About this edition

This edition presents the complete Devī Bhāgavata Purāṇa in twelve skandhas and 318 chapters. Every chapter contains the full Sanskrit reading text, direct Roman transliteration, and Swami Vijñanananda's complete English translation. The web reader and this download consume the same checksum-controlled corpus.

Textual control

The Sanskrit is controlled chapter by chapter from Sanskrit Wikisource, with exact page and revision provenance. Romanization is generated directly from the displayed Devanagari.

English witness

The English is Swami Vijñanananda's complete 1921–23 public-domain translation, controlled against the complete archival OCR. Historic spelling and transliteration are lightly normalized. It is aligned to the Sanskrit at chapter level; no unsupported verse-by-verse equivalence is implied.

English translation

1. I meditate on the beginningless Brahmavidya who is Sarvachaitanyarupa, of the nature of all-consciousness; May She stimulate our buddhi to the realisation of That (or who stimulates our buddhi in different directions).

2. S'aunaka said "O highly fortunate Suta! O noble Suta! You are the best of persons; you are blessed inasmuch as you have thoroughly studied all the auspicious Puranas.

3. O sinless one! you have gone through all the eighteen Puranas composed by Krisna Dvaipayana; these are endowed with five excellent characteristics and full of esoteric meanings.

Note The characteristics are to make the mantras reveal to one's own self, to realise, to transfer to others the S’akti, force thereof, to prove the various manifestations of the several effects thereof, etc.

4-5. O Sinless one! It is not that you have read them like a parrot, but you have thoroughly grasped the meaning of them all as you have learnt them from Vyasa himself, the son of Satyavati. Now it is our good merits that you have come at this divine holy excellent Vis'vasan Ksettra (place), free from any defects of the Kali age.

6-10. O Suta! These Munis assembled here are desirous to hear the holy Purana Samhita, that yields religious merits. So describe this to ns with your mind concentrated. O all-knowing Suta! Live long and be free from the threefold sorrows of existence. O highly fortunate one! Narrate to us the Purana equivalent to the Vedas. O Suta! Those persons that do not hear the Puranas, are certainly deprived by the Creator, though they have apparently the organ of hearing, of the power of tasting the sweet essence of words; because, the organ of hearing is gratified then and then only when it hears the words of the wise men, just as the organ of taste is satisfied then and then only when it tastes the six kinds of rasas (flavour, taste) (sweet, sour, pungent, bitter, salty, and astringent). This is known to all. The serpents that are void of the organ of hearing are enchanted by sweet music; then why should not those persons that have the organs of hearing and are averse to hear the Puranas, be thrown under the category of the deaf?

11-18. O Saumya! Hence all these Brahmins, being distressed with the fear of this Kali, have come here to this Naimisaranya, eager to hear attentively the Puranas, and are staying here with this one object. Time must be spent away anyhow or other; those that are fools while away their times in sports and other evil practices and those that are learned pass away their times in meditating on the S’astras; but these S’astras are too vast and very varied; they contain Jalpas (debates or wrangling discussions to win over the opposite party), Vadas (sound doctrines to arrive at just conclusions), and various Arthavadas (explanations and assertions, recommending Vidhis or precepts by stating the good arising from its proper observance and evils arising from its omission and also by adducing historical instances for its support; praises and eulogies) and filled with many argumentations. And, amongst these S’astras again, the Vedanta is the Sattvik, the Mimamsas are the Rajasik and the Nyaya S’astras with Hetuvadas, are the Tamasik; so the S’astras are varied. Similarly, the Puranas are of three kinds (1) S’attvik,

(2) Rajasik and (3) Tamasik. O Saumya! (one of gentle appearance) you have recited those Puranas endowed with five characteristics and full of many narratives; of these, the fifth Purana, equivalent to the Vedas and with all the good qualities, the Bhagavata yields Dharma and Kama (religion and desires), gives liberation to those who desire for emancipation and is very wonderful; you mentioned this before but ordinarily; you did not dwell on this specially. Now these Brahmanas are eager to hear gladly this divine auspicious Bhagavata, the best of the Puranas; so kindly describe this in detail.

19-25. O knower of Dharma! By your faith and devotion to your Guru, you have become Sattvik and thus have thoroughly known the Purana Samhitas spoken by Veda Vyas. O Omniscient one! Therefore it is that we have heard many Puranas from your mouth; but we are not satisfied as the Devas are not satisfied with the drinking of the nectar. O Suta! Fie to the nectar even as the drinking of nectar is quite useless in giving Mukti. But hearing the Bhagavata gives instantaneous Mukti from this Samsara or round of birth and death. O Suta! we performed thousands and thousands of Yajhas for the drinking of the nectar (Amrita), but never we got the full peace. The reason being that Yajhas lead to heaven only; on the expiry of the period of punya (good merits, the heavenly life ceases and one is expelled, as it were from the Heavens. Thus incessant sojourns in this wheel of Samsara, the constant rounds of births and deaths never end. O Knower of every thing! Thus, without Jhana (knowledge, wisdom) Mukti never comes to men, wandering in this wheel of Time (Kalachakra) composed of the three Gunas. So describe this holy Bhagavata, always beloved of the Mumuksas (those that desire Mukti), this secret work yielding liberation, holy and full of all sentiments (rasas).

Thus ends the first chapter of the first Skandha on the questioning about the Purana by Saunaka and other Rishis in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

Here ends the First Chapter of the First Skandha of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam on the questions by S'aunaka and other Risis.

English translation

1-5. S'ri Suta said “I am highly fortunate; I consider myself blessed and I am purified by the Mahatmas (high souled persons); inasmuch as I am questioned by them about the highly meritorious Purana, famous in the Vedas. I will now speak in detail about this Purana, the best of the Agamas, approved of by all the Vedas and the secret of all the S’astras. O Brahmins! I bow down to the gentle lotus feet, known in the three Lokas, of the Devi Bhagavati, praised by Brahma and the other devas Visnu, Mahes’a and others, meditated always by the Munindras and which the Yogis contemplate as their source of liberation. Today I will devotedly describe, in detail and in plain language, that Purana which is the best of all the Puranas, which gives prosperity and contains all the sentiments (Rasas) that a human being can conceive, the S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam. May that Highest Primal S’akti who is known as Vidya in the Vedas; who is omniscient, who controls the innermost of all and who is skilled in cutting off the knot of the world, who cannot be realised by the wicked and the vicious, but who is visible to the Munis in their meditation, may that Bhagavati Devi give me always the buddhi fit to describe the Purana! I call to my mind the Mother of all the worlds who creates this universe, whose nature is both real (taking gross, practical point of view) and and unreal (taking a real point of view), preserves and destroys by Her Rajasik, Sattvik and Tamasik qualities and in the end resolves all these into Herself and plays alone in the period of Dissolution - at this lime, I remember my that Mother of all the worlds.

6-10. It is commonly known that Brahma is the creator of this universe; and the knowers of the Vedas and the Puranas say so; but they also say that Brahma is born of the navel-lotus of Visnu. Thus it appears that Brahma cannot create independently. Again Visnu, from whose navel lotus Brahma is born, lies in Yoga sleep on the bed of Ananta (the thousand headed serpent) in the time of Pralaya; so how can we call Bhagavan Visnu who rests on the thousand headed serpent Ananta as the creator of the universe? Again the refuge of Ananta is the water of the ocean Ekarnava; a liquid cannot rest without a vessel; so I take refuge of the Mother of all beings, who resides as the S’akti of all and thus is the supporter of all; I fly for refuge unto that Devi who was praised by Brahma while resting on the navel lotus of Visnu who was lying fast asleep in Yoga nidra.

O Munis! meditating on that Maya Devi who creates, preserves and destroys the universe who is kuown as composed of the three gunas and who grants mukti, I now describe the whole of the Puranas; now you all better hear.

11-16. The Purana S’rimad Bhagavat (Devi Bhagavat) is excellent and holy; eighteen thousand pure S’lokas are contained in it. Bhagavan Krisna Dvaipayan has divided this Purana into twelve auspicious Skandhas (Books) and three hundred and eighteen chapters. Twenty chapters compose the first Skandha; twelve chapters in the second Skandha; thirty chapters in the the third Skandha; twenty-five chapters in the fourth Skandha, thirty-five, in the fifth; thirty-one, in the sixth; forty, in the seventh; twenty-four, in the eighth; fifty chapters in the ninth; thirteen, iu the tenth; twenty- four in the eleventh and fourteen chapters are contained in the twelfth Skandha, O Munis! Thus the Dvaipayan Muni has arranged his chapters in each Skandha.

17-20. Thus the Mahatma Veda Vyas has divided this Bhagavata Purana. into so many Skandhas and into so many chapters; and that the number of verses is eighteen thousand is already stated. That is denominated as Purana which contains the following five characteristics (1) Creation of the universe, (2) Secondary creation, (3) Dynasties (4) Manvantaras and (5) The description of Manus and other kings. S’iva is beyond Prakritic attributes, eternal and ever omnipresent; She is without any change, immutable, unattainable but by yoga; She is the refuge of the universe and Her nature is Turiya Chaitanya. Maha Lakshmi is Her Sattviki S’akti; Sarasvati is Her Rajasik S’akti and Maha Kali is Her Tamasik S’akti; these are all of feminine forms.

21-25. The assuming of bodies by these three S’aktis for the creation of this universe is denominated as "Sarga" (creation) by the high souled persona (Maharpurusa), skilled in S’astras. And the further resolution of these three S’aktis into Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a for the creation, preservation, and destruction of this universe is denominated (in this Purana) as Pratisarga (secondary creation.)

The description of the kings of the solar and lunar dynasties and the families of Hiranya Kasipu and others is known as the description of the lineages of kings and their dynasties. The description of Svayambhuva and, other Manus and their ruling periods is known as Manvantaras. And the description of their descendants is known as the description of their families. (Thus these are the five characteristics in the Puranas.) O best of Munis! all the Puranas are endowed with these five characteristics.

26-32. So is Mahabharata writen by Vedavyasa, characterised by these five things. This is known as the fifth Veda and Itihasa (history.) In this are something more than one lakh slokas. S'aunaka said "O Suta! What are those Puranas and how many verses are contained in each? Speak all those in detail in this holy Ksettra; we, the residents of Naimisaranya are all very eager to hear this. (Why we call ourselves as the residents of Naimisaranya, hear; you will realise then that no other place exists in this Kali age for hearing the holy discourses on religion) When we were afraid of the Kali age, Brahma gave us a Manomaya Chakra (wheel) and I said to all of us Follow this wheel, go after it and the spot where the felly of the wheel will become thin (so as to break) and will not roll further, that country is the holy place; Kali will never be able to enter there; you all better remain there until the Satya age comes back. Thus, acording to the saying of Brahma, we have got orders to stay here. On hearing the words of Brahma, wo went out quickly keeping the wheel go on, our object being to determine which place is best and holiest. When we came here, the felly of the wheel become thin and shorn before my eyes; hence this Ksettra is called Naimis; it is the most sanctifying place. Kali cannot enter here; hence the Mahatmas, Munis and Siddhas, terrified by the Kali age, have followed me and resorted to this place. We have performed yajhas with Purodasa (clarified butter as is offered in oblations to fire) where no animals are sacrificed; now we have no other important work to do except to pass our time here until the arrival of Satyayuga. O S'uta! we are extremely fortunate in all respects that you have come here; purify us to-day by narrating to us the names of the Puranas equivalent to the Vedas. O S'uta! you are also a learned orator; we, too, are ardent listeners, with no other works to bother our heads; narrate to us to-day the auspicious holy Bhagavata Purana. O S'uta! Long live you; and no ailings, internal, external, or from the Devas torment you. (this is our blessing to you). We have heard that in the most sanctifying Purana, narrated by Maharsi Dvaipayan, all about Dharma (religion), Artha (Wealth) and Kama (desires) are duly described as well the acquiring of Tattvajhan and liberation are also spoken of. O S'uta! our desires are not satisfied the more we hear of those beautiful holy words. Now describe to us the highly pure S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam where all the Lilas (the dramatic acts) of the Mother of the three worlds purifying the sins, adorned with all the qualifications are described as yielding all the desires like the Kalpa Vriksa (the celestial tree yielding all desires).

Thus ends the second chapter of the first Skandha on the description of the Purana (the text) in Maha Purana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

Here ends the Second Chapter of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam on questions put by Saunaka and other Risis.

English translation

1-11. Suta said “O best of the Munis! I am now telling you the names of the Puranas, etc., exactly as 1 have heard from Veda Vyasa, the son of Satyavati; listen. The Purana beginning with "ma" are two in number; those beginning with “bha” are two; those beginning with “bra" are three; those beginning with "va” are four; those beginning respectively with “A”, “na”, “pa”, “Ling”, “ga”, “ku” and “Ska” are one each and “ma” means Matsya Purana, Markandeya Purana; “Bha” signifies Bhavisya, Bhagavat Puranas; “Bra” signifies Brahma, Brahmanda and Brahmavaivarta Puranas; “va” signifies Vaman, Vayu, Visnu and Varaha Puranas; “A” signifies Agni Purana; “Na” signifies Narada Purana; “Pa” signifies Padma Purana; “Ling” signifies Linga Puranam; “Ga” signifies Govinda Puranam; Ku signifies Kurma Purana and “Ska” signifies Skanda Puranam. These are the eighteen Puranas. O Saunaka! In the Matsya Purana there are fourteen thousand slokas; in the wonderfully varied Markandeya Puranam there are nine thousand slokas. In the Bhavisya Purana fourteen thousand and five hundred slokas are counted by the Munis, the seers of truth. In the holy Bhagavata there are eighteen thousand S’lokas; in the Brahma Purana there are Ajuta (ten thousand) S’lokas. In the Brahmanda Purana there are twelve thousand one hundred S’lokas; in the Brahma Vaivarta Puranam there are eighteen thousand S’lokas. In the Vaman Purana there are Ajuta (ten thousand) S’lokas; in the Vayu Puranam there are twenty-four thousand and six hundred S’lokas; in the greatly wonderful Visnu Purana there are twenty-three thousand S’lokas; in the Agni Puranam there are sixteen thousand S’lokas; in the Brihat Narada Puranam, there are twenty-five thousand S’lokas, in the big Padma Purana there are fifty-five thousand s'lokas; in the voluminous Linga Purana eleven thousand s’lokas exist; in the Garuda Puranam spoken by Hah nineteen thousand s'lokas exist; iu the Kurma Purana, seventeen thousand s'lokas exist and in the greatly wonderful Skanda Purana there are eighty-one thousand s'lokas, O sinless Risis! Thus I have described to you the names of all the Puranas and the number of verses contained in them. Now hear about the Upa Puranas.

12-17. The first is the Upapurana narrated by Sanat Kumara; next comes Narasimha Purana; then Naradiya Purana, S’iva Purana, Purana narrated by Durvasa, Kapila Purana, Manava Purana, Aus’anasa Purana, Varuna Purana. Kalika Purana, Samva Purana, Nandi Kes’wara Purana, Saura Purana, Purana spoken by Paras’ara, Aditya Purana, Mahesvara Purana, Bhagavata and Vasistha Purana. These Upa Puranas are described by the Mahatmas. After compiling the eighteen Puranas, Veda Vyasa, the son of Satyavati composed Mahabharata, that has no rival, out of these Puranas.

18-24. At every Manvantara, in each Dvapara Yuga, Veda Vyasa expounds the Puranas duly to preserve the religion. Veda Vyasa is no other person than Visnu Himself; He, in the form of Veda Vyasa, divides the (one) Veda into four parts, in every Dvapara Yuga, for the good of the world. The Brahmanas of the Kali age are shortlived and their intellect (Buddhi) is not sharp; they cannot realise the meaning after studying the Vedas; knowing this in every Dvapara Yuga Bhagavan expounds the holy Purana Samhitas. The more so because women, S'udras, and the lower Dvijas are not entitled to hear the Vedas; for their good, the Puranas have been composed. Tne present auspicious Manvantara is Vaivasvata; it is the seventh in due order; and the son of Satyavati, the best of the knowers of Dharma, is the Veda Vyasa of the 28th Dvapara Yuga of this seventh Manvantara. He is my Guru; in the next Dvapara, Yuga Asvatthama, the son of Drona will be the Veda Vyasa. Twenty-seven Veda Vyasas had expired and they duly compiled each their own Purana Samhitas in their own Dvapara Yugas.

25-35. The Risis said "O highly fortunate Suta! kindly describe to us the nannes of the previous Veda Vyasas, the reciters of the Puranas in the Dvapara Yugas. Suta said In the first Dvapara, Brahma Himself divided the Vedas; in the second Dvapara, the first Prajapati Vyasa did the same; so S'akra, in the third, Brihaspati, in the fourth, Surya in the fifth; Yama, in the sixth, Indra, in the seventh, Vasistha, in the eighth; Sarasvata Risi in the ninth, Tridhama, in the tenth; Trivrisa, in the eleventh, Bharadvaja, in the twelfth; Antariksa, in the thirteenth; Dharma, in the fourteenth; Evaruni in the fifteenth; Dhananjaya, in the sixteenth; Medhatithi in tba seventeenth; Vrati, in the eighteenth; Atri, in the nineteenth; Gautama in the twentieth, Uttama, whose soul was fixed on Hari, in the twenty-first, Vajasrava Vena, in the twenty second; his family descendant Soma iu the twenty-third; Trinavindu, in the twenty-fourth; Bhargava, in the twenty-fifth; Sakti, in the twenty-sixth, Jatukarnya in the twenty- seventh and Krisna Dvaipayana became the twenty-eighth Veda Vyas in the Dvapara Yugas. Thus I have spoken of the 28 Veda Vyasas, as I heard. 1 have heard the holy S'rimad Bhagavat from the month of Krisna Dvaipayana. This removes all troubles, yields all desires, and gives Moksa and is full of the meanings of the Vedas. This treatise contains the essence of all the S'astras and is dear always to the Mamuksas (those who want Moksa or liberation).

36-43. O best Munis! Thus, compiling the Puranas Veda Vyasa thought this Purana to be the best; so (without teaching it to other persons) he settled that his own son the high-sould S'uka Deva born of the dry woods used for kindling fire (excited by attrition), having no passion for the worldly things, would be the fit student to be taught this Purana and therefore taught him; at that time I was a fellow student along with S'aka Deva and I heard every thing from the mouth of Vyasa Deva and realised the secret meanings thereof. This has happened through the grace of the merciful Guru Veda Vyasa.

Here ends the Third Chapter of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam on praising the Puranas and on each Vyasa of every Dvapara Yuga.

English translation

1-3. The Risis said O Saumya! How was S'uka Deva born? Who studied these Purana Samhitas; by which wife of Vyasa Deva? And How? O highly intelligent one! You have just spoken that S'uka Deva was not born from womb, in the natural way; he was born of the dry pieces of wood for Homa sacrifice. But we heard before that the great ascetic was Yogi even in his mother's womb, so a great doubt comes to our minds. You better remove that to-day; how he studied also these Puranas, as vast in their nature; say this.

4-5. Suta said In long-past days, Satyavati's son Vedas Vyas, while in his own hermitage on the banks of the river Sarasvati, was greatly wondered to see a pair of Chatakas (Sparrows). He saw the pair putting the beak of their young one, just born of the egg, of beautiful body, red mouth, and greasy body. They do not care at all for their own hunger and toil; all they are caring for is to nurture their young one. He said also that the pair are rubbing their bodies over the body and kissing lovingly the mouth of the young one and feeling the highest pleasure. Seeing this wonderful affection of the two sparrows towards their young, Veda Vyas became very anxious and thought over the following in his mind.

9-14. Oh! What wonder is there, when the birds have so much filial affection towards their child, that men, who want services from their sons, would show their affection towards their sons! This pair of sparrows will not perform the happy marriage of their young one and will not see the face of their son's wife; nor when they will grow old, that their child would become very religious and serve them to attain great merits in Heaven. Nor do they expect that their child would earn money and satisfy them nor the child would perform when they die, their funeral obsequies duly and help them in their sojourn in the next world; nothing of all these. Nor will the child perform the S'radh ceremony at Gaya; nor will the child offer the oblation of a blue bull on the day of offering the sacrifice to its ancestor (the bull is then let loose and held sacred); yet the pair of sparrows have so much affection towards their young one! Oh! in this world to touch the body of the son, especially to nurture the sons, is the highest happiness in life.

15-27. There is no prospect in the after birth of the sonless; never, never will Heaven be his. Without son, there is none other who can be of help in the next world. Thus in the Dharma S'astras, Manu and other Munis declare that the man who has sons goes to Heaven and the sonless one can never go to Heaven. The man possessing a son is entitled to the Heavenly pleasures can be vividly seen, rather than imagined. The man with son is freed from sins; this is the word of the Vedas. The sonless man becomes very much distressed even at the time of death and while lying on bed that is ground at that time, mournfully thinks. "This all my vast wealth, various things, this my beautiful house, who will enjoy all these?" When the sonless man is thus perplexed in his mind at the time of his death and becomes restless, then it is sure that his future career is full misfortunes; unless one's mind is calm and serene at the time of death, can never attain a good goal. Thus thinking variously, the Satyavati's son Veda Vyas sighed heavily and became unmindful. He thought of various plans and at last, coming to a definite conclusion, went to the Sumeru mountain to perform Tapasya. On reaching there, he thought which Deva he will worship! Visnu, S'iva, Indra, Brahma, Surya, Ganes'a, Kartikeya, Agni, or Varuna? Who will grant him boon quickly and thus satisfy his desires. While thus cogitating in his mind, came there the Muni Narada, of one mind with lute in hamd, accidentally in his course of travels. Seeing Narada, the Satyavati's son Veda Vyasa gave him a hearty welcome, with great gladness, offering him Arghya and Asan (seat) and asked about his welfare. Hearing this question of welfare, Narada Muni spoke "O

Dvaipayan! Why do you look so care worn! First speak this out to me.

28-30. Veda Vyasa said " The sonless man has no goal; therefore there is no happiness in my mind; I am always anxious to get a son and therefore I am very sorry. To-day my mind is sorely troubled with the one idea, which Deva I may satisfy by my tapasya, who will grant me my desires; now I take your refuge. O merciful Maharsi! You are omniscient; say this quickly; which Deva I will take for my refuge, who will grant me a son".

31-37. Suta said Thus questioned by Krisna Dvaipayan Veda Vyasa, the high souled Narada Muni, well versed in the Vedas, became very glad and spoke thus O highly fortunate Paras'ara's son. The question that you have asked me to-day was formerly asked by my father to Narayana. At this, Narayana Vasudeva, the Deva of the Devas, the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer of the Universe, the husband of Laksmi, the four armed, wearing yellow garment, holding conchshell, discus, club and with the mark S'rivatsa (a mark or curl of hair on the heart of Visnu) adorning His breast and decorated with Kaustuvagem, the Divinity Himself, became merged in great Yoga; at this my Father became greatly surprised and said "O Janardana! Thou art the Deva of the Devas; the Lord of the Present, the Past and the Future, the Lord of this Universe; why art thou meditating in Yoga? And what is it that Thou art meditating? O best of the Devas! Thou art the Lord of the entire Universe and yet Thou art now merged in deep meditation. At this I am greatly surprised (my surprise is not without foundation; Thou canst Thyself see). What more wonderful than this can happen?

38-43. O Lord of Rama! I am sprung from the lotus from thy navel and have become the Lord of this whole universe; who is there in this universe that is superior to Thee; kindly say this to me. O Lord of the world? Thou art the Origin of all, the Cause of all causes, the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer and the capable Doer of all actions. O Maharaja! at Thy will, I create this whole universe and Rudra destroys iu due time this world. He is always under Thy command. O Lord! By Thy command the Sun roams in the sky; the wind blows in various auspicious or inauspicious ways and the fire is giving heat and the cloud showers rain. I don't see in the three Lokas any one superior to Thee. Then whom art Thou meditating while being questioned by his very intelligent son S'uka Deva! not born in the usual way from womb, Dvaipayana expounded all the secret excellent meanings of the Purana and thereby I also came to know them also. O saintly persons! Thus S'uka Deva, sincerely earnest to cross this endless bottomless ocean of S'amsara, tasted of the wonderful traits of the Veda, the Kalpa tree, this S'rimad Bhagavata with its numerous stories and anecdotes with great eagerness and intense pleasure.

38-43. Oh! Who is there in this world that is not freed from this terror of Kali, after he has heard this Bhagavata. Even if the greatest sinner, void of the right ways of living and Achara as ordained in the Vedas, hears on a pretence this excellent Devi Bhagavata, the chief of the Puranas, he enjoys all the great enjoyments of this world and in the end attains the eternal place occupied by the Yogis. She who is rare, in Her Nirguna aspect, to even Hah and Hara, who is very dear as Tattva Vidya to the Jhanins whose real nature can be realised only in Samadhi, She resides always in the cavity of the heart of the hearers of the Bhagavata Purana. He who getting the all qualified human birth and getting the reciter of this Purana, the boat to cross, as it were, this world, does not hear this blissful Purana, he is certainly deprived by the Creator. How is it that the way-ward dull¬ headed persons, getting the vicious ears, can hear always the faults and calumnies of others, that are entirely useless, and cannot hear this pure Purana that contains the four Vargas Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Mokhsa? This is my main point of doubt. O One of good vows! I am Thy devotee; be merciful to me and speak this to me. There is almost nothing that is secret to Mahapurusas; this is a well- known fact".

44-50. Thus hearing Brahma's words, Bhagavan Narayana spoke "O Brahman! I now speak out my mind to you; listen carefully. Though the Devas, Danavas and men and all the Lokas know that You are the Creator, I am the Preserver and Rudra is the Destroyer, yet it is to be known that the saints, versed in the Vedas, have come to this conclusion by inference from the Vedas that the creation, preservation, and destruction are performed by the creative force, preservative force and destructive force. The Rajasik creative force residing in you, the Sattvik preservative force residing in me, and the Tamasik destructive force residing in Rudra are the all-in-all. When these Saktis become absent, you become inert and incapable to create, I to preserve and Rudra to destroy. O intelligent Suvrata! We all are always under that Force directly or indirectly; hear instances that you can see and infer. At the time of Pralaya, I lie down on the bed of Ananta, subservient to that Force; again I wake up in the time of creation duly under the influence of Time.

51-54. I am always subservient to that Maha S'akti; (under Her command) I am engaged in Tapasya for a long time; (By Her command) some time I enjoy with Lakshmi; some time I fight battles, terrible to all the Lokas, with the Danavas, involving great bodily troubles. O Know of Dharma! It was before Your presence that I fought hand to hand fight for five thousand years before Your sight on that one great ocean in long-past days with the two demons Madhu and Kaitabha, sprung from the wax of my ear, maddened with pride; and by the grace of the Devi, successfully killed the two Danavas.

55-61. O highly fortunate one! you realised then the great S'akti, higher than the highest and the cause of all causes; then why are you asking again and again that question. By the will of that S'akti, I have got this idea of man and roam on the great ocean; in yuga after yuga, I assume by Her will, the Tortoise, Boar, Man-Lion, and Dwarf incarnations. No one likes to take birth in the womb of inferior animals (especially birds). Do you think that I willingly take unpleasant births as in the womb of boars, tortoise, i.e., certainly not. What independent man is there who abandons the pleasurable enjoyment with Laksmi and takes birth in inferior animals as fish, etc. or leaves his seat on the seat of Gaduda and becomes engaged in great war-conflicts. O Svayambhu! In ancient days you saw before your eyes that my head was cut off when the bowstring suddenly gave way; and then you, brought a horse's head and by that help, the divine artist Visvakarma, stuck that on to my headless body. O Brahma! Since then I am known amongst men by the name of "Hayagriva". This is well-known to you. Now say, were I independent, would such an ignominy have happened to me? Never. Therefore I am not independent; I am in every way under that S'akti. O Lotus-born! I always meditate on that S'akti; and I do not know any other than this S'akti".

62-66. Narada said:-- Thus spoke Visnu to Brahma. O Muni Vedavyas! Brahma spoke these to me. So you, too, better meditate the lotus feet of Bhagavati calmly in the lotus of your heart for the success of your idea. That Devi will give you all that you wish. Suta said At these words of Narada, Satyavati's son Veda Vyasa went out to the hills for Tapasya, trusting the lotus feet of the Devi as the all-in-all in this world.

Thus ends the fourth chapter of the first Skandha on the excellency of the Devi in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-4. The Risis said "O Suta! Our minds are merged in the sea of doubt, hearing your this most wonderful saying, surprising to the whole world. The head of Janardan Madhava, the Lord of all, was severed out of His body! And He was afterwards known as Hayagriva, the horse-faced! Oh! what more wonder can there be than this? Whom the Vedas even praise, all the Devas rest on Whom, Who is the Cause of all causes, the Adi Deva Jagannath (the Lord of the universe). Oh! how is it that His head came to be severed! O highly intelligent one! Describe all this to me in detail".

5-9. Suta said O Munis! Hear all attentively the glorious deeds of the supremely energetic Visnu, the Deva of the Devas. Once on a time the eternal Deva Janardana became tired after the terrible continuous battle for ten thousand years. After this the Lord Narayana seated Himself on Padmasan (a kind of posture) in some lovely place on a level plot of ground and placing his head on the front of his bow with the bow strung and placed erect on the ground fell fast asleep. Visnu, the Lord of Rama, was exceedingly tired and thus he fell soon into deep sleep. At this time Indra and the other Devas, with Brahma and Mahesa began a sacrifice.

10-13. Then they, for the sake of success in Deva's well, went to the region of Vaikuntha to meet with the Deva Janardana, the Lord of sacrifices. There the Devas, not finding Visnu, came to know by their Dhyan (meditation) where Bhagavan Visnu was staying and thither they went. They saw that the Lord Visnu, the Deva of the Devas was lying unconscious, being under the arms of Yoganidra (the yogic sleep). Therefore they took their seats there. Seeing the Lord of the universe asleep, Brahma, Rudra and the other Devas became anxious.

14-18. Indra then addressed the Devas:-"0 best of the Suras! Now what is to be done! How shall we rouse Bhagavan from His sleep? Now think of the means by which this can be effected". Hearing Indra's words S'ambhu said "O good Devas! Now we must finish our sacrificial work. But if the sleep of Bhagavan be disturbed, He would get angry." Hearing S'ankara's words, Paramesthi Brahma created Vamri insects (a sort of white ants) so that they might eat up the forepart of the bow that was lying on the ground causing the other end rise up and thus break His sleep. Thus the Deva's purpose will, no doubt, be fulfilled. Thus settling his mind, the eternal Deva Brahma ordered the white ants Vamris to cut the bow string.

19-22. Hearing this order of Brahma, Vamri spoke to Brahma, thus:- - "O Brahman! How can I disturb the sleep of the Devadeva, Lord of Laksmi, the World Guru? To rouse one from one's deep sleep, to interrupt one in one's speech, to sever the love between a couple husband and wife, to separate a child from one's mother, all these are equivalent to Brahmahatya (murdering a Brahman). Therefore, O Deva! how can I interrupt the happiuess of sleep of the Devadeva? And what benefit shall I derive by eating the bowstring, so that I may incur this vicious act? But a man can commit a sin if there be any interest of his; I am ready to eat this, if I get a personal interest".

23-24. Brahma said We will give you, too, share in this our Yajha (sacrifice); so hear me; do our work and rouse Visnu from His sleep. During the time of performing Homa whatever ghee will fall outside the Homa-Kund (the sacrificial pit) will fall to your share; so be quick and do this.

25-30. Suta said Thus ordered by Brahma, the Vamri insect soon ate away the fore end of the bow that rested on the ground.

Immediately the string gave way and the bow went up; the other end became free and a terrible sound took place. The Devas bcame afraid; the whole universe got agitated; the earth trembled. The sea became swollen; the aquatic animals became startled; violent wind blew; the mountains shook; ominous meteors fell. The quarters assumed a terrific aspect; the Sun went down the horizon. In that time of distress the Devas became anxious what evil might come down. O ascetics! while the Devas were thus cogitating, the head with crown on it of the Devadeva Visnu vanished away; no body knew where it fell.

31-36. When the awful darkness disappeared, Brahma and Mahadeva saw the disfigured body of Visnu with its head off. Seeing that headless figure of Visnu they were greatly surprised; they were drowned in the ocean of cares and, overwhelmed with grief, began to weep aloud. O Lord! O Master! O Devadeva! O Eternal one! what unforeseen extraordinary mishap occurred to us to-day! O Deva! Thou canst not be pierced nor cut asunder, nor capable of being burnt; how is it then that Thy head has been taken away! Is this the Maya (majic) of some. Deva? O all pervading one! The Devas cannot live when Thy condition is thus; we do not know what affection dost Thou have towards us. We are crying because of our selfish ends; perhaps this therefore has occurred. The Daityas, Yaksas, or Rakhsasas have not done this; O Lord of Laksmi! Whose fault will we ascribe this to? The Devas themselves have committed this loss to themselves?

37-41. O Lord of the Devas! The Devas are. now dependent! They are under Thee. Now where are we to go? What are we to do? There is none to save the dull stupid Devas! At this juncture, seeing S'iva and the other Devas crying, Brihaspati, supremely versed in the Vedas, consoled them thus "O highly fortunate one! what use there will be in thus crying and repenting? it ought you now to consider the means that you should adopt to redress your calamities. O Lord of the Devas! Fate and one's own exertion and intelligence are equal; if the success comes not through Fate (Luck or chance) one is certainly to show one's prowess and merit".

42-46. Indra said Fie to your exertion when, before our eyes, the head of Bhagavan Visnu Himself has been carried off! Fie, Fie to your prowess and intelligence! Fate is in my opinion, the supreme.

Brahma said Whatever, auspicious or inauspicious, is ordained Daiva (Fate), every one must bear that; no one can go beyond the Daiva. When one has taken up a body, one must experience pleasure and pain; there is no manner of doubt in this. See, in long- past days, by the irony of Fate, S'ambhu severed my head; His generative organ, too, dropped down through curse. Similarly Hari's head has, to-day, fallen into the salt ocean. By the influence of time, Indra, the Lord of Sachi, had thousand genital marks over his body, was expelled from Heaven and had to live in the Manas sarovar in the lotuses and had to suffer many other miseries.

47-50. O Glorious ones! When such personages have suffered pains, then who else is there in the world, that dues not suffer! so you all cease sorrows and meditate on the Eternal Mahamaya; who is the Mother of all, who is supporter of all, who is of the nature of Brahmavidya (the Supreme Knowledge) and who is beyond the Gunas, who is the Prime Prakriti, and who pervades the three Lokas, the whole universe, moving and unmoving; She will dispense our welfare. Suta said Thus saying to the Devas, Brahma ordered all the Vedas, that were incarnate there in their forms, for the successful issue of the Deva's work.

51-54. Brahma said “OVedas! Now go on and chant hymns to the Sacred Highest Devi Mahamaya, who is Brahmavidya, who brings all issues to their successful issues, who is hidden in all forms.” Hearing His words, the all-beautiful Vedas began to chant hymns to Mahamaya who can be comprehended by Jhan, and who pervades the world. The Vedas said Obeisance to the Devi! to the Mahamaya! to the Auspicious One! to the Creatrix of the Universe! We bow down to Thee, who is beyond the Gunas, the Ruler of all the Beings! O Mother! Thou givest to S’ankara even His desires. Thou art the receptacle of all the things; Thou art the Prana of all the living beings; Thou art Buddhi, Laksmi (wealth), S’obha, Ks'hama (forgiveness), S’anti (peace), Sraddha (faith), Medha (intellect), Dhriti (fortitude), and Smriti (recollection).

55. Thou art the vindu (m) over the Pranava (om) and thou art of the nature of semi-moon; Thou art Gayattri, Thou art Vyarhiti; Thou art Jaya, Vijaya, Dhatri (the supportress). Lap (modesty), Kirti (fame), Ichcha (will) and Daya (mercy) in all beings.

56-57. O Mother! Thou art the merciful Mother of the three worlds; Thou art the adorable auspicious Vidya (knowledge) benefitting all the Lokas; Thou destroyest the Universe and Thou skilfully residest (hidden) in the Vija mantras. Therefore we are praising Thee. O Mother! Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara, Indra, Surya, Fire, Sarasvati and other Regents of the Universe are all Thy creation; so none of them is superior to Thee. Thou art the Mother of all the things, moving and non-moving.

58-61. O Mother! When Thou dost will to create this visible Universe, Thou createst first Brahma, Visnu and MahesVara and makest them create, preserve and destroy this universe; but Thou remainest quite unattached to the world. Ever Thou remainest constant in Thy one form. No one in this Universe is able to know Thy nature; nor there is any body who can enumerate Thy names. How can he promise to jump across the illimitable ocean, who cannot jump across an ordinary well. O Bhagavati! No one amongst the Devas even knows particularly Thy endless power and glory. Thou art alone the Lady of the Universe and the Mother of the world.

62-68. The Vedas all bear testimony how thou alone hast created all this unreal and fleeting universe. O Devi! Thou without any effort and having no desires hast become the cause of this visible world, thyself remaining unchanged. This is a great wonder. We cannot conceive this combination of contrary varieties in one. O Mother!

How can we understand thy power, unknown to all the Vedas even, when thou thyself dost not know thy nature! We are bewildered at this. O Mother! It is that thou dost know nothing about the falling off of the Visnu's head! Or knowingly thou wanted to examine Visnu's prowess. Is it that Hah incurred any heinous sin. How can that be! Where is sin to thy followers who serve Thee! O Mother! Why art Thou so much indifferent to the Devas! It is a great wonder that the head of Visnu is severed! Really, we are merged in great misfortunes. Thou art clever in removing the sorrows of Thy devotees. Why art Thou delaying in fixing again the head on Visnu's body. O Devi! Is it that Thou taking offence on the gods hast cast that on Visnu! or was it that Visnu became proud and to curb that. Thou hast played thus! or is it that the Daityas, having suffered defeat from Visnu went and practised severe tapasya in some beautiful holy place, and have got some boons; and so Visnu's head has thus fallen off! Or is it, O Bhagavati! that Thou wert very eagerly interested to see Visnu's headless body and therefore Thou hast seen thus! O Prime Force! Is it that Thou art angry on the daughter of the Sindhu (ocean); Laksmi Devi! Else, why hast Thou deprived Her of Her husband? Laksmi is born as a part of Thine; So Thou oughtest to forgive Her offence. Therefore dost Thou gladden Her by giving back Her husband's life. The principal Devas, engaged in Thy service, always make their Pranams (bow down) to Thee; O Devi! Beest Thou kind enough and make alive the Deva Visnu, the Lord of all and crossest us across this ocean of sorrows. O Mother! We cannot make out anything whatsoever where Hari's head has gone. We have no other protectress than Thee who canst give back His life? O Devi! Dost Thou give life to the whole world as the nectar gives life to all the Devas.

69-73. Suta said Thus praised by the Vedas with their Angas, with Samaganas (the songs from the Sama Veda), the Nirguna Mahes'vari Devi Mahamaya became pleased. Then the auspicious voice came to them from the Heavens, gladdening all, and pleasing to the ears though no form was seen: “O Suras! Do not care anything about it; you are immortal (what fear can you have?) Come to your senses. I am very much pleased by the praise sung by the Vedas. There is no doubt in this. Amongst men, whoever will read this My stotra with devotion, will get all what he desires. Whoever will hear this devotedly, during the three Sandhyas, will lie freed from troubles and become happy. When this stotra has been sung by the Vedas, it is equivalent to the Vedas.

74-75. Does anything take place in this world without any cause? Now hear why Hari's head was cut off. Once on a time, seeing the beautiful face of His dear wife Laksmi Devi, Hari laughed in presence of Her.

76-82. At this Laksmi Devi came to understand that “He has seen surely something ugly in my face and therefore He laughed; otherwise why my Husband would laugh at seeing me. But what reason can there be as to see ugliness in my face after so long a time. And why shall He laugh without seeing something ugly, without any cause. Or it may be, He has made some other beautiful woman as my co-wife”. Thus arguing variously in her mind, Maha Laksmi gradually got angry and Tamo guna slowly possessed Her. Then, by turn of Fate, in order that god’s work might be completed, very fierce Tamas Sakti entered into Her body. She got very angry and slowly said “Let Thy head fall off”. Thus, owing to feminine nature and the destiny of Bhagvan, Laksmi cursed without any thought of good or bad, causing Her own suffering. By the Tamasi S’akti possessing Her, she thought that a co-wife would be more painful than Her widowhood and thus She cursed Him.

83-86. Falsehood, vain boldness, craftiness, stupidity, impatience, over-greediness, impurity, and harshness are the natural qualities of women. Owing to that curse, the head of Vasudeva has fallen into the salt ocean. Now I will fix the head on His body as before. O Sura Sattamas! There is another cause, also, regarding this affair. That will bring you great success. In ancient days a famous Daitya, named Hayagriva practised severe tapasya on the bank of the Sarasvati river.

87-92. Abandoning all sorts of enjoyments, with control over his senses and without any food, the Daitya did Japam of the (repeated) one syllabled Maya-Vija-mantra and, meditating the form of the Utmost Sakti of Mine, adorned with all ornaments, practised very terrible austerities for one thousand years. I, too, went to the place of austerities in My Tamasi form, meditated by the Daitya and appeared before him. There, seated on the lion's back, feeling compassion for his tapasya I spoke to him “O glorious One! O one of good vows! I have come to grant boon to Thee!” Hearing the words of the Devi, the Daitya instantly got up and falling down with devotion at Her feet, circumambulated Her. Looking at My form, his large eyes became cheerful with feelings of love and filled with tears; shedding tears, then, he began to chant hymns to Me.

93-95. Hayagriva said “Obeisance to the Devi Mahamaye! I bow down to Thee, the Creatrix, the Preserver, and the Destructrix of the universe! Skilled in shewing favour to Thy devotees! Giver of the devotee's desires! Obeisance to Thee! O Thou, the giver of liberation! O Thou! The auspicious one! I bow down to Thee. Thou art the cause of the five elements - earth, water, fire, air, and Akasa! Thou art the cause of form, taste, smell, sound and touch. O MahesVari! the five jhanendriyas (organs of perception) eyes, ears, nose, tongue, and skin and the five organs of action Karmendriyas - hands, feet, speech, arms, and the organ of generation are all created by Thee.

96-100. The Devi said “O child! I am very much satisfied with your wonderful tapasya and devotion. Now say what boon do you want. I will give you the boon that you desire”. Hayagriva said “O Mother! grant me that boon by which death will not come to me, and I be invincible by the Suras and Asuras, I may be a Yogi and immortal”. The Devi said “ Death brings in birth and birth brings in death; this is inevitable.” This order of things is extant in this world; never its violation takes place. O best of the Raksasas! Thus knowing death sure, think in your mind and ask another boon. Hayagriva said: - “O Mother of the universe! If it be that Thou art not willing at all to grant me immortality, then grant me this boon that my death may not occur from any other than from one who is horse-faced. Be merciful and grant me this boon that I desire.”

101-105. O highly fortunate one! “Go home and govern your kingdom at your ease; death won't occur to you from any other beings then from one who is horse-faced.” Thus granting the boon, the Devi vanished. Becoming very glad on getting this boon, Hayagriva went to his residence. Since then the wicked Daitya is troubling very much all the Devas and Munis. There is none in the three worlds to kill him. So let Visvakarma take a horse's head and fix it on the headless body of Visnu. Then Bhagavan Hayagriva will slay the vicious wicked Asura, for the good of the Devas”.

106-112. Suta said Thus speaking to the Devas, Bhagavati S’arvani remained silent. The Devas became very glad and spoke this to Visvakarma “Kindly do this Deva work and fix Visnu's head. He will become Hayagriva and kill the indomitable Danava.” Suta said Hearing these words, Visvakarma quickly cut off with his axe, the head of a horse, brought it before the Devas and fixed it on the headless body of Visnu. By the grace of Mahamaya, Bhagavan became horse-faced or Hayagriva. Then, a few days after, Bhagavan. Hayagriva killed that proud Danava, the Deva's enemy, by sheer force. Any man, hearing this excellent anecdote, becomes freed, certainly of all sorts of difficulties. Hearing or reading Mahamaya's glorious deeds, pure and sin destroying, gives all sorts of wealth.

Thus ends the fifth chapter of the first Skandha on the description of the narrative of Hayagriva in the Maha Purana S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-44. The Risis said “O Saumya! Just now you have spoken of the fight for five thousand years, in that great ocean, between Bhagavan S’auri and Madhu Kaitabha. How was it that the two greatly powerful Danavas, invincible of the Devas came to be born there? And why did Bhagavan Hah kill them? O highly intelligent one! Kindly describe that greatly wonderful event. We all are extremely eager to hear it, and you are the great Pundit and speaker, present before us. It is our good luck that we have come across you here. As the contact with the illiterate is very painful, so the contact with the literate is very happy like nectar. The animals in this world live like illiterates; they eat, call for their nature, void urines and faeces, and know wonderfully well the sexual intercourse. Only they want discriminative knowledge of right and wrong, of the real and unreal, and a knowledge of discrimination, leading to Moksa or final liberation; this is the only point of difference. Therefore the persons that have no liking to hear of Bhagavata and books like it, are like beasts; there is no doubt in this. Behold! Deer and some other animals can enjoy well the sense of hearing like men; and the serpents, though wanting in the organ of hearing, become charmed quite like men, as if tasting the pleasure of hearing sweet sounds. Verily out of the five organs of perception the organ of hearing and the organ of sight are benefitting, for the knowledge of things arises from hearing and the heart is pleased by seeing. Therefore the Pundits divide in three classes, the objects of hearing, as (1) Sattvik, (2) Rajasik and (3) Tamasik. The Vedas and other S'astras are Sattvik; the literature Sahitya is the Rajasik and war news and finding fault with others is Tamasik. The wise persons again sub¬ divide the Sattvik in three sub-classes good, middling and worst. That which gives Moksa is good or excellent; that which gives Heavens is middling and that which gives this worldly pleasure is worst. In the same way, the literature Sahitya is of three kinds

That which describes the people to live with their legitimate wives is the best; which describes about prostitutes is the middling; and that which makes people live with other's wives is the worst.

The seers of Sastras, the learned men divide the subjects of the Tamasik hearing into three classes That in which fight with the enemies is described is best; where the fight, as of the Pandavas, with the enemies out of hatred, ill-feeling, is described is middling; and that where fighting is described without any cause is worst. Therefore, O highly intelligent one! Hearing the Puranas is far superior to hearing other S'astras, for thereby sins are destroyed, intellect is increased and Punyam (good merits) is stored. So, O intelligent one! Kindly describe to us, the Puranas, fulfilling all the requirements of life, that you heard before from the mouth of Krisna Dvaipayana". Hearing these words of the Risis, Suta said "O highly fortunate ones! When you all are desirous to hear the Puranas and I am ready to tell them, then both of us are blessed on the surface of the earth". In days of yore, in the time of Pralaya (universal dissolution) when the three lokas and the entire universe dissolved in water, when the Devadeva Janardana was lying asleep on the bed of Ananta, the thousand headed serpent, arose from the was of the ear of Bhagavan Visnu, the two very powerful Daityas Madhu and Kaitabha; they grew in the waters of the ocean and played around in the waters and thus passed some of their time. Once, on a time, when the two huge bodied Danavas were playing with each other like two brothers, they thought that the general rule of the universe is that no effect takes place without a cause and nothing can rest without the receptacle thereof. But we cannot understand what is our receptacle or who is resting on us. Whereon rests this pleasant expanse of wide ocean? Who was it that created this? How was this created? Why are we living here merged within the water? Who created us? and who are our father and mother. Nothing of a these we know. Thus thinking, when they could not come to any conclusion, Kaitabha spoke to Madhu, beside him.

within the waters "O Brother! It seems to me the great immoveable force that makes us rest in this water is the cause of all. This whole mass of water, too, pervaded by that force, rests on that; that Highest Devi must be the Cause of us".

When the two Asuras, merged in this thought, understood this, they heard in the air the beautiful Vagvija (the seed mantra of Vak, the speech, the Devi Sarasvati). They then began to pronounce repeated the Vagvija mantra and practised it with the great steadfastness. Next they saw, risen high up in the air, the auspicious lightning and thought that certainly our mantra that we are repeating has made Herself visible in this form of light and thus we have seen certainly in the air, the saguna form (form with attributes) of Sarasvati, the goddess of Speech. Thus thinking in their minds they, without any food, with their minds controlled, constantly thought of that, with their whole mind collected on that, and repeating and meditating the mantra became one with that. Thus they passed one thousand years in practising that great tapas; when the Highest Adya S'akti became pleased with them and seeing the two Danavas, steadfast in the practice of Tapas, tired, address them, invisibly in the way of celestial voice thus "O two Danavas! I am exceedingly pleased with your tapasya; so ask boon whatever you desire; I will grant it." Hearing, then, the celestial voice, thus the two Danavas said "O Devi! O Suvrate! Grant us that we will die wheni/i/e will." Hearing this, VagdevT said "O two Danavas! Certain by My grace, you two will die when you will and you two brothers will be invincible of all the Suras and Asuras. There is no doubt in this".

Suta said When the Devi granted them this boon, the two Danavas, puffed up with pride, began to play with the aquatic animals in the ocean. O Brahmins! Some days thus passed away when the two powerful Danavas saw the Brahma, the Prajapati, seated on the lotus of navel of Hah. Doubt came on their minds and they told him with a view to fight"O Suvrata! Either fight with us, or leave off this lotus seat and go any where you like. If you be so weak, this auspicious lotus seat not fit for you. For this should be enjoyed by the heroes. So if you be a coward, leave it quickly". Hearing these words of the Danavas, Prajapati, engaged in the practice of Tapasya, saw the two great powerful heroes and began to think anxiously "What should be done now" and waited there.

Thus ends the sixth chapter of the first Skandha on the preparation for war by Madhu Kaitabha in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-26. Suta said Seeing the two Danavas very powerful, Brahma, the knower of all the S'astras, thought of the means Sama, Dana, Bheda, Danda (conciliation, gifts, bribe, or sowing dissensions and war or punishment); which of these four he should apply. He thought thus "I do not know their strength and it is not advisable to enter into war without knowing their strength. Again if I offer praises to them puffed up with pride, it will be simply displaying my own weakness; and when they will come to know this, only one of them will be sufficient to kill me and this they will do certainly. To offer bribes is not also advisable; and how can I sow dissensions. Therefore it is best that I should rouse the four armed Janardana Visnu, who is very powerful, from his sleep on the thousand headed Ananta serpent. He will remove my difficulties".

Thus thinking in his mind, Bhagavan Brahma, the lotus-born remained in the tubular stalk of the lotus from Visnu's navel and thence took refuge mentally of Visnu, the remover of difficulties and began to chant auspicious hymns composed of various metres to Jagannath Narayana, involved in deep Yoganidra (meditative sleep). He said "O Refuge of the poor! O Hah! O Visnu! O Vamana! O Madhava, Thou art the Lord of the universe and omnipresent. O Hrisikes'a! Thou removest all the difficulties of Thy devotees; therefore leave your Yoganidra and get up. O Vasudeva! O Lord of the Universe! Thou residest within the hearts of all and knowest their desires.

O Thou, holder of the disc and club! Thou always destroyest the enemies of Thy devotees; O Omniscient One! Thou art the Lord of all the Lokas and all-powerful; no one can know what is Thy form; O Lord of the Devas! Thou art the destroyer of all pains and sufferings! So get up and protect me. O Protector of the Universe! nothing is concealed from Thy eyes! Every one becomes pure by hearing and chanting Thy name. Thou art Nirakara (without any form); yet Thou Greatest, preservest and destroyest the Universe. O Cause of the world! O Supporter of all! Thou art shining as king of kings over all and yet Thou dost not understand that the two Danavas, puffed up with pride have become ready to kill me. If thou dost neglect me, seeing me very much distressed and under your protection then Thy name as Preserver will become quite useless. Thus praised, when Visnu did not get up, Brahma thought that "Bhagavan Visnu is now surely under the influence of sleep of the Primal Force Adya S'akti and is not therefore getting up; what am I to do now, thus distressed! These two Danavas, elated with pride are ready to kill me; now what am I to do and where shall I go? I don't find any body who can protect me any where." Thus thinking, Brahma came to the conclusion and decided to chant hymns to Yoga Nidra Herself with one pointed heart. Discussing in his mind. He thought that that Adya S'akti (the Prime Force) which kept Bhagavan Visnu, senseless and motionless would alone be able to save him. As a dead man cannot hear any sound so Hah, merged in deep sleep, knows not anything. When I have praised Him so much and when He has not awakened, then it is certain that sleep is not under Hah, but Hah is under sleep, and he who is under another becomes his slave; so this Yoga Nidra is now exercising Her control over Hari. Again she, too, who brought Hah under control, that daughter of the Krsira (milk) ocean is now under the control of Yoga Nidra; so it seems that that Bhagavati Mahamaya has brought the whole Universe under Her control.

Whether it be Myself, or Visnu or S'ambhu, or Savitri or Rama or Uma, all are under Her control; there is nothing to be doubted here? What to speak of other high souled persons! Now I will chant hymns to Yoga Nidra, under whose influence Bhagavan Hari even is lying, under deep sleep, inert like an ordinary man. When the eternal Vasudeva Janardana will be dispossessed by Her, He will no doubt fight with the Danavas. Thus deciding, Bhagavan Brahma, seated on the tubular stalk of the lotus, began to chant hymns to Yoga Nidra, residing on the body of Visnu, thus 27-32. Brahma said "O Devi! I have come to understand on the authority of all the words of the Vedas, that Thou art the only One Cause of this Universal Brahmanda. The more so when Thou hast brought the best Purusa Visnu, endowed with discrimination above all beings, under the control of sleep, then the above remark is self- evident.

O Thou, the Player in the minds of all beings! O Mother! I am extremely ignorant of the knowledge of Thy nature; when Bhagavan Hari is sleeping inert by Thy power, then who is there amongst Kotis and Kotis of wise men, who can understand completely the Pastime, Leela, full of Maya of Thine, who art beyond the Gunas. The Sankhya philosophers say (that the Purusa (the male aspect of S'akti) is the pure, conscious being and that Thou art the Prakriti, without any consciousness, material inert, Creatrix of the universe; but, O Mother! art Thou really inert like that? Never like that; had it been like that, how is it that Thou hast made Bhagavan Hari, the receptable of the world quite unconscious like this? O Bhavani! Thou, being beyond the Gunas art displaying like a dramatic performance these various dramatic plays by the conjunction with the three Gunas. It is Thy three qualities, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas that the Munis meditate every day in the morning mid-day, and evening, the three Sandhyas; but no one is aware of Thy ways of doings. O Devi! Thou art of the nature of the judgment and understanding giving rise to knowledge of all the beings in the Universe; Thou art always the S'ri (wealth and prosperity) giving pleasures to the Devas. O Mother! Thou art reigning in all as Kirti (fame), mati (intellect), Dhriti (fortitude). Kanti (beauty) S'raddha (faith) and Rati (enjoyment). O Mother! Now I am put to great difficulties and therefore I have got eye witness of Thy nature; no need of further reasoning and discussing about it.

27-50. I have now known that verily, verily Thou art the only Mother of all the worlds as Thou hast brought Hah under the influence of sleep. O Devi! Now when it is evident that all the worlds, etc., have come from Thee, then the Vedas have also come from Thee; what doubt is there? So the Vedas, too, do not know fully Thy nature; for the effect can never know its cause. So, it is very true that Thou art incomprehensible of the Vedas, O Mother! When I, Hah, Hara and the other Devas and my son Narada and other Munis have not able to realise Thy nature fully, then who else can be so intelligent in this world that will realise all Thy nature? So Thy glory is beyond the speech of all beings. O Devi! If, in the place of sacrifice, the ritualists, the knowers of the Vedas, do not utter Thy name Svaha, then the Devas, participators of the offerings in Yajha, do not get their share, however hundreds of oblations be offered; so Thou art also the giver of sustenance allowances to the Devas. O Bhagavati! In previous Kalpas, Thou hadst saved me terrified from the fear of the Danavas. O Devi Varade! now, too, I am terrified at the sight of the terrible forms of Madhu and Kaitabha and take Thy refuge. O high-minded one! Now I thoroughly see that by Thee, by Thy power Yoganidra the whole body of Bhagavan Visnu is senseless; but how is it that Thou dost not realise my sufferings. So, either dost Thou leave possession of this Adi-Deva, or destroy Thyself these two Danavendras - lost do either of the two as Thou likest. O Devi! Those that do not know Thy extraordinary powers, those stupid ones meditate Hari, Hara, etc.

But, O Mother! By Thy grace, I realise to-day, as eye-witness, that Visnu even is to-day lying unconscious in deep sleep, totally senseless of anything outside by Thy force. O Bhagavati! Now, when Kamala, the daughter of Sindhu is unable to rouse Her husband Hari, by her effort, or rather Thou hast made Her, too, perforce, sleep unconsciously, it seems she is without any effort and does not know anything of what is going on outside. O Devi! Verily those are blessed who worship Thy lotus feet with their whole heart full of devotion and without any hope of getting rewards, abandoning the worship of other Devas and knowing Thee as the Creatrix of the whole world and the giver of all desires. Alas! now the intelligence, beauty, fame, and all good qualities have forsaken Hari and fled away to some unknown quarters. O Bhagavati! Thou art really adorable in the three worlds for, by Thy power of Yoganidra, Hari has been kept in prison, as it were, in this way. O Mother! Thou art the S’akti of all this universe and endowed with all prowess and energy; all other things are Thy creation. As a dramatic player, though one, plays in the theatre, assuming many forms, so Thou, too, being one, playest always in this charming theatre of world, created by Thy Gunas, in various forms.

O Mother! Thou, in the beginning of the Yugas, dost manifest first the Visnu form and givest him the pure Sattrik Sakti, free from any obscuration and thereby madest Him preserve the Universe; and now it is Thyself that hast kept Him thus unconscious; therefore, it is an undoubted fact that Thou art doing whatever Thou wiliest, O Bhagavati! I am now in danger; if it be Thy desire not to kill me, then dost break the silence, look on me and show Thy mercy. O Bhavani! If it be not Thy desire to kill me, then why hast Thou created these two Danavas, my death incarnate; or is it that Thou wantedest to put me to ridicule. I have come to know of Thy wonderful acts; Thou createst this whole Universe, and Thyself remaining aloof, playest always and in the time of Pralaya resolvest everything again into Thee. Therefore, O Bhavani, what wonder is there, that Thou wouldst want to kill me in this way? But, O Mother! I won't feel any pain if Thou willingly killest me but this is to my great dishonour that being given power over these beings, I would then be made an object to be killed by the Daityas; this, indeed, is hard to me. So, O Thou Leelamayi like a sportive girl! get up! O Devi! assumest the wonderful form Thyself and killest me or the two Daityas, as Thou wiliest; or rouse Hari who will then kill the Daityas. All these are in Thy hands.”

Suta said Thus praised by Brahma, the Nidra Devi (the goddess of sleep), of the nature of Tamo Gunas, quitted the body of Bhagavan Hari and stood by him. When thus left completely by the Devi Yoga Nidra, of unequalled brilliance and splendour, for the destruction of Madhu Kaitabha, Visnu began to move his body and at this Brahma became very glad.

Thus ends the seventh chapter of the First Skandha on the praise of the Devi in the Maha Puranam S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Vedavyas.

English translation

1-7. The Risis said "O highly fortunate one! A great doubt has arisen on your statement. This is ascertained by all the wise men as written in the Vedas, Puranas and other Sastras that Brahma, Visnu and MahesVar, these three Devas are eternal. None is superior to them in this Brahmanda. Brahma creates all the beings, Visnu preserves and MahesVar destroys all in due time. These are the causes of creation, preservation and destruction. The Trinity Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a are really one form, indeed. Trinity in Unity and Unity in Trinity.

Being endowed respectively with Sattva, Raja and Tamo Gunas they do their respective works. Amongst these, again, Purushottam Adideva Jagannath Hah, the husband of Kamala is the best; for he is capable of doing all the actions; no other than the Visnu, of unrivalled prowess is so capable. How is it, then that Yogamaya has overpowered Hari with sleep and made him altogether senseless? O highly fortunate one! whither did, then, go that extraordinary self knowledge and power, etc., of Hari while alive? This is our greatest doubt; so kindly advise us that our this doubt be removed and our well-being be thus ensured.

8-30. What is that S'akti? Which you mentioned to us before; as well by whom Visnu is conquered? Whence is She born? What is the power of that S'akti and what is Her nature? O Suvrata! explain to us these fully.

How was it that Yogamaya overpowered with sleep the Highest Deity Bhagavan Visnu who is everlasting-intelligence bliss! who is the God of all, the Guru of the whole world, the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer, who is omni-present, an incarnate of purity and holiness and beyond Rajoguna; how was such a personage brought under the control of sleep? O Suta! You are very intelligent and the pupil of Vyasa Deva; destroy our this doubt by the sword of wisdom.

Hearing this, Suta said:--"o highly fortunate Munis! There is none in the three Lokas who can clear your this doubt; the mind-born sons of Brahma, Narada, Kapila and other eternal sons get bewildered by these questions; what can I, then, say on this very difficult point!

See, some persons call Bhagavan Visnu omnipresent, the preserver of all and the best of all the Devas; according to them all this universe moving and non-moving, is created by Visnu; they bow down before the Highest Narayan Hrisikes'a Janardana Vasudeva and worship Him, whereas others worship Mahadeva S'ankara, having Gauri for the other half of his body, endowed with all powers, residing in Kailas'a, surrounded by hosts of bhutas, that destroyed the Daksha's sacrifice, who is mentioned in the Vedas as S'as'is'ekhara (having moon on his forehead), with three eyes and five faces and holding trident in his hand and known as Vrisadhaja and Kaparddi. O highly intelligent ones! There are some other persons, that know the Vedas and worship the Sun everyday in the morning, mid-day and in the evening with various hymns.

In all the Vedas, it is stated that the worship of the sun is excellent and they have named the high-souled sun as Paramatma (the Highest Deity). Whereas there are other Vedavits (the knowers of the Vedas) who worship the Devas, Fire, Indra, and Varuna. But the Maharsis say, that as Ganga Devi (the river Ganges), though one, is expressing Herself by many channels, so the one Visnu is expressing in all the Deva forms. Those who are big Pundits, declare perception, inference, and verbal testimony as the three modes of proofs. The Naiyayik Pundits add to the above three, a fourth proof which they call upama, resemblance, similitude and some other intelligent Pundits add another fifth proof called Arthapatti, an. inference from circumstances, presumption, implication. It is deduction of a matter from that which could not else be; it is assumption of a thing, not itself perceived but necessarily implied by another which is seen, heard or proved; whereas the authors of the Puranas add two other, called SaksT and Aitijhya, thus advocating, seven modes of proofs. Now the Vedanta S'astra says that the supreme being (Param Brahma), the Prime cause of the Universe, cannot be comprehended by the above-mentioned seven proofs. Therefore, first of all, adopt the reason leading to sure belief, the Buddhi, according to the words of the Vedas and discriminate and discuss again and again and draw your inference about Brahma.

And the intelligent person should adopt what is seen by perception as self-evident and what is inferred by the observance of good conduct. The wise persons say, and it is also stated in the Puranas, that the Prime Force is present in Brahma as the Creative Force; is present in Hari as the Preservative Force; is present in Hara as the Destructive Force; is present in Kurma (tortoise) and in Ananta (the thousand headed Snake) as the earth supporting Force; is present in fire as the Burning Force, is present in air as the moving Force, and so is present everywhere in various manifestations of forces.

31-51. In this whole Universe, whoever he may be, all are incapable of any action if he be deprived of his force; what more than this, if S'iva be deprived of Kula Kundalini S'akti, He becomes a lifeless corpse; O great ascetic Risis! She is present everywere thus in every thing in this universe from the highest Brahma to the lowermost blade of grass, all moving and non-moving things. Verily everything becomes quite inert, if deprived of force; whether in conquering one's enemies, or in going from one place to another or in eating - one finds oneself quite incapable, if deprived of force. Thus the omnipresent S'akti, the wise call by the name of Brahma. Those who are verily intelligent should always worship Her in various ways and determine thoroughly the reality of Her by every means. In Visnu there is the Sattviki S'akti; then He can preserve; otherwise He is quite useless; so in Brahma there is Rajasi S'akti and He creates; otherwise He is quite useless; in S'iva, there is Tamasi S'akti and He destroys; else He is quite useless. Thus, arguing again and again in one's mind, everyone should come to know that the Highest Adya S'akti by Her mere will creates and preserves this Universe and She it is who destroys again in time the whole Brahmanda, moving and non-moving; no one is capable to do his respective work be he Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'var, Indra, Fire, Sun, Varuna or any other person whatsoever; verily all the Devas perform the respective actions by the use of this Adya S'akti. That She alone is present in cause and effect and is doing every action, an be witnessed vividly. The intelligent ones call that S'akti twofold; one is Saguna and the other is Nirguna. The people, attached to the senses and the objects, worship the Saguna aspect, and those who are not so attached worship the Nirguna aspect. That conscious S'akti is the Lady of the fourfold aims of life, religion, wealth, desires, and liberation. When She is worshipped according to due rules. She awards all sorts of desires. The worldly persons, charmed by the Maya of this world, do not know Her at all; some persons know a little and charm others; whereas some stupid and dull-deaded Pundits, impelled by Kali, start sects of heretics, Pasandas for the sustenance of their own bellies. O highly fortunate Munis! In no other Yugas were found acts as prevalent in this Kali Yuga, based on various different opinions and altogether beyond the pale of the Vedic injunctions. Behold again, if Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a be the supreme Deities, then why do these three Devas meditate on another One beyond speech, beyond mind and practise, for years, hard austerities; and why do they perform Yajhas (sacrifices) for their success in creation, preservation, and destruction? They know, verily, the Highest Supreme Being, Brahmani Devi S'akti eternal, constant and therefore they meditate Her always in their minds. Therefore the wise man, knowing this firmly, should serve in every way the Highest S'akti. O Munis! This is the settled conclusion of all the Sastras. I have heard of this great hidden secret from Bhagavan Krisna Dvaipayan. He heard it from Narada, and Narada heard it from his own father Brahma. Brahma heard this from Visnu. O Munis it is well that the wise even should not hear or think anything to the contrary from other sources; they should with their concentrated heart serve the Brahma Sanatani S'akti. It is clearly witnessed in this world that if there be any substance wherein this conscious S'akti does not exist, that becomes inert, quite useless for any purpose. So know this fully that it is the Highest Divine Mother of the Universe that is playing here, residing in every being.

Thus ends the eighth chapter of the first Skandha on deciding who is to be worshipped in the Mahapurana Sri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Vedavyasa.

English translation

1-49. Suta said:-o Munis! When the excellent Tannasi S'akti, the Goddess presiding over sleep came out from the eyes, mouth, nose, heart, etc., of the body of the World-Guru Visnu and rested in the celestial space, then the powerful Lord Visnu began to yawn and got up. He saw the Prajapati Brahma, terrified and spoke to him in words, deep like rumbling in the clouds "O Bhagavan Padmayone! What makes you come here, and leave your tapasya? Why do you look so terrified and anxious?" Hearing this, Brahma said: "O Deva! The two very powerful and very terrible Daityas, Madhu Kaitabha sprung from the wax of Thy ears approached to kill me; terrified thus, I have come to Thee. So, O Lord of the Universe! O Vasudeva! now I am quite out of senses and terrified; save me." Visnu, then, said "Now go and rest in peace, without any fear; let those two stupids, whose life has been well nigh exhausted, come to me for battle; I will certainly kill them."

Suta said While Bhagavan Visnu, the Lord of all the Devas, was thus saying, those two very powerful Danavas, elated with pride, came up there, in their search for Brahma. O Munis! The two proud Daityas stood there in the midst of the Pralaya water without anything to stand on and with calm attitude. They then spoke to Brahma as follows O You have fled and come here? You cannot escape. Go on and fight. I will kill You before this one.

Then I will kill him also who sleeps on this bed of serpent. Either give us battle or acknowledge yourself as our servant. Hearing their words, Janardan Visnu addressed them as follows:- "O two Danavas, mad for war! Come and fight with me as you like; I will surely curb your pride. O two powerful ones! If you trust me, come and fight". Hearing this, the two Danavas in the midst of that mass of water resting without any support, came up there to fight, with their eyes rolling with anger. The Daitya, named Madhu, became very angry, came up quickly to fight while Kaitabha remained where he stood. Then the hand-to-hand fight ensued between the two mad athletes; Bhagavan Hah and Madhu became tired; Kaitabha came up and began to fight. After that Madhu and Kaitabha joined and, blind with rage, began to fight again and again hand to hand with the very powerful Visnu. And Bhagavan Brahma and the Prime Force Adya S'akti witnessed this from the celestial Heavens. So the fight lasted for a long, long, time; yet the two Danavas did not feel a bit tired: rather Bhagavan Visnu became tired. Thus five thousand years passed away; Hari then began to ponder over their mode of death. He thought:-- “I fought for five thousands of years but the two formidable Danavas have not been tired anything, rather I am tired; it is a matter of great surprise. Where has gone my prowess? and what for the two Danavas were not tired; What is the cause? This is a matter, now, seriously to be thought over”. Seeing Bhagavan Hari thus sunk in cares, the two haughty Danavas spoke to him with great glee and with a voice like that of the rumbling of cloud “O Visnu! If you feel tired, if you have no sufficient strength to fight with us, then raise your folded palms on your head and acknowledge that you are our servant; or if you can, go on fighting. O intelligent one!

We will take away your life first; and then slay this four-faced Brahma”. Hearing the words of the two Danavas, resting there without any support in the vast ocean, the high-minded Visnu spoke to them in sweet consoling words “See, O heroes! no one ever fights with one who is tired, afraid, who is weaponless, who is fallen and who is a child; this is the Dharma of the heroes. Both of you fought with me for five thousands of years. But I am single handed; you are two, and both equally powerful and both of you took rest at intervals. I will therefore take rest for a while, and then fight with certainty. Both of you are very powerful and very much elated in vanity. Therefore rest a while. After taking rest for a while I will fight with you according to the just rules of warfare.” Hearing these words of Hari, the two chief Danavas trusted and remained far aloof, ready to fight again.

Now the four-armed Vasudeva, seeing them at a sufficient distance, began to ponder in his mind thus “How their death can be effected? Thinking for a time, he came to know that they have been granted, by the Supreme S’akti Devi, death at their will (Ichchamrityu); and therefore they are not getting tired. I fought so long with them uselessly; my labour went in vain. How then can I now fight, with this certain knowledge. Again if I do not fight, how these two Danavas, elated with their boon and giving troubles to all, be destroyed? When the boon is granted by the Devi their death is also well nigh impracticable. Who wants his own death, even placed in very great distressed circumstances. Attacked by terrible diseases, reduced to indigent poverty no one wants to die; so how can it be expected that these two haughty Danavas would want their death themselves? Therefore it is advisable me to take refuge of that Adya S’akti, the giver of the fruits of all desires. No desires can ever be fructified unless She is thoroughly pleased. Thus thinking, Bhagavan Visnu saw the beautiful Devi Yoga Nidra S’iva, shining in the air. Then the supreme Yogi, Bhagavan Visnu, of immeasurable spirit began to praise with folded palms that great BhuvanesVari Maha Kali, the giver of boons for the destruction of the Danavas. “O Devi! I bow down to Thee O Mahamaya, the Creatrix and Destructrix! Thou beginningless and deathless! O auspicious Chandike! The Bestower of enjoyment and liberation I do not know Thy Saguna or Nirguna forms; how then can I know Thy glorious deeds, innumerable as they are. To-day Thy undescribable prowess has been experienced by me, I being made senseless and unconscious by Thy power of sleep. Being tried again and again by Brahma with great care to bring me back to my consciousness, I could not become conscious, so much my senses were contracted down. O Mother! By Thy power. Thou didst keep me unconscious and Thou again hast freed me from sleep, and I also fought so many times. O giver of one's honour! Now I am tired; but Thou hast granted boon to the two Danavas and therefore they are not getting tired. These two Danavas, puffed up with pride, were ready to kill Brahma; and therefore I challenged them to fight with me and they too are fighting fiercely with me in this vast ocean. But Thou hast granted them the wonderful boon that they will die whenever they will; and therefore I have now come to Thy refuge, as Thou protectest those that come under Thy shelter. Therefore, O Mother, the remover of the Devas' troubles! These two Danavas are become exceedingly elated by Thy boon and I, too, am tired. Therefore dost Thou help me now. Seel those two sinners are ready to kill me; without Thy grace, what can I do now? and where to go?”

50-59. Thus praised by the eternal Vasudeva Jagannatha Hah, with humility and pranams, the Devi Maha Kali, resting in the air, said smiling “O Deva deva Hah! Fight again; O Visnu! These two heroes, when deluded by My Maya, would be slain by you; I will delude them certainly, by My side long glance; O Narayana! then slay quickly the two Danavas, when conjured by My maya”.

Suta said Hearing these loving words of Bhagavati, Bhagavan Visnu went to the scene of battle in the middle of that ocean, when the two powerful Danavas of serene tempers and eager to light, became very glad on seeing Visnu in the battle and said “O four¬ armed one! we see your desire is very lofty indeed; well stand! Stand! now be ready for battle, knowing that victory or defeat is surely dependent on Destiny. You should think now thus Though it is generally true that the more powerful one wins victory; but it also happens sometimes that the weak gets the victory by queer turn of Fate; so the high souled persons should not be glad at their victories, nor should express their sorrows at their defeat; so don’t be glad, thinking, that you on many former occasions fought with many Danavas who were your enemies, and got the victory; nor be sorry that now you are defeated by the two Danavas”. Thus saying, the powerful Madhu Kaitabha came up to fight. Seeing this, Bhagavan Visnu struck them immediately by fist with great violence; the two Danavas, elated with their strength, struck Hah in return with their fists. Thus fighting went on vigorously.

60-87. Now seeing the two Danavas of great powers, fighting on incessantly, Narayana Hari cast a glance expressive of great distress, towards the face of the Devi Mahakali. Seeing Visnu thus distressed, the Devi laughed loudly and began to look constantly with eyes somewhat reddish and shot towards the two Asuras side¬ long glances, of love and amorous feelings which were like arrows from the Cupid. The two vicious Daityas became fascinated by the side-long glances of the Devi and took great pleasures in them; being extremely agitated by these amorous darts, looked with one steady gaze towards the Devi, of spotless lustre. Bhagavan Hari, too, saw the wonderful enchanting pastime of the Devi. Then Hari, perfectly expert in adopting means to secure ends, began to speak smiling and in voice like that of the rambling cloud, knowing the two Danavas enchanted by Mahamaya, thus

O two heroes! I am very glad at the mode of your fighting. So ask from me boons. I will grant that to you. I saw many Danavas before, fighting; but never I saw them expert like you, nor I heard like this. I am therefore, very much satisfied by your such unrivalled powers. Therefore, O greatly powerful pair of Danavas! I wish to grant both of you any boon that you want. Seeing the Devi Mahamaya, the gladdener, of the Universe, the two Danavas felt themselves amorous; and therefore they became proud on hearing Visnu's those words and told Visnu, with their lotus-like eyes wide open, thus:--

O Hari! what do you like to give us? We are not beggars; we do not want anything from you. O Lord of the Devas! Rather we will give you whatever you desire; we are donors; not receivers. So O Vasudeva! Hrisi Kesa! We are glad to see your- wonderful fight; so ask from us any boon that you desire. Hearing their words, Bhagavan Janardan said “ If you both are so much pleased with me, then I want this that both of you be killed by me.” Hearing these words of Visnu, Madhu Kaitabha became very much wondered and thinking “we are now cheated” remained for some time merged in sorrow. Then reflecting that there is water everywhere and solid earth nowhere, they said

“O Janardana Hari! We know that you are truthful; therefore now we want this desired boon from you that you wanted to grant us before now grant us this desired boon of ours. O Madhusudana! We will be slain by you; but kill us, O Madhava! on a solid earth, free from any water; and thus keep your word.

S’ri Bhagavan Hari laughed and remembering His Sudarsan disc said “O two highly fortunate ones! Verily, I will kill both of you on the vast solid spot without any trace of water. Thus saying, the Devadeva Hari expanded His own thighs and showed to those Danavas the vast solid earth on the surface of water and said

“O two Danavas! See, here is no water. Place your two heads here; thus I will keep my word and you would keep your word.” Hearing this, Madhu Kaitabha thought over in their minds and expanded their bodies to ten thousand Yojanas. Bhagavan Visnu Hari also extended his thighs to twice that amount. Seeing this, they were greatly, suprised and laid their heads on the thighs of Visnu. Visnu of wonderful prowess, then cut off quickly with His Sudarsan disc the two very big heads over His thighs. Thus the two Danavas Madhu Kaitabha passed away; and the marrow (meda) of them filled the ocean. O Munis! For this reason, this earth is named Medini and the earth is unfit for eatable purpose.

Thus I have described to you all that you asked. The sum and substance is this that the wise persons should serve Mahamaya with all thei hearts. The Supreme S’akti is worshipped by all the Devas. Verily verily, I say unto you that this is decided, in all the Vedas and other S’astras that there is nothing higher than this Adya S’akti. Therefore this Supreme S’akti should be worshipped anyhow; either in Her Saguna form or in Her Nirguna state.

Thus ends the ninth Chapter of the first Skandha on the killing of Madhu Kaitabha in the Mahapurana S’rimad Devi Bhagavatann of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-37. The Risis said "O Suta! You told before, that Vyasa Deva, unrivalled spirit, composed all the Puranas and taught them to his own S'uka Deva; but how did Vyasadeva, who was incessantly engaged in tapasya, procreate S'uka? Describe to us in detail what you heard direct from Krisna Dvaipayana Vyasa". Suta said "O Risis! Hear how S'uka Deva, the best of the Munis and the foremost of the Yogis, was born of Vyasa Deva, the Satyavati's son.

On the very beautiful summit of Mount Meru, Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, firmly determined, practised very severe austerities for the attainment of a son. Having heard from Narada, he, the great ascetic, repeated the one syllabled mantra of Vak and worshipped the Highest Mahamaya with the object of getting a son. He asked. Let a son be born to me as pure and as spirited and powerful as fire, air, earth, and Akas'a. He thought over in his mind that the man possessed of S'akti is worshipped in this world and the man devoid of S'akti is censured here, and thus came to the conclusion that S'akti is therefore worshipped every where; and, therefore,worshipped Bhagavan MahesVara coupled with the auspicious Adya S'akti and spent away one hundred years without any food. He began his tapasya on that mountain summit which was ornamented with the garden of Karnikar, where all the Devas play, and where live the Munis highly ascetic, the Adityas, Vasus, Rudras, Marut, the two As'vins, and the other mindful Risis, the knowers of Brahma and where the Kinnaras always resound the air with their songs of music, etc.; such a place Vyasa Deva preferred for his tapasya."

The whole universe was pervaded with the spirit of asceticism of the intelligent Parasara's son Vyasa Deva; and the hairs of his head were clotted and looked tawny, of the colour of flames. Seeing the fire of his asceticism, Indra, the lord of S'achi became exceedingly terrified. Bhagavan Rudra, seeing Indra thus afraid, fatigued and morose, asked him "O Indra, why do you look so fear-stricken to¬ day? O Lord of the Devas! What is the cause of your grief? Never show your jealousy and anger to the ascetics; for the mindful ascetics always practise severe asceticism with a noble object and worship Me, knowing Me to be possessed of the all powerful S'akti; they never want ill of any body". When Bhagavan Rudra said this, Indra asked him "What is his object?" At this S'ankara said For the attainment of a son, Prasara's son is practising so severe austerities; now one-hundred years is being completed; I will go to him, and give him to-day the auspicious boon of a son. Thus speaking to Indra, Bhagavan Rudra, the Guru of the world, went to Vyasa Deva and, with merciful eyes, said "O sinless Vasavi's son! Get up; I grant to you the boon, that you will get a son very fiery, luminous and spirited like the five elements fire, air, earth, water and Akas'a, the supreme Jhani, the store of all auspicious qualities, of great renown, beloved to all, ornamented with all Sattvik qualities, truthful and valorous.

Hearing these sweet words of Bhagavan S'ulapani Maharsi Krisna Dvaipayana bowed down to Him and went back to his own hermitage. Tired with the labour of penance for many years, he wanted to kindle fire by rubbing two fuels (Arani) with each other. While doing this the high souled man suddenly began to think strongly in his mind about procreating a son. He thought"Will it be that my son will be born as this fire is produced by the friction of the two churning sticks? I have not got the wife, which the Pundits designate a "Putrarani", the youthful wife endowed with beauty, born of a noble family, the chaste one I have not got with me. But the wife, though chaste and fit to beget a son, is undoubtedly a chain to both the legs so how can I get such a one for my wife? This is known to all that a chaste wife, though clever in doing all household duties, beautiful and giving happiness to one's desires, is yet always a sort of bondage. What more than this, that the ever Bhagavan Mahes'vara is always under the bondage of woman. How, then, knowing and hearing all these I can accept this difficult householder's life? While he was thinking thus, the extraordinarily beautiful Apsara Ghritachi fell to his sight close to him in the celestial air.

Though Vyasa Deva was a Brahmachari (holding in control the secret power of generation) of a very high order, yet seeing suddenly the agile Apsara (a celestial nymph) coming close to him and looking askance at him, he became soon smitten with the arrows of cupid and feeling himself distressed, began to think what shall I do in this critical moment.

Unbearable amorous feelings now have come over me; now if I take this celestial nymph, knowing that Dharma is everywhere looking, and woman has come to take away my precious fire of spirit acquired by my tapasya, then I will be laughed at by the high souled ascetic Munis who will think that I have lost my senses altogether. Alas! Why I who have practised for one hundred years the most terrible ascetism, have become so powerless by the mere sight of this Apsara! The Pundits declare the household life as the source of getting son, one's heart’s desire and the source of all happiness; so much so that it leads all the virtuous souls to the pleasures of Heaven, and ordains Moksa (liberation) to those who are Jhanins; and if I get such unrivalled happiness from this householder's life, I can have this Deva Kanya (the celestial nymph) though blameable. But again that happiness will not occur to me through her; there is no doubt in this. So how can I take her. I heard from Narada how, in ancient days, a king name Pururava fell under the clutches of Urvas'i and ultimately felt great pain, being defeated by her.

Thus ends the tenth chapter on S’iva's granting boon in the Mahapurana S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-86. The Risis said “O Suta! Who is that King Pururava? and who is the Deva girl Urvas'i? And how did that high-souled King Pururava conne into trouble? O son of Lomaharsana! Kindly describe now all these to me. We are now desirous to hear sweet words from the lotus of your mouth. O Suta! Your words are sweeter and more full of juice than nectar even; so we are not satiated by hearing them as gods are not satiated with the drink of nectar.”

Hearing this Suta said O Munis! I am now telling you, as far as my intelligence goes, what I heard from the mouth of S'ri Vyasa. Now hear that beautiful divine incident.

Once on a time the exceedingly beautiful dear wife of Brihaspati, named Tara, full of youth and beauty, of the most beautiful limbs and intoxicated with pride went to the house of Chandra Deva (the Moon), the yajaman (Employer of priest Brihaspati at any sacrifice) of Brihaspati. Seeing Tara of beautiful face like Moon, the Moon became very passionate; Tara also fell amorous at the sight of Moon. Thus both of them became very much passionately attached to each other. Then they, the Moon and Tara, being smitten by the arrows of Cupid and intoxicated with amorous passions began their sexual intercourse with reciprocal feelings of passionate love. Some days passed in this state. Brihaspati, then, being distressed with the pang of separation from his wife, sent his pupil to bring back Tara; but Tara was then submissive of Chandra and therefore refused to come. Brihaspati sent over and over again his pupil and when Chandra Deva returned the messenger, Brihaspati became very angry and went personally to Chandra's house and spoke angrily to the Moon who was puffed up with arrogance and somewhat smiling “O Moon! Why are you committing this vicious act, contrary to Dharma? Why are you keeping my beautiful wife in your house? I am your Guru; you are my client; O stupid! why are you enjoying your Guru's wife and keeping her in custody in your house? Do you not know that he who kills a Brahman, who steals gold, who drinks, who goes to wife of one's Guru are Mahapatakis (great sinners) and those who keep company of these are the fifth Mahapatakis? Therefore if you had enjoyed my wife, you are exceedingly vicious, blameable and a Mahapataki (great sinner); you are not fit to live amongst the Devas. O wicked one! Now I say that even now you better forsake Tara, who is of a blue colour and whose look is askance; I won't go from here without having Tara. And if you do not give back Tara, then you are certainly with her and undoubtedly I will curse you. When Brihaspati said so, Chandra, the husband of Rohini, spoke to his Guru Deva, who was very angry, sorry and afflicted at the separation from his beloved wife, thus In this world, the Brahmins that know the Dharma S'astras, that are devoid of anger, are fit to be worshipped; and those that are not so, they are objects of disrespect and not to be worshipped by all for their anger. O sinless one! The beautiful one will surely go to your house; what harm is there to you, if she waits here for a few days?

She is staying here of her own accord to enjoy pleasures and will go back of her own will. One word more You gave out before this opinion of the Dharma S'astras that as a Brahman though guilty of committing vicious deeds, becomes pure again by the practice of Karmas as enjoined in the Vedas, so a woman, too, though guilty of adultery, becomes pure again when she is again in the period of her menstruation. At these words of Chandra Deva, Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, became exceedingly sorry and anxious and went back immediately to his own house, with a grievous heart, full of amorous feelings. After staying in his own house for some days Brihaspati, worn out with anxiety, came again quickly to the house of Chandra; but, no sooner he was to enter the gate, he was stopped by the door-keepers; he became very angry and stopped at the gate way. And when he saw that Chandra did not make his appearance, he became exceedingly angry and thought“Oh! What a wonder is this? this irreligious Chandra, being my disciple, has done this vicious act and took by violence the wife of his Guru, who is reckoned as the mother; and I will now teach him a good lesson.”

standing on the entrance gate way Brihaspati began to speak aloud “O stupid, vicious, vilest of the Devas! Why do you now sleep in your inner room? Do return quickly my wife; else I will curse you at once. In case you do not bring me back my wife at once, I will now reduce you to ashes.” Hearing these foul words of Brihaspati, Chandra Deva the king of the Dvijas, quickly came out of the house and said smiling “O Brahmin! Why are you spending your stock of words for nothing? That all-auspicious lady, of a blue colour and looking askance, is not fit for you; therefore take another comparatively uglier woman for your use. Exceedingly youthful and lovely woman like her is not fit for a beggar's house. O stupid one! I see, you don't know anything about the Kama S'astra (the book that dwells on amorous passion); those wise men who are skilled in this S'astra assign for the women, their lovers equivalent to their beauty in matters of amorous dealings. So, O stupid man! go away wherever you like. I won't give you back your wife. Do whatever lies in your power. I won't return your wife. When you have become passionate, your curse won't affect me in any way. This I say finally unto you “O Guru! I will not give you back your wife; do what you wish.” Thus spoken by Chandra, Brihaspati became vary anxious and angry; he then went away quickly to the Indra's house.

Seeing Guru Deva morose and sorry, the very liberal minded Indra Deva worshipped him duly with padya, arghya, and Achamaniya and asked “O highly fortunate one! Why do you look so anxious? O great Muni! Why are you grievous and sorry? You are my Guru; is it that you are insulted by any one in my kingdom; say freely. All the Regents of the several quarters (the Lokapalas) and all the Deva armies are under your command. Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'var and other Devas are ready to lend you every assistance, no doubt. So say what is the cause of your anxiety?” Hearing these words of Indra, Brihaspati said “Chandra has stolen my beautiful-eyed wife. I asked for her, again and again, but that wicked soul is not returning me my wife at all. O Lord of the Devas! What am I to do now? You are my help and guide. O S'atakratu! You are the lord of the Devas; therefore I pray to you with a very grievous heart, help me in this matter.” Hearing this, Indra said “O knower of Dharma! Do not be sorry. O Suvrata! I am your servant. O highly intelligent one! Surely I will bring you back your wife. I will send a messenger and even then if Chandra, mad with pride, do not return your wife, I will wage war with him and fight against him, with all our Deva armies.” Thus consoling Brihaspati, Indra sent a very clever man, who was a good speaker and wonderful in his capabilities, to Chandra. The clever and wise messenger went to the Chandra Loka (the region of the Moon) and spoke to Chandra, the husband of Rohini, thus “O Mahabhaga! Indra has sent me to you to communicate his message to you. So O intelligent one! I will tell you what he has ordered me; hear.” He said “O highly fortunate one! You know well Dharma and Niti S'astra (the science of morals); the more so, because the virtuous Maharsi Atri is your father. Therefore, O Suvrata! You ought not to commit such blameable act. See, all beings should protect their own wives always without remaining idle to the best of their powers; therefore, no doubt, quarrels would ensue necessarily on that point. O Sudhanidhi! as far as this point of protecting one's wife is concerned, your Guru Deva ought also to do his best. You ought to consider all persons like your own self.

O Sudhakara! You have got twenty-eight exceedingly beautiful wives, who are the daughters of Daksa; why then do you desire to enjoy the wife of your Guru? The beautiful Apsaras (celestial nymphs) Menaka and others are always residing in the Heavens; you can enjoy them to your heart's content; leave off the wife of your Guru. In case any powerful man commits an unworthy act out of egoism, the illiterate ones would follow them; so the Dharma will decline. Therefore, O highly lucky one! Do such as does not lead, for nothing, quarrels amongst the gods and leave your Guru's wife, even beautiful.” Hearing these words from the messenger, the Moon (Chandra Deva) became somewhat angry and, making gestures, replied to the messenger, as if to Indra, thus

O mighty armed one! As you yourself are the lord of the Devas and the knower of Dharma, so your priest, too, has become like you; the head of both of you are the same. You will find many that can show their learning and give advice to others, but you will find always very rare such persons as will act themselves to their own advices when occasion arises and wants them to fulfil their own words. O Lord of the Devas! All the persons take the opinion of the S'astras framed by Brihaspati then why the quarrel would ensue with me and the Devas when I an enjoying, according to his dictates, a woman who is herself willing? See also, that the rule in this world is might is right; all things go to the powerful man who can take by force; nothing falls to the lot of the weak; moreover this woman is mine and that woman is of another, this false notion comes to those whose brains are weak. When Tara, is so much attached to me and is not at all attached to Brihaspati, the above rule applicable to me all the more; how then can I quit the lady so much attached to me, according to the laws of Dharma and the morals? You can see also, that happiness reigns in that family where the wife is according to the will of the husband; how, then, can the household happiness exist when the lady of the house is always dissatisfied? Therefore the household happiness of the Guru is impossible as Tara is dissatified with Brihaspati since he enjoyed the wife of his younger brother Samvarta. Then the result comes to this, O thousand eyed one! How have you come to be thousand eyed! However that may be, you are the lord of the Devas; you can do whatever you like. O messenger! go and tell your lord of the Devas all that I have spoken; I will not return by any means that beautiful Tara.

When Chandra spoke thus, the messenger went back to Indra and communicated to him all that Chandra Deva had spoken. Hearing this, Indra became angry and ordered all the Deva forces to be ready at once. Hearing this news of war, S'ukracharya, out of enmity to Brihaspati, went to Chandra and spoke thus “O highly intelligent one! never return Tara; in case if war ensues between you and Indra, I will help you by my Mantra-S'akti.” On the other hand, Bhagavan S'ankara, hearing of the vicious act of Chandra's, taking his Guru's wife, and knowing that S'ukracharya was the enemy of Brihaspati, came to the assistance of the Devas. The great war.

then, ensued between the Devas like the terrific war of Tarakasura; it continued for many years. Then the grandfather Brahma, seeing the great havoc in the lives of the Devas and Asuras, came there on his vahan Hamsa, to secure peace and talked to Chandra “Quit the Guru's wife; if not, I will call Visnu and destroy all of you party.” He also desisted the son of Bhrigu, S'ukracharya, saying “O highly intelligent one! why has this wicked idea possessed your mind? Is it due to the bad association?” Then S'ukracharya also told Chandra, the lord of the medicinal plants, not to wage war and said “Better quit you now the Guru's wife. Your father Maharsi Atri has sent me to you for this purpose.” Chandra, then, hearing the strange words of S'ukracharya, returned to Brihaspati his wife Tara, though she was not satisfied with him and became herself pregnant.

Brihaspati returned with joy to his house, accompanied by his wife; the Devas and Danavas went away to their respective places. Brahma went to Brahmaloka and S'ankara went to Kailas'a.

Brihaspati began to pass his time happily with his beautiful wife; Some days went away when the wife of Brihaspati, Tara, gave birth to an all-auspicious son, having all the qualities of Chandra, on an auspicious day and under the influence of an auspicious star; seeing this new-born child, Brihaspati gladly performed the natal ceremonies of the child. Hearing that a son is born to him, Chandra sent a messenger to Brihaspati saying that “That the child is not his; but it is born out of the semen of mine; why, then, have you performed the natal ceremonies out of your own will?” Hearing these words of Chandra's messenger, Brihaspati said “No, this child is mine, no doubt, as he resembles quite like me.” When Brihaspati said this, war again ensued. The Devas and Danavas met each other again in battle field; and councils of war were held. Then, for the preservation of peace, Prajapati Brahma went there; and before all desisted the Devas; and Danavas, mad for war, and ready to fight against each other. Brahma, then, asked Tara “O auspicious one! say truly whose child is this? O beautiful one! if you say truly, then this war resulting in the loss of so many lives, will cease.” The handsome Tara, looking askance, lowered her head with shame and gently spoke to Brahma “This is the Chandra's child” and went inside. Chandra Deva, then, became very glad and took the child, put down its name as Budha and carried it, to his own house. Bhagavan Brahma, Indra and the other Devas went back to their respective places. All the spectators went also to their own places whence they came. O Munis! I have now described the birth of Budha, as the son of Chandra and in the womb of Brihaspati's wife, as I heard it from the mouth of Vyasa Deva, the son of Satyavati.

Thus ends the eleventh chapter of the 1st Skandha on the birth of Budha in the Mahapurana S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-53. Suta said O Maharsis! The son of the above mentioned Budha is the greatly religious Pururava, of a very charitable disposition, and always ready to perform sacrificial acts; he was born of a kshattriya woman named lla; and I will now describe how this Pururava was born of lla and Budha, kindly listen.

In days of yore there was a king named Sudyumna, very truthful and highly capable in keeping his senses under control. Once on a time, wearing beautiful ear-rings, with extraordinary bow named Ajagab and holding the arrow-case full of arrows on his back, he went out on hunt to a forest, riding on a horse, born of the country Sindhu, surrounded by a few of his ministers. Going about in the regions of forest, the king got for his shikar, buck, hare, boar, rhinoceros, bison, buffalo, young elephant, Srimar deer, wild fowl and various other animals fit for sacrificial purposes; thus he went on deep into the interior of the forest. This divine forest was adorned with rows of Mandara trees and situated at the bottom of the mount Sumeru. Various trees and flowers were spreading the beauty of the forest all around; at places were Asoka creepers, Vakula, Sal, Tal, Tamal, Champak, Panasa, mangoe, Nip, Madhuka, pomegranate, cocoanut, Yuthika, plantain, kunda creeper, and various other trees and flowers; at some other places the bowers formed of Madhavi creepers enhanced the beauty and shed the lustre all around. There were tanks and reservoirs of water in the forest filled with swans, karandavas, and other aquatic birds. The bamboo trees on their banks becoming filled with air were emitting sweet musical sounds; and at many places of that all blissgiving forest, there were bees humming sweetly and delighting the minds of people there. Now the Rajarsi Pradyumna became highly gladdened in his heart to see this interior of the forest, resonated with the cooing of the cuckoos and beautified by various lovely flowers; and no sooner he entered there than he was turned into a female and his horse, also, turned into a mare; the king, then, became seriously anxious. He began to think over and over again "What is this? How has this come to pass?" and became very ashamed and sorry and pondered over thus:--"What am I to do now? How can I in this woman condition go back to my house and how shall I govern my kingdom? Alas! Who has deceived me thus!" Hearing these astounding words of Suta, the Risis said "O Suta! You have mentioned that the king Sudyumna equal to god has been turned into a woman; this is very strange indeed!

Therefore, O Suvrata! What is the reason of his being turned into a mare? Kindly describe fully what that beautiful king did in the forest?"

