English translation

1-50. The Devi said "Hear, Ye Immortals! My words with attention, that I am now going to speak to you, hearing which will enable the JTvas to realise My Essence. Before the creation, I, only I, existed; nothing else was existent then. My Real Self is known by the names Chit, Sambit (Intelligence), Para Brahma and others. My Atman is beyond mind, beyond thought, beyond any name or mark, without any parallel, and beyond birth, death or any other change or transformation. My Self has one inherent power called Maya. This Maya is not existent, nor non-existent, nor can it be called both. This unspeakable substance Maya always exists (till the final emancipation or Moksa).

Maya can be destroyed by Brahma Jhana; so it can not be called existent, again if Maya does not exist, the practical world cannot exist. So it cannot be called non-existent. Of course it cannot be called both, for it would involve contradictions. This Maya (without beginning but with end at the time of Moksa) naturally arises as heat comes out of fire, as the rays come out of the Sun and as the cooling rays come out of the Moon. Just as all the Karmas of the JTvas dissolve in deep sleep (S'usupti), so at the time of Pralaya or the General Dissolution, the Karmas of the JTvas, the JTvas and Time all become merged, in one uniform mass in this great Maya. United with My S'aktT, I am the Cause of this world; this S'aktT has this defect that it has the power of hiding Me, its Originator.

I am Nirguna. And when I am united with my S'aktT, Maya, 1 become Saguna, the Great Cause of this world. This Maya is divided into two, Vidya and Avidya. Avidya Maya hides Me; whereas Vidya Maya does not. Avidya creates whereas Vidya Maya liberates.

Maya united with Chaitanya (Intelligence), /. a, Chidabhasa is the efficient cause of this Universe; whereas Maya reduced to and united with five original elennents is the material Cause of the Universe. Some call this Maya tapas; some call Her inert, material; some call Her knowledge; some call Her Maya, Pradhana, Prakriti, Aja (unborn) and some others call Her S'akti. The S'aiva authors call Her Vimars'a and the other Vedantists call Her Avidya; in short, this Maya is in the heads of all the Pundits. This Maya is called various in the Nigamas.

That which is seen is inert; for this reason Maya is Jada (inert) and as the knowledge it conveys is destroyed, it is false. Chaitanya (Intelligence) is not seen; if It were seen, it would have been Jada. Chaitanya is self-luminous; not illumined by any other source. Were It so. Its Enlightener would have to be illumined by some other thing and so the fallacy of Anavastha creeps in (an endless series of causes and effects). Again one thing cannot be the actor and the thing, acted upon (being contrary to each other); so Chaitanya cannot be illumined by itself. So It is Self-luminous; and it illumines Sun, Moon, etc., as a lamp is self-luminous and illumines other objects. So, O Mountain! This My Intelligence is established as eternal and everlasting. The waking, dreaming and deep sleep states do not remain constant but the sense of "I" remains the same, whether in waking, dreaming or deep sleep state; its anomaly is never felt. (The Bauddhas say that) The sense of intelligence, Jhana, is also not felt; there is the absence of it; so what is existent is also temporarily existent. But (it can then be argued that) then the Witness by which that absence is sensed, that Intelligence, in the shape of the Witness, is eternal. So the Pundits of all the reasonable S'astras declare that Samvit (Intelligence) is Eternal and it is Blissful the fountain of all love. Never the Jivas or embodied souls feel "I am not"; but "I am" this feeling is deeply established in the soul as Love. Thus it is clearly evident that I am quite separate from anything else which are all false. Also I am one continuous (no interval or separation existing within Me). Again Jhana is not the Dharma (the natural quality) of Atman but it is of the very nature of Atman. If Jhana ware the Dharma of Atman, then Jhana would have been material; so Jhana is immaterial. If (for argument's sake) Jhana be denominated as material, that cannot be. For Jhana is of the nature of Intelligence and Atman is of the the nature of Intelligence. Intelligence has not the attribute of being Dharma. Here the thing Chit is not different from its quality (Chit). So Atman is always of the nature of Jhana and happiness; Its nature is Truth; It is always Full, unattached and void of duality. This Atman again, united with Maya, composed of desires and Karmas, wants to create, due to the want of discrimination, the twenty-four tattvas, according to the previous Samskaras (tendencies), time and Karma. O Mountain! The re¬ awakening after Pralaya Susupti is not done with Buddhi (for then Buddhi is not at all manifested). So this creation is said to be effected without any Buddhi (proper intelligence). O Chief of the Immovables! The Tattva (Reality) that I have spoken to you is most excellent and it is my Extraordinary Form merely. In the Vedas it is known as Avyakrita (unmodified), Avyakta (unmanifested) Maya S'abala (divided into various parts) and so forth. In all the S'astras, it is stated to be the Cause of all causes, the Primeval Tattva and Sachchidananda Vigraha. Where all the Karmas are solidified and where Ichcha S'akti (will), Jhana S'akti (intelligence) and Kriya S'akti (action) all are melted in one, that is called the Mantra Hrim, that is the first Tattva. From this comes out Akasa, having the property of sound, thence Vayu (air) with "touch" property; then fire with form, then water having "Rasa" property; and lastly the earth having the quality "smell." The Pundits say that the "sound" is the only quality of Akasa; air has two qualities wz., sound and touch, fire has three qualities sound, touch, form; water has four qualities sound, touch, form, taste; and the earth has five qualities sound, touch, form, taste and smell. Out of these five original elements, the allpervading, Sutra (string or thread) arose. This Sutratman (soul) is called the "Linga Deha," comprising within itself all the Pranas; this is the subtle body of the Paramatman. And what is said in the previous lines as Avyakta or Unmanifested and in which the Seed of the World is involved and whence the Linga Deha has sprung, that is called the Causal body (Karana body) of the Paramatman. The five original elements (Apahchikrita called the five Tan Matras) being created, next by the Pahchikarana process, the gross elements are created.

The process is now being stated O Girija! Each of the five original elements is divided into two parts; one part of each of which is subdivided into four parts. This fourth part of each is united with the half of four other elements different from it and thus each gross element is formed. By these five gross elements, the Cosmic (Virat) body is formed and this is called the Gross Body of the God. Jhanendriyas (the organs of knowledge) arise from Sattva Gunas of each of these five elements. Again the Sattva Gunas of each of the Jhanendriyas united become the Antah Karanani. This Antah karana is of four kinds, according as its functions vary. When it is engaged in forming Sankalpas, resolves, and Vikalpas (doubts) it is called "mind." When it is free from doubts and when it arrives at the decisive conclusion, it is called "Chitta"; and when it rests simply on itself in the shape of the feeling "I", it is called Ahamkara. From the Rajo Guna of each of the five elements arises Vak (speech), Pani (hands) Pada (feet), Payu (Anus) and Upastha (organs of generation). Again their Rajo parts united give rise to the five Pranas (Prana, Apana, Samana, Udana and Vyana) the Prana Vayu resides in the heart; Apana Vayu in the Arms; Samana Vayu resides in the Navel; Udana Vayu rasides in the Throat; and the Vyana Vayu resides, pervading all over the body. My subtle body (Linga Deha) arises from the union of the five Jhanendriyas, the five Karmendriyas (organs of action), the five Pranas and the mind and Buddhi, these seventeen elements. And the Prakrit! that resides there is divided into two parts; one is pure (Suddha Sattva) Maya and the other is the impure Maya or Avidya united with the Gunas. By Maya is meant She, who, without concealing Her refugees, protects them. When the Supreme Self is reflected on this S'uddha Sattva, Maya, He is called Is'vara. This Suddha Maya does not conceal Brahma, its receptacle; therefore She knows the All-pervading Brahma and She is omniscient, omnipotent, the Lady of all and confers favours and blessings on all. When the Supreme Self is reflected on the Impure Maya or Avidya, He is called Jiva. This Avidya conceals Brahma, Whose nature is Happiness; therefore this Jiva is the source of all miseries. Both Is'vara and Jiva have, by the influence of Vidya and Avidya three bodies and three names. When the Jiva lives in his causal body, he is named Prajha; when he lives in subtle body he is known as Taijasa; while he has the gross body, he is called VisVa.

So when IsVara is in His causal body, he is denominated Is'a; when He is in His subtle body, he is known as Sutra; and when He is in His gross body. He is known as Virat.

The Jiva glories in having three (as above-mentioned) kinds of differentiated bodies and IsVara glories in having three (as above- mentioned) kinds of cosmic bodies. Thus IsVara is the Lord of all and though He feels Himself always happy and satisfied, yet to favour the Jivas and to give them liberation (Moksa) He has created various sorts of worldly things for their Bhogas (enjoyments). This IsVara creates all the Universe, impelled by My Brahma S'akti. I am of the nature of Brahma; and IsVara is conceived in Me as a snake is imagined in a rope. Therefore IsVara has to remain dependent on My S'akti.

Here ends the Thirty-second Chapter of the Seventh Book on Self- realization, spoken by the World Mother in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-19. The Devi said "O Giriraja! This whole universe, moving and unmoving, is created by My Maya S'akti. This Maya is conceived in Me. It is not, in reality, different or separate from Me. So I am the only Chit, Intelligence. There is no other intelligence than Me.

Viewed practically, it is known variously as Maya, Vidya; but viewed really from the point of Brahman, there is no such thing as Maya; only one Brahman exists, I am that Brahma, of the nature of Intelligence.

I create this whole world on this Unchangeable Eternal (Mountain¬ like) Brahma, (composed of Avidya, Karma, and various Samskaras) and enter first as Prana (vital breath) within it in the form of Chidabhasa. O Mountain! Unless I enter as Breath, how can this birth and death and leaving and retaking bodies after bodies be accounted for! As one great Akas'a is denominated variously Ghatakas'a (Akas'a in the air), Patakas'a (Akas'a in cloth or picture), so I too appear variously by acknowledging this Prana in various places due to Avidya and various Antahkaranas. As the Sun's rays are never defiled when they illumine various objects on earth, so I, too, am not defiled in entering thus into various high and low Antahkaranas (hearts). The ignorant people attach Buddhi and other things of activity on Me and say that Atman is the Doer; the intelligent people do not say that. I remain as the Witness in the hearts of all men, not as the Doer. O Achalendra! There are many JTvas and many Is'varas due to the varieties in Avidya and Vidya. Really it is Maya that differentiates into men, beasts and various other JTvas; and it is Maya that differentiates into Brahma, Visnu and other Is'varas. As the one pervading sky (Akas'a) is called Mahakas'a Ghatakas'a (being enclosed by jars), so the One All pervading Paramatma is called Paramatma, JTvatma (being enclosed within JTvas). As the JTvas are conceived many by Maya, not in reality; so Is'varas also are conceived many by Maya; not in essence. O Mountain! This Avidya and nothing else, is the cause of the difference in JTvas, by creating differences in their bodies, indriyas (organs) and minds. Again, due to the varieties in the three Gunas and their wants (due to the differences between Sattvik, Rajasik and Tamasik desires), Maya also appears various. And their differences are the causes of different Is'varas, Brahma, Visnu and others. O Mountain! This whole world is interwoven in Me; It is I that am the Is'vara that resides in causal bodies; I am the "Sutratman, Hiranyagarbha that resides in subtle bodies and it is I that am the Virat, residing in the gross bodies. I am Brahma, Visnu, and MahesVara; I am the Brahma, Vaisnavi and Raudri S'aktis. I am the Sun, I am the Moon, I am the Stars; I am beast, birds, Chandalas and I am the Thief, I am the cruel hunter; I am the virtuous high-souled persons and I am the female, male, and hermaphrodite. There is no doubt in this. O Mountain! Wherever there is anything, seen or heard, I alway exist there, within and without. There is nothing moving or unmoving, that can exist without Me. If there be such, that is like the son of a barren woman. Just as one rope is mistaken for a snake or a garland, so I am the One Brahma and appears as Is'vara, etc. There is no doubt in this. This world cannot appear without a substratum.

And That Substratum is My Existence. There can be nothing else.

20. The Himalayas said "O Devi! If Thou art merciful on me, I desire, then, to see Thy Virat form in the Fourth Dimensional Space.

This sight is developed when the mind resides in the heart centre or in the centre of the eye-brows. A proper teacher is necessary.

21-41. Vyasa said "O King! Hearing the words of Giriraja, Visnu and all the other Devas gladly seconded him. Then the Devi, the Goddess of the Universe, knowing the desires of the Devas, showed Her Own Form that fulfils the desires of the Bhaktas, that is auspicious and that is like the Kalpa Vriksa towards the Bhaktas. They saw Her Highest Virat Form. The Satyaloka is situated on the topmost part and is Her head; the Sun and Moon are Her eyes; the quarters. Her ears; the Vedas are Her words; the Universe is Her heart; the earth is Her loins; the Bhuvarloka is Her navel; the asterisms are Her Thighs; the Maharloka is Her neck; the Janarloka is Her Face; the Taparloka is Her head, situated below the S'atyaloka; Indra and the Devas and the Svarloka is Her arms; the sound is the organ of Her ears; the AsVin twins, Her nose; the smell is the organ of smell; the fire is within Her face; day and night are like Her two wings. The four-faced Brahma is Her eyebrows; water is Her palate; the juice thereof is Her organ of taste; Yama, the God of Death, is Her large teeth; the affection is Her small teeth; Maya is Her smile; the creation of Universe is Her sidelooks; modesty is Her upper lip; covetousness is Her lower lip; unrighteousness is Her back. The Prajapati is Her organ of generation; the oceans are Her bowels; the mountains are Her bones; the rivers are Her veins; and the trees are the hairs of Her body. O King! Youth, virginity, and old age are Her best gaits, positions or ways (courses) paths, the clouds are Her handsome hairs; the two twilights are Her clothings; the Moon is the mind of the Mother of the Universe; Hah is Her Vijnana S'akti (the knowledge power); and Rudra is Her all-destroying power. The horses and other animals are Her loins; the lower regions Atala, etc., are Her lower regions from Her hip to Her feet. The Devas began to behold Her this Cosmic (Virata) appearance with eyes, wide awake, with wonder. Thousands of fiery rays emitted from Her form; She began to lick the whole universe with Her lips; the two rows of teeth began to make horrible sounds; fires came out from Her eyes; various weapons were seen in Her hands; and the Brahmanas and Ksattriyas are become the food of that Awful Deity. Thousands of heads, eyes and feet were seen in that form. Crores of Suns, crores of lightnings flashes, mingled there. Horrible, Awful, That appearance looked terrific to the eyes, heart and mind. The Devas thus beheld and began to utter cries of horror and consternation; their hearts trembled and they were caught with immoveable senselessness. "Here is the Devi, our Mother and Preserver." This idea vanished away at once from their minds.

At this moment the Vedas that were on the four sides of the Devi, removed the swoon of the Devas and made them conscious. The Immortals got, then, the excellent Vedas; and, having patience, began to praise and chant hymns in words choked with feelings and with tears flowing flowing from their eyes.

42-53. The Devas said "O Mother! Forgive our faults. Protect us, the miserable, that are born of Thee. O Protectress of the Devas! Withhold Thy anger; we are very much terrified at the sight of Thy this form. "O Devi! We are inferior immortals; what prayers can we offer to Thee! Thou Thyself canst not measure Thy powers; how then can we, who are born later, know of Thy greatness! Obeisance to Thee, the Lady of the Universe! Obeisance to Thee of the nature of the Pranava Om; Thou art the One that is proved in all the Vedantas. Obeisance to Thee, of the form of Hrim! Obeisance to Thee, the Self of all, whence has originated the Fire, the Sun, and the Moon and whence have sprung all the medicinal plants. Obeisance to the Devi, the Cosmic Deity, the Self in all whence have sprung all the Devas, Sadhyas, the beasts, birds, and men! We bow down again and again to the Great Form, Maha Maya, the Self of all, whence have sprung the vital breath Prana, Apana, grains and wheats, and Who is the source of asceticism, faith, truth, continence and the rules what to do and what not to do under the present circumstances. The seven Pranas, the seven Lokas, the seven Flames, the seven Samidhs, the seven Oblations to Fire, have sprung from Thee! Obeisance to Thee, the Great Self in all! Obeisance to the Universal form of the Deity of the Universe whence have sprung all the oceans, all the mountains, all the rivers, all the medicinal plants and all the Rasas (the tastes of all things). We bow down to that Virat Form, the Great Self, the Maha Maya, whence have originated the sacrifices, the sacrifical post (to which the victim about to be immolated is bound) and Daksinas (the sacrificial fees) and the Rik, the Yajus, and the Sama Vedas. O Mother! O Maha Maya! We bow down to Thy front, to Thy back, to Thy both the sides, to Thy top, to Thy bottom and on all sides of Thee. O Devi! Be kind enough to withhold this Extraordinary Terrific Form of Thine, and shew us Thy Beautiful Lovely Form.

54-56. Vyasa said "O King! The World Mother, the Ocean of mercy, seeing the Devas terrified, withheld Her Fearful Cosmic Form and showed Her very beautiful appearance, pleasing to the whole world. Her body became soft and gentle. In one hand She held the noose, and in another She held the goad. The two other hands made signs to dispel all their fears and ready to grant the boons. Her eyes emitted rays of kindness; Her face was adorned with beautiful smiles. The Devas became glad at this and bowed down to Her in a peaceful mind and then spoke with great joy.

1-22. The Devi said "O Devas! You are not at all worthy to see this My Wonderful Cosmic Form. Where are Ye! and where is this My Form! But it is my affection towards the Bhaktas that I have shewn to you all this great form of mine. Nobody can see this form without My Grace; the study of the Vedas, the Yoga, the gift, the Sacrifice, the austerities or any other Sadhanas are quite incompetent to make this form visible to anybody. O King of mountains! Now hear the real instructions. The Great Self is the only Supreme Thing in this world of Maya (Illusions). He it is that under the various Upadhis of an actor and enjoyer performs various functions leading to the Dharma (righteousness) and the Adharma (unrighteouss). Then he goes into various wombs and enjoys pleasure or pain according to his Karma. Then again owing to the tendencies pertaining to these births he becomes engaged in various functions and gets again various bodies and enjoys varieties of pleasures and pains. O Best of Mountains! There is no cessation of these births and deaths; it is like a regular clockwork machine; it has no beginning and it goes on working to an endless period. Ignorance or Avidya is the Cause of this Samsara. Desire comes out of this and action flows thence. So men ought to try their best to get rid of this Ignorance. O King of Mountains! What more to say than this that the Goal of life is attained when this Ignorance is destroyed. The highest goal is attained by a Jiva, when he becomes liberated, while living. And Vidya is the only thing that is able and skilful in destroying this Ignorance. (As darkness cannot dispel darkness, so) the Karma done out of Ignorance is Ignorance itself; and such a work cannot destroy Ignorance. So it is not proper to expect that this Avidya can be destroyed by doing works. The works are entirely futile. The JTvas want again and again the sensual enjoyments out of this Karma. Attachment arises out of this desire; discrepancies creep in and out of this ignorant attachment great calamities befall when such faults or discrepancies are committed. So every sane man ought to make his best effort to get this Jhanam (knowledge). And as it is also enjoined in the S'rutis that one ought to do actions (and try to live one hundred years) so it is advisable to do works also. Again the S'rutis declate that the "final liberation comes from Knowledge" so one ought to acquire Jhanam. If both these be collectively followed, then works become beneficial and helping to Jhanam. (Therefore the JTvas should take up both of these.) Others say that this is impossible owing to their contradictory natures. The knots of heart are let loose by Jhanam and the knots are knit more by Karma. So how can they be reconciled? They are so very diametrically opposite. Darkness and light cannot be brought together, so Jhanam and Karma cannot be brought together. Therefore one ought to do all the Karmas as best as one can, as enjoined in the Vedas, until one gets Chittas'uddhi (the purification of one's heart and mind). Karmas are to be done until S'ama (the control of the inner organs of senses), Dama (the control of the outer organs of senses), Titiksa (the power to endure heat and cold and other dualities), Vairagyam (Dispassion), Sattva Sambhava (the birth of pure Sattva Guna in one's own heart) take place. After these, the Karmas cease for that man. Then one ought to take Sannyasa from a Guru (Spiritual Teacher) who has got his senses under control, who is versed in the S'rutis, attached to Brahma (practising the Yogic union with Brahma). He should approach to him with an unfeigned Bhakti. He should day and night, without any laziness, do S'ravanam, Mananam, and Nididhyasanam (hearing, thinking and deeply realising) the Vedanta sayings. He should constantly ponder over the meanings of the Mahavakyam "Tat Tyam Asi." "Tat Tyam Asi" means Thou art That; it asserts the identity of the Supreme Self (Brahma) and Embodied Self (Jivatma). When this identity is realised, fearlessness comes and he then gets My nature. First of all, he should try to realise (by reasoning) the idea conveyed by that sentence. By the word "Tat" is meant Myself, of the nature of Brahman; and by the word "Tvam" is meant "Jiva" embodied self and the word "Asi" indicates, no doubt, the identity of these two. The two words "Tat" and "Tvam" cannot be apparently identified, as they seem to convey contradictory meanings ("Tat" implying omniscience, omnipresence, and other universal qualities and "Tvam" implying non-omniscience and other qualities of a limited nature). So to establish the identity between the two, one ought to adopt Bhagalaksmana and Tyagalaksmana. [N. B. — Bhagalaksmana - kind of Laksmana or secondary use of a word by which it partly loses and partly retains its primary meaning also called Jahadajahallaksana. Tyaga Laksmana - a secondary use of a word by which it loses partly its primary meaning.

23-40. The Supreme Self is Brahma - Consciousness, endowed with the omniscience, etc., and.the Embodied Self is Limited Jiva Consciousness, etc.) Leaving aside their both the adjuncts, we take the Consciousness, when both of them are indentical and we come to Brahma, without a second. The example is now quoted to illustrate what is called Bhagalaksana and Tyagalaksana. "This is that Devadatta" means Devadatta seen before and Devadatta seen now means one and the same person, if we leave aside the time past and the time present take the body of Devadatta only. This gross body arises from the Panchikrita gross elements. It is the receptacle of enjoying the fruits of its Karma and liable to disease and old age. This body is all Maya; therefore it has certainly no real existence. O Lord of Mountains! Know this to be the gross Upadhi (limitation) of My real Self. The five Jhanendriyas (organs of senses), five Karmendriyas (working organs), the Prana Vayus, mind and Buddhi (rational intellect), in all, these seventeen go to form the subtle body, Suksma Deha. So the Pundits say. This body of the Supreme Self is caused by the Apanchikrita five original elements. Through this body, pain and pleasure are felt in the heart. This is the second Upadhi of the Atman. The Ajhana or Primeval Ignoranee, without beginning and indescribable, is the third body of the Atman. Know this also to be my third Upadhi. When all these Upadhis subside, only the Supreme Self, the Brahman remains. Within these three gross and subtle bodies, the five sheaths, Annamaya, Pranamaya, Vijhanamaya, and Anandamaya always exist. When these are renounced, Brahmapuchcha is obtained. That is Brahma and My Nature, too. This is the Goal of "Not this. Not this" the

Vedanta words. This Self is not born nor It dies. It does not live also, being born. (But it remains constant, though It is not born). This Self is unborn, eternal, everlasting, ancient. It is not killed, when the body is killed. If one wants to kill it or thinks It as slain, both of them do not know; this does not kill nor is it killed. This Atman, subtler than the subtlest, and greater than the greatest, resides within the cave (the Buddhi) of the Jivas. He whose heart is purified and who is free from Sankalpa and Vikalpa (doubt and mental phenomena), knows It and Its glory and is free from sorrows and troubles. Know this Atman and Buddhi as the charioteer, this body as the chariot, and the mind as the reins. The senses and their organs are the horses and the objects of enjoyments are their aims. The sages declare that the Atman united with mind and organs of senses enjoys the objects. He who is non-discriminating, unmindful, and always impure, does not realise his Atman; rather he is bound in this world. He who is discriminating, mindful, and always pure reaches the Goal, realises the Highest Self; and he is not fallen again from That. That man becomes able to cross the Ocean of Samsara and gets My Highest Abode, of the nature of everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss, whose charioteer is Discrimination, and who keeps his senses under control by keeping tight the reins of his mind. Thus one should always meditate intensely on Me to realise the nature of Self by S'ravanam (hearing), Mananam thinking and realising one's own self by one's Self (pure heart).

41-44. When by the constant practice, as mentioned above, one's heart is fit for Samadhi (being absorbed in the Spirit), just before that, he should understand the meanings of the separate letters in the seed Mantra of Mahamaya. The letter "Ha" means gross body and the letter "Ra" means subtle body and the letter "I" means the causal body; the (dot over the semicircle) is the fourth "Turiya" state of Mine. Thus meditating on the separate differentiated states, the intelligent man should meditate on the aforesaid three Vijas in the Cosmic body also and he should then try to establish the identity between the two. Before enteriing into Samadhi, after very carefully thinking the above, one should close one's eyes and meditate on Me, the Supreme Deity of the Universe, the Luminous and Self- Ellulgent Brahma.

45-50. O Chief of Mountains! Putting a stop to all worldly desires, free from jealousy and other evils, he should (by constant practice of Pranayama) make equal according to the rules of Pranayama, the Prana (the inhaled breath) and Apana (the exhaled breath) Vayus and with an unfeigned devotion get the gross body (VaisVanara) indicated by the letter "Ha" dissolved in the subtle body Taijasa. The Taijasa body, the letter "Ra" is in a cave where there is no noise (in the Susumna cave). After that He should dissolve the Taijasa, "Ra" into the Causal body "I". He should then dissolve the Causal body, the Prajha "I" into the Turiya state Hrim. Then he should go into a region where there is no speech or the thing spoken, which is absolutely free from dualities, that Akhanda Sachchidananda and meditate on that Highest Self in the midst of the Fiery Flame of Consciousness. O King of Mountains! Thus men by the meditation mentioned above, should realise the identity between the JTva and Brahma and see Me and get My Nature. O Lord of Mountains! Thus the firmly resolved intelligent man, by the practice of this Yoga sees and realises the nature of My Highest Self and destroys immediately the Ignorance and all the actions thereof.

English translation

1. Himalaya said "O MahesVan! Now tell me the Yoga with all its Amgas (limbs) giving the knowledge of the Supreme Consciousness so that, I may realise my Self, when I practise according to those instructions.

2-10. S'ri Devi said "The Yoga does not exist in the Heavens; nor does it exist on earth or in the nether regions (Patala). Those who are skilled in the Yogas say that the realisation of the identity between the Jivatma and the Paramatma is "Yoga." O Sinless One! The enemies to this Yoga are six; and they are lust, anger, greed, ignorance, vanity and jealousy. The Yogis attain the Yoga when they become able to destroy these six enemies by practising the accompaniments to Yoga. Yama, Niyama, Asana, Pranayama, Pratyahara, Dharana, Dhyana, and Samadhi, these are the eight limbs of Yoga. Yama includes Ahimsa (non-injuring; non- killing); truthfulness; Asteyam (non-stealing by mind or deed); Brahmacharya (continence); Daya (mercy to all beings); Uprightness; forgiveness, steadiness; eating frugally, restrictedly and cleanliness (external and internal). These are ten in number. Niyama includes also ten qualities (1) Tapasya (austerities and penances); (2) contentment; (3) Astikya (faith in the God and the Vedas, Devas, Dharma and Adharma); (4) Charity (in good causes); worship of God; hearing the Siddhantas (established sayings) of the Vedas; Hri or modesty (not to do any irreligious or blameable acts); S'raddha (faith to go do good works that are sanctioned); (9) Japam (uttering silently the mantrams, Gayatris or sayings of Puranas) and (10) Homam (offering oblations daily to the Sacred Fire). There are five kinds of Asanas (Postures) that are commendable: Padmasan, Svastikasan, Bhadrasan, Vajrasan and Virasan. Padmasan consists in crossing the legs and placing the feet on the opposite thighs (the right foot on the left thigh and the left foot on the right thigh) and catching by the right hand brought round the back, the toes of the right foot and catching by the left hand brought round the back the toes of the left foot; sitting then straight and with ease. This is recomnnended by the Yogis (and by this one can raise oneself in the air).

N. B. - The hands, according to some, need not be carried round the back; both the hands are crossed and placed similarly on the thighs.

11-20. Place the soles of the feet completely under the thighs, keep the body straight, and sit at ease. This is called the Svastikasan. Bhadrasan consists in placing well the two heels on the two sides of the two nerves of the testicle, near the anus and catching by the two hands the two heels at the lower part of the testicles and then sitting at ease. This is very much liked by the Yogis. Vajrasan (diamond seat) consists in placing the feet on the two thighs respectively and placing the fingers below the thighs with the hands also there, and then sitting at ease. Virasan consists in sitting cross on the hams in placing the right foot under the right thigh and the left foot under the left thigh and sitting at ease with body straight.

Taking in the breath by the Ida (the left nostril) so long as we count "Om" sixteen, retaining it in the Susumna so long as we count "Om" sixty-four times and then exhaling it slowly by the Pingala nadi (the right nostril) as long as we count "Om" thirty-two times. (The first process is called Puraka, the second is called Kumbhaka, and the third is called Rechaka). This is called one Pranayama by those versed in the Yogas. Thus one should go on again and again with his Pranayama. At the very beginning, try with the number twelve, /. e., as we count "Om" twelve times and then increase the number gradually to sixteen and so on. Pranayama is of two kinds Sagarbha and Vigarbha. It is called Sagarbha when Pranayama is performed with repeating the Ista Mantra and Japam and meditation. It is called Vigarbha Pranayama when "Om" is simply counted and no other Mantram. When this Pranayama is practised repeatedly, perspiration comes first when it is called of the lowest order; when the body begins to tremble, it is called middling; and when one rises up in the air, leaving the ground, it is called the best Pranayama.

(Therefore one who practises Pranayama ought to continue it till he becomes able to rise in the air).

21-30. Now comes Pratyahara. The senses travel spontaneously towards their objects, as if they are without anyone to check. To curb them perforce and to make them turn backwards from those objects is called "Pratyahara," To hold the Prana Vayu on toes, heels, knees, thighs, sacrum genital organs, navel, heart, neck, throat, the soft palate, nose, between the eyebrows, and on the top of the head, at these twelve places respectively is called the "Dharana."

Concentrate the mind on the consciousness inside and then meditate the Ista Devata within the Jivatma. This is the Dhyana. Samadhi is identifying always the Jivatma and Paramatma. Thus the sages say. (Samadhi is of two kinds (1) Samprajhata, or Savikalpak and (2) Nirvikalpak. When the ideas the Knower, Knowledge and the Thing Known, remain separate in the consciousness and yet the mind feels the one Akhanda Sachchidananda Brahma and his heart remains, there, that is called Samprajhata Samadhi; and when those three vanish away and the one Brahma remains, it is called Asamprajhata Samadhi). Thus I have described to you the Yoga with its eight limbs. O Mountain! This body composed of the five elements, and with JTva endowed with the essence of the Sun, the Moon, and the Fire and Brahma in it as one and the same, is denominated by the term "VisVa." There are the 350,000 nadis in this body of man; of these, the principal are ten. Out of the ten again, the three are most prominent. The foremost and first of these three is Susumna, of the nature of the Moon, Sun, and Fire, situated in the centre of the spinal cord (it extends from the sacral plexus below to the Brahmaradhra in the head at the top where it looks like a blown Dhustura flower). On the left of this Susumna is the Ida Nadi, white and looking like Moon; this Nadi is of the nature of Force, nectar-like. On the right side of the Susumna is the Pingala Nadi of the nature of a male; it represents the Sun. The Susumna comprises the nature of the all the Tejas (fires) and it represents Fire.

31-41. The inmost of Susumna is Vichtra or Chitrini Bhulingam nadi (of the form of a cobweb) in the middle of which resides the Ichcha (will), Jhana (knowledge) and Kriya (action) S'aktis, and resplendent like the Millions of Suns. Above Him is situated Hrim, the Maya Vija Haratma with "Ha" and Chandravindu repesenting the Sound (Nada). Above this is the Flame, Kula Kundalini (the Serpent Fire) of a red colour, and as it were, intoxicated. Outside Her is the Adhara Lotus of a yellow colour having a dimension of four digits and Comprising the four letters "va", "s'a", "sa", and "sa". The Yogis meditate on this. In its centre is the hexagonal space (Pitham). This is called the Muladhara for it is the base and it supports all the six lotuses. Above it is the Svadhisthana Chakra, fiery and emitting lustre like diamond and with six petals representing the six letters "ba", "bha", "ma", "ya", "ra", "la". The word "Sva" means "Param Lingam" (superior Male Symbol). Therefore the sages call this "Svadhisthan Chakram. Above it is situated the "Manipura Chakram" of the colour of lightning in clouds and very fiery; it comprises the ten Petals, comprising the 10 letters da, dha, na, ta, tha, da, dha, na, pa, pha. The lotus resembles a full blown pearl; hence it is "Manipadma." Visnu dwells here. Meditation here leads to the sight of Visnu, Above it is "Anahata" Padma with the twelve petals representing, the twelve letters Ka, Kha, Gha, m###, (cha), (chha), (Ja), (Jha,) lya, ta, and tha. In the middle is Banalingam, resplendent like the Sun. This lotus emits the sound S'abda Brabma, without being struck; therefore it is called the Anahata Lotus. This is the source of joy. Here dwells Rudra, the Highest Person."

42-43. Above it is situated the Vis'uddha Chakra of the sixteen petals, comprising the sixteen letters a, a, i, T, u, u, ri, ri, li, Iri, e, ai, o, ar, am, ah. This is of a smoky colour, highly lustrous, and is situated in the throat. The Jivatma sees the Paramatma (the Highest Self) here and it is purified; hence it is called Vis'uddha. This wonderful lotus is termed Akas'a.

44-45. Above that is situated betwixt the eyebrows the exceedingly beautiful Ajha Chakra with two petals comprising the two letters

"Ha," and Ksa. The Self resides in this lotus. When persons are stationed here, they can see everything and know of the present, past and future. There one gets the commands from the Highest Deity (e. g. now this is for you to do and so on); therefore it is called the Ajha Chakra.

46-47. Above that is the Kailas'a Chakra; over it is the Rodhini Chikra. O One of good vows! Thus I have described to you all about the Adhara Chakras. The prominent Yogis say that above that again, is the Vindu Sthan, the seat of the Supreme Deity with thousand petals. O Best of Mountains! Thus I declare the best of the paths leading to Yoga.

48. Now hear what is the next thing to do. First by the "Puraka", Pranayama, fix the mind on the Muladhara Lotus. Then contract and arouse the Kula Kundalini S'akti there, between the anus and the genital organs, by that Vayu.

49. Pierce, then, the Lingams (the lustrous Svayambhu Adi Lingam) in the several Chakras above-mentioned and transfer along with it the heart united with the S'akti to the Sahasrara (the Thousand petalled Lotus). Then meditate the S'akti united with S'ambhu there.

50-51. There is produced in the Vindu Chakra, out of the intercourse of S'iva and S'akti, a kind of nectar-juice, resembling a sort of red- dye (lac). With that Nectar of Joy, the wise Yogis make the Maya S'akti, yielding successes in Yoga, drink; then pleasing all the Devas in the six Chakras with the offerings of that Nectar, the Yogi brings the S'akti down again on the Muladhara Lotus.

52. Thus by daily practising this, all the above mantras will no doubt, be made to come to complete success.

53-54. And one will be free from this Samsara, filled with old age and death, etc. O Lord of Mountains! I am the World Mother; My devotee will get all My qualities; there is no doubt in this. O Child! I have thus described to you the excellent Yoga, holding the Vayu (Pavana Dharana Yoga).

55. Now hear from Me the Dharana Yoga. To fix thoroughly one's heart on the Supremely Lustrous Force of Mine, pervading all the quarters, countries, and all time leads soon to the union of the Jiva and the Brahma.

56-58. If one does not quickly do this, owing to impurities of heart, then the Yogi ought to adopt what is called the "Avayava Yoga." O Chief of Mountains! The Sadhaka should fix his heart on my gentle hands, feet and other limbs one by one and try to conquer each of these places. Thereby his heart would be purified. Then he should fix that purified heart on My Whole Body.

59-62. The practiser must practise with Japam and Homam the Mantram till his mind be not dissolved in Me, My Consciousness. By the practice of meditating on the Mantra, the thing to be known (Brahma) is transformed into knowledge. Know this as certain, that the Mantra is futile without Yoga and the Yoga is futile without the Mantra. The Mantra and the Yoga are the two infallible means to realise Brahma. As the jar in a dark room is visible by a lamp, so this JTvatma, surrounded by Maya is visible by means of Mantra to the Paramatma (the Highest Self). O Best of Mountains! Thus I have described to you the Yogas with their Angas (limbs). You should receive instructions about them from the mouth of a Guru; else millions of S'astras will never be able to give you a true realisation of the meanings of the yogas.

Here ends the Thirty-fifth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the Yoga and the Mantra Siddhi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. S'ri Devi said "O Himalayas! Thus making one's own self attached to the Yoga by the above-mentioned process and sitting on a Yoga posture, one should meditate on My Brahma Nature with an unfeigned devotion. (How the knowledge of that Formless Existence and Imperishable Brahman arises, now hear.) He is manifest, near, yea, even moving in the hearts of all beings. He is the well-known Highest Goal. Know that all this whatever, waking, dreaming, or sleeping, which moves, breathes or blinks, is founded on Him. He is higher than Being and Non-being: higher than the Wisdom, He is the Best Object of adoration for all creatures. He is brilliant, smaller than the smallest and in Him the worlds are founded and the Rulers thereof. He is the Imperishable Brahman. He is the Creator (Life), the Revealer of Sacred Knowledge (speech) and Omniscient (or the Cosmic Mind). This is the Truth. He is immortal, O Saumya! Know that He is the target to be hit.

Note. - The words "higher than wisdom" mean higher than Brahma. (Brahma is the highest of all JTvas, higher than Brahma means higher than all creatures. The word Vijhana denotes Brahma as we find in the following speech of Brahma in the Bhagavat Purana) "I, the Wisdom Energy (Vijhana-S'akti) was born from the navel of this Being resting on the Waters and possessed of the Infinite Powers."

Visnu is called "Prana," because he is the leader of all (Prana-netri). He is called Vak, because He is the Teacher of all; Visnu is called Manas because He is the adviser of all (Mantri). He is the Controller of all the JTvas.

The third verse lays down that Brahman is to be meditated upon or that the Manana should be performed; as the second verse teaches that Dhyana or concentration also is necessary.

5-6. Take hold of the Mystic Name as the bow, and know that the Brahman is the aim to be hit. Put on this the great weapon (Om), the arrow (of the mind) sharpened by meditation. Withdraw thyself from all objects, and with the mind absorbed in the idea of Brahman, hit the aim; for know, O Saumya! That Imperishable alone to be the Mark. The Great name"Om" is the bow, the mind is the arrow, and the Brahman is said to be the mark. It is to be hit by a man whose thoughts are concentrated, for then he enters the target.

Note. - Thus S'ravana, Manana, and Dhyana of Brahman have been taught. This is the method of Brahma-upasana.

7. In Him are woven the heavens, and the interspaces, and mingle also with the senses. Know Him to be the one Support of all, the Atman. Leave off all other words (as well as the worship of other deities). This (Atman) is the refuge of the Immortals.

"He is the bridge of the Immortar'-the words Amrita or Immortal means Mukta Jivas. In the Vedanta Sutra I, 3-2, it has been taught that the Lord is the refuge of the Muktas. So also that "He is the Highest Goal of the Muktas."

8-9. In Him the life-webs (nadis) are fastened, as the spokes to the nave of a chariot; He is this (Atman) that pervades the heart, and by his own free will manifests Himself in diverse ways (as Visva, Taijasa, etc., in waking, sleeping, etc., states); and also as One as Prajha in the dreamless state. Meditate on the Atman as Om (full of all auspicious qualities and who is the chief aim of the Vedas), in order to acquire the knowledge of the Paramatman, Who is beyond the Prakriti and the S'ri Tattva. Your welfare consists in such knowledge.

Note. - This shows that Brahman is the Antaryamin Purusa. He resides in the heart where all the 72,000 Nadis meet, as the spokes meet in the navel of the wheel. He moves within the organs, not for His own pleasure, but to give life and energy to them all. The Om with all its attributes must be constantly meditated upon. He manifests Himself in manifold ways in the waking and dreaming stews as VisVa and Taijasa; while He manifests as One in the state of Susupti or Dreamless sleep as Prajha. He is beyond darkness; He has no mortal body. Meditate on such Visnu in the heart in order to get the Supreme Brahman, with the help of the Mantra Om. The result of such meditation is that there is the welfare of yours--all evils will cease, and you will get the bliss of the manifestation of the Divinity--your Real Self within your Heart.

10. He who is All-Wise, and All-Knowing, whose Greatness is thus manifested in the worlds, is to be meditated upon as the Atman residing in the Ether, in the Fourth Dimensional Space, in the shining city of Brahman (the Heart). He is the Controller of the mind and the Guide of the senses and the body. He abides in the dense body, controlling the heart. He, the Atman, when manifesting Himself as the Blissful and Immortal, is seen by the wise through the purity of the heart.

11. The fetters of the Jivas are cut asunder, the ties of Linga-dehas and Prakriti are removed (the effects of all) his works perish, when He is seen who is Supremely High (or when the Supremely High looks at the JTva.) [A/ote.-Visnu is Paravare, because Para or High Beings like Rama; Brahmas, etc., are Avara or inferior in His comparsion.]

[Note. - This shows the result of Divine Wisdom in the last verse. The Avidya covers both Is'vara and JTva. It prevents Is'vara being, seen by JTva, and JTva, seeing Is'vara. It is a direct bondage of JTva and a metaphorical fetter of Is'vara. Avidya is the name given to Prakriti in Her active state. When Her three qualities Sattva, Rajas and Tamas, are actively manifest. Destruction of Avidya means putting these Gunas in their latent state. There is a great difference between the destruction of the Avidya-fetters as taught in this verse, and the unloosening of them as previously described in this verse! There Avidya still remained, for it was merely a Paroksa or intellectual apprehension of Truth. Here Avidya itself is destroyed by Aparoksa or Intuitive Knowledge of Brahman.

The bonds are five The lowest is the Avidya bond, then the Lingadeha bond, then the Pramachchadaka Prakriti bond, the Kama bond, and the Karma bond. When all these bonds are destroyed, then the Jhani goes by the Path of Light to the Santamka Loka. Before proceeding further all have to salute the S'is'u-mara--the Dweller on the threshhold--the hub of the Universe.

The Sis'umara literally means the Infant Killer and means the porpoise and is the name of a constellation, in the north, near the Pole. It corresponds perhaps with the Draco or the Ursa Minor. For a fuller description of it, see Bhagam Purana Book 5, Chapter 23. Here it is a mystical reference to a Being of an exalted order, which every Jhani passes by, in his way beyond this Universe. It may correspond with the ring-pass-not of the 'Secret Doctrine'! It is the name of Hah, also, as we find the following verse "The Supreme Hah, the Support of infinity of worlds and who is called Sis'umara, is saluted by all knowers of Brahma, on their way to the Supreme God.]

12. The Brahman (called Sis'umaram) free from all passions and parts (manifests in the external world) in the highest Golden Sheath (the Cosmic Egg). That is pure, that is the highest of Lights, it is that which the knowers of Atman know. [Note. - "He is in the Centre of the Cosmic (as Sis'umara, the Light of all Cosmic Suns). He is even in the centre of our Sun and illumining all planets."]

In the first respect He is meditated upon as Sis'umara and in the second as Gayatri." [Note.-\n man, the Brahman manifests in the heart or the Auric Egg, called the city of Brahman. In the Universe, He manifests Himself in the Cosmic Egg, called the "Golden Sheath." These are the two places where Brahman may be meditated upon.

This verse has been explained in two different ways: First, as applying to S'is'umara and secondly, as teaching how to meditate on Narayana in the Sun. The "Golden Sheath" would then mean the Solar sphere. The Supremely High Brahman resides in the excellent Golden Sheath. He is Pure and Without parts.]

13. The Sun does not shine there in His Presence nor the Moon and the Stars (for His Light is greater than theirs, they appear as if dark in that Effulgence, like the candle-light in the Sun. Nor do these lightnings, and much less this fire shine there. When He shines, everything shines after Him; by His

Light all this becomes manifest.

Him the Sun does not illumine nor the moon and the stars. Nor do these lightnings; much less this Fire illumines Him. When He illumines all (the Sun, etc.,) then they shine after (Him with His light). This whole Universe reveals His Light (is His Light and its Light is His). Note.-The Sun, etc., do not illumine Him, i.e., cannot make Him manifest.

14. The Eternally Free is verily this Brahman only. He is in the West, in the North and the South, in the Zenith and the Nadir. The Brahman alone is; it is He who pervades all directions. This Brahman alone is it who pervades. This Brahman alone is the Full (that exists in all time the Eternity). This Brahman is the Best:--

This (idam) Brahman is alone the VisVam or Infinity or Full (purnam). This alone is the Best, the Highest of all. As the word "idam" is used several times in this verse, it qualifies the word Brahman and not "visVam," [Note.-The Brahman was taught to be meditated upon fully in the Heart and the Hiranmaya Kos'a. But lest one should mistake that He is thus limited in those two places, one is to infer that they are selected as the best.]

15-16. The man who realises thus is satisfied and has all that he wants to do and is considered as the best. He becomes Brahman and his Self is pleased and he neither wants anything nor becomes sorry. O King! Fear comes from the idea of a second; where there is no second, fear does not exist. No danger then arises for him to be separated from Me. Nor I also get separated from him.

17. O Himalayas! Know that I am he and he is I. Know that I am seen there where My Jhani resides.

18. Neither I dwell in any sacred place of pilgrimage, nor do I live in Kailasa nor in Vaikuntha nor in any other place. I dwell in the heart lotus of My Jhani.

19. The blessed man who worships once My Jhani, gets Koti times the fruit of worshipping Me. His family is rendered pure and his mother becomes blessed. He whose heart is diluted in the all-pervading Brahma Consciousness, purifies this whole world. There is no doubt in this.

20. O Best of Mountains! I have now told everything that you asked about Brahma Jhana. Nothing now remains to be further described.

21. This Brahma Vidya (science of the knowledge of Brahma) is to be imparted to the eldest son, who is devoted and of good character and to him who is endowed with the good qualities as enumerated in the S'astras and not to be given to any other person.

22. He who is fully devoted to his Ista Deva and who is equally devoted to his Guru, to him the high-minded persons should declare the Brahma Vidya.

23. Verily, he is God himself, who advises this Brahma Vidya; no one is able to repay the debts due to him.

24. He who gives birth to a man in Brahma, is, no doubt, superior to the ordinary father; for the birth that a father gives is destroyed; but the birth in Brahma that is given by the Guru is never destroyed.

25. So the S'ruti says Never do harm to the Guru who imparts the knowledge of Brahma.

26. In all the Siddhantas (decided conclusions) of the S'astras, it is stated that the Guru who imparts the knowledge of Brahman is the best and the most honourable. If S'iva, becomes angry, the Guru can save; but when the Guru becomes angry, S'ankara cannot save. So the Guru should be served with the utmost care.

27. So the Guru must be served with all the cares that are possible by body, mind, and word one should always please Him. Otherwise he becomes ungrateful and he is not saved.

28. O Best of Mountains! It is very difficult to acquire Brahma Jhana. Hear a story. A Muni named Dadhyam of Atharvana family went to Indra and prayed to him to give Brahma Jhana. Indra said: "I would give you Brahma-Jhana, but if you impart it to any other body, I would sever your head." Dadhyarna agreed to this and Indra gave him the Brahma-Jhana. After a few days, the two AsVins came to the Muni and prayed for Brahma Vidya, The Muni said "If I give you the Brahma-Vidyi, Indra, will cut off my head." Hearing this the two AsVins said "We will cut your head and keep it elsewhere and we will attach the head of a horse to your body. Instruct us with the mouth of this horse and when Indra will cut off your this mouth, we will replace your former head." When they said so, the Muni gave them the Brahma-Vidya. Indra cut off his head by his thunderbolt. When the horse-head of the Muni was cut off, the two physicians of the Devas replaced his original head. This is widely known in all the Vedas.

O Chief of Mountains! He becomes blessed who gets this the Brahma-Vidya.

Here ends the Thirty-sixth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the Highest Knowledge of Brahma in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. The Himalayas said "O Mother! Now describe your Bhaki Yoga, by which ordinary men who have no dispassion get the knowledge of Brahma easily.

2-10. The Devi said:-"o Chief of Mountains! There are three paths, widely known, leading to the final liberation (Moksa). These are Karma Yoga, Jhana Yoga and Bhakti Yoga. Of these three, Bhakti Yoga is the easiest in all respects; people can do it very well without incurring any suffering to the body, and bringing the mind to a perfect concentration. This Bhakti (devotion) again is of three kinds as the Gunas are three. His Bhakti is Tamasi who worships Me, to pain others, being filled with vanity and jealousy and anger. That Bhakti is Rajasic, when one worships Me for one's own welfare and does not intend to do harm to others. He has got some desire or end in view, some fame or to attain some objects of enjoyments and ignorantly, and thinking himself different from Me, worships Me with greatest devotion. Again that Bhakti is Sattviki when anybody worships Me to purify his sins, and offers to Me the result of all his Karmas, thinking that Jiva and Is'vara are separate and knowing that this action of his is authorized in the Vedas and therefore must be observed. This Sattviki Bhakti is different from the Supreme Bhakti as the worshippers think Me separate; but it leads to the Supreme Bhakti. The other two Bhaktis do not lead to Para Bhakti (the Supreme Bhakti or the Highest unselfish Love.)

11-20. Now hear attentively about the Para Bhakti that I am now describing to you. He who hears always My Glories and recites My Name and whose mind dwells always, like the incessant flow of oil, in Me Who is the receptacle of all auspicious qualities and Gunas.

But he has not the least trace of any desire to get the fruits of his Karma; yea he does not want Samipya, Sarsti, Sayujya, and Salokya and other forms of liberations! He becomes filled with devotion for Me alone, worships Me only; knows nothing higher than to serve Me and he does not want final liberation even. He does not like to forsake this idea of Sevya (to he served) and Sevaka (servant who serves). He always meditates on Me with constant vigilance and actuated by a feeling of Supreme Devotion; he does not think himself separate from Me but rather thinks himself "that I am the Bhagavati." He considers all the JTvas as Myself and loves Me as he loves himself. He does not make any difference between the JTvas and myself as he finds the same Chaitanya everywhere and mainfested in all. He does not quarrel with anybody as he has abandoned all ideas about separateness; he bows down, and worships the Chandalas and all the JTvas. He who becomes filled with devotion to Me whenever he sees My place, My devotees, and hears the Sastras, describing My deeds, and whenever he meditates on My Mantras, he becomes filled with the highest love and his hairs stand on their ends out of love to Me and tears of love flow incessantly from both his eyes; he recites My name and My deeds in a voice, choked with feelings of love for Me. [A/. 8.--The Para Prema Bhakti is like the maddening rush of a river to the Ocean; thence in the shape of vapour to the highest; Himalayan Mountain peaks to be congealed into snow where various plays of bright colours take place.]

21-30. O Lord of the mountains! He worships Me with intense feeling as the Mother of this Universe and the Cause of all causes. He performs the daily and occasional duties and all My vows and sacrifices without showing any miserly feeling in his expenditure of money. He naturally longs to perform My festivities and to visit places where My Utsabs are held. He sings My name loudly and dances, being intoxicated with My love, and has no idea of egoism and is devoid of his body-idea, thinking that the body is not his. He thinks that whatever is Prarabdha (done in his previoas lives) must come to pass and therefore does not become agitated as to the preservation of his body and soul. This sort of Bhakti is called the Para Bhakti or the Highest Devotion. Here the predominent idea is the idea of the DevT and no other idea takes its place. O Mountain!

He gets immediately dissolved in My Nature of Consciousness whose heart is really filled with such Para Bhakti or All Love. The sages call the limiting stage of this devotion and dispassion as Jhana (knowledge). When this Jhana arises, Bhakti and dispassion get their ends satisfied. Yea! He goes then to the Mani Dvipa, when his Ahamkara does not crop up by his Prarabdba Karma, though he did not fail to give up his life in devotion. O Mountain! That man enjoys there all the objects of enjoyments, though unwilling and at the end of the period, gets the knowledge of My Consciousness. By that he attains the Final Liberation for ever. Without this Jhana, the Final Liberation is impossible.

31-33. He realises Para Brahma who gets in this body of his the above Jhana of the Pratyak Atma in his heart; when his Prana leaves his body, he does not get re-birth. The S'ruti says "He, who knows Brahma, becomes Brahma." In the logic of Kantha, Chamikara, (gold on the neck) the ignorance vanishes. When this ignorance is destroyed by knowledge, he attains all his knowledge the object to be attained, when he recoginises the gold on his neck.

34-37. O Best of Mountains! This My consciousness is different from the perceived pots, etc., and unperceived Maya. The image of this Paramatma is seen in bodies other than the Atma as the image falls in a mirror; as the image falls in water, so this Paramatma is seen in the Pitrilokas. As the shadow and light are quite distinct, so in My ManidvTpa, the knowledge of oneness without a second arises. That man resides in the Brahma Loka for the period of a Kalpa who leaves his body without attaining Jhana, though he had his Vairagyam. Then he takes his birth in the family of a pure prosperous family and practising again his Yoga habits, gets My Consciousness.

38-45. O King of Mountains! This Jhana arises after many births it does not come in one birth; so one should try one's best to get this Jhana. If, attaining this rare human birth, one does not attain this Jhana, know that a great calamity has befallen to him. For this human birth is very hard to attain; and then the birth in a Brahmin family is rarer; moreover amongst the Brahmins, the knowledge of the Veda (the Consciousness is exceedingly rare.) The attaining of the six qualities (which are considered as six wealth), restraint of passions, etc.; the success in Yoga and the acquisition of a pure real Guru, all these are very hard to be attained in this life. O Mountain! The maturity and the activities of the organs of the senses, and the purification of the body according to the Vedic rites are all very difficult to attain. Know this again that to get a desire for final liberation is acquired by the merits acquired in many births. That man's birth is entirely futile, who attaining all the above qualifications does not try his best to attain this Jhana, So one should try one's best to acquire the Jhana. Then, at every moment, he gets the fruits of the As'vamedha sacrifice. There is no doubt in this.

As ghee (clarified butter) resides potentially in milk, so the Vijhana Brahma resides in every body. So make the mind the churning rod and always churn with it. Then, by slow degrees, the knowledge of Brahma will be attained.

Man attains blessedness when he gets this Jhana; so the Vedanta says: Thus I have described to you in brief, O King of Mountains! all that you wanted to hear. Now what more do you want?

Of The Devi

I- 2. The Himalayas said "O Devi! Describe the places on this earth that are prominent, sacred, and worth visiting and which Thou likest best. O Mother! Also sanctify us by describing the vows and utsabs that are pleasing to Thee, and by performing which, men become blessed and get themselves satisfied.

3-10. The Devi spoke "O Himavan! All the places that are on this earth are all Mine and all should be visited. And every moment is fit for taking vows and utsabs. For I am of the nature pervading every moment; so whatever actions are performed at any moment are all equal to taking My vows and utsabs. O King of Mountains! Still I am now telling something out of My affection to My Bhaktas. Hear. There is a great place of pilgrimage named Kolhapura in the southern country. Here the Devi Laksmi always dwells. The second place is Matripura in the Sahyadri mountain; here the Devi Renuka dwells. The third place is Tulajapur; next is the place Saptas'ringa, the great places of Hingula and Jvala Mukhi. Then the great places of Sakambhari, Bhramari, S'riraktadantika and Durga. The best of all places is that of Vindhyachala Vasini, the great places of Annapurna and the excellent Kanchipur (Conjiverum). Next come the places of Bhima Devi, Vimala Devi, S'ri Chandrala Devi of Karnat, and the place of Kaus'iki. Then the great place of Nilamba on the top of the Nilaparvata, the place of JambunadesVari, and the beautiful S'rinagara.

II- 20. The great place of S'ri Guhya Kali, well established in Nepal, and that of S'ri Mmaksi Devi established in Chidamvaram. The great place named Vedaranya where the Sundari Devi is residing; then the place named Ekamvaram, and the place Bhuvanes'vara near Purusottama where I always dwell as Para S'akti Bhuvanes'vari. The famous place of Mahalasa, known in the south by the name Mallari; the place of Yoges'vari Varat, and the widely known place of Nila

S'arasvati in China. The excellent place of Bagala in Baidyanath, the supreme place ManidvTpa of S'rimati BhuvanesVari where I always reside. The Yonimandala Kamakhya, the place of S'rimati Tripura BhariavT, the excellent of all the places in this earth, where the Devi Maha Maya always dwells. There is no other place better than this on the earth. Here the Devi becomes every month in Her course of menstruation and where the virtuous men are seen. Here all the Devas remain in the form of mountains and where on the mountains the excellent Devas inhabit. The sages say: That all the places there are of the nature of the Devi; there is no better place than this Kamakhya Yonimandala. Puskara, the sacred place, is the seat of Gayatri; the place of Chandika in Amares'a:

and the excellent place of Puskareksini in Frabhasa. The place of Linga-dharini Devi in Naimisaranya, and the place of Purubuta in Puskaraksa; Rati dwells in Asad hi.

21-30. Dandini Parames'vari dwells in Chandamundi. Bhuti dwells in Bharabhuti; and Nakule S'vari dwells in Nakula. Chandrika dwells in Haris'chandra; S'ankari in S'rigiri; Tris'ula in Japes'vara; and Suksma in Amrata Kes'vara. S'ankari dwells in Ujjain, S'arvani in the place Madhyama, and Marga Dayini dwells in the holy Ksetra Kedara. The celebrated Bhairavi dwells in the place named Bhairava; Mangala in Gaya Ksettra; Sthanupriya in Kuruksetra; and SvayambhuvT Devi dwells in Nakula; Ugra dwells in Kankhal; Vis'vesa dwells in Vimales'vara, Mahananda in Attahasa and Mahantaka in Mahendra. Bhimes'vari dwells in Bhima; the Bhavani S'ankari dwells in Vastrapadma; and Rudrani in Ardha Koti. Vis'alaksi dwells in Avimukta; Mahabhaga dwells in Mahalaya; Bhadrakarni in Gokarna; and Bhadra resides in Bhadrakarnak; UtpalaksT dwells in Suvarnaksa; SthanvTs'a in Sthanu; Kamala in Kamalalaya; Chanda in Chhagalandaka, situated in the south near the sea coast. Trisandhya dwells in Kurundala; Mukutes'vari in Makota; S'andaki in Mandales'a; Kali in Kalanjara; Dhvani in S'ankukarna; Sthula in Sthulakes'vara; and Parames'vari Hrillekha dwells in the heart lotuses of the Jhanins.

31-34. The places mentioned above are all dearest to the Devi. First the merits of these places are to be heard; next the Devi is to be worshipped by the rites and ceremonies according to these rules. Or, O Mountain! All the holy places of pilgrimages exist in Kas'i. The Devi always dwells there. Persons, devoted to the Devi, see these places and if they make Japam and meditate on the lotus-feet of the Devi, they will certainly be freed from the bonds of Samsara; there is no doubt in this. If anybody, getting up in the morning, recite the names of these places, all his sins would instantly be burnt away.

35-40. And if one reads, in the time of S'raddha, before the Brahmins, these holy names of the Devi, his Piths will be purified of their sins in the Mahakas'a by the Maha Prana and will get their highest goal. O One of good vows! I will now describe to you the vows that are to be carefully observed by men and women; hear. Ananta Tritiyakhya Vrata (vow), Rasakalyani Vrata, and Ardranandakara Vrata, these three Vratas are to be observed in the Tritiya (third) tithi. The next come the Friday vow, the Krisna Chaturdas'i vows, the Tuesday vow, and the evening twilight vow. In this twilight vow, Maha Deva placed the Devi in the evening on an Asana; and He, along with the other Devas, began to dance before Her. Fasting is enjoined in this vow; and then in the evening one must worship the Devi, the Giver of all auspicious things. Especially in every fortnight, if the Devi be worshipped. She gets extremely pleased.

41. O Best of Mountains! The Monday vow is very agreeable to Me; the worship of the Devi should be done and then in the night one must take one's food.

42-43. The two nine nights vow called Navaratra are to be observed, one in the autumn and the other in the spring season. These are very dear to Me. He is certainly My devotee and very dear who for My satisfaction performs these and the other Nitya Naimittik vows, free from any pride and jealousy. He certainly gets the Sajujya Mukti with Me.

44-46. O Nagaraja! The Holy (Dol) festival in the month of Chait on tha third day of the white fortnight is very pleasing to Me and should be observed by all. My devotees perform the S'ayanotsava in the PaurnamasT in the month of Asadha; the Jagaranotsava in the PaurnamasT in the month of Kartik, the Ratha Jatra in the 3rd of the white fortnight in Asadha; the Damanotsava in Chaitra. And my dear festivals in the month of S'ravana and various other festivals.

47-49. In all these festivals one should feast well with gladness all My devotees, and the Kumaris (virgins), well clothed and dressed, and the boys, thinking them all to be of My very nature. No miserliness is to be entertained and I should be worshipped with flowers, etc. He is blessed and attains his goal and is dear to Me who carefully and devotedly observes every year all these festivals. O Nagendra! Thus I have described to you in brief all the vows that are pleasing to Me. These instructions are not to be given who is not a disciple nor to one who is not My devotee.

Here ends the Thirty-eighth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the vows and the sacred places of the Devi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. The Himalayas said "O Devi! O MahesVari! O Thou, the Ocean of Mercy! O World-Mother! Now describe in detail how Thy worship is conducted, the rules and ceremonials thereof.

2-20. The Devi said "O King of Mountains! I now describe to you the rites and ceremonies and the methods of My worship that are pleasing to Me. Hear it attentively and with faith. My worship is of two kinds External and internal. The external worship is again twofold: one is Vaidik, and the other is Tantrik. The Vaidik worship is also of two kinds according to the differences in My forms. Those who are initiated in the Vedic Mantrams worship according to the Vedic rites and ceremonies and those who are initiated in the Tantrik-Mantram worship according to the Tantrik rites. That stupid man is entirely ruined and goes to Hell who knowing the secrets of worship, act contrary to them. First I will describe to you the Vaidik worship; hear. The highest Form of Mine that you saw before, with innumerable heads, innumerable eyes, innumerable feet, and the llluminer of the intelligences of all the Jivas, endowed with all powers. Higher than the Highest, Very Grand, worship That, bow down to That and meditate on That. O Nagendra! This is the first form of worship that I describe to you. With your senses controlled, peaceful, with a well concentrated mind, void of egoism and vanity, and devoted to That, perform sacrifices to That,, take refuge of That, see That within the temple of your mind, and always recite Her name and meditate on that. Take hold of Me, and My ideas with one pointed loving devotion and please Me with the performance of sacrifices, austerities and gifts. By My Grace, you will no doubt be able to get the Final Liberation. Whoever is entirely attached to Me, thinking Me as the Highest, is the foremost amongst the Bhaktas. I promise that I will certainly deliver him from this ocean of the world. O King of mountains! Meditation with Karma and Jhana with Bhakti will lead one to Me. Only the work alone will fail to get one to Me. O Himavan! From Dharma arises Bhakti and from Bhakti arises the Highest

Jnana. What are said in the S'ruti and Smriti S'astras the Maharsis take that as the Dharma; and what are written in other S'astras, they take them to be Dharmabhasa (the Shadow or reflection of Dharma). Out of My omniscient and omnipotent Nature, the Vedas have come. Owing to the want of Ignorance in Me, the Vedas can never be invalidated. The Smritis are formed out of the meaning of the Vedas; so the Smriti and Puranas, formed, by Manu and the other Risis, are authoritative. In some places it is hinted that there other S'astras than the Vedas, taking the Tantras indirectly into account. Although the matters relating to the Dharmas are mentioned therein, but as they are apparently contrary to the S'rutis, the Tantras are not accepted by the Vaidik Pundits. The other S'astra makers are marked with their ignorance; so their sayings cannot be authoritative. Therefore he must resort entirely to the Vedas who want the final liberation. As the king's order is never disobeyed amongst his subjects, so the S'ruti, the Command of Mine, the Lord of all, can never be abandoned by men.

21-30. To preserve My Commandments, I have created the Brahmana and the Ksattriya castes. My secrets are all embodied in the S'rutis. For that reason, the words of the S'rutis are no doubt to be known and observed by the sages. O Mountain! When the Dharma (righteousness) declines and the Adharma (unrighteousness) reigns supreme, I then manifest Myself in the world as Sakambhari, Rama, Krisna and others. Therefore, the Devas, the preservers of the Vedas, and the Daityas, the destroyers of the Vedas are classified. Whoever does not practise according to the Vedas I have created many hells for their lessons. When the sinners hear of those hells, they get extremely terrified. The king should banish those stupid persons from his kingdom and the Brahmins should not talk with them nor take them in their own lines nor when partaking of food, those who forsake the Vaidic Dharma and go for shelter to another Dharma. The S'astras that are extant, as contrary to the S'rutis and Smritis, are all Tamasa S'astras, Mahadeva has framed these Varna, Kapalak, Kaulaks, Bhairava and such like S'astras for fascinating the people; else he has no object in framing them. Those Brahmans that were burnt up by the curses of Daksa, S'ukra, Dadhichi and were banished from the path of the Vedas, it is for delivering them, step by step that Mahadeva has framed the five Agamas, S'aiva, Vaisnava, S'aura, S'atta and Ganapatya S'astras.

31-37. In those Tantra S'astras, there are some passages in conformity with the Vedas and there are other passages contradictory to the Vedas. If the Vaidik persons resort to passages in conformity with the Veda, then there cannot arise any fault in them. The Brahmins are not Adhikaris to those Tantric texts that are contradictory to the Vedas. Those persons that have no claim to the Vedas can be Adhikaris to these latter texts. Therefore the Vaidik Brahmanas should resort to the Vedas with all the care possible and make the Para Brahma ot the nature of Jhana manifest within them. The Sanynsins, Vanaprasthas, householders and Brahmacharis should give up all their desires and take refuge in Me; free from egoism and vanity, kind to all creatures, their hearts wholly given to Me and engaged in speaking out My places with enrapt devotion. They always worship My Virat (Cosmic) form, immersed in the Yoga called Ais'varya Yoga (Cosmic Yoga dealing with the glories, prosperity of god). Illumine the understanding with the Sun of My Consciousness, and I destroy the Darkness of Ignorance of those persons that are always engaged in practising Yoga with Me. There is no doubt in this. O Nagendra! Thus I have described in brief the methods and practices of the Vaidik Puja; now I will tell you the Tantriki Puja; hear attentively.

38-47. On an image, or clean plot of ground, or on the Sun or the Moon, in water, in Vana Linga, in Yantra or on a cloth or in the lotus of heart, one is to meditate and worship the Blissful, Higher than the Highest, the Devi, Who creates this universe with the three Gunas Sattva, Raja and Tama, Who is filled with the juice of mercy. Who is blooming in youth. Whose colour is red like the rising Sun, Whose beauty overtops to the full. Whose all the limbs are exquisitely beautiful. Who is the sentiment of Love Incarnate, Who feels very much for the mental pain of Her Bhaktas on Who being pleased, manifests Herself before the Bhaktas on Whose forehead, the segment of the Moon shines incessantly, and Whose four hands hold goad, noose and the signs of fearlessness and to grant boons. Until one is entitled to the internal worship, one should worship the external; never he is to abandon it. Worship is internal when one’s heart gets diluted in Para Brahma, of the nature of the Universal Consciousness, O Mountain! Know My Consciousness (Samvit) to be My Highest Nature without any limitations. Therefore it is highly incumbent to attach one's hearts, free from other adjuncts, constantly to this Samvit. And what is more than this Samvit is this illusive world full of Maya. So to get rid of this world one is to constantly meditate on Me, the Witness of all, the Self of all, with a heart full of devotiou and free from any Sankalpas or desires.

O Best of Mountains! Now I will describe to you in detail the external form of worship. Hear attentively.

Here ends the Thirty-ninth Chapter of tho Seventh Book on the worship of the World Mother in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. The Devi said:-Getting up from the bed early in the morning, one is to meditate on the thousand petalled lotus, bright, of the colour of camphor, in the top part his brain on the head. On this he should remember his S'ri Guru, very gracious looking, well decorated with ornaments, with His Consort S'akti and bow down to Him and within Him he should meditate the Kundalini Devi thus -"I take refuge unto that Highest S'akti Kundalini, of the nature of the Supreme Consciousness, Who is manifest as Chaityana while up- going to the Brahmarandhra (the aperture supposed to be at the crown of the head, through which the soul takes its flight at death) and Who is of the nature of nectar while returning back in the Susumna canal. After meditating thus, he should meditate on the Blissful Form of Mine within the Kundalini Fire situated in the Muladhara Lotus (coccygeal lotus). Then he should rise up to go for the calls of nature, etc., and complete Sandhya Bandanams and other duties. The best of the Brahmins, then, should for My satisfaction perform the Agnihotra Homa and sitting in his Asana make Sankalap (determination) to do My Puja (Worship).

N. B.-The brain has three divisions, the lower, the middle and the higher, or top-most part which is very pure.

6-10. Next he is to make Bhuta S'uddhi (purification of elements of the body by respiratory attraction and replacement) and then the Matrika Nyasa, Then he should arrange the letters of the root Mantra of Maya and execute the Hrillekha Matrika Nyasa. In this he is to place the letter "Ha" in the Muladhara, the letter "Ra" in his heart and the vowel "T" in the middle of his brows aud, Hrim on the top part of his head. Finishing then all the other Nyasas according to that Mantra, he should think within his body Dharma, Jhana, Vairagyam, and Prosperity as the four legs of the seat and Adharma, Ajhana, Avairagyam and non-prosperity, these four as the body of the seat on the four quarters East, South, West and North. Then he should meditate on the Great Devi in the lotus of his heart blewn by Pranayama, situated on the five seats of the Pretas. O Mountain! Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Sadas'iva and Is'vara are the five Pretas situated under My feet.

11. These are of the nature of earth, water, fire, air, and ether, the five elements and also of the nature of Jagrat (waking), Svapna (dreaming) Susupti (deep sleep state) Turiya (the fourth state) and Atita Rupa, the (the fifth state) excluding the 4 states, corresponding to the five states. But I, who am of the nature of Brahma, am over and above the five elements and the five states; therefore My Seat is always on the top of these five forces.

12. Meditating on Me thus and worshipping Me with his mind concentrated, he is next to make Japam (reciting My name slowly). After Japam he is to make over the fruits of Japam to Me. He should then place the Arghya for the external worship.

13. Then the worshipper is to sprinkle with the Astra mantra 'Phat', all the articles of worship that are placed in front of him and purify them.

14-18. He should close the ten quarters with the Chhotika Mudra and bow down to his Guru. Taking his permission, he should meditate on the outside seat, the beauiful divine form of his heart lotus and invoke the Deity outside and place Her on the seat by Prana Pratistha and perforn Avahana, and present to Her Arghya (an offer of green grass, rice, etc., made in worshipping a god), Padya (water for washing legs and feet), Achaman, water for bath, a couple of clothes, all sorts of ornaments, or scents, flowers and the necessary articles with due devotion and he should worship the attendant deities of the Yantra. If one be unable to worship daily the attendant deities, one must worship them on Friday.

19. Of the attendant deities, one must meditate the principal deity of the nature of Prabha (illumination) and think that by Her rays the three worlds are pervaded.

20. Next he should worship again the BhuvanesVari Devi, the Chief Deity along with other attendant deities with scent, good smelling flowers; and Naivedya and various other tasteful dishes.

21-22. He should then recite the Sahasranama (thousand names) stotra and the Devi Sukta Mantra "Aham Rudrebhih, etc.," and "Sarve vai Deva Devi mupatasthuh, etc.," the Devi Atharva S'iro Mantra and the Upanisads' Mantra of BhuvanesVari, the famous mantras, repeatedly and thus bring My satisfaction.

23-24. With hearts filled with love and with hairs standing on their ends all should satisfy Me frequently with tears of love flowing from their eyes and with voice choked with feelings and with dancing music and singing and with his whole body filled with joy.

25. My glory is well established in the Veda Parayana and in all the Puranas. So for My satisfaction, one should offer daily to Me one's everything with one's body and recite the readings from the Vedas.

26-27. Next, after completing the Homa offerings, he should feed the Brahmanas, tha young virgins well clothed, the boys and the public and the poor, thinking all of them to be so many forms of the Devi. Than he should bow before the Devi that resides in his heart and finally by Samhara Mudra take leave of the Deity invoked.

28. O One of good vows! The Hrillekha Mantra (Hrim) is the chief of all mantrams; so My worship and all other actions ought to be performed with this Hrillekha Mantram.

29. I am always reflected in this Mirror of Hrillekha form; so anything offered in this Hrillekha Mantra of Mine is offered as it were with all the Mantras. Then one should worship the Guru with ornaments, etc., and think oneself blessed.

30-31. O Himavan! Nothing remains at any time unavailable to him who worships thus the Bhuvanes'vari Devi. After quitting his body, he goes to theMani Dvipa, My Place. He gets the form of the Devi; and the Devas constantly bow down to him.

32-45. O Mahidhara! Thus I have described to you the rules of worshipping the Great Devi; consider this in all the aspects and worship Me according to your Adhikara (claim) and you will attain your Goal. There is no doubt in this. O Best of mountains! This S'astra Devigita you are not to tell to those who are not the devotees, to those who are enemies, and to those who are cunning.

If one gives out this secret of Gita, it is like taking off the covering from the breast of the mother; so carefully keep it secret and think that this is very necessary. This Devi Gita ought to be given to a disciple, a Bhakta, the eldest son, and to one who is good natured, and well dressed and devoted to the Devi. O Mountain! In the time of S'raddha (solemn obsequies performed in honour of the manes of deceased ancestors) he gets the highest place of the Pitris who reads this Devi Gita before the Brahmanas. Vyasa said:- The Devi vanished there after describing all these. The Devas were glad and considered themselves blessed by the sight of the Devi. O Janamejaya! The Haimavati next took Her birth in the house of the Himalaya and was known by the name of Gauri. S'ankara, the Deva of the Devas, married Her. Sadanana (Kartika) was born of them. He killed the Tadaka Asura. O King! In ancient times, when the ocean was churned, many gems were obtained. At that time the Devas chanted hymns to the Devi with a concentrated mind to get Laksmi Devi. To show favour to the Devas, Rama Devi got out of the ocean. The Devas gave Laksmi to Visnu, the Lord of the Vaikuntha. Visnu was very glad at this. O King! Thus I have described to you the Greatness of the Devi and the birth of Gauri and Laksmi. One's desires are all fulfilled when one hears this. O King! This secret I have described to you. Take care not to divulge it to any other body. This is the secret of the Gita; so carefully conceal it. O One of pure heart! I have told to you this Divine and Sin-destroying narration, that you asked. What more do you want to hear? Say.

English translation

1-4. Janamejaya asked “O Lord! I have heard all that you have described about the sweet nectar-like characters of the Kings of the Solar and the Lunar dynasties. Now kindly describe the real Tattva of the Virat Form of the Great Devi and how She was worshipped in every Manvantara by the Regent of that Manvantara and the Kings thereof. In what part of the year and in which place, under what circumstances and in what form and with what Mantras was the Devi worshipped? I am very anxious to hear all this. O Guru! In fact describe the gross forms of the Adya S'akti, the Devi Bhagavati by concentrating attention to Which, I can have the power to understand the subtle forms of the Devi and I can get the highest good in this world.”

5-7. Vyasa said O King! Now hear. I am describing to you in detail about the worship of the Devi Bhagavati that leads to the welfare of the Whole World; the hearing of which or the practice of which enables one to get the highest good. In days of yore, the Devarsi Narada asked Narayana about this very point; I will now tell you what the Bhagavan, the Promulgator of the Yoga Tattva, advised Narada. Once on a time the all powerful Devarsi Narada entitled with all the Yogic powers, and born from the body of Brahma was travelling all over this earth and came to the hermitage of the Risi Narayana. Resting a while, and the troubles of the journey over, he bowed down to the Yogi Narayana and asked Him what you ask me now. Narada said O Deva Deva Mahadeva! O Thou, the Ancient Purusa, the Excellent One!

8-9. O Omniscient! O Thou, the Holder of the Universe! O Thou Who art the repository of the good qualities and Who art praised by all!

10-12. O Deva! Now tell me what is the ultimate cause of this Universe: whence has this Universe its origin? And how does it rest? To whom does it take refuge? Where does it dissolve in the time of Pralaya? Where do all the Karmas of these beings go to? And what Object is that whose knowledge destroys forever the Maya, the Cause of all this Moha (illusion)? Whose worship, what Japam, and Whose meditation in the lotus of heart are to he made, by which, O Deva! the knowledge of Paramatman rises in the heart, as the darkness of the night vanishes by the rising of the Sun.

13. O Deva! Kindly reply to these my questions in such a clear manner as the ignorant people in this Samsara can understand and get themselves across this ocean of Samsara.

14-15. Vyasa said Thus asked by the Devarsi, the ancient Narayana, the Best of the Munis, the great Yogi gladly spoke O Devarsi! Hear I will now speak to you all the Tattvas of this world, knowing which the mortal never falls into the illusion of this world.

16. O Child! The original cause of this Universe is the Devi Maha Maya (the image of the Supreme Chaitanya Para Brahma); this is the opinion of the Risis, the Devas, Gandharvas, and other intelligent persons.

17-23. It is written in the Vedas and other S'astras that the Devi Bhagavati, worshipped by all in the Universe, creates, preserves and destroys the Universe by the influence of Her three Gunas. I now describe to you the nature of the Devi, worshipped by the Siddhas, Gandharbas and Risis, the mere remembering of Whom destroys all sins, and gives final liberation Moksa (and Dharma, Artha, and Kama also). The powerful Svayambhuva Manu, the First, the husband of S'atarupa, the prosperous and the Ruler of all the Manvantaras worshipped the sinless Prajapati Brahma, his Father with due devotion and satisfied Him when the Grandsire of the Lokas, the Hiranyagarbha spoke to his son The excellent worship of the Devi should be done by you. By Her Grace, O Son, your work of creating worlds will be successful. Thus spoken by Brahma, the Bibhu Svayambhuva Manu, the Virat incarnate, worshipped the World Mother with great austerities. And with his concentrated devotion, he satisfied the Devi Deves'i and began to chant hymns to Her, the First-born, the Maya, the S'akti of all, and the Cause of all causes.

24-36. Manu said Thou art Brahma, the ocean of the Vedas, Krisna, the abode of Laksmi, Purandara. I bow down again and again to Thee, the Deves'i, the Cause of Maya, the Cause of this Universe. Thou boldest s'ankha (the conchshell), chakra, gada, etc., in Thy hands and Thou residest in the heart of Narayana; Thou art the Vedas incarnate, the World Mother, the Auspicious One, bowed down by all the Devas, and the Knower of the Three Vedas. O Thou, endowed with all powers and glory! O Mahamaye! Mahabhage! Mahodaye! (the Self-manifested). Thou residest as the better half of Maha Deva, and Thou dost all what are dear to Him. Thou art the most beloved of Nanda, the Cow-herd (in the form of Maha Maya, the daughter who concealed Krisna and slipped from the hands of Kamsa and got up in the air and remained as Vindhyavasini; also in the form of S'ri Krisna). Thou gavest much pleasure and wert the cause of all the festivities; Thou takest away the fear due to plague, etc.; Thou art worshipped by the Devas. O Thou, the auspicious Bhagavati! Thou art the welfare of all incarnate; Thou fructifiest the desires of all to success! Thou art the One to Whom all take refuge and Thou removest their all the dangers; O Thou the three-eyed! Gauri! Narayani! Obeisance to Thee. I bow down to that ocean of all brightness and splendour, without beginning or end, the One Consciousness, wherein this endless Universe rises and remains interwoven therein. I bow down to the Devi, whose Gracious Glance enables Brahma, Visnu, and MahesVara to do their respective works of creating, preserving, and destroying the Universe. O Devi! Thou art the Only One, whom all can bow, since the lotus-born Brahma, terrified by the horrible Daityas, was freed by Thy prowess only. O Bhagavati! Thou art modesty, fame, memory, lustre; Thou art Laksmi, Girija, the daughter of Himalaya, Thou art Sati, the Daksa's daughter; Thou art the Savitri the Mother of the Vedas, Thou art the intelligence of all and Thou art the cause of fearlessness. So I now engage myself reciting Thy Japam, Thy hymns and Thy worship. I meditate on Thee and see Thy form within my heart and hear Thy praises. Be graciously pleased on me, O Devi! It is by Thy Grace that Brahma is the Revealer of the Four Vedas, Visnu is the Lord of Laksmi, Indra is the Lord of the Devas and of the three worlds; Varuna is the Lord of waters, Kuvera is the Lord of wealth, Yama is the Lord of the dead, Nairrita is the Lord of the Raksasas, and Soma is the Lord of the water element and praised by the three worlds. Therefore, O Auspicious World Mother! I bow down again and again to Thee.

37-45. Narayana said O Child! When Svayambhuva Manu, the son of Brahma, chanted thus the hymns to the Adya S'akti Bhagavati Narayani, She became pleased and spoke to him thus The Devi said "O King, the Brahma's son! I am pleased with your devoted worship and hymns; so ask boon from Me that you desire." Manu said "O Devi! If Thou art graciously pleased, grant that my creation be finished without any hitch." The Devi said "O King of Kings! By My blessing, your work of creation will be completed without any obstruction. And by your punya (merits) they will no doubt multiply on and on. He who reads with devotion this hymn (stotra) composed by you, will get sons, fame and beauty in the world and, in the end, he will be entitled to get the Highest Place.

The people will have powers unopposed by anybody, will get wealth and grains, will get victory everywhere and happiness; and his enemies will be ruined." Narayana said "O Child! The Devi Bhagavati Adya S'akti granted thus the desired boon to Svayambhuva Manu and vanished away at once from his sight." Then the powerful Manu, obtaining thus the boon, spoke to his father O Father! Now give me a solitary place where I can worship the Devi with sacrifices and do my work of creating a good number of people.

46-48. Hearing thus the words of the son, the Prajapati, the Lord thought over the matter for a long time "How this work would be done? Alas! I have spent an endless time in this work of creation; but as yet nothing has been done. For the Earth, the receptacle of all the Jivas is submerged in water and has gone down to the Rasatala. What is to be done now? There is only one hope and that is this If the Bhagavan, the Primeval Person, under Whose Command I am engaged in this work of creation, helps me in this work of mine, no doubt it will be accomplished then and then only."

Here ends the First Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the worlds in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-10. Narayana said O Child! When you have got your senses controlled and have overcome lust, anger, etc., and other enemies, then you are certainly entitled to hear this secret. While Brahma was discussing on this subject with Marichi and the other Brahmarsis and with Svayambhuva Manu, suddenly there came out of the nose of the meditative Brahma, one young boar (the child of a boar) of the dimension of one finger only. That little boar, that was just in the air, soon became, while they were looking at it, enlarged to a very big elephant, in an instant; a very strange sight, indeed! Seeing this, the Kumaras Sanaka, etc., Marichi and the other Seven Risis, and the Creator Brahma were struck with wonder and Brahma began to discuss thus Oh! This young boar has come out suddenly of My nose; though it is a very small one, it is certainly, come under a disguise and it has all made us merge in an ocean of wonder. Is this something Divine, of a Sattvic quality under the guise of this boar? It was of the size of a thumb and it is now like the Himalaya Mountain? Oh! Is this the Bhagavan, the Yajha Purusa? While they were thus discussing, the Bhagavan, in the shape of the boar, began to make loud sounds, like the rolling of the mountain clouds at the time of the Pralaya resounding all the quarters. At this Brahma and all the Risis assembled there became very glad. Hearing the ghurghura noise of the Boar, their troubles ended and the people of Janarloka, Taparloka, Satyaloka and all the Devas being very much gladdened began to chant sweet hymns with Chhandas of Rik, Yajus, Sama and Atharva Vedas, to that Adi Purusa, the Bhagavan, from all sides.

11-20. Hearing their praises, the Bhagavan Hah graciously looked on them and immediately merged Himself in the ocean. The ocean was very much agitated with the fierce striking of the hairs of the Boar, when He entered into the waters, and spoke thus “O Deva! O

Thou, the destroyer of the afflictions of your refuges! Protect me.” Hearing the words of the ocean, the God Hah tore asunder all the aquatic animals and went down beneath the waters. Searching violently hither and thither. He knew the earth by her smell. At once the Bhagavan Hari, the Lord of all, went to Her and rescued the earth by raising Her up on his big teeth, the Earth that was the abode of all the beings. When the Bhagavan, the Lord of all the sacrifices, came up with the Earth on the top of His teeth. He looked beautiful like the elephant of a quarter taking out by the root and holding a thousand petalled lotus upon his tusks. When the Bhagavan rescued thus the Earth, raising Her up on His tusks, Brahma and Indra, the Lord of the Devas, the powerful Manu began praise to Him with sweet words Brahma said O Lotus-eyed! O Bhagavan! Thou art victorious everywhere; O Thou, the Destroyer of the sufferings of the Bhaktas! Thou hast, by Thy own prowess, humiliated the Heaven, the abode of the gods upto Satyaloka! Thou, the Giver all the desires! O Deva! This earth shines so beautiful on Thy teeth as the thousand petalled lotus, taken up by the root by a mad elephant, shines on his two tusks. O Bhagavan! This Form, i. e., that of Thy sacrificial Boar, with earth on Thee looks so very beautiful as the lotus looks beautiful on the tusks of an elephant.

21-22. O Lord! We bow down to Thee, the Creator and the Destroyer of everything; Thou assumest many forms for the purpose of destroying the Danavas; Thou dost do many acts that redound to Thy Glory, We bow down to Thee, to Thy Front and to Thy Back. (Really thou hast no front nor back. Thou art everywhere.) Thou art the Upholder of all the Celestials and the Immortals! Thy eyes shine equally everywhere.

23-25. O Deva! By Thy power I am brought up and engaged in the work of creation and by Thy order I create in every Kalpa this Universe and destroy it. O Lord of Immortals! In the ancient times the Devas united churned the vast ocean by Thy help and got according to their merits their due shares. O Hah! Indra, the Lord of the Devas is enjoying the vast kingdom of Heaven, the Trilokas, by Thy Will and appointment. All the Devas worship him.

26-27. So the God of Fire has got his burning power and is residing in the bellies of the Devas, the Asuras, men and all other beings and penetrating their bellies, is satisfying all. Yama, the King of Dharma, by Thy appointment, is the Lord of the southern quarters, is presiding over the Pitris and being the witness of all the actions of the Jivas, is awarding duly to them the fruits thereof.

28-33. Nairrita, the Lord of the Raksasas, the witness of all the actions of all the beings, by Thy commandment, is the destroyer of all the obstacles of the devotees that take refuge unto thee, though he is a Yaksa. The Varuna Deva, by Thy order, has become duly the Lord of the waters, and the Regent of the Loka (Dikpala). The Vayu, the Life of all, the carrier of the smell, has become by Thy order Lokapala and the Guru of the universe. Kuvera, obedient to Thy order, has become the Lord of the Yaksas and the Kinnaras and is holding a respectful position like other Lokapalas. Is'ana, Who is the destroyer of all the Jivas, has got his Lordship over a quarter by Thy order and is being praised by all the Rudras, the Devas, Gandharbas, Yaksas, Kinnaras, the men and all the beings. O Bhagavan! We bow down to Thee, the Lord of the Universe; the innumerable Devas that are seen are merely the small fractions of Thy powers.

34-38. Narayana said “O Child Narada! When Brahma, the Creator and the Grandsire of the Lokas, praised thus the Adi Purusa Bhagavan, He cast a side long glance at them, offering His Grace. When the Bhagavan, the Sacrificial Boar, was coming up with earth.

rescued and placed on his teeth, the awful Hiranyaksa, the chief of the Daityas came before Him and obstructed His passage when He killed him by one violent stroke of his club. He was besmeared all over his body with the blood of the Daitya; and thus He came up from the Rasatala and placed the earth on the waters. He then went away to His Vaikuntha abode.

O Child Narada! He who hears or reads devotedly this glorious deed of the Bhagavan and the deliverance of the Earth, will certainly be freed of all his sins and goes to the highest holiest place of Visnu, the Lord of all. There is no doubt in this.”

Here ends the Second Chapter of the Eighth Book on the uplifting of the Earth by the Sacrificial Boar in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-23. Narayana said O Narada! When the Bhagavan went away to Vaikuntha, establishing the Earth in due position and equilibrium, Brahma spoke thus to his son “O Powerful Son of mine, O Svayamhhuva! The best of those that are filled with Teja (energy) and Tapas! Now go on with your work of creation, as you think proper, on this earth, the Upholdress of all the Jivas. And worship the Purusa, the Lord of Sacrifices, according to the division of place and time, and with all the necessary materials of various kinds, high and low, and those that will be useful in performing your sacrifices. Do Dharma according to the S'astras, and according to the Varna(the different castes) and Asrama (Brahmacharya, etc.); thus by gradually going on step by step in the path of Yoga, your progeny will be multiplied. Beget lovely sons and daughters, of good fame, culture, modesty and ornamented with various other good qualifications, like yourself; then marry your daughters when they will come to the marriageable age, to proper persons of good qualifications and then fix your mind thoroughly on the Excellent Purusa that is the very Best. O Child! Now go and serve the Bhagavan with devotion as I have advised you; and you will certainly attain that which is difficult to be worshipped and obtained. Advising thus his son Svayambhuva Manu, and starting him in his work; of creation, the Lotus-born, the Lord of all the subjects, Brahma went away to His own abode. When Brahma went away, having ordered his son to create progeny and subjects, Manu, took that seriously in his heart and began to do that work. In due time, he had two powerful sons named Priyavrata and Uttanapada and three lovely beautiful daughters endowed with various good qualities. Hear the names of the three daughters. The first daughter, the purifier of the world, was named Akuti; the second was named Devahuti and the third was Prasuti. The first daughter Akuti was married to the Maharsi Ruchi; the second was married to the Prajapati Karddama;

and the third was married to the Prajapati Daksa. And know that all the beings in this world had their origin from this last daughter. Now hear the progeny of these three daughters and the Maharsis respectively By Maharsi Ruchi was born one son named Yajha, in the womb of Akuti; he is the part of the Bhagavan Adi Purusa Visnu; by Maharsi Karddama, in the womb of Devahuti was born the Bhagavan Kapila Deva, the famous author of the S'ankhya S'astra; and in the womb of Prasuti, by the Prajapati Daksa were born some daughters only; know that the Devas, men, beasts and birds were all created by this Prajapati Daksa. These offsprings were the first promulgators in the work of creation. In the Svayambhuva Manvantara, the powerful Bhagavan Yajha, by the help of the Deva named Yama, saved his mother's Father Manu from the attacks of the Raksasas; and the great Lord of the Yogis, the Bhagavan Kapila, remained for a while in his Asrama and gave spiritual instructions to his mother Devahuti, by which Avidya could be at once destroyed, and disclosed his S'ankhya S'astra, the great work on the Spiritual Philosophy and the special Dhyana Yoga in all its details and finally went for Samadhi to the Asrama of Pulaha where the great Deva Samkhya charya lives up to today. Oh! I bow down to the great Yogacharya, the Bhagavan Kapila Deva, the Fructifier of all desires, the more remembrance of Whose Name makes easily the Yogi realise the meaning of the Samkhya Jhana. The sins are immediately destroyed of those that hear or read the holy anecdote of the progeny of the daughters of Manu. O Child! Now I describe to you the progeny of the sons of Svayambhuva Manu. Hear attentively. The hearing of which will enable one to enter into the highest place. Now is being described the history about the progeny of those who formed those Dvipas (islands) Varsas(countries) and oceans for the welfare and happiness of all the creation and for the use of them. Hear.

1-28. The Risi Narayana said The eldest son of Svayambhuva, Priyavrata served always his father and was very truthful. He nnarried the daughter of the Prajapati VisVa Karma, the exceedingly lovely and beautiful Barhismati, resembling like him, adorned with modesty, good nature and various other qualifications. He begat ten sons, very spiritual and well qualified and one daughter named Urjasvati. This daughter was the youngest of all. The names of the ten sons are respectively (1) Agnidhra, (2) Idhmajibha, (3) Jajhabahu, (4) Mahavira, (5) Rukmas'ukra (Hiranyareta), (6) Ghritapristha, (7) Savana, (8) Medhatithi, (9) Vitihotra and (10) Kavi. The name “Agni” was attached to each of the above names. Out of these ten, the three sons named Kavi, Savana, and Mahavira were indifferent and dispassionate to the world. In due time, these became extremely free from all desires and they were proficient in Atmavidya (Self- Knowledge). They were all Urdhareta (of perpetual chastity; who has subdued all their passions) and took gladly to the Paramahamsa Dharma. Priyavrata had by his other wife three sons, named Uttama, Tamasa, and Raivata. These were all widely known; each of them in due time became endowed with great prowess and splendour and became the Lord of one Manvatara. Priyavrata, the son of Svayambhuva, the King-Emperor enjoyed with his sons and relations, this earth for eleven Arvuda years; the wonder was this, that he lived so long and there was seen no decay in his strength as regards his body or his senses. Once on an occasion, the King observed that when the sun appeared on the horizon and got up, one part of the earth was illumined and the remaining part was enveloped in darkness. Seeing this discrepancy, he thought over for a long time and exclaimed, “What! Will the Darkness be seen in my kingdom, while I am reigning? This can never be. I will stop this by my Yogic powers.” Thus thinking, the King Priyavrata mounted on a luminous chariot, as big as the Sun, to illumine the whole world and circumambulated round the earth seven times. Whatever portion of the earth was trodden by the wheel on each occasion, became an ocean. Thus the seven oceans had their origins. And the portion of the earth, that was included within the ruts, became the seven islands (Dvipas). 0 Child! Now hear about the seven Dvipas and the seven Oceans The first is the Jambu Dvipa; the second is Plaksa, the third is S'almali; the fourth is the Kus'a Dvipa; the fifth is Krauncha; the sixth is the S'aka Dvipa; and the seventh is the Puskara Dvipa. The second Dvipa Plaksa is twice the first Jambu Dvipa and so on; each succeeding Dvipa is twice as large as its previous one. Now hear the names of the oceans. The first ocean is named Ksaroda (the salt water ocean); the second is Iksurasa (the sugarcane ocean); the third is Sura (the wine ocean), the fourth is Ghritoda (the clarified butter ocean) the fifth is Ksiroda (the ocean of milk); the sixth is Dadhi Manda (the ocean of curds); and the seventh is that of the ordinary water. The Jambu Dvipa is surrounded by Ksira Samudra. The King Priyavrata made his son Agnidhra, the lord of this Dvipa. He gave to his Idhmajibha, the Plaksa Dvipa surrounded by Iksu Sagara; so he gave to Jajhabahu the S'almali Dvipa surrounded by Sura Sagara and he gave the lordship of Kus'a Dvipa to Hiranyareta. Then he gave to his powerful son Ghritapristha the Krauncha Dvipa surrounded by Ksira Samudra and to his son Medhatithi the S'aka Dvipa surrounded by Dadhimanda Sagara. Finally he gave to his Vitihotra, the Puskara Dvipa surrounded by the ordinary water. Thus distributing duly amongst his sons, the separate divisions of the earth, he married his daughter, the youngest Urjasvati to the Bhagavan Us'ana. In the womb of Urjasvati the Bhagavan S'ukracharya had his famous daughter Devayani. O Child! Thus giving the charge of each Dvipa to each of his sons and marrying his daughters to the worthy hands, he took to Viveka (discrimination) and adopted the path of Yoga.

1-31. S'n Narayana said O Child Narada! Now hear in detail about the divisions of the earth into the DvTpas and the Varsas as marked out by the Devas. In brief, I describe about them; no one can speak about this in details. First, the Jambu Dvipa is one lakh Yoyanas in its dimensions. This Jambu DvTpa is round like a lotus. There are nine Varsas in it and excepting the Bhadras'va and Ketumala, each is nine thousand Yoyanas in its dimensions (i.e., in its diameter or circumference?) and there are eight very lofty mountains, in those Varsas, forming their boundaries. Of the Varsas, the two Varsas that are situated in the North and South, are of the size of a bow (segmental); and the four others are elongated in their size. The centre of all these Varsas is named Navrita Varsa and its size is rectangular. In the centre of this Navarsa is situated the golden Sumeru Mountain, the King of all the mountains, one lakh Yoyanas high. It forms the pericarp of the lotus earth. The top of this mountain is thirty Yoyanas wide. O Child! The sixteen thousand Yoyanas of this mountain is under the ground and the eighty four Yoyanas are visible outside. In the north of this Navarsa are the three mountains the Nilagiri, the SVetagiri and the S'ringavau, forming the boundaries respectively of the three Varsas named Ramyaka, Hiranmaya and Kuru respectively. These run along from the east and gradually extend at their base and towards the salt ocean (Lavana Samudra).

These three mountains, that form the boundaries, are each two thousand Yoyanas wide. The length of each from the east towards north is less by one-tenth (1/10) of the above dimensions. Many rivers take their source and flow from them. On the south of Navarsa three beautiful mountain ranges, named Nisadha, Hemakuta, and Himalayas, are situated, extending from the east. They are each one Ayuta Yoyanas high. These three mountains form the boundaries again of Kimpurusa and Bharata Varsa.

To the west of Mvrita is situated the mountain called Malyavan and to the east are situated the mountains Gandhamadan, Nila, and Nisadha, the centres of the highest sublime grandeur and beauty. The length and breadth of these the boundary (limiting) mountains are each two thousand Yoyanas. Then the mountains Mandara, SuparsVak, and Kumuda and others are situated in the Ketumala and Bhadras'va Varsas; but these all are reckoned as the Pada Parvatas (mountains at the foot) of the Sumeru mountain. The height and breadth of each of these is one Ayuta Yoyanas. These form the pillars, as it were, of Meru on the four sides. On these mountains, the mangoe, the jack, plantain, and the fig trees and various others are situated, four hundred (400) Yoyanas wide and eleven hundred (1,100) Yoyanas high; they seem to extend to the Heavens and form, as it were, the flagstaffs on the top. The roots, bases of these trees as well as their branches are wonderfully equally thick and extend to enormous distances. On those mountain tops are situated again, the four very capacious lakes. Of these, one lake is all milk; the other lake is all honey; the third lake is all sugarcane juice and the fourth lake is all sweet water. There are, then, again the four very lovely gardens named Nandana, Chaitrarath, Vaibhrajaka, and Sarvatobhadra, very lovely, enchanting and pleasing to the delicate female sex and where the Devas enjoy the wealth and prosperity and their other Yogic powers. Here the Devas live always with numerous hordes of women and have their free amorous, dealings with them, to their heart's contents and they hear the sweet songs sung by the Gandharbas and Kinnaras, the Upa Devatas about their own glorious deeds. On the top of the Mandara mountain, there are the Heavenly mangoe trees eleven hundred Yoyanas high; the sweet delicious nectarlike mangoe fruits, very soft and each of the size as the summit of a mountain, fall to the ground; and out of their juices of a colour of the rising sun, a great river named Arunoda takes her origin. Here the Devas always worship the great Devi Bhagavati named Aruna, the Destructrix of all sins, the Grantrix of all desires, and the Bestower of all fearlessness with various offerings and with the lovely water of this Arunoda river, with great devotion. O Child! In ancient days, the King of the Daityas worshipped always this Maha Maya Aruna Devi (and obtained immense wealth and prosperity). He who worships Her becomes cured of all diseases, gets his health and other happiness by Her grace. Therefore She is named Adya, Maya, Atula, Ananta, Pusti, IsVaramalini, the Destroyer of the wicked and the Giver of lustre and beauty and thus remembered on this capacious earth. The river Jambunada has come out, as a result of Her worship, containing divine gold.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the receptacle of beings and on the mountains and on the origin of rivers in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-32. Narayana said O Narada! This Arunoda river that I mentioned to you rises from the Mandara mountain and flows by the east of llavarsa. The Pavana Deva (the God of wind) takes up the nice smell from the bodies of the wives of the Yaksas and Gandharbas, etc., and the attendants of the Devi Bhavani and keeps the surroundings of the earth there filled with nice smell for ten Yoyanas around. Again the rose-apples with their nuts, of the size of an elephant, fall down upon the earth from the high peaks of the mountain Mandara and break into pieces; the sweet scented juices flow down as a river. This is called the Jambu river and this flows by the south of llavarsa. The Devi Bhagavati there is pleased with the Juice of that rose-apple (Jambu) and is known by the name of Jambadini. The Devas, Nagas, and Risis all always worship with great devotion, the lotus-feet of the merciful Devi, wishing the welfare of all the Jivas. The mere remembering of the name of the Devi destroys all the disease, and all the sins of the sinner.

Therefore the Devas always worship and chant the names of the Devi, the Remover of all obstacles. She is installed on both the banks of the Jambu river. If men recite Her names Kokilaksi, Karuna, Kamapujita, Kathoravigraha, Devapujya, Dhanya, Gavastini and worship, so they get their welfare both in this world and in the next. With the juice of the Jambu fruit aided by the combination of the wind and the rays of the Sun, is created the gold. Out of this are made the ornaments for the wives of the Immortals and the Vidyadharas. This gold, created by the Daiva, is known by the name of the Jambunada gold. The love-stricken Devas make their crowns, waist bands and armlets out of this gold for their sweet-hearts. There is a big Kadamba tree on the mountain SuparsVa; the five streams of honey called Madhu Dhara get out from its cavities and running by the west of llavrita Varsa, flow over the land. The Devas drink its waters; and their mouths become filled with the sweet fragrance. The air carries this sweet fragrant smell to a distance of even one hundred Yoyanas. The Dhares'vari Maha Devi dwells there, the Fulfiller of the desires of the Bhaktas, highly energetic, of the nature of Kala (the Time, the Destroyer), and having large face (Mahanana), faces everywhere, worshipped by the Devas and is the presiding Deity of the woods and forests all around. The Devi, the Lady of the Devas, is to be worshipped by the names “Karala Deha,” “Kalamgi”, “Kamakotipravartini”. The great Banyan tree named S'atabala is situated on the top of the Kumud mountain. From its trunk many big rivers take their origin. These rivers possess such influences as to give to the holy persons there, the milk, curd, honey, clarified butter, raw sugar, rice, clothing, ornaments, seats, and beddings, etc., whatever they desire. Therefore these rivers are called Kamadugh. They come gradually down the earth and flow by the north of llavarsa. The Bhagavati Minaksi dwell there and is worshipped by the Suras and the Asuras alike. That Deity clothed blue, of fearful countenance, and ornamented with hairs of blue colour, always fulfil the desires of the Devas dwelling in the Heavens. Those that worship Her, remember Her or praise Her by the names Atimanya, Atipujya, Mattamatanga Gamini, Madanonmadini, Manapriya, Manapriyatara, Marabegadhara, Marapujita, Maramadini, Mayuravaras'obhadhya, S'ikhivahanagarbhabhu, etc., are honoured by the Deity Minalochana Ekangarupini and the ParamesVara and get all sorts of happiness. Those drink the clear waters of these rivers become free from old age or decay, worry, perspiration, bad smell, from any disease, or premature death. They do not suffer anything from error, from cold, heat, or rains, or from any paleness in their colour. They enjoy extreme happiness as long as they live and no dangers come to them. O Child! Now hear the names of the other twenty mountains that encircle the Golden Sumeru mountain at its base, as if they were the filaments round the pericarp of a flower.

The first is Kuranga; they come in order Kuraga, Kus'umbha, Vikankata, Trikuta, S'is'ira, Patanga, Ruchaka, Nisadha, S'itivasa, Kapila, S'amkha, Vaidurya, Charudhi, Hamsa, Risabha, Naga, Kalanjara and lastly Narada. The central one is the twentieth.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the rivers and the mountains Sumeru and others in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-37. Narayana said Jathara and Devakuta are the two mountains situated on the east of Sumeru; their dimensions towards the north are eighteen thousand Yoyanas wide and two thousand Yoyanas high. On the west of Meru, are situated the two famous lofty mountains Pavamana and Pariyatra; their length and height are well known. On the south of Meru are situated the two lofty mountains Kailasa and Karavira. On the north, again, of the Sumeru mountain, are situated the mountains

S'ringagiri and Makaragiri. Thus the golden Sumeru mountain, shines like the Sun, surrounded by these eight mountains. In the centre of the Sumeru, there is a Divine city built of the Creator Brahma, ten thousand Yoyanas in dimensions. The learned sages that know everything from the highest to the lowest, describe that as square in dimensions and all made of gold. On the top of the Sumeru, are situated the world known eight golden cities, subservient to the Brahmapuri, for the eight Lokapalas. The Lords of the four directions, east, west, north and south and of the four corners, north-east, north-west, south-west, south-east, occupy these. The dimensions of each of these eight cities are two thousand Yoyanas and a half. In fact, there are nine cities there including the Brahmapuri. Now hear the names of these nine cities in due order. The First is Manovati, the second is Amaravati, the third is Tejovati, next come in order Samyamani, Krisnangana, S'raddhavati, Gandhavati, and Mahodaya, the ninth is Yas'ovati. The Lords of the Puris are Brahma, Indra, Fire and the other Dikpalas in due order. When Visnu Bhagavan assumed the Tri Vikrama Form in His Dwarf Incarnation and went at the sacrifice, to get back the Kingdom of the Heavens from the demon Vali, there was created one hole or cavity over this Brahmanda Kataha (skull) by the nails of the toes of that foot that went up towards his left; and through that cavity, the famous river Bhagavati Ganga flowed on the top of those heavenly Kingdoms, the clear waters of which are ever ready to destroy the sins of the whole people. For this reason. She is known in the three Lokas as the Visnupadi manifested. This took place long long ago, many thousand Yugas ago, a period difficult to determine. The Ganges fell first on the top of the Indra's Heavens, near the place called Visnudhama, known in the three worlds. Here the pure-souled Dhruva, the son of Uttanapada, observed within his heart the lotus- feet of Sri Visnu Bhagavan and exists still there taking refuge on that immoveable position. There the high-souled Seven Risis, knowing the highest purifying influence of the Ganges, circumambulate the river, wishing for the welfare of all the Lokas. This is the great place where one gets success, and final liberation, the success-giving place of the ascetics and where the Munis with clots of hairs on their heads daily take their dip in the Ganges with the greatest pleasure and admiration. The Ganges flows thence from the Dhruva Mandala, the abode of Visnu, in Kotis and Kotis of Divine Channels, interspersed with many Vimanas or carriages, deluges the Chandra Mandala (the Moon Sphere), comes gradually to the Brahma Loka. Here She is divided into the four channels, Sita, Alakananda, Bhadra, and Chaturbhadra and irrigating many countries, mountains, and forests ultimately falls in the oceans. The Sita, the famous Dhara, purifying all, while falling down from the Brahmaloka, passes round the mountains that form as it were the filaments of the flower¬ like Sumeru mountain, and falls on the top of the Gandhamadana range. Thence She, worshipped by the Devas, irrigates the Bhadras'vavarsa and falls eastward into the salt ocean. The second Dhara (stream), named Chaksu, getting out of the Malyavan range, gradually gains strength and assumes great force and flows by Ketumalavarsa to the western ocean. The third Dhara (stream), the very pure Alakananda, getting out of the Brahma Loka, passes through the Girikuta mountain and other forests, falls to Hemakuta; next She flows through the Bharata Varsa and meets with the southern ocean. No words can describe the glory and the purifying effect of this river; suffice it to say that those who march out to bathe in this river get at each of their steps, the fruits of doing the great sacrifices, Rajasuya and AsVamedha, etc. The fourth Dhara of the Trailokyapavani Ganga Devi, named Bhadra, falling from the mountain S'ringavan, become swift and capacious, flows by the Northern Kuru country and satisfying the people there flows down into the ocean. Many other rivers, getting out from the mountains, Meru, Mandara and others, flow through the various Varsas or continents, but of all the Varsas, continents, this Bharata Varsa is called the Karma Ksettra (or the field of actions). The other eight Varsas, though on earth, give the pleasures of the Heavens. The reason for this is that when the period of the persons' enjoyments in the Heavens cease, they come and take their birth in the one or other of these eight Varsas. The people here live for ten thousand years; their body is hard like thunderbolt and all are endowed with powers of Ayuta elephants. No one is satisfied with a little of the pleasures of sexes; so all men live happily with their wives, etc. It is not that the males alone are so happy; the females also are full of youth throughout their lives and become pregnant, when they are less than one year old. In short, the inhabitants of the Varsas enjoy for ever as the persons of Treta Yuga do.

Hear ends the Seventh Chapter of the Eighth Book on the story of the Ganges and the continents in Sri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Narayana said In those Varsas, Visnu and the other Devas used to worship always the Great Devi with Japann and meditation and to chant hymns to Her. The forests there are ornamented with all sorts of fruits, flowers and leaves, in all the seasons. In those excellent forests, and on the mountains, in those Varsas and on the clear waters interspersed with full blewn lotuses and S'arasas (cranes) and in those countries where varieties of mountain trees are standing and where varieties of birds frequent and echo all around, the people play in waters and engage themselves with a great many pleasant occupations; and the beautiful women, as well, roam there with the knitting of their eyebrows. The people there enjoy as they like, surrounded by young women; Narayana, the Adipurusa Bhagavan Himself, worships the Devi there, to shew his extreme grace to all the inhabitants of the Navavarsa. The people also worship the Deity. By worshipping the Devi only, the Bhagavan remains there in Samadhi, surrounded with Aniruddha and his other Vyuhachatustaya (the four forms). But in Ilavrita Varsa, the Bhagavan Rudra, originated from the eye-brows of Brahma, resides only with women. No other person can enter there; for the Bhavani, the S'akti of Rudra has cursed that any male entering there would be transformed into a female. The Lord of Bhavani, surrounded by innumerable women, remains here engaged in the worship of the unmanifested unborn Bhagavan Samkarsana. For the good of humanity, with intense meditation. He worships His Own Turiya Form of the nature of Tamas, thus

12-19. S'ri Bhagavana said “Obeisance to Thee! the Bhagavan, the Great Purusa, endowed with all the qualities (the principal six AisVaryas or prosperities), the Ananta (the Infinite) and to the Unmanifested I We worship Thee, Whose lotus feet are the refuge of all. Thou art the great storehouse of all the superhuman powers and the divine faculties of omnipotence, etc. Thou art always present to the Bhaktas. Thou art creating all these beings. Thou givest Moksa to the Bhaktas and destroyest their attachment to the world and Thou bindest Thy non-devotees in bondage to this world. Thou art the Lord. We worship Thee. We are entirely under the control of the passions, anger, etc., and our minds are always attached to the senses; but though Thou art always looking at this world for its creation, etc.. Thy mind is not a bit attached to it. So who will not turn to Thee, desirous to conquer his self. Thou art appearing by Thy Maya as one whose sight is ignorant; Thou lookest dreadful with Thy eyes reddened with the drink of Madhu (wine). By the touch of Thy feet, the mental faculties are very much enchanted; hence the women folk of the Nagas cannot in any way worship Thee, out of bashfulness. The Risis say that though Thou art the Only One to create, preserve and destroy, yet Thou art quite unconcerned with them. Thou art Infinite and Thou hast innumerable heads. This vast universe is like the mustard seed resting somewhere on one of these heads, which Thou canst not feel even. The Mahat Tattva is Thy body manifested first. It is built of Sattva, Raja and Tamo Gunas. Brahma has come out of this and I again have sprung from this Brahma and am nurtured by the Sattva and the other Gunas and with the help of the Teja, created these elements and the senses. These Mahat Tattvas and we all are controlled by Thy Extraordinary Form. Thou hast kept us in our respective places by Thy Kriya S'akti as birds are kept duly by the strings through them. Mahat Tattva, Ahamkara, and the Devas, elements and the senses, before mentioned all united create this Universe by Thy Grace. Thy creation is very big and grand; for this reason the gross thinkers, deluded by Thy power, never understand it. This Maya is the only means to get the Samsara Nivritti, Moksa, the real Goal of man: and this Maya, again involves them in the Karma entanglements, very hard to get through. Coming in and going out, both of these are Thy forms; so we bow down to Thee.

20-23. Narayana said Thus the Bhagavan Rudra, with His Own persons in llavrita Varsa used to worship the Devi and the Sankarsana, the Controller of all the Lokas. The son of Dharma, well known by the name of Bhadras'rava and all the persons born of his family and his attendants, worship thus the Devi. This form is well known to all by the name of Hayagriva and worshipped thus. All the persons there worship Him with the intense meditation and Samadhi and realise Him thoroughly. Then they praise Him, according to due customs and get the thorough Siddhis (success in getting extraordinary powers).

24-29. The Bhadras'ravas said Obeisance to Thee, the Bhagavan, the Incarnate of Virtue, and to Him who destroys completely the desires, attachments, etc., to worldly objects! Ho!

How wonderful are the feats of the Bhagavan! Death always destroys all, but people, seeing this, seem not to see this. Seeing that the son meets with death, the father desires to live long not for a virtuous purpose but for sense enjoyments, what is called Vikarma. Those who are skilled in Jhana and Vijhana say that this Universe that is seen is very transient. Moreover those Pundits who are endowed with much Jhana, see vividly the transitoriness of this Universe. Still, O Unborn One! When practically they come to deal with this, they all become overpowered with the influence of Maya.

So Thy Pastime (Lila) is wonderfully variegated. (Instead of spending our time uselessly in discussing on S'astras) we bow down to Thee, and Thee alone. Thou art the Self-manifest Chaitanya. Thou are not the object to be covered by Maya. Thou dost not do anything in the sort of creation, etc. Thou remainest simply as the Witness thereof. Sill the Vedas declare that Thou createst, preservest and destroyest the Universe. It is quite reasonable and nothing to be wondered at. Thou art the Atman of all. When the Pralaya (the time of great dissolution) comes, the Vedas were stolen by the Daityas and taken to the nether regions, the Rasatala. Thou, in the form of Hayagriva (Horse-faced), rescued the Vedas and gave them to the Grandsire Brahma who was very eager to get them back and understand their meanings. Thou art the true Sankalap (resolve); we bow down to Thee. Thus the Bhadras'ravas praise the Haiyagriva form of Hah and sing the glorious deeds of Him. He who reads these narratives of the Maha Purusa (the high-souled personage) or he who makes others hear these things, both of them, quitting their sinful bodies, go to the Devi Loka.

Here ends the Eighth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of llavrita in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narayana said In Harivarsa, the Bhagavan Hari is shining splendid as a Yogi in the form of Narasimha. The Maha Bhagavat (most devoted) Prahlada, who knows the attributes of God worships and chants hymns with his whole hearted devotion, seeing that beautiful form, gladdening to all the people.

3-11. Prahlada spoke I bow down to Thee, the Bhagavan Nrisingha Deva. Thou art the Light of all Lights. Thy big teeth are like thunderbolts. Let Thee manifest in Thy most terrible form. Let Thee destroy the desires of the people to do Karma and let Thou devour the great Ignorance (Ajhana) the Moha (delusion) of the people.

Thou art the receptacle of the Sattva, Raja and Tamo Gunas. Let myself be always free from any fear by Thy Grace. “Om Khraum!”

Let this whole world rest completely in peace and happiness. Let the cheats quit their guiles and be pure and simple. Let all the people quit completely their animosities towards each other and think of their welfare. Let all the people be free from making injuries to others and be peaceful; and let them have their control over their passions. Let our mind be completely free from desires and rest entirely and devotedly to Thy lotus-feet. Let us not be attached to sons, wives, wealth, house or to any other worldly objects. If there be any attachment, let it be to the objects dear to the Bhagavan. He who barely sustains his body and soul and controls himself completely, success is very near to him; not so to the persons that are attached to the senses. The dirt of the mind, that is not washed away by bathing in the Ganges or by taking recourse to the Tirthas, etc., is removed by the company of the devotees to the God and by their influence, hearing, thinking, and meditating on the attributes of the Bhagavan. So who is there that does not serve the Bhagavan! He who has got Niskama Bhakti (devotion without regard to any fruits thereof) to the Bhagavan, to him come always the Devata, Dharma and Jhana and other higher qualities. But he who indulges in various mental phantasms, without any Bhakti to the Bhagavan, he follows the worldly happiness that is certainly to be hated and never he gets Vairagyan and other higher qualities. As water is life to the fish, so the Bhagavan Hah is the self of all embodied beings and so He is to be specially prayed for. So if a high-souled person be attached to household happiness, without thinking of God, then his greatness dwindles into a trifling insignificance like the ordinary pleasures of man and woman when they are full of youth. So leave, at once, the home that is the source of Birth and Death and leave Trisna (thirst, desire), clinging to life, low-spiritedness, name, and fame, egoism, shame, fear, poverty and loss of one's honour and worship the Lotus-Feet of the Bhagavan Nrisingha Deva and be entirely fearless. Thus Prahlada, the Lord of the Daityas, daily worships devotedly the Bhagavan Nrisingha, resplendent in his lotus heart, the death blow, the lion to all the elephant sins. In the Ketumala Varsa, the Bhagavan Narayana is reigning in the form of the Kama Deva, the God of Love. The people there always worship Him. The daughter of Ocean, the Indira Devi, who confers honour and glory to the Mahatmas, is the presiding Deity of the Varsa. She always worships the Kama Deva with the following verses

12-18. The Laksmi Devi spoke “Om, Hram, Hrim, Hrum, Om name Bhagavate Hrisikesaya! Thou art the Bhagavan of the nature of Om. Thou are the Director, the Lord of the senses: Thy Atman is the Highest and the Receptacle of all the good things. All the Karma Vrittis, all the Jhana Vrittis, and effort and resolution and other faculties of the mind, act in their respective channels by Thy looking and by their being constantly practised in Thee. And the elements over which they get their masteries are subservient to Thy Laws. The mind and the other eleven Indriyas, and touch, taste and other five senses are but Thy parts. All the rites and ceremonies observed in the Vedas are found in Thee. Thou art the infinite store of all the foodings of the Jivas. From Thee flows the Paramananda, the Highest Bliss. Thou art All, Thou art the Substance, Purity incarnate; Thou art the Energy, the Strength manifest in all. Thou art the Finish of all the happiness and Thou art the Only One Substance, that can be desired by the people. So obeisance to Thee! This Thy Lordship is not dependent on any other body. The women that know Thee, the Lord of all and worship other bodies for their husbands, those husbands can never save them, their lives, their wealth, progeny or other dear things as those are controlled by Kala (Time) and Karma. So they cannot be termed husbands at all; Thou art the Real Husband; and no other. For Thou art naturally fearless and Thou protectest in every way the persons that become afraid. Thou art the Lord of all wealth; so no other is superior to Thee. How can then, they be independent whose happiness depends on others! The lady that desires to worship Thy lotus feet only and becomes subservient to no others, she attains all the desires. Again the lady who, desiring other desires than to get Thee, does not worship Thy lotus-feet.

Thou fulfillest the desires of her too. But, O Bhagavan! When the period of enjoyment of these things ceases and when the objects of these enjoyments are destroyed, then she repents much due to the loss of those things. Brahma, Mahadeva, the Suras and the Asuras practise hard Tapasyas to get me, impelled by their desires to attain the objects of sense enjoyments; but he only really gets me who worships and takes refuge of Thy lotus feet only, for my heart is entirely attached to Thee. So, O

Achyuta! Kindly shew Thy Grace and put, on my head. Thy lotus palm, praised by the universal people that Thou placest on Thy Bhaktas. O Bhagavan! That Thou takest me in Thy Bosom is a sign of Thy Grace. No one can fathom the deeds of Thee, the Only Controller of all. Thus the Prajapati and the Lords of that Varsa, worship the Bhagavan, the Friend of all, with a view to attain their respective desires and Siddhis. In Ramyak Varsa, the Matsya form of the Bhagavan is set up and consecrated. The Suras and the Asuras worship Him. The highly intelligent Manu always chant hymns to that Excellent Form thus "Obeisance to Him who is the Life of all, the Essence and Strength of all, to that Great Fish Form, the Body Incarnate of Sattva Guna, who is of the nature of Om and Bliss."

19-23. Thou art the Lord of all the Lokapalas and of the form of the Vedas. Thou art within and without all this universe, moving and non¬ moving; still all the beings are unable to see Thy form. As the people bring under their control the wooden dolls, so Thou controllest the universe by the rules and prohibitions under the names of the Brahmanas, etc. Thou art the God. The Lokapalas, being overcome by the fever of jealousy and pride, become quite unable, either individually or collectively, to quit their jealousies and to protect the tripeds, quadrupeds, reptiles and snakes; so Thou art the God. Thou hadst upheld this earth along with me and with the medicinal plants and creepers; and Thou shewedest the highest luminous light in the great ocean, at the time of Pralaya, tossed with surging waves and didst roam there. Thou art the Self of all the beings in the universe. So we bow down to Thee. Thus the Manu, the best of the mortal beings, used to praise the Bhagavan, who took His incarnation in the shape of the Fish, the Remover of all doubts. Manu, the foremost of the Bhagavatas (the devotees) is reigning there in the service of the Fish Incarnation of the Bhagavan, with intense meditation and expurging all sins and with great devotion.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the narration of the division of the continents in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-7. Narayana said In Hiranmaya Varsa, the Bhagavan is remaining in the form of Kurma, the Tortoise, as the Lord of Yoga. He is thus praised and worshipped by Aryama, the Ruler of the Piths. Aryama said Om name Bhagavate Akuparaya; (King of tortoises, sustaining the world) Obeisance to Thee, the Lord of all prosperities, in the form of Tortoise (Kurma); Thou art built of Sattva Guna Incarnate; no one can make out where Thou dost dwell; Thou art not encompassed by Time; (Thou art in the Present, Past and Future); so obeisance to Thee. Thou dost pervade all things; we bow down to Thee. All are established in Thee; so obeisance to Thee. By Thy extraordinary Maya (power) Thou hast made manifest this universe that is seen. This is Thy Form. It is by no means distinct from Thee. This Thy Form is seen in so many forms. So the true reality being not known like the mirage, these cannot be counted really speaking, what is Thy form, no one can definitely say. The beings generated by heat and moisture (said of insects and worms), those that are born of eggs, from wombs and the plants and other moving, non-moving beings, the Devas, Risis, Piths, Bhutas, and these senses; the sky, the heavens, earth, mountains, rivers, oceans, islands, planets, and stars all these art Thou and Thou alone. Thy name, form, and appearance, are as varied; and their numbers cannot be counted. Still, Kapila and others have determined their numbers, by the knowledge of which Thou canst become visible to the Eye of Knowledge. Thy form and nature are determined by these Sankhyas ascertained by Kapila. So we bow down to Thee. Thus Aryama, and the other rulers of the Varsa all united sing, praise, and worship the Bhagavan Kurma Deva, the Controller of all and the Generator of all. All Hail to Thee! The Bhagavan Yajha Purusa is manifest in Uttara Kuru Mandala in the form of Adi Varaha. The Earth Herself worships Him always. The Goddess Earth praises Hah, the Yajha Varaha, the Destroyer of the Daityas and worships duly that Deva, with Her heart lotus, naturally devoted, rendered more devoted by Her attachment to the Lord.

8-13. The Goddess Earth spoke “Om Name Bhagavate Mantratattva Lingaya Yajha Kratave” I bow down to the Bhagavan, the Great Boar; Thou art Om; Thy real form and nature can be known by only the Mantra and Tattva. Thou art Yajha and Kratu (sacrifice) incarnate; therefore all the great sacrifices are Thy limbs. Thou art the Three Yugas (there being no Yajha in the Satya Yuga); Thou art that which is left as Pure, after doing Karma (so as to be fit for performing Yajhas). So obeisance to Thee. The sages, versed in Jhana and Vijhana say that Thou art hidden in the body and in the senses as fire is hidden in the wood. So they, ardent to see Thee, seek for Thee with a discriminative and dispassionate mind, judging Karmas and their fruits; and then Thy Nature is revealed, I bow down to Thee, Thy Form can be ascertained by the cause and effect of the Karmas and other Gunas of Maya, sense objects, senses, actions, Devas, body, time, Ahamkara and others. I bow down to Thee,

Those can see thus Thy form, whose mind is firmly established in Thee, by their discrimination and Yama, Niyama, etc., and who have abandoned all sorts of fickleness and changeability of their tempers. So obeisance to Thee. As iron goes attracted towards the magnet, so Maya dances before Thee with Her Gunas and Her works in the way of the creation, preservation and destruction of this universe; but Thou art totally indifferent to it. For the sake of the Jivas (embodied souls), desire comes to Thee, though Thou art not quite willing! Thou art the Witness of the Jivas and their Adrista (the Fate). I bow down to Thee. The Yajha Varaha, the Cause of this universe, has lifted me up from the Rasatala and placing me on His big tusks, has come out from the Pralaya, the great ocean, after overpowering in battle His enemy, the powerful Daitya, like an elephant, I bow down to that Controller of all, to Thee. In the Kimpurusa Varsa, the Bhagavan Adi Purusa (the Prime Man), the Self-manifest, and the Lord of all, is residing in the form of Rama, the son of Das'aratha and the Joy of the heart of Sita Devi.

14-18. S'ri Hanumana thus spoke:- “Om name Bhagavate Uttama Slokaya” I bow down to the Bhagavan, who art sung by the excellent verses, purifying all. I bow down to Thee, the incarnate of modesty, good temper, vow and good signs; Thy mind is always under control; Thou dost imitate, as Thy nature is good, the actions of all persons; obeisance to Thee. Thou art the Supreme Place to award praise. Obeisance to Thee. Thou art Brahmanya Deva (in the creation of the universe), the high souled Person Mahapurusa. Thou gettest the First Share, above all the persons! Thou art the One Tattva and That Alone, as established in the Vedanta. The holy realisation is the only guide to it. This Tattva dominates over all the Gunas. It can never be an object. Only by pure intellect. It can be realised. There is no name, no form of It. It is always beyond the pale of Ahamkara. I take refuge to this Tattva, the most Peaceful, with my body and mind. Thy incarnation in human shape in this world is not simply for killing Ravana but for giving instructions to the mortals. The contact with woman and the suffering thereof are very difficult to avoid; to give this lesson also He took this incarnation. He Who is merged in enjoying the Supreme Bliss of His Own Nature and He Who is the Lord of all, how can He suffer miseries in the bereavement of Sita.

He is the best friend and the very Atman of those who have conquered their minds and senses. Especially He is the receptacle of all the qualities and is in enjoyment of other divine extraordinary powers. So He is not attached to the worldly objects. How can the delusion due to His wife come and darken Him? and why will He send Laksmana in exile? He is the Mahat Tattva and the Parama Purusa; so good birth, beauty, intelligence, oratory or good form, nothing can please Him. Bhakti (devotion) can only attract Him. If that be not the case, then why will He, the elder of Laksmana, the Bhagavan, the son of Das'aratha make friendship with us, the wanderers of the forest and who are by nature, not the receptacles of any beauty, etc. So everyone, be he a Sura or Asura, man, or not man, should worship the Hah manifest in Rama, in the human body with all his heart. He is so good that if anybody worships Him even to a very small extent. He always considers it to be much; what more can be said than this that He took all the inhabitants of Kos'ala to Heaven!

19-20. Narayana said Thus Hanuman, the best of monkeys, sings the praises and worships duly in Kimpurusa Varsa, the lotus-eyed Rama, truthful, and determined in his vows. He who hears this wonderful description of Rama, is freed of all his sins and goes with his body pure to the abode of Rama.

English translation

1. Narayana said In this Bharatavarsa (India) I am present, as the First of all, in the shape of the Man, at present existing before you. Let you praise Me incessantly thus:--

2-28. Narada said Thou art the Bhagavan. Obeisance to Thee. Thou art completely free from attachment and envy and Thou art the incarnate of Dharma, Jhana and Vairagyam (Dispassion). No trace of Ahamkara (egoism) is in Thee. Obeisance to Thee. Thou hast nothing of wealth; Thou art the foremost of the family of Risis; Thou art Nara Narayana. Thou art the Parama Hamsa (the highest class of ascetics and renouncers of the world). Thou art the Highest Guru; Thou art happy with Thyself and the Leader of all; I bow down to Thee. Thou art the Lord of all, yet not mixed in the work of creation, etc. Though Thou residest in every embodied being, yet no hunger and thirst can press Thee; though Thou art the Witness, yet Thy sight is not at all disturbed by the proximity. Thou art not at all connected and no desires can come to Thee; Thou art the Witness. So I bow down to Thee. This path of Yoga had come out of Thee and it is established in Thee. The Bhagavan Hiranyagarbha has given instructions on the cleverness in Yoga, thus That leaving aside the egoism of this body, the seat of all evils, the people at last will take resort to the path of Bhakti and set their minds on Thee, Who art beyond the pale of the three Gunas. If, like the ignorant persons very much attached to this world as well as the next, the wise pass their time in the thoughts of their sons, wives, and riches and ultimately become very much pained on the destruction of this ugly body, persons, versed in Jhana and Vijhana be afraid in the end of their separation fron the body, then their study of the S'astras and all their labours become labours merely, without any effect. When such a thing occurs to the learned, then O Thou, the Subduer of the knowledge of senses! Thou Thyself givest us instructions that we may easily think of Thee. Then this terrible clinging to this ugly body that Thy Maya brings about and which it is very difficult to discard by other means, will leave us quickly. Narada, the seer of all, well qualified with the knowledge of all the Tattvas, the foremost of the Munis, thus worships it and praises Narayana Who is unaffected by any of the Upadhis and who corresponds to Nitya and Leela (both Permanent and the Pastime-making). O Devarsi! I now describe to you the rivers and mountains in Bharatvarsa. Hear attentively. Malaya, Mangalaprastha, Mainaka, Chitrakuta, Risabha, Kutaka, Kolia, Sahya, Devagiri, Risyamuka, S'ris'aila, Vyankata, Mahendra, Varidhara, Vindhya, S'uktiman, Riksa, Pariyatra, Drona, Chitrakuta, Gobardhana, Raivataka, Kakubha, Nila, Gaurmukha, Indrakila, Kamagiri and many other mountains, that cannot be numbered.

Great merits accrue on seeing these mountains. Hundreds and thousands of rivers issue from these mountains. Drinking their waters, bathing in them and visiting them and singing their praises completely destroy the sins of mind, word and body. The names of the rivers are Tamraparni, Chandravas'a, Kritamala, Vatodaka, Vaihayasi, Kaveri, Vena, Payasvini, Tungabhadra, Krisnavena, S'arkara, Vartaka, Godavari, Bhimarathi, Nirbindhya, Payosnika, Tapi, Reva, Surasa, Narmada, Sarasvati, Charmanvati, and the Indus, Andha, and Sone, Risikulya, Trisama, Vedasmriti, Mahanadi, Kaus'iki, Yamuna, Mandakini, Drisadvati, Gomati, Sarayu, Oghavati, Saptavati, Susama, S'atadru, Chandrabhaga, Marudbridha, Vitasta, Asikni and Vis'va and many other rivers. Those persons that take their births in this Varsa enjoy the (Divya) Divine, human, and the lower enjoyments, as the effects of their Karmas, in accordance with their Sattvik, Rajasik, and Tamasik qualities. All the inhabitants of this Varsa take their Sannyasa, Vanaprasthas, etc., in accordance with the rules of their Varnas (castes) respectively and enjoy beatitudes as dictated (in their S'astras). The Vedavadis (the propounders of the Vedas), the Risis, and the Devas declare that this Varsa is superior to all the other Varsas as the Grace of God is easily obtained here. They say: Oh! What an amount of good works, the inhabitants of Bharata Varsa did in their previous lives, that by their influence, the Bhagavan Hah has become pleased with them without their having any Sadhanas (good Yogic practices). Therefore we also desire to have our births there, for there if we be born amidst the persons there, we would be able serve Hah, Mukunda in every way. What will severe austerities, gifts, sacrifices, and practising vows avail us? Even if we go to Heaven, what benefit we will derive there? Then we would never be able to bring our mind to the lotus- feet of the Bhagavan Narayana. Our tastes for sense enjoyments would increase and we would be wholly deprived of Bhagavan. Far better it is to be born in this Bharata Varsa as short-lived persons, than to acquire other places where one can live up to the period of Kalpa and then be reborn. For the intelligent people of Bharata, getting this mortal coil can within a short period devote themselves to the Bhagavan Hari and be free from rebirth. That place is never to be visited and served, even if that be Svarga Loka where the nectar-like ocean of the sayings of Vaikuntha are not heard; where there are no assemblages of saints who take refuge of the Lotus feet of Bhagavan; where the great sacrifices and festivities of the Bhagavan Visnu are not celebrated. Those persons, that do not try for Moksa, when they get human births and when they possess Jhana, Kriya (methods of doing sacrifices and other works for the help of Jhana) and Dravya (materials for those sacrifices), are certainly like beasts and get themselves repeatedly entanged into bondages. The people of Bharata Varsa offer oblations to Indra and other deities, invoking their names separately, with proper rules (Vidhis), mantras, and purodasas (a sacrificial oblation made of ground rice and offered in Kapalas or vessels); but the All sufficient Bhagavan Hari, the Giver of blessings accepts those very gladly.

True that He grants unto the people what they ask from Him; but He hardly gives anybody the Paramartha, the Highest Goal. The reason being that the people ask again and again after receiving what they had asked. So He gives of Himself His own lotus-feet to those who, having abandoned all their desires, worship Him and Him only with the idea of love. (1) Thus We are living very happily in the Heavens as the fruit of the Istapurta that we performed fully; yet we want that we may also be born in Bharata Varsa with our memory all renewed with the thought of the Bhagavan Hah. The Bhagavan residing in this Bharatvarsa, awards the highest welfare to its inhabitants.

29-32. Narayana said O Devarsi! Thus the Devas of the Heavens, the Siddhas, the Highest Risis, sing the excellent merits of this Bharatavarsa. There are the eight Upadvipas of this JambudvTpa When the sons of the King Sagara were searching for the footprints of the stolen horse (for AsVamedha sacrifice), they found these Upadvipas; so it is definitely stated. The names of out and made these are Svarnaprastha, Chandras'ukra, Avartana, Ramanaka, Mandaropakhya, Harina, Panchajanya, and Ceylon. The length and breadth of JambudvTpa have been described; now the other six DvTpas, Plaksa and others will be described. Hear.

Here ends the Eleventh Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the continents and of Bharatavarsa in the Mahapuranam, S'rT Mad DevT Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-37. Narayana said The Jambudvipa has been described, how it is and what is its width. It is surrounded on all sides by the salt ocean. As Meru is surrounded by Jambudvipa, so the salt ocean is surrounded by Plaksadvipa, twice its size. As the ditch is surrounded by gardens, so the salt ocean is surrounded by gardens. As the Jambu tree exists in Jambudvipa, so the Plaksa tree exists in the Plaksa DvTpa and of the same size. The name Plaksa Dvipa is derived from the name of this Plaksa tree. This tree is of a golden colour. Fire exists at its bottom with form incarnate. This is, named Saptajihva. The Ruler of this island is Idhmajihva, the son of Priyavrata. He divided his island into the seven Varsas and distributed them, to each of his seven sons and he himself took refuge of the path of Yoga, so much liked by the Knowers of Self and he got the Bhagavan Vasudeva. The names of those seven DvTpas are S'iva, Yavas, Subhadra, Santi, Ksema, Amrita, and Abhaya. Seven rivers and seven mountains exist respectively in the seven islands. The rivers are Aruna, Nrimna, Angirasi, Savitri, Suprabhatika, Ritambhara, and Satyambhara. The names of the mountains are Manikuta, Vajrakuta, Indrasena, Jyotismana, Suparna, Hiranyasthiva, and Meghamala. The seeing and drinking the waters of these rivers take away all sins and all darkness due to ignorance. The four castes live here, Hamsa, Patanga, Urdhayana, and Satyanga, corresponding to the four castes Brahmana, etc. The inhabitants of this Plaksa DvTpa live for one thousand years and all are of variegated wonderful appearances. They follow the customs and usages dictated by the Vedas and worship the God Sun for the attainment of Heaven. The mantra by which the worship is done is this We take refuge unto that Sun, Who is the Body Manifest of the Ancient Person Visnu and Who is the Ordainer of Satya (Truth), Rita (Straight forwardness), Brahma, Amrita (Immortality) and Mrityu (Death); O Narada! All the persons here live long, of vigorous senses, energetic, powerful, intelligent, enthusiasts, and valorous; everyone gets extraordinary powers of themselves. Next to this Plaksa Dvipa is the Ikshu Ocean. This Iksu Sagara surrounds the Plaksa Dvipa. Next comes S'almala Dvipa. It is twice as large as Plaksa. This Dvipa is surrounded by Surasagara (the ocean of wine). There is a tree named S'almali in this island, which is as large as the Plaksa tree. The high-souled Garuda resides on that tree, Yajhavahu is the Ruler of this place. He was born of Priyavrata; he divided his Varsa into the seven parts and distributed each of them to his seven sons respectively. Now hear the names of these Varsas Surochana, Saumanasya, Ramana, Deva Varsa, Paribhadra, Apyayana, and Vijhata. Seven mountains and seven rivers exist there respectively. The names of the mountains are Sarasa, S'atas'ringa, Varna Deva, Kandaka, Kumuda, Puspavarsa, and Sahasra-S'ruti. Now hear the names of the rivers. Anumati, Sinibali, Sarasvati, Kuhu, Rajani, Nanda, and Raka; these are the seven rivers. The people are divided into the four castes S'rutadhara, Viryadhara, Vasundhara, Isundhara. These correspond to the Brahmanas, etc. They worship the Bhagavan Moon, the Controller of all and the Creator of all the Vedas. They offer food duly in the black and white fortnight to their Piths. The mantra for their worship is "Let Soma, the King of all, be pleased." O Narada! Next to Surasagara is Kus'advipa, surrounded by Ghritasagara (the ocean of clarified butter). Its dimensions are twice as large. Here are blades of Kus'a grass, of a very resplendent colour. The name of the Dvipa is from this Kus'astamba. This bundle of Kus'a, illumines all the quarters with their gentle rays. The Ruler of the Dvipa is Hiranyareta, the son of Priyavrata. He divided the Dvipa into seven parts and distributed each of them to each of his seven sons respectively. The names of the seven sons are Vasu, Vasudana, Dhridharuchi, Nabhigupta, Stutyavrata, Vivikta, and Bhamadevaka. There are seven mountains forming the seven boundaries and so are the seven rivers. Hear the names of these. The names of the mountains are Chakra, Chatuhs'ringa, Kapila, Chitre Devanika, Kuta, Urdharoma and Dravina. The names of the rivers are Rasakulya, Madhukulya, Mitravinda, S'rutavinda, Devagarbha, Ghritachyut, and Mantramalika. The inhabitants of the Kus'advipa drink the waters of these rivers. There are the four castes here Kus'ala, Kovida, Abhiyukta, and Kulaka corresponding to the Brahmanas, etc. They are all powerful like Indra and the other chief Devas; and all of them are omniscient. They worship the Fire God and perform various good works in honour of Him. Their mantra is this O Fire! Thou earnest the oblations direct to Para Brahma. In the sacrifices of the Devas, Thou worshippest that Personal God and offerest to Him whatever are given in oblations, mentioning the respective limbs of His Body. Thus the inhabitants of that DvTpa worship the Fire God.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the narration of Plaksa, S'almala, and Kus'a Dvipas in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said Thou, the Knower of everything! Describe about the remaining Dvipas, knowing which we will be highly delighted.

2-36. Narayana spoke thus The very vast Ghrita Sagara (the ocean of clarified butter) is encircling the Kus’a DvTpa. Next to it is the Krauncha DvTpa. It is twice as large as Kus’a. The KsTra Sagara (the ocean of milk) is surrounding this DvTpa. The Krauncha mountain is standing here. The name of this DvTpa is derived from this mountain. In days gone by, the highly intelligent Kartikeya burst this mountain by his own prowess. This DvTpa is washed by the KsTra Sagara; and Varuna is its Regent. The son of Priyavrata, Ghritapristha, respected by all and whose prosperity knows no end, is the Lord of this DvTpa. He divided this DvTpa into the seven parts and distributed them to his sons and named the Varsas after the names of his sons. He made his sons the rulers of those places and he himself took the refuge of the Bhagavan Narayana The names of the seven Varsas are respectively Ama, Madhuruha, Meghapristha, Sudhamaka, Bhrajistha, Lohitarna, and Vanaspati. O Narada! The seven mountains and the rivers there are very celebrated throughout the worlds. The names of the mountains are - S'ukla, Vardhamana, Bhojana, Upavarhana, Nanda, Nandana, and Sarvatobhadra. The names of the rivers are Abhaya, Amritaugha, Aryaka, TTrthavatT, VrittirupavatT, S'ukla, and Pavitravatika. The inhabitants there drink the highly pure water of these rivers. The people there are divided into four colours Purusa, Risabha, Dravina, and Vedaka and they worship the Bhagavan Varuna, of the form of water. Then they become very discriminative, and, with great devotion, and holding full within their folded palms the water, repeat the following mantra "O Water! Thou art the essence VTrya of the Person Bhagavana and Thou sanctifiest the Bhurloka, Bhuvarloka, and Svarloka. Thou destroyest the sins of all. We all are touching it; purify our bodies." After finishing their mantrams, they sing various hymns to Varuna. Next to the Ksiroda Sagara, is the S'aka Dvipa, thirty two lakh yoyanas wide, surrounded by the Dadhi Sagara (the ocean of curds), of similar dimensions. Here the most excellent tree named the S'aka tree exists. O Narada! The DvTpa is named so after the tree. Medhatithi, the son of Priyavrata is the Lord of this DvTpa.

He divided this land into the seven Varsas and distributed each to his seven sons respectively; and ultimately he took refuge to the path of Yoga. The names of the seven Varsas are Purojava, Manojava, Pavamanaka, DhumranTka, Chitrarepha, Bahurupa, and Vis'vadhrik. In these Varsas there are seven mountains, one in each Varsa, as forming their boundaries; and there are seven rivers also. The names of the mountains are Is'ana, Urus'ringa, Valabhadra, S'ata Kes'ara, Sahasra-srotaka, Devapala, and Mahasana; the names of the rivers are Anagha, Ayurda, Ubhayaspristi, Aparajita, PahchapadT, and Sahasras'ruti and Nijadhriti. These seven rivers are all very big and resplendent with lustre. The people are divided into four classes Varsas, Satyavrata, Kratuvrata, Danavrata, and Anuvrata. They all take the Pranayama exercise and thereby bring the Rajas, and Tamo Guna under their subjection and they worship Hah, of the nature of Prana Vayu, Higher than the Highest. Their mantra is this "He has entered into all the living beings and nourishes them by the Prana and other faculties; He is the Internal Ruler of all and the Supreme Controller; this Universe is under His control; let Him protect and nourish us." O Narada! Next to this Dadhi Sagara is Puskara DvTpa; it is twice as large as S'aka DvTpa. It is surrounded by the Dudha Sagar (the ocean of milk) all twice as large. The leaves of Puskara tree that shines in the Puskara DvTpa, are fiery like golden flames; they are as clean and pure. Crores and crores of leaves, golden in colour ornament this Tree. Vasudeva, the Guru of all the Lokas, has created this Puskara DvTpa as the seat of ParamesthT Brahma, possessed of six extraordinary powers, for the purpose of creation. There is one mountain in this DvTpa; it is divided into two parts, named ArvachTna and ParachTna. These form the boundaries of the two Varsas. The mountain is one Ayuta Yoyana high and one Ayuta Yoyana wide. There are four cities on the four sides. Indra and the three other Lokapalas are the lords of these cities. The Sun God connes out from their top and circumambulating Meru, goes there again. The whole year is his Chakram, circle of circuit; His path is Uttrayanam and Daksinayanam. Vitihotra, the son of Priyavrata is the lord of this island. He distributed the two Varsas amongst his two sons, Ramana and Dhataki. They rule over the two Varsas named also after them. Like the inhabitants of the above Varsas, the people also get powers of themselves and worship devotedly the God seated on the lotus and follow such path of the Yoga as leads them to the Brahma Salokya, etc. The mantra runs thus “We bow down to that One God, without a Second, of the nature of Peace, Who is the Fruit of all the Karmas, Who is the seat of illumination of Brahma, Who is established in Unity, and Who is worshipped by all the Lokas.”

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the remaining DvTpas in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-29. Narayana said Next to the ocean of pure water, is the mountain, called Lokaloka. It marks the sphere between the two countries Loka and Aloka. O Devarsi! There is a land, all of pure gold (beyond this ocean of pure water) for a space equal to the distance between Manasottara and Meru. This land is like a mirror; there are no beings here; the reason is, any substance placed on it would at once be converted into gold and nothing can be obtained out of it. O Narada! No living beings can live there and therefore it is named Lokaloka. This is established always between the Loka and Aloka. The God himself has made this as the boundary of the three Lokas. The rays of the Sun, the Polar Star and all the planets are confined to this sphere; rather passing through its middle, the luminaries shed their lustre on the three Lokas. O Narada! This great mountain is so lofty and capacious that the rays of the luminaries can never go out of it. The learned men say, that the size, form, and indications of this mountain are such as this is the one-fourth of five hundred times the size of the earth on its summit. The self-born Brahma has placed very big elephants on all sides of it. Hear their names. These are Risabha, Puspachuda, Vamana, and Aparajita. These four elephants are said to hold all the Lokas in their respective positions. The Bhagavan Hari gives strength to these elephants and to Indra and others who are reckoned to be His Vibhutis (powers). He manifesting His S’uddha Sattva and super-extraordinary powers, and united with Anima, Laghima, etc., the eight Siddhis, is reigning there surrounded by His Paris’adas Visvaksena and others. He is the one God of all; He is without a second. For the welfare of all. He is holding Sudars’ana and His various other weapons; and the powers of His arms are great. He is His own Cause and at all times He pervades all in and through. He is Eternal. This Universe is upheld by His extraordinary power Maya for its preservation. He remains in this form till the end of a Kalpa. The inner width described above.

determines the width of Aloka. For it is situated outside the above Loka. Beyond the mountain Lokaloka, is said to lie the pure path leading to YogesVara within the egg-shaped ellipsoid formed by the Heaven and Earth. The inner dimension of this ellipsoid is twenty five Koti Yoyanas. When this egg becomes unconscious (lifeless), the Sun enters within it in the form of Vairaja. Hence the Sun is called Martanda. He is Hiranyagarbha, when He is born from this Golden Egg. It is this Sun that ordains the quarters, Akas’a, Heaven and Earth, etc., in their proper spheres and divisions. This Sun is the Atma of Svarga and Moksa, hell and other lower regions, of the Devas, men, birds, reptiles, trees and all other living beings; and He is the Presiding Deity of their sight. O Narada! Its width is Pahchas’at Koti Yoyanas and its height or depth is twenty-five Koti Yoyanas. If as the two halves of a gram are of the same size, so the Earth and Heaven are of equal size. The space enclosed between them is called Antariksa; the Sun God, the foremost of the planets, being situated in the middle, gives light and illumines and heats the three Lokas. He goes by the path of Uttarayana and therefore His motion becomes slow (His motion becomes Mandagati). The Sun then getting up higher prolongs the day time. Similarly when the Sun follows the path of Daksinayana, He gets S’lghra-gati and not going up so high, shortens the day time. Again when He comes at the Equator, He maintains an even position and the day and night become equal. When the Sun is in the signs Aries (Mesa) and Libra (Tula), then the day and night become equal. When the Sun traverses the five signs Taurus, Gemini, etc., the day becomes longer and when the Sun traverses the five signs Scorpio and others, the day becomes shorter and the night becomes longer.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the Lokaloka space in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-45. Narayana said O Narada! I will now describe the motion of the Sun. Hear. It is of three kinds; S'lghra (perihelionic), Manda (Aphelionic), and even. O Surasattama! Every planet has three positions. The name of the Madhyagati position is Jaradgava, the name of the northern position is Airavata; and the name of the southern position is VaisVanara. The asterisms AsVini Krittika and Bharani are known by the term Nagavithi. Rohini, Ardra, and Mrigas'ira are named Gaja Vithi; Pusya, As'lesa, and Punarvasu are named AiravatMthi. The three Vithis, above-mentioned are called Uttara Marga. Purvaphalguni, Uttara Phalguni and Magha are named Arsabhi Vithi. Hasta, Chitra and Svati are called Govithi; Jyestha, Vis'akha and Anuradha are named Jaradgavi Vithi. These three Vithis are named Madhyama Marga. Mula, Purbasadha, Uttarasadha are termed Ajavithi S'ravana, Dhanistha and S'atabhisa are termed Mriga Vithi. Uttara bhadrapada, Purvabhadrapada, and Revati are called VaisVanarivithi. These three Vithis (paths) are called Daksinamarga. During the Uttarayana time, as the Dhruva attracts the rope of air from both the sides of the Yuga, orbit (or axis), the chariot of the Sun ascends, (i.e., is drawn up by the rope). Thus when the Sun enters within the sphere, the motion of the chariot becomes slower and the day is lengthened and the night is shortened. O Sura Sattama! Know this to be the course of the path of the Sun.

When the cord draws towards the south, the Chariot descends and as the Sun then comes out of the sphere, the motion becomes quick The day shortens and the night is lengthened. Again when the cord is neither tightened nor is it slackened, rather its motion is exactly mid-way, the Sun also remains in a medium position and his Chariot enters within a sphere of equilibrium and the day and night become equal. When the cord of air, in a state of equilibrium is attracted by the Polar Star, then it is that the Sun and the Solar system revolves; and when the Polar Star slackens its attraction over the cord of air, the Sun coming out of the middle sphere, revolves; and the Solar system also revolves. On the east of Meru is established the city of Indra and the Devas dwell there. It is called therefore Devadhanika. On the south of the Meru, is the famous city of Yama, the God of Death, named Samyamani. On the west of Meru, is the great city of Varuna, named Nimnochani. On the north of Meru is the city of the Moon, named Vibhavari. O Narada! The Brahmavadis say that the Sun first rises in the city of Indra. At noon the Sun goes to Samyamani; at evening the Sun goes to Nimnochani and He is said to set. In the night the Sun remains in Vibhavari. O Muni! The going of the Sun round Meru is the cause of all the beings getting themselves engaged in their respective duties. The inhabitants of the Meru see the Sun always in the central position. The Sun moves on, eastwards towards the stars, keeping the Meru to his left; but if the Zodiac be taken into account, it would appear that the Meru is left towards the south of the Sun. The rising and the setting of the Sun are always considered in front of Him. O Devarsi! Every point, every quarter, every person, seeing the Sun says that the Sun has risen there; again where he becomes invisible. He is considered to set there. The Sun always exists; so there is no rising nor setting for Him. It is His appearance and disappearance that make men say that the Sun rises or sets. When the Sun is in the Indra's city. He illumines the three cities, those of Indra, Yama, and the Moon and illumines the north-east and east-west corners. So when He rests in the city of Fire, he illumines north-east, east-west, and south-west, the three corners, and at the same time the cities of Indra and Yama; and so on for the other cities and corners. O Narada! The Mont Meru is situated towards the north of all the Dvipas and Varsas. So whenever any person sees the Sun rise he calls that side "east." But Meru exists towards the left of the Sun; so it is said. If the Sun travels in 15 (fifteen) Ghatikas, the distance from Indrapuri to Yamapuri, He is said to travel within that time a distance equal to 2% Kotis, 121/2 lakhs and 25000 Yojanas (22695000 Yojanas). The thousand-eyed and thousand rayed Sun God is the Manifester of

Time. He travels in the aforesaid way the cities of Varuna, Chandra and Indra respectively. He is the diadem of the Svarloka; and the Zodiac is his Atman. He travels thus, to mark off time to all persons. O Narada! The Moon and the other planets and stars rise and set in the aforesaid manner. Thus the powerful chariot of the Sun travels in a Muhurta 142,00000 Yojanas. By the force of Pravaha Vayu (air), the Sun God, the Incarnate of the Vedas travels round the cities, the Zodiac, in one Samvatsara (year). The wheel of the Sun's Chariot is one year; twelve months are the spokes; three Chaturmasyas are the nave and the six seasons are the outer ring or circumference of the wheel. The learned men call this chariot as the Samvatsara (one year). The axis or axle points to the Meru on one side and to Manasottara mountain on the other. The end or circumference of the wheel marks off other divisions of the time as Kala, Kastha, Muhurta, Yama, Parahara, day and night, and fortnights. The wheel is fixed on the nave. The Sun goes on this wheel, like an oilman's on his oil- machine, round and round the Manasottara mountain. The eastern side of the wheel is on that axis and the other part is fixed on the Pole Star. The dimension of the first axis is (15750000 Yoyanas).

The second axis measures one-fourth of the above (3937500 Yoyanas). It resembles the axis of an oil-machine. The upper side of that is considered to belong to the Sun. The seat of the Sun on his chariot measures 36 Lakh Yoyanas wide. The Yuga measures in length one fourth of the above dimensions, that of his seat. The Chariot is is moved by seven horses, consisting of the seven Chhandas, Gayatri, etc., driven by Aruna. The horses carry the Sun for the happiness of all. Though the charioteer sits in front of the Sun, his face is turned towards the west. He does his work as a charioteer in that state. Sixty thousand Valakhilya Risis, of the size of a thumb, chant the sweet Vedic hymns before Him. Other Risis, Apsaras, Uragas, Gramanis, Raksasas, and all the Devas, each divided in groups of seven, worship every month that highly lustrous Sun-god. The earth measures 90152000 Kros'a Yuga Yoyanas (1 Krosa - % Yoyana). The Sun passes over this distance in a moment. He does not take rest in his this work even for a day; no, not even for a moment.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the motion of the Sun in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

S'n Narayana said O Narada! Now hear the wonderful movements of the planets and their positions. The auspicious and inauspicious events of the mankind, are due to the different movements of these planets. As in a potter's wheel going round and round, the motion of the insects crawling on the wheel, appears in a contrary direction, so the motion of the Sun and other planets moving on the Zodiac composed of the Basis (12 constellations) which again always moves round the Meru as an axle, appears different. Their motion from one star to another and from one constellation to another appears so likewise. These two motions therefore are not contradictory but are consistent; so it is settled everywhere by the learned Pundits (as being subservient to the Zodiac). O Narada! He, Who is the Origin of all. Who is the Adi Purusa, from Whom all these have sprung. Who is endowed with six extraordinary powers, in Whom all this Prapahcha, this material world composed of the five elements remains, that Narayana, roaming about, has divided the Trayi Atma into twelve parts for the perfect happiness of all and for Karma S'uddhis (the purification of Karma, acts). The sages furnished with Jhan and Vijhana have thus argued on the point, following the path as laid out in the Vedas. The Surya Narayana, moving on in the six seasons, spring, etc., has established, cold, heat, etc., as the Dharma of the seasons, duly for the fructification of the Karmas of the individual beings. Those persons that worship this Adipurusa, with devotion, according to the knowledge of the Vedas the customs and usages of Varna (castes) and As'rama (Brahmacharya, etc.), and with various performances of Yogas, get their fruits respectively according to their desires. This Sun is the Atman of all the Lokas and resting on the Zodiac between the Heavens and the Earth, enjoys the twelve months in the twelve constellations, Aries, etc. These months are the limbs of the year. Two fortnights make one month. The 21 asterisms go to form one month according to the Solar measure, of the day and night.