Suta, said Once on a time, Sanaka and other Risis went to this forest to pay a visit to S'ankara, illuminating the ten quarters by their holy aura. But then Bhagavan S'ankara was in amorous dealings with S'ankari. The beautiful Devi Ambika was then naked and sitting on the lap of S'ankara and therefore became very much ashamed at their sight; She got up hurriedly, and putting on her cloth, remained there shuddering, with great shame and sensitiveness. The Risis, also, seeing them engaged in amorous dealings, went away quickly to the hermitage of Nara Narayana.

Then Bhagavan S'ankara, seeing S'ankari too much sensitive, said - "Why are you so much bashful and shy? I am doing just now what will give you pleasure. O Beautiful one! Whoever male will enter from to-day and hereafter, within the precincts of this forest, will be instantly converted into a woman." O Munis! Though the forest gave all delights to all, yet, having this defect, all the persons that know of this curse, carefully avoid the forest. No sooner did the King Sudyumna enter into the forest, out of ignorance, than he, as well as his attendants, were instantly turned into women; there could be no doubt in this. The king became overpowered with great care and anxiety and did not go back, out of shame, to his palace; but he began to wander to and fro on the outer skirts of that forest. He became known afterwards as the woman lla. Now, once on an occasion, Budh, while he was wandering at his will, came up there and seeing the beautiful lla with gestures and pastures and surrounded by women, became passionately attached towards her; and lla, too, seeing the beautiful Budh, the son of Chandra deva, became desirous to have him as her husband. They became so very much tied in love towards each other, that intercourse took place there. Thus Bhagavan Budh generated, in the womb of lla, Pururava; and lla gave birth, in due time, the son Pururava in that forest. She then, with an anxious heart, recollected, while in the forest, her (rather his), family priest Vasistha Deva. Now then Vasistha Deva, seeing the distressed condition of the king Sudyumna became affected with pity and pleased Mahadeva, S'ankara, the most auspicious Deva of all, by hymns and praises. When Bhagavan S'ankara wanted to grant him the boon that he desired, Vasistha Deva wanted that the king would be turned again into man as before. At this Bhagavan S'ankara said, in recognition of His promise, that the king Sudyumna would be alternately one month a man and the second month a woman and so on. Thus, by the favour of Vasistha Deva, the king Sudyumna got this boon and returned to his kingdom and began to govern it. When he used to be turned into a woman, he used to remain in the interior, and when he used to become a man, he governed his kingdom. At this the subjects became very anxious and did not welcome the king as they used to do before. Some days passed away in this way when the prince Pururava grew up into manhood. Then the king Sudyumna gave over to him the kingdom and made him the king of the new capital named Pratisthan; and started out to an hermitage to perform tapasya. He went to a beautiful forest, variegated with all sorts of trees, and got from the Devarsi Narada the excellent mantra of the Bhagavati Devi, consisting of nine letters. He began to repeat it incessantly, with an heart filled with love. Thus some days passed away when the all- auspicious Devi Bhagavati, the Saviour of the whole Universe, became pleased with the king and appeared before the king, assuming the divine beautiful form, composed of attributes, intoxicated with the drink, and with eyes rolling with pride, and riding on vahana, the lion. Seeing this divine form of the Mother of the Universe, the king lla (in this form) bowed down before Her with eyes filled with love and gladly praised Her with hymns thus “O

Bhagavati! What a fortunate being I am! That I have seen today the extraordinary world renowned benignant form of Thine granting grace and benefit to all the Lokas, I, therefore, bow down to Thy lotus-feet, granting desires and liberation, and served by the whole host of the Devas. O Mother! What mortal is there on this earth, who can fully comprehend Thy glories when all the Devas and Munis get bewildered in trying to know of them.

O Devi! I am thoroughly astonished to see Thy glories and Thy compassion towards the distressed and poor and helpless people. How can a human being, who is devoid of attributes comprehend Thy attributes when Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara, Indra, Chandra (moon), Havana (wind), Surya, Kuvera, and the eight Vasus know not Thy powers. O Mother! Bhagavan Visnu, of unrivalled brilliancy, knows Thee as a part of Thine only, as Kamala of Sattva Gunas and giving one all one's desires; Bhagavan Brahma knows Thy part only as the form made of Rajo guna and Bhagavan S’ankara knows Thee as Lima only made of Tamo Guna; but, O Mother! none of them knows Thy turiya form, transcending all the Gunas.

O Mother! where is my humble self, that is of very dull intellect and powerless, and where is Thy extremely propitious serenity and graciousness! Indeed such a gracious favour on me is certainly beyond expectation. Therefore, O Bhavani! I have come to realise, in particular, that Thy heart is full of unbounded mercy; for Thou dost certainly feel compassion for these Bhaktas that are full of Bhakti towards Thee. O Mother! what more shall I say than this, that Bhagavan Madhusudan Visnu, though married to Kamala, born from only a part of Thine, considers Himself unfit of Her and is therefore not happy; then the fact that He, the Adi Purusa gets his feet shampooed by Kamala merely corroborates the fact that He wants His feet to become pure and all auspicious to the world by the holy touch of Kamala's hands. O Mother! It seems to me that the ancient Purusa Bhagavan Visnu wants gladly to be kicked by Thee like As'oka tree, for his own improvement and pleasure; and therefore it is that Thou dost want, as if Thou hast become angry to kick (beat with one's legs) Thy husband, stricken by Smara (cupid, love) and worshipped by all the Devas, who lies prostrate below Thy feet.

O Devi; when Thou always residest on the calm broad chest, as if on a great cot, adorned beautifully of Bhagavan Visnu, as lightning in deep dense blue clouds, then it is without doubt that He, becoming the Lord of the Universe, has surely become Thy vahan (vehicle) (on account of carrying Thee on His breast), O Mother! If Thou forsakest Madhusudana, out of wrath. He becomes at once powerless and is not worshipped by any body; for it is seen everywhere that persons, though calm and serene, if devoid of S’ri (wealth and power) are forsaken by their relatives as reduced to a state having no qualities. O Mother! I am not to be ignored by Thee, on account of my being a woman, for was it not the fact, that Brahma and the other Devas who always take shelter of Thy lotus feet, had not all to assume once youthful feminine forms, while in Manidvipa, and I know this surely that Thou again didst make them of male forms. Therefore, O Thou of unbounded power! What shall I describe about Thy power?

Indeed, there is great doubt in my mind whether Thou art masculine or feminine? O Devi! Whoever Thou mayst be, whether with attributes on transcending the attributes, whether male or female, I always bow down to Thee, with heart full of devotion towards Thee.

O Mother! I want that I may have one unflinching devotion, towards Thee in my final state."

Suta said Thus praising the Devi, the king Sudyumna, in the form of the feminine lla, took refuge of the World Mother; and the Devi, becoming greatly pleased, gave to the king, then and there, union with Her own Self. Thus the king got the highest steady place, so very rare even to the Munis, by the grace of the Prime Force, the Devi Brahmamayi.

Thus ends the Twelfth Chapter of the first Skandha on the birth of Pururava, in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-34. Suta said O Maharsis! When the king Sudyumna had gone up to heavens, the religious king Pururava, endowed with great beauty and many qualities, and able to please the minds of his subjects began to govern his kingdom well, according to Dharma, with his heart intent on governing his people. No body knew what his counsel was, but he was very clever in knowing others' counsels. He was always highly energetic and his lordly power was great. The four methods of warfare, (1) con-ciliation, (2) giving gifts, (3) sowing dissensions and (4) war, were fully under his control. He saw that his subjects practised religion according to Varnas'ram (Colours and stages of life), and thus he began to govern his kingdom. Pururava, the lord of men, performed various sacrifices with abundance of Daksinas (sacrificial fees) and also gave away much in various charities, causing great wonder and astonishment. His extra-ordinary beauty and qualities, liberality and good nature, his unbounded wealth and prowess made the Apsara Urvas'i (celestial nymph) think of him often and she wanted him to satisfy her. Some time passed when that procud Urvas'T had to descend on this earth, due to a curse pronounced on her by a Brahmin; and she chose the king Pururava as her husband, thinking him to be endowed with all the qualities. She then addressed the king and made the following contract“O king, giving honour due to every body! I keep these two young sheep in trust and deposit with you; kindly look after these and, then, my honour will be preserved by you. O king! I will take ghee daily and nothing else for my food; and there is one word more; O king! Let me not see you naked, except when you hold sexual intercourse. O king I say this truly, that, in case there be any breach in this contract I will instantly leave you and go away.” The king accepted this contract of Urvas’T. Urvas’T, too, remained there according to the above contract and also with a view to pass away the period of her curse. During this time the king was fascinated with the love of Urvas’T and became so very much attached to her, that he left all his duties and dharma and remained long for many, many years in enjoying Urvas’T. The king's mind was so deeply absorbed in her, that he could not remain alone without her, even for a moment. Thus many years passed away, when, once on a time, Indra, the lord of the Devas, not seeing Urvas'i, asked the Gandarbhas and said “O Gandarbhas! Better go and steal away the two young sheep in a proper time from the palace of Pururava, and then bring Urvas'i here. My Nandana garden is now void of all beauty without Urvas’T; so bring the lady here any how or other.” Thus spoken by Indra, Vis'vavasu and other Devas went to Pururava's palace; and when it was dark in the night, and when Pururava was holding sexual intercourse with Urvas’T, stole away the two young sheep. They, when being carried away in the sky, cried out so piteously that Urvas’T came to hear that as if of her two sons, and angrily spoke to the king “O king! Now the contract that I made with you is verily fulfilled! It is that I placed my implicit confidence on you that this my misfortune has befallen on me; See! the thieves are stealing away the two sheep, my sons as they were! How then are you sleeping here like a woman? Alas! I am ruined in having an impotent husband who vainly boasts of his prowess!

Where are my two young sheep to-day that are dearer to me than my life?” Thus seeing Urvas’T wailing, the king Pururava, the lord of the Universe, ran after the Gandharvas instantly without any sense as it were, left in him, naked. The Gandharvas, then, cast rays of lightning in that room, and Urvas’T, willing to leave, saw the king naked when the Gandharvas left the two young sheep there and went away. The tired king brought the two sheep back to his house in that naked state. Then Urvas’T, too, seeing the husband naked, went away immediately to the DevT loka. Seeing Urvas’T going away, the king wailed very much with a very grievous heart. Then, being very much bewildered by the bereavement of Urvas’T, with his senses beyond control, and deluded by passion, wandered about in various countries, crying and giving vent to sorrow. Thus, wandering all over the globe, he came once to Kuruksettra and saw Urvas’T; then with a gladdened face said “O beloved! Wait, wait for a moment; my mind is all absorbed in you; it is quite innocent and submissive to you. So you ought not to forsake me in such a dire difficult time. O Devi! For the sake of you, I have travelled very far. O Beautiful one! The body that you embraced before, will now, forsaken by you, fall here and will be devoured by crows and wolves, and other carnivorous animals.” Seeing the king, tired and passion stricken, greatly distressed and with a very sorrowful heart and wailing, Urvas’i spoke out“O king! You are certainly a quite senseless man; whither has gone your extraordinary knowledge now? O king! Do you not know that the pure unalloyed love of women cannot take place with any other as the love of a wolf cannot fall on any man. Therefore the earthly men ought never to trust a bit to women and thieves. So go back to your palace and enjoy the pleasures of the kingdom; do not drown your mind further in sorrows.” The king Pururava, though thus brought to senses by Urvas’i, was so much fascinated by her love that his heart did not feel any consolation; rather he felt indescribable pain, being held up in bondage by the love of Urvas’i. O Munis! Thus I have described to you the character of Urvas'i; it is described, in detail, in the Vedas; I have stated this in brief.

Thus ends the thirteenth chapter of the 1st Skandha of the characters Urvas'i and Pururava; in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-70. Suta said O Maharsis! (Now hear the main topic). Seeing the dark-blue lady looking askance at him, Vyasa Deva thought “Indeed! What is to be done now? This Devakanya Apsara Ghritachi is not fit for my household.” Then, seeing Vyasa Deva thus thoughtful, the Apsara thought that the Muni might curse her and got terrified. Confounded by terror, she assumed the form of a S’uka bird and fled away; Vyasa, too, became greatly surprised to see her in the form of a bird. The moment Vyasa saw the extraordinary beautiful form of Ghritachi, the Cupid entered then, into his body, and his mind was filled with the thought of sweet feminine form and was gladdened and all his body was thrilled with pleasure so that the hairs of the body stood on their ends. The Muni Vyasa Deva tried his best and exerted his power of patience to its utmost, but failed to control his restless mind to enjoy the woman. Though he was very energetic, and he tried repeatedly to control his heart, enchanted with the beautiful form of Ghritachi, yet he could not, as due to a state of things pre-ordained by God, control his mind. At this state, when he was rubbing the fire sticks to get the sacred fire, the two pieces of wood used in kindling the fire, his seed (semen) fell upon the Arani (the two pieces of wood used in kindling the sacred fire). But he did not take any notice of that, and he went on rubbing the firesticks when arose from that Arani the wonderfully beautiful form of S’uka deva, looking like a second Vyasa. This boy, born of Arani fuel, looked there brilliant like the blazing fire of the sacrificial place, whereon oblations of ghee are poured. Seeing that son,Vyasa Deva was struck with great wonder and thought thus “What is this? How is it that my son is born without any woman.” Thinking for a while, he came to the conclusion, that this had certainly come to pass as the result of boon granted to him by S'iva. No sooner the fiery S’uka Deva, was born of Arani, he looked brilliant, like fire, by his own tejas (spirit). At that time Vyasa Deva began to look with one steady gaze the blissful form of his son as a second Garhapatya Fire, brilliant with the Divine fire. O hermits! The river Ganges came there from the Himalayas and washed all the inner nerves of the child S’uka Deva, by her holy waters and showers of flowers were poured on his head.

Vyasa Deva next performed all the natal ceremonies of the high- souled child; the celestial drums were sounded and the celestial nymphs began to dance and the lords of the Gandharvas Visvavasu, Narada, Tumburu and others began to sing with great joy for the sight of the son. All the Devas and Vidya Dharas began to chant hymns with gladdened hearts at the sight of the Divine form, the son of Vyasa, born of arani. O twice born ones! Then were dropped down from the sky the divine rod (Danda), Kamandalu, and the antelope skin. No sooner the extraordinarily brilliant S’uka Deva was born than he grew up, and Vyasadeva, who is master of endless learning and how to impart them to others, performed the son's Upanayana ceremony. No sooner the child was born than all the Vedas with all their secrets and epitomes began to flash in the mind of S’uka Deva, as it reigned in Vyasa

Deva. O Munis! Bhagavan Vyasa Deva gave the name of the child as S’uka as during the moment of his birth he saw the form of Ghritachi in the form of the S’uka bird. S’uka then accepted Brihaspati as his guru and began devotedly, with his whole head and heart to perform duly the Brahmacharya vow (the life of studentship and celebacy). The Muni S’uka remained in the house of his Guru and studied the four Vedas with their secrets and epitomes and all the other Dharma S'astras and gave Daksina to the Guru duly according to proper rules, and returned home to his father Krisna Dvaipayan. Seeing his son S’uka, Vyasadeva got up and received him with great love and honour and embraced him and took the smell of his head. The holy Vyasa asked about his welfare and about his studies and requested him to stay in that auspicious As'rama. Vyasa then thought of S’uka's marriage and he became anxious and began to enquire where a beautiful girl of a

Muni can be found. And he spoke to his son “O highly intelligent one! You have now studied all the Vedas and Dharma S'astras. Therefore, O sinless one! better marry now. O son! Take a beautiful wife, and leading a householder's life, worship the Devas and Piths, and free me from debt. There is no other way of issueless persons; he can never go to heaven; so O highly fortunate son of mine! Now enter into the life of a householder and make me happy. O highly intelligent one! I have big expectations from you; now try to fulfill them. O greatly wise S’uka! After a very severe asceticism, I have got you who are verily a Deva born without any womb. I am, therefore, your father; save me.” When Vyasa spoke thus to S’uka, making him sit close by, the highly dispassionate Suka at once made out that his father was terribly attached to the world and replied “O knower of Dharma! you have, by the power of your great intelligence, divided Veda into four parts; why are you therefore advising me so now? I am your disciple; so give me true advice. Certainly I will obey your order.” At this Vyasa deva said “O son! I have got you after I had performed very severe tapasya, for one hundred years, and worshipped Bhagavan S'ankara in the sole object of having you. O highly wise one! I will ask some king and will give you sufficient wealth for your family expenses. So that you, having attained this much desired youth, enjoy the householder's life.” Hearing these words of the father, S’uka Deva said “O father! Kindly say this to me what pleasure is there in this earth that is not mixed with pain. The happiness, that is mixed with pain, is not called happiness by the wise. O highly fortunate one! when I will marry, I will become certainly submissive to that woman; see then how happiness can be possible to one who is dependent; especially to one, dependent on one's wife. Rather freedom can be obtained one day when one is tied to an iron or wooden pillar; but never freedom will come to that man who is tied by his wife and children. As the body of man is full of urine and faeces, so is the body of the woman. The more so, when I am born of no womb, how can I find happiness there; not only in this birth, but in my previous birth, too, I had no desire to be born of any womb. How can I desire now to enjoy the pleasure of urine and faeces in the face of the bliss of self that has got no other bliss equal to it? The high-souled persons, that find pleasure in their selves, never go after the sensual pleasures of the objects of enjoyments? When I studied first, the Veda in detail, it struck me that the Vedas dealt with the S'astra of Karma marga (the way of action); and it is all full of Himsa (injury to others). Then I took Brihaspati as my Guru to shew me the way to true wisdom; but soon I found that he, too, was attacked with the dreadful disease Avidya (ignorance) and plunged in the terrible ocean of world, full of Maya. So it became quite clear to my mind, how could he save me? If the physician be diseased himself, how can he effect cures to other diseases? When I am desirous of liberation, how can I get it from a Guru who is himself deeply attached to the world; how can such a one treat my case to free me, from the disease of attachment to this world? It would be merely a farce. I bowed down to the Guru and now I am come to you to save me, frightened by this terrible serpent of Samsara. Day and night the JTvas travel in this awful wheel of Samsara, this constellation of Zodiac; they are moving like the Sun and never get any rest. O father! If we discuss about the truth of Atman, we will at once find that there is no trace of happiness in this Samsara. As the worms enjoy pleasures in the midst of faeces, so the ignorant persons find pleasures in this Samsara. Those who have studied the Vedas and other S'astras and yet are attached to the world, are certainly deluded and blind like horses, pigs and dogs; no one is more stupid and ignorant than those persons. Getting this extremely rare human birth and studying the Vedanta and other S'astras, if they be attached to this world, then who are the men that will attain freedom? What more wonder can you find in this world than the fact that persons, attached to wives, sons and houses; are denominated as Pundits? That man who is not bound by this Samsara, composed of the three Gunas of Maya, is Pundit; that man is intelligent and he has understood the real import of the S'astras. What use can there be in studying the S'astras, in vain, that teach how to bind men more firmly in this Samsara, full of Maya.

That S'astra ought to be studied, which tells how a man would be liberated. The house is called "Griha" because it catches hold of a man firmly. So what happiness can you expect from the house which is like a prison? O father! I am therefore afraid. Those Pundits are certainly stupid and they are certainly deceived by the Creator, who having the birth even of men, become again imprisoned." Hearing these words of S'uka, Vyasa spoke as follows "O Son! The house is never a prison, nor is it the cause of any bondage; the householder whose mind is unattached, can get Moksa, in spite of his being such. Truthful, holy, earning wealth by just means and performing, according to rules the rites and ceremonies, as stated in the Vedas and doing S'raddhas duly, a householder can certainly get Moksa. See a man who is a Brahmachari, who is an ascetic, who is a Vanaprasthi or follows any other method or vow, all have got to worship the householder after mid-day. The religious householder, too; welcomes them all, with sweet words, and gives them food, with great love and respect, and thus does them an amount of good. For this reason the householder's stage is the most excellent of all; and I have not seen or heard of any other As'rama superior to it. For this reason Vas'istha and other Acharyas resorted to householder's life, in spite of their being endowed with great wisdom O highly fortunate one! If one performs duly the rites and ceremonies of the Vedas, there is nothing that is impracticable to him. Be it the birth in a good family, or the enjoyment of heavens say, or be it Moksa, whatever desires, it is fructified to success. Also there is no such rule that one will have to remain in one and in the same As'rama throughout his life. The Pundits who know Dharma say that pupils can go from one Asrama to another. Therefore, O child! accept Agni (the householder's fire) and try your best to do unremittingly your duties. O Son! Enter into a householder's life and appease the Devas, Piths and men; procreate sons and enjoy the pleasures of household life. When old age will come, quit the house and take up the Vanaprasthashram (the third stage) and go to a forest and perform the excellent vows and then take up the dharma of the Sannyasa (renunciation of everything).

O Fortunate one! He who does not take a wife, is certainly maddened by these indomitable five organs of action, five organs of senses and mind. Therefore, the makers of the S'astras say, that to save one self from the pernicious influences of these vicious senses, one is to take wife during his youth time and then be engaged in performing tapasya during his old age.

O fortunate one! In days of yore, the fiery Rajarsi VisVamitra practised very severe tapasya without any food for three thousand years, and thought he was very strong and shining like fire, he was fascinated by the charm of the celestial nymph Menaka. And an auspicious daughter was born from the womb of Menaka by VisVamitra. My father Paras'ara, though a great ascetic, was struck with Cupid's arrows at the sight of the daughter of a fisherman, named Kali and accepted her in the boat. What more than this, that Brahma seeing his own daughter Sandhya was struck by passion and ran after her, when Bhagavan Rudra Deva made him unconscious by his Humkar sound and made Brahma desist from the attempt.

So, O fortunate one! Take my word pregnant of good issues and marry a lady, born of a good family, and follow the path presented in the Vedas.”

Thus ends the fourteenth Chapter of the 1st Skandha, on the birth of S’uka Deva and the duties of householders in the Maha Purana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Vedavyas.

English translation

1-67. Hearing these words of Vyasa Deva S'uka Deva said O Father! I do not like at all to take to a householder's life; as I see clearly that it fastens men, as a cord fastens animals, and is a source of incessant pain. O Father! Where can you expect happiness from a householder who is always loaded with anxiety how and whence to get wealth? Those, who have greed for wealth, oppress their poor relatives, even; and extort money. Even one who is the lord of the three worlds, who is their Indra, he also is not so happy as a beggar, that has no desires. See, then, who else can be happy in this world?

Whenever an ascetic is seen to practise severe asceticism, Indra, the lord of the Devas becomes anxious and sorry, and raises various obstacles in his way. See also that Brahma is not happy with his big samsara (his creation which is his house). Bhagavan Visnu, though He has got His beautiful Kamala, the presiding Deity of all wealth and prosperity, is always suffering, since He is incessantly engaged in fighting with the Asuras; and though He is the husband of Laksmi and full of prosperity. He practises, almost, every now and then, terrible asceticism with great care and earnestness. So who else is there, who is possessed of constant happiness? I know also Bhagavan S'ankara, too, suffers incessant troubles and has to fight against the Daityas. So, then, O Father: how can a poor householder be happy when the rich householder cannot sleep happily, with his constant care for wealth. O highly fortunate one! Knowing full well this truth of the world, why are you plunging me, your son, in this terrible Samsara, full of pains and agonies.

O Father! What shall I say to you about the miseries of the world! There is pain in birth, pain in old age, pain in death, and pain in the life in the womb full of urines and faeces; but the pain, arising from desire and greed, is more terrible than all the pains mentioned above; and then, the pains experienced while asking for them are greater than the pangs of death. Alas! There is no other way for the Brahmans to earn their livelihood than to accept gifts from others. Therefore the Brahmans have to suffer daily death-like pangs in having to wait in expectation from others; can there be anything more regrettable than this? The Brahmanas, studying all the Vedas and Dharma S'astras and acquiring wisdom, have got at last to go to the rich and praise them (in expectation of some money) carefully. O Father! if one does not become a householder, then what care is there to feed one's own belly? If there be contentment in the mind, any how the belly can be filled with leaves, roots and fruits; but if there be wife, sons and grandsons and many dependent relatives, then to feed them all, much trouble and anxiety are experienced. So how can you expect, O Father! perfect happiness in the world? So teach me, O Father! the S’astras on Yoga and eternal truth that will give perfect happiness; no advice in karma kanda (the series of actions) will bring me pleasure. Now advise me how the karmas can be exhausted; how the root of the three sorts of karmas, Sanchita, Prarabdha, and Vartamana, giving torments of birth, death, etc., the Avidya, the great ignorance, can be destroyed? The fools do not understand how the women suck the blood out of persons like leeches, for they get themselves deluded by their gestures and postures! The lady of the house, whom the people call kanta, the beautiful one, steal away the semen virile, the strength and energy in the way of giving them happiness as sexual intercourse, and their minds and wealth and everything by their crooked love conversations; so see what greater thief can there be than a woman? In my opinion, those that are ignorant are certainly deluded by the Creator; they accept wife to destroy their own pleasure of happiness. They can never understand that the women can never be the source of pleasure; they are the source of all miseries. Hearing these words of S’uka, Vyasa became merged in the deep sea of cares and anxieties, thinking what to do then. The incessant tears of pain flowed from his eyes; his whole body began to shiver and his mind became too much worried.

Seeing this distressed and sorrowful state of his father, S'ukdeva, with eyes full of wonder, said Oh! What a power has Maya got?

Oh! He, whose words are accepted by all, with great love and care as equivalent to the Vedas, who is the author of the Vedanta Dars'ana, and before whom nothing is veiled in ignorance. Oh! that greatest Pundit, the knower of all the Tattvas, is now deluded by Maya? Oh! what is that Maya who has been able to delude Vyasa Deva, the son of Satyavati, so skilled in the knowledge of Brahma Vidya; I also do not know how, with what great care, one is to practise Sadhana towards Her.

Alas! He who has composed eighteen Maha Puranas and the great Maha Bharata, who has divided the Vedas in four parts, the same Veda Vyas has today been deluded by the power of Maya! What to speak of other persons! Oh! Maya has deluded Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara and others and the whole universe; then who is there in the three worlds that is not fascinated by Her influence! I therefore, take refuge unto the Internal Governess, the Devi Maha Maya. Oh! what wonderful power She wields? By her own Mayic power. She has kept God even under Her control, who is omniscient and the Controller of all. The Pundits, who know the Puranas say, that Vyasa Deva is born of the part of Visnu; but, see the wonder, that he is today plunged in the sea of delusion like a merchant whose ship has been wrecked. Alas! How great is the wonderful power of Maya! The all-knowing Vyasa is today under the control of Maya and is weeping like an ordinary man! So I have come to the firm conclusion that the wise Pundits are incapable to surpass the strength of Maya. What a great error arises through the power of Maya! See! indeed!! who is he and who am I? What for we have come here? There is no certainty, nothing whatsoever, about that. And, see, also, how he has got the nice idea of "father" on his body and the idea of "his son" in my body, that are composed of five elements.

This is now quite evident to me that, when the Brahmin Maharsi Krisna Dvaipayan is weeping under the influence of Maya, She is the strongest of all; even those who are skilled in the great Maya fall under Her prey.

Then S'uka Deva bowed down mentally to the Devi, Maha Maya, who is the Creatrix of Brahma and the other Devas and who is the Controller of them all; and then began to speak the following auspicious words pregnant with reason, to his father Vyasa Deva, greatly distressed and plunged in the sea of sorrows "O Father! you are exceedingly fortunate, for you are the son of the high souled Paras'ara and you yourself are the instructor of real truth, the tattva jnana, to all persons; so, O Lord! why are you giving vent to sorrows, like an ordinary bewildered man? O Mahabhaga! why are you plunging yourself in this great error, though you are a high souled personage! See, it is quite true that now I am born as your son; but this I don't know what relation existed between you and me in my previous birth? So, O highly intelligent one! Open your eyes of wisdom, and be patient; do not throw yourself, in vain, in the sea of sorrows. All this universe is like a net of delusion; knowing this, abandon all your grief; why are you feeling yourself so much weak and distressed, for your attachment towards your son? Hunger is satisfied by eating something, and thirst is satisfied by the drinking of water; hunger is not satisfied by seeing the son. So the organ of scent is satisfied by smelling sweet scents; and the organ of hearing is satisfied by hearing sweet music; and when thirst arises to enjoy women, that is satisfied only by sexual intercourse; but what satisfaction can a son give? So what shall I do to you by remaining as your son? The son, in fact, is not the cause of any satisfaction to one's self. For this reason, in ancient days, the poor Brahmin Ajigarta gave his son to the king Harischandra, for necessary equivalent price in money, who wanted a man for his sacrifice where human beings are to be sacrificed as victims. In fact, those things that are urgently required as necessities give happiness; and all these articles can be obtained by wealth; so if you want to enjoy happiness, then earn money; of what use shall I be to you as your son? O Muni! you can see subtle things and you are greatly intelligent; so I pray to you, to look upon me as your son and open my eyes of wisdom, that I can be free for ever from this womb of birth. O Sinless one! To get a human birth in this land of Karma (in India) is very difficult; again to get a Brahmin birth is extremely rare; so when I have got this so very rare birth, why shall I spend my time in vain? O Father! Though I have served many spiritual teachers, fraught with wisdom, for many years, yet the firm idea "I am, as it were, bound up in this net of Samsara" the notion covered with dark darkness of ignorance, caused by desires, this net of Samsara does not leave me.

When the son S'uka Deva of extraordinary power and intelligence spoke thus, Vyasa saw that his son was strongly inclined to take to the four As'ram, that of Sannyasa and spoke thus O Son! If your mind has become so, then read Bhagavat Purana, composed by me, highly auspicious, voluminous, and the second Vedas.

In this you have the chapters on Creation (Sarga) and secondary creation (upa sarga), etc., the five characteristics as in other Puranas and it is sub-divided into twelve Skandhas. Hearing of this Bhagavata brings up to the mind that Brahma alone is real and all the universe is unreal and knowledge both intuitive and indirect springs up. For this very reason, the Bhagavata treatise is considered as the ornament of the Puranas. Therefore, O highly intelligent one! you better study the Purana. O Child! In days of yore, at the end of a Kalpa, Bhagavan Hah was lying, as a small child on a floating leaf of a banyan tree, and was thinking thus "Who is the Intelligent One that has created me a small child? What is His object? Of what stuff am I made of? and how am I created? whence can I know all this?" At this moment the Devi Bhagavati Who is all chaitanya, seeing the high-souled Bhagavan Hah musing thus, spoke out in the form of a celestial voice in the following half-stanza:- - "All this that is seen is I Myself; there is existent nothing other that is eternal." Bhagavan Visnu, then, began to think deeply the above celestial voice "Who has uttered this word, pregnant of truth, to me? How shall I come to know the speaker, whether that is female, male or a hermaphrodite?" Pondering over this for a long time, when he could not come to a definite conclusion, he began to repeat (make japam) frequently that word of Bhagavati with a whole heart. When Hari, lying on a banyan tree leaf, became very anxious to know what the above words implied, then the all-auspicious Devi Bhagavati with a beautiful face, calm and quiet appearance, appeared before Bhagavan Visnu, of unrivalled splendour, in the form of Maha Laksmi, who is all of Sattva Guna, surrounded by Her Vibhutis, Her manifestations of attendents. Her smiling companions of the same age, decked with ornaments, and wearing divine clothings, and holding each in their four divine hands, conch shell, disc, club, and lotus.

The lotus eyed Visnu was very much surprised to see that beautiful Devi, standing without anything to rest on that water; He saw that on four sides of the Devi, were staying Rati, Bhuti, Buddhi, Mati, Kirti, Smriti, Dhriti, S'raddha, Medha, Svadha, Svaha, Kshudha, Nidra, Daya, Gati, Tusti, Pusti, Ksama, Lajja, Jrimbha Tandra and other personified forces, each possessing a clear distinct form, and endowed with a clear distinct feeling. In the hands of them all were divine weapons; on their necks, necklaces and garlands of Mandara flowers; and all the limbs of their bodies were decorated with divine ornaments. Seeing in that one mass of ocean the Devi Laksmi and Her S'aktis, Bhagavan Janardan, the soul of all, became greatly astonished and thought within Himself thus "What is this? Is this Maya that I am witnessing? Whence have appeared these women? and whence have I come here, lying on this banyan leaf? How has the banyan tree come to existence in this one mass of ocean? And who is it, that has placed me here in the form of a child? Is this my Mother? Or is this some Maya that can create impossible things?

Why has She made Herself manifest before me now? Or is there some hidden motive that She has appeared thus? What ought I to do now? Or shall I go to some other place? or shall I continue remaining here in this form of the child, silent and with vigilance.

Thus ends the fifteenth chapter of the 1st Skandha on the dispassion of S'uka and the instructions of Bhagavati to Hah in the Mahapurana S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

Mithila To See Janaka

Vyasa spoke Then the Devi Maha Laksmi, seeing the Deva Janardana lying on a banyan leaf and surprised, spoke to him, smiling O Visnu! Why are you becoming so much astonished? Before this, since times immemorial (without any beginning) there had been many dissolutions (Pralayas); and many Sristis (creations); and at the beginning of every creation You came first into existence and every time I was united with You; but now You have forgotten me under the spell of that Maha S'akti.

That Highest Maha S'akti is transcendent of all the Gunas; but you and I are with Gunas. Know me as the S’akti, all of Sattva Guna who is widely known as Maha Laksmi. After this the Prajapati Brahma, full of Rajo Gunas, the creator of all the Lokas, will come into existence from your navel lotus and will create the three worlds.

Then he will perform severe tapasya and acquire the excellent power to create, and will create the three worlds by his Rajo Guna. That highly intelligent Prajapati will create first, the five Maha bhutas (great elements), all endowed with Gunas and then create mind with sensory organs and the presiding deities of the senses, and thus with all the ingredients, fit for creation, will create all the worlds. Therefore He is denominated by all as the Creator of Brahmanda. O highly fortunate one! You will be the Preserver of this Universe.

When the Prajapati Brahma will be angry at the beginning of the creation on his four mind-born sons, Rudra Deva will appear.

He will appear then from the centre of his eye brows. On being born this Rudra Deva will practise very severe tapasya and will get the Samhara S’akti, who is all of Tamo Guna and at the end of the Kalpa will destroy all this universe of five elements. O highly intelligent one! So I have come to you for this work of creation, etc. So take me to you as your VaisnavT S’akti full of Sattva Guna. O Madhusudana! I will take refuge at your breast and will remain always with you.

Hearing all this, Bhagavan Visnu spoke “O beautiful Devi! The half stanza was ere long heard by me, in clear words; by whom was that spoken? Kindly speak to me on this great auspicious secret first. For a great doubt has come and possessed my mind. What more shall I say than this that as a poor man always thinks of wealth, so I am thinking of that again and again.” Hearing these words of Visnu, the Devi Maha Laksmi smilingly said, with great affection “O Strong and Energetic one! I am now speaking in detail on this; listen. O Four-armed one! It is because I have come to you with form and endowed with Gunas that you have come to know me; but you have not known that Adya S’akti, the Prime force, transcending all the Gunas, though She is the substratum of all the Gunas. O highly fortunate one! That Devi Bhagavati, transcendent of all the Gunas, uttered that all auspicious, highly sanctifying semistanza, the essence of all the Vedas. O destroyer of the enemies! I think that there is the highest grace of that Highest S’akti on you, that She spoke the greatest secret to you for your benefit. O one performing good vows! know those words uttered by Mahavidya, as the essence of all the S’astra. So firmly retain them within your heart; never forget them. There is no other thing, save that, worth being known in earnest. Because you are most beloved by the Devi! that She has spoken this to you.” Hearing the words of the Devi Maha Laksmi, the four-armed Bhagavan took that semi stanza as a Mantra to be repeated in right earnest within his mind and cherished that for ever within his heart. After some time, Brahma born of the lotus of the navel of Visnu, became afraid of the two Daityas Madhu and Kaitabha, took refuge of Bhagavan Visnu; Visnu killed the two demons and began to do distinctly the japam of the semi-stanza. Brahma, born of the lotus, then asked Visnu with a gladdened heart “O Lord of the Devas! what japam are you doing? Lotus eyed! Is there any other body more powerful than you? O Lord of the Universe! whom do you think and thus feel yourself so happy?” Hearing Brahma, Bhagavan Hah said “O highly fortunate one! Think out yourself once of the Primordial Force, the auspicious Bhagavati Adya S’akti who is reigning everywhere as the cause and effect and you will be able to understand everything. My presiding Deity is that immeasurable eternal Maha S’akti Brahmamyi; on whose S’akti, as a receptacle with form on this ocean rests the whole Universe; I am thinking of that, by which is created (often and often) this entire Universe, moving and non-moving. When the Devi Bhagavati, the giver of boons, become graciously pleased, the human beings become freed of this bondage of Samsara; and again that highest Eternal Wisdom, the cause of Mukti, becomes the source of bondage to this world, of those who are deluded by Her.

She is the Is'vari of the Is'varas of this universe. O Brahma! You, I and all other things of the entire Universe are born of the Chit S’akti (the power of consciousness) of Her and Her alone; there is no manner of doubt in this. The semi-stanza by which She has sown within me the seed of Bhagavata will get expanded by the beginning of the Dvapara Yuga. While Bhagavan Brahma was resting on the navel lotus of Visnu, He got the seed of Bhagavata. Then He gave it to His own son Narada, the best of the Munis. Narada gave it to me and I have expanded that into twelve Skandhas. Therefore, O Mahabhaga! You now study this Bhagavata Purana, equal to the Vedas and endowed with five characteristics. In this the wonderful glorious deeds and life of the Devi Bhagavati, the hidden meanings of the Vedas and the wisdom, the truth are all described; hence this is the best of all the Puranas and sanctifying like the Dharma S’astra. It is the substratum of Brahma Vidya; therefore if men study this, they will easily cross this sea of world; and those that are stupid and deluded get pleasure in hearing the death of Vritrasura and many other narrations that are interspersed in this book. Therefore, O Mahabhaga! hear this sanctifying Bhagavata Puranam and retain it firmly within your heart. O best of persons! You are the foremost of those that are intelligent; so you are worthy to read this Purana. Eighteen thousand S'lokas are in that Purana and you better get them by heart; for if anybody reads or bears this Purana, fit to be praised in every way, all-auspicious, capable to increase posterity by the addition of sons and grandsons, giving long life, happiness and peace, he sees the Sun of Wisdom, resting in his breast and dispelling all darkness of ignorance. Thus speaking to his son S’uka Deva, Krisna Dvaipayan, my Guru, studied us the Purana and thought it was voluminous. I got the whole of it by heart. S'uka studied the Purana and stayed in Vyasa's As'rama. But he was naturally dispassionate like Sanat Kumara, etc., the mind-born sons of Brahma; therefore he could not get peace in studying the contents of the Purana which deal with Karma-Kanda (actions) fit for the house-holders. He remained in a solitary place, his heart being troubled very much. He appeared, as if, with his heart void. He did not mind much for his food and he did not fast also. Once Vyasa Deva seeing his son S'ukdeva so thoughtful, said “O Son! What do you think constantly? And why are you troubling yourself so much? Like an impoverished man, entangled in debt, you are always disturbed by your thoughts. O child! When I your father is living, what for do you care? Leave aside your inmost sorrows and be happy. Cast off all other thoughts and think of the wisdom contained in the S’astras and try your best to acquire Vijhana, the essence of wisdom. O Suvrata! If you do not get peace by my words then go, at my word to Mithila, the city of the King Janaka. O Mahabhaga! That king Janaka, who is liberated while living, whose soul is religious and who is the ocean of truth will cut asunder the net of your delusion. O Son! Go to the king and question him on Varnas'ram Dharma (Dharma relating to caste and stages of life) and remove your doubts.

That royal sage Janaka, the greatest Yogi, the knower of Brahma and liberated while living, is of pure soul, truthspeaking, of a calm and quiet heart and always fond of Yoga.” Hearing these words of Vyasa Deva, the highly spirited S’uka deva of unrivalled energy replied “O virtuous one! Your word can never turn out false; but when I hear that the king Janaka is gladly governing his kingdom still he is liberated while living, and disembodied while he has body -- this your word appears to me quite contradictory like light and darkness at one and the same place and time, and seems that these two epithets simply indicate vanity and nothing else. O Father! This is my greatest doubt how can the royal sage Janaka govern his kingdom, being disembodied. It appears that your word about Janaka is quite false as the son of a barren woman. O Father! I have now got a desire to see the disembodied king Janaka; for my mind is plunged in great doubt how can he remain in samsara unattached like a lotus leaf in water? O Greatest Orator! Is the liberation of Janaka according to Buddhistic doctrines or like the opinions of the materialistic Charvakas! O highly intelligent one! How can the royal sage Janaka, in spite of his being a householder, quit the usages of his senses? I cannot comprehend this. How can the things enjoyed by him appear to him, as if, unenjoyed and and how can his doings be his non-doings? How can the ideas of mother, wife, son, sister, prostitutes and various persons having different relations, arising within him vanish again altogether? And if that be not the case, how can his Jivanmuktahood be possible? If his taste be present of pungent, sour, astringent, bitter, and sweet things, then it is clear that he is enjoying all the most excellent things, O Father! This is my greatest wonder and doubt, that if he has got the sense of heat and cold, pleasure and pain, how can he be a Jivanmukta? That king is thoroughly expert in reigning his kingdom; how then the ideas of enemy, friend, taste and distaste, remaining absent in him, he can govern his state? How can he look with the same eyes a thief and an ascetic? And if he makes any distinction, how then is his liberation effected? I have never seen such a man, that is liberated while living and at the same time an expert king in governing his subjects. For these reasons, great doubt has arisen in me. I cannot understand how can the king Janaka be liberated, while he is remaining in his house?

Whatever it be, I desire now greatly to see him after his Jivanmuktahood; so I desire to go to Mithila to solve my doubts."

Thus ends the Sixteenth Chapter of the first Skandha on S'uka's desiring to go to Mithila to see Janaka, in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

Control Amidst The Women Of The Palace Of Mithila

Suta said Thus speaking to his father about his intention to go to Mithila, the high-souled S’uka Deva fell prostrate at his feet and with folded painns said O highly fortunate one! Your word must be obeyed by me; now I desire to see, as you say, the kingdom of Janaka; kindly give me permission. O father! Again the doubt is coming within me how the king Janaka is governing his kingdom without sentencing any body? And if there be no punishment within his kingdom, no one will remain in the path of virtue. It is for the sake of preserving religion that Manu and the other sages have always prescribed for punishment; how, then, religion can be preserved without inflicting punishment. O Mahabhaga! What you have spoken to me appears to me true like the sentence “My mother is barren.” So, O destroyer of foes! Permit and I will start for Mithila. Seeing the greatly wise son S’uka, void of any desires, earnestly anxious to go to Mithila, gave him a cordial embrace and said “O highly intelligent son S’uka! Peace be on you! Have a long life. O child! Speak truly before me and go. O son! Say that after going to Mithila you will come back again to this As'rama; never that you will go anywhere else. O son! Seeing the lotus face of yours, I am passing my days happily; if I do not see you, I will suffer extreme pain. What more than this, that you are my life and soul. I am saying, therefore, after seeing Janaka and clearing your doubts come here again and remain at peace, and study on the Vedas.”

Vyasa having spoken thus, S’uka bowed down and circumambulated his most worshipful father, and went out; he began to walk very fast like an arrow, leaving the bow, and when it has left the bow. On his journey he saw various countries, various classes of persons, earning money, various gardens and forests, various trees; in some places he saw fields with green grains and grains standing on them; at others he saw ascetics practising asceticism, and initiated Yajniks (performing yajhas, or sacrifices); in some places he saw yogis practising yoga, the high-souled Vanaprasthis (in the third stage of life) residing in the forest, and at others he saw devotees of S'iva, S’akti, Ganes'a, Surya and Visnu and many others. Thus he went on in his journey, in great wonder, towards his destination. In his passage he crossed Meru in two years and the Mount Himalayas in one year and then reached the city Mithila. Going there he found the place, full of wealth, corn, grains, etc., and all prosperities and the people were all very happy and they observed the rule of conduct as in the S'astras. When he was about to enter into the city the guard in front of the gate stopped him, asking “Who are you? Sir. What for are you come here?” When the guard asked him thus, he replied nothing and went away to a distance and with great wonder could not help laughing in his mind and remained motionless like a statue. At this the guard said “O Brahman! Why have you remained silent? Kindly say what for you have come here? I know this well that no body goes anywhere without having something to do? The king has forbidden strangers whose parentage and character are unknown. Therefore O Brahmin! Every one has to take the king's permission before he goes into the city.

It seems that you are a very energetic Brahman and that you know the Vedas; so O giver of honour! speak out to me your object-in-view and go into the city as you like.” Hearing these words of the guard, S’uka Deva began to say “I have come to see the city of Videha Janaka; but now I see that persons like me find great difficulty to enter here; so O Gatekeeper! I have got the answer from you. I was a great fool that I was so much deluded that to see the king I crossed many countries and over topped the two mountains and have come here. O Mahabhaga! What blame can I put on others? It is my father that has deluded me; or my karma done in my previous birth is now making me wander about. Alas! In this world greed for money is the sole cause to make a man knock about; but I have not got that even; my erroneous idea has brought me so far. I now realise that a man, having no desires, gets constant happiness if he be not plunged in the net of delusion; else he cannot have any such. O Mahabhaga! Though I have no desire of anything, yet I am plunged in the sea of Moha. Alas! Where is Meru? and where is Mithila (a great distance intervenes) I have walked so great a distance on foot; alas! this is this the result of my so long a journey! Therefore I am thoroughly convinced that the Creator has deceived me. One must have to suffer for his Prarabdha karma, be it auspicious or inauspicious. One must make one's effort, being always under the control of this Law of Karma. Though there be no apparent desire or cause, yet this Prarabdha Karma always puts a man into different actions.

This place is not a Tirath (holy place) nor there are the Vedas personified here, that I have taken so much pains and trouble to come here -- only there is one thing here and that is the king Janaka; but there is no chance to see him even; for I have not been able to enter even within his kingdom." Thus saying, S'uka remained silent and began to stay as one who has taken the vow to remain silent. The guard then took him to be a very wise Brahman and spoke in sweet words "O Brahman! Go to the place, as you like, where you have got your work. O Brahman! I stopped you; so please excuse me for any offence incurred by me. Free persons like you have mercy alone as their greatest strength." Hearing this S'uka Deva said:--What is your fault? you are dependent on another; the servant ought to obey the words of his master and serve him by all means; and there is no fault of the king, too, in your not allowing me to enter; for the wise persons ought to ascertain by all means, whether the new comers are enemies or thieves? Hence when I am quite a stranger suddenly come to this place, that the fault is wholly mine. Every person knows that it is lowering oneself to go to another's house. The guard then said "O great Brahman! what is happiness? and what is pain? what ought to be done to by your well wisher? who is your enemy? and who is your benefactor? Now advise me on all these points." Hearing this S'uka Deva said Everywhere men are divided, as far as their internal natures are concerned, into two classes; they are called attached or unattached. And the minds of these two classes are again of two kinds. The "attached" man is stupid and cunning and the "unattached" is sub¬ divided into three classes knowing, unknowing and middling. The cunning man is divided again into two classes Whether his cunningness is according to the dictates of S'astras or arising from his intellect. Again intellect is sub-divided into two whether it is Yukta (one-pointed) or Ayukta (Diverted) The guard spoke "O Learned one! I cannot understand what you say; so explain them to me what they mean." S'uka Deva said Those who are attached to this world are said to be "attached" persons. These attached persons feel frequently various pleasures and pains. When they get wives, sons, wealth, honour, rise, etc., they get pleasures; and if they do not get any of these they feel at every moment intense pain. Now the attached person sought to take such means as will secure them the pleasures of this world; so whoever acts against those means are denominated as breakers of their happiness and so they are enemies; and whoever aids in their acquiring pleasures are denominated as their friends. Of these the attached but at the same time cunning man does not get confounded and bewildered by them; whereas stupid attached man gets always bewildered everywhere. The man that is dispassionate and engaged in determining the "self" dwells in a solitary place, meditates on "self", finds pleasure in studying the Vedanta S'astras and feels pain in all the topics on worldly affairs. The wise man that wants his real welfare and is averse to the worldly enjoyments finds that he has many enemies; lust, anger, palaces, etc., are his so many enemies. Contentment is his only friend in the three lokas and no one is his real self.

Hearing these words of S'uka Deva, the watchman considered S'uka Deva a very wise man and soon led him to a very beautiful compartment. S'uka Deva then began to see that the town was full of three sorts of men, good, middling, and bad; and the shops were filled with various articles of merchandise. The many things were being incessantly purchased and sold there. Within that town, filled with many men, money and all sorts wealth and prosperities, almost everywhere were seen instances of attachment, hatred, lust, anger, greed, vanity and delusion; at some parts there were seen persons quarrelling with each other. Seeing thus the three sorts of persons, the highly energetic S'uka, blazing like a second Sun went to the royal palace when the gateman stopped him. He stood there like a log of wood and began to meditate on "Moksa" (Liberation). He began to think the light and darkness as same; the greatly ascetic S'uka became merged in Dhyana (meditation) and remained at one place motionless. In an instant, a royal minister came out and saluting him with folded hands, took him to a second compartment. Here the minister showed him beautiful divine gardens adorned nicely with rows of divine trees bearing fruits and gave him a good reception and took him to a very beautiful palace. The minister next ordered the public women in royal service, expert in music and playing with instruments, and skilled in Kama-S'astra (the science of amorous dealings) to attend on S'uka Deva and went out of the palace. S'uka, the son of Vyasa, remained there. Those prostitutes then prepared various dishes, suited to the time and place, and sought the satisfaction of S'uka and then worshipped him duly with greatest devotion. Those ladies, then, residing within the four walls became enamoured to see the beauty of S'uka Deva and showed him the gardens that existed in the inner compound. S'uka was young and beautiful; over this he was extremely lovely, of nice limbs; his speech was soft and gentle; so he looked like a second Cupid (the god of love); all the ladies, struck with Cupid's arrows, lost their consciousness. Then recovering, they considered S'uka Deva to be the great controller of passions and began to serve him with great care. The pure minded S'uka, born of Arani, looked on them like his mother. S'uka, finding pleasure in self and the controller of anger was not pleased or displeased with anything; so though be saw that the ladies were disturbed with amorous feelings, he remained quite undisturbed, calm and quiet. The ladies, then prepared a very nice bed whereon S'uka Deva would sleep; it was spread over with nice clean bed sheet; many nice pillows were placed. He, then, washed his feet and with vigilance, put on his finger the ring prepared of Kus'a grass, and completing his evening Sandhya, became merged in Dhyana. Meditating on Supreme Brahma for three hours (one Prahara), slept for 6 hours and getting up, again became merged in Brahma Dhyana for the last three hours of the night. Then at the Brahma muhurta (one hour preceding the sunrise) he took his bath and completing his morning duties, became immersed in Samadhi (inner enlightenment) and sat at ease.

Thus ends the 17th chapter of the 1st Skandha on S'uka's displaying his self-control amidst the women of the palace of Mithila in the Mahapurana S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam.

English translation

1-22. Suta said Maharsis! When the king Janaka heard of the arrival of S'uka Deva, the son of his Guru, he took his priest before him and attended by his ministers came before him in pure spirit. Then he duly worshipped S'uka, offering him Padya, Arghya and an excellent seat, and a cow, yielding milk and then enquired about his welfare. S'uka Deva accepted duly all the things offered by the king; and informed him of his well-being and asked the king in return, of his welfare and took his seat at ease on the Asana. The king Janaka asked the son of Vyasa, full of peace "O Mahabhaga Muni Sattama! You are devoid of any attachment and you have no desires. May I enquire why such a person as your honoured self has come to me." S'uka Deva said O great king! my father told me thus O child; take a wife; for the house-holder's life is the best of all the as'ramas but I thought that will be the source of my bondage to this world and therefore did not obey his word, though he was my highest Guru. He then again said to me If one takes a household life, it does not at once follow that he will be held in bondage; yet I did not agree to that. Then the Muni, thinking me still to be in some doubt, spoke this word of advice to me "O Son! Do not be sorry; go to Mithila and have your doubts solved. There my disciple the king Janaka, is governing his kingdom without any source of danger. He is Jivanamukta (liberated while living) and is free from the ideas of body, etc., so everybody knows. When that royal sage, Janaka, though governing his kingdom, is not seen tied up by Maya, then O Son! why are you afraid of this Samsara, when you are living this forest life.

Therefore, O Mahabhaga! Trust me and marry; and in case you doubt very much, then go and see the king Janaka; ask him and remove your doubts. He will certainly solve your doubts. But, O Son! After hearing him, come again quickly to me." O king! When my father spoke thus, by his permission I have come now to your capital. O king! I don't want any thing, save Moksa (liberation); therefore O Sinless one! Kindly advise what am I to do, so that I attain Moksa. O Lord of kings! Practising asceticism, going to the holy places of pilgrimage, holding vratas (vows), performing sacrifices, studying the Vedas, or earning wisdom, whatever is the cause of Moksa, kindly say that. Hearing this, Janaka said "O son of my Guru! I am telling what ought to be done by the Brahmanas, following the path of Moksa; listen. After having the holy thread, a Brahmin should live in the house of his Guru to study the Vedas, the Vedantas and pay the Dakshina (the fee) to the Guru according to rules; he will then return home and marry and enter into the householder's life; he should lead a life of contentment, be free from desires, sinless and truthful and earn his livelihood with a pure heart and according to the sanction of justice and conscience. He is to perform the Agnihotra and other sacrifices; and after getting sons and grandsons, he is to leave his wife under the care of his son and then to take the life of a Vanaprastha (3rd stage of life). That Brahman, the knower of Dharma, must practise tapasya and become master of his six passions (enemies); and when he gets disgusted with the world and when the Vairagyam (dispassion) will arise within him, he would enter into the fourth As'rama. For, the man is first to enter into the householder's life and when he will be quite dispassionate towards the world, he will then have a right to take the As'rama of Sannyasa (Renunciation). A course contrary to this can never entitle one to the As'rama of Sanyasa.

This is the beneficial word of the Vedas and it must hold true; it cannot be false; this is my firm belief. O S'uka! In the Vedas are mentioned forty-eight Samskaras (consecrations; purificatory rites); out of which the learned Mahatmas have reserved forty Samskaras for the householders and the last eight Samskaras (S'ama, Dama, etc.,) for the Sannyasins. And this good usage is heard to come down from very ancient times. A Brahmana ought to complete his previous As'ramas successively and then enter into the succeeding As'rama.

23-30. S'uka said If the pure Vairagyam (dispassion) arising out of knowledge and wisdom (jhan and Vijhan) already arises (before taking to the grihasth As'ram), is it still necessary to pass through house holder's life, Vanaprastha life, etc., or is one entitled then to take up at once the Sannyasa As'rama, quit everything and reside in the forest? Janaka said O! One giving honour to the S'astras and Gurus! Though the powerful passions seem to be under control in the period of unripened Yoga (the imperfect yogic state), yet one ought not to trust them; for, it is generally seen, many imperfect Yogins find themselves disturbed by one or other of the senses. If the mind of one who has already entered into the Sannyasa As'ram gets perturbed in his course, then, how can he, you can see this for yourself, satisfy desires of eating good things, sleeping nicely, seeing his son, or wishing any other desires, knowing them to lead to his degradation? He is then in a very serious state. The net of desires is very difficult to be conquered by men; that can never die out. Therefore, to put an end to them, the advise is to cut them slowly and slowly. He who sleeps on an elevated place has the danger of tumbling down; but one who sleeps in a low place has no such danger. So any man who has once taken the highest dharma Sannyasa, and if he be fallen, then he never gets hold of the real track. As an ant begins to get from the root of tree, and, by and by, gets to the topmost part of the branches, so human beings go by degrees from one As'rama to another till they go to the highest; then and then only they are able to get easily their desired truth. The birds without anticipating any danger, get up to the skies very quickly and soon they get tired and cannot go to their desired place but the ant goes with rest to its desired place. This mind is very difficult to be controlled; for this reason the men of unripened minds, cannot conquer it all at once; and are advised to conquer it, by and by, observing the laws of one As'rama after another.

31-37. See also if anybody, remaining in his household life be of a quiet temper and of good intellect, and if he takes success and failure in the same light, and be not elated in times of pleasure and not depressed in times of pains and does his duty for duty's sake without troubling his mind with cares, and anxieties, then that householder acquires pure happiness by the realisation of his self and acquires Moksha. There is no manner of doubt in this. O Sinless One! See, I am liberated while living, though I am engaged in preserving kingdom; if any source of pain or pleasure arises, I am not in any way affected by them. As I will attain in the end Videha Mukti (liberation from bodies) though I am always wandering at my free will, enjoying various things as I like and do various things as it pleases me, so you can do your duties and then be liberated in the end.

O Son of my Guru! When this material world, the cause of all error according to the Vedanta S'astras, is simply an object of sight then how can this material substance, an object of sight, be the source of bondage to the Atman, the Self? O Brahman! Though the five material elements can be seen, their qualities or Gunas can be known only by inference, so the self is to be inferred; it can never be an object of sight; and also this self, known by inference, changeless and without any impurity or stain can never be bound by the visible changeful material thing. O Brahman! This impure heart is the source of all pleasure and pains; so when the heart becomes pure and quiet, all the things then become fully pure, O Brahmana!

38-41. If going often and often to all Tiraths and bathing there, do not make one's heart pure and holy, then all one's troubles are taken in vain. O Destroyer of enemies! It is the mind that is the cause of bondage or freedom; and not the body, nor the Jivatma (the embodied soul), nor the senses. The Self or Atman is always pure consciousness and is ever free so, truly speaking, it can never be bound. Bondage and freedom reside on in the mind; so when the Mind gets peace, the bondage of Samsara is also at an end. He is an enemy, he is a friend, he is neither an enemy nor friend, all these different thoughts reside in the mind and arise out of duality; how can the ideas of differences exist, when everything has become all one pervading self?

42-47. Jiva is Brahma; I am that Brahma and nothing else; there is nothing to be discussed here. It is owing to the dualities that monism appears not clear and differences between Jiva and Brahma arise. O Mahabhaga! This difference is due to Avidya and by which this difference vanishes, that is termed Vidya.

This difference between Vidya and Avidya ought to be always kept in view, by those that are clever.

How can the pleasure from the cooling effect of the shadow, be felt, if the heating effect of the rays of the Sun be not previously experienced? So how Vidya is to be experienced if Avidya be not felt before? Sattva, Rajas and Tamo Gunas reside naturally in things, made of Gunas; and the five principal elements reside naturally in substances made up of elements; so the senses reside naturally in their own forms, etc.; so how can there be any stain to the Atman which is unattached? Yet to teach humanity, the high souled persons preserve always with greatest care the respect of the Vedas. If they do not do this, then, O Sinless One! the ignorant persons would act lawlessly according to their wishes, like the Charvakas; and Dharma will become extinct. When Dharma will become extinct, the Varnas'rama will gradually die out; so the well-wishers should always follow the path of the Vedas.

48-56. S'uka said "O King! I have now heard all that you have said; still my doubt remains; it is not solved. O King! In the Dharma of the Vedas, there is Himsa (act of killing and injuring); and we hear that there is much of Adharma (sin) in the above Himsa.

So how can the Dharma of the Vedas give Moksha? O King! One can see before one's eyes that the drinking of Soma rasa, the killing of animals, the eating of fish and flesh and so are advised in the Vedas; so much so that in the sacrificial ceremony named Sautramana the rule of drinking wine and many other vratas are clearly mentioned; even gambling is advised in the Vedas. So how can Mukti be obtained by following the Veda Dharma? It is heard that, in ancient times, there was a great king, named S'as'avindu, very religious, truthful, and performing sacrifices, very liberal; he protected the virtuous, and chastised those that were wicked and going astray. He performed many Yajhas, where many cows and sheep were sacrificed according to the rules of the Vedas and abundant Dakshinas (sacrificial fees) were presented to every one that performed their parts in the sacrifices. In these sacrifices, the hides of the cows that were sacrificed as victims, were heaped to such an enormous extent that they looked liked a second Bindhyachal mountain. Then the rains fell and the dirty water coming out of that enormous heap of skins flowed down and gave rise to a river which was thence called the Charmanvati river. And what a wonder? That cruel king left behind him an ineffaceable fame and went to Heavens. Whatever it may be, it can never come to my head that I should perform the Veda Dharma, filled with so many acts of killing and cruelties. Again, when the man find pleasure in sexual intercourses and when they do not have that intercourse, they experience pain, how can you expect such persons to attain liberation."

57-61. Janaka said "The killing of animals in a sacrificial ceremony is not killing; it is known as Ahimsa; for that himsa is not from any selfish attachment; therefore when there is no such sacrifice and the animals are killed out of selfish attachment, then that is real himsa; there is no other opinion in this. Smoke arises from a fire when fuels are placed in it; and smoke is not seen when no fuel is added. So, O Munisattama! The himsa, as prescribed in the Vedas, is free from all blemishes, selfish attachment, etc., and therefore it is unblameable. So it follows the himsa committed by persons attached to objects, is the real himsa; that can be blamed, but the himsa of those persons who have no desires is not that sort of himsa. Therefore the learned men that know the Vedas declare that the himsa done by the dispassionate persons, with their hearts free from egoism, is no himsa done at all. O Dvija! Really speaking, the killing of animals done by the house-holder attached to senses and their objects, and done under their impulses can be taken into account as a real act of killing; but, O Mahabhaga of those whose hearts are not attached to anything of those self controlled persons, desirous of moksa, if they do an act of Himsa out of a sense of duty, with no desires of fruits and with their hearts free from egoism that can never be reckoned as a real act of killing."

Thus ends the 18th Chapter of the 1st Skandha on Janaka's giving instructions on truth to S'uka Deva in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam.

English translation

1-4. S'n S'uka said O king! This great doubt arises in my mind how a man can be free from desires and the rewards of their actions, when he lives in the midst of this Samsara, that is all full of Maya? When even by the acquiring of wisdom of the S'astras and the capability to judge which is real and which is unreal, the delusion of the mind is not dispelled until one resorts to the practice of Yoga, how then can freedom from desires and liberation come to a householder? The darkness of a room is not destroyed by the mere mention of lamp, light; so the wisdom acquired by reading the S'astras can never dispel the darkness of delusion that reigns in the inside of a man. O lion of kings! If one wants Moksa, one ought not to commit any act of revenge or injury or killing any being; how can this be possible to a householder?

5-17. Your desires to acquire wealth, to enjoy royal pleasures and to get victory in battle have not yet subsided; how then can you be a Jivan mukta? O king! You consider yet a thief, thief and a saint, saint; you consider a man as your relative or other than that; these ideas have not vanished from you; how then can you be called Videha? O king! You feel the pungent, bitter, astringent, sour tastes and the like; you feel good and bad rasas respectively; you become glad when success comes to you and you feel sorrow when you happen to fail; and you experience the three states, waking, dreaming, and deep sleep as an ordinary man does, how then can you be called to attain the Turiya (fourth) state? May I ask Whether you cherish this idea that all these infantries, cavalries, chariots, and that all these elephants are mine; I am the lord of all the wealth and things? Or whether you do not cherish this idea? O king! I think you eat sweet and good things, and, at times, feel pleasure and, at other times, feel pain! So, O king! How can you look on the garland of flowers and the snake as one and the same? O king! He who is a Muktapurusa considers a lump of earth, a piece of stone, and gold as of one and the same value; he considers everything to be the same Atman and does good to all the beings. Whatever that may be, I do not find any pleasure at present with houses, wife, etc., or with anything, in fact. What my heart's desire is that I roam alone always without any desires in my heart. Therefore I like not to have any companion; to be free from any attachment and to be peaceful, and calm; I do not wish to accept anything from anybody; I will forego all pleasures and pains from cold, warmth, etc., and I will sustain my life on roots, fruits, and leaves, obtained without any effort and will roam, as I like, like a deer. When I have not got the least attachment to the household life and when I am beyond all the attributes, what necessity have I then of house, wealth or a suitable wife? And when you think of various things with loving heart, and yet say that you are a Jivan mukta, that is nothing but a mere vanity of yours! O king! When you think and become anxious about your enemies, about your wealth or sometimes about your army, how then can you be said to be free from cares? What more can be said than the fact that many Munis, eating moderately and controlling their senses, and leading an anchorite's life, and knowing the unreality of the world, fall victims to the Maya!

18-27. Then what need there is to talk of you? O king! know that the hereditary title “Videha” to your line of kings indicates downright insincerity; nothing can be other than this as the name “Vidya Dhara” (holder of knowledge) is applied to an illiterate man; as the name “Divakara” (sun) is given to a born-blind man, as the name “Laksmidhara” (holder of wealth) is given to even a poor man, as these names are quite useless to me. I have heard that the kings of your family who were your predecessors were called “Videha” in name only and not in deed. O king! In your family there reigned a king named “Nimi.” Once on a time that royal sage invited his Guru Vas’istha to perform a sacrifice, when Vas'istha said “I am already invited by Indra, the lord of the Devas, to perform his sacrifice; so O king! let me first finish his work; I will then take up your work. Better go on collecting the sacrificial materials till my that work is complete.” Thus saying, Vas'istha went away to perform Indra's sacrifice; on the other hand, the royal sage Nimi selected another priest and made him his Guru and began his sacrifice. Hearing all this, Maharsi Vas’istha became angry and cursed him thus “O forsaker of your Guru! For the crime of forsaking your Guru, let thy body be destroyed today!” At this, the royal sage, too, cursed Vas'istha in his turn “Let your body fall off also.” Then the bodies of both the persons fell. But, O king! this curiousity came to my mind, how the royal sage, whose body fell before, cursed his own Guru afterwards.

28-35. Janaka said O Lord of Brahmins! what you have said is, in my opinion, all quite true; nothing is false. Still hear. Know what my most worshipful Guru Deva has spoken to me is, in fact, true (and nothing else). You are now intending to quit the company of your father and go to the forest; well and good! but even then you will undoubtedly have the company of deer, etc.; see, also, that when the five elements, earth, water, air, etc., are present, encompassing everywhere, how, then, can you expect to be free from all companions? So, O Muni! when you will have to think always of your food, how, then, can you be said to be free from all cares? Again, even if you go to the forest, you will have to think there also for your staff, deer skin, etc.; so you can take my case, too, of thinking of my kingdom, whether I think or not, as your thinking of staff, deer skin, etc., your heart is tainted with Vikalpa Jhan (knowledge of doubt, duality, etc.); and therefore you have come here from a far-off country. But my heart is free from any such doubt and I am remaining quite cheerful here. O best of Brahmins! I have got no doubt whatsoever on any point, and therefore I take my food and go to sleep with great pleasure. “I am not bound up by this world” this idea gives me constant happiness of the highest degree. But you consider that you are bound and therefore you feel always constant pain. So leave off your idea that you are bound, and be happy. “This body is mine” this knowledge leads to my bondage; and “This body is not mine” this knowledge leads to freedom so know this verily that all this wealth, kingdom, etc., are not mine.

36-45. Suta said Hearing these words of the royal sage, S’uka Deva became exceedingly glad and pronounced “Sadhu” “Sadhu” (true saint, indeed a true saint, well said) and went away without any delay to the pleasant As’rama of Vyasa. Vyasa, too, seeing his son come back, became very glad and embraced him and took the smell of his head and asked about his welfare again and again. Then S’uka Deva, well conversant with the S’astras and ever ready in studying the Vedas, sat by the side of his father, with an enlightened mind, in his lovely As’rama and thinking of the state of the highsouled Janaka in his kingdom, began to feel the highest peace. Though S’uka adopted the path of Yoga, yet he married the daughter of a Muni, named Pivari, very beautiful, fortunate, enhancing the glory of her father's family. Then were born first the four sons named Krishna, Gauraprabha, Bhuri, and Devas'ruta out of the sperm of S'uka and the ovum of Pivari; and next a daughter was born named Kirti of them. Vyasa's son S'uka, endowed with the fire of asceticism gave the daughter Kirti in marriage in due time with the high-souled Anuha, the son of Vibhraja. As time passed on, a son was born of the womb of Kirti and the sperm of Anuha, a son who became the powerful king Brahmadatta, the knower of Brahma and endowed with wealth and prosperity. Some time elapsed when Anuha, the son-in-law of S'uka Deva, getting from Narada the Mayavija and highest knowledge of Yoga handed over his kingdom to his son and went to the hermitage of Vadarika and became liberated.

The Devarsi Narada gave him the mantra, the vija of Maya; and by the influence of that mantra and by the grace of the Devi, the knowledge of the Supreme Brahma, arose in him without any obstacle and gave him liberation.

46-51. On the other hand S'uka Deva, always averse to any company, left his father and went to the beautiful mountain Kailas'a. He began to meditate on the unmoving Brahma and thus remained there. After some time the highly energetic S'uka Deva attained Siddhi (supernatural powers) Anima, Laghima, etc., rose up high in the air from the top of the mountain and began to roam there, and then he appeared like a second Sun. When S'uka arose from the peak, it severed into two and various ominous signs became visible. When S'uka Deva, appearing like a second Sun by the dazzling brilliancy of his body, suddenly vanished away like air and became diluted in the Paramatman, entering into everything and became invisible, then the Devarsis began to chant hymns to him. On the other hand, Vyasa Deva became very much distressed with the separation from his son and cried out frequently "Oh, my son! Alas! my son Where are you gone?" and went to the summit of the mountain where S'uka did go and wept bitterly. Then S'uka Deva, who was then residing as the Paramatman, the Internal controller of all the beings and with all the beings, knowing Vyasa Deva as very much fatigued, distressed, and crying, spoke out as an echo from the mountains and trees thus "O Father! There is no difference between you and me, considered in the light of Atman; then why are you weeping for me?"

52-59. Even today the above echo is clearly heard (almost daily). Seeing Vyasa Deva grieved very much for the separation from his son and always crying "Oh! my son! Oh! my son!" Bhagavan MahesVara came there and consoled him saying "O Vyasa Deva! your son is the foremost of the Yogis; he has attained the highest state, so very rare to the ordinary persons that are not self controlled. So do not be sorry any more. O Sinless One! when you have realised the Brahma-tattva, then you ought not to express any sorrow for your S'uka who is now stationed in that Brahman. Your fame is now unrivalled, only on account of your having got a son like him." Vyasa Deva said "O Lord of the Devas! O Lord of the world! What am I to do now? My grief does not quit my heart anyhow or other. My eyes are as yet satisfied in seeing my son; they like still to see the son." Hearing these sorrowful words of Vyasa, Bhagavan Mahadeva said "O Muni Sardula! I grant this boon to you that you will see the form of your son abiding in shadow, very beautiful, by the side of you. O Destroyer of enemies! Now abandon your grief by seeing that shadow form of your son." When Bhagavan MahesVara said so, Vyasa began to see the bright shade form of his son. Granting thus the boon, Bhagavan Mahadeva vanished then and there. When He vanished away, Vyasa became very much distressed with sorrow for the bereavement of his son and returned with heavy heart to his own hermitage.

Thus ends the nineteenth chapter of the first Skandha on the description of the marriage of S'uka in the Mahapurana S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-8. The Risis said “O Suta! What did Veda Vyasa do, when the highest Yogi S’uka, Deva-like, acquired all the excellent supernatural powers? Kindly describe all these in detail.”

Hearing this question, Suta spoke O Rishis! Vyasa already had with him many disciples Asita, Devala, Vais'ampayana, Jaimini, Sumantu and others, all engaged in the study of the Vedas. After their studies were over, they all went out to propagate Dharma on the earth. Then Vyasa, seeing that the disciples went to the earth and his son S’uka Deva had got to the next world, became very much distressed with sorrow and wanted to go to some other place. He then decided to go to his birth place and went to the banks of the Ganges and there remembered his auspicious mother Satyavati, forsaken by him before, very sorrowful, and the daughter of a fisherman. He then quitted that heaven-like mountain, the source of all happiness and came to his own birth place. Reaching the island where he was born, he enquired the whereabouts of the beautiful faced, the fisherman's daughter as well the wife of a king. The fishermen replied that their king had given her in marriage to the king S'antanu. Then the king of fishermen, seeing Vyasa there, gladly worshipped him and gave him a cordial welcome and spoke with folded palms, thus 9-16. O Muni! When I have become so fortunate as to see you, rare even to the Devas, then my birth has been sanctified today and you have purified my family. O Brahmin! Kindly say what for have you come?

My wife, son and all my riches and every other thing that I have are at your disposal. Thus hearing the history of his mother Satyavati, Vyasa erected an As'rama on the beautiful banks of the river Sarasvati and remained there in tapasya with an enlightened mind.

Some time elapsed when the highly energetic S'antanu got through his wife Satyavati two sons. Vyasa Deva considered them as his two brothers and became very glad, though he himself used to live in the forest. The first son of the king S'antanu was Chitrangada, endowed with all auspicious qualities, exceedingly beautiful, and tormenting his foes; the second son was Vichitra-virya; he was endowed with all qualities. The king S'antanu became very happy to get these children. S'antanu had one son before through his wife Ganga; he was a great hero and very powerful; and the two sons of Satyavati were equally powerful. The high souled S'antanu now seeing the three sons, all endowed with all auspicious qualities, began to think that the Devas were incapable to defeat him.

17-34. After some time, the religious S'antanu quitted his worn-out body as a man quits his clothes worn out in due time. After the king S'antanu had ascended the Heavens, the energetic Bhis'ma performed duly his funeral obsequies and gave various things in charity to the Brahmanas. He did not accept the kingdom himself; but placed Chitrangada on the throne and became known by the name of Devavrata (truthful in vow like the Devas). The pure souled Chitrangada, born of Satyavati became so much powerful by sheer force of his arms, and became so great a hero that the enemies felt endless troubles. Now once on an occasion, the greatly powerful Chitrangada, surrounded by a great army, went on an hunting excursion to the forest in quest of ruru deer, etc., when the Gandarbha Chitrangada, seeing the king on the way, alighted from his chariot.

O ascetics! A fierce battle then ensued for three years on that sacred and wide expanse Kuruksettra between the two heroes, both equally powerful. In the battle, the king Chitrangada, the son of S'antanu was slain by the Gandarbha Chitrangada and went up to Heavens. Bhis'ma, born of the womb of Ganga, hearing the above news, expressed his sorrows and, being surrounded by the ministers completed all the funeral obsequies and installed Vichitravirya on the throne. The beautiful Satyavati became very much agitated by the death of her son; but when the ministers and the highsouled spiritual teachers consoled her, she became glad when she saw that her youngest son became king. Vyasa Deva, too, felt himself glad to hear that his youngest brother had been made king. After some time when the all auspicious, Satyavati's son Vichitravirya attained his youth,

Bhis'ma began to think of his marriage. At this time the king of Kasi (Kas'iraj) called an assembly Svayamvara (where the kings are invited and the bride selects the bridegroom) for the marriage of her three daughters, endowed with all auspicious qualities, at one and the same time. Thousands and thousands of kings and princes from various countries were invited there in the assembly; and, worshipped duly, they went and decorated the hall. At that time the highly energetic fiery Bhis'ma alone, mounting on his chariot, attacked the infantry and cavalry, and defeated all the kings assembled there, and perforce carried away the three daughters of Kas'iraj and took them to Hastinapur. Bhis'ma behaved towards those three daughters as if they were mothers, sisters or daughters and informed Satyavati without any delay of everything that had happened.

35-39. Then he called for the astrologers and Brahmins, versed in the Vedas and enquired about the auspicious day for their marriage. When the day was fixed and when every preparation was made, the religious Bhis’ma wanted Vichitravirya to marry them. At this time, the eldest daughter, beautiful-eyed spoke out modestly to the Ganga's son Bhis’ma “O Ganga's son, the illustrious son of your family and the best of the Kurus! You are the best knower of Dharma; therefore what more shall I say to you. In the Svayamvara assembly I mentally selected S'alva and it struck me that he, too, looked on me with a very loving heart towards me. So, O tormentor of foes! Now do what is fit for that sacred family; O Ganga's son! Not only you are extraordinarily powerful but you are also the foremost of the religious. Salva mentally wanted to marry me; now do as you like.”

40-44. When the eldest daughter spoke thus, Bhis’ma asked the aged Brahmanas, ministers and his mother “What ought to be done now” and, taking the opinions of all, spoke to that daughter“O beautiful one! You can go wherever you like.” Thus saying, Bhis’ma released her. Then the beautiful daughter of Kasiraj went to the house of Salvaraj and expressed to him her heart's desire “O great king! Knowing me attached to yourself, Bhis’ma has quitted me according to the laws of Dharma; I have therefore come to you now; marry me. O best of the kings! I will be your legal wife, for already I used to think you as my husband and you, too, must have thought me your wife.”

45-47. S'alva replied as follows “O beautiful one! When Bhis’ma caught hold of your arm before me and took you to his chariot, then I won't marry you. You can say yourself what intelligent man can marry a woman touched by another? Therefore I won't marry you, though Bhis’ma has quitted you, in the light of another.” Hearing these words of S’alva, the daughter of Kasiraj wept bitterly; yet S’alva quitted her. Therefore, finding no other way, she went back to Bhis’ma weeping, and said as follows

48-50. O great warrior! S’alva did not consent to marry me, as you first took me to the chariot and afterwards left me. So, O Mahabhaga! You better look to Dharma and marry me, as you know best what is Dharma. If you do not marry me, I will certainly quit my life. Hearing her words Bhis’ma said O beautiful one! How can I accept you, when your mind has become attached towards another. So, O fair one! You better go back soon to your own father with a calm, clear mind. When Bhis’ma said thus, that daughter of Kasiraj did not go back, out of sheer shame, to her father's house, but went to a forest and in a greatly solitary place of pilgrimage began to practise asceticism.

51-56. Now the other two daughters of Kasiraj, beautiful and all auspicious Ambalika and Ambika became the wives of the king Vichitravirya. Thus the powerful king Vichitravirya began to enjoy various pleasures in the palace and in the gardens and thus passed his time. For full nine years the king Vichitravirya enjoyed the sexual pleasures and became attacked with consumption and fell into the jaws of death. Hearing the death news of her son Vichitravirya, Satyavati became very sorry and surrounded by her ministers, performed his funeral obsequies. Then she spoke privately to Bhis’ma with a grievous heart“O highly fortunately son! now you better govern your father's kingdom and see that the family of Yayati does not become extinct. So better take your brother's wife and try your best to continue your family line.

57-74. Bhis’ma then said:-- "O Mother! Did you not hear of the promise that I already made before my father? So I cannot ever marry and govern the kingdom.” Hearing these words of Bhis’ma, Satyavati became anxious. She began to think as follows “How now the continuity of the family be kept! And it is not advisable to remain idle when the kingdom has become kingless; no happiness can be derived in this state.” Thus thinking, she became exceedingly distressed; then the Ganga's son, Bhis’ma spoke to her“O respected one! Do not worry your mind with cares; now take steps so as to secure a son from Vichitravirya's wife. Call some best Brahmin, born of a good family and unite him with Vichitravirya's wife. There is no fault, as far as I know, in doing thus to keep up the family line. O sweet smiling one! Thus having begotten the grandson, give him this kingdom; I will also obey his commands.” Hearing these reasonable words of Bhis’ma, Satyavati remembered her own son, the sinless Vyasa Deva, who was born to her during her virginity. As soon as Vyasa was remembered, he, the great ascetic and effulgent like the sun, came there and bowed down to his mother. The highly energetic Vyasa was then worshipped duly by Bhis’ma and welcome by Satyavati and began to rest there like a smokeless fire. The mother Satyavati then spoke to the chief Muni “O son! Now procreate a beautiful son from your sperm and the ovum of Vichitravirya's wife.” Hearing the mother's words, Vyasa considered them as Veda's injunction and thought they must be obeyed and promised before her that he must obey and and fulfil her orders. He remained there, waiting for the menstruation period.

When the due period of menstruation arrived, Ambika bathed and had a sexual intercourse with Vyasa and begot a very powerful son, but a blind one (since she closed her eyes at the sight of Vyasa during her intercourse). Seeing the son born blind Satyavati became exceedingly sorry; she, then, asked her other son's wife “Go soon and get a son born of you in the aforesaid manner.” When the menstruation period arrived, Ambalika during the night time went to Vyasa and mixed and became pregnant. In due time a son was born; that child became of a very pale colour; so Satyavati thought the new child, too, unfit for the kingdom; therefore at the end of the year again asked her son's wife Ambalika to go to Vyasa. She asked Vyasa also for the same purpose and sent Ambalika to his bed room. But Ambalika became afraid, and could not go herself but sent her maid servant for the purpose. Thus from the womb of the maid servant the high souled Vidura was born, having Dharma's parts and the most auspicious towards all. Thus Vyasa begot three very powerful sons Dhritarastra, Pandu and Vidura for the continuity of the family line. O sinless Maharsis! Thus I have described to you how my Guru Vyasa Deva, who knows well all the Dharmas, kept up the continuity of his family and how he begot sons in the womb of his brother Vichitravirya's wives, according to the laws of Dharma, to keep up a family.

Thus ends the twentieth chapter of the 1st Skandha as well as the first Skandha on Vyasa doing his duties in the Mahapuranam S'ri Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. The Risis said "O Suta! Your words sound wonderful to us indeed! but you have not as yet definitely spoken to us the original events in detail; so a great doubt has arisen in our minds. We know that the king S'antanu married Vyasa's mother, Satyavati. Now say, in detail in how Vyasa became her son? How such a chaste woman Satyavati, remaining in her own house, came to be married again by S'antanu? and how the two sons came to be born of S'antanu's sperm and Satyavati's' ovum? Now O highly fortunate Suvrata? Kindly describe in detail this highly sanctifying historical fact. These Risis, who are observing vows, are desirous to hear of the birth of Veda Vyasa and Satyavati."

6-23. Suta said I bow down with devotion to the Highest Primordial Force, the bestower of the four fold aims of existence of human life, who grants to all, their desires when so prayed by the help of the Vagbhava Vijamantra with their heart and soul, for the success of all their desires. The above vija is so potent in its effect that even pronounced very lightly, even under a pretext, it grants all siddhis. So the Devi should be remembered by all means; and now saluting Her, I begin my narration of the auspicious Puranic events.

In days gone by there reigned a king, named Uparichara; he ruled over the Chedi country and respected the Brahmins; he was truthful and very religious. Indra, the lord of the Devas, became very pleased by his asceticism and presented him an auspicious celestial car (going in the air) made of pearls, and crystals, helping him in doing what he liked best. Mounting on that divine chariot, that religious king used to go everywhere; he never remained on earth; he used to remain always in the atmosphere and therefore be had his name as "Uparichara Vasu" (moving in the upper regions). He had a very beautiful wife, named Girika; and five powerful sons, of indomitable vigour, were born to him.

The king give separate kingdoms to each of his sons and made them kings. Once on an occasion, Girika, the wife of the Uparichara Vasu, after her bath after the menstruation and becoming pure came to the king and informed him of her desire to get a son; but that very day his Pitris (ancestors) requested him also to kill deer, etc., for their Sraddha (solemn obsequies performed in honour of the manes of deceased ancestors). Hearing the Pitris, the king of Chedi became somewhat anxious for his menstruous wife; but thinking his Pitris words more powerful and more worthy to be obeyed, went out on an hunting expedition to kill deer and other animals, with the thought of his wife Girika in his breast. Then while he was in the forest, he remembered his Girika, who was equal in her beauty and loveliness to Kamala, and the emission of semen virile took place. He kept this semen on the leaf of a banyan tree and thought "How the above semen be not futile; my semen cannot remain unfruitful; my wife has just now passed her menstruous condition; I will send this semen to my dear wife." Thus thinking the time ripe, he closed the semen under the leaves of the banyan tree and charging it with the mantra power (some power) addressed a falcon close by thus "O highly fortunate one! Take this my semen virile and go to my palace. O Beautiful one! Do this my work: take this semen virile and go quick to my palace and hand it over to my wife Girika for to-day is her menstruation period."

24. Suta said "O Risis! Thus saying, the king gave that leaf with the virile therein to the falcon, who is capable of going quick in the air, took it and immediately rose high up in the air.

25-26. Another falcon, seeing this one flying in the air with leaf in his beak, considered it to be some piece of flesh and fell upon him. Immediately a gallant fighting ensued between the two birds with their beaks.

27. While the fighting was going on, that leaf with semen virile fell down from their beaks on the waters of the Jumna river. Then the two falcons flew away as they liked.

28-39. O Risis! While the two falcons were fighting with each other, one Apsara (celestial nymph) named Adrika came to a Brahmin, who was performing his Sandhya Bandanam on the banks of the Jumna. That beautiful woman began to bathe in the waters and took a plunge for playing sports and caught hold of the feet of the Brahmana. The Dvija, engaged in Pranayama (deep breathing exercise), saw that the woman had amorous intentions, and cursed her, saying “As you have interrupted me in my meditation, so be a fish.”

Adrika, one of the best Apsaras, thus cursed, assumed the form of a fish Safari and spent her days in the Jumna waters. When the semen virile of Uparichara Vasu fell from the beak of the falcon, that fish Adrika came quickly and ate that and became pregnant. When ten months passed, a fisherman came there and caught in a net that fish Adrika. When the fish's belly was torn asunder, two human beings instantly came out the the womb. One was a lovely boy and the other a beautiful girl. The fisherman was greatly astonished to see this. He went and informed the king of that place who was Uparichara Vasu that the boy and the girl were born of the womb of a fish. The king also was greatly surprised and accepted the boy who seemed auspicious. This Vasu's son was highly energetic and powerful, truthful and religious like his father and became famous by the name of the king Matsyaraj. Uparichara Vasu gave away the girl to the fisherman. This girl was named Kali and she became famous by the name of Matsyodari. The smell of the fish came out of her body and she was named also Matsyagandha. Thus the auspicious Vasu's daughter remained and grew in that fisherman's house.

The Risis said The beautiful Apsara, cursed by the Muni, turned into fish; she was afterwards cut asunder and eaten up by the fisherman. Very well! What happened afterwards to that Apsara? How was she freed of that curse? and how did she go back to the Heavens?

Thus questioned by the Risis, Suta spoke as follows When the Apsara was first cursed by the Muni, she was greatly astonished; she began to weep and cry like one greatly distressed and afterwards began to praise him. The Brahmin, seeing her weeping, took pity on her and said “O good one! Don't weep; I am telling you how your curse will expire. As an effect of having incurred my wrath, you will be born as a fish and when you will give birth to two human children, you will be freed of your curse.”

The Brahmin having spoken thus, Adrika got a fish-body in the waters of the Jumna. Afterwards she gave birth to two human children and became freed of the curse when she, quitting the fish form assumed the divine form and went up to the Heavens. O Risis! The beautiful girl Matsyagandha thus took her birth and was nourished in the fisherman's house and grew up there. When the extraordinarily lovely girl of Vasu, Matsyagandha attained her youth, she continued to do all the household duties of the fisherman and remained there.

Thus ends the first chapter of the Second Skandha on the birth of Matsyagandha in the Mahapurana S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Once on an occasion, the highly energetic Muni Paras'ara went out on pilgrimage and arrived on the banks of the Yamuna, and spoke to the religious fisherman who was taking his food then thus - "O fisherman! Take me on your boat and carry me to the other side of the river." Hearing this, the fisherman spoke to the beautiful girl Matsyagandha "O beautiful smiling one! This religious ascetic intends to cross the river; so take the boat and carry him to the other bank." Thus ordered by her father, the exceedingly beautiful Vasu girl Matsyagandha began to steer the boat whereon sat the Muni. Thus while the boat was sliding on the waters of the Yamuna; the Muni Paras'ara saw the beautiful-eyed damsel Matsyagandha and became as if under the command of the great destiny, greatly enamoured of her. He desired to enjoy Matsyagandha, full of youth and beauty and with his right hand caught hold of her left hand; the blue coloured Matsya looking askance spoke out smilingly in the following words:-- O knower of Dharma! What are you going to do, pierced by the arrows of Cupid? What you desire now, is it worthy of your family or your study of the S’astras or worthy of your Tapasya; see, you are born in the line of Vas'istha and you are well known as of good character. O best of Brahmins! You are quite aware that the attaining of a man-birth in this world is very rare; and over and above this the attainment of Brahminhood is, as far as my knowledge goes, particularly difficult.

11-14. O Prince of Brahmins! You are the foremost and best as far as your family, goodness, and learning in the Vedas and other S’astras are concerned; you are well versed in Dharma; how is it, then, that you are going to do this act, not worthy of an Arya, though you see me possessed of this bad smell of fish throughout my body. O one of unbaffled understanding! O best of twice-born! What auspicious sign do you see in my body that you are stricken with passion on my account that you have caught hold of my hand to enjoy me? Why have you gotten your own Dharma? Thus saying, Matsyagandha thought within herself“Alas! This Brahmin has certainly lost his brains in order to enjoy me; certainly he will be drowned just now in his attempt to enjoy me in this boat; his mind is so much agitated with the arrows of Cupid that no body, it seems, can act against his will.” Thus thinking Matsyagandha spoke again to the Muni “O highly fortunate one! Hold patience! let me first take you to the other side of the river; then you may do as you please.”

15-19. Hearing these reasonable words, the Muni let loose of her hand and took his seat on the boat and gradually got down on the other bank of the river. But the Muni, becoming again extremely passionate caught hold of Matsyagandha; when the young woman spoke to Paras’ara, in front of her, shuddering “O best of Munis! My body is emitting very bad smell; do you not feel this? You know very well that the sexual intercourse between male and female of similar types brings in happiness and comfort.” Thus spoken to, Paras’ara made Matsyagandha emit sweet scent like that of musk to a distance of one Yojana (8 miles) and her body exceedingly lovely and beautiful and, becoming extremely passionate, again caught hold of her right hand.

20-34. Then the auspicious Satyavati addressed Paras’ara Muni, resolved to enjoy her, thus:-- “O Muni! Behold! all are looking at us; my father too, is there on the bank of the Yamuna; so, O Muni! wait till night this beastly act before all is highly unsatisfactory to me. The wise persons declare it a great sin to commit sexual intercourse during day they have ordained night time as the best time of intercourse for men not the day time; the more so that many person's eyes are in this direction. So, O intelligent one! hold on your passion for a while; for the blame pronounced by the public is horrible.” Hearing these reasonable words, the liberal minded

Paras'ara created, by his influence of Tapasya, a dense fog so that both the banks of the Yamuna became covered with darkness. Then Matsyagandha gently spoke to the Muni “O best of Dvijas! I am not as yet married; I am now a girl; you will go away after enjoying me; your semen virile is not fruitless; so Brahman! What will be my fate? If I be pregnant today, what shall I say to my father? and what will be my future state? There is no doubt that, after enjoying me, you will go away; what will I do afterwards; kindly say.” Hearing these words of Matsyagandha, Paras'ara said “O beloved! after you have done my pleasant duty, you will remain a girl as you are now; yet, O timid one! ask from me any boon you like; I will grant it to you.” Satyavati then said “O best Brahman, O giver of one's honour! grant me these things That my father and mother do not know anything of this affair and that my virginity be again as ever the same. Also let an extraordinarily powerful energetic son be born to me like you; let this nice smell continue to remain always in my body and let my youth and beauty remain afresh and increase ever more. Hearing this, Paras'ara said “O beautiful one! a son, very pure and holy, will be born to you, from Narayana's part! his name will be famous in the three worlds. O beautiful one! never before my heart was agitated with such passion. I do not know why I have become so much passionate for you. I saw the unrivalled beauties of Apsaras but I never lost my patience; but seeing you, I have become attracted to you; it must be under the direction of Providence; know it certain that there must be some mysterious cause in this. However Fate is unavoidable to all; otherwise you are full of so bad smell; why shall I be fascinated by your sight? O beautiful one! your son will be famed in the three worlds; will compose the Puranas and will sub¬ divide the Vedas.

Thus saying, the Muni Paras'ara enjoyed Matsyagandha, who became quite submissive; and after bathing in the Yamuna, quickly went away. On the other hand, the chaste Satyavati, too, became pregnant and immediately gave birth on the island of Yamuna to a son beautiful, as if the Second Kamadeva, the god of Love, Kamadeva. No sooner that son, very fiery and highly potent, was born than he devoted his mind to tapasya and spoke to his own mother Satyavati thus:--“o Mother! now go wherever you like; I will also go to perform tapasya. O highly fortunate one; No sooner you remember me, I will come to you. O Mother! where you will have any onerous duty, remember me and I will instantly come to you. Let all good be unto you; now I go. Avoid all cares and live happily. Thus saying, Vyasadeva went out. Matsyagandha, too, went back to his father. Vyasa was named also Dvaipayan (born in an island, a Dvipa) in as much as Satyavati gave birth to him in a Dvipa island); and as he was born of Visnu's parts, he grew up no sooner he was born.

The Muni Dvaipayana bathed in every Tirtha and performed the highest asceticism. Thus Dvaipayan Vyasa was born of Paras'ara in Satyavati’s womb. Seeing the advent of Kali Yuga, he adorned the tree of the Vedas with many S’akhas (branches). It is because he expanded the Vedas many S’akhas, that he is denominated also as VedaVyas; he composed eighteen Puranas, Samhitas, the excellent Mahabharat, subdivided the Vedas and made his disciples Sumantu, Jaimini, Paila, Vaisampayan, Asita, Devala and his son S’uka to study them.

Suta said “O Munis! Thus I have described to you the birth of the holy Vyasa, the son of Satyavati and all the causes. O Munis! Do not allow any doubt enter your mind as regards his birth; for it is always advisable to take up only the good things as far as the lives of great persons and Munis are concerned. There must be some extraordinary mysterious cause owing to which Satyavati was born of a fish, and she was first united to Paras'ara and then to Santanu. Otherwise how can one account for the fact of the Muni Paras’ara being so much agitated by passion and why he would behave like a mean low person in the committal of a a grossly blameable act? Now has been spoken the wonderful birth story of Vyasa Deva together with all incidents, and enveloped under the great mystery. If any man hears this holy narrative, he will be freed from sins and will never fall into difficulties and will always be happy.

Thus ends the Second Chapter of the Second Skandha on the birth of Vyasa Deva in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-8. The Risis said “O Sinless Suta! You have described to us in detail the birth of Vyasa, of unrivalled fire, and of Satyavati; but we have one great doubt in our minds though, O Knower of Dharma! which is not being removed by your words. O Sinless one! First, as regards the mother of Vyasa, the all auspicious Satyavati, we have this doubt how she came to be united to the virtuous S’antanu? The king S’antanu, of the family of Puru is a greatly religious man; how could he have married Satyavati knowing her to be a fisherman's daughter and born of a low family? Now say who was the first wife of S’antanu and how Bhisma, the intelligent son of S’antanu came to be born of the parts of Vasu? O Suta! You have told before that Bhisma, of indomitable valour, made the Satyavati's son, the brave Chitrangada, king; and subsequent to his death made his younger brother Vichitravirya king. But when the elder brother Bhisma, the greatly religious and beautiful was present, how was it that Chitrangada and Vichitravirya having been installed by Bhisma himself could have reigned.”

9-12. Again on the demise of Vichitravirya, Satyavati became very much grieved and got two sons born of her two son's wives by Vedavyasa? How can we explain this fact? Why did she do this? Why did she not give to Bhisma the kingdom? Why did Bhisma not marry? And how was it that the elder brother Vyasa Deva, of indomitable valour, did such an irreligious act as to beget two (Goloka) sons from the wives of the brothers? Vyasa composed the Puranas and knew everything of religion; how then did he go to other's wives, especially, of his brother's wives?

13-14. O Suta! Why did Vyasa Deva do such a hateful act, in spite of his being a Muni? The actions of Vedas are inferred from their subsequent good conducts; how can this act of Vyasa be calculated as one amongst them? O Intelligent one! You are the disciple of Vyasa; therefore you are the best man to solve our doubts. We all of this Dharmakshettra Naimisaranya are very eager to hear this.