The period that the Sun takes to travel over the two constellations is called Ritu or the Season (i.e., two months). The Scientists say that this season is the limb of one Samvatsara. The path that the Sun describes within the three seasons or half the year in the Zodiac is called one Ayanam. The time taken by the Sun with earth and heavens to make a circuit of the Zodiac is called one Vatsara or year. This year is reckoned into five divisions as Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idavatsara, Anuvatsara, and Idvatsara. These are functioned by the S'lghra, Manda, and uniform motions of the Sun. So the Munis say. Thus far the motion of the Sun has been described. Now hear that of the Moon. The Moon is situated one lakh Yoyanas higher than the Sun and shares with the motion of the Sun for one year; and She enjoys as well every month with the Sun in the shape of the dark and bright fortnights. The Moon, the Lord of Night and of the medicinal plants also enjoys the day and night by the help of one constellation or 2% Naksattras. Thus, by Her S'lghragati, the Moon enjoys the Naksattras. During the bright fortnight, the Moon becomes more and more visible and gives pleasure to the Immortals by Her increasing phases; and, during the dark fortnight by Her waning phases. She delights the Piths. She performs revolution in the day and night by Her both the phases of the bright and dark fortnights. Thus She becomes the Life and Soul of all the living beings. The Moon, endowed with the highest prosperity, travels one Naksattra in thirty Muhurtas. She is Full and the Soul without any beginning. She fructifies the desires (Sankalpas) and resolves of all; hence She is called Manomaya. She is the Lord of all the medicinal plants (Osadhis); hence She is called Annamaya. She is filled with nectar; hence She is called the Abode of Immortality and She gives Nirvana (the final liberation) to all. Hence She is called Sudhakara. She nourishes and satisfies the Devas, Piths, men, reptiles and trees; hence She is called "Sarvamaya." By Her influence the asterisms travel over the three lakh Yoyanas. The God Himself has made the Naksattra Abhijit to revolve round the Meru, along with the other Naksattras in the Zodiac; so this is reckoned as the twenty-eighth Naksattra. The planet Venus (S'ukra) is situated above the Moon two lakh Yoyanas high. He sometimes goes before the Sun, sometimes behind and sometimes along with Him. He is very powerful. His motion is of three kinds (1) S'lghra, (2) Manda, and (3) uniform. He is generally favourable to all the persons and does for them many auspicious things. So it is stated in the S'astras. O Muni! S'ukra, the illustrious scion of Bhrigu, removes the obstacles to the rains. Next to S'ukra, the planet Mercury (Budha) is situated two lakh Yoyanas high. Like S'ukra, he, too, goes sometimes in front sometimes behind and sometimes along with the Sun.

And his motion too, is of three kinds S'lghra, Manda, and uniform. When Mercury the Son of Moon, is away from the Sun, then Ativata (strong winds, hurricanes), Abhrapata (the falling of meteors from the clouds) and draught and other fears arise. The planet Mars, the son of the Earth is situated two lakh Yoyanas higher. Within three fortnights (45 days) he travels one Ras'i. This occurs when his motion is not retrograde. This Mars causes all sorts of mischief, evils, and miseries to mankind. The planet Jupiter is situated two lakh Yoyanas higher. He passes through one Ras'T in one year. When his motion is not retrograde, he is always in favour with the Brahma Vadis. Next to Brihaspati, come the planet Saturn, the son of the Sun, two lakh Yoyanas higher. He takes thirty months to pass over one Ras'T. This planet causes all sorts of unrest and miseries to all. Therefore He is called a Manda Graha (a malefic planet). Next to it, is situated the Saptarsi mandala, the Great Bear, eleven lakh Yoyanas higher up. O Muni! The seven planets always do special favours to all. These circumambulate the Visnupada, the Polar Star.

Here ends the Sixteenth Chapter in the Eighth Book on the motion of the planets in the Maha Puranam S'rT Mad DevT Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-29. Narayana said Beyond the Saptarsi mandalam (the Great Bear), thirteen lakh Yojanas higher is situated, the Visnu's Paramam Padam (the highest place of Visnu). The Great Bhagavat (devotee of God), the most respectful, S'riman Dhruva, the son of Uttanapada, is established there with Indra, Agni, Kas'yapa and Dharma and the Naksattras. The visitors pay to him always their respects. He is the patron of those who live till the end of a Kalpa. He is engaged in serving the lotus-feet of the Bhagavan. He has been made by God Himself the pillar round whom all the planets, stars, and the luminary bodies are revolving always and with great force in the Zodiac and in the celestial Heavens. The Devas also worship him. He, resplendent in his own glory, illumines and manifests all. As beasts tied to yoke go on tilling, so the planets and stars, fixed on the Zodiac, go quickly round and round this Dhruva, the Pole Star; some nearer, some further distant in spheres, propelled by Vayu. As the hawks hover round the sky, so the above-mentioned planets, go completely round and round under their own Karmas and controlled by the Vayu in the sky. Thus all the luminaries do not fall to the ground, as they are kept up in their respective positions by the favour of the union of Prakriti and Purusa. Some say that this Jyotischakra, the celestial Heavens (the Zodiac) is S'is'umara. It is kept duly in its position for the purpose of holding things up by the power of the Bhagavan. Hence it does not fall. It is resting with its body coiled round and with its head lower down. O Muni! Dhruva, the son of Uttanapada is staying at the tail end. And, in addition to him, also at the tail rests Brahma, the Sinless Prajapati, worshipped by the Gods, Agni, Indra and Dharma. Thus the creation is at the tail and the Saptarsimandal is staying at his waist. Thus the celestial wheel (Jyotischakra) is resting with his coils turned in a right-hand direction. On his right side are found the Uttarayana Naksattras, fourteen in number from Abhijit to Punarvasu and on his left side are found the other fourteen Daksinayanam Naksattras from Pusya to Uttarasadha. O Son of Brahma! Thus the Naksattras form the coil-shaped body of the S'is'umara, the Zodiac; half the Naksattras on the one side and the other half Naksattras on the other. His back is on the Heavenly Ganges named Ajavithi. Punarvasu and Pusya form the right and left side of the loins; Ardra and As'les'a form the right and left feet (westward); Abhijit and Uttarasadha form the right and left nostrils. O Devarsi! S'ravana and Purvasadha form the right and left eyes respectively; so say the persons that form the Kalpanas (fancies). Dhanistha and Mula form his right and left ears; Magha, etc., the eight Daksinayanam Naksattras form the bones on the left side. O Muni! Mrigasirsa, the Uttarayana Naksattras form the bones on his right side, S'atabhisa and Jyestha form the right and left shoulders. Agasti (the Canopus) forms the upper jaw and Yama, the lower jaw. The planet Mars forms his face; Saturn forms his organ of generation; Brihaspati forms the hump on the shoulders; the Sun, the Lord of the planets, forms his breast; Narayana remains in the heart; and the Moon is in his mind. (Note S'is'umara is also the constellation Dolphinus and is sometimes meant for the polar star.) O Narada! The two As'vins form the nipples on his breast; Us'ana forms his navel; the Mercury is his Prana and Apana; Rahu is his neck and Ketu is all over his body and the stars are reigning all over the hairs of his body. This Zodiac is the body composed of the Devas of that All Pervading Bhagavan. So every intelligent person should daily meditate this S’is’umara in the Sandhya time, with perfect purity and keeping himself Mauna (silent), and with his whole heart. Then he should repeat the following mantras and get up and say “Thou art the Substratum of all the luminaries, we bow down to Thee; Thou createst and destroyest all. Thou art the Lord of all the celestials. Thou art the Adipurusa, the foremost of all the Purusas; we meditate fully on Thee. The planets, Naksattras, and the stars are Thy body. The Daiva is established in Thee alone. Thou destroyest the sins of those that compose the Mantras. The sins are completely destroyed for the time being of him who bows down or remembers Thee in the morning, afternoon and evening.”

1-9. Narayana said O Devarsi! The Sphere of Rahu (the ascending node) is situated one Ayuta Yoyanas below the Sun.

Rahu, the son of Simhika is moving there like a Naksattra. This Rahu swallows up both the Sun and the Moon and He has got immortality and capability to travel in the sky. The Sun’s rays go up to one Ayuta Yoyanas. The Asura Rahu thus covers his rays. So the sphere of the Moon extends upto the twelve thousand Yoyanas. Rahu covers the field of the thirteen thousand Yoyanas. So he covers both the Sun and the Moon. Desire to take the vengeance of the previous enmity, he covers them during the time of Parva (the festivals). This planet wants to cover them from a distance. Hearing this, the Bhagavan Visnu hurls His Sudars’an Chakra against Rahu. This Chakra (disc) is encircled with the fiery flames and is very terrible. When all the quarters were filled with its violent flames, Rahu became instantly alarmed and fled away from the distance. O Devarsi! This is known as the eclipse known amongst the mortals. Below the sphere of Rahu, there are the other pure Lokas situated. O Sattama! The Siddhas, Charanas, and Vidyadharas live in those Lokas. Their dimensions are one Ayuta Yoyanas.

10. O Devarsi! Below them live the Yaksas, Raksasas, Pis’achas, Pretas and Bhutas with their excellent Viharas (residences).

11-34. The learned people call this Antariksa. It extends upto where the wind blows violently and where the clouds appear. O Best of the twice-born! Below this Antariksa is this earth, measuring one hundred Yoyanas. All the articles and things of the earth are found here; birds herons, cranes and ducks all fly over the earth. The earth extends upto this. Now is described the configuration of the earth. O Devarsi! At the lower part of this earth there are seven places (caves or nether regions). Their diameter is one Ayuta Yoyanas. In all the seasons, all sorts of enjoyments can be had at these places. The first is Atala; the second is Vitala. Next come in orderSutala, Talatala, Mahatala. Rasatala, and lastly (the seventh) the Patala. O Vipra! Thus the seven holes or regions are reckoned. These are termed the Vila-Svargas and they yield the happinesses, greater than those of the Heavens. These are all filled with lovely amorous enjoyments, prosperity and happiness. They are crowded with gardens and Viharas (the places of enjoyments). And these Viharas are all decorated tastefully so as to furnish special tastes of enjoyments. The powerful Daityas, Danavas, and Snakes enjoy here great happiness incessantly, united lovingly with their sons, wives and friends. The householders also pass their time in ease and enjoyments, surrounded by their friends and attendants. They are all Mayavis (Magicians) and their resolves are not thwarted; they are more than God in this respect and they are filled with desires. They all live with joy and in enjoyments and they find pleasure in all the seasons. Maya, the Lord of Maya had built separate cities, as he liked, in those nether regions. Besides he has created thousands of dwelling-houses, palaces, and town-gates, studded with gems and jewels.

The assembly halls, Chatvaras, and Chaityas are elaborately decorated and rare even to the Suras. The Nagas and Asuras live in those houses with their consorts; doves and pigeons and female Mayina birds are hovering there. In those places many plots marked out artificially and excellent rows of palatial buildings of the Lords of those Vivaras adorn there. Very big gardens also exist there. All these cheer the minds; and, to add to their beauty, many places of fruits and flowers are close by, fit for the comfort and enjoyments of the ladies. The tanks and pools of water are crowded with various birds; the lakes are filled with clear waters and the Pathina fishes abound there. The aquatic animals move in the waters, violently agitating them. Various kinds of lotuses, Kumud, Utpala, Kahlara, blue lotus, red lotus, are fully blown in these lakes or reservoirs of water. The gardens there are all overcrowded with the Viharas of the inhabitants there and echoed with the sweet melodious music, pleasing to the senses. For there, these places seem to vie with the Heavens. No fear is there, whether during the day or during the night. The gems on the crest of snakes constantly illumine the environments and there is no darkness there at any time. The food there is prepared with the divine medicines and they drink and bathe with these medicinal plants; so no disease attacks them. Old age, fever, indigestion, paleness, sweats, bad smells, or loss of energy or any other source of trouble cannot trouble them. The people are always happy and good. Only they fear the Teja of the Bhagavan and His Sudars'an disc; and they fear nothing else. When the Teja of the Bhagavan enters, the women's abortions take place.

1-32. Narayana said O Vipra! In the first beautiful region Atala, the exceedingly haughty son of the Danava Maya, nanned Bala, is living. He has created the ninety-six Mayas. All the requisites of the inhabitants are obtained by them. The other Mayavis know one or two of these. None of them are capable to know all, as they are exceedingly difficult to be carried out. When this powerful Bala yawned, the three classes of women were produced, fascinating to all the Lokas. They were named Pums'chali (or unchaste woman) Svairini, (an adultress) and Kamini (a lovely women). When any man, beautiful and lovely to them, enters into their Atala region, they, with the help of the Hataka sentiment (of love), generate in him, while in solitude, the power to enjoy (copulate) and with their sweet smiles and amorous lovely looks and with great caution embrace him thoroughly and begin to converse with him and with amorous gestures and postures, and thus please him well. When the people enjoy this Hatakarasa, they think often and often, that they themselves have become gods, they have become Siddhas and powerful like Ayuta elephants; being blind with vanity and finding them endowed with powers and prosperity, they think themselves so repeatedly and constantly. O Narada! Thus the position in Atala has been described. Now hear, the description of the second region Vitala. Vitala is situated below the earth. There the Bhagavan Bhava, worshipped by all the Devas, has assumed the name of HatakesVara and is staying there coupled with Bhavani, surrounded by His attendants specially for the increase of the creation of Brahma. The river Hataki flows there and has Her origin from the essences (Semen virile) of them both. Fire, augmented by the help of the wind, begins to drink it. When the Fire leaves that, making a Phutkara noise (i.e., blowing out air through the mouth), the gold, named Hataka, is created. This gold is very much liked by the Daityas. The Daitya women use this gold always for their ornaments.

Below Vitala is Sutala. It is reckoned as of some special importance. O Muni! The highly meritorious Bali, the son of Virochana lives here. The Bhagavan Vasudeva, brought down this Bali into Sutala, for the welfare of Indra. He assumed the body of Trivikrama and gave to Bali all the wealth of the three Lokas, all the Laksmi went to him and installed him in the position of the Lord of the Daityas. What more can be said than this, that what prosperity, wealth and riches that Indra could not obtain, that S'ri Laksmi Devi Herself has followed Bali. Bali, as the Lord of Sutala, has become entirely fearless, remains here upto this day and is worshipping Vasudeva. O Narada! It is said by the high-minded persons that when Vasudeva Himself, the Controller of all, appeared as a beggar, Bali gave him land, and, therefore, on account of making gift to a good person, he acquired so much prosperity. But this cannot be reasonable. For, it is not at all reasonable to cast the effects of making this gift on Narayana, O Narada! Who is Self-manifest by His own Extraordinary Glory and Who is Himself filled with all AisVarya (prosperity) and Who can bestow the Highest Goal of life and other requirements of men. This Narayana is the Deva of the Devas; if anybody takes His name, when in the greatest distress, he gets himself immediately freed from the Gunas, the cause of bondage due to his Karma. All persons perform many Yogas and follow the paths advised by the Samkhya method, with their minds directed to the All-Controller Bhagavan, to abandon all sorts of troubles and miseries. O Narada! Know that the Bhagavan does not shew us His Favour when he gives us greatest wealth and prosperity. For the wealth and riches are the offspring of Maya and the source of all worries, miseries and mental troubles; and one is liable to forget the Bhagavan when one gets such a wealth. The Bhagavan is pervading all this universe and is full of wisdom; and He is seeing always all the ways and means; He took away, in the way of begging, rather cheated all that Bali had, leaving only his body; and at last, finding no other means, fastened him by the Varuna Pas'a (noose), threw him in the middle of the mountain cleft (cave) and then has stationed Himself at his door as a Door¬ keeper. Once, out of his extreme devotion, Bali did not care at all for his difficulties, troubles, or miseries. Rather he gave out that Indra, whose minister is Brihaspati had acted very foolishly. For when the Bhagavan becomes very graciously pleased, he wanted from Him ordinary wealth. But what will the wealth of the Trilokas avail? It is a quite insignificant thing. Surely, He is an illiterate and stupid brute who, for mere wealth, leaves the Bhagavan, Who is the Fountain of all Good Wishes to the Humanity. My grandfather Prahlada, who was highly fortunate, who was devoted to the God and who was always ready to do good to others, he did not ask for any other thing than the servantship of God (the Dasya Bhava). When his powerful father died, the Bhagavan wanted to give him unbounded wealth; but the Bhagavata (devoted) Prahlada did not want that. None of us, who are marked with so many deficiencies can know the nature of the Bhagavan Vasudeva, Whose omnipotence cannot be compared and all these manifested worlds are but His Upadhis (adjuncts, limitations). O Devarsi! Thus Bali, the Lord of Daityas, the highly respected and renowned in all the Lokas, is reigning in Sutala. Hari Himself is his Door-keeper. Once the King Havana, the source of torment to all the people, went out to conquer the whole world; and when he entered Sutala, that Hari, ever ready to show Grace to His devoted, threw him at a distance of one Ayuta Yoyanas by the toe of His foot. Thus by the grace of the Devadeva Vasudeva, Bali is reigning in Sutala, and enjoying all sorts of pleasures, without any equal anywhere.

1-37. Narayana said O Narada! The cave lower down than Sutala is Talatala! The Lord of Tripura, (the three cities) the great Maya Danava is the Ruler of this region. MahesVara, the Doer of good to the three Bhuvanas, burnt his three cities; but at last, being pleased with his devotion. He rescued him. Thus Maya, by the favour of that God, has regained his own kingdom and the enjoyments thereof. This Maya Danava is the Teacher (Acharya) of the Mayavi sect and the cult thereof; and he is skilled in various Mayas or all sorts of the magic powers. All the fierce demons, of cruel temper, worship him for their prosperities in their various enterprises. Next to this Talatala is the most renowned Mahatala. The sons of Kadru, the very angry Snakes, live here. They are many headed. O Vipra! I now mention to you the names of the famous amongst them Kuhaka, Taksaka, Susena, and Kaliya. These all have very wide hoods and they all are very strong; they all are of cruel temper. Their kinsmen also are so. They are always afraid of Garuda, the King of birds. Surrounded with their sons, wives, friends and acquaintances, they live happily, well skilled in various sports and pleasures. Lower down this Mahatala is Rasatala. The Daityas, Danavas and Pani Asuras live here. Besides these, there live the Nivata Kavachas of the Hiranyapura city and the Asuras named Kaleyas, the enemies of the Devas. These all are naturally very energetic and brave; their powers are baffled by the Tejas of the Bhagavan and they live like snakes in this region. The other Asuras that were driven and were afraid of the Mantras, uttered by Sarama, the messenger of Indra, live here too. O Narada! Lower down is Patala, where live Vasuki, the Chief of the snakes, and others named S'ankha, Kulika, SVeta, Dhananjaya, Mahas'ankha, Dhritarastra, S'ankhachuda, Kamvala, AsVatara, and Devopadattaka, all very angry, of wide hoods, and virulently poisonous. Some of these have five heads, some seven hoods, some ten; some hundred, some others have thousand heads, while some others have on their crests exceedingly luminous jewels. By their rays, they dispel the darkness of the nether regions; but they are awfully prone to anger. At the bottom of this Patala, and at a distance of the thirty Yoyanas; the Portion of Bhagavan in the shape of the infinite Darkness is reigning there. O Devarsi! All the Devas worship this Form. The devotees call Him by the name of Sanakarsana, as He is the manifested emblem of “Aham” and the common ground where the Seer and the Seen blend into one. He is the thousand-headed Controller of all, moving and non-moving; He is of infinite forms; He is S'esa; this whole universe is being held as a mustard bean on His head; He is of the Nature Intelligence and Bliss and He is Self-manifest. When he wants to destroy all this during the Pralaya, the very powerful Sankarsana Rudra, well arrayed with the eleven Vyuhas, military (squadrons) arrangements, springs up from Him. From His Central Eyebrow, looking wide with His Three Eyes and raising His Trident, resplendent with three flames. All the (prominent) principal snakes, ruling over many others, come to Him during the nights filled with devotion and surrounded with Bhaktas (devotees) and bow down to Him with their heads bent low and look at each other's faces, enlightened with the lights from the jewels shining with clear lustre, on the nails of the red toes of His Lotus- Feet. At that time their faces become brilliant with the rays emitting from the jewels on the top of their very gay encircled hoods; and their cheeks look beautiful and shining. The daughters of the Naga Raja also do like this; when very beautiful rays come out of their perfectly excellent bodies. Their arms are wide extended; they look very clear and they are beautifully white. They use always Sandalpaste, Aguru and Kasmiri unguents. Being overpowered by the amorous passion, due to their contact with those scented things, they look at Him with bashful glances and sweet smiles and expect Asiss (benedictions) from Him. And then His eyes roll maddened with love and express signs of kindness and mercy. The Bhagavan Ananta Deva is of boundless strength; His attributes are infinite; He is the ocean of infinite qualities. He is the Adi Deva, of a very good nature and His Nature is highly luminous. He has abandoned anger and envy and He wants the welfare of all. All the Devas worship Him and He is the repository of all Sattvic qualities.

The Devas, Siddhas, Asuras, Uragas, Vidyadharas, Gandharbas, and Munis always meditate on Him. On account of His constant Mada Raga the enthusiasm and intoxication, His sight appears intoxicated and His eyes look perturbed with emotions. He is always pleasing to those who surround him and to the Devas by His sweet nectar-like words.

The Vaijayanti garland hangs from His neck; it never wanes and it is always decorated with the fresh and clear Tulasi leaves. The maddened bees make their humming noises incessantly and thus add to the beauty. He is the Deva of the Devas and He wears a blue coloured cloth and He is ornamented with only one earring. He (the God Visnu) Undecaying and Immutable; resting His fleshy arms on the Halakakuda (the lofty portion of the plough), He is upholding the golden girdle as the elephant Airavata of Indra upholds the golden girdle. O Narada! The devotees describe Him as the Source of this Leela of the Universe and the Controller of the Devas.

English translation

1-9. Narayana said O Devarsi! Sanatana, the son of Brahma, recites thus in the assembly of the Devas, the glories of the Bhagavan Ananta Deva, and worships Him, thus How can one of ordinary sight and understanding grasp the real nature of Brahma, Whose mere Glance enables the Prakrit! work Her Gunas in the Creation, Preservation and Destruction of this Universe! Him Whose nature has no beginning nor end; Who though One, has created all this Prapahcha (the universe of five elements) as a covering to the Atman (the True Self). He has made the Sat and Asat, out of his infinite compassion, this universe, full of cause and effect, visible in His One and only one S'uddha Sattva nature where even the very powerful lion is imitating his Leela (Pastime), void of all defects, to bring under His control the minds of His own kinsmen. (Note This Ananta Deva is the Ruling Principle in the Fourth Dimensional Space.) To Whom else, then, the persons, desirous of Moksa, will take refuge, the mere hearing or reciting Whose Name, in a fallen or a distressed condition, or merely in jest, takes away instantly all the sins! He is upholding the earth with the mountains, oceans, rivers and all the beings as if an atom on his thousand heads. He is infinite. His power knows no decrease in any time. No one can describe his actions even if one had thousand tongues to speak. He is of an infinite strength, of the endless high qualities and of unlimited understanding. Thus staying at the bottom of the earth, the Bhagavan Ananta Deva is upholding with ease this earth for her protection, unaided and independent. O Muni! The people get the fruits of their actions and desires as they want and as they have followed the paths laid down in the S'astras and become accordingly kings, men, deer or birds or other creatures in other states. O Narada! This I have described, as you questioned me before, the various and dissimilar fruits of various actions, done according to the dictates of the Dharma and the S'astras.

10. Narada said "O Bhagavan! Kindly describe to me now why has the Bhagavan created so many diversities, when the Karmas, done by the Jivas, are the same."

11-28. Narayana said O Narada! So many different states arise because the S'raddhas of the doers are so very different. The fruits differ because the S'raddhas vary, some being Sattvik, some Rajasik and some Tamasik. If the S'raddha be Sattvik, happiness comes always; if it be Rajasik, incessant pain and misery is the result; if it be Tamasik, misery comes and the loss of the knowledge of good or bad is the result. Thus the fruits differ as the S'raddha varies. O Best of Dvijas! Thousands and thousands of states occur to a man as the result of their Karmas, done under the influence of the beginningless Avidya (Nescience). O Dvijottama! I will now deal in detail with their varieties; hear. Behind this Triloki, below this earth and over the Atala, the Piths named Agnisvattas and other forefathers live. Those Pitris stay there, and, practising deep Samadhis, they offer always, to their best blessings to their own Gotra (families) respectively. There Yama, the God of the Pitris gives punishment to the dead brought there by His messengers according to their Karmas and faults. By the command of the Bhagavan, the Yama, surrounded by his own Ganas (persons), judges and does full justice according to the Karmas that they had done and the sins they had committed. He sends always those of his messengers who obey his order and know the Tattva of Dharma, and who are posted to their respective duties to carry out what He commands. The writers of the S'astras describe twenty-one Narakas or hells; others say there are twenty-eight hells. Now hear their names Tamisra, Andha Tamisra, Raurava, Maharaurava, Kumbhipaka, Kalasutra, Asipatrakanana, S'ukaramukha, Andhakupa, Krimibhojana, Taptamurti, Samdams'a, Vajrakantaka, S'almali, Vaitarani, Puyoda, Pranarodha, Vis'asana, Lalabhaksa, Sarameyadana, Avichi, Apahpana, Ksarakardama, Raksogana, Sambhoja, S'ulaprota, Dandas'uka, Avatarodha, Paryavartanaka, and Suchimukha. These are the twenty-eight Narakas or hells. (N.B. These are 29).

These hells are very tormenting. O Son of Brahma! The embodied beings (jivas) suffer these according to their own Karmas respectively.

Here ends the Twenty-first Chapter of the Eighth Book on the narrative of hells in the Maha Puranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said “O Everlasting One! O Muni! Now describe the various actions that lead to these tormenting hells. I like to hear about them in detail.”

2-52. Narayana said O Devarsi! He who steals other’s sons, wives, and riches, the wicked fellow is taken to Yama by His messengers. Tied down hard and fast by the terrible messengers of Yama, by the Kala rope (rope of time), he is taken to the Tamisra hell, the place of many torments. There the Yama’s attendants punish him, beat him and threaten him; and he becomes stupefied, and feels himself very weak, distressed and ultimately faints. He who deceives another’s husband and enjoys his wives; the Yama’s servants drag him down to Andha Tamisra hell. There he suffers any amount of pain and suffering. He loses instantly his eyesight and his brain gets upset. His state resembles that of a tree when its trunk is broken. For this reason the ancient sages called this Andha Tamisra. He who being subject to “My” and “Mine” quarrels with others and being very much attached, maintains his family, leaves his families here and goes with his bad tendencies to the Raurava hell, very horrible to all. The animals whom he injured and killed before in this world, assume the form of Ruru animal and torment him in the next. For this reason, the intelligent knowers of Purana, call this Raurava. The ancients say, that Ruru is more cruel and ferocious than snakes. These animals live in that hell; hence it is termed Maharaurava. He who torments others, goes to this hell and these Rurus, the flesh-eaters, spring on his body and bite and eat his flesh. He who cooks other animals and birds, that cruel and ferocious, thus deluded, is cooked in return on the hot oil in the Kumbhipaka hell by the Yama Dutas for thousand years. He who quarrels with his Piths and the Brahmanas, is taken by the Yama Dutas to the Kalasutra hell and there be burnt by the fire and Sun. There that hellish person, being troubled very nnuch, inside and outside by hunger and thirst, sometimes sits, sometimes sleeps, sometimes walks, and sometimes runs hither and thither. O Devarsi! He who transgresses the path of the Vedas in times other than those of calamity and danger and follows other paths even to a trifling distance, that sinner is taken by Yamadutas to Asipatra Kanana and there whipped severely. Not being able to bear that, he runs wildly to and fro and is pierced by the sharpedged Asi leaves on both his sides. His whole body being cut asunder, he cries “Oh! I am killed!”and faints away. Then feeling himself pained very much, he tumbles down at every step. Thus the sinner suffers for violating the path of the Vedas. The King or that royal personage who gives orders of punishment, not approved by Dharma, and hurts or punishes the body of a Brahmana, the Yama’s servants throw him down into the S’ukaramukha Hell and grind down his body with great force as a sugarcane is ground down. He then cries aloud bitterly, he gets fainted and becomes stupefied. He is crushed by them and suffers all sorts of pains and miseries. Again he who knows the feelings of others when they are tormented, pains those insects who live on other’s blood as bugs, etc., and who does not realise other’s pains, goes, as a punishment for that fault to the Andhakupa Hell. There he is pained by the beasts, birds, deers, reptiles, mosquitoes, bugs, louses, flies and Dandas’ukas and various other cruel animals.

There he lives in his ugly body and roams like a beast. The man who, getting even a trifling wealth and food-stuff, does not perform the five Maha Yajhas and gives not a share of that to the Devas and feeds his own belly with that like a crow, is taken by the ferocious Yamadutas to the worst Krimibhojana Naraka for his sinful deeds. This hell is one lakh Yoyanas wide and is the reservoir of worms. It causes terror to the inhabitants of the hell. That sinner assumes the form of an insect and is eaten up on return by the insects and thus passes his time there. When a man does not give any share to the Atithis or the guests and does not offer oblations to the Fire and eats his food, he, too, goes to the above hell. When a man in times other than that of great danger and distress, follows the livelihood of a thief and robs gold and jewels forcibly of a Brahmin or any other person, he is taken to this hell and the Yama’s servants pierce and cut off his skin by a fiery hot iron cutter.

When a man goes for an illicit cohabitation to one who is not fit to be approached and when a woman goes similarly to an unapproachable man, both of them are taken, being whipped, to this hell by the servants of Yama! Where the man is obliged to embrace a fiery hot iron figure of woman and vice versa. When a man goes to all sorts of wombs for unnatural crimes, he is taken to Vajra Kantaka Naraka and placed on the top of an iron S’almalT wood. When a King or any royal personage, subject to the Pasanda Dharma (i.e., the unrighteous path) breaks the boundary of a law, he for that sin goes to Vaitarani, the ditch round that hell. There the aquatic animals eat his body all around. O Narada! Yet neither his life nor his body parts with him. He is thrown, for his Karma, into the rivers filled with faeces, urine, puss, blood, hairs, bones, nails, flesh, marrow, fat, etc., and he becomes very much troubled.

Those who are the husbands of Vrisalis (girls under twelve years of age, who have attained menstruation; or the barren women), void of any S’aucha (cleanliness) or shame and without any Achara Vyavahara (the following of one’s natural customs and rites) and those who follow Pas’vachara (like beasts), they meet with a very hard fate and are thrown into this hell filled with faeces, urine, cough, blood and other impurities and when they feel hungry, are forced to eat the above things. When those persons that are twice born, maintain dogs and asses, etc., and when they are addicted to hunting, and kill daily, for nothing, beasts, birds and deer, those evildoers are specially watched by the servants of Yama and when they retire, they tear them asunder by shooting bows at them.

He who kills animals, engaged vainly in a sacrifice and addicted to haughty tempers and habits, is thrown into this hell by the Yama's servants and whipped very severely. The twice-born that copulates blindly with a savarna wife, is taken by the Yama's messengers into the hell filled with semen and he is made to drink that. Those who are addicted to robbery, who put fire to other's houses, who make others drink poison, those that are treacherous, and who destroy the interest of the villagers and other persons, those kings or the royal personages are taken after their death by the Yamadutas to the Sarameyadana hell. There seven hundred and twenty dogs, very wonderful to behold, come furiously and with great force and energy, over them and feed on them. O Narada! This hell is denominated as Sarameyadana Naraka and it is very horrible. Now I will describe to you the other hells Avichi and others.

Here ends the Twenty-second Chapter of the Eighth Book on the narrative of the sins leading to hells in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-31. Narayana said O Narada! When persons, impelled by sinful motives, always speak false at the time of giving evidence or at the time of taking or giving money, they, after their death, go to the terrible hell, named Avichi. There, from the summit of a mountain, one hundred Yojanas high they are dropped at once down below with their heads inverted down. Here the solid ground looks like water and appears like waves. Therefore it is called Avichi, resembling like Avichi waves. Here if the sinner’s body be cut to small pieces, still he does not die; rather he gets a new body when his body is all cut to pieces. O Son of Brahma! When a man, be he a Brahmin, Ksattriya, or a Vais’ya, drinks the Soma (wine) or due to inadvertence drinks wine, he is thrown into this hell. O Muni! The Yama’s servants make him drink the molten iron. When a vile person being maddened by the pride of his self-learning, birth, austerities or Varna and As’rama, does not pay his respect duly to his superiors, he is thrown into the Ksarakardama hell with his head downwards.

He suffers a tremendous pain there. When a man or woman out of delusion, performs the human sacrifices (where men are immolated as victims), he or she has to eat the human flesh here. Those that killed before all sorts of beasts, come after their death into this abode of Yama, all united and like butchers, cut each other’s flesh by pickaxes, etc., and drink their blood and dance and sing repeatedly. They do, in fact, what the terrible Raksasas do. When persons meet with the innocent persons, wishing to live in villages or forests and raise their confidence by various such means and make them attached and finally pierce them by pointed S’ulas (trident) or pointed swords and kill them as if they were ordinary play things, they are taken after their death by the Yama dutas and thrown into S’uladi Naraka (pierced by S’ulas). They are pierced there by S’ulas and become overpowered by hunger and thirst. Herons and cranes, with their sharp beaks hunt after them to and fro. Thus tormented, they remember all their sins done in their previous lives. Those who follow stray paths and trouble the other beings as the serpents do, they fall into the Dandas’uka hell. Here worms with five faces and seven faces come from all sides and eat them as a fierce serpent devours a mouse. Those who confine persons in dark holes, a dark room or a dark cave they are taken by the Death servants with their arms uplifted and confined to similar dark caves, filled with poison, fire and smoke. When a Brahmin householder, seeing a guest coming to his house in a reasonable (proper) time, casts a furious sinful glance at him as if to burn him, the Death's attendants, the herons with thunderbolt like beaks, the crows and the Vatas and other birds and very fierce vultures all come and forcibly take out the eyes of that person who committed the aforesaid sins. When person elated with vanity of his riches become too haughty and doubt over their Gurus and when their hearts and faces wither withal away, as it were, with the thoughts of their income and expenditure, and being always unhappy, hoard up money always like the Brahma Pis'achas, the Death's officers take them for these Karmas to Suchimukha Narakas and pierce all over his body with pins, as a tailor does with his cloth. O Devarsi! True, sinful persons thus suffer hundred thousand hells. All these are very painful and tormenting. Out of these the abovenamed twenty hells give the greatest sufferings. O Devarsi!

The sinners suffer various pains in hells and virtuous persons go to the several spheres where all sorts of happinesses and pleasures reign. O Maharsi! I have described to you many forms of practising one's Sva Dharma; yet know this verily that the worship of the Devi's Gross Form and of Her Virat Form is the Chief Dharma of all the persons. By worshipping the Devi, the persons have not to go to the hells. In fact, when the Devi Bhagavati is worshipped. She Herself arranges for crossing the person to the other shore of this ocean of transmigration of existence.

Here ends the Twenty-third Chapter of the Eighth Book on the description of the remaining hells in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad

Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narada said “O Bhagavan! Of what sort is the Dharma, i.e., the worship of the Devi? In what way shall we worship Her, so that She gives us the Highest Place? What are the methods and forms of Her Worship? Where and when shall we worship Her! So that the Durga Devi saves us from the above mentioned hells.”

3-20. Narayana said O Devarsi! You are the foremost of the Knowers of Truth. I will therefore tell you how the Devi gets pleased and how Her worship is conducted according to the Dharma. Hear attentively. O Narada! I will also describe the nature of Sva Dharma. Hear that also. When one worships, with due rites and ceremonies, the Devi in this beginningless world. She Herself removes all the terrible dangers and difficulties. Hear the rules how the people worship the Devi. When the Pratipat Tithi (the first day after the Full or New Moon) comes, one should worship the Devi with a present of rice, etc., with ghee (clarified butter) and give that to the Brahmins. Then one becomes completely free from any disease. On the second day (Dvitiya Tithi), one must serve the Mother of the Universe with sugar and give that to the Brahmins; he then becomes long-lived. On the third (tithi) on commencing with the Pooja, the worshipper must give milk to the Devi and give that to a best Brahmin; he is then freed from all his troubles and ailings. On the fourth (tithi) the worshipper is to offer a cake of flour to the Devi and then give that to a Brahmin; no obstacles come to that man. On the fifth tithi, the worshipper is to offer plantains to the Devi and then to give that to the Brahmins; he thus becomes intelligent. On the sixth tithi, the worshipper gives honey to the Devi and then that to a Brahmin; he gets thus the beauty of his body. On the seventh tithi, the Brahmin gives to the Devi the Naivedya (an offering of rice, etc.) with Gur (sugarcandy) and then that to the Brahmins; he then becomes freed from his mental sorrows. On the eighth day, if one gives cocoanut, one is freed of one’s remorse, etc.; on the ninth, if anybody gives fried rice (Laj), he will have his happiness increased both in this world and in the next. O Muni! If on the tenth tithi, one offers to the Devi black Til (sesamum) and then to the Brahmin, he becomes free from the fear of death. If, on the eleventh tithi, (ekadas’i) one gives the curd to the Devi and then to the Brahmin, one becomes a great favourite of the Devi. If on the twelfth day, one offers to the Devi and to the Brahmin the Chipitaka rice or grain (well parched and flattened) one becomes a favourite of the Devi. If, on the thirteenth day one gives to the Bhagavati grains and then that to a Brahmin, one gets progeny. If, on the fourteenth day, one gives to the Devi the flour of fried barley or other grains (S’aktu) and then that to a Brahmin, one becomes a favourite of S’iva. If on the Full Moon day, one offers to the Devi Payasa and then that to a Brahmin, then one’s Piths are uplifted to the higher regions.

21-42. O Muni! On the above tithis, if one forms daily Homas, as stated in the Puja Chapter, the Devi becomes very pleased. The articles corresponding to the tithi as mentioned above destroy all the evils and inauspicious omens.

On Sunday, it is a rule to give an offering of Payasam (a food prepared of rice, milk, and sugar). On Monday, the milk; on Tuesday, the nice plantains; on Wednesday, the fresh butter; on Thursday, the gud or sugarcandy, Friday, the white sugar, and on Saturday, it is a rule to give the clarified butter of cow’s milk. Now hear what should be offered on the Naksattras. The following are the Naivedyas given to each of the Naksattras, in due order, from As’vini Clarified butter (ghee), sesamum (Til), sugar, curd, milk, Kilatak (Malai, milk), Dadhikurchi (Malai Curd), Modaka (a kind of sweetmeat, a confection) Phenika, Ghrita Mandaka, a sort of sweet meat of wheaten flour and gur, Vatapattra, Ghritapura (Ghior), Vataka, Kharjura juice (of the datepalm), a sort of sweet meat of Gur and

gram, honey, S'urana, Gur Prithuka, grapes, datepalms, Charakas, Apupa, Navanita (fresh butter), mudga, modaka, and Matulinga.

Now hear what are given in the Viskambha and the other Yogas. The World Mother becomes very much pleased when one offers to Her the following things Gur, honey, ghee, milk, curd, Takra, apupa, fresh butter, Karkati, Kusmanda, Modaka, Panasa, plantain, Jambu (rose-apple), mangoe, sesamum, oranges, Dadima, (pomegranate) Vadari (Jujube) the Dhatri (Amalaki) fruit, Payasa, Prithuka, gram, cocoanut, Jambira. Kaseru, and S'urana. The auspicious events occur when these are offered. The intelligent persons have thus decided to give the above on Viskambha and the other Yogas. Now hearI will describe the things that are offered on the respective Karanas Kamsara, Mandaka, Pheni, Modaka, Vatapattraka, Ladduka, Ghritapura, Til (Sesamun), curd, ghee, and honey. These are to be offered devotedly to the Devi on the respective Karanas. Now I will describe to you the other offerings very pleasing to the Devi. Hear. O Narada! Hear it with great attention and love. On the third tithi of the bright fortnight, in the month of Chaitra, one is to worship duly the Madhuka tree and offer Pahcha Khadya (the five sorts of food). So hear what articles are to be offered according to the rules that are laid down on the third day of the white fortnight of the other months. The Gur, in the month of Vais'akh; the honey, in Jyaistha; the fresh butter, in Asadha; the curd, in S'ravana; the S'arkara, in Bhadra; the Payas'a, in AsVin; the pure milk, in Kartik; the Pheni, in Agrahayana; the Dadhi Kurchika in Pausa; the clarified butter of cow's milk, in Magha, and the cocoanut offerings, in the month of Phalguna. Thus with these twelve sorts of offerings, one is to worship the Devi in the twelve months respectively.

43-69. One should worship the Devi in the Madhuka tree with these names Mangala, Vaisnavi, Maya, Kala-ratri, Duratyaya, Mahamaya, Matangi, Kali, Kamalavasini, S'iva, Sahasracharana, and Sarva mangalarupini (One name for each of the 12 months). Finally, to bring the vow to a good issue and to have one's desires fulfilled with greater success, one is to sing stotras (hymns) to the MahesVari, the Controller of all the gods, in that Madhuka tree, thus Thou art lotus-eyed; obeisance to Thee! Thou art Jagaddhatri, the Upholdress of the Universe, I bow down to Thee; Thou art MahesVari, Maha Devi, and Mahamangalarupini (Thou art the great Devi, and Thou dost great good to all). Thou destroyest the sins. Thou givest Moksa or final liberation. Thou art ParamesVari, Thou art the World Mother and Thou art of the nature of the Highest Brahma. Thou art Madadatri (the giver of Mada, the Supreme Felicity and rapture or excessive delight). Thou art maddened with Mada the (Excessive Joy); Thou canst be reached when Thou art given proper veneration; Thou art the the Most High. Thou art Intelligent; Thou art meditated upon by the Munis; and Thou dwellest in the Sun. Thou art the Lord of the several Lokas (worlds); Thou art endowed with the Highest Knowledge; and Thou art of the colour of water at the time of Pralaya (the Universal Dissolution). Thou art worshipped by the Gods and the Asuras for the destruction of the Great Moha. So Great Victory to Thee! Thou art the Rescuer of one from the abode of Death; Thou art worshipped by Yama, Thou art the elder of Yama, Thou art the Controller of Yama and Thou art worshipped by all. Obeisance to Thee! Thou art impartial; Thou controllest all; Thou art perfectly unattached; Thou destroyest the people's worldly attachments; Thou art The One to whom all look for the fructification of their desires; and Thou art the Compassion Incarnate. Thou art, worshipped by the names Kankala Krura, KamaksT; MmaksT Marma bhedini, Madhuryarupas'alini; and Thou art worshipped with the Pranava Om prefixed to all the Stotras and the Mantras. Thou art of the nature of the Seed Maya (mayavija); Thou canst be realised by repeating the mantra and Thou canst be pleased by the deep concentration (Nididyasana) on Thee. Thou canst be reached by all men through their minds and Thou dost things that are pleasing to the Maha Deva. Thou dwellest in the trees As'vattha, Vata (Peepul tree), Neem, Mangoe, Kapittha (wood apple tree), and the tree Kul (Jujube) trees. Thou art the Palms (Jack) tree. Thou art Arka, Karira and Ksira trees. Thou residest in Dugdha valli (the milky juice of plants); Thou art the Compassion Incarnate; and fit to shew mercy. Thou art sincerity and kindness and Thou art the Consort of the Omniscient. So Victory to Thee! O Narada! After the worship, if one performs the stotra above described, to the Devi, the worshipper derives all sorts of Punyams (merits). He who reads daily the Stotra, pleasing to the Devi, becomes freed of all sorts of diseases, pain and freed of his fear of passions, so hard to conquer! What more than this that he who wants money, gets money; who wants Dharma, gets Dharma; he who wants Kama, gets his Kama (objects of desires); and he who wants Moksa, gets Moksa. The Devi is the Awarder of the Chatur Varga fourfold fruits.

If this Stotra be read, the Brahmin becomes Vedavit, the knower of the Vedas; the Ksattriya gets the victory; the Vais'ya gets wealth and the S'udra gets happiness. If this Stotra be read with devotion and attention, the Pitris get undying satisfaction, lasting till Pralaya (the time of universal dissolution). Thus I have described to you the method of worshipping the Devi. The Devas consider it with great attention. He gets the Devi Loka, who performs the worship of the Devi, as above described, with devotion. O Brahmana! When the Devi is thus worshipped, all the desires are fulfilled; all sins are destroyed; and, in the end, one's mind becomes pure and the worshipper is respected and worshipped everywhere. O Son of Brahma! His fear of going into hell is destroyed by the Grace of the Devi; even in dreams, he does not fear anything. By the Grace of Maha Maya, his sons and his grandsons, riches and grains multiply and multiply. He becomes a great and steadfast devotee of the Devi; there is no doubt in this. Now I have described to you completely the rules of worship of the Devi. When one performs this, one becomes freed of the Narakas; and all sorts of good things come to him. O Muni! The Madhuka worship and the monthly worship have been described also. He who performs this Madhuka worship fully, never meets with any disease or obstacles. Now I will describe to you the other five aspects of the Great Devi of the nature of Prakriti. Her Name, Form and Origin give pleasure to all the worlds. O Muni! Now hear this Prakriti Pahchaka, its narrative and the greatness thereof. Know that this is as curious as it gives liberation.

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Eighth Book on the worship of the Devi in the Maha Puranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. S'ri Narayana said This (Highest) Prakriti is recognised as five¬ fold. When She is engaged in the work of Creation, She appears as (1) Durga, the Mother of Ganes'a, (2) Radha, (3) Laksmi, (4) Sarasvati and (5) Savitri.

2-3. Narada replied O Thou, the best of Jhanins! Who is this Prakriti? (Whether She is of the nature of Intelligence or of matter?) Why did She manifest Herself and then again why did She reveal Herself in these five forms? And what are Her characteristics? Now Thou oughtest to describe the lives of all, the different modes of their worship, and the fruits that are accrued thereby. Please also inform me which Forms of them manifested themselves in which different places. Dost Thou please narrate to me all these.

4-18. Narayana said "O Child! Who is there in this world that can describe fully the characteristics of Prakriti! However I will describe to you that much which I heard from my own father, Dharma. Hear. The prefix "Pra" in the word Prakriti means exalted, superior, excellent; and the affix "Kriti" denotes creation. So the Goddess, the Devi Who is the most excellent in the work of creation is known as the Devi Prakriti. To come closer"Pra" signifies the Sattva Guna, the most exalted quality, "Kri" denotes the Rajo Guna and "Ti" denotes the Tamo Guna. (The Sattva Guna is considered as the Highest as it is perfectly clear and free from any impurities whatsoever; the Rajo Guna is considered intermediate as it has this defectthat it spreads a veil over the reality of things, so as not to allow men to understand the True Reality, while the Tamo Guna is considered worst as it completely hides the Real Knowledge).

So when this Intelligence of the nature of Brahma, beyond the three attributes, gets tinged with the above three Gunas and becomes omnipotent, then She is superior (Pradhana) in the work of creation. Hence She is styled as Prakriti.

O Child Narada! The state just preceding that of creation is denoted by "Pra"; and "Kri" signifies creation. So the Great Devi that exists before creation is called Prakriti after creation. The Paramatma by His Yoga (i.e., Maya S'akti, the Holy Ghost) divided Himself into two parts; the right side of which was male and the left side was the female Prakriti.

(Note The Holy Ghost is the principle of Conception and Emanation, Creation). So the Prakriti is of the nature of Brahma. She is eternal. As the fire and its burning power are not different, so there is no separate distinction between Atman and His S'akti, between Purusa and Prakriti. Therefore those that are foremost and the highest of the Yogis do not recognise any difference between a male and a female. All is Brahman. He is everywhere as male and female forever. There is nothing in this world that can exist for a moment even without this Brahman consisting of male and female, (i.e. they are Brahman with Maya manifested). Out of the Will of S'ri Krisna, to create the world Whose Will is all in all, came out at once the Mula Prakriti, the Great Devi Is'vari, (the Lady Controller of the Universe) Brahma with Maya in a state of equilibrium). By Her command came out five Forms of Her, either for the purpose of creation or for bestowing Favour and Grace to the Bhaktas (devotees). Durga the Mother of Ganes'a, comes, as the first, the most auspicious, loved by S'iva. She is Narayani, Visnu Maya, and of the nature of Puma Brahma (the Supreme Brahma). This eternal, all auspicious Devi is the Presiding Deity of all the Devas and is, therefore, worshipped and praised by Brahma and the other Devas, Munis, and Manus. This Bhagavati Durga Devi, (when She gets pleased) destroys all the sorrows, pains and troubles of the Bhaktas that have taken Her refuge, and gives them Dharma, everlasting name and fame, all auspicious things and bliss and all the happiness, nay, the Final Liberation! She is the Greatest Refugeof these Bhaktas that come to Her wholly for protection and are in great distress, whom She saves from all their dangers and calamities. In fact, know this Durga Devi as, verily, the Presiding Deity of the heart of Krisna and as His Highest S'akti, of the nature of the Holy Fire and the Holy Light. She is Omnipotent and resides always with Krisna, the Great God. She is worshipped by all the Siddha Purusas (those that have attained success); the (eighteen) Siddhis all go to Her and when pleased She gives whatever Siddhis (success) that Her Bhaktas want.

19-40. This Great Devi is the intelligence, sleep, hunger, thirst, shadow, drowsiness, fatigue, kindness, memory, caste, forbearance, errors, peace, beauty, and consciousness, contentment, nourishment, prosperity, and fortitude. She is sung in the Vedas and in other S'astras as the Maha Maya, of the nature of the Universe. In reality. She is the All-S'akti of the Universe and She is the S'akti of Krisna. All these qualities are also mentioned in the Vedas. What is mentioned here is a tithe merely, in comparison to that of the Vedas. She has infinite qualities. Now hear of other S'aktis. The second S'akti of the Paramatman is named Padma (Laksmi). She is of the nature of S'uddha Sattva (Higher than Sattva Guna) and is Krisna's Presiding Deity of all wealth and prosperity. This very beautiful Laksmi Devi is the complete master of the senses; She is of a very peaceful temper, of good mood and all-auspicious. She is free from greed, delusion, lust, anger, vanity and egoism. She is devoted to Her husband and to Her Bhaktas; Her words are very sweet and She is very dear to Her husband, indeed, the Life and Soul of Him. This Devi is residing in all the grains and vegetables and so She is the Source of Life of all the beings. She is residing in Vaikuntha as Maha Laksmi, chaste and always in the service of Her husband. She is the Heavenly Laksmi, residing in the Heavens and the royal Laksmi in palaces and the Griha Laksmi in the several families of several householders. O Narada! All the lovely beauty that you see in all the living beings and all the things, it is She; She is the glory and fame of those that have done good and pious works and it is She that is the prowess of the powerful kings. She is the trade of merchants, the mercy of the saints, engaged in doing good to others and the seed of dissensions in those sinful and vicious persons as approved of in the Vedas. She is worshipped by all, reverenced by all. Now I will describe to you about the third S'akti of the Great God who is the Presiding Deity of knowledge, speech, intelligence, and learning.

This third S'akti is named Sarasvati. She is all the learning of this endless Universe and She resides as medha (intelligence) in the hearts of all the human beings; She is the power in composing poetry; She is the memory and She is the great wit, light, splendour and inventive genius. She gives the power to understand the real meaning of the various difficult Siddhanta works; She explains and makes us understand the difficult passages and She is the remover of all doubts and difficulties. She acts when we write books, when we argue and judge, when we sing songs of music; She is the time or measure in music; She holds balance and union in vocal and instrumental music. She is the Goddess of speech; She is the Presiding Deity in the knowledge of various subjects; in argumentations and disputations. In fact all the beings earn their livelihood by taking recourse to Her. She is peaceful and holds in Her hands Vina (lute) and books. Her nature is purely Sattvic (S'uddha Sattva), modest and very loving to S'ri Hah. Her colour is white like ice-clad mountains, like that of the white sandal, like that of the Kunda flower, like that of the Moon, or white lotus. She always repeats the name of Paramatma S'ri Krisna while She turns Her bead composed of jewels. Her nature is ascetic; She is the bestower of the fruits of the ascetism of the ascetics; She is the Siddhi and Vidya of all; She grants always success to all. Were She not here, the whole host of Brahmins would always remain speechless like the dead cluster of persons. What is recited in the Vedas as the Third Devi is the Holy Word, The Third S'akti, Sarasvati. Thus I have described Her. Now hear the glories of the other Devi in accordance with the Vedas. She is the mother of the four colours (castes), the origin of the (six) Vedamgas (the limbs of the Vedas and all the Chhandas, the Seed of all the mantrams of Sandhya vandanam and the Root, the Seed of the Tantras; She Herself is versed in all the subjects. Herself an ascetic, She is the Tapas of the Brahmins; She is the Tejas (Fire) and the caste of the Brahmin caste and embodies in Herself all sorts of Samskaras (tendencies; inclinations); She is the Japam. Pure, known by the names of Savitri and Gayatri, She resides always in the Brahma Loka (the Sphere of Brahma) and is such as all the sacred places of pilgrimages want Her touch for their purification.

41-47. Her colour is perfectly white like the pure crystal. She is purely S'uddha Sattva, of the nature of the Highest Bliss; She is eternal and superior to all. She is of the nature of Para Brahma and is the bestower of Moksa. She is the Fiery S'akti and the Presiding Deity of the Brahma Teja (the fiery spirit of Brahma, and the Brahmanas). The whole world is purified by the touch of Whose Feet, this Savitri Devi is the Fourth S'akti. O Child Narada! Now I will describe to you about the Fifth S'akti, the Devi Radhika. Hear. She is the Presiding Deity of the five Pranas; She Herself is the Life of all; dearer than life even to S'ri Krisna; and She is highly more beautiful and superior to all the other Prakrit! Devis. She dwells in everything; She is very proud of Her good fortune (Saubhagyam); Her glory is infinite; and She is the wife, the left body, as it were, of S'ri Krisna and She is not in any way inferior to Him, either in quality or in the Tejas (Fiery Spirit) or in any other thing. She is higher than the Highest; the Essence of all, infinitely superior, the First of all. Eternal, of the nature of the Highest Bliss, fortunate, highly respected, and worshipped by all. She is, the Presiding Devi of the Rasa Lila of S'ri Krisna. From Her has sprung the Rasa mandalam and She is the Grace and the Ornament of the Rasa mandalam (the dance in a circle in Rasa).

[Note Extracts from a paper on Creation as explained by Hon'ble Justice Sir G. Woodroffe.

The lecturer commenced by pointing out that an examination of any doctrine of creation reveals two fundamental concepts: Those of Being (Kutastha) and Becoming (Bhava); Changelessness and Change; the one and Many. The Brahman or Spirit in its own nature (Svarupa) is and never becomes.

It is the evolutes derived from the Principle of Becoming (Mula Prakriti) which constitute what is called Nature. The latter principle is essentially Movement. The world is displayed by consciousness (chit) in association with Mula Prakriti in cosmic vibration (spandana). Recent Western hypotheses have made scientific “matter” into Maya in the sense that it is but the varied appearances produced in our mind by vibration of and in the single substance ether. The doctrine of vibration (Spandana) is however in India an ancient inheritance. The whole world is born from the varied forms of the initial movement in Mula Prakriti. The problem is how does such multiplicity exist without derogation to the essential unit of its efficient cause, the spirit? The lecturer then made a rapid survey of the Sankhya philosophy on this point which assumes two real and independent principles of Being and Becoming which it calls Purusa and Prakriti and passed from this the easiest dualistic answer to the pure monism of S’ankara which asserted that there was but one Principle of Being, the Sadvastu and Maya, whether considered as a S’akti of IsVara or as the product of such S’akti was Avastu or nothing. He then pointed out that the Tantrik doctrine with which he dealt occupied a middle position between those two points of view. S’iva in the Kularnava Tantra says “Some desire Monism” (Advaitavada), others Dualism (Dvaitavada). Such, however, know not My Truth which is neither Monism nor Dualism (Dvaitadvaita Vivarjita). Tantra is not Dvaitavada for it does not recognise Prakriti as an independent unconscious principle (Achit). It differs from S’ankara’s Advaitavada in holding that Prakriti as a conscious principle of Becoming, that is as S’akti, is not Avastu, though its displayed picture, the world is Maya. It effects a synthesis of the S’ankhya dualism by the conversion of the twin principles of Purusa and Prakriti into the unity which is the ArdhanansVara S’iva S’akti.

As regards other matters it adopts the notions of the Sankhya such as the concepts of Mula Prakriti with the three Gunas, vibration (spandana), evolution (Parinama) of the Vikritis and the order of emanation of the Tattvas. S’akti which effects this exists and is Herself never unconscious (Achit) though It has the power to make the Jiva think It is such. If this were understood one would not hear such nonsense as that the S’aktas (whose religion is one of the oldest in the world) worship material force or gross matter (Jada).

The lecturer then shortly explained the nature of S’akti (S’akti Tattva), a term which derived from the root “S’ak” meant the Divine Power whereby the world was created, manifested and destroyed. In Tantra the power and the Lord who wields it (S’aktiman) are one and the same, S’iva and S’akti are one and the same, S’iva is Brahman, S’akti is Brahman. The first is the transcendent, the second the immanent aspect of the one Brahman, Who is both S’iva and S’akti. The Mother creates (Karya-Vibhavini). The Father wills what She does (Karya-Vibhavaka). From their union creation comes. S’akti is not like the diminutive female figure which is seen on the lap of some Indian images, to which is assigned the subordinate position which some persons consider a Hindu wife should occupy. She is not a handmaid of the Lord but the Lord Himself in Her aspect as Mother of the worlds. This S’akti is both Nirguna and Saguna that is Chit S’akti and Maya S’akti.

After this defining the nature of S’akti by which the world was created, the lecturer commenced an account of its manifestation as the universe, following in the main the S’arada Tilaka written in the eleventh century by Laksmanacharya, the guru of the celebrated

Kashmiran Tantrik, Abhinava Gupta. The following is a very abbreviated summary of this, the main portion of the paper. The lecturer first referred to the Aghanavastha state which was that Niskala S’iva and touching upon the question why S’iva became Sakala (associated with Kala) and creative explained the term Kala and the theory of Adristasristi taught by the Tantra as by other S’astras. The former is according to Sankhya, Mula Prakriti; according to Vedanta, Avidya and according to the S'iva Tantra, S'akti. The latter is the doctrine that the impulse to creation is proximately caused by the Karma of the Jivas. It is the seed of Karma which contains the germ of cosmic will to life. When Karma becomes ripe, there arises the state called Iksana and other names indicative of creative desire and will. There then takes place a development which is peculiar to the Tantra called Sadris'a Parinama, which is a kind of Vivartta. The development is only apparent for there is no real change in the Anandamaya Kosa. S'akti which exists in Sakala S'iva in a purely potential state is said to issue from Him. This is the first kinetic aspect of S'akti in which Sattaguna is displayed. This is the Paramakasavastha. Nada (sound, word) then appears. S'akti becomes further kinetic through the enlivening of the Rajo Guna. This is the Aksaravastha. Then under the influence of Tamas, Isvara becomes Ghanibhuta and what is called the Paravindu. This is the Avyaktavastha. Thus the Supreme Vindu men call by different names, Maha Visnu, Brahma Purusa, or Devi. It is compared to a grain of gram which under its sheath contains two seeds in undivided union. These are S'iva S'akti and their encircling sheath is Maya. This Vindu unfolds and displays itself, in the threefold aspect of Vindu, Vija, Nada; or S'iva, S'akti, and S'iva S'akti; the three S'aktis of will, knowledge and action. This is the mysterious Kama Kala which is the root of all Mantras. These seven Sakala, S'iva, S'akti, Nada, Paravindu, Vindu, Vija, Nada are all aspects of S'akti which are the seven divisions of the Mantra Om and constitute what is called the creation of Para sound in the Is'vara creation.

The lecturer having explained the nature of these S'aktis which formed part of the sound (S'abda), Sadrisa Parinama, referred to the form or meaning (Artha) creation in the same development by the appearance of the six S'ivas from S'ambu to Brahma which were aggregate (Samasti) sound powers. It was he said, on the differentiation of the Paravindu that there existed the completed causal S'abda which is the Hidden Word. The causal body or Para S'abda and Artha being complete, there then appeared the displayed word or S'abdartha. This is a composite like the Greek Logos. The S'abda Brahman or Brahman as cause of S'abda is the Chaitanya in all beings. The S'abdartha in the Vedantin Namarupa or world of name and form of this S'abdartha the subtle and gross bodies are constituted, the S'aktis of which are the Hiranyagarbha sound, called Madhyama and the Virat sound Vaikhari. By S'abda is not meant merely physical sound which as a quality of atomic ether is evolved from Tamasik Ahamkara.

The lecturer then pointed out that there had been Adrista Sristi up to the appearance of S'akti and Vivartta development up to the completion of the "word" or causal sound. Then there takes place real evolution (Parinama) in which the Tattvas (or elements discovered as a result of psychological analysis of our worldly experience) are said to emanate according to the Sankhya and not the Vedantic scheme, though there were some peculiarities in the Tantrik exposition which the lecturer noted. Finally Yogika Sristi was accepted in so far as it was the elements which in varied combinations made up the gross world.

In conclusion the lecturer pointed out that Indian S'astra was a mutually connected whole. Such peculiarities as existed in any particular S'astra were due to a variety of standpoints or purpose in view. The main point in this connection to be remembered was that the Tantra was practical S'adhana S'astra. Whilst S'ankara dealt with the subject from the standpoint of Jhanakanda, the Tantra treated it from the point of view of worship (Upasanakanda) the Tantrik doctrine is compounded of various elements some of which it shared with other S'astras, some of which are its own, the whole being set forth according to a method and terminology which is peculiar to itself.]

48-70. She is the Lady of the Rasa Lila, the Foremost of the Jovial, humourous (witty) persons and dwells always in Rasa. Her abode is in Goloka and from Her have come out all the Gopikas. Rasa - the circular dance of Krisna and the cow-herdesses of Vrindavana. Her nature is the Highest Bliss, the Highest Contentment, and Excessive Joy; She transcends the three Sattva, Rajo and Tamo Gunas and is Nirakara (without any particular form); but She dwells everywhere but unconnected with any. She is the soul of all. She is without any effort to do anything and void of Ahamkara. She assumes forms only to show Her favour to Her Bhaktas. The intelligent learned men (Pundits) read Her Mahima (glories) in meditating on Her according to the Vedas. The chief of the Devas and the Munis could never see Her; Her clothings are fire-proof and She is decorated with many ornaments all over Her body. Her body looks as if the crores of moons have risen all at once; She is the Giver of Bhakti (devotion) towards Krisna, services towards Krisna; and She bestows all wealth and prosperity. In Varaha Kalpa, i.e., when the Varaha incarnation took place. She incarnated Herself as the daughter of one Gopa (cow-herd), named Vrisabhanu. And Earth was blessed by the touch of Her feet. She is such as Brahma and the other Devas could never perceive Her by any of their senses, yet everyone at Vrindavan saw Her very easily. She is the Gem amongst women. And when She is seen on the breast of Krisna, it seems that lightnings flash in the blue mass of clouds in the sky. In days gone by, Brahma practised several austerities for sixty thousand years to purify Himself by seeing the nails of Her toe; but far from seeing that. He could not have that even in his dreams. At last He succeeded in seeing Her at Vrindavana and became blessed. O Child Narada! This is the fifth Prakriti and She is denominated as Radha. Every female in every Universe is sprung from a part of S'ri Radha or part of a part. O Narada! Thus I have described to you the five Highest Prakritis, Durga and others. Now I am going to describe those that are parts of these Prakritis. Hear. The Ganges, Ganga has sprung from the lotus feet of Visnu; Her form is fluid-like; She is eternal. And She is the veritable burning fire to burn away the sins of the sinners. She is sweet to touch in taking baths and in drinking; She gives final liberation to the JTvas, and leads easily to the Goloka abode. She is the holiest amongst the places of pilgrimage and is the first of the running rivers. She is the rows of pearls in the clotted hairs of Mahadeva's head and She is the Tapasya (asceticism) incarnate of the Tapasvis (ascetics) of the Bharata Varsa. This Ganges purifies the three worlds and is the part of Mula Prakriti; She shines like the Full Moon, is white like white lotus and like milk; She is pure S'uddha Sattva, clear, free from any Ahamkara, chaste and beloved of Narayana. The TulasT Devi is the consort of Visnu. She is the ornament of Narayana, and dwells always at the lotus feet of Narayana. By Her are performed all the acts of worship, all austerities, and all Sankalpas (resolves). She is the chief of all the flowers, holy and able to give merits (Punyam) to others. At Her sight and touch. Nirvana can be obtained; and, were it not for Her, there could be no other fire in this Kali Yuga to burn the sins. She Herself is of the nature of Fire and at the touch of Whose lotus-feet, the earth is purified; all the Tirthas desire to have Her sight and touch for purification and without Her all acts in this world become fruitless. She bestows Moksa (liberation) to those who want final liberation, grants all sorts of desires to several people. Who Herself is like a Kalpa Vriksa, Who is the Presiding Deity of all the trees in Bharata and Who has come here to grant satisfaction to the ladies of Bharata Varsa and She is considered very superior throughout all parts of India. This TulasT DevT is the chief factor of Mula Prakriti.

71-95. Then comes the Manasa Devi, the daughter of Kas'yapa- She is the dear disciple of S'ankara and is therefore very learned in matters of S'astras. She is the daughter of Ananta Deva, the Lord of Snakes and is very much respected by all the Nagas. She Herself is very beautiful, the Lady of the Nagas, the mother of the Nagas and is carried by them. She is decorated with ornaments of the Snakes;

She is respected by the Nagendras and She sleeps on the bed of Snakes. She is Siddha Yogini, the devotee of Visnu and always ready in the worship of Visnu; She is the Tapas and the bestower of the fruits of Tapas. Herself an ascetic. She spent three lakh years (according to the Deva measure) and has become the foremost of the ascetics in Bharatvarsa. She is the Presiding Deity of all the mantras; Her whole body shines with Brahmateja (the Holy Fire of Brahma). Herself of the nature of Brahma, She again meditates on Brahman. She is sprung from a part of S'ri Krisna and the chaste wife of Jarat Karu Muni, the mother of Astika, the great Muni; She is the part of Mula Prakriti. O Child Narada! Now comes the S'asthi Devi, the Mother of Devasena. She is the most superior amongst the Gauri and the sixteen Matrikas. This chaste woman is the giver of sons and grandsons in the three worlds and the nurse, the foster mother of all. She is the sixth part of Mula Prakriti and is hence known by the name of S'asthi. She lives near to every child as an aged Yogini. Her worship is everywhere prevalent in the twelve months Vais'akha, etc. When the child gets born, on the sixth day of Her worship is done in the lying-in-chamber and again on the 21^^ day (after twenty days have passed away) the most auspicious worshipful ceremony of Her is performed. The Munis bow down to Her with reverence and want to visit Her daily.

She protects all children always with a mother's affectionate heart. This S'asthi Devi is again the part of Mula Prakriti. Then appears the Devi Mangala Chandika. She goes from one house to another, on land or through water or in air, doing great good to them; She has come out of the face of the Prakriti Devi and is doing always all sorts of good to this world. Her name is Mangala Chandi because She is all auspicious at the time of creation and assumes very furious angry appearance at the time of destruction. So the Pundits say. On every Tuesday in all the worlds Her worship is done; and She, when pleased, gives to women sons, grandsons, wealth, prosperity, fame and good of all sorts and grants all desires. This Mangala Chandi is again the part of Mula Prakriti. Now comes the lotus-eyed MahesVari Kali who when angry can destroy all this universe in a moment, who sprang from the forehead of the Mula Prakriti, Durga to slay the two demons S'umbha and Nis'umbha. She is the half¬ portion of Durga and qualified like Her, fiery and energetic. The beauty and splendour of whose body make one think as if the millions of suns have arisen simultaneously. Who is the foremost of all the S'aktis and is more powerful than any of them. Who grants success to all the persons. Who is superior to all and is of Yogic nature. Who is exceedingly devoted to Krisna and like Him fiery, well-qualified, and valorous. Whose body has become black by the constant meditation of S'ri Krisna, Who can destroy in one breath this whole Brahmanda, Who was engaged in fighting with the Daityas simply for sport and instruction to the people and Who, when pleased in worship can grant the four fruits Dharma, Artha, Kama and Moksa. This Kali is also the part of Prakriti. The Devi Basundhara (Earth) is again the part of Mula Prakriti. Brahma and the other Devas, all the Muni mandalams (the spheres of Munis), fourteen Manus and all men sing hymns to Her. She is the support of all and filled with all sorts of grains. She is the source of all gems and jewels. She bears in Her womb all the precious metals. All sorts of best things issue from Her. She is the Refuge of all. The subjects and kings worship Her always and chant hymns to Her. All the Jivas live through Her and She bestows all sorts of wealth and prosperity. Without Her, all this, moving or non-moving, become void of any substratum. Where to rest on!

96-143. O Child Narada! Now hear about them who are issued again from the parts of Mula Prakriti as well as the names of their wives. I will now narrate duly. The Devi "Svaha" is the wife of Agni (Fire), and the whole Universe worships Her. Without her, the Devi can never take any oblations. Daksina and Diksa are both the wives of Yajha (Sacrifice). They are honoured everywhere. So much so that without Daksina (the fees given at the end of the Sacrifice) no sacrificial ceremonies can be complete and fructifying. The Devi "Svadha" is the wife of the Pitris. All worship this Devi "Svadha" whether they are Munis, Manus, or men. If this mantra "Svadha" be not uttered while making an offering to the Pitris, all turn out useless. The Devi “Svasti” is the wife of the Vayu Deva; She is honoured everywhere in the Universe. Without this “Svasti” Devi, no giving nor taking nor any action can be fructifying and useful. “Pusti” (nourishment) is the wife of Ganapati. All in this world worship this Pusti Devi. Without this “Pusti”, women or men alike all become weaker and weaker. Tusti (satisfaction, contentment) is the wife of Ananta Deva. She is praised and worshipped everywhere in this world. Without Her no one anywhere in the world can be happy. “Sampatti” is the wife of Isana Deva. The Suras, the men all alike worship Her. Were it not for Her, all in this world would be oppressed with dire poverty. The Devi “Dhriti” is the wife of Kapila Deva. She is honoured equally in all places. Were it not for Her, all the people in this world would have become impatient. The “Sati” Devi is the wife of Satya Deva (Truth). She is endearing to the whole world. The liberated ones worship Her always. Were it not for the truth loving Sati, the whole world would have lost the treasure in friendship. “Daya” (Mercy) endearing to the whole world is the chaste wife of “Moha Deva”. She is liked by all. Were it not for Her, all the world would have become hopeless. The Devi “Pratistha” (fame, celebrity) is the wife of Punya Deva (merit).She gives merits to persons according as they worship Her. Were it not for Her, all the persons would remain dead while living. The Devi “Kirti” (fame) is the wife of Sukarma (good works). Herself a Siddha (one who has acquired the result of one’s success), all the blessed people honour Her with great reverence. Were it not for Her, all the persons in this world would have been dead, devoid of any fame. Kriya (work-efforts, action, doing) is the wife of “Udyoga” (enthusiasm). All honour Her greatly. O Muni Narada! Were it not for Her, the whole people would be void of any rules and regulations. Falsehood is the wife of Adharma (unrighteousness). She is honoured greatly by all the cheats that are extant in this world. Were she not liked by them, then all the cheats would become extinct. She did not fall in the sight of anybody in the Satya Yuga. Her subtle form became visible in the Treta Yuga. When the Dvapara Yuga came. She became half developed. And at last when the Kali Yuga has come. She is fully developed and there is no second to Her whether in bold confidence and shamelessness or in talking much and pervading everywhere. With her brother Deceitfulness, She roams from one house to another. Peace and modesty and shame are both the wives of good behaviour. Were they not existent, all in this world would have turned out deluded and mad. Intelligence, genius and fortitude, these three are the wives of Jhana (knowledge). Had they not lived, every one would become stupid and insane. Murti is the wife of Dharma Devi. She is of the nature of Beauty to all and very charming. Were it not for Her, Paramatman would not get any resting place; and the whole universe would have become Niralamba (without anything to rest). This chaste Murti Devi is of the nature of splendour, loveliness and Laksmi. She is everywhere respected, worshipped and reverenced. “Sleep”, the Siddha Yogini, is the wife of Rudra Deva, who is of the nature of Kalagni (the universal conflagration at the break-up of the world). All the Jivas spend their nights with Her. The twilights, night and day are the wives of Kala (Time). If they were not, the Creator even would not be able to reckon time. Hunger and thirst are the wives of Lobha (covetousness). They are thanked, respected and worshipped by the whole world. Had they not lived, the whole world would have merged ever in an ocean of anxieties. Splendour and burning capacity are the wives of Tejas (fire). Without these, the Lord of the world could never have created and established order in this universe. Death and old age are the daughters of the Kala, and the dear wives of Jvara (the disease). Without these, all the creation would come to an end. The Tandra (drowsiness, lassitude) and Priti (satisfaction) are the daughters of Nidra (sleep). And they are the dear wives of Sukha (pleasure). They are present everywhere in this world. O Best of Munis! S’raddha (faith) and Bhakti (devotion) are the wives of Vairagyam (dispassion). For then all the persons can become liberated while living (Jivanmuktas). Besides these there is Aditi, the Mother of the Gods, Surabhi, mother of cows; Diti, the mother of the Daityas; Kadru, the mother of the Nagas (serpents); Vinata, the mother of Garuda, the prince of birds; and Danu, the mother of the Danavas. All are very useful for the purpose of creation. But these all are parts of Mula Prakriti. Now I will mention some of the other parts of Prakriti. Hear. Rohini, the wife of the Moon, Sanjha, the wife of the Sun; S'atarupa, the wife of Manu; S'achi, the wife of Indra; Tara, the wife of Brihaspati; Arundhati, the wife of Vas'istha; Anasuya, the wife of Atri; Devahuti, the wife of Kardama; Prasuti, the wife of Daksa; Menaka, the mind born daughter of the Piths and the mother of Ambika, Lopamudra, Kunti, the wife of Kuvera, the wife of Varuna, BindhyavalT, the wife of the King Bali; Damayanti, Yas'oda, Devaki, Gandhari, Draupadi, S'aivya, Satyavati, the chaste and noble wife of Brisabhanu and the mother of Radha; Mandidari; Kaus'alya, Kauravi,; Subhadra; Revati, Satyabhama, Kalindi, Laksmana; Jambavati; Nagnajiti, Mitrabinda, Laksana, Rukmini, Sita, the Laksmi incarnate; Kali, Yojana Gandha, the chaste mother of Vyasa, Usa, the daughter of Vana, her companion Chitralekha; Prabhavati, Bhanumati, the Sati Mayavati, Renuka, the mother of Paras'urama; Rohini, the mother of Balarama, Ekananda and the sister of S'ri Krisna, Sati Durga and many other ladies are the parts of Prakriti and all the female sex, everywhere in the Universe are all come from the parts of Prakriti. So to insult any woman is to insult the Prakriti. If one worships a chaste Brahmin woman, who has her husband and son living, with clothings, ornaments, and sandal paste, etc., one worships, as it were, Prakriti. If any Vipra worships a virgin girl, eight years old, with clothings, ornaments and sandal paste, know that he has worshipped the Prakriti Devi. The best, middling, and worst are all sprung from Prakriti. Those women that are sprung from Sattva Guna are all very good natured and chaste; those that are sprung from Rajo Guna are middling and very much attached to worldly enjoyments and do their selfish ends and those that are sprung from Tamo Guna are recognised as worst and belonging to the unknown families. They are very scurrilous, cheats, ruining their families, fond of their own free ways, quarrelsome and no seconds are found equal to them. Such women become prostitutes in this world and Apsaras in the Heavens. The Hermaphrodites are parts of Prakriti but they are of the nature of Tamo Gunas.

144-159. Thus I have described to you the nature of Prakriti. So in this Punyabhumi Bharata Varsa, to worship the Devi is by all means desirable. In days past by, the King Suratha worshipped the Mula Prakriti Durga, the Destructrix of all evils. Then again S'ri Rama Chandra worshipped Her when he wanted to kill Havana. Since then Her worship is extant in the three worlds. She was first born as the honourable daughter of Daksa. She destroyed the whole hosts of Daityas and Danavas. It was She who, hearing the abusive words uttered against Her husband at the Yajha by Daksa, Her father, gave up Her body and took up again Her birth. She took Her birth in the womb of Menaka and got again Pas'upati as Her husband. And of the two sons, Kartika and Ganes'a, born to Her, Kartika was the Ansa (part) of Narayana and Ganapati was S'ri Krisna Himself, the Lord of Radha. O Devarsi! After the two sons, Laksmi Devi came out of Durga. Mangala Raja, the King Mars first worshipped Her. Since then, all in the three worlds began to worship Her, whether they are Devas or men. The King AsVapati first worshipped Savitri Devi; and since then the Devas, Munis, all began to worship Her. When the Devi Saravasti was born, the Bhagavan Brahma first worshipped Her; next the greatest Munis, Devas all began to worship Her. On the full moon night of the month of Kartik, it was Bhagavan S'ri Krisna, The Highest Spirit, that worshipped, first of all, the Devi Radha within the Rasa Mandalam, the enclosure, within which the Rasa Lila was performed (the circular dance) in the region Goloka. Then under the command of S'ri Krisna, all the Gopas (cow-herds), Gopis, all the boys, girls, Surabhi, the queen of the race of the cows, and the other cows worshipped Her. So since Her worship by the inhabitants of Goloka, by Brahma and the other Devas and the Munis, all began to worship ever S'ri Radha with devotion and incense, light and various other offerings. On earth She was first worshipped by Suyajha, in the sacred field of Bharatvarsa, under the direction of Bhagavan Mahadeva. Subsequently, under the command of the Bhagavan S'ri Krisna, the Highest Spirit, the inhabitants of the three worlds began to worship Her. The Munis with great devotion, with incense, flowers and various other offerings worship always the Devi Radha. O Child Narada! Besides these, all the other Devis that have issued from Prakriti Devi are all worshipped. So much so that in the villages, the village Deities, in the forests, the forest Deities and in the cities, the city Deities are worshipped. Thus I have described to you all according to the S'astras the glorious lives of the Devi Prakriti and Her parts. What more do you want to hear?

1-4. Narada said O Lord! I have heard all that you said in brief about the Prakriti Devi. Now describe in detail. Why the Mula Prakriti Adya S'akti (the Prime Force) was created at the beginning before the creation of this world of five elements. How did She, being of the nature of the three Gunas, come to be divided into five parts? I desire to hear all this in detail. Now kindly describe their auspicious births, methods of worship, their meditation, their stotras (praises), Kavachas (the mystic syllables considered as a preservation like armour), glory and power in detail.