15-39. At this Suta said In ancient days there reigned a king named Mahabhisa, in the family of Iksaku endowed with all the qualities of a great king; he was the foremost of all the kings, truthful and religious. That highly intelligent king performed thousand horse- sacrifices (Asva medhas) one hundred Vajapeya sacrifices and thereby satisfied Indra, the king of the Devas and went to Heavens. Once, on an occasion, that king went to the abode of Brahma; the other gods also went there to serve Prajapati. The great river, Ganga Devi, too, assuming the feminine form, went to Brahma to serve him. Now, in the interval, violent winds arose and the clothing of Ganga Devi went off; at this the Devas did not look at her; rather kept their faces downwards; but the king Mahabhisa continued gazing at her. Ganga also came to know the king and that he had become attached to her. Brahma, seeing that both of them are love-stricken and are shameless, became angry and cursed them immediately O king! you better take your birth again in the human world and practise great meritorious deeds and come again to this Heaven. Thus saying, Brahma looked at Ganga, who was attached to the king, and addressed her“You too better go to the human world and become his wife.” Both of them, the king as well as Ganga, came out of Brahma's abode, very much grieved in their hearts. The king Mahabhisa thought of coming to this world and reflected on the kings thereof and settled to make the king Pratipa of Puru's family his father. At this time the eight Vasus with their wives wandering in various places and enjoying as they liked came to the hermitage of Vas'istha. Amongst the aforesaid eight Vasus Prithu and others, one Vasu Dyau's wife seeing Nandini, the sacrificial cow (Kamadhenu) of Vas'istha asked her husband “Whose is this excellent cow that I see? Vasu then replied as follows “ O Beautiful one! This is Vas'istha's cow. Whoever, be he a man or woman drinks her milk gets his longevity extended to ten thousand years and his youth never ends.” Hearing this, the Vasu's wife said “There is a very beautiful comrade (Sakhi) of mine, the daughter of the Rajarsi- Us'ina in the world, of auspicious qualities. O Mahabhaga! Kindly bring to me from Vas'istha's hermitage that auspicious sacrificial milch cow Nandini together with her calf that yields all desires; my Sakhi will then drink her milk and be thereby free from disease, old age and become the chief amongst all mankind. Hearing thus, his wife's word, the Vasu Dyau, though sinless, stole away together with Prithu and the other Vasus the cow Nandini in utter defiance to the self-controlled Muni Vas'istha. When the cow Nandini had been stolen, the great ascetic Vas'istha came quickly to the hermitage with abundance of fruits.

The ascetic Muni Vas'istha, not finding, in his hermitage, his cow with her calf, searched for her in many forests and caves; but he, the son of Varuna, could not find out his cow even after prolonged searches; he, then, took recourse to meditation and came to know that the Vasus had stolen the cow and became angry. He expressed “When the Vasus have stolen this my cow in utter defiance to my self, they must be born amongst men.” When the religious Varuna's son Vas'istha thus cursed the Vasus, they became very sorry and absent-minded; all of them went to Vas'istha's hermitage and saw him there; they began to supplicate him as much as they could; and took refuge under him. Seeing the Vasus standing before him in an extremely distressed condition, the virtuous Muni Vas'istha said “You all will be free from the curse within one year; but the Vasu Dyau will dwell amongst men for a long, long period as he had stolen direct my Nandini with her calf.”

40-60. While the Vasus, thus cursed, were returning, they saw on the way the chief river Ganga Devi also cursed and therefore distressed;

all of them bowed down to her simultaneously and said: “O Devi! A serious thought is troubling our minds, how can we, who live on nectar, take our birth in human wombs; so, O best river! You better be a woman and give birth to us. O Sinless one! You better be the wife of the sage King S’antanu and no sooner we be born of your womb, kindly throw us in the river Ganga (your water). If you do thus, O Ganga we will certainly be freed of our curse.” Ganga Devi replied “Well; that will be.” Thus spoken, the Vasus went to their respective places; and Ganga Devi, too, thinking on the subject again and again, went out of that place. At this time Mahabhisa became born as a son of the king Pratipa and became known as S’antanu. He was exceedingly religious and true to his promise. One day while the King Pratipa was praising the Surya Devi (the sun) of unequalled energy, Ganga Devi assumed an extraordinarily beautiful feminine form and came out of the waters and sat on the right thigh, resembling like a sal tree, of the king Pratipa. The sage king Pratip spoke out to the lady sitting on his right thigh, thus “O beautiful faced one! Why, unasked, have you sat on my auspicious right thigh?” The lovely Ganga then replied “Hear why I have sat here. O best of Kurus! O king! Becoming attached to you, I have sat on your thigh; so please accept me.” At this the king Pratipa spoke to the beautiful lady, full of youth and beauty, “I never go, simply out of passion to another's wife. There is another point; you have sat on my right thigh; that is the seat of sons and son's wives; so, when my desired son will be born, you will then, be my son's wife. And certainly, by your good will, my son will be born.” The lady, of divine form, said. Well; that will be done! and went away. The king returned to his palace, thinking of the lady. After some time, he had a son born to him and when the son attained his teens, the king desired to lead a forest life and communicated this matter to his son. He said also, if the aforesaid beautifully smiling girl comes to you to marry, then marry her. And I am also ordering you not to question her anything “who are you” and so forth. If you take her as your legal wife, you will certainly be happy. Thus saying to his son, the king Pratipa handed over all his kingdom to his son and gladly retired into the forest. The king practised tapasya in the forest and worshipped Ambika; on quitting his mortal coil, he went by his sheer merit to the Heavens. The highly energetic king S'antanu, on getting his kingdom, began to administer justice according to the laws of Dharma and governed his subjects.

Thus ends the third Chapter of the Second Skandha on the description of the curse on Ganga, Mahabhisa and Vasus in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-8. Suta said On the king Pratipa, ascending to the Heavens, the truly hero-king S'antanu went out a hunting tigers and other forest animals. Once, while he was roaming in a wild wilderness, on the banks of the Ganges, he saw a fawn-eyed well decorated beautiful woman. No sooner the king S'antanu saw her than he became addicted to her and thought within himself thus "Certainly my father spoke of this beautiful faced woman who is looking like a second Laksmi, endowed with beauty and youth." The king could not rest satisfied simply with seeing the lotus-like face. The hairs on his body stood on their ends and his heart was very much attracted to her. Ganga Devi, too, knew him to be the king Mahabhisa and became, in her turn, very much attached to him. She then went smiling towards the king. Seeing the blue-coloured lady looking askance at him, the king became very happy and consoled her in sweet words and said "O, one of beautiful thighs! Are you Devi; ManusT (human kind) Gandharvi; Yakshi, the daughter of Nagas (serpents), or a celestial nymph? Whoever you may be, O beautiful one! be my wife; your sweet smiles, it seems, are brimful of love; so be my legal wife to-day."

9-26. Suta said The king S'antanu could not recognise the lady to be Ganga; but Ganga knew that he is the king Mahabhisa and is born as S'antanu. Hearing the above words of the king, Ganga, out of her previous affections, spoke out to the king, smiling "O king! I know that you are the son of the king Pratipa. Behold! Though it is inevitable that woman will get their husbands, yet who is that beautiful lady that does not husband according to her liking and qualifications? But I can take you as my husband, if you make a certain promise to me. Hear my resolve afterwards I will marry you.

O king! Whatever I will do, be it good or bad, auspicious or inauspicious, you must not hinder or interrupt me nor ever say that is not to your liking and satisfaction. Whenever you will break this my resolve, I will instantly quit you and go to another place wherever I like. The king S'antanu, then, said "Well! That will be" and promised to the above effect; then Ganga Devi recollected within herself Vasus' words and thought of the attachment of the king Mahabhisa and accepted S'antanu as her husband. Thus married to the king S'antanu, the beautiful Ganga in human form went to his abode. The king, on having got possession of her, began to enjoy in pleasant gardens. The lady, too, appreciated his mental feelings and began to serve him to his satisfaction. Thus many years elapsed in lovely enjoyments and intercourses between the couple who looked like Indra and his pair Sachi; and they did not feel at all how the time passed. The lady endowed with all qualities and the clever king, well- versed in the art of loving, began to enjoy incessantly like Laksmi and Narayana, in their divine palace.

Thus many years passed when the lovely eyed lady became pregnant of the king S'antanu's sperm and, in due time, gave birth to a son who was a Vasu. No sooner the son was born than Ganga Devi threw it in the waters of the Ganges. Thus the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh sons were threwn successively on the waters. Then the king became very anxious and thought within himself"What am I to do now? How my family be preserved? This my wife, incarnate of sin, has killed my seven sons; if I now desist her, she will instantly leave me and go away. Now this is the eighth pregnancy as desired by me. Now if I do not interrupt her, she will certainly throw my son in the Ganges. Whether a son will be born again or not is doubtful; and even if that be born, it is doubtful whether she will preserve that child; now what am I to do in this doubtful point? However I will try my best to continue the thread of my family line."

27-46. Now, in due time, the Vasu who, having been influenced by his wife had stolen Vas'istha's cow Nandini, became born as the eighth son of Ganga Devi; the king S'antanu, seeing this son fell unto Ganga's feet and said "O thin-bodied woman! I pray to you to give my life to-day; better nourish this my one son. O beautiful one! You killed in succession my seven exceedingly beautiful sons. O one of beautiful hips! I now fall at your feet. O beautiful one! save the life of this child of mine. If you ask from me any other thing to day, even that be very rare, I will give it to you; but you better now keep the thread of my family line. The Pundits, versed in the Vedas, say that he who has no issues cannot go to Heaven; so, O Beautiful one! To¬ day I pray to you to keep the life of this my eighth son." Though thus spoken by S'antanu, Ganga Devi was eager to take away the son to throw in the waters; the king became very sorrowful and angrily spoke out "O vile and vicious woman! What are you going to do? Do you not fear hell! of what villain are you the daughter, that you are always doing this vicious deed? O Sinner! go away wherever you will or remain here as yon like, it matters little; but my son will remain here. When you attempt to bring my family to extinction, what use is there in living with you?" When the king thus spoke to the woman who was ready to take away the son she angrily spoke as follows O King! When you have acted against my promise, my word is broken and my connection with you has stopped from to-day. Therefore I will take this son to the forest, where I will nourish him. I am Ganga; to fulfil God's work I have come here. The high-souled Vas'istha cursed before the eight Vasus "Better be born as men"; they became very anxious; and seeing me they prayed "O Sinless one! let you be mother of us all." O best of kings! I granted them what they desired; and then for the purpose of serving god's ends, I became your wife. Know this my history. The seven Vasus already were born and were freed; now this is the last Vasu and he will remain here for sometime as your son. O S'antanu! now take this son offered by Ganga. Know this to be the Deva Vasu and enjoy the pleasure of having a son. O highly fortunate one! This son will be famous by the name of Gangeya (Ganga's son) and will be the most powerful of all. O King! To-day I will take this son to the place where I chose you as my husband; I will nourish him and when he attains his youth, I will return him to you. For, this son, if deprived of mother, will not be happy nor will he live." Thus saying, Ganga vanished with the son; the King S'antanu became very sorrowful and passed away his time in his palace. The king thought always of the separation from his wife and son and thus painfully governed his kingdom.

47-69. Thus some time passed on, when, once on an occasion, the king S'antanu went out a hunting and killed, with arrows, buffaloes, boar, and other wild animals and came to the banks of the Ganges. Here he saw with great wonder that a boy was playing with a great bow and was shooting arrows after arrows. The king's attention was more attracted towards the boy, but whether that boy was his or not, did not at all come to his mind. Looking at his extraordinary feats, his agility in shooting arrows with ease and quickness, his learning that can have no equal and his beautiful form, as if of Cupid, he became greatly surprised and asked him "O Sinless one! whose son are you?" The hero boy did not reply anything but went away shooting his arrows. The king thought within himself "Who is this boy? Whose son is he? What to do now? To whom shall I go now?" Thus pondering, he recollected within himself and began to recite verses in praise of Ganga; Ganga, assuming her beautiful form as before, became visible to the king. Seeing her, the king said "O Ganga! Who is this boy that has just gone? Will you show him once more to me now?" Hearing these words of S'antanu, Ganga said "O king of kings! He is your son, he is that eighth Vasu. So long I have nourished him and now I hand him over to you. O Suvrata! This is the great ascetic Gangeya. He is the illustrious scion of your family. The glory of your line will be enhanced. I have taught him the whole science of archery. This pure son of yours dwelt in the hermitage of Vas'istha and has become versed in all the Vidyas and skilled in all the actions. Your this son knows everything that Jamadgni Paras'uram knew. So, O king of kings! Take now your son and be happy. Thus saying, Ganga gave him his son and vanished; the king also became very glad and embraced his son; he smelled his head and took him to his chariot and drove towards his own city. On returning to Hastinapur, the king held a great festival (utsab) in honor of the arrival of his son; he called all his astrologers and enquired what day was auspicious. He then called all his subjects and ministers and installed Gangeya as the Crown Prince. The religious S’antanu became very happy on making Gangeya, the Crown Prince; he forgot the pains due to Ganga's bereavement. Suta said - “Thus I have described to you the cause of the curse on Vasus, the birth of Bhisma from the womb of Ganga, the union of Ganga and S’antanu, etc.. He who hears in this world this holy story of Ganga's birth and the birth of the Vasu, is freed of all sins and gets mukti. O Munis! I have described these meritorious holy accounts, as I heard from the mouth of Vyasa. Any body who hears this holy S’rimad Bhagavatam, endowed with five characteristics and filled with various anecdotes, that came out of the mouth of Vyasa, finds all his sins destroyed and attains peace and blessedness. O Munis! Thus has been described completely to you this holy history.

Thus ends the fourth Chapter on the birth of the Vasus in the Mahapurana S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-20. The Risis said “O son of Lomaharsana, O Suta; you have described to us how the eight Vasus, cursed by Vas'istha, took their birth and how Bhisma was born. O knower of Dharma! Now describe to us in detail how the greatly religious king S’antanu married the auspicious Yojanagandha, the chaste Satyavati, the mother of Vyasa, knowing full well that she was a fisherman's daughter? O Suvrata! Remove our this doubt. Suta then said The sage king S’antanu always used to go to forests on hunting expeditions, with his heart addicted to hunting buffaloes, deer and various other wild animals.

Thus, for four years that king went out a hunting, with his son Bhisma, deer and other wild animals and got the highest happiness as Mahadeva finds in company with Kartikeya. Once, on an occasion, while he was shooting arrows at rhinoceros and boar, etc., he went so far as to reach a forest on the banks of the Yamuna, the chief of the rivers. There he began to smell an excellent nice smell that could not be described in words; he tried to find out the source and wandered here and there, and on all sides of the forest; and thought that this enchanting smell was not that of Mandara flowers, musk, champaka nor that of Malati nor that of Ketaki flower; the air was blowing saturated with peculiar fragrant smell that he never experienced before. Thus thinking of that smell, the king S'antanu, being enchanted with that, followed to its source in that forest. At last he came to a spot on the banks of the Yamuna the chief of the rivers, where a very beautiful girl, calm and quiet and with feminine gestures and posture amorous, lovely but ill-clad, was sitting; and he found out that the above beautiful smell was coming out of her body. The form of the lady was extremely beautiful; the smell was very wonderful, and captivating the hearts of all; her age then entered to youth and she was very auspicious. The king was greatly surprised and was eager to know who the lady was; whence she had come; whether she was a Deva girl, or a human or a Gandarbha daughter or a Naga daughter? But, being unable to come to a definite conclusion and becoming passionate, he remembered Ganga and asked that lady sitting on the bank of the Yumna, thus "O dear! Who are you? Whose daughter are you? Why are you alone in this lovely forest? O beautiful eyed! Are you married? Or are you as yet unmarried? So answer to all these. O lovely eyed one! Seeing your lovely enchanting form I am become extremely passionate. So, O dear! Describe in detail to me, who are you? and what do you intend to do?" When the king spoke thus the lotus eyed nice-teethed lady replied as follows "O king! Know me as a fisherman's daughter and I am completely under my father's command. O king of kings! For Dharma's sake I carry ferry across this Yumna river. My father has gone to-day to our house. O Master of wealth! Thus I have spoken truth to you." Thus saying the lady desisted; the passionate king then spoke to her"I am the foremost hero of the Kuru family; so choose me as your husband; then your this youth will not go in vain.

21-32. O fawn-eyed one! I have no other wife existing; so you will be my legal wife. O Dear! Passion is giving much pains to me; therefore I am now become your obedient servant for ever. O Beloved! My former dear wife has abandoned me and gone away; but I have not married since then. Now seeing you beautiful, in all respects, I cannot bring my mind under control."

Hearing these nectar-like beautiful words of the king, the sweet scented fisherman's daughter, though also turned extremely passionate, held patience and exclaimed "O king! I also desire that which you have expressed; I am of opinion to act according to your wishes. But, what am I to do? I am not dependent. You are to know this. My father alone can give me in marriage to you. So better ask my father for me. Though I am a fisherman's daughter, still I am not wanton and wilful. I am always obedient to my father; if my father wills, you can marry me. And I will be obedient to you. O king! The god of love is tormenting me, who is endowed with youth; he does not torment you so much. Still I must regard my family manners and customs coming down from ancient times. I must hold my patience." Suta said Thus passionately pleased with these fascinating words of the lady, the king went to the fisherman's house for the lady. Seeing the king coming, the fisherman was greatly bewildered and astonished and bowed down with great devotion and said "O King! I am Thy servant. I am blessed by Thy presence. O great King! Now be graciously pleased to order me the cause of Thy arrival." Hearing the fisherman's words, the King said "O sinless one! This I tell you truly that if you give me your daughter in marriage I will certainly make her my legal wife." The fisherman replied "O king! What must be given ever, how can I say that is not to be given. Therefore if Thou askest for my daughter, I will certainly give her to Thee. But, O great King! Thou wilt have to make her son, the king of Thy kingdom; no other son of Thine could be king, after Thy absence."

33-40. Hearing these words of the fisherman, the king S’antanu became very anxious. He remembered Gangeya and could not speak anything. He, being sick with love anxiously returned home; but he abandoned bathing, feeding, sleeping, etc. At this, the son Gangeya Bhisma whose vow was equal to that of the gods, marking that the king was being troubled with some thought, went to him and asked why he was anxious “O king! Say truly what is your anxiety; who is your enemy that is not conquered; whom do you went to bring under your control? O king! What use is there of having a son who does not understand the difficulties of his father, or does not try to remove these difficulties. A son can be called really the son, who is born to repay the debts incurred by him in previous births; there is no manner of discussion in this. See, Raghu's son Dasarathi Ram abandoned his kingdom under the orders of his father and repaired to Chitrakuta forest with his brother Laksman and wife Sita. The son of king Haris Chandra, Rohita, ready to repay the debt of his father and sold by his father, worked as a servant at a Brahmana's house. So the famous S’unahs'ephah, sold by his high souled father Ajigarta was tied for sacrifice in a sacrificial post; but he was afterwards freed by the Gadhi's son VisVamitra.

41-59. It is well known that, in ancient days, the Jamadagni's son Paras'uram cut off his mother's head under the orders of his father. He considered the father's words more important, and hence could do such an unjust act. O king! This my body is at your disposal; I can certainly do what you order me to do. So say what am I to do? as long as I am living, you need not express any sorrow; if you permit, I will do what is even hardly practicable to do. O king! Say why you are anxious; I will remove that at once with this bow in my hand. If my body goes in carrying your mandate know that your desire will be fructified. Fie to that son, who, being capable, is averse to do what his father desires! What use is there in having a son who does not remove the cause of his father's anxiety? Hearing the words of the son, the king S’antanu felt much ashamed in his heart and said “O son! This is now my gravest care that you are my only son; besides you are a hero very powerful, honoured and never showing your back in battles; therefore, if, out of ill-luck you become dead in some battlefield, I will become issueless; under such circumstances what am I to do? So, O son! My life is fruitless when I have got only one son; this is my gravest care; therefore I am sorry. O son! I have no other cares that I can mention to you.” Hearing these words of the father, Gangeya called the old ministers and said that the king was too ashamed to speak out to me the real matter; so I ask you all to know exactly the king's cares and communicate them to me as they are; I can carry them out, without any hitch, then. At these Bhisma's words, the ministers went to the king, and learned the true cause, and spoke to Bhisma; learning this, he began to think what ought to be done.

The Ganga's son Bhisma, then, accompanied by the ministers, quickly went to the house of the fisherman, and with words of humility and affection, spoke “O tormentor of foes! I pray to you to give your beautiful daughter in marriage to my father. Your daughter will be my mother and I will be her servant.” The fisherman, then, said “O highly lucky prince! Then the king's son will not be able to become king, in your presence; so kindly marry yourself my daughter.” At this Bhisma again said Let your daughter be my mother; I will never accept the kingdom. The son of your daughter will, no doubt, become king. The fisherman said “I know your words are true; but if your son be powerful, he can take forcibly the kingdom for himself.” At this Bhisma again said “O Sire! Know my words as true; I will never marry; from to-day I have accepted this difficult vow.” Suta said Hearing this firm resolve of Bhisma; the fisherman gave over his beautiful daughter to the king S’antanu.

Thus S’antanu married the dear Satyavati; but he was quite unaware of the wonderful birth of Vyasa Deva.

Thus ends the fifth Chapter of the second Skandha on the marriage of Satyavati in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-12. Suta said Thus S’antanu married Satyavati; two sons were born to her and they died in course of time. Out of Vyasa Deva's semen, Dhritarastra was born. Ambika Devi, the mother of Dhritarastra closed her eyes on seeing Veda Vyasa; hence Dhritarastra was born blind. Seeing Dhritarastra blind Satyavati asked Vyasa to go to Ambalika (Pandu's mother); the princess Ambalika, mother of Pandu turned pale at the sight of Vyasa; hence her son became of a pale colour out of Vyasa's wrath. Hence the name of the son was Pandu. Next the maid servant, expert in the science of amorous pleasures, satisfied Vyasa; hence her son Vidura was born of Dharma's part and became truthful and holy. Though Pandu was younger, the ministers installed him on the throne. Dhritarastra could not become king, as he was blind. By the permission of Bhisma the powerful Pandu obtained the sovereignty; and the intelligent Vidura became his minister. Dhritarastra had two wives Gandhari and Sauvali; this Sauvali was Vaishya; she was engaged in the household affairs. The king Pandu had two wives, too; the first was Kunti, the daughter of Surasena; and the other was Madri, the daughter of the Madra king. Gandhari gave birth to one hundred beautiful sons; Vais'ya Sauvali gave birth to one beautiful son named Yuyutsu. While Kunti was a virgin, she gave birth, through the medium of the Sun, the lovely Kama; next he became the wife of Pandu. Hearing this, the Risis said “O Muni Suta! What are you saying? First Kunti brought forth a child and afterwards she was married to Pandu; this is wonderful, indeed! How was Kama, born of Kunti, unmarried? and how came Kunti to be married afterwards? describe all these in detail.”

13-35. Suta then said “O Dvija! While Surasena's daughter Kunti was a virgin girl, the king Kuntibhoja asked for Kunti that she might become her girl and Surasena gave her to the king Kuntibhoja who brought up this beautifully smiling girl. He put to her the service of Agni of Agnihotra. Once, on an occassion, Durvasa Muni, engaged in the vow, lasting for four months, came there; Kunti served him during that period; the Muni became greatly pleased and gave her a very auspicious, mantra, by virtue of which any Deva, when called upon by that mantra will come to Kunti and satisfy her desires. When the Muni went away, Kunti, remaining in her house, wanted to test the accuracy of the mantra and asked within herself “What Devata to call upon.” Seeing the God Surya had arisen in the sky, Kunti uttered the Mantra and invoked him. The Sun, then, assuming an excellent human form, came down from the Heavens and appeared before Kunti in the same room. Seeing the Deva Sun, Kunti became greatly surprised and began to shudder and instantly became endowed with the inherent natural quality of passion (had menstruation). The beautiful-eyed Kunti, with folded palm; spoke to Surya Deva standing before “I am highly pleased to-day seeing Thy form; now go back to Thy sphere.”

Surya Deva said “O Kunti! What for you called me, by virtue of the Mantra? Calling me, why do you not worship me, standing before you? O beautiful blue one! Seeing you, I have become passionate; so come to me. By means of the mantra, you have made me your subservient so take me for intercourse.” Hearing this, Kunti said “O Witness of all! O knower of Dharma! You know that I am a virgin girl. O Suvrata! I bow down to you; I am a family daughter; so do not speak ill to me.” Surya then said “If I go away in vain, I will be an object of great shame, and, no doubt, will be laughed amongst the gods; So, O Kunti! If you do not satisfy me, I will immediately curse you and the Brahmin who has given you this mantra. O Beautiful one! If you satisfy me, your virginity will remain; no body will come to know and there will be born a son to you, exactly like me.” Thus saying Surya Deva enjoyed the bashful Kunti, with her mind attracted towards him; He granted her the desired boons and went away. The beautiful Kunti became pregnant and began to remain in a house, under great secrecy. Only the dear nurse knew that; her mother or any other person was quite unaware of the fact. In time, a very beautiful son like the second Sun and Kartikeya, decked with a lovely Kavacha coat of mail and two ear-rings, was born there. Then the nurse caught hold of the hand of the bashful Kunti and said “O Charming one! What care can you possibly have as long as I am living.” Kunti then, placed the son in a box and said “O son! What shall I do? Being afraid of shame, I am leaving you, though you are dear to me as my life itself! I am exceedingly fortunate that I am casting aside this all auspicious son. May the attributeless Bhagavati Ambika, the World Mother and the Lady of all, endowed with attributes, protect Thee! May Katyayani, the giver of all desires, feed you with Her milk! Alas! I am quitting you, born of Surya's semen in this solitary forest like a vitiated wanton woman. I do not know, when shall I see your lotus like beautiful face, dearest to me like my self. Alas! I never worshipped in my former birth S'ivani, the mother of the three worlds; I never meditated Her lotus like feet, the Giver of all happiness; hence I am so very unfortunate. O Dear son! I must perform great tapasya to expiate for this terrible sin, that I knowingly commit in relinquishing you in the forest."

36-48. Suta said:-- Thus saying to the son within the casket, Kunti gave over that to the hands of her nurse, terrified, lest some one might see her. Kunti then bathed and remained with a fearful heart in her father's house. A carpenter (charioteer?) named Adhiratha got accidentally that casket floating in the Ganges. The carpenter's wife Radha, prayed for the son and nourished him under her care. Thus nourished in the carpenter's house, the famous Kunti's son Kama became a very powerful warrior. The king Pandu then married Kunti in a Svayamvara, a marriage in which the girl chooses her husband from among a number of suitors, assembled together. And the all auspicious daughter of the king of Madra became also the second wife of Pandu. Once, on an occasion, the powerful Pandu, while hunting in the forest killed a Muni, in the form of a deer, engaged in the act of co-habitation, thinking it to be a deer. The dying Muni became inflated with wrath, cursed Pandu "If you co-habit.

certainly you will die." Thus cursed by the Muni, Pandu became very sorrowful and abandoned his kingdom and began to live in the forest. O Munis! His two wives Kunti and Madri, followed their husband as chaste women do, to serve him in the forest. Dwelling in the hermitage of the Munis, Pandu listened to the Dharma S'astras and practised severe penance. Once while he was listening to the religious discourses of the Munis, he heard unmistakeably the Munis telling that the man who is sonless can never go to the Heavens; so he must get a son somehow or other. The Pundits declare that the sons born of the father's semen, the sons born of their daughters, the Ksettraja, the Goloka, the Kunda, the Sahoda, the Kanina, the Krita, one obtained in the forest, or one offered by another father, unable to nourish his son, all are entitled to inherit the wealth of the father; but the sons, enumerated successively are more and more inferior.

N.B.: Ksettraja - of a son, the off spring of the wife by a kinsman appointed to procreate issue to the husband.

Goloka - Bastard child of a widow.

Kunda - a child born in adultery.

Sahoda - the son of a woman pregnant at the time of marriage. Kanina - the son born of a young and unmarried woman.

Krita - purchased

49-52. Hearing this, Pandu spoke to the lotus-eyed Kunti to procreate sons for him soon by a great ascetic Muni "By my order, you will not incur any sin in doing this. I heard that in ancient times the high souled kin Saudasa got son from Vas'istha." Kunti, then spoke to the king "O Lord! I know one Siddha mantra; it was given to me before by the Muni Durvasa. Whichever Devata I will invoke by that Mantra, he will instantly come to my side, controlled by that Mantra."

53-71. At the request of the husband, Kunti invoked Dharma, the best of the Devas; and after being impregnated by him, gave birth to Yudhisthira. Then she got through Pavana Deva, the son

Vrikodara; and through Indra the Lord of the Devas, Arjuna. Thus, in every year, Kunti gave birth to one son and so in three years she gave birth to three very powerful and mighty sons. At this Madri spoke to her husband “O king, the best of the Kurus! What shall I do now? Kindly suggest to me the means of procreating sons; O Lord, remove my pain.” Pandu asked Kunti for this; Kunti, moved with pity, gave her the mantra, so that she might get one son. Then the beautiful Madri, invoked the twin AsVin under the advice of her husband and got a pair of twins Nakula and Sahadeva through them. O Munis! Thus five Pandavas were born successively in every following year to the wives of Pandu by the seed of the Devas. Once on a time Pandu, whose end was drawing nigh became very passionate at the sight of Madri in that solitary hermitage. He, though forbidden repeatedly by Madri, warmly embraced her, as if dictated by the great destroyer, and fell to the ground. As the creeper falls down when the tree is felled, so Madri dropped on the ground and began to cry violently. Having heard the wailings of Madri, Kunti and the five sons of Pandu came there weeping and crying; a tumult then ensued and the great Munis also appeared on the scene. Then those Munis, practising great vows, knew that Pandu was dead and performed duly, on the banks of the Ganges, the ceremony of burning the dead.

At that time Madri gave over to Kunti the charge of her two sons and followed the Sati practice along with her husband to go to Satyaloka.

The Munis, then, performed Tarpana ceremonies in honour of Pandu and Madri and took Kunti and the five sons to Hastinapur. Knowing that Kunti has come, Bhisma, Vidura and the relatives of Dhritarastra within the city, all came to Kunti. They all asked Kunti “O beautiful one! Whose are these five sons?” Kunti, then, remembered the curse on Pandu and sorrowfully expressed “ These are the Deva's sons born in Kuru family.” In order to convince the people assembled there, Kunti invoked the Devas who came in the celestial space above and said “Yes, these are the sons born of our seeds.” Bhisma, then, paid respect to the words of the Devas and honoured duly the boys. Bhisma then took the five sons and Pandu's wife to Hastina and gladly nourished them. O Munis! The sons of Pritha were thus born and nourished by Bhisma.

Thus ends the sixth chapter of the second Adhyaya on the birth of the Pandavas in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam.

English translation

Suta said The chaste Draupadi was the common wife of all the five very beautiful sons of Kunti; and she bore five sons, one to every husband. Arjuna had one wife more; she was Subhadra, the sister of S'ri Krisna. By the order of S'ri Krisna, Arjuna stole her away (took her by force). The great hero Abhimanyu was born of Subhadra. This Abhimanyu and the five sons of Draupadi were killed in battle. Abhimanyu's wife Uttara was the charming daughter of the king Virat. She gave birth to one dead child, after all the boys, the descendants of the family were extinct. The above child died out of the arrows of AsVatthama. The extraordinarily powerful S'ri Krisna Himself made alive again this his sister's dead grandson. As this son was born after the family had become extinct, he became known in the world by the name of Pariksit. When the sons were all destroyed, Dhritarastra became very sorry, and, tormented by the arrow-like words of Bhima, remained in the kingdom of the Pandavas.

Gandhari, too, exceedingly distressed on the bereavement of the sons, remained there also. Yudhisthira, day and night, served Dhritarastra and Gandhari. The greatly religious Vidura always used to console, by the advice of Yudhisthira, his brother Dhritarastra, who possessed the eye of wisdom and he remained by his brother's side. Dharma's son Yudhisthira used to serve his uncle Dhritarastra in such a way as he might forget the pain of the death of his sons. But Bhima used to pierce his heart by his arrow-like words that he pronounced so loud as to reach the ears of the old king Dhritarastra. Bhima used to-say "In the battle field I killed all the sons, of the wicked blind king (Dhritarastra) and it was I that sucked well and drunk, full to the brim, the blood of the heart of Duhs'asana. Now this blind king eats shamelessly like a crow and a dog, the mass of food (Pinda) given by me, and thus is bearing uselessly the burden of life. Daily Bhima used to tell, thus, harsh words to him; whereas the religious Yudhisthira used to console him, saying "Bhima is a quite illiterate brute" and so forth. The king Dhritarastra remained there with a grieved heart for eighteen years; the one day he proposed to the Dharma's son Yudhisthira about his intention to dwell in forest thus "To-day I wish to perform Tarpanas in the names my sons. True it is, that Bhima performed the funeral obsequies of them all; but, having in view of the former enmity, he did not do anything for my sons. If you give me some money, I will, then, perform the funeral obsequies of my sons and then retire to the forest to perform tapasya that I can go to Heaven." Vidura also asked Yudhisthira privately pay to Dhritarashtra the sum that he wanted; Yudhisthira also intended to pay the required money. Then Yudhisthira, the lord of the world call his younger brothers and addressed them as follows "O highly fortunate ones! Our revered uncle is desirous to perform the funeral obsequies of his sons; so we will have to give him some money for the purpose.” Hearing these words of his elder brother of indomitable valour, Havana's son, the mighty armed Bhima became very angry and spoke out follows “O highly lucky one! Is it that we will have to give wealth for the spiritual benefit of Duryodhana and others? What a great stupidity can there be than the fact that such a malevolent blind king is deriving so great happiness at your hands? O Arya! It is by your bad counsel that we suffered endless troubles in the forest and the extremely good Draupadi was brought before the public in the hall by Duhs'asana. O one of good vows! It is for your satisfaction alone that we, though we were very mighty, had to remain in the house of Matsya Raj Virat as servants. Had you not been our elder brother and not been addicted to the gambling, would it have been possible I, who killed Jarasandha, would have been a cook to Virat Raj! Never we had been put to so great a trouble!

Never would the mighty armed Arjuna, the Vasava's son, have acted the part of an actress (a dancer), dressing himself in a female garb, under the name Vrihannala. Alas! What more painful could there be by assuming a human birth that the hands of Arjuna, that wielded always the Gandiva bow, would have worn bracelets befitting a woman? I would have been happy then had I, seeing the braid of hair on Arjuna's head and the collyrium in his eyes, cut off the head of Dhritarastra!

O Lord of the earth! Without asking you, I set fire on the house, named Jatugriha (a lac-house, as built by Duryodhana in order to burn up the Pandavas) and therefore the vicious Virochana, who wanted to burn us, was himself burnt up. Again, O Lord of men! similarly, without asking you, I slew Kichaka; this is now the one thing I regret that I could not have killed in the same way the sons of Dhritarastra before the public hall. O king of kings! It was simply your stupidity that you liberated Duryodhana and other sons, the great enemies of the Gandarbhas, when they had been imprisoned by them. Again to-day you are willing to give wealth for the spiritual benefit of those Duryodhana and others! But, O Lord of the earth, I would never give wealth, even if you request me specially to do this.

Thus saying, Bhima went away. Dharma's son Yudhisthira then consulted with the other three brothers and gave abundance of wealth to Dhritarastra. With this sum, the Ambika's son Dhritarastra duly performed the Sradh ceremony of his sons and gave away lots of things to the Brahmanas. The king Dhritarastra, thus performing all the funeral obsequies, became ready to go early to the forest with Gandhari, Kunti and Vidura. By the help of Sanjaya, the highly intelligent Dhritarastra became informed of the roads of the forest, and then went out of the house. Surasena's daughter Kunti, though stopped by her sons, followed them. Bhima and other Kauravas went along with them weeping up to the banks of the Ganges and thence returned to Hastinapura.

The ascetics went to the auspicious S’atayupa hermitage on the banks of the Ganges and building a hut practised tapasya with their hearts concentrated. Thus six years elapsed when Yudhisthira, troubled by their bereavements, said to his younger brothers “ I dreamt that our mother Kunti got very lean and thin. Now my mind wants bitterly to see mother, uncle, aunt, the high souled Vidura and the highly intelligent Sanjaya. If you approve, I want to go to there.” Then the five brothers, Pandu's sons, became desirous to see Kunti, and taking with them Draupadi, Subhadra, Uttara, and other persons went to the Satayupa hermitage and saw the persons there; but not seeing Vidura, Yudhisthira asked “Where is Vidura?” Hearing this Dhritarastra said “Vidura has taken up Vairagyam (dispassion) and has gone alone to a solitary place and is meditating in his heart the eternal Brahma.” Next day while the king Yudhisthira was walking along the banks of the Ganges, he saw in the forest Vidura, engaged in his vow and become lean and thin by his tapasya; he then exclaimed “I am the king Yudhisthira; I am saluting you.” The holy Vidura heard and remained motionless like a log of wood.

Within an instant a wonderful halo came out of Vidura's face and entered the mouth of Yudhisthira, both of them being Dharma's parts. Vidura then died; Yudhisthira expressed great sorrow. When the Vidura's body was going to be set on fire, a celestial voice was heard:--“o king! He was very wise; so he ought not to be burnt; you can go away as you like.” Hearing this, Yudhisthira bathed in the pure Ganges and returned to the As'rama and informed everything in detail to Dhritarastra. While the Pandavas were staying in the hermitage with the other inhabitants of the city, Vedavyasa, Narada, and other high-souled Munis came there to Yudhisthira. Kunti then spoke to the auspicious Vyasa “O Krisna! I saw my son Kama, only just when he was born; my mind is being very much tormented for him; so, O great ascetic! Show him once to me. O highly fortunate One! You alone can do this; so O Lord! Satisfy my heart’s desire.” Gandhari said “O Muni! I did not see while Duryodhan went to battle; so, O Muni! Show me Duryodhana with his younger brothers.” Subhadra said “O Omniscient one! I want very much to see the great hero Abhimanyu, dearer to me than my life even; O great ascetic! Show him once to me.” (33-57.)

Suta said Satyavati's son Vyasa Deva, hearing their words, held Pranayama (deep breathing exercise) and meditated on the eternal Devi, the force of Brahma. When the evening time came, the Muni invited Yudhisthira and all others to the banks of the Ganges. He then bathed in the Ganges and began to chant hymns in praise of the Devi Brahmamayi Prakriti, resting on the Purusa, the Dweller in the Mani DvTpa, with attributes, at the same time transcending them, thus “O Devi! When Brahma was not, Visnu was not, Mahes'vara was not, nor when existing Indra, Varuna, Kuvera, Yama, and Agni, Thou alone existed then; my salutation to Thee.

When there existed not water, Vayu, ether, earth and their Gunas, taste, smell, etc., when there were no senses, mind, Buddhi, Ahamkara; when there existed no Sun, Moon nor anything. Thou alone existed then; so, O Devi! I bow down again and again to Thee. O Mother! Thou boldest all these visible Jiva lokas in the cosmic Hiranyagarbha; again Thou bringest this Hiranyagarbha, the sum-total of Linga Sariras (the subtle bodies), with the Gunas Sattva, Rajas and Tamas to a state of equilibrium named Samyavastha and remainest quite independent and apart for a Kalpa period. At that time even those that are possessed of the power of great discrimination and dispassion cannot fathom Thy nature. O Mother! These persons are praying to me to see their dead ones; but I am quite incapable to do that. So kindly shew them their departed ones early.” While Vyasa praised thus the Devi, the Devi Mahamaya, the Lady of the Universe, of the nature of Universal Consciousness called all the departed ones from the Heavens and showed them to their relatives. Then Kunti, Gandhari, Subhadra, Uttara, and the Pandavas became very glad to see their relatives come to them again. Vyasa, of indomitable valour, again remembering Mahamaya, bade good bye to the departed ones; it seemed then, a great magic had occurred. The Pandavas and the Munis bade good bye to each other and went to their respective places. The king Yudhisthira talked on the way about Vyasa and ultimately came to Hastina. (58-68.)

Thus ends the seventh chapter of the Second Skandha on shewing the departed ones in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-23. Suta said On the third day after the Pandavas had returned to Hastinapur, the king Dhritarastra was burnt up together with Gandhari and Kunti, by the conflagration of fire in the forest. Sanjaya went away at that time, leaving Dhritarastra in the forest, on a tour on pilgrimage. The king Yudhisthira heard all this from Narada and was very sorry. Now after thirty six years after the Kuru family had become extinct, all the descendants of Yadu in the Prabhas tirtha were destroyed by the Brahmana's curse. The high-souled descendants of Yadu, intoxicated by drinking wine, fought against each other and were extirpated in the presence of Krisna and Balaram. Balaram then quitted his mortal coil; the lotus-eyed Bhagavan Krisna quitted his life, struck by the arrows of a hunter, to pay respect to a Brahmin's curse. Vasudeva heard of Hari's quitting his mortal coil, and meditated the Goddess of the Universe within his heart and left his holy life. Arjuna became very sorry; he went to Prabhasa and performed the funeral obsequies of all duly. Seeing the dead body of Hah, Arjuna collected fuel and burnt his body together with his eight principal wives; he burnt also Balaram's body with that of his wife Revati. Arjuna, then, went to the Dvaraka city and removed all the inhabitants of the city when the whole Dwarka city of Vasudeva was drowned in the waters of the ocean. While Arjuna was taking all the persons with him after getting out of Dwarka, he felt himself very weak on the way; and therefore a band of robbers, known by the name of Abhiras plundered all the wealth and all the wives of Krisna. Arjuna, of indomitable valour, after his arrival at Indraprastha made Vajra, Aniruddha's son, the king of the place.

Then the highly powerful Arjuna informed Vyasa of his powerlessness when Vyasa said:-“o highly intelligent one! When Hah and you will reincarnate in another Yuga, then your heroic strength will again be manifested. Hearing all these words, Pritha's son Arjuna returned to Hastina with a sorrowful heart and informed everything to Yudhisthira, the Dharmaraja. Hearing the extinction of the Yadavas and Hari's quitting His mortal coil, Yudhisthira wanted to go to the Himalayas. He installed Pariksit, Uttara's son who was then thirty six years old on the throne and went out of his palace in company of his brothers, and Draupadi to the forests of the Himalayas. Thus the Pandavas, Pritha's son, reigned for thirty six years in Hastina and quitted their mortal coils in the Himalayas. Here the greatly religious sage-king Pariksit governed with vigilance all his subjects for sixty years. After this, Pariksit went once on an hunting expedition to a dense forest and shot a deer. He then searched for the deer and it became noon and he felt very thirsty, hungry, quite fatigued with his body, perspiring, when he saw a Muni merged in meditation; he asked the Muni “Where can water be had?” But the Muni held at that time the vow of silence; so he did not answer anything. Seeing this, the thirsty king, influenced by Kali, became angry and raised a dead serpent by the fore-end of his bow and coiled it round the Muni's neck. Even thus coiled with a snake round his neck the Muni remained as before motionless in his state of enlightenment and spoke nothing. The king also returned home.

24-49. Then the Muni's son, born from the cow's womb, S’ringi, a great ascetic, a fiery devotee of Mahas'akti, heard of the above event, while he was playing in the forest. His friends spoke to him “O Muni! Some body has now enclosed a dead serpent around the neck of your father.” Hearing their words, S’ringi became very angry and taking water in his hands, cursed thus:-- “He who has coiled to¬ day a dead serpent around my father's neck, let that villain be bitten by the serpent Taksak within one week from this day”. One disciple of the Muni then went to the king in his house and informed him of the Muni's curse. Abhimanyu's son Pariksit heard of the curse pronounced by a Brahmin, and knowing infallible, spoke to the aged councillors

"O Ministers! Certainly it is through my fault that I have been cursed by a Brahmin's son. Now find out and settle what is to be done though the persons versed in the Vedas say that death is inevitable under these circumstances; yet the wise ones should try their best to thwart this according to the S’astras. Many sages who are the advocates of taking steps to redress any act, say that all the actions of wise persons are fructified by proper means; their solution does not remain unsolved.

Therefore I am saying that the powers of manis, mantrams and herbs (osadhis) are indescribable; if applied duly, do you think that they will bear no fruit in this case? I heard that when a Muni's wife died out of snake-bite, the Muni gave away the half of his life to his wife Apsara and made her alive again. It is not proper for the learned to depend on the maxim that what is inevitable must come to pass; one must try one's best to act for the living present.

O Ministers! Have you seen any person in the Heavens or in the world who remains idle, depending on fate alone? The Sannyasins have renounced the world; but they must have to go to the houses of the house-holders, whether they be invited or not invited. See again, supposing that the food of a person is brought to him unasked and suppose it is thrown into the mouth by some one, can you conceive that food would go down into the belly, from the mouth without one's effort? Therefore one should exert one's own prowess from the very outset; though the intelligent ones should be satisfied with the thought “What can be done? It is not ordained in my fate.” When Pariksit said thus, the ministers asked “Which Muni made his dead wife alive again, by giving her half his own life? And how did his wife die? Kindly describe all these in detail to me.”

The king said Bhrigu Muni had a very beautiful wife Puloma. In her womb the world renowned Chyavana Muni was born. Sukanya, the daughter of S’aryati was the wife of Chyavana. In her womb was born a beautiful son named Pramati; he was very famous. Pramati had his famous beautiful wife Pratapi. In her womb was born the great ascetic son Ruru. At this time a person named Sthulakes'a, a religious truthful man of great name, was practising tapasya. O Ministers! In the meanwhile, the chief Apsara Menaka held sexual intercourse with Visvavasu Gandharva on the banks of a river and became pregnant. She went out from that place to the hermitage of Sthulakes'a on the river bank and gave birth to a very beautiful daughter. Seeing this girl quite an orphan and very beautiful, the Muni Sthulakes'a began to rear up her and named her Pramadvara. This all-auspicious girl Pramadvara attained youth in due course when the Muni Ruru saw her and became smitten with passion.

Thus ends the eighth chapter of the Second Skandha on the extinction of the family of Yadu and on the anecdote of Pariksit in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-17. Pariksit said When the Muni Ruru went to his room to sleep, his mind having become perturbed with passion, his father Pramati seeing him sorrowful, asked him “O Ruru! Why do you look so absent minded?” Ruru was passionate then; so he said to his father “I saw a girl named Pramadvara in the hermitage of Sthulakes'a; I wish that she might become my wife.” Hearing this, Pramati went immediately to the hermitage of Sthulakes'a, and pleased him by various conversations and asked for her beautiful daughter when Sthulakes'a promised that he would give her daughter in marriage on an auspicious day. Then both the high-souled persons Pramati and Sthulakes'a began to work in co-operation and make arrangements for marriage ceremony and collected various articles in that hermitage when the fair eyed girl Pramadvara, while playing in the courtyard in the house, trod on a serpent and was bitten by it and consequently died. Seeing then Pramadvara dead, all the Munis of the place assembled and cried and wept with sorrowful hearts, when a great tumultuous uproar ensued. Though the life departed from Pramadvara’s body, yet seeing the brilliant lustre of her lifeless body lying on the ground, her nourisher and father Sthulakes'a became very sorry and wept aloud. Hearing this cry of his, Ruru came there to see what had happened and perceived the girl, though lifeless, yet seeming alive and lying on the ground.

Seeing Sthulakes'a and other Risis weeping, Ruru went out from that place and with a grievous heart, began to cry aloud. “Alas! Fate has certainly sent this serpent as the cause of all my miseries and to mar all my happiness. Alas! What am I to do now? Where to go? When my beloved has fallen unto the jaws of death, I do not want to live any longer, bereft of my wife. Oh! What an unfortunate creature I am? I have not been able to embrace this beautiful darling of mine. I am deprived of kissing her face and marrying her. Alas! Fie to my human birth! Let my life get out just now in as much as I could not.

out of mere shame, throw myself on the burning pyre along with my beloved! Oh! When death comes not to the sorrowful person, even when prayed for, how then can I expect divine happiness in this world? So let me now drop myself down in a lake or enter in to a burning fire or drink venom or strangle myself by tieing rope round my neck!”

18-31. Thus Ruru wailed much on the bank of the river and long reflecting in his mind found out a way and thought what would be the advantage in death? “Rather an irretrievable sin would be incurred in committing suicide; and my father and mother would be sorry.

Seeing me commit suicide, my bad luck and enemies will be gladdened; there is no manner of doubt; in this. What benefit will my beloved gain if I commit suicide or if I be distressed for her bereavement. Suppose I die, even then my beloved will not become mine in the next world; so there are many faults in my committing suicide but there is no fault if I preserve my life.” Thus coming to a conclusion Ruru bathed, performed Achaman and became pure. He then took water in his hand and said “Whatever good works, worshipping the gods, etc., that I have done and if I have performed, with devotion, the service to my preceptors and teachers and superiors, homa ceremonies, Japam, tapasya, if I have studied all the Vedas and if I have recited Gayatri and worshipped the Sun then let my beloved have life and get up as an outcome of my Punyam. If my beloved does not get back her life, I will certainly quit my life.” Thus saying, he worshipped the Devas mentally and threw that water of his hands on the ground. Thus Ruru, with a sorrowful heart, was weeping. The Deva's messenger came down and said “O Brahman! Don't make this bold attempt; how can your beloved get back her life? The life-period of this beautiful girl, born of Gandharva's sperm and Apsara's ovum is now exhausted; now look for another beautiful woman. O one of very dull understanding! Why are you crying in vain? Where is the affection between you and this girl; she died in an unmarried state (without marrying you).” At this

Ruru said “O Deva messenger! I won't marry any other lady, whether my beloved gets back her life or does not get back her life; in case she does not regain this life, I will also forego my life at this instant.” At this greatest importunity of Ruru, the Deva messenger became glad and spoke the following truthful beneficent yet beautiful words

32-51. “O Brahmana! I will suggest one way to you; kindly hear. The Devas ordained this long, long ago. You can give up your half life period, and with that you can make this girl alive soon.”

Ruru said “O Deva messenger! I give half my life-period to this girl; there is no doubt in this. Let my beloved get back her life soon and get up.”

The king said O Ministers! At this time Visvavasu, knowing that his daughter Pramadvara is dead, descended from the Heavens in a celestial car and came to the place; then the Gandharva king and the Deva messenger both went to Yama, the Dharmaraj, and spoke thus “O Dharmaraj! This Visvavasu's daughter Pramadvara, the wife of Ruru, the Risis' son was bitten by a snake and has now come to your place. The Dvija Ruru is now desirous to quit his life; so, O Sun's son! Now let the girl again get her life through the influence of Ruru's brahmacharya (purity) as a consequence of his giving away half his life period for the girl.”

Dharma said “O Deva messenger! if you want to make the girl alive again, let her get life as a consequence of half the life-period of Ruru being subtracted. Go immediately and give the girl to Ruru.”

The king said “O Ministers! Yama having said thus to the Deva messenger, he went away immediately and made Pramadvara alive and handed her over to Ruru.

Thus, on an auspicious day, Ruru married her. Thus the Risis' daughter Pramadvara though fallen dead, got again her life by proper means. So, O Councillors! to save life, one should resort one's best duty according to the S’astras, by the use of gems, mantras, and herbs and plants.”

Thus speaking to the ministers, the king Pariksit had a fine building of seven floors in height erected, placed the principal guards around it and stationed also the most powerful men well versed in the knowledge of mani (gems), mantrams, and plants for protection and immediately ascended to this building. To appease the wrath of the Muni S’ringi, the king sent the Muni named Gaurmukha to him and requested him repeatedly “Let the crime of the humble devotee be forgiven.” Then, for self preservation, the king brought from all sides the Brahmanas, who are perfect in their knowledge and application of the mantras. The minister's son placed the elephants in proper places so that no body can ascend to the top of the building; what more can be said than the fact that even air could not find entrance there when once ordered “no admission” what to speak of others!

The king Pariksit remained there and counted the number of days of the serpent Taksaka's coming there; he performed his bath, Sandhya Bandanams and feeding; even he consulted with his ministers and governed his kingdom from there. O Risis! At this time a Brahman named Kas'yapa, versed in the mantras, heard of the curse of the king and thought that he would get abundant wealth if he could free the king from Taksaka's poison and proposed to himself that he would go to the place where the cursed king Pariksit was staying with the Brahmanas. Pondering thus, the Brahmana went out of his house, on the expectation of wealth from the king.

Thus ends the ninth chapter of the second Skandha on the account of Ruru in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-3. Suta said “O Risis! On that very day when the Brahmin Kas'yapa went out of his house, Taksak, knowing the king ParTksit cursed, assumed an aged Brahmin's form and went out of his abode.

The serpent Taksak met the Brahmin Kas'yapa on the way. Seeing the Brahmana, versed in the Mantras, Taksak asked him “Where are you going so in haste, and what for are you taking this trouble?”

4-17. Thus questioned, Kas'yapa replied I heard that the serpent Taksak will bite the king ParTksit; therefore I am going in haste to the king ParTksit to cure him of the serpent's poison. I know the mantra (mystic verse) that can destroy the effect of poison. If his life-period is not exhausted, I will certainly give him back his life. Taksak then. Said “O Brahmana! I am that Taksak; I will bite him and take away his life. So you better desist. Will you be able to treat him whom I bite; certainly you will not.” Kas'yapa said “O chief of snakes! When you will bite the king who has been cursed by the Brahman, I will no doubt make him alive by the power of my mantra.” Taksak said “O chief of Brahmanas! If you have so thought that you will make the king alive after I bite him, then shew me your strength before hand. O sinless one! I will bite this Nyagrodha tree (the Indian fig-tree); just now make it alive.”

Kas'yapa said “Certainly I will make this tree alive, that will be burnt away by the venom of your teeth.” Suta said “The snake Taksak then bit the tree, which was reduced to ashes; and asked Kas'yapa to bring back that tree to life.” Seeing the tree reduced to ashes by the fire of venom of the snake, he collected all the ashes and said “O highly venomous serpent. See to-day the power of my mantra. Behold! While you are witnessing, I will enliven this tree. Thus the great mantra-knower Kas'yapa took water in his hand, and impregnating it with his mantra power, sprinkled the water on the ashes. Immediately, on the sprinkling of the mantra saturated water, the Nyagrodha tree got back its life as before. Taksak became greatly astonished to see the tree enlivened again and said to Kas'yapa >- “O chief of Brahmans! What is your object in taking so much pains? Speak out what you want and I will fulfil your desires.” Kas'yapa said “O chief of serpents! Knowing the king cursed, I am going to do good to him by my knowledge and to get in return abundant wealth.” Hearing this, Taksak said “I will give you the amount of wealth that you desire; take that and go back to your house, and let my desire be also fulfilled.”

18-26. Kas'yapa, the knower of the highest state, heard Taksaka's words and pondered in his mind again and again. “What is to be done now? If I take this wealth and go back to my house, my name and fame will not be known in this world, simply for my greed; but if the king be made alive again, my undying fame, abundant wealth, and greater Punyam will accrue to me. Again fie to that wealth with which there is no fame; so one must try one's best to preserve one's fame. The king Raghu, in ancient days, gave away everything of his to the Brahmanas for fame; the king Harischandra and Kama did not hesitate a bit to give away endless property. There is one point again to take into account, how can I trifle away the matter, seeing the king burnt up by the venomous fire?

If I can bring back the king's life, everyone will become happy. If the kingdom be without its king, the subjects will, no doubt, be ruined.

So, following the king's death, sin will also incur on me due to the ruin of the subjects; and infamy will come on my head that I am a very greedy man.” Thus meditating in his mind, the highly intelligent Kas'yapa began to meditate, and plunged himself in Dhyan; he thereby came to know that the king's life period was spent up. Thus knowing the king's death imminent, the virtuous Kas'yapa took the desired wealth from Taksak and returned home.

27-48. Thus making Kas'yapa to retire to his house on the seventh day Taksak went on to Hastinapur to bring death and destruction on to Pariksit. When he went close to the city, he heard that the king Pariksit was staying on the upper story of the palace; and the palace had been preserved by various gems, mantras, herbs and plant. Taksak became very anxious; and fearing, lest the curse of the Brahmanas, will fall on his head, became very much agitated and thought. “How shall I now enter the palace? How can I cheat this stupid hypocrite vicious king, cursed by the Brahmana, who causes troubles to the Brahmanas. Not a single man has taken birth in the Pandava family ever since that he coiled a dead serpent round the neck of an ascetic Brahmin. The king has committed a very heinous crime and knowing the course of time to be in fallible, has placed sentries on all sides of the palace and has ascended to the top-most story of the building, thinking thereby to deceive Death and is staying in a peaceful mind. How can then he be smitten, in accordance with the Brahmana's word? The king, of dull intellect, knows not that death cannot be prevented; for that reason he has placed guards and sentinels round the building, and himself has got up the house and is happily whiling away his time; but he is quite ignorant that when Fate who can never be violated, ordains the death, how can it be prevented though thousands of attempts are made to thwart it? This scion of Pandu family knows that his death is at hand and yet wants to live and therefore is staying in his own place with a tranquil mind. The king ought now to make charities and other meritorious works; it is only by acts of Dharma that disease is destroyed and life is prolonged.

And if that be not the object then a dying man ought to take bath, to make charities and to await his time of death; he thereby attains heaven; otherwise hell is inevitable. The king committed great sin in the act of causing pains and trouble to the Brahmin or other similar acts and therefore death is so close that the Brahmin curse has fallen thus on his head. Is there no such Brahmin who can make him understand this; or the Creator has ordained his death now as inevitable.” Thus meditating, the chief serpent made other serpents following him assume then form of ascetic Brahmanas and gave them roots and fruits to be taken to the king. The serpent Taksak himself entered within the fruits in the form of an insect. Then the ascetic serpents took the fruits and quickly went out of the place. They came to the palace where Pariksit was resting. Seeing them, the guards asked “What for have you come here?” Hearing this, “We are coming from the hermitage to prolong the life of the hero king, the son of Abhimanyu and the son of the Pandava family, by chanting the mantras of the Atharvavedas, and we want to have an interview with the king; now you better go and inform the king that some Munis have come to see you. We will sprinkle water on him and give him some sweet fruits and then depart. We have never come across such gatekeepers in the family of Bharat as disallow the ascetic Muni visitors to go and see the king. We will ascend to the place where the Pariksit is staying and we will bless him, and wish him long life; we will communicate to him our orders and then depart to our own places.”

49-68. Suta said Hearing these words, the sentinels spoke as previously ordered by the king, as follows “O Brahmanas! We think verily you won't be able to have an interview with the king to¬ day; you, all ascetics can come to-morrow to this palace. O Munis! Owing to the Brahmana's curse, the king has built this place; then it follows, as a matter of course, that the Brahmanas are not allowed to get up to the palace.” Then the serpents, in the form of the Brahmanas, spoke “O good sentinels! Then take these roots and fruits and offer them to the king and communicate to him our blessings.”

The sentinels went to the king, and informed him of the arrival of the ascetic Brahmanas. The king replied “Bring here the roots and fruits offered by them and ask what for they have come. Give them my pranams; to-day I cannot meet with them; let them come tomorrow morning.” The sentinels went to the ascetics and got from them their roots and fruits and offered them with great respect to the king. When the serpents in the guise of the hypocrite Brahmins went away, the king took those fruits and spoke to his ministers “Take these fruits and let all my friends eat them. I will take only this one fruit given by the Brahmanas and will eat it.” Saying this, the Uttara's son Pariksit gave away fruits to the friends and took one ripe fruit for himself, broke it and saw within it a very fine copper-coloured black eyed insect. At this the ministers were astonished; the King spoke to them “The sun has set; so there is no further chance of any fear from any poison to-day. I speak then to-day, fearing the Brahman's curse, let this insect bite me.” Thus saying the king took that insect and placed it on his neck. That Taksak in the form of an insect, when placed, during the sun-set, on the neck by the king, immediately assumed the form of the terrible Kala (Death), coiled round the king and beat him. The Ministers were greatly surprised and began to weep and cry with great pain and sorrow. Seeing that terrible serpent, the ministers, overwhelmed with terror, fled away on all sides. The guards cried out loudly. The terrible out-cry was raised on all sides. Then Uttara's son, the king Pariksit, coiled by the serpent, saw that all his efforts were rendered fruitless, and remained silent and held fast to his patience. From the mouth of the serpent Taksak the terrible venomous flames came out burning all and immediately killed the king. Thus taking away the life of the king, Taksak went up in the celestial atmosphere; the people then saw that the serpent was ready as if to burn the world. The king fell down lifeless like a burnt tree; and all the persons cried out seeing the king dead.

Thus ends the tenth Chapter of the Second Skandha on the death of the king Pariksit in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-4. Suta said “O Munis! seeing now the king lifeless, and his son a mere boy, the ministers themselves performed all his funeral ceremonies. First they burned the king on the banks of the Ganges without uttering any Mantra, as his death was an accidental one due to snake bite, afterwards they had an effigy of the king made of kus’a grass and placed it on a funeral pyre and burned it, with sandal and scented wood. The priest then performed and completed his funeral obsequies, repeating duly the Vedic mantras, and distributed various things in charities to the Brahmins, together with sufficient quantity of gold, and varieties of food and clothings so that the king may attain heaven.

5-7. Next, on an auspicious moment, the ministers installed the boy prince on the throne that gladdened the hearts of the subjects and all the populace of the city, towns, and villages acknowledged the boy prince Janamejaya, endowed with all royal qualities as their king.

The Dhatreyi gave all instructions to the king about his duties. The boy prince gradually grew in years and became endowed with great intellect.

8-15. When Janamejaya became eleven years old, the family priest initiated him duly with the Gayatri mantra and he also studied it duly. Then Kripa charya taught him perfectly the science of archery (Dhanurveda) as Dronacharya taught Arjuna and Paras'urama taught Kama. Janamejaya learnt by and by all the sciences and became very powerful and indomitable to his enemies as he was skilled in the science of archery, he was similarly in the other branches of the Vedas. Truthful, self-controlled, religious, the king Janamejaya acquired full knowledge in the Dharmas'astras (philosophies and law books) and Arthas'astras (economics) and governed his kingdom like the Dharma's son Yudhisthira.

The king of Kas'i gave his all-auspicious daughter Vapustama in marriage to the king Janamejaya wearing golden coat of armour. The king Janamejaya, with the beautiful Vapus'ama casting side-long looks, looked very happy as was the king Vichitravirya, when he got for his wife the daughter of Kashira] and also when Arjuna got his Subhadra. Then the king began to enjoy his lotus-eyed Vapustama in forest, and gardens like S’atakratu and S’achi. The able ministers conducted satisfactorily the reins of government; and the subjects, well governed passed away their time with cheerful hearts.

16-32. In the meanwhile, a Muni, named Uttanka, being much troubled by Taksaka, thought who could help him in his taking revenge on Taksak and, seeing the king Pariksit's son the king Janamejaya a proper person came to Hastina to the king and spoke out thus “O good king! Thou dost not know when to do a thing that ought to be done; Thou art doing at present what ought not to be done; and thou art not doing what should be done now. There is nothing of anger or energy within Thee; Thou dost things as a child does; so Thou dost not know the meaning of the S’astras nor dost Thou know Thy former enemy; so what shall I pray before Thee?” Hearing this Janamejaya said “O highly fortunate one! I do not know who is my enemy; what wrong is there to be redressed? please speak out what I am to do.” Uttanka said “O king! the wicked Taksak killed Thy father; ask about the death of Thy father from Thy councillors.” Hearing these words, the king Janamejaya asked his ministers; they replied “Thy father died out of the snake Taksaka's bite.” Then the king spoke “The cause of my father's death is the Brahmin's curse; what is the fault of Taksaka in this matter; please say.” Uttanka said It was Taksaka that gave abundance of wealth to Kas'yapa who was coming to cure Thy father of Taksaka's poison and made him desist from his purpose; so O king! Is not that Taksaka, then, Thy father's great enemy and his slayer?

O King! In former days, when Pramadvara, the dearest wife of the Muni Ruru, died of snake bite in her unmarried state, Ruru made her alive again. But Ruru made then the promise “whichever serpent will see, I will take away its life by striking it with a club.” O King! Thus making the resolve, he began to kill snakes wherever he found with his club, and thus, in his course of travel all round the earth, he saw within a forest an aged terrible water-snake (Dhonda serpent) and immediately lifted his club to kill it and angrily struck a blow on it, when the snake replied

“O Brahmana! Why are you striking me thus? I have not caused any offence to you.” Ruru said “O serpent! My dearest wife died of snake bite; since then I have made this resolve, under great provocation and sorrow, to kill snakes.” Hearing thus, the water- snake Dundubha replied “I do not bite; those who bite are a different class of snakes; simply on account of my bearing a body similar to them that you will strike me is not quite proper.” Hearing these beautiful humane words from the mouth of a serpent, Ruru asked:-- “Who are you? Why have you become this Dundubha snake?”

33-45. The snake replied “O Brahmana! I was formerly a Brahman; there was a friend of mine named Khyas, very religious, truthful and self-controlled. Once he was staying in his Agnihotra room and I foolishly terrified him much by placing before him an artificial snake created by me of the leaves of trees. He became so much bewildered with fear and shuddered so terribly that he at length cursed me saying “O one of blunt intellect! As you have terrified me by this snake, having no poison, so you better be a snake of that type.” Immediately I turned into a snake and when I much entreated that Brahmana, his anger abated a little and he said again “O snake! Pramati's son Ruru will no doubt free you of this curse.” I am that snake; and you are also that Ruru; now hear my words in conformity with Dharma. The highest Dharma of the Brahmana, is non-killing. There is no doubt in this. The wise Brahmanas ought to show mercy to all. No harm or killing is to he committed anywhere except in Yajha (sacrifice); killing is only allowed in a Yajha; for at the sacrifice, the animal killed attains the highest goal; hence killing in sacrifice is not reckoned as an act of killing. Uttanka said That Brahmana was then freed of the serpent body; and Ruru, too, desisted from killing since then. O King! Ruru gave life back to that girl and married her but even then, remembering the former enmity he killed the snakes. But, O chief of Bharata's family! Thou art staying without any care, without any anger to the snakes and without any revenge to the previous wrong. O king of kings! Thy father died high up in the air without any bath or charity due to be done at the time of death. So rescue thy father by killing his enemies, the snakes. That son is dead, though living, who does not consider the act of his father's enemy as inimical. Until Thou dost kill the snakes. Thy father's enemies. Thy father's hell life will not be freed. O king! Now remember the wrong done to Thy father and perform the sacrifice to the Great Mother, denominated as the Sarpa Yajha (the sacrifice of snakes).

46-55. Suta said Hearing the words of Uttanka, the king Janamejaya sadly wept and shed tears, and thought within himself:- - “Alas! Fie to me! I am a great stupid; hence I feel myself proud but in vain. Where can his honour be whose father, bitten by a snake, has gone down to hell. Now I will, no doubt, commence the Sarpa Yajha and ensure the destruction of all the snakes in the blazing sacrificial fire and thus deliver my father from hell.” Thus coming to a conclusion, he called all his ministers and said “O ministers!

Better make arrangements duly for a great sacrifice. Have a suitable holy site on the banks of the Ganges, selected and measured by the Brahmanas and have a beautiful sacrificial hall built up on one hundred pillars and prepare a sacrificial altar within this. O Ministers!

When all these preliminaries will be completed, I will commence with great eclat the great Sarpa Yajha (sacrifice of snakes). In that Yajha, the snake Taksak will be the animal victim; and Uttanka, the great Muni, will be the sacrificial priest; so invite early the all-knowing Brahmanas, versed in the Vedas. Thus at the command of the king, the able ministers collected all the materials of the sacrifice and prepared a big sacrificial altar. When the oblations were offered on the sacrificial fire, calling on the snakes, Taksak became greatly distressed with fear and took refuge of Indra saying “Save my life”. Indra, then, gave hopes to Taksaka, trembling with fear, and made him sit on his Asana, encouraged him with words “No fear”. O! snake do not fear any more.

56-65. The Muni Uttanka, seeing that Taksak had taken Indra's protection and that Indra had given him hopes of “no fear”, called on Taksaka with Indra to come to fire with an anxious heart; Taksak, then, seeing no other way, took refuge of the greatly religious Astik, the son of the Muni Jarat Karu, born of the family of Yayavara. The Muni's son Astik came to the sacrificial hall and chanted hymns in praise of Janamejaya; the king, too, seeing the Muni boy greatly learned worshipped him and said “What for have you come? I will give you what you desire.” Hearing this, Astika prayed:-- “O highly enlightened one! Let you desist from this sacrifice.”

The truthful king, prayed thus again and again, stopped the Sarpa Yajha to keep the Muni's word. Vais'ampayana then recited the whole Mahabharata to the king to cheer up his heart. But the king, hearing the whole Mahabharata could not find peace and asked Veda Vyasa “how can I get peace; my mind is constantly being burned with sorrow; say what am I to do? I am very miserable; hence my father Pariksit the son of Abhimanyu has died an unnatural death. O lucky one! See that a Ksattriya's death in a deadly battlefield or in an ordinary battle is praiseworthy; even his death in his own house, if followed up according to natural laws and Vidhis (rules) is commendable; but my father did not die such a death; under the Brahmana's curse why did he, quite senseless, quit his life high up in the air? O son of Satyavati! Now advise me so that my father who is now in hell can again go up to the heavens, and that my heart may find its way to peace.”

Thus ends the Eleventh Chapter of the Second Skandha on the “Sarpa Yajha” in the Mahapurana S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-4. Suta said Hearing these words of the king, Vyasa Deva, the son Satyavati addressed to him before the assembly, thus “O king! I am now reciting to you a Bhagavata Purana, holy, wonderful, filled with many anecdotes, and leading to auspicious results; listen. Before I made my son S'uka study this Purana; O king! I will now recite before you that highest Purana, with all the secrets contained therein. I have extracted this from all the Agamas; it brings in Dharma (religion), Artha (wealth), Kama (fructification of desires) and Moksa (liberation); hearing this gives always happiness and good results.

5-6. At this Janamejaya said “O Lord! Whose son is this Muni Astika? Why did he come as an obstacle in my Sarpa Yajha (sacrifice of snakes)? And what object had he in preserving the snakes? O highly fortunate one! Kindly describe all this in detail; after this recite the Purana, also, in detail to me.”

7-18. Vyasa Deva said “O king! In former days there lived a Muni named Jaratkaru. He always remained in the path of peace; and did not marry. Once he saw, in a cave in a forest, his fathers and forefathers pendant. They spoke to Jaratkaru thus “O son! Marry; we will thereby be greatly pleased; if there be a son of good character born to you, we all will be freed from all troubles and we would then able to go to Heavens.” Hearing this Jaratkaru said “O Forefathers! If I get a girl of my name, without begging and asking and if she be entirely obedient to me, I will marry and lead a householder's life; thus I have spoken truly to you.” Thus saying to his forefathers, Jaratkaru went on tour to the holy places. Now it happened so, that at that very time Kadru, the mother of snakes cursed her sons, saying “May you be burnt by fire.” The matters of this incident run as follows “At that monnent Kadru and Vinata, the two co-wives of Kas'yapa saw the horses yoked in the chariot of the sun and thus argued with each otherKadru, seeing the sun's horse, first asked Vinata “O good one! Tell me soon, what is the colour of this horse?” Vinata said “O auspicious one! What do you think?” I said, the colour of the horse is white; you also better say before hand what is its colour? We will then lay a wager (and challenge). Kadru said “O Smiling one! I think the the horse is black. Now come; let us challenge; whoever will be defeated will become the slave of the other.” Thus saying, Kadru told her sons that were obedient“Cover by your bodies all the pores of the body of the horse of the chariot of the Sun, so it may look black; go and do it.” At this some snakes replied “That cannot be.” Kadru then cursed them saying “Let you fall on the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya.” Then the other snakes tried to please their mother and coiled round the back of that horse so that the horse began to look black. Kadru and Vinata, the two co-wives went together and saw the horse. Vinata saw it black and became very sorry.

19-21. Now, Garuda, Vinata's son, very powerful and devourer of snakes was passing that way and seeing his mother very distressed asked her“O Mother! Why do you look so very sorry? It seems as if you are weeping. Aruna, the charioteer of the Sun and I myself are your two sons living. Fie to us that, while we are living, you will have to suffer pains. O beautiful one! If mother suffers while the son is living, then what use is there in having such a son? So, O Mother, give out the cause of your grief and I will remove it at once.”

22-31. Hearing this Vinata said “O son! What shall I say to you of my misery; I am now become the slave of my rival wife. By some pretext she defeated me and is now telling me to carry her on my back. O son! For this reason I am sorry.” Hearing these words of the mother, Garuda said “Very well I will carry her on my shoulders wherever she wishes to go. O auspicious one! You need not be sorry; I will remove all your cares.” Vyasa Deva said Thus spoken to by Garuda, Vinata went to Kadru. At that time the highly powerful Garuda went there also to free his mother of her slavery and carried Kadru with all her sons on his back to the other side of the ocean. When Garuda went across the ocean, Garuda spoke to Kadru “O mother! I bow down to thee; kindly say how my mother can be freed of your slavery. Hearing this Kadru said “O son! If you can bring to-day by your sheer force nectar from the Deva loka and give it to my sons then you will be able to free your helpless mother. When Kadru said so, the highly powerful Vinata's son, Garuda immediately went to the abode of Indra and, fighting hard, stole away the jar of nectar and brought and gave it to Kadru and freed his mother Vinata from the slavery of Kadru. In the meantime, the snakes went for their bath, after which they would drink the nectar. Indra stole away that jar which contained nectar. O king! Thus, by the sheer strength of arms of Garuda Vinata was freed of her slavery. On the other hand, when the snakes returned from their bath and found that there was no jar of nectar, they began to lick the Kusa grass over which the jar of nectar was kept, thinking that they would thereby get some drops of nectar which might have trickled over; and the result was that by the sharp edges of kusa grasses, the tongues of all the snakes were cut asunder into two; hence the snakes are called Dvijihva.

32-36. The snake Vasuki and others, whom Kadru, the mother of snakes, cursed, went to Brahma and took his refuge and informed all of the cause of their terror, the curse from their mother; when Brahma spoke to them “Go and give the sister of Vasuki, named Jaratkaru, in marriage to the great Muni Jarat Karu, (both of the same name). In her womb, a son named Astika will be born; and he will certainly deliver you from your difficulties. Hearing those beneficial words of Brahma, Vasuki went to the forest and requested humbly the great Muni Jarat Karu to accept in marriage her own sister when the Muni, knowing the girl to be of his name, spoke out thus “But when your sister will act against my wishes, I will forsake her at once.”

37-46. Under these conditions, the Muni married her. And Vasuki, after giving her sister in marriage according to her own wishes to the Muni, returned to her own abode. O Tormentor of foes! Then the Muni Jaratkaru built a white hut of leaves in that great forest and began to pass his days happily in enjoyment with his wife. Once, on an occasion, after he had taken his dinner he slept and told his wife not to awaken him under any circumstances and fell fast asleep. The beautiful sister of Vasuki sat by his side. When the evening time came and the sun began to set, the Vasuki's sister Jaratkaru became afraid at the thought that the evening Sandhya might not be performed by the Muni and thought thus “What am I to do now? My heart finds not rest if I do not awaken him; and if I awaken him, he will forsake me at once. Now if I do not awaken him, the evening will pass away to no purpose. Whatever it be, if he quits me or if my death ensues, that is better than the non-observance of Dharma; for when Dharma is destroyed, hell ensues.

Thus thinking, the girl awakened him saying “O One of good vows! It is evening time; so get up; etc.” The Muni got up in great anger and addressed his wife “When you have disturbed my sleep, I now go away from you; you also better go to your brother's house.” When the Muni said so, Vasuki's sister spoke out, trembling “O One of indomitable lustre! How will the object be served for which my brother has given me in marriage with you.”

47-50. The Muni then spoke firmly to his wife Jaratkaru "That is within your womb." Jaratkaru then, forsaken by the Muni, went to the abode of Vasuki. When her brother Vasuki asked her about her son, she said:-- "The Muni has forsaken me, saying that the son is within your womb." At this Vasuki trusted; and said "The Muni won't ever tell lies" and gave shelter to his sister. O Kurusattama! After some time, a famous boy named the Muni Astika was born.

51-56. O king! That Muni boy, the knower of truth, had desisted you from your sacrifice of snakes for the preservation of his mother's family. It is well and good, befitting you, that you respected the words of the Muni Astika, born of Yayavara family and the cousin of Vasuki. O Mighty-armed! Let all auspiciousness come to you; you have heard the whole Mahabharata and gave away lots of things in charities. You have worshipped innumerable Munis. But, O king! Though you have done so many good things, yet your father has not attained heaven and you have not been able to sanctify your family. So, O king Janamejaya! Now install a capacious temple of the Devi with the highest devotion; then all your desires will be fulfilled. The all auspicious Devi, the Giver of all desires, makes the kingdoms more stable and increases the family, if She be always worshipped with the highest devotion.

57-64. O king! You better perform duly the Devimakha Yajha Yotistoma and others, pleasing to the Devi, and hear the great Purana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam, filled with accounts of the glorious deeds of the Devi. I will make you hear now that Divine Purana, filled with various sentiments, highly sanctifying and capable to carry one across this ocean of world. O king! There is no other subject in this world worthy to be heard than the above Purana and there is no other thing to be worshipped then the lotus feet of the Devi. O king! Those are certainly fortunate, those are intelligent and blessed, in whose hearts of love and devotion reign always the Devi Bhagavati. O illustrious scion of Bharata's family! Know them to the always afflicted with troubles who do not worship in this world the great Mother Mahamaya. O king! Who is there that will not worship Her when Brahma and all the Devas are always engaged in Her devotional service. O king! He who hears always this Purana gets all his desires fulfilled; in former days Bhagavati Herself spoke this excellent Purana to Visnu. O king! Your heart will be appeased and become peaceful when you hear this; and, as a result of your hearing this Puranam, all your ancestors will attain endless Heavenly life.

English translation

1-10. Janamejaya said “O Bhagavan! What is that great Yajha (sacrifice) named Amba Yajha about which you referred just now? Who is the Amba? Where was She born? From whom and what for did Her birth take place? What are Her qualities? What is Her form and nature? O Ocean of mercy! You are all-knowing; kindly describe everything duly. Along with this, describe in detail the origin of Brahmanda. O Brahmana! You know every thing of this whole Universe. I heard that Brahma, Visnu and Rudra are the three Devatas, who are successively originated to create, preserve, and destroy this Universe. Are these three highsouled entities independent? or Do they do their respective duties, being subservient to another Person? Now I am very eager to know all these. So Paras'ara's son! Describe all these to me. Are these highly powerful Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'vara subject to Death like ordinary beings? Or are they of the nature of everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss? Are they subject to the three fold pains arising from their own selves from elements and from those arising from gods? Are they subject Time? How and wherefrom were they originated? Do they feel the influence of pleasure, pain, sleep or laziness? O Muni! Do their bodies consist of seven Dhatus? (blood, etc.) or are they of some other kinds? A great doubt has arisen in me on all these points. If these bodies be not made up of five elements, then of what substance are they built of? And of what gunas are their senses built also? How do they enjoy objects of enjoyments? How long is their longevity? O Brahmana! where do they, Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'vara, the best of the gods live? And of what nature are their powers and prosperities? I like very much to hear all these. So describe all these in detail to me.”

11-24. Vyasa said “O highly intelligent king! The questions that you have asked me today whence and how Brahma, etc., were born

? etc., are very difficult. In ancient days, once, on an occasion, I asked many questions like you to the Muni Narada. At first he was greatly suprised to hear my queries, afterwards he gave due replies to them. O king! I will answer to you in the same way; listen. Once I saw that the all-knowing, peaceful Narada, the knower of the Vedas was sitting on the banks of the Ganges. I became very glad and fell at his feet. By his order I took one excellent seat. Hearing, then, of his welfare and seeing him sitting on the sands I asked him “O highly intelligent One! Who is the Supreme Architect of this widely extended Universe? Whence is this Brahmanda born? Is it eternal or temporary? When it is an effect, then it is natural that it cannot be created without a cause. Now when the cause, the creator, is certain, is he one or many? O sage! as regards this wide Samsara, I have expressed my doubt; now answer me what is the Real and True, and thus remove my doubts. Many believe Maha Deva, the Lord of all the other Devas as the Supreme God, the Cause of all. He is the source of deliverance to all the Jivas; devoid of birth and death; always auspicious; peaceful in Himself and the controller of the three gunas. He is the one and only cause of creation, preservation and destruction. Some Pundits believe Visnu as the God of all and praise Him as such. It is Visnu that is the powerful Supreme Self, the Lord of all and the First Person Adipurusa. It is He that has no birth nor death, the Deliverer of the whole Jivas, Omnipresent; His faces are everywhere; He is the Granter of enjoyments and liberation to the devotees. Some others call again Brahma, the Cause of all. It is He that is omniscient and the Stimulator of all beings.

The four-faced Brahma, the best of all the Devas is born from the navel lotus of some One of endless force. He resides in Satyaloka; He is the Creator of all and the Lord of all the Devas. Again some other Pundits call the Sun, Surya as God. In the morning and in the evening they chant His hymns, without any lack of slackness and laziness. Again there are some others, who say that Indra is the lord of all the Jivas; He is thousand-eyed; it is Indra, the husband of S'achi, that is the God of all. Those who perform Yajhas (sacrifices) worship Vasava, the king of the Devas. He drinks Soma juice Himself and those who drink Soma are his beloved. He is the one and only Lord of Sacrifices. Thus all men worship, according to their respective wishes, Varuna, Soma, Agni, Pavana (wind), Yama (the god of Death), Kuvera, the lord of wealth; there are some again who worship the elephant-faced Ganapati, the Fructifier of all actions, the Granter of desires of all the devotees, and the Giver of success to all in all enterprises, no sooner He is remembered. Some Acharyas (professors) say again that the All auspicious the Adi Maya, the Great S'akti Bhavani, the Giver of everything. Who is the nature of with and without attributes Who is not different from Brahma, who is both Purusa and Prakriti, the Creatrix, the Preservatrix and the Destructrix of all, the Mother of all the gods, beings and lokas, is the Great Goddess of this Brahmanda. She is without beginning and end, full, present in all the beings and everywhere. It is this Bhavani that assumes the various endless forms such as Vaisnavi S'ankari, Brahmi, Vasavi, Varuni, Varahi, Nara Simhi, Maha Laksmi the one and secondless Vedamata, and others. It is this Vidya nature that is the One and the only Root of this tree of Samsara (universe).

The mere act of remembering Her destroys heaps of afflictions of the devotees and fulfills all their desires. She gives Moksa to those who are desirous of liberation and gives rewards to those who want such. She is beyond the three Gunas and still She emanates them. Therefore the Yogis that want rewards meditate Her, Who is of the nature of Vidya and Who is devoid of attributes. The best Munis, the knowers of the truths of Vedanta meditate on Her as formless, immutable, stainless, omnipresent Brahma devoid of all Dharma.

She is described in some Vedas and Upanishads as full of Light (Tejas). Some intelligent persons describe God as of infinite hands, infinite ears, infinite legs, infinite faces, peaceful, Virat Purusa and describe sky as the Pada (place) of Visnu. Other knowers of the Puranas describe Him as Purusottama. There are some others again who declare that this creation cannot be done by a single individual. Some atheists say that this inconceivable infinite Universe can never be created by one God. So there is no such definite God that can be called its Creator. Though without any creator, this Brahmanda is sprung from the Nature and conducted by Her. The followers of the Samkhya system say that Purusa is not the creator of this Universe; they declare that Prakrit! is the Mistress of this Universe O Muni! Thus I have expressed to you what the Muni Kapila, the Acharya of the Sankhyas and the other philosophers declare as their opinions; various doubts, thus, reign always in my breast. Owing to these doubts my mind is so confused that I cannot arrive at any definite conclusion. My mind is very much unsettled as to what is Dharma and what is Adharma. What are the characteristics of Dharma? I cannot make out them. For the Devas are all sprung from the Sattva Guna and are always attached to the true Dharma; yet they are frequently troubled by the sinful Danavas. How, then, can I place my confidence on the permanence of the Dharma? My forefathers, the Pandavas were always endowed with good behaviours and good actions and they remained always in the path of the Dharma; yet they suffered a good deal of troubles and sufferings. In these cases it is very difficult understand the greatness of Dharma. So, O Father! Seeing all these, my mind is thrown into a sea of doubts and troubles. O Great Muni!

There is nothing impracticable with you; so remove my doubts. O Muni! I am always plunged and raised and plunged again in this sea of delusion. So save me by lifting me on a boat of wisdom and carry me across this ocean of samsara (this world).

Thus ends the first chapter on the third Skandha on the questions put by Janamejaya in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-19. Vyasa said O mighty armed Kuru! What you have asked me just now, I also asked the same thing to Narada, the lord of the Munis and he gave me the following reply O Vyasa! What shall I say to you on this point more than this that a doubt occurred to me also in my former days. The question that you have put to me today rose in my mind before; and I went to my father Brahma, of endless energy and asked to him thus O Lord! O Father! Whence is this whole Brahmanda born? Have You created it? Or is it Visnu or MahesVara? O all pervading soul! Who is there in this Brahmanda fit to be worshipped? O Lord of the world! Who is the top-most Lord ruling over everything? Kindly say. O Brahman! I am plunged in this sea of Maya and perils; my heart is agitated with doubts; hence it is not appeased in any place of pilgrimage; or in thinking any Deva or in practising any Sadhan or in any other object. O Sinless one! Give me the answers duly and thus remove my doubts. O Tormentor of foes! Unless the highest truth is not known, peace is not found. This heart, distracted in various ways, cannot rest fixed on one subject. Whom am I to remember? Whom to worship? Where to go? Whom to praise? Who is the Supreme God this Universe? I do not understand these things. O Satyavati's son! Hearing these my serious queries, Brahma, the grand-Sire of beings, replied to me as follows O highly illustrious son! What more shall I say to you than this that even Visnu is unable to answer your questions; so difficult are they indeed! O great intelligent one! Nobody that is attached to the world knows anything about this. Those who are unattached to this world, who are free from any envy, these who are without desires and calm, those highsouled ones know the secret of all this. In former days when all was water, water everywhere and all things, moving and non-moving were destroyed, when five elements were sprung, then I was also born from the lotus navel of Visnu. Then not seeing Moon, Sun, trees, or mountains or anything and sitting on the centre (Karnika) of the lotus thought thus When I am born in this great ocean of waters? Who has created me? Who is now my protector?

And Who will be my Destroyer when this cycle ends? There is no earth distinctly visible anywhere here; on what, then, this mass of water rests? Lotus is termed Pankaja because it springs from mud and dirt; so unless there exists the earth underneath with mud and dirt, how this lotus will come out here! Now let me try and find out where is the root of this lotus, where is the mud and dirt? If this be found, then the earth will be also certainly there. Thus thinking, I dived underneath the water and searched for one thousand years but could not find earth anywhere, when the celestial voice entered my ears "Practise tapasya (austerities)." Hearing this celestial voice, I sat on the lotus, my birth place, and practised tapasya for one thousand years.

20-30. Next, the celestial voice came again "Create." Hearing this, I became quite confounded and began to think within myself "now what am I to create? What to do?" After this, the two terrible Daityas Madhu and Kaitabha came to me and affrighted me saying "Fight with us." I became quite terrified and holding the stem of the lotus, I got down within the water. There I saw a wonderful person, sleeping on the Ananta serpent. He was of a deep blue colour like a rain- cloud, wearing yellow clothes, four-armed, garlanded with forest flowers, and the Lord of this whole Universe. On the four arms of this Maha Visnu there were conch-shells, disc, club, and lotus and other weapons. I saw this Achyuta Purusa, sleeping on the Ananta serpent bed, motionless and under the influence of Yoga Nidra. I then thought within myself "What am I to do?" Not being able to find out any other way, I recollected the Devi who was then of the nature of sleep and began to praise Her. The auspicious Devi Yoga Nidra, whose form could not be determined, immediately left the body of Visnu and decorated with divine ornaments, began to shine in the air. After She left the body of Visnu, Visnu immediately got up. And He fought terribly for five thousand years with the Danavas Madhu Kaitabha; then by the grace of the Bhagavati, He extended His own thighs and then, on those thighs. He slew the two demons. Where Visnu and myself were standing, Rudra Deva came also and joined with us. Then we three saw the beautiful Devi in the celestial space.

31-40. We three, then, commenced to chant hymns to Her and She gladdened our hearts by Her gracious look and said "O Brahma!

O Visnu! O Rudra! The two great Daityas are slain. Now forsake your laziness and do your respective works of creating, preserving, and destroying the Universe; create your own abodes, and live in happiness; create by your respective lordly powers, the fourfold beings." Hearing the Devi's gentle sweet words, we spoke "O Mother! There is no wide earth here; all is one mass of infinite ocean. No five elements, no five tanmatras, no sensual organs, no Gunas, nothing exist here; how can we then execute the works of creation, etc. Hearing our words, the Devi smiled. Immediately there came from the sky overhead a beautiful aerial car. The Devi said "O Brahma! O Visnu! O Rudra! Get in this car without any fear. To¬ day I will show you one wonderful thing." At Her word, we got into the beautiful car without any fear. It was decorated with various gems and jewels, bedecked with pearls, emitting sweet tinkling sounds of bells and looking as the abode of the celestials. Seeing us seated without any fear. She made the car get high up in the sky by Her force.

Thus ends the second chapter of the third skandha on Brahma, Visnu and Rudra's going towards the heavens on the celestial car, given by the Devi in the Mahapurana S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

1-5. Brahma said “We were very much astonished not to find water where our beautiful aeroplane landed us. We saw earth resonated with the sweet cooings of the cuckoos, filled with beautiful fruit-laden trees, forests and gardens. Big rivers, wells, tanks, ponds, water-springs, small pools, women, men all are there. Next we saw, in front of us, a nice city enclosed by a divine wall, containing many sacrificial halls and various palatial buildings and magnificent edifices. Oh! We thoughtIt is Heaven! What a great wonder! Who built this?

6-11. Next we saw a king looking like a Deva is going out on a hunting excursion in the forest. The Devi Ambika, Whom we saw before, is staying on the chariot. In an instant, our aeroplane, propelled by air got high up above the sky and reached in the twinkling of an eye at a lovely place. We saw there a divine Nandana garden. There Surabhi, the cow of plenty, was staying under the shade of the Parijata tree. Close by her, there was an elephant having four tusks; and Menaka and other hosts of Apsaras were there with their various gestures and postures, playing, dancing and singing. There were hundred of Yaksas, Gandharbhas, Vidyadharas within that Mandara garden playing and singing. Within this there was the Lord Satakratu with S'achi, the daughter of Puloma.

12-34. Next we saw with great wonder, Varuna, the lord of the aquatic animals, Kuvera, Yama, Surya (sun), fire and the other Devas; then we saw that in our front, Indra the Lord of the Devas, was coming out from a well decorated city. He was there situated in his palanquin, calm and quiet and carried by men. Then the car, where we were situated, began to get up high in the sky, and in the twinkling of an eye, we reached Brahma loka, that is saluted by all the Devas. There S'ambhu and Kes'ava were greatly bewildered to see Brahma of that place. In the council hall of Brahma, the Vedas with their Angas, the serpents, hills, oceans and rivers were seen. Seeing all these, Visnu and MahesVara asked me "O Four-faced one! Who is this eternal Brahma? I replied I do not know who is this Brahma? Who am I? and who is He? why has this error come over me? You, too, also are gods so you can better ponder over it." Next our car, going with the swiftness of mind went, in the twinkling of an eye, to the beautiful all auspicious Kailas'a mountain surrounded by bliss-giving Yaksas. It was beautified by the Mandara garden, resonated by the sweet cooings of S'ukas and cuckoos and the sweet sounds of lutes and small drums and tabors. When we reached there we saw the five faced, three-eyed Bhagavan S'ashi S'ekhara, with ten hands, wearing tiger skin, and the upper garment of the elephant skin. He was then, getting out of his abode, riding on a bull. His two sons, the great heroes, Ganes'a and Kartikeya, beautifully adorned, were attending Him as His body guards. Nandi and all other hosts were following Him, chanting victories to Him. O Muni Narada! we were greatly wondered to see another S'ankara, surrounded by the Matrikas. So much so, that perplexed with doubts, I sat down there. Next our aeroplane went on with the force of wind; and in an instant reached the abode of Vaikuntha, the amusement court of Laksmi. O Suta! There at Vaikuntha, we saw a wonderful manifestation of power. Our companion Visnu was greatly surprised to see that excellent city. We saw there four-armed Visnu, of the colour of Atasi flower, wearing yellow garments, adorned with divine ornaments sitting on Garuda. Laksmi Devi is fanning wonderful chowry to Him. Struck with wonder at the sight of the eternal Visnu, we took our seat on the car and looked at one another's face.

Next the balloon ascended with the swiftness of wind; and, in the twinkling of an eye, reached to the ocean of nectar, the Sudha- Sagar, with waves playing sweetly on it. This ocean Sudha Sagara is filled with aquatic animals and agitated with ripples. We saw and went along and came to a very wonderful place called the Mani DvTpa (the island of gems) in the midst of the Ocean. It was adorned with Mandara and Parijata an other heavenly flower trees (plants?), with various beautiful carpets, with variegated trees As'oka, Vakula, Ketaki, Champaka, Kuravaka, etc., adorned with lustrous gems and pearls. It was resonated with the sweet cooings of the cuckoos and the humming sounds of bees; and it presented the sight of a sweet harmonious music playing there.

35-67. Sitting on our aeroplane, we saw, from a distance, within that Dvipa, a beautiful cot known as S'ivakara (i.e. whose four legs represent Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, etc., and whose top portion represents Sada S'iva looking like a rainbow, with exquisitely beautiful carpet spread over it and decked with various gems and jewels and inlaid with pearls. We saw a Divine Lady, sitting on the cot, wearing a red garment and a garland of red cloth and bedewed with red sandal paste. Her eyes were dark-red; that beautiful faced red-lipped lady looked more beautiful than ten millions of lightnings and ten millions of Laksmis and lustrous like the Sun. The Bhagavati BhuvanesVari was sitting with a sweet smile on Her lips and holding in Her four hands noose, goad, and signs indicating as if She was ready to grant boons and asking Her devotees discard all fear. We never saw before such a form. Even the birds of that place repeat the mystic incantation Hrim and serve that Lady, Who is of the colour of the rising Sun, all merciful, and in the full bloom of youth. That lotus-faced smiling lady was adorned with all the beauties of Nature. Her high breasts defied the lotus bud. She was holding various jewelled ornaments, e.g., armplates, bracelets, diadems, etc.

Her lotus-face looked exceedingly beautiful with jewelled ear-rings of the shape of the S’ri Yantra (yantra of Tripura Sundari). Hrillekha and other Deva girls were surrounding Her. There were Sakhis on the four sides - always chanting hymns to MahesVari, the Lady of the world. She was surrounded on Her all sides by Ananga kusuma and other Devis. She was sitting in the middle of the Satkona (six angled) Yantra. We were all wondered at the sight of this Wonderful Form never seen before and we thought“Who is this Lady? What is Her name? we know nothing of Her, from such a distance.” Thus while we were gazing at Her, that four armed Lady became gradually thousand eyed, with thousand hands and thousand feet; so it seemed to us. O Narada! We became very much embarrassed with doubts and thought within ourselves “Is She Apsara (nymph) or a Gandharva daughter or any other Deva Girl? who is She?” At this juncture Bhagavan Visnu saw closely the sweet smiling Devi and by his intelligence came to a definite conclusion and spoke to us “This is the Devi Bhagavati Mahavidya Maha Maya, undecaying and eternal; She is the Full, the Prakriti; She is the Cause of us all. This Devi is inconceivable to those who are of dull intellects; only the Yogis can see Her by their Yoga-powers. She is eternal (Brahma) and also non-eternal (Maya). She is the Will-force of the Supreme Self. She is the First Creatrix of this world.

This Devi with wide eyes, the Lady of the Universe, has produced the Vedas. The less-fortunate persons cannot worship Her. During the time of Pralaya, She destroys all the Universe, draws within Her body all the subtle bodies (Linga-Sariras), and plays. O two Devas! At present She is residing in the form of the Seed of the Universe. Behold! On Her sides are seen duly all the Vibhutis (manifestations of powers). They are all adorned with divine ornaments and anointed with divine scents and are serving Her. O Brahman! O S'ankara! To¬ day we are blessed and highly fortunate that we have got the sight of this Devi. The tapasya (asceticisms) that we practised of yore have yielded to us this fruit. Else why Bhagavati has shown so carefully Her own form? Those who are highly meritorious by tapasyas and gifts of abundant wealth, those high souled persons are able to see this all-auspicious Bhagavati. The person attached to sensual objects can never see Her. It is She that is the Mula Prakriti, united with the Chidananda Person. It is She that creates this Brahmanda and exhibits it to the Paramatma (the Supreme Self). O two Devas! This whole Universe and all the Seers and Seen and other things contained therein owe to Her as their sole cause. She is the Maya assuming all forms; She is the Goddess of all. Where is I myself! Where are the Devas! Where are Laksmi and the other Devis! We cannot compare to one-hundred thousandth part of Her. It is this all- excellent Lady, Whom I saw in the great Ocean when She reckoned Me who was baby then with greatest gladness. In former days, when I was sleeping on the cot made of immoveable fixed leaves of a banyan tree and licking my toe, making it enter within my mouth and playing like an ordinary baby, this Lady rocked my gentle body to and fro on the banyan leaves singing songs like a Mother. Now I recollect all what I felt before at Her sight and recognise that She is the Bhagavati. These very things I now communicate to you. Hear attentively that She is this Lady and She is our Mother.”

English translation

1-20. Brahma said Thus speaking, Bhagavan Janardana Visnu spoke to me again “Come, let us bow down to Her again and again and let us go to Her. We shall reach at Her feet fearlessly and we will chant hymns to Her; Maha Maya will be pleased with us and will grant us boons. If the guards at the entrance prevent us from going, we would stand at the gateway and we will chant hymns to the Devi with one mind."

Brahma said When Hari addressed us in the above way, we two became choked by intense feelings of joy; our voice became tremulous and we waited there for some time; our hearts were elated with joy to go to Her. We then accepted Hari's word said "Om" and got down from our car and went with hastened steps and with fear to the gate. Seeing us standing at the gateway, the Devi Bhagavati smiled and within an instant transformed us three into females. We looked beautiful and youthful women, adorned with nice ornaments; thus we greatly wondered and went to Her. Seeing us standing at Her feet in feminine forms, the beautiful Devi Bhagavati, looked on us with eyes of affection. We then bowed to the great Devi, looked at one another and stood before Her in that feminine dress. We three, then, began to see the pedestal of the great Devi, shining with the lustre of ten million Suns and decorated with various gems and jewels. We next discerned that thousands and thousands of attendants are waiting on Her. Some of them are wearing red dress; some blue dress, some yellow dress; thus the Deva girls, variously dressed were serving Her and standing by Her side. They were dancing, singing on and playing with musical instruments and were gladly chanting hymns in praise of the Devi. O NaradalWe saw there another wonderful thing. Listen. We saw the whole universe, moving and non-moving within the nails of the lotus feet of the Devi. We saw there myself, Visnu, Rudra, Vayu, Agni, Yama, Moon, Sun, Varuna, Tvasta, Indra, Kuvera and other Devas, Apsaras, Gandarbhas, rivers, oceans, mountains, Visvavasus Chitraketu, Sveta, Chitrangada, Narada, Tumburu, Ha Ha Hu Hu and other Gandarbhas, the twin As'vins, the eight Vasus, Sadhyas, Siddhas, the Piths, Ananta and other Nagas, Kinnaras, Uragas, Raksasas, the abode of Vaikuntha, the abode of Brahma, Kailas'a mountain, the best of all mountains; all were existing there. Within that nail of the toe were, reflected all the things of the Universe. The lotus whence I was born, the four faced Brahma like myself on that lotus, Bhagavan Jagannath lying on that bed of Ananta, the two Demons Madhu Kaitabha, all I saw there.

21-31. Seeing all these wonderful things within the nails of Her lotus feet, I became greatly surprised and thought timidly "What are all these!" My companions Visnu and S'ankara were struck with wonder. We three, then, made out that She was our Mother of the universe.

Thus full one hundred years passed away in seeing the various glories of the Devi in the auspicious nectar-like Mani Dvipa; as long we were there. Her attendants, the Deva girls adorned with various ornaments gladly considered us as Sakhis. We, too, were greatly fascinated by their enchanting gestures and postures. For that reason, we saw always their beautiful movements with great gladness. Once, on an occasion, Bhagavan Visnu, while He was in that feminine form, chanted hymns in praise of the great Devi S'ri Bhuvanes'vari.

S'ri Bhagavan said Salutation to the Devi Prakriti, the Creatrix; I bow down again and again to Thee. Thou art all-auspicious and grantest the desires of Thy devotees; Thou art of the nature of Siddhi (success) and Vriddhi (increase). I bow down again and again to Thee. I bow down to the World Mother, Who is of the nature of Everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss. O Devi! Thou createst, preservest and destroyest this Universe; Thou dost the Pralaya (the great Dissolution) and showest favour to the created beings. Thus Thou art the Authoress of the above five fold things that are done; so, O BhuvanesVari, I bow down to Thee! Thou art the great efficient and material cause of the changeful. Thou art the Unchangeable, Immoveable Consciousness; Thou art the half letter (Ardhamatra), Hrillekha (the consciousness that ever pervades both inside and outside the Universe); Thou art the Supreme Soul and the individual soul. Salutation again and again to Thee.

O Mother! I now realise fully well that this whole Universe rests on Thee; it rises from Thee and again melts away in Thee. The creation of this Universe shews Thy infinite force. Verily, Thou art become Thyself all these Lokas (regions). During the time of creation Thou createst the two formless elements akasa and Vayu and the three elements with form, fire, water, and earth; then with these Thou createst the whole Universe and shewest this to the Enjoyer Purusa, who is of the nature of consciousness, for His satisfaction. Thou again dost become the material cause of the twentythree (23)

Tattvas, Mahat, etc., as enumerated in the Sankhya system and appearest to us like a mirage.

32. O Mother! Were it not for Thee, no object would be visible. Thou pervadest the whole Universe. It is for this reason that those persons that are wise declare that even the Highest Purusa can do no work without Thy aid.

33-34. O Devi! Thou createst and art giving satisfaction to the whole Universe by Thy power; again at the time of Pralaya Thou swallowest forcibly all these that are seen. So, O Devi! Who can fathom Thy powers? O Mother! Thou didst save us from the hands of Madhu and Kaitabha. Then Thou hast brought us to this Mani Dvipa and shewed us Thy own form, all the extended regions and immense powers and given us exquisite delight and joy. This is the highest place of happiness.

35-37. O Mother! When I Myself, S'ankara and Brahma or any one of us is unable to fathom Thy inconceivable glory, who else can then ascertain? O Bhavani! Who knows, how many more than the several regions that we saw reflected in thy nails of Thy feet, exist in Thy creation. O One endowed with infinitely great powers! O Devi! we saw another Visnu, another Hara, another Brahma, all of great celebrity in the Universe exhibited by Thee; who knows how many other such Brahmas, etc., exist in Thy other Universes! Thy glory is infinite. O Mother! I bow down again and again to Thy lotus feet and pray to Thee that may Thy this form exist always in my mind. May my mouth always utter Thy name and may my two eyes see always Thy lotus feet.

38-43. O Revered One! May I remember Thee as my Goddess and may'st Thou constantly look on myself as Thy humble servant. O Mother! What more shall I say than this May this relation as mother and son always exist between Thee and me. O World- Mother! There is nothing in this world that is not known to Thee for Thou art omniscient. So O Bhavani! What more shall my humble self declare to Thee! Now dost Thou do whatever Thou desirest. O Devi! The rumour goes that Brahma is the Creator, Visnu is the Preserver, and MahesVara is the Destroyer! Is this true? O Eternal One! It is through Thy Will power, through Thy force, that we create, preserve and destroy. O Daughter of the Himalaya mountain! The earth is supporting this Universe; it is Thy endless might that is holding all this made of five elements. O Grantress of boons! It is through Thy power and lustre that the Sun is lustrous and becomes visible. Though Thou art the attributeless Self, yet by Thy Mayic power Thou appearest in the form of this Prapancha Universe. When Brahma, Mahes'a, and I myself take birth by Thy power and are not eternal, what more can be said of Indra and other Devas than this that they are mere temporary things and created. It is only Thou that art Eternal, Ancient Prakriti and the Mother of this Universe. O Bhavani!

Now I realise from my remaining with Thee, that it is Thou that dost impart, out of mercy, the Brahma vidya to the ancient Purusa; and thus He can realise His eternal nature. Otherwise He will remain always under delusion that He is the Lord, He is the Purusa without beginning, that He is good and the Universal Soul, and thus suffers under various forms of egoism (Ahamkara).

Thou art the Vidya of the intelligent persons and the S’akti of the beings endowed with force; Thou art Kirti (fame), Kanti (lustre), Kamala (wealth) and the spotless Tusti (peace, happiness). Amongst men. Thou art the dispassion, leading to Mukti (complete freedom from bondage). Thou art the Gayatri, the mother of the Vedas; and Thou art Svaha, Svadha, etc. Thou art the Bhagavati, of the nature of the three Gunas; Thou art the half matra (half the upper stroke of a letter), the fourth state, transcending the Gunas. It is Thou that givest always the S’astras for the preservation of the Devas and the Brahmanas. It is Thou that hast expanded and manifested this whole phenomenon of the visible Universe for the liberation of the embodied souls (JTvas), the parts of the pure holy Brahman, the Full, the Beginningless, the Deathless, forming the waves of the Infinite expanse of ocean. When the JTva comes to know internally and becomes thoroughly conscious that all this is Thy work. Thou createst and destroyest, that all this is Thy Mayic pastime, false, like the parts of an actor in a theatrical play, then and then only he desists for ever from his part in this Theatre of world. O Mother! O Destroyer of the greatest difficulties! I always take refuge unto Thee. Thou dost save me from this ocean of Samsara, full of Moha (delusion). Let Thou be my Saviour when my end will come, from these infinitely troublesome and unreal pains arising from love and hatred. Obeisance to Thee! O Devi! O Maha vidya! I fall prostrate at Thy feet. O Thou, the Giver of all desires! O Auspicious One! Dost Thou give the knowledge that is All-Light to Me.

English translation

1. Brahma said O Narada! Thus speaking, Visnu stopped; Sankara, the Destroyer, then stepped in and, bowing down to the Devi said

2. S'iva said O Devi! If Hari be born by Thy power and the lotus- born Brahma have come into existence from Thee, why, then, I who of Tamo Guna be not born of Thee! O Auspicious One! Thou art clever in creating all the Lokas! What wonder is there in My being created by Thee.

3. O Mother! Thou art the earth, water, air, akasa and fire. Thou art, again, the organs of senses and the organs of perception; Thou art Buddhi, mind and Ahankara (egoism).

4. Those who say that Hari, Hara, and Brahma are respectively the Preserver, the Destroyer and the Creator of this whole Universe do know anything. All the three, above mentioned, are created by Thee; then they perform always their respective functions; their sole refuge being Thyself.

5. O Mother! If the Universe be created of the five elements, earth, air, ether, fire, and water, having the properties of touch, taste, etc., then how these five elements possessing attributes and of the nature of effects, can come into manifestation, without their being born from Thy Chit portion (Intelligence)?

6. O Auspicious Mother! It is Thou in the shape of Brahma, Visnu and S'iva, That art creating this Universe and it is Thou that hast assumed the form of this whole Universe, moving and non-moving. Thus Thou playest, as it wills Thee, under various forms, again and again. Thou dost cease from play (during pralaya) as it likes Thee.

7. O Mother! When Brahma, Visnu and I become desirous to create the world, we execute our duties by taking the dust (earth, etc.) of Thy lotus feet.

8. O Mother! It it were not Thy mercy, then how Brahma could have become endowed with Rajoguna, Visnu with Sattvaguna and I with Tamoguna?

9. O Mother! If there were no differences observed in Thy mind, then why hast Thou created in this world rich and poor, king and councillors, servants, etc., various classes of beings? Why hast Thou not created all alike happy or all alike miserable?

10. So Thou wilt have to show Thy mercy towards me. Thy three gunas are capable at all times to create, preserve and destroy the world; then Hah, Hara and Brahma, whom Thou hast created as the cause of the three worlds, is simply Thy will.

11-12. O Bhavani! If Thy Gunas had no power in the acts of creation, etc., then how can the fact that while we three Hah, Brahma and I were coming in the aeroplane, we saw on our way new worlds created by Thee, become possible? Kindly dost Thou say on this. O World-Mother! It is Thou that desirest to create, preserve, and destroy this world by Thy part Mayik power. Thou art always enjoying with Purusa, Thy husband. O S'iva! We cannot fathom Thy inscrutable ways.

13-15. O auspicious one! How can we understand Thy sport? O Mother! We are transformed into young women before Thee; let us serve Thy lotus feet. If we get our manhood, we will be deprived from serving Thy feet and thus of the greatest happiness. O Mother! O Sire! I do not like to leave Thy lotus feet and get my man-body again and reign in the three worlds. O Beautiful faced one! Now that I have got this youthful feminine form before Thee, there is not a trace of desire within me to get again my masculine form. What use is there in getting manhood, what happiness is there if I do not get sight of Thy lotus-feet!

16-18. O Mother! Let this unsullied fame of mine be spread over in the three worlds that I have got, in this young womanly form, the chance of serving Thy lotus feet that has got this effect that the idea of world goes away. Who is there that will leave Thy service and desire to enjoy the foeless kingdom in the world? Oh! even a moment appears a Yuga to him who has not got Thy lotus feet with him! O Mother! Those that leave the worship of Thy lotus feet and become engaged in performing tapasya are certainly deprived of the best thing by the Creator, though their minds be pure and holy. Their power from their Tapasya may be acquired and they be entitled for Mukti; yet they get dire defeat from not having Thee.

19. O Unborn One! Austerities, control of passions, enlightenment or performance of sacrifices, as ordained in the Vedas, nothing can save, from this ocean of Samsara. It is the devotional worship only of Thy lotus feet that can make one attain the Beatitude. O Devi! If Thou be extremely merciful towards me, then initiate me in that wonderful holy mantra of Thine; I will repeat that omnipotent par- excellent nine-lettered mantra of the Chandika Devi and be happy.

20-26. O Mother! In my former birth I got the nine-lettered mantra but now I have forgotten it O Tarini! O Saviour! Give me today that mantra and save me from this ocean of world. Brahma said When S’iva of wonderful fire and energy, said this, the Devi Ambika clearly uttered the nine lettered mantra. Mahadeva accepted the mantra and became very glad. He fell down at the feet of the Devi, and then and there began to repeat the nine-lettered mantra together with Vija (seed) that yields desires and liberation and can be easily pronounced. When I saw S'ankara, the Auspicious One to all the Lokas, in that state, I fell down also at the feet of the Devi and spoke to Maha Maya O Mother! It is not that the Vedas are unable to ascertain Thy nature; for, in the performances of sacrifices and other minor actions, they do not mention Thy full Nature, the Ordainer of all but mention simply Indra and minor deities and Svaha Devi, a portion of Thy essence as the presiding deities of the sacrificial offerings and oblations. So, O Devi! It is Thou that hast been extolled in this Universe as the Universal Consciousness, all knowing and transcending all the Devas and all the Lokas.

27. I have created this greatly wondrous Universe; I am the Lord of this Brahmanda. Who is there more powerful than me in these three worlds? When I am Brahma, transcending all the Lokas, then I am blessed; there is no doubt in this. By reason of this vanity I am plunged in this widely extended ocean of Samsara.

28-31. That now I have been able to get the dust of Thy lotus feet, has now made me really proud; and truly I am blessed today and by Thy grace this manifestation of pride on my part has become quite justified. Thou destroyest the fear of this Samsara and givest Mukti. So, O Goddess! pray unto Thee that Thou dost cut asunder this iron chain of my delusion, full of great troubles and make me devoted to Thee. O Auspicious One! I am born from the lotus discovered by Thee; now I am extremely anxious how I can get Mukti. I am Thy obedient servant; I am merged in the delusion of this ocean of world. Save me O S'iva! from this Samsara. Those who do not know Thy character, think that I am the Creator and Lord of this Universe; those, who do not worship Thee and worship Indra and other Devas and perform sacrifices to attain Heaven are certainly ignorant of Thy glory. O Prime Maya! Thou art the Eternal Maha Maya! It is Thou that dost want to play this worldplay, and for that purpose hast created me as Brahma. Then I created these four sorts of beings, engendered by heat and moisture (said of insects and worms), those that are oviparous, those that are sprung from germs or shoots, and those that are born from womb, viviparous and exhibit my pride "That I am omniscient" So forgive this sin of mine, this my pride.

32-37. O Mother! Those ignorant persons blinded by passion, who take recourse to the eight-fold Yoga and Samadhi and labour under it, do not know for certain, they would get Moksa, if they utter Thy name, even under a pretext. O Bhavani! are they not deluded by error and blinded by passion for this world, who discriminate only the Tattvas (essences) and forget Thy name? For it is Thou that dost give Mukti from this world. O Thou Unborn! Can Hah, Hara, etc., and other ancient persons who have realised the highest Truth, forget, even for a second Thy holy character and Thy names S'iva, Ambika, S'akti, Isvari and others? Canst Thou not create, by Thy glance merely, this fourfold creation? In fact, for mere recreation and will, it is Thou that hast made me as a Creator from the earliest times. Is it not that Thou didst save Hah in the ocean from the two Daityas Madhu and Kaitabha? Is it not again the fact that Thou destroyest Hara even who is the great destroyer, when Thou dissolvest the creation? Otherwise why is it that Hara becomes born from my eye¬ brows at the time of fresh creation? So Hah is not the Preserver of all. Hara is not the Destroyer of all. Had they been such, why would they be preserved and destroyed respectively by Thee? So Thou alone art the Creatrix and Preservatrix of all. O Bhavani; no one has heard of or seen Thee taking birth; nobody knows whence Thou art born. Thou art, indeed, the One and only S'akti! Only the four Vedas can make one understand Thy Nature. O Mother! It is only by Thy help that I am able to create this creation; Hari, to preserve; and Hara, to destroy.

Without Thy aid, we are able to do nothing. There is nobody, in this world, born or that was born or that will be born, who does not become doubtful as we are. This Thine wondrously variegated Universe, full of Thy Lila, consisting in variety, is the common ground of dispute of the imperfect intellects; who are not deluded here! In this Samsara, full of things, visible and invisible, there is another one who is more ancient than Thee; there is another Highest Person who is Thy substratum. If it be argued nicely, it will be seen that there is no other third Person that can be proved as far as evidences or proofs go to measure it. The wise persons, knowing all the laws, declare that there is the One God attributeless, inactive, without any object in view, without any upadhis or adjunct without any parts, who is the witness of Thy widely extended Leela "One alone exists; and that is Brahman, and there is nothing else." This is the saying of the Vedas. Now I feel in my mind a doubt as to the discrepancy with this Veda saying. I cannot say that the Veda is false. So I ask Thee Art Thou the Brahman, the one and the secondless that is mentioned in the Vedas? or Is the other Person Brahma? Kindly solve this doubt of mine. My mind is not completely free from doubts; this little mind is still discussing whether the Reality is dual or one; I cannot solve myself. So dost Thou say from Thy mouth and cut my doubts asunder. Whether Thou art male or female, describe in detail to me.

So that, knowing the Highest S'akti, I be freed from this ocean Samsara.

Thus ends the fifth chapter of the Third Skandha on the chanting of hymns by Hara and Brahma in the Maha Puranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Brahma said When I thus asked with great humility, the Devi Bhagavati, the Prime S'akti, She addressed me thus in the following sweet words There is oneness always between me and the Purusa; there is difference whatsoever at any time between me and the Purusa (Male, the Supreme Self). Who is I, that is Purusa; who is Purusa, that is I. The difference between force and the receptacle of force is due to error. He who knows the subtle difference between us two, is certainly intelligent; he is freed from this bondage of Samsara; there is no manner of doubt in this. The One Secondless Eternal ever-lasting Brahma substance becomes dual at the time of creation. As a lamp, though one, becomes two by virtue of adjuncts; as a face, though one, becomes two, as reflected in a mirror; as one man becomes double by his shadow, we become reflected into many, by virtue of different Antah Karanas (mind, buddhi, and ahankara) created by Maya. The necessity of creation, again and again, after the Prakriti Pralayas is due to the fructification of those Karmas of the JTvas, whose fruits were not enjoyed before the Pralayas; so when creation again commences, the above said differences are found to appear; Brahma is the material cause of these changes; without Brahma as the basis, the existence of Maya is simply impossible. It is therefore that in Maya and Maya's action, Brahma is interwoven. For this reason as many differences are found in Maya, so many differences exist in Brahma.

The Maya and Brahma appear as two and hence all the differences, visible and invisible, have come forth. Only during creation are these differences conceived. When everything melts away, i.e., there comes the Pralaya or general dissolution, then, I am not female, I am not male, nor I am hermaphrodite. I then remain as Brahma with Maya latent in it. During the time of creation I am S’ri (wealth),

Buddhi (intellect), Dhriti, (fortitude). Smriti (recollection), Sraddha

(faith), Medha (intelligence), Daya (mercy), Lajja (modesty),

Kshudha (hunger), Trishna (thirst), Kshama (forgiveness), Akshama (non-forgiving), Kanti (lustre), Santi (peace), Pipasa (thirst), Nidra (sleep) Tandra (drowsiness), Jara (old age), Ajara (non old-age), Vidya (knowledge), Avidya (non-knowledge), Spriha (desires), Vanchha (desires), S'akti (force), As'akti (non-force), Vasa (fat), Majja (marrow), Tvak (skin), Dristi (sight), Satyasatya Vakya (true and untrue words) and it is I that become Para, Madhyama, Pas'yanti, etc., the innumerable Nadis (tubular organs of the body, e. g., arteries, veins, intestines, blood vessels, pulses, etc.); there are three koti and a half Nadis (35 millions of Nadis).

11-13. O Brahma! See what substance is there in this Samsara, that is separate from Me? And what can you imagine with which I am not connected? So know this as certain that I am these all forms. O Creator! Say, is there any such thing, where you will not see my above mentioned positive form? So, in this creation, I am one, and I am many as well, in various forms. Know this as certain that it is I, that assuming the names of all the various Devas, exist in so many forms of S'aktis. It is I that manifest power and wield strength.

14-27. O Brahma! I am Gauri, Brahmi, Raudri, Varahi, Vaisnavi, S’iva, Varuni, Kauveri, Nara Sinhi, and VasavT S'aktis. I enter in every substance, in everything of the nature of effect. Making that Purusa the instrument, I do all the actions (rather Purusa is the efficient cause, the immediate agent). I am the coolness in water, the heat in fire, the lustre in the Sun, the cooling rays in the Moon; and thus I manifest my my strength. O Brahma! Verily, I tell you this as certain that this universe becomes motionless, if it be abandoned by Me. If I leave S'ankara, he will not be able to kill the Daityas. A very weak man is declared to be as without any strength; he is not said to be without Rudra, or without Visnu, nobody says like this; everyone says, he is without strength, without S'akti. Those who get fallen.

tumbled, afraid, quiet, or under one's enemies are called powerless; no one says that this man is Rudraless and so forth. So the creation that you perform, know S’akti, power to be the cause thereof. When you will be endowed with that S’akti, you will be able to create this whole Universe. Hah, Rudra, Indra, Agni, Chandra, Surya, Yama, Vis'vakarma, Varuna Havana, and other Devas all are able to do their karmas, when they are united respectively with their S'aktis.

This Earth, when united with S’akti, remains fixed and becomes capable to hold all the Jivas and beings. And if this Earth be devoid of force. She cannot hold an atom even.

Thus Ananta, Kurma and all the other elephants of the eight points of the compass, become able to do their respective works, only by My help (when united with Me, the Force). O Lotus born! If I wish

I can drink all the fire and waters today and I can hold wind in check. I do whatever I wish. If I say that I am creating this world then the inconsistency arises thus “When I am everything, then I am being eternal, all this universe, made up of Prapancha, becomes eternal.” (Whereas this universe is not eternal in the sense that it is changing.) If it were said that this universe is different from Me, then My saying that I am everything becomes inconsistent. Thinking thus, do not plunge yourself in the doubt as to the reality and origin and separateness of the non-eternal universe. For what is unreal, how can that come into existence? The unreal substances can never come into existence; as the child of a barren woman, the flowers in the sky are simply absurd. What is real can only be born. In discussing about origin, birth, etc., the appearance and disappearance of real things is called their birth and dissolution. In the cold of earth there exists the previous existence of the jar and this is the cause of the appearance of the jar; the disappearance of the jar exists in the jar; hence this disappearance is the cause of the destruction of the jar. Thus the appearance and disappearance of the causal eternal things are called the Origin and Pralaya. Similarly in discussing on the causal nature, there does not arise an inconsistency in My being everything.

28-48. So there is nothing to fear. In discussing about the reality of effects, this is to be conceived, that today there does not exist here the earth in the form of jar, if it is destroyed, where it has gone? The conclusion is that the earth in the form of jar exists in atoms. O Brahma! All substances eternal, existing for a moment only, the void, and the substances of the nature, real and unreal both, all are due to a cause.

Ahankara is born first among them. Thus substances are of seven kinds: Mahat, etc. O Unborn One! Mahattattva first arises from Prakriti; from Mahattattva springs Ahamkara; and from Ahamkara arises other substances. Thus, in this order, you go on creating this Universe. O Brahma! Now you better go to your respective places, and after creating the Universe, remain there and perform your respective functions ordained by Prarabdha. Take this beautiful great S’akti Maha Sarasvati, full of Rajoguna, and of a smiling nature. This S'akti, wearing white clothes, adorned with divine ornaments and sitting on Varasana, will always be your playmate. This beautiful woman will always be your boon companion; consider Her as My bibhuti (manifestation of power), and so most worshipful. Never show any sort of disrespect towards Her. Take Her and go immediately to Satyaloka; and from the seed of Mahattattva, create the fourfold beings from these. The subtle bodies (Linga sarira) and Karmas are remaining mixed up with each other. Separate them, as before, duly, in due time.

Now go on as before and according to Kala (time). Karma, and Svabhava (nature), join them with their respective attributes (sounds and other qualities); in other words bestow fruits according to their gunas and Karmas (Prarabdhas), and to the time when these fruits are due.

Visnu is prominent in Sattvaguna and hence superior to You. So You should always respect and worship Him. Whenever any difficulty will come to you, Visnu will come down on earth to fulfil your ends.

Janardan Visnu will sometimes be born in the wombs of birds and animals, be sometimes in the wombs of men and destroy the Danavas. The highly powerful Maha Deva, too, will help you. Now create the Devas and enjoy as you like. The Brahmanas, Kshattriyas, and Vaisyas will worship you, with devotion, in various sacrifices, endowed with due sacrificial fees. All the Devas will be always satisfied when my name “Svaha” will be uttered in the sacrificial oblations and ceremonies.

S’iva, the incarnate of Tamo guna will be revered and worshipped by all persons in every sacrifice. When the Devas will be frightened by the Daityas, then Varahi, Vaisnavi, Gauri, Nara Simhi, S’achi, S'iva and My other S’aktis will take excellent bodies and destroy your fear. So, O Lotus-born! Be at your ease and do work. You utter and repeat my nine-lettered mantra with Vija and Dhyan and do your work.

O highly intelligent one! This nine-lettered mantra is the best of all the mantras. You are to keep this mantra, within your heart, for the accomplishment of all your ends.

Thus saying to me, Bhagavati smiled and began to say to Visnu O Visnu! Take this beautiful Maha Laks'mi and go. She will always reside within your breast; there is no doubt in this. This all auspicious giving S’akti I give to you for your enjoyment.

You should always shew respect to Her; never show hatred or contempt. For the good of the world, I unite thus Laks'mi and Narayan. For your sustenance I create Yajha. You three will act together in harmony unanimously.

You, Brahma and S’iva are my three Devas, born of my Gunas. You three will undoubtedly be respected and worshipped by the world.

The stupid man who will find any difference between you three, will go to hell; there is no doubt in this. He who is Hah, is S’iva; He who S’iva is Hah; to make difference between these will lead one to hell. So Brahma is one and the same with S’iva and Visnu; there no manner of doubt in this. O Visnu! But there are other differences in their Gunas; I will tell this; listen, as far as meditation of the Supreme Self is concerned you will have Sattva Guna predominant within you; and Rajo Guna and Tamo Guna will be secondary. In various other pursuits and Vikaras (changes) better have Rajo Guna with Laks'mi and always enjoy Her.

49-85. O Lord of Rama! I give you Vakvija, Kamavija, and Mayavija that will lead you to the highest end. Take this Mantra and repeat it and enjoy as you like. O Visnu! By this, the danger of death, caused Kala, will never come to you. When the creation of this Universe will be completely done I will then destroy this whole thing, moving and non-moving. You all will then be dissolved in Me. You should add pranava this mantra with Kamavija leading to Moksa and repeat it always with auspicious motives. O Purusottama! Build your Vaikunthapuri; live there and think of this My Eternal Form and enjoy as you like.

Brahma said Saying thus to Vasudeva, that Higher Prakriti Devi who is all of the three Gunas and yet transcending them, began to address Maha Deva, the Deva of the Devas, in sweet words, thus O Sankara! Accept this beautiful Maha Kali Gauri, build a new Kailas'a city and live there happily. Your primary Gunas will be Tamas; Sattva and Rajas will be your secondary Gunas. Have recourse to Rajo and Tamo Gunas while you slay the Asuras and thus wander.

O sinless S’ankara! Have recourse to peaceful Satto Guna, when you reflect on the Supreme Self and practise austerities. You all are for creating, preserving and destroying the Universe and you are all of the three Gunas. There is no such thing in this world as are devoid of these three Gunas. Everything, that is visible, is endowed with the three Gunas, and whatever will be or was before cannot exist without them. Only the Supreme Self is without these Gunas; but He is not visible. O Sankara! I am the Para Prakriti; at times I appear with Gunas; and at others I remain without any Gunas. O S’ambhu! I am always of the causal nature; never I am of the nature of effect. When I am causal, I am with Gunas; and when I am before the Highest Purusa, I am, then, without any Gunas on account of my remaining in the state of equilibrium (Samya vastha). Mahattattva, Ahamkara, and sound, touch, etc., all the Gunas perform the work of Samsara, day and night, each preceding one being the cause and each subsequent one being the effect; never do they cease in their activities.

From the Reality (Sat vastu) springs Ahamkara (Avyakta); therefore I am of the nature of causality; again Ahamkara is embodied with the three Gunas, and so the Pundits call it as an effect of mine. From Ahamkara arises Mahattattva; this is denominated as Buddhi. So Mahattattva is the effect and Ahamkara is its cause. From Mahattattva arises again another Ahamkara; from this second Ahamkara arise the five Tanmatras or the subtle elements. From these five Tanmatras, the five gross elements arise after a process called Panchikarana. From the Sattvika part of the five Tanmatras, arise the five organs of perception; from their Rajasik part, the five organs of action come; from their Panchikarana, came the five gross elements; from the Sattvika portion of all the five elements comes mind. Thus sixteen things come into existence. These organs of perception, etc., and other effects together with the Maha bhutas form one Gana, composed of the sixteen categories. The original Purusa is the Supreme Self; He is neither cause nor is He any effect. O S'ambhu! At the beginning of the creation, all the above things are born in the way already indicated. Thus I have described to you, in brief; about the creation. O Devas! Now get up in your aeroplane and go to your respective places and fulfil your respective duties. Whenever you get into any dire distress, then remember Me; I will appear before you. O Devas! You should remember always the Eternal Supreme Self and Me. When you will remember us both, all your actions, will, no doubt, be crowned with success.

Brahma said Bhagavati Durga gave us S'aktis, full of Divine beauty and lustre; She gave Maha Laksmi to Visnu, Maha Kali to S'iva, and Maha Sarasvati to me and bade good bye to us. Thus given farewell to by the Devi, we three went to another place and were born as males. We thought of the very wonderful nature and influence of the Devi and we got upon our divine aeroplane. When we ascended, we saw there was no ManidvTpa, there was no Devi, there was no ocean of nectar, nothing whatsoever. Save our aeroplane, we did not see anything. We then got into our wide aeroplane and reached there where Visnu killed the two indomitable Daityas, in the great ocean, where I was born from the lotus.

Thus ends the Sixth Chapter of the Third Skandha on the description of the Devi's Vibhutis (powers) in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyas.

English translation

And Their Presiding Deities

1.0 Brahma said Narada! Thus we three I, Visnu, and Mahadeva saw that highly effulgent Goddess: we also saw separately Her attendant goddesses, one after another, that form, as it were, a veil to her? Who were also preeminently grand.

2-3. Vyasa said O king! Narada, the foremost of the Munis, hearing thus his father's words, was exceedingly pleased and asked O Grandsire of all the Lokas! Now describe in detail that ancient and indestructible undecaying, unchangeable, eternal Purusa, that is Nirguna (free from Prakritic qualities) that you have seen and realised.

4. Father! You have seen the S'akti (the Prime Energy) personified the Saguna energy, the Supreme Goddess, having hands and feet; but cannot understand of what kind is that Nirguna S'akti which cannot be seen and which is devoid of all Prakritic qualities.

O Lotus-born! Be good enough to describe to me the real nature of that Prakrit! and Purusa and thus satisfy me.

5-6. O Lord of Creation! I practised severe austerities in the Svetadvipa (white island), so that I might realise and see the Nirguna Highest Self and the Nirguna S'akti, the Supreme Goddess; I saw there many other Mahatmas (high class spiritual persons) who attained siddhis (supernatural powers) practise Tapasya with their passions and anger conquered. But I did not realise nor did I see anything about that Nirguna Highest Self. Father, I was not despaired; again and again I continued with nny ascetic practices; but still I failed.

7. Father, you have been so successful as to see that beautiful S'akti with qualities; I have heard about Her from you, but how and of what sort, is that invisible attributeless energy as well as that Nirguna Purusa. Please narrate and explain all these and satisfy my desires that always reign in my breast.

8. Vyasa said O King! Thus asked by Narada, the Lord of creation, the grandsire of the Lokas, smiled, and began to speak the truth in the following words

9. O best of Munis! The form of the Nirguna Purusa (the Supreme Spirit beyond the Prakritic qualities) cannot exist or be visible; for everything that comes within the range of sight is transitory. How can, then, that Eternal Spirit have form and how can He become visible!

10. O Narada! The Nirguna Energy or Nirguna Purusa comes not easily within the range of knowledge; but both of them can be realised by the Munis in their meditation in their consciousness.

11. Prakriti and Purusa have no beginning nor end; they can be realised only through faith; those that have no faith can never realise them.

12. Narada! The universal consciousness, that is felt in all the beings, know that as the Highest Self; the Energy that is universal and is seen always in all the beings, know that as the Highest Self.

13. O blessed one! That Purusa and Prakrit! pervade everywhere and exist in all the things; in this Universe nothing can exist without the presence of both of them.

14. Both of them are the highest intelligent self, nirguna (free from all material qualities), without any tinge of impurity, and undecaying.

The one form that is a combination of these two is always to be meditated in the heart.

15. What is S'akti (energy) is the Highest Self; what is the Highest Self is the Highest S'akti. O Narada! Nobody can ascertain the subtle difference between these two.

16. O Narada! Merely the study of all the S'astras and the Vedas with their Amgas without renunciation does not enable one to ascertain the difference between these two.

17. O Child! This whole universe, moving and non-moving, comes out of Ahamkara (egoism). How can one ascertain the above difference even if he tries for one hundred kalpas, unless one frees oneself from Ahamkara.

18. The Jivas are Saguna (with qualities), how can the Sagunas see the Nirguna One with their physical eyes? Therefore O Intelligent one! try to see the Saguna (Brahma) only within your heart (until you free yourself from the material qualities and thus be fit to realise the Nirguna Brahma).

19-20. O best of Munis! If the tongue (organ of taste) and eyes (organ of sight) be affected with over biliousness, the pungent taste and the yellow colour do not appear what it appeared before; so the hearts of Jivas, overpowered with nnaterial qualities, are quite unfit for realisation of the Nirguna Brahman. O Narada! That heart again has come out of Ahamkara; how can then that heart be free from Ahamkara?

21. Until one becomes able to cut asunder all connections with qualities, the seeing of that Nirguna Brahma is impossible. No sooner one is totally free from Ahamkara, than the Nirguna Brahma is at once seen by him within his heart.

22-24. Narada said O best of the Devas! Ahamkara is three-fold, Satvik, Rajasik and Tamasik; describe in detail the differences between these three sub-divisions as well the real nature of the Gunas. Also describe to me about that knowledge, knowing which will lead to my salvation. Also describe, in detail, the characteristics of the several Gunas, in due order.

25-26. Brahma said O Sinless one! The energy of Ahamkara is of three kinds Jnana S’akti, Kriya S’akti, and Artha or Dravya S’akti. The power by which knowledge is produced or obtained is the Sattvic Ahamkara; the power by which action or activity or motion is produced is the Rajasic Ahamkara; and that by which the material things or objects of have senses are generated is called the Tamasic Ahamkara. O Narada! thus I described to you, in due order, the threefold Ahamkara.

27-30. Now I describe to you their merits and workings in detail; hear. Out of the Dravya S’akti of the Tamasic Ahamkara come sound, touch, form, taste and smell. From these five qualities, the five Tanmatras or the five subtle-elements (primary atoms) are produced.

Sound is the quality of Aka'sa (ether); touch is the quality of Vayu (Air); the form is the quality of Agni (fire); the taste is the quality of Jala (water); and the smell is the quality of earth.

O Narada, these ten gross and subtle materials can, when combined, become endowed with power to work out results in the shape of earth, water, fire, etc., and when the Panchikarana process is combined, the building of the whole cosmos takes place as a natural consequence of the Tamasa Ahamkara, endowed with the energy of generating material substances.

31-34. Now hear what are produced by the Rajasic energy. The five organs of hearing, touch, taste, sight, and smell (ears, skin, tongue, eyes and nose) called the five Jhanendriyas (organs of senses); mouth, hands, feet, anus and the organs of generation called the five Karmendriyas (organs of action); and Prana, Apana, Vyana, Samana, and Udana, the five Vayus. The creation out of these fifteen substances is called the Rajasic energy. Narada! All these organs of senses and actions endowed with the Kriya S’akti, called the Karanas and the materials fashioned out of them are called the chidanuvritti or Maya.

35-38. O Narada! From the S'attvik Ahamkara are produced the five presiding rulers of the five internal organs named Dik (quarters), Vayu, Sun, Varuna, and the twins Asvini Kumaras and the four presiding rulers of the four fold divisions of Antahkarana (Buddhis, manas, Ahamkara and chitta) named Moon, Brahma, Rudra, and Ksetrajha. Thus the above five organs of senses, the five organs of action, the five Vayus and mind, these sixteen substances are reckoned as the Sattvic creation.

39-40. O Child! The Highest Self has two forms; one gross and the other subtle. The formless Self; the Consciousness incarnate, as it were, is the first form. The Seers consider this formless self to be the primary cause (the ultimatum) of all this phenomenal cosmos. (This is only for the best qualified Jhanis, not for others).

The Second Form is the Gross Form for the meditation of the second class qualified persons; thus the sages say. This second form of the Supreme Goddess is conditioned by inherent Maya (time, space and causation); this is also divided into gross and subtle, according as it is the outer or inner body of the second form (and the form suited for the meditation of the third class and the second class devotees).

41. My body is called Sutratma; I will now tell you the gross body of Brahman, the Highest Self.

O Narada! This my body and soul having the nature of a string or thread is called Hiranyagarbha; this is also the gross body of the Paramatman; therefore the Paramatman together with the Sutratma, should also be worshipped. O Narada! I will now describe to you the outer gross body of Brahman, the Highest Self; hear it attentively; if one hears it with faith and devotion, one is sure to get salvation.

42-43. I have mentioned to you before the five subtle elements, called the five Tanmatras; these, now, when the Panchi Karana process is done, are converted into the five gross elements. Now hear what the Panchi Karana process means 44-46. Suppose you are to create the gross element of water. Divide into two equal parts the subtle element of water; divide also the other 4 elements into two equal parts respectively. Now set apart the first half of each of the five elements; divide the second half of each of the elements into four equal parts. Mix the first half of each of the elements with each of the fourth part of the other four elements; and you get one gross element. Similarly you get the other four gross elements. For example You want to get the gross element of waterWith the half of the subtle element (V 2) of water mix the fourth part, of the halves of the other elements of ether, fire, air and earth; you get the gross element of water and so on.

The Panchikarana process is clearly illustrated in the following table.

Gross element 1

When the five gross elements are thus produced, consciousness then enters into these elements as their presiding deities; next comes the feeling of egoism (I ness) identifying itself with the body thus created out of the five elements. (I am this body and so forth).

47. This great "I", the great consciousness, creating and considering the Cosmos as its body is called the Bhagavan, Adideva, Narayana or Vaisvanara.

48. When, by the Panchikarana process, the five gross elements, earth, ether, air, etc., are solidified and get their clear definite forms, one, two, three, four, five, qualities are seen to exist in ether, air, fire, water, and earth, respectively.

49-51. Thus ether has one quality only - that is sound: the air has got two qualities - sound and touch; the fire possesses three qualities - sound, touch, and form; the water has got four qualities - sound, touch, form and taste; the earth has got five qualities - sound, touch, form, taste and smell, and by the various combinations of these five gross elements, is produced this grand Cosmos, the great body of Brahman.

52. Similarly the sum-total of Jivas is produced from the several parts of the whole Brahmanda; these Jivas are eighty four lakhs; so the sages say.

Thus ends the Seventh Chapter of the Third Skandha of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, on the creation and the Tattvas and their presiding Deities.

Note:Of these Jivas, those who are the best qualified, the Uttamadhikaris, are known as the Brahmanas, Janaghana Turiyas, as denoted by Om Hrim; the middlings have their gross, subtle and causal bodies and are called as Brahma VaisVanara, Sutra, Hiranyagarbhas; and the third class is known as VisVa, Taijasa. and Prajhas and forms the body, as it were, of the Brahman. There are others also, animals, etc., in the lowest class.

English translation

1. Brahma said:--0 Narada! I have described to you what you asked me just now about the creation of this universe, etc. Now hear with attention the colour of the three qualities, as well their configuration and how they are seen to exist.

2-3. The Sattva Guna is the source of pleasure and happiness; and when happiness comes, everything seems delightening. When integrity, truthfulness, cleanliness, faith, forgiveness, fortitude, mercy, bashfulness, peace and contentment arise in one's heart, know certainly that there has arisen firmly the Sattva Guna in that man.

4. The colour of the Sattva quality is white; it makes one always like religion, and have faith towards good purposes and discard one's tendencies towards bad objects.

5. The Risis, the seers of truth classify Sraddha (faith) under the three headings: Sattvik, Rajasik and Tamasik.

6. The quality Rajas is of red colour, wonderful and is not pleasant; it is the source of all troubles; there is no doubt in this.

7-8. The intelligent should understand that Rajas has certainly arisen in him, when his mind is filled with hatred, enmity, quarrelsome feeling, pride, stupification, uneasiness, sleeplessness, want of faith, egoism, vanity and arrogance.

9-11. The quality Tamas is of black colour. From Tamas arises laziness, ignorance, sleep, poverty, fear, quarrels, miserliness, insincerity, anger, aberration of intellect, violent atheism, and finding fault with others. The wise should think that Tamas has overpowered him when the above qualities are found to possess him. When this Tamas quality is attended with the Tamasi faith, then it becomes the source of pain to others.

12. The well wishers should manifest in themselves the Sattva qualities, control the Rajasic qualities, and destroy the Tamasic qualities.

13. These three qualities are always found to remain intermingled with another, and each of them has always an inherent tendency to overcome the others; and therefore they are always, as it were, at war with another. They never have a separate existence from one another.

14. Never is found anywhere only one Sattva quality to the exclusion of others, the Rajas and Tamas; similar is the case with the Rajas or Tamas. They remain intermingled and depend on one another.

15. O Narada! Now hear, in detail, which two qualities remain in twins, knowing which, one is freed from this ocean of the transmigration of existence.

16. I have realised these; therefore you ought not to have any uncertainties on these points. The reality of these is especially felt, when it is really understood and when its effects begin to manifest themselves.

17. O high-minded! No one is able to realise these at once; it requires be heard, and then meditated upon. It also depends on one's natural capability and merits, due to the past actions.

18-21. Suppose one hears of the sacred places of pilgrimages and is filled with the Rajasic devotion. He goes out to those places and sees what he had heard before. There he performs his ablutions, makes offerings and the Rajasic gifts, stays there for some time; but all this he does under the influence of the Rajasic quality. And when he returns home, he finds himself not free from lust, anger, love and hatred; he remains the same that he was before. Therefore, in this case, O Narada! man hears but he does not realise the purifying effects of those holy places. O best of Munis! And when he does not find any benefit from the holy place of pilgrimage, it is equivalent to his not at all hearing of the place.

22. O best of Munis! The effect of visiting the sacred places of pilgrimages is then said to accrue to any individual, when he becomes freed from his sins, just as the fruit of cultivating fields is then said to occur, when the cultivator gets the ripened harvest out of his labour and enjoys the produce of his fields.

23. O Narada! Lust, anger, covetousness, delusion, thirst, hatred, love, vanity, malice, jealousy, non-forgiveness, unrest all these indicate that there is sin; and until these are purged out of one's body and mind, man lives in sin. If the visiting of the sacred places of pilgrimages does not enable one to overcome the above passions, then the labours in going to those places are in vain, i.e., those labours merely are the results just as the toil only undergone by the cultivator is his only result, and is not met with any reward when there is no harvest at all.

24-28. Lo! The cultivator takes hard labour to clear his fields and cultivate the hard soil; he then sows the valuable seeds, because this is considered as doing good. Next, in expectation of the harvest, he undergoes a good deal of pains, day and night, to protect his fields and goes down to sleep, in the cold season, in the forest surrounded by tigers and other dangerous animals; but alas! locusts coming eat away and destroy all the crops, to the utter disappointment of the cultivator. All his labours are spent in vain. So, O Narada! The labour taken by one in going to the holy places yields pains, and pains only, instead of success and happiness.

29-32. When the Sattva quality grows in abundance, as a consequence of reading the Vedanta and the other S'astras, dispassion comes towards the Rajasic and the Tamasic qualities and things, and the Sattva quality overpowers the Rajas and Tamas. Similarly when the Rajasic quality grows in abundance, as a natural consequence of greed and avarice, then it overpowers Sattva and Tamas; so, by delusion, when the Tamasic quality grows in abundance, it overpowers the Sattva and the Rajasic qualities. O Narada! I will now speak to you, in detail, about the overpowering of these qualities by one another.

33-35. When the Sattva quality grows in preponderance, the mind rests in religious ideas and things; it no more thinks of those external things, the products of the Rajas and Tamas qualities. Rather it wants to enjoy the Sattvic things; wealth, religious affairs, sacrifices that can be acquired or performed without any trouble. Then that individual yearns after salvation and renounces his pursuits after the Rajasic and Tamasic objects.

36. Thus, O Narada! first try to conquer the Rajas and then the Tamas; then the Sattva becomes pure.

37. When the Rajasic quality grows in preponderance, the individual imbibes the Rajasic faith, abandons his own Sanatan Dharma (settled eternal religion) and practises against his religious instructions.

38. Under the Rajasic propensities, one is eager to amass wealth and enjoy the Rajasic things. The Rajas drives away the Sattva and curbs the Tamas.

39-41. Narada! So when the Tamasic quality grows in preponderance, the faith in the Vedas and in the religious S'astras entirely disappears. Imbibing the Tamasic faith, the individual squanders away his wealth and is always engaged in quarrels, and party feelings, envy, violence and never enjoys peace. The individual with the Tamasic quality in excess overpowers the Rajasic and Sattvic qualities and becomes angry, wicked, and a great cheat and does everything as he likes, without any regard to his superiors.

42. Narada! Thus you see that, of these three qualities, no one can remain entirely alone, free from the other qualities. These remain always in twos or threes.

43-44. The Sattva can never exist without the Rajas; the Rajas can never exist without the Tamas; and these two qualities can never exist without Tamas. Again Tamas cannot exist without Rajas and Sattva. These qualities act and react always in twos or threes.

45-47. They never exist separately; they live in pairs or threes and are the originators of each other; these qualities are of the nature of procreating things; in other words, Sattva originates the Rajas or Tamas; again the Rajas originates sometimes Sattva and Tamas. Again the Tamas sometimes originates Sattva and Rajas. Thus they generate each other as the earthen pots and earth are their mutual causes.

48-49. Deva Datta, Visnu Mitra, and Yajha Datta these three united perform any action, so these three qualities united reside in the buddhi (intellect) of the Jivas and generate their sense perceptions.

Just as the husband and wife get into a couple, the qualities get into couples.

50. The Sattva with Rajas forms the couple Rajas Sattva; so Sattva Rajas forms another couple, where the Sattva predominates. So Sattva end Rajas forms each with Tamas the other couples.

51. Narada said! O Dvaipayana! Hearing thus about these three qualities from my father, I asked him again these questions.

Thus ends the eighth chapter of the Maha Puranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam containing the description of the Gunas, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narada said Father! You have described to me the characteristic of the three qualities; though I have drunk the sweet juice from your lotus like mouth, still I am not quite satisfied. Kindly describe to me, in detail, in due order, how I can recognise clearly the three qualities so that I can get the highest peace of mind.

3. Vyasa said O King! The Creator of the world, Brahma, originated from the Rajo Guna, asked by his high minded son Narada, began to speak in the following terms.

4. O Narada! I myself do not possess fully the complete knowledge of the three qualities; but, as far as I know, I am telling that to you.

5. The pure Sattva quality is not found alone to exist anywhere; it manifests itself always, in mixed condition, in combination with the other qualities.

6-9. As a beautiful woman, well decorated with ornaments and endowed with amorous gestures, gives delight, on the one hand, to her husband, father, mother and friends; and, on the other hand, becomes a source of pain and delusion to her rival wives, so the Sattva quality, personified as a beautiful woman, engenders the Sattvic happiness of the mind to some individual, at one time, and at another time becomes a source of pain to the same individual (or at one and the same time becomes a source of happiness to one and a source of pain to another.) Thus the Rajas or the Tamas quality.

personified respectively as a beautiful woman becomes a source of pain or delusion to an individual at one time, and at another time, a source of happiness to the same man. So it is easily seen that one quality cannot remain single; it remains in union with the other qualities.

Note It is very possible that a man, possessing the Sattvic quality at any time, can be said not to possess only the Sattvic quality but also the Rajas and the Tamas to a certain degree. At any subsequent time the Rajas might get preponderance, and that man may be in circumstances requiring money or so forth; but, due to his Sattva quality before hand he did not collect money and therefore he feels pain afterwards. So with the Rajas. Or it may be thus Suppose an earning member is Sattvic. He earns just sufficient to meet his wants. But his family members require more money, for they are Rajasic. Therefore the earning member is happy for his Sattvic quality; but the other members are unhappy for his Sattvic quality. A man is, as it were, wedded to the three wives, Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas.

10. O Narada! When the three qualities remain each in their own real natures, then the effects produced by them also remain always the same; no changes are perceived owing to the difference of time or person. But when they get combined, then each of them produces effects sometimes counter to their natures.

11-13. A young beautiful woman, shy, modest and of sweet qualities, well versed in her religious learning, and full of good behaviour, skilled in love practices and full of sweet sentiments becomes a source of loving delight to her beloved and also a source of pain to her rival wives so each of the three qualities assume no doubt.

different aspects according to differences in time and in the nature of the person.

O Narada! As one woman gives pain and delusion to her rival wives and gives pleasure to her husband and friends, so the Sattva quality, when perverted, gives pain and delusion to the persons.

14-19. As the police sepoys and constables are, on the one hand, delight to the saints, troubled by thieves, and, on the other hand, sources of pain and confusion to the thieves and robbers; again as the heavy shower of rain in a pitch dark night, in the rainy season, when the sky over clouded, and when there are flashes of lightning and thunder, is on the one hand, a source of highest delight to a farmer, who has all seeds and necessary things and implements, and, on the other hand is a source of pain to the unfortunate householder, whose house is not yet completely thatched with grass or who has not been able to collect his beams and grass for necessary roofing, and a source of utter bewildering confusion to the young woman, whose husband is abroad expected back at that time, so the three Gunas produce contrary results when perverted by contact with the remaining Gunas, instead what they would have produced, had they not been perverted so.

20-25. O Child! Again I speak to you of the characteristics of the the Gunas. The Sattva guna is pure, clear, illumining, light (not heavy) white. When the senses, eyes, etc., and the limbs are felt very light (without any heaviness) and the heart and brain clear, when there is dispassion towards the Rajasic and the Tamasic enjoyments, know then that the Sattva quality has grown in preponderance in a body. When there is a tendency to yawn, when there is rigidity and suppression of the functions of faculties and when one feels drowsiness, consider that the Rajasic quality has gone to excess. Again, when one seeks after quarrels and goes to another village, one is always restless and ready to fight, when one feels heaviness in body, as if wrapped by a very heavy darkness, when one's limbs and senses are heavy and obscure, when one's mind is vacant, and when one does not like to go to sleep, know that the Tamas has increased too much, Narada!

26. Narada said O Father! You have described the different characteristics of the three Gunas; but I cannot understand how they act all in conjunction?

27. As those who are enemies to one another do not work united, so these Gunas, of opposite characteristics, are enemies, as it were, to one another; how can, then, they act in unison? Kindly explain this to me.

28-30. Brahma said O Narada! The three Gunas may be likened to a lamp. As a lamp manifests a certain object, so these three qualities united do manifest or reveal a certain thing. See the wick, oil, and flame are all of different characteristics; though the oil goes against fire, still it unites with the fire. The oil, wick and fire though running against each other, all these united, serve the one common purpose of illumining, revealing a certain object.

31. So, O Narada! All the three qualities, though of contrary natures, go to prove the same thing.

Narada said O Son of Satyavati! The lotus born Brahma thus described the three qualities, as born of Prakriti; and they are the causes of this Universe. What I heard of you about the nature of Prakriti, I have now described before you.

32. Vyasa said O King! What you asked me, I asked before the same to Narada and he described thus (as I told you above) to me about the characteristics and the effects of the three Gunas in regular order and in detail.

33. O King! Wherever in the S'astras whatever is said, the essence of all that is this -- that the Highest Energy, the Supreme Force, the Great Goddess who is pervading the Universe, is always with qualities and without qualities, according to the differences in the manifestation. This Supreme Force is to be worshipped with the highest devotion.

34. The Brahman, the Purusa (the Supporter, the Ultimate Substratum) the Highest Energy considered as the Male Principle though It is Undecaying, Supreme and Full, is still without any desires or emotions. It is not able to accomplish any action (without the help of its inherent force); this Mahamaya, the Supreme Force is doing all the functions, real and unreal, of the universe.

35-37. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, the Sun, Moon, Indra, the twin Asvins, the Vasus, Visvakarma, Kuvera, Varuna, Fire, Air, Pusa, the Sadanan, and Ganesa all are united with S'akti and can do their respective functions; else they are unable to move themselves. Therefore O king! Know that Supreme Goddess Mahamaya as the cause of this Universe.

38. O Lord of men! You worship this Goddess, perform sacrifices in honour of Her and worship Her with the highest devotion.

39. O king! That Mahamaya is Maha Laksmi, She is Maha Kali, She is Maha Sarasvati; She is the Goddess of all the bhutas and She is the Cause of all causes.

40. That all peaceful, easily worshipped and the ocean of mercy, when worshipped, fulfills all the desires of Her devotees; what to say, the mere utterance of Her name is sufficient for the granting of the desires.

41. In days of yore Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara and all the Devas and many other self controlled ascetics worshipped Her to attain liberation.

42. O king! What shall I speak now about Her more than this If one takes Her name even with indistinctness. She grants the desired purposes, even if they are quite unattainable.

43. In the midst of forest, on the sight of tigers and other ferocious animals, if one becoming afraid, cries aloud Her seed mantra (twice) “Ai, Ai” without the Vindu (incorrectly) instead of “Aim, Aim” She grants immediately his desires.

44-45. O best of kings! There is an example of Satyavrata on this point. That the mere utterance of the name of Bhagavati gives unforeseen results, has been witnessed by us and other high minded Munis. Also in the assembly of the Bramanas I have heard fully many sages quoting in detail many instances on the above point.

46-47. O king! There was a Brahman, named Satyavrata, quite illiterate, a thorough block-head. Once he heard the letter “Ai, Ai” being uttered by a pig; and in course of a talk he himself uttered incidentally that letter and thereby became the one of the best Pundits.

N. B. - “Aim” is the seed mantra of Sarasvati, the Goddess of learning.

48. The Goddess Devi, the Ocean of mercy, hearing the letter “Ai” being pronounced by that Brahmin, became very glad and made him the best of the poets.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said O Maharsi! Who was Satyavrata, the Brahmin whose name you have just taken? In what country was he born? Of what nature was he? Please describe all these to me and satisfy my curiosity?

2. How did he hear that sound “Ai”; how did he repeat that word? How came out the success to him, that illiterate Brahman, at that very instant?

3. And how is it that that Great Goddess, who is omniscient and omnipresent, was pleased with him, kindly describe this interesting incident in detail.

4. Suta said Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, thus asked by the king, addressed in the following pure, sweet, and highly liberal words.

5. Vyasa said Hear, O king! You are the best and foremost in the Kuru clan; what I before heard in the assembly of the Munis, I am now relating that ancient story, highly beneficial to you.

6. O best of the Kurus! Once in my peregrinations in the holy places of pilgrimages, I came to the Naimisaranya forest, that highly sacred place frequented by the Munis.

7-8. That time there were staying Sanaka, Sanatana and the other sons of Brahma who were liberated while living. I went there and bowed down to the Munis and took my seat. Then the religious conversations ensued there in the assembly, when the great sage Maharsi Jamadagni began to question the Munis in the following terms

9. O high-minded excellent ascetics and Munis! There has arisen a great doubt in my mind; I am desirous to have that doubt solved in this assembly of the Maharsis.

10-12. O all-knowing Maharsis that have fulfilled your vows! O Givers of one's honour! Now my question is this:-- Of the following Devas Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Indra, Varuna, Fire, Kuvera, Wind, Visvakarma, Kartikeya, Ganesa, the Sun, the two As'vins, Bhaga, Pusa, Moon, and the other planets, who is the first and best to be worshipped, that can easily be served; who is very quickly satisfied and grants the desired boons; kindly tell me this as early as possible.

13. Thus questioned by the Muni Jamadagni, Maharsi Lomas'a, one in the assembly, spoke O Jamadagni! Hear in reply to your question.

14-15. The Goddess of Energy is the best of the Devas, most excellent and highest to be worshipped. Those who want welfare, they ought to worship this Supreme Force. She is the Para Prakriti, the Highest Nature, the Brahma, conditioned by Maya (Time, space, and causation). She grants all the desires, does good to all, pervades everywhere, and is the Mother of Brahma and the other high souled Devas. She is the First Prakriti, and is the Root of this gigantic Tree of Universe.

16. If any one calls the Devi in remembrance or distinctly utters Her Name, She fulfills all the desires of the human beings. If anybody worships Her, She is at once filled with mercy and becomes ready to grant boons.

17. O Munis! How, once on a time, at Brahmin, uttering one letter of Her mystical mantra, obtained Her Grace, I am now describing that most auspicious history before you. Be pleased to hear.

18. Once on a time, there lived in the country of Kosala, a famous Brahmin, named Deva Datta. He had no issues and therefore started duly according to the prescribed rules a sacrifice called Puttresti for the sake of obtaining children.

19-20. On the banks of the Tamasa river, the Brahmin erected a temporary building (or an open shade) for performing the ceremony, and there built an altar and invited the Brahmins, versed in the Vedas, and clever in performing sacrificial rites. There he placed the fire and began to perform according to the strict rules, the Puttresti sacrifice.

21-22. In that sacrifice, Suhotra, the best of the Munis acted the part of Brahma (1); Yajhyavalkya acted the part of Adhvaryu (2); Brihaspati, that of Hota (3); Paila, that of Prastota (4); Govila, that of Udgata (6); and the other Munis acted as assistants. These all were duly paid their remunerations.

(1) One of the four priests employed at a Soma sacrifice as a superintendent.

(2) Any officiating priest technically distinguished from Hotri, Udgatri and Brahman. His duty was to measure the ground, build the altar, prepare sacrificial vessels, to fetch wood and water, light the fire, bring the animal and immolate it and while doing this to repeat the Yajurveda.

(3) A sacrificing priest who offers the oblations. Or one who recites the prayers of the Rigveda at a sacrifice.

(5) One of the four principal priests at a sacrifice, one who chants the hymns of the Samaveda.

23-24. The Hota Govila, the excellent reciter of the Sama hymns, began to sing in accented tones called svarita (the accents are three Udatta, Anudatta and Svarita) and the Rathantara Sama in 7 tunes.

Then he began to draw breath frequently; and consequently there was a break in time in the accent of Govila. Seeing this, Deva Datta was angry and immediately said to Govila.

25. Well, Govila, you are the foremost of the Munis and still you are doing your work like a quite illiterate man. I fear obstacles may arise in the getting of my son in this my sacrifice of Puttresti.

26. Govila then became much enraged and told Deva Datta "your son will be illiterate, hypocrite, and dumb."

27. Behold! Every being is subject to breathing and respiring; it is very hard to control them; there is no fault of mine in the accents of my songs being thus broken; it is strange that you, being intelligent, cannot understand this.

28. Being afraid to hear the curse from Govila, Deva Datta became very sorry and said "O Muni! I have done no serious offence; why are you so offended without any cause. Seel The Munis are void of anger and they always give delight to others."

29-30. O best of Brahmans! My offence is very trifling; why have you inflicted on me so severe a curse? I was already under the mental agony, since I had no issues; and now you have made me suffer move pain.

31. For the Vedic Pundits declare that it is better not to have any son than to have an illiterate stupid son; the more so, when a Brahmin's son is illiterate, he is blamed by one and all.

32. An illiterate son is like a S'udra or a beast; he is unfit for any action. O Brahmin! What shall I do with an illiterate son?

33. An illiterate Brahmin is like a S'udra; consequently not an object to be engaged in any act of worship or of gifts, he is not deserving to do any action.

34. A Brahman, bereft of the knowledge of the Vedas, living in a country is treated as a S'udra by the king of the place and is liable to pay taxes.

35. Whoever wants to have any fruit in any action will never invite an illiterate Brahmin to take his seat in the ceremony relating to the Pitris or the Devas.

36. The king will consider an illiterate Brahmin as if a S'udra and will never engage him in any religious ceremony but will order him to do the work of a farmer in cultivating fields.

37. Rather to perform the funeral ceremonies by erecting a Kus'abata than to engage an illiterate Brahmin for the purpose.

38. One should give food to an illiterate Brahmin just sufficient to fill his belly and no more. If he does not do that, the giver and especially the receiver are subject to go down to hell.

39. Fie to a kingdom where honour is shown to the illiterate stupid Brahmanas.

40. Where no difference is observed when seats, worship and gift are given to various persons, sages should draw their inference how the literate and illiterate persons are treated there.

41. When the illiterate fools become haughty, when they are paid honours and gifts, the literary persons should never dwell there.

42. The wealth of the wicked goes to the enjoyments of the bad persons; for the Nim trees, though abounding richly in fruits, are enjoyed only by crows.

43. Again, on the other hand, if the Brahmins, versed in the Vedas, study the Vedas even after they have taken their food, still his father and forefathers are happy and play cheerfully in their heavens.

44. Therefore O Govila! You being the foremost of the Brahmin who are versed in the Vedas, what have you said just now? See in this world, death is rather to be preferred then to have an illiterate son. How is it, then, that you have cursed me that I would get an illiterate son, when you are the best one, highly qualified with knowledge.

45. O high minded one! You are capable to relieve the distressed; I am bowing down to your feet; shew your mercy and re-consider your curse.

46. Lomas'a said O Munis! Devadatta, saying these words, fell prostrate at his feet and began to eulogise him in very pitiful words, being very much grieved and with tears in his eyes.

47. Seeing him thus distressed, Govila was moved with pity. The persons that are noble have their anger satiated after a short while; the anger of the ignoble lasts for a long time.

48. The water is naturally cool; but it gets hot in contact with fire heat; and no sooner the heat is drawn away, water gets again cooled quickly.

49. The merciful Govila then addressed the distressed Devadatta “your son though at first illiterate, will afterwards be very learned.”

50. The Brahmin Devadatta was very glad on getting this boon; then completing the sacrifice, rewarded the Brahmins with their due dakshinas and dismissed them.

51. In due course of time, his fair chaste wife Rohini, like the asterism Rohini became pregnant.

52. Devadatta performed the Garbhadhan (1) and Pumsavan (2) ceremonies and other purificatory rites duly.

53. He performed the Simantonnayana ceremony according to rules and considered his Puttrvesti sacrifice successful and made various offerings to the Brahmins.

N. B. -- (1) One of the Samskaras, purificatory ceremonies, performed after menstruation to ensure or facilitate conception (this ceremony legalises in a religious sense the consummation of marriage).

(2) It is a ceremony performed on a woman's perceiving the first signs of a living conception, with a view to the birth of a son.

(3) “Parting of the hair” one of the twelve Samskaras or purificatory rites observed by women in the fourth, sixth, or eighth month of their pregnancy.

54-55. In the auspicious lagna when Rohini asterism was present and in the auspicious day, his wife Rohini gave birth to a male child. Devadatta performed the nativities of the new born child and saw its face. Next that knower of the Puranas, Devadatta kept the name of the child as Utathya.

56. When the son was eight years old, Devadatta performed the Upanayana (thread) ceremony duly.

57-58. Next the child was made to accept the vow of Brahmachari; and Devadatta made him study the Vedas; but the child could not pronounce a single word and used to sit simply like a stupid boy. Though tried in various ways to read and write, that wicked boy never paid the slightest attention, simply sat idly. Seeing this, his father was very sorry and much grieved.

59. Thus twelve years passed. Yet the boy could not learn how to perform his Sandhya Bandana duly.

60. The rumour went abroad that Utathya, the son of Devadatta turned out very illiterate. All the Brahmanas, ascetics, and other persons came to learn this fact.

61. Wherever Utathya used to go in any forest on hermitage, the people used to laugh at him, ridiculed his father and mother and began to chide that illiterate son.

62. Thus blamed by father, mother and all other persons, dispassion occupied the heart of Utathya.

63. Once when rebuked by his father and nnother that it was better to have a blind and lame son instead of an illiterate brute, Utathya took recourse to renunciation and went to a dense forest.

64-65. On the banks of the Ganges in a beautiful spot free from obstacles, he built a beautiful hut and began to subsist on the roots and fruits of the forest and with collected mind. Having made the excellent vow “I will never speak untruth” and holding the vow of celibacy, he lived in that beautiful hermitage.

Thus ends the 10th chapter in the 3rd Skandha of S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa relating to the story of Satyavrata.

English translation

1-5. Lomas'a said O Munis! Utatthya, the son of Devadatta, was quite ignorant of anything of the Vedas, Japann (muttering of mantra) meditation of the deity, worship of the Devas, Asana (Posture), Pranayama (withholding the breath by way of religious austerity), Pratyahara (restraint of mind), Bhutas'uddhi (purification of the elements of the body by respiratory attraction and replacement), mantra (a mystical formula regarding some deity), Kilaka (chanting of a mantra to serve as a pin of protection), Gayattri (the famous mantra of the Brahmins), Saucha (cleanliness, external and internal) rules how to bathe, Achamana (sipping of water and reciting mantrams before worship), Pranagnihotra (offering of oblations to the fire of Prana or to the fire of life), the offering of a sacrifice, hospitality, Sandhya (the morning, mid-day or evening prayer), collecting fuels for oblations, and offering of oblations. Daily he rose in the morning and somehow rinsed his mouth and washed his teeth and bathed in the Ganges river without any mantrams (like a Sudra).

6. That stupid fellow ate indiscriminately, did not know what to eat and what not to eat. During the mid-day he collected the fruits from the forest and used to eat them.

7. But he always spoke truth while he stayed there; never did he say any untruth. The people of that place, seeing this, named him Satyatapa.

8-9. That Utatthya did no good or bad to anybody; he slept peacefully and blissfully; but be used to think when he would die;

thus his troubles would be ended; he felt that the life of an illiterate Brahman is a curse; his death would be a better alternative.

10. He used to think thus Fate has made me a fool; I do not find any other cause for it. Oh! I got the exceedingly good birth amongst men; but all this has been rendered in vain by Fate.

11. Oh! As a fair woman, if barren, a cow if giving no milk, and a tree without any fruits are all useless, so Fate has rendered my life, too, quite useless.

12. Why am I cursing Fate? This is all the fruits of my past Karma. In my previous life I never wrote a book and presented to a good Brahmin; hence I am illiterate in this birth.

13. In my former birth I did not impart any knowledge to my favourite pupils; hence I am wicked and a cursed Brahmin in this birth.

14. I never performed any religious asceticism in any holy place, I did not serve the saints, I never worshipped the Brahmins with any offerings. For all these reasons I am now born of perverted intellect in the present birth.

15. Many a son of the Munis have learnt the meanings of the Vedas and the S'astras; and I am whiling away my time thus in a quite illiterate condition by some wretched combinations of incidents.

16. I do not know how to perform Tapasya; what is the use, then, of my attempting to do so? I am of very bad luck, and thus my good resolve will not be crowned with success.

17. I consider Fate to be the strongest of all; Fie on one's own prowess! For actions done with effort and hard labour are frustrated entirely by Fate.

18. Time can never be overstepped; Seel Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Indra, and others are all under the influence of the Great Time.

19. O Risis! Thus arguing in his mind, that Brahmin son Utatthya stayed there in that hermitage on the bank of the holy Ganges.

20. And gradually he became thoroughly unattached to all the things and, being peaceful, passed away his time in that forest without any habitations and men, with great difficulty.

21. Thus passed away fourteen years in that forest where the Ganges was flowing. Still he did not learn how to worship the Supreme Deity, how to make Japam, nor did he learn any mantrams. Simply he lived there and whiled away his time.

22. People surrounding that place knew this much only of him that this Muni spoke truth only and hence his name was Satyavrata. This one name made him celebrated that he is Satyavrata; never did he say any untruth.

23. Once on a time, a hunter named Nisada, exceedingly clever in hunting, came accidentally with bows and arms in his hands, while hunting a deer in that wide forest. He looked like a second God of Death (Yama) and seemed to be very cruel.

24. That savage mountaineer, drawing his bow so as to touch the ear, pierced a boar with his sharp arrows. The boar, being very much terrified, fled with enormous rapidity to the Muni Satyavrata.

25. On seeing the distressed condition of the boar trembling with fear and his body besmeared with blood, the Muni was moved with mercy.

26. While the boar, pierced with arrows and besmeared with blood, was running away in front of him, mercy took possession of the Muni, therefore the Muni began to tremble and agreeably to the human nature exclaimed "Ai" "Ai" (go to that direction), the seed mantram of the Goddess of learning with "m" left out (Aim, Aim).

27. That illiterate Brahmin son never heard before that "Ai" was the seed mantram of the Sarasvati Devi; nor did he come to know of it by any other means. Accidentally it came out of his mouth, and he uttered. And afterwards that Mahatma seeing the boar's distressed condition was merged in deep sorrow.

28. The boar entered trembling into the Muni's hermitage very much distracted and being very much pained with arrows. Being unable to find any other way the boar hid himself in the dense bushes.

29. Instantly there appeared then, before the Muni, the terrible savage hunter, like a second God of Death, with string stretched to his ear, in pursuit of that boar.

30-33. On seeing the Muni Satyavrata sitting there alone and silent on the Kus'a grass seat, the hunter bowed down to him and asked "O Brahmin! Whither has that boar gone. I know very well everything about you that you never speak untruth; therefore I am enquiring about the boar pierced by my arrows. My family members are all very hungry; and to feed them, I am come out in this hunting. This is the living, ordained by the Fate; I have got no other means of maintaining the livelihood of my family. This I speak truly to you; whether it is bad or good, I will have to maintain my family with it. O Brahman! You are famous as Satyavrata; my family members are starving; kindly reply quickly where that boar has gone?"

34. Thus asked by the hunter, the Mahatma Satyavrata was merged in an ocean of doubt; he began to argue "If I say I have not seen the boar then my vow to speak the truth will certainly be broken.

35. The boar struck with arrows has gone this way, it is true. How can I tell a lie? Again this man is hungry and is therefore asking, he will instantly kill the boar no sooner he finds him. How then can I speak truth?

36. Where speaking out the truth causes injury and the loss of lives, that truth is no truth at all; moreover, even untruth, when tempered with mercy for the welfare of others, is recognised as truth. Really speaking, whatever leads to the welfare of all the beings in this world, that is truth; and every thing else is not truth.

37. O Jamadagni! Thus placed between the horns of a religious dilennnna what shall I do now so as to meet both the ends -- to save the life of the boar, to do the welfare, as well as not to speak untruth."

38. When Satyavrata saw the boar wounded by the arrow of the hunter, he, moved with pity, uttered the seed mantra of the Goddess of Learning; and now that most auspicious Goddess, on account of his uttering Her seed mantram, was very pleased and gave him the knowledge, difficult to be attained otherwise.

39. The door of all his knowledge opened out at once, and he became at once instantly the seer, the poet like the ancient Muni Valmiki.

40. Then that religiously disposed, merciful Brahman, aiming at Truth, addressed that hunter before him with bows in his arms, thus

41. That force which sees (as witness) never speaks; and that force which speaks, never sees. O hunter! Why are you asking me repeatedly, impelled by your own selfish desire?

42. The hunter, the killer of the animals, on hearing this was disappointed in the matter of finding out the boar and went back to his home.

43. That Brahmin turned out a poet like Varuna and he became celebrated as Satyavrata, the speaker of truth, in all the worlds.

44. He began to recite the Satyavrata mantram duly, and, by its influence, became a Pundit, rivalled by none in this world.

45. During every festival the Brahmans chanted his praise and the Munis used to narrate his story in detail.

46. On hearing his fame spreading all around, his father Devadatta who forsook him before, recalled him to his hermitage and took him again in his family with great honour and affection.

47. Therefore O King! You should always worship and serve that Great Goddess, the Prime Energy, the Cause of all this Universe.

48. O King! With due Vedic rites you perform that sacrifice to that Goddess which will surely yield results at all times and all desires. I already spoke to you about this.

49. That Great Goddess is known as Kamada (the giver of all desires); for She grants all desires when men with devotion remember Her, worship Her, take Her name, meditate Her and eulogise Her.

50-56. O King! The wise sages ought to see the persons diseased, distressed, hungry, those without any wealth, the hypocrite, the cheat, the afflicted, the sensual, the covetous, the incapable, always suffering from mental troubles; again those who are wealthy with their children and grand-children, prosperous, healthy, with enjoyments, versed in the Vedas, literary, kings, heroes, those who command over many, those attended with relations and kinsmen and endowed with all good qualities; and then judge for themselves that those people did not worship the Goddess and therefore they were sufferers and these people worshipped the Goddess and hence they were happy in this world.

57. Vyasa said Thus I heard from the mouth of Lomas'a Muni, in assembly of the sages, the good merits of the Great Goddess.

58. O King! Consider all these and you will find that the Highest Goddess, the Bhagavati is to be worshipped always with devotion and unselfish love.

English translation

1. The king spoke O Lord! Kindly describe the rules and regulations as to how the Devi Yajna (sacrifice) is performed with its duly prescribed rites and ceremonies. Hearing it I will unwearied perform it, as far as it lies in my power, with as little delay as possible.

2. How the worship is done, what are the mantras, what are the articles required for oblations, how many Brahmins are required and what Daksinas are to be paid to them, describe in detail all these.

3-5. Vyasa said O king! I am telling you duly how the Yajna is performed, hear. The actions are always threefold according as the preparations are made and according as they are practised with regard to the observed rules. The threefold divisions are Sattvik, Rajasik and Tamasic. The Munis do the Sattvik Puja, the kings celebrate Rajasic and the Rakshasas do the Tamasik Pujas. There is another Puja which is devoid of qualities and which is performed by the liberated ones. I will describe to you all these in detail.

6-7. O king! The Yajna is then called Sattvik, when it is performed in a Sattvik country, like Benares, etc., in Sattvik time, e.g., in Uttarayana, when the materials collected are earned rightly, when the mantras are those of the Vedas, when the Brahmin is Srotriya, where there is Sattvik faith, void of any attachment towards the sensual objects, when all these happen to coincide. O king! When all the above takes place and there is purification of materials, actions, and mantras, i.e., when the materials are all right, when the actions are done as they ought to be, and where there is no error or omission, etc., in the mantras, etc., then and then only the Yajna becomes perfect and no doubt yield full results; there would be nothing contrary to this.

8-9. If the Yajha is performed with articles not rightly earned, then there is no fame either in this world nor there is any reward in the next world. Therefore it is necessary that the Yajha should be performed with rightly earned materials; then there is fame in this world and better state in the next world; and happiness is also acquired; there is no doubt in this.

10. O king! It is before your eyes, as it were, that the Pandavas performed the Rajasuya Yajha, the king of sacrifices, and, on the completion whereof, the excellent Daksinas were paid to the Brahmins and others.

11. In that Yajha the highly intelligent S'ri Krisna Himself, the Lord of the Yadavas was present, as well as many other Brahmanas, like Bharadvaja and other fully enightened souls.

12. But within three months after completing the sacrifice, the Pandavas suffered extreme hardships and had to live, with extreme difficulty, as exiles in the forest.

13. Consider the insult shown towards Draupadi, the Pandava's defeat in the play of gambling, their going away to dwell in the forest; these hardships were borne by the Pandavas. What rewards did then the Pandavas derive from the Rajasuya Yajha?

14-15. All the high-souled Pandavas had to work as slaves of Virata; and Draupadi, the best of women, was very much troubled and insulted by Kichaka. When all these occurred, any one can easily ask where were the ashirvadas of the pure souled Brahmanas? Also what result did they derive from their unflinching devotion towards S'ri Krisna when they were involved in the above critical state?

16. No one protected Draupadi, the chaste and the best, the daughter of Drupada, when she was drawn by her hair on her head into the hall of assembly where gambling was being played?

17. O king! How could all these happen in a place where S'ri Bhagavan Kesava Himself and the high souled Yudhisthira were present? If one argues, one would conclude “there must have been something wrong in that Yajha.”

18. If you say that nothing wrong happened in the Yajha, all these were caused by Fate; then it comes to this that the Vedic mantras, Agamas and the other Vedic rites are all fruitless.

19. If it be argued that though the Vedic mantras are powerful enough to bear fruits, yet whatever is predestined to come to pass, will surely pass, then the proposition resolves into this that all the means, expedients, and appliances lead to meaningless conclusions.

20. Then the Agamas, the Vedas merely recommend a vidhi or precept by stating the good arising from its proper observance and the evils arising from its omission and also by adducing historical instances as its support; in other words, they are powerless as far as bearing fruits is concerned; all the acts are meaningless, asceticism to attain Heaven comes as useless and the peculiar duties of caste are fruitless. O king! This view is exceedingly culpable; it is never fit for acceptance by the highsouled persons.

21. O King! If what is laid by God in the womb of futurity (a state of things preordained by God in which it is sure to take place in the fullness of time), be taken as the first-hand proof, then all the other proofs are rendered null and void. Therefore Fate and human exertion both are to be undoubtedly taken into account to ensure success.

22. Human exertions being applied, if the results come otherwise, the wise Pundits would infer that some defects, omissions or imperfections crept into the work.

23. All the Pundits, very learned and instituters of sacrifices have classed Karmas under different headings according as the agents, mantras, and articles employed in the worship vary.

24. Once on an occasion VisVarupa, ordained as a Guru by Indra (in a Yajha) (intentionally) did things contrary so as to benefit the Daityas, who belonged to his mother's side.

25. VisVarupa uttered repeatedly the mantrams beneficial to the gods, while they were present; and, during their absence, prayed heartily for the welfare of the Daityas; and, in the long run, protected the Daityas.

26. On seeing the Asuras gaining strength, Indra, the Lord of the Devas, became very much enraged and instantly cut off VisVarupa's head by his thunderbolt.

27. O King! This is then the instance where the contrary fruits were borne out by the agent employed in performing the Yajha; there is no doubt in this. This is not possible in the other cases.

28. See, again, the king of Panchala performed his sacrifice to get a son to kill Drona, the son of Bharadvaja; and though he did this out of angry motives, still Dhristadyumna was born out of fire; and Draupadi sprang out of the altar.

29. Again, in days of yore, Das'aratha, the king of Kosala, was sonless; and he instituted a sacrifice to get one son; and lo! be got four sons.

30. Therefore O King! If the Yajha be performed according to proper rules and regulations, it yields fruits in all respects; again if it be done unrighteously, without any regard for the rules, etc., it yields results just the contrary; there is no doubt in this.

31-32. Therefore, there must have been some defects in the Yajha of the Pandavas; hence contrary effects ensued, and therefore the truthful king Yudhisthira and his powerful brothers and the chaste Draupadi were all defeated in the play at dice.

33. It might be that the materials were not of a good stamp; they were all earned by killing the kings, good many in number, and earned thus unrighteously; or it might happen that the Pandavas did their Yajha with too much egoism. However, this is certain that there had crept in some defects in their actions.

34. O King! The Sattvik Yajha is rare; it can be done only by the Sattvik Munis who live in the 3rd order of the household life or who live as hermits.

35-36. The ascetics that eat daily the Sattvik food, the roots and fruits, collected from forests and obtained rightly, that is good to the Munis and that is well cleaned and purified, are the only ones that can perform with full devotions the Sattvik Yajhas, where no animals are sacrificed (where there are no sacrificial posts to which the victim is fastened at the time of immolation) and where offerings of cakes of ground rice in vessels are given. These are the best of all the Sattvik Yajhas.

37. The Ksattriyas and the Vaisyas perform the Yajhas with Abhiman (self-conceit and egoism) where many presents are given, animals are sacrificed, and all things are well cleansed, purified and elaborately decorated. This Yajha is called Rajasic.

38. That Yajha is according to the sages, Tamasik, where the Danavas, puffed up with arrogance, infatuated with anger, jealousy and wickedness perform their acts with the sole object of killing their enemies.

39. That Yajha is called Manas Yag or manasic (mental) where the high-souled Munis, void of worldly desires, collect mentally all the necessary articles and perfornn the Yajha with the sole object of liberation from the bondages of the world.

40. In all the other Yajhas (than the Manas Yag) some imperfections or other naturally arise, due to some defects in the materials, or want of faith, or in the performance or in the Brahmins.

41. No other Yajhas can be so complete as the Manasa Yajha; the reason being that in the other Yajhas some, imperfections come out due to time, place, and separate ingredients to be collected.

42-43. Now hear who are the persons fit to undertake this mental Yajha in honour of the Great Goddess. First this mind is to be purified, by making it void of the Gunas; the mind being pure, the body becomes also pure, there is no doubt. When the mind becomes completely pure, after it has abandoned all sensual objects, fit for enjoyment, then that man is entitled to perform the Mother's Yajha.

44-45. There he should build mentally the big hall for sacrifice, many Yojanas wide, decorated with high polished pillars out of the materials brought for the purpose (e. g., fortitude, etc.). Within the hall he will imagine a wide and spacious altar and place the Holy Fire on it mentally according to due rules and regulations.

46-47. He is to select mentally the Brahmin priests and consecrate them as Brahma, Adharyu, Hota, Prastota, Udgata, Pratihatra and other assistants. He is to worship mentally all these priests.

48. Then he will have to imagine the five Vayus, Prana, Apana, Vyana, Samana, and Udana, as the five fires and locate them duly on the altar.

49-50. Prana Vayu stands for Garhapatya; Apana, for Ahavaniya; Vyana for Daksina; Samana for Avasathya; and Udana for Sabhya Agni. These fires are all very terrible; then one should place these carefully on the altar with great concentration of mind. He is to collect then all the other necessary materials and think that all are very pure and free from any defects.

51-57. In the Manasic Yajha, mind is the offerer of oblations and mind the Yajamana, the performer of the Sacrifice; and the Presiding Deity of the Sacrifice is the Nirguna Brahma. The Great Goddess, the Nirguna Energy, who is always auspicious and gives the feeling of dispassion and indifference to worldly objects is the awarder of fruits in this Yajha. She is the Brahma Vidya, She is the substratum of all and She is all pervading. The Brahmin is to take the Devi's name and offer oblations in the fire of Prana, the necessary articles for the Devi's satisfaction. Then he is to make his Chitta and Prana void of any worldly thought, or any worldly support and to offer oblations to the Eternal Brahma through the mouth of Kundalini (the Serpent Fire.) Next, within his Nirvikalpa mind, by means of Samadhi, be should meditate own Self, the Mahes'vari Herself by his consciousness. Thus, when he will see his own self in all the beings and all the beings in his own self, then the Jiva will get the vision of the Goddess Mahavidya, giving auspicious liberation (Moksa). O King! After the high souled Munis have seen the Goddess, of everlasting intelligence and bliss, then he becomes the knower of Brahman. All the Maya, the cause of this Universe becomes burnt up; only, as long as the body remains, the Prarabdha Karma remains.

58. Then the Jivas become liberated, while living; and when the body dissolves, he attains to final liberation. Therefore, O Child! Whoever worships the Mother becomes crowned with success; there is no doubt in this.

59. Therefore follow the advice of the Guru, the Spiritual Teacher; and with all attention, hear, think and meditate on the Great Goddess of the World.

60. O King! Liberation is sure to ensue of this Manasa Yajha. All the other Yajhas are Sakama (with some object in view) and therefore their effects are temporary.

61-62. He who wants enjoyments in Heaven, should perform the Agnistoma Yajha, with due rites and ceremonies; such is the Vedic injunction. But when the acquired merit expires, the sacrificer will have to come again into this world of mortals. Therefore the Manasa Yajha is eternal and best.

63-65. This Manasa Yajha is not fit to be performed by kings intent on getting victory. The Yajha that you performed, the serpent Yajha, is Tamasic, for you wanted to take vengeance on your enemy, the serpent Taksaka; and millions of serpents were made to be burnt in that sacrifice.

O King! Hear now about the Devi Yajha, that was performed by Visnu in the beginning of the creation. You better now do that Devi Yajha with due rules.

66-67. I will tell you all about the rules; there are Brahmins that know the rules and know best also the Vedas; they know also the seed mantrams of the Devi, as well as the rules of their application; they are clever in all the mantrams. These will be your priests and you yourself will be the sacrificer.

68. O King! Do this sacrifice duly and deliver your father from hell by the merits that you will acquire thereby.

69. O Sinless One! The sin incurred on account of insulting a Brahmin is serious and leads the sinner to hell. Your father committed that sin and incurred the curse from a Brahmin. Therefore he has gone to the hell.

70. Your father died also out of a snake bite which is not a meritorious one. The death occurred also in a palace built high up in the air (on a pillar), instead of taking place on the ground on a bed of Kus'a grass.

71. O best of the Kurus! The death did not occur in any battle nor on the banks of the Ganges. Void of proper bathing and charities, etc., he died in a palace.

72. O best of Kings! All the ugly causes, leading to hell, were present in the case of your father. See, again, there is also one thing which done will lead to one’s liberation; but that was absent too with your father.

73-76. That is this Let a man remain, wherever he may, whenever he comes to learn that his end is approaching, even if he had not practised before any good practices or meritorious deeds, and even if he becomes senseless in the trial time of death, when dispassion comes to an individual whose mind gets, for the time being, clear and free from any worldly thoughts, then he should think thus "This my body, composed of five elements, will soon be destroyed; there is no cause whatsoever in having any remorse for it; let whatever come, that it may; I am free, void of qualities; and I am the Eternal Purusa; death is not capable to do any harm to me. All the elements are liable to decay and destruction; what remorse can overtake me? I am not a man of the world, I am always free. Eternal Brahma; I have got no connection with this body that is merely the outcome of actions.

77. Before I did meritorious or unmeritorious acts, leading to happiness and pain; therefore I have got this mortal coil and am enjoying the fruits of my past auspicious or inauspicious Karma."

78. Whoever thinks thus and dies, even if he does not take proper purificatory bath or make any charity, he gets himself freed from the awful Samsara and never comes to see himself again born in this world.

79. O King! This method of parting from one's body is rarely attained even by the Yogins; this is the acme, the highest height of all the human efforts towards liberation.

80. But your father, hearing even the curse from a Brahmin, retained his attachment towards his body; therefore he did not attain dispassion.

81. He thought thus "My body is now free from any disease; my kingdom is free from enemies or any other source of danger; how can I now get myself saved from this untimely death." Thinking thus, he ordered to call the Brahmans, who know the mantrams.

82. Then that king ascended to the palace, with medicines, many mantras and many other instruments.

83-84. He considered his fate to be the strongest and therefore did not take his bath in any holy place; he did not perform any charities, did not sleep on the ground or remember any mantram of the Devi. Due to Kali entering into his body, he committed the sin of insulting an ascetic and plunged himself in the ocean of delusion and died bitten by the Taksaka snake on the top of a palace.

85. The King has now fallen undoubtedly to the hell, on account of those vicious deeds. Therefore, O King! dost Thou deliver your father from the sin.

86. Suta said, O Risis! Hearing these words from the fiery Vyasa, the king Janamejaya became very sad and tears came from his eyes and flowed down his cheeks and throat.

He then exclaimed in a suffocating voice "Fie on me! my father is still in the hell. I will now do at once whatever leads my father to heaven."

Thus ends the twelfth chapter on the Amba Yajha rules in the 3rd Adhyaya of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses composed by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. The King spoke O Grandfather! How did Visnu, the Powerful, the Cause of the world, perform the Devi Yajna? Whose help did he receive and what priests with their knowledge of the Vedas did he engage, kindly tell all these to me in special details. I will very attentively hear first this Devi Yajna, performed by Visnu; and then I will make arrangements to do that myself accordingly.

4. Vyasa said O noble one! Hear in detail that very wonderful thing, how Visnu celebrated the Devi Yajna comformably to the rules laid down in the S'astras.

5. When Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a were each given powers by the Devi, the Goddess of the Universe, and when they parted, these three Devas became free from their womanhood, while they were coming back in their aerial cars and turned out men, as they were before.

6. These three Devas, found the great ocean before them. They brought out world from it; and built, in that world, dwelling abodes; and they themselves began to live in some of them.

7. That world became fixed, steady and the supporter of all beings when the Goddess imparted the power of fixture, steadiness, and the power of supporting to the world. The earth, filled with marrow, then, became fixed and the great supporter by Her power.

8-10. O King! The name of this earth is Medini, since it was made out of the marrow of the two Asuras Madhu and Kaitabha. This earth is termed Dhara because it supports all; is termed Prithvi because it is very capacious; and it is called Mahi because it is great, since it supports so many beings. O King! the Ananta serpent is holding it on her thousand-hoods. To make the earth remain solid and compact, Brahma built at places mountains. As iron nails in a log of wood, so these hills and mountains within this earth made it fixed. Therefore the Pundits call these mountains "Mahidhara," holder of the earth.

11.0 King! Thus the golden Meru, the great mountain, many Yojanas wide, adorned with many golden mountain peaks was created.

12. Next Marichi, Narada, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Daksa, and Vas'istha were created by Brahma; these are the Brahma's mental sons (sons created by the sheer power of mind).

13. The son Kas'yapa was born to Marichi and thirteen daughters were born of Daksa. From these daughters and out of the seed of Kas'yapa, various Devas and Daityas were born.

14. Then human beings, animals, serpents and many other classes were created. This is called the KasyapT S'risti or the Kas'yapa's creation.

15. Next Svayambhava Manu sprang from the lower half of Brahma; and the daughter named S'atarupa came out of the left hand side of the Brahma's body.

16. The two sons Priyavrata and Uttanapada were born of Manu in the womb of S'atarupa and the three daughters, very beautiful and fair complexioned, were also born of him.

17. Creating then, the Bhagavan, the lotus born Brahma built the beautiful Brahma-loka, on the top of the Meru mountain.

18. Then the Bhagavan Visnu built the Vaikuntha city on the top of all the lokas or worlds to dwell with his consort Laksmi.

19. Mahadeva, too, built the exceedingly beautiful Kailas'a and stayed there with his Bhutas and played with them at his will.

20. The third Loka termed Heaven was built on the top of Meru, decorated with various precious gems and jewels and stones. It was fixed as the abode of Indra.

21-22. When the great ocean was churned, Parijata, the best of all the trees, the elephant Airavata with four tusks, the Heavenly cow yielding the milk of all desires, the Uchchais'rava horse and Apsaras, Rambha and others, arose and were taken by Indra. These became the ornaments of Heaven.

23. The Moon and Dhanvantari, the great phyisician also came out of the churning of the ocean. These surrounded with many other members began to shine, being situated above the Heavens.

24. O King! Thus the three varieties, human beings, Devas, and Tiryakas (birds, etc.) and their great subvarieties sprang up.

25. The four classes of Jivas, Andaja (born from the eggs), Svedaja (born out of sweats), Udbhija (plants, etc.) and Jarayuja (men, etc.) were created, being endowed with the fruits of their past auspicious or inauspicious Karmas, as the case may be.

26. Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a began to play and walk about at their leisures in their respective spheres, after they finished all their creations.

27. Thus the wheel of creation being started, the Great God Bhagavan Visnu Achyuta remained in sport with Maha Laksmi in His own sphere Vaikuntha.

28. Then Bhagavan Visnu, while sitting one day in Vaikuntha, got in his mind the memory of that beautiful island, called Mani Dvipa, adorned with precious stones, gems and jewels.

29-33. O King! In this Mani DvTpa, the Bhagavan Visnu got the vision of the Maha Maya and the auspicious mantra. He now thought to celebrate a Yajha in honour of the Devi, when he recollected the highest Energy, the Great Goddess. He then went out of his abode and invited Brahma, MahesVara, Kuvera, Indra, Varuna, Fire, Yama, Vas'istha, Kas'yapa, Daksa, Vamadeva, Brihaspati and others and began to collect lots of materials necessary for the Devi sacrifice. Selecting a site Sattvik, beautiful, and possessing great spiritual powers, Visnu erected, with the help of the great artists and engineers, a wide capacious sacrificial hall, and for the due celebration and fulfilment of it, appointed twenty seven priests; who pledged a solemn vow to complete it duly.

34. When the big altar and chiti (pile of wood for burning, stack of sacrificial bricks) were finished, the Brahmanas began to recite slowly the Devi mantrams with their root mantrams.

Note Chiti, lit pile of wood for burning, is perhaps the Muladhara, the sacral plexus, where the fire called Kundalini is first kindled by processes of Yoga.

35-37. Then the profuse quantities of ghee were offered as oblations to to the Sacred Fire. Thus when the Homa, (offering oblations of ghee to the fire) ceremony was finished elaborately and conforming to the rules of the S'astras, the sweet and melodious Heavenly voice was heard in the air, addressing Visnu Bhagavan, thus O Visnu! Let You be the supreme amongst the gods; honour and worship shall be Thine first; and you would be the most powerful of the Devas. Indra together with Brahma, and the other Devas, all will worship You.

38-39. O Achyuta! (O Infallible One!) Those men on the earth that will be devoted to you, will certainly be endowed with power and you shall be the bestower of boons and all their desires. O Visnu! you will be the Supreme of the Devas and you will be the God of the gods; you will be the first and foremost in all the sacrifices and you will be worshipped by the sacrificers.

40-41. People will worship you; and you will favour them with the boons. O best of the Purusas! When the Devas will be troubled by the Asuras, they will come and take refuge in Thee. You will be the Protector of all, there is no doubt in this. In all the Puranas and all this vast Vedas, You will be first worshipped.

42. O Kes'ava! Wherever there will be decay and decline in religion. You will incarnate in your parts and preserve the religion.

43-44. O Madhava! Avataras, renowned in all the worlds, will come down on earth as Your part incarnations in all sorts of wombs, in due order, and will be respected by all the high souled personages. O Madhusudana! Those Avataras will be the best of all the Avataras and will be famous all the Lokas, the worlds.

45. In all your Avataras, you will get your attendants, the S'aktis (females) drawing their energies from My parts; and they will serve your purposes.

46-47. Varahi, Narasimhi, etc., and various other S'aktis of auspicious appearances, endowed with various weapons and decked with all the ornaments will serve as your attendants; no doubt in this. O Visnu! Always with their help and under the influence of My favour, you will no doubt be quite competent to serve the purposes of the Devas.

48. You should respect and worship all those powers by all means and with very great attention; never shew the slightest trace of pride to them; never do you thus insult them.

49. These S'aktis, capable of bestowing all the desires, will be worshipped in Pratimas (images of clay, etc.) in the whole of India.

50. O Deva of the Devas! The fame of all these S'aktis, as well as of You will be spread in the seven worlds and in the whole Universe.