5-26. Narayana spoke "O Devarsi! The Mula Prakriti, of the nature of Maya of Para Brahman is an eternal entity (the nabho mandal); Time (Kala), the ten quarters, the Universe Egg, the Goloka and, lower than this, the Vaikuntha Dhama all are eternal things. Atman and Prakriti are in inseparable union with each other as Fire and its burning capacity, the Moon and her beauty, the lotus and its splendour, the Sun and his rays are inseparably united with each other. As the goldsmith cannot prepare golden ornaments without gold and as the potter cannot make earthen pots without earth, so the Atman cannot do any work without the help of this omnipotent Prakriti. The letter “Sa” indicates “AisVaryam” prosperity, the divine powers; and “Kti”, denotes strength; and in as much as She is the bestower of the above two, the Mula Prakriti is named “S’akti”. “Bhaga” is indicative of knowledge, prosperity, wealth, fame; and in as much as Mula Prakriti has all these powers. She is also called “Bhagavati”. And Atman “is always in union with this Bhagavati Who is all powers, so He is called “Bhagavan’. The Bhagavan is therefore sometimes with form; and sometimes He is without form. {Note When Prakriti becomes latent, God is without form; with Prakriti manifest, God is with form.) The Yogis always think of the Luminous

Form of the Formless Bhagavan and declare Him to be all blissful Para Brahma, the God. Though He is invisible, the Witness of all. Omniscient, the Cause of all, the Giver of everything and of every form, yet the Vaisnavas do not say so. The Vaisnavas declare how can fire, strength and energy come when there is no fiery, strong, energetic Person behind it? Therefore He who shines in the centre of this fiery sphere is the Para Brahma; He is the Fiery Person; He is higher than the Highest. He is All Will; He is All Form, the Cause of all causes and His Form is Very Beautiful. He is Young; He looks very peaceful and loved by all. He is the Highest; and His Blue Body shines like new rain-clouds. His two eyes defy the beauty of the autumn lotuses in the mid-day; His exquisitely nice rows of teeth put all the series of pearls in the dark back-ground. The peacock’s feather is seen on His crown; the garland of Malati flowers is suspended from His neck.; His nose is exceedingly beautiful; the sweet smile is always seen on His lips. There is no second like Him in showing favour to the Bhaktas. He wears yellow clothings, as if the burning fire is emanating all round; the flute is seen on both His hands, reaching His knees. His body is decorated all over with jewels. He is the Sole Refuge of this Universe; the Lord of all, omnipotent and omnipresent. No trace of deficiency can be seen in Him; He is Himself a Siddha (perfect) Purusa; and the foremost of all Siddha Purusas; bestows Siddhis to all. The Vaisnavas meditate always That Eternal S’ri Krisna, the Deva of the Devas. He takes away fully all the fears of birth, death, old age, and ills and sorrows. The age of Brahma is the twinkling of His eye. That Highest Self, the Para Brahma is denominated as Krisna. The word “Kris” denotes Bhakti to S’ri Krisna and the letter “na” signifies devotion to His service. So He is the Bestower of Bhakti and devotion to His service. Again “Kris” denotes all; everything; and “na” signifies the root. So He Who is the Root and Creator of all, is S’ri Krisna. When He desired, in the very beginning, to create this Universe, there was nothing then except S’ri Krisna; and at last, impelled by Kala (His Own Creation), He became ready, in His part, to do the work of creation.

27-61. The Lord, who is All Will, willed and divided Himself into two parts. His Left part becoming female and His Right part becoming male. Then that Eternal One, Who is greatly loving, looked at the female. His left part, the Sole Receptacle to hold all the contents of love, very lovely to the eyes, and looking like the beautiful lotus. The loins of this woman defy the Moon; Her thighs put the plaintain trees quite in the background; Her breasts are mistaken for the beautiful Bel fruits; flowers are scattered as Her Hairs on the head; Her middle part is very slender, very beautiful to behold! Exceedingly lovely; appearance very calm; sweet smile reigning in Her lips; side long glances with Her; Her clothing is purified with fire; all over Her body decorated with gems. Her eyes, also, like the Chakora bird (Greek partridge) began to drink incessantly with joy the moon beams from the face of S’ri Krisna, defying, as it were, the ten millions of moons. On Her forehead there was the dot of vermillion (red-lead); over that, the dot of white sandal paste and over that was placed the musk.

The fillets or braids of hair on Her head are slightly curved; this was decorated with Malati garlands; on Her neck was suspended the necklace of gems and jewels and She is always very amorous towards Her husband. On looking at Her face, it seems that ten millions of moons have arisen at once; when She walks. Her gait puts (humiliates) those of ganders and elephants in the shade. O Muni! S’ri

Krisna, the Lord of the Rasa Dance, and the Person of Taste in the Rasa sport, looked askance at Her for a while and then catching hold of Her by Her hand went to the Rasamandalam and began to play the Rasa sport (the amorous pastime). It seemed then the Lord of amorous pastimes had become incarnate there and had been enjoying the various pleasures of amorous passions and desires. So much, that Brahma's one day passed away in that sport. The Father of the Universe, then becoming tired, impregnated in an auspicious moment in Her womb who was born of His left portion. The Prakriti Devi was also tired of the embraces of S'ri Krisna; so after the intercourse, she began to perspire and breathe frequently. Her perspiration turned into water and deluged the whole universe.

with water; and Her breath turned into air and became the life of all beings. The female that sprung from the left side of Vayu became his wife and out of their contact originated Prana, Apana, Samana, Udana and Vyana, the five sons. These are the five vital Vayus of all the beings. Besides these from the womb of the Vayu's wife came out Naga and the other four lower Vayus. The water that came out from perspiration, Varana Deva became the Presiding Deity of that; and the female, sprung out of the left side of Varuna Deva, became the wife of Varuna, called Varunani. On the other hand, the S'akti, of the nature of knowledge of S'ri Krisna, remained pregnant for one hundred manvantaras. Her body became effulgent with Brahma-teja (the fire of Brahma). Krisna was Her life and She again was dearer to Krisna than his life even. She remained always with S'ri Krisna; so much so that She constantly rested on His breast. When one hundred manvantaras passed away, that Beautiful One gave birth to a Golden Egg. That egg was the repository of the whole universe. The Beloved of Krisna became very sorry to see the egg and out of anger, threw that within the water collected in the centre of the Universe. Seeing this, S'ri Krisna raised a great cry and immediately cursed Her duly and said "O Angry One! O Cruel One! When you have forsaken out of anger this son just born of you, I say then that you become from today bereft of any issue. Besides, let all those godly women that will spring out of your parts, they also be deprived of having any issue or sons and they will remain ever constant in their youth. O Muni! While S'ri Krisna was thus cursing, suddenly came out from the tongue of the beloved of Krisna, a beautiful daughter, of a white colour. Her clothings were all white, in her hands there were lute and book and all Her body was decorated with ornaments made of gems and jewels. She was the Presiding Deity of all the S'astras. Some time later the Mula Prakriti, the Beloved of Krisna divided into two parts. Out of Her left portion came Kamala and out of Her right portion came Radhika. In the meantime S'ri Krisna divided Himself into two parts. From his right side appeared a form two-handed; and from the left side appeared a form four- handed. Then S'ri Krisna addressed the Goddess Speech, holding flute in Her hand, "O Devi! You follow this four-handed Person as his wife" and then spoke to Radha "O Radhe! You are a sensitive, proud lady; let you be My wife; so it will do you good". S'ri Krisna also told Laksmi gladly to become the wife of the four-handed Narayana. Then Narayana, the Lord of the world, took both Laksmi and Sarasvati to the abode Vaikuntha. O Muni! Both Laksmi and Sarasvati became issueless, being born of Radha. From the body of Narayana arose his attendants, all four-handed. They were all equal to Him in appearance, in qualifications; in spirit and in age. On the other hand, from the body of Kamala arose millions of female attendants all equal to Her in form and qualifications. Then arose innumerable Gopas (cow-herds) from the pores of S'ri Krisna. They were all equal to the Lord of Goloka in form, Gunas, power and age; they were all dear to Him as if they were His life.

62-88. From the pores of Radhika came out the Gopa Kanyas (cow- herdesses). They were all equal to Radha and all were Her attendants and were sweet-speaking. Their bodies were all decorated with ornaments of jewels, and their youth was constant, they were all issueless as S'ri Krisna had cursed them thus. O Best of Brahmanas! On the other hand, suddenly arose Durga, the Maya of Visnu (The Highest Self) eternal and whose Deity was Krisna. (A/. B. Durga was the Avatara of Mula Prakriti not the Avatara of Radha as Laksmi and Sarasvati were.) She is Narayani; She is Is'ani; She is the S'akti of all and She is the Presiding Deity of the intelligence of S'ri Krisna. From Her have come out many other Devis; She is Mula Prakriti and She is Is'vari; no failings or insufficiencies are seen in Her. She is the Tejas (of the nature of Fire) and She is of the nature of the three Gunas. Her colour is bright like the molten gold; Her lustre looks as if ten millions of Suns have simultaneously arisen. She looks gracious always with sweet smile on Her lips. Her hands are one thousand in number. Various weapons are in all Her hands. The clothings of the three-eyed one are bright and purified by Fire. She is decorated with ornaments all of jewels. All the women who are the jewels are sprung from Her parts and parts of parts and by the power of Her Maya, all the people of the world are enchanted. She bestows all the wealth that a householder wants; She bestows on Krisna's devotees, the devotion towards Krisna; nay. She is the Vaisnavi S'akti of the Vaisnavas. She gives final liberation to those that want such and gives happiness to those that want happiness. She is the Laksmi of the Heavens; as well She is the Laksmi of every household. She is the Tapas of the ascetics, the beauty of the kingdoms of the kings, the burning power of fire, the brilliancy of the Sun, the tender beauty of the Moon, the lovely beauty of the lotus and the S'akti of S'ri Krisna the Highest Self. The Self, the world all are powerful by Her S'akti; without Her everything would be a dreary dead mass. O Narada! She is the seed of this Tree of World; She is eternal; She is the Stay, She is Intelligence, fruits, hunger, thirst, mercy, sleep, drowsiness, forgiveness, fortitude, peace, bashfulness, nourishment, contentment and lustre. The Mula Prakrit! praising S'ri Krisna stood before Him. The Lord of Radhika then gave Her a throne to sit. O Great Muni! At this moment sprang from the navel lotus the four-faced Brahma, with his wife Savitri, an exceedingly beautiful woman. No sooner the four-faced Brahma, the foremost of the Jhanins, fond of asceticism and holding Kamandalu in His hand came into being than He began to praise S'ri Krisna by His four mouths. On the other hand the Devi Savitri, with a beauty of one hundred moons, born with great ease, wearing apparel purified by fire and decorated with various ornaments praised Krisna, the One and Only Cause of the Universe and then took Her seat gladly with Her husband in the throne made of jewels. At that time Krisna divided Himself into two parts; His left side turned into the torn of Mahadeva; and His right side turned into the Lord of Gopikas (cow- herdesses). The colour and splendour of the body of Mahadeva is pure white like white crystal; as if one hundred suns have arisen simultaneously. In His hands there are the trident (Tris'ul) and sharp- edged spear (Pattisa); He is wearing a tiger skin; on His head is matted hair (data) of a tawny hue like molten gold; His body was besmeared all over with ashes, smile reigning in His face and on His forehead, the semi-moon. He has no clothing on His loins; so He is called Digambara (the quarters of the Sky being His clothing); His neck is of a blue colour; the serpent being the ornaments on His body and on His right hand the nice bead of jewels well purified.

Who is always repeating with His five faces the Eternal Light of Brahma, and Who has conquered Death by praising S'ri Krisna, Who is of the nature of Truth, the Highest Self, the God Incarnate, the material cause of all things and the All auspicious of all that is good and favourable, and the Destroyer of the fear of birth, death, old age, and disease and Who has been named Mrityunjaya (the conqueror of Death). This Mahadeva took His seat on a throne made of jewels (diamonds, emeralds, etc.).

Here ends the Second Chapter of the Ninth Book on the origin of Prakriti and Purusa in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-34. Narayana said:- "O Devarsi! The egg (born of Mula Prakriti) that was floating in the waters for a period equal to the life period of Brahma, now in the fullness of time separated into two parts. Within that egg there was a powerful Child, lustrous like one thousand millions of suns. This child could not suck mother's milk, as it was forsaken by Her. So being tired of hunger, the child for a moment cried repeatedly. The child that will become the Lord of countless Brahmandas (universes), now an orphan having no father nor mother began to look upwards from the waters. This boy came to be denominated afterwards by the name of Maha Virat, when he became gross and grosser. As there is nothing finer than radium so there is nothing grosser than Maha Virat. The power of this Maha Virat is one-sixteenth of that of S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self. But this boy, (born of the Prakriti Radha) is the Sole Stay of all this Universe and he is denominated by the name "Maha-Visnu". In his every pore countless universes are existing. So much so that even S'ri Krisna could not count them. If it were possible to count the number of dust particles, it is impossible to count the number of universes. So there are endless Brahmas, Visnus, and Mahes'varas. In every Brahmanda, there is Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a. Each Brahmanda extends from Patala to the Brahmaloka. The abode of Vaikuntha is higher than that (i. e. it is situated outside of Brahmanda), again the abode of Goloka is fifty koti yojanas (50 x 10 x 4 x 2 million miles) higher than Vaikuntha. This Goloka Dhama is eternal and real as S'ri Krisna is eternal and real. This world composed of the seven islands is surrounded by the seven oceans. Forty-nine Upa Dvipas (smaller islands adjacent to them) are existing here. Besides there are countless mountains and forests. Higher than this earth is the Brahmaloka with seven heavens and below this are the seven Patalas. This is the bounding limit of Brahmanda. Just above this earth there is the Bhurloka; above is Bhuvarloka; then Svarloka, then Janarloka, then Taparloka, then Satyaloka, and above that is Brahmaloka. The splendour of Brahmaloka is like that of molten gold. But all the substances whether outside or inside this Brahmaloka, are transient. When this Brahmanda (cosmos) dissolves, everything dissolves and is destroyed. All are temporary like bubbles of water. Only Goloka and Vaikuntha are eternal. In every pore of this Maha Virat is existing one Brahmanda (cosmos). What to speak of others when even Krisna cannot count the number of these Brahmandas. In every Brahmanda there is Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a. O Child Narada! In every Brahmanda, the number of the gods is three kotis or 30 millions. Some of them are the Dikpatis (the Regents of the quarters); some are the Dikpalas (the Rulers of the quarters), some are asterisms, and some planets. In the Bhurloka, there are four Varnas (Brahmins, etc.,) and in the Patalas there are Nagas. Thus the Universe exists composed of moveable and non-moveable things (This is Brahmanda Vivriti). O Narada!

Now the Virat Purusa began to look up to the skies again and again but He could not see anything within that egg except the void. Then distressed with hunger He cried out repeatedly and became merged in anxiety. Next moment getting back His consciousness. He began to think of Krisna, the Highest Person and saw there at once the eternal light of Brahma. He saw there His form as deep blue like new rain-cloud; with two hands, garment of a yellow colour, sweet smile on His face, flute in His hand and He seemed to be very anxious to show His Grace to Devotees. Looking at the Lord, His Father, the boy became glad and smiled. The Lord, the Bestower of boon granted him boons appropriate for that moment "O Child! Let you possess knowledge like Me; let your hunger and thirst vanish; let you be the holder of innumerable Brahmandas till the time of Pralaya (the universal dissolution). Be without any selfishness, be fearless and the bestower of boons to all. Let not old age, death, disease, sorrow nor any other ailings afflict thee. Thus saying He repeated thrice on his ear the six-lettered great Mantra "Om Krisnaya Svaha" worshipped by the Vedas with their Amgas, the Giver of desires and the destroyer of all troubles and calamities. O Brahma's Son! Thus giving the mantra, S'ri Krisna arranged for his feeding thus:- In every universe, whatever offerings will be given to S'ri Krisna, one sixteenth of that will go to Narayana, the Lord of Vaikuntha and fifteen-sixteenth is to go to this boy, the Virat. S'ri Krisna did not allot any share for Himself. Himself transcending all the Gunas, and Full, He is always satisfied with Himself. What necessity is there for any further offerings? Whatever the people offer with devotion, the Lord of Laksmi, the Virat eats all these. Bhagavan S'ri Krisna giving thus to the Virat the boon and the Mantra said:-- "O Child! Say what more you desire; I will give you that instantly. The Virat boy, hearing thus the words of S'ri Krisna, spoke:- "O Thou Omnipresent! I have got no desires whatsoever, save this that as long as I live, whether for a short time or for a long time, let me have pure Bhakti towards Thy lotus feet.

35-41. In this world he is Jivanmukta (liberated whilst living) who is your Bhakta; and that bewildered fool is dead while living who is devoid of any Bhakti to Thee. What needs he to perform Japam, asceticism, sacrifice, worship, holding fasts and observances, going to sacred places of pilgrimages and other virtuous acts if he be without any bhakti to S'ri Krisna? Vain is his life who is devoid of any devotion to S'ri Krisna, under Whose Grace he has obtained his life and Whom he does not now pay homage and worship. He is endowed with Sakti as long as Atma (Self) resides in his body; no sooner the Atma departs from his body all the Saktis accompany him. O Great One! And thou art the Universal Atman (soul) who transcends Prakriti, Who is All will, the Primeval Person and of the nature of the Highest Light. O Child! Thus saying, the Virat boy remained silent. S'ri Krisna then, spoke in sweet words:- "O Child! Let you remain as fresh as ever like Me. You will not have any fall even if innumerable Brahmas pass away.

42-57. Let you divide yourself in parts and turn into smaller Virats in every universe. Brahma will spring from your navel and will create the cosmos. From the forehead of that Brahma will spring eleven Rudras for the destruction of the creation. But they will all be parts of S'iva. The Rudra named Kalagni, of these eleven Rudras, will be the destroyer of all this VisVas (cosmos). Besides, from each of your sub-divisions, the Vis'nu will originate and that Bhagavan Visnu will be the Preserver of this VisVu world. I say that under my favour you will always be full of Bhakti towards Me and no sooner you meditate on Me, you will be able to see My lovely form. There is no doubt in this; and your Mother, Who resides in My breast, will not be difficult for you to see. Let you remain here in ease and comfort. I now go to Goloka. Saying thus S'ri Krisna, the Lord of the world disappeared. Going to His own abode He spoke instantly to Brahma and S'ankara, skilled in the works of creation and destruction:- "O Child Brahma! Go quickly and be born in parts from the navels of each of the smaller Virats that will arise from the pores of the Great Virat. O Child Mahadeva! Go and be born in parts from the forehead of each Brahma in every universe for the destruction of the creation; (but be careful that you not forget) and perform austerities for a long, long time. O son of the Creator Brahma! Thus saying, the Lord of the Universe remained silent. Brahma and S'iva, the auspicious, bowing to the Lord, went to their own duties. On the other hand, the great Virat that lay floating in the waters of the Brahmanda sphere, created from his every pore each smaller Virat. That youth Janardan of the form of the Great Cosmos, wearing yellow garment of the bluish- green colour of the Durba grass, lay sleeping pervading everywhere. Brahma took his birth in His navel. He, then, after his birth, began to travel in that navel-lotus and in the stem of the lotus for one lakh yugas. But he could not find out the place whence the lotus or its stem had sprung up. O Narada! Then your father became very anxious and came back to his former place and began to meditate on the lotus feet of S'ri Krisna. Then, in meditation, with his introspective eye, he first saw the small Virat, then the endless great Virat lying on the watery bed, in whose pores the universes are existing and then he saw the God S'ri Krisna in Goloka with Gopas and Gopis. He then began to praise the Lord of Goloka when He granted boons to your father, and he began to do the work of creation.

58-62. From the mind of your father, were born first S'anaka and other brothers and then from his forehead eleven Rudras sprang. Then from the left side of that small Virat lying on the bed of waters, the four-handed Visnu Bhagavan, the Preserver of the Universe, came. He went to SVetadvTpa, where he remained. Then your father became engaged in creating this Universe, moveable and non¬ moveable, composed of three worlds, heaven, earth and Patala, in the navel of that small Virat Purusa. O Narada! Thus from the pores of that great Virat each universe has sprung and in every universe there is one small Virat, one Brahma, one Visnu and one S'iva and S'anaka and others. O Best of twice born! Thus I have described the glories of Krisna, that give exceeding pleasure and Moksa. Now say what more you want to hear?

English translation

1-3. Narada said By your Grace I have heard everything very sweet like nectar, of the origin of things. Now may I ask you which Devi of these five Prakritis has been worshipped by what Mantra? and by whom? How has each of them been praised? and by whom? How has the worship of their Murtis (form) become prevalent in this world? What are the Stotram (hymn of praise), the Dhyan (meditation) glory and life of these? Also what sort of boon do each of the Devis grant? and to whom? Kindly describe all these in detail.

4-29. Narayana said O Child! Durga, the mother of Ganes'a, Radha, Laksmi, Sarasvati and Savitri, these are the five Prakritis sprung directly from Mula Prakriti. The methods of their worship, wonderful glorious acts, excellent stotrams, and their lives, inculcating good to all, and sweet like nectar are all widely written in the Vedas, Puranas, Tantras and other S'astras. So there is no need to describe them here again. Now I am describing in detail the auspicious character of these that are sprung from the parts and Kalas of the Prakriti. Hear attentively. Kali, Vasundhara,

Ganga, Sasthi, Mangal Chandika, Tulasi, Manasa, Nidra, Svadha, Svaha, and Daksina, these are the parts of Prakriti. By and by I will describe, briefly, the merit-giving characters and pleasant to hear. Along with these I will describe the Karmas of the Jivas, and the great exalted lives of Durga and Radha. I am now describing Sarasvati's character. Hear, O Muni! S'ri Krisna introduced first in this Bharata, the worship of the Devi Sarasvati, the holder of Vma in Her hands, under whose influence, the hearts of illiterate stupid persons become illumined with knowledge. The amorous Devi Sarasvati sprang from the end of the lips of Radha and so she desired to marry Krisna out of amorous feelings. S'ri Krisna, the controller of the hearts of all, knew it instantly and addressed the Mother of the people in true words proper to Her and beneficial to Her in the end. O Chaste One! The four-armed Narayana is born from My parts; He is young, of good features and endowed with all qualifications; so much so, he is like Me. He is a Knower of amorous sentiments of women and He fulfils those desires; what to speak of His beauty, ten millions of the God of love are playing in His body. O Beloved! And if you desire to marry and remain with Me, that will not be of any good to you. For Radha is near to Me; She is more powerful than you. If a man be stronger than another, he can rescue one who takes his shelter; but if he be weaker, how can he then, himself weak, protect his dependant from others. Though I am the Lord of all, and rule all, yet I cannot control Radha. For She is equal to me in power, in beauty, in qualifications, equal to Me in every respect. Again it is impossible for Me to quit Radha for She is the presiding Deity of My life. Who can relinquish life?

Though a son is very dear to his father, still it may be questioned, is he dearer than his father's life? So, O Auspicious One! Go to the abode Vaikuntha; you will get your desires fulfilled there. You will get for your husband the Lord of Vaikuntha and you will live ever in peace and enjoy happiness. Though Laksmi is residing there yet like you she is not under the control of lust, anger, greed, delusion and vanity. She is also equal to you in beauty, qualities, and power. So you will live with her in great delight and Hah, the Lord of Vaikuntha, will treat both of you equally. Moreover, I say this in particular that in every universe, on the fifth day of the bright fortnight of the month of Magha, every year, the day when the learning is commenced, a great festival will be held and men, Manus, Devas, and the Munis desirous of liberation, Vasus, Yogis, Nagas, Siddhas, Gandarbhas, Raksasas, all will perform your worship with devotion in every Kalpa till the time of Maha Pralaya comes. All are required to be Jitendriya (having their senses under control) and Samyami (concentrating his mind, and with a religious vow) and they will invoke Thee on a jar or on books and then meditate according to what is stated in the Kanva S'akha of Yajurveda and then worship and sing hymns to Thee. Thy Kavacha (an armour; a mystical syllable  considered as a preservative like armour) is written on the bark of the Bhurja tree and then with eight kinds of scents mingled with it is placed within a golden nut or ring named Maduli and then held on the neck or on the right arm. The learned should recite Thy Stotras during worship. Thus saying, the Puran Brahma S'ri Krisna Himself worshipped the Devi Sarasvati. Since then, Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a, Ananta Deva, Dharma, Sanaka and other Munmdras, all the Devas, Munis, all the kings and all the human beings are worshipping the Devi Sarasvati. O Narada! Thus the worship of the Eternal Devi is made extant in the three worlds.

30-31. Narada said O Chief of the Knowers of the Vedas! Now describe to me the methods of worship, Dhyan, Kavacham, hymns, the appropriate offerings of the Puja flowers, sandalpaste and other good things necessary in these worships and which are so sweet to hear. I am ever very eager and anxious to hear these.

32-59. Narayana said O Narada! I am now stating the method of worship of the Devi Sarasvati, the Mother of the Worlds, according to Kanva S'akha of the Yajurveda. Hear. On the day previous to the fifth day of the bright fortnight of the month of Magh or the day of commencement of education, the devotee should control his senses, concentrate his mind and take his bath. Then he is to perform his daily duties and install the jar (Ghata) with devotion and according to the Mantras of the Kanva S'akha or the Tantra, as the case may be. He is to worship first on that Ghata (jar) Ganapati (Ganes'a), then meditate the Devi Sarasvati as described below, invoke Her and again read the Dhyan and then worship with Sodas'opachara (sixteen good articles offered in the worship). O Good One! Now I am speaking, according to my knowledge, about the offerings as ordained in the Vedas or Tantras. Hear. Fresh butter, curd, thickened milk, rice freed from the husk by frying, sweetmeats (Til Laddu) prepared of Til, sugar cane, sugarcane juice, nice Gud (molasses), honey, svastik, sugar, rice (not broken) out of white Dhan, chipitak of table rice (Alo chal), white Modak, Harbisyanna prepared of boiled rice with clarified butter and salt, Pistaka of jaoa or wheaten flour, Paramanna with ghee, nectar like sweetmeats, cocoanut, cocoanut water, Svastik Pistaka, Svastik and ripe plantain Pistaka, Kaseru (root), Mula, ginger, ripe plantains, excellent Bel fruit, the jujube fruit, and other appropriate white purified fruits of the season and peculiar to the place are to be offered in the Pooja. O Narada! White flowers of good scent, white sandalpaste of good scent, new white clothes, nice conchshell, nice garlands of white flowers, nice white necklaces, and beautiful ornament are to be given to the Devi. I say now the Dhyanam sweet to hear, of the Devi Sarasvati according to the Vedas, capable to remove errors! Hear. I hereby bow down to the Devi Sarasvati, of a white colour, of a smiling countenance and exceedingly beautiful, the lustre of whose body overpowers that of the ten millions of Moons, whose garment is purified by fire, in whose hands there are Vma and books, who is decorated with new excellent ornaments of jewels and pearls and whom Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara and the other Devas, Munis, Manus and men constantly worship. Thus meditating the Devi, the intelligent persons should offer all articles, after pronouncing the root Mantra. Then he is to hymn and hold Kavacha and make Sastanga pranams before the Devi. O Muni! Those whose Devi Sarasvati is the presiding Deity, are not to be spoken of at all (i.e., they will naturally do all these things and with a greater fervour). Besides all should worship the Devi Sarasvati on the day of commencement of education and every year on the S'ukla Panchami day of the month of Magh. The eight- lettered Mantra, as mentioned in the Vedas is the root Mantra of Sarasvati. (Aim Klim Sarasvatyai namah). Or the Mantra to which each worshipper is initiated is his Mulmantra (not Mantra). Or uttering the Mantra “S'rim Hrim Sarasvatyai Svaha” one is to offer everything to the Devi Sarasvati. This Mantra is the Kalpa Vriksa (i. e., the tree which yields all desires). Narayana, the ocean of mercy, gave in ancient times, this very Mantra to Valmiki in the holy land Bharata Varsa on the banks of the Ganges; next Bhrigu gave this Mantra on the occasion of solar eclipse to Maharsi Sukracharya on the Puskara Tirtha; Maricha gave to Brihaspati on a lunar eclipse; Brahma gave to Bhrigu in the Vadarika As'rama; Jaratkara gave to Astika on the shore of the Ksiroda ocean; Bibhandaka gave this to the intelligent Risyasringa on the Sumeru mountain, S'iva gave this to Kanada and Gotama, Surya gave to Yajhavalkya and Katyayana, Ananta Deva gave to Panini, to the intelligent Bharadvaja and to S'akatayana in Bali's assembly in the Patala. If this Mantra be repeated four lakhs of times, all men attain success. And when they become Siddhas with this Mantra, they become powerful like Brihaspati. In past times, the Creator Brahma gave a Kavacha named Vis'vajaya to Bhrigu on the Gandhamadana Mountain. I now speak of that. Hear.

60-61. Once on a time Bhrigu asked Brahma the Lord of all, and adored by all, thus “O Brahman! Thou art the foremost of those that know the Vedas; there is none equal to thee in matters regarding the knowledge of the Vedas (so much so that there is nothing that is not known to thee; for all these have sprung from thee). Now say about the Vis'vajaya Kavacha of the Devi Sarasvati, that is excellent, without any faults and embodying in it all the properties of all the Mantras.”

62-91. Brahma said “O Child! What you have asked about the Kavacha of Sarasvati that is sweet to hear, ordained and worshipped by the Vedas, and the giver of all desired fruits, now hear of that. In the very beginning, the all-pervading S'ri Krisna, the Lord of the Rasa circle, mentioned this Kavacha to me in the holy Brindavana forest in the abode Goloka at the time of Rasa in Rasa Mandala.

This is very secret; it is full of holy unheard, wonderful Mantras. Reading this Kavacha and holding it (on one's arm) Brihaspati has become foremost in matters of intelligence; by the force of this Kavacha S'ukracharya has got his ascendancy over the Daityas; the foremost Muni Valmiki has become eloquent and skilled in language and has become Kavmdra and Svayambhuva Manu; holding this Kavacha he has become honoured everywhere. Kanada, Gotama,

Kanva, Panini, S'akatayana, Daksa, and Katyayana all have become great authors by virtue of this Kavacha; Krisna Dvaipayana Veda Vyasa made the classification of the Vedas and composed the eighteen Puranas. S'atatapa, Samvarta, Vas'istha, Parasara and Yajhavalkya had become authors by holding and reading this Sarasvati Kavacha. Risyas'ringa, Bharadvaja, Astika, Devala, Jaigisavya, and Yayati all were honoured everywhere by virtue of this Kavacha. O Dvija! The Prajapati Himself is the Risi of this Kavacha; Brihati is its Chhanda; and S'arada Ambika is its presiding Deity. Its application

(Viniyoga) is in the acquisition of spiritual knowlege, in the fruition of any desires or necessities, in composing poems or anywhere wheresoever success is required. May S'rim Hrim Sarasvatyai Svaha protect fully my head; S'rim Vagdevatayai Svaha, my forehead; Om Hrim Sarasvatyai Svaha, my ears always; Om S'rim Hrim Bhagabatyai Sarasvatyai Svaha always my eyes;

Aim Hrim Vagvadinyai Svaha, always my nose; Om Hrim Vidyadhisthatri Devyai Svaha, my lips always; Om S'rim Hrim Brahmyai Svaha my rows of teeth; Aim, this single letter protect my neck; Om S'rim Hrim my throat; S'rim, my shoulders, Om Hrim Vidyadhisthatri Devyai Svaha, always my chest; Om Hrim Vidyadhisvarupayai Svaha my navel; Om Hrim Klim Vanyai Svaha my hands; Om Svarva varnatmi Kayai Svaha my feet; and let Om Vagadhisthatridevyai Svaha protect all my body. Let Om Sarvakanthavasinyai Svaha protect my east; Let Om Svarvajibhagra vasinyai Svaha, the South-east; Om Aim Hrim S'rim Klim Sarasvatyai budhajananyai Svaha, my South; Aim Hrim S'rim, this three lettered Mantra my South-west; Om Aim Jhibhagravasinyai Svaha, my West; Om Svarvam bikayai Svaha, my North west; Om Aim S'rim Klim Gadyavasinyai Svaha my North; Aim Sarvas'astra vasinyai Svaha, my North-east; Om Hrim Sarvapujitayai Svaha, my top; Hrim Pustakavasinyai Svaha my below and let Om Grantha vijasvarupayai Svaha protect all my sides. O Narada! This Vis'vajaya Kavacha of the nature of Brahma and its embodied Mantra I have now spoken to you. I heard this before from the mouth of Dharma Deva in the Gandhamadana mountain. Now I speak this to you out of my great affection for you. But never divulge this to anybody. One is worship one's spiritual Teacher (Guru Deva) according to due rites and ceremonies with clothings, ornaments, and sandalpaste and then fall down prostrate to him and then hold this Kavacha.

Repeating this five lakhs of times, one gets success and becomes a Siddha. The holder of this Kavacha becomes intelligent like Brihaspati, eloquent, Kavmdras, and the conqueror of the three worlds, no sooner one becomes a Siddiha in this. In fact, he can conquer everything by virtue of this Kavacha. O Muni! Thus I have described to you this Kavacha according to Kanva S'akha. Now I am speaking about the method of worship, Dhyana and the praise of this Kavacha. Hear.

Here ends the Fourth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the hymn, worship and Kavacha of Sarasvati Devi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5 Narayana said O Narada! I now describe the Stotra (hymn) of Sarasvati Devi, yielding, all desires that Yajnavalkya, the best of the Risis recited in days of yore to Her. The Muni Yajnavalkya forgot all the Vedas out of the curse of Guru and with a very sad heart went to the Sun, the great merit-giving place. There he practised austerities for a time when the Lolakhya Sun became visible to him, when, being overpowered by great sorrow, he began to cry repeatedly; and then he sang hymns to him. Then Bhagavan Surya Deva became pleased and taught him all the Vedas with their Amgas (limbs) and said “O Child! Now sing hymns to Sarasvati Devi that you get back your memory.” Thus saying, the Sun disappeared. The Muni Yajnavalkya finished his bath and with his heart full of devotion began to sing hymns to the Vag Devi, the Goddess of Speech.

6-32. Yajnavalkya said “Mother! Have mercy on me. By Guru's curse, my memory is lost; I am now void of learning and have become powerless; my sorrow knows no bounds. Give me knowledge, learning, memory, power to impart knowledge to disciples, power to compose books, and also good disciples endowed with genius and Pratibha (ready wit). So that in the council of good and learned men my intelligence and power of argument and judgment be fully known. Whatever I lost by my bad luck, let all that come back to my heart and be renewed as if the sprouts come again out of the heaps of ashes. O Mother! Thou art of the nature of Brahma, superior to all; Thou art of the nature of Light, Eternal; Thou art the presiding Deity of all the branches of learning. So I bow down again and again to Thee. O Mother! The letters Anusvara, Visarga and Chandravindu that are affixed. Thou art those letters. So obeisance to Thee! O Mother! Thou art the exposition (Vyakhya) of the S'astras; Thou art the presiding Deity of all the expositions and annotations. Without Thee no mathematician can count anything. So

Thou art the numbers to count time; Thou art the S'akti by which Siddhantas (definite conclusions) are arrived at; Thus Thou dost remove the errors of men. So again and again obeisance to Thee. O Mother! Thou art the S'akti, memory, knowledge, intelligence, Pratibha, and imagination (Kalpana).

So I bow down again and again to Thee. Sanatkumara fell into error and asked Brahma for solution. He became unable to solve the difficulties and remained speechless like a dumb person. Then S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self arriving there, said O Prajapati! Better praise and sing hymns to the Goddess of speech; then your desires will be fulfilled. Then the four-faced Brahma advised by the Lord, praised the Devi Sarasvati; and, by Her grace, arrived at a very nice Siddhanta (conclusion). One day the goddess Earth questioned one doubt of Her to Ananta Deva, when He being unable to answer, remained silent like a dumb person. At last He became afraid; and advised by Kas'yapa, praised Thee when He resolved the doubt and came to a definite conclusion. Veda Vyasa once went to Valmiki and asked him about some Sutras of the Puranas when the Muni Valmiki got confounded and remembered Thee, the Mother of the world. When by Thy Grace, the Light flashed within him and his error vanished. Thereby he became able to solve the question. Then Vyasadeva, born of the parts of S'ri Krisna, heard about the Purana Sutras from Valmiki's mouth and came to know about Thy glory. He then went to Puskara Tirtha and became engaged in worshipping Thee, the Giver of Peace, for one hundred years. Then Thou didst become pleased and grant him the boon when he ascended to the rank of the Kavindra (Indra amongst the poets). He then made the classification of the Vedas and composed the eighteen Puranas. When Sada S'iva was questioned on some spiritual knowledge by Mahendra, He thought of Thee for a moment and then answered. Once Indra asked Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, about S'abda S'astra (Scriptures on sound). He became unable to give any answer. So he went to Puskara Tirtha and worshipped Thee for a thousand years according to the Deva Measure and he became afterwards able to give instructions on S'abda S'astra for one thousand divine years to Mahendra. O Sures'vari! Those Munis that give education to their disciples or those that commence their own studies remember Thee before they commence their works respectively. The Munindras, Manus, men, Daityendras, and Immortals, Brahma, Visnu and Mahes’a all worship Thee and Sing hymns to Thee. Visnu ultimately becomes inert when He goes on praising Thee by His thousand mouths. So Maha Deva becomes when he praises by His five mouths; and so Brahma by His four mouths. When great personages so desist, then what to speak of me, who is an ordinary mortal having one mouth only!” Thus saying, the Maharsi Yajhavalkya, who had observed fasting, bowed down to the Devi Sarasvati with great devotion and began to cry frequently. Then the Mahamaya Sarasvati, of the nature of Light could not hide Herself away. She became visible to him and said “O Child! You be good Kavmdra (Indra of the poets).” Granting him this boon. She went to Vaikuntha. He becomes a good poet, eloquent, and intelligent like Brihaspati who reads this stotra of Sarasvati by Yajhavalkya. Even if a great illiterate reads this Sarasvati stotra for one year, he becomes easily a good Pundit, intelligent, and a good poet.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Ninth Book on Sarasvati stotra by Yajhavalkya in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Narayana said “O Narada! Sarasvati lives always in Vaikuntha close to Narada. One day a quarrel arose with Ganga, and by Her curse, Sarasvati came in parts as a river here in this Bharata. She is reckoned in Bharata as a great sanctifiying holy and merit-giving river. The good persons serve Her always, residing on Her banks. She is the Tapasya and the fruit thereof of the ascetics. She is like the burning fire to the sins of the sinners. Those that die in Bharata on the Sarasvati waters with their full consciousness, live for ever in Vaikuntha in the council of Hah. Those that bathe in the Sarasvati waters, after committing sins, become easily freed of them and live for a long, long time in Visnu-Loka. If one bathes even once in the Sarasvati waters, during Chaturmasya (a vow that lasts four months), in full moon time, in Aksyaya or when the day ends, in Vyatipata Yoga, in the time of eclipse or on any other holy day or through any other concomitant cause or even without any faith and out of sheer disregard, one is able to go to Vaikuntha and get the nature of S’ri Hari. If one repeats the Sarasvati Mantra, residing on the banks of the Sarasvati, for one month, a great illiterate can become a great poet. There is no doubt in this. Once shaving one's head, if one resides on the banks of the Sarasvati, daily bathes in it, one will have not to meet with the pain of being again born in the womb. O Narada! Thus I have described a little of the unbounded glories of Bharata that give happiness and the fruits of all desires.”

11. Suta said “O Saunaka! The Muni Narada hearing thus, asked again at that very moment to solve his doubts. I am now speaking of that. Hear.”

12-15. Narada said “O Lord! How did the Devi Sarasvati quarrel with the Devi Ganga and how did she by Her curse turn out in India, into a holy river in giving virtues. I am becoming more and more eager and impatient to hear about this critical incident. I do not find satiety in drinking your nectar-like words. Who finds satiety in getting his good weal? Why did Ganga curse Sarasvati, worshipped everywhere. Ganga is also full of Sattva Gunas. She always bestows good and virtue to all. Both of them are fiery and it is pleasant to hear the cause of quarrels between those two. These are very rarely found in the Puranas. So you ought to describe that to me.”

16-21. Narayana said Hear, O Narada! I will now describe that incident, the hearing of which removes all the sins. Laksmi, Sarasvati and Ganga, the three wives of Hari and all equally loved, remain always close to Hari. One day Ganga cast side-long glances frequently towards Narayana and was eagerly looking at Him, with smile on Her lips. Seeing this, the Lord Narayana, startled and looked at Ganga and smiled also. Laksmi saw that, but she did not take any offence. But Sarasvati became very angry. Padma (Laksmi) who was of Sattva Guna, began to console in various ways the wrathful Sarasvati; but she could not be appeased by any means. Rather Her face became red out of anger; she began to tremble out of her feelings (passion); Her lips quivered; and She began to speak to Her husband.

22-38. The husband that is good, religious, and well qualified looks on his all the wives equally; but it is just the opposite with him who is a cheat. O Gadadhara! You are partial to Ganga; and so is the case with Laksmi. I am the only one that is deprived of your love. It is, therefore, that Ganga and Padma are in love with each other; for you love Padma. So why shall not Padma bear this contrary thing! I am only unfortunate. What use is there in holding my life? Her life is useless, who is deprived of her husband's love. Those that declare you, of Sattva Gunas, ought not to be ever called Pundits. They are quite illiterate; they have not the least knowledge of the Vedas. They are quite impotent to understand the nature of your mind. O Narada! Hearing Sarasvati's words and knowing that she had become very angry, Narayana thought for a moment and then went away from the Zenana outside. When Narayana had thus gone away, Sarasvati became fearless and began to abuse Ganga downright out of anger in an abusive language, hard to hear"O Shameless One! O Passionate One! What pride do you feel for your husband? Do you like to show that your husband loves you much? I will destroy your pride today. I will see today, it will be seen by others also, what your Hari can do for you?" Saying thus Sarasvati rose up to catch hold of Ganga by Her hairs violently. Padma intervened to stop this. Sarasvati became very violent and cursed Laksmi "No doubt you will be turned into a tree and into a river. In as much as seeing this undue behaviour of Ganga, you do not step forward to speak anything in this assembly, as if you are a tree or a river." Padma did not become at all angry, even when she heard of the above curse. She became sorry and, holding the hands of Sarasvati, remained silent. Then Ganga became very angry; Her lips began to quiver frequently. Seeing the mad fiery nature of the red-eyed Sarasvati, she told Laksmi "O Padme! Leave that wicked foul-mouthed woman. What will she do to me? She presides over speech and therefore likes always to remain with quarrels. Let Her shew Her force how far can she quarrel with me. She wants to test the strength of us. So leave Her. Let all know today our strength and prowess."

39-44. Thus saying, Ganga became ready to curse Sarasvati and addressing Laksmi, said "O Dear Padme! As that woman has cursed you to become a river, so I too curse her, that she, too, be turned into a river and she would go to the abode of men, the sinners, to the world and take their heaps of sins." Hearing this curse of Ganga, Sarasvati gave her curse, "You, too, will have to descend into the Bhurloka (the world) as a river, taking all the sins of the sinners." O Narada! While there was going on this quarrel, the four¬ armed omniscient Bhagavan Hari came up there accompanied by four attendants of His, all four-armed, and took Sarasvati in His breast and began to speak all the previous mysteries. Then they came to know the cause of their quarrels and why they cursed one another and all became very sorry. At that time Bhagavan Hah told them one by one

45-67. O Laksmi! Let you be born in parts, without being born in any womb, in the world as the daughter in the house of the King Dharma- dhvaja. You will have to take the form of a tree there, out of this evil turn of fate. There S'ankhachuda, the Indra of the Asuras, born of my parts will marry you. After that you will come back here and be my wife as now. There is no doubt in this. You will be named TulasT, the purifier of the three worlds, in Bharata. O Beautiful One! Now go there quickly and be a river in your parts under the name Padmavati. O Gange! You will also have to take incarnation in Bharata as a river, purifying all the worlds, to destroy the sins of the inhabitants of Bharata. Bhagiratha will take you there after much entreating and worshipping you; and you will be famous by the name Bhagirathi, the most sanctifying river in the world. There, the Ocean born of my parts, and the King S'antanu also born of my parts will be your husbands. O Bharati! Let you go also and incarnate in part in Bharata under the curse of Ganga. O Good-natured One! Now go in full Amsas to Brahma and become His wife. Let Ganga go also in Her fullness to S'iva. Let Padma remain with Me. Padma is of a peaceful nature, void of anger, devoted to Me and of a Sattvika nature. Chaste, good-natured, fortunate, and religious woman like Padma are very rare. Those women that are born of the parts of Padma are all very religious and devoted to their husbands. They are peaceful and good-natured and worshipped in every universe. It is forbidden, nay, opposed to the Vedas, to keep three wives, three servants, three friends of different natures, at one place. They never conduce to any welfare. They are the fruitful sources of all jealousies and quarrels. Where, in any family females are powerful like men and males are submissive to females, the birth of the male is useless. At his every step, he meets with difficulties and bitter experiences. He ought to retire to the forest whose wife is foul- mouthed, of bad birth and fond of quarrels. The great forest is better for him than his house. That man does not get in his house any water for washing his feet, or any seat to sit on, or any fruit to eat, nothing whatsoever; but in the forest, all these are not unavailable. Rather to dwell amidst rapacious animals or to enter into fire than remain with a bad wife. O Fair One! Rather the pains of the disease or venom are bearable, but the words of a bad wife are hard to bear. Death is far better than that. Those that are under the control of their wives, know that they never get their peace of mind until they are laid on their funeral pyres. They never see the fruits of what they daily do. They have no fame anywhere, neither in this world nor in the next. Ultimately the fruit is this:- that they have to go to hell and remain there. His life is verily a heavy burden who is without any name or fame. Never it is for the least good that many co-wives remain at one place. When, by taking one wife only a man does not become happy, then imagine, how painful it becomes to have many wives. O Gange! Go to S'iva. O Sarasvati! Go to Brahma. Let the good-natured Kamala, residing on the lotus remain with Me. He gets in this world happiness and Dharma and in the next Mukti whose wife is chaste and obedient. In fact he is Mukta, pure and happy whose wife is chaste; and he whose wife is foul-natured, is rendered impure unhappy and dead whilst he is living.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the coming in this world of Laksmi, Ganga and Sarasvati in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narayana said O Narada! Thus saying, the Lord of the World stopped. And Laksmi, Ganga and Sarasvati wept bitterly, embracing one another. All of them then looked to S'ri Krisna, and gave vent to their feelings one by one with tears in their eyes, and with their hearts throbbing with fears and sorrows.

3-4. Sarasvati said “O Lord! What is now, the way out of this curse, so severe and paining since our births? How long can helpless women live, separated from their husbands? O Lord! I certainly say that I will sacrifice my body when I go to Bharata, by taking recourse to yoga. The Mahatmas always protect all the persons without fail.”

5-6. Ganga said “O Lord of the Universe! Why have I been abandoned by You. What fault have I committed? I will quit my body. And You will have to partake of the sin due to the killing of an innocent woman. He is surely to go to hell even if he be the Lord of all, who forsakes in this world an innocent wife.”

7-15. Padma said “O Lord! Thou art of the nature of Sattva Guna in fullness; what wonder, then, how Thou hast become angry! However let Thou be pleased now with Sarasvati and Ganga. Forgiveness is the best quality of a good husband. I am ready just now to go to Bharata when Sarasvati has cursed me. But tell me, how long I will have to stay there? After how many days I shall be able to see again Thy lotus-feet? The sinners will wash away their dirts of sins in my waters by their constant baths and ablutions? By what means shall I be freed again and get back to Thy lotus-feet. How long shall I have to remain in my part, the daughter of Dharma Dhvaja, at the expiry of which I will be able to see Thee again? How long shall I have to assume the form of Tulasi tree, the abode of Thine. O Thou, the Ocean of mercy! Say, when wilt Thou deliver me? And if Ganga have to go to Bharata, by the curse of Bharata, when shall She be freed of the curse and sin and when shall She see back Thy feet? Again if Sarasvati have to go to Bharata out of Ganga's curse, when will that period of curse expire? How many days after shall She be able to come back to Thy feet? Now, be pleased to cancel Thy order for them to go to Brahma and S'iva respectively.” O Narada! Thus speaking to Jagannatha, the Devi Kamala bowed down at His feet and embracing them by Her own hairs of the bead, cried frequently.

16-37. Now the lotus-navelled Hah, always eager to shew favour to the devotees, smiled and with a gracious heart took up Padma on His breast and said “O SuresVari! I will keep my own word, also I will act according as you like. O Lotus-eyed! Hear. How the two ends can be made to meet. Let Sarasvati go in her one part to have the form of a river and in her one half part to Brahma and remain with me in Vaikuntha in Her full parts. Ganga will have to go in one part to Bharata - to purify the three worlds as she will be urged eagerly to do so by Bhagiratha. And She will remain in her one part in the matted hair of Chandra S'ekhara (the Mahadeva with Moon on his forehead), obtained with a great difficulty, and so will remain there purer than her natural pure state. And let her remain with me in full parts. O Padme! O Lovely-eyed One! You are most innocent; so part of your part will go to Bharata and be the Padmavati river and you will be the Tulasi tree. After the expiry of five thousand years of Kali Yuga, your curse will expire. Again you all will come to My abode. O Padme! Calamities are the causes of the happiness of the embodied beings. Without dangers no one can understand the true nature of happiness. The saint worshippers of My mantra who will perform their ablutions in your water will free you all of your curse by touch and sight. O Fair One! By the sight and touch (Darsan, Spars'an) of My bhaktas (devotees), all the sacred places of pilgrimages in the world will be purified. For uplifting and sanctifying the holy earth, My mantropasakas, i.e., S'aivas, S'aktas, Ganapatyas, etc., that are devoted to Brahma all are residing in Bharata. Where My Bhaktas reside and wash their feet, that place is undoubtedly reckoned as the holy places of pilgrimages. So much so that by the sight and touch of My devotees, the murderer of a woman, of a cow, of a Brahmin, the treacherous and even the stealer of the wife of one's Guru will be sanctified and liberated while living. Those who do not perform the vow of Ekadas'i, who do not perform Sandhyas, who are Nastikas (atheists), the murderers, all are free of their sins by the sight and touch of My devotees. By the sight and touch of My devotees, those who live on their swords, pens, and the royal officials, the beggars in a village and the Brahmanas who carry (deal in) bullocks are also freed of their sins. The traitors, the mischief makers of their friends, those who give false evidence, those that steal other's trust properties, are also freed of their sins by the sight and touch of My devotees. Those who are foul-mouthed, bastards, the husbands and sons of unchaste women are all purified by the sight and touch of My Bhaktas. The Brahmin cooks of S'udras, Brahmins of an inferior order (who subsist upon the offerings made to the images which he attends), the village mendicants, those who are not initiated by their Gurus, these all are purified by the sight and touch of My devotees.

O Fair One! The sins of those persons who do not maintain their fathers, mothers, brothers, wives, sons, daughters, sisters, the blind, friends, the families of the Gurus, the fathers-in-law, the mothers-in- law are also removed by the sight and touch of My devotees. Those that cut the As'vattha trees, that slander My devotees, and the Brahmins that eat the food of S'udras, are also freed of their sins. Those who steal the Deva's articles, the Brahmana's articles, those that sell lac, iron, and daughters, those who commit Maha Patakas (Brahmahatya, Surapanam, Steyam, Gurbanganaganah, Mahanti patakanyahuh, tatsam-sargahseha Pahchamam) and those that burn the S'udra's dead bodies, these also are freed of their respective sins by the sight and touch of My devotees."

38-42. Maha Laksmi said "O Thou gracious to faithful attendants! What are the characteristics, the marks of those Bhaktas of Thine that Thou hast spoken of just now whose sight and touch destroy instantly the Mahapatakas (five great sins), that are destroyed after a long time by the water of the Tirthas and the earthen and stone images of the Gods. The sins of the vilest of men, devoid of Hah bhakti, vain and egoistic, cheats, hvpocrites, slanderers of saints, vicious souls are destroyed by your Bhaktas, whose touch and ablations sanctify the sacred places of pilgrimages; by the touch of the dust and water of whose feet, the earth is purified; whom the Bhaktas of Bharata always pray to see; and there is nothing higher than the meeting of those Bhaktas." Suta said "O Great Risi! Thus hearing the words of Maha Laksmi, the Lord smiled and began to speak about the secret things or the marks of the Bhaktas."

43-54. O Laksmi! The marks of the Bhaktas are all mentioned very hiddenly in S'rutis and Puranas. These are very sanctifying; destructive of sins, giving happiness, devotion, and liberation. These are never to be described to deceitful persons; these are the essences and to be kept hidden. But you are very simple and like my life. I therefore speak to you. Hear. O Fair One! All the Vedas declare him to be holy and the best of men, in whose ears are pronounced from the mouth of a Guru, the Visnu mantra. At the very moment of his being born into this world, one hundred generations back of that person, whether they be at that time in heaven or hell, get instantaneous liberation and if any of them happen to be born then as Jivas, they become liberated at once while living and finally get Visnupadam (the place of Visnu). That mortal is My Bhakta (devotee) who is full of devotion to Me, who always repeats My glories and acts according to My directions, who hears with all his heart My topics, and hearing which, whose mind dances with joy, whose voice gets choked and tears incessantly flow out from whose eyes, who loses his outward consciousness. Such a man is indeed. My Bhakta. My Bhaktas do not long for happiness or Mukti, or the four states Salokya, Sayujya, Samipya and Sarsti, nor the Brahmahood, nor the Devahood (the state of immortality); they want only to do Seva (service) to Me and they are solely intent on doing this. Even in dreams they do not desire the Indraship, Manuship, the state of Brahma so very difficult to be had; nor do they want the enjoyment of kingdoms and heavens. My Bhaktas roam in Bharata, eager to hear My glories, and always very glad to recite My sweet glorious deeds. The birth of such Bhaktas in Bharata is very rare. They purify the world and go ultimately to My abode, the best of all Tirthas (sacred places). Thus I have spoken O Padme! all that you wanted to hear. Now do as you like. Then Ganga and others all went to obey the order of Sri Hari, Who went to His own abode.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter of the Ninth Book on the curses Ganga, Sarasvati, and Laksmi and the way to freedom thereof in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-110. Narayana said A part of Sarasvati descended in this Bharata Punya Bhumi (land of merits), owing to the curse of Ganga; and She remained in full in Visnu's region, the abode of Vaikuntha. She is named Bharati, on account of Her coming to Bharata; she is called Brahmi because she is dear to Brahma; and She is called Vani as She presides over Speech. Hari is seen everywhere, in tanks, in wells, in running streams (i.e., in Saras). Because He resides in Saras, therefore He is called Sarasvan. Vani is the S'akti of that Sarasvan; therefore She is denominated Sarasvati. The river Sarasvati is a very sacred Tirtha. She is the burning fire to the fuel of sins, of sinners. O Narada! Through the curse of Sarasvati, the Devi Ganga also assumed the form of a river in part. She was brought down to this earth at the request of Bhagiratha. Hence she is called Bhagirathi. While Ganga was rushing down to the earth S'iva capable to bear the great rush of Her, held Her on His head at the request of the Mother Earth. Laksmi also, through the curse of Sarasvati came in part of parts Bharata as the river Padmavati. But She remained in full with Hari. Laksmi appeared also in Her other part as the well-known daughter Tulasi of the king Dharmadhvaja in India. Last of all, through Bharati's curse and by the command of S'ri Hari, she turned into the Tulasi tree, purifying the whole world. Remaining for five thousand years of Kali, all them will quit their river appearances and go back to Hari. By the command of S'ri Hari, all the Tirthas save Kasi and Bindraban will go along with them to Vaikuntha. Next at the expiry of the ten thousand years of Kali, S'alagrama S'ila (the stone piece worshipped as Narayana) S'iva, and S'iva S'akti and Purusottama Jagannatha will leave the soil of Bharata and go to their respective places, (i.e. the Mahatmyas of those will be extinct from Bharata). There will then cease to be the saints of S'iva S'akta, Ganapatya and Vaisnava sects, (eighteen) Puranas, the blowing of conch shells (auspicious signs), S'raddhas, Tarpanas, and all the rites and ceremonies dictated by the Vedas.

The worship and glorification of the Gods, the recitation of their praises, their names will be extinct. The Vedas with their Amgas will no longer be heard of. All these will disappear with them. The assembly of the Sadhus, the true Dharma, the four Vedas, the village Devas and Devis, the Vratas (vows) the practising of the austerities, fasting, all will disappear. All will be addicted to the Vamachara ritual (the left-hand ritual Tantrik form of worship; sarcastically used in the sense of drinking wine and eating flesh, etc.) They will speak falsehood and be deceitful. If anybody worships, his worship will be void of TulasT leaves. Almost all will be deceitful, cruel, vain, egoistic, thievish and mischievous. Men will be at variance with one another; women will be at variance with one another; no fear will exist in marriage ties. Properties will be only of those that will make them (i. e. there will cease to be any inheritance from father to son and so forth). Husbands will be obedient to their wives; unchaste women will be in every house. Wives will rebuke their husbands by incessant noisings and chidings. Wives will be the sole mistresses of houses and husbands will stand before them as servants with folded palms. Fathers-in-law and mothers-in-law will be their servants. The brothers of wives, and their friends will be the managers of the household affairs. But there will be no friendship with one's own class fellows. The brothers and friends of the house owners (masters of the house) will appear quite strangers as if they are new-comers. Without the command of the house-wives, the masters of the houses will be unable to do anything. The divisions of caste (Brahmana, Ksattriya, Vaisya, and S'udra) will entirely disappear. Far from practising Sandhya Bandanam and other daily practices, the Brahmanas will cease to hold the holy threads even on their bodies. The four colour-classes will practise the doings of the MIechchas, read the S'astras of the MIechchas and forsake their own S'astras. The Brahmins, Ksattriyas, and Vais'yas will become the slaves of S'udras, will become their cooks, runners and carriers of buffaloes. Every one will be devoid of truth. Earth will not yield any grains; trees will not yield any fruits and women will be issueless. The cows will not yield milk; even if there be a little milk, ghee will not come out of it. The affection between husband and wife will die out and the families will be devoid of truth. The King will not wield any power; the subjects will be over burdened with taxes. The ever flowing big rivers, the petty streams, the caves of mountains all will gradually have very little water in them. The Four Varnas will be devoid of Dharma and Punya (merit, virtue). One in a lakh may be virtuous. Afterwards that too will cease. Men, women, boys, all will be ugly and deformed. They will utter bad words and vile sounds. Some villages and towns will be completely deserted by men and will look terrible; at some others few cottages with few inhabitants will be seen. Villages and towns will be jungles and jungles will become filled with men. The inhabitants of the forests will become heavily taxed and disconsolate. The beds of rivers and lakes will become dry owing to want of rains and will be cultivated. The Kulinas of high families will become very low. The whole earth will be filled with liars, untruthful cheats and hypocrites. The lands, though cultivated well, will yield grains in name. Those who are well known as the millionaires, they will become poor and those who are devoted to the Devas will be atheists. The towns folk will have no trace of mercy; rather they will hate and envy their neighbours and turn out murderers of men. In the Kali age, males and females will be everywhere, of a dwarfish stature, diseased, shortlived, and of very little youthful virility. The hairs will turn out grey no sooner the people reach their sixteenth year. And they will be very old when they become twenty years old. The girls of eight years will have menstruation and will become pregnant. They will deliver every year. Old age will attack them when they become sixteen years old. Some women will have their husbands and children living. Otherwise almost all will be barren, childless. The four Varnas will sell their daughters. The paramours of the mothers, wives, son's wives, daughters, and sisters will be the source of support to them all. No one will be able, without money, to collect the merits by repeating the name of Hah. Persons will make gifts for name and fame and ultimately will take back what they had made as gifts. If there be any gifts made by one's own self or by one's forefathers or for a Deva purpose or for Brahmins or for the families of the Gurus, there will not be found wanting attempts to take back those gifts. Some will go to daughters, some to mothers-in-law, some to the wives of sons, some to sisters, some to mothers of co-wives, some will go to the brother's wives. In every house, those who are unfit to be mixed will be mixed with, excepting one's mother. In Kali Yuga who is whose wife? And who is whose husband? There will be no certainty; who is whose subject and what village is to whom? There will be no surety that such a property belongs to such and such a man. All will turn out to be liars, licentious, thieves, envious of other's wives, and murderers of men. In the houses of the Brahmins, Ksattriyas, and Vais'yas, the three higher castes, the current of sin will flow. They will live by selling lac, iron, and salts prohibited by the S'astras. The Brahmins will drive buffaloes, burn the dead bodies of the S'udras, eat the food of the S'udras and go to unchaste women. There will be no more faith existing in the five Risi Yajhas. Almost every Brahmin will not observe the vows of Amavasya Nis'ipalana. The holy threads will be cast away and the Sandhya Bandanam and cleanliness and good practices will cease altogether. The unchaste women who deal in giving loans, etc., and live on interests and the procuresses during menstruation will cook in Brahmin families. There will be no distinction of food, no distinction of wombs, no distinction of As'ramas, and no distinction of persons. All will turn out MIechchas. O Narada! Thus, when the Kali will have its full play, the whole world will be filled with MIechchas, the trees will be one hand high and the men will be of the size of a thumb. Then the most powerful Bhagavan Narayana will incarnate in His part in the house of a Brahmin named Visnujas'a as his son. Mounted on a long horse, holding a long sword He will make the world free of the MIechchas in three nights. Then he will disappear from the face of the Earth and She will be without any sovereign and be filled with robbers. There will be incessant rain, for six nights and it will rain and rain and the whole earth will be deluged; no traces of men, houses, and trees. After this the Twelve Suns will rise simultaneously and by their rays the whole water will be dried up and the earth will become level.

Thus the dreadful Kali will pass away when the Satya Yuga will come back, Tapasya and the true religion and Sattva Guna will prevail again. The Brahmins will practise Tapasya, they will be devoted to Dharma and the Vedas. The women will be chaste and religious in every house. Again the wise and intelligent Ksattriyas devoted to the Brahmanas will occupy the royal thrones and their might, devotion to Dharma and love for good deeds will increase. The Vais'yas will again go on with their trades and their devotion to their trade and the Brahmins will be reestablished. The S'udras, too, will be again virtuous, and serve the Brahmins. Again the Brahmins, Ksattriyas, and Vais'yas and their families will have Bhakti towards the Devi, be initiated in Devi Mantras and all will meditate on the Devi. Again there will be spread the knowledge of the Vedas, the Smritis, and the Puranas, all will go to their wives in menstruation periods. No Adharma (unrighteousness) will exist and the Dharma will reign in full, with all the parts (Kalas) complete. When the Treta Yuga comes, the Dharma will be three footed; when the Dvapara Yuga will come; the Dharma will be two-footed and when Kali will begin, the Dharma will be one-footed, and when Kali will reign supreme, no Dharma will exist, even in name. (O Narada! Now I will speak of time.) The seven days of the week, Sunday, &c., the sixteen tithis, Pratipada &c., the twelve months Vais'akha &c., the six seasons Summer, &c., the two fortnights (dark and bright) and the two Ayanas (Northern and Southern) are rendered in vogue. One day consists of four Praharas, one night consists of four Praharas; a day and a night constitute one so-called day. Thirty such days make one month. In the computation of time, five kinds of years (Varsas) were already mentioned (in the 8th Skandha). As the Satya, Treta, Dvapara and Kali roll on turn by turn, so the days, months and years also roll on in turn. One day, according to the Devas, is equal to one year, according to men; three hundred and sixty human Yugas equal to one Deva Yuga. Seventy- one Deva Yugas make one Manvantara. The life period of Indra, the Lord of S'achi, is one Manvantara. Twenty-eight Indras' lives equal to one day of Hiranyagarbha (the golden wombed) Brahma. One hundred and eight such years equal to the life of one Brahma. When this Brahma dies, there is the Prakrita Pralaya. The earth is not visible then. (The dissolution of Prakriti takes place.) The whole Brahmanda is deluged by water; Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara and the other wise Risis get diluted in Para Brahma whose substance is all truth and consciousness. That time, the Prakriti Devi, too, gets merged in Para Brahma. The fall of Brahma and the dissolution of Prakriti are called the Prakrita Pralaya. The duration of this Pralaya is one Nimesa of the Para Brahma Mula Prakriti united with Maya.

All the Brahmandas (universes) are destroyed at this time. When this Nimesa expires, the creation begins again in due order. So one cannot count the endless numbers of times when this creation and dissolution work are going on. So who can tell how many kalpas had past away, or how many Kalpas will come, how many Brahmandas were created or how many Brahmandas will be created. Who will be able to count how many Brahmas, how many Visnus or how many MahesVaras there have been. But One and Only One Para Brahma ParamesVara (the Great God) is The Supreme Lord of these countless Brahmandas. The ParamesVara of the nature of Existence, Consciousness and Bliss is the Highest Spirit of all. All others, Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara the Great Virat, the Smaller Virat, all are His parts. This Brahma is Mula Prakriti and from That has appeared S’ri Krisna, the Lord of his left half which is woman (Ardha NarisVara). It is She that divided Herself into two forms; in Her one form. She resides as the two armed Krisna in the region of Goloka; and as the four-armed Narayana in Vaikuntha. All the things from Brahma, the Highest, to the mere grass the lowest, all are originated from Prakriti. And all the Prakriti-born things are transient. Thus the True, Eternal Para Brahma, beyond the three gunas, the Source of all creation. Whose substance is All-Will is the Only Substance beyond the region of Prakriti. He is without Upadhis (conditions, as time, space, causation and attributes); He is without any form; and the forms that He assumes, they are for shewing His Grace to the devotees only. The Lotus-born Brahma is able by His Power of Knowledge to create the Brahmanda. It is by His Grace that S'iva, the Lord of the yogis is named Mrityumjaya (the Conqueror of Death), the Destoyer of all, and the Knower of all Tattvas. By His Tapas, S'iva has realised Para Brahma and therefore has become the Lord of all. All-knowing, endowed with great Vibhutis (lordly powers), the seer of all, omnipresent, the protector of all, the bestower of all prosperities. The devotion and service towards Para

Brahma have alone made S’ri Visnu the Lord of all; and it is through the power of Para Brahma, that Mahamaya Prakriti Devi has become omnipotent and the Goddess of all. Bhagavati Durga has got His Grace by Her devotion and service to Him and has become Mula Prakriti of the nature of Being, Consciousness and Bliss. And so has the Devi Savitri, the Mother of the Vedas, become the presiding Deity of the Vedas and She is worshipped by the Brahmanas and the Knowers of the Vedas. That She presides over all the branches of knowledge, is worshipped by all the learned assemblies and by the whole Universe is the result only of worshipping the Prakriti Devi. That Laksmi has become the bestower of all wealth and the presiding Deity of all the villages and the mistress of all, worshipped by all and the bestower of sons to all is also the result of worshipping Her. Thus it is through the worship of Prakriti that Durga, the Destroyer of all calamities and troubles has appeared from the left side of S’ri Krisna; and Radha has become the presiding Deity of His Prana (vital airs), and She is worshipped by all and possessed of all knowledge. It is by the worship of S'akti that Radhika has so much excelled in love, has become the presiding Deity of the prana of Krisna, has got love and respect, has been placed on His breast and is exceedingly beautiful. With the object of getting Krisna for her husband. She practised severe austerities for one thousand Deva years on the mountain S'atas'ringa in Bharata to get the Mula Prakriti's Grace. And when the S'akti Mula Prakriti became graciously pleased towards Her, S’ri Krisna seeing Radhika increasing in beauty like the Crescent Moon took Her to His breast and out of tenderness wept and granted Her highest boons so very rare to others and said O Beautiful One!

You better remain always in My breast and devoted to Me amongs all my wives; let you be superior to them all in good fortune, respect, love and glory. From today you are my greatest best wife. I will love you as the best amongst them all. O Dear! Always I will be submissive to you and fulfil what you say. Thus saying, S’ri Krisna selected her as his wife without any co-wives and made Her dear to His Heart. The other Devis besides the five Prakritis, already mentioned, also derived superiorities by serving Mula Prakriti. O

Muni! What shall I say, everyone reaps the fruits as he practises Tapasya. Bhagavati Durga practised on the Himalyas tapasya for one thousand Deva years and meditated on the lotus-feet of Mula Prakrit! and so has come to be worshipped by all. The Devi Sarasvati practised Tapasya for one lakh Deva years and is come to be respected by all. The Devi Laksmi practised Tapasya at Puskara for one hundred Divine Yugas and, by the Grace of Mula Prakrit! has become the bestower of wealth to all. The Devi Savitri worshipped S’akti for sixty thousand divine years in the Malaya mountain and is respected and worshipped by all. O Bibhu! Brahma, Visnu, and MahesVara worshipped S'akti for one hundred Manvantaras and so have become the Preservers, etc., of this world. S’ri Krisna practised for ten Manvantaras terrible austerities and therefore obtained his position in the region of Goloka and is remaining there today in greatest bliss. Dharma Deva worshipped S’akti with devotion for ten Manvantaras and has become the lives of all, worshipped by all, and the receptacle of all. O Muni! Thus all, whether the Devis, Devas, Munis, Kings, Brahmanas, all have got their respect in this world by the worship of S’akti. O Devarsi! I have thus described to you all that I heard from the mouth of my Guru, in accordance with the rules of the Vedas. What more do you want to hear?

English translation

1-4. S'n Narada said In the twinkling of an eye of the Devi, the Pralaya takes place; and in that very time also the Brahmanda (cosmos) is dissolved, which is called the Pralaya of Prakriti. During this Pralaya, the Devi Vasundhara (Earth) disappears; the whole world is deluged with water and all this appearance of five elements called Prapahcha vanishes in the body of Prakriti. Now where does Vasundhara (Earth), thus vanished, reside? And how does She again appear at the beginning of the creation! What is the cause of her being so much blessed, honoured and capable to hold all and victorious. So tell about Her birth, the source of all welfare.

5-23. S’ri Narayana said O Narada! So it is heard that the Earth appears at the very outset of the creation. Her appearance and disappearance so occur in all the Pralayas. (This earth) the manifestation of the great S’akti, sometimes becomes manifest in Her and sometimes remains latent in Her (the S’akti). It is all the will of that Great S’akti. Now hear the anecdote of appearance (birth) of the earth, the cause of all good, the source of destruction of all calamities, the destroyer of sin and the cause of furtherance of one's religious merits. Some say that this earth has come out of the marrow of the Daityas, Madhu and Kaitabha; but that is not the fact. Hear now the real fact. Those two Daityas were greatly pleased with Visnu's valour and prowess in the fight between them and Visnu; and they said “Kill us on that part of the earth which is not under water.” From their words it is evident that the earth was existent during their lifetime but she was not visible. After their death, the marrow came out after their bones. Now hear how the name “Medini” came to be applied to the earth. She was taken out of the water, and the marrow came to be mixed with the earth. It is on account of this mixing that she is called Medini, Now I will tell you what I heard before in Puskara, the sacred place of pilgrimage, from the mouth of Dharma Deva, about the origin of earth, approved by the S'rutis, consistent, and good. Hear. When the mind of Maha Virat, merged in water, expanded all over his body, it entered into every pore of his body. Next the MahaprithvT or the Great Earth appeared at the time of Pahchi Karana (mixing of one-half of each of the elements with one-eighth of each of the other four elements).

This MahaprithvT was broken into pieces and placed in every pore. It is this differentiated earth that appears during creation and disappears during Pralaya. From this mind, concentrated in every pore of the body of Maha Virat, is born this earth, after a long interval. In every pore in the skin of this Virat Purusa there is one earth. She gets manifested and she disappears. This occurs again and again. When she appears, she floats on the water; and when she disappears, she gets merged in the water. There is this earth (world) in every universe; and along with her, there are mountains, forests, seven oceans, seven islands, Sumeru mountain, the Moon, the Sun and other planets, Brahmaloka, Visnuloka (the abode of Visnu) S'ivaloka and the regions of the other Devas, sacred places of pilgrimage, the holy land of Bharatavarsa, the KanchanT Bhumi, seven heavens, seven Patalas or nether regions, on the above Brahmaloka, and Dhruvaloka. This law holds good in every world in every universe. So every universe is the work of Maya and thus it is transient. At the dissolution of Prakriti, Brahma falls. Again when creation takes place, the Maha Virat appears from S’rT Krisna, the Supreme Spirit. Eternal is this flow of creation, preservation and destruction; eternal is this flow of time, Kastha; eternal is this flow of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a, etc. And eternal is this flow of Vasundhara who is worshipped in the Varaha Kalpa by the Suras, Munis, Vipras, Gandarbhas, etc. The S'ruti says that the Presiding Deity of this eternal earth is the wife of Visnu in His boar-form. Mangala (Mars) is the son of that earth and Mangala's son is Ghates'a.

24-26. Narada said In what form was the Earth worshipped by the Devas in Varaha Kalpa. The Varahi, the receptacle of all things, moving and non-moving, how did she appear, by what method of Pahchi Karana, from the Mulaprakriti? What is the method of her worship in this Bhurloka and in the Heavens (Svarloka). Also tell me, O Lord! in detail, the auspicious birth of Mangala (Mars).

27-34. Narayana spoke In ancient days, in the Varaha Kalpa, Varaha Deva (the boar incarnation) when entreated and praised by Brahma, killed the Daitya Hiranyaksa and rescued the earth from the nether regions Rasatala. He then placed the earth on the waters where she floated as the lotus leaf floats on water. In the meantime Brahma began to fashion the wonderful creation on the surface of the earth. Bhagavan Hah, in His boar form and brilliant like ten million suns saw the beautiful and lovely appearance of the presiding deity of the earth, possessed of amorous sentiments. He then assumed a very beautiful form, fit for amorous embraces. They then held their sexual intercourse and it lasted day and night for one Deva year. The beautiful Earth, in the pleasant amorous plays, fainted away; for the intercourse of the lover with the beloved is exceedingly pleasant. And Visnu, too, at the same time was very much exhausted by the pleasant touch of the body of the Earth. He did not become conscious even how days and nights passed away. When full one year passed away, they got back their senses and the amorous man then left his hold of the loved. He assumed easily his former Boar form and worshipped Her as the incarnate of the Devi, with incense, lights, offerings of food, with vermilion (Sindur, red- powder), sandal-paste, garments, flowers and various other offerings of food, etc. He then said

35-37. O Auspicious One! Let Thou beest the receptacle of all things. All the Munis, Manus, Devas, Siddhas, and Danavas, etc., will worship Thee with pleasure and willingness. On the day the Ambuvachi ceremony closes, on the day when the house construction, i.e., the foundation is laid, on the day when the first entry is made into the newly built houses, when the digging of the well or tank commences, and on the day when tilling the ground commences, all will worship Thee. Those stupid fools that will not observe this, will certainly go to hell.

38-41 The Earth spoke "O Lord! By Thy command I will assume the form of Varahi (female boar) and support easily on my back this whole world of moving and non-moving things, but the following things, pearls, small shells, S'alagram, (a black stone, usually round, found in the river Gandaki, and worshipped as a type of Visnu), the phallus or emblem of S'iva, the images of the goddesses, conch-shells, lamps (lights), the Yantras, gems, diamonds, the sacred upanayana threads, flowers, books, the Tulasi leaves, the bead (Japa mala), the garland of flowers, gold, camphor, Gorochana (bright yellow pigment prepared from the urine or bile of a cow). Sandal, and the water after washing the S'alagrama stone, I will not be able to bear. I will be very much pained in case I were to bear these on Me."

42-45. S'ri Bhagavan said "O Fair One! The fools that will place the above articles on Thy back will go to the Kalasutra hell for one hundred divine years." O Narada! Thus saying, the Bhagavan Narayana remained silent. Now the Earth became pregnant and the powerful planet Mars was born. By the command of S'ri Hah, all began to meditate on Earth according to what is mentioned in Kanvas'akha and began to praise Her. Offerings of food were given, uttering the root Mantra. Thus became extant all over the three worlds Her worship and praise.

46. Narada said O Bhagavan! Very sacred is the meditation, hymn and the root Mantra of the Earth. I am very anxious to hear them. Kindly describe it in detail.

47-48. Narayana said The Earth was first worshipped by Varaha Deva; next She was worshipped by Brahma. Next She was worshipped by all the Munis, Devas, Manus and men. O Narada! Now hear the Dhyan, praise and Mantra of the Devi Earth.

49-51. The Earth was first worshipped by Bhagavan Visnu with this root Mantra (mul mantra) "On Hrim S'rim Klim Vasundharayai Svaha." Next He said O Devi Earth! O Thou Smiling One! I worship Thee, who art worshipped by the three worlds, whose colour is white like white lotus, whose face is beautiful like the autumnal moon, who art the Store-house of all gems and jewels, and in whose womb all the precious stones and pearls are inbedded, and who has put on a raiment purified by fire. All then began to worship Her with this Mantra.

52-63. S'ri Narayana said Now hear the hymn sung before Her according to Kanva S'akha O Thou, the Giver of Victory! Holder of water! Endowed with water, full of victory; Consort of the Boar

Incarnation, Carrier of victory! Bestow victory on me. O Thou Auspicious One! The Store-house of all good, O Thou incarnate of all auspiciousness! Bestower of good. Thou, the Source of all good to bestow all sorts of welfare! Bestow all things that are good and auspicious to me in this world.

O Thou! The Receptacle of all, the Knower of all, all powerful, the Bestower of all desires, O Devi Earth! Give me the fruits that I desire.

O Thou! Who art all merits, Thou, the Seed of all religious merits, O Thou, the Eternal, the receptacle of all religious merits, the home of all religious persons. Thou bestowest merits to all.

O Thou! The Store-house of all grains, enriched with all sorts of corns. Thou bestowest harvests to all; Thou takest away all the grains in this world and again. Thou producest all corns of various kinds here. O Earth! Thou art all-in-all to the landlords, the Best Source of refuge and happiness. O Bestower of lands! Give me lands. The above hymn yields great religious merits. He becomes the sovereign of the whole earth for millions and millions of births who rising early in the morning reads this stotra. Men who read this acquire merits due to giving away lands as gifts. People become certainly freed of their sins, if they read this stotra, who take back the lands after making them as gifts, who dig earth on the day of Ambuvachi, who dig wells without permission on another's well, who steal other's lands, who throw their semen on earth, who place lamps on the earth. Religious merits, equivalent to one hundred horse sacrifices accrue from reading this stotra. There is no doubt in this. This stotra of the great Devi is the source of all sorts of welfare and auspiciousness.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the origin of the S'akti of the earth in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Narada said I am now desirous to hear about the merits acquired by making gifts of land, the demerits in stealing away lands, digging wells in other's wells, in digging earth on the day of Ambuvachi, in casting semen on earth, and in placing lamps and lights on the surface of the earth as well the sins when one acts wrongly in various other ways on the surface of the earth and the remedies thereof.