51. O Hah! The human beings on this earth will constantly worship with selfish ends these powers and you, for the fructification of their desires.

52. Having various desires, men will, in your worship, present various offerings, recite the Veda mantrams, and repeat the names of you and the powers.

53. O Visnu! You will be the God of the Immortals and your glory will be enhanced by the worship offered by the human beings in the world as well as in the heavens.

54. Vyasa said O king! The heavenly voice, thus, bestowing boons on Visnu, ceased. Visnu Bhagavan became very glad to hear this.

55-58. Then Hah, the God of Gods, completed duly the sacrifice and dismissed the Devas and the Munis, the sons of Brahma. Then ascending on Garuda, (His Vahana), He went up to Vaikuntha with his followers. The Devas also went to their own respective places. The Munis also retired gladly to their own hermitages, all thunderstruck to see these things, conversing with each other about this sacrifice.

59. O king! All were filled with best devotion towards the Supreme Force, on hearing this clear beautiful, sonorous heavenly voice; then the Dvijas, the Munis, and Munindras began to worship with devotion, according to the Vedas, that Highest Force, the Supreme Goddess, giving all desired objects profusely in all the details.

Here ends the thirteenth chapter on the Devi Yajha by S'ri Visnu in the third Adhyaya in S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam; the Maha Puranam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Janamejaya spoke O Dvija! I have heard in detail the Devi Yajha, performed by S'ri Visnu. Now describe Her Glory and glorious deeds. After hearing these, the Devi's glorious deeds, I will also perform that, the best of all sacrifices. Thereby I will no doubt be pure through your favour.

3. Vyasa said O king! Hear, I am describing to you the history of the most auspicious mighty deeds of the Devi, according to the Puranas.

4-5. In days of yore, there reigned in the country of Kosala, the king Dhruvasandhi of the Solar Dynasty. He was the son of Puspa and celebrated on account of his great prowess. He was truthful, religious, engaged in doing good to his subjects, obeying the laws of the four castes and As'ramas. He being pure, performed his regal duties in the flourishing city of Ayodhya.

6. The Brahmanas, Ksattriyas, Vais'yas, and S'udras and other good persons all lived religiously under his rule, each abiding by his own profession.

7. No thieves, cheats, cunning persons, vain and arrogant persons, treacherous and illiterate men were allowed to remain in his kingdom.

8. O host of Kurus! Thus ruling virtuously, the king had two wives, both of them young, fair and beautiful and well able to give delights and enjoyments to the king.

9. The first and lovely wife was Manorama, and the second was Lilavati. Both of them were exceedingly handsome, intelligent and qualified.

10. The king enjoyed much with them in palaces, gardens, romantic hills, lakes, and various beautiful mansions.

11. In the auspicious moment, Manorama gave birth to a beautiful child, endowed with all royal qualifications. The child was named, in due course, Sudars'ana.

12. Next within one month, his second wife the fair Lilavati in the auspicious fortnight and in the auspicious day, gave birth to an excellent child.

13. The King then performed the Jata-Karma (ceremonies on the birth of a child) and being very glad, made lots of presents, wealth, etc., to the Brahmanas.

14. The King shewed affection equally to the two children; never he made any distinction between them.

15. The king, the tormenter of the foes, was very glad and performed duly the chuda karana ceremony according to his position and wealth.

16. The sight of these two sons delighted very much the people. Now seeing these Kritachudas, and playing, the king was merged in the ocean of pleasure.

17-18. Sudars'ana was the eldest; but Satrujit, the second beautiful son by Lilavati was of sweet and persuasive speech. His beautiful figure and sweet words gave very much delight to the king, and for these qualities, the child Satrujit turned out also a favourite of the people and ministers.

19. The king could not show so much affection to the unfortunate Sudars'ana as he showed to Satrujit.

20-21. Thus some days having passed, one day the king Dhruvasandhi went out on an hunting expedition to the forest. He killed in the forest many deer, Ruru (a kind of deer), elephants, boar, hare, buffaloes, rhinoceros, camels and amused himself very much with this hunting affair.

22-23. While he was hunting thus, a lion got very much enraged, and, from a bush, suddenly jumped and came upon the king. That king of the beasts was already struck with arrows; now seeing the king in front, he loudly roared.

24-25. He angrily lifted his long tail high up in the air and, puffing up his manes, jumped up high in the air to attack and to take the life of the king. Seeing this, instantly the king took sword in his right hand

26. The king's followers, one and all, angrily shot arrows on the lion.

27. Then a loud uproar ensued; and all began to hurl arrows as best as they could. But, after all, that dangerous lion fell upon the king.

28-29. Seeing thus, the king struck him with his sword, but the lion also tore asunder the king, with his sharp nails. The king thus struck by the lion, fell on the spot and died. The soldiers cried aloud and killed the lion with arrows.

30. Thus both the king and lion lay dead on the spot; and the soldiers turned back to the palace and gave all the informations to the royal ministers.

31. When the munis heard the demise of the king, they went to the forest, performed the burning of the dead body of the king.

32. The Maharsi Vas'istha performed duly on the same spot, all the funeral ceremonies, thus ensuring the king the safe journey to the next world.

33. All the subjects and the citizens and the Muni Vas'istha counselled each other to install Sudars'ana on the throne as the king.

34-35. The minister-in-chief as well as the other members proposed that as Sudars'ana is the son of the legal wife, calm and quiet, beautiful and endowed with all the royal qualifications, he is fit for the throne. Maharsi Vas'istha said, the royal son, though not attained to proper age is still religious; therefore he is really fit be installed as king on the royal throne.

36. When the wise aged ministers thus decided, Yudhajit, the king of Ujjain, on hearing the decision hastened to the spot.

37. He was the father of Lilavati; on hearing the demise of his son- in-law he came there, so that his daughter's son might get the kingdom.

38. Next, Virasena, the king of the country of Kalinga and the father of Manorama, came there also with the object that his daughter's son Sudars'ana be the Emperor.

39. The two kings, accompanied respectively by their own army and soldiers, began to counsel with the aged ministers, each trying so that his daughter's son may get the throne.

40. Yudhajit made the question "Who is the eldest of the two sons? Is it always the case that the eldest will inherit the kingdom? Will not the youngest ever be able to acquire it?"

41. Virasena said O king! He who is the son of the legal wife inherits the kingdom; this I have heard from the learned who are proficient in the knowledge of the S'astras.

42. Hearing Virasena, Yudhajit repeated "Sudars'ana is not so qualified with royal qualifications and other matters as this son of the late king, Satrujit. How can then Sudars'ana inherit the throne?"

43. O King! Then quarrels ensued amongst the two kings. Now, at this critical juncture, who is able to solve their doubts?

44. Yudhajit then addressed the ministers "You all are prompted by selfish ends; you want to acquire a good deal of money by making Sudars'ana the king.

45-46. I have come to know by your gestures and postures that your decision is to the above affect. After all, as Satrujit possesses many more qualifications than Sudars'ana, he has more claims to the throne; and therefore he is fit to occupy the throne and no other. Morever, let me see as long as I live who can set aside the claims of a qualified prince, in possession of an army, and put forward the claims of a prince who has no qualifications it all.

47. I am ready to fight and I will tear the earth into two pieces by my sword. What more have you to say on this?"

48. Hearing this, Virasena addressed Yudhajit "I see the two boy's intelligence the same. You are intelligent; kindly mention where is the difference?"

49. O king! The two kings quarrelling with each other, remained there; the subjects and the Risis, seeing this, were very anxious.

50. Hundreds of tributary princes wanting that the two kings might be involved into quarrels with each other, came to the spot, with their soldiers, though they had to undergo great hardships in doing so.

51. Many aborigines, from the inhabitants of Sringaverpur, hearing the demise of the late king, also appeared on the scene with the sole object to plunder.

52. The two princes are minors; and hearing their parties at war with each other, many robbers from various adjoining countries came also there.

53. Thus when the war broke out between the two kings, the great confusion and tumult across within the kingdoms; on the other hand, Yudhajit and Virasena both became ready to fight.

Thus ends the Fourteenth Chapter on the narration of the glories of the Devi and the death of the Kosala king Dhruva Sandhi in the 3rd Adhayaya of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! When the war was declared, the two kings, excited by greed and anger, took up arms; and a dreadful encounter ensued.

2. On one side the king Yudhajit of long arms, surrounded by his own army, with bows and arrows came ready to fight.

3. On the other hand, the fiery Virasena, the second God of the Devas appeared in the battle, following a true Ksattriya custom, on behalf his daughter's son.

4. Then that truthful king Virasena, seeing Yudhajit in battle, became very angry and hurled arrows on him, as a cloud rains on the mountain tops.

5. On being covered, as it were, by the sharp and swift arrows, sharpened on a stone slab hurled at him by Virasena, Yudhajit, too, quickly, shot arrows at Virasena and cut off all his arrows.

6. O King! A dreadful fight then ensued between the cavalries, the warriors on the elephants; and the Devas, men, and Munis began to witness this terrible battle with wonder and astonishment. Birds, vultures and crows, desirous to eat the flesh of the dead soldiers, flew in the air.

7. Blood of elephants, horses and warriors, the bodies that lay dead, flowed in torrents awfully like rivers in that deadly battle ground. The torrent of blood excited fear amongst those who came to see it, as the river Vaitarani on the way to hell (the Lord of Death) is very fearful to the sinners.

8. The human skulls were driven ashore by the current and they look like so many hollow shells of gourds scattered there for the play of the boys on the banks of the Jumna.

9. When any warrior lay dead on the field, the vultures began to fly about in the air for devouring his flesh. It seemed then that the soul of the warrior beholding his beautiful body tried to reenter into his body, though he thought that it had become very inaccessible to him

10. Some warriors on being slain in the battle instantly arose in a celestial car to the heavens and was seen addressing the celestial nymph, who came already within his embrace, thus "O one of beautiful thighs. Behold! how my beautiful body is lying on the earth below!"

11. Another warrrior thus slain got up in the heavens on a celestial car, came in possession of a celestial nymph and when he was sitting with her in the car, his former wife in the earth made herself a sati and burnt herself up in the funeral pyre, thus got a celestial body, came up to the heavens; and that chaste virtuous woman drew away perforce her own husband away from that celestial nymph.

12. Two warriors, went up, slew each other and lay down dead at the same time. They went up in the heavens at the same time and there began quarrel with each other and fight with their weapons for one and the same celestial nymph.

13. Some hero got in the heavens a nymph more lovely and beautiful than himself and he thus became very much attached and devoted her. He began to describe his own heroic qualities and also to copy dotedly the qualities of his lover so that she might remain faithfully attached to him.

14. The dust, arising from the dreadful encounter of the soldiers in battle field, rose up in the air and covered the sun. It appeared night. After a while that dust became absorbed in the blood below, and the sun appeared very red, reflected with the colour of the blood.

15. Some Brahmachari fought in the battle and was slain. He went up to the heavens; instantly a lovely eyed Devakanya, a celestial nymph desired to select him as bridegroom with great devotion. But that clever man did not accept the offer, thinking that his vow of Brahmacharya would be thus broken.

16-17. O King! Thus when the battle was deadly, the king Yudhajit shot a sharp, dreadful arrow at Virasena and severed his head from body. Virasena lay dead on the battle field and his army was routed. The soldiers fled away from the battle.

18-19. Hearing that her father was slain in the battle, Manorama became very terrified and anxious. She then began to think that the vicious wicked king Yudhajit will surely slay her son, for kingdom's sake and to satisfy his enmity with her father.

20. What shall I do now? My father is slain in the battle. My husband is no more. My child is a minor to-day. Where shall I go?

21. Greed is very sinful; who is there that cannot be bought over by love of gold? and what vicious act can there be, that cannot be done when actuated by covetousness?

22. A greedy man does not hesitate to kill his father, mother, spiritual guide, friends and others. There is no doubt in this.

23. It is the inordinate love of worldly things that makes a man eat what is held unclean in society, that makes a man approach a woman who is unapproachable, and it is greed that makes a man discard his own religion and become an apostate.

24. In this city I find none so powerful as I can remain there under his shelter and be able to rear up my child.

25. What can I do if the king Yudhajit slay my son? There is none in this world who can save me, and, counting on whose shelter, I can stay here without any anxiety.

26. And this my co-rival wife Lilavati will always practise enmity with me. She will never shew mercy on my son.

27. When Yudhajit will arrive in this city, I will never be able to go out of it and he will to-day put my son in the prison on the pretext that he is a minor.

28-29. I heard that, in days of yore, Indra entered into the womb of his pregnant step mother with a small thunderbolt in his hand and divided the foetus into seven parts with that weapon, again each of these seven into seven parts again, thus the forty nine Maruts were born in the Heavens.

30-31. I heard also that in ancient times one queen gave poison to destroy the foetus in the womb of her rival wife. When the child came out of the womb, he was celebrated by the name of Sagara (with poison) in this earth.

32. The husband was alive, and still his queen Kaikeyi banished the eldest son of his king, S'ri Ramchandra to the forest; and the king Das'aratha sacrificed his life for that very reason.

33. The ministers no doubt wanted before to install my son as the king; but now they are not independent; they have now yielded themselves to the king Yudhajit.

34. There is no brother of mine powerful enough to release me from my bondage; I see I have fallen into a great difficulty by the combination of unforeseen circumstances.

35. Though the success depends on Fate, still one should make an earnest effort. If one does not make any effort, fate also remains asleep. I will therefore soon make out a plan to save my son.

36-38. O King! Thinking thus, that woman Manorama called in private the best and very respectable minister Vidalla, who was intelligent and expert in everything, and holding the hands of her son and weeping, said humbly in a depressed spirit "O Minister! My father is slain in the battle field, this my son is a minor, and Yudhajit is a powerful king; consider all these and tell me what I should do now?"

39-40. The venerable minister Vidalla then said to the queen Manorama "It is never advisable for us to stay here. Soon we will go into the forests of Benares. There I have got my powerful uncle Subahu. He is prosperous and has got a strong army. He will protect us.

41. "I will make the pretext that I am become very anxious for the king and therefore I am going out to see the king Yudhajit and will go out of the city in my chariot. There is no doubt in this."

42-43. Hearing, thus, the Vidalla's words, the queen Manorama went to Lilavati and said "O faireyed! To-day I am going to see the father Yudhajit." Thus saying, she went out of the city in a chariot, accompanied by her son, attendants and Vidalla.

44-45. Grieved at the loss of her father, fearful, distressed, and fatigued, Manorama saw Yudhajit and performed the cremation of her father Virasena; and, trembling with fear, got to the banks of the Ganges after two days' swift journey.

46-48. There the robbers, the Nisadas plundered all their riches and took the chariot and went away. Manorama had only her clothings, that she wore, left to her. She began to weep, and, holding the hands of her attendant, went to the Ganges shore, and being afraid crossed the river on a raft and went to the Chitrakuta mountain.

49. That terrified Devi went to the hermitage of Bharadvaja as early as possible. There she saw the ascetics and was relieved of her fear.

50. Bharadvaja asked, “O lotus eyed! Who are you and whose wife are you? Why have you taken so much trouble to come here? Answer all these truly.”

51. “O beautiful one! are you a Devi or a human being? your son is a very minor. Why have you come in this dense forest? It seems, as if you are deprived of your kingdom.”

52. Thus asked by the best of the Munis, the beautiful Manorama became very much afflicted with grief and began to weep; she could not speak anything herself and ordered Vidalla to inform the Muni all what had happened.

53-54. Vidalla then said There was a king of Kosala, named Dhruvasandhi. She is the legal wife of that king. Her name is Manorama. That powerful king of the Solar Dynasty was killed by a lion in a forest. This boy Sudars’ana is his son.

55. The father of this Manorama was very religious. He died fighting for the cause of his daughter's son. Now the present queen has become much afraid and has therefore come to this wild forest.

56. The son of this woman is now a minor; he is now taking your refuge. O best of the Munis! Protect them.

57. To give protection to any distressed person is to acquire merits higher than performing a sacrifice. Therefore to protect one who is very much afflicted with fear and who is helpless will have still higher merits.

58. Bharadvaja said “O beautiful one! Remain in this hermitage without any fear; rear up your son here. O auspicious one! There is no cause of fear here from your enemies.

59. Better nourish and support your child. Your son will surely be a king and if you remain in this hermitage, no sorrow or grief will overtake you.”

60. Vyasa said When the great Muni Bharadvaja said thus, the queen Manorama became peaceful. The Muni gave them a cottage to live in and there they dwelt without any sorrow.

61. Thus Manorama dwelt obediently with her maid servant, liked by all. Vidalla also remained there and Manorama began to nourish her child.

Here ends the Fifteenth chapter on the Devi Mahatmya and the battle between Yudhajit and Virasena and the going away of Manorama to the forest in the 3rd Adhyaya of S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said After gaining the victory in the battle, the king Yudhajit returned to the city of Ayodhya with his huge army and asked where are Sudars'ana and Manorama? He wanted to kill Sudars'ana.

2. He repeatedly exclaimed "Where are they gone?" and sent his servant on their search. Then, on an auspicious day, he installed his daughter's son on the throne.

3. Maharsi Vas'istha was engaged as the priest; he and the other ministers began to chant the auspicious hymns of the Atharvaveda and with the jars, filled with water, and consecrated by these hymns, installed S'atrujit on the throne.

4. O best of the Kurus! Conch shells resounded; drums, bheris and turiyas, resounded; and great festivals and rejoicings took place in the city.

5. The reciting of the Vedic mantrams by the Brahmans, the chanting of hymns by the bards and the auspicious acclamation of Victory to the new king resounded the whole city of Ayodhya with joy.

6. When the new king S'atrujit ascended on the throne, the subjects were filled with joy; everywhere hymns were sung; drums were resound. At this Ayodhya looked as fresh as ever.

7-8. O King! Though there were thus great rejoicings and festivals, yet some good persons were found that remembered Sudars'ana and gave vent to this feeling of sorrow, thus "Alas! Where has that prince gone? Where has that chaste queen Manorama gone with her son? Oh! The enemies have killed his father for greed of kingdom."

9. The saints with their views impartial, thus rendered uneasy, sorry, began to pass away their time there subject to S'atrujit.

10. After installing duly his daughter's son on the throne and after having made over the charge of the kingdom to the wise councillors, Yudhajit turned towards his own city.

11-12. Afterwards Yudhajit heard that Sudars'ana was staying in the hermitage with the Munis. He started at once for Chitrakuta and went quickly to Durdars'a, the chief of the city of Sringavera, being accompanied by Bala, the chief of the NTsadas.

13-15. Hearing that Yudhajit was coming there with his army, Manorama began to think that his son was a minor and became very sorrowful, distressed and terrified. Then she with tears in her eyes addressed the Muni thus "Yudhajit is coming here; what shall I do and whither shall I go? He has slain my father, and has installed his daughter's son on the throne. Still he is not satisfied and he is now coming with his army here to kill my minor child."

16-21. O Lord! In days of yore, I heard that the Pandavas, when they went to the forest, lived in the holy hermitage of the Munis with Draupadi. One day the five brethren went a hunting, and the beautiful Draupadi stayed without any fear with other maid servants in the hermitage where there was the chanting of the Vedas by Dhaumya, Attri, Galava, Paila, Javali, Gautama, Bhrigu, Chyavana, Kanva of the Atrigotra, Jatu, Kratu, Vitihotra, Sumantu, Yajhadatt, Vatsala, Ras'asana, Kahoda, Yavakri, Yajhakrit, Kratu and other holy high souled Risis like Bharadvaja and others.

22-23. While the five great heroes Arjuna and others, the destroyers of their enemies, were roaming in the forests, Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu came with his army to the hermitage, hearing the reciting of the Vedic hymns.

24. Hearing thus, that king quickly descended from the chariot so that he might have a sight of these holy maharsis.

25-27. Accompanied by two attendants only, he approached to the Munis and, finding them engaged in the study of the Vedas, waited there with folded hands for an opportunity. O Lord! When the king Jayadratha on entering the hermitage took his seat, the wives of the Munis came there to see the king and began to enquire "Who is this person?"

28. With the wives of the Munis came there also the beautiful Draupadi. Jayadratha looked upon Draupadi as if she were the second goddess Laksmi.

29-30. Looking at that lovely royal daughter who looked like the Deva girls Jayadratha asked the Maharsi Dhaumya, "Who is this beautiful lotus eyed lady? Whose wife is she and who is her father? What is her name? Oh! From her beautiful appearance it seems that the goddess S'achi has come down on earth."

31. This fair woman is shining like the celestial nymph Rambha surrounded by the Raksasis or like the beautiful creeper Lavangalatika encircled by thorny trees.

32. O good ones! Tell truly whose beloved is she? O Brahmins! It seems that she is the wife of some king, not the wife of a Muni.

33. Dhaumya said "O king of Sindhu! She is the daughter of Panchala; her name is Draupadi; she is the wife of the Pandavas; they are residing in this forest, having got rid of their fears."

34. Jayadratha said "Where have those powerful Pandavas of great prowess gone now? Are they dwelling in this forest, free from fears?"

35. Dhaumya said "The five Pandavas have gone out on hunting, ascended on a chariot. They will return at noon with their game."

36-37. Hearing the Muni's words Jayadratha got up, and going near to Draupadi, bowed down to her and said "O Fair One! Is there everything well with you? Where have your husbands gone? To-day it is eleven years that you are residing in the forest."

38. Draupadi then said "O prince! Let all be well with you, wait here for a short while; the Pandavas are coming quickly."

39. While Draupadi thus spoke, that powerful king, being overpowered with greed and avarice, stole her away, disregarding all the Munis present there.

40-42. O Lord! The wise should never trust any body; if on any body he places his trust, he will surely conne to grief. For example, see the case of the king Bali. Bali, the son of Virochana, and the grandson of Prahlada, was prosperous, devoted to his religion, true to his promise, performer of sacrifices, generous, always giving protection to and liked by the saints and a great warrior. His mind never turned to any irreligious subject and he performed ninety nine Yajhas with full Daksinas (remunerations).

43-44. But the Bhagavan Visnu, who is all full of Sattvic purity and who is never affected with passions and changeless, who is always worshipped by the Yogis, He, in the form of a dwarf in his Vamana incarnation as the son of Kas'yapa Risi, to serve the Devas, stole away his whole seagirt earth and kingdom deceitfully on hypocritical pretext.

45. O Lord! I heard that the son of Virochana was a generous large hearted king. He truly resolved to give what was wanted; but Visnu behaved with him deceitfully to serve the cause of Indra.

46. When the pure, Sattvik Visnu could assume this dwarf incarnation to bring about the hindrance to Bali’s Yajha, what wonder is that other ordinary mortals would practise things like that?

47. Therefore never trust on any body in any way. Lord! Where there are greed and avarice, reigning in one’s heart, what fear can he have to perpetrate any evil deed?

48-49. O Muni! It is through avarice that nnen commit sinful deeds; they do not care what good or bad will happen to them in the next world. Thoroughly overpowered by greed, they take away in mind, word and deed other’s things; and thus they become fallen.

50-51. Lo! Human beings always worship the Gods for wealth; but the Devas do not give them wealth instantly; they give them these things through others by making them carry on trade, make gifts, or shew their strength or by making them steal.

52. The Vais’yas worship the Gods simply because they think they will be highly prosperous and therefore they sell many things as grains, cloth and the like.

53. O Controlled one! Is there not the desire to take away the other’s property in this act of merchandise? Certainly there is. Besides the merchants, when they find that when people are in urgent need of buying articles from them, expect that the price of those articles might run higher.

54. O Muni! Thus every one is anxious to take away other’s properties. How, then, can we trust them?

55. Those who are clouded by greed and delusion, their going to places of pilgrimages, their making charities, their reciting the Vedas, all are rendered useless. Though they go to the holy places, etc., still these things bear no fruits to them, as if they have not done these things at all.

56. Therefore O Enlightened one! You make Yudhajit go back to his own place. Then I will be able to remain here, like Sita, with my son.

57-58. On Manorama's thus speaking to the Muni, the fiery Maharsi went to Yudhajit and said “O King! You better go back to your own place or anywhere else you like. The son of Manorama is a minor; that queen is very much grieved; she cannot come to you now."

59. Yudhajit said "O peaceful ones! Kindly cease showing this impudence and give me Manorama. I will never go away leaving her. If you do not give her easily, I will take her away by force."

60. The Risis said "O King! If there be any strength in you, you can take away Manorama by force; but the result will be similar to that when the King Visvamitra wanted to take away the heavenly cow by force from the hermitage of Vas'istha."

Thus ends the Sixteenth Chapter on the glory of the Devi and the going of the King Yudhajit to the hermitage of Bharadvaja, to kill Sudars'ana, in the the 3rd Adhyaya of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of the Maharsi Bharadvaja and seeing that he made a firm resolve, the King Yudhajit called his prime minister quickly and asked, “O intelligent one! What am I to do now? I want to carry away by force this boy with his mother sweet Manorama; no one desirous of one’s welfare won’t trifle away his enemy, be he even a very weak one; if he does so, that enemy will get stronger day by day, as the disease consumption becomes stronger; and will ultimately become the cause of death.

4. There is no warrior, nor any soldiers here of the other party; no one will be able to resist me; I can take away, as I like, the enemy of my daughter’s son and can kill him.

5. I will try to-day to carry him away by force, and Sudars’ana being killed, my daughter’s son will reign fearlessly without an enemy; there in no doubt in this.”

6. The prime minister said No such hazardous courage need be shewn now; you have heard the Maharshi's words; he quoted you the example of Vis’vamitra.

7. O King! In days of yore, Vis’vamitra, the son of the King Gadhi, was a celebrated monarch; one day while roaming, he accidentally reached the hermitage of Vas’istha.

8. The powerful king VisVamitra bowed down before the Muni, and the Muni gave him a seat. The king took his seat there.

9. Then the high souled Vas'istha invited the king to a dinner. VisVamitra, the king, went there with his whole army.

10-12. There was a cow, named Nandini, of Vas'istha. The Muni prepared all sorts of eatables from her milk and entertained them all. The king with his whole army was very much pleased; and, coming to know of the divine power of the cow, asked Vas'istha to give his cow Nandini over to him and said “The udder of your cow Nandini is like a big jar. I will give you thousand cows like that; I pray you to let me have your cow Nandini.”

13. Vas'istha said “O King! This is my sacrificial cow; I cannot give you this cow in any way, let your thousand cows be yours.”

14. Vis'vamitra said “O Saint! I will give you cows lakhs or tens and hundreds of lakhs or any number you like. Please give me your cow; in case you be unwilling, I will carry her away perforce.”

15. Vas'istha said “O King! As you like, better take it perforce; I will never be able to give you my cow Nandini from my house.”

16. O King! Hearing thus the Vas'istha's words, Vis'vamitra, the King, ordered at once his powerful followers to carry the cow Nandini away by fastening a cord round her neck per sheer force.

17-19. The followers, obeying the order at once bound the cow with ropes and began to carry her away by force. At this Nandini, trennbling and with tears in her eyes, began to say to the Muni “O One! whose wealth consists only in asceticism! Are you going to leave me? Otherwise why these fellows are binding me with a cord and dragging me away?” At this the Muni replied “O Nandini! I have never parted with you; I perform all my sacrifices through your milk. O auspicious one! I honoured this king, my guests, with eatables prepared from your food and for that reason he is carrying you away from me by sheer force. What can I do? O Nandini! I have not the least desire to part with you.”

20. Hearing these words from the Muni, the cow became very angry and bellowed loudly and terribly.

21. At once came out from her body, on that very spot, the terrible demons wearing coats of armour, and holding various weapons; and they uttered aloud, “Wait; you will soon meet with vengeance.”

22. They then destroyed all the forces of the king. And the king alone was left and he went away alone, much dejected and sorrowful.

23. Oh! That wicked king then cursed with great humility the Ksattriya S’akti; and thinking the Brahmanic power would be attained with great exertion, began to practise asceticism and penance.

24. Performing penance and tapasya, very hard indeed, in the great forest, VisVamitra, the son of Gadhi, succeeded at last in becoming a Risi and then he renounced his Ksattriya Dharma.

25. Therefore, O King! Dost Thou never quarrel with these ascetics and be involved in wars resulting in great enmity and causing the extinction of the race.

26. Better dost thou appease the Muni and now go back to your own kingdom. Let Sudars'ana remain here at his pleasure.

27. O King! This minor boy has no wealth; what harm can he do to you? It is useless to show your enmity towards an orphan, a weak minor boy.

28. This world is under the control of Destiny; therefore one should shew mercy to all. O king! What use is there to shew one's jealousy? What is inevitable will surely come to pass.

29. O king! The thunderbolt comes sometimes like a blade of grass; a blade of grass acts sometimes like a thunderbolt.

30. O king! You are very intelligent; consider that by, combinations of circumstances, a hair can kill a powerful tiger and a gnat can kill an elephant. Therefore dost thou forsake this rashness and hear my beneficent advice.

31. Vyasa said O king! The best of kings, Yudhajit hearing the prime minister's advice bowed down humbly at the feet of the Muni and returned to his own city.

32. Manorama, too, became free from anxiety, and, remaining peaceful in the hermitage, began to nourish and support her child, engaged in vows.

33. The lovely son of the king began to grow daily like the phases of the waxing moon and sport fearlessly with the boys of the Munis, altogether, wherever they liked, a sight very auspicious.

34. One day the minister Vidalla came there and the sons of the Munis seeing him began, in the presence of Sudars'ana, to address him "Klib," "Klib."

35. Sudars'ana, too, hearing them pronounce "Klib," "Klib" took up the one letter, "Kli" and uttered this only repeatedly, which is, in fact the prince of the root mantras of Kama, with anusvara omitted.

36. Then the son of the king took that mantram and silently repeated this in his mind.

37. O King! Thus that boy Sudars'ana was initiated in this root mantra of Kama (desire) spontaneously, out of his original Samskara (innate tendency) owing to the unavoidable destiny of Fate.

38-39. The son of the king, when he was five years old, got this most excellent mantra, though without its Risi (seer), meditation, without its chhanda (metre) and without Nyasa (assignment of the various parts of the body to different deities, accompanied with prayers and corresponding gesticulations), and considered this as the quintessence of all, therefore meditated this always in his mind spontaneously and never forgot it.

40-41. When the king's son grew eleven years old, the Muni performed his Upanayana (sacred thread) ceremony and made him begin the study of the Vedas. The son, with that mantra power, soon mastered all the studies about archery, all the moral and political sciences in conformity with proper rules, within a very short time.

42-43. One day Sudars'ana got a vision of the form of the Supreme Goddess, of a red colour, wearing red apparel and decorated with red ornaments, mounting on Garuda and with Her wonderful Vaisnavi powers and Her face, fully opened like the budding of a lotus flower.

44. Thus, expert in many branches of learning, Sudars'ana served his Mother in that forest and began to wander on the banks of the Ganges.

45. One day the Mother of the Universe gave the bows, sharpened arrows, quiver and a mail coat of armour to that boy in that forest.

46-47. O King! At this time the extraordinary beautiful and lovely princess S'as'ikala, endowed with all auspicious qualities, the daughter of the king of Kashi, came to hear that a beautiful prince named Sudars'ana, a second Kandarpa, full of heroism and endowed with all auspicious qualities is dwelling in a forest.

48. The princess, hearing this from a soothsayer, mentally loved and desired him and wanted finally to accept him as her legal husband.

49-50. Thus, on one occasion, at the end of a night (night-fall), the Goddess appeared in her dreams before her and consoled her and said "O fair one! ask a boon from me; Sudars'ana is my devotee; he will fulfill, at my word, all your desires."

51. Thus seeing the beautiful figure of the Goddess in her dreams and hearing Her sweet words, the honoured S'as'ikala was drowned in the ocean of bliss.

52. When the princess awoke, her face beaming with gladness, her mother perceived her joy and inferred that her daughter must have been internally very glad, and asked her repeatedly, but S'as'ikala was too much abashed and did not give vent to the cause of her satisfaction.

53. The princess, remembering her dreams, began to laugh repeatedly on account of her excessive joy. At last she spoke out in detail all about her dreams to one of her lady friends, or companions.

54. On one occasion, that large eyed S'as'ikala went out for enjoyment to a nice garden beautified with champaka flowers, attended by her companion.

55. While the King's daughter seated under a champaka tree, was collecting flowers, she saw a Brahmin, coming towards her in great haste.

56. After bowing down before him, that beautiful princess, endowed with all auspicious qualifications, addressed him in sweet words "O blessed one! whence are you coming?"

57. The Brahmana said "O girl! I am coming on an errand from the hermitage of Bharadvaja Muni. Please mention what you are going to ask me?"

58. S'as'ikala replied "O Noble one! What beautiful thing is therein that hermitage that is extraordinary and worth describing."

59. The Brahmana said "O fair one! There is staying the most lovely Sudars'ana, the son of the King Dhruvasandhi. He is the loveliest of all men.

60. O fair one! He who has not seen him, I think, has his eyes given to him in vain.

61. O auspicious one! It appears as if the Creator, with a view to see how it looks, has invested him with all the qualities.

62. O beautiful one! what shall I say more to you, suffice to say that, that prince is fit to become your husband. I think that the Creator has, no doubt, settled already the union between you two, as a happy union of two congenial things (gold in union with Jewel)."

Thus ends the seventeenth chapter on the story of VisVannitra and on the getting of the root mantra of Kama by the son of the King in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said The King's lovely daughter was very glad on hearing the words of the Brahmana, and drowned herself in ecstacy of love. The Brahmin also departed, thinking of the whole affair.

2. The daughter was already attached to the prince, and now she became the more merged in love for him and became very anxious. Now, on the departure of the Brahmin, she felt herself struck by the arrows of love.

3-4. Then S’as’ikala, oppressed by love, addressed her dear companion, who followed her inclinations thus “O my companion!

I have not as yet had any knowledge of the king's son; still the signs of love have sprung up in my body and mind, from the moment that I heard about him from the Brahmin. The love is giving me much trouble; tell, my companion what am I to do now? and whither shall I go?

5. O dear companion! I saw him like a second God of Love in my dreams; and, since then, my innocent mind is being troubled with his being away from me.

6. O fair one! The sandal paste on my body appears to me like a poison, this garland is like a serpent and the moon's rays seem like a fire.

7. O companion! My mind gets not rest anywhere, in palaces, gardens, in lakes, in hills, at any time, during the day or night; all the enjoyable things have assumed now contrary aspects and are paining me.

8. The bedding, betel leaves, music, singing, and dancing, all now fail to give me satisfaction and peace.

9. O companion! I would have gone to-day where is residing that deceiver; but I fear for my father as well for the honour of my family.

10. My father is not yet declaring the svayamvara for my marriage. What shall I do? Had he given me in marriage to that Sudars'an, I would have allowed him embrace me and satisfy his passions to¬day!

11.0 friend! look at the strange ideas of the Creator! There are hundreds of kings today who are influential and I do not consider them beautiful; and that King's son is exiled from his kingdom and yet he has stolen away my heart."

12. Vyasa said Thus that King's son, Sudars'ana, though helpless, and living in a forest on roots and fruits, deprived of wealth, power, and army, began to reign in the heart of that princess.

13-14. S'as'ikala, too, began to recite slowly the root mantra of Sarasvati and therefore her love towards this prince held out signs of success.

Once engaged in meditation on that excellent root mantra on Kama, and, while repeatedly reciting it mentally, he got in a dream the vision of that Ever Full, the World Mother Ambika, that cannot be expressed in words, the VaisnavT S'akti and capable to bestow all wealth and property.

15-16. At this time the King of Nisadas, the lord of S'rimgaverpur came to the hermitage and presented an excellent chariot together with all other necessary things. This chariot was drawn by four horses, decorated with nice flags and was endowed with the prospect of getting victory everywhere; thinking it thus a befitting present to be given to the King, he gave it to Sudars'ana.

17. Sudars'ana, too, accepted the offer of a friend and worshipped him well in return, with roots and fruits of the forest.

18-19. The lord of the Nisadas, thus worshipped as a guest, went away. The Munis and ascetics then began to address Sudars'ana, with fondness "O son of the king! Don't be anxious and restless; within a very short time, you will get your kingdom, no doubt, by your own good luck and prowess.

20. O one attached to one's vows! The Goddess that enchants the whole universe, the Giver of boons, S'ri Ambika, has been pleased with you; assistance is also rendered well to you; therefore do not trouble yourself with contrary thoughts any more."

21. The Munis, who have taken vows, addressed Manorama also “Your son will soon become the lord of the world; you need not care any more.”

22. Then the lean and thin Manorama, hearing the Muni's words said “O Brahmanas! Let your asiss (words of benedictions) be justified with success. What wonder that a kingdom be obtained by the good will of the Sadhus!

23. There is no force, no minister, no help, no property; how, under what combinations, can then my son get kingship?

24. You are the best of the knowers of mantrams; due to the influence of your good will, my son will surely be a king; there is no doubt in this.”

25. Vyasa said Wherever that intelligent Sudars'ana used to go on his chariot, there he seemed by his own prowess, as if he were surrounded by a whole army consisting of 109, 350 foot, 65,610 horse, 21,870 chariots and 21,870 elephants.

26. This is the influence of the seed mantra; it is not an ordinary acquisition. It is because Sudars’ana, with gladness and one- pointedness of his mind, meditated on his seed mantra, that he acquired the above powers; there is no doubt in this.

27. Becoming pure and peaceful, whoever gets this wonderul seed mantra from a true spiritual guide and meditates on it incessantly, is destined certainly to attain all desires.

28. O best of kings! There is no such thing either in the heavens above or in the worlds below, that a man won’t get, when the Supreme Goddess becomes pleased.

29. Those are certainly very unfortunate and of dull intellect, who cannot place their faith on the worship of this Goddess and consequently suffer incessantly all sorts of troubles.

30. O best of the Kurus! At the beginning of the creation, this Amba Devi was the Mother of all the Gods, and is therefore known as the First Mother.

31. She is practically seen in this world in the shape of Buddhi (iutellgence), Kirti (fame), Dhriti (fortitude), Laksmi (Goddess of wealth), S’akti (the Force), S’raddha (Faith), Mati (Intellect), Smriti (memory), etc.

32. It is only the deluded souls that do not realise the nature of the Devi; it is only those, whose hearts are destroyed by the glare of false argument, that do not worship this All-auspicious Goddess of the Universe.

33-34. O king! Brahma, Visnu, S’ambhu, Indra, Varuna, Yama, Vayu, Agni, Kuvera, Vis'vakarma, Pusa, Bhaga, the two Asvins, Adityas, Vasus, Rudras, VisVedevas, Maruts, all worship the Supreme Deity of Creation, Preservation and Dissolution.

35. Who is there amongst tho wise that does not serve this Highest Energy? The real nature of that Auspicious Goddess, the Bestower all desires, Sudars’ana came to know very well.

36. She is the Real Essence, Brahma, very rarely realised; She is the Higher Vidya and the Lower Vidya (Avidya) and She is the vital energy, the Mukhya Prana, of the best of the Yogis, who are desirous of liberation.

37. O king! What individual is there that is able to realise the nature of Pramatma (the Highest Universal Self) without having recourse to Her, Who is manifesting this universal consciousness, by bringing into existence these Satvik, Rajasik, and Tamasik creations.

38. Sudars'ana, though he dwelt in the forest, realised a greater happiness than that in obtaining the sovereignty of a kingdom, by constantly meditating on that Goddess.

39. S’as’ikala, too, being too much oppressed with the arrows of love, any how remained with her soul in her body, having had to be always cared for her health in various ways by her attendants.

40. Then the king Subahu, on coming to know that her daughter is desirous of getting her husband, made arrangements for her Svayambara (a marriage in which the girl chooses her husband from among a number of suitors assembled together) without any delay.

41-44. The Svayambara of the royal family, the Pundits say, is of three kinds 1st Ichchha Svayambara (optional); 2nd Panya Svayamvara by fulfilling a promise, e.g. Ramachandra broke in two the bow of S’iva and married Sita; 3rd the Svayambara, preferring one who will prove the strongest hero by one’s own prowess. Of these three kinds of Svayambaras, the king Subahu preferred Ichcha Svayamvara (according to the bride's free choice).

Accordingly the king employed many artisans, had platforms covered with beautiful carpets and big halls decorated beautifully in various ways.

45-47. Thus the assembly hall for Svayambara built and decorated and all the necessary articles and equipments brought thither, the fair eyed S’as’ikala, told her companions with sorrow “Better go to my mother and say her privately that I have already selected mentally my husband the beautiful Sudars'ana, the son of the king Dhruvasandhi in my mind; I won't marry any other prince than him; the Goddess Bhagavati has settled him for my husband.”

48-50. Vyasa said, the companion of S’as’ikala hearing thus, went quickly to her mother Vaidarbhi and addressed her sweetly in private “O chaste one! Your daughter, with a sorrowful heart, has sent me to you to say the following; Please hear and do at your earliest convenience, what is good and beneficial.” She said “There is staying in the hermitage of Bharadvaja, the son of the king Dhruvasandhi; I have mentally selected him as my husband; I won't select any other prince.”

51. Vyasa said The queen, hearing her words, told to her husband, when he returned to the palace, all her daughter's words as she had heard them.

52-53. Hearing this, the king Subahu was astonished and then laughed frequently and then began to say to his wife, the daughter of the king of Vidarbha the following true words “O fair one! That king’s son Sudars’ana is a minor, he has been exiled to the forest; now he is helpless and is residing with his mother in a dense forest.

54. For his sake, the king Virasena was slain in battle by the king Yudhajit. O fair eyed! how can that helpless exiled poor boy become her husband.

55. Do say therefore to S’as’ikala that, in the assembly hall for her Svayamvara, many kings commanding honour and respect would be present. She would then choose whomever she likes. She need not repeat such words any more.”

Thus ends the Eighteenth Chapter of the 3rd Skandha about the Svayambara of S’as’ikala, the daughter of the king Kasiraja in the Maha Puranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said After the king Subahu had spoken thus, the Queen nnade her daughter S'as'ikala, who had always sweet smiles on her lips sit on her lap and after consoling her with sweet words, began to say “O fair eyed! You always practise vows and other religious performances; why are you, then, speaking these unpleasant words? The King has heard all what you wanted to say and has been very sorry.

3-5. That Sudars'ana is very unfortunate, deprived of his kingdom, helpless, void of wealth and army, abandoned by his friends, exiled with his mother in the forest, subsisting on roots and fruits, lean and thin. Thus he is not worthy of becoming the husband of yours. There are many learned, beautiful, approved of all, qualified with all royal marks, princes fit to become your husband. They all will come in this Svayamvara.

6. There is one brother of this Sudars'ana, who is endowed with all kingly qualifications, beautiful, and qualified in various other ways. He is the king of the Kosala country.

7. There is another point worth consideration; please hear it. The King Yudhajit is trying his best to kill Sudars'ana on a befitting opportunity.

8. He already counselled with his ministers and killed in a desperate fight the king Virasena and installed his daughter’s son on the throne.

9. Even he came up so far as the hermitage of Bharadvaja to kill Sudars'ana; afterwards he was prevented by the Munis from doing so then he returned home."

10-11. S'as'ikala replied "Mother! That prince, though staying in the forest, is approved of by me; under the advice S'aryati, the chaste Sukanya married Chyavana Muni and served her husband all along; so I will marry this king's son and will always be engaged in serving him. The women are able to attain heaven and emancipation, if they serve their husbands; therefore if we be sincere in serving our husbands, we will no doubt be happy.

12. I have seen in my dream that the Goddess Bhagavati has ordained him to be my husband; how can I now accept any other body as my husband than him?

13. The Devi Bhuvanes'vari has pictured his frame firmly in my heart; I will never be able to leave my dearest beautiful husband and to contract marriage with any other person."

14. Vyasa said Thus the mother, the daughter of the King of Videha, found many signs and at last desisted. She then reported to the King all the words of S'as'ikala.

15-16. When S'as'ikala, on the day before the marriage day, became very anxious and, sent in a great hurry, one trustworthy Brahmin, versed in the Vedas to the hermitage of Bharadvaja with this message "O Brahman, go in such a way to Sudars'ana, as my father be not able to know about it and tell Sudars'ana all my words.

17-18. My father has called in for my marriage a Svayambara ceremony; many powerful kings will attend with their armies; O Deva! The Goddess Bhagavati has ordered me in dream and accordingly I, with full gladness of my heart, have become yours already in my heart.

19. Rather I will take poison or I will jump in a blazing fire, than I can obey my father's and mother's words and marry another.

20. By my mind, word, and deed, I have selected you my husband; and pleasure and happiness is sure to attend on us by the blessings of the Bhagavati.

21. Please depend unto Her, at Whose command this whole universe, moving and unmoving is resting, unto that Great Destiny and come to this place without fail.

22. What the Goddess, whose commands S'ankara all the other Devas obey, has ordered, can never turn out false.

23. O Brahmin! You the foremost amongst the virtuous; do therefore call on that King's son in privacy and speak out all there to him. What shall I say more to you. Do all that my object may be fullfilled."

24. Thus saying, she gave the Brahmin his Daksina and sent him to Sudars'ana. He went there and reported all the matter duly to him and quickly returned back.

25. On coming to know all this, Sudars'ana determined to start; and the Maharsi Bharadvaja, with gladness, sent him.

26. Vyasa said Seeing her son ready to start, the mother Manorama became very sorry and, trembling and shedding tears, thus spoke to her son.

27-28. “Sudars’ana! Where are you going now? How do you dare to go there in the Svayamvara alone, where are present kings and all your terrible enemies. O Son! You are as yet a boy. The King Yudhajit will certainly go there with the object of killing you; there will then is no other body to help you. So you should never go to that place.

29. You are my only son; I am very poor and helpless; I have no other to lean upon than you; therefore you ought not to throw me in despair at this moment.

30. See Sudars’ana! The King Yudhajit who had slain my father, that uncontrollable king will come there; if you go there alone, he will certainly kill you.”

31. Sudars'ana replied “Mother! What is inevitable will certainly come to pass; there is no need to discuss further on the subject. I will go at the command of the World Mother to that assembly hall Svayamvara.

32. O Auspicious one! Do not give vent to sorrow; I do fear none by the grace of the Bhagavati.”

33. Vyasa said Thus saying, Sudars’ana mounted on his chariot and was ready to start. Seeing this Manorama began to bless him and so cheer him.

34-37. O Son! Let Ambika Devi protect your front; Padmalochana protect your back; Parvati, your two sides; S’iva Devi, all around you; Varahi, in dreadful paths; Durga, in royal forts, Kalika, in terrible fights; ParamesVari, in the platform hall; Matamgi, in the Svayamvara hall; Bhavani, the Avertress of world, amidst the kings; Girija, in mountain passes; Chamunda, in the sacrificial ground, and let the eternal Kamaga, protect you in the forests.

38. O Descendant of Raghu family! Let the Vaisnavi force protect you in quarrels; let BhairavT protect you in battles and amongst your enemies.

39. O Son! Let the Maha Maya Jagaddhatri BhuvanesVari protect you everywhere and at all times.

40. Vyasa said Then Manorama, speaking thus to him, trembled with fear and again said “O Sudars’ana, I will also accompany you; there will not be otherwise.

41. I will never be able to remain anywhere without you and even for the twinkling of an eye. O Son, carrry me thither where you are desiring to go.”

42. Thus saying, his mother with her attendants was ready to start. The Brahmanas pronounced their blessings. All then went out.

43. Sudars’an, the descendant of the Raghu family, mounted then alone on his chariot and reached Benares. There the King Subahu, hearing that he had come, welcomed him and worshipped him with various presents.

44. He gave him, the house for his residence, and made arrangements for his food and drink and other necessary requirements and gave order to his servants to wait on the prince.

45. Then, from various quarters, the kings assembled together; and Yudhajit, too, came there accompanied by his daughter’s son, S’atrujit.

46-48. The King of Karusa, the King of Madra, the King of Sindhu, the King of Mahismati, the valiant warriors, the King of Panchala, the kings of the mountainous tract, the King of Karnat, the powerful King of Kamarupa, the King of Chola, and the very powerful King of Vidarbhas with 180 Aksauhini soldiers all arrived and assembled there. Benares was then crowded all over with soldiers and soldiers.

49. Many other kings came there on their beautiful elephants to witness the Svayamvara ceremony.

50. Then the princes began to talk amongst them “The King’s son Sudars’ana, too, had come there and is staying unconfused and calm.

51. Is it that the high minded Sudars’ana, born of the Kakutstha family, had come there on a chariot, helpless, to marry?

52. Can it be that the princess will overlook these Kings with soldiers and weapons, and select the long armed Sudars’ana?”

53. Then the King Yudhajit addressed all the other kings “I will slay Sudars’ana for the sake of the daughter; there is no doubt in this.”

54-55. Hearing Yudhajit's words, the king of Keral, the foremost of those who know morals, began to say “O king! In this Ichchha svayamvara, it is not proper to fight. Here there will be no marriage for the prowess; there is no arrangement fixed to steal away the bride elect by force; here the bride will select of her own free choice; what cause can then there crop up here for quarrels?

56. Before, you had driven him out of his kingdom; and though you are the superior king, you have taken his kingdom by force and installed your daughter’s son on the throne.

57. O King! This Sudars’an is born of the Kakutstha family and the son of the King of Kosala. Why would you kill this innocent boy?

58. O Long lived! Better be sure that there is some God of this Universe; He is governing all; and if you commit anything wrongful know that you will get the fruit of that due to you; there is no doubt it this.

59. O King! There is victory everywhere of the Truth and Dharma, always you find Adharma and Falsehood defeated. Therefore dost thou forsake your evil and mean intentions and pacify your vile mind.

60. Your daughter's son is also present here; he is beautiful and prosperous and is reigning a kingdom. Why will not that bride elect him as bridegroom?

61-62. Consider again that there are many other powerful princes and kings in this Svayamvara; the princess may select them also. Therefore let all the kings assembled here say that if the selection of the bridegroom be performed in that way, what cause of a quarrel can there crop up? Knowing all these, you ought not to quarrel here.”

Thus ends the Nineteenth Chapter on the going to the Svayamvara assembly of Sudars’ana and the other kings in the Maha Puranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O Noble minded one! The king Yudhajit replied to the address of the king of Keral, thus

2-3. O King! You are truthful and have restrained your passions. What you have told just now in this assembly of kings is all correct and approved by morality. O best of the kings! You are born of a high family; you better say how can this take place that when so many fit persons are present here to become the bridegroom, can an unworthy person take away the offer?

4. As a jackal never becomes fit to enjoy what are the dues of a lion, so this Sudars'ana is also unfit to acquire this bride elect.

5. The Brahmanas have the Vedas as their strength; the Ksattriya kings take bows and arrows to be their source of strength; this is ordained everywhere. Therefore O King! What wrong have I done in my statement. Kindly explain.

6-7. The power of the kings is the befitting money given to the parents of a bride; according to this, the strongest man is to acquire the bride, a jewel. The Ksattriyas that are weak can never acquire that. Make this the rule in this marriage. This earth is fit to be enjoyed by the heroes only and not by the cowards and intriguing persons. Otherwise quarrels are sure to ensue amongst the kings.

8. The dispute thus arose in that Svayamvara hall; and the king Subahu was called in.

9. The kings that could see the reality of things then addressed the king Subahu. "O king! You are requested to establish a golden rule in this marriage ceremony.

10. What is your object in calling this Svayamvara. Better give it out after a mature consideration. Please be explicit whom have you intended to give over your daughter in this marriage?"

11-12. Subahu said "My daughter has mentally selected Sudars'ana; I prevented her repeatedly from doing this; but she did not accept my word. What shall I do now? The mind of my daughter now is not at her will. Sudars'ana, too, though uninvited, has come here singly and is residing calmly, without any signs of disturbance in his mind."

13-14. Vyasa said Then the chief kings all invited Sudars'ana there; Sudars'ana, too, came there quietly, and the princes, seeing his quiet nature, asked him, "O one, engaged in practising vows! Who has invited you here? Why have you come here singly, in this assembly of kings?

15. You have no force, no ministers, no help, no wealth, and no army. O intelligent! Then explain why have you come here alone?

16. In this assembly of kings you see that the powerful monarchs are ready to fight with each other for the sake of this princess. What do you intend to do under those circumstances?

17. Your brother, too, is come here to have the princess; he has got his army and is also marked with his strength and valor. The powerful Yudhajit has come here also to help him.

18. O observer of good vows! Seeing you without any army, we have narrated to you all the facts. Now think and do accordingly. If you please, remain here or go anywhere else."

19-20. Sudars'ana replied "True, I have no army, no help, no wealth, no forts, no friends or no kings to protect me. Hearing that Svayamvara will be held here, I have come here to witness it. But there is one particularity here; it is this The Devi Bhagavati has ordered me in my dream to come here. Under Her command I have come here; there is no doubt in this.

21. I have got no other object in view; I have obeyed what the Bhagavati BhuvanesVari has ordered me to do. Today will happen, no doubt, what She has ordained.

22-23. O kings! I am seeing everywhere the Supreme Goddess Bhagavati Bhavani. Therefore there is no enemy of mine in this world; but he who will turn out an enemy of mine, will be duly punished by the Maha Vidya Maha Maya. I do not know what is enmity?

24. O kings! What is inevitable will surely come to pass. There will be nothing otherwise. I am always depending on Fate, Destiny. What is the use, then, in thinking what will be the result?

25. Everywhere in the Devas, in the spirits, in men, in all the beings, the Devi's power is existent; it cannot be otherwise.

26. O kings! Whenever She wishes. She makes kings, masters of wealth or devoid of wealth. What is, then, the use of bothering my head in this?

27. When even the Gods Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a without Her presence, become powerless enough to move their hands or feet, then why shall I be anxious for the result?

28. O kings! Whether I am unable or able or an ordinary person, you have nothing to consider; I have come here in this assembly hall under the command of the Supreme Bhagavati.

29-30. What She has willed. She will do that. I am not to care for that. O high minded ones! You need not be afraid at all in this. I have told you all truth. Victory or defeat, I feel no shame in either of them. For I am always under the control of Bhagavati; therefore if there be any shame here, it is all Hers."

31-33. Vyasa said Hearing thus his words, and seeing that his mind is firmly devoted to Bhagavati, the kings saw each other and said thus "O Sudars'ana! What you have said is quite true; it is never otherwise; still Yudhajit, the king of Ujjain is intent on killing you. O intelligent! O sinless! we have all come to know that there is no trace of evil in you. We were all overcome with pity for you; hence we have informed you; now think and do the needful?"

34. Sudars'ana said, "You are all kind and large hearted; what you all have said is quite true. What shall I tell you, being a minor as yet!

35. O kings! No one can cause the death of another. All this world, moving and unmoving, is under the control of Fate.

36-38. No soul is independent; every one is under the effects of one's own Karma. The Pundits that have realised the Truth, say that Karma is of three kinds. Accumulated, Present, and Prarabdha? This whole world is due to Kala (Time), Karma (action) and Svabhava (Nature); unless the proper time comes, even the Devas cannot kill men. The men are killed on account of some cause, immediate; but the Great Time is the real Destroyer.

39. My father, though a destroyer of many others, was himself killed by a lion and my mother's father was slain by Yudhajit in the battle.

40. The Jivas, though caring hard to preserve their lives, are killed by Fate in spite of all their cares; and they live thousand years though there is none to protect them.

41. O religious kings! I do not fear a bit from Yudhajit. I consider Fate as the Supreme and I therefore remain always undisturbed, calm and quiet.

42. Daily and constantly I remember Bhagavati, Who is the Mother of all this Universe. She will look after my welfare.

43. Behold! One will have certainly to bear the burden of one's past Karma, whether it be good or it be bad; one's own actions must bear their fruits. Then why shall he be sorry, who has come to know this?

44. The less intelligent deluded persons, on getting pain from their own actions, turn out enemies on very trifling matters.

45. I do not grieve nor do I fear on account of such enemies. I am staying here in this assembly of kings, cool-minded.

46. Under the order of Chandika, I have come here to see this Svayamvara; whatever is inevitable will surely come to pass.

47. The words of the Bhagavati are the best proof; I do not know any other. My mind is entirely given up to Her. There will be nothing otherwise than what She has ordained; whether it is good or whether it is bad.

48. O kings! Let Yudhajit remain in peace. I have no enmity with him. He, who will deal inimically with me, will certainly reap his reward. There is not the least doubt in this."

49. Vyasa said O king! When Sudars'ana addressed them thus, all the kings became very glad and they all remained there for the Svayamvara. Sudars'ana, too, went to his camp and remained also calm and quiet.

50. Next day the king Subahu invited all the kings present in his city to their respective seats in the Svayamvara hall.

51. The princes and kings, decorated with best ornaments, came and took their seats on their respective platforms, covered with valuable carpets of best workmanship.

52. The kings then looked like the celestial Devas, wearing divine ornaments and apparels, blazing with the lustrous light of gems, and remained to see the Svayamvara affair.

53. Every one there had this foremost thought in his mind when will the princess, the bride elect, would come there; and who will be the man so fortunate as to be blessed with garlands offered by her (as a token of selection of the bridegroom)!

54. If, accidentally, she offers the garland to Sudars'ana in this Svayamvara assembly, then will ensue, no doubt, desperate struggles amongst the kings.

55. While they were thus meditating, sounds of drums were loudly sounded.

56-58. Then Subahu, the king of Benares, went to her daughter and found that S'as'ikala had just taken her bath and put on her silken clothes, and adorned herself with various ornaments and sweet garlands. Thus, dressed in complete marriage dress, she began to shine like another Goddess Laksmi, the Goddess of wealth. The king, on seeing his daughter dressed in silken cloth, afflicted with anxious thoughts, just smiled and said, "Child! Rise and take the beautiful garlands by your hands and go to the the Svayamvara hall and just look at the assembly of kings.

59. O lean bodied one! Whoever, well-qualified, beautiful, and of noble birth, amongst the kings is reigning in your mind, better select him.

60. O graceful! The kings from various quarters are adorning their respective seats; better go and see and select whomever you like."

61. Vyasa said When Subahu had spoken thus, S'as'ikala, who generally talked little, replied with sweet sonorous words, impregnated with religious truth.

62. "Father! I won't go before the kings who are inspired by lust; women like me never go there; it is those that are dissolute that attend those places.

63. Father! I have heard from the religious texts that women should cast their glances on their husbands only and not on any other.

64. The woman that goes to many persons is mentally claimed by all; each of them contemplates strongly "Let this woman be mine." Thus her chastity is destroyed.

65-66. Desirous of selecting her husband, when the woman holding in her hands, the garland for her would-be-husband, goes to the Svayamvara hall, then she turns out like an ordinary unchaste woman. As a prostitute going to a public shop looks on many persons and judges of their merits and demerits according to her own power of judgment, the maid that goes in the Svayamvara hall does exactly the same.

67. How can I behave myself in the hall of the assembly of kings like a prostitute, who does not attach her feelings firmly on a single individual but glances constantly at many lustful persons.

68. Though this system of Svayamvara is approved by the elderly persons, I am not going to follow that now. I will take the vow of a chaste woman and act up to that doctrine as perfectly.

69. I will never be able to act like an ordinary woman going in the Svayamvara hall, mentally determining many and finally selecting one.

70. Father! From the very beginning I have given myself up to Sudars'ana in mind, word and deed. I have not the least inclination to leave him and select another in his stead.

71. O King! If you want to have my welfare, then give your daughter on an auspicious day and in an auspicious lagna to Sudars'ana, according to the prescribed rites."

Thus ends the 20th Chapter on the Svayamvara hall and the kings' conversation there in S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said On hearing the sound words of his daughter S’as’ikala, pregnant with reason, Subahu the king of Benares, became very anxious and began to think what he would now, so short a space of time in this momentous occasion, thus

2-3. “The powerful kings, all, have come here on intention that they would fight and therefore they are all attended with their armies and followers respectively; and they are now sitting on their respective daises in the Svayamvara hall. If I go now and tell them that my daughter S’as’ikala is not willing to come of her own accord in the hall, the evil minded kings will certainly kill me out of their wrath.

4. I have not so much strength, whether in my army or in forts, as to be able to decline these kings and drive them away from my kingdom.

5. Sudars’ana, too is, alone, helpless, wealthless, and a mere boy. What shall I do now? Alas! I am now plunged in deep sorrow.”

6. Thinking thus, with head bowed down by humility, the king went to the kings, and said thus

7. “O Kings! The girl, though requested repeatedly by me and her mother, is not willing to come to this hall. What can I do now?

8-9. I am your servant and, bowing my head at the feet of you all, pray to you, to accept my worship and return to your own cities respectively. I am ready to give a sufficient quantity of gems and jewels, clothes, elephants, chariots. Kindly accept these and go back to your own homes.

10. My daughter is as yet a girl; if I chastise her, she may commit suicide; and I will be exceedingly sorry; therefore I am very much distressed with this thought.

11. You all are fortunate, energetic, and of a merciful disposition; what will it serve you to accept the daughter of mine, who is disobedient and unfortunate?

12. I am your obedient servant; shew your mercy on me and it is your duty to consider my daughter as your own daughter."

13. Vyasa said Hearing Subahu's words, the kings did not utter a single word; but Yudhajit, with his eyes reddened out of wrath, began to address the king of Benares in an angry tone

14. "O King! You are a veteran fool; what do you say now after committing a most blameable act? Had you any doubt as to your proceedings, why have you, out of sheer delusion, called this meeting hall of Svayamvara, without thinking the matter before-hand.

15. You have invited the kings and princes in this marriage ceremony Svayamvara; and they all have assembled here; how can they now go back to their homes?

16. Are you going now to insult these? and will you give your daughter in marriage to Sudars'ana? Nothing can be more ignoble than this?

17. The welfare-seeking person ought to judge before-hand and then to act. But you have started your work without any previous judgment and decision. You will have to reap its fruit; there is no doubt this.

18. Why are you now thinking of giving your daughter to this helpless, wealthless Sudars'ana in the presence of kings that are powerful and that command a great militia.

19. O thou most sinful! Today I will certainly kill you; next I will kill Sudars'ana and then give your daughter to my daughter's son; know that this is my firm resolve.

20. Who is there, when I am standing, in this assembly that can aspire to carry away the bridegroom elect by force or theft? Nothing to speak of Sudars'ana who is powerless, wealthless and a mere boy!

21. I spared his life before in the hermitage of Bharadvaja at the Muni's request; but today I will not spare the boy under any circumstances whatsoever.

22. Therefore, please go and consult with your wife and daughter and give your dear beautiful daughter to my daughter's son.

23. Be engaged in a marriage tie with me by giving your exquisitely beautiful daughter to my daughter's son. You can very well judge that it is always proper and advisable that a great man shall come under the protection of another great man.

24. What happiness can you expect from this Sudars'ana, who is helpless and banished from his kingdom, that you are going to give him your dear and auspicious daughter!

25. Family, wealth, army, appearance, kingdoms, forts and true friends and other helping persons; these a man should consider when he is going to give away his daughter in marriage to anybody; else there is no surety of happiness. Think over the royal custom and the never failing Dharma and do what is proper. Never it is advisable to do any act, abandoning the path of Dharma and morals.

26. You are my intimate friend; therefore I am telling you these good words. O king! Better bring your daughter, surrounded by her attendant maids, in this hall of Svayamvara.

27. Let this daughter select any man other than Sudars’ana; I have got no cause of quarrel; and the marriage will then be celebrated according to your will.

28-29. O best of kings! The other kings are all of high descent; and they have armies and are all in positions befitting your connection! If the daughter chooses any one annongst them, then no quarrels would arise. But if the daughter chooses Sudars’ana, then certainly I will carry her by force. Therefore, O king! act in such a way that no quarrels occur in future.”

30-31. Vyasa said Thus addressed by Yudhajit, the king of Benares was very sorrowful, and, after a heavy sigh, went to his palace and told with a grieved heart to his wife, thus “O fair eyed one! Now I am completely under your control; you better explain to S’as’ikala that a dreadful quarrel is now to occur; what am I to do now?”

32-33. Vyasa said Hearing her husband's words, the queen went to her daughter and spoke thus “O child! Quarrels have now ensued amongst the kings for your sake; your father has become very sorrowful; therefore, O fair one! Choose any other man your husband than Sudars’ana.

34-35. O Child! If you do not judge and rashly choose Sudars’ana, then the powerful king Yudhajit, possessing a large army, will no doubt kill you, me and Sudars’ana. It might be, if quarrels ensue, you might be married to another husband; therefore better think now and act.

36. O dear eyed! It is now your incumbent duty to choose another king for your husband, if you want your and my welfare and happiness. Leave Sudars’ana.”

37. The mother thus advised her daughter; the king, too, afterwards explained and tried to convince her. The girl spoke fearlessly.

38. “O king! What you have said is all true; but you know my firm resolve already. I won't ever select any other king than Sudars’ana.

39-40. O king! If you are afraid and be in agony, then do this thing: better give me in marriage to Sudars’ana and then drive us away from your city. He will put me in his chariot and go away out of your city. After that what is inevitable will surely come to pass. There cannot be anything otherwise.

41. O king! You need not fear anything about what is kept in the womb of future by Destiny. What is inevitable will happen; there is no doubt in this.”

42. The king said “O child! The intelligent persons never show too much rashness and insolence. The learned people, versed in the Vedas, say it is never advisable to quarrel with many persons.

43. How can I give my daughter in marriage to one and then banish them both? The kings have turned out enemies. There is no heinous crime, that they cannot commit now.

44. O child! If it be your opinion, I can pledge something as a pawn for your marriage, as the king Janaka pledged in days of yore for her daughter Sita.

45-47. I will also put forward a pawn very difficult to be carried out, as Janaka originally made an offer of the hands of Sita to whomsoever, who would break the S'iva's strong bow. Thus the quarrels amongst the kings might be diminished; for he who will be able to fulfill the promise, will be able to accept you. Then, be he Sudars'ana or any other king, whoever will be strong to fulfill the promise will take you as his wife.

48. Thus the quarrels will cease and I will also be able to perform your marriage ceremony in peace and happiness."

49. The daughter said "Father! On hearing from you, I am merged in an ocean of doubt, for it seems to me what you are saying is the act of a fool; already, I have chosen in my mind Sudars'ana for my husband; now it cannot be otherwise.

50. O king! The mind is the source of virtue and vice. When I have mentally selected, how can I now forego him and choose another?

51-52. O king! If you keep any pledge, then I will be subject to any and everybody; if one, two, or more fulfill the same pledge, I will be then subject to any or all of them. Father! in that case quarrels may arise. What shall I do then? I cannot give my vote on this doubtful point.

53. O king! You need not fear anything. Better give me in marriage to Sudars'ana according to the prescribed rules; then, in that case, the Goddess Chandika will certainly protect us.

54. O king! Taking Whose Name destroys a whole host of sins, take Her Name and think the Almighty and perform carefully our marriage ceremony.

55. Better go to the king's assembly today, and, with folded hands, tell them come tomorrow to the hall of Svayamvara.

56-57. Thus bidding goodbye to the kings, perform in the right spirit, according to the prescribed rites, our marriage ceremony. Next, after giving fit dowries and other articles after the marriage, better tell the prince Sudars'ana to depart. The son of Dhruvasandhi will take me away with him.

58. If, at this, the kings get angry and be ready to quarrel with you, then in that case, the Goddess Bhagavati will no doubt help us.

59. Sudars'ana then will fight against those kings; and if he loses his life perchance in the battle, then I will also follow him and die.

60. O king! Let all good come unto you! Better give me in marriage to Sudars'ana and remain here with your army. I will go alone with him, the object of my love."

61. Vyasa said Hearing these words from her daughter, the king Subahu trusted her, and firmly resolved to act according to that, and to celebrate the marriage of S'as'ikala.

Thus ends the 21st chapter on the king of Benares fulfilling the advice of his daughter in S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O King! Then, on hearing his daughter's words, that high souled king of Benares, Subahu, came to the spot where the kings were staying and said "O kings! Now you can go to your own camps; tomorrow I will perform my daughter's marriage ceremony.

2. Let you all be pleased with me and graciously accept the food and drink, given by me. Tomorrow let you all come here and perform my daughter's marriage ceremony.

3. O Kings! My daughter is not coming today to this hall of Svayamvara; what can I do now; I will console her and bring her here tomorrow. Therefore do you all go now to your own camps respectively.

4. Intelligent persons should not quarrel with the members of their own family. But they should always shew kindness towards their own sons and daughters who are under their protection. However, I will make my daughter understand and bring her tomorrow morning. You may all go now to your places as you desire.

5. Tomorrow morning we will settle about the pledge, whether by choice or by fulfilling a promise, that requires strength, and have the marriage celebrated; or better you all together would decide what mode of Svayamvara is to be adopted."

6. The kings heard Subahu and trusted him. Then seeing that the city is well guarded on all sides, they went to their own camps and performed their mid-day duties.

7-8. The king Subahu on this side began to perform all the duties regarding the marriage of his daughter, after duly consulting with all the chief members of the family. At the appointed time of marriage he brought his daughter in a well concealed and guarded chamber, had the bathing ceremony of the bridegroom elect performed by the priests, versed in the Vedas, and had him well dressed and did other requisite things. Then he brought the bridegroom in the house, made him seat on a Vedi (platform) and duly worshipped him.

9. Then the large-hearted king gave to the bridegroom seat, Achamaniya (water for rinsing the mouth and such articles of food as require rinsing one's mouth after eating them), Arghya (articles for worshipping deservedly, padyam, e.g., water for washing the feet with an offer of green grass, rice, etc., made in worshipping a God or a Brahman), the two silken cloths and sheet, cows, and two ear-rings and then wanted to give Sudars'ana his daughter.

10. The high minded Sudars'ana accepted all the offerings given by the king. Seeing this, Manorama was relieved of her anxiety. Manorama began to think that beautiful and well adorned daughter as if the daughter of Kuvera (the God of wealth); and thanked herself and thought as if all her duties were over.

11. Then the royal ministers carried gladly and fearlessly the beautiful Sudars'ana, worshipped with ornaments and clothings, in a good nice carriage to the centre of the amusement court.

12. On the other hand, the elderly female members, who knew all about the prescribed rules, performed the dressing of the princess in a befitting manner and placing her in a beautiful conveyance took her before the bridegroom elect, in the marriage hall, where there was the platform regularly built.

13-14. The Sacred Fire was then lit, the royal priest began to perform the Homa ceremony duly; when the amusement ceremony of the bridegroom and bride united in love was duly performed, the priest called them there. After this the bridegroom and bride performed duly the Laja Homa ceremony and circumambulated the Sacred Fire. Thus all the ceremonies, befitting the gotra and family, were all fully performed according to the prescribed rules.

15-17. Then the king Subahu, excited by feelings of love, in the marriage time, gave to the prince Sudars'ana the following presents: well adorned two hundred chariots, with horses and the arrow cases filled with arrows, one hundred and twenty five elephants, dressed with golden ornaments, looking like so many mountains, one hundred beautiful female elephants and one hundred maid servants, all dressed in golden ornaments.

18-20. The king gave the bridegroom also one thousand servants well adorned, bearing the complete set of all sorts of weapons, many gems and jewels, clothings, nice variegated woolen clothes, beautiful capacious rooms to live in, and two thousand excellent horses born in the Sindhu country, three hundred good camels able to carry sufficient loads, and two hundred carriages, filled with grains, etc.

21. Then the king bowed to the king's daughter Manorama and with clasped hands, said "O royal daughter! I am now become your servant; now kindly say what is your desire?"

22. Hearing these beautiful words of the king, Manorama said "O king! all good to you and let your family increase in sons and grandsons. You have increased my honour by giving in marriage your daughter (jewel) to my son. I have no other desire than to see your welfare constant and the increase in your family, posterity and prosperity.

23. O king! Your are the chief amongst the kings. Your have made my son great and strong like the Sumeru mountain by giving him your daughter in marriage. You are high and my related. I am not the daughter of a panegyrist or a bard; how can I then praise you for this noble act of yours.

24-25. O king! Your character is wonderful and pure. What more shall I say to you than this that you all, in the face of many other kings, have given your daughter to my son in marriage, who is banished from his kingdom, is deprived of his father and is living in the forest, penniless, armyless, subsisting himself on roots and fruits only.

26. In these cases the kings as a rule make relations with those only, who are their equals in rank and position, of noble families of equal grade, having forces and wealth equal to each other. No other king would have offered his beautiful well-qualified daughter in marriage to my prince who is without any wealth.

27. O king! On your this act, all the other kings, holding great influence and possessing armies, have turned out your enemies. I, being a woman am unable to describe the amount of patience in you."

28. The king Subahu of Benares, hearing the sweet words of Manorama was highly pleased and, with folded hands, began to say, "O Devi, you better take my this celebrated kingdom; I will become the commander of your forces and will try my best to guard this city.

29. Or you can take half of my kingdom and remain here with your son. It is not my desire that you leave this Benares and go and live in the forest.

30-31. The kings have become very offended; I will first try to appease them; if they be not satisfied, I will adopt the means of "gift" or sowing dissensions amongst them; and even, if, in that, I fail, I will ultimately take to war. O Devi! Victory or defeat is under the hands of the Destiny; still victory comes to those who are in the right path and defeat to those who are in the wrong path. How then can the victor arise to those sinful kings?"

32. Hearing the king's words, pregnant with meaning, Manorama felt herself highly respected; and, with a cheerful heart, said the following good words.

33. "O king! let all good come on you! you better discard all fear and reign with your sons here; my son Sudars'ana, too, will become the king of Ayodhya by the Grace of S'ri Bhagavati Bhuvanes'vari, the Supreme Cause of the innumerable worlds, and will roam in this world; there is no doubt in this.

34. May Bhagavati Bhavani bring all good unto you; now kindly permit us to depart to our homes, O king! I always contemplate the Highest Goddess Ambika; and I have no time to indulge in other thoughts."

35. Thus, on various subjects, Manorama and the king Subahu began to talk with each other, causing satisfaction to both like nectar, when the morning broke out.

36. The kings, knowing early in the morning, that the princess had been given away in marriage, became very much enraged and went out of the city and began to discuss with one another.

"We will kill today the king Subahu, the disgrace amongst the kings as well that boy Sudars'ana, totally unfit to marry the princess, and take away the kingdom and the princess S'as'ikala. How can we return to our homes, with this severe disgrace, stamped on our heads.

37. Hear, O kings! the sound of the drums, mridangas, other instruments; the sounds of the conchshells have even been overpowered. Hark! The various musical sounds and the chanting of the Vedas. It is then certain that the King Subahu has finished the marriage ceremony of his daughter S'as'ikala with Sudars'ana.

38. Oh! This king has deceived us with his words and performed the marriage ceremony, according to ordinary religious rules.

39. Now O kings! decide unanimously what to do and come to a definite conclusion."

When the kings were thus discussing, the king of Benares, of indomitable prowess, the king Subahu, after finishing his daughter's marriage, came there with his famous friends to invite them.

40. Seeing the King of Benares present, all the other kings did not utter a single word, but they remained silent, beaming with anger.

41. Subahu then approached to the kings, bowed down, and, with folded hands, said "Be kind enough to come to my house for dinner.

42. O kings! My daughter S'as'ikala after all has selected Sudars'ana; I could not help in this. You are all kind and noble; therefore you all be peaceful and let the matter drop."

43. The kings hearing him were filled with rage and said, "We have all taken food; our desires have been fulfilled; you better now go back to your own home.

44-45. Your behaviour with us is all right and proper; now do your other duties and let the kings go back to their homes." Hearing these words of the kings, the king of Benares was very much terrified and returned home, thinking that the kings were all filled with rage and might do serious harm to him. Thus he began to pass away his time in dire anxiety.

46. Then the king Subahu disappeared; the kings united made this resolve that they would block the passage of Sudars'ana, kill him, and take the girl away.

47. Some of these kings rather said "What is the use in killing the king's son. We will all go willingly to see the fun."

48. Thus the kings went and remained blocking the path of Sudars'ana; and the king Subahu, on returning home, began to make arrangements for the departure of the bridegroom and the bride.

Thus ends the 22nd Chapter on Sudars'ana's marriage in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said After paying due respects to his new son-in-law, the king Subahu cheerfully entertained him for six days with variety of good dishes.

2. Thus finishing off the marriage ceremony, the king after consulting with his ministers, presented the bridegroom and the bride various jewels and ornaments and other things given naturally on marriage occasions.

3. Then the king of Benares, of brilliant splendour, heard from his messengers that the kings had obstructed the way back of Sudars'ana and became very absent minded.

4. Then Sudars'ana, of firm resolve, told his father-in-law "O king! better now give us order that we may depart. We will go without any fear.

5. O king! First we will halt at the holy hermitage of Bharadvaja Muni; and next we will, after due considerations, settle where we would go.

6. O pure one! You need not fear a bit from these kings; the Mother of the Universe, the Bhagavati Bhavani will surely protect us."

7. Vyasa said O king Janamejaya! Hearing thus his son-in-law's orders, the king Subahu gave hinn a vast amount of wealth and bade good-bye to him. Sudars'ana, too, quickly departed.

8. The king Subahu followed him with a long train of soldiers. Thus Sudars'ana went on, in his journey, fearless.

9. The great hero Sudars'ana, the descendant of Raghu, with his new consort in the chariot and followed by many other chariots, saw the soldiers of the several kings.

10. The king Subahu, seeing them, became anxious. But Sudars'ana, gladly took refuge, with his whole heart, of the all- auspicious Goddess S'ankari.

11. Sudars'ana began to recite silently the excellent one word seed mantra of the King of Desires (Kamaraja) and, out of its power, he and his wife remained in the chariot without any fear and sorrow.

12. Then all the kings came there with their soldiers to fight with Sudars'ana and to carry away by force the bride. Thus a loud uproar arose.

13. The king of Benares seeing them wanted to kill them. But Sudars'ana, the descent of Raghu, desirous of victory, repeatedly asked him not do so.

14. Loud arose, then, the uproar, caused by the sounds of conchshells, bherri, and war drums of the kings on one side and Subahu on the other, each of the two parties determining to extirpate the other.

15. S'atrujit prepared himself for the war to destroy his enemy. Yudhajit came there for his help, well equipped with army, etc.

16-17. Some warrior kings remained there as witnesses with their soldiers. Then Yudhajit went in front of Sudars'ana. His younger brother S'atrujit, too, attended Yudhajit to kill his brother in the battle field. Then the warriors, overpowered with anger, shot each other with arrows.

18. A great encounter then ensued in the battle field with sharp arrows. The king of Benares hurriedly advanced there, with a great body of army, to relieve his son-in-law.

19. Thus when the dreadful war began to grow more and more horrible, the Goddess Bhagavati suddenly appeared there, mounted on Her lion.

20-21. The beauty of Her body was exceedingly lovely; She was adorned with various excellent ornaments and She held various weapons. She wore divine clothings and the beautiful Mandara garland suspended from Her neck up to Her knees. The kings were greatly astonished to see Her. They began to argue "Who in this Lady, mounted on a lion? Whence has She so suddenly come?"

22-23. Beholding Her, Sudars'ana told the king of Benares "O king! Behold! The Divine Maha Devi has come here to favour us. She is very merciful. Now I am completely fearless."

24. Sudars'ana and Subahu were highly delighted to see the Beautiful Goddess and bowed down to Her feet with great devotion.

25. Then the lion, the vehicle of the Goddess, roared, making tremendous noise. Hearing the roaring of the lion, all the elephants trembled. At that time, the winds began to blow violently and the four quarters assumed an awful appearance.

26-27. Then Sudars'ana told his general to carry soon his forces where the kings were staying, blocking his way. "What could the vicious kings do now, though they had become very angry? The Goddess Bhagavati had come there to save us.

28. Now you all go safely and calmly through the midst of the kings. See! At my remembering Her, She has come here mercifully to save us.

29-30. The general, on hearing these words, became ready to march by that route. Then Yudhajit, very much infuriated with anger, said to all the kings "Why are you all so much fear stricken? Kill this Sudars'ana, stealing away this girl.

31. This lad, weak and without any support, will carry away by force and fearlessly the girl, spiting all the kings; and won't you be able to do anything? This is very strange!

32. Are you afraid to see this one lady on a lion? O high minded kings! Never trifle away this boy; kill him with all attention.

33. Killing him, we will then take away this girl. The jackal can never snatch away the lady under the grasp of a lion."

34. Thus saying, the king Yudhajit, filled with anger, came to the battle field with S'atrujit and all his forces.

35-36. That wicked king, drew his bow string well nigh to his ear and shot arrows after arrows, sharpened under stone and by blacksmith at Sudars'ana, with the object of killing him. Sudars'ana cut off all those arrows quickly with his own quick going arrows.

37. Thus when the fight grew intense, the Goddess Chandika became very mach enraged and shot arrows at Yudhajit.

38. Assuming diverse forms, the Goddess Durga, holding various weapons the auspicious Mother of the Universe, began to fight terribly in the battle field.

39. S'atrujit and the king Yudhajit were killed in that terrible battle. Both of them fell dead from their chariots; and a shout of victory arose from the side of Sudars'an.

40. The uncle and cousin of the king Subahu were on the side of Yudhajit and were killed. The kings were very much astonished to see them thus lying dead.

41. The king Subahu, seeing them dead in the battlefield became very glad and began to praise and sing hymns in honour of Durga Devi the Destroyer of all difficulties.

42-43. I bow to the auspicious Goddess Jagaddhatri, again and again; I bow to the Bhagavati Durga the bestower of all desires; I always bow down to Her Who is auspicious, peace giving, and the Higher Vidya. O Mother! O Giver of salvation! O Auspicious One! You are pervading the whole Universe, O World Mother! and Upholder of the Universe! I bow down to Thee.

44. O World-mother! O Devi! you are devoid of Prakritic qualities; you are full of qualities; beyond mind and speech; one cannot think out your prowess, etc., by one's mind. Mother! you are the Highest Force; ever willing to destroy the miseries of your devoted persons. Your influence is manifest everywhere; what eulogy can I sing of Thee.

45. O Devi! You are the Goddess of Vak (speech) of all beings; you are the all pervading intelligence, mind, effort, and movements; you are the controller of the minds of all; therefore how can I praise You? O Goddess; You are the Self of all; how can I sing eulogies to You, who are beyond speech and mind, and to the Universal Self.

46. Brahma, Hah and Hara and other higher Devas have not been able to find the limits of your qualities, though they are incessantly chanting your praises; O Goddess! I am the small of the smallest, I am without qualification, and bound by Prakritic qualities; I am ignorant as regards Jiva and Brahma. O Mother! I will never be able to describe Your characteristics that are unfathomable.

47. O Mother! why not good companionships effect the fulfilment of one's desires. The purification of my heart has been effected incidentally. O Mother! my son-in-law is wholly devoted to you; accidentally there has arisen the connection between him and me and it is on account of his connection that I have been able to see You.

48. O Mother! Today I have got without any restraint and control of passions, and samadhi, the rare vision of You, who is wanted to be seen even by Brahma, Hah and Hara, Indra and the other Devas and by the Munis, who have attained their realisation. Therefore who is there in this Triloki, that is so fortunate as I am.

49. O Bhavani! Where am I, void of intelligence and where is the rare vision of You, Who is the only medicine of this disease of the ocean of world? Still, O Mother! Who is worshipped by the Devas, I have got Your vision. Now I have come to know that You always show mercy to Your Bhaktas, who are in their Bhavas (mental images of your Self).

50. O Goddess! You have saved Sudars'an in this great war crisis and You have slain these two powerful enemies. How can I describe your prowess in this matter? This I have understood that Your Holy Character ever shows mercy on Your devotees.

51. O Goddess! Again this is not a matter to be wondered at, if one considers; for You are protecting this whole universe, moving and unmoving; and accordingly You have now protected, out of Your mercy, your Bhakta Sudars'ana, the son of Dhruvasandhi, by killing his enemy.

52. O Bhavani! It is not merely for the protection of your Bhaktas, engaged in Your service, that You shew this favour but also to extol the meritorious deeds of your Bhaktas that You do such things; otherwise how is it that this Bhakta saintlike Sudars'ana, by marrying my daughter, has got victory in this battle field?

53. O Mother! You are fully capable to destroy the fear of birth and death. What wonder is there that you fulfill the desires of your Bhaktas? The Bhaktas extol You by characterising You as Saguna (full of qualities), Nirguna (devoid of any quality) and Apara, beyond all merits and demerits.

54. O Goddess! O Bhuvanes'vari! I am fortunate that I have been able to see You, and thus all my duties have become crowned with success. O Mother! I have no practices in the shape of Your meditation, etc. nor do I know any seed mantras of Yours; today I have fully seen Your glory manifested.

55. Vyasa said Thus extolled by the king Subahu, the Goddess Bhagavati, the Bestower of the Absolute Freedom, was pleased and said "O thou, practiser of good vows! Ask boon from Me."

Thus ends the twenty third chapter on the killing of the enemy of Sudars'ana in the great war, in S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said Hearing the Devi's words, the king Subahu began to say with great devotion thus

2-3. O Devi! If there be made a comparison between the kingdom of the Devas and the world on the one hand and the vision of Thine on the other hand, then it must be acknowledged that the kingdom of the Devas and the earth cannot stand in comparison before Thee. O Devi! There cannot be anything, in this Triloki, that is more exalted than Thy vision; therefore, O Mother! What other boon may I ask from Thee. I am very thankful and blessed; all my desires are fulfilled, when I have seen Thee.

4-5. O Auspicious Mother! I ask from You this boon, my desire that my devotion may remain constant, fixed, and unflinching towards You. O Mother! You would remain always in this city of mine being celebrated under the name of S’ri Durga Devi, Your S’akti. This is my desire.

6-9. O Devi! As you have cleared off all the obstacles of Sudars’ana and saved him from this danger, so remain here in this city of Benares and protect it, so long as this city stands on the face of the earth and make it firm and well established and renowned. O Durga,

I pray that you may grant me these boons. O Devi! Grant me also various other desires of mine and destroy my enemies and extirpate all the irreligious and wicked people in this city. O Goddess of mercy! What more can I ask from you?

10-11. Vyasa said Thus praising and praying, the king Subahu stood, with folded hands, before the Devi Durga, the remover of all calamities, when She addressed thus O king! I will remain no doubt, in this city of Benares, the place of salvation, as long as it stands on the face of the earth and protect all the people here.

12. Then came there Sudars’ana, heartily gladdened; and he bowed to Her and began to praise Her with intense joy and devotion.

13. O Mother of this Universe! Everyone in this world shows mercy to those that are devoted to him; but, O Mother! I see, in Your case. You take it as if Your bounden duty, to save those, that are void of any devotion towards You; for You have saved my life, though I am devoid of any devotion towards you. Therefore how can I describe the boundless ocean of mercy that reigns in You!

14. O Goddess! I have heard that You have created all this Universe, with its elements, and You are preserving this Your own creations and again You will destroy it in due time. Therefore O Mother! What wonder is there that you have saved me!

15. O Goddess! Now order me early what work of Yours shall I do now? Where shall I go? O Mother! Now I am unable to make out my duty; therefore kindly order me whether I will remain here or go anywhere else or remain anywhere, I like, at my leisure?

16. Vyasa said On Sudars’ana thus petitioning before the Devi, She said with much kindness “O good soul! Go to Ayodhya and govern the country befitting your family.

17. O king! Constantly remember Me and worship Me with great care. I will always look after the welfare of your kingdom.

18. Especially in the eighth, fourteenth, and in the ninth day of the lunar half month, worship Me according to the prescribed rites and rules and offer me victims (sacrifices).

19. O sinless one! Establish my image in this city and worship it three times, morning, mid-day and evening carefully and with devotion.

20. It is noteworthy that My Great Puja in autumn for the nine nights (Navaratra) ought to be done with the greatest devotion.

21-22. O king! In the month of Chaitra, Magh, As'vin, and Asadha, My grand festival should be done on the four Navaratris respectively; and especially on the fourteenth and on the eighth day of the black half, all persons ought to worship Me with their minds full of devotion towards Me.”

23. Vyasa said After the Devi, the Goddess Durga, the Destroyer of all dangers, had finished Her sayings, Sudars’ana bowed down to Her and praised Her much. The Devi, giving him the above mentioned advices, disappeared.

24. Seeing Her disappear, all the kings went to Sudars’ana and bowed to him, as the Devas go to their lord, the Indra.

25. The king of Benares, Subahu, too, gladly bowed down and stood before him. Then all the kings began to address Sudars’an, the king of Ayodhya.

26. “O king! You are our lord and governor; we are always your servants; protect us as the king of Ayodhya.

27. O king! It is through your grace only that we have seen the Supreme Force, the Goddess of this Universe, the most Auspicious, the Eternal Bhavani, the Giver of the fourfold desires.

28. O king! It is for your sake that the Eternal, Highest Prakriti Devi appeared; therefore you are very fortunate, auspicious, and most blessed in this world. Your have finished, as it were, all that you had to do.

29. O king! We all are deluded by the Maya of that Mahamaya Chandika Devi; therefore none of us is able to know Her prowess.

30. We are always engaged in thinking of wealth, sons and wives; there we are merged in this awful ocean of delusion, infested with crocodiles, etc., in the shape of lust, anger, greed, etc.

31. O Blessed one! You are highly enlightened and you know everything; hence we ask you What is this Force; whence has She sprung? How is Her prowess? Kindly describe all these to us.

32. O Descendant of Kakud! The saints are always nnerciful; kindly therefore relate to us the glory of the Excellent Goddess, that serves the purpose of a boat in crossing this ocean of world (transmigration).

33. O king! I am intensely desirous to hear the prowess and nature of the Devi.”

Note Kakud is an epithet of Puranjaya, son of S'asada, a king of the solar dynasty, and a descendant of Ikshvaku. The Mythology relates that when in their war with the demons, the gods were often worsted; they, headed by Indra went to the powerful king Puranjaya and requested him to be their friend in battle. The latter consented to do so, provided Indra carried him on his shoulders. Indra accordingly assumed the form of a bull and Puranjaya seated on its hump, completely vanquished the demons. Puranjaya is therefore Kakutstha ‘standing on a hump.’

34. Vyasa said When the kings had thus asked, the son of Dhruvasandhi, the king Sudaras'ana became very glad and, meditating on the Goddess, began to say thus

35. “O kings! Indra and the other Devas, even Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes’a are unable to fathom the most exalted deeds of that Goddess; how, then, can I describe to you the great glory of the Mahamaya.

36-38. O kings! The Bhagavati Bhavani is present, as it were, being divided into four parts. She who is the first and foremost, the excellent Sattvic Energy, worshipped by all, is always engaged in the preservation of this world. That part which is engaged in creating this world, is called the Rajasik Energy; and that part which is engaged in destroying the world is called the Tamasik Energy, and that part which is the cause of all, Brahma, etc., that Highest S'akti, the Bestower of all desires, is called the fourth S'akti, the Nirguna S'akti.

39. O kings! Those who are not Yogis, will never be able to grasp the Nirguna S'akti. The Saguna Force can be easily served. All those middle Adhikaris (fit persons) and learned men always meditate and worship the Saguna Aspect of Her."

40-41. The kings said "O king! You got afraid and went in your very early age to the forest; how is it, then, that you have been able to know the excellent Goddess Mahamaya. How did you worship and pray to Her? That She, becoming so glad, has favoured you and so helped you?"

42-43. Sudars'an said "O kings! Early in my childhood, I got the excellent root-mantra of desires, Kamavija; daily I meditated and silently uttered that mantram. After that I came to realise through the Risis That Eternal Auspicious Mother; and since that time, day and night, I always used to remember that Highest Deity; with the greatest devotion."

44. Vyasa said Hearing the words of Sudars'ana, the kings came to know that the Goddess which they saw was the Highest Force and filled with the greatest devotion towards Her, returned to their own homes.

45. The king of Benares, Subahu, returned to his own city after bidding good-bye to Sudars'ana. The virtuous Sudars'ana, too, went towards his Kosala kingdom.

46. The ministers were very glad to hear the death of S'atrujit and to see the victory of Sudars'ana.

47-48. The inhabitants and armies of Sakata (Ayodhya) hearing that Sudars'ana is coming and knowing him to be the son of the king Dhruvasandhi, became highly delighted and approached to him with various offerings.

49-50. Sudars'ana, with his new consort, arrived at Ayodhya with his heart highly gladdened, and shewed his due regard and respect towards all his subjects. Then the ministers came and sainted him; the women threw at him offerings of Laja (fried rice) and flowers; the bards began to praise loudly. Thus, honoured by various auspicious ceremonies, the king entered into his palace.

Here ends the 24th chapter on the installation of Durga Devi in the city of Benares and the return to Ayodhya of Sudars'ana in the Maha Puranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Vyasa said The king Sudars'ana, surrounded by his friends, on conning to the palace at Ayodhya, bowed down to Lilavati, the mother of S'atrujit, and said "O mother! I swear by touching your feet, that I have not killed in battle your son S'atrujit nor your father Yudhajit; it is the Devi Durga that has killed them; I am not to be blamed a bit in this. O mother! You need not be sensitive in this; there is no remedy for what will inevitably come to pass; therefore you do not be sorry for the death of your son; you must know that the JTvas enjoy pleasure and pain as the results of their own Karmas.

5. O mother! I am your servant; you are entitled to the same respect and worship as Manorama, my own mother; there is no difference whatsoever between her and you.

6. O mother! One must bear the effects of one's Karma, good or bad; therefore when pleasure or pain arises, you should not be glad or otherwise.

7. When pain arises, more pain is said to be conceived and when pleasure arises, more pleasure is seen. But the learned say that man ought not to subject himself to excessive pleasure or pain.

8. O mother! This whole world is under Fate, Destiny; nothing of it is yours. Therefore the intelligent persons ought not to grieve their hearts at any time with sorrow.

9. As the wooden dolls dance in a stage as danced by the actor, so the individual souls here work as the results of their past Karmas; there is no doubt in this.

10. O mother! I know that the effect of one's own Karma, must have to be borne; it is, on that account, that I never felt sorrow in my exile in the forest.

11. You are quite aware that my mother's father was killed here, and my mother, becoming very much afraid and sorrowful, took me and escaped to the forest.

12-13. The robbers robbed us of everything save our clothes on our bodies; I was then very young; my mother was without any shelter; she carried me with this minister Vidalla and my helpless nurse to the hermitage of Bharadvaja.

14. There the kind hermit and his wife and the other wives of the hermits protected our lives in that forest, with the roots and fruits, that can be obtained there in that forest. Thus our time passed.

15. Mother! I had felt no pain then; nor do I feel any pleasure at present, when wealth is flowing unto me. What more to say, I have no feeling of jealousy or envy whatsoever in my mind.

16. O mother! Rather it is better, in my eyes, to subsist on roots and fruits than to enjoy kingdoms; for the kings go to hell; but the ascetics living on roots and fruits never meet with that result.

17. The wise should undoubtedly practice Dharma and control their passions and thus save themselves from being led into hells.

18-19. O mother! The human birth in this auspicious Bharatvarsa is seldom obtained. The enjoyments in eating and drinking are possible in every womb, but it is highly incumbent on us when we have got the privilege of this human birth, to earn Dharma, leading to the Heavens and salvation which can be very rarely attained in being born in other wombs."

20-21. Vyasa said When Sudars'ana had told thus, Lilavati became very abashed; she cast aside the sorrow for the death of her son, told him with tears in her eyes:-- "O my son Sudars'ana! I am very much guilty on account of my father Yudhajit killing your mother's father and taking hold of the sovereignty of this kingdom.

22. I could not then hinder my father and son; whatever unlawful evil and cruel deeds were then committed, all were done by my father Yudhajit. Therefore, my child, I am not to be made guilty in any way in these doings.

23. Both my father and son were killed out of the wickedness of their own actions; how can you account for those wicked things? Child! I am not expressing sorrow at the death of my son; I have been pained by his doings.

24-25. O noble souled one; You are my son; Manorama is my sister; Child! I am not at all offended with you nor am I the least sorry for your obtaining the kingdom; Child! you are very fortunate; therefore you have obtained, by the grace of Bhagavati, this kingdom without any enemies; now rule your subjects according to the prescribed rules of Dharma."

26-28. Vyasa said O king! The king Sudars'ana heard LTIavati and bowed down at her feet. Then he went to the beautiful palace where Manorama had previously gone and began to live there. Inviting the ministers and the astrologers, he asked them what was the auspicious day and the auspicious moment, that he can establish Durga Devi on a beautiful golden throne and he would worship Her.