4-30. S’ri Narayana said If one makes a gift of land in this Bharata of the measure of a Vitasti (a long span measured by the extended thumb and little finger) to a Brahmana who performs Sandhya three times a day and is thus purified, one goes and remains in S’iva Loka (the abode of S’iva). If one gives away in charity a land full of corn to a Brahmin, the giver goes and lives in Visnu Loka in the end for a period measured by the number of dust particles in the land. If one presents a village, a plot of land, or grains to a Brahmin, both the giver and the receiver, become freed of their sins and go to the Devi Loka (the abode of the Devi). Even if one be present when a proposal for a gift of land is being made and says “This act is good,” one goes to Vaikuntha with one's friends and relatives. He remains in the Kalasutra hell as long as the Sun and Moon exist, who takes back or steals away the gift to a Brahmin, offered by himself or by any other body. Even his sons, grandsons, etc., become destitute of lands, prosperity, sons, and wealth and remain in a dreadful hell named Raurava. If one cultivates the grazing land for the cows and reaps therefrom a harvest of grains, one remains for one hundred divine years in the Kumbhipaka hell. If one cultivates any enclosure for cows or tanks and grows grains on them, one remains in the Asipatra hell for a period equivalent to fourteen Indra's falls. One who bathes in another's tank without taking off five handfuls of earth from it, goes to hell and one's bath is quite ineffectual. If anybody, out of his amorous passion casts his semen privately on the suface of the ground, he will have to suffer the torments of hell for as many years as are the numbers of dust particles on that area. If anyone digs ground on the day of Ambuvachi, one remains in hell for four Yugas. If, without the permission of the owner of a well or tank, a stupid man clears the old well or tank and digs the slushy earth from the bottom, his labour goes in vain. The merit goes to the real owner. And the man who laboured so much goes to Tapta Kunda Naraka for fourteen Indra's life-periods. If any one takes out five handfuls of earth from another's tank, when he goes to bathe in it, he dwells in Brahma Loka for a period of years amounting to the number of particles in those handfuls of earth. During one's father's or grandfather's S'radha ceremony, if one offers pinda without offering any food (pinda) to the owner of the soil, the S'radha performer goes certainly to hell. If one places a light (Pradipa) directly on the earth without any holding piece at the bottom, one becomes blind for seven births; and so if one places a conch-shell on the ground (S'ankha), one becomes attacked with leprosy in one's next birth. If any body places pearls, gems, diamonds, gold and jewels, the five precious things on the ground he becomes blind, if one places the phallic emblem of S’iva, the image of S'ivani, the S'alagrama stone on the ground, he remains for one hundred Manvantaras to be eaten by worms. Conchshells, Yantras (diagrams for S'akti worshippers), the water after washing S'ilas (stones) i. e., Charanamrita, flowers, Tulasi leaves, if placed on the ground, lead him who places these, verily to hells. The beads, garlands of flowers, Gorochana (a bright yellow pigment prepared from the urine or bile of a cow), and camphor, when placed on the ground, lead him who places so to suffer the torments of hell. The sandal wood, Rudraksa mala, and the roots of Kus'a grass also, if placed on the ground, lead the doer to stay for one manvantara in the hell. Books, the sacred Upanayana threads, when placed on the ground make the doers unfit for Brahmin birth; rather he is involved in a sin equivalent to the murder of a Brahmin. The sacred Upanayana thread when knotted and rendered fit for holding, is worth being worshipped by all the castes.

One ought to sprinkle the earth with curd, nnilk, etc., after one has completed one's sacrifices. If one fails to do this, one will have to remain for seven births in a hot ground with great torment. If one digs the earth when there is an earth quake or when there is an eclipse, that sinner becomes also devoid of some of his limbs in his next birth. O Muni! This earth is named Bhumi since She is the abode of all; she is named Kas'yapi since she is the daughter of Kas'yapa; is named Vis'vambhara, since she supports the Universe; She is named Ananta, since she is endlessly wide; and She is named PrithivT since she is the daughter of the King Prithu, or she is extensively wide.

Here ends the Tenth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the offences caused towards the surface of the earth and punishments thereof in hells - in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. The Devarsi Narada said O Thou, the foremost of the knowers of the Vedas! I have heard the excellent narration of Earth. Now I want to hear the anecdote of Ganga. I heard, ere long, that Ganga, of the nature of Visnu and appearing from the feet of Visnu, the Is'vari of the Devas, appeared, due to the curse of Bharati, on Bharata; why has she come to Bharata; in which Yuga and asked by whom did she come to Bharata? O Lord! Now describe to me this auspicious anecdote capable to destroy sins and yield religious merits.

4-38. Narayana said O Child! In ancient days there was born a prosperous Emperor King of Kings, in the Solar dynasty. He had two beautiful wives; one was named Vaidarbhi, and the other was named S'aivya. S'aivya delivered a very lovely son; his name was Asamanja. On the other hand, the queen

Vaidarbhi desirous of getting a son, worshipped S'ankara, the Lord of Bhutas who became pleased and granted her request; and Vaidarbhi became pregnant. After one hundred years of pregnancy she gave birth to one mass of flesh. Seeing this, the queen became very afflicted and taking refuge of Mahadeva, began to cry loudly and very often. Bhagavan S'ankara, then, appeared there in a Brahmin form and cut that mass of flesh into thousand pieces. Those thousand pieces turned out into thousand very powerful sons. Their bodies looked more brillant than the mid-day sun. But they were all burnt to ashes by the curse of Kapila Muni. And the King began to lament bitterly and he entered into the forest. Asamaja practised tapasya to bring the Ganga for one lakh years when he quitted his body in course of time. His son Ams'uman practised tapasya for one lakh years to bring Ganga unto Bharata and he, too, died. Then the son of Amsuman, the intelligent Bhagiratha, a great devotee of Visnu, free of old age and death and the store of many qualifications, practised tapasya for one lakh years to bring Ganga on earth. At last he saw S'ri Krisna brilliant like ten millions of summer suns. He had two hands; there was a flute in his hand; be was full of youth in the dress of a cow-herd. A sight of His Gopala Sundari form, wearing a Sakhi's dress, makes one think that He is ever ready to show grace on His devotees. He is Para Brahma, whose Substance is Will; be has no deficiencies. Brahma, Visnu and MahesVara and the other Devas and Munis, etc. all praise Him, who pervades everywhere. He is not concerned with anything; yet He is the Witness of all. He is beyond the three gunas, higher than Prakriti. A sweet smile is always in his face, which makes it the more lovely. There is none equal to him in showing Grace to the Bhaktas. His raiment is purified (uninflammable) by fire and he is decorated with gems, jewels and ornaments. The King Bhagiratha saw that unforeseen appearance, bowed down and began to praise over and over again. His whole body was filled with ecstasy. Then he clearly told what he wanted for the deliverance of his family. Bhagavan S'ri Krisna then, addressed Ganga and said “O SuresVari! Go quickly and appear in Bharata, under the curse of Bharati. By My command go quickly and purify the sons of Sagara. They will all be purified by the touch of the air in contact with the Ganges and rise up in divine aerial cars, assuming forms like Mine and they will come to My abode. They will there remain always as My attendants and they will not be involved in the sins that they committed in their previous births. O Narada! It is stated thus in the Vedas, that if the human souls, taking their births in Bharata, commit sins for millions and millions of births, the sins will be completely destroyed if they touch once the air in contact with and carrying the particles of the Ganges. The sight of the Ganges and the touch of the Ganges water give religious merits ten times more than the touch with the air in contact with the Ganges water. People become freed of their sins then and there especially if they bathe in the Ganges. It is heard in the S'rutis that the bathing in the Ganges, if done according to rules, destroys all the sins, e.g., the murder of a Brahmin, etc., acquired in one thousand millions of births done consciously or unconsciously. The merits that are acquired by the bathing in the Ganges on a day of religious merit, cannot be described even by the Vedas. Whatever is mentioned in the Agamas is but a mere trifle. Even Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a cannot describe fully the merits of the bathing in the Ganges. O Brahmin! Such is the glory of ordinary bathing. Now I will describe the effect of the Ganges bath done with a Sankalpa (resolve); hear. Ten times more the result is obtained when the Ganges bathing is done with a resolve (Sankalpa) than ordinary bath and if one bathes on the day when the sun passes from one sign to another (in the Zodiac), thirty times more religious merits accrue. On the new Moon (Amavyas) day, the Ganges bath gives the merits as above mentioned; but when the Sun is in his Southern course (Daksinayana) double the merits are obtained and when the sun is in his Northern course, ten times more religious merits are obtained. The Ganges bathing in the time of Chaturmasya, full Moon day, Aksaya Navami or Aksaya trittiya yields merits that cannot be measured. And if on the above Parva (particular periods of the year on which certain ceremonies are commanded) days both bathing, and making over gifts are done, there is no limit to the religious merits acquired; hundred times more than ordinary bath, religious merits are obtained. Great religious merits accrue from the Ganges bath on Manvantara tithi, Yugadya, S'ukla seventh day of the month of Magha, Bhismastami day, As'okastami day, and S'ri Rama Navami day. Again double the merits than those of the above arise from bathing in the Ganges during the Nanda ceremony. The Gauges bath in the Das'ahara tenth tithi gives merits equivalent to Yugadya Snanam (bath). And if the bathing be done on Mahananda or in Mahavaruni day, four times more religious merits accrue. Ten million times more religious merits accrue from the Ganges bathing on Maha Maha Varuni day than ordinary bath. The Ganges bath in the Solar eclipse yields ten times more religious merits than in the Lunar eclipse. Again the Snanam in Ardhodaya Yoga yields hundred times more religious merits than that of the (solar) eclipse. Thus saying to Ganga before Bhagiratha, the Lord of the Devas remained silent. The Devi Ganga with her head bowed down with devotion, said

39-42. Ganga said If I am after all, to go to Bharata as Thou commandest and under the curse given previously by Bharati, then tell me how I would be freed of the sins that the sinners will cast on me. How long will I have to remain there? When, O Lord! Shall I be able to return to the Highest place of Visnu? O Thou, the Inner Self of all! O All Knowing! O Lord! Whatever else I desire. Thou knowest them all. So be pleased to instruct me on all these points.

43-69. Bhagavan S'ri Hari said O Sures'vari! I know all that you desire; when you will assume the liquid form, the Salt Ocean will be your husband. He is My part and you are of the nature of Laksmi; so the union of the lover with the love stricken in the world will turn out a happy and qualified one. Of all the rivers Sarasvati and others in Bharata, that go to mix with the ocean, you will be the best and highly fortunate of them all. From today you will have to remain in Bharata for a period of five thousand years, under the curse of Bharati. You will be able to enjoy daily and always the pleasures with the Ocean. O Devi! As you are a clever lady, so He is also apt and expert. The inhabitants of Bharata will praise Thee and worship Thee with great devotion by the stotra which Bhagiratha has composed.

He will derive the fruit of one horse-sacrifice who will meditate on Thee as per Kanvas'akha and worship, praise and bow down to Thee daily. Even if one utter “Ganga,” “Ganga,” though one is one hundred Yojanas away from the Ganges, one will be freed of all sins and go to Visnu-loka. Whatever sins will be cast in Thee by thousand sinners bathing in Thee will be destroyed by the touch of the devotees of Prakrit! Devi. Even if thousands and thousands of sinners touch the dead bodies and bath in Thee, all those will be destroyed when the Devi Bhaktas,the worshippers of BhuvanesVari and Maya Vija, will come and touch Thee. O Auspicious One! Thou wilt wash away the sins of the sinners, by Thy stay in Bharata with other best rivers Sarasvati and others. That will be at once a sacred place of pilgrimage where Thy glories will be chanted. By the touch of the dust of Thine, the sinner will be at once purified and he will dwell in the DevMoka (Mani Dvipa) for as many years as will be the dust there. All Hail to the Devi BhuvanesVari! He who will leave his body on Thy lap with full consciousness and remembering My name, will certainly go to My abode and will remain, as My chief attendant for an infinite period. He will see countless Prakritik Layas (dissolutions of the Universe). Unless a man has collected hordes of religious merits, be cannot die in the Ganges; and if he dies on the Ganges he goes to Vaikuntha as long as the Sun rises in this world. I get many bodies for him where he can enjoy the fruits of his Karma and I then give him My Svarupya (Form resembling Mine) and make him My attendant. If any ignorant man, void of any Jhanam, quits his body by touching merely Thy water, I give him

Salokya (place in My region) and make him My attendant. Even if one quits one's body in a far off place, uttering Thy Name, I give him place in My region for one life time of Brahma. And if he remembers Thee with devotion, and quits his mortal coil at another place, I give him Sarupya (Form resembling Mine) for a period of endless Prakritik Layas. He instantly gets on an aerial car made of jewels and goes with My attendants to the region of Goloka and gets form like Me. Those that worship daily My Mantra, that pass their day eating the remnant of the food offered to Me, they need not have any distinction whether they die in Tirath or not. They themselves can easily purify the three worlds. Getting on the excellent and best aerial car built of jewels, they go to the region of Goloka. O Chaste One! Even if the friends of My devotees, be born in animal births, they also will be purified by the devotion shown towards Me and getting on a jewelled aerial car will be able to go to Goloka, so diffcult of access. Wherever the Bhaktas may be, if they simply remember Me with devotion, they will become liberated while living by the power of My Bhakti. Thus saying to Ganga, Bhagavan S'ri Hah addressed Bhagiratha O Child! Now worship Ganga Devi with devotion and chant hymns to Her. The pure Bhagirata meditated with devotion as per Kauthuma S'akha and worshipped the Devi and praised Her repeatedly. Then Ganga and Bhagiratha bowed down to S'ri Krisna and He disappeared at once from their sight.

70. The Devarsi Narada said "O Thou the foremost of the Knowers of the Vedas! How, by what Kuthuma S'akha, the noble King Bhagiratha meditated on the Devi Ganga; what stotra did he recite and what was the method with which he worshipped the Ganges.

71-75. Narayana said O Narada! One should first take one's bath, and putting on a clean washed clothing should perform one's daily duties. Then one should control oneself and with devotion worship the six Devatas Ganes'a, Sun, Fire, Visnu, S'iva and S'ivani. Thus one becomes entitled to worship. First worship is to be given to Ganes'a for the destruction of obstacles; the Sun is to be next worshipped for health; Fire, for purification; Visnu is then worshipped for getting wealth and power; S'iva is worshipped for knowledge and S'ivani is worshipped for Mukti. When these Devatas are worshipped, one is entitled to worship the Deity. Otherwise contrary become the effects. Now I am saying what Dhyanam (meditation) did Bhagiratha practise towards the Devi Ganga.

Here ends the Eleventh Chapter of the Ninth Book on the origin of the Ganges in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-15. Narayana said O Narada! Now about the meditation (Dhyan) of the Devi Ganga as per Kanva S'akha, which destroys all the sins, O Gange! Of white colour like white lotuses! Thou destroyest all the sins of men. Thou hast appeared from the body of S'ri Krisna. Thou art powerful like Him. Thou art very chaste and pure. Thou hast worn the raiment, uninflammable and decorated all over with ornaments made of jewels. Thou art more brilliant than one hundred autumnal Moons. Thou art also well pleased with a smile on Thy lips. And Thou art always of steady youthful beauty (that never wanes). Thou art dear to Narayana, calm and of peaceful temper, and proud of being His with His fortune. Thou bearest the braid of hair, decked with garlands of Malati flowers; Thy cheeks are anointed with sandal dots, with Sindura bindu (dots of red powder, vermilion) and well adorned with various artistic lines made of musk. Thy garment and Thy beautiful lips are more red than the ripe Bimba fruit (the red fruit of a cucurbitaceous plant); Thy teeth vie as it were, with the rows of pearls. How lovely are Thy eyes! How delightsome is Thy side-long glance! How close are Thy breasts like Bel fruits! Thy loins are thicker and more solid then the plantain trees. How do Thy feet look beautiful, defying the beauty of the Sthalapadma (ground Lotus)!

How do the red sandals look lovely with Kunkuma and alaktak (red powder)! What a red tinge Thy feet have shewn with the honey of Parijata flower that is seen on the head of Indra. The Devas, the Siddhas, the Munis, offer always Arghyas (offerings of rice with Durba grass) at Thy feet; the ascetics bow down at Thy feet, and it seems as though so many lines of bees are on Thy lotus feet. O Mother! Thy lotus feet give liberation to those that want Mukti and enjoyment to those that want Bhukti (enjoyments). O Mother! Thou art the boon; Thou art the chief excellent; Thou grantest boons and Thou showest Thy favour to Thy devotees; Thou bestowest the Visnupadam (the place of Visnu); but Thou hast come from the feet of Visnu. Thus meditating on the Devi Ganga flowing by three routes (in Heaven, earth and infernal regions), the bestower of good things one should offer to the Devi sixteen things Asana, Padya, Arghya, water for bathing, ointment (anulepana), Dhupa (scents), DTpa (lights), Naivedya (offerings of food), betel, cool water, clothings, ornaments garlands, sandal-paste, Achamaniya (water for sipping), and beautiful beddings and worship Her with these. Then, with folded hands, one should perform stotra to Her and bow down to Her with devotion. Thus the worshipper gets the fruits of A'svamedha sacrifice.

16. Narada said O Lord of the Devas! At present I am desirous to hear the sin-destroying and virtue-bestowing stotra (hymn) of Ganga Devi, the Purifier of all those that are fallen from virtue, originated from the feet of Visnu, the Lord of world and the husband of Laksmi. Kindly narrate all these in detail.

17-41. Narayana said O Narada! Now I am narrating the stotra of Ganga Devi, that destroys all sins and bestows all religious merit. Hear. I bow down to the Ganges who appeared from the body of S’ri Krisna, enchanted by the music of S'iva, and, who was bathed with the perspiration (water coming out of the body) of S’ri Radha. I bow down to Ganga Devi who first appeared in the circular dance (Rasa Mandalam) in the region of Goloka and who always remains with S'ankara. My obeisance to the Devi Ganga who remains in the auspicious grand utsab of Radha (Rasa Mandalam), crowded with Gopas and Gopis, in the Full Moon night of the month of Kartik. She is one koti yojanas wide and one lakh times one koti yojanas long in the region of Goloka. My Obeisance to Her! In Vaikuntha, Ganga is sixty lakh yojanas in width and four times that in length. My Obeisance to Her! In Brahma-loka, Ganga is thirty lakh yojanas wide and five times as long. I bow down to Her. In S'iva-loka, She is thirty lakh yojanas wide and four times that in length. I bow down to Her. In Dhruva-loka, She is one lakh yojanas wide and seven times as long.

I bow down to Her. In Chandra-loka She is one lakh yojanas wide and five times as long. My obeisance to S'ri Ganga Devi. I bow down to the Ganges who is sixty thousand yojanas wide in the Surya loka and ten times that in length. I bow down to Ganga in Tapo-loka who is one lakh yojanas wide and five times that in length. My obeisance to Ganga Devi in Janar-loka, who is one thousand yojanas wide and ten times that as long. I bow down to Ganga in Mahar-loka who is ten lakh yojanas wide and five times that in length. My obeisance to Ganga Devi in Kailas'a who is one thousand yojanas wide and one hundred times as long. I bow down to Ganga Devi who is known as Mandakini in Indra-loka, and who is one hundred yojanas wide and ten times than that in length. My obeisance to Ganga Devi, known as Bhogavati in Patala who is ten yojanas wide and five times as long. I bow down to Ganga Devi, known as Alakananda in this earth, who is two miles wide, in some places more wide and in some places less wide. I bow down to Ganga Devi who was of the colour of milk in Satya yuga, of the colour of Moon in Treta Yuga, of the colour of white sandal-paste in Dvapara yuga. I bow down to S'ri Ganga Devi who is as water in Kali yuga in this earth and as milk in Kali yuga in Heaven. O Child! By the touch of one molecule of the water of the Ganges, all the horrible sins incurred in ten million births, the murder of a Brahmin and so forth, are burnt to ashes. Thus I have described in twenty-one verses the great stotra (human) of the sin-destroying and the virtue-increasing merits of Ganga. He reaps the fruit of the A'svamedha sacrifice (Horse sacrifice), who daily sings this praise of Ganga after worshipping Her with devotion. There is no doubt in this. The persons that are without any sons get sons hereby and those who have no wives get wives. The diseased get themselves free from their diseases, and the man who is under bondage, is liberated from that bondage. He who getting up early in the morning reads this stotra of Ganga, becomes widely known even if he be not known at all and he becomes illumined with wisdom even if he be quite ignorant. Even if he sees a bad dream, he acquires the merit of bathing in the Ganges and of seeing good dreams.

42-44. S'ri Narayana spoke O Narada! With this stotra (hymn) did Bhagiratha praise the Ganga Devi. Who then went with him to the spot where the Sagara's sons were burnt to ashes by the curse of Kapila. By the contact of the wind in touch with the particles of water of the Ganges, those sons of Sagara were instantly freed of their curses and they all repaired to Vaikuntha. She is named Bhagirathi, because Bhagiratha brought Her to this earth. Thus I have described to you the story of the Ganges.

This anecdote is highly meritorious and the great step to liberation. What more do you now want to hear? Say.

45-46. Narada said O Lord! How did Ganga come to flow through the three worlds by three routes, and thus purify them? How was she carried and to which places? How did the people of those localities accord respect to Her? Kindly describe all these in detail.

47-79. Narayana said O Narada! On the Full Moon night of the month of Kartik in the Rasa mandalam, at the great festivity in honour of Radha, S'ri Krisna worshipped Radha and remained there. Next Radha, worshipped by S'ri Krisna, was worshipped by Brahma and the other Devas, by

Saunaka and the other Risis, who also stopped there with much gladness. At this moment the Devi Sarasvati, the Presiding Deity of the Science of Music began to sing lovely songs regarding Krisna, in tune with vocal and instrumental music. Brahma became glad and presented to Sarasvati a necklace of jewels; Maha Deva gave her gems and jewels rare in this universe; Krisna presented the best Kaustubha jewel; Radhika offered excellent invaluable necklace of jewels; Narayana presented to her the best and most excellent garland of jewels; Laksmi gave her invaluable golden earrings decked with gems; Visnu-Maya Mula Prakriti, Bhagvati Durga, who is Narayani, Is'vari, Is'ani, presented Her devotion to Brahma, so very rare; Dharma gave her devotion to Dharma and high fame; Agni (fire) gave her excellent raiments purified by fire and Vayu gave Her Nupura (toe ornaments) made of gems and jewels. At this time, MahesVara, the Lord of Bhutas (elements) began to sing, at the suggestion of Brahma, songs relating to S’ri Krisna's grand Rasa festival. Hearing this, the Devas became very much enchanted and remained motionless like statues. With great difficulty, they regained their consciousness. Then they saw that there was no Radha nor Krisna in this Rasa mandala; everything was deluged with water. The Gopas, Gopis, Devas and Brahmanas began to cry loudly. Brahma in his meditation then came to know that Radha and Krisna both have assumed this liquid appearance for the deliverance of the people of the world. Brahma and others, all began to praise S’ri Krisna and said “O All prevading One! Now be pleased to show us Thy form and grant us our desired boons.” At that instant a sweet incorporeal voice was clearly heard by all, as coming from air above, that, “I am the Self of all, pervading all; and this my S’akti, Radha, is also the Self of all, prevades all; so there is no separation of us from you all even for a moment. It is only to show our favour to the devotees that we assume special forms. For this reason only there is separation of us from you as regards this body! There is nothing else. Besides you have no necessity with our bodies. O Devas! Now if my Manus, men. Munis, Vaisnavas and you all, purified by Mantras desire very much to see My Form clearly, then I tell you to request MahesVara to carry out My word. O Brahma! O Creator! Better ask Mahadeva, the World Teacher, that He would better compose the beautiful Tantra S'astra, in accordance with the limbs of the Vedas. And that the above S'astra be full of Mantras, capable to yield desired fruits, Stotras (hymns) and Kavachas (protection mantras) and rules of due worship in proper order. And that also My Mantra, My Stotra, and My Kavacha be also given there in a hidden form. So that those people that are sinners might not understand their real meanings and thus turn out against Me. It may be that one in a thousand or in a hundred may worship My Mantra. And My Mantra worshippers, the saints, become purified and come to My Abode. If My S'astra be not well made (i. e., if everyone be able to understand its meaning) and if everyone be able to go from Bhurloka to Goloka, then Thy labour in this creation of the world will all be in vain. Therefore dost Thou better create different worlds according to the differences of Sattvik, Rajasik, and Tamo Gunas; then some will be the inhabitants of this Bhurloka, some will be the inhabitants of Dyuloka according to their Karmas. O Brahman! If Maha Deva promises earnestly in this assembly of the Devas, I will then exhibit My True Form.” O Narada! Thus speaking, the Eternal Purusa S’ri Krisna remained silent (i. e., the aerial incorporeal voice stopped). Hearing this, Brahma, the Creator of the world, gladly informed S’iva of this. When the Lord of Knowledge, the Foremost of the Jhanins, Bhutanatha heard the words of the Creator, He took the Ganges water in His hands and swore that “I will complete the Tantra S'astra, full of Radha mantras and not opposed to the Vedas. If one touches the Ganges water and speaks lies, one remains in the terrible Kalasutra hell for a period of one Brahma's life time.” O Dvija! When Bhagavan S'ankara said this before the assembly of the Devas in the region of Goloka, S’ri Krisna appeared there with Radha. The Devas became exceedingly glad to see Him. They praised Him, the Best Purusa and they were all filled with rapture and again engaged themselves in the grand Rasa

Festival. Some time after, Maha Deva lighted the Torch of Mukti, i.e., the Tantra S'astra was published by Him, as promised. O Child! Thus I have disclosed to you this anecdote, so very secret, and hard to be attained. Thus S'ri Krisna Himself, is verily the liquid Ganga sprung in the region of Goloka. This holy Ganga, born of the bodies of Krisna and Radha inseparable from each other, grants enjoyment, lordship and liberation. S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self, has placed Her in various places; so Ganga is of the nature of S'ri Krisna and is everywhere, equally honoured everywhere in the Brahmanda (universe).

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter in the Ninth Book on the origin of Ganga in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatann of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said O Lord of the Devas! Kindly say in what Loka did Ganga go after 5000 (five thousand) years of the Kali Yuga?

2-4. Narayana said The Bhagirathi Ganga came down to Bharata under the curse of Bharati; and when the term expired, She went back, by the Will of God, to the region of Vaikuntha. Also at the end of the period of their curses, Bharati and, Laksmi, too, left Bharata and repaired to Narayana. Ganga, Laksmi, and Sarasvati, these three and Tulasi all these four are so very dear to S'ri Hah.

5-6. Narada said How did Ganga appear from the lotus feet of Visnu? Why did Brahma put Her in His Kamandalu? I have heard that Ganga is the wife of S'iva; how then, came She to be the wife of Narayana? Kindly describe all these in detail to me.

7-8. Narayana said O Muni! In ancient times, in the region of Goloka, Ganga assumed the liquid appearance. She was born of the bodies of Radha and Krisna. So She is of the nature of both of them and their parts. Ganga is the presiding deity of water. She is unequalled in Her beauty in this world. She is full of youth and adorned with all ornaments.

9-43. Her face was like the autumnal mid-day lotus and sweet smile was always reigning on Her lips; Her form was very beautiful; Her colour was as bright as melted gold and She looked brilliant like the Autumnal Moon. Eyes and mind get cool and become pleasant at Her beauty and radiance; She was

clothings all over Her body. Her breasts were plump and prominent; they were raised, hard, and nicely round. Her eyes very fascinating, always casting sidelong glances. Her braids of hair situated a little oblique and the garland of Malati flowers over it made Her look extremely handsome. The saudalpaste dot and the vermillion dot were seen on Her forehead. On Her cheeks the leaves of musk were drawn and Her lips were red like Bandhuka flowers and they looked enchanting. Her rows of teeth looked like rows of ripe pomegranates; the ends of Her cloth not inflammable by fire, worn in front in a knot round the waist. She sat by the side of Krisna, full of amorous desires, and abashed. She covered Her face with the end of Her cloth and was seeing, with a steadfast gaze the face of the Lord and She was drinking the nectar of His face with great gladness. Her lotus face bloomed and became gladdened at the expectation of a first amorous embrace. She fainted on seeing the Form of Her Lord and a thrill of joy passed all over Her body. In the meanwhile Radhika came up there. Radha was attended by thirty kotis of Gopis. She looked brilliant like tens of millions of Moons. Seeing Ganga by the side of S'ri Krisna, Her face and eyes became reddened with anger like a red lotus. Her colour was yellow like champaka and Her gait was like a maddened elephant. She was adorned with various invaluable ornaments made of jewels. Her pair of clothings were tied round Her waist. They were decked with invaluable jewels and not inflammable by fire (fire-proof). The Arghya offered by S'ri Krisna was on Her lotus-feet of the colour of a flowering shrub. Hibiscus mutabilis, and She was going slowly step by step. The Risis began to fan Her with white Chamaras no sooner She, descending from the excellent aeroplane decked with jewels, began to walk. Below the point where the parting of the hairs on the head is done, there was the dot of Sindura on Her forehead. It looked brilliant like a bright lamp flame. On both sides of this Sindurabindu, the dot of musk and the dot of Sandal-paste were seen. When She began to quiver with anger. Her braid, with Parijata garland round it began to tremble also. Her lips adorned with beautiful colours, began to quiver also. She took Her seat angrily on a jewel throne by the side of S'ri Krisna. Her attendants took their seats in their allotted positions. Seeing Radha, S'n Krisna got up at once from His seat with reverence and addressed Her, smiling and began to converse with Her in sweet words. The Gopis, very much afraid and with their heads bent low, began to chant hymns to Her with devotion. S'ri Krisna also began to praise Her with stotras. At this moment Ganga Devi got up and praised Her with various hymns and asked Her welfare with fear and with humble words. Out of fear. Her throat, lips and palate were parched up. She took refuge humbly at S'ri Krisna's feet. S'ri Krisna then, took Ganga Devi on His breast when She became calm and quiet. At this interval SuresVari Ganga looked at Radha, seated on a throne, lovely and sweet, as if She was burning with Brahma Fire. Since the beginning of creation. She is the Sole Lady of innumerable Brahmas and She is Eternal. At the first sight. She looked young as if of twelve years old. Nowhere in any Universe can be seen a lady so beautiful and so qualified. She was peaceful, calm and quiet, lovely, infinite and having no beginning nor end. She was auspicious, well endowed with all auspicious signs, prosperous, and having the good fortune of having a best husband. She was the foremost jewel amongst the ladies and appeared as if all the beauties were concentrated in Her. Radha is the (left) half of S'ri Krisna's body; whether in age or in strength or in beauty she was in every way perfectly equal to S'ri Krisna. Laksmi and the Lord of Laksmi both worship Radha. The excellent brilliance of Sri Krisna was overpowered by the beauty of Radha. Taking Her seat on the throne She began to chew betels offered by Her attendants (Sakhis). She is the Mother of all the worlds; but no one is Her mother. She is fortunate, respected and proud. She is the Ruling Lady of S'ri Krisna's Life and Soul and ever dearer to Him than His Prana (vital breath). O Devarsi! Ganga, the Governess of the Devas, looked at Her over and over again with a steadfast gaze; but Her eyes and mind were not at all satiated. At this moment, Radha addressed smilingly to S'ri Krisna, the Lord of the world, humbly and in sweet words. O My Lord! Who is that Lady sitting by Thy side, looking askance, eager and with a smiling countenance. She is enchanted with Thy beauteous form and fainting away. Her whole body is excited with rapturous joy. Hiding Her face with cloth She is frequently looking at Thee. Thou also dost look on Her smilingly and with desires. What are all these? Even during My presence in this Goloka, all these bad practices are being rampant.

44-51. It is Thou that art doing all these bad things often and often! We are female sex; what shall we do? We are naturally, of a very pleasing temper, simple. I bore and forgave all these out of our love. O Licentious One! Take Thy Beloved and go away quickly from this Goloka. Otherwise these things will not bid fair to Thee. Firstly, one day I saw Thee, united with Viraja Gopi, in Chandana (Sandal wood) forest. What to do? At the request of the S'akhis, I did forgive Thee. Then, hearing My footsteps Thou didst fly away. Viraja, out of shame, quitted Her body and assumed the form of a river. That is million Yojanas wide an four times as long. Even to this day that Viraja is existing, testifying to Thy Glory (near Puri, Jagannatha)! When I went back to My home Thou didst go to Viraja again and cried aloud “O Viraje! O Viraje!” Hearing Your cry, Viraja, the Siddha Yogini arose from the waters, out of Her Yogic power, and when She showed Thee Her divine appearance decked with ornaments. Thou didst draw Her to Thy side and cast Thy seed in Her. It is owing to the casting of that seed in the womb of Viraja that the seven oceans have come into existence!

52-107. Secondly, one day I saw Thee in actual intercourse with the Gopi named S'obha! Hearing My footsteps. Thou fled'st away that day also.

Out of shame S'obha quitted Her body and departed to the sphere of Moon (Chandra Mandal). The cooling effect of the Moon is due to this S'obha. When S’obha was thus distressed. Thou didst divide Her and put some parts to gems and jewels, part to gold, partly to excellent pearls and gems, partly on the face of women, partly to the bodies of Kings, partly to the leaves of trees, partly to flowers, partly to ripe fruits, partly to corns, partly to palaces and temples, partly to purified materials, partly to young and tender shoots and foliage, and partly to milk. Thirdly, I saw Thee united with Prabha GopT in Brindaban. Thou fled'st away, hearing My footsteps. Out of shame, Prabha quitted Her body and departed to the Solar atmosphere. This Prabha (lustre) is fierce luminosity of the Solar atmosphere. Out of the pangs of separation Thou criedest and didst divide Prabha and didst put some parts in Fire, partly amidst the Yaksas, partly into lions, among men, partly amongst the Devas, partly in Vaisnavas, partly in serpents, partly in Brahmanas, partly in Munis, partly in ascetics, and partly in fortunate and prosperous ladies. Thou hadst to weep then after Thou hadst thus divided Prabha, for Her separation and and fourthly I saw Thee in love union with the GopT S'anti in Rasa Mandalam. On the coming of the spring season, one day Thou with garlands of flowers on Thy neck and with Thy body besmeared with sandal paste and decked with ornaments, wast sleeping on a bed of flowers with S’anti GopT, decked with gems, in a temple made of gems and pearls and illumined by a lamp of jewels and Thou wast chewing the betel, given by Thy beloved. Hearing My sound Thou fled'st away. S’anti GopT, too, out of fear and shame quitted Her body and disappeared in Thee. Therefore S’anti is reckoned as one of the noblest qualities. Out of the pain of separation. Thou didst divide the body of S’anti and distributed partly to forests, partly to Brahma, partly to Me, partly to S'uddha Sattva LaksmT, partly to Thy Mantra worshippers, partly to My Mantra worshippers, partly to the ascetics, partly to Dharma, and partly to the religious persons. Fifthly, dost Thou remember that one day anointing all over Thy body fully with the sandal paste and good scent and with garlands on Thy neck, well dressed, decked with jewels. Thou wast sleeping with Ksama (forgiveness) GopT in ease and happiness, on a nice bedding interspersed with flowers and well scented. Thou wert so much over-powered by sleep after fresh intercourse that when I went and disturbed, then Thou two didst get up from the sweet sleep. I took away Thy yellow robes, the beautiful MuralT (flute), garlands made of forest flowers, Kaustubha gems, and invaluable earrings of pearls and gems. I gave it back to Thee at the earnest request of the S'akhis. Thy body turned black with sin and dire shame, Ksama then quitted Her body out of shame and went down to the earth. Therefore Ksama turned out to be the repository of best qualities. Out of affection to Her, Thou didst divide Her body and distributed them partly to Visnu, partly to the Vaisnavas, partly to Dharma, partly to the religious persons, partly to weak persons, partly to ascetics, partly to the Devas, and partly to the Pundits (literary persons). O Lord! Thus I have described Thy qualities as far as I know. What more dost thou want to hear? Thou hast many more qualities! But I am not aware of them. Having thus spoken, the red- lotus eyed Radha began to rebuke Ganga sitting by the side of S’ri Krisna with Her head bent low out of shame. At this time Ganga, who was a Siddha Yogini came to know all the mysteries, and instantly disappeared from the assembly in Her own water form.

The Siddha Yogini Radha came to know also, by Her Yogic power, the secrets of Ganga and became ready to drink the whole water in one sip. Ganga, knowing this intention of Radha, by Her Yogic power, took refuge of Krisna and entered into His feet. Then Radha began to look out for Ganga everywhere First She searched in Goloka, then Vaikuntha, then Brahma-loka; then She searched all the Lokas one by one but no where did She find Ganga. All the places in Goloka became void of of water; all turned out dried mud and all the aquatic animals died and fell to the ground. And Brahma, Visnu, S’iva, Ananta, Dharma, Indra, Moon, Sun, Manus, Munis, Siddhas, ascetics all became very thirsty and their throats became parched. They then went to Goloka, and bowed down with devotion to S’ri Krisna, Who was the Lord of all, beyond Prakriti, the Supreme, worthy to be worshipped, the Bestower of boons, the Best, and the Cause of boons; Who is the Lord of Gopas and Gopis; Who is formless, without any desire, unattached, without refuge, attributeless, without any enthusiasm, changeless, and unstained; Who is All Will and who assumes forms to show favour to His devotees; Who is Sattva, the Lord of truth, the Witness and eternal Purusa and Who is the Highest, the Supreme Lord, the Best and Excellent, the Highest Self and the Supreme God. They began to hymn Him. All were filled with intense feelings with devotion; tears of love were flowing from their eyes and the bodies of all were filled with ecstasy, the hairs standing in ends. He was Para Brahma; His Substance was made of Transcendental Light, Who is the Cause of all Causes, who was seated in a wonderful throne, built of invaluable gems and jewels, who was being fanned by the Gopas with white chowries, who was seeing and hearing with great delight, and smiling countenance, the dancing and singing of the Gopis, who was chewing the scented betel offered by Radha and who was residing in. the heart of His dearest S’ri Radha, who was the Perfect, all pervading, and the Lord of the Rasa Circle. The Manus, Munis, and the ascetics all bowed down to S’ri Krisna, no sooner they beheld Him. Joy and wonder at once caught hold of their hearts. They then looked at one another and gave over to Brahma the task of communicating their feelings. The four faced Brahma, with Visnu on His right and Varna Deva on His left, gradually came in front of S’ri Krisna. Wherever He cast His glance in the Rasa Mandalam, He saw S’ri Krisna, full of the Highest Bliss, of the nature of the Highest Bliss, sitting. All have turned out Krisnas; their seats were all uniform; all were two armed and with flutes in their hands; on every one's neck is the forest garland; peacock's tail was on the top of everyone's crest and Kaustubha jewels were on all their breasts. The Forms of all of them were very beautiful; very lovely and very peaceful. No difference at all between them whether in form, or in qualities, or in ornaments, or in radiance, in age, in lustre, in no respect no one was inferior to another. No one was imperfect; no one was deficient in lordliness. It was indeed very difficult to make out who was the master and who was the servant. Sometimes He is seen in His Teja form as the Great Light, and there is nothing else; sometimes there is that Clear Divine Form; sometimes He comes Formless; sometimes with form; and again sometimes both with and without form. Sometimes there is no Radha; there is only Krisna;

And sometimes again in every seat there is the Yugal Murti Radha and Krisna combined. Sometimes Radha assumes the form of Krisna. So the Creator Brahma could not make out whether S'ri Krisna was a female or a male. At last He meditated on S'ri Krisna in his heart-lotus and began to chant hymns to Him with devotion and prayed for forgiveness for his misdoings. When S'ri Krisna got pleased, the Creator, opening His eyes, saw S'ri Krisna on the breast of S'ri Radha. There were His attendants on all the sides and the Gopis all around. Seeing this, Brahma, Visnu, and MahesVara bowed down to Him and sang His praises.

108-113. S'ri Krisna, the Lord of Laksmi, the Omnipresent, Cause of all, the Lord of all, and the Internal Ruler of all, knew their intentions and, addressing them, separately said "O Brahman! Is it all well with you? O Lord of Kamala! Come here. O Mahadeva! Come here; let all be well to you. You all have come to me for Ganga. Ganga has taken refuge under My feet out of fear for Radha. Seeing Ganga by My side, Radha wanted to drink Her up. However I will give over Ganga to the hands of you all; but you will have to pray to Radha, so that Ganga becomes fearless of Her." The lotus born Brahma smiled at S'ri Krisna's words and began to sing hymns to Radha, Who is fit to be worshipped by all. The Creator Brahma, the Compiler of the Four Vedas, the Four-faced One praised Radha with His Four heads, bent low and addressed Her thus 114-125. Brahma said "O Radhe! Ganga, appeared from Thee and the Lord S'ri Krisna. Both of you were transformed before into the liquid forms in the Rasa Mandalam, on hearing the music of S'ankara. And That Lquid Form is Ganga. So She is born of Thee and S'ri Krisna. Hence She is like Thy daughter and to be loved as such. She will be initiated in Thy Mantra and She will worship Thee The four armed Lord of Vaikuntha will be Her husband. And when She will appear in parts on earth, the Salt Ocean will be Her husband. O Mother! The Ganga that dwells in Goloka, is dwelling everywhere. O Governess of the Devas! Thou art Her mother; and She is always Thy Self born daughter." Hearing thus, the words of Brahma, Radha gave Her assent towards the protection of Ganga. And then Ganga appeared from the toe-tip of S'ri Krisna. The liquid Ganga, then, assumed Her own form and, getting up from water, was received with great honour by the Devas. Bhagavan Brahma took a little of that Ganges water in His Kamandalu and Bhagavan Mahadeva kept some of it in His own head.

The lotus born Brahma, then, initiated Ganga into the Radha Mantra and gave Her instructions, Radha Stotra (hymn of Radha) according to the Sama Veda, Radha Kavacha (protection mantras), Radha Dhyan (meditation on Radha), method of worship of Radha, and Radha's purascharana. Ganga worshipped Radha according to those instructions and went to Vaikuntha. O Muni! Laksmi, Sarasvati, Ganga, and the world purifying Tulasi, these four became the wives of Narayana. Krisna, then, smiled and explained to Brahma the history of Time, hardly to be comprehended by others. He then spoke "O Brahma! O Visnu! O MahesVara! Now you better take Ganga and I will now tell you what a change has been effected by this time. Hear.

126-136. You, the three Devas, the other Devas, Munis, Manus, Siddhas, and other Mahatmas that are present here, are living now. For this region of Goloka is not affected by Kala (Time). Now the Kalpa is going to expire. So in the other regions than Goloka and Vaikuntha, the Brahmas, etc., that were existing in all other Universes, have all now dissolved in My Body. O Lotus-born! Save Goloka and Vaikuntha, all are now under water, the pre-state of earth. Better go and create your own

Brahmandas and Ganga will go to that newly created Brahmanda. I will also create other worlds and the Brahmas thereof. Now you all better go with the Devas and do your own works respectively. You have waited here for a long interval. As many Brahmas that have fallen all appear again.” Thus saying S’ri Krisna, the Lord of Radha went to His Inner Chamber.

The Devas also instantly retired from that spot and engaged themselves earnestly in the creation work. Ganga remained as before till then in the region of Goloka, Vaikuntha, S’ivaloka, Brahma- loka, and in other places, by the command of S’ri Krisna. She is named Visnupadi, because She appeared from the feet of Visnu. Thus I have described to you this pleasant, essential story of Ganga, leading to liberation. What more do you now want to hear? Say.

English translation

1-2. Narada said O Lord! Ganga, Laksmi, Sarasvati, and the world purifying Tulasi, these four, are dearest to Narayana. Out of these, Ganga went from the region of Goloka to Vaikuntha. So I have heard. But how did She come to be the wife of Narayana. I have not heard. Kindly describe this.

3. Narayana said Brahma came from Goloka to the region of Vaikuntha accompanied by Ganga.

4-23. Brahma said to Narayana O Lord! Ganga, born of the bodies of Radha and Krisna, full of youth, modest, extraordinarily beautiful, of pure Suddha Sattva, and void of anger and egoism, does not like to marry anyone save Thee as She is born of Thee. But Radha is of a very proud nature and very wrathful. She was even ready to drink up Ganga. But Ganga at once and intelligently took refuge into the feet of S'ri Krisna. So the whole Goloka became void of water. Seeing this, I have come here to know in particular the whole history of the case. Then S'ri Krisna, the Knower and the Ruler of the hearts of all, came to know my heart and instantly caused Ganga to issue from His toe and handed Her over to me. I bowed down to S'ri Krisna and now I have come with Ganga to Thee. Now Thou dost marry the SuresVari Ganga according to the Gandharva rule of marriage. As Thou art a Deva of taste and humorous in the assembly of the Devas, so Ganga is. As Thou art a gem amongst the males, so She is the gem amongst the females. And the union of a humorous man with a humorous woman is exceedingly pleasant. Now marry this Lady who has come of Her own accord to Thee. S'ri Maha

who does not marry a woman who has come spontaneously. There is no doubt in this. The wise men do never insult the Prakriti. All the Purusas (males) are born of Prakriti and all the females are parts of Prakriti. So Prakriti and Purusa are both inseparable and verily one and the same. So these two should never insult each other. (If Thou sayest that Ganga is attached to Krisna; how canst Thou marry Her. The reply is) As S’ri Krisna is beyond the attributes and beyond Prakriti, so Thou art also above Prakriti. The one-half of S’ri Krisna is two-armed; the other half of S’ri Krisna is four-armed. Radha has appeared from the left side of S’ri Krisna. He Himself is the right half and Padma is His left-half. As there is no difference between Radha and Kamala so there is no difference between S’ri Krisna and Thee. Therefore as Ganga is born of Thy body, she wants to marry Thee. As Prakriti and Purusa are really one and the same without any difference, so the males and females are one. Thus speaking to Narayana, Brahma handed Ganga over to Narayana and went away. Narayana, then, married Ganga smeared with sandal paste and flowers, according to the rules of the Gandarbha marriage. The Lord of Laksmi then spent his time happily in enjoyment with Ganga. Ganga had to go to the earth (under the Bharati's curse) and afterwards returned to Vaikuntha. As Ganga appeared from the feet of Visnu, She is denominated Visnupadi. Ganga Devi was very much overpowered with enjoyment in Her first intercourse with Narayana; so much so that She remained motionless. Thus Ganga spent the days happily with Narayana. Sarasvati’s jealousy towards Ganga did not disappear, though She was advised by Laksmi Devi not to do so. Sarasvati cherished incessantly the feeling of jealousy towards Ganga. But Ganga had not the least feeling of jealousy towards Sarasvati.

At last, one day, when vexed too much, Ganga became angry and cursed Sarasvati to take Her birth in Bharata. So Laksmi, Sarasvati and Ganga were the wives of Narayana. Lastly TulasT became the wife of Narayana. So the number of wives of Narayana amounted to four.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter in the Ninth Book on the story of Ganga becoming the wife of Narayana in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Narada said O Bhagavan! How came the pure chaste Tulasi to be the wife of Narayana? Where was Her birth place? And what was She in Her previous birth? What family did She belong to? Whose daughter was She? And what austerities did She practise, that She got Narayana for Her husband, Who is above Prakriti, not liable to change without any effort, the Universal Self, Para Brahma and the Highest God; Who is the Lord of all, omniscient, the Cause of all, the Receptacle of all. Omnipresent, and the Preserver of all. And how did Tulasi, the chief Devi of Narayana, turn out into a tree? Herself quite innocent, how She was attacked by the fierce Asura? O Remover of all doubts! My mind, plain and simple, has become restless. I am eager to hear all this. So kindly cut asunder all my doubts.

7-40. Narayana said O Narada! The Manu Daksa Savarni was very religious, devoted to Visnu, of wide renown, of a great name, and born with Visnu's parts. Daksa Savarni’s son Brahma Savarni was also very religious, devoted to Visnu and of a pure S'uddha Sattva Guna. Brahma Savarni's son, Dharma Savarni was devoted to Visnu and He was the master of his senses. Dharma Savarni's sons Rudra Savarni was also a man of restraint and very devoted. Rudra Savarni's son was Deva Savarni, devoted to Visnu. Deva Savarni's son was Indra Savarni. He was a great Bhakta of Visnu. His son was Vrisadhvaja. But He was a fanatic S'aiva (devoted to S'iva). At his house S'iva Himself remained for three Yugas according to the Deva measure. So much so that Bhagavan Bhutanatha loved him more than His own son. Vrisadhvaja did not recognise Narayana, nor Laksmi nor Sarasvati nor another body. He discarded the worship of all the Devas. He worshipped S'ankara only. The greatly exciting Laksmi Puja (worship of Maha Laksmi) in the month of Bhadra and S’ri Pahchami Puja in the month of Magha, which are approved of by the Vedas, Vrisadhvaja put an entire stop to these and the Sarasvati Puja. At this the Sun became angry with the King Vrisadhvaja, the discarder of the holy thread, the hater of Visnu, and cursed Him thus “O King! As you are purely devoted to S’iva and S’iva alone, and as you do not recognise any other Devas,

I say within no time, you will be deprived of all your wealth and prosperity.” S'ankara, hearing this curse, became very angry and taking His trident, ran after the Sun. The Sun, becoming afraid, accompanied His father Kas'yapa and took refuge of Brahma. Bhagavan S'ankara went to the Brahma Loka, with trident in His hands. Brahma became afraid of Mahadeva and took Sun to the region of Vaikuntha. Out of terror, the throats of Brahma, Kas'yapa, and Sun became parched and dry and they all went afraid for refuge to Narayana, the Lord of all. They all bowed down to Him and praised Him frequently and finally informed Him of the cause of their coming and why they were so much afraid. Narayana showed them mercy and granted them “Abhaya” (no fear). O You! Who are afraid, take rest. What cause of fear there can be to you, when I am here!

Whoever remembers Me, wherever he may be, involved in danger or fear, I go there with the Sudars'an disc in My hand and save him. O Devas! I am always the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer of this universe. In the form of Visnu, I am the Preserver; in the form of Brahma, I am the Creator; and in the form of Mahes'a, I am the Destroyer. I am S’iva; I am you; and I am the Surya, composed of the three qualities. It is I who assumes many forms and preserves the universe. Better go to your respective places. What fear can ye suspect? I say, all your fears due to S'ankara, are verily removed from this day. Bhagavan S'ankara, the Lord of all, is the Lord of the Sadhus. He always hears the words of His Bhaktas; and He is kind to them. He is their Self. Both the Sun and S’iva are dearer to Me than My life. No one is more energetic than S'ankara and the Sun. Mahadeva can easily create ten million Suns and ten million Brahmas. There is nothing impossible with S'ulapani. Having no consciousness of any outer thing, immersed, day and night, in meditating on Me with His whole heart concentrated. He is repeating with devotion My Mantra from His five faces and He always sings My glories. I am also thinking, day and night, of His welfare. Whoever worships Me in whichever way, I also favour him similarly. Bhagavan Maha Deva is of the nature of S’iva, all auspiciousness; He is the presiding deity of S'iva, that is, liberation. It is because liberation is obtained from Him, He is called S’iva. O dear Narada! While Narayana was thus speaking, the trident bolder Mahadeva, with his eyes red like reddened lotuses, mounting on His bull, came up there and getting down from His Bull, humbly bowed down with devotion to the Lord of Laksmi, peaceful and higher than the highest. Narayana was then seated on His throne, decked with jewel ornaments. There was a crown on His crest; two earrings were hanging from His ears; the disc was in His hand, forest flower's garlands on His neck; of the colour of fresh blue rain cloud; His form exceedingly beautiful. The four-armed attendants were fanning Him with their four hands; His body smeared all over with sandal-paste and He is wearing the yellow garment. That Bhagavan, distressed with the thought of welfare for His Bhaktas, the Highest Self was sitting on a jewel throne and chewing the betel offered by Padma and with smiling countenance, seeing and hearing the dancing and singing of the Vidyadharis. When Mahadeva bowed down to Narayana, Brahma also bowed down to Mahadeva. The Sun, too, surprised, bowed down to Mahadeva with devotion. Kas'yapa, too, bowed and with great bhakti, began to praise Mahadeva. On the other hand, S’ankara praised Narayana and took His seat on the throne. The attendants of Narayana began to fan Mahadeva with white chowries. Then Visnu addressed Him with sweet nectar like voice and said “O Mahes'vara! What brings Thee here? Hast Thou been angry?”

41-45. Mahadeva said: - “O Visnu! The King Vrisadhavaja is My great devotee; he is dearer to Me than My life. The Sun has cursed him and so I am angry. Out of the affection for a son I am ready to kill Surya. Surya took Brahma's refuge and now he and Brahma have taken Thy refuge. And Those who being distressed take Thy refuge, either in mind or in word, become entirely safe and free from danger. They conquer death and old age. What to speak of them, then, of those who come personally to Thee and take Thy refuge. The remembrance of Hah takes away all dangers. All good comes to them. O Lord of the world! Now tell me what becomes of My stupid Bhakta who has become devoid of fortune and prosperity by the curse of Surya."

46-51. Visnu said "O S'ankara! Twenty-one yugas elapsed within this one-half Ghatika, by the coincidence of Fate (Daiva). Now go quickly to Thy abode. Through the unavoidable coincidence of the cruel Fate, Vrisadhvaja died. His son Rathadhvaja, too, died. Rathadhvaja had two noble sons Dharmadhvaja and Kus'adhvaja. Both of them are great Vaisnavas; but, through Surya's curse, they have become luckless. Their kingdoms are lost; they have become destitute of all property, prosperity and they are now engaged in worshipping Maha Laksmi. Maha Laksmi will be born in parts of their two wives. Then again, by the grace of Laksmi, Dharmadhvaja and Kus'adhvaja will be prosperous and become great Kings. O S'ambhu Your worshipper Vrisadhvaja is dead. Therefore Thou dost go back to Thy place. O Brahma, O Sun! O Kas'yapa! You all also better go to your places respectively." O Narada! Thus saying, Bhagavan Visnu went with His wife to the inner rooms. The Devas also went gladly to their own places respectively. And Mahadeva, too. Who is always quite full within Himself, departed quickly to perform His Tapas.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter on the question of anecdote of Tulasi in the Ninth Book in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-30. S’n Narayana said O Muni! Dharmadhvaja and Kus’adhvaja practised severe tapasyas and worshipped Laksmi. They then got separately their desired boons. By the boon of Maha Laksmi, they became again the rulers of the earth. They acquired great religious merits and they also had their children. The wife of Kus’adhvaja was named Malavati. After a long time, the chaste wife delivered one daughter, born of the parts of Kamala. The daughter, on being born, became full of wisdom. On being born, the baby began to sing clearly the Vedic mantrams from the lying-in-chamber. Therefore She was named Vedavati by the Pundits. She bathed after her birth and became ready to go to the forest to practise severe tapas. Everyone then, tried earnestly to dissuade her, devoted to Narayana, from the enterprise. But she did not listen to anybody. She went to Puskara and practised hard tapasya for one Manvantara. Yet her body did not get lean a bit; rather she grew more plumpy and fatter. By degrees her youth began to show signs in her body; one day she heard an incorporeal voice from the air above, “O Fair One! In your next birth S’ri Hah, adored by Brahma and other gods, will be your husband.” Hearing this, her joy knew no bounds. She went to the solitary caves in the Gandhamadan mountain to practise tapas again. When a long time passed away in this tapasya, one day the irresistible Havana came there as guest. No sooner Vedavati saw the guest, then she gave him, out of devotion to the guest, water to wash feet, delicious fruits, and cool water for his drink. The villain accept the hospitality and sitting there, began to ask “O Auspicious One! Who are you?” Seeing the fair smiling lady, with beautiful teeth, her face blooming like the autumnal lotus, of heavy loins, and of full breast, that villain became passionate. He lost entirely all consciousness and became ready to make violence on Her. Seeing this, the chaste Vedavati, became angry and out of her tapas influence, astounded him and made him insensible to move. He remained motionless like an inanimate body. He could not move his hands nor feet nor could he speak. That wicked fellow then mentally recited praises to her. And the praise of the Higher S'akti can never go futile. She became pleased and granted him religious merits in the next world. But she also pronounced this curse "That when you have touch my body out of passion, then you will be ruined with your whole family for my sake. Now see my power." O Narada! Thus saying to Havana, Vedavati left her body by her yogic power. Then Havana took her body and delivered it to the Ganges and he then returned to his own home. But Havana thought over the matter repeatedly and exclaimed, "What wonder have I seen! Oh! What a miracle this lady has wrought!" Havana thus lamented. This Vedavati, of pure character, took her birth afterwards as Sita, the daughter of Janaka. For the sake of this Sita, Havana was ruined with his whole family.

By the religious merits of her previous birth, the ascetic lady got Bhagavan Hah S'ri Hama Chandra, the Fullest of the Full, for her husband and remained for a long time in great enjoyment with the Lord of the world; a thing very difficult to be attained! Though she was a Jatismara (one who knows all about her past lives), she did not feel any pain due to her practising severe austerities in her previous birth; for when the pains end in success, the pains are not then felt at all. Sita, in Her fresh youth enjoyed various pleasures in the company of her husband, handsome, peaceful, humorous and witty, the chief of the Devas, loved by the female sex, well-qualified, and just what she desired. But the all-powerful Time is irresistible; the truthful Hamachandra, the scion of the Haghu's family, had to keep up the promise made by his father and so he had to go to the forest, ordained by Time. He remained with Sita and Laksmana near the sea. Once the God Fire appeared to Him in the form of a Brahmana. Fire, in a Brahmin-form, saw Hama Chandra morose and became himself mortified. Then the Truthful Fire addressed the truthful Hamachandra "O Bhagavan Hamachandra! I now speak to you how time is now coming to you. Now has come the time when your Sita will be stolen.

31-48. The course of Destiny is irresistible; none else is more powerful than Time, Fate. So give over your Sita, the World Mother to me and keep with you this Chhaya Sita (the shadow Sita; the false Sita). When the time of Sita's ordeal by fire will take place I will give Her back to you. The Devas united have sent me to you. I am not really a Brahmin; but I am Agni Deva (eater of oblations)." Ramachandra heard Fire and gave his assent. But his heart shattered. He did not speak of this to Laksmana. By the yogic power Agni (Fire) created a Maya Sita. This Maya Sita, O Narada, was perfectly equal to the real Sita. Fire, then, handed this Maya Sita to the hands of Ramachandra. Hutasana (fire) took the real Sita and said, "Never divulge this to any other body" and went away. What to speak of divulging the secret to any other body, Laksmana even could not know it. By this time Rama saw one deer, made of all gold. To bring that deer carefully to her, Sita sent Ramachandra with great eagerness. Putting Sita under Laksmana's care, in that forest, Rama went himself immediately and pierced the deer by one arrow. That Maya mriga (the deer created by magic powers) on being pierced, cried out "Ha Laksmana!" and seeing Hah before him and remembering the name of Hah, quitted his life. The deer body then vanished; and a divine body made its appearance in its stead. This new body mounting on an aerial car made of jewels, ascended to Vaikuntha. That Mayik (magic) deer was in its previous birth, a servant, of the two gate-keepers of Vaikuntha; but, for the sake of some emergency, he had to take up this Rakhsasa birth. He again became the servant of two door-keepers of Vaikuntha. On the other hand Sita Devi, hearing the cry "Ha Laksmana!" became very distressed and sent Laksmana in search of Rama. No sooner did Laksmana get out of the hermitage, the irresistible Ravana took away Sita gladly to the city of Lanka (Ceylon). Now Ramachandra, seeing Laksmana on the way in the forest, became merged in the ocean of sorrows and without losing any time came hurriedly to the hermitage where he could not find Sita. Instantly he fell unconscious, on the ground; and, after a long time, when he regained his consciousness, he lamented and wandered here and there in search of Her. After some days on the banks of the river Godavari, getting the information of Sita, he built a bridge across the ocean with the help of His monkey armies. Then he entered with his army into Lanka and slew Havana with arrows with all his friends. When Sita's ordeal by fire came, Agni (Fire) handed over the real Sita to Ramachandra. The Shadow Sita then humbly addressed Agni and Rama Chandra, "O Lord! What am I to do now? Settle my case."

49-53. Agni and Ramachandra both of them then said to Chhaya Sita "O Devi! Go to Puskara and practise tapasya there; that place is the giver of religious merits and then you will be the Svarga Laksmi (Laksmi of Heaven)." Hearing this, the Chhaya Sita went and practised tapasya for the three divine lakh years and became Maha Laksmi. This Svarga Laksmi appeared at one time from the sacrificial Kunda (pit). She was known as the daughter of Drupada and became the wife of the five Pandavas. She was Veda Vati, the daughter of Kus'adhvaja in the Satya Yuga; Sita, the wife of Rama and the daughter of Janaka in Treta Yuga; and Draupadi, the daughter of Drupada, in the Dvapara Yuga. As she existed in the Satya, Treta, and Dvapara Yugas, the Three Yugas, hence She is Trihayani.

54. Narada said "O Chief of Munis! O Remover of doubts! Why had Draupadi five husbands? A great doubt has arisen in my mind on this point. Remove my doubt."

55-63. Narayana said O Devarsi! When, in the city of Lanka, the real Sita came before Rama, then Chhaya Sita, full of youth and beauty, became very anxious. Agni Deva and Ramachandra both told Her to go to Puskara and worship S'amkara. While this Chhaya Sita was practising austerities in Puskara, She became very anxious to get a good husband and asked from MahaDeva the boon "Grant me a husband" and repeated it five times.

S'iva, the chief among the humorous, witty persons, hearing this, said, "O Dear! You will get five husbands" and thus granted her the boon. Therefore She became the dearest wife of the five Pandavas. Now hear other facts. When the war at Lanka was over, S'ri Ramachandra got his own dear wife Sita, and installing Vibhisana on the throne of Lanka, returned to Ayodhya. He ruled for eleven thousand years in Bharata and finally went to Vaikuntha with his all his subjects. Vedavati, the incarnation in part of Laksmi dissolved in the body of Kamala. Thus I have described to you the pure anecdote of Vedavati. Hearing this destroys sins and increases virtue. The four Vedas reigned incarnate, in their true forms, on the lips of Vedavati; hence She was named Vedavati. Thus I have told you the anecdote of the daughter of Kus'adhvaja. Now hear the story of Tulasi, the daughter of Dharmadhvaja.

Here ends the Sixteenth Chapter in the Ninth Book on the incarnation of Maha Laksmi in the house of Kus'adhvaja in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-19. S'n Narayana said O Narada! The wife of Dharmadhvaja was Madhavi. Going to the Gandhamadan mountain, She began to enjoy, with great gladness, the pleasures with the king Dharmadhvaja. The bed was prepared, strewn with flowers and scented with sandal-paste. She smeared all over her body with sandal-paste. The flowers and cool breeze in contact with the sweet scent of sandal-paste began to cool the bodies. Madhavi was the jewel amongst women. Her whole body was very elegant. Besides it was adorned all over with jewel ornaments. As she was humorous, so the king was very expert in that respect. It seemed as if the Creator created especially for Dharmadhvaja, the humorous lady Madhavi expert in amorous affairs. Both of them were skilled in amorous sports. So no one did like to desist from amorous enjoyments. One hundred divine years passed in this way, day and night passed unnoticed. The king then got back his consciousness and desisted from his amorous embraces. But the lustful woman did not find herself satisfied. However, by the Deva's influence, she became pregnant and conceived for one hundred years. In the womb there was the incarnation of Laksmi; and the body's lustre increased day by day. Then, on an auspicious day, on an auspicious moment, auspicious Yoga, auspicious Lagna, auspicious Amsa, and on an auspicious combination of planetary rulers and their houses, she delivered on the full moon night of the month of Kartik one beautiful daughter, the incarnation in part of Laksmi. The face of the baby looked like the autumnal moon; Her two eyes resembled autumnal lotuses and her upper and lower lips looked beautiful like ripe Bimba fruits. The daughter began, no sooner it was born, to look on all sides of the lying-in-room. The palm and lower part of feet were red. The navel was deep and below that there were three wrinkles. Her loins were circular. Her body was hot in the winter and cold in the summer and pleasant to touch. Her hairs on the head were hanging like the roots of the fig tree. Her colour was bright like

Champaka; She was a jewel amongst women. Men and women cannot compare her beauty. The holy wise men named Her Tulasi. As soon as she was born, she looked of the female sex, full in every way. Though prevented repeatedly by all. She went to the forest of Badari for practising Tapasya. There she practised hard Tapasya for one lakh divine years. Her main object was to get Narayana for her husband. In summer she practise Panchatapa (surrounded by fire on four sides and on the top); in the winter she remained in water and in the rainy season she remained in the open air and endured the showers of the rain, twenty thousand years. She passed away thus in eating fruits and water. For thirty thousand years she subsisted only on the leaves of trees. When the forty thousandth year came, she subsisted only on air and her body became thinner and thinner day by day. Then for ten thousand years afterwards she left eating anything whatsoever and without any aim, stood on only one leg. At this time the lotus-born Brahma, seeing this, appeared there to grant her boons. On seeing Him, Tulasi immediately bowed down to Brahma, the Four-faced One riding on His vehicle, the Swan. [Note: - - The vehicle theory of the Devas came from Egypt. The Devas were without vehicles at first and were faced half-beasts. Then they were rendered men and their vehicles were fancied as beasts. The face of the Durga Devi was thought of as that of a tiger.]

20. He then addressed her and said "O Tulasi! Ask a boon that you like. Whether it be devotion to Hari, servantship to Hari, freedom from old age or freedom from death, I will grant that to you."

21-27. Tulasi said "Father! I now say you my mind. Hear. What is the use of hiding away my views out of fear or shame to One who knows everything reigning in One's Heart.

I am Tulasi Gopi (cowherdess); I used to dwell before in the Goloka.

I was a dear she-servant of Radhika, the beloved of Krisna. I was also born of Her in part, Her Sakhis (female attendants) used to love me. Once in Rasa Mandalam I was enjoyed by Govinda; but I was not satiated and while I was lying down in an unconscious state, Radha, the Governess-in-chief of the Rasa circle, came there and saw me in that state. She rebuked Gobinda and, out of anger, cursed me 'Go at once and be born as a human being.' At this Govinda spoke to me 'If you go and practise Tapas in Bharata, Brahma will get pleased and He will grant you boon. When you will get Narayana, the Four-armed, born of Me in part as your husband.' O Father! Thus speaking, S'ri Krisna disappeared out of sight. Out of Radha's fear, I quitted my body and am now born in this world. Now grant me this boon that I get the peaceful, lovely, beautiful Nara for my husband."

28-37. Brahma said "O Child Tulasi! The Gopa (cowherd)

Sudama was born of S'ri Krisna's body. At the present time he is very energetic. He too, under the curse of Radha, has come and taken his birth amongst the Danavas. He is named S'ankha Chuda. No one is equal to him in strength. In Goloka, when he saw you before, he was overpowered with passion for you. Only out of Radha's influence, he could not embrace you. That Sudama is Jatismara (knows all about his previous births); and you, too, are Jati Smara. There is nothing unknown to you. O Beautiful One! You will now be his wife. Afterwards you will get Narayana, the Beautiful and Lovely for your husband. Thus under the curse of Narayana, you will be transformed into the world purifying Tulasi tree. You will be the foremost amongst the flowers and will be dearer to Narayana than His life. No one's worship will be complete without Thee as leaf. You will remain as a tree in Bindraban and you will be widely known as Vrindabani. The Gopas and Gopis will worship Madhava with Your leaves. Being the Presiding Deity of the Tulasi tree, you will always enjoy the company of Krisna, the best of the Gopas." O Narada!

Thus bearing Brahma's words, the Devi Tulasi became very glad. Smile appeared in her face. She then bowed down to the Creator and said

38-40. "O Father! I speak now truly to Thee that I am not as devoted to the four-armed Narayana as I am devoted to S'yama Sundara, the two-armed. For my intercourse with Govinda S'ri Krisna was suddenly interrupted and my desire was not gratified. It is because of S'ri Govinda's words that I prayed for the four-armed. Now it appears certain that by Thy grace I will get again my Govinda, very hard to be attained. But, O Father! Do this that I be not afraid of Radha."

41-48. Brahma said:-- "O Child! I now give you the sixteen lettered Radha mantra to you. By Her Grace you will be dear to Radha as Her life. Radhika will not be able to know anything of your secret dealings. O Fortunate! You will be dear to Govinda like Radha." Thus saying, Brahma, the Creator of the world, gave her the sixteen lettered Radha mantra, stotra, Kavacha and mode of worship and puras'charana and He blessed her. Tulasi, then, engaged herself in worshipping Radha, as directed. By the boon of Brahma, Tulasi attained Siddhi (success) like Laksmi. Out of the power of the Siddha mantra. She got her desired boon. She became fortunate in getting various pleasures, hard to be attained in this world. Her mind became quiet. All the toils of Tapasya disappeared. When one gets the fruit of one's labour, all the troubles then transform to happiness. She then finished her food and drink and slept on a beautiful bed strewn with flowers and scented with sandal paste.

Here ends the Seventeenth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the anecdote of Tulasi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-26. Narayana said Thus highly pleased, Tulasi went to sleep with a gladdened-heart. She, the daughter of Vrisadhvaja, was then in her blooming youth and while asleep, the Cupid, the God of five arrows, shot at her five arrows (by which one gets enchanted and swooned). Though the Devi was smeared with sandal paste and She slept on a bed strewn with flowers, her body was felt as if being burnt. Out of joy, the hairs stood on their ends all over her body; her eyes were reddened and her body began to quiver. Sometimes She felt uneasiness, sometimes dryness; sometimes She got faint; sometimes drowsiness and sometimes again pleasantness; sometimes she became conscious, sometimes sorrowful.

Sometimes she got up from her bed; sometimes she sat; and sometimes she fell again to sleep. The flower-bed, strewn with sandal-paste, appeared to her full of thorns; nice delicious fruits and cold water appeared to her like poison. Her house appeared to her like a hole in a ground and her fine garments seemed to her like fire. The mark of Sindura on her forehead appeared, as it were, a boil, a sore. She began to see in her dreams that one beautiful, well clothed, humorous, young man with smile in his lips, appeared to her. His body was besmeared with sandal-paste and decked with excellent jewels; garlands of forest flowers were suspending from his neck. Coming there, he was drinking the honey of her lotus face. He was speaking on love themes and on various other sweet topics. As if he was embracing amorously and enjoying the pleasures of intercourse. After the intercourse he was going away; again he was coming near.

The lady was addressing him, “O Darling! O Lord of my heart! Where do you go. Come close.” Again when she became conscious, she began to lament bitterly. Thus on entering in her youth, the Devi

Tulasi began to live in the hermitage of Badari (Plum fruit, it may signify womb. Those who visit Badari are not to enter again in any womb). On the other hand the great Yogi S’ankhachuda obtained the Krisna Mantra from Maharsi Jaigisavya and got siddhi (success) in Puskara Tirtha (sacred place of pilgrimage where one crosses the world). Holding on his neck the Kavacha named Sarvamangalamaya and obtaining the boon from Brahma as he desired, he arrived at Badari, by Brahma’s command. The signs of the blooming youth had just begun to be visible in the body of S’ankhachuda as if the God of Love incarnated in his body; his colour resembled that of white Champakas and all his body was decked with jewelled ornaments. His face resembled the autumnal full moon; his eyes were extended like the lotus leaves. The beautiful form was seen to sit in an excellent aerial car, made of pearls and jewels. Two jewel earrings, nice and elegant, suspended upto his cheek; his neck was adorned with Parijata flower garlands; and his body was smeared with Kumkum and scented sandal-paste. O Narada! Seeing S’ankhachuda coming near to her, Tulasi covered her face by her clothing and she, with a smiling countenance, cast repeatedly sidelong glances at him and bent her head low abashed in the expectation of a fresh intercourse. How beautiful was that clear face of her! It put down the autumnal moon in the background. The invaluable jewelled ornament were on her toes. Her braid of hair was surrounded by sweet scented Malati garlands. The invaluable jewelled wonderful earrings like the shape of a shark were hanging up to her cheek. Extraordinarily beautiful necklaces were seen being suspended to the middle of her breasts and added to the beauty thereof; on her arms and hand were jewelled bangles and conch ornaments; jewelled armlets and on fingers; excellent jewelled rings were seen. O Muni! Seeing that lovely beautiful chaste woman of good nature, S'ankhachuda came to her and taking his seat addressed her as follows

27. "O Proud One! O Auspicious One! Who are you? Whose daughter are you? You look fortunate and blessed among women. I am your silent slave. Talk with me."

28-30. That beautiful eyed Tulasi, full of love, replied to S'ankhachuda with smiling countenance and face bent low "I am the daughter of the great king Vrisadhvaja. I have come to this forest for tapasya and am engaged in this. Who are you? What business have you to talk with me? You can go away wherever you like. I have heard in the S'astras that persons born of a noble family never speak with ladies of a respectable family in privacy.

31-71. Only those that are lewd, void of any knowledge in the Dharma S'astras, void of the Vedic knowledge and who are not Kulinas, like to speak with women in privacy. And those woman, too, that look externally beautiful but very passionate and the Death of males, who are sweet tongued but filled with venom in their hearts, those who are sweet externally but like a sword internally, those that are always bent in achieving their own selfish ends and those that become obedient to their husbands for their own selfish ends otherwise behaving as they like, those that are filled inside with dirty things and outside looking pleasant in their faces and eyes, whose characters are pronounced as defiled, what intelligent, learned and noble-minded man can trust them? Those women do not discriminate who are their friends or who are their enemies; they want always new persons. Whenever they see a man well dressed, they want to satisfy their own passions. And they pretend with great care that they are very chaste. They are the vessels of passion; they always attract the minds of others and they are very enthusiastic in satisfying their own lust. They verbally shew that they want other men to go away but at hearts, feelings for intercourse remain preponderant; whenever they see their paramours in private, they laugh and become very glad but externally their shame, knows no bounds. When they do not have their intercourses with their paramours, they become self-conceited; their bodies burn with anger and they begin to quarrel. When their passions are satisfied fully, they become glad and when there is a deficiency in that, they become sorrowful. For the sake of good and sweet food and cold drinks, they want beautiful young persons, qualified and humorous. They consider witty young persons clever in holding intercourses, more dearly than their sons. And if that beloved one becomes incapable or aged, then he is considered as an enemy. Quarrels and anger then ensue. They devour these men as serpents eat rats.

They are boldness personified and they are the source of all evils and vices. Even Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a remain deluded before them. They cannot find out any clue of their minds. They are the greatest obstacle in the path of tapasya and the closed doors for liberation. Devotion to Hari cannot reach those women. They are the repositories of Maya and they hold men fast by iron chains in this word. They are like magicians and false like dreams. They enchant others by external beauty; their lower parts are very ugly and filled with excrements, faeces, of foul scent and very unholy and smeared with blood. The Creator Bhagavan has created them as such, the Maya to the Mayavis and the venom to those who want liberation, and as invisible to those that want to have them." Thus saying Tulasi stopped. O Narada! S'ankhachuda, then smilingly addressed her as follows "O Devi! What you have spoken is not wholly false; partly it is true and partly it is false. Now hear. The Creator has created this all-enchanting female form into two parts. One is praiseworthy and the other is not. He has created Laksmi, Sarasvati, Durga, Savitri and Radha and others as the primary causes of creation; so there are the prime creations: Those women that are born of their parts, are auspicious, glorious and much praiseworthy. S'atarupa,

Devahuti, Svadha, Svaha, Daksina Chhayavati, Rohini, Varunani, S'achi, the wife of Kuvera, Diti, Aditi, Lopamudra, Anasuya, Kautabhi (Kotari), Tulasi, Ahalya, Arundhati, Mena, Tara, Mandodari, Damayanti, Vedavati, Ganga, Manasa, Pusti, Tusti, Smriti, Medha, Kalika, Vasundhara, Sasthi, Mangalachandi, Murti, wife of Dharma. Svasti, S'raddha; S'anti, Kanti, Ksanti, Nidra, Tandra, Ksudha, Pipasa, Sandhya, Ratri, Diva, Sampatti, Dhriti, Kirti, Knya, S'obha, Prabha, S'iva, and other women born of the Prime Prakritis, all are excellent in every Yuga. The prostitutes of the heavens are also born of the above women in their parts and parts of parts. They are not praiseworthy in the universe; they are all regarded as unchaste women. Those women that are of Sattva Gunas are all excellent and endowed with influence. In the universe they are good, chaste and praiseworthy. This is not false. The Pandits declare them excellent. Those that are of Rajo Gunas, and Tamo Gunas are not so praiseworthy. Those women that are of Rajo Gunas are known as middling. They are always fond of enjoyments, yield to them, and always ready to achieve their own ends. These women are generally insincere, delusive, and outside the pale of religious duties.

Therefore they are generally unchaste. The Pandits consider them as middling. Those women that are of Tamo Gunas are considered as worst. Those born of noble families, can never speak with other wives in a private place or when they are alone. By Brahma's command I have come to you. O Fair One! I will marry you now according to the Gandharba method. My name is S'ankhachuda.

The Devas fly away from me out of terror. Before I was the intimate S'akha (friend) of S'ri Hah, by the name of Sudama. Now, by Radhika's curse I am born in the family of the Danavas. I was a Parisad (attendant) of S'ri Krisna and the chief of the eight Gopas. Now, by Radhika's curse I am born as S'ankhachuda, the Indra of the Danavas. By S'ri Krisna's grace and by His mantra, I am Jatismara (know of my past births). You, too, are Jatismara Tulasi. S'ri Krisna enjoyed you before. By Radhika's anger, you are now born in Bharata. I was very eager to enjoy you then; out of Radhika's fear I could not."

72-87. Thus saying, S'ankhachuda stopped. Then Tulasi gladly and smilingly replied "Such persons (like you) are famous in this world; good women desire such husbands. Really, I am now defeated by you in argument. The man who is conquered by woman is very impure and blamed by the community. The Pith Lokas, the Deva Lokas, and the Gandharba Loka, too, look upon men, overpowered by women, as mean, despicable. Even father, mother, brother, etc., hate them mentally. It is said in the Vedas that the impurities during birth and death are expiated by a ten days observances for the Brahmanas, by twelve days observances for the Ksattriyas, by fifteen days observances for the Vais'yas and by one month's observances for the S'udras and other low castes. But the impurity of the man who is conquered by women cannot be expiated by any other means except (his dead body) being burned in the funeral pyre. The Piths never accept willingly the pindas and offerings of water (Tarpanas) offered by the women-conquered men. So much so that the Devas even hesitate to accept flowers, water, etc., offered by them on their names. Those whose hearts are entirely subdued by men, do not acquire any fruits from their knowledge, Tapasya, Japam, fire sacrifices, worship, learning and fame. I tested you to ascertain your strength in learning. It is highly advisable to choose one's husband by examining his merits and defects. Sin equivalent to the murder of a Brahmin is committed if one gives in marriage one's daughter to one void of all qualifications, to an old man, to one who is ignorant, to a poor, illiterate, diseased, ugly, very angry, very harsh, lame, devoid of limbs, deaf, dumb, inanimate like, and who is impotent. If one gives in marriage a daughter to a young man of good character, learned, well qualified and of a peaceful temper, one acquires the fruits of performing ten horse sacrifices. If one nourishes a daughter and sells her out of greed for money, one falls to the Kumbhipaka hell. That sinner drinks the urine and eats the excrements of that daughter, remaining in that hell. For a period equal to the fourteen Indra's life-periods they are bitten by worms and crows. At the expiry of this period, they will have to be born in this world of men as diseased persons. In their human births they will have to earn their livelihood by selling flesh and carrying flesh."

88-100. Thus saying, when Tulasi stopped, Brahma appeared on the scene and addressed S'ankachuda O S'ankhachuda! Why are you spending uselessly your time in vain talks with Tulasi? Marry her soon by the Gandharba method. As you are a gem amongst males, so She is a gem amongst females. It is a very happy union between a humorous lover and a humorous beloved. O King! Who despises the great happiness when it is at one's hand! He who forsakes the pleasure is worse than a beast in this world. O Tulasi! And what for are you testing the nobly qualified person who is the tormentor of the Devas, Asuras and Danavas. O Child! As Laksmi Devi is of Narayana, as Radhika is of Krisna; as is My Savitri, as Bhava's is Bhavani, as Boar's is Earth, as Yajha's is Daksina, Atri's Anasuya, Gautama's Ahalya, Moon's Rohini, Brihaspati's Tara, Manu's S'atarupa, Kandarpa's Rati, Kas'yapa's Aditi, Vas'istha's Arundhati, Karddama's Devahuti, Fire's Svaha, Indra's S'achi, Ganes'a's Pusti, Skanda's Devasena, and Dharma's Murti, so let you be the dear wife of S'ankhachuda. Let you remain with S'ankhachuda, beautiful as he is, for a long time, and enjoy with him in various places as you like. When S'ankhachuda will quit his mortal frame, you would go to Goloka and enjoy easily with the two-armed S'ri Krisna, and in Vaikuntha with the four-armed Krisna and with great gladness.

Here ends the Eighteenth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the union of S'ankhachuda with Tulasi in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said “O Bhagavan! Wonderful is the story that has been now recited by you. My ears are not satisfied. So tell me what happened afterwards.”

2-94. Narayana said O Narada! The Creator Brahma, blessing them, departed to His own abode. The Danava married Tulasi under the Gandharba method. The celestial drums sounded and the flowers were showered. In the beautiful lovely house the Danavendra, remained in perfect enjoyment. Tulasi, too, being busy with fresh intercourses, became almost mad after them. The chaste Tulasi and S’ankhachuda both became deeply immersed in the ocean of bliss in their sexual union and began to enjoy sixty-four sorts of amorous sports. In the S’astras on love affairs, all the connections of limbs with limbs that are described, as the lover and the loved desire, they both enjoyed those with perfect freedom and pleasure. The place was solitary; to add to it, the scenery was grand and lovely; so nothing remained untasted of the several tastes of amorous pleasures. On the banks of the river, in flower-gardens, they slept on the flower beds smeared with sandal-paste, and enjoyed the amorous pleasures. Both were adorned with jewel ornaments; both were skilled in amorous practices; so no one desisted. The chaste Tulasi out of her nimbleness due to young age, easily stole into the heart of her husband. S’ankhachuda, too, a great expert in knowing other’s amorous sentiments, attracted the heart of Tulasi. Tulasi obliterated the sandal marks from the breast of the King and the sign of tilak from his nose. The King also wiped away the dot of Sindur and Alaka (vermillion) marks from Tulasi’s forehead and put marks of nails on her round plump breasts. Tulasi also hurt the King’s left side by her bracelets. Then the King bit the lips of Tulasi. Thus each one embraced the other, kissed each other and each one began to champoo the thighs, legs, etc. When both of them thus spent their time in amorous sports, they got up and began to dress themselves as they desired. Tulasi smeared S’ankhachuda’s nose with red sandal-paste mixed with kumkum (saffron), smeared his body with sweet-scented sandal-paste, offered sweet-scented betels in his mouth, made him put on celestial garments (fireproof; brought from Fire) put unto his neck the wonderful garland of Parijata flowers, destructive of disease and old age, invaluable jewel rings on his hand and offering him excellent gems, rare in the three worlds, said “O Lord! I am your maidservant” and uttering this repeatedly bowed down to the feet of her husband with devotion. She then got up and with smiling countenance began to look on his face with a steadfast gaze. The king S’ankhachuda then attracted his dear Tulasi to his breast and took off the veil fully from her face and began to look on that, next moment he kissed on her cheek and lips and gave her a pair of garments brought from the Varuna's house, a necklace of jewels, hard to get in the three worlds, the tinklets of Svaha, the wife of Agni, the Keyura (armlets) of the Sun's wife Chhaya, the two earrings of Rohini, the wife of the Moon, the finger rings of Rati, the wife of Kamadeva, and the wonderfully beautiful conch, given by Vis'va Karma, excellent bedding studded with pearls and jewels and various ornaments; and when he gave her all these things, he smiled. The king then put garlands on Tulasi's braid of hair, nicely variegated Alakas on her cheek, three crescent lines of sweet- scented sandal paste within the Alakas, dots of saffron all around that, the brilliant Sindura mark looking like a flame, and red Alta on the feet and toes; he then placed those feet on his breast and utterred repeatedly "I am your servant" and then held her on his breast. They then left the hermitage, in that state and began to travel in various places. In the Malaya mountain, in mountains after mountains, in solitary flower gardens, in the mountain caves, in beautiful sea-beaches, on the banks of the Puspabhadra river, cool with watery breeze, in various rivers and riversides, in Vispandana forest echoed with sweet songs of the birds of the vernal season. They then went from Vispandana forest to the Surasana forest, from the Surasana, forest to the Nandana forest, from the Nandana forest to the nice Chandana forests, from Chandana forest to Champaka, Ketaki; Madhavi Kunda, Malati, and Kumuda and lotus forests; thence they went to the forest of desire gratifying trees (Kalpavriksa forest,) and Parijata trees. They then went to the solitary place Kanchan, thence to the Kanchi (forest) they then went to the Kihjalaka forest, thence to the Kanchanakar (the gold mine), thence to Kanchuka and various other forests echoed with the sweet sounds of cuckoos. There, on beds strewn with flowers and scented with sandal paste they both enjoyed each other to their hearts content and with great pleasure. But none of them, whether S'ankhachuda or Tulasi, got quenched with their thirst. Rather their passions were inflamed like the fire on which clarified butter is poured (in sacrifices). The King of the Danavas, then, brought Tulasi to his own kingdom and, there, in his own beautiful garden house, he incessantly enjoyed her. Thus the powerful king of the Danavas passed away one Manvantara in the enjoyment of his kingdom. He spread his sway over the Devatas, Asuras, Danavas, Gandharbas, Kinnaras, and Raksasas. The Devas, dispossessed of their realms, wandered everywhere like beggars. At last they united in a body and went to the Brahma's assembly and there they began to cry and then related the whole history how the Danava S'ankhachuda oppressed them. Hearing all this, Brahma took them to S'ankara and informed Him of the whole history of the case. When Mahadeva heard all this. He took them all to the highest place, Vaikuntha devoid of old age and death. Going towards the first entrance of Narayana's abode, they saw the gate-keepers watching the gate, taking their seats on jewel thrones. They all looked brilliant, clothed with the yellow garments, adorned with jewel ornaments, garlanded with forest flowers, all of S'yama Sundara (dark blue, very beautiful) bodies. They were four¬ armed, holding on their hands, conch, mace, discus and lotus; sweet smile was on their faces and eyes beautiful like lotus leaves. On Brahma asking them for entrance to the assembly, they nodded their assent. He, then, accompanied by the Devas, passed one by one.

sixteen gates and at last came before Narayana. On reaching there, He saw that the assembly was completely filled with Devarsis, and four-armed Narayanlike Parisadas (attendants), decked with Kaustubba jewels. The sight of the Sabha (assembly) makes one think that the Moon has just arisen, shedding effulgent rays all round. By the will of S'ri Hah, excellent diamonds, invaluable gems and necklaces of gems and jewels were placed at various places. At other places rows of pearls were shedding their splendour and brilliance like the garlands of gems and jewels. At others, the mirrors were placed in a circle; and at various other places, the endless wonderful artistic picture lines were drawn. Again at other places the jewels called Padmaragas were artistically arranged as if the lotuses were there spreading their lustrous beauty all around. At many other places rows of steps were made of wonderful Syamantak jewels. All around the assembly, there were the excellent pillars, built of Indranilam jewels. Over those pillars, sandal leaves strung on strings from to pillar to pillar, were suspended. Golden jars, all brimful with water were located at various places. All around, the garlands of Parijata flowers were seen. The hall was decorated with sweet scented sandal trees, red like saffron and musk. Sweet scents were being emitted all round. The Vidyadharis were dancing at places.

The assembly hall measured one thousand Yojanas. Countless servants were engaged all over on various works. Brahma, S'ankara, and the other Gods saw there S'ri Hari seated in the centre on an invaluable jewel throne, as a Moon looks surrounded by stars. There were the crown on His head, the ear-rings on His ears; garlands made of wild flowers were on his neck and His body was smeared all over with sandal paste and He was holding Kelipadma (a sort of lotus) in His hand. He was seeing, with a smiling countenance, the dancing and music before Him. He was full of peace, the Lord of Sarasvati. Laksmi was holding gently His lotus feet and He was chewing the sweet scented betel offered by Her. Ganga also was fanning Him devotedly with a white Chamara and the others were singing hymns to Him with their heads bent low with devotion.

Brahma and the other Gods all bowed down to Him; their bodies were all filled with Pulaka (excessive joy causing hair stand on end); tears flowed from their eyes and their voices were choked out of emotion. The creator Brahma, then, with clasped hands informed Him, with head bowed down, of the whole history of S'ankhachuda. Hearing this, the omniscient Hah, knowing the minds of all, smiled and spoke to Brahma all the interesting secrets O Lotus born! I know all about S'ankhachuda.

He was in his previous birth My great devotee, an energetic Gopa. Now I speak to you the ancient history of Goloka; hear. This story about Goloka is sin destroying and highly meritorious.

S'ankhachuda, in his previous birth was the Gopa Sudama, My chief Parisad (attendant). He has now become a Danava on account of the dire curse pronounced by S'ri Radha. One day when I went from My abode, accompanied by Viraja Gopi, to the Rasa Mandala, My beloved Radha, hearing this news from a maid servant, came up at once with Her whole host of Sakhis wrathful, to the Rasa Mandalam (ball dance in Goloka) and, not being able to see Me, saw Viraja turned into a river. She thought that I had disappeared. So She went back to Her own abode with Her Sakhis. But when I returned to the house with Sudama, Radha rebuked Me very much. I remained silent. But Sudama could not bear and he rebuked Radha in My presence, a thing quite intolerable to Her dignity! On hearing this rebuke, Radha's eyes became red with anger and She immediately ordered Her Sakhis to drive him away. Sudama began to tremble with fear. Immediately on Her command lakhs and lakhs of Sakhis got up immediately and drove that hot irresistible Sudama away. Sudama repeated his chafings and roarings. On hearing these. She cursed him "You better be born in the womb of a Danavi." Hearing the terrible curse, Sudama bowed down to Me and went away crying; then Radha, who was all-mercy, became melted with mercy. And She prevented him repeatedly, not to go away. Radha wept and told him, "O Child! Wait. Where are you going? No more you will have to go; return." Thus saying She became very distressed. The Gopas and Gopis also began to weep. I then explained to them, "In about half a moment Sudama will come back, fulfilling the conditions of the curse. O Sudama! Come here when the curse expires."

Then he appeased Radha also. "Know that one moment (Ksan) in Goloka is equal to one Manvantara on earth. The Yogi S'ankhachuda, expert in Maya and very powerful will soon return from the earth.

Take this My weapon S'ula and go early to Bharata. S'iva will slay the Danava by this S'ulastra. The Danava holds always on his neck My auspicious Kavacha and will therefore become the conqueror of the universe. No one will he able to kill him as long as be holds the above Kavacha. So, first of all, I will go to him in the form of a Brahmana and ask from him the Kavacha. O Creator! Thou also didst give him the boon that his death would occur when the chastity of of his wife would be destroyed. I will go and hold intercourse with his wife. Then his death will occur without fail. His wife after her death will come and become My dearest wife. Thus saying, Narayana gave over to Mahadeva the S'ulastra. Then He went gladly to His inner compartments. On the other hand, Brahma and Rudra and the other Devas incarnated themselves in Bharata.

Here ends the Nineteenth Chapter on the going of the Devas to Vaikuntha after Tulasi's marriage with S'ankhachuda in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. Narayana said Brahma, then putting S'iva to the task of killing S'ankhachuda went to His own abode. The other Devas returned to their homes. Here under the beautiful Bata tree, on the banks of the river Chandrabhaga, Mahadeva pitched His big tent and encamped Himself to get the victory of the Devas. He then sent Chitraratha, the Lord of the Gandharbhas, as a messenger to S'ankhachuda, the Lord of the Danavas. By the command of Mahadeva, Chitraratha went to the city of the king of Daityas, more beautiful than Indra's place and more wealthy than the mansion of Kuvera. The city was five yojanas wide and twice as much in length.

It was built of crystals of pearls and jewels. There were roadways on all sides. There were seven trenches, hard to be crossed, one after another, encircling the city. The city was built of countless rubies and gems, brilliant like flames. There were hundreds of roadways and markets and stalls, in the wonderful Vedis (raised platforms) built of jewels. All around were splendid palatial buildings of traders and merchantmen, filled with various articles. There were hundreds and kotis of beautiful buildings, adorned with various ornaments and built of variegated red stones looking like Sinduras. Thus he went on and saw, in the middle, the building of S'ankhachuda, circular like the lunar sphere. Four ditches all filled with fiery flames, encircled one after another, his house. So the enemies could not in any way cross them; but the friend could easily go there. On the top were seen turrets built of jewels, rising high to the heavens. The gate-keepers were watching the twelve gates. In the centre were situated lakhs and lakhs of excellent jewel built houses. In every room there were jewelled steps and staircases and the pillars were all built of gems and jewels, and pearls. Puspadanta (Chitraratha) saw all this and then went to the first gate and saw one terrible person, copper coloured, with tawny eyes, sitting with a trident in his hand and with a smiling countenance. He told he had come as a messenger and got his entrance. Thus Chitraratha went one afer another to all the entries, not being prohibited at all though he told that he had come as a messenger on war service. The Gandharbha reached one after another, the last door and said “O Door keeper! Go quickly and inform the Lord of the Danavas all about the impending war.” When the messenger had spoken thus, the gate-keeper allowed him to go inside. Going inside, the Gandarbha saw S’ankhachuda, of excellent form, seated in the middle of the royal assembly, on a golden throne. One servant was holding on the king’s head an umbrella, decked with divine excellent gems, the inner rod of the umbrella being made up of jewels, and decorated with expanded artificial flowers made of gems. The attendants were fanning him with beautiful white chamaras; he was nicely dressed, beautiful and lovely and adorned with jewel ornaments. He was nicely garlanded, and wore fine celestial garments. Three Koti Danavas were surrounding him; and seven Koti Danavas, all armed, were walking to and fro.

22-53. Puspadanta was thunderstruck when he saw thus the Danava and he addressed him thus O King! I am a servant of S’iva; My name is Puspadanta; hear what S’iva has commanded me to tell you. You better now give back, to the Devas, the rights that they had before. The Devas went to S’ri Hari and had taken His refuge. S’ri Hari gave over to S’iva one S’ula weapon and asked the Devas to depart. At present, the three eyed Deva is residing under the shade of a Bata tree on the banks of the Puspabhadra river. He told me to speak this to you, “Either give over to the Devas their rights, or fight with me. Please reply and I will speak to Him accordingly.” S’ankhachuda, hearing the messenger’s words laughed and said, “Tomorrow morning I will start, ready for war. Better go away today.” The messenger went back to S’iva and replied to Him accordingly. In the meantime the following personages joined S’iva and remained seated on excellent aerial cars, built of jewels and gems. The following were the persons:-- Skanda, Virabhadra, Nandi,

Mahakala, Subhadraka, Vis’alaksa, Bana, Pingalaksa, Vikampana,

Virupa, Vikriti, Manibhadra, Vaskala, Kapilaksa, Dirgha Dangstra, Vikata, Tamralochana, Kalakantha, Balibhadra, Kalajihba, Kutichara, Balonmatta, Ranas’laghi, Durjaya, Durgama, (these eight Bhairavas), eleven Rudras, eight Vasus, Indra, the twelve Adityas, fire, moon, VisVakarma, the two AsVins, Kuvera, Yama, Jayanta, Nala Kubara, Vayu, Varuna, Budha, Mangala, Dharma, S’ani, Is’ana, the powerful Kamadeva. Ugradamstra, Ugrachanda, Kotara, Kaitabhi, and the eight armed terrible Devi Bhadrakali. Kali wore the bloody red clothings and She smeared red sandal paste all over Her body.

Dancing, laughing; singing songs in tune, very jolly. She bids Her devotees discard all fear, and terrifies the enemies. Her lip is terrible, lolling, and extends to one Yojana. On Her eight arms She holds conch, disc, mace, lotus, axe, skin, bow and arrows. She was holding in Her hands, the bowl shaped human skull; that was very deep and one Yojana wide. Her trident reached up to the Heavens; Her weapon called S’akti (dart) extended to one Yojana. Besides there were Mudgara (mace), Musala (club), Vajra (thunderbolt), Kheta (club), brilliant Phalaka (shield), the Vaisnava weapon, the Varuna weapon, the Agneyastra (the fire weapon), Nagapas’a (the noose of serpents), the Narayanastra, the Gandharva’s weapons, the Brahma’s weapons, the Gadudastram, the Parjanayastram, the Pas’upatastram, the Jrimbhahastram, the Parvatastram, the Mahes’varastram, the Vayavyastram, and the Sanmohanam rod and various other infallible divine weapons. Besides hundreds of other divine weapons were with Her. Three Kotis of Yoginis and three Kotis and a half of terrible Dakinis were attending Bhadrakali. Bhutas, (demons) Pretas, Pis’achas, Kusmandas, Brahma Raksasas, Rakhsasas, Vetalas, Yaksas and Kinnaras also were there in countless numbers. At this time Kartikeya came there and bowed down to his father Mahadeva. He asked him to take his seat on His left side an asked him to help. Then the army remained there in military array. On the other departed, S'ankhachuda went to the zenana and informed TulasT of the news of an impending war. No sooner She heard than her throat and lips and palate became dried. She then with a sorrowful heart spoke in sweet words "O my Lord! O my Friend! O the Ruler of My life! Wait for a moment and take your seat on My heart. Instil life in Me for a moment. Satisfy My desire of human birth. Let me behold you fully so that my eyes be satisfied. My breath is now very agitated. I saw by the end of the night one bad dream. Therefore I feel an internal burning." Thus at the words of TulasT, the king S'ankhachuda finished his meals and began to address her, in good and true words, beneficent to her"O My Lady! It is Kala (the time that brings out these various combinations by which the Karmic fruit is enjoyed; it is Kala that awards auspicious and inauspicious things; the Kala is the Sole Master to impart pain, fear, and good and bad things.

54-84. Trees grow up in time; their branches, etc., come out in time; flowers appear in time and fruits come out in time. Fruits are ripen in time and after giving the fruits, they die out also in time. O Fair One! The universe comes into existence in time and dies away in time.

The Creator, Preserver, and Destroyer of the universe, are creating, preserving and destroying the worlds with the help of time. Time guides them in every way. But the Highest Prakriti is the God of Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a (i.e., the Creatrix of Time). This Highest Prakriti, the Highest God is creating, preserving and destroying this universe. She makes the Time dance. By Her mere Will, She has converted Her inseparable Prakriti into Maya and is thus creating all things, moving and unmoving. She is the Ruler of all; the Form of all, and She is the Highest God. By Her is being done this creation of persons by persons, this preservation of persons by persons, and this destruction of persons by persons. So you better now take refuge of the Highest Lord. Know it is by Her command the wind is blowing, by Her command the Sun is giving heat in due time, by Her command Indra is showering rains; by Her command. Death is striding over the beings; by Her connnnand fire is burning all things and by Her connnnand the cooling Moon is revolving. She is the Death of death, the Tinne of time, Yama of yama (the God of death), the Fire of fire and the Destroyer of the destroyer. So take Her refuge. You cannot find and fix who is whose friend in the world; so pray to Her, the Highest God, Who is the Friend of All. Oh! Who am I? And who are you either? The Creator is the combiner of us two and so He will dissociate us two by our Karma. When difficulty arises, the ignorant fools become overwhelmed with sorrow; but the intelligent Pundits do not get at all deluded or become distressed. By the Wheel of Time, the beings are led sometimes into happiness; sometimes into pain. You will certainly get Narayana for your husband; for which you practised Tapas before, in the hermitage of Vadari (the source of the Ganges, the feet of Visnu). I pleased Brahma by my Tapasya and have, by his boon, got you as my wife. But the object for which you did your Tapasya, that you may get Hari as your husband; will certainly be fulfilled. You will get Gobinda in Vrindabana and in the region of Goloka. I will also go there when I forsake this, my Demon body. Now I am talking with you here; afterwards we will meet again in the region of Goloka. By the curse of Radhika, I have come to this Bharata, hard to be attained. You, too, will quit this body and, assuming the divine form will go to S'ri Hari. So, O Beloved! You need not be sorry." O Muni! Thus these conversations took them the whole day and led them to the evening time. The king of the demons, S'ankhachuda then slept with Tulasi on a nicely decorated bed, strewn with flowers, and smeared with sandal paste, in the Ratna Mandir (temple built of jewels.) This jewel temple was adorned with various wealth and riches. The jewel lamps were lighted. S'ankhachuda passed the night with his wife in various sports. The thin bellied Tulasi was weeping with a very sorrowful heart, without having taken any food. The king, who knew the reality of existence, took her to his breast and appeased her in various ways. What religious instructions he had received in Bhandira forest from S'ri Krisna, those Tattvas, capable to destroy all sorrows and delusions, he now spoke carefully to Tulasi. Then Tulasi's joy knew no bounds. She then began to consider, everything as transient and began to play with a gladdened heart. Both became drowned in the ocean of bliss; and the bodies of both of them were filled with joy and the hairs stood on their ends. Both of them, then, desirous to have amorous sports, joined themselves and became like ArdhanarisVara and so one body. As Tulasi considered S'ankhachuda, to be her lord, so the Danava King considered Tulasi the darling of his life. They became senseless with pleasureable feelings arising out of their amorous intercourses. Next moment they regained their tenaciousness and both began to converse on amorous matters. Thus both spent their time sometimes in sweet conversations, sometimes laughing and joking, sometimes maddened with amorous sentiments. As S'ankhachuda was clever in amorous affairs, so Tulasi was very expert. So none felt satiated with love affairs and no one was defeated by the other.

Here ends the Twentieth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the war preparations of S'ankhachuda with the Devas in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-33. S’n Narayana spoke Then the Danava, the devotee of S’ri Krisna, got up from his flower strewn bed, meditating on S’ri Krisna, early in the morning time, at the Brahma Muhurta. Quitting his night dress, he took his bath in pure water and put on a fresh washed clothing. He then put the bright Tilak mark on his forehead and, performing the daily necessary worship, he worshipped his Ista devata (The Deity doing good to him). He then saw the auspicious things such as curd, ghee, honey, fried rice, etc., and distributed as usual, to the Brahmanas the best jewels, pearls, clothing and gold. Then for his marching to turn out auspicious, he gave at the feet of his Guru Deva priceless gems, jewels, pearls, diamonds, etc., and finally he gave to the poor Brahmins with great gladness, elephants, horses, wealth, thousands of stores, two lakhs of cities and one hundred kotis of villages. He then gave over to his son, the charge of his kingdom and of his wife, and all the dominions, wealth, property, all the servants and maid servants, all the stores and conveyances. He dressed himself for the war and took up bows and arrows and arrow cases. By the command of the King, the armies began to gather. Three lakhs of horses, one lakh elephants, one ayuta chariots, three Kotis of bowmen, three Kotis armoured soldiers and three Kotis of trident holders got themselves ready. Then the King counted his forces and appointed one Commander-in-Chief, (Maharatha), skilled in arts of warfare, over the whole army. Thus the generals were apppointed over the three lakh Aksauhini forces and their provisions were collected by three hundred Aksauhini men. He, then, thinking of S’ri Hari, started for war, accompanied by his vast army. (Note One Aksauhini consists of a large army consisting of 21,870 chariots, as many elephants, 65,610 horses, and 109,350 foot). He then mounted on a chariot built of excellent jewels and, headed by his Guru and all his other elders, went to S’ankara. O Narada! Bhagavan Mahadeva was at that time, staying on the banks of Puspabhadra. That place was Sidhas’rama (the hermitage where the yogic successes had been obtained and can easily be acquired in future for the Siddhas as well a Siddha Ksettra.) It was the place where the Muni Kapila practised Tapasya, in the holy land of Bharata. It was bounded on the east by the western ocean, on the west by the Malaya mountain, on the south, by the S’ri S’aila mountain and on the north by the Gandha Madana Mountain. It was five yojanas wide and one hundred times as long. This auspicious river in Bharata yields great religious merits and is always full of clear, sparkling running water. She is the favourite wife of the Salt Ocean and She is very blessed. Issuing from S’aravati Himalayas, She drops into the ocean. Keeping the river Gomati (Goomti) by her left; She falls into the west ocean. S’ankhachuda, arriving there, saw Mahadeva under a Peepul tree near its root with a smiling countenance, like one Koti Suns seated in a yogic posture. His colour was white like a pure crystal; as if the Fire of Brahma was emitting from every pore of His body (burning with Brahma-Teja); He was wearing the tiger skin and, holding the trident and axe. He dispels the fear of death of His Bhaktas; His face is quite calm. He, the Lord of Gauri, is the Giver of the fruits of Tapasya and of all sons of wealth and prosperity. The smiling face of As'utosa (one who is pleased quickly) is always thinking of the welfare of the Bhaktas; He is the Lord of the Universe, the Seed of the universe, the All-form (all-pervading), and the Progenitor of the universe. He is omnipresent. All pervading, the Best in this universe, the Destroyer of this universe, the Cause of all causes, and the Saviour from the hells. He is the Awakener and Bestower of Knowledge, the Seed of all knowledges, and He Himself is of the nature of Knowledge and Bliss. Seeing that Eternal Purusa, the King of the Danavas at once descended from his chariot and bowed down with devotion to Him and to Bhadra Kali on His left and and to Kartikeya on his front. The other attendants did the same. S'ankara, Bhadra Kali and Skanda all blessed him. NandisVara and others got up from their seats on seeing the Danava King and began to talk with each other on that subject. The King addressed S'iva and sat by Him. Bhagavan Mahadeva, the Tranquil Self, then, spoke to him, thus O King!

Brahma, the knower of Dharma and the Creator of the world, is the Father of Dharrna, The religious Marichi, a devotee of Visnu, is the son of Brahma. The religious Prajapati Kas'yapa is also the Brahma's son. Daksa gladly gave over to Kas'yapa in marriage, his thirteen daughters. Danu, fortunate and chaste, is also one of them.

34-64. Danu had forty sons, all spirited and known as Danavas. The powerful Viprachitti was the prominent amongst them. Viprachitti's son was Dambha, self controlled and very much devoted to Visnu.

So much so that for one lakh years he recited the Visnu mantra at Puskara. His Guru (spiritual teacher) was S'ukracharya; and, by his advice, he recited the mantra of S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self. He got you as his son, devoted to Krisna. In your former birth, you were the chief attendant Gopa (cow-herd) of Krisna. You were very religious. Now, by Radhika's curse, you are born in Bharata, as the Lord of the Danavas, powerful, heroic, valorous, and chivalrous. All the things from Brahma down to a blade of grass, the Vaisnavas regard as very trifling; even if they get Salokya, Sarsti, Sayujya and Samipya of Hari, they do not care a straw for that. Without serving Hari, they do not accept those things, even if those are thrust on them. Even Brahmahood and immortality, the Vaisnavas count for nothing. They want to serve Hari (Seva-bhava). Indrahood, Manuhood, they do not care. You, too, are a real Krisna Bhakta. So what do you care for those things that belong to the Devas, that are something like false to you. Give back to the Devas their kingdoms thus and please Me. Let the Devas remain in their own places and let you enjoy your kingdom happily. No need now for further quarrels. Think that you all belong to the same Kas'yapa's family. The sins that are incurred, for example, the murder of a Brahmin, etc., are not even one-sixteenth of the sins incurred by hostilities amongst the relatives. If, O King! You think that by giving away to the Devas their possessions, your property will be diminished, then think that no one's days pass ever in one and the same condition. Whenever Prakriti is dissolved, Brahma also vanishes. Again He appears by the Will of God. This occurs always. True, that knowledge is increased by true Tapasya; but nriemory fails then. This is certain. He who is the creator of this world, does his work of creation gradually by the help of his Knowledge-power (Jhana-S'akti). In the Satya Yuga, Dharma reigns in full; in the Treta Yuga, one quarter is diminished; again in the Dvapara only one-half remains. And in the Kali Yuga, only one quarter remains. Thus Dharma gets increase and decrease. At the end of the Kali, the Dharma will be seen very feeble as the phase of the Moon is seen very thin on the Dark Moon night. See, again, the Sun is very powerful in summer; not so in winter. At midday the Sun is very hot; it does not remain so in the morning and evening. The Sun rises at one time; then he is considered as young at another time he becomes very powerful and at another time he goes down. Again in times of distress (i.e., during the cloudy days) the Sun gets entirely obscured. When the Moon is devoured by Rahu (in the Lunar Eclipse), the Moon quivers. Again when the Moon becomes liberated (i.e., when the eclipse passes away) She becomes bright again. In the Full-Moon night She becomes full but She does not remain so always. In the Dark fortnight She wanes every day. In the bright fortnight She waxes every day. In the bright fortnight, the Moon becomes healthy and prosperous and in the dark fortnight, the Moon becomes thinner and thinner as if attacked with consumption. In the time of eclipse She becomes pale and in the cloudy weather. She is obscured. Thus the Moon also becomes powerful at one time and weak and pale at another time. Vali now resides in Patala, having lost all his fortunes; but, at some other time, he will become Devendra (the Lord of the Devas). This earth becomes at one time covered with grains and the resting-place of all beings; and, at another time. She becomes immersed under water. This universe appears at one time and disappears at another. Everything, moving or non-moving, sometimes appears and again, at another time, disappears. Only Brahma, the Highest Self, remains the same. By His grace, I have got the name Mrityunjaya (the Conqueror of Death). I, too, am witnessing many Prakritik dissolutions, I witnessed repeatedly many dissolutions and will in future, witness many dissolutions. The Paramatman becomes of the nature of Prakriti.

Again it is He that is the Purusa (male principle). He is the Self; He is the individual soul (Jiva). He thus assumes various forms. And, again, Lo! He is beyond all forms! He who always repeats His Name and sings His Glory, can conquer, at some occasion, death. He is not to come under the sway of this birth, death, disease, old age and fear. He has made Brahma the Creator, Visnu the Preserver and Me the Destroyer. By His Will, we are possessed of those influences and powers. O King! Having deputed Kala, Agni and Rudra, to do the destruction work, I Myself repeat only His name and sing His glory, day and night, incessantly. My name is, on that account, Mrityunjaya. By His Knowledge Power, I am fearless. Death flies away fast from Me as serpents fly away at the sight of Garuda, the Vinata;s son. O Narada! Thus saying, S'ambhu, the Lord of all, the Progenitor of all, remained silent. Hearing the above words of S'ambhu, the King thanked Mahadeva again and again and spoke in sweet humble words.

65-74. S'ankhachuda said The words spoken by Thee are quite true. Still I am speaking a few words. Kindly hear. Thou hast spoken just now that very great sins are incurred by kindred hostilities. How is it, then, that He robbed Vali of his whole possessions and sent him down into Patala? Gadadhara Visnu could not recover Vali's glory. But I have done that. Why did the Devas kill Hiranyaksa and Hiranyakas'ipu, S'umbha and the other Danavas? In by gone days, we laboured hard when the nectar was obtained out of the churning of the ocean; but the best fruit was reaped by the Devas only. However, all these point that this universe is but the mere sporting ground of Paramatman, Who has become of the nature of Prakriti (the polarities of the one and the same current to produce electric effects). Whomsoever He grants glory and fortune, he only gets that. The quarrel of the Devas and the Danavas is eternal. Victory and defeat come to both the parties alternately. So it is not proper for Thee to come here in this hostility. For Thou art the God, of the nature of the Highest Self. Before Thee, we both are equal. So it is a matter of shame, no doubt, for Thee to stand up against us in favour of the gods. The glory and fame that will result to Thee, if Thou art victorious, will not be so much as it will be if we get the victory. On the contrary the inglory and infamy that will result to Thee if Thou dost get dire defeat will be inconceivably much more than what would come to us if we are defeated. (For we are low and Thou art Great.)

75-79. Mahadeva laughed very much when he heard the Danava's words and replied O King! You are descended from the Brahmin family. So what shame shall I incur if I get defeat in this fighting against you. In former days, the fight took place between Madhu and Kaitabha; again between Hiranya Kas'ipu and Hiranyaksa and S'ri Hah. I also fought with the Asura Tripura. Again the serious fight took place also between S'umbha and the other Daityas and the Highest Prakriti Devi, the Ruler of all, and the Progenitrix of all and the Destructrix of all. And, then, you were the Parisada attendant of S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self.

Note S'ri Krisna is the Eternal Purusa beyond the Gunas. He creates Prakriti. All the creation is effected by Him. He is the Master of all the S'aktis. These S'aktis come from Him and go into Him. S'ri Krisna plays with these S'aktis, these lines of Forces, very powerful and terrible, indeed, that go to create, preserve and destroy the whole universe. These Lines of Forces have their three properties (1) Origin; (2) direction and (3) magnitude. And finally they come back to their origin. This makes one Kalpa, one Life, one Moment, one in the Full One. The Gunas come out of these S'aktis, these Lines of Forces. S'ri Krisna is the Great Reservoir, the Great Centre of Forces, Powerful, Lovely and Terrible. All the events as described here, appear in the intermediate stages when the Fourth Dimension passes into the Third Dimension, etc. The Fourth Dimension does not at once turn out into the Third Dimension but it takes place by degrees. This explains our dreams, visions, etc., which, if seen when the mind is pure, turn out to be true.

80-82. So the Daityas, that were killed before, cannot be compared with you. Then why shall I feel shame in fighting against you? I am sent here by S'ri Hah for saving the Devas. So either give back to the Devas their possessions, or fight with Me. No need in speaking thus quite useless talks. O Narada! Thus speaking, Bhagavan S'ankara remained silent. S'ankhachuda got up at once with his ministers.

Here ends the Twenty-first Chapter in the Ninth Book on the meeting of Mahadeva and S'ankhachuda for an encounter in conflict in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-75. S’n Narayana spoke Then the King of the Danavas, very powerful, bowed down to Mahadeva and ascended on the chariot with his ministers. Mahadeva gave orders to His army to be ready at once. So S’ankhachuda did. Terrible fight then ensued between Mahendra and Vrisaparva, Bhaskara and Viprachitti, Nis’akara and Dambha, between Kala and KalesVara, between Fire and Gokarna, Kuvera and Kalakeya, between VisVakarma and Maya, between Mrityu and Bhayamkar, between Yama and Samhara, between Varuna and Vikamka, between Budha and Dhritapristha, between S’ani and Raktaksa, Jayanta and Ratnasara, between the Vasus and Varchasas, between the two AsVin Kumaras and Diptiman, between Nalakubara and Dhumra, between Dharma and Dhurandhara, between Mangala and Usaksa, Bhanu and S’ovakara, between Kandarpa and Pithara, between the eleven Adityas and Godhamukha, Churna and Khadgadhvaja, Kahchimukha and Pinda, Dhumra and Nandi, between VisVa and Palas’a, between the eleven Rudras and the eleven Bhayamkaras, between Ugrachanda and the other Mahamaris and NandisVara and the other Danavas. The battlefield, then, assumed a grim aspect, as if the time of Dissolution had come. Bhagavan Mahadeva sat under the Vata (peepul) tree with Kartikeya and Bhadrakali. S’ankhachuda, decked with his jewel ornaments, sat on the jewel throne, surrounded by kotis and kotis of Danavas. The S’ankara’s army got defeated at the hands of the Danavas. The Devas, with cuts and wounds on their bodies, fled from the battlefield, terrified. Kartikeya gave words “Don't fear” to the Devas and excited them. Only Skanda resisted the Danava forces.

In one moment he slew one hundred Aksauhini Danava forces. The lotus eyed Kali also engaged in killing the Asuras. She became very angry and no sooner did She slay the Asura forces, than She began to drink their blood. She easily slew with Her one hand and at every time put into Her mouth ten lakhs, and hundred lakhs and Kotis and Kotis of elephants. Thousands and thousands of headless bodies (Kavandhas) came to be witnessed in the field. The bodies of the Danavas were all cut and wounded by the arrows of Kartikeya. They were all terrified and fled away. Only Vrisaparva, Viprachitti, Dambha, and Vikamkanah remained fighting with Skanda with an heroic valour. Mahamari, too, did not shew his back and he fought out vigorously. By and by they all became very much confused and distressed; but they did not turn their backs. Seeing this terrible fight of Skanda, the Devas began to shower flowers. The killing of the Danavas looked like a Prakritik Dissolution. S'ankhachuda, then, began to shoot arrows from his chariot.

The shooting of arrows by the king seemed as if rains were being poured in by the clouds. Everything became pitch dark. Fires only were seen emitting their golden tongues. The Devas, NandisVara and others, fled away, terrified. Only Kartikeya remained in the battlefield. Then S'ankhachuda began to throw terribly showers and showers of mountains, snakes, stones, and trees. So much so, that Kartikeya was covered by them as the Sun becomes obscured by fog. The Demon King cut off the weighty quiver and the pedestal of Skanda and broke His chariot. By the divine weapons of the Danava, the peacock (the vehicle) of Kartikeya became exhausted. Kartikeya threw one S'akti (weapon) on the breast of the Danava; but before it fell, the Danava cut off that, lustrous like the Sun and, in return, darted his S'akti. By that stroke, Kartikeya became stunned for a moment; but he immediately regained his consciousness. He then took up the quiver that Bhagavan Visnu gave him before and many other weapons; and ascending on another chariot, built of jewels, began to fight out violently and valiantly. Getting angry, he resisted all those showers of snakes, mountains and trees by his divine weapons. He resisted fire by his watery (Paryannya) weapon. Then He cut off easily S'ankhachuda's chariot, bow, armour, charioteer, and his bright crown and he threw on his breast one blazing S'akti of white colour. The Danavendra fell unconscious; but, at the next moment, he regained his consciousness quickly, mounted on another chariot and took a fresh quiver. The Danava was the foremost in his magic powers. He, by his power of Maya, made a shower of arrows so much so that Kartikeya became completely covered by that multitude of arrows. Then the Danava took one invincible S'akti, lustrous like one hundred Suns. It seemed that flames of fire were licking high as if the Dissolution Time had come aright. Inflamed by anger, the Danava threw that S'akti on Kartikeya. It seemed, then, that a burning mass of fire fell on him. The powerful Kartikeya became senseless. Bhadrakali immediately took Him on Her lap and carried him before S'iva. S'iva easily restored him to his life by his knowledge-power and gave him the indomitable strength. He then got up in full vigour. Bhadrakali went to the field to see the Kartikeya's forces. Nandis'vara and other heroes, the Devas, Gandharbas, Yaksas, Raksasas and Kinnaras followed Her. Hundreds of war drums were sounded and hundreds of persons carried Madhu (wine). Going to the battle-ground. She gave a war- cry. The Danava forces got fainted by that cry. Bhadrakali shouted aloud inauspicious peals after peals of laughter. Then She drank Madhu and danced in the battlefield. Ugra Damstra, Ugrachanda, Kotavi, the Yoginis, Dakinis, and the Devas all drank Madhu (wine). Seeing Kali in the battlefield, S'ankhachuda came up again and imparted the spirit of Fearlessness to the Daityas, trembling with fear. Bhadrakali projected, then, the Fire weapon, flaming like the Great Dissolution Fire; but the king quickly put out that by the Watery weapon. Kali then projected the very violent and wonderful Varunastra. The Danava cut off that easily with Gandharbastra. Kali then threw the flame-like Mahes'varastra. The king made it futile by the Vaisnavastra. Then the Devi purifying the Narayanastra with the mantra, threw it on the king. At this the king instantly alighted from his chariot and bowed down to it. The Narayanastra rose high up like the Dissolution Fire. S'ankhachuda fell prostrate on the ground with devotion. The Devi threw, then, the Brahmastra, purifying it with Mantra. But it was rendered futile by the Danava's Brahmastra. The Devi again shot the divine weapons purifying them with mantras; but they also were nullified by the divine weapons of the Danava. Then

BhadrakalT threw one S'akti extending to one Yojana. The Daitya cut it to pieces by his divine weapon. The Devi, then, being very much enraged, became ready to throw Pas'upata Astra, when the Incorporeal Voice was heard from the Heavens, prohibiting Her, and saying, "O Devi! The high-souled Danava would not be killed by the Pas'upata weapon. For Brahma granted him this boon that until the Visnu's Kavacha will remain on his neck and until his wife's chastity be not violated, old age and death will not be able to touch him." Hearing this Celestial Voice, the Devi at once desisted. But She, out of hunger, devoured hundreds and lakhs of Danavas. The terrible Devi Kali, then, went with great speed to devour S'ankhachuda but the Danava resisted Her by his sharp divine weapons. The Devi then threw on him a powerful axe, lustrous like a summer Sun; but the Danava cut it to pieces by his divine weapon. The Devi seeing this, became very angry and proceeded to devour him; but the Danava King, the Lord of all Siddhis, expanded his body. At this. Kali became violently angry and assuming a terrific appearance, went quickly and with the blow of one fist, broke his chariot and dropped down the charioteer. Then she hurled on the Asura one S'ula weapon, blazing like a Pralaya Fire. S'ankhachuda easily held that by his left hand. The Devi became angry and struck the Danava with Her fist; the Daitya's head reeled, and, rolling, he fell unconscious for a moment. Next moment regaining his consciousness he got up. But he did not fight hand to hand with the Devi. Rather he bowed down to Her. The weapons that the Devi threw afterwards were partly cut down by the Danava and partly taken up by him and absorbed in him and thus rendered futile. Then BhadrakalT caught bold of the Danava and whirling him round and round threw him aloft. Then the powerful S'ankhachuda fell down on the ground from high with great force; he immediately got up and bowed down to Her. He then gladly ascended on his beautiful chariot, built of excellent jewels. He did not feel any fatigue with the war and went on fighting. Then the DevT BhadrakalT, feeling hungry began to drink the blood of the Danavas and ate the fat and flesh. She came before Mahadeva and described to Him the whole history of the warfare from beginning to end. Hearing the killing of the Danavas, Mahadeva began to laugh. She went on saying, "The Danavas that get out of my mouth while I was chewing them, are the only ones that are living. This number will be about one lakh. And when I took up the Pas'upata weapon to kill the Danava, the Incorporeal Celestial Voice spoke He is invulnerable by you. But the very powerful Danava did no more fling any weapon on Me. He simply cut to pieces those that I threw on him."

English translation

1-6. Narayana said: - S'iva, versed in the knowledge of the Higher Reality, hearing all this, went hinnself with His whole host to the battle. Seeing Him, S'ankhachuda alighted from his chariot and fell prostrate before him. With great force he got up and, quickly putting on his armour he took up his huge and heavy bow case. Then a great fight ensued between S'iva and S'ankhachuda for full one hundred years but there was no defeat nor victory on either side. The result was stalemate. Both of them, Bhagavan and the Danava quitted their weapons. S'ankhachuda, remained on his chariot and Mahadeva role on His Bull. Hundreds and hundreds of Danavas were slain. But extraordinarily endowed with divine power, S'ambhu restored to life all those of His party that were slain.

7-30. In the meanwhile, an aged Brahmana, very distressed in his appearance, came to the battlefield and asked S'ankhachuda, the King of Danavas "O King! Grant me what I beg of you; you give away in charity all sorts of wealth and riches; give me also what I desire; give me, a Brahmin, something also. I am a quiet peaceable aged Brahmin, very very thirsty. Make your Promise first and then I will speak to you what I desire." (Note The Brahmins only are fit for receiving frauds and cheatings.)

The King S'ankhachuda, with a gracious countenance and pleasing eyes swore before him that He would give him what he would desire. Then the Brahmin spoke to the King with great affection and Maya "I am desirous of your Kavacha (amulet)." The King, then, gave him the Kavacha (the amulet, mantra written on a Bhurja bark and located in a golden cup). Bhagavan Hah (in the form of that Brahmin) took that Kavacha and, assuming the form of S'ankhachuda came to Tulasi. Coming there. He made His Maya (magic) manifest and held sexual intercourse with her. At this time Mahadeva took up the Hari's trident-aiming at the king of the Danavas. The trident looked like the Mid-day Sun of summer, flaming like a Pralaya fire. It looked irresistible and invincible as if quite powerful to kill the enemies. In brilliance it equalled the Sudars'an Chakra (disc) and it was the chief of all the weapons. No other body than S'iva and Kes'ava could wield such a weapon. And everybody feared that but S'iva and Kes'ava. In length it was one thousand Dhanus and in width it was one hundred hands. It seemed lively, of the nature of Brahma, eternal and not capable to be noticed, whence and how it proceeded. The weapon could destroy, by its own free Lila (Will) all the worlds. When S'iva held it aloft and aiming at S'ankhachuda, He hurled it on him, the King of the Demons quitted his bows and arrows and with mind collected in a yoga posture, began to meditate on the lotus-feet of S'ri Krisna with great devotion. At that moment, the trident, whirling round fell on S'ankhachuda and easily burnt him and his chariot to ashes. He, then assuming the form of a two-armed Gopa, full of youth, divine, ornamented with jewels, holding flute, mounted on a Divine Chariot, surrounded by kotis and kotis of Gopas who came there from the region of Goloka, whose bodies were built up of excellent jewels, and S'ankhachuda then went up to the Heavens (Goloka, where S'ri Brindabana is located in the middle). He went to Vrindaban, full of Rasas (sentiments) and bowed down at the lotus feet of Radha Krisna with devotion. Both of them were filled with love when they saw Sudama, and, with a gracious countenance and joyful eyes, they took him on their laps. On the other hand the S'ula weapon came with force and gladness back again to Krisna. The bones of S'ankhachuda, O Narada! were transformed into conch-shells. These conch-shells are always considered very sacred and auspicious in the worship of the Devas. The water in the conch-shell is also very holy and pleasing to the Devas. What more than this, that the water in the conch-shell is as holy as the water of any Tirtha. This water can be offered to all the Gods but not to S'iva. Wherever the conch-shell is blown, there Laksmi abides with great pleasure. If bathing be done with conch- shell water, it is equivalent to taking bath in all the Tirthas. Bhagavan

Hari resides direct in the conch-shell. Where S'ankha is placed, there Hari resides. Laksmi also resides there and all inauspicious things fly away from there. Where the females and S'udras blow the S'ankhas, Laksmi then gets vexed and, out of terror. She goes away to other places. O Narada! Mahadeva, after killing the Danava, went to His own abode. When He gladly went away on His Vehicle, on the Bull's back, with His whole host, all the other Devas went to their respective places with great gladness. Celestial drums were sounded in the Heavens. The Gandharbas and the Kinnaras began to sing songs. And showers of flowers were strewn on S'iva's head. All the Munis and Devas and their chiefs began to chant hymns to Him.

Here ends the Twenty-Third Chapter of the Ninth Book on the killing of S'ankhachuda in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said How did Narayana impregnate TulasT? Kindly describe all that in detail.

2-11. Narayana said For accomplishing the ends of the Devas, Bhagavan Hari assumed the Vaisnavi Maya, took the Kavacha from S'ankhachuda and assuming his form, went to the house of TulasT. Dundubhis (celestial drums) were sounded at Her door, shouts of victory were proclaimed and TulasT was informed. The chaste TulasT, hearing that sound very gladly looked out on the royal road from the window. Then for auspicious observances. She offered riches to the Brahmins; then She gave wealth to the panegyrists (or bards attached to the courts of princes), to the beggars, and the other chanters of hymns. That time Bhagavan Narayana alighted from His chariot and went to the house of the DevT TulasT, built of invaluable gems, looking exceedingly artistic and beautiful. Seeing her dear husband before her. She became very glad and washed his feet and shed tears of joy and bowed down to Him. Then She, impelled by love, made him take his seat on the beautiful jewel throne and giving him sweet scented betels with camphor, began to say "Today my life has been crowned with success. For I am seeing again my lord returned from the battle." Then she cast smiling glances askance at him and with her body filled with rapturous joy lovingly asked him the news of the war in sweet words

12-13. O Thou, the Ocean of mercy! Now tell me of your heroic valour, how you have come out victorious in war with Mahadeva who destroys countless universes. Hearing TulasT's word, the Lord of LaksmT, in the guise of S'ankhachuda, spoke these nectar-like words with a smiling countenance.

14-17. O Dear! Full one Samvatsara the war lasted betwixt us. All the Daityas were killed. Then Brahma Himself came and mediated. Peace, then, was brought about and by the command of Brahma, I gave over to the Devas their rights. When I returned to my home, S'iva went back to His S'ivaloka. Thus saying. Hah, the Lord of the world, slept and then engaged in sexual intercourse with her. But the chaste TulasT, finding this time her experience quite different from what She used to enjoy before, argued all the time within herself and at last questioned him

18-22. Who are you? O Magician! By spreading your magic, you have enjoyed me. As you have taken my chastity, I will curse you. Bhagavan Narayana, hearing Tulasi's words and being afraid of the curse, assumed His real beautiful figure. The Devi then saw the Eternal Lord of the Devas before her. He was of a deep blue colour like fresh rain-clouds and with eyes like autumnal lotuses and with playful Lilas equivalent to tens and tens of millions of Love personified and adorned with jewels and ornaments. His face was smiling and gracious; and he wore his yellow-coloured robe. The love-stricken TulasT, seeing That Lovely Form of Vasudeva, immediately fell senseless; and at the next moment, regaining consciousness, she began to speak.

23-27. O Lord! Thou art like a stone. Thou hast no mercy. By hypocrisy Thou hast destroyed my chastity, my virtue and for that reason didst kill my husband. O Lord! Thou had no mercy; Thy heart is like a stone. So Let Thee be turned into a stone. Those who declare Thee as a saint, are no doubt mistaken. Why didst Thou for the sake of others, kill without any fault, another Bhakta of Thine. Thus speaking, TulasT overpowered with grief and sorrow, cried aloud and repeatedly gave vent to lamentations. Seeing her thus very distressed, Narayana, the Ocean of Mercy, spoke to her to cheer her up according to the rules of Dharma.

28-102. O Honoured One! For a long time you performed tapasya in this Bharata, to get Me. S'ankhachuda, too, performed tapasya for a long time to get you. By that tapas, S'ankhachuda got you as wife. Now it is highly incumbent to award you also with the fruit that you asked for. Therefore I have done this. Now quit your this terestrial body and assume a Divine Body and marry Me. O Rame! Be like Laksmi. This body of yours will be known by the name of Gandaki, a very virtuous, pure and pellucid stream in this holy land of Bharata. Your hairs will be turned into sacred trees and as they will be born of you, you will be known by the name of Tulasi. All the three worlds will perform their Pujas with the leaves and flowers of this Tulasi. Therefore, O Fair-faced One! This Tulasi will be reckoned as the chief amongst all flowers and leaves. In Heavens, earth, and the nether regions, and before Me, O Fair One, you will reign as the chief amongst trees and flowers. In the region of Goloka, on the banks of the river Viraja, in the Rasa circle (the celestial ball dance,) where all amorous sentiments are played in Vrindarana forest, in Bhandira forest, in Champaka forest, in the beautiful Chandana (Sandal Forests and in the groves of MadhavT, Ketaki, Kunda, Mallika, and Malati, in the sacred places you will live and bestow the highest religious merits. All the Tirthas will reside at the bottom of the Tulasi tree and so religious merits will accrue to all. O Fair-faced One! There I and all the Devas will wait in expectation of the falling of a Tulasi leaf. Anybody who will be initiated and installed with the Tulasi leaves water, will get all the fruits of being initiated in all the sacrifices. Whatever pleasure Hari gets when thousands and thousands of jars filled with water are offered to him, the same pleasure He will get when one Tulasi leaf will be offered to Him. Whatever fruits are acquired by giving Ayuta cows as presents, those will be also acquired by giving Tulasi leaves. Especially if one gives Tulasi leaves in the month of Kartik, one gets the fruits same as above mentioned. If one drinks or gets the Tulasi leaf water at the momentous Time of Death, one becomes freed of all sins and is worshipped in the Visnu Loka. He who drinks daily the Tulasi leaf water certainly gets the fruit of one lakh horse sacrifices. He who plucks or culls the Tulasi leaf by his own hand and holding it on his body, quits his life in a Tirath, goes to Visnu Loka. Whoever holds in his neck the garland made up of Tulasi wood, gets certainly the fruit of horse sacrifices at every step. He who does not keep his word, holding the Tulasi leaf in his hand, goes to the Kalasutra Hell as long as the Sun and Moon last. He who gives false evidence in the presence of the Tulasi leaf, goes to the Kumbhipaka Hell for the life- periods of fourteen Indras. He who drinks or gets a bit of the Tulasi leaf water at the time of death, certainly goes to Vaikuntha, ascending on a car made up of jewels. Those who pluck or cull the Tulasi leaves in the Full Moon night, on the twelfth lunar day, on the passing of the sun from one sign to another, the mid-day, or on the twilights, on the night, while applying oil on their bodies, on the impurity periods, and while putting on night dresses, verily eat off the Narayana's head. O Chaste One! The Tulasi leaf kept in the night, is considered sacred. It is considered good in S'raddha, vow ceremony, in the making over of any gift, in the installation of any image or in worshipping any Deva. Again, the Tulasi leaf fallen on the ground or fallen in water or offered to Visnu, if washed out can be used in holy and other purposes. Thus, O Good One! You will remain as tree in this earth and will remain in Goloka as the Presiding Deity thereof and will enjoy daily the sport with Krisna. And also you will be the Presiding Deity of the river Gandaki and thus bestow religious merits in Bharata; you will be the wife of the Salt Ocean, which is My part. You are very chaste; in Vaikuntha you will enjoy me as Rama lives with Me. And as for Me, I will be turned into stone by your curse; I will remain in India close to the bank of the river Gandaki. Millions and millions of insects with their sharp teeth will make rings, (the convolutions in the S'alagrama or sacred stones), on the cavities of the mountains there, representing Me. Of these stones, those that have one door (entrance hole), four convolutions, adorned by the garland of wild flowers (having a mark like this) and which look like fresh rain-cloud, are called Laksmi Narayana Murtis (forms). And those that have one door, four convolutions and look like fresh rain- clouds but no garlands are called Laksmi Janardana Chakras (discus). Those that have two doors, four convolutions, and decked with mark like cow's hoof and void of the garland mark are called Raghunatha chakras. Those that are very small in size, with two Chakras and look like fresh rain clouds and void of the garland marks are named Vamana Chakras. Those that that are very small in size, with two Chakras and the garland mark added, know then to be the S'ridhara Chakras. These always bring in prosperity to the household. Those that are big, circular, void of garland mark, with two circular Chakras, are known as Damodara forms. Those that are mediocre in size, with two Chakras and marked as if struck by an arrow, having marks of arrows and bow-cases are known as Rana- Ramas. Those that are middling, with seven Chakras, having marks of an umbrella and ornaments, are called Rajarajes'varas. They bestow the royal Laksmi to persons. Those that have twice seven chakras, and are big, looking like fresh rain-clouds are named Anantas. They bestow four fold fruits (Dharma, wealth, desire and liberation). Those that are in their forms like a ring, with two chakras, beautiful, looking like rain-clouds, having cow-hoof marks and of mediocre size are named Madhusudanas. Those that have one Chakra are called Sudars'anas. Those that have their Chakras hidden are called Gadadharas. Those that have two Chakras, looking horse-faced, are known as Hayagrivas. O Chaste One! Those that have their mouths very wide and extended, with two Chakras, and very terrible, are known as Narasimhas. They excite Vairagyas to all who serve them. Those that have two Chakras, mouths extended and with garland marks (elliptical marks) are called Laksmi Nrisinghas. They always bless the householders who worship them. Those that have two Chakras near their doors (faces), that look even and beautiful, and with marks manifested are known as Vasudevas. They yield all sorts of fruits. Those that have their Chakras fine and their forms like fresh rain-clouds and have many fine hole marks within their wide gaping facets are called Pradyumnas. They yield happiness to every householder. Those that have their faces of two Chakras stuck together and their backs capacious, are known as Sankarsanas. They always bring in happiness to the householders. Those that look yellow, round and very beautiful are Anirudhas. The sages say, they give happiness to the householder. Where there is the S'alagrama stone there exists S'ri Hah Himself; and where there is Hah, Laksmi and all the Tirthas dwell there. Worshipping S'alagram S'ila, destroys the Brahmahatya (killing a Brahmin) and any other sin whatsoever. In worshipping the S'alagrama stone looking like an umbrella, kingdoms are obtained; in worshipping circular S'ilas, great prosperity is obtained; in worshipping cart-shaped stones, miseries arise; and in worshipping stones, whose ends look like spears (S'ulas), death inevitably follows. Those whose facets are distorted, bring in poverty; and yellow stones bring in various evils and afflictions. Those whose Chakras look broken, bring in diseases; and those whose Chakras are rent asunder bring in death certainly. Observing vows, making gifts, installing images, doing S'raddhas, worshipping the Devas, all these become highly exalted, if done before the S'alagrama S'ila. One acquires the merits of bathing in all the Tirthas and in being initiated in all the sacrifices, if one worships the Salagrama S'ila. What more than this, that the merits acquired by all the sacrifices, all the Tirthas, all vows, all austerities and reading all the Vedas are all acquired by duly worshipping by the holy S'alagrama S'ila. He who performs his Abhis'eka ceremony always with S'alagrama water (being sprinkled with S'alagrama water at the initiation and Installation ceremonies), acquires the religious merits of performing all sorts of gifts and circumambulating the whole earth. All the Devas are, no doubt, pleased with him who thus worships daily the S'alagrama. What more than this, that all the Tirthas want to have his touch. He becomes a Jivanmukta (liberated while living) and becomes very holy; ultimately he goes to the region of S'ri Hah and remains in Hari's service there and dwells with him for countless Prakritic dissolutions. Every sin, like Brahma Hatya, flies away from him as serpents do at the sight of Garuda. The Devi Vasundhara (the Earth) becomes purified by the touch of the dust of his feat. At his birth, all his predecessors (a lakh in number), are saved. He who gets the S'alagrama S'ila water during the time of his death, he is freed of all his sins and goes to the Visnu Loka and gets Nirvana; he becomes freed entirely from the effects of Karma and he gets, no doubt, dissolved and diluted for ever in (the feet of) Visnu. He who tells lies, holding S'alagrama in his hands, goes to the Kumbhipaka Hell for the life-period of Brahma. If one does not keep his word, uttered with the S'alagrama stone in his hand, one goes to the Asipatra Hell for one lakh manvantaras. He who worships the S'alagrama stone without offering TulasT leaves on it or separates the TulasT leaves from the stone, will have to suffer separation from his wife in his next birth. So if one does not offer the TulasT leaves in the conchshell, for seven births he remains without his wife and he becomes diseased. He who preserves the S'alagrama stone, the TulasT and the conchshell, in one place, becomes very learned and becomes dear to Narayana. Look! He who casts his semen once in his wife, suffers intense pain, no doubt, at each other's separation.

So you become dear to S'ankhachuda for one Manvantara. Now, what wonder! That you will suffer pain, at his bereavement. O Narada! Thus saying, S'rT Hah desisted. TulasT quitted her mortal coil and assumed a divine form, began to remain in the breast of S'rT Hari like S'rT LaksmT DevT. Hari also went with her to Vaikuntha. Thus LaksmT, SarasvatT, Ganga, and TulasT, all the four came so very dear to Hari and are recognised as Is'varTs. On the other hand, the mortal coil of TulasT, no sooner quitted by TulasT, became transformed into the river GandakT. Bhagavan Hari, too, became also converted into a holy mountain, on the banks thereof, yielding religious merits to the people. The insects cut and fashion many pieces out of that mountain. Of them, those that fall into the river, yield fruits undoubtedly. And those pieces that fall on the ground become yellow coloured; they are not at all fit for worship. O Narada! Thus I have spoken to you everything. What more do you want to hear now? Say.

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the glory of TulasT in the Mahapuranam S'rT Mad DevT Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narada said When the Devi Tulasi has been made so dear to Narayana and thus an object for worship, then describe Her worship and Stotra (the hymn of Tulasi) now. O Muni! By whom was She first worshipped? By whom were Her glories first sung? And how did She become therefore an object of worship? Speak out all these to me.

3. Suta said Hearing these words of Narada, Narayana, laughing, began to describe this very holy and sin-destroying account of Tulasi.

4-15. Narayana said Bhagavan Hah duly worshipped Tulasi, and began to enjoy her with Laksmi; He raised Tulasi to the rank of Laksmi and thus made her fortunate and glorious Laksmi and Ganga allowed and bore this new union of Narayana and Tulasi. But Sarasvati could not endure this high position of Tulasi owing to Her anger. She became self-conceited and beat Tulasi on some quarrel before Hah. Tulasi became abashed and insulted and vanished off. Being the IsVari of all the Siddhis, the Devi, the Self-manifest and the Giver of the Siddhiyoga to the Jhanins, Tulasi, Oh! what a wonder, became angry and turned out as invisible to S'ri Hah even.

Not seeing Tulasi, Hari appeased Sarasvati and getting Her permission went to the Tulasi forest. Going there and taking a bath in due accord, and with due rites, worshipped with His whole heart the chaste Tulasi and then began to meditate on Her with devotion.

O Narada! He gets certainly all siddhis who worships Tulasi duly with the ten lettered mantra "S'rim Hrim Klim Aim Vrindavanyai Svaha," the King of mantras, yielding fruits and all gratifications like the Kalpa Tree. O Narada! At the time of worship, the lamp of ghee, was lighted and dhup, sindura, sandal, offerings of food, flowers, etc., were offered to Her. Thus hymned by Hari, TulasT came out of the tree, pleased. And She gladly took refuge at His lotus feet. Visnu, then, granted her boon that, "You will be worshipped by all; I will keep you in My breast and in My head and the Devas also will hold you on their heads." And He then took her to His own abode.

16. Narada said "O Highly Fortunate One! What is Tulasi's dhyan, stotra and method of worship? Kindly describe all these."

17. Narayana said When TulasT vanished, Hari became very much agitated at her bereavement and went to Vrindavana and began to praise her.

18-44. The Bhagavan said The TulasT trees collect in multitudinous groups; hence the Pundits call it Vrinda. I praise that dear TulasT. Of old. She appeared in the Vrindavana forest and therefore known as VrindavanT. I worship that fortunate and glorious One. She is worshipped always in innumerable universes and is, therefore, known as VisVapujita (worshipped by all). I worship that VisVapujita. By whose contact, those countless universes are always rendered pure and holy; and therefore She is called VisVapavani (purifying the whole universe). I am suffering from her bereavement, I remember the DevT. Without TulasT, the Devas do not get pleased, though other flowers be heaped on them; therefore She is considered as the essence of all the flowers. Now I am in sorrow and trouble and I am very eager to see her, who is of the nature of purity incarnate. The whole universe gets delighted when the Bhaktas receive her; hence She is called NandinT; so may She be pleased with me. There is nothing in the universe that can be compared to Her; hence She is called TulasT; I take refuge of that clear TulasT. That chaste dear one is the life of Krisna, hence She is known as KrisnajTvanT. Now may She save my life. O Narada! Thus praising, RamapatT remained there. The chaste TulasT then came to His sight and bowed down to His lotus feet; when She becoming sensitive out of the insult, began to weep. Bhagavan Visnu, seeing that sensitive dear one, immediately took her to His breast. Taking, then, SarasvatT's permission. He took her to His own home and brought about, first of all, the agreement between her and SarasvatT. Then He granted her the boon, "You will be worshipped by all, respected by all, and honoured by all; and all will carry you on their heads." I will also worship, respect and honour you and keep you on My head. Receiving this boon from Visnu, the DevT TulasT became very glad.

SarasvatT then attracted her to her side, made her sit close to her. LaksmT and Ganga both with smiling faces attracted her and made her enter into the house. O Narada! Whosoever worships her with her eight names Vrinda, VrindavanT, VisVapujita, VisVapavanT, TulasT, Puspasara, NandanT and Krisna JTvanT and their meanings and sings this hymn of eight verses duly, acquires the merit of performing AsVamedha Yajha (horse sacrifice). Specially, on the Full Moon night of the month of Kartik, the auspicious birth ceremony of TulasT is performed. Of old Visnu worshipped her at that time. Whoever worships with devotion on that Full Moon combination, the universe purifying TulasT, becomes freed of all sins and goes up to the Visnu Loka. Offerings of TulasT leaves to Visnu in the month of Kartik bring merits equal to those in giving away Ayuta Cows.

Hearing this stotra at that period gives sons to the sonless persons, wives to the wifeless persons and friends to friendless persons. On hearing this stotra, the diseased become free of their diseases, the persons in bondage become free, the terrified become fearless, and the sinners are freed of their sins. O Narada! Thus it has been mentioned how to chant stotra to her. Now hear her dhyan and method of worship. In the Vedas, in the Kanva S’akha branch, the method of worship is given. You know that one is to meditate on the Tulasi plant, without any invocation (avahana) and then worship her with devotion, presenting all sorts of offerings as required to her.

Now hear Her Dhyanam. Of all the flowers, Tulasi (the holy basil) is the best, very holy, and captivating the mind. It is a flame burning away all the fuel of sins committed by man. In the Vedas it is stated that this plant is called Tulasi, because there can be made no comparison with Her amongst all the flowers. She is the holiest of them all. She is placed on the heads of all and desired by all and gives holiness to the universe. She gives Jivanmukti, mukti and devotion to S’ri Hah. I worship Her. Thus meditating on Her and worshipping Her according to due rites, one is to bow down to Her. O Narada! I have described to you the full history of S’ri Tulasi Devi. What more do yo want to hear now, say.

Here ends the Twenty-fifth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the method of worship of Tulasi Devi in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narada said I have heard the anecdote of TulasT. Now describe in detail the history of Savitri. Savitri is considered as the Mother of the Vedas. Why was She born, in days gone by? By whom was She first worshipped and subsequently also?

3-4. Narayana said O Muni! She was first worshipped by Brahma. Next the Vedas worshipped her. Subsequently the learned men worshipped her. Next the King AsVapati worshipped Her in India. Next the four Varnas (castes) worshipped Her.

5. Narada said O Brahman! Who is that AsVapati? What for did he worship? When the Devi Savitri became adorable by all, by which persons was She first worshipped and by which persons subsequently?

6-14. Narayana said O Muni! The King AsVapati reigned in Bhadrades'a, rendering his enemies powerless and making his friends painless. He had a queen very religious; her name was Malati; She was like a second Laksmi. She was barren; and desirous of an issue. She under the instruction of Vas'istha, duly worshipped Savitri with devotion. But She did not receive any vision nor any command; therefore She returned home with a grievous heart. Seeing her sorry, the king consoled her with good words and himself accompanied her to Puskara with a view to perform Tapas to Savitri with devotion and, being self-controlled, practised tapasya for one hundred years. Still he could not see Savitri, but voice came to him. An incorporeal, celestial voice reached his ears "Perform Japam (repeat) ten lakhs of Gayatri Mantram." At this moment Parasara came up there. The king bowed down to him. The Muni said O King! One japa of Gayatn, destroys the days sins. Ten Japams of Gayatri destroy day and night's sins.

15-40. One hundred Gayatri Japams destroy one month's sins. One thousand Japams destroy one year's sins. One lakh Gayatri Japams destroy the sins of the present birth and ten lakh Gayatri Japams destroy the sins of other births. One hundred lakhs of Japams destroy the sins of all the births. If ten times that (i.e., 1,000 lakhs) be done, then liberation is obtained. (Now the method, how to make Japam). Make the palm of the (right) hand like a snake's hood; see that the fingers are all close, no holes are seen; and make the ends of the fingers bend downwards; then being calm and quiet and with one's face eastward, practise Japam. Then count from the middle of the ring (name-less) finger and go on counting right-handed (with the hands of the watch) till you come to the bottom of the index finger. This is the rule of counting by the hand. O King! The rosary is to be of the seed of white lotus or of the crystals; it should be consecrated and purified. Japam is to be done then in a sacred Tirtha or in a temple. Becoming self-controlled one should place the rosary on a banyan leaf or on a lotus leaf and smear it with cowdung; wash it, uttering Gayatri Mantra and over it perform one hundred times Gayatri Japam intently in accordance with the rules. Or wash it with Pahchagavya, milk, curds, clarified butter, cow urine and cowdung, and then consecrate it well. Then wash it with the Ganges water and perform best the consecrations. O Rajarsi! Then perform ten lakhs of Japam in due order. Thus the sins of your three births will be destroyed and then you will see the Devi Savitri. O King! Do this Japam, being pure, everyday in the morning, mid-day, and in the evening. If one be impure and devoid of Sandhya, one has no right to do any action; and even if one performs an action, one does not get any fruit thereby. He who does not do the morning Sandhya and the evening Sandhya, is driven away from all the Brahminic Karmas and he becomes like S'udras. He who does Sandhya three times throughout his life, becomes like the Sun by his lustre and brilliance of tapas. What more than this, the earth is always purified by the dust of his feet. The Dvija who does his Sandhya Bandanam and remains pure, becomes energetic and liberated while living. By his contact all the Tirthas become purified. All sins vanish away from him as snakes fly away at the sight of Garuda. The Dvija who becomes void of Sandhya three times a day, the Devas do not accept his worship nor the Piths accept his Pindas. He who has no Bhakti towards the Mula Prakriti, who does not worship the specific seed Mantra of Maya and who does not hold festivities in honour of Mula Prakriti, know him verily to be an Ajagara snake without poison. Devoid of the Visnu mantra, devoid of the three Sandhyas and devoid of the fasting on the Ekadas'i Tithi (the eleventh clay of the fortnight), the Brahmin becomes a snake devoid of poison. The vile Brahmin who does not like to take the offerings dedicated to Hari and who does the washerman's work and eats the food of S'udra and drives the buffaloes, becomes a snake devoid of poison. The Brahmin who burns the dead bodies of the S'udras, becomes like the man who is the husband of an unmarried girl. The Brahmin also who becomes a cook of a S'udra, becomes a snake void of poison. The Brahmin who accepts the gifts of a S'udra, who performs the sacrifice of a S'udra, who lives as clerks and warriors becomes like a snake void of poison. The Brahmin who sells his daughter, who sells the name of Hari or eats the food of a woman who is without husband and son, as well as of one who has just bathed after her menstruation period, becomes like a serpent void of poison. The Brahmin who takes the profession of pimps and pampers and lives on the interest, is also like a serpent void of poison. The Brahmin who sleeps even when the Sun has risen, eats fish, and does not worship the Devi is also like a poisonless serpent. Thus stating all the rules of worship in order, the best of the Munis told him the Dhyanam, etc., of the Devi Savitri, what he wanted. Then he informed the King of all the mantras and went to his own As'rama. The king, then worshipped accordingly and saw the Devi Savitri and got boons.

41-43. Narada said What is the Savitri's Dhyan, what are the modes of her worship, what is stotra, mantra, that Paras'ara gave to the King before he went away? And how did the King worship and what boon did he get? This great mystery, grand and well renowned in the S'rutis, about Savitri, I am desirous to hear in brief on all the points.

44-78. Narayana said On the thirteenth day (the trayodas'i tithi) of the black fortnight in the month Jyaistha or on any other holy period, the fourteenth day (the chaturdas'i tithi) this vow is to be observed with great care and devotion. Fourteen fruits and fourteen plates with offerings of food on them, flowers and incense are to be offered and this vow is to be observed for fourteen years consecutively. Garments, holy threads and other articles are also offered and after the Vrata is over, the Brahmins are to be fed. The lucky pot (mangal ghat) is to be located duly according to the rules of worship with branches and fruits. Ganes'a, Agni, Visnu, S'iva and S'iva are to be worshipped duly.

In that ghat Savitri is to be next invoked and worshipped. Now hear the Dhyanam of Savitri, as stated in the Madhyan Dina Sakha, as well the stotra, the modes of worship, and the Mantra, the giver of all desires. I meditate and adore that Savitri, the Mother of the Vedas, of the nature of Pranava (Om), whose colour is like the burnished gold, who is burning with Brahma teja (the fire of Brahma), effulgent with thousands and thousands of rays of the midday summer Sun, who is of a smiling countenance adorned with jewels and ornaments, wearing celestial garment (purified and uninflammable by fire), and ready to grant blessings to Her Bhaktas; who is the bestower of happiness and liberation, who is peaceful and the consort of the Creator of the world, who is all wealth and the giver of all riches and prosperity, who is the Presiding Deity of the Vedas and who is the Vedas incarnate, I meditate on Thee. Thus reciting the Dhyanam, mantra and meditating on Her, one is to offer Naivedyas (offerings of food) to Her and then place one's fingers on one's head; one is to meditate again, and then invoke the Devi within the pot. One should next present fourteen things, uttering proper mantras according to the Vedas. Then one must perform special puja and chant hymns to the Devi and worship Her. The fourteen articles of worship are as under

(1) Seat (Asan); (2) water for washing feet (Padya), (3) offering of rice and Durba grass (Arghya), (4) water for bath (Snaniya), (6) anointment with sandalpaste and other scents (Anulepana), (7) incense (Dhupa), (8) Lights (Dipa), (9) offerings of food (Naivedya), (10) Betels (Tambul), (11) Cool water, (12) garments, (13) ornaments, (14) garlands, scents, offering of water to sip, and beautiful bedding. While offering these articles, one is to utter the mantras, this beautiful wooden or golden seat, giving spiritual merits is being offered by me to Thee. This water from the Tirthas, this holy water for washing Thy feet, pleasant, highly meritorious, pure, and as an embodiment of Puja is being offered by me to Thee. This holy Arghya with Durba grass and flowers and the pure water in the conch-shell is being offered by me to Thee (as a work of initial worship). This sweet scented oil and water being offered by me to Thee with devotion for Thy bathing purposes. Kindly accept these. O Mother! This sweet-scented water Divine-like, highly pure and prepared of Kunkuma and other scented things I offer to Thee. O Parames'vari! This all-auspicious, all good and highly meritorious, this beautiful Dhupa, kindly take, O World Mother! This is very pleasant and sweet scented; therefore I offer this to Thee. O Mother! This light, manifesting all this Universe and the seed, as it were, to destroy the Darkness is being offered by me to Thee. O Devi! Kindly accept this delicious offering of food, highly meritorious, appeasing hunger, pleasant, nourishing end pleasure giving. This betel is scented with camphor, etc., nice, nourishing, and pleasure-giving; this is being offered by me to Thee. This water is nice and cool.

appeasing the thirst and the Life of the World. So kindly accept this. O Devi! Kindly accept this silken garment as well as the garment made of Karpasa Cotton, beautifying the body and enhancing the beauty. Kindly accept these golden ornaments decked with jewels, highly meritorious, joyous, beauteous and prosperous. Kindly accept these fruits yielding fruits of desires, obtained from various trees and of various kinds. Please have this garland, all auspicious and all good, made of various flowers, beauteous and generating happiness. O Devi! Kindly accept this sweet scent, highly pleasing and meritorious. Please take this Sindura, the best of the ornaments, beautifying the forehead, highly excellent and beautiful. Kindly accept this holy and meritorious threads an purefied by the Vedic mantrams and made of highly holy threads and knitted with highly pure knots. Uttering thus, offer the above articles that are to be offered to the Devi, every time the specific seed mantra being uttered. Then the intelligent devotee should recite the stotras and subsequently of the Daksinas (presents) with devotion to the Brahmanas. The Radical or the Specific Seed Mantra mantra is the eight lettered mantra Srim Hrim Klim Svaitrai Svaha; So the sages know. The Stotra, as stated in the Madhyandma S'akha, gives fruits of all desires. I am now speaking to you of that mantra, the Life of the Brahmanas. Listen attentively. O Narada! Savitri was given to Brahma, in the ancient times of old in the region of Goloka by Krisna; but Savitri did not come to Brahma loka with Brahma. Then by the command of Krisna, Brahma praised the mother of the Vedas. And when She got pleased. She accepted Brahma as Her husband.