29. "O ministers! First I will install on the throne the Devi, the Awarder of the four main objects of human pursuits (viz. virtue, wealth, enjoyment and final beatitude) and then I will govern my kingdom like the kings S'ri Rama Chandra and others.

30. All the people of this city of Ayodhya ought also to worship this Auspicious S'akti, the Highest Energy, the Giver of all desires and Siddhis, and that is respected and adored by all."

31. The ministers, on hearing his words, had a beautiful palace built by the engineers, artists and workmen and proclaimed in the city the king's proclamation.

32. Then the king Sudars'ana had an image of the Devi nicely built and got that installed with the help of the Pundits, versed in the Vedas, on an auspicious day and at an auspicious moment.

33. The intelligent king performed the worship and Homa ceremony, according to the prescribed rules, and thus finally settled the ceremony of invocation of the Deity into the new image and established it as an idol in the temple.

34. O Janamejaya! There the soundings of the various drums and other musical instruments, the chanting of the Veda mantrams by the Brahmanas, and sweet music were heard; and various sorts of festivities and rejoicings were celebrated.

35. Vyasa said Thus completing the installation ceremony of the Durga Devi by the Brahmanas, versed in the Vedas, the king Sudars'ana duly worshipped the image in various ways, etc.

36. Thus gaining his father's kingdom and worshipping the Devi, he and the Devi became celebrated throughout the kingdom.

37. The religious largehearted Sudars'ana, on gaining his kingdom, brought all the other feudatory princes under his control by the sheer force of his religious character.

38. The subjects became happy and got honor in the reign of Sudars'ana, as they got before in the reigns of Dilip, Raghu and Ramachandra.

39. The virtue of all the citizens under Varnas'rama shone complete with all its four padas; and there remained none in the world irreligious.

40. In villages after villages, the chief townsmen began to build temples, worship the Goddess there with all their jolliness. Thus everywhere in the Kosala kingdom spread the Devi worship.

41. On the other hand, the king Subahu established the Idol in Benares, had temples built and worshipped there the Devi.

42. The inhabitants of Kas'T became then filled with devotion and intense love towards the Devi and duly worshipped Her, as they used to do to S'iva in the temple of VisVanatha.

43. Thus the Durga Devi became very widely celebrated in this world. O king! Thus in different countries, the devotion began to increase towards the Goddess.

44. The Devi Bhagavati Bhavani became in every way an object to be worshipped and adored by all people and everywhere in Bharatavarsa.

45. The people began to recite slowly, meditate, and chant hymns as advocated by the Agamas constantly and became deeply attached to the S'akti worship and began to be looked upon with the highest honour by others.

46. O king! From that time all the people used to worship, perform Homa ceremony and sacrifice duly in honour of the Devi in every Navaratri (for the first nine days of the bright half in the months of AsVin and Chaitra).

Here ends the 25th Chapter on the installation of the Devi in Ayodhya and Benares in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said "O Best of the Brahmins! What are men to do in the time of Navaratra? Especially in the Navaratra ceremony during the autumnal season how is the ceremony to be performed? Kindly relate all this with the prescribed rules and regulations.

2. O intelligent one! What are the fruits therein of the Navaratra ceremony? and what are the rules to be observed? Kindly describe all these to me."

3-5. Vyasa said O king! Hear about the vow of auspicious Navaratra. This has to be performed with loving devotion in the vernal season; but its special season is autumn. The two seasons, autumn and spring, are famous as the teeth of Yama, the God of Death; and these are the two seasons, very hard for the persons to cross over. Therefore every goodfaring man should everywhere perform this vow very carefully.

6-8. O king! The people are very much afflicted with various terrible diseases in these two seasons autumn and spring and many lose their lives during these portions of the year. Therefore the wise should unquestionably worship with great devotion the Chandika Devi in these auspicious months of Chaitra and AsVin.

9-11. On the day previous to the commencement of the vow, when the Amavasya tithi commences, one should collect the materials that will be required in the worship and should eat only once in that tithi what is called Habisyanna (sacred food, boiled rice with ghee) and should on that day prepare an open shade in a temporary building, twenty four (24) feet in dimensions, on a level piece of ground, that is considered holy; it is to be equipped with a post and a flag. Next, this is to be heaped over with yellow earth and cow dung. Then a raised platform called the Vedi, six feet wide and one and a half foot high, level and hard, is to be erected, and provided with an excellent space thereon for the seat of the Devi. Provisions are to be made also for ornamented gate ways and an awning over the top.

12-17. One should invite then, those Brahmins, that observe fully the customs and usages, who are self restrained and versed in the Vedas and Vedangas, especially those who are skilled in the ceremony of worshipping the Devi.

Next, in the Pratipad tithi (the first day of the bright half), one should take one's morning ablutions in a river, or in a lake, tank or a well or in one's own residence, according to rules, and one should perform one's every day practices of Sandhya Bandanam. Afterwards he should appoint the Brahmins and give them water for washing their feet and Arghya (offerings of grass, rice, etc.,) and Madhuparka (an oblation of honey and milk, etc.) and give then, as his means permit, clothings and ornaments to them. If he happens to be rich, he should never show his miserliness here in making these gifts; for if the Brahmins be satisfied, they will try their best to make the ceremony a complete success. O king! The Chandi paths (the reading of the book called Chandi) and Bhagavata paths (the reading of some portions of the book named Bhagavat) are done on this occasion, for the satisfaction of the Goddess; and either nine Brahmins or five or three or at least one Brahmin should be appointed for the purpose. Moreover one other Brahmin, of a restrained and calm nature, is to be appointed, who would observe the fasting on the day previous (parayana). All these being done, the able man is to perform the ceremony preparatory to the solemn Devi worship, (in which the priest utters the Vedic mantra Svasti-vachana, Svasti na Indro vriddhas'ravah, etc.). Om Hrim S'rim Dum Durgayai namah is the nine lettered Durga mantra.

18-20. O king! When the ceremony has been thus commenced, one should place on the Vedi (a raised platform; an altar), the throne fitted with double silken clothes; and, on that throne, he should place the image of the Devi. The Devi, the Eternal World-Mother, is to be four-armed or eighteen armed, (4 or 18) fully provided with all the weapons, ornamented with garlands of pearls and jewels, decorated with various ornaments of gems and precious stones, wearing excellent heavenly clothings, all the parts of the image being artistically finished and endowed with all the auspicious signs, mounted on a lion, and holding conch shell, wheel, club, and lotus in Her hands.

Note The Devi, here, is represented with four (4) or eighteen (18) hands.

21-22. In the absence of the image, one should place an earthen water-pot, on that throne, thoroughly purified by the Vedic Mantras, filled with gold and jewels, and filled fully with the water, brought from a sacred river or a sacred place of pilgrimage and with five young shoots of plants, the extremities of branches bearing new leaves immersed in water. Beside the water-pot on the throne, there should be a symbol (Diagram or Yantra) with the nine lettered Mantram (Om Hrim S'rim Chandikayai namah) in it for the purpose of worship.

23. One should place on one's side all the materials of worship in their due places, and then have the music and other sounding drums played, for the good fortune and prosperity of the fannily.

Note Look for the mantras in the book Mantramaho Dadhi.

24. O king! If the first day be the Nanda tithi (i.e., the first day of the bright half with the asterism Hasta in the ascendant), then that is the best time for worshipping duly the Holy Goddess. There is no doubt that special fortunate results would arise on this.

25. On the previous night, one should observe fasting, or on the previous day one should take only one meal of Habisyanna (boiled rice and ghee) and on the next day one should make a Sankalpa (an avowal of the purpose to perform a rite) and then begin worship.

26. One should pray before the Goddess thus, "O Mother, Mother of the World! I will perform this excellent Navaratra vow; be pleased to help me in every respect."

27. One is to observe, as far as possible, all the rules enjoined in this vow and then utter the mantras and do the worship according to the prescribe rules.

28-31. First of all, one should worship duly the Goddess Jagaddhatri, presenting Her Chandan (sandal paste), Aguru (a fragrant wood, the aloe wood). Camphor, the flowers Mandara (one of the five trees of the celestial regions), Karaja a kind of fragrant flower)! As'oka, Champaka, Karavir, Malati, and Brahmi and various lovely sweet scented flowers and good Bel leaves, Dhupa (incense, a fragrant gum burnt before idols) and lamps. Next one should present the fruits cocoanut, Matulinga, the pomegranate, bananas, oranges, the jack fruits, Bel and various other delicious fruit and then, offering Her arghya, present boiled rice and other food with a heart, full of devotion.

32. Those who eat meat, they can sacrifice animals in this worship of the Devi; and, for this purpose, goat and wild boars are the best.

33-34. O sinless one! The goats, etc., offered as a sacrifice before the Devi attain to unending heavens. Therefore persons offering the sacrifices of goats do not incur any sin. O king! The goats, etc., and other beast offered as a sacrifice before the Devas undoubtedly go to the heavenly regions; therefore, in all the S'astras, it has been decided that this killing of animals in a sacrifice is considered as non¬ killing.

35. Now, for doing the Homa ceremony one should prepare, according to one's requirements, a triangular pit from one to ten hands in dimension and a triangular level piece of ground covered with sand.

36. Daily, thrice, one should worship the Devi with various lovely articles and finally make a great festivity with dancing, singing and music.

37. Everyday he should sleep on the ground and worship the virgins (young girl from the age of two to the age of ten) with nectar like sweetmeats and beautiful clothings aud ornaments.

38. Everyday one virgin or increased by one, two, or three every day or nine virgins in all the days respectively are to be worshipped.

39. O king! One should perform worshipping this Kumari (virgin) Puja for the satisfaction of the Devi, as his means allow; never one is to shew miserliness in this.

40. O king! Hear the rules of the virgin worship that I am going to tell you. The virgin, aged one year, is not to be worshipped; for they are quite ignorant as to smell and tasting various delicious things.

41-43. The virgin aged two years is named the Kumari; aged three years is named the Trimurti four years, is called the Kalyani; five years, Rohini; six years, Kalika; seventh year, Chandika; eighth year, S'ambhavT; ninth year, Durga; and a virgin, aged ten years, is called Subhadra. Virgins aged more than ten years are not allowed in all ceremonies.

44. One should worship these virgins, taking their names and observing all the rules. I am now mentioning the different results that arise from the worship of these nine classes of virgins.

45. The worship of Kumari leads to the extinction of miseries and poverty, to the extirpation of one's enemies and the increment of riches, longevity and power.

46. The Trimurti Puja yields longevity, and the acquisition of the three things, Dharma, wealth, and desires, the coming in of riches, sons and grandsons.

47. Those who want learning, victory, kingdonn and happiness, they should worship the Kalyani, the fructitier of all desires.

48-49. Men should worship Rohini duly for the cure of diseases. For the destruction of enemies, the worship of the Kalika with devotion is the best. For prosperity and riches, Chandika is to be worshipped with devotion. O king! For the enchanting and overpowering of one's enemies, for the removal of miseries and poverty, and for victory in battles, S'ambhavi worship is the best.

50-51. For the destruction of awfully terrible enemies and for happiness in the next world, the worship of Durga is the safest and best. People worship Subhadra when they want their desires to be fulfilled.

52. People should, with great devotion, worship the Kumaris (virgins) with the mantrams "S'rirastu" or other mantrams, beginning with "S'ri" or with the seed mantrams.

53. The Goddess who can create without any difficulty all the sacred tattvas of the Kumar Kartikeya and who effects, as if in sport, the creation of all the Devas Brahma and others; I am worshiping the same Kumari Devi.

54. She who is appearing under the three forms as differentiated by the three gunas Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas, and who is appearing in multiple forms, owing to the differentiations of the three gunas again into various minor differences, I am worshipping Her the Trimurti Devi.

55. She who being worshipped always fares us with auspicious things, I am worshipping Her, with devotion, the Kumari Kalyani, the awarder of all desires.

56. I am worshipping the Rohini Devi with a heart, full of devotion who is germinating all the karmas in seed forms, that have accumulated owing to past deeds.

57. She who, at the end of a Kalpa gathers unto Her in the form of Kali all this Universe, moving and unmoving, I worship that Kalika Devi with devotion.

58. She, who is furious and wrathful and hence is called Chandika and who killed the two Demons Chanda and Munda I bow down to Her humbly with devotion, to that Chandika Devi, who destroys the terrible sins.

59. I worship that S'ambhavT Devi, the giver of all pleasures and happiness, whose form is the Veda Brahma, and whose origin is without any cause, and whe is so recited in the Vedas.

60. She who saves from danger her devotees and who always delivers from various difficulties and troubles, whom all the Devas are incapable to know, I worship with devotion that Durga Devi the destroyer of all calamities.

61. I, with my mind devoted, offer my salutations to that Subhadra Devi, Who procures all auspiciousness to Her devotees and removes all inauspicious incidents.

62. Thus, in the mantrams, above described, people should always worship the virgin girls, giving them clothings, ornaments, garlands, scents, and various other articles.

Here ends the 26th Chapter on the narration of what are to be done in the Navaratri in the Maha Puranam in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! Those Kumaris, who are defective in limbs, who are lepers, who are filled with sores and ulcers over their bodies, whose bodies emit offensive smell or whose bodies are polluted, or those who are of a bad family are never to be accepted for worship in the Navaratra ceremony festival.

2-3. Those who are born blind, who are squint-eyed, who are blind of one eye, of disgraceful appearance, whose bodies are overgrown with hairs, or who are diseased or who are in their menstruation or in any other signs, indicating thus their passionate youthful tendencies, or those who are very lean and thin, or born of widows, or of women unmarried are always to be avoided in this Puja.

4. O king! It is only the healthy, graceful, beautiful, without any ulcers, and who are not bastards, those virgins are to be selected for the Kumari Puja.

5. In all the cases, the Kumaris, born of the Brahmin families, can be taken; when victory is desired, the Kumaris of the Kshattriya families are preferred; when profit is wanted, the Vais'ya Kumaris and, when general welfare is wanted, the S'udra Kumaris are to be taken.

6-7. O king! In the Navaratri Puja, the Brahmins should select for worship the Brahmin Kumaris; Kshattriyas, Brahmin or Kshattriya; the Vais'ya worshippers can select for worship Brahmin, Kshattriya, or Vais'ya Kumaris. And the S'udra worshippers can select, for worship, any of the four classes. But artists and artisans should select for worship the Kumaris from their own families and tribes respectively.

8. If persons become unable to worship on all the days, then it is advised that they should perform the special worship on the eighth day (Astami tithi).

9-10. In ancient times, on the eighth day, Bhadra Kali Goddess, the destroyer of the sacrifice, started by Daksa, appeared on that day in hideous forms, surrounded by hundreds and lakhs of Yoginis (one of a class of sixty goddesses or female attendants on Kali). Therefore one should worship in particular on the eighth day with scents, garlands, and pastes and various offerings.

11. On this day, Payasa (a food prepared of rice, milk and sugar), and fresh fish are to be specially offered to the Deity. The Homa ceremonies, feasting of the Brahmans, and the worship of the Mother Goddess are done with various offerings, the fruits and flowers, and in good quantities.

12. O king! Those who are unable to observe the fasting in this Navaratra Puja, will reap the same fruits, if they observe fasting for the three days only the Saptami, the Astami, and the Navami tithis.

13. On the seventh, eighth, and ninth days, in these three tithis (lunar days) if one worships with devotion, one will acquire all the merits.

14. When the Devi's worship, Homa, Kumari worship and the feasting of the Brahmanas, all these are done, know that the Navaratri Puja is completed.

15. O Janamejaya! No worship or vow or charitable gifts extant in this world, can be compared, as regards their meritorious effects, with this Navaratra Puja.

16. On observing this Navaratram Vrata, one gets riches, crops, sons and grandsons, prosperity and happiness, longevity, health and heaven and even the final beatitude.

17. Those who are desirous of learning, riches, or sons will get them all if they perform this most auspicious Navaratra ceremony, able to confer fortunes on the devotees.

18. On the performance of this sacrifice, those who want learning get all the learning; and he, who is deprived of his kingdom will get back all his kingdoms.

19. Those who did not, in their previous births, perform this meritorious vow, they become diseased, poor and devoid of sons in their present births.

20. Those women that are barren, or widows or devoid of sons, infer that they never, in their previous births, performed this sacrifice.

21. Those who have not performed the Navaratra ceremony, how can they acquire riches in this world and acquire happiness and peace in the next?

22. He who has worshipped the Goddess Bhagavati Bhavani Devi with young leaves of the Bel tree, besmeared with red sandal paste, it is he that will undoubtedly become the king in this world.

23. That man who has failed to worship the Goddess of the whole universe. Who fructifies all the pursuits of human life. Who destroys all the troubles, pains and miseries. Who is all suspicious Bhagavati Bhavani, that fellow is sure to pass his days in this world, wretched, impoverished, and surrounded by his enemies on all sides.

24. When Hah, Hara, Brahma, Indra, Fire, Varuna, Kuvera, and the Sun when all these possessing all the wealth and powers and filled with the highest felicities, when they meditate constantly the Goddess of the universe. Who is All Existence Intelligence, and Bliss, then what to speak of the human beings! How is it that persons do not worship that Chandika Devi, the One that leads all human pursuits to success!

25-26. Why should not the people worship the Goddess Bhavani, the bestower of all happiness, whose other names are Svaha and Svadha, the mantrams under whose intrinsic energies the Devas and the Pitris always get satisfied, and which are recited by all the Munis when they chant in every sacrifice the Vedic mantrams?

Under Whose Will power Brahma the Creator, creates all this Universe? Under Whose energy, the Visnu Janaradan, the Deva of the Devas, incarnates in this earth in various forms and preserves this world, and under Whose power, S'ankara destroys this whole Universe?

27. No body, in this whole universe, can have his existence without having recourse to that Prakriti Devi, the S'akti incarnate; be he a Devi, a human being or a bird, or a serpent, Gandharva, Rakhsasa, Pis'acha, a mountain or a tree, he cannot move even of his own accord, without the help of this Force.

28. Therefore, why should not anybody worship that Chandika Devi, the Awarder of all desires and wealth? And how is it, that a man desiring one of the 4 objects of human pursuits, Dharma, wealth, desires, and the final beatitude, observes not the vow regarding that Deity.

29. So much so, that even a man who has committed a heinous offence, five such are enumerated, viz. (1) killing a Brahman, (2) drinking liquor, (3) stealing gold, (4) adultery with the wife of a spiritual guide (5) associating with any such person, if he performs the Navaratra vow, he will be absolved entirely from all such sins; there is no doubt in this.

30. O king! Once on a time there lived in the country of Kosala, a trader, poor and miserable, having under him many relations and dependants in his family, whose provisions he had to provide.

31. He had many sons and daughters; when they were very hungry and distressed, then they used to get a little food and that in the evening, only once in twenty-four hours.

32. That trader, too, worked under another, the whole day; and when it was evening, he used also to take his meals. Thus, being very much anxious and distressed, he maintained somehow or other his family members (that are to be maintained).

33-34. This trader was of a quiet temper, of a good conduct, truthful, always ready to act religiously, devoid of anger, steady and contented, void of vanity and jealousy; daily he used to worship the Devas, Pitris, and the guests and used to take his meals after all his family members had taken their meals.

35-36. Thus many days passed away when that good trader, named Sus'ila, being very much perplexed with poverty and hunger, asked a quiet tempered Brahmin "O Bhudeva! (deva incarnate on the earth) kindly tell me positively how this state of poverty can be got rid off!

37. O holy minded! Kindly advise me such as preserves my honour; I do not want wealth, nor do I like to be a rich man; O Brahmin! I want just enough to meet with the expenses, incurred in maintaining my family; please advise so that I may be able to earn this much only.

38. I have many sons; I have not got any food, sufficient enough to give them even a handful of rice.

39. Alas! My youngest son was crying today for food; I have driven him out of the house by chastising him. O Brahmin! What am I do? I have got no wealth; my heart is burning with grief and sorrow; my baby has gone out of the house, weeping and hungry.

40. My daughter has come to a marriageable age; I have no money. Her age has exceeded ten years; the marriageable age limit has been exceeded. Alas! What am I to do?

41-42. O Brahmin! I am expressing my sorrow for all that. You are merciful, and all-knowing; tell me any means, be it asceticism, gifts, vow, or the reciting of any mantrams by which I can maintain my family; I want wealth just sufficient for that purpose and nothing more.

43. O high minded one! Kindly devise and tell me some means by which my family members become happy in this world.”

44-46. Vyasa said The Brahmin that used to practice vows when thus asked by the trader told him gladly “O trader! Do now the Navaratri vow, the most auspicious, and worship the Bhagavati, perform Homa, and feast the Brahmins. Have the Vedas and Puranas recited and recite then slowly the S’akti mantram and try, as much as you can, to do other concomitant ceremonies; and your desires will thus be undoubtedly fulfilled.

47. There is no other vow superior to this in this world; this vow is very holy and will bring unto you happiness.

48. This vow leads to wisdom and liberation; destroys enemies and increases posterity and prosperity.

49. In former days, S’ri Rama Chandra suffered very much owing to his being deprived of his kingdom; and, then on account of his wife being stolen away. Subsequently he performed this Navaratra vow in Kiskindhya, his heart being heavily laden with grief.

50. Though troubled very much, on account of the bereavement of Sita, still Rama Chandra observed the Vow of Navaratra and worshipped the Goddess according to the prescribed rules and rites.

51-52. As a fruit of this worship he was able to bridge the great ocean and kill the giant Kumbha Kama, Meghanada, the Ravana’s son, and Ravana, the king of Lanka; and subsequently he was able to recover his Sita. He installed Vibhisana on the throne of Lanka (Ceylon) and at last returned to Ayodhya and reigned there without any enemies.

53. O best of the Vais’yas! Rama Chandra, of incomparable prowess, was able to obtain happiness in this world on account of the influence of this Navaratra ceremony.

54-55. Vyasa said O king! That Vais’ya, hearing thus the Brahmin’s words, made him his Guru, was initiated by him in the seed mantra of Maya and ceaselessly, without any laziness, recited slowly the mantram for nine nights and worshipped the Devi, with great caution and with various offerings. Thus for nine consecutive years he devoted himself to the Japam (reciting slowly) of the seed mantra of Maya till, at last, when the ninth year was completed, the Great Goddess appeared distinctly before his eyes on the night of the great Astami tithi (the eighth day of the bright half) and gave him various boons and delivered the Vais’ya from poverty and bestowed on him wealth and his other desired things.

Here ends the 27th Chapter on the virgins fit to be worshipped and the Glory of the Devi in the Maha Puranam S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa in the Third Adhyaya.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said O Muni! How did Ramchandra celebrate the Devi's Puja, that leads to happiness? Who was He! And how was stolen away His Sita? How was He deprived of His kingdom? Please satisfy me by narrating all these incidents to me.

2. Vyasa said O king! There lived, in days of yore, in the city of Ayodhya, a prosperous king of the solar dynasty named Das'aratha. He always worshipped the Devas and Brahmanas.

3-5. He had four celebrated sons Rama, Laksmana, Bharata and Satrughna. These four sons were equally learned and beautiful and they always did actions agreeable to the king. Of these, Ramachandra was the son of the Queen Kaus'alya, Bharata was the son of Kaikeyi, and the good looking Laksmana and Satrughna were the twin sons of Sumitra. While young, they learned the art of archery and began to play with bows and arrows in their hands.

6-7. Thus educated and purified, the four sons began to give delight more and more to the king; one day the Maharsi Vis'vamitra came to Ayodhya and aked from the king Das'aratha the help of his son Ramachandra for the protection of his sacrificial ceremonies. The king could not cancel the Vis'vamitra's request and sent with him Rama, accompanied by Laksmana.

8-11. The lovely Rama and Laksmana accompanied the Muni on his way back. There lived a terrible looking Rakhsasi, named Tadaka, in a forest on their way, who used to give great troubles to the ascetics; and Rama killed her with only one arrow. Next he killed Subahu and shot arrows at another night-wanderer Maricha and made him senseless, almost dead and threw him at a great distance and thus saved VisVamitra from all the obstacles troubling him in his sacrificial ceremonies. Thus fulfilling the great work, protecting the sacrificial ceremonies, Rama, Laksmana and the Muni Cowsick, the three, started for the kingdom of Mithila. On his way, Rama Chandra rescued Ahalya from the curse that she was suffering from.

12-13. At last the two brothers, accompanied by the Muni, reached the city Videhanagar. Just at this time the king Janaka of Ayodhya made a vow to give in marriage Sita to anybody who will be able to break the bow of S'iva; Rama broke that bow into two and married Sita, born of Laksmi's parts. The king Janaka gave in, marriage, to Laksmana his own-daughter Urmila.

14. The good and auspicious Bharata and Satrughna married respectively Mandavi and S'rutakirti, the two daughters of Kus'adhvaja.

15. O king! Thus, in the great city of Mithila, the four brothers performed their marriage ceremonies, according to the prescribed rules and rites.

16. The king Das'aratha, then seeing Rama well qualified to take charge of the kingdom, proposed to install him on the throne of Ayodhya.

17. The queen Kaikeyi, seeing that various articles were being collected for the installation of Rama, asked for the two boons, promised before, from her husband Das'aratha, who was completely under her control.

18. The first request was her own son, Bharata's becoming the king of Ayodhya; and the second request was the banishing of Rama to the forest for fourteen years.

19. Thus Ramachandra went accompanied by Sita and Laksmana to the Dandaka forest, frequented by the Raksasas.

20. The high souled king Das'aratha felt very much due to bereavement of his son, remembered the curse given to him by Andhaka Muni and left his mortal coil.

21. Bharata, seeing that his father died solely on, account of his mother, refrained from becoming the king of Ayodhya, the prosperous city and wanted the welfare of his brother Rama.

22. Ramachandra went to the forest Pahchavati. One day the youngest sister of Ravana, named Surpanakha became very passionate and came to Rama; whereon Ramachandra disfigured her by cutting off her nose and ears.

23. Seeing her nose thus cut away, the Raksasas Khara, Dusana, and others fought very hard against the powerful Ramachandra.

24. The truly powerful Rama killed Khara, Dusana and all other powerful Raksasas, for the welfare of the Munis.

25. Then Surpanakha went to Lanka and informed Ravana of her nose having been cut and of the death of Khara, Dusana and others.

26. The wicked and malignant Ravana, hearing of their death, became filled with anger and, mounting on a chariot, quickly went to the forest of Maricha.

27. Ravana expressed his desire to take away Sita; so ordered that magician Maricha to assume the form of a golden deer and go to Rama and entice him away.

28. The magician Maricha assumed the form of a golden deer and reached the sight of Janaki. Then that variously spotted deer began to move about near the Sita Devi.

29. Looking at the beautiful golden splendour of the body of that golden deer, Sita Devi, prompted as it were by the great Fate, spoke to Ramachandra like other independent women "O Lord! Bring me the skin of the deer."

30. Rama too, not judging at all, as if it was the work of Destiny, asked Laksamana to remain there and protect Sita, took hold of his bows and arrows and went after the deer.

31. Infinitely skilled in magic, the deer seeing Hah in the shape of Rama sometimes came and sometimes came not within his sight and travelled from one forest to another.

32. When Rama saw that He had come very far away from His place, He became angry and drew his bow and shot sharp arrows at that deer, the transformed Maricha.

33. The deceitful conjuror Raksasa, being thus shot very violently and pained intensely, cried out "O brother Laksmana! I am killed" and breathed his last.

34-35. This loud awful cry reached Janaki's ears. She took that voice for Rama's voice and told to Laksmana in a grieved tone "Laksmana, go quickly. I fear Rama is killed; hear the voice 'O Laksmana! come quickly and deliver me' is calling you to go there."

36. Laksmana then replied "Mother! You are alone in this forest; therefore I cannot leave you thus even if Ramchandra be killed.

37. O daughter of Janaka! Rama has ordered me to remain here. Now if I leave you and go elsewhere, then I will be charged with having disobeyed his order. Fearing that, I am unable to leave this place.

38. It seems to me, moreover, that some magician has carried Rama away from here; I am therefore unable to move a step from here and leave you alone.

39. Hold patience; let me consider; I find no such man as can kill Rama; I am unable to leave you by any means alone here and to go away, disobeying Rama's orders."

40. Vyasa said O king! Then the young wife of Rama, having handsome teeth, began to cry aloud, fearfully, as if made to do so by Destiny, and uttered the cruel words to the pure Laksmana.

41. "O son of Sumitra! I know why you are so much attached towards me? I know very well that you have been sent here by Bharata to accompany us simply to obtain me.

42. O vile Ksattriya, skilled in magic! I am not that sort of woman acting to my wanton will; never I will accept you of my will as my husband in case S'ri Ramchandra be dead.

43. In case S'ri Rama does not return, I will certainly commit suicide; without him I would be very much grieved and afflicted with sorrows; and I would not be able to hold on my life.

44. O Saumitri! Whether you remain here or do not remain, I won't request anything more to you; for I am quite unaware of your mind; but this much I like to say to you, where has your intimacy towards your religious elder brother now gone?"

45-46. Hearing thus the Sita Devi's words, Laksmana became exceedingly sorry; and, being suffocated with heaving sighs on account of the internal pain told Sita "O! One born from without any womb! Why are you uttering so cruel and malignant words; I clearly see when you are speaking such unworthy words, that some great evil is sure to befall on you very soon."

47. O king! Thus saying, the spirited Laksmana left Sita and went out weeping very much, and, being very much afflicted with grief, traced the footsteps of his elder and went on in search of him.

48. When Laksmana thus departed, Ravana entered into the hermitage in the guise of a deceitful beggar (Bhiksu wearing a red garb).

49. Janaki took that villain Ravana to be a Yogi and respectfully gave him offerings of worship and forest fruits.

50-52. That villain asked Sita humbly, in a gentle tone, "O beautiful! Your eyes are beautiful like Palasa lotus leaves; therefore it seems that you are not an ordinary woman; how is it that you are here thus alone in a wild forest? O fair one! Who is your father? who is your brother and who is your husband? Being such a beautiful one, how is it that you are in this forest here like an ordinary woman, dumbfounded? O good looking one! You are worthy to live in a palace filled with nectar; why are you living, in this hovel, in this wild forest like an ordinary Muni's wife, when your beauty is shining in lustrous beams like a Deva girl?"

53-55. Vyasa said The daughter of Janaki, hearing the words of Ravana, the husband of Mandodari, unfortunately took him to be a good Yogi and replied in the following way "Perhaps you have heard that a prosperous king Das'aratha is reigning in the Ayodhya city. He has four sons; the eldest of these, S'ri Ram Chandra, is my husband. The king offered two boons to Kaikeyi; due to which Ram Chandra has been exiled in this forest and is with his brother Laksmana.

56. I am the daughter of the King Janaka; my name is Sita; Ram Chandra has broken the bow of S'iva and has married me.

57. Resting under his prowess of arms, I am resting here fearlessly in this wild forest; seeing a golden deer, he has gone out to kill that for me.

58. Laksmana, too, hearing his voice has gone just now. O Yogi! I am living here depending on the strength of these two brothers.

59. Thus I have told you all about our living in this forest; shortly they will come and worship you duly.

60-61. The man who has controlled his passions and has become a Yati is like Visnu incarnate; therefore I have worshipped you. O Yogi! Our As'ram is in the midst of this terrible forest, surrounded by Rakhsasas. Therefore I am asking you how is it that you have been able to come here in this dress of Tridandi (a Sannyasi Yogi); please speak in the name of Truth before me."

62. Ravana said "O askance looking one! I am the king of Lanka, the husband of Mandodari. O beautiful one! it is for you that I have put on this dress of Yati.

63. O beautiful! My two brothers Khara and Dusana have been killed in this forest; and being urged by my sister I have come here.

64-65. Now leave your this man-husband, residing in the forest as a pauper, devoid of fortune and wealth; and worship me as a husband. O fair one! I am Ravana, the king of kings; you now become my lord.

66. O daughter of Janaka! I am the lord of the Regents of the quarters; and yet I bow my head down to your lotus feet; better accept me and fulfil my desires today.

67-68. Formerly I asked of you from your father, the king Janaka; but he then said, that he had laid a pledge, 'Whoever will break the S'iva's bow will marry my daughter.' The Bhagvan Rudra is my Guru; hence I feared to break his bow, and therefore I was not present in your Svayamvara. But from that time my mind is always thinking of you and is in a state of bereavement for you.

69. O beautiful one! Hearing now that you are residing in this forest, I, impelled by my previous fascination for you, have now come hither; and you better now crown my labour with success."

Thus ends the 28th Chapter on the incidents connected with the Navaratri and the description of Ramayanam in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa in the 3rd Adhyaya.

Note: The story about the origin of Sita Devi runs thus Ravana, the king of Ceylon (Lanka) practised very severe austerities and got extraordinary powers. He brought the three worlds under his subjection, levied taxes from all. The Devas and all the other inhabitants of the several worlds paid their taxes, as imposed by Ravana. Ravana sent messengers to the Risis and the Munis, the ascetics, dwelling in forests and asked them to pay their taxes. The Risis replied that they had no property. But Ravana insisted. The Risis gave, then, blood, cutting their thighs, in a jar that was carried to Lanka. Ravana kept that jar under the custody of his queen Mandodari, and instructed her that the jar contained poison and that she should not eat that. Mandodari, however, ate a portion of that, out of curiosity, and became pregnant and gave birth to a daughter. Fearing Ravana, she floated the jar with the daughter, in the ocean, which, floating through oceans and rivers, came and touched the lands of the King Janaka. The peasants while tilling, found that and took the girl to the king, who reared her as his daughter. Thus Sita, born out of the blood of the Brahmanas, took away subsequently the kingdom, life, and all of Ravana.

Another version is this As before, the messengers advised the Munis to give something; otherwise Ravana would insist and put them to various troubles. So the Munis cut their thighs and gave blood as their tax, saying that that blood in the jar would cause ruin and desolation to the country where it will be kept. Ravana, hearing this, ordered the jar to be carried to the kingdom of the king Janaka, thus causing ruin to him. The jar was brought and placed in the fields of Janaka.

Now it happened that there was a very severe drought; rains were absolutely wanting; and a dire famine was imminent. The Brahmin Pundits informed the king that if the king and his wife ploughed themselves the fields, rains would fall. So the king with his wife did that, the king holding the plough and the queen holding the hand of the king. The fore end of the plough accidentally hit upon that jar, out of which came out Sita Devi with two women Riddhi and Siddhi, waving chowries on her two sides. The two ladies disappeared and Sita Devi looked like a girl. The king Janaka reared her, as if his daughter. Sita Devi used to lift daily with her left hand the bow of S'iva, kept in the king's house, and daily worshipped that, and thus cleansed the place. Seeing this, the king Janaka pledged the vow that, whoever would break the S'iva's bow, would marry Sita.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said Hearing these vicious words, Janaki became very much confounded with fear and began to tremble; somehow collecting herself she began to say “O descendant of the family of Pulastya! Why are you, prompted by lust, uttering these sinful words? I am born of the family of Janaka; therefore I cannot act wantonly according to my own inclination.

3. O ten faced one! Better you go to Lanka quickly; else Ramchandra will take away your life; you will no doubt incur death for my sake.”

4-5. Thus saying, Sita Devi went towards the Sacred fire called Garhapatya, placed in the house, with words “go away” “go away” in her mouth. He, whose wickedness has caused all the Lokas cry out “save” “save”, the same Havana, of perverted intellect, then assumed his real form, went towards the hut and caught hold of Sita Devi who was crying, bewildered with fear.

6. Sita cried “Rama” “Rama” “Laksmana”, and the sinful Havana caught hold of her and quickly mounting her on the chariot, fast got away.

7-9. On the way Jatayu, the son of Aruna, met Havana; and a terrible fight then ensued between the two, when the evil minded Havana, the king of the Demons, killed Jatayu. Havana carried Sita to Lanka. Then Sita cried like a forlorn deer and Havana kept her in the As’oka forest (Jaffna), surrounded and guarded by the Raksasis. The king of Lanka tempted Sita with comforting words, and the kingdoms, etc., but she never swerved from her own pure and stainless chastity.

10-12. On the other side, Ramachandra after killing the deer and taking it was coming back calmly, when he saw Laksmana going to him and said “O Laksmana! What a great blunder you have committed! Hearing the voice of that villain conjurer, how is it that you have left my dear Sita alone and come here!” Laksmana said “O Lord! Being pierced sharply by Sita Devi’s words (coming like sharpened arrows) and being driven away by her, under the guidance of the Inevitable Destiny as it were, I have come here; there is no doubt in this.”

13. They, then, both hurriedly went to their hut, made of leaves; and there not finding Sita, they were very much afflicted with sorrows and went in quest of Janaki.

14. Rama and Laksmana in their search for Sita, came at last to the spot where Jatayu, the king of birds, was lying on the surface of the earth, with his life ultimately on the point of parting away from his body.

15-16. Jatayu said Ravana, the king of Lanka, carried away today stealthily Sita Devi; I resisted that villain who then fought with me on that account and threw me down on this spot by weapons. Thus saying, the king of birds died; whereupon Ramchandra performed the burning of his dead body as well his funeral ceremonies. Then both of them went out of that place.

17. Then the Lord Ramachandra killed Kabandha and freed him from his curse; and, through his advice, he made friendship with Sugriva, the king of the monkeys, and was thus bound under a tie.

18. Next Rama killed the hero Bali as a duty and gave the excellent kingdom of Kiskindhya to his new friend Sugriva according to his promise.

19. Then, he began to ceaselessly think of the stealing away of Sita by Ravana and passed away the four months of the rainy season there with his brother Laksmana.

20. Rama, being very much shaken on account of the bereavement of Sita, began to address Laksmana thus “O Saumitre! The desires of the daughter of the king of Kekaya are now fulfilled.

21. Janaki will no more be obtained; without Janaki I will not go back to Ayodhya; without Janaki I won’t be able to live any longer.

22. Kingdom lost, dwelling in forests happened, father left his body, at last the dear wife is lost; the cruel hands of Destiny are tormenting me now thus; what more it will inflict, how can I say now?

23. O Brother Laksmana! What is to happen is very hard to be known beforehand by men; I cannot say, what is written on my fate after this, painful or otherwise.

24. See! Both of us, the descendants of Manu, though born in a royal family, are exiled in forests due to our past deeds.

25. O Laksmana! It is by Fate, too, that you, abandoning the pleasures of the royal surroundings, have come out with me; and you, too, are now suffering heaps of dire troubles with me.

26. No one in our family suffered so much as we are suffering; why we talk of our family! No human being was ever born or will ever take his birth that suffered or will suffer like me so many troubles, will be like me incapacitated and a penniless pauper.

27. O Saumitre! I am drowned in the ocean of pains and troubles; What am I to do now? I have no means to cross this ocean; I am quite helpless, no doubt.

28. No money, nor armies, O hero! you are my one and only one companion; O brother! On whom shall I be angry when I am suffering on account of my own deeds?

29. Alas! The kingdom that could have been compared in prosperity to the Indra Sabha, was almost obtained by me when, in an instant, I lost it and am now in exile in forest. Laksman! Who can ascertain what is in the womb of Destiny?

30. Oh! That soft bodied Sita, with her child like nature came out with us in this forest; but the inexorable Fate has now drowned her, that perfectly beautiful woman, into an ocean of sorrows, difficult to be crossed?

31. That fair daughter of Janaka is extremely devoted to me; she is pure and holy. How will she be able to suffer troubles in the house of the king of Lanka!

32. O Laksmana! Sita Devi will never come under the control of Havana; how can that excellent chaste woman act like an ordinary public woman?

33. O Laksmana! Rest assured that in case Havana exercises, out of his lordly position, any violence on Sita, she will rather put an end to her life than come under his control.

34. O Laksmana! And when Janaki sacrifices her life, I will assuredly do the same; for, of what use, then is this body to me when that fair Sita has gone away with her life?”

35. While the lotus eyed Ramchandra was thus weeping and expressing his regrets and sorrows, the religious Laksmana consoled him with the following sweet, truthful, words

36. “O Hero of the heroes! Kindly cast aside this weakness and have patience; I will soon kill that villain demon Havana and get you back your Sita Devi.

37. The wise steady persons remain on account of their fortitude, unshaken in their hearts whether in joy or in sorrow; whereas men, of little intellect, indulge in sorrows when they are happy.

38. Conning in union and going out in disunion, both are under the hands of Destiny; What, then, there is the need for expressing sorrows for this body, which is not soul.

39. As we have been banished from our kingdom into this forest, as there has happened this bereavement of Sita, so, in proper time, we will again get back Sita Devi.

40. O Darling of Janaki! There must come a time when sorrows will be converted into happiness and vice versa; there will be nothing otherwise. So avoid this sorrow now and have firmness.

41. There are multitudes of monkeys, who are our helping hands; they will go to all the four quarters and bring back to us the news of the daughter of Janaka; there is no doubt in this.

42. O Lord! Knowing the way to Lanka, we will go there and kill by our prowess the villainous Ravana and bring back Sita Devi.

43. Or we will call Bharata with Satrughna and with all the armies we all united will kill our enemy; why, then, are you thus expressing sorrows in vain.

44. O Lord! our ancestor Raghu, the hero of heroes, the monarch; won his victories over the ten quarters; and you belong to that family and are now plunged in grief!

45. Alone, I can defeat all the Devas and the Demons; and if I get help, is there any doubt, then, in my killing, that Ravana, the disgrace of the family of Raksasas.

46. O Powerful One! We may call to, our aid the king of Janaka and root out that wicked source of enemy to the Devas.

47-48. O Descendant of Raghu! Like the rim of a wheel, happiness and pain come alternately; it is not that happiness, or pain comes and remains for ever. He whose mind is very much overwhelmed, with pain or happiness, is the man who is always plunged in an ocean of misery; and he can never expect to become happy.

49. Seel In days of yore, Indra once got addicted into vicious habits. The Devas united put in place of Indra, the king Nahusa.

50. Then Indra, terrified, relinquished his post and passed very many years into an unknown and unnoticed state within the lotus.

51. Again, when time changed, he got his own post back; and the king Nahusa fell down on this earth and became transformed into a boa constrictor (a big serpent), through the curse of a Risi.

52. The king Nahusa wanted the wife of Indra and insulted a Brahmin; therefore, he was, under the curse of Maharsi Agasti, transformed into a snake on the earth.

53. Therefore, O Raghava! One ought not to plunge in grief, when a danger comes; rather one should be quite energetic in times of danger and remain firm; thus, the sages do.

54. O Lord of the world! You are high minded, omniscient and omnipotent; why are you now overwhelmed with grief, like an ordinary mortal."

55. Vyasa said Oh king! Thus consoled by Laksmana, Rama discarded all his heavy sorrows and began to remain with his heart firm and at rest.

Thus ends the 29th chapter on the stealing of Sita and the sorrows of Rama in the 3rd Skandha of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said O king! Rama and Laksmana, discussing thus, remained silent; when the Risi Narada appeared there from the sky above, singing the Rathantara Sama Veda hymns in tune and musical gamut with his renowned lute.

3-4. Ramachandra, of indomitable prowess, on beholding him rose up from his seat and gave him quickly an excellent seat and offerings of water for washing his feet. Then he worshipped the Muni and stood with folded hands. When the Muni ordered him, he took his seat close by Narada.

5-8. On Ramachandra taking his seat there with Laksmana with a grievous heart, Narada asked him in a sweet tone “O Descendant of Raghu! Why are you being afflicted with sorrows like an ordinary mortal? I know that the evil minded Ravana has stolen Sita Devi. I heard while in the heavens that Ravana, the descendant of Pulastya, stole away Janaki, out of fascination, could not know that would be the cause of his death. O Descendant in the family of Kakutstha! It is for the killing of Ravana that your birth has taken place; and for that purpose Janaki has been stolen now.

Note The real Janaki was not stolen; Her shadow form was stolen.

9-12. O Raghava! The Devi Janaki, in her previous birth, was the daughter of a Muni and practised asceticism. While engaged in her austerities, in her holy hermitage, Ravana came and looking at her, prayed that beautiful woman to become his wife. Hearing this, she gave a good reproach to Ravana, when he perforce caught hold of her hairs. That ascetic woman got very angry, and, considering her body polluted by the devil's contact, resolved to put an end to her life and cursed Ravana, thus "O Villain! I will be born on the surface of the earth, not from any womb but simply for your destruction and ruin." Thus saying, she parted with her life.

13. O Tormentor of the foes! Ravana, the king of the Raksasas, mistook a garland for the extremely poisonous serpent and has stolen away Sita Devi, the part incarnation of Laksmi, in order to root out his race.

14. O Kakutstha! When the Devas prayed for the destruction of that wicked insolent Ravana, difficult to be subdued, you are born on this earth, in the family of Aja, as a part incarnate of Hah, beyond birth, old age and death.

15. O mighty-armed! Have patience; Sita Devi is meditating you, day and night.

16-17. Indra himself, the king of the Devas, sends the nectar and the Heavenly Cow's Milk in a pot to Her daily; and She subsists on that, alone.

O Lord! On drinking the Heavenly Cow's Milk, the lotus eyed Sita Devi is living without any hunger or thirst! I use to see Her daily.

18. O Descendant of Raghu! I am now telling how that Ravana can be killed. Perform, in this very month of AsVin, the vow with devotion.

19. Fasting for nine nights, the worship of the Bhagavati, and repeating the Mantram silently and performing the Homa ceremony, observing all the rules, will certainly fulfill one's all the desires.

20. O the best in the race of Raghu! You should offer the sacrifice before the Goddess of a sacred and unblameable animal, perform Japam and Homa ceremony equivalent to one-tenth of Japam. If you do all this, you will certainly be able to release Sita.

21. In days of yore, Visnu, S'iva and Brahma and the Devas in the Heavens all performed this worship of the Goddess.

22. Therefore, O Raghava! Every person desiring happiness, specially those that have fallen under great difficulties, ought to do this auspicious ceremony, without the least hesitation.

23-24. O Kakutstha! Vis'vamitra, Bhrigu, Vas'istha and Kas'yapa all of them did this worship before. When some stole away the wife of Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, he, too, by the force of this worship, got his wife back. Therefore O king! dost thou also celebrate the Puja for the destruction of Ravana.

25-26. O high minded one! This vow was practised before by Indra for the destruction of Vritra, by S'iva for killing the demon Tripura, by Narayana for the killing of the demons Madhu and Kaitava; so you should also firmly resolve to perform duly this vow with your whole heart."

27. Rama replied "O Ocean of Knowledge! Who is that Devi? What is Her influence; whence has She sprung? What is Her Name? And how is that vow to be duly observed? Kindly describe all these to me in detail."

28. Narada answered "Listen, O Raghava! That Goddess is Eternal and Ever Constant Primordial Force. If you worship Her, all your difficulties will be removed and all your desires will be fulfilled.

29. She is the source of Brahma, Visnu and others and of all these living beings. Without Her force, no body would be able even to move their limbs.

30. That Supreme Auspicious Goddess is the preserving energy of Visnu, is the creative power of Brahma, and is the destroying force of S'iva.

31. Whatever there exists in this infinite Universe, whether Temporal or Eternal, She is the Underlying Force of all; how, then, can She have an origin!

32-33. Her origin is not Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a, Sun, Indra, or the other Devas, not this Earth nor this Upholder of the Earth; She is devoid of any qualities, the Giver of Salvation of all, the Full Prakriti. In the time of the final dissolution of this Universe, She lives with the Supreme Purusa.

34. She is also Saguna, full of qualities, and is the Creatrix of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a, and has empowered them, in every way, to create the three Lokas.

35. She is the Supreme Knowledge, existing before the Vedas, and the Originator of the Vedas. The individual souls, knowing Her Nature, become able to free themselves from the bondages of the world.

36. She is known by endless names. The Brahma, and the other Devas might choose to call Her according to their actions and qualities. I am unable to describe those names.

37. O descendant in the race of Raghu! Her endless names are formed by the various combinations of the various vowels and consonants from the letter 'A' to the letter 'Ksa.'"

38. Rama said "O best of the Munis! Describe briefly all the rules and regulations as to how that vow and worship are to be performed. With my heart, full of devotion and faith, I will worship the Goddess today."

39. Narada said "O Raghava! On a level plot of ground, prepare an altar. Place the Goddess there and fast for nine days.

40. O king! I will be your priest and I will, with great energy, carry out this yajha to fullfil the work of the Gods."

41-42. Vyasa said Then the powerful Bhagavan Hah, hearing all fronn the Muni, believed them to be true; and, on the approach of the month of AsVin, prepared the altar on the top of a hill and placed the Auspicious Goddess, the World Mother and, observing all the rules, performed the vow and worshipped the Goddess.

43. Fasting for nine days, Rama celebrated the vow and duly offered sacrifices, performed the worship and Homa ceremonies.

44-46. When, on the grand night of the Eighth lunar day, the two brothers completed the vow as told by Narada, the Supreme Bhagavati was pleased with the worship and appeared before them, mounted on a lion, and remaining there on the mountain top, addressed Rama and Laksmana, in a sweet grave tone, like the rumbling of a rain cloud, thus "Rama, I am satisfied with your worship; ask from me what you desire.

47. Rama! You are sent by the gods for the destruction of Ravana and are born as a part incarnate of Narayana, in the pure and stainless family of Manu.

48. It is You that, in ancient times, incarnated as a fish for serving the purpose of the Devas and preserved the Vedas by killing the terrible Raksasas for the welfare of the Universe.

49. It is You that incarnated as a tortoise and held aloft the Mandara mountain, churned the ocean and nourished the Devas.

50-51. O Rama! It is You that incarnated, in days of yore, as a boar and held aloft on your teeth this earth. It is You that assumed the form of a Man-Lion and preserved Prahlada, by tearing asunder the body of Hiranya Kas'ipu, by Your sharp nails.

52. O Descent of Raghu! It is You that assumed, in ancient times, the form of a dwarf and served the purpose of the Devas, by deceitfully cheating Bali, the younger of Indra.

53. O son of Kaus'alya! You incarnated as the son of Jamadagni in the Brahmin family, extirpated the line of Ksattriya kings and gave over this whole earth to Bhagavan Kas'yapa Risi.

54. So You are now born as the son of Das'aratha, in the stainless race of Kakutstha, at the request of the Devas, harassed by Ravana.

55-56. These powerful monkeys, born as Deva incarnates, all endowed with great power by Me, will help you. Your younger Laksmana is the incarnate of S'esa serpent; this indomitable man will kill undoubtedly Indragit, the son of Ravana.

57. You will kill Ravana; then you would worship Me, with great devotion, in the vernal season and then enjoy your kingdom according to your liking.

58. O best of the Raghus! For full eleven thousand years you will reign on this earth; and after that reenter your heavenly abode."

59. Vyasa said O king! Thus saying, the Devi disappeared. Rama Chandra became very glad and, completing that most auspicious ceremony, performed the Bejoya Puja on the tenth day and gave lots of presents to Narada and made him go towards the ocean.

60-61. O king! Thus stimulated by the Supreme Energy, the Highest Goddess brought front to front, Ramachandra, the husband of Kamala, went to the shores of the ocean, accompanied by Laksmana and the monkeys. Then he erected the bridge across the ocean and killed Ravana, the enemy of the gods. His unparalleled fame spread everywhere throughout the three Lokas.

62. He who hears with devotion this excellent account of the Devi, will get the greatest happiness in this world, and, in the end, will get the final beatitude. There is no doubt in this.

63. O king! There are extant many other Puranas, but none is equal to this S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam. Know, this is my firm belief.

Here ends the thirtieth chapter on the narration of the Navaratra ceremony by Narada and the performance of that by Rama Chandra in the 3rd Adhyaya in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa. Here ends the Third Book.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said O Vasaveya! the Chief amongst the Munis, the Ocean of all knowledge, O the Sinless One! the Lord and Well Wisher of our families, I come to you with a mind to ask you certain questions.

2-3. I heard of yore, but I do not know why was that illustrious son of Surasena, that powerful Anakadundubhi (1), the pious and illustrious Vasudeva, the father of S'ri Krisna, the incarnation of the God Hari Himself, and who was worshipped even by the Gods, thrown into prison by Kamsa?

Note (1) Anakadundubhi is the epithet of Vasudeva, father of S'ri Krisna, since at Vasudeva's birth, drums called Anakas and Dundubhis were resounded in the sky.

4-5. What faults had he and his wife Devaki committed? Why that Kamsa the descendant of Yayati, killed the six infant sons of Devaki? And for what reason did the God S'ri Hari incarnate Himself as the son of Vasudeva in the prison house of Kamsa?

6-11. How was that Lord of the Universe, S'ri Bhagavan, and the Ruler of the Yadava clan, taken to Gokula? Why was He, born of a Ksattriya family, generally recognised as of the Gopala (cow-herd) clan? Why were His father Vasudeva and mother Devaki thrown into prison? And why did not S'ri Krisna, of indomitable prowess, and capable to create and preserve the worlds, could release instantly.

father and mother from their imprisoned state? I cannot conceive that the so-called Fate could have any influence on such high souled persons, the father and mother of the Supreme Being, S'ri Krisna; who were those sons of Vasudeva that were killed by Kamsa? And who was that girl child who when struck by Kamsa on a slab of stone instantly rose up above the sky, assuming the form of Astabhuja, the eight armed Goddess? O Sinless One! Kindly explain unto me how did S'ri Hah manage to perform the house-holder's duties, when he had married the several wives? and what were those glorious deeds that he did in His this incarnation and how did he finally pass away from his mortal physical coil? My mind sinks into an ocean of confusion, when I hear of the several things done by S'ri Hah; some times I find the deeds, not capable of being done by any other than the Supreme Being Himself and sometimes I hear of deeds that can be done by an ordinary man. And, therefore I cannot decide whether Vasudeva was the Incarnation of God or an ordinary being. Be pleased to remove these doubts from my mind and describe the life of Vasudeva in its true light.

12-14. In days of yore, the two sons of Dharma were the two best amongst the Risis, and were the Devas Nara and Narayana. They were very high souled persons and they performed severe austerities for long extending years. They were born as part incarnations of Visnu; and, for the good of the world, did they, in the Vadarika'srama, perform penances, controlling their six passions, and free from desires.

15. The all-knowing sages Narada and others say that the well known Arjuna and S'ri Krisna of indomitable prowess were the two part incarnations of those two ancient Munis Nara and Narayana.

16. How came those two Devas Nara and Narayana to be born in the two bodies of Krisna and Arjuna, though they did not relinquish their previous bodies!

17. And also when those two Munis had attained liberation, their goal in their Yogas, by performing severe penances, how could they again be born in other bodies!

18-19. If any S'udra dies performing his own religion, he takes up a Vais'ya body in his next incarnation; if any Vais'ya died so, he takes up a Ksattriya body and a Ksattriya when adhering to his own rites and ceremonies, dying takes up a Brahman body in his next incarnation. And if a Brahmin be free from desires and resorts to the path of peace, when he dies, he becomes free from incarnations and is saved from this disease of getting into the world.

20-21. Now the reverse seems to take place in the case of Nara and Narayana. In spite of withering up their bodies by hard penances, they took up Ksattriya bodies. Under what influence of Karma, did they take up up birth when they were Yogis? Or might they, the Brahmins, become Ksattriyas owing to some curse? Whatever it may be, kindly remove my doubts, explaining to me their causes.

22. It is heard that the Yadava clan suffered destruction through the curse of a Brahman and in spite of S'ri Krisna being the incarnation of the Supreme Being, his family died of the effect of curse from Gandhari.

23. How was it that Pradyumna was stolen away by S'ambara, the lord of the Asuras; and for what purpose when Vasudeva, the Deva of the Devas was present, how was it that his son was stolen away from the lying-in room? This seems impossible.

24. Why did not Vasudeva see, with His inner vision, the stealing away of his son from the impregnable walls of His fortress-like mansion in Dwarka? (And could thus have prevented this!)

25-39. O Muni! After Vasudeva had gone to Heaven, his wives were plundered by the dacoits on the way. I am very much in doubt on this point. Also I cannot understand why did this event take place just after His translation to Heaven? Again how was S'ri Krisna, who was Visnu's Full incarnation, born into this world to take off the vicious load of this earth, and to destroy the evil-doers, terrified and He fled through the fear of Jarasandha, evacuated His kingdom of Mathura and went with His armies and friends to Dwarka? Vasudeva came here to destroy the evil miscreants and to conserve the religion; how then did He not, as He was all knowing, previously kill those dacoits, who afterward stole and plundered His wives? Was it, that He, being Omniscient did not know those dacoits? He protected the Pandavas, no doubt, who were high souled, righteous and virtuous; but I cannot understand how did He consider the high souled virtuous persons like Bhisma, Drona and others as loads of earth and slay them. The devotees of S'ri Krisna, observing good customs, conducts and practices, Yudhisthira and his brothers performed the Rajasuya sacrifice, according to rules, giving various offerings to the Brahmins and depended entirely on Vasudeva; still, O Muni! they suffered terrible hardships; whither were their virtuous deeds by this time? what horrible sins did they commit that they had to suffer pains and troubles in the assembly. The highly merited Draupadi arose from the midst of sacrificial fire and is born of the part of Laksmi, pure and devoted to S'ri Krisna. How did such a glorious woman meet with incomparable terrible pains often and often; how could she be caught hold of by her hair on her head by Duh'sasan; and carried to the royal assembly, when she was in her menses and extremely terrified and harassed? How did she come to be a slave of Matsya Raj in his kingdom Virat, and though actually crying aloud like a female osprey (eagle) she was highly insulted by Kichaka! Alas! how could Draupadi be stolen away by Jayadratha, though latterly released by the Pandavas? What evil deeds did the Pandavas commit in their previous births, that they had to befall under so many telling difficulties?

40. O high minded Muni! My ancestors performed the Rajasuya sacrifice and still they fell under so many serious difficulties. Kindly explain the causes of these to me.

41-42. If it be urged, that they suffered so many serious calamities, due to their actions in their former lives, that seems impossible. Because they are born of the Devas; thus arises my doubt; be pleased to explain to me.

Again how the Pandavas, the sons of Kunti, of good conduct, and knowing the illusory nature of the world, why did they, out of pretence kill Bhisma, Drona and others?

43. This appears a riddle to me that these Pandavas were led to the extermination of their race, being inspired by Hah Vasudeva, to this horrible act.

44. Rather to live on begging alms and to live on rice, growing wild or without cultivation, or to live as an artisan or artist than to kill the valiant warriors unlawfully in a battle, simply out of voluptuous greed.

45. O Best of the Munis! You have preserved this extirpated race by producing the Goloka sons (i. e. sons born by other persons of women after their husbands are dead) of indomitable prowess.

46. And why did my honoured father, born of Uttara in this respected family, encircle a snake round the neck of a Brahmin ascetic?

No body, born of a Ksattriya family, shews signs of hatred and jealousy towards a Brahmin. Is it that my father shewed such feeling to that ascetic, who took the vow of silence!

O Best of the Munis -- These things and lots of others are troubling my mind with many grave doubts. O merciful saint! You know every thing; be kind enough to quell this the disturbed state of my mind.

Thus ends the First Adhyaya in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavata Purana of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Suta said The learned Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, and the knower of the Puranas, when thus asked by Janamejaya, the son of Pariksit, whose heart had become calm, replied in the following words, capable to remove all his doubts. Vyasa said

2. O king! You would better know, that in this Universe the course of Karma is not easily comprehensible; even the Devas are not capable to comprehend the wonderful effects of actions; what to speak of men!

3. When this Universe composed of the three Gunas arose, it was through Karma, that everything had its origin.

4-5. It was the seed of Karma whence the Jivas (the individual embodied souls) arose with neither any beginning nor any end. Those Jivas go often and often incarnating in numberless varieties of wombs and then go to dissolution. When this Karma ceases, the Jivas then are never to have any more connection with any other body.

6. The Karmas done by Jivas are of three kinds auspicious, inauspicious and mixed (partly auspicious and partly inauspicious); of which the auspicious is the Sattvik Karma, the inauspicious is the Tamasik Karma and the mixed, is the Rajasic Karma. Thus have been said by the Sages.

7. These three again are subdivided into three. They are Sanchita (accumulated), Bhavisya (impending in future) and Prarabdha (commenced). All these Karmas are in dwelling always with the body.

8-9. O king! Everybody, even Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a all under the influence of this Karma! And they experience pleasure, pain, old age, disease and death, joy and sorrow, lust, anger, greed and other bodily qualities, out of the effects of this Karma, which we call ordinarily Fate.

10-11. Therefore love, hatred and other bodily qualities all predominate equally in all bodies. Anger, jealousy, hatred, and other similar qualities arise in the Devas, men, and birds owing to some sort of dislikes on previous occasions; and love, compassion, pity, etc., arise out of some sort of likings, existing already.

12-13. O king! No individual can arise without some sort of action or other. It is through Karma that the Sun traverses in the sky; it is through Karma that the Moon was attacked with consumption disease; and it is through Karma that the Rudra holds the disc of skull bone. This Karma, therefore, has no beginning nor end (till Moksa); now that this Karma is the sole cause in the production of this Universe.

14-16. For this reason, this whole Universe, moveable and immoveable, is real; but Munis are deeply absorbed in meditation to ascertain about its reality or unreality. They cannot definitely know it for certain whether this world is real or unreal; for where Maya is prevalent, the universe is there. Where there is the cause fully existing in all respects, there is no effect, how can we say? The Maya is eternal and always acts as the Prime Cause of all.

17. Therefore, O king! the sages declare that the seed of Karma is eternal. This whole universe changes incessantly, being controlled by this karma.

18. O king of kings! They say, it is through the will of Visnu, of unbounded energy and splendour, that all this universe enters, again and again, into all sorts of wombs, whether good or evil.

19. Now, if the birth of Visnu, of infinite prowess, takes place according to His will, then why is it that He travels through many impious births? Why is it that Bhagavan Visnu goes, in different Yugas, to take His births in low, vile origins?

Where is that self dependent man, who, leaving his abode Vaikuntha and all sorts of pleasures and happiness, desires to live in this mortal temple, filled with urine, faeces and other filthy matters.

20. No intelligent man will leave comfortable resting places and amorous sports and gathering flowers for the sake of dwelling in this uterus in the womb?

21. Who likes to live with his face downwards in the womb, when he can enjoy fine heavenly soft downs, puffed up with cotton or silk.

22. Who will abandon singing, dancing and music, where all sorts of love feelings are being manifested, and think of coming down to this veritable Hell?

23. Who will abandon the wonderful ambrosial nectar and prosperity given by Laksmi, that cannot be easily renounced, and then like to taste this urine and faeces.

24. There is no hell more aggravating in the three worlds than this existence in the wombs. The Munis, afraid of these, perform difficult asceticisms in this wondrous world.

25. Wise, intelligent persons renounce their kingdoms and enjoyments and resort to forests. Who is there so stupid as to enter willingly in the various wombs?

26. Worms and insects torment the Jivas in the womb; the digestive fire of the stomach heats it from below, whereas it is always fearfully tied down on all sides by the flesh, enclosing its fat or marrow. O King; Not a trace of happiness is visible there.

27. It is far better to live in a prison house, fettered by hard iron chains. Whereas it is not desirable to live for a moment in the womb.

28. It is very hard and painful to be in the womb for ten months. To come out of the hard and terrible womb is extremely troublesome.

29. Jivas get trouble in their childhood; they cannot speak, and they do not know what to say, when they are hungry or thirsty; they depend entirely on others and they are grieved.

30. When the child becomes hungry and cries, the mother becomes anxious. When the child is afflicted with diseases and cries, the mother then knows and administers medicines.

31. Thus many troubles arise in childhood. Sages do not therefore find any happiness and do not desire, of their own accord, to come here.

32. O king, no sane man, would forego incessant heavenly pleasures and prefer before the Devas to this toilsome and painful state of being born in the womb.

33. O king of kings! All the Devas, Brahma and others have to enjoy full the effects of their Karmas done, whether they are pleasant or painful.

34. O best of kings! The fruits of karma must have to be experienced, whether auspicious or inauspicious, be he a Deva, or human being or an animal; any one who has embodied himself in fine or gross bodies!

35. Human beings, by dint of their practise of penance, religious austerities alms givings and sacrifices, rise to Indrahood. Indra, in his turn, when the effects of his good actions cease, comes down to inferior births! there is no doubt of it.

36. In the Rama Incarnation, the Devas had to incarnate themselves a Monkeys; and in the Krisna incarnation, the Devas had to incarnate themselves as human beings. Cow-herds (Gopas) and Yadavas.

37. Thus being urged on by Brahma, Visnu Bhagavan incarnates Himself many times, yugas after yugas, to preserve the religion.

38. O king of mortals! Thus, like a carwheel, Bhagavan Hah incarnated Himself in various wombs successively in a wonderful manner.

39. The destruction the of Daityas was done by Hari in His many secondary incarnations.

40. Now I will narrate to you the auspicious facts of the birth of Krisna, Who incarnated Himself in the family of Yadu (Yadu Kula).

41. O king! The illustrious Vasudeva, born of the part of the Muni Kas'yapa, had to take his birth again as a human being due to his previous curse and had to maintain his livelihood by tending cows.

42. O best of kings! And the two wives Kas'yapa, Aditi and Surasa had to take their births as the two sisters, Devaki and Rohini, on account of the curses cast on them. O Descendant of Bharata! We have thus heard that they were greatly cursed at one time by Varuna, the water deity, who got very much angry. The king said.

43-47. What fault was committed by Kas'yapa that he had to take his birth along with his wife as cowherds. And why was it that the Everlasting uninterrupted Atman Visnu Narayana had to take his birth in Gokula. He whose abode is Vaikuntha, who is the Lord of Rama! who is Bhagavan and the Supreme amongst the gods, who is the upholder of the universe and the yugas! Under Whose order can such a being abandon his abode and take his birth in the world like an ordinary mortal? There is this grave doubt, then, of mine on this point.

48-51. Obtaining this depraved human coil, one is always perplexed with various thoughts, sometimes with lust, anger, jealousy, intoleration, sorrow, enmity sometimes with pleasurable feelings, happiness, fear, sufferings, penury, sometimes with straight¬ forwardness, good or bad deeds, faithfulness, treachery, unsteadiness, supporting others; sometimes with remorse, hesitation, bragging, greed, vain boasting, delusion, or hypocrisy and sometimes with remorse; these different feelings exist in men.

52. How then can Visnu Bhagavan abandon His eternal pleasures and have recourse to this human birth, full of many perplexing thoughts.

53. O best of Munis! What peculiar happiness is there in the pleasures of human births, that S'ri Bhagavan Hah has to undertake the burden of dwelling thus in the human wombs?

54-55. O Munmdra! The sufferings that are experienced, while in the womb, the pain during the time of delivery, the misfortunes in the early childhood, the troubles of passionate lust in youth, the greater sorrows and difficulties in the householder's life, all these are existent there; how then Bhagavan Visnu incarnate Himself often in these various human births.

56-57. What an amount of enormous difficulties had Brahma-born Hah to undertake in His Rama incarnation! That high souled One had to suffer for his exile in forest, for the stealing away of his wife Sita, for the frequent wars, for the final separation from his wife Sita.

58-59. Likewise in the Krisna Avatara, the birth in a prison, the departure to Gokul, tending cows, the killing of Kamsa, departure to Dwarka with great difficulty and all sorts of household difficulties were there. Why had He to suffer all these?

60. Who amongst the wise and the emancipated, of his own accord condescends to take on his shoulders so many hard sufferings? This is the grave doubt in my mind; be graciously pleased to remove my this grave doubt and make my mind tranquil.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king; The incarnation of Hah and the incarnation of the Amsa Avataras of all the other Devas are accountable to many causes. The chief cause being Karma; the minor causes being many.

2. Hear, now, the cause of the incarnations of Vasudeva (Krisna's father), Devaki and Rohini in detail.

3. Once, on an occasion, S'riman Kas'yapa stole away the Kamadhenu (the heavenly Cow, yielding all desires) of the Deva Varuna for his sacrificial purpose; and though he was entreated by Varuna often and often to return the cow, Kas'yapa did not return to him that, the best of all the cows.

4. Varuna became very sorry; he went to Brahma, the Lord of the creation and told him humbly all that had happened and about his sorrows.

5-6. "O Glorious One! Maharsi Kas'yapa is now almost infatuated with his sacrifice; and though I have tried all my means, he is not returning me my cow. I could not hear the pitiful cries and wailings of the calves or bereavement from their mother; and I cursed Kas'yapa saying 'You would go down and take birth in the human world as a cow-herd; and your two wives also are to go there as human mortals, suffering under the greatest difficulties and dangers."'

7. O Brahmana! On seeing the distressed condition of the calves I cursed Aditi a second time that she would be put to prison, her children would be still born, and she would suffer lots of troubles.

8. O Janamejaya! Hearing this, the Lotus-born Brahma called Kas'yapa before him and asked.

9. O Fortunate One! Why have you stolen away all the cows of the Varuna Deva, the Guardian of a quarter of the world? And why have you committed an offence in not returning the cows to Him?

10. Bhagavan! You are intelligent, you know everything fully; knowing that it is a sin to steal other's property, why have you committed the unlawful act of stealing away the cows.

11. Oh! What is the wonderful influence of covetousness! Even those that are great are not free from the clutches of greed. Covetousness is the source of all sins, is unapproved by the Sages and leads to hell.

12. Lo! Maharsi Kas'yapa is not able to leave this vicious habit even now; what shall I do? I will hence count greed as more powerful than even Fate, the Ruler of all destinies.

13. Blessed are those saints that have devoted themselves wholly to the attainment of peace, who are tranquil-hearted, lead a hermit life and don't ask themselves of any thing from any body. Verily those are blessed.

14. This covetousness is a powerful enemy; it is always unholy and odious. See! Its influence has overpowered the Maharsi Kas'yapa and has tied him down to an ordinary affection and has urged him to commit a sinful act.

15-16. Then the Prajapati Brahma, to preserve and keep the prestige in the name of Justice and Religion, cursed his own very dear grandson Kas'yapa, the best of the Munis, and said Go to the earth in your Ams'a, and take your birth in the Yadu clan, be united with your wives and work as a Cowherd.

17. Vyasa said O king! Thus was cursed the Maharsi Kas'yapa by Brahma and Varuna to come down to the earth as Amsa Vatara to relieve the earth of her burden.

18. Diti, too, becoming grieved much with sorrows, cursed Aditi that seven of her sons would be killed consecutively after their births.

19. Janamejaya said O best of Munis! Why was it that Diti so cruelly cursed his sister Aditi, the mother of Indra? Kindly explain to me the cause of this and oblige. I am sorry to hear of this curse.

20. Suta said Thus asked by the son of Pariksit, Vyasa, the son of Satyabati, himself replied to the king about their causes in the following words

21. Vyasa said Daksa Prajapati had two daughters, Diti and Aditi; these two, of high rank, were married to Kas'yapa; and they were his favourites.

22. Aditi gave birth to the very powerful Indra, the king of the Devas. Diti, too, asked for a son of the same strength, prowess, and splendour as those of Indra.

23. Diti, of beautiful dark blue eyes, entreated to her husband and said, “Give me a son, O giver of due respects to every body! who shall be a hero as strong as Indra, religious and of indomitable energy.”

24. The Muni said to herO Dear! Be peaceful; I advise you to take a vow, practise a rite, and when the period of your practice will be over, you will get a son like Indra.

25. Diti promised to act according to his word and took an oath; and when she practised the vow, Maharsi Kas'yapa impregnated the seed in her womb. Diti also bore the seed in her womb according to the usual rite.

26. The excellent fair complexioned Diti remained sacred, observed all the rules and, deeply intent on her vow, subsisted only on milk and slept or the ground.

27-28. Thus when the foetus was fully developed, Diti began to look white and full of splendour. On seeing her thus, Aditi became anxious and thought if there be born of Diti a son like the powerful Indra, then my son will no doubt be deprived of his brilliancy and splendour.

29. The proud Aditi, thinking thus, said to Indra O Son! There, in the womb of Diti, is your powerful enemy.

30. O Beautiful One! Even now think out how you can kill your enemy. Before the child is born of the womb, try to destroy it.

31. Since the time I have looked, on my co-wife Diti, of beautiful eyes and proud, this is the one and only thought that troubles the peace in the innermost of my hearts.

32. The enemy, if he firmly gets hold like a fully developed consumption, cannot be killed; therefore the intelligent persons should destroy the enemies, when they are in their buds.

33. O S’atakratu! My heart is being pierced wholly by an iron spoke when I see the womb of Diti; kill it by any means you can!

34. O High minded One! If you like my welfare, then destroy the foetus, in the womb of Diti, by any of the existent means, Sama, Dana or strength and thus remove the cause of grief in my heart.

35. Vyasa said On hearing his mother, Indra, the King of the Immortals, thought over all the means and went then to his step¬ mother Diti.

36. That evil minded Indra bowed down at the foot of Diti with humility and addressed her with words, sweet but full of poison.

37. O mother! You have become very weak, lean and thin in the practise your vow. I have come to serve you; order me now what I can do for you.

38. O chaste one to your husband! I want to shampoo your feet. To serve one's Guru means to earn righteousness and immortality.

39. O mother! I swear, on oath, I don't make any difference between you and my mother Aditi. Saying thus, he touched her feet and began to shampoo her legs.

40. The beautiful eyed Diti, tired of the vow, lean and thin, thus being shampooed and having full faith in Indra's words, fell to deep sleep.

41-42. Seeing her asleep, Indra, with thunderbolt in his hand, took subtle form and by the influence of his yogic power, entered carefully into her womb quickly and cut asunder the foetus in the womb into seven parts.

43-44. The child in the womb, struck by the thunder bolt, cried out. Indra spoke to the child gently “Do not cry,” and in the mean while cut each of the seven parts into seven parts again. Thus, O king! The forty-nine Maruts were born.

45. When the good natured Diti awoke, she came to know that Indra has treacherously cut the foetus in her womb and became very sorry and angry.

46-47. Knowing that all these treacherous acts are really done under the advice of her sister, the truthful Diti; who was under the vow, cursed Aditi, and Indra, saying that as her son Indra has treacherously cut the foetus in her womb, Indra's kingdom over the three worlds would be destroyed.

48-49. And as the sinful Aditi has secretly caused the destruction of my son, her sons, too, would also die after their birth consecutively and she would dwell in the prison house in much trouble and anxiety and would also bear still born sons in her next birth.

50. Vyasa said O king! Maharsi Kas'yapa, the son of Marichi, hearing the curse, allayed her anger with loving words.

51. O Blessed One! Do not be angry. Your sons would all become very powerful and would be called Maruts. They would be companions and friends to Indra.

52. O Dear! Your curse won't be fruitless; in the 28th Manvantara, at the end of the Dvapara Yuga, your curse will bear fruit. Then Aditi, sinful for her jealousy and anger, will go down on earth to take the human birth through her Amsa (part) and suffer according to your curse.

53. Varuna, too, had become very grieved and cursed her. And, due to both these curses, this Aditi will be born as a woman.

54. O King! The fair complexioned Diti, thus consoled by her husband, became glad and did not utter any more unpleasant words.

55. O king! Thus I have narrated to you the cause of the previous curse. O best of kings! Thus Aditi was born as Devaki out of her Ams'a.

Here ends the third Chapter of the Fourth Book of the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses on the former curse of Vasudeva and Devaki by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. The King spoke O highly honoured and intelligent one! I have heard the anecdote just related to me by you. I am very much bewildered. This Samsara (world) is vice incarnate. I wonder how the JTvas, entangled in its meshes, can again be freed!

2. When the son of Kas'yapa, whose kingdom is the three worlds, can commit such an heinous act, what wonder, then, that any other ordinary person would do more blameable things!

3. On the pretence of serving and on a solemn oath, when a man, can enter into his step-mother's womb and take away the life of the son, what more heinous and dreadful can take place than this!

4. When the preserver and controller of religion, the ruler of the three worlds can do such acts, you cannot expect that any other person would desert from committing heinous, contemptible acts.

5. O World Teacher! Indeed my grandfather did unjustifiable horrible mean acts in the battle field of Kuruksettra. It is really wonderful!

6-7. Bhisma, Drona, Kripa, Kama, even Yudhisthira, who is the part incarnate of Dharma all these were urged by Vasudeva into this contrary religious act. These personages are all born of Devamsas, devoted to religion, and intelligent. These know the transitory nature of this world; how can these commit such mean blameable things!

8. O Glory of the Brahmins! What faith or regard can we have for a religion, when such high souled persons commit such irreligious acts! Indeed, there is doubt whether religion exists at all or not! O Best of the Munis! My heart is agitated very much on hearing these incidents.

9. If it be said that the word of the Aptas (seers) is a sufficient guarantee for the entity of religion, it may then be questioned where there is such an Apta, holding such a pure religious body? All those persons who are attached to worldliness are bent on all worldly objects with their whole head and heart; these, therefore, cannot be Aptas.

10. When self interest is obstructed, jealousy and anger arise; and to secure one's self interest, out of jealousy, arise untruthful words.

11. Even the pure, excellent, virtuous S’ri Krisna, with full consciousness, had to assume under pretence a Brahmin form for killing Jarasandha.

12. Just as the holy S'ri Hari assumed a false appearance to kill Jarasandha, similarly Arjuna, too, did a false sacrifice to accomplish his ends. Where is, then, one who can claim to be an Apta? And what proof is there of the existence of such an Apta?

13. What sort of sacrifice was this? Did it lead to heaven in the next world or did it lead to glory or did it serve the cause of any good will? Why was it deprived of that peace and rest? (It was performed with a view to kill S'isupala and others).

14-15. The Pundits, of yore, declare that truth is the first Pada, cleanliness, the second; compassion, the third; and charity is the fourth Pada (foot) of Dharma (Religion). Thus, devoid of these, how can Religion stand with due regards from all?

16. How can an act bear good fruits, which has no trace of virtue in it? It seems no one had any trace of faith and steadiness in one's religion. (The Pandavas did sacrifice out of arrogance; how can they be Aptas?)

17-20. Visnu, the Lord of the Universe, assumed His Dwarf (Vamana) Incarnation with the express object to cheat Vali, the king of the Daityas. Now, O Muni! The king Bali, performed one hundred sacrifices; he was the protector of the Vedas, virtuous, charitable, truthful and self controlled; why was such a man dislodged from his position by Visnu, the Powerful. Who was victorious in this affair? Was he the Vali, who was cheated? Or was it Vamana Deva, the expert in making nice pretence? Who was the better of the two? I have got grave doubts on this point. O the best of the twiceborn! You are the composer of the Puranas, virtuous, and liberal hearted. Speak what is true (and thus tranquil my heart).

21-23. Vyasa said O king! The victory was certainly Bali's, in as much as he fulfilled his promise and gave over his kingdom of earth to Visnu. And in as much as Visnu in his 5th or dwarf Incarnation deceived Bali, he had to become a dwarf (i. e. a small mean person indicated even by the shortness of his body). O king! There is nothing superior in religion to truth. See! S’ri Hah even had to become, for his falsehood, a gate keeper of Vali. O king! It is hardly possible for a human being to observe in every way the injunctions of truth.

24. Powerful, indeed, is Maya, composed of the three qualities and of various forms. By Her is created this Universe, made manifold by the admixture of the three qualities (Sattwa, Rajas and Tamas).

25. How can you expect therefore, truth to be observed wholly, without the least violation, by a deceiver. This world is made up of the mixture of Rajas; O king! Know this as the every day routine of things in nature.

26-27. It is only the Munis and Hermits that can observe pure truth; and that is why they are without any attachment; they do not accept any thing from any other body; they are desireless; and they all have no rough wear and tear of the world. They exist as perfect examples; their case is quite separate. All the others are caught under the meshes of the three Mayic Gunas.

28. O Best of kings! The Dharma S’astras, Puranas and the Angas the Vedas are full of diverse opinions on any one point under consideration for their composers were under the influence of the different Gunas.

29. The Saguna persons (i. e. persons under Maya) do Saguna works (works composed of qualities) and the Nirguna persons (i. e persons above Maya) do not do any Saguna work. And when the Gunas are mixed with one another, they cannot remain pure (i. e. they exhibit qualities of those Gunas with which they are mixed).

30. O king! One is influenced by Maya no sooner one takes one's birth in this world; so that no body can remain steady in this pure, steady maxim of truth, untainted by any falsehood or deceit.

31. The sense organs, Indriyas, confound the Buddhi (reason) and make one follow the path of enjoying sensual things. Mind is attached to senses and follows diverse ways, urged on furiously by the three Gunas.

32. O king! All the beings, Brahma down to the moving and non¬ moving things, fall under the delusion of Maya; She plays with them.

33. This Maya is always imposing on all; and She is incessantly making formations and transformations in this Universe; O king of kings! The man under the influence of action takes recourse to this untruth (i.e., actions arise first from this untruth) from the very moment of his birth.

34. Persons when they do not get their desired objects after they have pondered how to secure the sensual objects, take recourse to pretext, and, from that pretext do many sinful acts.

35. Lust, anger, and avarice; these three are very powerful enemies. The Jivas under their influence cannot distinguish the right from the wrong.

36. When wealth, might and rank come to a person, he gets deep- rooted Ahamkara, and becomes very egoistic; from Ahamkara, delusion comes and, from delusion, insensibility and death ensue.

37-38. Here men argue mentally many plans; and thence jealousy, intolerance and enmity spring in the heart; next arise, out of delusion, hope, thirst, misery, low-spiritedness, arrogance and irreligiousness.

39. It is through Ahamkara that people are led to perform sacrifices, charities, visit places of pilgrimages, practise vows and rules for religious rites and ceremonies.

40. Hence these sacrificial acts, etc., proceeding from Ahamkara, are unable to remove the clouds of impurity from the mind, as observance of purity and cleanliness does. Especially when any action is done through greed or undue affection, as its motive, it cannot be pure in every respect.

41. Therefore, at the commencement of any sacrifice, the wise persons look at the purity of sacrificial things; (Dravya Suddhi); those articles that are collected without injuring others, are the best in religious acts.

42. O best of Kings! If the things, acquired by injuring others, be utilised in any auspicious act, they yield contrary results at the time of fruition.

43. It is he only, whose mind is very pure and undefiled, who gets the results wholly auspicious from any sacrificial act. Minds defiled do not acquire their proper desired objects.

44-45. When the preceptor and the priests ordained are sincere and pure; moreover, when the place, moment, act, sacrificial things, the mantras, and the sacrificer are all holy, then and there only, the full results accrue in their entirety to the sacrificer.

46. If the sacrifice be intended for the destruction of one's enemy or for a personal motive and one's gain, it converts auspicious results into those that are inauspicious and lead to ruin in the end.

47. Selfish persons are unable to ascertain, which actions are auspicious and which are not; they depend on the circumstances what they call Daiva, and the people do acts sinful instead of virtuous.

48-49. The Devas and demons all are created by Brahma, the Prajapati, the Creator; they all are selfish; hence they are at war and war with each other. The Devas are born from the Sattva Guna; the human beings are sprung from the Rajas and the birds are sprung from the Tamas.

50. O King! When the Devas, born of the Sattva Guna are always engaged in inimical actions, what wonder, then, is there, that the lower ones would be at war with one another!

51-52. O King! When the Devas are always discontented, filled with jealousy and envy, at war amongst each other, and obstructors of the ascetics and the austere persons, then know that this Universe has sprung from Ahamkara (egoism). How can you expect them to be free from feelings of anger, jealousy; etc.!

English translation

1. Vyasa said O best of kings! There is no need of dwelling at length on this point; suffice to say, that in this world, are found persons very rare that are religious, and free from egoism, jealousy, anger, etc.

2. O king of kings! Even in the Satya Yuga, the Golden age, this world, moving and unmoving, was covered with feelings of jealousy and anger. What to say in this Kali Yuga (Dark Age)! (There is no wonder that this world would be full of these vicious things.)

3. O best of kings! When the Devas are deceitful, jealous, and filled with feelings of anger, what is to be said with human beings and other lower creations!

4. O Lord of the Earth! It is natural, that injury be inflicted on those persons that commit injury; but when peaceful persons, void of any enmity, are injured, that is certainly an act wicked and mischievous.

5. Whenever, any devout ascetic, calm and quiet, is engaged in prayer and meditation, and silent muttering of one's mantrams, the king of the Immortals throws hindrance in his asceticism. (This is certainly a mischievous act.)

6. (Holy, unholy and mixed persons exist in all the yugas). To those that are holy, all the yugas are the Satya yuga; to the unholy ones always it is the Kali yuga (Dark age); and to the mixed ones, always it is Treta and Dvapara.

7. You will very seldom find a few persons, following really the True Religion; otherwise, you would have found all the persons in the different yugas religious, appropriate to those yugas.

8. O king! In all cases where the conservation of religions and religious affairs are concerned, know that the original wish and desire is the cause. If this desire be impure and sullied, religion becomes also sullied for, verily, this impurity in one's desire is one's cause of ruin in every respect. (Therefore the impure desires are never to be cherished and indulged.)

9. A son, named Dharma, was born of the heart of Brahma; he was devoted to Brahmajnana (the knowledge of Brahma), truthful, and always engaged in rites and ceremonies and in accordance with the Vedic religion.

10. This high souled Muni Dharma was a householder and married duly, according to the proper procedure, to the ten daughters of Daksa Prajapati.

11. This Dharma, the foremost amongst the followers of truth, impregnated them and had four sons, named respectively Hah, Krisna, Nara, and Narayana.

12. Hah and Krisna, amongst the four, used to remain always in the practising of the yoga.

13. Nara and Narayana came over to the Himalayan mountains and, in the hermitage of Badarika, commenced the difficult religious asceticism and penance.

14. The foremost of the ascetics, those two ancient Munis, began to recite that highest mantra of Para Brahma, the Gayatri, on the wide spacious bank of the Ganges.

15. The two Risis named Nara and Narayana, born of Hari's Ams'a, practised excellent tapasya for full one thousand years.

16. The whole Universe, moving and unmoving, became hot through the Fire of their Tapas. Indra became also perplexed.

17-18. The thousand-eyed Indra became anxious, thought and within himself thus What is to be done now? These two sons of Dharma are practising Tapas and are in meditation. If they succeed, they can occupy my excellent seat in Heaven; how can I break their Tapasya and what steps shall I take to hinder them.

19-20. Lust, anger, and insurmountable avarice Indra brought into existence and, intent on hindering their tapasya, mounted on the elephant Airavata, went quickly to the hill Gandhamadan, and approaching the holy hermitage, saw the two ancient Risis.

21. Their bodies were incandescent by Tapasya, as if they were the two rising Suns. Were they Brahma, Visnu manifested there or were they the two shining sources of light? These two Risis were the sons of Dharma. What would they do with their Tapasya?

22-23. Thinking thus, the lord of S'achi seeing them addressed thus O highly fortunate ones! O two Risis the sons of Dharma! Please tell me what are your objects? I have come here to give thee excellent boons; I am very pleased with your Tapasya; therefore ask boons from me; and even if they be not worth giving, I will give them to you.

24-25. Vyasa said The Risis were deeply immersed in meditation and seemed very firm and resolute; they, therefore, did not reply anything, though Indra, standing before them, repeatedly urged them to ask boons from him. Seeing this, the king of the Immortals began to terrify them with his supernatural enchanting fearful mayic powers.

26. He created lions, tigers, wolves and other murderous animals and began to terrify the two Risis with them; Indra also produced rains, hurricanes and fires very frequently so that they might yield.

27. In spite of Indra's attempt to terrify them by his wonderful Maya, the two Munis, Nara Narayana, the two sons of Dharma, could not be brought under his control. And Indra returned to his own place.

28-31. And he became very sorry and thought thus:-- These two Munis could not be tempted away with boons, nor did they fly away from their place of worship, though terrified with fire, wind, wolves, tigers and lions. No one, I think, would be able to break their meditation. When fear and temptations have not distracted their meditation, they are certainly meditating on the Eternal Maha Vidya

S'n Bhuvanes'wan, the Prime Force of Nature, the Source of all Mayas, and the Goddess the Creatrix of all the worlds, the wonderful highest Prakriti; what other expert in emitting Maya there can be? Who can break their meditation!

32. Indeed! how can this whole host of Mayas that are created by Gods and Asuras overpower those purged of all their sins, who are meditating their Creator, the Supreme Maya, that Illusion by which one considers the unreal Universe as really existent and as distinct from the Supreme Spirit, whence the Gods and Asuras have derived all their supernatural powers.

33. He in whose heart reign the seed mantras of Vak, Kama and Maya, called Vagvijam, Kamavijam, Mayavijam, no one is able to stand against and overpower him.

34-35. O king! Indra, enchanted by Maya, did not desist from tempting the two Risis, but he went on thinking other means by which their asceticism could be baffled and asked Kama and Vasanta (the god of Lust and the season spring) to come before him and addressed them, thus O Kama! You now be united with your wife Rati and Vasanta (the God of spring) and go to the hill Gandhamadan, accompanied by all the Apsaras (celestial damsels) and with all the Rasas (love sentiments).

NOTE The Gandhamadan is the mountain like unsurpassable intoxicating happiness of the senses.

36-37. There you will find the two ancient excellent Risis Nara and Narayana practising asceticism in solitude, in the hermitage of Badarika. O Manamatha! You better go before them, and with the influence of your arrows, do now my work and make their hearts extremely lustful.

38. O Fortunate One! Charm over them by means of your arrows, make them leave their asceticism by magical spells.

39. Who is there in this world of Devas, Daityas, human beings, that, being whipped by your arrows, do not come under your control?

40. When Brahma, I, Mahadeva, Moon and Fire are all fascinated by your arrows, then is there any doubt that these two Risis would not be fascinated by them!

41. I am sending these public women as your assistants. Rambha and other beautiful celestial nymphs would all follow you.

42. You alone, or Rambha or Tilottama alone can do this work. Will there be any doubt if you all unite in this?

43. O Good One! Do this work for me; I will confer on you your desired objects.

44. O Manmatha! I tempted them with boons but these two ascetics, of controlled minds, could not be displaced from their seats. My efforts were rendered useless.

45. I frightened them very much with all the Mayic powers; yet they could not be dislocated from their deep thoughts. It seems that they are quite heedless in the preservation of their bodies.

46. Vyasa said Kamadeva, on hearing the king of the Devas, addressed him thus O Indra! Today I will fulfill all your desires.

47. But there is one word. If these two ascetics be meditating Visnu, S'iva or Brahma or the Sun, then I will be able to bring them under my control.

48. And if they be meditating on the Great Seed Mantra, the root of all Maya, and the great Kamavijam, the king of the Kama, I will never be able to subdue such a devotee of the Highest Devi.

49. If these two ascetics have devotedly taken refuge of the Great Power Maha Devi, then they will not come under the sight of my arrows.

50. Indra said O Blessed One! Go now with your assistants, ready to do your work. No body but you, I find, that can fulfill my this beneficial, though very difficult work.

Vyasa said Thus ordered by Indra, they all departed to where the Dharma's sons Nara, and Narayana were performing their hard Tapasyas.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! First there appeared on the mountain, the king of the seasons, Vasanta, the Spring. All the trees flowered and became very beautiful; and the bees began to hum round all sides.

2. Mangoes, Bokul trees, the beautiful Tilaka trees, the good Kimsukas, Sal, Tal, Tamal and Madhuka trees assumed unequalled beauties, ornamented with their flowers.

3. Cuckoos began to coo coo (warble) beautifully on the tops of trees; the creepers flowered and began to embrace the trees.

4. The creatures became enamoured with love and began to look on their paramours with amorous eyes and began to hold pleasant sexual intercourses.

5. The southern breeze blew gently, full of pleasant odours and agreeable to touch. The sensual organs became very powerful and could no longer be brought under their control by the Munis.

6. Then Kama, united with Rati, hurriedly entered into the Hermitage of Badarika with the five arrows in his hands.

7. Rambha, Tilottama, and other prominent Apsaras all went to that beautiful hermitage and began to sing in perfect tune with gamuts, key notes and respective pauses.

8. The two Maharsis awoke on hearing the sweet music, the warbling of the cuckoos and the nice hummings of the bees.

9. Nara Narayana became anxious to see the untimely bursting of the Vasanta (vernal season) and the flowering of the trees.

10. How can the spring season come now at such an untimely season. I see, all the creatures are become extremely amorous with each other and infatuated with passionate lust.

11. It is very unusual that untimely things should happen. How has this come to pass? Struck with wonder, Narayana began to speak to Nara with eyes wide apart.

12. Narayana said O Brother! See these trees look very elegant with flowers on them; the cuckoos are sounding sweet notes on all sides; the bees are humming on all sides.

13. The spring, the lion of the seasons, has burst asunder the fierce elephant, the winter season, by its sharp nails, as testified by the budding of Palasa flowers.

14-18. O Brahman! See how beautiful and excellent has become this hermitage with the presence of the Goddess Spring Laksmi? O DevarsT! The Raktas'oka flower is the palm of her hand; Kims'uka flower, her excellent feet; Nilasoka flowers, her black hairs on her head, the full-blown lotuses, her eyes; the bel fruits, her breast; the jolly Kunda flowers, her teeth; Manjari, her beautiful ears; red Bandhu flowers, her lips; Sindhubara, her wonderful nails; the peacocks, her ornaments; the sounds of Sarasa birds, the jingling of her feet ornaments; the wreaths of flowers, her waist ornaments; the mad gooses, her gait; Kadamba flower's filaments, her hairs on her body; O best of ascetics! With all these, the Vasanta Laksmi has assumed a wonderful nice appearance.

19. Why has this occurred untimely? Think over it; O Devarsi! I am struck with wonder; surely this is obstructive of our penances.

20. Hear! There the Apsaras are singing sweetly the song, tending to destroy our Tapasyas; it seems, these are the means, no doubt, adopted by Indra to pollute our Tapasya.

21. Why is this spring season now generating our pleasures? It is clear that that Indra, the enemy of the Asuras, is become afraid of our Tapasya and is creating these obstructions to disturb our asceticisms.

22. Lo! The cool, odorous, and pleasant breezes are blowing; no other cause can be traced than the wicked deed of Indra.

23. When the best of the Brahmins, the Deva Narayana was addressing thus, the whole host of Cupid became visible before their sight.

24. And the two Risis were very much surprised on seeing them.

25-27. They saw near to them the Cupid with his attendants Menaka, Rambha, Tilottama, Puspagandha, Sukes'i, MahasVeta, Manorama, Pramodvara, Ghritachi, Charuhasini, the expert in music, Chandra Prabha, the cuckoo voiced Soma, the lotus eyed Vidyunmala, Kanchana malini, and others.

28. Eight thousand and five hundred Apsaras and long multitudes of the hosts of Cupid, the Munis saw and were surprised.

29. Then those prostitutes of the Devas, dressed with their heavenly ornaments and the heavenly flowers, appeared before the Munis and bowed down their heads on the ground.

30. The Apsaras began their enchanting songs, exciting much passion and rarely heard or seen in this world.

31-32. The two Munis Bhagavan Visnu-like Nara Narayana were pleased with their music and addressed them thus O thin waisted good looking Apsaras! You have come here as guests, I see, from your Heavenly world. Stay here in peace and all comfort; we will gladly serve you as your hosts.

33-34. Vyasa said O king! The two Munis, thinking that Indra has sent these Apsaras to obstruct their Tapasya, were filled with egoism and determined to create, out of their strength of Tapasya a new Apsara, who would be very much more beautiful and possessing far more heavenly graces than the present ones, who are ordinary looking and clumsy in their behaviours.

35. And the Munis, by clapping or striking their thighs, instantly created a woman, exquisitely beautiful in all respects.

36. This good looking woman was named Urvas'i, since she was produced from the thighs. And all the other Apsaras present there were very much thunderstruck on seeing that Urvas'i.

37. Then the Muni Narayana easily created as many women as there were Apsaras to serve them.

38. The just produced Apsaras brought with them all sorts of offering in their hands, and, singing and smiling, came before the Munis and with clasped hands bowed down before them.

39. The heavenly damsels sent by Indra, though enchanting to others were themselves now bewildered on beholding Urvas'i, beautiful in all respects and produced out of the Tapasya of the Munis; and their hairs over the bodies stood on their ends. Then they tried to make their faces as beautiful as they could and began to address the Munis thus

40. O Munis! We are ignorant girls; how can we praise you and the greatness of your Tapasya and at your steadiness. Oh! There is no one in this Universe, that is not burnt with the passion by the arrows of our sharp eyesight? But there is no trace of mental disturbance and defilement in you; Oh! Wonderful is your greatness, indeed!

41. We are convinced that both of you are the Amsas of Visnu and that your treasures are your incessant peace and control of mind. We have come here not to serve you but to hinder you in your penances, that we may fulfill the desires of Indra.