79-87. Brahma said Thou art the everlasting existence intelligence and bliss; Thou art Mulaprakriti; thou art Hiranya Garbha; Thou didst get pleased, O Fair one! Thou art of the nature of fire and Energy; Thou art the Highest; Thou art the Highest Bliss, and the caste of the twice-born. Dost thou get appeased, O Fair One! Thou art eternal, dear to the Eternal; thou art of the nature of the Everlasting Bliss. O Devi, O Thou, the all auspicious One! O Fair One! Beest thou satisfied. Thou art the form of all (omnipresent)! Thou art the essence of all mantras of the Brahmanas, higher than the highest! Thou art the bestower of happiness and the liberator O Devi, O Fair One! Beest thou appeased. Thou art like the burning flame to the fuel of sins of the Brahmanas! O Thou, the Bestower of Brahma teja (the light of Brahma) O Devi! O Fair One! Beest appeased. By Thy mere remembrance, all the sins to me by body, mind and speech are burnt to ashes. Thus saying, the Creator of the world reached the assembly there. Then Savitri came to the Brahmaloka with Brahma. The King AsVapati chanted this stotra to Savitri and saw Her and got from Her the desired boons. Whosoever recites this highly sacred king of Stotras after Sandhya Bandanam, quickly acquires the fruits of studying the Vedas.

English translation

1-2. Narayana said O Narada! After having chanted the above hymn to the Goddess Savitri and worshipped Her in accordance with due rites and ceremonies, the king AsVapati saw the Devi, effulgent like the lustre of thousand suns. She then smilingly told the king, as a mother to her son, whilst all the quarters were illumined with the lustre of Her body

3-14. Savitri said:-- “O King! I know your desire. Certainly I will give what you and your wife long for. Your chaste wife is anxious for a daughter, while you want a son. So, one after another, the desires of both of you will be fulfilled.” Thus saying, the Devi went to the Brahma Loka. The King also returned to his house. First a daughter was born to him. As the daughter was born, as if a second Laksmi was born after worshipping Savitri, the King kept her name as Savitri. As time rolled on, the daughter grew, day by day, like the phases of bright fortnight moon, into youth and beauty. There was a son of Dyumat Sena, named Satyavana, always truthful, good natured and endowed with various other qualifications. The daughter chose him for her bridegroom. The King betrothed her with jewels and ornaments, to Satyavana, who gladly took her home. After one year expired, the truthful vigorous Satyavana gladly went out, by his father's command, to collect fruits and fuel. The chaste Savitri, too, followed him. Unfortunately Satyavana fell down from a tree and died. Yama, the God of Death, saw his soul as a Purusa of the size of one's thumb and took it and went away. The chaste Savitri began to follow Him. The high souled Yama, the Foremost of the Sadhus, seeing Savitri following Him, addressed her sweetly O Savitri! Whither are you going in your this mortal coil? If you like to follow after all, then quit your this body.

15-25. The mortal man, with his transient coil of these five elements, is not able to go to My Abode. O Chaste One! The death time of your husband arrived; therefore Satyavana is going to My Abode to reap the fruits of his Karma. Every living animal is born by his Karma. He dies again through his life long Karma. It is his Karma alone that ordains pleasure, pain, fear, sorrows, etc. By Karma, this embodied soul here becomes Indra; by Karma he can become a Brahma's son. What more than this that Jiva, by his Karma, can be in Hari's service and be free from birth and death! By one's own Karma all sorts of Siddhis and immortality can be obtained; the four blessed regions as Visnu's Salokya, etc., also can be obtained by Karma. What more than this that by Karma, a being becomes divine, human, or a King, or S'iva or Ganes'a! The state of Munindra, asceticism, Ksattriyahood, Vais'yahood, MIechhahood, moving things, stones, Raksasahood, Kinnaras, Kingship, becoming trees, beasts, forest animals, inferior animals, worms, Daityas, Danavas, Asuras, all are fashioned and wrought by Karma and Karma alone. O Narada! Thus speaking, Yama remained silent.

1-4. Narayana said O Narada! Hearing the words of Yama, the chaste intelligent Savitri, replied with great devotion “O Dharmarajan! What is Karma? Why and how is its origin? What is the cause of Karma? Who is the embodied soul (bound by Karma)? What is this body? And who is it that does Karma? What is Jhana? What is Buddhi? What is this Prana of this embodied JTva? What are the Indriyas? And what are their characteristics? And what are the Devatas thereof? Who is it that enjoys and who is it that makes one enjoy? What is this enjoyment (Bhoga)? And what is the means of escape from it? And what is the nature of that State when one escapes from enjoyment? What is the nature of Jivatma? And what of Paramatma? O Deva! Speak all these in detail to me.”

5-21. Dharma said Karma is of two kinds: good and bad. The Karma that is stated in the Vedas as leading to Dharma is good; all other actions are bad. The God’s service, without any selfish ends (Sankalpa) and without the hope of any fruits thereof (ahaituki), is of such a nature as to root out all the Karmas and gives rise to the highest devotion to God. A man who is such a Bhakta of Brahma becomes liberated, so the S’rutis say. Who then does the Karma and who is it that enjoys? (i.e., no such body). To such a Bhakta to Brahma, there is no birth, death, old age, disease, sorrow nor any fear. O Chaste One! Bhakti is two-fold. This is stated by all in the S’rutis. The one leads to Nirvana and the other leads to the nature of Hah. The Vaisnavas want the Bhakti to Hah, i.e., the Saguna Bhakti. The other Yogis and the best knowers of Brahma want the Nirguna Bhakti. He who is the Seed of Karma, and the Bestower for ever the fruits of Karma, Who is the Karma Incarnate and the Mula Prakriti, is the Bhagavan; He is the Highest Self. He is the Material Cause of Karma. Know this body to be by nature liable to dissolve and die. Earth, air, akas’a, water, and fire; these are the threads, as it were, of the work of creation of Brahma, Who is of the nature of Being. “Dehi” or The Embodied Soul is the Doer of Karma, the Karta; he is the enjoyer; and Atma (self) is the prompter, the stimulator within to do the Karma and enjoy the fruits thereof. The experiencing of pleasures and pains and the varieties thereof is known as Bhoga (enjoyment). Liberation, Mukti is the escape therefrom.

The knowledge by which Atma (sat) and Maya (Asat) are discriminated is called Jhanam (Brahma Jhanam). The knowledge is considered as the root discriminator of various objects of enjoyments

(i.e., by which the various objects are at once recognised as different from Atman). By Buddhi is meant the right seeing of things, (as certain) and is considered as the seed of Jhanam. By Prana is known as the different Vayus in the body. And this Prana is the strength of the embodied. Mind is the chief, the best, of the senses, it is a part of IsVara; its characteristic is its doubtful uncertain state. It impels to all actions, irresistible. It is inascertainable, invisible; it obstructs the Jhana. The senses are seeing, hearing, smelling, touching and tasting. These are the several limbs, as it were, of the embodied and the impellers to all actions. They are both enemies and friends as they give pain (when attached to worldly objects) and happiness (when attached to virtuous objects) both. The Sun, Vayu, Earth, Brahma and others are their Devatas. The Jiva is the holder, the sustainer of Prana, body, etc. The Paramatma, the Highest Self, is the Best of all. Omnipresent, transcending the the Gunas, and beyond Prakriti. He is the Cause of all causes and He is the Brahma Itself. O Chaste One! I have replied, according to the S’astras to all your questions. These are Jhanas of the Jhanins. O Child! Now go back to your house at pleasure.

22-30. Savitri said Whither shall I go, leaving my Husband and Thee, the Ocean of Knowledge? Please oughtest to answer the queries that I now put to Thee. What wombs do the Jivas get in response to which Karmas? What Karmas lead to the Heavens? And what Karnnas lead to various hells? Which Karmas lead to Mukti? And which Karmas give Bhakti? What Karmas make one Yogi and what Karmas inflict diseases? Which Karmas make one’s life long? or short? Which Karmas again make one happy? And what Karmas make one miserable? Which Karmas make one deformed in one’s limbs, one-eyed, blind, deaf, lame or idiotic? Which Karmas again make one mad? Make one very much avaricious or of a stealing habit? What Karmas make one possess Siddhis? Or make one earn the four Lokas Salokya, etc.? What Karmas make one a Brahmin or an ascetic? Or make one go to Heaven or Vaikuntha? What Karmas enable one to go to Goloka, the par excellence and free from all diseases? How many are the hells? What are their names and how do they appear? How long will one have to remain in each hell? and what Karmas lead to what diseases? O Deva, now tell me about these that I have asked to you and oblige.

Here ends the Twenty-Eighth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the story of Savitri in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narayana said Yama got thunderstruck at these queries of Savitri. He then began to describe, with a smiling countenance, the fruition of the several works of the Jivas.

2-8. He said “O Child! You are now a daughter only twelve years old. But you speak of wisdom like the Highest Jhanins and Yogis, Sanaka and others. O Child! By virtue of the boon granted by Savitri, you have become incarnate of Her in part. The King AsVapati got you before by performing severe penances. As Laksmi is dear and fortunate with regard to Visnu, as Mahadevi is to Mahadeva, Aditi to Kas’yapa, Ahalya to Gautama, so you are to Satyavana in respect of affection and good-luck and other best qualities. As S’achi is to Mahendra, as Rohini is to Moon, as Rati is to Kama, as Svaha is to Fire, as Svadha is to the Piths, as Sanjha is to the Sun, as Varunani is to Varuna, as Daksina is to Yajha, as Earth is to Varaha, as Devasena is to Kartika, so you are fortunate and blessed with respect to Satyavana. O Savitri! I myself grant you this boon of my own accord. Now ask other boons. O highly fortunate One! I will fulfil all your desires.”

9-12. Savitri said “O Noble One! Let there be one hundred sons of mine by Satyavana. This is the boon that I want. Let there be one hundred sons of my Father as well; let my Father-in-law get back his (lost) eyesight and may he get back his lost kingdom. This is another boon that I want. Thou art the Lord of the world. So grant me this boon, too, that I may have this my very body for a lakh years when I may go to Vaikuntha with Satyavana. Now I am eager to hear the various fruitions of Karmas of several Jivas. Kindly narrate them and oblige.”

13-70. Dharma said You are very chaste. So what you have thought will verily come to pass. Now I describe the fruition of Karmas of the JTvas. Listen. Excepting this holy land of Bharata, nowhere do the people enjoy wholly the fruition of their two-fold Karmas, good and bad. It is only the Suras, Daityas, Danavas, Gandharvas, Raksasas, and men that do Karmas. The beasts and the other JTvas do not do Karmas. The special JTvas, e.g., men, etc., experience the fruition of their Karmas in Heavens, hells and in all the other Yonis (wombs). Specially, as the JTvas roam in all the different Yonis, they enjoy their Karmas, good or bad, as the case may be, carved in their previous births. The good works get fructified in Heavens; and the bad works lead the JTvas to hells. This Karma can be got rid of by Bhakti. This Bhakti is of two kinds (1) Nirguna of the nature of Nirvana; and (2) towards Prakriti, of the astute of Brahma, and with Maya inherent. Diseases come as the result of bad and ignorant actions and healthiness comes from good and certain scientific Karmas. Similar are the remarks for short and long lives for happiness and pain. By bad works, one becomes blind or deformed in body. So by doing excellent Karmas, one acquires Siddhis, etc.. These are spoken generally. I will now speak in detail; listen. This is very secret even in Puranas and Smritis. In this Bharatavarsa men are the best of all the various classes of beings. The Brahmans are the best of men and are best in all Kinds of Karmas. They are responsible, too, for their actions. O Chaste One! Of the Brahmins, again, those that are attached to the Brahmanas are the best. The Brahmanas are of two kinds as they are Sakama (with desires) or Niskama (without desires). The NiskamT Brahmanas are superior to the SakamT Brahmanas. For the SakamTs are to enjoy the fruits of their Karmas, while the NiskamT Brahmanas are perfectly free from any such disturbances (they have not to come back to this field of Karma). The Niskama Bhakta after they quit their bodies, go to a place free from sickness or disease, pure and perfect. From there they do not come back. The Niskama Bhaktas assuming the divine forms go to the Goloka and worship the Highest God, the Highest Self, the two-armed Krisna. The Sakami Vaisnavas go to Vaikuntha; but they come back in Bharata and get into the wombs of the twice-born. By degrees they also become Niskama when they certainly acquire pure undefiled Bhakti. The Brahmanas and Vaisnavas that are Sakamis in all the births, never get that pure undefiled intellect and never get the devotion to Visnu. The Brahmanas, living in the Tirthas (sacred places of pilgrimages) and attached to Tapas go to Brahmaloka (the region of Brahma); they again come down to Bharata. Those that are devotedly attached to their own Dharma (religion) and reside in places other than Tirthas, go to Satyaloka and again come to Bharata. The Brahmanas, following their own Dharma and devoted to the Sun go to the world of the Sun and again come to Bharata. And those who are devoted to Mula Prakriti and devoted to Niskama Dharma go to Mani Dvipa and have not to come back from thither. The Bhaktas of S'iva, S'akti, and Gane'sa, and attached to their own Dharmas respectively go to the S'iva Loka and return from thence. Those Brahmanas that worship the other Devas and attached to their own Dharmas go to those regions of theirs respectively and again come to Bharata. Attached to their own Dharmas, the Niskami Bhaktas of Hari go by their Bhakti step by step to the region of S'ri Hari. Those that are not attached to their own Dharmas and do not worship the Devas and always bent on doing things as they like without any regard to their Acharas go certainly to hells. No doubt in this. The Brahmanas and the other three Varnas, attached to their own Dharmas all enjoy the fruits of their good works. But those who do not do their Svadharma, go verily down into hells. They do not came to Bharata for their rebirth, they enjoy their fruits of Karmas in hells! Therefore the four Varnas ought to follow their own Dharmas of the Brahmanas, they are to remain attached to their own Dharmas and give their daughters in marriage to the similarly qualified Brahmanas. They then go to the Chandraloka (the region of the Moon). There they remain for the life periods of the fourteen Indras. And if the girl be given, with ornaments, the results obtained would be twice. If the girl be given with a desire in view, then that world is obtained; but if the girl be given without any desire but to fulfil the God's will and God's satisfaction only, then one would not have to go to that world. They go to Visnu Loka, bereft of the fruits of all Karmas. Those that give to the Brahmanas pasture ground and cattle, silver, gold, garment, fruits and water, go to the Chandraloka and live there for one Manvantara. They live long in those regions by virtue of that merit. Again those that give gold, cows, copper, etc., to the holy Brahmanas, go to the Surya Loka (the region of the Sun) and live there for one Ayuta years (10,000 years), free from diseases, etc., for a long time. Those that give lands and lots of wealth to the Brahmins, go to the Visnu Loka and to the beautiful S'veta Dvipa (one of the eighteen minor divisions of the known continents). And there they live as long as the Sun and Moon exist. O Muni! The meritorious persons live long in that wide region. Note S'veta Dvipa may mean Vaikuntha, where Visnu resides. Those who give with devotion dwelling places to the Brahmanas, go to the happy Visnu Loka. And there, in that great Visnu Loka, they live for years equal to the number of molecules, in that house. He who offers a dwelling house in honour of any Deva, goes to the region of that Deva and remains there for a number of years equivalent to the number of particles in that house. The lotus-born Brahma said that if one offers a royal palace, one obtains a result four times and if one offers a country, one gets the result one hundred times that; again if one offers an excellent country, twice as much merit one acquires. One who dedicates a tank for the expiation of all one's sins, one lives in Janar Loka (one of the pious regions) for a period equivalent to the number of particles therein). If any man offers a Vapi (a well) in preference to other gifts, one gets ten fold fruits thereby. If one offers seven VapTs, one acquires the fruits of offering one tank. A VapT is one which is four thousand Dhanus long and which is as much wide or less (Note Dhanu equals a measure of four hastas). If offered to a good bridegroom, then the giving of a daughter in marriage is equivalent to a dedication of ten Vapis. And if the girl be offered with ornaments, twice the merits accrue. The same merit accrues in clearing the bed of the mud of a pond as in digging it. So for the VapT (well). O Chaste One! He who plants an AsVattha tree and dedicates it to a godly purpose, lives for one Ayuta years in Tapar Loka. O Savitri! He who dedicates a flower garden for the acquirement of all sorts of good, lives for one Ayuta years in Dhruva Loka.

O Chaste One! He who gives a Vimana (any sort of excellent carriage) in honour of Visnu, in this Hindoosthan, lives for one Manvantara in Visnuloka. And if one gives a Vimana of variegated colours and workmanship, four times the result accrues. And one who gives a palanquin, acquires half the fruits. Again if anybody gives, out of devotion, a swinging temple (the Dol Mandir) to Bhagavan S'ri Hah, lives for one hundred Manvantras, in the region of Visnu. O Chaste One! He who makes a gift of a royal road, decorated with palatial buildings on either side, lives with great honour and love in that Indraloka for one Ayuta years. Equal results follow whether the above things are offered to the Gods or to the Brahmanas. He enjoys that which he gives. No giving, no enjoying. After enjoying the heavenly pleasures, etc., the virtuous person takes birth in Bharata as a Brahmin or in other good families, in due order, and ultimately in the Brahmana families. The virtuous Brahmana, after he has enjoyed the heavenly pleasures, takes his birth again in Bharata in Brahmana, Ksattriya or in Vais'ya families. A Ksattriya or a Vais'ya can never obtain Brahmanahood, even if he performs asceticism for one Koti Kalpas. This is stated in the S'rutis. Without enjoying the fruits, no Karma can be exhausted even in one hundred Koti Kalpas. So the fruits of the Karmas must be enjoyed, whether they be auspicious or inauspicious. By the help of seeing the Devas and seeing the Tirthas again and again, purity is acquired. O Savitri! So now I have told you something. What more d o you want to hear? Say.

Here ends the Twenty-Ninth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the anecdote of Savitri on the fruits of making gifts and on the effects of Karmas in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Savitn said “O Dharmarajan! Kindly tell me in detail about those works that lead the meritorious persons to the Heavens and various other spheres.”

2-20. Dharmaraj said O Child! He who gives rice and food to the Brahmanas in India, goes to the S’ivaloka where he dwells with great respect for years equivalent to the measure of that food. This “Anna- dana” (the giving of boiled rice and other eatables) is a great dan (charity) and this can be done not only to the Brahmanas but to the other castes also, where similar results also follow. There is, or will be, no other charity superior to this charity of anna (rice, boiled it may be and other eatables). For here no distinction is made as to what caste will get it or not, nor the discrimination of time, when to give such a charity. O Child! Seats (Asanas) given to the Devas and the Brahmanas, carry the donor to the Visnu Loka, where he dwells for Ayuta years with great respect and love. Giving excellent cows yielding milk to Brahmanas take the donor to Visnuloka, where he is glorified and remains for years equivalent to the number of pores in that cow or those cows. And if cows be given on a meritorious day, four times the merits accrue, and if given in a sacred place of pilgrimage, hundred times the result occurs; and if given in a tirath, where Narayana is worshipped, koti times the results accrue. He who gives with devotion, cows to the Brahmanas in Bharata, remains in the Chandraloka for one Ayuta years and is glorified. He who gives a two-mouthed cow to a Brahmana, goes to Visnuloka and remains there for as many years as there exist the numbers of hairs on the body of that cow and is glorified. A gift of a beautiful white umbrella to a Brahmana makes one go to Varunaloka for Ayuta years where he remains with great pleasure. Giving garments to the diseased Brahmanas makes one fit to remain with glory in Vayuloka for one ayuta years. Giving to a Brahmana the S'alagrama with garments makes one remain with glory in Vaikuntha as long as there exist the Sun and Moon. Giving a beautiful bedding to a Brahmana, glorifies a man in the Chandraloka as long as there exist the Sun and Moon. To give lights to the Devas and Brahmana glorifies a man in Agniloka (the region of Fire) for one Manvantara. To give elephants to the Brahmanas in Bharata, makes one sit in the same throne with Indra for his life period.

Giving horses to the Brahmanas makes one remain in Varunaloka for fourteen Indra's life periods. Giving a good palanquin to a Brahmana makes one remain in the Varunaloka for fourteen Indra's life-periods. Giving a good site or a good orchard to a Brahmana leads one to the Vayuloka where he remains with glory for one Manvantara. Giving a white chamara and fan to a Brahmana, leads the donor to the Vayuloka where he remains for one ayuta years. Giving grains and jewels make one long-lived and both the donors and receivers go certainly to Vaikuntha.

21-40. He who always recites the name of S'ri Hari, lives for ever and Death goes far far away from him. The intelligent man that celebrates the Swinging Festival (Dol Jatra) in the last quarter of the Full Moon night in this land of Bharata, becomes liberated while living, enjoying pleasures in this world, goes in the end to Visnuloka, where he remains for one hundred Manvantaras; there is no doubt in this. If the Swinging Festival be performed under the influence of the asterism Uttara Phalguni then the fruits become doubled; this is the saying of Brahma Himself. The performer lives to the end of a Kalpa. To give til (Sesamum) to a Brahman, leads one to S'iva Loka, where one enjoys for a number of years equal to the number of til. Then one is born in a good yoni and becomes longlived and happy.

To give a copper plate yields double the effect. To give in India a chaste wife with garments and ornaments to a Brahman (and then to purchase her with an equivalent in gold) leads one to Chandra Loka where one remains for fourteen Indra's life periods and enjoys day and night the celestial Apsaras. Thence the donor goes to the Gandharba Loka for one ayuta years and day and night enjoys Urvas'i. Then he gets for thousand births chaste, fortunate, wealthy, gentle and sweet-speaking, beautiful wives. He who gives nice and delicious fruits to the Brahmanas, remains with glory in the Indra Loka for a number of years equivalent to the fruits. He gets again a good Yoni (birth) and gets excellent sons. To give thousand trees while there are fruits on them, or nice fruits only to the Brahmanas, makes one enjoy the Heavens for a long, long time and he then comes back to Bharata. To give various things and good edifices with grains, etc., to the Brahmanas leads one to the regions of the Devas where he remains for one hundred Manvantaras. Then he gets a very good birth and becomes the master of abundant wealth. He who gives with devotion to the Brahmanas lands certainly goes for one hundred Manvantaras and remains there in glory for one hundred Manvantras; and, coming again to be born in good wombs, they become Kings. The earth does not leave him for hundred births. He becomes prosperous, wealthy and possesses many sons and becomes the lord of his subjects. He who gives a good village with pasture land and cows, dwells with glory in Vaikuntha for one lakh manvantaras. Then he gets a good birth (becomes born in a high caste family) and obtains a lakh villages. The earth quits him not even if he be born a lakh times. (This is very bad then, to one who does not like to be born again).

41-60. He who gives a village inhabited by good and obedient subjects with ripe excellent grains, various tanks, trees and adorned with fruits and leaves dwells in Kailasa with great glory for ten lakh Indra’s life periods. Getting again born in a high family, he becomes Raja Dhiraja in Bharata and obtains Niyuta towns. There is no doubt in this. The earth quits him not, even if he be born ayuta times.

Really he gets the highest prosperity in this earth. He who gives to a Brahmana one hundred towns and countries, inhabited by good or mediocre subjects, with wells, tanks, and various trees, remains with glory in Vaikuntha for one koti manvantaras. Then he becomes born in this earth in a high caste family, becomes the Lord of Jambudvipa and attains in this earth great prosperity like Indra. The earth quits him not even if he comes here Koti times; in reality he is a Mahatma (a great soul man), RajrajesVara (the Lord of Kings) and lives upto the end of a Kalpa. He who gives his whole property to a Brahmin, gets in the end four times that; there is no doubt in this. He who gives Jambu Dvipa to an ascetic Brahmana, gets undoubtedly in the end one hundred times the fruit. If you give away Jambu DvTpa, the whole earth; if you travel all the Tirthas, if you perform all sorts of asceticisms, if you give shelter to all, if you make gifts of all sorts, know that you will have to come again to be reborn in this earth; but if you become a devotee of Mula Prakriti, then be sure that you won’t have to come here and be reborn. The devotees of Mula Prakriti go to Mani DvTpa, the highest place of S’rT Bhuvanes’arT DevT and remain there and they see the fall of innumerable Brahmas. The worshippers of the DevT Mantra when they quit their mortal coils, assume divine appearances endowed with Bibhutis (manifestations of powers) and free from birth, death and old age, assume the Sarupya (the same form) of the DevT and remain in Her Service. They reside in ManidvTpa and see the part Pralayas. The Devas die, the Siddhas die, the whole universe vanishes; but the DevT Bhaktas never die and they remain free form birth, death, and old age. He who offers TulasT leaf to Bhagavan Hah in the month of Kartik resides for three yugas in the temple of Hah. Getting again a good birth, he acquires the devotion to S’rT Hah and becomes the Foremost of those who restrain their senses. He who bathes in the Ganges early before the rising of the Sun remains in enjoyment in the temple of Hari for sixty thousand yugas. Getting again a good birth, he gets the Visnu Mantra, and, quitting his mortal coil, becomes united with the Feet of S’rT Hari.

61-77. He has not to come back from Vaikuntha to this earth. He remains in Hari’s Service and gets the same form of Hah. He who bathes daily in the Ganges, becomes purified like the Sun and gets the result of performing the Horse-sacrifice at every step. The earth becomes purified by the dust of his feet and he enjoys in Vaikuntha as long as the Sun and Moon exist. Then again he becomes born in a good and beautiful womb, and is liberated by acquiring the devotion to Hari. He becomes very energetic and the foremost of the ascetics, pure, religious, learned, and self-restrained. When the Sun comes midway between Pisces and Cancer and heats intensely the earth, the man who in Bharata gives cool water to drink to the people, resides in happiness in Kailas’a for fourteen Indra’s life periods. Getting again a good birth here, he becomes beautiful, happy, devoted to S’iva, energetic and expert in the Vedas, and the Vedangas. He who gives to a Brahmana the S’aktu (sattu). in the month of Vais’akhe enjoys in the S’iva temple for as many years as there are number of particles in that quantity of sattu (powders in parched oat). He who performs the Krisna Janmastami vow in this Bharata, is freed from the sins incurred in his hundred births; there is no doubt in this. The observer of the vow remains in great enjoyment in Vaikuntha for fourteen Indra’s life periods, gets again a good birth here and acquires Hari Bhakti. He who performs the S’ivaratri vow in this Bharata Varsa, resides with great joy in S’iva Loka for seven manvantaras. He who offers the Bel leaves to S’iva in S’ivaratri time, resides with great joy in S’iva’s Abode for as many yugas as there are number of leaves. Getting again a good birth here, he acquires the devotion to S’iva and becomes learned, prosperous and possesses sons, subjects and lands. He who performs vow and worships S'ankara in the month of Chaitra or Magha and who, with a branch of a tree in hand, dances day and night for one month, or half a month, for ten days or for seven days, dwells in S'iva Loka for as many yugas as the number of days he dances. He who performs the vow of S'ri Rama Navami, lives in the abode of Visnu for seven Manvantaras in great joy. Getting again a good birth, he becomes devoted to S'n Rama, the foremost of those who have self restraint and he becomes very wealthy.

78-87. He who performs the Saradiya Puja (the great Durga Puja in the month of autumn) of the Mula Prakriti with incense, lights, offerings of food, and animal sacrifices of buffaloes, goats, sheep, rhinoceros, frogs or other animals, together with dancing, music, and various other auspicious things, resides in the S'iva Loka for seven Manvantaras. Getting an excellent birth, and a pure understanding, he gets unbounded prosperity, sons and, no doubt, grandsons and he becomes a very powerful sovereign possessing many horses and elephants. There is no doubt in this. Again he who worships daily with devotion for a fortnight beginning from the eighth day of the bright fortnight the Maha Devi Laksmi, remains in the region of Goloka for fourteen Indra's life periods. Then, obtaining an excellent birth, he becomes a sovereign. He who in the full moon night in the month of Kartik prepares a Rasa mandal with one hundred Gopas and Gopis and worships S'ri Krisna and Radha in S'alagrama or in images with sixteen varieties of offerings remains in Goloka for Brahma's life-time and coming again to Bharata acquires an unflinching devotion to S'ri Krisna.

88-99. And when this Bhakti becomes greatly intensified, ho gets initiated into S'ri Hah mantra and after quitting his mortal coil, he goes to the Goloka. Then he gets the Sarupya (the same form) of Krisna and becomes the chief Parisad (attendant of Krisna) and, becoming free from old age, he has no fear, to fall again down to this earth. He who observes the Ekadas'i day, remains fasting and performing penances in the bright or dark eleventh day, remains in Vaikuntha in great enjoyment and comfort. Then, again coming into this Bharata he becomes a devotee of Hari. And when that Bhakti is intensified he becomes solely devoted to Hari and quitting his mortal coil, goes again to the Goloka and gets the Sarupya of Krisna and becomes His Parisada (attendant). Then, freed of old age and death, he does not fall. He who worships Indra in the month of Bhadra in the twelfth day of the white fortnight is worshipped in the regions of Indra for sixty thousand years. He who performs in Bharata the worship of the Sun on Sunday Sankranti (when the Sun goes from one sign to another) and the bright seventh Tithi, according to due rules and ceremonies and eats the food called Havisyanna (rice boiled in ghee), dwells in the Suryaloka for fourteen Indra's life periods. Then coming to Bharata, he becomes free from all diseases and becomes prosperous. He who worships Savitri on the fourteenth day of the black fortnight dwells in the region of Brahma for seven Manvantaras with great eclat and glory. Coming again to Bharata he enjoys beauty, unequalled valour, long life, knowledge and prosperity. He who worships on the fifth day of the bright fortnight in the month of Magha, with his senses controlled and full of devotion, the Devi Sarasvati with sixteen articles of food, resides in Mani DvTpa for one day and one night of Brahma.

100-140. On getting re-birth, he becomes a poet and a learned man. He who daily gives with devotion for his whole life, cow and gold to a Brahmana dwells in Visnu Loka for twice as many years as there are the numbers of hairs on the bodies of these cows and plays and jests with Visnu and doing auspicious things he finds pleasure. In the end he comes again to this Bharata and becomes the King of Kings. He becomes fortunate, prosperous, possesses many sons, becomes learned, full of knowledge and happy in every way. He who feeds a Brahmana here with sweetmeats goes to Visnu Loka and enjoys there for as many years as there are hairs on the body of the Brahmin. In the end he comes again to Bharata and becomes happy, wealthy, learned, long lived, fortunate and very powerful. He who utters the name of Hah or gives the name (i.e., the mantra) of Hah to others, is worshipped in Visnu loka for as many yugas as the number of times, the name or mantra was uttered. Coming again to Bharata, he becomes happy and wealthy. And if such things be done in

Narayana Ksettra, koti times the above results ensue. He who repeats the name of Hari koti times in Narayana Ksettra, becomes, no doubt, freed of all sins and liberated while living and he will not get rebirth. He lives always in Vaikuntha. He gets the Salokya (the same region of Visnu), is not liable to fall, becomes a Bhakta of Visnu. He who daily worships the earthen phallic symbol (after making it daily) for his whole life, goes to the S'iva Loka and dwells there, for as many years as there are the number of particles of earth. Getting rebirth he becomes the King of Kings. He who worships daily the S'alagrama stone and eats the water (after bathing it) is glorified in Vaikuntha for one hundred Brahma's lives and becomes born again. When he acquires the rare Hari Bhakti and quiting his mortal coil goes to Visnu Loka, whence he is not to return. He who performs all the Tapasyas (asceticims) and observes all the vratas (vows), dwells in Vaikuntha for fourteen Indra's life peroids. Getting rebirth in Bharata he becomes the King of Kings and then he becomes liberated. He is not to return any more. He who bathes in all the Tirthas and makes a journey round the whole world, gets Nirvana. He is not reborn. He who performs the Horse-Sacrifice in this holy land Bharata enjoys half the Indraship for as many years as there are hairs on the body of the horse. He who performs a Rajasuya Sacrifice, gets four times the above result. Of all the sacrifices, the Devi Yajha, or the Sacrifice before the Devi is the Best. O Fair One! Of old, Visnu, Brahma, Indra and when Tripurasura was killed, Maha Deva did such a sacrifice. O Beautiful One! This sacrifice before the S'akti is the highest and best of all the sacrifices. There is nothing like this in the three worlds. This Great Sacrifice was done of yore by Daksa when he collected abundant sacrificial materials of all sorts. And a quarrel ensued on this account between Daksa and S'ankara. The Brahmins conducting the sacrifice cursed the Nandi and others. And Nandi cursed the Brahmanas. Mahadeva, therefore, disallowed the going on of sacrifice and brought it to a dead stop. Of yore the Prajapati Daksa did this Devi Yajha; it was done also by Dharma, Kas'yapa; Ananta, Kardama, Svayambhuva Manu, his son Priyavrata, S'iva, Sanat Kumara, Kapila and Dhruva. The performance of this sacrifice brings fruits equal to performing thousands and thousands of Rajasuya sacrifices. Therefore there is no other sacrifice greater than this Devi Yajha. One becomes surely endowed with a long life of one hundred years and is liberated while living. He becomes equal to Visnu in knowledge, energy, strength, and asceticism. This is as true as anything. O Child! This Devi Yajha is the best and highest of all the sacrifices as Visnu is the highest amongst the Devas; Narada, amongst the Vaisnavas; the Vedas, amongst all the S'astras; the Brahmanas amongst all the castes; the Ganges amongst the sacred places of pilgrimages, S'iva amongst the Holy of Holies, the Ekadas'i vow amongst all the Vratas; Tulasi, amongst all the flowers; the Moon, amongst the asterisms; Garuda, amongst the birds; Prakriti, Radha, Sarasvati and Earth amongst the females; the mind, amongst the quick-going and restless senses; Brahma, amongst the Prajapatis; Brahma, amongst all the subjects; Vrindraban, amongst all the forests; Bharat Varsa, amongst all the Varsas; Laksmi, amongst the prosperous; Sarasvati, amongst the learned; Durga, amongst the chaste; Radhika, amongst the fortunate. If one hundred horse sacrifices are performed, Indrahood is sure to be obtained. It is by the influence of bathing in all the Tirthas, performing all the sacrifices, observing all the Vratas, practising all the austerities, studying all the Vedas and circumambulating the whole earth, that this Highest S'akti's service is obtained and this service of S'akti is the direct cause of Mukti (liberation). To worship the lotus-feet of the Devi is the best and highest, is stated in all the Puranas, in all the Vedas, and in all the Itihasas. To sing the glories of Mula Prakriti, to meditate on Her, to chant Her Name and attributes, to remember Her stotras, bow down before Her, to repeat Her Name, and to drink daily

Her Padodoka (water after washing Her feet) and the offerings already offered to Her, these are approved of by all; and everyone desires this. So worship, worship this Mula Prakriti, Who is of the nature of Brahma, and, lo! Who is again endowed with Maya. O Child! Take your husband and live happily with him in your home. O Child! Thus I have described to you the fruition of the Karmas. This is auspicious to every human being, desired by all and approved of by all. The Real Knowledge springs from this. There is no doubt in this.

Here ends the Thirtieth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the conversation between Savitri and Yama and on the fruition of Karmas in the Great Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narayana said O Narada! Hearing thus the supreme nature of Mula Prakriti from Dharmaraja Yama, the two eyes of Savitri were filled with tears of joy and her whole body was filled with a thrill of rapture, joy and ecstacy. She again addressed Yama “O Dharmaraja! To sing the glories of Mula Prakriti is the only means of saving all. This takes away the old age and death of both the speaker and the hearer.

3-12. This is the Supreme Place of the Danavas, the Siddhas, the ascetics. This is the Yoga of the Yogins and this is studying the Vedas of the Vaidiks. Nothing can compare even to one sixteenth of the sixteenth parts of the (full) merits of those who are in S’akti’s Service; call it Mukti, immortality, or attaining endless Siddhis, nothing can come to it. O Thou, the foremost of the Knowers of the Vedas! I have heard by and by everything from Thee. Now describe to me how to worship Mula Prakriti and what are the ends of karmas, auspicious and inauspicious.” Thus saying, the chaste Savitri bowed down her head and began to praise Yama in stotras according to the Vedas. She said “O Dharmarajan! The Sun practised of yore very hard austerities at Puskara and worshipped Dharma. On this, Dharma Himself became born of Surya as his son. And Thou art that son of Surya, the incarnation of Dharma. So I bow down to Thee. Thou art the Witness of all the Jivas; Thou seest them equally; hence Thy name is Samana. I bow down to Thee. Sometimes Thou by Thy own will takest away the lives of beings. Hence Thy name is Kritanta. Obeisance to Thee! Thou boldest the rod to distribute justice and pronounce sentence on them and to destroy the sins of the Jivas; hence Thy name is Dandadhara; so I bow down to Thee. (Note:-- Any Jiva, in course of his travelling towards Mukti, can expect to pass through the stage Yamaship; and if he pleases, he can become a Yama.) At all times Thou destroyest the universe. None can resist Thee. Hence Thou art named Kala; so obeisance to Thee! Thou art an ascetic, devoted to Brahma, self-controlled, and the distributor of the fruits of Karmas to the Jivas; Thou restrainest Thy senses. Hence Thou art called Yama. Therefore I bow down to Thee.

13-17. Thou art delighted with Thy Own Self; Thou art omniscient; Thou art the Tormentor of the sinners and the Friend of the Virtuous. Hence Thy name is Punya Mitra; so I bow down to Thee. Thou art born as a part of Brahma; the fire of Brahma is shining through Thy body. Thou dost meditate on Para Brahma, Thou art the Lord. Obeisance to Thee!” O Muni! Thus praising Yama, She bowed down at the feet of Him. Yama gave her the mantra of Mula Prakriti. How to worship Her and He began to recite the fruition of good Karmas. O Narada! He who recites these eight hymns to Yama early in the morning, getting up from his bed, is freed of the fear of death. Rather he becomes freed of all his sins. So much so, that even if he be a veritable awful sinner and if he recites daily with devotion this Yamastakam, Yama purifies him thoroughly.

English translation

1-28. Narayana said Then, initiating her with the Great Seed, the Adi Radical Mantra of the Maha S'akti, S'ri BhuvanesVari in accordance with due rules, the son of Surya began to recite the various effects of various Karmas, auspicious and inauspicious. Never do the persons go to hell when they perform good Karmas; it is only the bad works that lead men to hells. The different Puranas narrate various heavens. The JTvas go to those places as the effects of their various good Karmas. The good Karmas do not lead men to hells; but the bad Karmas do lead them veritably to various hideous hells. In different S'astras, different hell-pits are ascertained.

Different works lead men to different hells. O Child! Those hell-pits are very wide, deep, painful and tormenting, very horrible and ugly. Of these, eighty six pits or Kundas are prominent. Many other Kundas exist. Now listen to the names of the Kundas mentioned in the Vedas. Their names are Vahni Kunda, Tapta Kunda, Ksara Kunda, Bhayanaka Kunda, Vit Kunda, Mutra Kunda, S'lesma Kunda, Gara Kunda, Dusika Kunda, Vasa Kunda, S'ukra Kunda, S'onita Kunda, As'ru Kunda, Gatramala Kunda, Karnamala Kunda, Majja Kunda, Mamsa Kunda, impassable Nakra Kunda, Loma Kunda, Kes'a Kunda, impassable Asthi Kunda, Tamra Kunda, the exceedingly hot and painful Lauha Kunda (the pit of molten iron), Charma Kunda, the hot Sura Kunda, sharp Thorny Kunda, Visa Kunda, the hot Taila Kunda, very heavy Astra Kunda, Krimi Kunda, Puya Kunda, terrible Sarpa Kunda, Mas'aka Kunda, Dams'a Kunda, dreadful Garala Kunda, Vajra Damstra Vris'chika Kunda, S'ara Kunda, Sula Kunda, awful Khadga Kunda, Gola Kunda, Nakra Kunda, sorrowful Kaka Kunda, Manthana Kunda, Vija Kunda, painful Vajra Kunda, hot Pats'ana Kunda, sharp Pas'ana Kunda, Lala Kunda, Masi Kunda, Chakra Kunda, Vakra Kunda, very terrible Kurma Kunda, Jvala Kunda, Bhasma Kunda, Dagdha Kunda, and others. Besides these, there are the Taptasuchi, Asipatra, Ksuradhara, Suchimukha, Gokhamukha, Kumbhipaka, Kalasutra, Matsyoda, Krimi, Kantuka, Pams'ubhojya, Pas'avesta, Sulaprota, Prakampana, Ulkamakha, Andhakupa, Vedhana, Tadana, Jalarandhra, Dehachurna, Dalana, S'osana, Kasa, S'urpa, Jvalamukha, Dhumandha, Nagavestana and various others. O Savitri! The Kundas give much pain and torment greatly the sinners; they are under the constant watch of innumerable servants. They hold rods in their hands; some of them have nooses; others hold clubs, S'aktis, awful scimitars; they are fierce fanatics, maddened with vanity. All are filled with Tamogunas, merciless, irresistible, energetic, fearless and tawny-eyed (like copper). Some of them are Yogis; some are Siddhas, they assume various forms. When the sinners are about to die, they see these servants of Yama. But those who do their own duties, who are S'aktas, Sauras, or Ganapatyas or those who are virtuous Siddha Yogis, they never see the servants of Yama. Those who are engaged in their own Dharmas, who are possessed of wisdom, who are endowed with knowledge, who are mentally strong, who are untouched by fear, who are endowed with the feelings of the Devas, and those who are real Vaisnavas, they never see these servants of Yama. O Chaste One! Thus I have enumerated to you the Kundas. Now hear who live in the Kundas.

Here ends the Thirty-second Chapter of the Ninth Book on the enumeration of various hells for sinners in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-19. Dharmarajan said Those that are in Hari's service, pure, the Siddhas in Yoga (those that have attained success in Yoga), the performers of Vratas (vows), the chaste, the ascetics, the Brahmacharis never go to hells. There is no doubt in this. Those persons that are proud of their strong positions and who use very harsh burning words to their friends, they go to Vahni Kunda and live there for as many years as there are hairs on his body; next they attain animal births for three births and get themselves scorched under the strong heat of the Sun. He goes to the Tapta Kunda hell who does not entertain any Brahman guest with any eatables who comes to his house hungry and thirsty. He lives there for as many years as there are hairs on his body and he has to sleep on a bed of fire, very tormenting. Then he will have to be born for seven births as birds. If anybody washes any clothing with any salt on Sunday, or on the day of Samkranti (when the Sun enters another sign), or on any new-moon day or on any S'raddha day (when funeral ceremonies are performed), he will have to go to the Ksara Kunda hell where he remains for as many years as there are threads in that clothing and finally he becomes born for seven births as a veritable washerman. The wretch that abuses Mula Prakriti, the Vedas, the S'astras, Puranas, Brahma, Visnu, S'iva and the other Devas, Gauri, Laksmi, Sarasvati and the other Devis, goes to the hell named Bhayanaka Narakakunda. There is no other hell more tormenting than this. The sinners live here for many Kalpas and ultimately become serpents. There is no sin greater than the abuse of the Devi. There is no expiation for it. So one ought never to abuse the Devi. If one discontinues the allowances given by oneself or other persons to the Devas or Brahmanas, one goes to Vistha Kunda and has to eat the faeces there for sixty thousand years and finally to be born in Bharata as worms in faeces the same number of years. If any person without the owner's permission digs another's tank dried of water, or makes water in the water of any tank, he goes to Mutra Kunda and drinks urine for as many years as there are the particles in that tank. Then he becomes born in this Bharata its an ox for one hundred years. If any person eats good things himself without giving any portion thereof to the member of his family, he goes to S'lesma Kunda where he eats phlegm, for full one hundred years. Then he becomes born as Preta (disembodied spirits) in this Bharata for hundred years and drinks phlegm, urine and pus; then he becomes pure. He who does not support his father, mother, spiritual teacher, wife, sons, daughters and the helpless persons, goes to Gara Kunda where he eats poison for full one hundred years. Finally he becomes born and wanders as Bhutas (disembodied spirits). Then he becomes pure.

20-50. He who becomes angry and shrinks his eyes at the sight of a guest who has come to his house offends the Devas or Pitris, who do not accept the water offered to them by that villain. On the contrary, he earns all the sins of Brahmahatya (murder of a Brahmin and so forth) and finally goes to Dusikakunda where he remains for one hundred years and eats polluted things. Then wandering as Bhutas for one hundred years he becomes purified. If anybody makes a gift of any article to a Brahmin and then again gives that article to a different man, he goes to Vasa Kunda where he eats marrows for one hundred years. Then he has to roam about in India for seven births as a Krikalasa (lizard) and finally he becomes born as a very poor man with a very short life. If any woman or any man makes another of a different sex eat semen, out of passion, he goes to S'ukra Kunda where he drinks semen for one hundred years. Then he crawls about as worms for one hundred years. And then he gets purified. If anybody beats a Brahmana who is a family preceptor and causes his blood to come out, he will have to go to Rakta Kunda where he has to drink blood for one hundred years. Finally he has to roam about for seven births in India as tigers; then he becomes pure by degrees. If anybody mocks and laughs at any devotee of Krisna who sings with rapt consciousness and sheds tears of joy, he will have to go to As'ru Kunda where he drinks tears for one hundred years. Then he has to roam as Chandala for three births and then he becomes pure. He who always cheats his friends, lives for one hundred years in Gatramala Kunda. Then roaming about for three births as an ass and for three births as a fox concurrently, he becomes purified. Out of vanity, if anybody jests at a deaf person, he goes to Karnamalakunda where he eats for one hundred years the wax of the ear. Next he comes to the earth as a deaf and very poor man for seven births, when at last he gets purified. If anybody commits murder out of greed to support his family, he goes to the hell Majjakunda where he eats marrow for one lakh years. Next he becomes a fish for seven births, for seven births he becomes a mosquito, for three births he becomes a boar, for seven births he becomes a cock, deer and other animals concurrently; at last he gets purified. If any stupid person sells the daughter whom he has supported, out of greed for money, he goes to Mansakunda and lives there for as many years as there are hairs on her body. The Yama's servants beat him with their clubs. His head becomes overloaded with the burden of the flesh; and, out of hunger, he licks the blood coming out of his head. Next that sinner comes to Bharata and for sixty years becomes a worm in any daughter's faeces, for seven births he becomes a hunter; for three births, a boar; for seven births, cock; for seven births, frog; for seven births, leech; and for seven births, crow; when he gets purified. One who shaves on the day of observing vows, fasting and funeral ceremony day, becomes impure and unfit to do any action, and, in the end, he goes to the Nakha Kunda where he receives blows of clubs and eats nails for one hundred Deva years. If anybody worships, out of carelessness, the earthen S'iva phallic symbol with any hairs on it, he goes to the hell Kes'a Kunda where he remains for as many years as there are particles in that hair; then he gets to the yoni (womb) a Yavanani (a MIechcha woman) out of Hara's wrath. After one hundred years he becomes freed from that and then he becomes a Raksasa; there is no doubt in this. He who does not offer Pindas to the Visnupada in honour of his Piths at Gaya goes to the hell Asthikunda where he remains for as many years as there are dirts on his body. Then he becomes a man; but for seven births he becomes lame and poor. Then he gets purified. The stupid man who commits outrage and violence on his pregnant wife, resides for one hundred years in the hot Tamra Kunda (where coppers are in a molten condition). He who takes the food of a childless widow and the same of any woman that has just bathed after menstruation goes for one hundred years to the hot Lauha Kunda (where iron is in a molten condition). For seven births he becomes then a crow and for seven births he becomes born of a washerwoman, full of sores and boils, and poor. Then he gets purified.

51-61. If one touches the things of the Devas after touching skins or impure hides, one remains in the Charma Kunda for full one hundred years. If any Brahmin eats a S'udra's food, requested by him, he lives for one hundred years in the hot Sura Kunda. Then for seven births he performs, the funeral rites for a S'udra; at last he becomes pure. If any foul-mouthed person uses always harsh and filthy language to his master, he will have to go to Tiksna Kantaka Kunda where he eats thorns. Besides, the Yama's servants give severe beatings to him with their clubs. For seven births he will have to become horses when he gets purified. If any man ministers poison to another and so takes away his life, he will have to remain for endless years in Visakunda, where he will have to eat poison. Then he will have to pass for one hundred years as a murderer Bhilla, full of sores and boils, and for seven births he will have to be a leper when at last he gets purified. Being born in this holy land Bharatavarsa, if any man strikes a cow with a rod or any driver does so whether by himself or by his servant, he will have to dwell certainly in the hot Lauha Kunda for four yugas. He will have to pass as many years as a cow as there are hairs on that cow when ultimately he gets purified. If anybody strikes any other body with a red-hot iron dart

(Kunta weapon), he will have to dwell in the Kunta Kunda for ayuta years. Then he will have to remain for one birth in a good womb, with a diseased constitution, when ultimately he will be purified.

62-85. If any Brahmin villain eats, out of greed, any flesh (not sacrificed before the goddess) or anything not offered to Hari, he will have to remain in the Krimi Kunda where he eats those things for as many years as there are hairs on his body. Then he will have to pass for three births as MIechchas when ultimately he becomes born in a Brahmin family. If any Brahmin performs the S'radh of a S'udra, eats the food pertaining to a S'radh of a S'udra or burns the dead body of a S'udra, he will have to dwell certainly in Puya Kunda, where, being beaten by the rod of Yama, he eats the pus, etc., for as many years as there are hairs on his body. Then he becomes reborn in this Bharata as one greatly diseased, poor, deaf and dumb and ultimately he will have to roam for seven births as a S'udra. He who kills a black serpent on whose hood there is the lotus mark, lives in Sarpa Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body and he is bitten by serpents there and beaten by the servants of Yama and eats the excrescences of snakes and finally becomes born as a serpent. Then he becomes a man shortlived and having the cuticaneous disease and ringworm. And his death also comes out of snake-bite. He who kills mosquitoes and other small fanged-animals, that earn their substance rightly and pass so their lives, goes to Dams'a mas'a Kunda where he is eaten by mosquitoes and other fanged-creatures and lives there without food and crying, weeping, for as many years as the numbers of lives destroyed. Besides the Yama's servants tie his hands and feet and beat him. Then he becomes born as flies when ultimately he becomes purified. He who beats and chastises any man not fit to be chastised and beaten and as well as a Brahmana, goes to Vajra Damstra Kunda, full of worms, and lives there day and night for as many years as there are the number of hairs on the chastised person. When he is bitten by the worms and beaten by Yama's servants, he cries sometimes, weeps sometimes, and becomes very miserable. Next he is reborn as a crow for seven births when ultimately he gets purified. If any foolish king punishes and gives trouble to his subjects out of greed of money, he goes to Vrischika Kunda where he lives for as many years as there are hairs on the bodies of his subjects. There is no doubt in this. Finally he becomes born in this Bharata as a scorpion; then a man diseased and defective in limbs, when ultimately he becomes freed of his sins. If any Brahmin carries or raises weapons, washes the clothes of others who do not perform Sandhyas and abandons his devotion to Hah, he lives in Saradi Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body; he is, then, pierced by arrows. Finally he becomes purified. If any king maddened by his own folly and fault, shuts his subjects in a dark cell and kills them, then he will have to go to a dreadful dark hell filled with worms having fanged teeth and covered with dirt. This hell is named Gola Kunda. He lives there bitten by insects for as many years as there are hairs on the bodies of his subjects. Finally he becomes a slave of those subjects, when he gets purified.

86-103. If anybody kills the sharks and crocodiles, etc., that rise out of the water spontaneously, he will have to remain, then, in Nakra Kunda for as many years as there are thorns or edged points on those animals. Then he will have to be born as crocodiles, etc., for some time, when he will be purified. If any man, overpowered with lust, sees another's wife's uncovered breast, loins, and face, he will have to remain in Kaka Kunda for as many years as there are hairs in his own body. Here the crows take out his eyes. Finally for three births he gets himself burned by Fire when he becomes pure. He who steals in India the gold of the Devas and the Brahmanas, dwells certainly in Manthana Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. My servants give him good beatings, and cudgellings; his eyes are covered by Manthana Danda insects (or animals) and he eats their dirty faeces. Then he is reborn as a man but for three births he becomes blind and for seven births he becomes very poor.

cruel, and a sinful goldsmith and then he is born a Svarnavanik (Sonar bene). O Fair One! He who steals in India copper or iron, silver or gold, dwells in Vija Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. There the Vijas (a kind of insect) cover his eyes and he eats the excrescences of those insects. My messengers torment him. Finally he gets purified. If anybody steals in India any Devata or the articles of a Devata, he dwells in Vajra Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. There his body gets burnt up. My messengers torment him and he a cries and weeps and remains without any food. Then he gets purified. If anybody steals the metal gold or silver, cows, or garments of any Deva or a Brahmana, certainly he dwells in hot Pasana Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. Next for three births he becomes a tortoise and all sorts of white birds. Finally for three births he becomes a leper and for one birth be becomes a man with white marks on his body. Next for seven births he becomes diseased with a severe colic pain and bad blood and lives short. Then he gets purified. If anybody steals brass or Kamsya properties of any Deva or a Brahmana, he will have to remain in the sharp Pasana Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. Next he becomes born in Bharata for seven births as horses; and ultimately his both the testicles get enlarged and he gets diseases in his legs when he gets purified. If anybody verily eats the food of an adulterate woman or lives on her alms, he will have to go to the Lala Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. My messengers torment him there and he eats the saliva and thus lives miserably. Then he gets eye diseases and colic; when ultimately he gets purified.

104-126. If any Brahmana lives on writing only or on the service of MIechchas, he lives in Masi Kunda very painfully, eating ink, tormented by My messengers for as many years as there are hairs on his body. Then he becomes a black animal for three births and for another three births he becomes a black goat. Then he becomes a Tal tree when he gets purified. If anybody steals a Deva's or a Brahmana's grains, or any other good materials, betel, Asan (seat) or bedding, he lives in Churna Kunda for one hundred years, tormented by My Dutas (messengers). Next for three births he gets himself born as a goat, cock, and monkey. Finally he becomes born as a man with the heart disease, without any issue, poor, and short lived. When, at last, he gets purified. If anybody steals any Brahmin's property and thereby does chakra puja (the famous chakra circle worship in Tantra), or prepares a potter's wheel or any other wheels, he will have to go to Chakra Kunda and remain there for one hundred years, tormented by My messengers. Then he will be born for three births as an oilman suffering from very severe diseases when he will ultimately be poor, without any issue and diseased. Finally he gets purified. If anybody casts a sinful eye on any Brahmana or on cows, he will have to remain in Vakra Kunda for one hundred Yugas. Next for three births he becomes a cat, for three births he becomes a vulture; for three births he becomes a boar; for three births he becomes a peacock; for seven births he becomes a man deformed and defective in limbs, his wife being dead, without any issue. Finally he becomes purified. If any person born in a Brahmin family eats the flesh of a tortoise that is prohibited, he lives in Kurma Kunda, for one hundred years, eaten by tortoises. Then he becomes for three births a tortoise; for three births, a boar; for three births a cat; for three births, a peacock; till at last he gets purified. If anybody steals clarified butter or oil of any Devas or a Brahmana he will have to go to Jvala Kunda or Bhasma Kunda. That sinner remains in oil for one hundred years and gets soaked through and through. Then for seven births he becomes a fish and a mouse when he gets purified. If anybody, born here in this holy land Bharata steals sweet scented oil of a Deva or of a Brahmana, the powdered myrobalan or any other scent, he goes to Dagdha Kunda where he lives, burnt day and night for as many years as there are hairs on his body. For seven births he becomes born emitting a nasty smell, for three births he becomes musk (mriga-nabhi); for seven births, as a Manthana insect. Then he becomes born as a man. If, out of envy, a powerful man appropriates to his purpose another's ancestral property by cheating, by using force, he goes to the hot Suchi

Kunda, being tormented there like a Jiva dropped in the midst of a very hot oil tank, full of boiling oil. His body is, then, being burnt up severely as the result of his own Karma; the wonder being that his body never gets completely destroyed nor reduced to ashes. For seven manvantaras he lives there without any food. My messengers give him good beatings and cudgellings and chastise him; he cries aloud. Next he gets himself born as worms of faeces for sixty thousand years. When he becomes born as a pauper without owning any land. Thus that villain, getting a fresh lease of human birth, begins again to do fresh good acts.

Here ends the Thirty-third Chapter of the Ninth Book on the description of the destinies of different sinners in different hells in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-28. Dharma Raja Yama said O Fair One! If, in this Bharata, any murderer, merciless and fierce, kills any man, out of greed for money, he goes and miserably dwells in the Asipattra hell for fourteen Indra's life periods. And if that murderer kills a Brahmana, he lives in that hell for one hundred manvantaras. While in hell, his body becomes fiercely cut and wounded by the swords. There My messengers chastise him and beat him and he cries aloud and passes his time without any food. Then he becomes born for one hundred years as a Manthana insect, for hundred births as a boar, for seven births as a cock; for seven births as a fox, for seven births as a tiger; for three births, as a wolf; for seven births, as a frog; then as a buffalo when he becomes freed of his sins of murders. If anybody sets fire to a city or a village, he will have to live in Ksuradhara Kunda for three yugas with his body severed. Then he becomes a Preta (disembodied spirit) and travels over the whole earth, being burnt up with fire. For seven births he eats unclean and unholy food and spends his time as a pigeon. Then for seven births he becomes diseased with a severe colic pain, for seven births as a leper; when ultimately he gets a pure human body. If anybody whispers in one's ear another's calumny and thus glorifies himself and abuses and vilifies the Devas and Brahmanas, he goes and remains in Suchi Kunda for three Yugas, and he is pierced there by needles. Then he becomes a scorpion for seven births, a serpent for seven births, and an insect (Bhasma Kita) for seven births; then he gets a diseased human body when, at last, he becomes purified. If anybody breaks into another's house and steals away all the household articles, cows, goats or buffaloes, he goes to Goka Mukha Kunda where faeces are like cow's hoofs, there, beaten by My servants, for three Yugas. (Goka is Goksura, hoof of a cow). Then, for seven births, he becomes a diseased cow; for three births, a sheep; for three births, a goat; and finally he becomes a man. But in this man-birth he is born first as diseased, poor, deprived of wife and friends, and a repenting person; when ultimately he is freed of his sin. If anybody steals any ordinary thing, he goes to Nakra Mukha Kunda and lives there for three years, greatly tormented by My messengers. Next for seven births, he becomes a diseased ox. Then he attains a very diseased man-birth, and ultimately he is freed of his sins. Such are the horrible results. If anybody kills a cow, elephant, horse, or cuts a tree, he goes to Gaja Dams'a Kunda for three yugas. There he is punished by My messengers freely by the teeth of elephants. Then he attains three elephants' births, three horse-births; then he becomes born as a cow and ultimately he is born a MIechcha when he becomes pure. If anybody obstructs any thirsty cow from drinking water, he goes to Krimi Kunda and Gomukha Kunda filled with hot water and lives there for one manvantara. Next when he attains a human birth he owns not any cattle nor any wealth; rather he is born as a man, very much diseased, in low castes, for seven births when he becomes freed. If anybody, being born in Bharata, kills cows. Brahmins, women, beggars, causes abortions or goes to those not fit to be gone into, he lives in the Kumbhipaka hell for fourteen Indra's life periods. There be is pulverised always by My messengers. He is made to fall sometimes in fire, sometimes over thorns, sometimes in hot oil, sometimes in hot water, sometimes in molten iron or copper. That great sinner gets thousand vulture births, hundred boar births, seven crow births and seven serpent births. He then becomes worms of faeces for sixty thousand years. Thus travelling frequently in ox births he at last becomes born as a very poor leper.

29-31. Savitri said "O Bhagavan! What is, according to the S'astras, Brahmahattya (murdering a Brahmin) and Gohatya (killing a cow)? Who are called Agamyas (women unfit to be approached)? Who are designated as void of Sandhya (daily worship of the twice born castes)? Who can be called uninitiated? Who are said to take Pratigrahas (gifts) in a Tirath? What are the characteristics of a real Gramayaji (village priests), Devala, (Brahmana of an inferior order who subsists upon the offerings made to the images which he attends), the cook of a S'udra, of one who is infatuated (Pramatta) and the VrisalTpati (one who has married an unmarried girl twelve years old in whom menstruation has commenced; a barren woman) Kindly describe all these to me."

32-91. Dharmarajan said O Fair Savitri! If anybody makes a distinction between Krisna and His Image or between any Deva and his image, between S'iva and His phallic emblem, between the Sun and the stone Surya Kanta (a precious stone of a bright and glittering colour) between Ganes'a and Durga, he is said to be guilty of the sin Brahmahattya. If anybody makes any difference (superiority or inferiority) between his own Ista Deva (his Deity), his Spiritual Teacher, his natural father, and mother, is certainly involved in the sin of Brahmahattya. He who shews any difference (superiority or inferiority) between the devotees of Visnu and those of other Devas, is said to commit Brahmahattya. He who makes any difference in matters of respect between the waters of the feet of any Brahmana and those of S'alagrama stone, is said to commit Brahmahattya. The difference between the offerings to Hari and Hara leads to Brahmahattya. He who shews any difference between Krisna, Who is verily the God of gods, the Cause of all causes, the Origin of all. Who is worshipped by all the Devas, Who is the Self of all. Who is attributeless and without a second yet Who by His Magic powers assumes many forms and who is Is'ana, is said to commit, indeed, the Brahmahattya. If any Vaisnava (a devotee of Visnu) abuses and envies a S'akta (a devotee of S'akti), he commits Brahmahattya. He who does not worship, according to the Vedas, the Pitris and the Devas or prohibits others in doing so, commits Brahmahattya. He who abuses Hrisikes'a, Who is the Highest of the Holy things. Who is Knowledge and Bliss and Who is Eternal, Who is the only God to be served by the Devas and Vaisnavas, and those Who are worshippers of His Mantra, and those who do not worship themselves are said to commit Brahmahattya. He who abuses and vilifies Mulaprakriti Maha Devi, Who is of the nature of Causal Brahma (Karana Brahma), Who is All Power and the Mother of all. Who is worshipped by all and who is of the nature of all the Devas and the Cause of all Causes, Who is Adya S'akti Bhagavati, is said to commit Brahmahattya. He who does not observe the Holy S'ri Krisna Janmastami, S'ri Rama Navami, S'ivaratri, the Ekadas'i happening on Sunday, and five other holy Parvanas (festivals), commits Brahmahattya; is considered more sinful than a Chandala. He who in this land of Bharata, digs earth on the day of Ambuvachi or makes water, etc., in the waters of the tanks, is involved in the sin of Brahmahattya. He who does not support his spiritual teacher, mother, father, chaste wife, son and daughter, though they are faultless, commits Brahmahattya. He whose marriage does not take place during his whole life-time, who does not see the face of his son, who does not cherish devotion to Hah, who eats things unoffered to S'ri Hah, who never worshipped throughout his life Visnu or an earthen symbol of S'iva, verily commits Brahmahattya. O Fair One! Now I will recite the characteristics, according to the S'astras, of Gohattya (killing a cow). Listen. If anybody does not prohibit one, seeing one to beat a cow, or if he goes between a cow and a Brahmin, he is involved in the sin of Gohattya. If any illiterate Brahman, carrying an ox, daily beats with a stick, the cows, certainly he commits the Gohattya. If anybody gives the remains of another's meal to a cow to eat, or feeds a Brahmin who carries, rather moves or drives, cows and oxen; or eats himself the food of such a Brahmin driver, he commits Gohattya. Those who do sacrifices of the husband of a barren woman (Vrisali) or eat his food, commit sin equal to one hundred Gohattyas; there is no doubt in this. Those who touch fire with their feet, beat the cows or enter the temple bathing but not washing their feet, commit Gohattya. Those who eat without washing their feet or those who sleep with their feet wetted with water and those who eat just after the Sun has risen, commit Gohattya. Those who eat the food of women without husbands or sons or the food of pimps and pampers or those who do not perform their Sandhyas thrice, commit Gohattya. If any woman makes any difference between her husband and the Devata, or chastises and uses harsh words to her husband, she commits Gohattya. If anybody destroys cow's pasture land, tanks, or land for forts and cultivates there grains, he commits Gohattya. He who does not do Prayas'chitta (expiation, atonement) for the expiation of the sin of Gohattya done by his son (for fear of his son's life), commits the sin himself. If any trouble arises in the state or from the Devas, and if any master does not protect then his own cows, rather torments them, he is said to commit Gohattya. If any Jiva oversteps the image of a Deva, fire, water, offerings to a god, flowers, or food, he commits the great sin Brahmahattya. When a guest comes, if the master of the house always says, "there is nothing, nothing with me; no, no," and if he be a liar, cheat and an abuser of the Devas, he commits the above sin. O fair One! Whoever seeing his spiritual teacher, and a Brahman, does not bow down and make respectful obeisance to them, commits Gohattya. If any Brahmin, out of sheer anger, does not utter blessings to a man who bows down or does not impart knowledge to a student, he commits Gohattya. O Fair One! Thus I have described to you the characteristics, approved by S'astras, of cow-killing (Gohattya) and murdering a Brahmin(Brahmahattya).

Now hear which women are (Agamyas) not fit to be approached and those which are fit to be approached (Gamyas). One's own wife is fit to be approached (Gamya) and all other women are Agamyas, so the Pundits, versed in the Vedas, declare. This is a general remark; now hear everything in particular. O Chaste One! The Brahmin wives of S'udras or the S'udra wives of Brahmanas are Atyagamyas (very unfit to be approached) and blameable both in the Vedas and in the society. A S'udra going to a Brahmani woman commits one hundred Brahmahattyas; so a Brahmana woman going to a S'udra goes to the Kumbhipaka hell. As a S'udra should avoid a Brahmani, so a Brahmana should avoid a S'udra woman. A Brahmana going to a S'udra woman is recognised a Brisalipati (one who has married an unmarried girl twelve years old in whom menstruation has commenced). So much so that that Brahmana is considered an outcast and the vilest of the Chandalas. The offerings of Pindas by him are considered as faeces and water offered by him is considered as urine. Nowhere whether in the Devaloka or in the Pitriloka, his offered Pindas and water are accepted. Whatever religious merits he has acquired by worshipping the Devas, and practising austerities for Koti births, he loses all at once by the greed of enjoying the S'udra woman. There is no doubt in this. A Brahmin, if he drinks wine, is considered as the husband of a Vrisali, eating faeces. And if he be a Vaisnava, a devotee of Visnu, his body must be branded with the marks of a Taptamudra (hot seal); and if he be a S'aiva, his body is to be branded with the Tapta S'ula (hot trident). The wife of a spiritual teacher, the wife of a king, step-mother, daughter, son's wife, mother-in-law, sister of the same father and mother, the wife of one's brother (of the same father and mother), the wife of a maternal uncle, the father's mother, mother's mother, the mother's sister, sisters, the brother's daughter, the female disciple, the disciple's wife, the wife of the sister's son, the wife of the brother's son, these all are mentioned by Brahma as Atyagamyas (very unfit to be approached). The people are hereby warned. If anybody, overpowered by passion, goes to these Atyagamya women, he becomes the vilest of men. The Vedas consider him as if going to his mother and he commits one hundred Brahmahattya sins. These have no right to do any actions. They are not to be touched by any. They are blamed in the Vedas, in the society everywhere. Ultimately they go to the dreadful Kumbhipaka hells. O Fair One! He who performs Sandhyas wrongly or reads it wrongly or does not perform at all the three Sandhyas daily, is called as void of Sandhya. He is said to remain uninitiated who does not, out of sheer vanity, receive any Mantra, whether he be a Vaisnavite, S'aivite, or a Sun worshipper or the Ganes'a worshipper. Where there is the running stream of the Ganges, lands on either side, four hands in width, are said to be the womb of the Ganges (Ganga Garbha) Bhagavan Narayana incessantly dwells there. This is called the Narayana (Ksetra). One goes to Visnupada who dies in such a place. Varanasi (Benares), Vadari, the Confluence of the Ganges with the ocean (Ganga-Sagara), Puskara, Hah Hara Ksettra (in Behar near Chapra), Prabhasa, Kamarupa, Hardwar, Kedara, Matripura, the banks of the river Sarasvati, the holy land Bindraban, Godavari, Kaus'iki, Triveni (Allahabad), and the Himalayas are all famous places of pilgrimages. Those who willingly accept gifts in these sacred places are said to be Tirthapratigrahis (the acceptors of the gifts in the Tirtha). These Tirthaprathigrahis go in the end to Kumbhipaka hell. The Brahmana who acts as priest to the S'udras is called S'udrayaji; the village priests are called Gramayajis. Those who subsist on the offerings made to the gods are called Devalas. The cooks of the S'udras are called Supakaras. Those who are void of Sandhya Bandanams are called Pramattas (mad). O Bhadre! These are the marks of the VrisalTpatis that I have (now) enumerated. These are the Great Sinners (Maha Patakas). They go ultimately to the Kumbhipaka hell. O Fair One! I now state by and by the other Kundas (hells) when other people go. Listen.

Here ends the Thirty fourth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the description of the various hells in the Maha Puranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-44. Dharmarajan said O Chaste One! Without serving the Gods, the Karma ties can never be severed. The pure acts are the seeds of purities and the impure acts lead to impure seeds. If any Brahmana goes to any unchaste woman and eats her food, he will have to go ultimately to the Kalasutra hell. There he lives for one hundred years when ultimately he gets a human birth when he passes his times as a diseased man and ultimately he gets purified. Those women who are addicted to their (one) husbands only are called Pativratas.

Those addicted to two persons are named Kulatas; to three, are called Dharsinis; to four, called Pums'chalis; to five, six persons, called Ves'yas; to seven, eight, nine persons are called Pungis; and to more than these, are called Mahaves'yas. The Mahaves'yas are unfit to be touched by all the classes. If any Brahmana goes to Kulata, Dharsini, Pums'chali, Pungi, Ves'ya and Mahaves'yas, he will have to go to the Matsyoda Kunda. Those who go to Kulatas remain there for one hundred years; those who go to Dharsinis, remain for four hundred years, those who go to Pums'chalis for six hundred years; those who go to Ves'yas, for eight hundred years; those who go to Pungis, remain for one thousand years and those who go to Mahaves'yas remain in the Matsyoda Kunda for ten thousand years. My messengers chastise and beat and torment them very severely. And when their terms expire, the Kulata-goers become Tittiris (a bird), the Dharsini-goers become crows, the Pums'chali-mongers become cuckoos, the Ves'ya haunters become wolves; the Pungi-goers become for seven births boars. If any ignorant person eats food during the lunar and solar eclipses, he goes to Aruntuda Kunda for as many years as there are particles in that food. He then becomes born diseased with Gulma (a chronic enlargement of spleen) having no ears nor teeth, and after passing his time so, he becomes freed of his previous sin. If anybody makes a promise to give his daughter to one but he gives actually to a different person, he goes to Pams'u Kunda where he eats ashes for one hundred years. Again if anybody sells his daughter, he sleeps on a bed of arrows in Pams'uvesta Kunda for one hundred years, chastised and beaten by My messengers. If any Brahmana does not worship with devotion the phallic emblem of S'iva, he goes to the dreadful S'ulaprota Kunda for that heinous sin. He remains there for one hundred years; then he becomes a quadruped animal for seven births and again he becomes born a Devala Brahmin for seven births when he becomes freed. If any Brahmana defeats another Brahmana in a bad useless argument and trifles him and makes him tremble, he goes to the Prakampana Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. If any woman, being very furious with anger, chastises and uses harsh words to her husband, she goes to Ulkamukha Kunda for as many years as there are hairs on his body. My servants put fiery meteors or torches in her mouth and beat on her head. At the end of the term, she becomes a human being but she has to bear the torments of widowhood for seven births. Then she is again born as diseased; when at last she gets herself freed. The Brahmana woman, enjoyed by a S'udra, goes to the terrible dark Andhakupa hell, where she remains, day and night, immersed in the impure water and eats that for fourteen Indra's life periods. Her pains are unbounded and My messengers beat her severely and incessantly.

At the expiry of the term in that hell, she becomes a female crow for thousand births, a female boar for one hundred births, a female fox for one hundred births, a hen for one hundred years, a female pigeon for seven births, and a female monkey for seven births. Then she becomes a ChandalT in this Bharata, enjoyed by all. Then she becomes an unchaste woman with the pthisis disease, a washerwoman, and then an oilwoman with leprosy when she becomes freed. O Fair One! The Ves'yas live in the Vedhana, and Jalarandhra hells; the Pungis live in the Dandatadana hell; the Kulatas live in the Dehachurna hells; the Svairinis live in the Dalana hells; the Dharsinis live in S'osana hells. Their pains know no bounds at all those places. My messengers always beat and chastise them and they eat always the urine and faeces for one Manvantara. Then, at the expiry of their hell period, they become worms of faeces for one lakh years when they become freed. If a Brahmana goes to another Brahmana's wife, if a Ksattriya, Vais'ya and S'udra do so, they go to the Kasaya hell. There they drink the hot Kasaya water for twelve years when they become purified. The lotus-born Brahma has said that the wives of Brahmins, Ksattriyas, etc., live in hells like Brahmins, Ksattriyas, etc., and they then get freed. If a Ksattriya or a Vais'ya goes to a Brahmin's wife, he is involved in the sin of his going to his mother and goes and lives in the S'urpa hell. There the worms of the size of a S'urpa bite that Ksattriya, that Vais'ya and that Brahmana's wife. My messengers chastise them and they have to eat the hot urine. Thus they suffer pains for fourteen Indra's life periods. When they become boars for seven births and goats for seven births, when at last they are freed. Now if anybody makes a false promise or swears falsely, taking the Tulasi leaf in his hands, if anybody makes a false promise, taking the Ganges water, S'alagrama stone, or any other images of God in his hand; if anybody swears falsely, placing his right palm on the palm of another; if anybody swears falsely, being in a temple or touching a Brahmana or a cow; if anybody acts against his friends or others, if he be treacherous or if he gives a false evidence; then all these persons go to Jvala Mukha hell, and remain there for fourteen Indra's life periods, chastised and beaten by My messengers and feeling pain as if one's body is being burnt by red hot coal. One who gives a false evidence, with the Tulasi (holy basil) in his hand becomes a Chandala for seven births; one who makes a false promise with the Ganges water in his hand, becomes a MIechcha for five births; one who swears falsely while touching the S'alagrama stone, becomes a worm of the faeces for seven births; one who swears falsely, touching the image of the God, becomes a worm in a Brahmin's house for seven births; one who gives a false evidence touching with the right hand, becomes a serpent for seven births; then he becomes born as a Brahmin, void of the knowledge of the Vedas, when he becomes freed. One who speaks falsely, while in a temple, is born as a Devala for seven births.

45-59. If one swears falsely, touching a Brahmana, one becomes a tiger. Then he becomes dumb for three births, then for three births he becomes deaf, without wife, without friends, and his family becomes extinct. Then he becomes pure. Those that rebel against their friends, become mongoose; the treacherous persons become rhinoceroses; the hypocrite and treacherous persons become tigers and those who give false evidences become frogs. So much so, that their seven generations above and seven generations below go to hell. If any Brahmana does not perform his daily duties (Nitya Karma), he is reckoned as Jada (an inert matter). He has no faith in the Vedas. Rather he laughs at the Vedic customs. He does not observe vows and fastings; he blames others who give good advices. Such persons live in Dhumrandhakara hell where they eat dark smoke only. Then he roams about as an aquatic animal for one hundred births successively. Then he becomes born as various fishes when he is freed. If anybody jests at the wealth of a Deva or a Brahmana, then he with his ten generations above and below becomes fallen and he himself goes to the Dhumrandhakara hell, terribly dark and filled with smoke. There his pains know no bounds and he lives there for four hundred years, eating smoke only. Then he becomes a mouse for seven births, and he becomes various birds and worms, various trees and various animals when ultimately he gets a human birth. If a Brahmin earns his livelihood by being an astrologer or if he be a physician and lives thereby or if he sells lac, iron, or oil, etc., he goes to the Nagavstana Kunda hell where he lives for as many years as there are hairs on his body, tied up by snakes. Then he becomes born as various birds; ultimately he gets a human birth and becomes an astrologer for seven births and a physician for seven births. Then for sometime he becomes a cowherd (milkman), for sometimes a blacksmith; for sometimes a painter, when he becomes freed of his sin. O Chaste One! Thus I have described to you all the famous Kundas or hells. Besides there are innumerable small Kundas. The sinners go there and suffer the fruits of their own Karmas and travel through various wombs. O Fair One! What more do you now want to hear? Say.

Here ends the Thirty-Fifth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the description of the various hells for the various sinners in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Savitn said “O Dharmarajan! O Highly Fortunate One! O Thou! Expert in the Vedas and the Amgas thereof! Now kindly describe that which is the essence of the various Puranas and Itihasas, which is the quintessence, which is dear to all, approved of by all, which is the seed by which the Karmic ties are cut asunder, which is high, noble and happy is this life. Kindly describe the above by which man can acquire all his desires, and what is the only source of all the good and auspicious things. All by knowing which man has not to face any dangers or troubles, nor has he to go to the dreadful hells that thou hast severally just now described and that by which men can be freed of those various wombs. Kindly now describe all these. O Bhagavan! What is the size of the several kundas or hells that Thou hast just now enumerated? How do the sinners dwell there? When a man departs, his body is reduced to ashes. Then of what sort is that other body by which the sinners enjoy the effects of their Karmas and why do not those bodies get destroyed when they suffer so much pains for so long a time? What sort of body is that? Kindly describe all these to me.”