42. By what good luck of ours we have got a sight of thee, we do not know; we do not know also what merits we did? We have committed great offence to you; still you have not cursed us. You have considered us as those of your own family and have pardoned us. Therefore our minds are free from sorrow and anxiety. Much praise be to your forgiveness! Wise saints do not squander away their occult powers, derived from austerities, in trivial ways like cursing others.

43. Vyasa said Very pleased were those two Dharma's sons, the two Maharsis, self controlled and desireless, to hear these words of those godly behaved heavenly damsels; they then spoke to the damsels, blazing with the fire of their Tapas.

44-45. Nara and Narayana said O Damsels! We are pleased with you; better ask from us your desired boons; we will instantly grant them to you. You better take with you to your Heaven this beautiful eyed Urvas'i, born of our thighs as a present to your Deva Raja, the Indra.

46. Now peace be to all the Devas; you better go to your own places; do not, in future, disturb the Tapasya of others.

47. The damsels said Where will we go now? We have reached your lotus feet through our devotion, and our joy knows no bounds;

O Narayana the Supreme amongst the Gods!

48. O Lord! O Madhusudana! O Lotus-eyed! If Thou art pleased with us and dost want to give us our desired boons, we disclose to you our wished for object.

49. O Lord of the Devas! Thou art the Lord of the world; so beest Thou the Lord of us. O Destroyer of the foes! We will gladly put ourselves at the service of your feet.

50. Let those sixteen hundred and fifty beautiful-eyed damsels including Urvas'i, that are your creation and that are now existing here, let them go unto Heaven by your command.

51. And we, the sixteen hundred and fifty damsels that have come before, may be allowed to remain here at your service.

52. O Madhava! You are the Lord of the Devas; be true to your word and give us our desires. Those seers, the Munis, who know what is Dharma, declare that it is sin, equivalent to murder, to destroy the hopes of those women that are struck with passion.

53. We are very fortunate to come here from Heaven and we are filled with extreme love for you, O Deves'a! You are the Lord of the world; you can do all things; therefore do not leave us.

54. Narayana said O thin bodied damsels! I am practising at this place the tapasya for full one thousand years, controlling my passions; how can I now break it by engaging myself to enjoy sensual things.

55. I have no inclination to indulge in sexual pleasures, tending to destroy the Highest Bliss as well as the Highest Dharma. What intelligent person will like to indulge like a beast in sensual pleasures.

56-57. The Apsaras said Of the five senses; sound, etc., the pleasures attained through the sensation of touch are excellent, and are reckoned as the source of Bliss; no other pleasures stand equal to it. Therefore do then fulfill our words, and enjoy incessantly this highest bliss and roam freely in this Gandhamadan mountain.

58. If you like to go to Heaven, be pleased to know that there is no Superior Heaven to Gandhamadan (the mountain like intoxicating happiness of the senses). Dost thou enjoy the highest bliss, the pleasant sexual intercourse with us, the heavenly damsels in this very beautiful and lovely place.

Thus ends the Sixth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa on the origin of Urvas'i.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! The Dharma's son, of excellent prowess, hearing thus, the words of these damsels, thought within himself, thus what shall I do under the above circumstances.

2. If I indulge now in sexual pleasures, I will be an object of laughter amongst the Munis. This present trouble has, no doubt, arisen from my Ahamkara (egoism). This Ahamkara is the first and foremost in ruining one's Dharma.

3-5. The wise sages have declared this Ahamkara as the root of this tree of world. I did not observe the vow of silence on seeing those damsels come here; I have held much conversations with them; therefore I have got into this troublesome anxiety and sorrow. I have created these damsels at the expense of my Dharma and Tapasya. The beautiful and lovely damsels sent by Indra are now full of lust; and are bent on ruining my tapasaya. Now if through Ahamkara I had not created the damsels, I would not have fallen into this difficulty. Now I am caught firmly in the meshes of my own creation like a spider; what am I to do next!

6-7. If I abandon these damsels, thinking that there is no necessity to reconsider the matter, then these would be broken hearted; and they would go away cursing me?

Yet I would be free from this present danger at least and then be able to practise excellent tapasya in a lonely place. Therefore, now, I will get angry and tell these damsels go away from me.

8. Vyasa said O King! The Muni Narayana thought that he would become thus happy; but, at the next moment, he discussed in his mind thus

9. The second great enemy is anger; it is greater than causing hurt to others; and it is greater than lust and avarice.

10. Out of anger people commit murder; this murder is the source of hell and is giving pains to all.

11. As trees, rubbing against each other, generate fire; and are themselves burnt up in this fire, so fire arising from this body ultimately burns this body to death.

12. Vyasa said The younger brother Nara on seeing his elder brother anxious and low-spirited, spoke out what is right, as follows

13. O Narayana! You are very intelligent and very good; therefore reliquish this feeling of anger and betake to quietude and peace, and kill the dreadful anger.

14. Do you not remember that it is through this Ahamkara and anger that our tapasya was destroyed on a previous occasion; and we had to fight severely with Prahlada, the Lord of the Asuras for one full divine thousand years.

15-16. O Lord of the Devas! We were put to much difficulties then; therefore O Lord of the Munis! Get rid of this anger; be quiet! The sages declare the peace is the root cause and the only object of Tapasya.

17.Vyasa said On hearing these words of his younger brother Nara, the Dharma's son Narayana took to peace.

18. Janamejaya said O Lord of the Munis! The high souled Prahlada was a devotee of Visnu and of a peace loving heart: how it was that, in the ancient days, the battle took place between him and these Risis; how could the Risis fight? There is this great doubt in my mind.

19-20. These two Dharma's sons were ascetics and peace loving; how the fight could come to pass between these and the Daityasuras? How did these two Risis fight with the high souled Prahlada?

21-22. Prahlada was very religious, full of knowledge and very much devoted to Visnu. Nara Narayana were Sattvik and ascetics; therefore if there had occurred enmity between those, it appears that the religion and asceticism, Tapasya and Dharma were matters in name only; and the labour was spent in vain in the golden age even. What was the value of asceticism and meditation and muttering silently the mantras! No one can make out.

23. Oh! Persons like them could not conquer their hearts full of anger and egoism! Anger and jealousy cannot spring unless there be at the bottom a feeling of egoism (Ahamkara).

24. All the passions, lust, greed, anger, etc., come out of Ahamkara (egoism), there is no doubt of it; one hundred lakh years of severe asceticism are rendered quite useless by the cropping up afterwards of a bit of Ahamkara.

25. As darkness is dispelled entirely on sunrise, so no trace of religious merit can exist on the rising of a bit of Ahamkara.

26. When Prahlada could fight with S'ri Bhagavan Hah, then. Oh! all his merits in this world are rendered of no use whatsoever.

27. Where is the religious merit and where is peace when the quiet souled persons Nara Narayana, the two Risis began to fight, without paying any heed to their highest end, the Tapasya?

28. When Ahamkara became invincible by the two Risis, then what can be expected from the weak trivial persons like us in the matter of subjugating this Ahamkara?

29. Who can be free from Ahamkara in these three worlds, when the high souled persons like the above were not free from it? I am now quite confident that, in this Universe, no body was ever before free from Ahamkara nor will there be any such in the distant future.

30. One can be free if bound by an iron or a wooden chain; but when one is pierced by Ahamkara, one can never become free from it.

31. This whole Universe, moving and unmoving, is rolling in this Samsara (migration and transmigration) polluted by urine and faeces, being covered by Ahamkara.

32. Where is, then the Brahma Jhana? O Good One in vows! The Karma theory, according to the Mimamsakas, seems reasonable and true.

33. O Muni! What can you expect from the weak-minded persons like me in this Kali yuga, when the great persons are always overpowered with lust, anger, etc.

34-35. Vyasa said O Descendant of Bharata! How can the effect be different from its cause? Gold and golden ear-rings though different in form owing to upadhis, are both similar to their original cause, the metal gold.

Thread is the cause of cloth; therefore as cloth cannot be different from its thread, so this whole universe, moving and unmoving, is sprung from Ahamkara; then how can it be free from Ahamkara?

36. All this, moving and unmoving, including a blade of grass, are fashioned out of the three qualities of Maya; so if it be formed of those qualities, what repentance can come to those who are wise and know every phenomenon as unreal?

37. O Best of kings! Brahma, Visnu or Mahes'a, even these are all rolling in this vast ocean of Samsara, being bewildered and fascinated by Ahamkara.

38. The great sages like Vas'istha, Narada and the other Munis are frequently taking their births in this Samsara.

39. In this Triloki, there is not even one embodied soul, who is entirely free from this Maya and has become quiet and immersed in the high bliss of the Supreme Self.

40. O Best of kings! Lust, anger, avarice, and fascination, all, arise from Ahamkara. These do not leave any embodied person.

41-42. Studying all the Vedas and Puranas, going to all the sacred places pilgrimages, making charities, thinking on Paramatman and worshipping the gods, doing all these, the people still get attached to sensual objects and act like a thief.

43. O Son of Kuru! In the three yugas, the Satya, Treta, Dwapara, Dharma had been pierced and wounded very much; what to say of Dharma in this Kali Yuga!

44. You will find quarrels, avarice, anger raging always in this Kali yuga. Therefore there is no wonder that you will not find any one thinking and doing what is worth thinking, and doing what is not worth doing?

45. Free from envy, anger, and jealousy, such persons are rare now- a-days in this Kali yuga. Some peaceful persons exist here and there to keep up the ideal.

46. The king said O Muni! They are blessed and holy who are free from this fascination of Maya, self controlled, who have conquered their passions, and who follow good conduct. They have risen above the Triloki.

47. O Best of Munis! My high minded father put a dead serpent round the neck of an ascetic without any fault; I am very sorry to think of his act.

48. Therefore, O Muni! Kindly suggest any means by which I can now redress that act. O Bhagavan! I do not know what will be the result of this act, committed out of the bewildering of intellect.

49. Fools in search of honey see only honey before them but not the falls, whence they might tumble down and die. So the stupid men do disgraceful acts and do not get afraid of the tortures of hell.

50. Kindly describe, in detail, how the fight incurred between Prahlada and Narayana in ancient times.

51. How was it that Prahlada went out of Patala (the nether regions) and went to the great holy place, the hermitage of Badarikas'rama in the Sarasvata country, the great place for pilgrimage.

52. O Muni! What was it that led the best of the Munis, the two ascetics to fight with Prahlada?

53. The enmity springs where there is wealth, wife, or land. The two Maharsis were desireless, had nothing of these; how, then, without any cause, they fought such a battle!

54. Prahlada was also very religious and knew that those two Risis were the Devas; knowing this, why did he fight with them?

55. So describe in detail the cause of all these.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter in the 4th Book of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses on Ahamkara by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Suta said Thus asked by the son of Panksit, the king Janamejaya, the best of the Brahmanas, the son of Satyavati, Vyasa spoke, in detail, the following

2. The virtuous Janamejaya became very much sorry and despondent when he heard in detail the improper acts of his own father Pariksit, the son of Uttara.

3. Owing to insulting the Brahmin boy, his father had to go to hell; and he was constantly thinking how to release his father.

4. The son is called “Puttra” for he releases his father from the hell, named “Put”. He is the true son that can do so.

5-6. The fortunate son of Pariksit became very much tormented and bewildered with fear when he heard what was the fate of his father, who died bitten by a serpent on the top of a palace, due to the curse of a Brahmin, void of any bathing, charities, and the purificatory acts.

7. When Vyasa returned home, Janamejaya asked him, the whole course of events of Nara Narayana.

8. Vyasa said O King! When the terrible Hiranya Kas'ipoo was slain, his son Prahlada was installed on his throne.

9. During the government of Prahlada, the chief of the Daityas, the worshipper of the Brahmanas and Devas, the kings on earth began with faith to do many sacrifices for the satisfaction of the Devas.

10. The Brahmanas were engaged in their Tapasya, Dharma, and in frequenting the places of pilgrimages; the Vais'yas, in their trade; and the S'udras, in serving the other three classes.

11. The incarnation of Hah, the Nri Simha (Man-Lion) made Prahlada, the king of the Daityas in the Patala (Nether regions); and Prahlada, engaged there, spent his time in the preservation and welfare of his subjects.

12. Once, on a time, the great ascetics Chyavana Muni, the son of Bhrigu went on his way to bathing in the river Narmada, at the place of pilgrimage, called VyarhitisVara.

13. There he saw the great river Reva and, while he was descending in the river, a dreadful snake caught hold of him and carried him to the Patala. The Muni was greatly terrified and began to think of the Deva of the Devas, Janardana Visnu.

14-15. On remembering the lotus eyed Visnu, the serpent lost his poison, and Chyavana Muni did not find any trouble, though carried to the Patala.

16. Then the serpent, coming to know of the power of the Muni, left him for fear that the Muni might curse him; the snake afterwards repented very much.

17. Chyavana, the best of the Munis, worshipped by the daughters of the serpents, roamed there and entered once into a beautiful palace of the Nagas and the Danavas.

18. While he was walking, he was seen by the religious king of the Daityas, the Prahlada.

19. The lord of the Daityas on seeing him worshipped him and enquired of him the cause of his coming there.

20. Are you sent here by Indra? Speak truly, O best of the Brahmanas. Is it to pry into my kingdom out of the enmity between the Devas and the Daityas?

21. Chyavana said What have I to do with Indra? That I might be sent by him, as his spy, messenger, to your city!

22. O Chief of the Daityas! Know me as Chyavana, the son of Bhrigu, prompt in religious duties and whose eye is illumined by knowledge. Do not fear that I am sent here by Indra.

23. When I went to bathe in a place of pilgrimage, in the holy Narmada, and dropped into the river, a poisonous snake caught hold of me (and carried me here).

24. I took the name of Visnu; and the serpent, hearing the Visnu's name, became void of poison, and left me here as you see.

25. O king! Coming here, I see you. You are a devotee of Visnu; know me, too, a devotee of the same Visnu.

26. Vyasa said O king! Prahlada, the son of Hiranya Kas'ipu, on hearing his sweet words, gladly asked him about the various places of pilgrimages.

27. Prahlada said O Best of Munis! Kindly describe to me, in detail, which are the places of pilgrimages on the earth, Patala, and in the Heavens, that verily lead to holiness.

28. Chyavana said O King! He whose body, words, and mind have grown pure, to him, his every footstep is a place of pilgrimage; he, whose heart is impure and defiled, to him the holy Ganges even is a thing more hated and worse than the Kikata country (the name of Behar).

29. Every holy place will impart holiness to him whose mind is first pure and deprived of sin.

30-31. O Best of the Daityas! On the banks of the Ganges, are situated good many cities, towns, villages, places to assemble, mines, small villages, the living places of the aborigines, the chandalas, and kaivartas, the Hunas, Bangas, the Khasas and the other MIechchas.

32. The inhabitants of the above places drink at their will the holy Ganges water, equivalent to Brahma, and bathe therein and do other works.

33. O King! There not even a single soul becomes pure. What use is a holy place to him, whose heart becomes attached to the sensual objects and who can therefore be called the lost souls.

34. Know, O king! the mind as the principal factor in any religious act or in any holy place. He who wants purity, let him first make his own mind pure.

35. The residents in any holy place deceive others and thus incur great sins. The sins committed in a place of pilgrimage can never be removed; they become unending and inexhaustible.

36. As the fruit, Indravaruna, is never sweet though fully ripe, so whose heart is defiled, he can never be pure though he bathes hundreds and thousands of times in the Tirtha water.

37. He who wants welfare of his own and others, he should first make his mind pure; when his mind becomes pure, then, the purity of material things and the purity of conduct can have any effect; then and then only resorting to places of pilgrimages becomes efficacious.

38-39. Always avoid company with the lowest class of persons in the holy places; it is far better to shew one's good will and compassion to all the souls (jivas) by one's intellect and by one's acts. You have asked me about the holy places of pilgrimages; I will now tell you those that are the best.

40. O king! The holy Naimis'aranya is the first, next Chakratirtha; next Puskaratirtha; there are many others besides these that cannot be counted. O Best of kings! There are lots of other holy places in this world.

41-42. Vyasa said O king! Prahlada, the king of the Daityas, on hearing the Muni's words, became ready to go Naimis'ranya and, with very much gladness, exclaimed to his followers, the Daityas O Good Ones! Get up; today we will go to Naimis'aranya and we will see the lotus eyed, yellow robed S’ri Achyutam, the Visnu.

43. Vyasa said O King! When thus addressed by Prahlada, the Demons were exceedingly glad; and they all marched out of Patala.

44. The Daityas, and Demons all united went to Naimis'aranyam and filled with much pleasure, they all bathed on reaching that holy place.

45. There, accompanied by the Daityas, Prahlada roamed about the sacred places and saw the holy Sarasvati river and Her pure clean water.

46. The highsouled Prahlada bathed in the Sarasvati river and his mind was satisfied.

47. The king of the Daityas was very much pleased and he perform ablutions and charities according to due rites in that most auspicious sacred place of pilgrimage.

English translation

1. Vyasa said After performing duly his religious rites there, the son of Hiranya Kas'ipu saw before him an unbrageous peepul tree.

2-3. There he saw along with the feathers of vultures, the terrible, sharpened under a stone, various glittering arrows, arrayed in due order; and he was surprised to think who could have kept such arrows, well guarded in this very holy hermitage of the Risis.

4-5. While Prahlada was thus meditating in his mind, he saw before him, wearing the skin of a black antelope, the two sons of Dharma, the two Munis Nara Narayana, loaded on their heads with high clots of hairs. Before them were placed the two white bows named S'arngam and Ajagavam, (Pinaka) the bows of Visnu and S'iva respectively, bearing their qualified marks, as well as their two inexhaustible big quivers.

6-10. The Lord of the Daityas, then, saw those two blessed ones, the two Risis Nara Narayana, the two sons of Dharma, deeply absorbed in meditation. Seeing this, he became very much enraged, his eyes became red, and he began to address them thus O two Ascetics! Has vain arrogance possessed your mind to destroy religion? It is never seen nor even heard, that the practice of severe asceticism and the holding of the bows and arrows, were carried into effect simultaneously by one man in any of the Four Ages. These two are contradictory things. That may be worthy in the Kali Yuga? This asceticism is fit for the Brahmanas; why, then are the bows and arrows held by you? There is an irreconcilable difference between the holding of clotted hairs on the head and the holding in the hand of the bows and arrows. Therefore, do you practise religious rites, with feelings befitting your divine positions!

11. Vyasa said O Descendant of Bharata! On hearing thus the Prahlada's words, the Nara Risi said O Lord of the Daityas! What matters it to you? Why do you, for nothing, trouble yourself with our tapasya.

12. An able man can accomplish any thing. It is widely known in the three worlds, that we are able to accomplish these two things contemporaneously. O thou of weak understanding!

13. In the battle field as well as in asceticism, we can shew our prowess. What have you got to do with us in these matters? The road before you is unobstructed, you can go wherever you like; why do you brag of your own merits?

14. You are very dull and stupid; what can you understand of a Brahmanic glory that is very rare and attained with great difficulty? Those that want happiness need not meddle with the Brahmanas.

15-16. Prahlada said Blunt headed and vain braggarts are you! When I am present in this Tirtha, I who am the upholder of Dharma, I won't allow you to practise any irreligious things here! O Ascetics! Better show me your skill in fight to-day.

17-18. Vyasa said O king! The Risi Nara on hearing his words replied Give us battle if you are so desirous. O wretched amongst the Asuras! In to-day's battle, I will knock your head down, and then you shall never in future desire to fight with any body.

19-20. Vyasa said On hearing these words, the chief of the Daityas was very much angry and promised to conquer these two self controlled Risi ascetics, Nara Narayana by any means whatsoever.

21-22. Vyasa said Thus saying, the Daitya took up his bow and quickly stretched it with arrow and the bow string made a terrible noise. Then Nara, too, too up with anger his bows and began to shoot arrows at Prahlada lots of sharpened arrows and weapons.

23. The lord of the Daityas quickly selected the arrows, glittering like gold, and with them tore asunder the arrows thrown by Nara. Nara, seeing his arrows, cut asunder, became infuriated with anger and began to hurl as quickly lots of other arrows.

24. Prahlada then cut asunder with arrows, of quick velocity, the Nara's weapons and struck violently on the breast of Nara. Nara, too, with anger pierced the arms of Prahlada with five quick arrows.

25. Indra and the other Devas came on their respective aeroplanes to see their fight and began to give cheers sometimes to Nara and sometime to Prahlada from above the skies.

26. The Lord of the Daityas taking up his bow, began out of furious anger to hurl various weapons on Nara as incessantly as clouds give rain over the mountain peaks. The Nara Muni now became very much exhausted and weary, being struck with Prahlada's arrows.

27. Narayana then seeing Nara exhausted, became very much amazed and bolding his unequalled S'arnga bow, began to quit arrows, shining with with golden lustre.

28. O Lord of the earth! Then Narayana and Prahlada both were desirous to win the victory, and a terrible fight ensued. The Devas gladly poured forth flowers on their heads from the skies.

29. The king of the Daityas got very much enraged and began to hurl arrows with tremendous quickness. Narayana, the son of Dharma, immediately cut asunder those weapons with his very sharp arrow.

30-32. Narayana too, threw arrows sharpened under stones with high velocity and very much troubled the lord of the Daityas, who now became very much restless.

33-34. The sky was covered over with arrows and arrows from both the parties and the day looked like the night. Then the Devas and the Daityas were very much astonished and told each other, "We never saw before a terrible fight like this."

35. Then the Devarsis, Gandarbhas, Yaksas, Kinnaras, Pannagas, Vidyadharas and Charanas were all very much confounded.

36-37. The two Risis Narada and Parvata came also to witness their fight; the Devarsi Narada told the Parvata Risi he never saw before such a dreadful fight. There were awful battles with Tarakasura and Vritrasura and also the battle between Hari and Madhukaitava; but they were all inferior and cannot stand in comparison.

38. It seemed that Prahlada was very powerful; otherwise how could an equal fight last so long a time with such an accomplished person, perfect with all the supernatural powers and of such heroic deeds as Narayana.

39-42. Vyasa said O king! Day and night the Daityas and the ascetic Narayana went on fighting terribly with each other. Then Narayana cut off, with the arrow, the bow of Prahlada; Prahlada soon took another bow; the expert handed Narayana quickly broke into two that bow. Thus though Prahlada's arrows were repeatedly cut asunder still he began to take up fresh bows and Narayana began to cut them repeatedly.

43-44. Thus, then, when all the bows of Prahlada were destroyed, the Daitya Raja took up Parigha (iron club), became enraged and threw it on Narayana's arm. The powerful Bhagavan Narayana, seeing the dreadful iron club, cut it asunder with nine arrows and pierced Prahlada with ten arrows.

45-47. Then Prahlada, enraged, threw the iron gada on Narayana's thighs. The exceedingly powerful Dharma's son was not at all agitated and stood firm like a rock and taking up arrows quickly cut asunder the iron gada of the Daitya. Then the visitors were much startled.

48-49. Then Prahlada, intent on killing his enemy, became very much angry and threw the S'akti darts, spears and missiles instantly on Narayana's thighs with great velocity. Narayana with one arrow cut that easily into seven parts and with seven arrows pierced Prahlada.

50. Thus for one thousand Deva years the terrible fight lasted between Prahlada and Narayana in that hermitage; and the whole universe was struck with surprise.

51-52. Then Gadadhara with yellow robes and four hands quickly came there and called Prahlada. The son of Hiranya Kas'ipoo, Prahlada, seeing the Lord of Laksmi, four armed, Narayana with lotus and disc in His hands come there, bowed low, and, with folded hands, began to speak to him with great devotion.

53-54. O Deva of the Devas! You are the Lord of the universe and devoted to your devotees. O Madhava! I have fought for full one hundred Deva years; still I have not not been able to defeat these ascetics. I do not know why. I am surprised at it.

55-56. Visnu said O Forgiving One! These two Risis Nara Narayana are, the perfect ascetics, self controlled and born of my Amsas. Therefore you have not been able to defeat them. What wonder is there! O king! Better go now to your Patala and keep your steadfast devotion on me. O Intelligent one! Do not quarrel any more with these two ascetics.

57. Vyasa said O king! The Daitya king Prahlada then advised by Visnu went out of that place with his Asura followers; and the two Nara Narayanas began again to practise their Tapasyas.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Fourth Book of S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam; of 18,000 verses, on the fight between the Risis and Prahlada by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Janamejaya said O Son of Paras'ara! There has arisen a great doubt in my mind on hearing just now your words. These Nara Narayana are the two sons of Dharma; they are ascetics, calm and quiet, the Ams'as of Visnu; they reside in a holy place of pilgrimage! They are filled with the Sattvic qualities, subsisting always on roots and fruits of the forest, the highsouled hermits and truthful. How were they addicted to such warfare? Why had they left their invaluable asceticism? And with what object were they fighting for full one thousand Deva years with Prahlada.

5. What was the end, O Muni, of their fight with Prahlada? Kindly explain to me in detail the cause of this warfare.

6. Women, wealth or any other worldly object can be the cause of any quarrel or fight amongst any persons; but, in this case, the two ascetics had none of these; how then this idea of fight sprung within their minds.

7-8. And why did they practise such severe austerities? Was it that they had to overpower others, or enjoy pleasures themselves or to reach Heaven that they practised tapasya? What fruits did they eventually obtain from such penances?

9. They became very lean and thin through their asceticism; still how could they fight full one thousand Deva years without getting fatigued.

10. They were not entangled in this fight for kingdom, or wealth or for women or for any other worldly object; then why did they fight with the high souled Prahlada?

11. Having no attachment for any worldly object nor any desire to gain any thing therefrom, why did they engage themselves so thoroughly, in such pains giving battle?

12. Intelligent persons always do works leading to bliss; they never do painful works; this is the long standing rule of the world.

13. The two sons of Dharma were the Ams'as of Hah, all knowing and adorned with all qualities; why did they fight, subversive of religion?

14. O Maharsi! Even the dull and stupid persons in the world won't go to these deadly battles leaving asceticism and samadhi, leading to the purification of all desires.

15. I have heard that Yayati, the Lord of the earth was dropped from Heaven to this world, owing to his Ahamkara, though he was a virtuous king devoted to charities and sacrifices.

16-17. No sooner Yayati, said the king did As'vamedha sacrifice, etc., with Ahamkara, egoism, he was dropped by Indra with thunderbolt in his hands. So one can see that, without Ahamkara no fight can occur. The ascetics had no bodily strength; therefore if they had to fight, it is through the waste of their Tapasya that they could do so.

18. Vyasa said O king! The all knowing sages that have realised the truth or Dharnna declare the threefold Ahamkara arising out the Sattvic, Rajasic and Tamasic qualities respectively to be the causes of this world.

19. How, then, can these two Munis being embodied forego their Ahamkaras? Without any cause, no actions follow; this is quite certain.

20. Tapas, charities, sacrifices all originate from the Sattvic qualities. And quarrels arise from the Rajasic or Tamasic qualities.

21. All arise from Ahamkara, whether good or bad; this is quite certain.

22. There is no other thing that enchains a soul than this Ahamkara.

It is out of Ahamkara that this Universe is created: how can it be then free from it?

23. O King! Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'ha, even these are with Ahamkaras. Then how can you expect other ordinary Munis to be free from it?

24. Encased with Ahamkara, this Universe is rolling. Births and death occur repectively through this Karma.

25. O Lord of the earth. The Devas, birds and men are revolving in this world like the wheel of a chariot.

26. In this wide world who can count how many Avataras Visnu had to take in all sorts of wombs, good or low.

27. Ordained by the Lord of the Universe, Narayana Himself had to take the Fish, Tortoise, Boar, Man Lion and the Dwarf incarnations.

28. Vasudeva Janardana the Lord, had to undertake countless Avataras births in this world.

29. In the Vaivasvata manvantara, the Avataras of Bhagavan Hari are being mentioned to you. Hear!

30. The all pervading Lord of the world, the God of the Gods, had to take several incarnations in this world, owing to the curses inflicted by Bhrigu.

31. The king said There has now again arisen another fresh doubt, why was Visnu cursed by Bhrigu Muni?

32. O Muni! What injury did Hari commit to that Muni, and whereof the Muni Bhrigu cursed him.

33-34. Vyasa said Hear, O king! the cause of the curse; I will narrate to you. In days of yore, the king Hiranyakasipu, the son of Kasyapa often quarrelled with the Devas; owing to this incessant warfare, the whole universe was much alarmed and perplexed.

35. And when Hiranyakasipu was slain by the Man-Lion incarnation, Prahlada, the tormentor of the foes, continued his enmity towards the Devas and began to annoy them.

36. Thus one hundred years dreadful battle occurred between the Devas and Prahlada, to the astonishment of all.

37-38. O king! The Devas fought very hard and were victorious. Prahlada was defeated and was sorely grieved. Hearing that the Eternal Religion is the best, he handed his kingdom over to his son Bali and went to the Gandhamadan hill to practise tapasya.

39-40. The prosperous Bali, too, on gaining his kingdom, began to quarrel with the Devas and the war thus went on. Ultimately the powerful Indra and the Devas defeated the Asuras.

41-42. O king! Indra, of unequalled prowess, with the aid of Visnu, deprived the Daityas of their kingdom. The defeated Daityas took refuge of their family spiritual guide S'ukracharya and addressed him thus, O Brahmana! You are endowed with your fiery strength of Tapasya and you are now powerful; why are you not lending your helping hands to your Daitya followers. O foremost of the councillors. If you do not help us and save us, we will not be able to stay in this earth and will soon have to go down to Patala.

43-44. Vyasa said Thus addressed by the Daityas, the very kind hearted S'ukracharya said, O Daityas! Do not be afraid; I will protect you by my fire of strength and vigour; and help you with sound counsels and medicines. Be brave and energetic and cast aside your mental agony and sorrow.

45-47. Vyasa said O king! The Daityas became fearless under the patronage of S'ukracharya. The Devas had their spies and knew all about these. They held councils with Indra and settled that before the Daityas had time to dislodge us from our Heaven with the mantra of S'ukracharya, we will speedily go and attack them. Thus attacked all on a sudden, they will all be slain by us and we will drive them down to the Patala.

48. Thus forming their resolves, with fully equipped arms and weapons, they went out of rage to fight with the Daityas and orderd by Indra and aided by Visnu, they began to kill the Demons.

49. When the Devas were thus slaying the Demons, they got very much terrified and exclaimed “O Lord! Protect us! Protect us!” and took the refuge of Sukra.

50. S'ukracharya, seeing the Daityas very much perplexed and distracted, at once cried aloud out of the influence of his Mantra “No fear, no fear,” Then the Devas on seeing S'ukracharya left the Daityas and fled away to their own places.

Here ends the Tenth Chapter of the Fourth Book of the Maha Puranann, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18000 verses by MaharsT Veda Vyasa on the curse on Visnu by Bhrigu.

English translation

1. Vyasa said When the Devas retired from the battlefield, S'ukracharya addressed the Demons thus O best of the Demons! Please hear, what had been told to me by Brahma in days of yore.

2-3. Janardan Visnu is coming here to slay all the Demons, He killed before Hiranyaksa, the king of the Asuras, in His Boar incarnation.

He killed Hiranyakasipu by assuming His Man-Lion appearance; now too, he will kill all the Daityas, no doubt, with great enthusiasm.

4-5. Now my mantra force will not be of any avail before S'ri Hari. And without my help you will not be able to conquer the Devas. Therefore, O Demons, wait for some time for me; I will start today to the presence of S'iva Mahadeva to obtain from him the Mantra S'akti.

6. I will return, as early as possible, getting the Mantra from S'ri Mahadeva; and with the help of the power of those great Mantras I will be able to protect you thoroughly.

7. The Daityas said O best of the Munis! We are now defeated and our forces are well nigh exhausted; how will we be able to stay on this earth and expect your return for so long a time?

8. Those who were of great strength amongst us, they all are slain; now we are left very few in number. In this crisis it is not advisable and auspicious for us to remain here in this battlefield.

9. S'ukracharya said Better you all stay here until I return, getting the requisite Mantra; remain peaceful and engaged in asceticism.

10. The heroes apply one or other of the following four measures conciliation, alliance, gifts and bribery, partitions and sowing dissensions and punishment or open attack according to the conditions of time, place strength and circumstances.

11. Intelligent and well wishing persons do serve their enemies even in time of distress; but no sooner they find that their strength and army have increased, than they try at once to kill all their enemies.

12. Now, therefore, pretend your meekness and allegiance and adopt peace and remain in your own place until my arrival.

13. O Demons! I will come back with the Mantra from Mahadeva. I will fight again with the Devas, by that veritable mantra power.

14. O king! Thus firmly making up his mind to have the Mantra, S'ukracharya went to Mahadeva.

15. The Danavas sent Prahlada to the Devas for conciliation. The Devas regarded Prahlada truthful and they all trusted on him.

16. Prahlada with Asuras addressed thus the Devas with gentleness and humility.

17. O Immortals! We all have abandoned our weapons and armour. Now we desire to wear barks of trees and practise asceticism.

18. The Devas took Prahlada's words to be true and deserted from further fight; were freed of anxiety and felt all delighted.

19. On the Daitya's leaving their weapons, the Gods desisted from battle, went to their respective places and freely gave themselves up to pleasure and amusements.

20. The Daityas controlled themselves and practised asceticism in the Kas'yapa's hermitage, expecting the return of S'ukracharya.

21. S'ukracharya went to Kailasa and made respectful obeisance to the God Mahadeva. Mahadeva enquired of the cause of his coming.

22. S'ukracharya said 1 ask for Mantras, O Deva! from you that are not possessed by Brihaspati, for the defeat of the Devas, and the victory of the Asuras.

23. Vyasa said On hearing his words, the all-knowing S'ankara S'iva began to think what He would do in this matter.

24. Certainly, this is with the revengeful object of attacking the Devas, for their defeat and for the victory of the Asuras that this Muni has come.

25. The Devas ought to be protected by me; thus thinking, S'ankara MahesVara advised him an entirely difficult tapasya to practise.

26. Full one thousand years he would practise tapasya with feet upwards and head downwards, he will have to inhale the smoke of burnt husk. Then he will get the Mantra and his desires will be fulfilled.

27. That would be done; thus saying to S'ankara, S'ukracharya practised that excellent vow, peaceful and inhaling the smoke of husk to get that Mantra.

28-29. The Devas came to know that S'ukracharya is practising his vow and the Daityas have become arrogant. They then counselled.

30. And came to the conclusion, took up weapons and arms and went to the Daityas, ready to fight.

31. The Daityas, seeing the Devas dressed in armour and holding weapons and coming from all sides, became very much afraid and anxious.

32. The Daityas, seeing this all on a sudden, were attacked with fear and began to address the Devas, proud with their army, in words, full of good meanings and morals.

33. O Devas! We have abandoned our arms; we are now armless; our spiritual guide is in his tapasya, you gave us words of fearlessness; why then you have come now dressed in full armour and with armies to kill us.

34. O Devas! Where is your truth. And where is your religion acccording to S'ruti? It is stated in S'ruti never to kill the weaponless, the fear stricken, and the refugees.

35. The Devas said You sent your good S'ukracharya, out of pretence to acquire the Mantras; your asceticism is veiled under a deceitful object. Therefore we will fight with you certainly.

36. Be ready now and dress yourself with your arms and ammunitions, "Lo! Whenever you get any loop hole in your enemies, catch hold of it and kill your enemy." This is the eternal religion.

37. Vyasa said On thus hearing the reply from the Devas, the Daityas after consideration quitted that place and fled away with terror.

38. And they took refuge under the S'ukracharya's mother. She saw the Daityas very much fearstricken and at once guaranteed to them protection from fear.

39. The mother of Kavya S'ukracharya said Don't fear; don't fear; cast away fear. O Danavas! In my presence, no fear can overtake you.

40. The Asuras on hearing her words were free from anxiety and pain and remained in that hermitage, in no way now bewildered or agitated, though they had no arms.

41-42. Here the Devas, seeing the Daityas flying away, pursued them and entering the hermitage were ready to kill the Daityas, not taking into account what strength they gained there. The mother of S'ukra warned the Devas not to kill; but, inspite of her hindrance, they began to slay the Daityas.

43. Seeing the Daityas thus attacked, the mother was furiously irritated and told them she would make all of them overpowered by sleep by her tapas strength, clarified intellectual force.

Note:-ls it by the asphyxiating gas? Or, by poisonous vapours or liquids?

44. So saying she sent the Goddess of sleep who at once overpowered the Gods and made them all lie down on the grounds senseless. Indra with the other Devas lay there dumb, and miserable.

45. On seeing Indra thus stupefied by sleep, the Bhagavan Visnu told Indra to enter into His body. He would then carry him to another place and he will be better.

46-47. Indra entered into the Visnu's body; and, under His protection, he became free from sleep and fear. On seeing Indra thus sheltered by Visnu and fearless, the mother of Kavya spoke.

48. O Indra! I will devour you with Visnu today by my Tapas force. All the Devas will presently see all this and my extraordinary power.

N.B.: Is it by making the earth go down, causing a fissure, thus engulfing the whole army? Or by blowing them up? Or by showering jets of poisonous gas or hot water or vapour from all sides.

49. Vyasa said O king! No sooner the mother spoke thus, than both Indra and Visnu were both stupefied under her magical spell, superior thought power, and a thorough learning of the art of warfare.

50. The Devas, seeing them very much overpowered and bewildered, were greatly struck with wonder; they became desperate and began to cry aloud.

51. Indra, on hearing the Devas cry aloud, told Visnu, O Madhusudana! I am more bewildered in particular than yourself.

52. O Madhava! No need of any further consideration. Before this wretch, inflated with pride by her tapasya, burns us, better cause her death as early as possible.

53. When thus requested by Indra who was very much perplexed, Bhagavan Visnu quickly remembered his Sudars'ana disc, casting aside the thought that it is hateful to kill a woman.

54-55. The disc, the ever obedient weapon of Visnu appeared instantly at his remembrance; and Visnu, becoming angry as prompted by Indra held the disc in His hand, and, hurling it off on the S'ukra's mother, severed off her head quickly. The god Indra became very glad at this.

56. The Devas became free from sorrow, got very much pleased and heartily exclaimed victory to Hari and worshipped Him and began to chant His praises.

57. Indra and Visnu then became free from all troubles; but they began to fear that Bhrigu (S'ukra's father) would curse them terribly and without fail.

Here ends the Eleventh Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa, on S'ukra's going to Mahadeva to get the Mantra.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! On seeing Visnu killing his wife, and thus committing a dreadful atrocious act, the Bhagavan Bhrigu was very sorry and began to tremble with anger and addressed Madhusudana thus.

2. Bhrigu said O Visnu! You have done an extremely sinful act. O intelligent one! Knowing it, you have done so; what a great wonder! Nobody dreams of the murder of this Brahman’s daughter; and you have committed it in deed, black and white.

3. O Deva! The Maharsis declare you to be Sattvic, engaged in preservation; Brahma to be Rajasic (creator) and S’ambhu S’iva to be Tamasic (destroyer). Why then is the contrary thing visible in this case?

4. Why have you become Tamasic? Why have you done this heinous crime? O Visnu! The females are never to be killed; this is a known fact; then why have you killed this woman without any fault.

5-6. You have done a very execrable act. What shall I do to you? It is mete that I would curse you. O Great Sinner! You have pained me very much and made me very weary. I will not curse Indra. You always assume a deceitful appearance and behave like a black cruel serpent; your mind is all full of wickedness; I will curse you.

7. O Janardana. Those Munis who call you Sattvic are fools; I have seen today that your ways are exceptionally vicious and Tamasic.

8. O Visnu! I curse you now to take frequent births, suffer very frequently in different wombs, in the earth and thus suffer the pains of remaining in the wombs.

9. O king! Therefore whenever religion subsides in the world, Bhagavan Visnu incarnates frequently in this human world, due to the curse of Bhrigu.

10. The king said O best of the Munis! Did that Mahatma Bhrigu again marry and lead a householder's life when his wife was thus killed by the lustrous disc Sudars'ana.

11. Vyasa said O king! The sacrificer Bhrigu angrily cursed Hah and next took that severed head and quickly placed it over the body as before and said

12-14. O Devi! Visnu has slain you today; I will make you regain your life just now. If I am acquainted with all the Dharmas and if I have practised these in my life and if I have spoken truth always, then dost thou regain your life by my religious merit. Let all the Devas witness my power and strength. If I know the True, if I have studied all the Vedas and if I have realised the Knowledge of the Vedas, then I, sprinkling your body with this cold water, charged with my mantras, will revive you.

15. Vyasa said O king! Sprinkled by the water by Bhrigu, his wife regained her life and rose up at once and felt herself glad and smiled.

16. All the persons and living creatures seeing her stand, as if awoken from her sleep, at once exclaimed from all sides "well done, well done!" thanked Bhrigu and his wife very much and highly praised them.

17. Thus seeing the fair complexioned wife regain her life through Bhrigu, Indra and all the Devas were very much struck with wonder.

NOTE Thought power and inhalation of some medicines might have revived her.

18. Indra then adressed the Devas Now the mother of S'ukra has regained her life through Bhrigu; but when S'ukracharya will receive the mantra after his severe tapasya, we do not know what terrible harm; he would do to us!

19. Vyasa said O king! Though the deep sleep that overtook Indra had now left him, yet he became very unhappy, remembering the severe asceticism of S'ukra's tapasya and his receiving mantras.

20. Thinking over deeply in his mind, Indra called his daughter Jayanti and spoke to her with affection.

21-22. Go! Daughter! I have given thee over to the ascetic Kavya. Do this service for me, go to Kavya and help him in his asceticism and bring him under your control. By whatever acts the Muni be pleased, dost thou do at once and please him in every way and thus remove my fear.

23. The large-eyed beautiful Jayanti, hearing her father's words, went to the hermitage and there saw the Risi inhaling or drinking the smoke.

24. On seeing the body of the ascetic, and remembering her father's words she brought the leaves of the plantain trees and began to fan him.

25. The intelligent Jayanti with no excitement used to bring the pure, clear, cool, and well scented water and place it, with great devotion, before the sage for his drinking.

NOTE: Here Indra bribed by giving away his daughter.

26. When the sun was over his head, she used to prepare some protection, with her clothes, from the sun and thus made the shade for him. Thus, in various ways, did she begin to serve the Muni, herself remaining steady in her religion.

27. She brought sweet and ripe fruits proper according to the S'astras and used to place them before him for his repast.

28. In the performance of his daily duties, she used to collect the Kus'a grass of the span of thumb and fore finger, and flowers, white and yellow and placed them before him.

29. For the Muni's bedding to lie down and sleep, she used to gather soft, green leaves and with them she used to keep his bed ready; and when the Muni laid himself down, she used to fan him gently.

30. Never did she exhibit for fear of curse, any gesture or posture calculated to disturb his mind.

31. The sweet-tongued, thin lady used to praise S'ukracharya in pleasing and favourable terms.

32. When the Muni awoke, she placed water before him to wash his face and hands. Thus serving the Muni, did she stay in the hermitage.

33. The fear stricken Indra used to send messengers to fathom the mind of that self controlled Muni.

34. Thus did Jayanti serve for good many years the Muni, being void of anger and observing duly her celibacy.

35. In this way one thousand years passed duly, the God Mahadeva was very pleased and addressed S'ukracharya that He had come to give him boons that he desire.

36-37. The God Mahadeva said Whatever there exists in this universe, whatever you see with your eyes and whatever cannot be described in words, you will be the lord of all these and the conqueror of all. There is no doubt in this. You cannot be killed by any creature; you will be the ruler of all beings and will be reckoned as the best of the Brahmanas.

38-39. Vyasa said The God Mahadeva disappeared then and there, after granting him the boons. Then S'ukracharya saw Jayanti and said to herO lady of beautiful hips! Who and whose daughter art thou? What is the desire in your mind? What for you have come here? O one of beautiful thighs! what is your duty?

40. O beautiful eyed! I am very pleased with all that you have done for me. What do you want? O one of good vows! Ask boons from me; I will grant them even if they be difficult.

41. On hearing this, Jayanti's face became bright with joy; she said:- - whatever I desire, you know that already by force of your Tapasya.

42. The Kavya said Your mental desires I know; still mention them yourself particularly; I will do good to you in any way you like; I am pleased with your services.

43-44. Jayanti said O Brahmin! I am the daughter of Indra and I am the younger of my brother Jayanta. Father has given me over to you; I now like to live with you. Kindly fulfil my desires now. O blessed one! You better take me and enjoy me according to Dharma. This is my desire.

45. S'ukracharya said O thou of large and handsome hips! Better enjoy with me for ten years, according to your liking, without being visible to anybody.

46-48. Vyasa said Thus saying, S'ukracharya went to his home and, according to religious observances, married Jayanti and lived with her for ten years under the shade of Maya and unobserved by anybody. On the other hand, the Daityas, hearing that S'ukracharya returned home successful getting his desired Mantra, were very glad and went to his house to pay their respects to him. But S'ukra was then living with Jayanti; hence the Asuras could not see him.

49. Then they got very much dejected, sorry and were drooped in spirits; they searched for him again and again.

50. Not being able to see S'ukra under the shade of Maya, the Daityas were very sorry and got afraid and then returned to their own residences.

51. On the other hand, the Devas, knowing that S'ukra was holding intercourses with Jayanti, Indra, the God of Devas, spoke to the Deva Guru Brihaspati. O Guru! Advise us what to do under the present circumstances and relieve us from the impending difficulties.

52. O Brahmana. Better go today to the Danavas and do that by which our honour may be maintained. You better put the Danavas under some charm by your magical spell and think and do good to us.

53. On hearing Indra's words and knowing that S'ukra is now enjoying with Jayanti, Brihaspati went to the Danavas, putting on the appearance of S'ukracharya.

54. Going to the Demons, he called on them very politely and sweetly. The Asuras said that S'ukracharya had come in presence of them.

55. The Demons were very glad and bowed down before S'ukracharya and could not make out that he was the false S'ukracharya, under the mayic charm of Brihaspati.

56. Then the false S'ukracharya asked the welfare of the Daityas and said 1 went so long for your good; I performed severe tapasya and satisfied the God S'ambhu and acquired from him the Mantra, the sacred knowledge, and that I will frankly explain to you.

57. On hearing this, the Demons were very pleased and, knowing that the Guru had been successful, were filled with joy.

58. They saluted him with joy and began to live quietly and freely and without pains, having got rid of fear from the Devas.

English translation

1. The king said What did the intelligent Brihaspati do after he had assumed falsely the appearance of S'ukracharya, and lived there as the spiritual guide of the Demons.

2. O Muni! Brihaspati is the Guru of the Devas; he also devotes his time in studying the Vedas; and is the ocean of all knowledge; he is the son of the Maharsi Angira and he is himself a Muni. Endorsed with all these good qualifications, how could he deceive the Demons

3-4. In all the religious S'astras, Truth is declared to be the essence of Dharma; and the Supreme Self is attained through Truth, so the wise sages say. How can we expect an ordinary householder to be true when such a man as Brihaspati takes recourse to falsehood with the Demons.

5. If one acquires, as one's wealth, the whole Universe, still one does not require anything more than what is required in feeding one's belly; how is it that Brihaspati could speak falsehood merely for the sake of his belly?

6. O Muni! The words sung by the ancient virtuous and respectable sages were true and had their corresponding objects denoted by those words; now they employed the term S'ista meaning that there were virtuous, respectable persons as denoted by them. When Brihaspati can even commit such condemnable deceitful acts and speak falsehood, we can expect no virtuous respectable persons in the world. Where then do you find the S'ista persons, denoted by the word S'ista, sung by the ancient sages? The word S'ista is now meaningless!

7. The Devas are sprung from the Sattvic qualities, men from Rajasic qualities and birds, etc. from the Tamasic qualities.

8. When the Guru of the Immortals, the incarnate of Sattvic qualities, can become a liar, how can one expect those who are Rajasic or Tamasic to follow rigorously the truth?

9. Oh! This Triloki is all pierced with falsehood! Where is the Religion! And what will be the ultimate goal of all these creatures!

10. When Bhagavan Hari, Brahma, Indra and the best of the Devas when all can betake to pretext, fraud and trickery and show cleverness in them; what to speak of men!

11-12. O Giver of honour! When all the Devas, Vas'istha, Vamadeva, VisVamitra, Brihaspati and other ascetic Munis get themselves overpowered by lust and anger, when their intelligence gets destroyed by covetousness and avarice, when they are addicted to vices and are expert in fraud, pre-text and trickery, then what fate, alas! can you expect of Dharma and what help is there of any religious persons!

13. Alas! Indra, Agni, Moon, and Brahma when these get overpowered by the strong influence of lust, are in illicit love with others' wives, where is the goodness and virtuous behaviour in this Triloki?

14. O Sinless One! To whom, then, can we look upon as our spiritual guide and our advice and law givers when all the Devas and Munis are corrupt with avarice?

15. Vyasa said O king! Be he Indra, Brihaspati, Brahma, Visnu or Mahes'a, whoever is embodied or will put on bodies, he will have to be in touch with the previously mentioned Ahamkara, and covetousness and other vices due to name and form.

16. O king! Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a are all attached to sensual objects; and what improper and sinful actions there can be that cannot be committed by persons devoted to sensual objects!

17. It is through cleverness and fraud that any one devoted to sensual objects can easily make oneself as cleverly free from Maya; but when difficulty comes, then his trickery gets discovered and the respective qualities hidden in him are brought to bear their respective results. Know, then, the three qualities to be conjointly the cause of all these actions; as without any cause, no action gets visible.

18. These discrepancies in the case of Brahma and others are caused by the three qualities; their bodies are all created from Pradhan Mahat and the other 25 Tattvas (essences).

19-20. O king! Brahma and others are subject to death; then how can you doubt on other things? In advising others, everybody gives, as it were, good and virtuous advices; but the burden falls upon their own heads; they fall off from their advices and act according to their hidden natures; then they yield to lust, anger, envy, egoism and fascination.

21. No one who is embodied can get rid of passions, born of the 3 qualities. O king! Thus the Triloki goes, is the saying of the Maharsis.

22-29. This Triloki, auspicious, inauspicious, mixed, never gets any serious change; its nature remains always uniform. See Bhagavan Visnu sometimes practises severe asceticism; Indra, the lord of the Devas sometimes follows the practices of religious sacrifices. Again you find Visnu Bhagavan, full of youth, fond of the Leela, enjoying the company of Rama in Vaikuntha; sometimes He is the ocean of mercy, is fighting dreadful battles with the Demons and being severely afflicted with their clusters of arrows; sometimes he gains victories, sometimes he gets defeat through the irony of Fate; thus he gets undoubtedly pleasures and pains. O king! some time Narayana draws all the worlds into his belly and takes his yogic sleep on the thousand headed serpent S'es'a and again he gets himself awakened by Prakriti. O king! Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a, Indra, the Devas, and Munis all of them, live up to the limit of their ordained time and when the time of Pralaya, the Universal dissolution, ends, this whole Universe, moving and nonmoving, again comes into existence as before; there is no doubt in this. O king, at the expiry of the ordained time, Brahma and all others will die, no doubt.

30-31. Again, in due course, Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a and the other Devas come out and assume bodies and get all the passions, lust, etc., as ordained. O King! You need not be astonished; this Triloki always goes on accompanied by lust, anger, etc.

32-34. Persons free from lust, anger and other passions are very rare in this world. He who is afraid of this world does not marry, and thus being free from the attachments to any worldly object, becomes free and roams fearless. The Moon stole away the wife of Brihaspati and Brihaspati himself stole away the wife of his younger brother. Thus in this wheel of Samsara, all the creatures are ever passioned with attachment, avarice, etc.

35. The householder can never expect to obtain freedom. Therefore those who want to be free, should carefully relinquish the idea of the stability of the world and worship the Eternal Mother Full and Sat, Chit and Anandam.

36. This world, moving and unmoving, O Mahes'ani, rolls in madness, overpowered by Her Maya.

37. Intelligent persons worshipping Her, trample down the three qualities and become free. O king! No other Path exists for Freedom

38-39. Until one gets the Grace from the Mahes'ani, one never gets happiness. True mercy is not found anywhere else but from Her. Then one should worship the All merciful, being of pure heart. For Her worship leads to freedom, even in this body-hood.

40. He who getting a human frame fails to worship Mahes'ani, gets down from the highest rung of the ladder. This is my opinion.

41-42. This Universe, composed of the three qualities, is encompassed with Ahamkara and fastened to untruth; therefore freedom can never be expected without the worship of That Potent Goddess, O Muni! O king! Renounce every worldly object and serve the Goddess BhuvanesVari; this is the highest duty of all.

43. The king said What did, then, the Devaguru do in the disguise of S'ukracharya? And when did the real S'ukracharya come there? O respected Muni! Speak on these points.

44. Vyasa said Please hear what the disguised Brihaspati in the shape of S'ukracharya did afterwards.

45. The demons were made to understand clearly by Brihaspati; and then they took him for S'ukracharya and placed implicit faith on him and began to think of him and him alone.

46. The Daityas, enchanted and deceived by the magic of Brihaspati, took now his refuge for acquiring the knowledge from him, since they mistook him for S'ukracharya. Who is there that is not enchanted by the idea of gaining something?

47. On the other hand, when the term of ten years was over, S'ukracharya, the real Guru of the Daityas, ceased enjoying Jayanti and began to remember his disciples, the Daityas.

48. He now began to think that "My disciples, the Daityas, are expecting every instant my return; and I would now go and see them, bewildered with fear.

49-51. They are my devotees and I ought to do such that they might not be afraid of the Devas." And then he exclaimed to Jayanti, "O beautiful one! Let my sons take the shelter of the Gods; your term of ten years is today over; I now go therefore, to see my disciples; soon I will again come to you."

52. "Be it so", replied Jayanti, the best of those who know religion, "you can go where you like; I am not to destroy your Dharma."

53-54. Hearing these words, S'ukracharya went hurriedly to the Demons and saw the Devaguru Brihaspati sitting before them in the guise of S'ukracharya. He was explaining to them the Jaina doctrines, compiled by himself and finding fault with the act of envy, taking revenge and killing and cursing the sacrifices, etc.

55. He was telling them "O Enemies of Gods! Truly, I am telling you words that will, no doubt, prove good to you. Non-killing is the highest virtue; even the enemies ought never to be killed.

56. It is the Brahmanas, addicted to enjoyments and pleasures of the senses, who want to satisfy their tastes and pleasures that are found in the Veda's injunctions to kill animals; but there is no virtue higher than non-killing animals."

57-58. O king! S'ukracharya was perfectly astonished to hear Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, speaking against the Vedas and began to think that Brihaspati is certainly my enemy. My disciples have been duped by this cheat; there is no doubt in this.

59. Fie to Avarice! It is the seed of sin; very strong and the veritable gate to hell; Brihaspati, even, the Guru of the Devas, is speaking lies, bound under the influence of this heinous avarice!

60. Oh! What wonder is this that the Guru of the Devas, who is the promulgator of all the religious S'astras and whose word is accepted as the final decision, is now expounding the doctrines of atheists.

61. When Brihaspati can become the expounder of atheistic doctrines, impelled by covetousness what to speak of those whose minds are not pure and whose intelligence is not sharp?

62. This Deva Guru, though a Brahmin, is acting today like a rogue, wanting to take away all and is deceiving my disciples the Daityas, who have been confounded by his magic.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam of 18,000 verses on cheating the Daityas by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said Thus arguing in his mind, S'ukracharya smilingly said to the Daityas O Daityas! what for have you all been cheated by Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, in my guise.

2. I am S'ukracharya; you are my disciples; this man is Brihaspati, wanting to serve the Gods. He has cheated you, there is no doubt in this.

3. This vain villainous person has assumed my form; do not put the least faith in his words. O Daityas! You are my disciples, follow unto me; leave this Brihaspati, vain and arrogant.

4. The Daityas, on hearing his words were struck with wonder at the resemblance of the two personages and came to the conclusion that "the person just come is the real S'ukracharya."

5. Then Brihaspati, the false S'ukracharya explained to the Daityas in plain and enchanting words that "the second man just come is the Deva Guru Brihaspati; he has come here in my guise. His object is to cheat you.

6. He has come here to cheat you and serve the purpose of the Devas; do not believe in his words.

7. What knowledge I have acquired from the God S'ambhu, I am teaching it to you; I will make you, no doubt, victorious in the battle with the Devas."

8. Thus the Daityas, hearing the words of the false S'ukracharya, thought the false one to be real and placed implicit reliance in his words.

9. The real S'ukracharya, then explained them as much as he could; but the Daityas, owing to the magic of the false S'ukracharya and to the wonderful effect of time, did not hear his words.

10. The Daityas thus convinced said to the real S'ukracharya, "this man before us is our Guru for our welfare and enlightenment, he is the foremost religious S'ukracharya; for ten years continuously he is giving us advices. You are not our Guru; you appear fictitious and false; you better leave this place and go away."

11. The dull brained Daityas repeatedly told to S'ukracharya the reproachful words and bowed down to the false S'ukracharya, and, saluting, him, gladly welcomed him as their Guru.

12-14. The real S'ukracharya, seeing the Daityas exceedingly attached to Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, and deceived by his words, cursed them out of anger and said:-"As you have not taken my words though I have explained everything to you, you would lose your knowledge and get defeat.

15. As you have shown disrespect towards me, you will get the fruits of it at an early date and will then understand the deceitful behaviours of that Deva Guru."

16. Vyasa said Thus saying S'ukracharya hurriedly went away, infuriated with anger. Brihaspati was glad and remained there with his mind calm.

17-19. Brihaspati then knowing the Daityas cursed by S'ukracharya, assumed his real appearance, left that place, and hurriedly returned to Indra. He began to say "I have undoubtedly succeeded in my undertaking; the Daityas have been cursed and left by me too. They are now helpless; so, O Good Suras! I have made them cursed, you would better now try to fight with them."

20-21. Indra heard their Guru and became very glad; all the other Devas were glad and worshipped him. They held another cabinet, secret council, how to fight with the Daityas; and, then, all uniting together marched out in battle against the Asuras.

22. Seeing that the powerful Devas are marching towards them ready to fight and knowing their false Guru had fled, the Daityas became very anxious.

23. They told each otherAlas! We were enchanted by the Devaguru; the highsouled S'ukracharya angrily left us; now it is our incumbent duty to satisfy him.

24. That vicious, dirty inside and pure outside, hypocrite Pundit Deva Guru, who used to go to his brother's wife, has really cheated and has quitted us.

25. What are we to do now? where to go? How to satiate now the anger of S'ukra so that he might be glad and help us.

26. Thus pondering over they all unitedly, shuddering with fear, again went to S'ukracharya, keeping Prahlada in front of them.

27. They all bowed down at the feet of their Guru; S'ukra remained silent; then, bursting with anger and with eyes red, told them.

28. You were all warned by me that you were being cheated by the Maya of Brihaspati; you did not take my word, as worth hearing, though unselfish, pure and leading to your welfare.

29. Rather you were influenced by him and infatuated with vanity, you insulted me; now you will have to bear undoubtedly the effects of that Karma.

30. You are now vitiated from the path of your welfare; go now where that disguised cheat resides for the welfare of the Gods; know me not to be a cheat like him.

31. Vyasa said O king! When S'ukra finished saying his uncertain words, Prahlada clasped his feet and began to say thus

32. Prahlada said O our Guru Bhargava! Today we have come to you in a very distressed condition! O Omniscient! we are your disciples; we are your good sons; you ought not to quit us.

33. On your departure to get the Mantra, that hypocrite, vicious Brihaspati getting the opportunity, assumed your false appearance and cheated us.

34. Peaceful persons do not take any offence committed with ignorance; you know everything; you know very well that our hearts are devoted to thee and to thee alone. There is no need of telling anything further to you.

35. O Highly Intelligent One! By your Tapas, you know our inner minds and relinquish your anger. The sages say that the anger of the saints is not lasting.

36. O Muni! Water is naturally cool; when in contact with fire it gets hot; but, when the heat is removed, it gets cold shortly after.

37. O observer of good vows! Anger is like chandala; sages therefore quit it. Our prayer to you is that you leave your anger and be pleased with us.

38. If you do not quit your anger and if you make us overpowered with grief and sorrow, O blessed one! We, being abandoned by you, will go down to the Patala.

39. Vyasa said Bhargava heard Prahlada's words and, with his intuitioned eye, came to see the proper state of affairs and was pleased and lovingly said.

40. You will not have to fear nor to enter into the Patala. You are my Yajamanas; I will certainly protect you all by my never failing Mantra power.

41. O knower of religion! What Brahma of yore told me, I am now telling you accordingly. Hear my truthful words, leading to your welfare.

42. Whatever is inevitable, doomed to pass, must come to pass, be it auspicious or inauspicious. No one is able in this world to go against the current of Fate.

43. Under the influence of Time you are now deprived of strength, therefore you will have to suffer defeat at the hands of the Devas and you will have to go once to the Patala.

44-45. Brahma said When your time to enjoy the sovereignty of the Triloki had come, you enjoyed the kingdoms of the Triloki with all its wealth and power. You attacked the Devas and, helped by Time, had been able to trample them under your feet and held your sovereignty for full ten yugas and enjoyed the pleasures without any hitch.

46. You will regain this kingdom in the Savarnik manvantara. Then Bali will come in your family as the grandson of Prahlada and will conquer the Triloki and will get name and fame throughout his kingdom.

47-48. When the Lord of Vaikuntha had incarnated as Vamana and stolen away the kingdom of Vali, then the Janardan Visnu told Bali, the king of the Demons that "I have taken away your kingdom by pretext to serve the purpose of the Gods; you will become Indra, no doubt, in the coming Savarnika manvantara."

49. Bhargava said According to the sayings of S'ri Bhagavan Hari, your grandson Bali is now invisible to all creatures and is now passing away his time, very much terror stricken.

50-51. Being afraid of Indra, he is now staying in a lonely house as an ass. One day Indra on seeing him enquired of him, in various ways, the cause of his assuming that ass-body.

52. O Lord of the Daityas! You have always enjoyed pleasures of all the world; you are the ruler of the Daityas; you ruled over all the worlds; do you not feel shame now in thus assuming this ass body. The Lord of the Daityas, hearing him, spoke thus.

53-54. O Indra, there is nothing to be sorry in these matters. When the most powerful Visnu can assume fish and tortoise incarnations, then what wonder is there that I by virtue of the force of Time, am now staying as an ass? When you had murdered a Brahman, you, too had hid yourself in the Manasa lake in the lotuses; similarly today distressed, I am staying here in this ass body.

55. O Indra! What sorrow or happiness can be to a person who is under the control of Fate. To him everything is alike; for whatever the Time wishes, It can act accordingly.

56. Bhargava said to Prahlada! Both persons Bali and Indra got enlightenment at the mutual conversations; and they went away to their places at their own will.

57. O Lord of the Asuras! I have narrated to you this story indicating how powerful is the Time. Know that the Devas and Daityas and all the human beings and this whole universe is under that Great Fate.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses on the Daityas getting back their S'ukracharya, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king Janamejaya! Prahlada was glad to hear the above words of the high souled Bhargava.

2. Knowing Fate to be the strongest, he addressed the Daityas Never, in this battle will victory be ours.

3-5. Then the victorious Dennons, infatuated with pride, told Prahlada What is Fate? We do not recognise it. We ought to fight. O Lord of us Fate reigns over those that are idle, not energetic. Has Fate any shape? Who has created it? Has anybody seen Fate? However let us gather strength and fight. You are very intelligent and all knowing; It is proper that you should take our lead in the fight.

6. O king! When the Daityas spoke thus, Prahlada, the great Destroyer of enemies, became the general and challenged the Devas to fight.

7. On seeing the Asuras in the battle field, the Devas, dressed with arms and weapons, began to fight with them.

8. For full one hundred years the dreadful battle was fought between Indra and Prahlada; on seeing this, the Munis were astonished.

9. O king! In this fearful battle, the Daityas with their general Prahlada, the followers of S'ukracharya, got the victory.

10. Then Indra, advised by their Guru Brihaspati, began to remember the Goddess of the Universe, the Most High, the Giver of welfare, the Destroyer of all sorrows and calamities, and the Bestower of freedom, worship Her, and sing hymns to Her with great devotion.

11-12. Indra said Victory be to the name of the Goddess Mahamaya, the Eternal Mother, the Holder of the trident! Holder of conchshell, disc, club, and lotus, the Giver of “no fear.” Salutation to Thee, the Goddess of the Universe; Thou art the Supreme Heroine in everything that relates to force, that is described in the S’akti Dars’ana S’astras. Thou art the Ten Tattvas, Thou art the Mother, Thou art the Mahavidya (the Supreme Knowledge).

13. There are many Tattvas; here the ten tattvas are according to the S’akti Dars’ana. There are many Dharma S’astras. Here S’akti S’astra is meant.

The Tattvas are those ultimate substances into which these gross manifestations resolve. The tattvas are Mahavindu, Nada S’akti, Mis'ra Vindu, etc.

O World Mother! Thou art the Maha Kundalini (the great Serpent Fire); thou art the Everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss; Thou art the Deity of the vital Fire (Prana); Thou art the Deity of the Agnihotra (maintenance of the Sacred Fire and an oblation to It);

Thou art the Holy Flame, burning always in the ethereal space in the Heart; Salutation to Thee!

14. Thou dwellest within the five Sheaths (the Annamaya, the Pranamaya, the Manomaya, the Vijhanamaya and the Anandamaya sheaths are the five sheaths here referred to). Thou art the Indweller of the Ananda maya kosa, Thou art of the nature of Puchchha Brahma, the end of Brahma. Thou art the Deity of all, the Ananda (bliss) unblown, O Mother! Thou art the Deity of all the Upanisadas.

15. O Mother! Be pleased unto us; we have become powerless; protect us, O Mother! we are defeated by the Daityas; O Goddess! Thou art endowed with all the powers. Thou art our Sole Refuge in this Universe, in times of distress, and Thou art the Only One, strong and capable to remove all our dangers.

16. O Goddess! Those who incessantly meditate on Thee are really happy and those that do not meditate Thee, their fear, and sorrows are never removed; those that want ultimate freedom from bondage and who meditate on Thee always; those pure souls, being free from Ahamkara, and free from attachment go, no doubt, beyond this ocean of world.

17. O World Mother! Thy prowess is ever manifested whenever protection is demanded; You always come forward and relieve the distressed; You are the great destroyer! Thou art the Time Incarnate of all these worlds; O Mother! We are fools; how can we appreciate your qualities.

18. Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a, I myself, Sun, Yama, Varuna, Fire, Air, the high minded munis, Agama, Nigama, the Tantras and the Vedas, are quite unable to realise Your unequalled prowess; Salutation to Thy Feet.

19. Those are blessed that are devoted to Thee; They are the great souls; they always dive in the Ocean of Bliss, being always free from the fangs of this Samsara. Those that are not Your devotees, cannot cross this Ocean of Samsara, where the Birth and Death are the billows.

20. O Goddess! Those that are always fanned by the white chamaras and those that travel always in cars, they in their previous births worshipped Thee with various things; therefore they have acquired the effects of their meritorious deeds; this is my opinion.

21. Those that are always worshipped amongst the human beings, those that go on nice elephants, those that are surrounded by pleasures and enjoy the lovely companions of beautiful coquettish women, those that go surrounded by soldiers, O Goddess! I consider they worshipped Thee in their previous births, and they are now enjoying fruits of their past deeds.

22-23. Vyasa said Thus praised by Indra, the Goddess of the Universe with four arms hurriedly appeared there mounted on a lion Conchshell, disc, club, and lotuses were held by the beautiful eyed Goddess in Her four hands respectively, wearing a red apparel and ornamented with divine garlands.

24. The Goddess being pleased addressed the Devas with sweet words, "Cast off your fear. O Devas! I will see presently all about your welfare."

25. Addressing the Devas thus, the Divine Mother nnounted on a lion, went hurriedly to the place where the demons were waiting, infatuated with pride.

26. All the Daityas with their general Prahlada saw the Goddess before them and were terrified and began to address each other "What are we to do now?"

27-28. This Chandika Goddess has come here to protect the Devas. She destroyed Mahisasura and Chanda Munda; it was She that killed, in days of yore, Madhukaitava with evil look.

29-30. Seeing the demons thus full of sorrowful thoughts, Prahlada addressed the Daityas “It is better not to fight but let us fly away all together.” Then the Daitya Namuchi told the Daityas ready to fly away “If you fly away, this World Mother will instantly kill you all with weapons in Her hands.

31. Do that by which we can protect us. Let us worship the Goddess of the Universe, and, getting Her permission, we will go this very day to the Patala.”

32. Prahlada said “I will worship the Goddess Mahamaya, the Creatrix, Preservrix and Destructrix of the Universe, the World Mother, and the Assurer of safety to Her devotees.”

33. Vyasa said Thus saying, the knower of the highest knowledge, Prahlada, the devotee of Visnu, began to sing hymns with folded hands in praise of the Goddess, the Upholdress of the Universe.

34. I bow down to Thee, the incarnate of the mantra “Hrim” the Refuge of all, and within Whom this whole Universe, moving and unmoving, is appearing untruly as a snake is mistaken for a garland of flowers.

35. O Goddess! All these Universes, moving and unmoving, have sprung from Thee; Brahma, Visnu and others are Creators, Preservers in name only; Thou hast created them all.

36. O Mahamaya! You are the Divine Mother of all! When You have created the Asuras and the Suras, how can you then see any difference between the Devas and the Daityas?

37. As a Mother makes no distinction between her good sons and bad sons, so You are not to make any difference between us and the Devas; this is our prayer to you.

38. O Goddess! You have been sung in all the Puranas as the World Mother; therefore, O Mother! We are your sons just as the Devas are.

39. O Mother! As they have got their interests, so we too have got our interests; therefore there is no difference between he Daityas and the Devas. Therefore if anyone nnakes any difference, it is due to the subtle error.

40. O Goddess! As we are attached to wealth, wives, and other pleasures of the senses, so the gods are; O Goddess! How then can any difference exist between them and us.

41. O Mother! They are the sons of Maharsi Kas’yapa; we also are his sons; Therefore you cannot have partiality for them before us.

42. O World Mother! In You no such difference is visible anywhere. Therefore do You here preserve equality amongst us both.

43. The Suras and Asuras all have sprung from the permutations and combinations of the 3 qualities! Then how the Devas being embodied can possess more qualities than us.

44. Every embodied soul possesses always cupidity, anger, covetousness; how then can one expect to remain without any quarrels with others.

45. We think that it is all sport with You to see our opinions different, rather contradictory, and it is You who got us involved in quarrels with each other and it is Your pleasure to witness how we fight against each other.

46. Sinless one! O Chamunde! Were You not so fond to see our fight, how then, we being brothers are at war against each other.

Certainly it is Your Divine Sport.

47. O Goddess! I know what is religion, I know who is Indra. It is the very idea to enjoy these sensual pleasures that is the only cause of our incessant quarrels.

48. O Mother! You are the Sole Ruler of this Samsara; no sensible man can carry out the words of a man who yearns for something, (i.e., O Mother, You are the only one that is desireless; so we can obey your words).

49. O Mother! Once the Devas and the Asuras conjointly churned the ocean. At that time Visnu, on the plea of distributing the jewel, and the ambrosial nectar, incurred quarrels amongst them.

50. O Mother! You have made him the Preserver and Controller of the Universe and the Spiritual Guide of the world. And it was He who took away the Goddess Laksmi, the beautiful lady amongst the Deva women.

51. Indra, the Lord of the Gods, took the elephant named Airavat, the flower Parijat, the Heavenly Cow yielding all desires, and the horse Uchchais'rava. Thus, through the desires and devices of Visnu, they got the excellent things.

52. O! What a wonder is this that the Devas were considered holy persons, after they had committed such unholy acts; no doubt the Devas had done a very heinous crime. O Goddess! You can judge Yourself what is the just and unjust thing in this case.

53. What is Religion? And where is Religion? And what are the acts done by a religious man? What is uprightness, justice, and purity? You better examine which party has observed virtue? Who has shown uprightness, justice and parity? To whom victory and defeat are due? You are the only one capable to judge all these things.

54-55. Alas! Whom to tell all the conclusions arrived at in the Mimamsakas. If any one considers, one will find the world is the field of dissensions and quarrels; the argumentators look to the logical reasoning only; followers of the Vedas look to the rules and regulations only; these so called men of gross ideas they acknowledge that this world is created and preserved by the One only, and yet they quarrel amongst each other.

56-57. If there be One and only One Lord of this wide infinite Samsara, then why would there be differences and quarrels amongst each other? Why is there not seen any agreement in opinion and why do the S'astras differ and why are there so many differences in the opinions held by the knowers of the Vedas.

58. O Goddess! This whole Universe, moving and unmoving is selfish; hence arise so many differences between several opinions. There was no one unselfish in this world and there would be no unselfish persons born hereafter.

59-64. Look! The Moon stole away perforce knowingly the wife of Brihaspati; Indra, knowing what is religion stole away the wife of Gautama; Brihaspati enjoyed forcibly the wife of his younger; and also he outraged his elder brother's wife in her pregnant state and cursed the boy in the womb and made him blind. What more to say than Visnu, all full of Sattvic qualities, severed perforce the head of Rahu. O Mother! Look to the case of my grandson Bali who used to pay due respects to all, who was the foremost amongst the virtuous, observer of rigorous truth, performer of sacrifices, liberal, peaceful, all-knowing. The pretender Hah, taking the form of a dwarf in his Vamana incarnation, deceived Bali and took away all his kingdoms.

Alas! Still the intelligent good persons reckon the Deva Visnu as the preserver of Religion. What a wonder! Those who are flatterers become victorious in this world; and defeat come to those that speak of Dharma.

65. O Goddess! You are the Mother of all the worlds; do whatever You like. But You should know that the Demons are all under Your protection; kill or save them as You like.

66. The Devi said O Demons! Leave you all the anger arising from this warfare and go without any fear to Patala and live there at your ease and happiness.

67. Better now wait on Time; whether you will get auspicious or inauspicious fruits for your deeds. Know whoever is desireless and unattached, to him happiness is always and everywhere.

68. Whose mind is avaricious. He does not get peace and happiness, even if he acquires the Triloki. Even, in the golden age, avaricious persons did not get happiness, though they acquired the fruits of their actions.

69. Therefore you get yourselves freed of your sins and obey My order and leave the earth and go down to the Patala.

70. Vyasa said On hearing the Devi's words, the Demons obeyed and bowing at Her feet and preserved by Her, went to Patala.

71. Then the Devi disappeared; and the Devas went away to their own homes. Thus the Devas and the Daityas, abandoning their feelings of enmity towards each other, lived in peace.

O King! He who hears this fact, gets himself freed from all sorts of calamities and reaches the Highest Peace.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses, on the truce between the Daityas and Devas and on their departures with peace, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Janamejaya spoke O best of Munis! How did Visnu, of wonderful deeds, get his incarnation owing to the curse, cast on Him by Bhrigu? what were His different incarnations in different Manvantaras respectively? O Thou, well versed in religion! O Brahmana! Kindly narrate those sin-destroying deeds of Hah in His several incarnations, that are the source of happiness, peace and welfare to all humanity.

3. Vyasa said O king! Hear, I am narrating to you the incarnations of S'ri Bhagavan Hah which He had in the several Manvantaras and in the several Yugas respectively.

4. I will tell you now, in brief, what forms He took and what deeds He did in the various incarnations.

5. In the Chaksusa Manvantara, the Bhagavan Hah took the incarnation of Dharma; and the two sons of Dharma, Nara Narayana, were widely celebrated in this world.

6. Then, in the present Vaivasvata Manvantara, under the reign of Vaivasvata Manu in the second Yuga, Bhagavan Hari incarnated as Dattatreya, in the shape of the son of Atri Risi.

7. Anasuya the wife of Atri, was desirous to have, as her sons, the three Devas Brahma, Visnu and Rudra; and in fulfilment of her desires, the Devas took their births in her womb.

8. Anasuya, was foremost amongst the chaste and virtuous women and on her praying, Brahma, Visnu and Rudra the Trinity at once agreed to become her sons.

9. Brahma was born as Soma, Hari was born as Dattatreya and Rudra was born as Durvasa.

10. In the fourth Yuga, the Bhagavan assumed the beautiful double form in one, the upper part resembling a lion and the lower part a human being to accomplish the noble purpose of the Devas.

11. It was to kill Hiranyakas'ipu that the Bhagavan Hari assumed this appearance, wonderful even to the Devas.

12. In the Treta Yuga, the superior and the best of all the Yugas, the Bhagavan incarnated as Vamana (the Dwarf), the son of Maharsi Kas'yapa, to curb the power of Bali.

13. The Dwarf Hari took away by pretext, the kingdom of Bali, while he was performing a sacrifice and sent him down into the Patala (the lower regions).

14. Afterwards, in the nineteenth Yuga, known as the Treta Yuga, S'ri Bhagavan Hari incarnated as Paras'urama, very powerful and the son of Jamadagni Risi.

15. He was very beautiful and graceful in his body, truthful and the conqueror of his senses. He extirpated the Ksattriya race and gave the whole world over to the high minded Risi Kas'yapa-

16. O king! He is the Paras'urama, the sin-destroyer, the incarnation of Hah, and the doer of wonderful deeds.

17-20. After that the Bhagavan Hari incarnated as Rama, the son of Das'aratha. Next in the twenty-eighth Dvapara Yuga, He incarnated as the very powerful Arjuna and S'ri Krisna, the Ams'as of Nara Narayana. To remove the load of the earth, these two were born; and they fought deadly battles in the battlefield of Kuruksettra. O king! Thus the several incarnations of Hari arose, according to the requirements of Prakriti. O King! These three worlds are under the control of Prakriti.

21. Whatever the Prakriti wishes at any time. She can fashion the world in that way. And She does this incessantly in accordance with the Word Divine, the Highest S'akti, to please the Purusa, without any cessation.

22-23. In days of yore, the most ancient Bhagavan, the Highest, above all the qualities of Maya, formless, all pervading, difficult to be conceived, without any decay, self-supporting, without any want, created these worlds, moving and unmoving and He manifested Himself as the Trinity, Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a in the shape of the three qualities Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, and which is called the Highest Prakriti.

24. This all auspicious Prakriti shines differently according to the differences in time and circumstances. This threefold Prakriti, the Great Enchantress of the world is creating, preserving the worlds and is destroying them at the end of the Kalpas.

25. O King! Whenever there takes place the union with this Prakriti, Brahma creates, Visnu preserves, and the all-auspicious God S'ankara destroys the worlds.

26. It was She That gave birth to Kakutstha, the best of the kings; and to conquer the Danavas, She placed him at a certain place.

27. O king! Thus all men controlled by the Great Law in this world, enjoy sometimes the pleasures, enjoy sometimes pains and thus exist in the world.

Here ends the Sixteenth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa, on the Birth of the several Avataras of Visnu and their deeds.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said O Muni! You told before that the heavenly prostitutes sent by Indra in the hermitage of Nara Narayana became lustful and desired to live with Narayana only, whose heart was calm and quiet.

2. At that moment when Narayana was about to curse them, his brother Nara desisted him from taking that step.

3-4. Now I ask you what did that triumphant Narayana Muni do, in the critical juncture, when he was repeatedly asked by those prostitutes, sent by Indra, to satisfy their lust?

5. O Grand Sire! I am very eager to know the deeds of Narayana, leading to one’s freedom. Kindly describe in detail and fulfill my wishes.

6. Vyasa said Hear, O king! I am describing to you in detail, what that high souled son of Dharma did.

7. When Narayana Hah was ready to curse them, the Risi Nara, seeing this, consoled him and desisted him.

8. Then the great sage, the ascetic son of Dharma, Narayana, leaving aside his anger, began to address them in sweet words with countenance smiling.

9-10. O Fair women! We have determined to practise asceticism in this life; it does not therefore behove us to accept any wife; therefore shew your kindness unto us and go back to your Heaven. You would better think that those who know what is religion, they never desire to break the vow of another.

11.0 beautiful eyed ones! In the sexual pleasure, it is the delightful feeling of passionate joy that is requisite; and we are wanting in those feelings; then how can we effect that union?

12. No action can come out of no cause; this is all clear. The poets say that the sexual power and pleasure, is the feeling, the mental attitude that corresponds; and that is the only thing, that lasts. And we have no desire for that.

13. However my limbs are all very graceful, I am very fortunate and blessed in this world, otherwise how can I be the object of your sincere love towards me.

14. You all are very fortunate; therefore do now show this mercy unto me "do not break my vow." I pray now that, in a subsequent birth, I may become your husband.

15-16. O large eyed fair women! In the twenty-eighth Dvapara Yuga, I will certainly incarnate on earth to effect the purpose of the Devas; then you all also would respectively incarnate as the daughters of kings and would also become my wives.

17. Narayana thus consented to marry them in some other next birth; and consoling them, made them go back to their Heavens. They also abandoned their mental disquietude and, on reaching back to Heavens, they explained everything to Indra.

18-19. Indra heard (from these heavenly women) what the two two Risis did and saw before him Urvas'i and other women created by Narayana from his thighs, etc., and began to extol the merits of the high souled Narayana.

20. Indra said O! How wonderful is the patience of the Muni?

What is the wonderful influence of his Tapas! Oh! He has created, by the sheer force of his Tapas, Urvas'i and these fair women, unrivalled for their beauties, from his thighs.

21. The Lord of the Devas thus extolled his merits and became freed from his anxieties. The virtuous Narayana, too, devoted himself to the practice of his Tapasya.

23. O king! Thus I have described to you, in detail, all the wonderful accounts regarding Nara Narayana.

O Superior in the descendants of Bharata! These two Nara and Narayana afterwards incarnated themselves, due to Bhrigu's curse as the two great heroes Arjuna and Krisna, to relieve the burden of the earth.

24. The king said O respect giving Muni! Now describe in detail the life of the Avatar Krisna and dispel my mental doubt.

25-26. O best of the Munis! Why were Vasudeva and Devaki, who were chosen by the very powerful Hah and Ananta as their parents, doomed to so many miseries and afflictions. Why had these parents to remain for good many years in the prison of Kamsa, who pleased directly by their Tapasya that Bhagavan Janardana.

27. Why did Krisna taking his birth at Mathura, go to Gokula? Also what was his object to go to Dvarka, situated in the ocean, when he killed the enemy Kamsa?

28. Also why did his father, mother and relatives, leave their old holy places of residences and go abroad to live in a wretched old country?

29-31. Why was the Yadu race destroyed by the curse from a Brahmana! How did S'ri Krisna Vasudeva leave finally His body after He had relieved the burden of the earth and was about to enter into His Heaven? The evildoers of the earth were slain by Krisna and Arjuna, of unequalled prowess; but how was it, that those who plundered the wives of S'ri Hah, were not at all punished by Him?

32-33. The great personages Bhisma, Drona, Kama, the king Valhika, Virata, Vikarna, Dhristadyumna, the king Somadatta were destroyed for relieving the burden of the earth; and the plunderers were acquitted! Kindly explain the cause of this.

34. How was it that those chaste and virtuous wives of S'ri Krisna go into troubles at the latter end of their lives? There has arisen a doubt in my mind on this point.

35. Why did the virtuous Vasudeva leave his mortal coil owing to the death of his sons and why did he die an unusual death?

36. O best of Munis! The Pandavas were devoted to Krisna and they were religious; they had to suffer so many troubles!

37. Why was Draupadi so very unfortunate and she had to suffer so much miseries, and pains, who was born of Laksmi from amidst the sacrificial place and from the altar.

38-39. Why did Duhs'asan drag Her by Her hairs while She was in Her menstruation period, in the hall of audience and why was it that Sindhu Raj Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu, gave Her exceedingly mental troubles?

40. Why was it that Her five sons residing in Her house were killed by AsVaththama? What was the cause that the son of Subhadra had to die in the battlefield?

41. Why did the king Kamsa kill the six sons of Devaki; and why was it that S'ri Hah who was capable of averting the Fate did not at all prevent that?

42. What a wonder is this that in the matters of Brahmana's curse toward the Jadavas, their being killed in the Prabhasa, the total extermination the Jadu race and the plundering of His wives, why did He allow Fate to do these great momentous things?

43. If He was the all-powerful God and He Himself Narayana, that why did He incessantly act like a slave towards Ugrasena.

N.B. - Ugrasena was the king of Mathura and father of Kamsa. He was deposed by his son; but Krisna after having slain Kamsa restored him to the throne.

44-45. All these bring doubt in our minds regarding Narayana Muni that His deeds are always like those of ordinary persons; why did his pleasures and pains resemble those of ordinary human beings? Were he God, why his actions were not Godly? (i.e., superhuman)

46. Therefore dost Thou describe in detail all the Divine Leelas (playful sports) done by Hah of superhuman powers in this world.

47. O Best of Munis! When one's longevity expires, one dies; then I cannot understand what glory was manifested by Hah in killing the Daityas? For Fate Killed them; not Hah.

48. Was not the doing of Hari like a thief when he stole away the Lady Rukmini and fled quickly to his own place.

49. What did it mean when he fled to Dvarka city, and quitted his own highly prosperous town Mathura simply out of the fear of Jarasandha?

50. Did not anybody at that time recognise that he was S'ri Bhagavan Hah? O Respected One! Were he Bhagavan, why did He hide himself in Vraja? Please explain the cause to me.

51. O Muni! These and many other doubts always exist in my mind; you are the best of the Dvijas and blessed; I pray, dost thou remove these doubts.

52-53. O best of Munis! Another doubt exists and is not dispelled and that is secret. Was not the taking of the five husbands by Panchali for herself shameful and despised by the society? The good manners and doings are always considered by the learned as the proofs of virtue. Why did those Pandavas, then, capable in every respect, do this thing like brutes?

54. And what did Bhisma do living like a Deva in this world? May I ask, was his act of producing two sons by a widow and thus preserving his line of ancestors worthy of his name?

55. The religious sanction advocated by the Munis "Procreate sons in any way whatsoever" is simply shameful. Fie to this religious sanction.

questions asked by Janamejaya.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O king! Hear in detail the complete life and the deeds in the incarnation of S'ri Krisna and also the various wonderful achievements by the Goddess of this universe.

2. Once on a time, the Earth was very much overburdened by the load of wicked kings and She was therefore very much afraid.

3. She then assumed the appearance of a cow and went to the Devaloka crying and very much dejected.

Indra, the lord of the Devas, asked her, O Vasundhare! What is the cause of your fear now? Who has troubled you? What afflictions are you merged in? Please tell me all these.

4. On hearing Indra's words, the Earth exclaimed O Respect giver! When You have asked me, I am explaining to you the cause of all my afflictions and sorrows; at present I am overburdened with too much load.

5-8. Now is reigning in the earth Jarasandha, the king of Magadha, a very very vicious person. Thus the other S'is'upal, the lord of the Chedis, the uncontrollable Kas'iraj, Rukmi, the powerful Kamsa, the strong Naraka, the Sauvapati S'alva, the wicked Kes'i, Dhenuka, and Batsaka all these are now in royal positions. O Lord of the Devas! These kings are all devoid of the least trace of virtue, quarrelsome against each other, infatuated with vanity, and addicted to vicious deeds. These have become kings as if they were personified Yamas, the Lords of Death, and are constantly troubling me. I am now unable to carry their loads; where shall I go now? This great thought is constantly ailing me.

9-11.0 Vasava! What to tell! The Bhagavan in His Boar Incarnation is the cause of all these my afflictions; O Indra! These present troubles I am fallen into only through Him; for when the cruel Daitya Hiranyaksa; the son of Ka'syapa stole me away and drowned me in the great ocean, then it was Visnu in his Boar incarnation that killed him and rescued me from the ocean and then kept me in this my stable position.

12. Had he not then lifted me up, I would have rested safe in the depths of Rasatala; O Lord of the Devas! Now I am quite unable to bear the load of these vicious persons.

13. O Surendra! The vicious twenty eight Kali is coming quickly in front. Thinking of His influence, it seems to me that I will be very troubled then and will have to go down to Rasatala.

14. Therefore, O Lord of the Devas! I am bowing down before Your feet, kindly relieve me of my burden and save me from these endless troubles.

15. Indra said O Earth! I cannot do anything for you. You better go and take refuge of Brahma. I am also going to Him. He will remove all your troubles.

16. Hearing Indra's words the Earth hurriedly went to the realm of Brahma and Indra and all the other Devas followed Her; and all reached the Brahmaloka.

17-18. O King! The Grand Father Brahma saw the Earth coming to him and through the power of meditation, found out the cause of Her coming and said O Auspicious One! why are You crying? What troubles You have now? What wicked person has given You troubles.

19. The Earth said O Lord of the Earth! The vicious Kali is coming before; under Its influence the subjects will be horribly vicious; therefore I am very much afraid of this Kali.

20. In the beginning of this Kali Yuga, the ancient enemies, the Asuras have now incarnated on this earth as kings. They will be extremely wicked, quarreling against each other, and will be clever in stealing others' things. There is no doubt in these.

21. O Grand Father! Now kill these vicious kings and relieve my burden. O Lord! I am very much troubled by the armies of these kings.

22. Brahma said O Goddess! I, too, am unable like Indra to remove your load. Let us go to that Visnu, the Holder of the disc.

23. That Janardana will remove your burden. I thought of this well before and settled what to do.

24-25. Vyasa said Thus saying, the four faced Brahma, the Author of the Vedas, rode on His Hamsa Vehicle taking in front the Goddess Earth; and the Devas went to Visnu and began to praise Visnu Janardana, the Deva of the Devas, with the words of the Vedas with full devotion.

26. Brahma said Thou hast thousand heads, thousand faces, thousand feet. Thou art the Purusa of the Vedas, Thou art the Deva of the Devas, and Thou art Eternal.

27. O Omnipresent! Thou art the Past, Present, and Future! O Lord of Laksmi! Thou hast awarded immortality unto us.

28. Thou art the Creator of universe, the Preserver and the Destroyer; Thou art the One and the Only goal and thou art the God. Everybody knows that all these glories belong to Thee.

29. Vyasa said O king! When Brahma praised thus, Visnu whose sign was Garuda, was highly pleased and appeared before Brahma and the other Devas.

30. The Bhagavan asked them about their welfare and enquired in detail into the cause of their arrival there.

31. Brahma them bowed down to Him and, remembering the cause of the sorrows of the Goddess Earth, said O Lord! Thou art now to relieve the burden of the Earth.

32. O Thou, Ocean of mercy! When the end of the Dvapara yuga will come Thou art to incarnate in the world and kill the wicked kings and thus to relieve the burden of the Earth.

33-34. Visnu said I am not independent in these matters; why I? Brahma Mahes'a, Indra, Agni, Yama, Visvakarma, the Sun and Varuna and other Devas, nobody is independent. This whole universe, moving and unmoving is existing under the control of the Yoga Maya; and from Brahma up to the clot of grass, all are strung into the thread of Her Three qualities.

35. O One of good vows! Whatever that Yoga Maya, the Supreme Goddess, Who is All will. Whose mouth is inward. Who does good at all times, what She wills She does that at any time. You should all know that we are entirely under Her control.

36-41. You better think that were I independent, what for would I have stayed in the great ocean, incarnating in the Fish and Tortoise Bodies! O Brahmin! What name or pleasure is there in enjoyment in the body of lower animals! What holy merit or any other reward may I expect from being born in the wombs of lower animals? What is the reason that I assume the body of a Boar? or of a Man-Lion? or of a Dwarf? Why was I born as the son of Jamadagni. Especially why did I, being born of that highsouled Brahman Jamadagni, and being the best of the Brahmins, do the most atrocious act like that of a heartless brute and fill up the lakes with their blood. Alas! I killed the Ksatriyas mercilessly; to say nothing more than that I killed the sons that were then in the wombs. Were I independent, what for I would have done these horrible and cruel deeds! O Lord of the Devas! See again. In my Rama incarnation I roamed on foot, helpless and without any provision, in the fearful Dandaka forest unfrequented by anybody, wearing clotted hair, bark, rags, like a man who feels no shame, and behaved like a hunter and killed many animals.

42-44. Being under the delusion of Maya, I could not make out the real nature of the golden deer; consequently leaving Janaki in the thatched cottage, I went out pursuing the deer. Though repeatedly warned by me not to leave the place, Laksmana was moved by the qualities of Prakriti, forsook her and went out on my search.

45. Then the hypocrite Ravana, the king of the Raksasas, under the garb of a beggar; stole away by force the daughter of Janaka, who had become very lean on account of sorrows.

46. I was very much distressed owing to the separation from my dear wife and roamed about weeping sorely in forest and formed friendship with Sugriva, under the influence of the circumstances.

47. It was an act of gross injustice on my part to kill Bali, the king of the monkeys. I freed him from his curse; afterwards, aided by the monkeys, I had to go to Lanka.

48. When my younger Laksmana and myself were both enchained under the chain of the serpents, Nagapas'a, and were senseless, the monkeys all were astonished.

49. Then Garuda came and freed us the two brothers, from those Nagapas'as! I considered then what adverse inauspicious circumstances Fate sometimes ordains on our lot.

50. I lost my kingdom, lived in the forest, my father died, Janaki was stolen and I had to suffer extreme troubles in very deadly battles; I could not know what worse fate still awaited for us?

51. O Suras! What more calamity can you expect to befall any person than that I was from the very first deprived of my kingdoms and wealth, and had to go to the forest with the princess Sita dwelling in and taking shelter in a dense forest!

52. At the time of my going to the forest my father did not give a single penny; penniless and helpless I had to get out of Ayodhya on foot.

53. I was compelled to leave my Ksattriya Dharma and take up the avocation of a hunter and thus to spend fourteen years in forest.

54. After that, under the benign influence of Fate, I was able to kill that Asura Ravana and got the victory in the battle and was able to bring back dear Sita to Ayodhya.

55. There I succeeded in becoming the ruler of the kingdom Kos'ala with its subjects and got the full kingdom and enjoyed for a few years the pleasures of the world.

56-57. The stealing away of Sita took place at the first outset; next I got my kingdom; then the subjects began to circulate the bad name regarding Janaki; and I being afraid of that, deported her into exile in the forest. At that time I had to suffer again extreme pain and agony due to the separation from my wife. Then the daughter of the Goddess Earth penetrated into the Earth and got down to the Patala.

58. O Devas! When I had to depend on Fate and to suffer so many troubles incessantly, where else can you dare to say that an independent man exists.

59. Afterwards under the influence of Time, I had to go to Heaven with my brothers. Let all this point to what it may, the intelligent learned people can say what an amount of mishaps takes place to one who is dependent!

60. O One born from the Lotus! You hear my word; I am in every way dependent; why I? Rudra, You and all those Suras are fully dependent.

Here ends the Eighteenth Chapter of the Fourth Book of the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa on the Devi Earth's going to the Heavens.

English translation

1. Vyasa said The Bhagavan Visnu spoke again unto Prajapati Brahman! All these beings fascinated by Maya, cannot know the Real Essence, the Highest Truth.

2. We, too, are fascinated by that Maya; and hence we also, being blinded by that, do not at all remember That Highest Eternal Purusa, calm and quiet, the World Teacher, the Highest Self, of the nature of Pure Existence, Intelligence and Bliss.

3. O Brahma! I am Visnu, I am Brahma, I am Rudra, thus our l-ness ahamkara has blinded our eyesight; and we are made unable to recognise That Eternal Highest Self.

4. As the wooden dolls dance according to the will of the player, the magician, I also am similarly fascinated by the Maya and am thus incessantly rolling about like a dependent man.

5-6. O Brahma In the beginning of the Kalpa, MahesVara, You and I saw the wonderful unspeakable form and glory of that Highest Self at the time of Rasamandala in the Mani Dvipa where there was the Mandara Tree and the Devas assembled. Then I also saw that wonderful thing a second time in the Sudharnava ocean of nectar, and the most wonderful of it is this, that until we were able to See that Form, we did not hear anything of Her before!

7. Therefore, O Devas! Today do you all remember that Prime Force, the Highest Self, that all beneficent Force that yields all good and auspicious things; That Very Force will fulfill now all your desires.

8. Vyasa said O king! No sooner the Bhagavan Hari addressed thus, Brahma and the other Devas at once mentally began to meditate on that Eternal Yoga Maya, the Goddess of the Universe.

9. Being thus meditated, at once appeared before their eyesight the Devi, the Goddess of the Universe, whose colours were like the blood red Java flower, holding in two of Her hands noose, hook, or goad, while the third hand indicated favour and the fourth hand bade all discard every sort of fear.

10. As the web comes out of a spider and sparks come out of fire, so this whole Universe comes out of that Goddess. We all bow down before Her with our humble hearts, full of devotion.

11. We all salute to that Goddess of the Universe, BhuvanesVari, under Whose Mayic force this whole Universe, moving and unmoving, is created; Who is All-Intelligence and the Ocean of Mercy.

12. This world appears real to him who is unable to realise Her Real Essence; and the world drops off as unreal no sooner he realises Her Presence. We all meditate on that All Intelligent Goddess and we all pray to Her that She may grant unto us more strength to meditate Her and Her alone so.

13. We all want to know Maha Laksmi, we all meditate on the Omnipotent; May the Goddess grant unto us strength to meditate on Her so.

14. O Thou, the Remover of the world's afflictions! Best Thou pleased unto us; O Thou, kind hearted! Do this work for us and promote our good. O Thou, Lord of the Earth! Dost Thou relieve the burden of the earth by killing these Asuras and bring on our welfare.

15. O Thou, Lotus-Eyed! If Thou dost not show Thy mercy towards the gods, they will never be able to strike their enemies with their weapons in the battlefield. O Goddess! Thou didst verify the truth of this before, when Thou didst assume the appearance of a Yaksa and utter the following sentences "O Fire! You burn this blade of grass," etc. (in the Kena Talavakara Upanisada.)

16. O Mother! Kamsa, Bhauma, Kalayavana, Kes'i, Jarasandha, the son of Brihadratha, Vaka, Putana, Khara, S'alva and other vicious kings respectively are dwelling on the earth. Dost Thou better kill them and relieve the burden of the Earth.

17. O Lotus-Eyed! Thou hadst killed those Asuras without any effort that were not slain by Visnu or Mahes'vara and they ended their lives, while they were beholding Thy pleasing countenance.

18. O Goddess! Holding Moon on Her forehead! These Hah, Hara, Brahma and the other gods are unable to move a step without the help of Force; nothing to speak any further, the thousand headed King of Serpents is unable to hold this earth even for a moment, were he not provided with the S'akti of upholding this world.

19. Indra said O Bhagavati! Would Brahma be ever able to create this world without the aid of Sarasvati! Would Visnu, the Deva of the Devas, be ever able to preserve it without the aid of Laksmi or would MahesVara be ever able, to destroy this world without the help of His Lima; no, never! These Devas, the Trinity, are able to take their respective parts in the keeping up of the world simply because they are united with the forces, incarnate in Sarasvati, etc., who are again parts of Thee.

20. Visnu said O Vimale! Were we deprived of Thy Force, the Creator would never have been able to create the world, I would never have been able to preserve it and MahesVara would never have been able to destroy. Therefore O Devi! Thou alone art reigning as the Supreme Goddess amidst all the glories in the creation, preservation, and destruction of this Universe.

21-22. Vyasa said O king! Thus praised by the Gods, the Goddess then addressed them O Devas! Let all anxieties leave you all; I will do what the Devas have desired, even if it be very difficult to do in this world; now explain what is troubling the Goddess Earth.

23. The Devas replied The wicked kings are troubling very much this Earth. She cannot any longer bear their burden; therefore She came crying unto us.

24. O BhuvanesVari! Now it is Your duty to remove this load of earth. O Auspicious One! Know this, the desire of the gods.

25-28. O Mother! In days of yore, You have killed the most powerful Danava named Mahisa, attended by lakhs and lakhs of Danavas and Daityas; What to speak! You have slain S'umbha, Nis'umbha, Raktavija, the very powerful Chanda Munda, Dhumralochana, Durmukha, Duhsana, the strong Karala and many other cruel Danavas.

Now, similarly kill the wicked kings, the enemies of the Gods and save the Earth from their heavy loads.

29. Vyasa said Thus addressed by the Devas, the Most Auspicious One, the Devi, whose colour was black and who looked askance, said smiling in a tone, grave and deep, like that of the rumbling of a raincloud.

30. O Suras! I have already thought over how the burden of those wicked kings, the parts incarnate of Asuras, can be removed.

31. I will, by My own power, rob them of their powers, of that highly prosperous and affluent Jarasandha, the king of Magadha, and others, the parts incarnate of the wicked Asuras, that are now shining on the Earth.

32. O Devas! You would all better go down and incarnate yourselves as part incarnations, impregnated with My power, and help thus in the removal of the load of this earth.

33. The Deva Prajapati Maharsi Kas'yapa would first of all go with his his wife and incarnate as Anaka Dundubhi Vasudeva, in the race of Yadu.

34. The Imperishable Bhagavan Visnu will also incarnate as part, owing to the curse of Bhrigu, as the son of Vasudeva.

35. O Devas! I will be born, then, in the womb of Yas'oda, in Gokula and will accomplish all the ends of the Gods.

36. I will send Visnu from the prison to the Gokula; also I will transfer Ananta Deva from the womb of Devaki to the womb of Rohini.

37. They two will grow, day by day, by My Force and at the end of the Dvapara Yuga, will no doubt kill the wicked kings.

38-39. Arjuna too, the part incarnate of Indra, will destroy the armies of those kings. Yudhisthira, the part incarnate of Dharma, Bhimsena, that of of Vayu, Nakula and Sahadeva the incarnate of the two Asvins, and Bhisma, the incarnate of Vasu as the son of the Ganga, will take their respective births and exhaust their armies.

40. O Devas! Now be calm and quiet and go. Let the Earth be also calm and quiet; be confident that I will certainly remove the load of this earth.

41. I will make the above mentioned Gods as my instruments merely and I will destroy, by My own force, the Ksatriyas in the battlefield of Kuruksettra.

42. Malice, jealousy, foul intention, desire, attachment, vanity, covetousness, desire for victory, lust, and fascination are the vices that will destroy the Yadavas.

43. The race of Yadu will end owing to the curse of a Brahmana. The Bhagavan also will leave His mortal coil due to a curse.

44. Now go and incarnate in your respective parts, with your wives, in Gokula and Mathura, and be helpers in the work of the Lord.

45-46. Vyasa said Saying thus, the Devi the Goddess of the Universe, the Maya Incarnate of the Highest Self disappeared. The Devas and the Earth went to their respective places. O king Janamejaya! the Goddess Earth was pleased with the Devi's words, and being quiet, remained surrounded with various medicinal plants and creepers.

47. Then the subjects felt peace and pleasure, the Brahmans also grew stronger in happiness and prosperity, and the Munis became glad and began to perform their religious acts with fresh zeal and alacrity.

Here ends the Nineteenth Chapter in the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, the Maha Puranam, on chanting the hymns to the Devi by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said O Bharata! I now narrate to you about the relief of the burden of the Earth, the destruction by the Yoga Maya of the armies Kuruksettra and Prabhasa, the two sacred places, and about the birth, due to the curse of Bhrigu, of the Bhagavan Hah, of unparalleled prowess, under the influence of Mahamaya, in the race of Yadu. Now hear.

3. Visnu's taking birth in the world was effected under the circumstances caused by Yoga Maya, to relieve the burden of the Earth; this is my opinion.

N. B. Prabhasa is a well-known place of pilgrimage near Dvarka, in Gujerat.

4. O king! When the Goddess Mahamaya, the Incarnate of the three qualities can make Brahma, Visnu and the other Devas dance incessantly as their Internal Controller, then what wonder, that She would appear charming to the other Jivas and make them dance incessantly, as wooden dolls.

5. All the troubles incurred in remaining in the womb, amidst the urine, excreta and tissues. She had brought to bear finally on Visnu by Her ever famous Leela (Divine Sport).

6. In days of yore, in Rama incarnation. She, That Supreme Goddess made the Gods become monkeys and you know very well already, what amount of trouble Bhagavan Visnu had to undergo by the hard iron chain of bondage, "This is mine, this is I," etc., imposed by Maya.

7. The Yogis who want final liberation and who have abandoned all their attachments and who want devotion, they worship the Supreme Goddess of the Universe, the Incarnate of Auspiciousness.

8. O king! Who will not serve Her? A trace of devotion towards Whom effects at once the salvation of the JTvas.

9. If any human being utters simply the name "BhuvanesVari" (the Goddess of Universe) She gives him the three worlds; and if any one cries and utters for help "Save me," then the Goddess of the Universe, being unable to find anything that She can repay him as a fit recompense for his utterance, becomes Herself indebted to that man.

10. O King! Know Vidya (knowledge) and Avidya (non-knowledge, spiritual ignorance, lower knowledge) Her two forms; Vidya gives liberation; Avidya causes bondage.

11. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, all these and their Avataras are Her instruments and are under Her subjection, as if they are all fastened by a cord.

12-14. The Bhagavan Hari sometimes resides in Vaikuntha, sometimes resides in the sea of milk and enjoys pleasures, sometimes fights the powerful Danavas, sometimes performs extensive sacrificial ceremonies sometimes performs severe asceticism and sometimes takes to deep sleep under the guidance of Yoga Maya. Thus He never becomes free and independent.

15-16. O King! And like Visnu, Brahma, Rudra, the other Gods Indra, Varuna, Yama, Kuvera, Agni, the Sun, Moon and other celestial gods, the Sanaka and other Munis, Vas'istha and other Risis, all are incessantly controlled by the Supreme Goddess, as if they are the dolls in the hands of a playing magician.

17. All the Devas are controlled by the noose of Time, just as oxen are brought under control by men, by strings passed within their noses.

18. O King! Pleasure, pain, sleep, lassitude, idleness, and other passions and feelings are always found inherent in every embodied being.

19-23. The Devas are written down by authors in their books as not subject to death or decay; this statement is merely nominal and not real; for whoever is always subject to birth, growth, decay and death how can we call him immortal or beyond old age and death? Why do the Devas get into sorrows, and troubles? How can they be called gods? How can one enjoy when one is involved in a trouble? In this world, it is seen mosquitoes and other insects born from water die after a very short time; so, like these, the Devas at the expiry of their ordained life-period, die too. Then why not the Devas be treated like those insects? Why not shall we term them, “Mortal”?

24-25. Some human beings live one year; some others live upto one hundred years, the Devas live longer than men; the life of the Prajapati Brahma exceeds those of the Devas; Rudra lives longer than Brahma; and Visnu lives longer than Rudra. All these are thus subject by turns to birth, growth, and decay.

26. Those who are born, they die; those that die are again born. Thus O King! In this world all the JTvas, no doubt, move round and round like a wheel.

27. The JTvas are deluded by the network of Moha (charms) and thus deluded. They can never gain final release. So long as Maya exists in them, their delusion is not destroyed.

28. O King! At the time of creation Brahma and all other things came into existence, in due order, and these will duly dissolve at the time of the Great Dissolution (the Pralaya)?

29. Whatever is the cause of destruction to anybody here, that destroys the body in question. According to the Will Power of the Supreme Goddess, whatever is created by Brahma, no none can undo that. Know this as perfectly certain.

30. Know this the predestined law that the birth, death, old age, diseases, pain or pleasure overtake all the JTvas according to the prescribed order of Nature; never these laws fail to operate in their actions.

31. See! The Devas that we see with our physical eyes, the Sun and Moon yield pleasure to all; still they suffer always troubles at the hands of their enemies (i.e., Rahu and Ketu, i.e., there always take place regularly solar and lunar eclipses, when they are in the ascending and descending modes.) This suffering is never removed.

32. The son of the Sun (Saturn) is always injurious to people; hence it is termed “Manda” (bad); the Moon was attacked with consumption and bears stain on his body (spots in the Moon disc). What to speak of ordinary men? The great men even are subject to the prescribed laws of Fate and Nature.

33. The Creator of the world, the four faced Brahma is the author of the Vedas and awarder of Intelligence. He, too, on seeing Sarasvati, his own daughter, was afflicted with passion.

34. When Sati, the wife of S’iva, left off Her mortal coil, Mahadeva, though He could remove the sorrows of all, was very much moved with passion and greatly afflicted.

35. Then, being burnt very much as it were by the fire of passion, he threw himself down into the water of the river Kalindi; and the water of that river became black-coloured, as if burnt by the burning fire of the sorrows of S’iva.

36-37. O King! When Mahadeva, being infatuated with Kama, went into the forest of Bhrigu and becoming naked, began to copulate, the ascetic Bhrigu, seeing him in that state, exclaimed "O You are very shameless" and cursed Him thus Let your penis drop off just now.

Mahadeva, then to satisfy his thirst for passion, began to drink the water of the lake Amrita Vapi, dug by the Danavas.

38-39. Indra, too, the Lord of the Devas, turned into a bull and carried Visnu on his back on the face of the earth. What to speak where the omniscience and omnipotence disappeared of Bhagavan Visnu, Who is the First of all created beings and possessed of reason, and discrimination? Oh! What a great wonder, that He could not know about the golden deer?

40-41. Judge, O King! for yourself, the great power of Maya, that even Rama Chandra was deluded by passion, and very much grieved for the separation from his dear wife Sita, and wept much for Her. Greatly deluded, he began to cry aloud and ask the trees "Where has gone My Sita, the daughter of Janaka? Is she devoured by the rapacious animals? or whether is she stolen by some mischievous person?

42-44. O Brother Laksmana! I am being consumed by the fire of separation from my beloved; I will commit suicide now; and you too will die due to the separation from me; our mother, too, would die when they will hear of our deaths; Satrughna, too, will be very much afflicted at our death and will not hold his life. The mother Sumitra, too, will destroy her life, being afflicted with her son's demise; and then Bharata's and his mother's desires will certainly be fulfilled.

45. O Sita! I am very much moved by your separation; where have you gone, leaving me here! O deer-eyed, O one of thin waist! come; give life unto me!

46. What shall I do? Where shall I go? My life is entirely dependent on you, O daughter of Janaka! I am your darling! Now I am very much depressed owing to your separation. Please come and speak to me words of hope and courage.

47. Though Rama, of unequalled prowess, roamed about weeping from forest to forest, yet he could not find out Sita.

48-49. He, who is the Refuge of all the worlds, the lotus-eyed Rama, got entangled into the delusion of Maya and had to take refuge Himself under the monkeys, and with their help, constructed the bridge across the ocean, crossed the ocean and was thus able to kill the valiant warriors Kumbhakarna and Havana.

50. Then Rama got back His Sita before him but suspecting, since she had been stolen by the vicious Havana, made her take an oath, though it is to, be remembered that Rama was all-knowing.

51. O King! The power of Yoga Maya is very great; what shall I speak of Her great power? This whole cosmos is always urged into activity by Her and thus goes rolling on and on incessantly.

52. Thus, in various incarnations, Bhagavan Visnu was always under the influence of previous curse and also under the control of Destiny and had to do various functions incessantly.

53. O King! Now I will speak to you about the birth of S'ri Krisna in the world for serving the purposes of gods, and will narrate His Leela.

54. In days of yore, on the delightful banks of the river Kalindi, there was a place, called Madhuban, where lived a powerful Daitya named Lavana, the son of Madhu.

55-56. That wicked Demon was exceedingly arrogant, on getting a boon, and he used to give an enormous amount of trouble to the Dvijas. Satrughna the younger of Laksman, killed that uncontrollable Daitya and built a very beautiful city there and named it Mathura.

57. The intelligent Satrughna, the destroyer of enemies, installed his two lotus-eyed sons in that kingdom and, when his end came, went to Heaven.

58. Afterwards on the decline of the Solar race, the Yadavas, born of the race of Yayati, occupied that Mathura city, giving salvation to all.

59. O King! There reigned in Mathura city one Yadava king, valiant warrior, named S'urasena; and he enjoyed all the pleasures Mathura.

60. Under the curse of Varuna, Vasudeva took his birth as the son of the renowned S'urasena, as the part incarnate of Kas'yapa.

61. He took up the profession of a Vais'ya and engaged himself in agriculture. And on the death of his father, the prosperous and wealthy Ugrasena became the King of Mathura. The powerful Kamsa was the son Ugrasena.

62. On the other hand, the King Devaka had a daughter born to hinn named Devaki, the part incarnate of Aditi. She under the curse of Varuna, followed Kas'yapa-

63. The high souled King Devaka performed the marriage ceremony of his daughter Devaki with Vasudeva.

64. When this marriage ceremony was over, a voice was heard from Heaven, saying O fortunate Kamsa! The eighth son of this Devaki will take away your life.

65. The powerful Kamsa, hearing that voice from Heaven, was surprised and took it to be true and became very anxious.

66-67. Kamsa began to argue in his mind. Once he thought "I would today destroy her; then my death won't take place; for I can't see any other way of escape from this difficulty," again he thought, "She is my sister, daughter of my paternal uncle and therefore fit to be worshipped; how can I kill her!"

68. Lastly, he came to the final conclusion, thus "She is the cause of my death, though she is my sister, fit to be worshipped; to kill her will not lead me to sin; for it is enjoined by the wise Do even a sin to avert one's own death."

69. The sins can be remedied always by penances. Therefore to save one's life, by committing even a sinful act, ought to be done by the wise.

70-71. The vicious Kamsa thus arguing, holding the scabbard in his hand, drew from it the sword and dragged and caught hold of the newly married handsome woman by her hair to kill her before the presence of the public.

72. A cry of universal consternation and distress arose on all sides, seeing Kamsa thus ready to kill Devaki; then the warriors, under Vasudeva, at once raised their bows and arrows, ready to fight.

73. These wonderfully valorous warriors loudly exclaimed to Kamsa, “Leave Devaki at once” “Leave Devaki at once” and then they were finally able out of their mercy to release the Devamata Devaki, from the hold of the vicious Kamsa.

74. Deadly battles ensued then between the powerful Kamsa and those valorous warriors on Vasudeva’s side.

75-76. Seeing the exceedingly terrible battle, the old Yadavas asked Kamsa to desist from such a battle and advised him thus. This Devaki is your sister; you ought to pay her respects. Did you not consider even for a moment that she is as yet a girl. O Hero! You ought not to kill her at the time of this joyous marriage ceremony.

77. O Valiant Warrior! The murder of a woman is intolerable! Destroyer of fame, and most heinous crime! You should also consider that learned persons ought not to commit such dastardly acts as the murdering of females, depending simply on a voice from heaven, a very ordinary thing!

78. It may be that some of your Vasudeva’s enemy has uttered that harmful word, hiding himself from your sight. No reason can be shewn contrary to this.

79. We are of opinion that to ruin your name and to destroy the house of Vasudeva, some magician, expert in black magic, your enemy has framed this voice from Heaven.

80. O king! You are a hero; why do you fear the words of a devil. We firmly believe, there is no doubt, that this is done by your malicious enemy to ruin your name.

81. O king! What is destined to take place, will take place; no one can stand against it otherwise. Therefore, at this marriage festivity, you ought never to kill this your respected sister.

82-83. O King Janamejaya! Though made to understand thus by the old wise Yadavas, the king Kamsa did not desist from his purpose; S’ri Vasudeva, versed in morals, told him “Kamsa! These three worlds are established on Truth. I say on Truth that I will hand over to you all my sons, born of the womb of Devaki, no sooner they are born.

84. And if I do not deliver to you all those sons, no sooner they are born then all my forefathers will fall down into the hell called Kumbihpaka.”

85-86. The descendants of Puru, that were present there, hearing his truthful words, praised him repeatedly and told Kamsa “Vasudeva is a high minded personage; he is surely not to tell a lie. Therefore,

O Thou, blessed one! Now leave Devaki and be free from committing the murder of woman.”

87. O king! Thus made to understand by the aged high minded Yadavas the king Kamsa accepted the truthful words of Vasudeva and abandoned his anger.

88. Then the Dunduvis and other sounding instruments were sounded; and their sounds filled the place; and all repeatedly uttered jai, jai.

89. Then the famous Vasudeva, the son of S’urasena, thus pleased the king Kamsa and freed Devaki; and, surrounded by his relatives, he went quickly without any fear to his own house, accompanied by Devaki.

Here ends the 20th chapter in the 4th Adhyaya of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa, on Devaki's marriage.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O King! Thus, in due course, Devaki, the goddess incarnate, being united according to rules with Vasudeva, became pregnant.

2-4. When full ten months were over, a good-looking and beautiful child (male) was first born to Devaki. Then the good-natured Vasudeva remembered his promise, and also what is ordained by Heaven; and he spoke to Devaki, the part incarnate of Aditi "O fair- looking! You know that I saved your life at your marriage by swearing on oath to deliver all your fresh-born children to Kamsa. Now has come the time to hand over your child to Kamsa."

5. O good-haired woman! Now I will hand your this son to Kamsa. Know Kamsa is very cruel and wicked. I cannot say what step he will take, urged on by Fate, to kill your child. O Sweet One! We have no hands in the matter. The effects of Karma are exceedingly puzzling. Ordinary persons cannot know them.

6. All persons are subject to Time, the Destroyer, and enjoy the merits or demerits of their past deeds. The effects of past Karma are fashioned by the Creator; knowing this, allow me to take away your child.

7. Devaki said O Lord! Certainly men have to suffer fully the effects of their past Karmas. But can that not be upset by residing in holy places, practising penances and asceticism or by making generous gifts?

8-9. The high minded Maharsis have fixed rules and penances for destroying the sins of past deeds; twelve years' vow to observe penances can purify one from sins, e.g., Brahminicide, stealing gold, drinking or stealing the wife of one's preceptor and many others.

10-11.0 Sinless one! Will not any one be freed from their sinful effects, if they observe practices and penances as are ordained by Manu or other Munis? If you don't accept penances to be sufficiently purificatory, do you mean to say, then, that what the Maharsis, seers, Yajhavalkya and other promulgators of religious doctrines have uttered, they did so, as an act of dire falsehood and villainy?

12. O My husband! "What is in the womb of Fate will surely come to pass," if this be taken as granted, then the whole Ayurveda (medicinal books) and Mantra vadas, the science and recitation of mantras or sacred formulae turn out utterly fruitless and false!

13-16. If all the actions are under the control of Fate, then no effect can come out of any effort; so all efforts are reduced to no effect. If what is ordained by Heaven is to come to pass then what is the use of taking recourse to any action and Agnistoma sacrifices, etc., that are declared to lead to Heavens. Judge! If Heaven or Fate you consider all-in-all, then the whole Vedas, the revelations from God's mouth turn out false; if the Vedas be false, then there is no reason why the whole Dharma will not be destroyed.

N.B. Fate is here denounced.

17. Now when it is seen that effects do come out whenever any exertion is made, then you ought to think out carefully and find out some means to avert danger. Therefore do you judge and find out a good way of preserving the life of this new born baby.

The learned people say that to tell a lie is not a sin, if you can thereby save a life, and have an honest motive for the welfare of all.

Note Here is a diplomatic statement!

18. Vasudeva said O blessed one! I now tell you what is truth and the matters connected with truth.

19-20. Effort, application and manifestation of energy are certainly the duties of man; but their effects are all under the Great Destiny or Fate.

The Pundits knowing the ancient lore say that there are three kinds of Karma mentioned in the Puranas and Agamas First, the Sanchita Karma (done in past births); the Prarabdha Karma, the Karma already done; and the Vartaman Karma (Karma in hand).

21. The Karma, auspicious and inauspicious, done in many previous lives and preserved in seed forms, remains always inherent in a human soul. Urged on by this Karma, the Jivas quitting their previous bodies, enjoy Heaven or Hell as effects of these, their own acts.

22-23. According to their good or bad works, the Jivas acquire the higher happy body and enjoy various pleasures in the Heavens, or they take up very painful vicious bodies and suffer various pains in hell.

24-25. At the expiry of the above period in Heaven or Hell, when there comes the time of his assuming another body, the Jiva becomes conscious of the subtle body (Linga Deha) and takes his birth again. When the Linga Deha comes into existence, the part of the Karma done in various previous births that are ripe and ready to yield their fruits, gets attached to the Jiva by God (or Destiny).

26. Therefore the collective effect of Karma done in previous births always exists in a Jiva's body. O Fair-eyed One! The effects of Prarabdha Karma, ripened and ready to yield their fruits must have to be experienced by a Jiva, whether happy or unhappy.

27. O beautiful young woman! Penances, performed according to rules, destroy the effect of Karmas that are in hand and are weak (i.e., not yet accumulated strongly as to remain in seed forms).

28. The Prarabdha Karma, those acts out of all the previous acts done in previous births that are fully mature and ready to yield their fruits, cannot be averted; their effects must have to be experienced and then they can die away; they cannot be expiated by penances or any other remedial measures. Therefore you must hand over unconditionally your new born babe unto the hands of Kamsa.

29-30. O Goddess! I have never done any blameable action, nor have I told any lie. Therefore do you fulfill your truth and hand over your baby. O Devaki! Dharma is the only thing permanent and real in this fleeting world. Even the births and deaths of high souled persons are subject to the great Destiny. Therefore the Jivas ought not to be sorry when there is no help for it.

31. O dear one! What shall I say to you! Know this much that his life is spent in vain who is lost to Truth. O beautiful one! Whose this life is destroyed, what can he expect in the life to come!

32. Therefore, O Goddess! Give me your baby and I will hand it over to Kamsa. If we can observe this truth, we will meet with ample rewards afterwards; there is no doubt in it.

33. Where there are pains and pleasures for the Jivas, there it is highly incumbent on us to do good and meritorious deeds. If we can act according to Truth, we will certainly get good fruits.

34. Vyasa said Thus addressed by Vasudeva, the husband of Devaki, who was very much grieved and intelligent, gave over the newly born baby, her whole body trembling, to the hands of Vasudeva.

35. The virtuous Vasudeva took that baby and went out to the Kamsa's palace. On the way, the people, seeing him thus, were very much astonished and began to praise him.

36-37. The people said "O people! See how Vasudeva is sensible to keep his words! He is taking his son to hand over to Kamsa. This truthful and highsouled man, free from malice, is going to give up his son to the hands of Kamsa who is the Death Personified. See his wonderful patience; this man's life is really high, noble and true."

38. Vyasa said O King! Vasudeva, thus praised, reached at last the Kamsa's palace and handed over his newly-born son to Kamsa.

39-41. The King Kamsa, too, was very much astonished to see this wonderful patience of Vasudeva. Then he held aloft the child and laughed and said "O son of S'urasena, you have been blessed today by giving me your son just now. But the voice from Heaven said that your eighth son will be the cause of my death; this your first son is not my cause of death. Therefore I will not kill this baby; you can take your baby back to your home.

O High-minded One! Let me have your eighth son brought here, when he will be born; I hope you will positively do it."

42. The cruel and wicked Kamsa returned the child and said "Let this child go back safely to his home."

43-44. When the king Kamsa said thus, Vasudeva, the son of S'urasena gladly took his child back and came home. Then the King Kamsa told his ministers that the Heavenly voice told that the eighth son would he the cause of his death; and so there was no necessity to kill that child. There was no need to incur sin by killing the first child.

45. The ministers, hearing the king Kamsa's those words, began to praise him very much and exclaimed repeatedly "Well done" "Well done." They went away to their respective homes, when ordered to do so by Kamsa.

46-49. Now Narada, the best of the Munis, arrived to Kamsa. The king Kamsa, the son of Ugrasena, stood up at once and offered him water to wash his mouth and with green grass and rice worshipped him devotedly and enquired of his welfare. He then asked the Muni about the cause of his untimely arrival there. The Maharsi Narada then smilingly and with sweet words repeatedly uttered "Kamsa," "Kamsa" and then said, O blessed one! I went perchance to Sumeru Mountain. There Brahma and other gods formed an assembly and were thus thinking out plans that Visnu, the Supreme God, would take His birth in the womb of Devaki, the wife of Vasudeva to kill Kamsa.

50. Now I ask you, you are very expert as a politician; then why have you not killed the son of Vasudeva? Kamsa said "I will kill the eighth son according to the Heavenly Voice."

51. Narada said O King! Now I understand that you do not understand anything of politics, leading to auspicious or inauspicious results; especially when you are quite ignorant of the Maya of the Devas, then what shall I say to you!

52-53. The truth is this The warriors, looking after their own welfare, never overlook the weakest of their foes. What have you understood when the Heavenly Voice uttered "the eighth son." It means the children counted from the first and then finished upto eighth; it may mean first, second, third or upto eighth. Never forego your enemies; then why have you desisted in killing your enemy when you got that enemy in your possession. Nothing is shewn of you in this act save dire foolishness, and ignorance.

54. Thus saying, the Maharsi Narada vanished quickly. Kamsa, of little understanding brought back the son of Vasudeva and killed him by dashing him against a stone and was relieved.

Note This human body is a microcosm; the universe is the macrocosm. God resides in the centre and controls the two. In this human body also live the Devas and the Danavas. The left half of the body, the Ida side, is the seat of the Devas. The right half, the Pingala side, is the seat of the Danavas. In this body war is always going on between the Devas and Danavas. Sometimes the Devas get victory; sometimes the Danavas win. God is in the centre, the heart and controls the two.

Here ends the 21st Chapter of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses composed by Veda Vyasa, on the killing of the sons of Devaki.

English translation

1. Janamejaya asked O grandfather! What bad act did that child commit, that no sooner he was born than he was killed by Kamsa?

2. Especially, Maharsi Narada is the the best amongst the Munis and foremost amongst the Brahma-vids (Knowers of Brahma), always doing virtuous acts, and learned; why did he become the agent in this very sinful act?

3. Pundits declare that the doers and stimulators of any evil deed both are equally responsible; then how is it that Narada, being the best of the Munis, instigated the wicked Kamsa to do this evil act!

4. I am very much in doubt on this point. Kindly describe, in detail, the act that the child did as the result of which be had to meet with this fate of being killed.

5. Vyasa said The Devarsi Narada is always fond of seeing quarrels brought about amongst parties; he always likes thus to see the fun. Here specially to serve the gods’ purpose he went to Kamsa and incited him to such an act.

6. Really he never intends to speak a lie; he is always truth speaking; pure hearted, and always ready to serve the gods.

7. Thus the six sons were born to Devaki; and Kamsa, too, killed those six sons consecutively as they were born. These six sons named Sadgarbha, were killed just after their births, owing to their having been previously cursed.

8. O King! Hear why they were cursed before. In the reign of Svayambhuva Manu, were born to Urna; the wife of Maharsi Marichi, the six powerful sons, all of a virtuous disposition.

9-11. Once, on an occasion, the Prajapati Brahma, on seeing his daughter, became passionate, and was ready to hold sexual intercourse with her. At this, those six sons laughed at him. Brahma cursed them saying "You all go quickly and take your birth in the wombs of the asuras." Therefore those six sons became the sons of Kalanemi in their first birth. At their second birth, they became the sons of Hiranyakas'ipu. This second time they had the fear of curse in their minds and therefore were born endowed with knowledge.

12. In this birth they became peaceful and, collecting all their energies, they began to practise austerities. Brahma was pleased at this and asked the Sadgarbha to take boons.

13. Brahma said O my sons! I was very angry to you before and cursed you; now I am very much pleased with you; ask boons from me that you all desire.

14-15. Vyasa said Hearing Brahma's words, they were very glad and becoming very anxious to secure their objects of desire, said O our grand sire! Today thou art pleased unto us; now favour us with our desired boons. That we may be invulnerable to all the Devas, human beings, the big serpents the Gandarbhas, and the Lord of Siddhas, (semi-divine beings supposed to be of great purity and holiness and said to be particularly characterised by eight supernatural faculties called Siddhis).

16. Vyasa said Brahma told them "What you have asked, you would certainly get; O blessed ones! better go now; my words will be found to be literally true. No doubt in this."

17-19. Granting them boons, Brahma went away; they then became very glad. O best of Kurus! Hiranyakas'ipu began to think "My sons now have pleased the Grandsire Brahma and are now regardless of me" and got very angry and said You all are become very proud on account of receiving boons; and since you have ceased your good feelings towards me I also henceforth cut off my connection with you. Now better go to Patala; you will be known in this world as Sadgarbha.

20-21. At present you would be always involved in deep sleep and remain in Patala for many years; and when you will be born one after another in the womb of Devaki, then your father Kalanemi of previous birth will be born as Kamsa; and he would be cruel hearted and surely kill you all, no sooner you be born.

22. Vyasa said Thus because they were cursed, they took their births repeatedly and Kamsa, too, being urged on by the same curse, killed those sons of Devaki, the Sadgarbha, no sooner they were born.

23-24. In the seventh wonnb of Devaki, Ananta made his appearance. The foetus in the womb was attracted by Yoga maya and placed in the womb of Rohini. But there was the rumour that there was miscarriage in the womb of Devaki in the fifth month; and this became known to the public.

25. Kamsa came to know that there had been miscarriage. That wicked soul became exceedingly glad to hear this gladdening news.

26. And at about this time the Bhagavan, the Protector of the devotee appeared in the eighth womb of Devaki to serve the purpose of the gods and to relieve the load of the Earth.

27-28. The King said:-- O best of Munis! "You have described the part incarnations of (1) Kas'yapa as Vasudeva and (2) of Bhagavan Hari to relieve the burden of the Goddess Earth as prayed by Her; and (3) of Ananta Deva; but you have not described the part incarnations of the other Devas. How the other Devas incarnated as their parts on this earth, kindly describe them now."

29. Vyasa said The part incarnations of Suras and Asuras on this earth, and their names I am now saying to you in brief; hear.

30-32. Vasudeva was the part incarnation of Kas'yapa, Devaki was of Aditi, Baladeva, of Ananta; Vasudeva S'ri Krisna, of S'riman Narayana; the son of Dharma existing even at that time in his physical body; Arjuna, of Nara, the younger brother of Narayana.

33. Yuidhisthira was part incarnate of Dharma, Bhimasena, of Vayu, the powerful twins of Madri, Nakul and Sahadeva, of AsVini- kumaras?

34. The valiant hero Kama, born of Kunti, was part incarnate of the Sun, and the high minded Vidura, the knower of the Supreme Essence, was incarnate of Yama, the king Dharmaraj. Drona, the Acharya of the Kurus and the Pandavas was the part incarnate of Brihaspati; and his son AsVatthama was part incarnate of Rudra Deva.

35. S'antanu was the part incarnate of the Ocean; his wife, of the river Ganges in human farm. It is stated in the Puranas that the king Devaka was part incarnate of the Lord of Gandarvas.

36-41. The Grand-father of the Kauravas, the foremost of the heroes, Bhisma Deva was the incarnate of Vasu; Virata, the Lord of Matsya was the part incarnate of Maruts; Dhritarastra, of the Daitya Hamsa, the son of Arista Nemi; Kripa and Krita Varma, of Maruts; Duryodhana, of Kali and S'akuni, of Dvapara; Suvarchakhya Somapraru, of the son of the Moon; Dhristadyumna was part incarnate of Fire and S'ikhandi of Raksasa; Pradyumna was part incarnate of Sanatkumara; the king Drupada was part incarnate of Varuna; Draupadi, of Laksmi; Draupadi's five sons, of Visve-devas; Kunti was incarnate of Siddhi; Madri, of Dhriti; Gandhari, of Mati; the wives of S'ri Krisna were the heavenly public women; thus all the Devas came as their part incarnations, urged on by Indra.

42-43. Amongst the Asuras, S'is'upala was the incarnate of Hiranyakas'ipu; Jarasandha, of Biprachitti, S'alya, of Prahlada; Kamsa, of Kalanemi and Kes'i, of Haya S'ira. The Asura named Arista of the form of a cow that was killed by Krisna was the son of Bali.

44. Dhristaketu was part incarnate of Anuhradha, Bhagadatta, of Vaskala; Pralamba, of Lamba; Dhenuka, of Khara.

45. Chanura and Mus'tika, the two athletes, were part incarnates of Varaha, and Kis'ora, the two dreadful Daityas.

46-47. Kubalaya, the elephant of Kamsa, was part incarnate of Arista, the sun of Diti. Vaki was the daughter of Bali, Vaka was her younger.

The powerful son of Drona, AsVatthama, though known as the part incarnate of Rudra, was really born of the four parts of Yama, Rudra, Cupidity and Anger.

48-49. The Daityas and Raksasas that were born to relieve the heavy burden of the Earth were all incarnates of Asuras. O king! I have thus narrated to you in order the incarnations of the Suras and Asuras, as they are stated duly in the Puranas.

50-51. When Brahma and the other Devas went to Visnu and prayed to Him then Hah gave to Brahma one hair of a black colour and one hair of a white colour. The Bhagavan S'ri Krisna was born of that black hair and S'ankarsana Baladeva was born of the white hair. They were both the incarnations of Visnu.

Note here the black is the younger and the stronger; and they also represent the polarities. The Jivas are points of those hairs.

52. He who hears with devotion the story of these part incarnations becomes freed of all sins and passes away his time merrily, surrounded by his circle of friends; there is no doubt in this.

Thus ends the 22nd chapter in 4th book of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa on the part incarnations of the several Devas.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said The six sons of Devaki being thus killed by Kannsa and the seventh womb being miscarried, Kamsa began, when Devaki was pregnant for the eighth time, to think of the cause of his own death as advised by Narada and watched carefully, day and night, so that this time there would be born a son and there be no miscarriage.

3. On the other hand the Bhagavan Hari came down and rested on the body of Vasudeva as part incarnate and then entered into the womb of Devaki, in due order.

4. That very time the Goddess Yogamaya, of Her own accord, enters into the womb of Yasoda in order to help the workings of the gods.

5. Rohini, the wife of Vasudeva was anxiously dwelling at that time through the fear of Kamsa in the Nanda Gokula; Balarama, the part incarnate of Ananta, took his birth there as Her son.

6. Kamsa then imprisoned Devaki, who was being worshipped by gods, and engaged servants to take care of her.

7. Vasudeva, too, entered into the prison with his wife Devaki, thinking of his issue and also being attracted by his attachment towards his wife.

8. Visnu, here, the Deva of the Devas, to accomplish the purpose of the gods began to grow regularly in the womb of Devaki, being incessantly adored and praised by the gods.

9-10. When the tenth month was complete, on the eighth day of the dark fortnight, under the star Rohini, Kamsa became much bewildered with fear and called on his Danava followers and said “You must all carefully protect Devaki in the prison.

11-12. The son born from this eighth womb of Devaki will turn out my dire enemy; therefore do you all very carefully protect that child, my death incarnate (so that the child may not be transferred anywhere else). O Daityas! I will be able to sleep without any anxiety then, when I will be successful. Kill this eighth son of Devaki who has become the source of my constant worries and endless troubles.

13. Equipped with swords, shafts and bow and darts do you all incessantly watch with eyes open on all sides, leaving off your sleep and drowsiness."

14. Vyasa said Thus ordering the Demons, the king Kamsa who had become worn out with this anxiety and was bewildered with fear, went quickly to his own palace room; but he could not find any trace of happiness.

15-18. On the other hand, Devaki, at dead of night, in that prison, told Vasudeva "O king! My birth pain has come; I see here many guards, terrific, who are watching and protecting us; what shall I do now? Yasoda, the wife of Nanda, promised me before this. O respected one! Your heart is almost burnt up with the fire of grief;

therefore do you send to my house your son; I will protect it with utmost care; and especially to incur Kamsa's faith and belief, I will give you another son. O Lord! This is now a very hard moment; what are we to do now?

19. And again how are you to exchange the two sons? However let what may come, come to pass; now the moment of child birth has come; I am possessed by a feeling of shame not liable to be overcome. You better turn away your face; there is no other remedy here."

20. Thus saying to that blessed Vasudeva, worshipped by the gods, Devaki, at dead of night, delivered a wonderful child.

21. The blessed Devaki looking on that exceedingly beautiful child, was struck with wonder and told her husband, her whole body being filled with joy.

22. O Lord! Look at the face of your new born child, a very rare thing to see such a face as this. Alas! The son of my paternal uncle, Kamsa, will kill my this new born child.

23. "Kamsa will do so." Saying this, Vasudeva took up that child in his arms and began to look amorously at the face of that child of wonderful deeds.

24. Thus looking, Vasudeva thought "What can I do now so as to relieve me from my sorrows owing to the future destruction of this child."

25-27. While Vasudeva was thus anxiously pondering over, the Heaven Voice clearly said thus "O Vasudeva! Quickly go to Gokula with the child. The keepers and guards I have made dead asleep by My Maya. The eight very strong doors are now lying wide open. You better free yourself from your chains and take this child, keep it in the house of Nanda and bring Yoga Maya from there and come back here."

28-29. Thus hearing the Heavenly Voice, he cast his glance at the doors and found them all wide open. O King! Very quickly then he took the child and stepped out of the prison, quite unnoticed by the guards and watchmen. Going to the banks of the Jumna he found there the daughter of Kalindi, flowing with great force and became anxious.

30-31. But the river Jumna instantaneously turned out to be easily fordable just knee deep; then Vasudeva, guided by Yoga Maya, crossed the Jumna and betaking to an unfrequented road arrived at Gokul at dead of night. There, at the doorway of the house of Nanda, he began to see the cows, buffaloes, the wealth and property of Nanda.

32. At that very moment, there was born of Yos'oda, the Maha Devi, the part of the Divine Yoga Maya, the Incarnate of the three qualities.

33. Then the Mahadevi Yoga Maya, assuming the appearance of a female artisan, taking that divine female child in her arms came there and handed her over to Vasudeva.

34. Vasudeva, too, delivered his child over to the lotus like hands of the Devi and, taking the female child instead, quickly returned with his heart full of joy.

35. He went unto the prison and kept that female child in the bed of Devaki and remained aside, fearful and anxious.

36-37. But that child, the moment she was lulled to sleep, began to cry in a sonorous voice; the royal guards at once woke up on that cry, and being bewildered with fear, hurriedly went to their king and said "O King! Come quickly. Devaki has brought forth a child."

38-39. The King of the Bhojas, hearing their words, went there quickly and saw the doors open, called on Vasudeva "O blessed one! Let me have the eighth son of Devaki, my death incarnate; I will at once kill that enemy of mine, born as part incarnate of Hah."

40. Vyasa said O King! Hearing Kamsa's words, Vasudeva handed over to him the female child crying and very much bewildered with fear.

41. At the sight of the female child, the king was very much astonished and began to think that the Heavenly Voice and the Seer Narada's words turned out false.

42. How can Vasudeva be able to bring about, in this dreadful place, the unnatural act of turning male into a female. Especially my guards are carefully watching the place. There is no doubt in this.

43. How has this female child come here? Where has that eighth born child gone? I ought not to doubt in this matter. For the ways of Time are mysterious!

44-46. Thinking thus, the cruel King Kamsa caught hold of that female child by her legs and, raising her high up in the air, was going to strike her against a stone, when the female child slipped out of his hands and flying into the air assumed a divine appearance and gently spoke to Kamsa, thus "What will you get by killing me?

Your powerful enemy is already born on the earth. O vilest of men! Disgrace to your family! He, the Excellent Human being Who is very difficult to be worshiped will certainly kill you."

47-49. Saying thus, the auspicious female child, able to go anywhere according to her will, disappeared. Kamsa astonished returned to his own home and, becoming impatient with fear and anger, called all the Danavas Baka, Dhenuka, Vatsa and others, and addressed them thus "O Danavas. Go all of you to serve my purpose. Kill anywhere the child whom you see just born.

50. Let Putana, expert in killing children go today to Nanda's Gokula. My order is this Any child recently born they must kill.

51. Dhenuka, Vatsaka, Kes'i, Pralamba, and Vaka, etc., all should remain in Gokula to carry out my order."

52. The cruel king Kamsa, thus ordering the Demons, went away to his own palace, and, thinking on this matter over and over again became, very much afflicted with fear and his mind got immensely depressed.

Thus ends the 23rd Chapter in the 4th Skandha of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa, on the birth of S'ri Krisna.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said On the other hand, there, at the house of Nanda, early in the next morning, commenced the grand birth day festivity. Kamsa came to know, afterwards, by his spies as will as by general rumour, that at Gokula, in the house of Nanda, a very joyous festival on a grand scale was being performed; he also knew before that the other wives of Vasudeva, his animals and his servants were all staying at Nanda’s residence in Gokula.

3-4. O Bharata! Thus all these gave reasons to Kamsa to suspect the place Gokula. Especially Narada told him before that the residents, the cowherds at Gokula, Nanda and others, their wives, Devaki and Vasudeva were all Devas incarnates; and consequently they were his enemies.

5-7. Thus being brought to more confidence by Narada’s words, that vicious Kamsa, the disgrace to his family, was very angry and sent there his demons Putana, Baka, Vatsa, the great Asura, the powerful Dhenuka, Pralamba. They were all killed by Krisna, of unsurpassable prowess. S’ri Krisna held aloft also the hillock Gobardhana (to protect the cow herds and cows, etc.) Hearing all these, Kamsa became certain also of his own death.

8. Lastly when the evil minded Kamsa heard that the Daitya Kes’i was also slain, then he made arrangements for a sacrifice, known as Dhanuryajha; and under this pretext wanted to bring over there at Mathura the two brothers Krisna and Balarama.

9. The evil minded Kamsa to effect the death of those two, Rama and Krisna, of unsurpassable prowess, sent Akrura to Gokula to bring them over to Mathura.

10. Akrura, the son of Gandini, under the orders of Kamsa, went to Gokula and brought the two boys on a chariot to Mathura.

11-12. On arriving at Mathura, Rama and Krisna first broke the bow; killed Rajaka, the elephant Kubalaya, Chanur, Mustika, S'ala, Tos'ala and other athletes and warriors. Last of all, Hari, the Lord of the Devas, holding Kamsa by his hair, killed him with utmost ease.

13. The enemy-destroyer Krisna removed the sorrows of his father and mother and released them from their prisons and gave over the kingdom of Mathura to Ugrasena (the father of Kamsa).

14-15. The high minded Vasudeva, then, with the triple girdle made of Munja grass, performed the Upanayana ceremonies (wearing the sacred thread round the body) of Rama and Krisna and made them accept the vow of Brahmacharya. They then departed to the hermitage of the holy Muni S'andipana to acquire knowledge. Learning all the vidyas (knowledges) there, they returned quickly to Mathura.

16. The two sons of Anakadundubhi stayed there and on attaining their twelfth year, became proficient in all the branches of learning and became very powerful.

17. That time Jarasandha, being grieved at the killing of his son-in- law Kamsa, collected a strong and numerous army and marched to Mathura.

18. Seventeen times Jarasandha, the king of Magadha, attacked Mathura and seventeen times he was defeated by the ingenuity of that highly intelligent S'ri Krisna, who was of firm resolve and was then residing in Mathura.

19. Lastly, Jarasandha sent the Kalayavana (Black Yavana) to invade Mathura. These Yavanas were brave and the lords of all MIechchas (untouchables) and extremely terrific to the Yadavas.

Note: Kalayavana - A king of Yavanas and enemy of Krisna and an invincible foe of the Yadavas. Krisna finding it impossible to vanquish him in the field of battle, cunningly decoyed him to the cave where Muchukunda was sleeping who burnt him down.

Yavana means a Greek, an Ionian; then any foreigner, or barbarian (the word is applied at present to a Mahomedan or a European also).

20-21. Hearing that Kala Yavana was coming to attack the Yadavas, Krisna the destroyer of Madhu, called all the Yadavas and Baladeva and addressed them thus "O blessed ones! Now a cause of great terror has appeared amongst us; Kala Yavana is being sent by our powerful enemy Jarasandha to attack Mathura. Now what to do? It is better to save one's life by leaving aside all our homes, wealth and army.

22. You should all know that is the place of our fathers and forefathers where we can safely and happily dwell; where there is a constant source of anxiety and uneasiness that, though the place of our fathers and forefathers, ought to be avoided; never ought anyone to dwell there.

23. If you want to dwell at ease and comfort, you ought to dwell in that country or place which is adjacent to a sea or a mountain; where there is no fear from an enemy, the sages will always remain there.

24. See! The Bhagavan Hah, being afraid, as it were, of his enemy has taken refuge on the body of the thousand headed S'esa serpent as his sleeping place and is sleeping at ease and comfort on the ocean. It seems likely that the enemy of Tripura, the great S'iva is also dwelling on the Kailas'a mountain.

25. We, too, are being constantly worried by our enemies here; therefore we ought not to live here any longer. We should all go to Dwarka city with our friends, relatives and wealth.

26. Garuda, the king of the birds, has given us the detailed information of the city Dwarka. That beautiful city is situated on the sea shore in the vicinity of the Raivataka mountain.”

27. Vyasa said The Yadava chiefs, hearing S’ri Krisna’s utterances fraught with their welfare, were ready to depart to that place Dwarka, attended by their friends, relatives, and appurtenances.

28. They then collected their camels, mares, and buffaloes and filled their conveyances with wealth, gems and precious stones and marched out of their place.

29. Rama and Krisna went in front; the Yadavas and other subjects then marched in groups (several parties).

30. Marching some days, they all reached Dvaravati. Then the portions of the city that were dilapidated or destroyed, S’ri Krisna had them repaired by engineers, artisans and craftsmen.

31. Placing the Yadavas there, Kes’ava and Baladeva quickly returned to Mathura and began to stay in that desolated city.

32. The extremely powerful king of the Yavanas arrived then at Mathura. Krisna knowing that the Yavana chief had come there, went out of the city.

33. The Bhagavan Madhusudana, the destroyer of the boastings of Asuras and other people, dressed in yellow robes, appeared on foot before the Kalayavan with smile on his lips.

34. Seeing the lotus-eyed Krisna before him, the treacherous Lord of the Yavanas, pursued him on foot to catch hold of him.

35. Where the powerful Rajarsi Muchukunda was sleeping soundly, the Bhagavan Hari led Kalayavana there.

36. There S’ri Krisna, saw Muchukunda and vanished away at once; the king of the Yavanas on arriving there found the Rajarsi (the royal sage) there in deep sleep.

37. The wicked Yavana mistaking Muchukunda for S’ri Krisna, gave him a good kick. The powerful king Muchukunda got up and was very angry; his eyes became red and reduced that vicious Yavana instantly into ashes.

38. When Muchukunda burnt the Yavana, he saw the lotus-eyed Krisna; he bowed down to that Supreme Deva, Vasudeva, and went to forest.

39. S’ri Krisna then went back to the city Dwarka with Rama and made Ugrasena there the king and began to enjoy at his will.

40. At the marriage ceremony of S’is’upala, at the palace of the king of Vidarbha, Janardan Visnu carried away by force Rukmini, the bride elect from the Svayambara assembly (where the husband is self elected by the bride herself) and afterwards married her according to the rule called Rakhsasa Vidhi (one of the eight forms of marriage in Hindu Law in which a girl is forcibly seized and carried away after the defeat or destruction of her relatives in battle).

41-42. Afterwards He brought also Jambavati, Satyabhama, Mitravinda, Kalindi, Laksmana, Bhadra, and auspicious Nagnajiti (the daughter of the king Nagnajit) on various occasions and married them. O Lord of the earth! These eight women were the best and most beautiful of S'ri Krisna's wives.

43. Rukmini first gave birth to the beautiful child Pradyumna and S'ri Krisna performed the religious ceremony at the birth of his child.

44. Then the powerful Danava named S'amvara stole away the little baby from the lying-in-chamber and carried him to his own city and made him over under the charge of Mayavati.

45. Coming to know that His son had been stolen away, S'ri Krisna became very much overpowered with sorrow and took the shelter of the Supreme Goddess, the Devi, with a heart full of devotion.

46-47. S'ri Krisna then began, to chant, in sweet auspicious tone, hymns in alphabets, conveying the highest meanings, in adoration of the Yoga Maya, Who slew Vritrasura and other Daityas with ease and alacrity.

48. O Mother! I, in my former birth as the son of Dharma, appeased You by my ascetic practices in the hermitage of Badari and worshipped You with various offerings; O Mother! Have you now forgotten all my devotion to You?

49. O Mother! Has any evil minded enemy stolen away my son from the lying-in chamber? Or have You Yourself done this to make a fun and see the amusement? It seems that some one of my enemies has done so to insult me; however. You, O Mother! ought not to put your devotee under this shameful condition.

50. O Mother! This Dwaraka city is well guarded; a very strong fort is built in its middle and my place is in the midst of that again; and the lying in-chamber is again in the middle; I therefore must say that it is due to my bad luck that the child is stolen away!

51. O Mother! I did not go to the house of my enemy; the Yadavas also did not go there; this city is guarded by valiant soldiers; then how is it, under what charm, the baby has been stolen? O Mother! Now I come to know that it is due to Your Maya; such things are common due to Your Maya in the three worlds.

52. O Mother! When I am ignorant of your deepest mysteries, how can there exist anyone among the little minded Jivas that can know your doings? My watchmen could not see anything, where my child was taken away and who has stolen it. O Mother! I come to the conclusion that it is hidden behind the screen of Your Maya.

53. O Mother! It is not strange with You; to the chaste woman, Rohini Devi, though situated at a great distance and not connected with any male persons. You, in the fifth month, moved away the son to my knowledge from the womb of my mother; and thus Baladeva was born to Rohini. This is now known to all.

54. Mother! You are incessantly creating, preserving, and destroying this whole universe by the mixture of the three qualities. Who can know Your sin-destroying doings? Mother! There is no need of dwelling at length. Suffice it to say that You, no doubt, are doing all that are being done in this whole universe.

55. You first create the joy at the birth of a child; again You load us with heavy burdens of sorrows due to the separation from that child; thus you are always sporting; otherwise how my joy at the birth of my child would thus be rendered quite useless?

56. The mother of that child is always weeping like an ewe, straying from a flock; she is giving vent to her sorrows always to me; O Kind- hearted! Being thus endowed with illimitable prowess and understanding, do You not know my troubles! O Mother! You are the only source of consolation to one, suffering from the sorrows of this world. There is no doubt in this.

57. O Goddess! The wise seers say that the birth of a child in any house is the highest bliss there, and the death of a child is the greatest sorrow that can befall to any house. Therefore, O Mother! What shall I do in this? What shall I say more than that my heart is going to burst, due to the disappearance of my child.

58. O Mother! I will perform all the necessary sacrifices, take up vows, perform all sorts of worship to the entire satisfaction of the Great Fate (Ordainer of things); You be pleased to remove my sorrow. O Mother! If my son be alive, kindly shew him once to me. Mother! There is no other than You Who is fully capable to destroy this my pain and sorrow, raging in my heart.

59. Vyasa said He who brings into practice, things that are considered impracticable for the Devas and removes the load of the Goddess Earth with ease and alacrity, the same Saviour of world, S'ri Krisna thus chanted hymns in adoration of the Great Goddess. The Devi then became visible to him and said.

60. O Lord of the Devas! Do not any longer be sorrowful and miserable; there had been a curse on you before; and, for that reason, the Daitya S'ambara has stolen away your son by his demonic magic.

61. Therefore, when your son will grow sixteen years old, then he will, by My Grace, kill the Daitya perforce and will return to you. There is no doubt in this.

62. O king! Thus saying these words full of hope and confidence, the Great Goddess Chandika, of formidable prowess, disappeared. Krisna too, quitted his sorrows, due to the bereavement of his child, and began to spend his time in happiness and peace.

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Fourth Book of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa on the stealing away of Pradyumna.

English translation

1. The King said O Best of Munis! Hearing these sorrows of S’ri Krisna, the part incarnate of Visnu Bhagavan, I am in doubt on your utterances.

2. Behold! Bhagavan Vasudeva is the part incarnate of Narayana; how could the Asura S’ambara steal away His son from the lying-in- chamber!

3. The beautiful Dvaraka city is specially well-guarded; the lying-in- chamber is again within the centre of that; under these circumstances, how was it that the Daitya could enter there and steal away the child!

4. O Son of Satyavati! How was it that Vasudeva could not know that! This appears very strange to me!

5. O Brahmana! Please explain to me why was that child stolen away from the lying-in-chamber, though S’ri Krisna was staying there at the city; and how was it that he was not able to know this beforehand!

6. Vyasa said O King! The Maya called S’ambhavi (Parvati's) is the cause; it fascinates and deludes the minds of human beings. Thus it is known to us. Who is there in this world that is not deluded by this Maya?

7. The Jivas, no sooner they are born as human beings, are immediately overcome with human qualities; the Deva or Asura qualities or their natures do not then visibly exist.

8-9. O King! Hunger, thirst, sleep, fear, lassitude, delusion, sorrow, doubt, pleasure, egoism, old age, disease, death, non-knowledge, knowledge, displeasure, envy, jealousy, pride and weariness; all these human qualities are seen to exist in human embodiments.

10-11. Behold! The night wanderer Raksasa Maricha assumed, by his Maya, the form of a golden deer and came before S'ri Ramchandra; and Ramchandra was not the least aware of it. Then the stealing away of Sita, the death of Jatayu, Rama's going to the forest on the very day of his installation to the throne of Ayodhya; the death of his father due to his bereavement, all these S'ri Ramchandra did not know a bit beforehand.

12. When Ravana stole away Janaki and carried her by force Rama did not know this before or after that event had happened. He wandered from forest to forest in search of Her, like a quite ignorant man.

13. Afterwards He killed Bali, the son of Indra and with the help of the monkeys, erected a bridge across the ocean, and, crossing it, went to Lanka.

14. He sent the chief monkeys to all the quarters in search of Sita and had to undergo all the troubles of deadly battles in the great battlefield.

15. The most powerful Raghunandana was tied down by Nagapas'a (snakes) and was afterwards freed from it by Garuda.

16. Then, being furiously enraged, the great Raghava slew Kumbhakarna, Nikumbha, Megha Nada and Ravana.

17. The Janardan Ramchandra was not aware of the innocence of Sita; and therefore He made her take an oath about the purity of Her character and even made Her undergo an ordeal of fire.

18. Afterwards Ramachandra, the son of Das'aratha, had to banish his dear blameless Sita on the mere ground of bad name, imputed to her by some ignorant person and that he would be thus blamed by the public.

19. He did not know that Kus'i and Lava were His two sons, born in the forest. Afterwards when the Muni Valmiki told him. He came to know of them.

20. Behold also Ramachandra could not know about the departure of Sita to Patala; getting angry once He was about to kill his brother Laksmana even.

21. Rama, the slayer of the Raks'asa Khara did not know that Kala Purusa was coming to him. He, incarnating in the human body, did acts all becoming to a man. Similarly S'ri Krisna, the descendant of Yadu, taking human birth did acts all like a man. What more discussion can there be in this?

22. Lo! From the very outset He fled, out of fear of Kamsa, to Gokula; afterwards he fled out of fear of Jarasandha to the Dwarka city.

23. Knowing all the rites and ceremonies of the Sanatan Dharma (the Eternal Religion) He stole away Rukmini who was chosen as bride elect by S'is'upala. This act was very unreligious of Him.

24. S'ambara Daitya stole away his newly born child and Krisna lamented for this. Afterwards on coming to know of the real state of things from the Goddess Bhagavati, He was very glad. Therefore it can be easily seen from all these circumstances that He had to yield to pleasures and to undergo remorse like ordinary human beings.

25. Again, under the orders of his wife Satyabhama, He had to go to Heaven to bring the Parijata tree and He had to fight with Indra. This shows clearly that He was under the subjection of His wife.

26. In that battle Hari with disc in hand defeated Indra; the Lord of the Devas, took away the Kalpa tree and retained the prestige of His respected wife (whom He had offended).

27. Again Satyabhama tied down Hari against a tree and presented Him as a gift to Narada; afterwards she, the passionate woman, freed Krisna on paying an equivalent of gold coins.

28-29. On seeing Rukmini's many sons, Pradyumna and others, all qualified with diverse qualifications. His wife Jambavati prayed to S'ri Krisna with humility, so that she may have also many beautiful sons. For her sake, Krisna firmly resolved to practise tapasya and went to the place where the great devotee of S'iva, Upamanyu, was staying.

30. Hah desiring to have sons engaged Upamanyu as His spiritual guide and obtained from him the Mantram called Pas'upata Mantra and became a Dundee (holder of a staff) and shaved His head.

31-32. In the first month He subsisted on fruits only and meditated on S'iva and repeated silently the S'iva mantra. Thus He practised very severe austerities. In the second month He subsisted on water only and stood on only one leg. In the third month he lived on air only and stood on the end of His great toe.

33-36. Thus time passed away. In the sixth month the God Rudra, holding Moon on His forehead, was pleased with His asceticism and devotion and appeared before Him on that spot. The God Maha Deva came on a bull; He was attended by Brahma and Visnu, Indra and the other Devas, Yakshas and Gandarbhas and addressed thus "O high minded Krisna of Yadu's descent; I am pleased with Your severe asceticism; now ask Your desired boon; I will grant it just now. I fulfil all the desires of all my devotees; what desire, then, there can be that is not fulfilled, when I am seen by the devotees!"

37-38. Vyasa said The son of Devaki was very glad to see the God S'amkara and fell prostrate at His feet. Then that eternal supreme God of the Devas began to recite hymns in praise of Him in a tone as deep as the rumbling of a cloud.

39. Krisna said O Deva of the Devas! O Lord of the world! You alone destroy the misfortunes and sorrows of all the beings. O Destroyer of Asuras! You are the Cause and Creator of this universe. I salute Thee.

40. O One having a blue throat! I bow down to Thee! O Holder of trident! I again and again salute Thee! O Lord of Parvati! You destroyed Daksa's sacrifice. I salute Thee.

41. I am blessed by Thy sight and think myself as having discharged all my duties and satisfied. O Virtuous One! My human birth is crowned with success by saluting Thy feet.

42. O Lord of everything! O three-eyed! I am tied down to this world by my attachment towards my wives; now I take refuge unto Thee to free me from these bonds.

43. O Destroyer of sorrows! I am very much troubled on attaining this human birth; O Bhava! I am afraid of this world; and hence I take refuge unto Thee; now save me.

44-45. O Destroyer of cupidity! I experienced a good deal of troubles in the womb; next out of fear to Kamsa I had to go to Gokula where I suffered much pains; there I had to obey the orders of cow-herds; there I had to attend as Nanda's cow-herd, the pasturing of his cows and was constantly suffocated with the awful dust thrown up by the cows; I had to wander constantly in the wild forests of Brindaban.

46. O Omnipresent One! I had to leave my dear ancestral place, the city of Mathura, a rare place to be found anywhere else, out of the great fear of Kala Yavana, the king of the MIechchas and had to go to Dwaraka city.

47-48. O Lord! In order to preserve the cause of religion, I had to hand over the best prosperous kingdom to Ugrasena, due to the curse of Yayati. My elders made him the king of the Yadavas; following their examples, I gave him the kingdom and am now serving him always like his servant.

49. O S'ambhu! The householder's life is exceedingly troublesome; it makes one subject to one's wife and go against his religion. There we are always dependent on others; and no word is heard or dreamt even, how to free oneself from those bondages of the world. Oh! What an irony of Fate.

50. O Destroyer of cupid! My wife Jambavati, on seeing the sons of my wife Rukmini has urged me to practise this Tapasya so that she might get excellent sons born to her also.

51. O Lord of the Devas! O Lord of the world! I am engaged in this asceticism with the desire to get sons; O Deva! I feel shame in asking you for the sons!

52. You are the lover of your devotees; You give eternal freedom;

You are the Lord of all the Devas. By worshipping and satisfying You, who is so fool as to ask for this trivial and transient thing!

53. O Omnipresent One! O S'ambhu! O Lord of the world! Knowing You as the giver of salvation, I, still deluded by Maya, ask from You, being requested by my wife, this happiness that sons be born to me of my wife.

54-55. O S'amkara! This world and its concerns are the abode of all sorrows; it is the cause that brings in all sorts of pains and troubles, and it is transient and will go to destruction. I know all these; still my mind does not desist from it.

56. Vyasa said O great and powerful king! The God of Gods, Maha Deva, thus praised and adored by Govinda, the Destroyer of enemies, replied You will get many sons.

57. You will get sixteen thousand one hundred wives and no doubt you will get ten sons of each of them. These sons will be very powerful and valorous.

58-60. The good-looking S'amkara saying these words remained silent; then S'ri Krisna bowed down at the feet of Girija, the wife of S'amkara. Then the Goddess Parvati addressed repeatedly to Vasudeva and said O mighty armed! O Krisna! O best of human beings! You will be the typical exemplary householder; (all people will try to follow you). When one hundred years will pass away, your race will be extinct, due to the curse of the Brahmana and Gandhari.

61. Your sons and the other Yadavas will lose their senses on drinking liquor; they will kill each other in the battle field and thus will be extirpated.

Note: Here Visnis and Andhkas are meant.

62. Then you and your elder brother Balabhadra (Balarama) will give up your bodies and will ascend to the Heavens; O Mighty Person! Do not grieve in matters that cannot be avoided.

63. You should know that there can be no remedy to what will inevitably come to pass; therefore no one is to grieve for them; this is all along my view.

64. O Madhusudana! After Your death, due to the curse of Astavakra Muni, your wives will be forcibly stolen away by indomitable robbers. There is no doubt in this.

65. Vyasa said When Devi Parvati thus spoke, S'ambhu, with the other gods disappeared; Krisna too, bowed down to Upamanyu and went back to the city Dvarka.

66-67. Therefore, O King! Though Brahma and the other Devas are heard to be the lords of the world, still they are all being tossed hither an thither by the waves of the ocean of Maya. They are all like wooden dolls subject to Maya.

68. As their previous karmas, so their several manifestations in the field of action, by the Great Maya, the incarnate of Para Brahma.

69. She has no differences nor any want of mercy; That Goddess of the universe is always leading the Jivas towards the Eternal Freedom (freedom from Maya).

70. Had She not created this world, moving and unmoving and if She had not remained there as the Controller of the Jivas in the shape of unshakeable consciousness the Kutasthya Chaitanya, this whole world would have become devoid of any consciousness, like an insentient substance and would have dissolved in the TamasT Maya (sheer darkness). There is no doubt in this.

71. Therefore that Goddess of the Universe has, through Her mercy, created all these worlds and Jivas, and resting incarnate in each JTva, is directing each and every of them according to his karmic merits and demerits.

72. Therefore it is a matter not to be doubted that Brahma and the other gods are all under this Maya; the Suras and Asuras are subject to Her.

73. Therefore, O king! Know this as certain that the Great Goddess moves and enjoys freely according to Her will; She is not dependent on anybody. Therefore it is the duty of everyone to serve and worship, with whole head and heart, that Devi.

74. In these three worlds there is nothing higher or more excellent than Her. Therefore this birth cannot be crowned with success in any other way than remembering that Highest Force, the Para S'akti and Her place.

lb-11. One should always think, without any difference, that Eternal World Mother, thus “Let me not be born in that family which has not that Supreme Goddess for its presiding Deity; I am that Goddess Bhagavati and no other; I am Brahma, untouched by sorrows.” One should hear first from the mouth of one's Spiritual Guide; next by hearing Vedanta and other religious scriptures, one should first form an idea of that Bhagavati; and then if one daily meditates on That Goddess, the Highest Self incarnate with one minded devotion, one will get, within a short period, the Eternal Freedom; else there is not the least chance, even if one performs lots of innumerable good works of becoming free.

78. S'vetas'vatara and other pure hearted Risis obtained this freedom from the bondages of Maya by meditating, in their hearts, this Highest Self and nothing else.

79. Brahma, Visnu and the other Devas, Gauri, Laksmi and other goddesses, all worship This Supreme Goddess, of Sachchidananda Para Brahmani.

80. O pure-hearted king! I answered all that you asked me, terrified with the fears of this world; what more do you want to hear?

81-82. O king! I have described this wonderful Purana narrative, destructive of sins, productive of virtue. He who daily listens to this Bhagavatam equal alike to Veda, becomes freed from all sorts of sins and goes to the region of the Highest Goddess and passes his time in the midst of the Highest Glory. There is no doubt in this.

83. Suta said "O Risis! This Sri Mad Bhagavatam, called otherwise the Fifth Puranam was recited, in detail, in days of yore by Vyasa. Whatsoever I heard from him, I have now told exactly the same to you."

Here ends the 25th Chapter in the Fourth Skandha of Sri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa on the Devi's Highest Supremacy.

Note The best mantra is the whole hearted devotion to one's Guru, and devotion and surrender of one's Self to the Supreme Mother, doing works without attachment to the fruits thereof. This will lead to dispassion and Renunciation. To one who is faithful in this, all the other mantras will be duly revealed and all his desires will be found to be true and fulfilled.

Here ends as well as the Fourth Skandha.

English translation

1-5. The Risis said "The great legendary story, the life of S'ri Krisna, supremely divine, destructive of all sins, has been narrated by you, O Suta! But, O Blessed One! You, though highly intelligent, have dwelt on it not at a great length; hence many doubts are cropping up in our minds. A very difficult tapasya was performed by Vasudeva the part incarnate of Visnu, who had to go to forest to worship S'iva. Next, it has been known that the Devi Parvati, the part incarnate of the Great Mother, the Mother of the universe, the Supreme, and Perfect offered boons to S'ri Krisna. How did it then come to pass that S'ri Krisna, being himself the God, had to worship Parvati and Mahadeva? Is it that S'ri Krisna was inferior to Mahadeva and Parvati? This is our doubt."

6-7. Suta spoke "Hear then, the reasons, O noble Risis! that I heard from Vyasa; I will now sing before you those meritorious deeds S'ri Krisna." The son of Pariksit, the intelligent Janamejaya had also the same doubts that you now have, when he heard the story before from Vyasa; and he asked the same questions that you now ask."

8-11. Janamejaya said "O son of Bhagavati! I have heard from you much about the Supreme Goddess, the Highest Cause; still the doubts are not leaving me. O Fortunate One! Krisna the Deva of the Devas, the Visnu incarnate, worshipped Sambhu and had to perform dire penances; this is my great wonder! He is the soul of all the JTvas, the One Ruler and Lord of this world and He is able to confer all the Siddhis; how is it, then, that the Lord Hah had to perform very difficult asceticism like an ordinary mortal. He who is able to create this universe, moving and non-moving, He who is able to preserve and destroy it, why did He practise such a terrible penance."

12-54. Vyasa said "True it has been said by you that Vasudeva the Janardana, is the destroyer of the Daityas and He is able to create and preserve the Devas and do all other acts for them. But the Great Lord assumed a human body; therefore he had to perform his duties like a man and observe the Varna and As'rama Dharmas pertaining to human beings. Respecting the elderly persons, worshipping the spiritual teachers, doing service to the Brahmanas, adoring and propitiating the Devas, feeling sorrow at times of sorrow, feeling pleasure at times of happiness, feeling dejection or expressing censure or scandal, or having sexual intercourse with women, in other words, to feel lust, anger, greediness and other passions when their proper time arises. All these are natural to all human beings; how can, then, S'ri Krisna though intrinsically of pure qualities, become Nirguna (devoid of human qualities) when he assumed a human body which is Saguna, i.e., with qualities. O Ruler of men! The extinction of the Yadava race by the curse of Gandhari, the daughter of Subala, and the curse of a Brahmin, Krisna's leaving his human coil, the stealing away of his wives, the robbing of their wealth on the way by the dacoits of the Avira tribe, Arjuna's becoming powerless to hurl any weapons on those dacoits, Krisna's not knowing anything about the stealing away of Pradyumna and Aniruddha from his Dvarka palace, these all correspond verily to exertions and failings appropriate to human bodies. Again the Risi Narayana is the part incarnate of Visnu, and Vasudeva is the part incarnate of the Risi Narayana; hence what wonder is there, if Vasudeva be seen to adore and propitiate S'iva? S'iva is the God of gods; and He is the Lord of all the causal bodies that exist; in the state of Susupti (deep sleep). In this respect, S'iva is the creator of Visnu and Visnu worships Him in this light. Rama, Krisna and others are all part incarnations of Visnu; so there is no wonder if they worship S'iva. The letter A is Bhagvan Brahma; the letter "U" is Bhagvan Hari; the letter "M" is Bhagvan Rudra and the half letter m is MahesVari, the Supreme Mother of the universe. The sages, therefore, consider Visnu superior to Brahma; they again consider Rudra superior to Visnu and MahesVari (Turiya State) again superior to Rudra. The speciality of the half letter is that it can never be uttered; it is the symbol of the Eternal Devi. In all the S'astras, therefore, the superiority of the Devi is established. Visnu is superior to Brahma; Rudra is superior to Visnu. Therefore no doubt can arise in Krisna's worshipping S'iva. It is through the will of S'iva that a second Rudra originated from the forehead of Brahma to offer boons to him (i. e., to Brahma). This second Rudra is venerable and entitled to all worship; what to speak of the First Rudra? O King! It is through the proximity of the Devi that the importance and superiority of S'iva is thus established. Thus the incarnations of Hari arise in yugas after yugas through the intervention of the Yoga Maya; so there is no need to discuss on this point. Why to Achyuta alone, to Brahma and S'iva also She gives troubles for getting involved into incarnations. She the Yoga Maya who is indirectly, with the twinklings of Her eyes, creating, preserving and destroying this universe. It is the Yoga Maya that caused Krisna to be transferred from his lying-in chamber to the village Vraja and then protected him in the house of the cowherd Nanda; afterwards took him to Mathura for the destruction of Kamsa, whence he was led again out of Jarasandha's fear to the city Dvarka. It is She that created from Her Ownself the eight Naikas (the leading mistresses) and also sixteen thousand and fifty women for the pleasure and enjoyment of Krisna Bhagwan, the incarnation of Ananta (Visnu Bhagavan); thus Krisna Bhagavan was made completely subservient to them just like a perfect slave. When a young woman, though she is alone, can bind a man down by the network of Maya, like strong iron chain, what wonder is there that the sixteen thousand and fifty women would make Krisna play in their hands like a S'uka bird and make him an instrument to serve any purpose that they liked. S'ri Krisna got himself so much under the control of Satyabhama that He went gladly under her commands to Indra's heavens to get the Parijata flowers. There he had to fight with Indra and subsequently stole away the Parijata tree and gave it to Satyabhama as a very valuable ornament to be kept in her room. Behold! The same Krisna, by His own prowess, defeated S'is'upala and others for the preservation of religion and then stole away Rukmini, the daughter of Bhima and afterwards married her as his legal wife; where is the rule, then observed that it is a sin to take away another's wife? Thus all embodied beings get themselves subdued by Ahamkara and do acts, good or bad, confounded and deluded by the network of Moha that always drags one down below. From the Mula Prakrit! are born Brahma, Visnu, and Hara and from the Tamasic Ahamkara of Prakrit! is created this whole cosmos, moving and non-moving. The lotus-born Brahma becomes free when he is free from Ahamkara; otherwise He becomes engaged in this world affairs. When freed from this Ahamkara, all the Jivas become free; and their houses, wealth, wives, sons and brothers are quite powerless to tie them down; but when bound by Ahamkara, the Jivas come under their control. O king! This Ahamkara is the cause bondage to all the beings; "I am the doer, this work is done by my power; or this I will do myself" thinking thus, the embodied beings fall themselves under this bondage. An earthen pot cannot be made without earth; no effects can be visible without a cause; consequently Visnu is preserving this universe, because of this Ahamkara (imposed on him by Prakrit!). The human beings are always drowned in their cares and anxieties simply because they are bound by this Ahamkara; when they become free from this Ahamkara, their cares and anxieties at once vanish. Moha (delusion) comes out of Ahamkara; world and the enjoyments thereof come out of Moha; otherwise how can it be accounted for, that Hari and others, the mine of all good and auspiciousness, take their several incarnations in various wombs? Neither Moha nor this world comes to those that are bereft of Ahamkara. Men are of three kinds, Sattvic, Rajasic, and Tamasic; O king! Brahma, Visnu and S'iva are sprung respectively from the Rajasic, Sattvic, and Tamasic Ahamkaras. In these three, the three Ahamkaras are always to be found, so the Munis, that have realised the Real Essence, declare. They are all bound by this Ahamkara; there is no doubt in this. The Pundits of dull intellect, and deluded by Maya declare that Visnu takes various incarnations out of his own free will; for when it is seen that men of even inferior intellects do not entertain any desire to enter into the wombs, painful and terrible; how will Visnu, then, the Holder of the discus, like to come into this womb! The slayer of Madhu, the Vaisnavas say, entered all at once into the wombs of Kaus'alya and Devaki, full of faeces and other dirty things, of His own free will. But you must think out what happiness can Madhusudana, quitting his Vaikuntha Heavens, attain in this womb, full of so many troubles, and where arise, like poisons, hundreds of cares and thoughts to torment an individual! Especially when it is seen that human beings perform asceticism, sacrifice Yajhas and do various charities, that they would avoid thus entering in wombs, which is very painful and terrible. How can Bhagavan Visnu be called independent? If so. He would never have yielded to enter into various wombs. Therefore, O king! Know this that this whole universe is under the control of Yoga Maya; the Devas, men, birds, what more everything from Brahma down to a blade of grass are all under the control of Yoga Maya. Brahma, Visnu and Hara all are bound by the rope of Her Maya. So they roam easily by Her Maya from womb to womb like a spider.

Here ends the First Chapter of the Fifth Book on the superiority of Rudra over Visnu in the Maha Puranam of S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa, consisting of eighteen thousand verses.

English translation

1-2. The king said "Lord! You have described fully the glory of the Maha Maya YogesVari; now describe Her Life and Character; I am very eager to hear them. This whole universe, moving and nonmoving, has been created by Mahes'vari; who is there that desires not to hear Her Glory!"

3-7. Vyasa spoke O king! You are very intelligent; I will describe in detail all this to you; whoever does not describe Her Glory to the peaceful and faithful, is certainly low-minded? In days of yore, a terrible battle ensued between the Devas and Danava forces on this earth when Mahisasura was the Ruler of this world. O king! Mahisasura went to the mountain of Sumeru and performed a very severe and excellent tapasya, wonderful even to the gods. O king! Meditating on his Ista Devata (the deity for his worship) in his heart, elapsed full ten thousand years, when Brahma the Grandfather of all the Lokas, was pleased with him. The fourfaced Brahma, arrived there on his vehicle the swan, asked Mahisasura "O One of virtuous soul! Ask from me what is your desired object; I will grant thee boon."

8. Mahisa said "O Lord, Lotus-eyed! I want to become immortal! therefore O Thou, the Grandfather of the Devas! Dost thou do for me so that I have no fear of death."

9-11. Brahma said "O Mahisa! Birth must be followed by death, and death must be followed by birth; this is the eternal law of nature. Then know this as certain that when one is born, one must die; and when one dies, one will be born. O Lord of the Danavas! What more to say than this, that high mountains, vast oceans, and all the beings will die when time will come. O Ruler of the earth! You are virtuous; therefore ask any other boon than this immortality; I will grant that to you.”

12-13. Mahisa said “O Grand Sire! Grant, then, that no Deva, Danava, nor human being of the male sex can cause my death. There is none among women who can cause my death. Therefore, O Lotus-eyed! Let woman be the cause of my death; how can women slay me! The are too weak to kill me!”

14. Brahma said “O Lord of the Danavas! Your death will certainly occur, at any time, through a woman; O Highly Fortunate One! No man will be able to cause your death.”

15. Vyasa said Thus granting him the boon, Brahma went to his own abode; the lord of the Danavas, too, returned to his place, very glad.

16. The king said “O Bhagavan! Whose son was this powerful Mahisasura; how his birth took place? and why, too, did he get a body of a buffalo?”

17-26. Vyasa said O king! Rambha and Karambha were the two sons of Danu; these two Danavas were far famed in this world for their pre-eminence. O king! They had no issues; hence, desirous of issues, they went to the sacred banks of the Indus (Pahcha Nada) and there performed severe asceticism for long years. Karambha got himself submerged in water and thus began his severe tapasya; while the other, Rambha, had recourse to a juicy peepul tree (haunted by Yakshinis) and there began to worship Fire. Rambha remained, engaged in worshipping the Five Fires; knowing this.

Indra, the Lord of S'achi, was pained and hurried thither, being very anxious. Going to Pahcha Nada, Indra assumed the form of a crocodile and caught hold of the legs of the wicked Karambha and killed him. Hearing of the death of his brother, Rambha got very much enraged and wishing to offer his own head as an oblation to the Fire, he wanted to cut off his own head; he, being infuriated, held the hairs of his head by his left hand, and, catching hold of a good axe, by his right hand, was on the point of cutting it, when the Fire gave him knowledge, desisted him from this act and spoke thus You are stupid; why have you desired to cut off your own head; killing one's ownself is a great sin; and there is no means of deliverance from this sin. Why are you then ready to execute it? Do not seek your death now; what end will that serve you? Rather ask boons from me; thus you will get your welfare.

27-31. Vyasa said O king! Hearing thus the sweet words of Fire, Rambha quitted the hold of his hairs and said O Lord of the Devas! If thou art pleased, grant my desired boon that a son be born unto me, who will destroy the forces of my enemy and who will conquer the three worlds. And that son be invincible in every way by the Devas, Danavas and men, very powerful, assuming forms at will, and respected by all. The Fire said O highly Fortunate! You will get your son, as you desire; therefore desist now from your attempting suicide. O highly fortunate Rambha! With any female of whichever species, you will co-habit, you will get a son, more powerful than you; there is no doubt in this.

32-50. Vyasa said O king! Hearing thus the sweet words of the Fire as desired, Rambha, the chief of the Danavas, went, surrounded by Yaksas, to a beautiful place, adorned with picturesque sceneries; when one lovely she-buffalo, who was very maddened with passion, fell to the sight of Rambha. And he desired to have sexual intercourse with her, in preference to other women.

The she-buffallo, too, gladly yielded to his purpose and Rambha had sexual intercourse with her, impelled as it were by the destiny. The she-buffalo became pregnant with his semen virile. The Danava, too, carried the she-buffalo, his dear wife, to Patala (the lower regions) for her protection.

On one occasion, another buffalo got excited and wanted to fall upon the she-buffalo. The Danava was also ready to kill him. The Danava came hurriedly and struck the buffalo for the safety of his wife; whereon the excited buffalo attacked him with his horns. The buffalo struck him so violently with his sharp horns that Rambha fell down senseless all on a sudden and finally died. Seeing her husband dead, the she-buffalo quickly fled away in distress and, with terror, she quickly went to the peepul tree and took refuge under the Yaksas. But that buffalo, excited very much and maddened with vigour, ran in pursuit of her, desiring intercourse with her. On seeing the miserable plight of the weeping she-buffalo, distressed with fear, and seeing the buffalo in pursuit of her, the Yaksas assembled to protect her. A terrible fight ensued between the buffalo and the Yaksas, when the buffalo, shot with arrows by them, fell down and died. Rambha was very much liked by the Yaksas; so they cremated his dead body for its purification. The she-buffalo, seeing her husband laid in the funeral pyre, expressed her desire to enter also into that fire. The Yaksas resisted; but that chaste wife quickly entered into the burning fire along with her husband. When the she- buffalo died, the powerful Mahisa rose from his mother's womb from the midst of the funeral pyre; Rambha, too, emerged from the fire in another form out of his affection towards his son. Rambha was known as Raktavija after he had changed his form. His son was thus born as a very powerful Danava and became famous by the name of Mahisa. The chief Danavas installed Mahisa on the throne. O king! The very powerful Raktavija and the Danava Mahisa, thus took their births and became invincible of the Devas, Danavas and human beings. O king! I have now described to you the birth of the highsouled Danava Mahisa and his getting the boon, all in detail.

Here ends the Second Chapter of the Fifth Book on the birth of Mahisa Danava in the Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam composed of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-14. Vyasa said The very powerful Asura Mahisa, puffed up with vanity on his getting the boon, obtained sovereignty and brought the whole world under his control! He, being the paramount power, began to protect the sea-girt earth acquired by the power of his own arms, over which he had the sole sovereignty, there being no other rival king nor any cause of the slightest fear. His Commander-in- Chief was then the very powerful Chiksura, maddened with pride; and Tamra was in charge of the Royal Treasury, guarded by many soldiers. There were, then, many generals Asiloma, Vidala, Udarka, Vaskala, Trinetra, Kala, Bandhaka and others, very proud, and each in charge of his own corps respectively and occupying this sea-girt earth. O king! The powerful kings that reigned before were made subservient and tributary; and those, that fought valiantly befitting the Ksattriya line, were slain by Mahisa. The Brahmanas over the earth became subservient to Mahisa and gave their Yajha offerings to him. When that Mahisasura got the sole sovereign sway of this world, he, proud of his boons, desired to conquer the Heavens. Then Mahisa, the Lord of the Daityas, desirous to send an envoy to Indra, the Lord of S'achi, instantly called for the messenger and spoke to him thus:- - Go, O hero! O valiant one! to Heaven. Act as my messenger and tell Indra fearlessly thus “O thousand-eyed one! Quit the Heavens; go anywhere you like, or offer your service to the high-souled Mahisa! He is the lord; and if you take refuge unto him, he will certainly protect you. Therefore, O Lord of S'achi, better seek the protection of Mahisa. If, O Balasudana! Not willing, wield your Vajra at once; we know your powers; you were, in days of yore, conquered by our ancestors. O chief of the Suras! You are the paramour of Ahalya; your strength is well known, give battle or go anywhere you like.”

15-21. Vyasa said Hearing the messenger's words, Indra became very indignant and laughed and said I did not know, O you stupid, that you were maddened with vanity; I will shortly give medicines for your master's disease. Now I will extirpate him by the roots; wise persons do not slay messengers; I therefore let you go. Better go and tell him what I say “Son of a buffalo! If you are willing to fight, better come and do not delay. O Enemy of horse! (Buffaloes and horses are always at war with each other) Your strength is well known to me; you are a grass eater and your appearance is stupid, idiotic; out of your horns I will make a good bow. You depend on your horns for your strength; that I well know. You are clever in striking with your horns; you don't know anything about warfare; therefore I will out off your both the weapons and render you powerless. You are very much puffed up with vanity due to that.”

22. Vyasa said Indra having spoken thus, the messenger quickly returned to his haughty master Mahisa and saluting, spoke 23-28. The messenger said Indra counts you not even a fig, as he is surrounded by his Deva forces and considers himself quite sufficient. It ought one's servant to speak true and pleasant before one's master; how can I utter the words before my master, that are spoken by that brute Indra. Whereas the well known maxim reigns in my mind withal that I am your well-wishing servant and I ought to speak truth before you, my master, and that truth is to be pleasant to hear also. If pleasant words I speak only, then I fail in my duty; at the same time, harsh words ought not to be spoken by me, your sincere well-wisher. My Lord! The cruel poison-like words that come from the mouth of an enemy, how can I, a servant of yours, utter those harsh sayings! O Lord of the Earth! I will never be able to utter those rude sayings that Indra has spoken.

29-53. Vyasa said Hearing the messenger's words full of meaning the grass-eater Mahisa Danava got very angry and, waggling his tail behind his back, passed urine; then his eyes reddened with anger, he called the Danavas before him and said:-0 Danavas! The Lord of the Devas is firmly resolved on battle; therefore collect your forces; we will have to conquer that devil, the chief of the Suras.

Who can stand for him a my rival here! If hundreds and thousands of warriors like Indra come I do not fear any of them at all; O Danavas, we will thoroughly put a end to him. His heroism is before those only that are peaceful and quiet before the ascetics that have become lean and thin by the penances; he is licentious and can only seduce other's wives by craftiness and arts. He is a thorough rogue and hypocrite, vicious and faultfinding; otherwise why does he put obstacles before others, depending for his strength only on the beauties of the Apsaras or heavenly prostitutes. He is treacherous to his very core; therefore he, being afraid at the very outset, took oaths, and entered into agreement with the high-souled Namuchi; afterwards, when his time turned favourable, that villain broke his treaty and treacherously killed him. Again the powerful Visnu is a thorough master of treachery and hypocrisy, the mine in taking oaths and can only show his vanity and is expert in that. He can assume many forms at will by his Magic power. For these very reasons Visnu had to take the form of a boar and kill Hiranyaksa; and again he had to take up a man-lion form to kill Hiranya Kas'Tpu. O Danavas! Never shall I surrender myself to Visnu, for I never place my trust in the words or deeds of Visnu and his Devas. What can Indra or Visnu do against me, when the most powerful Rudra is not able to fight against me in the battle-field! I will instantly defeat Indra, Varuna, Yama, Kuvera, Fire, Sun and Moon and get possession of their Heavens. On our conquering the Devas, we all shall get our share of Yajhas and we along with other Danavas drink the Soma juice and enjoy ourselves in Heaven. O Danavas! I have got the boon; what do I now care for the Devas. My death is not from men too. What can a woman do to me? O my emissaries! Call without any delay the chief Danavas from the nether regions and the mountains and make them my generals? O Danavas! I can alone conquer all the Devas; only to make the war arrangements look nice, that I am taking you to defeat them. There is no fear of mine from the Devas, consequent on the boon conferred on me. I will kill them by my hoofs and horns. I am not to be killed by Suras, Asuras, as men; therefore get yourselves ready to conquer the Devas. O Danavas! After conquering the Heavens we will be garlanded with Parijata wreaths and we will enjoy the Deva women in the Nandana Garden. We will drink the milk of the heavenly milching cow (the cow that yields all desires) and, intoxicated with the heavenly drinks, we will hear and see the music and singing the dancing of the Gandarbhas there. You will all be served there with various bottles of wine by Urvasi, Menaka, Rambha, Ghritachi, Tillottama, Pramadvara Mahasena, Mira Kesi, Madotkata, Viprachitti and others. Then be all ready at once for this auspicious occasion to march to Heavens and fight there with the Suras. And be pleased to call that pure-souled Muni S'ukracharya, the son of Bhrigu and the Guru of the Daityas and worship him and tell him to perform sacrificial ceremonies for the safety and victory of the Danavas. O king! Thus, ordering the chief Danavas, the wicked Mahisa went to his abode, with gladness.

Here ends the Third Chapter of the Fifth Book on the Daitya armies getting ready in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam by Maharsi Vedavyasa of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-17. Vyasa said O King! The messenger of the Danavas having departed, Indra, the lord of the Devas, Yama, Vayu, Varuna, and Kuvera and other Devas, called an assembly and addressed thus O Devas! the most powerful Mahisa, the son of Rambha, is now the king of the Danavas; he is particularly expert in hundreds of Mayas (magic) and has become haughty on the strength of his boon. O Devas! Mahisa has sent his messenger; he wants to take possession of the heaven; he came down to me and spoke thus "O Indra! Quit your this heaven and go any where you like, or be ready to pay your homage to the highsouled Mahisasura, the Lord of the Danavas. The Danava Chief never becomes angry with his opponent who becomes submissive like a servant; if you surrender and serve him, he will, out of mercy, grant an allowance to you. O Lord of the Devas! If this does not like you, then collect your forces and be ready for fight; no sooner I return, the Lord of the Danavas will come here at once ready to give battle to you." Thus saying, the messenger of that wicked Danava departed. Now what are we to do? O Devas! Think on that. O Devas! Even a weak enemy is not to be overlooked by a powerful opponent, especially when the enemy is powerful by his own powers and is ever energetic, never is he to be overlooked. It is always incumbent on us to make our efforts, as best as we can, both by our body and mind as far as lies in our power; the result, victory or defeat depends entirely on Fate. It is useless to make treaty with a deceitful and dishonest person; we therefore never should make treaty with this person; you are all honest; that Danava is dishonest; therefore ponder and ponder deeply and ponder again; do you that which is proper. It is not advisable to go out at once for fight when we are unaware of our enemy's strength; let us therefore send spies truthful, honest, motiveless, quick, to ascertain their strength, those who can easily enter amongst our enemies and yet who have no relation, nor any interest with them.

The arrangements of their forces, their movements, their numbers, they will ascertain correctly who are their generals, what is their number and what is their strength, they will thoroughly examine and return here quickly. First, we will ascertain the strength of the forces of our opposite party and then we will decide at once whether we will start for battle or seek protection within forts. Wise persons always consider before they act; any act done rashly leads in all respects to many troubles, and anything done after mature prejudgments leads to happiness; so the wise do. The Danavas are all one in their heart and mind; therefore it is not advisable, in any way to apply the principle of Bheda (sowing principles of discord). Let our spies go there, ascertain their strength, return and inform us; we will then judge what principle is proper and apply to the expert Danavas. Any act done contrary to policy and expediency will undoubtedly produce effects contrary in every way just like a medicine which we have not tried already.

18-22. Vyasa said O King! Thus counselling with the Devas; Indra sent expert spies to ascertain the true state of affairs. The spies, too, went into the abode of the Daityas, with no delay and made their searches thoroughly into every nook and corner and returned and told Indra all the strength of the Danava forces. Indra was very much startled to know, then, of their arrangements. He immediately bade all the Devas be ready for battle and called for his High priest Brihaspati, expert in giving advices and began to consult with him how to carry on the warfare with that indomitable enemy, the Lord of the Asuras. On Bhihaspati, the best and famous of the Angira family, taking his excellent seat.

23-25. Indra thus said “O Guru of the Devas! O Learned! Please say what are we to do now in this critical juncture? You are omniscient; to-day you are our guide. The Demon Mahisa has become very powerful, very haughty; surrounded by Danavas he is now conning to fight with us. You are expert in nnantras; find out the remedy for us. S'ukracharya is the remover of all obstacles on their side; and that you are our safe guard is well known to us.”

26. Vyasa said Hearing these words of Indra, Brihaspati, who is always ready to effect the Deva's purposes, thought intently on the subject, said very shortly thus

27-51. Brihaspati spoke O Lord of the Devas! O Venerable One! Be peaceful; have patience; when a difficulty comes, one should not, all on a sudden, lose one's patience. O Chief of the Immortals! Victory or defeat is completely under the control of destiny: therefore intelligent ones should always be patient. O S'atakratu! What will unavoidably be done must come to pass; knowing this as certain, one would always be an enthusiast and exert one's powers. Everything is guided by Fate. Knowing this, the Munis devote themselves at all times solely filled with energy in their meditation and Yoga practices for their final liberation. Therefore, to show one's energy, according to the rules of the daily practices, ought to be indispensably done; and one should not repel or feel pleasure on failure or success; for that is under Fate. Success sometimes comes without the exercise of one's own powers, as seen in cases of the lame and the blind; and that is not the reason why one should be very glad. The embodied beings are all under Daiva (Fate); therefore even if success be not attained, though one's own powers are exercised thoroughly, no one is to blame for that. O Lord of the Suras! What to say of forces. Mantras, or advices, what of chariots or weapons, nothing to lead to success; It is Daiva, and only Daiva that makes one successful. This whole universe is under Daiva; it is, therefore, that we see powerful persons suffering pains, and weak ones getting happiness; the intelligent ones sleeping without any food and fools enjoying merrily; distressed persons getting victory and powerful ones suffering defeats; what cares, then ought one to entertain in this. O Lord of the Suras! Whatever is inevitable to come to pass, be it success or failure, one will lead one's energies to that end; therefore one needs to consider beforehand whether one's energies will be successful or not. In times of distress, one sees distress too much and in times of pleasure, one seeks pleasure too much; one's self, therefore one should not surrender to one's enemies, pleasure and pain. Pain and suffering is not felt so much in patience as is felt when impatient; therefore one must practise patience when pain or pleasure comes. Indeed it is very difficult to bear oneself up in distress or happiness; therefore wise persons try not to let these feelings crop up at all from the very beginning. “I am always full, undiminishable, I am beyond these Prakritic qualities. Who is there to suffer? What is suffering?” Thus one ought to think at that moment. I am beyond the twenty-four Tattvas; what pleasure or pain can, then, arise to me? Hunger and thirst are the Dharma of Prana; pain and insensibility is the Dharma of mind, age and death belong to this physical body. I am free from these six diseases; I am S'iva. Grief and delusion are the qualities of this body what then do I care for them? "I" am not the qualities of the body nor "I" am the soul pertaining to that. I am beyond the seven transfigurations, changes, e. g., Mahat, etc., I am beyond this Prakriti, Nature, and beyond the sixteen changes wrought out by Prakriti; I am therefore eternally happy, I am beyond Prakriti and its transformation, then why am I to suffer pain always? O Lord of the Suras! Think on these and be without any passion. O S'atakratu! This attachment is the root of all miseries and non-attachment is the source of all happiness; non¬ attachment therefore, is the chief means of the extirpation of all your troubles. Lord of S'achi! Nothing can be happier than contentment.

In case you find it difficult to practise dispassion, apply, then, discrimination and think of Fate, that what comes inevitably to pass. O Lord of the Suras! Actions already done cannot die out without their effects being enjoyed. O Best of the Suras! Let all your intelligence be brought to action, let all the Devas lend their helping hands to you; what is inevitable must come to pass; what then can you care for your happiness or pain? O King! Happiness is felt for the expiation of good deeds and pain is felt for the expiation of bad deeds; therefore wise persons get thoroughly delighted when their punya ends. O King! Judge and hold a council to-day; then try your best. But what is unavoidable will come to pass, even if you try your best.