8-33. Narayana spoke Hearing the questions put forward by Savitri, Dharmaraja remembered S’ri Hari and began to speak on subject that sever the bonds of Karma O Child! O One of good vows! In the four Vedas, in all the books on Dharma, (Smritis) in all the Samhitas, all the Itihasas, all the Puranas, in the Narada Pahcharatram, in the other Dharma S’astras and in the Vedangas, it is definitely stated that the worship of the Pahcha Devatas (the five Devatas) S’iva, S’akti Visnu, Ganes’a, and Surya is the best, the highest, the destroyer of the old age, disease, death, evils and sorrows, the most auspicious and leading to the highest bliss. In fact, the worship of these Pahcha Devatas is the source of acquiring all the Siddhis (the success) and saves one from going to the hells. From their worship springs the Bhaktic Tree and then and then only the Root of the Tree of all Karmic bonds is severed for ever and ever. This is the step to Mukti (final liberation) and is the indestructible state. By this one can get Salokya, Sarsti, Sarupya, and Samipya, the different state of beatitudes in which the soul (1) resides in the same world with the Deity, (2) possesses the same station, condition, or rank, or equality with the Supreme Being in power and all the Divine attributes (the last of the four grades of Mukti), (3) possesses the sameness of form or gets assimilated to the Deity or (4) gets intimately united, identified or absorbed into the Deity. O Auspicious One! The worshipper of these five Devatas has never to see any of the hells, watched by My messengers. Those who are devoid of the devotion to the Devi see My abode; but those who go to the Tirthas of Hari, who hold Harivasaras (festivities on the days of Hari) who bow down at the feet of Hari and worship Hari, never come to My abode named Samyamana. Those Brahmanas that are purified by their performing the three Sandhyas and by the following the pure Acharas (customs and observances), those that find no pleasure until they worship the Devi, those that are attached to their own Dharmas and their own Acharas, never come to My abode.

My terrible messengers, seeing the devotees of S’iva, run away out of terror as snakes run away terrified by Garuda. I also order My messengers with nooses in their hands never to go to them. My messengers go mostly to other persons than the servants of Hari. No sooner do My Messengers see the worshippers of the Krisna Mantra, than they run away as snakes get terrified at the sight of Garuda. Chitragupta, too, one of the beings in Yama’s world, recording the vices and virtues of mankind, strike off the names of the Devi worshippers, out of fear and prepare Madhuparka, etc., for them (a mixture of honey; respectful offering made to a guest or to the bridegroom on his arrival at the door of the father of the bride). They rise higher than the Brahma Lokas and go to the Devi’s abode, i.e., to Manidvipa. Those that are the worshippers of the S’akti Mantra and are highly fortunate, whose contact removes the sins of others, they deliver the thousand generations (from the downward course). As bundles and bundles of dry grasses become burnt to ashes, no sooner they are thrown into fire, so the delusion at once becomes itself deluded at the sight of the forms of those devotees.

At their sight, lust, anger, greed, disease, sorrow, old age, death, fear, Kala (time that takes away the life of persons), the good and bad karmas, pleasures and enjoyments drop off to a great distance. O Fair One! Now I have described to you the states of those persons that are not under the control of Kala, good and bad karmas, pleasures and enjoyments, etc., and those that do not suffer those pains. Now I am speaking of this visible body. Listen. Earth, water, fire, air, and ether are the five Maha Bhutas (the great elements); these are the seeds of this visible body of the person and are the chief factors in the work of creation. The body that is made up of earth and other elements is transient and artificial, i.e., that body becomes burnt to ashes. Within this visible body, bound, is there a Purusa of the size of a thumb; that is called the Jiva Purusa; the subtle JTva assumes those subtle bodies for enjoying the effects of karmas. In My world, that subtle body is not burnt by the burning fire. If that subtle body be immersed in water, if that be beaten incessantly or if it be struck by a weapon or pierced by a sharp thorn, that body is not destroyed. That body is not burnt nor broken by the burning hot and molten material, by the red hot iron, by hot stones by embracing a hot image or by falling into a burning cauldron. That body has to suffer incessant pains. O Fair One! Thus I have dwelt on the subject of the several bodies and the causes thereof according to the S’astras. Now I will describe to you the characters of all the other Kundas. Listen.

Here ends the Thirty-sixth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the destruction of the fear of the Yama of those who are the worshippers of the Five Devatas, in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-60. Dharmaraja said All the Kundas (hells) are circular in form like the Full Moon. Of these, the Vahnikunda has the fire lit at its bottom, by the help of various kinds of stones. This Kunda will not be destroyed till Mahapralaya comes. Here the sinners are tormented severely. It looks like a blazing coke. The flames are rising from it one hundred hands high. In circumference those flames are two miles. This is named Vahnikunda. It is full of sinners crying loudly. It is constantly watched by My messengers who are chastising and punishing the sinners. Next comes the Tapta Kunda. It is filled with hot water and full of rapacious animals. The sinners there are severely beaten by My messengers and they are always crying out very loudly, which is being echoed and re-echoed all around terribly.

It extends for one mile. This Kunda is filled with hot salt water and the abode of many crows. Then there is the Bhayanaka Kunda. It extends for two miles and it is filled with sinners. They are being punished by My messengers and they are incessantly crying, “Save us, save us.”

Next comes the Vistha Kunda. It is filled with faeces and excrements where the sinners are moving without any food and with their palate and throats dry. Its size is two miles and it is very bad and ugly with foetid and nasty smell. It is always filled with sinners, who are being chastised by My Dutas (messengers) and eat those faeces and excrements. The worms therein are constantly biting and stinging them and they are crying, “deliver us, deliver us.” Then comes the hot Muttra Kunda. It is filled with the hot urine and the worms thereof. The great sinners always dwell here. It measures four miles; and it is quite dark. My Dutas always beat them and their throats, lips, palates are all dry. Then comes the S'lesma Kunda. It is filled with phlegm and the insects thereof. The sinners dwell in phlegm and eat that phlegm. Then comes the Gara Kunda. It is filled with (factitious) poison. It measures one mile. The sinners eat this poison and dwell here. The worms thereof bite them. They tremble at the chastisement of My Dutas and cry aloud. My messengers look like serpents, with teeth like thunderbolt and they are very furious and fierce, with their throats dry and their words very harsh. Then comes Dusika Kunda. It is filled with the rheum and dirt of the eyes and it measures one mile. Innumerable worms are born therein. Numberless sinners live there, and as they move, the insects immediately bite and sting them. Next comes the Vasa Kunda. It is filled with the serum or marrow of the flesh and it measures one-half mile. The sinners dwell there, chastised and punished by My messengers. Then comes the S'ukra Kunda. It measures two miles in diameter. The insects, born in the semen, bite the sinners, and they move on and on. Then comes the Rakta Kunda, with very offensive, foetid smell. It is deep like a well and filled with blood. The sinners dwell here, drinking blood. The insects therein are always biting them. Then follows the As'ru Kunda. It measures in size one fourth the measure of the well (above-mentioned). It is always filled with hot tears of the eyes; and many sinners are seen there living weeping and crying and being bitten by the snakes. Then there is the Gatra Mala Kunda. The sinners are chastised and punished there by My messengers and being bitten by the insects thereof, they eat the dirts of the body and dwell there. Then comes the Kama Mala Kunda. The sinners eat the wax of the ear and fill the place. The insects always bite them and they are crying aloud. It measures one fourth the measure of a Vapi. Then comes the Majja Kunda. It is filled with fat and marrow, emitting foetid offensive odour. It measures one fourth the measure of a Vapi. The great sinners always dwell there. Then comes the Mamsa Kunda. This is filled with the greasy flesh. It measures (one-fourth) that of a Vapi. Those who sell their daughters dwell here. My messengers always chastise and punish them and horrible insects bite and sting them and they cry, out of fear and agony, "Save us, save us," and eat at times that flesh. Then come in succession the four Kundas Nakha, Loma and others. They also measure each one-fourth that of a Vapi. The sinners dwell there, always chastised by My messengers. Next comes the very hot Tamra Kunda. Burning cokes exist on the top of very hot coppers. There are lakhs and lakhs of very hot copper figures in that Kunda. The sinners, being compelled by My messengers, are made to embrace each of these hot copper figures and they cry loudly and live there. It measures four miles. Then come the burning Angara Kunda and the hot Lauha Dhara Kunda. Here the sinners are made to embrace the hot iron figures and, feeling themselves burnt, cry out of fear and agony. Whenever My messengers punish them, they immediately cry out, "Save us, save us." It measures eight miles; and it is pitch dark and very awful. This is named the hot Lauha Kunda. Then come the Charma Kunda and Sura Kunda. The sinners, beaten by My men, eat the skin and drink the hot urine and dwell there. Then comes the S'almalT Kunda; it is overspread with thorns and thorny trees, causing intense pain. It measures two miles. Millions and millions of great sinners are made by My men to fall from the tops of those trees down below where their bodies get pierced by very sharp thorns, six feet long; and thus they dwell there, beaten by My men. Out of thirst, their palates get dried up; and they cry out repeatedly, "Water, water." Out of fear, they get very anxious and then their heads get broken by the clubs brought down on them by My men. So they move there like the beings burnt in very hot oil. Then comes the Visoda Kunda. It measures two miles in diameter and is filled with the poison of the serpent called Taksakas. My men punish the sinners and they drink the poison thereof and dwell there. Then comes the hot Taila Kunda. There are no insects here. Only the great sinners dwell. All around burning coals are flaring and when My men beat the sinners, they run hither and thither. It is filled with horrible intense darkness and it is exceedingly painful. It looks dreadful and measures two miles. Then comes the Kunta Kunda. Sharp pointed iron weapons like tridents are placed in order all round. The sinners, pierced by those weapons, are seen encircling the Kunda. It measures one-half mile. Beaten by My men, their throats and lips get dried up. Then comes the Krimi Kunda. It is filled with terrible worms and insects, snake-like with sharp teeth, of the size of a S'anku (a Sal tree) deformed and hideous looking; and it is filled with pitch darkness, terrible to look at. Beaten by My men, the great sinners dwell there. Then comes the Puya Kunda. It measures eight miles in diameter (or in circumference?). The sinners dwell and eat the pus thereof and, are beaten by My men. Then comes the Sarpa Kunda. Millions and millions of snakes of the length of a Tal tree are existing there. These serpents encircle the sinners and as they bite them. My men also beat them at the same time. So there arises a general hue and cry, "Save us, save us; we are done for." Then come in order the Dams'a Kunda, Mas'aka Kunda, and the Garala Kunda. These are filled with gad-flies, mosquitoes, and poison respectively. Each of them measures one mile. The sinners' hands and feet are tied up. So when the gad-flies and mosquitoes fiercely sting them, and My men violently beat them simultaneously, they raise a loud uproar and are made to move on, in their tied states by My persons. Their bodies get thoroughly reddened and covered with blood by the stinging of the flies, etc. Then come the Vajra Kunda and the Vris'chika Kunda filled respectively with Vajra insects and the scorpions. Each of them measures one-half that of the Vapi. The sinners that dwell there, are incessantly bitten by insects (Vajras and scorpions). Then come in order the S'ara Kunda, S'ula Kunda, and the Khadga Kundas. They are filled respectively with arrows, spikes, and scimitars. Each of them measures one half that of the Vapi. The sinners are pierced by arrows, etc., and become covered over with blood and dwell there. Then comes the Gola Kunda. It is filled with boiling hot water and it is pitch dark. The sinners live there, bitten by the insects. This Kunda measures half that of the Vapi. The insects bite them and My men beat them so their fear knows no bounds; everyone of them is weeping and crying loudly. This Kunda is filled with hideously offensive smells. So the pains of the sinners are infinite. The Nakra Kunda comes next. It measures half the Vapi, is filled with millions and millions of crocodiles living in water. The horrible looking deformed sinners live there. The Kaka Kunda then follows. The sinners here are being bitten by hundreds of deformed crows eating faeces, urines and phlegm. Then come the Manthana Kunda and Vija Kunda. These are filled respectively with insects called Manthana and Vija. Each of them measures one hundred Dhanus (one Dhanu - four hastas). Those insects are stinging the sinners and they cry out very loudly. Then follows the Vajra Kunda. It measures one hundred Dhanus. Many insects with their teeth as hard as thunderbolt live there and bite the sinners who cry out loudly. It is pitch dark. Then comes the hot Pasana Kunda. It measures twice that of the VapT. It is so built of hot stones as it resembles a burning mass of coal. The sinners become restless with the heat and turn round and round in the middle. Then comes the Pasana Kunda and the Lala Kunda. The Pasana Kunda is made up of the sharp pointed stones, having sharp edges. Innumerable sinners dwell there. Many red beings live in the Lala Kunda. Then comes the Mapi Kunda. Its size is one hundred Dhanus and its depth is two miles. It is made up of hot stones, each measuring the Anjana mountain. The sinners, beaten and driven by My persons, move on and on in the middle. Then comes the Churna Kunda. It measures two miles (in circumference) and is filled with (seven) churnas (powders). The sinners, driven and beaten by My men, go on, restless hither and thither and eat the powders and get themselves burnt. Then comes the Chakra Kunda. Here a potter's wheel with sixteen sharp-edged spokes is constantly whirling round and round; the sinners are being crushed by this wheel.

61-80. Then comes the Vakra Kunda. Its depth is eight miles. It is fashioned very much curved; and with and sharp slope it has gone down. It is built on the plan of a mountain cave, filled with hot water and it is enveloped with deep dense darkness. The aquatic animals there are biting the sinners, who got very much restless and are crying out very loudly. Then comes the Kurma Kunda. Here millions and millions of tortoises in the water awfully distorted, are biting the sinners. Then comes the Jvala Kunda. It is built of fierce fiery flames. It measures two miles in circumference. The sinners here are always in great difficulty, with intense pain and crying out loudly. Next follows the Bhasma Kunda. It measures two miles. The sinners get themselves well burnt in hot ashes and live there, eating the ashes.

It is filled with hot stones and hot irons. The sinners here are always being burnt in hot irons and hot stones and their throats and palates are being parched up. Then comes the Dagdha Kunda. It is deep and horrible. It measures two miles in circumference. My messengers threaten always the sinners there. Then comes the Suchi Kunda. It is filled with salt water. Waves are always rising there. It is filled with various aquatic animals making all sorts of noises. It measures eight miles in circumference and it is deep and dark. The sinners here cannot see each other and are bitten by the animals. Pained very much, they cry out loudly. Then comes the Asipattra Kunda. On the top surface of the Kunda there is a very big Tal tree very high. The edges of the leaves of this tree are sharp like the edge of a sword. One mile below this Tal tree is situated the Kunda. The sharp-edged Tal leaves, then, fall on the bodies of the sinners from the height of a mile and they get cut and wounded; blood comes out of them and the sinners, in great pain, cry out “save, save.” It is very deep, very dark and filled with Rakta Kita a kind of blood like insects. This is the horrible Asipatra Kunda. Next comes the Ksura Dhara Kunda, measuring one hundred Dhanus (one Dhanu - four hastas). It is filled with keen-edged weapons, as sharp as nice razors. The blood of the sinners is flowing here profusely. Then comes the Suchi Mukha Kunda, filled with sharp weapons of the form of long needles. It measures fifty Dhanus. The sinners get pierced by them end are constantly emitting blood. Their intense pain knows no bounds. Then comes the Gokamukha Kunda; inhabited by a sort of insect, called Goka. They look like mouths; hence they are named Gokamukha. It is deep like a well and it measures twenty Dhanus. The great sinners suffer an intense amount of pain there. They have got to keep their mouths always downwards as the Goka insects always bite and sting them. Then comes the Nakra Kunda. It resembles like the mouth of a crocodile and measures sixteen Dhanus. It is deep like a well and numbers of sinners dwell there. Then comes the Gaja Dams’a Kunda. It measures one hundred Dhanus. Next comes the Gomukha Kunda. It measures thirty Dhanus and resembles the mouth of a cow. It gives incessant pains and troubles to the sinners.

81-101. Then comes the Kumbhipaka Kunda. It is like a wheel resembling that of this Kalachakra, very horrible; and it is rotating incessantly. It looks like a water-jar, measuring eight miles, and it is quite dark. Its depth is one lakh Purusas of the height of 100,000 persons. There are many other Kundas, Tapta Taila Kunda and Tapta Taila Tamra Kunda, etc., within it. This Kunda is filled with almost unconscious great sinners and insects. They beat each other and cry out loudly. My messengers also threaten them with clubs and Musalas. So at times they fall dizzy-headed, at times they get unconscious, and sometimes they get up and cry. O Fair One! The numbers of sinners here equal to four times that of all the other sinners in all the other Kundas. They know no death, however much you beat them. Their lives persist. For the body is built up for sufferance, it is indestructible. This Kumbhipaka Kunda is the chief of all the Kundas. This Kunda where the sinners are tied to a thread built by Kala, where My men lift the sinners on high at one time, and sink them down below at another time, where the sinners becoming suffocated for a long time, get unconscious, where their sufferings know no bounds, where it is filled with boiling oil, is named the Kalasutra Kunda. Then comes the Matsyoda Kunda, hollow like a well. It is filled with boiling water and it measures twenty-four Dhanus. Next comes the Abatoda Kunda. It measures one hundred Dhanus. The sinners get their bodies burned and chastised by My persons, live there. No sooner they drop into the water of this Kunda, then they are attacked with all sorts of diseases. Then comes the Krimikantuka Kunda. The sinners are bitten by the Krimi Kantuka insects and cry out loudly, creating a general consternation and live there. Its another name is Aruntuda Kunda. Next comes the Pams'u Kunda. It measures one hundred Dhanus. It is overspread with burning rice husks. The sinners eat those hot husks and live there. Then comes the Pas'avestana Kunda. It measures two miles. No sooner the sinners fall in this Kunda than they are twined round by this rope or Pas'a. Hence its name. Then comes the Sulaprota Kunda. It measures twenty Dhanus. No sooner the sinners fall here than they are encircled with the Sulastra (darts). Then comes the Prakampana Kunda. It measures one mile. It is filled with ice-cold water. The sinners, going there, shiver at once. Next follows the Ulka Kunda. It measures twenty Dhanus. It is filled with burning to ashes and meteors. My messengers thrust the torches and meteors into the mouths of the sinners living there. Next comes the Andha-Kupa Kunda. It is pitch-dark, shaped like a well, circular and very horrible. The sinners beat each other and eat the insects thereof. Their bodies are burnt with hot water; they cannot see anything on account of dire darkness.

102-118. The Kunda where the sinners are pierced by various weapons is known as the Vedhana Kunda. It measures twenty Dhanus. Then comes the Dandatadana Kunda. It measures sixteen Dhanus. The sinners dwell here, threatened by My messengers. Then comes the Jalarandhra Kunda. Here the sinners live encompassed by a great net as fishes, etc., are tied in a net. Next comes the Dehachurna Kunda. It is quite dark and its depth is that of the height of one koti persons; its circumference is twenty Dhanus. The sinners, here, encompassed by iron chains are made to fall below where their bodies are reduced to powders and they are inert and almost unconscious. The Kunda where the sinners are crushed and threatened by My messengers is known as the Dalana Kunda; it measures sixteen Dhanus in circumference. Next comes the S'osana Kunda. It is deep up to the height of one hundred persons and it is very dark. It measures thirty Dhanus. On falling on the hot sand, the throats and palates of sinners get dried up. Their pain knows no bounds. Hence it is called the S'osana Kunda. Then comes the Kasa Kunda. It measures one hundred Dhanus. It is filled with the juices of skins and its smell is very offensive. The sinners eat those astringent waters and live there. Then comes S'urpa Kunda. It measures twelve Dhanus and is extended like a winnowing basket. It is filled with hot iron dust and many sinners live there, eating those foetid iron dusts. Next comes the Jvalamukha Kunda. It is filled with red hot sand. From the (bottom) centre rises a flame, over-spreading the mouth of the Kunda. It measures twenty Dhanus. The sinners are burnt here by the flame and live awfully; they get fainted no sooner they are dropped in this Kunda. Then comes the Dhumrandha Kunda. It is dark, quite filled with smoke. Within that the hot bricks are placed. The sinners get suffocated with smoke; and their eye-sight becomes also obstructed. It measures one hundred Dhanus. Then comes the Nagabestana Kunda. It is encircled and filled with the serpents. No sooner the sinners are let fall there, than they are surrounded by the snakes. O Savitri! Thus I have spoken to you about the eighty-six Kundas and their characteristics. Now what more do you want to hear? Say.

Here ends the Thirty-seventh Chapter of the Ninth Book on the eighty-six Kundas and their characteristics in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Savitn said “O Lord! Give me the devotion to the Devi to that Adya S’akti Bhagavati Maha Maye, ParamesVari Mayi that is the Essence of all essences, the Door of final liberation to the human beings, and the Cause of delivering them from hells, that is the Root of all the Dharmas that lead to Mukti, that destroys all the inauspiciousness, that takes away the fear of all the Karmas, and that takes away always all the sins committed before. O Thou, the Foremost amongst the knowers of the Vedas! How many kinds of Muktis are there in this world? What is the True Bhakti? What are its characteristics? What is to be done by which the enjoyment of the karmas done can be desisted and nullified? O Bhagavan! The woman kind has been created by the Creator as devoid of any Tattvajhana or true knowledge; now tell me something about this True Knowledge. All the charities, sacrifices, bathing in the sacred places of pilgrimages, observing vows and austerities cannot be compared with one sixteenth of imparting knowledge to those who are ignorant (of true knowledge). Mother is hundred times superior to father; this is certain; but the Spiritual Teacher, the Giver of True Knowledge, is hundred times more to be reverenced and worshipped than the mother. O Lord!”

7-79. Dharmaraja said O Child! What boons you desired of Me before, I granted them all to you. Now I grant this boon to you that, “Let the devotion towards the S’akti now arise in your mind.” O Auspicious One! You want to hear the reciting of the Glories of S’ri Devi; by this, both he who puts forward the question and he who hears the answer, all their families are delivered. When the S’esa Naga Ananta Deva with His thousand mouths is unable to recite the glories of the Devi, when Mahadeva cannot describe with His five mouths, when the Creator Brahma is incapable to recite Her with His four mouths, when Visnu, the Omniscient, falls back, when Kartikeya with His six mouths cannot sufficiently describe, when Ganes'a, the Guru of the Gurus of the great yogis is incapable, when the Pundits, the knowers of the four Vedas, the Essence of all the S'astras, cannot know even a bit of Her, when Sarasvati becomes inert in going to describe Her glories; when Sanatkumara, Dharma, Sanatana, Sananda, Sanaka, Kapila, Surya and other sons of the Creator have fallen back, when the other Siddhas, Yogmdras, Munindras are quite incapable to glorify the deeds of Prakriti Devi, then how can I recite fully the Glories of Her? Whose lotus-feet Brahma, Visnu, S'iva and others meditate; and lo! when it becomes difficult for Her devotees even to think of Her, then what wonder is there that She will be so very rare to others! Brahma, skilled in the knowledge of the Vedas knows more of Her than what other ordinary persons know so little of Her auspicious Glories. More than Brahma, Ganes'a, the Guru of the Jhanins, knows; again S'ambhu, the Omniscient, knows the best of all. For, in ancient times, the knowledge of the Prakriti Devi was given to Him by Krisna, the Highest Spirit in a solitary place in the Rasa Mandalam in the region of Goloka. Mahadeva, again, gave it to Dharma in the S'ivaloka; Dharma again gave the Prakriti Mantra to My father. My father became successful (Siddha) in the worship of Prakriti Devi when he practised austerities. Of old, the Devas wanted to offer to me the Government of the Yama Loka; but as I was very much dispassionate towards the world, I became unwilling and became ready to perform austerities. Then my Father told the Glories of Prakriti Devi. Now I describe to you what I heard from my Father and what is stated in the Vedas, though very difficult to comprehend. Listen carefully. O Fair Faced One! As the eternal space does not know its own extent, so Prakriti Devi Herself knows not Her own Glories; then what can be said of any other person on this! She is the Self of all, endowed with all powers and lordship, the Cause of all causes, the Lord of all, the Origin of all and the Preserver of all; She is Eternal, always with Her Cosmic Body, full of everlasting bliss, without any special form, unrestrained, having no fear, without any disease and decay, unattached, the Witness of all, the Refuge of all.

and Higher than the Highest; She is with Maya and She is Mula Prakriti; the objects created by Her being known as the Prakriti creation; Who rennains as Prakriti and Purusa inseparable from each other as Agni and Her burning force; the Maha Maya, of the nature of everlasting existence, intelligence and bliss. Though formless.

She assumes forms for the gratification of the desires of Her Bhaktas. She created first the beautiful form of Gopala Sundari, i.e., the form of S'ri Krisna very lovely and beautiful, captivating the mind. His body is blue like the fresh rain cloud; He is young and dressed like that of a cow herd. Millions of Kandarpas (the Love deity) are, as it were, playing in his body. His eyes vie with the midday lotus of the autumn. The beauty of His face throws under shade the millions and millions of the Full Moon. His body is decorated with invaluable ornaments decked with jewels. Sweet smile reigns ever in His lips; it is adorned moreover with His yellow coloured invaluable robe. He is Parama Brahma. His whole body is burning with the Brahma Teja, the Fire of Brahma.

His Body is Fiery. He is lovely, sweet to look at, of a peaceful temper, the Lord of Radha and He is Infinite. (Note The Universe; as we see, is unreal like what we see in the kaleidoscope; various apparent pictures of an endless variety of beautiful colours and forms.) He is sitting on a jewel throne in the Rasa Mandalam, and is incessantly looked upon by the smiling lovely Gopis at one and the same time. He is two-armed. A garland made of wild flowers is hanging from His neck. He is playing on His flute. His breast is resplendent with Kaustubha gem that He always wears. His body is anointed with Kunkuma (saffron), aguru (the fragrant and cooling paste of the Aguru wood), musk, and sandal-paste. The garland of beautiful Champaka and Malati flowers is hanging from His neck.

On His head, the beautiful crest is being seen, a little obliquely situated in the form of the beautiful Moon. Thus the Bhaktas, filled with Bhaktis, meditate on Him. O Child! It is through His fear that the Creator is doing His work of creation of this Universe; and is recording the

Prarabdha fruits of their Karmas. It is through His fear that Visnu is awarding the fruits of Tapas and preserving the Universe. By His command the Kalagni Rudra Deva is destroying all. By Whose favour S'iva has become Mrityumjaya, the Conqueror of Death and the Foremost of the Jhanins; knowing whom S'iva has become Himself endowed with knowledge and the Lord of the knowers of knowledge, full of the Highest Bliss, devotion and dispassion. Through Whose fear the wind becomes the foremost of runners and carries things, the Sun gives heat, Indra gives rain, Yama destroys, Agni burns, and Water cools all the things. By Whose command the Regents of the (ten) quarters of the sky are watching and preserving nice orders; through Whose fear the planets are describing their several orbits. Through Whose fear, trees flower and yield fruits; By Whose command the Kala destroys all. By Whose command all the beings whether on land or in water are quitting their lives in time; until the proper time comes no man does not die even if he be pierced whether in battle or in danger. By Whose command the wind supports the water; the water supports the tortoise; the tortoise supports the Ananta and the Ananta supports the earth; the earth supports the oceans, mountain and all the jewels. The earth is of the nature of forgiveness, i.e., endures all. For this reason all things, moving and non-moving, rest on Her and again melt away in Her. Seventy-one Divine Yugas constitute one Indra's life period. Twenty- eight Indra's life periods constitute Brahma's one day and one night. Thus thirty days constitute Brahma's one month; so two months constitute one Ritu (season); six Ritus make one year. Thus one hundred years constitute Brahma's life. When Brahma dies, S'ri Hari's eye closes. That is the Prakritik Pralaya. At this time, everything, moving and non-moving, from the Deva loka to Bhur loka (earth) dies. The Creator Brahma gets dissolved in the navel of S'ri Krisna. The four-armed Visnu, of Vaikuntha, sleeps on Ksira Samudra, the ocean of milk, i.e.. He dissolves on the left side of S'ri Krisna, the Highest Spirit. All the other S'aktis (forces) dissolve in Mula Prakriti, the Maya of Visnu. The Mula Prakriti Durga, the Presiding Deity of Buddhi (reason) dissolves in the Buddhi of Krisna. Skanda, the part of Narayana, dissolves in His breast. Gane'sa, the foremost of the Devas, born in part of Krisna, dissolves in the arm of S'ri Krisna. And those who are born in parts of Padma, dissolve in Her body and Padma dissolves in the body of Radha. All the cow-herdesses and all the bodies of the Devas dissolve in Radha's body. But Radha, the Presiding Deity of the Prana of S'ri Krisna, dissolves in the Prana of S'ri Krisna. Savitri, the four Vedas and all the S'astras dissolve in Sarasvati; and Sarasvati gets dissolved in the tongue of S'ri Krisna, the Highest Self. The Gopas in the region of Goloka dissolve in the pores of His skin; the Prana Vayu of all dissolve in His Prana Vayu; the fire dissolves in the fire in His belly; water dissolves in the tip of His tongue, and the Vaisnavas, (devotees of Visnu), drinking the nectar of Bhakti, the Essence of all essences, dissolve in His lotus-feet. All smaller Virats dissolve in the Great Virat and the Great Virat dissolves in the Body of S'ri Krisna. O Child! He is Krisna, on the pores of Whose skin are situated endless Universes; at the closing of Whose eyes, the Prakritic Pralaya comes and on the opening of Whose eyes, the creation takes place. The closing and opening of the eyes takes the same time. Brahma's creation lasts one hundred years and the Pralaya lasts one hundred years. O One of good vows! There is no counting how many Brahmas or how many creations and dissolutions have taken place. As one cannot count the number of dusts, so one cannot count the creations and dissolutions. This is the Great Unspeakable Wonder! Again on Whose closing of the eyes the Pralaya takes place and on whose opening of the eyes the creation takes place, out of the will of God, That Krisna dissolves at the time of Pralaya in Prakriti. This Highest S'akti, the Mula Prakriti is the Only One without a second; it is the only one Nirguna and the Highest Purusa. It is considered as "Sat" existing, by the Seers of the Vedas. Such a thing as Mula Prakriti is the unchanged state (Mukti). During the Pralaya, this only One Mula Prakriti appears as Jhana S'akti or the Knowledge Force. Who can in this universe recite Her glories? Mukti is of four kinds.

(1) Salokya, (2) Sarupya, (3) Samipya and (4) Nirvana. So it is stated in the Vedas. Out of them Bhakti towards the Deva is the highest; so much so that the Deva Bhakti is superior to Mukti. Mukti gives Salokya, Sarupya, Samipya, and Nirvana. But the Bhaktas do not want anything. They want service of the Lord. They do not want anything else. The state of becoming S'iva, of becoming an Amara or an immortal, becoming a Brahma, the birth, death, disease, old age, fear, sorrow, or wealth, or assuming a divine form, or Nirvana or Moksa all are looked on alike by the Bhaktas with disregard and contempt. Because Mukti is without any service while Bhakti increases this service. Thus I have told you the difference between Bhakti and Mukti. Now hear about the cutting off of the fruits of the past Karmas. O Chaste one! This service of the Highest Lord severs the ties of Karmas (past acts). This service is really the True Knowledge. So, O Child! I have now told you the Real Truth, leading to auspicious results. Now you can go freely as you desire. Thus saying to Savitri, Yama, the son of Surya, gave life back to her husband and blessing her, became ready to go to His own abode. Seeing Dharmaraja ready to go away, Savitri became sorry to have the bereavement of a good company, bowed down at His feet and began to cry. Yama, the Ocean of Mercy, hearing the crying of Savitri began to weep and told the following words

80-96. Dharma said O Child! You enjoy in this holy Bharata happiness for one lakh years and you will in the end go to the Deviloka or Mani Dvipa. Now go back to your house and observe for fourteen years the vow called Savitri-vrata for the mukti of women. This Vrata is to he observed on the fourteenth day of the white fortnight in the month of Jyaistha. Then observe the Maha-Laksmi Vrata. Its proper time is the eighth day of the bright fortnight of the month of Bhadra. For sixteen years consecutively without any break this vow is to be observed. The woman who practises with devotion this vow, goes to the abode of Mula Prakriti. You would worship on every Tuesday in every month the Devi Mangala Chandika, the giver of all good; on the eighth day in the bright fortnight you should worship Devi Sasthi (i.e., Devasena); you should worship Manasa Devi, the giver of all siddhis, on the Samkranti day (when the Sun enters another sign) in every year; you should worship Radha, the Central Figure of Rasa, more than the Prana of Krisna on every Full Moon night in the month of Kartik and you should observe fasting on the eighth day in the bright fortnight and worship the Visnu Maya Bhagavati Devi, the Destructrix of all difficulties and dangers.

(Note The Rasa is the playing out of the Vedantic saying of Brahma as "Raso vai Sah." He is of the nature of Rasa, the most sweet and lovely Divine Principle which unites the Rasika and the Rasika.) The chaste woman having husband and sons who worships the World Mother Mula Prakriti, whether in Yantra, or in Mantra or in image, enjoys all pleasures in this world; and, in the end, goes to the Deviloka or Mani Dvipa. O Child! The worshipper Sadhaka (one who is in one's way to success) must worship all the manifestations of the Devi, day and night. At all times one must worship the omnipresent Durga, the Highest Isvari. There is no other way to attain blessedness than this. Thus saying, Dharmaraja went to His own abode. Savitri, too, with her husband Satyavan went to her home. Both Savitri and Satyavan, when they reached home, narrated all their stories to their friends and acquaintances. In time, by the blessing of Yama, Savitri's father got sons and father-in-law recovered his eye-sight and kingdom and Savitri Herself got sons. For one lakh years, Savitri enjoyed pleasures in this holy land of Bharata, and ultimately went with her husband to the Deviloka.

Savitri is the Presiding Deity of the Suryamandalam, the solar orb. The Sun is the central Para Brahma. The Gayatri Mantra, the Presiding Devi, proves the existence of the highest Brahma in the centre of the Sun. Therefore She is called Savitri. Or Her name is Savitri because all the Vedas have come out of Her. Thus I have narrated the excellent anecdote of Savitri, and the fruitions of the Karmas of the several Jivas. Now what more do you want to hear? Say.

Here ends the Thirty-eighth Chapter in the Ninth Book on the glories of the Devi and on the nature of Bhakti in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3 Narada said “O Lord! I have heard in the discourse on Savitri and Yama about the Formless Devi Mula Prakriti and the glories of Savitri, all true and leading to the endless good. Now I want to hear the story of the Devi Laksmi. O Thou, the Chief of the knowers of the Vedas! What is the nature of Laksmi? By whom was She first worshipped? and by what Mantra? Kindly describe Her glories to me.

4-33. Narayana said Of old, in the beginning of the Prakritik Creation, from the left side of Krisna, the Supreme Spirit, appeared in the Rasamandalam (the Figure Dance) a Devi. She looked exceedingly handsome, of a dark blue colour, of spacious hips, of thin waist, and with high breast, looking twelve years old, of steady youth, of a colour of white Champaka flower and very lovely. The beauty of Her face throws under shade millions and millions of autumnal full moons. Before Her wide expanded eyes, the midday lotus of the autumnal season becomes highly ashamed. By the Will of God, this Devi suddenly divided Herself into two parts. The two looked equal in every respect; whether in beauty, qualities, age, loveliness, colour, body, spirit, dress, ornaments, smile, glance, love, or humanity, they were perfectly equal.

Now she who appeared from the right side is named Radha and she who came from the left side is named Maha Laksmi. Radha wanted first the two armed S'ri Krisna, Who was Higher than the highest; then Maha Laksmi wanted Him. Radha came out of the right side and wanted first Krisna; so Krisna, too, divided himself at once into two parts. From His right side came out the two-armed and from his left side came out the four-armed. The two-armed person first made over to Maha Laksmi the four armed One; then the two armed

Person Himself took Radha. Laksmi looks on the whole universe with a cooling eye; hence She is named Laksmi and as She is great, She is called Maha Laksmi. And for that reason the Lord of Radha is two-armed and the Lord of Laksmi is four-armed. Radha is pure Apra kritic S'uddha Sattva (of the nature of pure Sattva Guna, the illuminating attribute) and surrounded by the Gopas and GopTs. The four-armed Purusa, on the other hand, took Laksmi (Padma) to Vaikuntha. The two-armed person is Krisna; and the four-armed is Narayana. They are equal in all respects. Maha Laksmi became many by Her Yogic powers (i.e.. She remained in full in Vaikuntha and assumed many forms in parts). Maha Laksmi of Vaikuntha is full, of pure Sattva Guna, and endowed with all sorts of wealth and prosperity. She is the crest of woman-kind as far as loving one's husbands is concerned. She is the Svarga Laksmi in the Heavens; the Naga Laksmi of the serpents, the Nagas, in the nether regions; the Raja Laksmi of the kings and the Household Laksmi of the householders. She resides in the houses of house-holders as prosperity and the most auspicious of all good things. She is the progenetrix. She is the Surabhi of cows and She is the Daksina (the sacrificial fee) in sacrifices. She is the daughter of the milk ocean and she is Padmini, the beauty of the spheres of the Moon and the Sun. She is the lustre and beauty of the ornaments, gems, fruits, water, kings, queens, heavenly women, of all the houses, grains, clothings, cleansed places, images, auspicious jars, pearls, jewels, crest of jewels, garlands, diamonds, milk, sandal, beautiful twigs, fresh rain cloud, or of all other colours. She was first worhipped in Vaikuntha by Narayana. Next She was worshipped by Brahma and then by S'ankara with devotion. She was worshipped by Visnu in the Kshirode Samudra. Then she was worshipped by Svayambhuva Manu, then by Indras amongst men, then by Munis, Risis, good householders, by the Gandharbas, in the Gandharbaloka; by the Nagas in the Nagaloka. She was worshipped with devotion by Brahma for one fortnight commencing from the bright eighth day in the month of Bhadra and ending on the eighth day of the dark fortnight in the three-worlds. She was worshipped by Visnu, with devotion in the three worlds on the meritorious Tuesday in the months of Pausa, Chaitra, and Bhadra. Manu, also, worshipped Her on the Pausa Sankranti (the last day of the month of Pausa when the Sun enters another sign) and on the auspicious Tuesday in the month of Magha. Thus the worship of Maha Laksmi is made prevalent in the three worlds. She was worshipped by Indra, the Lord of the Devas and by Mangala (Mars) on Tuesday. She was then worshipped by Kedara, Nila, Subala, Dhruva, Uttanapada, S'akra, Bali, Kas'yapa, Daksa, Kardama, Surya, Priyavrata, Chandra, Vayu, Kuvera, Varuna, Yama, Hutasana and others. Thus Her worship extended by and by to all the places. She is the Presiding Deity of all wealth; so She is the wealth of all.

Here ends the Thirty-ninth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the story of Maha Laksmi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narada said “O Lord! How did the eternal Devi Maha Laksmi the dweller in Vaikuntha, the beloved of Narayana, the Presiding Deity of Vaikuntha, come down to the earth and how She, became the daughter of the ocean? By whom was She first praised? Kindly describe all these in detail to me and oblige.”

3-10. Narayana said O Narada! In ancient days when on Durvasa’s curse, Indra was dispossesed of his kingdom, all the Devas came down to earth. Laksmi, too, getting angry, quitted the Heavens, out of pain and sorrow and went to Vaikuntha and took the shelter of Narayana. The Devas, then, went to Brahma with their hearts full of sorrow and, taking Him from there, they all went to Narayana in Vaikuntha. Going there they all took refuge of the Lord of Vaikuntha. They were very much distressed and their throats, palate and lips were quite dry. At that time Laksmi, the wealth and prosperity of all, came down on earth by the command of Narayana and became born in part as the daughter of the ocean. The Devas, then with the Daityas churned the Ksiroda Ocean and, out of that, Maha Laksmi appeared. Visnu looked on Her. Her joy knew no bounds. She smiling, granted boons to the Devas and then offered a garland of flowers on the neck of Narayana (as a symbol of marriage celebrated). O Narada! the Devas, on the other hand, got back their kingdoms from the Asuras. They then worshipped and chanted hymns to Maha Laksmi and since then they became free from further dangers and troubles.

11-12. Narada said “O Bhagavan! Durvasa was the best of the Munis; he was attached to Brahma and had spiritual knowledge.

Why did he curse Indra? What offence had he committed? How did the Devas and Daityas churn the ocean? How, and by what hymns Laksmi became pleased and appeared before Indra? What passed on between them. Say all this, O Lord.”

13-25. Narayana said In ancient days, Indra the Lord of the three worlds, intoxicated with wine and becoming lustful and shameless, began to enjoy Rambha in a lonely grove. After having enjoyed her, he became attracted to her; his mind being wholly drawn to her, he remained there in that forest, his mind becoming very passionate. Indra then saw the Muni Durvasa on his way from Vaikuntha to

Kailas'a burning with the fire of Brahma. From the body of the Risi, emitted, as it were, the rays of the thousand midday Suns. On his head was the golden matted hair. On his breast there was the hoary holy thread; he wore torn clothes; on his hands there was the Danda and Kamandalu; on his forehead there was the bright Tilaka in the form of the Crescent Moon. (Tilaka - a sectarian mark on the forehead made with coloured earth or sandalpaste.)

One hundred thousand disciples, thoroughly-versed in the Vedas and the Vedangas, were attending him. The intoxicated Purandara, seeing him, bowed down to him and he began to chant with devotion hymns to his disciples also. They were very glad. The Risi with his disciples then blessed Indra and gave him one Parijata flower.

When the Muni was returning from the region of Vaikuntha, Visnu, gave him that beautiful Parijata flower. Old age, death, disease, sorrows, etc., all are removed by the influence of the flower; and the final liberation is also attained. The Devendra was intoxicated with his wealth; so taking the flower given by the Risi, he threw it on the head of the elephant Airarata. No sooner the elephant touched the flower, than he became suddenly like Visnu, as it were, in beauty.

form, qualities, fire and age. The elephant, then, forsook Indra and entered into a dense forest. The Lord of the Devas could, in no way, get him under his control. On the other hand, the Muni Durvasa seeing that Mahendra had thus dishonoured the flower, became inflamed with rage and cursed him saying, "O Indra! You are so mad with wealth that you have dishonoured me. The flower that I gave you so lovingly, you have thrown that, out of vanity, on the elephant's head!

26-46. No sooner one gets the food, water, fruits that had been offered to Visnu, one should eat that at once. Otherwise one incurs the sin of Brahmahattya. If anybody forsakes the things offered to Visnu, that he has got perchance, he becomes destitute of wealth, prosperity, intelligence, and his kingdom. And if he eats the food already offered to Visnu with devotion, he then elevates his hundred families passed before him and he himself becomes liberated while living. If anybody daily eats Visnu's Naivedyam (food offered to Visnu) and bow down before Him or worships Hah with devotion and chants hymns to Him, he becomes like Visnu in energy and wealth. By mere touch with the air round about his body, the places of pilgrimage become all purified. O You Stupid! The earth becomes purified by the contact of the dust of the feet of such a one devoted to Visnu. If anybody eats the food unoffered to Hari and flesh that is not offered to any Deity; if he eats the food of any unchaste woman, any woman without husband and sons, the food offered at any S'udra's Sradh (funeral) ceremony, the food offered by a Brahmana, who is a priest to the S'udras in honour of a S'iva Lingam, the food of a Brahman priest who subsists on the presents of a temple, the food of one who sells his daughter, the food of one who subsists on dealing with womb concerns, the leavings of others, the stale food left after all others had eaten, the food of the husband of an unmarried girl (twelve years old in whom menstruation has commenced), the driver of oxen, the food of one uninitiated in one's Istamantram, of one who burns a corpse, of a Brahmin who goes to one not fit for going, the food of a rebel against friends, of one who is faithless, treacherous, who gives false evidence, the food of a Brahmin who accepts offerings in a sacred place of pilgrimage, all his sins (incurred in the ways above-mentioned) will be removed if he eats the prasadam of Visnu, i.e., the food offered to Visnu. Even if a Chandala be attached to the service of Visnu, he sanctifies his millions of persons born in his family before him. And the man who is devoid of the devotion to Hah is not able even to save himself. If anybody takes unknowingly the remains of an offering (such as flowers) made to Visnu, he will certainly be freed from all the sins incurred in his seven births. And if he does this knowingly and with intense devotion, he will certainly be freed of all sorts of sins incurred in his Koti births. So, O Indra! I am a devotee of S'ri Hah. And when you have cast away the Parijata to flower offered by me on the elephant's head, then I say unto you that the Maha Laksmi will leave you and She will go back to Narayana. I am highly devoted to Narayana; so I do not fear anybody, I fear neither the Creator, nor Kala, the Destroyer, nor old age, nor death; what to speak of other petty persons! I do not fear your father Prajapati Kas'yapa nor do I fear your family priest Brihaspati. Now he, on whose head there lies the flower Parijata offered by me, verily he should be worshipped by all means." Hearing these words of Durvasa, Indra became bewildered with fear, and being greatly distressed and holding the feet of Muni, cried out loudly. He said "The curse is now well inflicted on me; and it has caused my delusion to vanish. Now I do not want back my Raja Laksmi from you; instruct me on knowledge. This wealth is the source of all coils; it is the cause of the veil to all knowledge, it hides the final liberation and it is a great obstacle on the way to get the highest devotion."

47-67. The Muni said:-"This birth, death, old age, disease, and afflictions, all come from wealth and the manipulation of great power. Being blind by the darkness of wealth, he does not see the road to Mukti. The stupid man that is intoxicated with wealth is like the one that is intoxicated with wine. Surrounded by many friends, he is surrounded by the unbreakable bondage. The man that is intoxicated with wealth, blind with property and overwhelmed with these things has no thought for the real knowledge. He who is Rajasik, is very much addicted to passions and desires; he never sees the path to Sattvaguna. The man that is blind with sense-objects is of two kinds, firstly, Rajasik and secondly Tamasik. He who has no knowledge of the S'astras is Tamasik and he who has the knowledge of the S'astras is Rajasik. O Child of the Devas! Two paths are mentioned in the S'astras; one is Pravritti, going towards the sense objects and the other is Nivritti, going away from them. The Jivas first follow the path of Pravritti, the path that is painful, gladly and of their own accord like a mad man. As bees, blind with the desire of getting honey, go to the lotus bud and get themselves entangled there, so the Jivas, the embodied souls, desirous first of getting enjoyments come to this very painful circle of births and deaths, this worldly life, which in the end is realised as vapid and the only cause of old age, death, and sorrow and get themselves enchained there.

For many births he travels gladly in various wombs, ordained by his own Karmas, till at last by the favour of gods, he comes in contact with the saints. Thus one out of a thousand or out of a hundred finds means to cross this terrible ocean of world. When the saintly persons kindle the lamp of knowledge and show the way to Mukti, then the JTva makes an attempt to sever this bondage to the world. After many births, many austerities and many fastings, he then finds safely the way to Mukti, leading to the highest happiness. O Indra! What you asked me, I thus heard from my Guru." O Narada! hearing the words of the Muni Durvasa Indra became dispassionate towards the Samsara. Day by day his feeling of dispassion increased. One day, when he returned to his own home from the hermitage of the Muni, he saw the Heavens overspread by the Daityas and it had become terrible. At some places outrage and oppression knew no bounds; some places were devoid of friends; at some places, some persons had lost their fathers, mothers, wives, relations; so no rest and repose could be found. Thus, seeing the Heavens in the hands of the enemies, Indra went out in quest of Brihaspati, the family preceptor of the Devas. Seeking to and fro Indra ultimately went to the banks of the Mandakini and saw that the Guru Deva had bathed in the waters of the Mandakini and sitting with his face turned towards the East towards the Sun, was meditating on Para Brahma, Who has His faces turned everywhere. Tears were flowing from his eyes and the hairs of the body stood erect with delight. He was elderly in knowledge; the spiritual Teacher of all, religious, served by all great men; he was held as most dear to all the friends. Those who are Jhanins regard him as their Guru. He was the eldest of all his brothers; he was considered as very unpopular to the enemies of the Devas. Seeing the family priest Brihaspati merged in that state of meditation, Indra waited there. When after one Prahara (three hours), the Guru Deva got up, Indra bowed down to his feet and began to weep and cry out repeatedly. Then he informed his Guru about his curse from a Brahmin, his acquiring the true knowledge as so very rare, and the wretched state of Amaravati, wrought by the enemies.

68-92. O Best of Brahmanas! Hearing thus the words of the disciple, the intelligent speaker Brihaspati spoke with his eyes reddened out of anger. “O Lord of the Devas! I have heard everything that you said; do not cry; have patience; hear attentively what I say. The wise politicians of good behaviour, with moral precepts, never lose their heads and get themselves distressed in times of danger. Nothing is everlasting; whether property or adversity; all are transient; they only give troubles. All are under one’s own Karma; one is master of one’s own Karma. What had been done in previous births, so one will have to reap the fruits afterwards. (Therefore property or adversity, all are due to one’s own Karma.) This happens to all persons eternally, births after births. Pain and happiness are like the ring of a rolling wheel. So what pain is there? It is already stated that one’s own

Karma must be enjoyed in this Holy Bharata. The man enjoys the effects of his own Karmas, auspicious or inauspicious. Never the Karma gets exhausted in one hundred Koti Kalpas, without their effects being enjoyed. The Karma, whether auspicious or inauspicious must be enjoyed. Thus it is stated in the Vedas and as well by S’ri Krisna, the Supreme Spirit. Bhagavan S’ri Krisna addressed Brahma, the lotus-born, in the Sama Veda Sakha that all persons acquire their births, whether, in Bharata or in any other country, according to the Karma that he had done. The course of a Brahmana comes though this Karma; and the blessings of a Brahmana come again by this Karma. By Karma one gets great wealth and prosperity and by Karma again one gets poverty. You may take one hundred Koti births; the fruit of Karma must follow you. O Indra! The fruit of Karma follows one like one’s shadow. Without enjoyment, that can never die. The effects of Karma become increased or decreased according to time, place, and the person concerned. As you will give away anything to persons, of different natures, in different times and in different places, your merit acquired will also vary accordingly. Gifts made on certain special days bring in Koti times the fruits (merits, punyam) or infinite times or even more than that. Again gifts, similar in nature, made in similar paces yield punyam the same, in character also. Gifts made in different countries yield punyams, Koti times, infinite times, or even more than that. But similar things given to similar persons yield similar punyams. As the grains vary in their natures as the fields differ, so gifts made to different persons yield different grades of punyas infinitely superior or infinitely inferior as the case may be.

Giving things to a Brahmana on any ordinary day yields simple punya only. But if the gift be made to a Brahman on an Amavasya day (new moon day) or on a Sankranti day (the day when the Sun enters another’s sign) then hundred times more punyam is acquired. Again charities made on the Chaturmasya period (the vow that lasts for four months in the rainy season) or on the full moon day, yield infinite punyams. So charities made on the occasion of the lunar eclipses yield Koti times the result and if made on the occasion of the solar eclipse yield ten times more punyams. Charities made on Aksayaya Tritiya or the Navami day yield infinite and endless results. So charities on other holy days yield religious merits higher than those made on ordinary days. As charities made on holy days yield religious merits, so bathing, reciting mantrams, and other holy acts yield meritorious results. As superior results are obtained by pious acts; inferior results are obtained by impious acts. As an earthen potter makes pots, jars, etc., out of the earth with the help of rod, wheel, earthen cups or plates and motion, so the Creator awards respective fruits to different persons, by the help of this thread (continuity) of Karma. Therefore if you want to have cessation of this fruition of Karma, then worship Narayana, by whose command all these things of Nature are created. He is the Creator of even Brahma, the Creator, the Preserver of Visnu, the Preserver, the Destroyer of S'iva, the Destroyer and the Kala (the great Time) of Kala (the Time). S'ankara has said He who remembers Madhusudana (a name of Visnu) in great troubles, his dangers cease and happiness begins." O Narada! The wise Brihaspati thus advised Indra and then embraced him and gave him his hearty blessings and good wishes.

Here ends the Fortieth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the birth of Laksmi in the discourse of Narada and Narayana in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Narayana said O Twice-born! Indra then remembered Hah and took Brihaspati, the Guru of the Devas, to the assembly of Brahma, accompanied by the other Devas. They soon reached the region of Brahma and no sooner they saw Him, than Indra and the other Devas and Bihaspati all bowed down to Him.

3-25. Brihaspati, the Acharya of the Devas, then communicated all to Brahma. Hearing this. He smiled and spoke, addressing Indra O Indra! You have been born in My race; nay, you are My grandson; the Arya Brihaspati is your Guru; you yourself are the ruler of the Devas and you are very wise and sagacious; the mother of your father is the powerful Daksa, a great Visnu Bhakta. How is it, then that when the three sides of the family are pure, one would turn out so haughty and arrogant! Whose mother is so much devoted to her husband, whose father, mother's father and mother's brother are self-controlled and of pure Sattva Guna, he is not expected to be so very haughty! Every man may be guilty to Hari for the three faults:-- For some fault due to that of his father, or of his mother's father, or of Guru, the Spiritual Teacher. Bhagavan Narayana, resides in this great holy temple of our this physical body controlling the hearts of all. At whatever moment, S'ri Narayana quits this temple-body, at that moment this body becomes dead. I myself am the mind; S'ankara is the Knowledge, Visnu is the vital breaths, Bhagavati Durga is the intelligence (Buddhi), sleep, etc., the powers of Prakriti; when these are being reflected on by the Atman, JTva is formed with a body for enjoyment called Bhoga S'arirabhrit. When a king departs, his attendants also follow him; so when this Atman departs from this temple of body, his attendants mind, buddhi, etc., instantly depart from this body and follow the Atman. O Indra! We all, are verily, the parts of S'ri Krisna. I myself, S'iva, Ananta Deva, Visnu, Dharma, Maha Virat, you all are His parts and entirely devoted to Him. And you have shown contempt for His flower. Bhagavan S'ankara, the Lord of the Bhutas, worshipped the lotus-feet of S'ri Krisna with that flower. The Risi Durvasa gave you that flower. But you showed disrespect to it. The flower, Parijata, after being offered at the lotus-feet of Krisna, should be placed on the head of an Immortal; His worship is to be done first; and it is the foremost amongst the Devas. So you are now being afflicted by the inevitable course of Fate; Fate is the most powerful of all. Who can save that unlucky man against whom Fate has turned? Seeing that you have rejected the flower offered to S'ri Krisna, S'ri Laksmi Devi has left you out of anger. Now come with Me and with your family priest Brihaspati to Vaikuntha and worship the Lord of Laksmi; then by His grace you may get back your Heavens. Thus saying, Brahma with Indra and all the other Devas, went to the Eternal Purusa, Bhagavan Narayana and saw that He was full of Fire and Energy like one hundred koti summer midday Suns, yet perfectly cool and calm. He has no beginning, and no end, nor any middle. He is Infinite. The four-armed Parisadas, Sarasvati, the four Vedas, and the Ganges, all were surrounding Him. Seeing Him, Brahma and the other Devas bowed down with devotion and began to chant hymns to Him with tears in their eyes. Brahma, then, informed Him of everything when all the Devas, dispossessed of their places, began to weep before Him. Narayana saw that the Devas were very afraid and much distressed. They had no jewel ornaments as before, no vehicles (Vahanas), nor the Daivic splendour as before, not that brillance; always fearful. Then Narayana, the Destroyer of fear, seeing the Devas in that state, addressed Brahma and the other Devas O Brahman! O Devas! Discard all fears. What fear can overcome you?

I am here. I will give you again the immoveable prosperous Rajya Laksmi (the Laksmi of the kings).

26-47. But for the present, I give you some advice proper for this moment. Listen. There are endless universes where exist innumerable persons. All of them are under Me. So know verily, that I am under them also. My devotees regard Me as the Highest. They know no other than Me; they are fearless; so I do not remain in that house where My devotees are dissatisfied. I instantly quit that house with Laksmi. Durvasa Risi is born in part of S'ankara. He is highly devoted to Me. He is a pakka Vaisnava. He cursed you and, as a matter of fact, I and Laksmi instantly left your house.

Laksmi does not reside in that house where conch shells are not blown, where there are no Tulasi trees, where there is no worship of S'iva and S'iva, where the Brahmanas are not fed. O Brahman! O Devas! Where I and My Bhaktas are blamed, Maha Laksmi becomes greatly displeased. She instantly goes away out of that house.

Laksmi does not stay even for a moment in that house where the stupid person, without any devotion for me, takes his food on the Harivasara Ekadas'i day (the eleventh day of the moon's wane or increase) or on My anniversary birthday. If anybody sells My name or his own daughter, where the guests are not served, Laksmi quits that house instantly and goes away.

(Note That Guru is the Real Guru, who, being capable, imparts the name of God to worthy persons without taking any fee at all.)

If the son of an unchaste woman be a Brahmana, he and the husband of an unchaste woman are great sinners. If anybody goes to such a person's house or eats the food of a S'udra during a Sraddha ceremony, Laksmi becomes very angry and vacates that house. Being a Brahmin, if one burns a S'udra's corpse, one becomes very wretched and the vilest of the Brahmins. Laksmi never stays for a moment more in that house. Being a Brahmin, if he be a S'udra's cook and drives oxen, Laksmi fears to drink water there and quits his house. Being a Brahmin, if his heart be unholy, if he be cruel, envies others and blames persons, if he officiates as a priest for the S'udra, Laksmi Devi never stays in his house. The World-Mother never stays even for a moment in his house who eats at the house of one who marries an unmarried girl twelve years old in whom menstruation has commenced. He who cuts grass by his nails, or writes on the ground with his nails, or from whose house a Brahmana guest goes back disappointed, Laksmi never stays in his house. If any Brahmana eats food at the early sunrise, sleeps during the day or engages in a sexual intercourse during the day, Laksmi never stays in his house. Laksmi slips away from that Brahmana who is devoid of Achara (rules of conduct), who accepts gifts from S'udras, from him who remains uninitiated in his Mantram. The ignorant man who sleeps naked and with his feet wet, who laughs always, and always talks at random on disconnected subjects like a mad man, is forsaken at once by Laksmi. Laksmi becomes angry and goes away from the house of that man who applies oil all over his body first and then touches the bodies of others and always makes some sounding noise on several parts of his body. If any Brahmana forsakes observing vows, fastings, the Sandhya ceremony, purity and devotion to Visnu, Kamala (Laksmi) does not remain in his house any longer. If anybody blames always the Brahmanas and shews his hatred always towards the Brahmanas, if he does injury to the animals, and if he does not indulge in his heart anything of pity, kindness, Laksmi, the Mother of the Worlds, quits him. O Lotus-born! But where Hah is worshipped and Hari's Name is chanted, Laksmi, the Mother of all auspiciousness, remains there. Laksmi remains where the glories of S'ri Krisna and His Bhaktas are sung.

48-59. Laksmi always remains there with the greatest gladness where conch-shells are blown, where there are conchsells, the S'alagrama stone, the TulasT leaves and the service and meditation of Laksmi are daily done.

Where the phallic emblem of S'iva is worshipped, and His glories sung, where S'ri Durga is worshipped and Her glories are sung, Laksmi, the Dweller in the Lotus, remains there. Where the Brahmanas are honoured and they are gladly feasted, where all the Devas are worshiped; the chaste Laksmi, the Lotus-faced, remains there. Thus saying to the Devas, the Lord of Laksmi said O Devi! Go without any any delay to the Ksiroda Ocean and incarnate there in part. He then addressed Brahma and said "O Lotus-born! You also better go there and churn the Ksiroda Ocean; when Laksmi will arise, give her to the Devas." O Devarsi! Thus saying, the Lord Kamala went to His inner compartment. On the other hand the Devas, after a long time, reached the shores of the Ksiroda Ocean. The Devas and the Daityas then made the Golden Mountain (the Sumeru) the churning rod, the Deva Kurma (the tortoise), the churning pot and Ananta Deva (the thousand headed serpent) the churning cord and began to churn the ocean. While churning was going on, by and by arose Dhanvantari, Amrita (the nectar), the horse Uchchaihs'rava, various other invaluable jewels that were desired, the elephant Airavata and the beautiful eyed Laksmi. Visnupriya, S'ri Laksmi Devi, no sooner She got up from the ocean, she, the chaste woman, presented on the neck of Narayana, of beautiful appearance, the Lord of all. Who slept on the Ksiroda ocean the garland (indicative of accepting Him for her bridegroom). Then Brahma and MahesVara and the other Devas gladly worshipped Her and chanted hymns. At this time Laksmi Devi being pleased, cast a favourable glance towards the homes of the Devas, in order to free them from their curse. Then, by the grace of Maha Laksmi and by the granting of the boon by Brahma, the Devas got back their own possessions from the hands of the Daityas. O Narada! Thus I have described to you the story of Laksmi Devi, the Essence of all Essences, and very pleasant to hear. Now what more do you want to hear? Say.

Here ends the Forty-first Chapter of the Ninth Book on the churning of the ocean and on the appearing of Laksmi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-50. Narada said O Bhagavan! I have heard about the glories of Hari, about the Tattvajhanam (the True Knowledge) and the story of Laksmi. Now tell me Her Dhyanam (meditation) and Stotram (recitation of hymns) of Her. Narayana said O Narada! Indra then, bathed first in the Tirath (holy place) and, wearing a cleansed cloth, installed, first of all, an earthen jar (ghata) on the beach of the Ksiroda Ocean. Then he worshipped with devotion Ganes'a, Surya, Fire, Visnu, S'iva, and S'iva, the six deities with scents and flowers. Next Indra invoked Maha Laksmi, of the nature of the highest powers and greatest prosperity, and began to worship Her as Brahma, who was acting as an officiating priest in the presence of the Munis, Brahmanas, Brihaspati, Hari and the other Devas, had dictated him. He first smeared one Parijata flower with sandal paste and reciting the meditation mantra of Maha Laksmi offered it to Her feet. The meditation mantra that was recited by Devendra, was what Bhagavan Hari first gave to Brahma. I am now telling you that. Listen.

"O Mother! Thou residest on the thousand-petalled lotus. The beauty of Thy face excels the beauty of koti autumnal Full Moons. Thou art shining with Thy own splendour. Thou art very beautiful and lovely; Thy colour is like the burnished gold; Thou art with form, chaste, ornamented all over with jewel ornaments; Thou art wearing the yellow cloth and look! What beauty is coming out of it! Always a sweet smile reigns on Thy lips. Thy beauty is constant; Thou art the bestower of prosperity to all. O Maha Laksmi! I meditate on Thee." Thus meditating on Her endowed with various attributes with this mantra, Indra worshipped devotedly with sixteen upacharas (articles offered). Every upachara (article) was offered with the repetition of mantra. All the things were very excellent, right

"O Maha Laksmi! VisVakarma has made this invaluable Asan (a carpet seat) wonderfully decked with jewels; I am offering this Asan to Thee. Accept. O Thou residing in the Lotus! This holy Ganges water is considered with great regard and desired by all. This is like the fire to burn the fuel in the shape of the sins of the sinners. O Thou! The Dweller in the Lotus! This Durbha grass, flowers, this Arghya (offering) of the Ganges water perfumed with sandalpaste, I am offering to Thee. Accept. O Beloved of Hari! This sweet scented flower oil and this sweet scented Amalaki fruit lead to the beauty of the body; therefore I present this to Thee. Accept. O Devi! I am presenting this cloth made of silk to Thee; Accept. O Devi! This excellent ornament made of gold and jewels, which increases the beauty, I am presenting to Thee. Accept. O Beloved of Krisna! I am presenting this sweet scented holy Dhupa prepared from various herbs and plants, exquisitely nice and the root of all beauty, to Thee. Accept. This sweet scented pleasant sandalpaste I offer to Thee, O Devi! Accept. O Ruler of the Devas! I present this pleasing holy DTpa (lights) which is the eye of this world and by which all the darkness is vanished; accept. O Devi! I present to Thee these very delicious offerings of fruits, etc., very juicy and of various kinds. Accept. O Deves'i! This Anna (food) is Brahma and the chief means to preserve the life of living beings. By this the nourishment of the body and the mental satisfaction are effected. Therefore I am presenting this food to Thee. Accept. O Maha Laksmi! I am presenting this most delicious Paramanna, which is prepared out of rice, milk and sugar, to Thee. Accept. O Devi! I am presenting this most delicious and pleasant svastika prepared of sugar and clarified butter to Thee; accept. O Beloved of Achyuta! I am presenting to Thee various beautiful Pakkannas, ripe delicious fruits and clarified butter out of cow's milk; accept. O Devi! The sugarcane juice, when heated, yields a syrup which again heated yields very delicious and nice thing called Gur. I am presenting this Gur to Thee; accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee the sweetmeats prepared out of the flour of Yava and and wheat and Gur and clarified butter; accept. I am presenting with devotion the offering made of Svastika and the flour of other grains; accept. O Kamale! I am presenting to Thee this fan and white chamara, which blows cool air and is very pleasant when this body gets hot; accept. O Devi! I am presenting this betel scented with camphor by which the inertness of the tongue is removed; accept. O Devi! I am presenting this scented cool water, which will allay the thirst and which is known as the life of this world; accept. O Devi! I am presenting this cloth made of cotton and silk that increases the beauty and splendour of the body. Accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee, the ornaments made of gold and jewels which are the source of beauty and loveliness. Accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee these pure garlands of flowers which blossom in different seasons, which look very beautiful and which give satisfaction to the Devas and to the kings. Accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee this nice scent, this very holy thing to Thee by which both the body and mind become pure, which is most auspicious and which is prepared of many fragrant herbs and plants; accept. O Beloved of the God Krisna! I am presenting this Achamaniya water to Thee for rinsing the mouth, pure and holy, and brought from holy places of pilgrimages; accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee, this bed made of excellent gems and jewels and flowers, sandalpaste, clothings and ornaments; accept. O Devi! I am presenting to Thee all those things that are extraordinary, very rare in this earth and fit to be enjoyed by the Devas and worthy of their ornaments; accept." O Devarsi! Uttering those mantras, the Devendra offered those articles, with intense devotion according to the rules. He, then, made Japam of the Mula Mantra (the Radical Seed Mantra) ten lakhs of times. Thus his Mantra revealed the Deity thereof and thus came to a successful issue. The lotus born Brahma gave this Mantra "S'rim Hrim Klim Aim Kamalavasinyai Svaha" to the Devendra. This is like a Kalpavriksa (the tree in Indra's garden yielding whatever may be desired). This Vaidik mantra is the chief of the mantras. The word "Svaha" is at the end of the mantra. By virtue of this Mantra, Kuvera got his highest prosperity. By the power of this Mantra, the King-Emperor Daksa Savarni Manu and Mangala became the lords of the earth with seven islands. Priyavrata, Uttanapada, and Kedararaja all these became Siddhas (were fructified with success) and became King-Emperors. O Narada!

When Indra attained success in this Mantra, there appeared before hinn Maha Laksmi, seated in the celestial car, decked with excellent gems and jewels. The Great Halo, coming out of Her body made manifest the earth with seven islands. Her colour was white like the white champaka flower and Her whole body was decked with ornaments. Her face was always gracious and cheerful with sweet smiles. She was ever ready to shew Her kindness to the Bhaktas.

On Her neck there was a garland of jewels and gems, bright as ten million Moons. O Devarsi! No sooner did Indra see that World Mother Maha Laksmi, of a peaceful appearance, than his body was filled with joy and the hairs of the body stood on ends. His eyes were filled with tears; and, with folded palms, he began to recite stotras to Her, the Vaidik stotras, yielding all desires, that was communicated to him by Brahma.

51-75. Indra said "O Thou, the Dweller in the lotus! O Narayani! O Dear to Krisna! O Padmasane! O Maha Laksmi!

Obeisance to Thee! O Padmadaleksane! O Padmanibhanane! O Padmasane! O Padme! O Vaisnavi! Obeisance to Thee! Thou art the wealth of all; Thou art worshipped by all; Thou bestowest to all the bliss and devotion to S'ri Hari. I bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou always dwellest on the breast of Krisna and exercisest Thy powers over Him. Thou art the beauty of the Moon; Thou takest Thy seat on the beautiful Jewel Lotus. Obeisance to Thee! O Devi! Thou art the Presiding Deity of the riches; Thou art the Great Devi; Thou increasest always Thy gifts and Thou art the bestower of increments. So I bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou art the Maha Laksmi of Vaikuntha, the Laksmi of the Ksiroda Ocean; Thou art Indra's Heavenly Laksmi; Thou art the Raja Laksmi of the Kings; Thou art the Griha Laksmi of the householders; Thou art the household Deity of them; Thou art the Surabhi, born of the Ocean; Thou art the Daksina, the wife of the Sacrifices; Thou art Aditi, the Mother of the

Devas; Thou art the Kamala, always dwelling in the Lotus; Thou art the Svaha, in the offerings with clarified butter in the sacrificial ceremonies; Thou art the Svadha Mantra in the Kavyas (an offering of food to deceased ancestors). So obeisance to Thee! O Mother Thou art of the nature of Visnu; Thou art the Earth that supports all; Thou art of pure S'uddha Sattva and Thou art devoted to Narayana. Thou art void of anger, jealousy. Rather Thou grantest boons to all. Thou art the auspicious Sarada; Thou grantest the Highest Reality and the devotional service to Hari. Without Thee all the worlds are quite stale, to no purpose like ashes, always dead while existing. Thou art the Chief Mother, the Chief Friend of all; Thou art the source of Dharma, Artha, Kama and Moksa! As a mother nourishes her infants with the milk of her breasts, so Thou nourishest all as their mother! A child that sucks the milk might be saved by the Daiva (Fate), when deprived of its mother; but men can never be saved, if they be bereft of Thee! O Mother! Thou art always gracious. Please be gracious unto me. O Eternal One! My possessions are now in the hands of the enemies. Be kind enough to restore my kingdoms to me from my enemies' hands. O Beloved of Hari! Since Thou hast forsaken me, I am wandering abroad, friendless, like a beggar, deprived of all prosperities. O Devi! Give me Jhanam, Dharma, my desired fortune, power, influence and my possessions." O Narada! Indra and all the other Devas bowed down frequently to Maha Laksmi with their eyes filled with tears. Brahma, S'ankara, Ananta Deva, Dharma and Kes'ava all asked pardon again and again from Maha Laksmi. Laksmi then granted boons to the Devas and before the assembly gladly gave the garland of flowers on the neck of Ke'sava. The Devas, satisfied, went back to their own places. The Devi, Laksmi, too, becoming very glad went to S'ri Hari sleeping in the Ksiroda Ocean. Brahma and Mahes'vara, both became very glad and, blessing the Devas, went respectively to their own abodes. Whoever recites this holy Stotra three times a day, becomes the King Emperor and gets prosperity and wealth like the God Kuvera. Siddhi (success) comes to him who recites this stotra five lakhs of times. If anybody reads regularly and always this Siddha Stotra for one month, he becomes very happy and he turns out a Rajarajendra.

Here ends the Forty-second Chapter of the Ninth Book on the Dhyanam and Stotra of Maha Laksmi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Narada said “O Risi Narayana! O Highly Fortunate One! O Lord! Thou art equal to Narayana whether in beauty or in qualities, or in fame or in energy or in everything. Thou art equal to Narayana. Thou art the foremost of the Jhanins; there cannot be found a second like Thee as a Siddha Yogi, the ascetics and the Munis. And Thou art the crest of the knowers of the Vedas. I have heard the wonderful anecdote of Maha Laksmi that Thou hast told me. Now tell me any other thing that is unknown, very good in everyway, in accordance with Dharma, in the Vedas, and that which is not as yet written in the Puranas.”

5-6. Narayana said “There are many wonderful hidden anecdotes that are not published as yet in the Puranas. What you have heard is very small in fact. Please mention to me what you like to hear, what you think as best amongst them and I will describe that to you.”

7-8. Narada said “When clarified butter is poured as libations in all the sacrificial ceremonies to the gods, Svaha is to be uttered everywhere as excellent, and commendable; so Svadha is to be repeated in the offerings when the oblations are offered to the Pitris, the deceased ancestors. Then, again, Daksina (the sacrificial fee) is always to be paid as right and excellent. So, O Knower of the Vedas! I like to hear the accounts of Svadha, and Daksina and their merits. Please now tell me about them.”

9. Suta said “Hearing the words of Narada, Narayana Risi smiled and began to speak the very ancient words of the Puranas.”

10-11. Narayana said Before the creation, the Devas assembled in the beautiful Brahma’s Council to decide on their food question.

They all brought to the notice of Brahma the scarcity about their food. Brahma promised to remove their food difficulties and began to chant hymns to Hah.

12. Narada said “O Lord! Bhagavan Narayana Himself incarnated in part as Sacrifice. Are not the Devas satisfied when the Brahmanas pour oblations of ghee to the Devas in those sacrifices?”

13-17. Narayana said O Muni! The Devas, in fact, did not get the offerings of the clarified butters that were poured in with devotion in sacrificial acts by the Brahmanas and Ksattriyas. So they were very much depressed and went again to the council of Brahma and informed Him that they could not get any food for themselves. On hearing this, Brahma at once meditated and took refuge of S’ri Krisna; Krisna advised them to worship Mula Prakriti. Brahma then, by the command of S’ri Krisna, began to meditate on Prakriti, worship Her and chant hymns to Her. Then from the part of Prakriti, an all-powerful Devi appeared. She was very beautiful, Shyama (of a blue colour) and very lovely. This Devi was Svaha. She looked always gracious with smile in Her face; it seemed that She was always ready to show favour towards the Bhaktas. She appeared before Brahma and said “O Lotus born! Want any boon you desire.”

18-22. Hearing Her words, the Creator spoke reverentially “O Devi! Let Thou be the burning power of Fire; without Thee Fire would not be able to burn anything. At the conclusion of any Mantra, whoever taking Thy name, will pour oblations in the Fire to the Gods, will cause those oblations to go to the Gods and reach them. And then they will be very glad. O Mother! Let Thou be the wealth of Fire, the beauty and housewife of Fire; let Thou be incessantly worshipped in the regions of the Gods and amongst men and other beings." Hearing these words of Brahma, Svaha Devi became very sad and expressed Her own intentions "I will get Krisna as my husband; let me perform Tapasya as long as it takes. This is my object. All other things are false as dreams.

23-28. I always meditate with devotion on the lotus-feet of S'ri Krisna, serving Which You have become the Creator of this world, S'ambhu has become the Conqueror of death, Ananta Deva is supporting this universe, Dharma is the Witness of the virtuous, Ganes'a is getting, first of all, the first worship. Prakriti Devi has become the adorable of all and the Munis and the Risis respected by all." O Child! Having spoken thus to the Lotus-born, Padma, with Her lotus-face, meditating incessantly on the Lotus-Feet of S'ri Krisna, free from any disease, started to perform tapasya for attaining Him. She, first of all, stood on one leg and practised austerities for one lakh years. Then She saw the Highest Purusa S'ri Krisna, Who is beyond Prakriti and Her attributes. The beautiful amorous Svaha, seeing the Lovely Form of the Lord of Love, fainted.

29-43. The omniscient Bhagavan Krisna knowing Her intentions, took Her to His lap, reduced very much in body by long continued Tapasya, and He said "O Devi! Thou shalt be My wife in the next Varaha Kalpa. Then Thou wilt be the daughter of Nagnajit and wilt be known by the name of Nagnajiti. O Beloved! At present let Thou be the Energy of Fire and be His wife. By My boon Thou wilt be worshipped by all. Fire will make Thee the Lady of His house and take the utmost care of Thee. Thou wilt be able to enjoy easily with Him." O Narada! Thus saying to Svaha, Bhagavan disappeared. On the other hand. Fire came in there by the command of Brahma, with a doubtful mind and began to meditate on Her, the World Mother as per Sama Veda and worshipped Her. He then pleased and married Her with mantrams, etc. For one hundred divine years they enjoyed each other. In a very solitary place while they were enjoying each other, Svaha Devi felt pregnant. For full twelve divine years She retained Her pregnancy. Then She delivered gradually three sons Daksinagni, Garhyapatyagni, and Ahavaniyagni. The Risis, Munis, Brahmanas, Ksattriyas poured oblations of clarified butter pronouncing the terminal mantra "Svaha." He who pronounces this excellent terminal Mantra "Svaha" gets immediate success in his actions. Then all the mantras without "Svaha" in the end became impotent as snakes become when void of poison, the Brahmanas when they are devoid of the knowledge of the Vedas, the wife when she does not serve her husband, the men when they turn illiterate and the trees, when void of fruits and branches. O Child! The Brahmanas then became satisfied. The Devas began to receive the oblations. With the "Svaha" mantra everything turned out fruitful. Thus I have described to you the anecdote of "'Svaha." One who hears this essential anecdote gets his happiness enhanced and the Moksa in his hands. What more do you want to hear? Say.

44. Narada said 1 like to hear how Fire worshipped Svaha and recited stotras (hymns of praise) to Her. Kindly tell me the method of worship, the Dhyanam and Stotra.

45-49. Narayana said O Best of Brahmanas! I now tell you the meditation (Dhyanam) as per Sama Veda, the method of worship and stotra. Listen attentively. At the commencement of any sacrificial ceremony, one should first of all worship whether on the S'alagrama stone or in an earthen jar (ghata), the Devi Svaha and then commence the ceremony with the expectation of getting the desired fruit. The following is the Dhyanam (meditation) of Svaha Devi O Devi Svaha! Thou art embodied of the Mantras; Thou art the success of the Mantras; Thou art Thyself a Siddha; Thou givest success and the the fruits of actions to men; Thou dost good to all. Thus meditating, one should offer Padya (water for washing the feet), etc., uttering the basic Mantra; success then comes to him. Now hear about the Radical Seed Mantra. The said mantra (Mula mantra) is this "Om Hrim S'rim Vahnijayayai Devyai Svaha." If the Devi be worshipped with this Mantra, all the desires come to a successful issue.

50-54. Fire recited the following stotra "Thou art Svaha, Thou art the Beloved of Fire, Thou art the wife of Fire; Thou pleasest all; Thou art the S'akti, Thou art the action. Thou art the bestower of Kala (time); Thou dost digest the food; Thou art the Dhruva; Thou art the resort of men; Thou art the burning power; Thou canst burn everything. Thou art the essence of this world; Thou art the deliverer from the terrible world; Thou art the life of the gods and Thou nourishest the Gods." O Narada! He who reads with devotion these sixteen names, gets success both in this world as well as in the next. None of his works become deficient in any way; rather all the works are performed successfully and with a successful issue. Reading this stotra, one who has no wife, gets wife. So much so that the man who recites the stotra gets for his wife equal to Rambha, the heavenly nymph, and passes his time in greatest bliss.

English translation

1-18. Narayana said said O Narada! I will tell you now the excellent anecdote of Svadha, pleasing to the Piths and enhancing the fruits of the S'radh ceremony when foods are offered to the Pitris. Listen. Before the creation, the Creator created seven Pitris. Four out of them are with forms and the other three are of the nature of Teja (light).

Note Kavyavahoanalah Some Yamaschaivaryama tatha, Agnisvattah Barhisadah Somapa Pitri Devatah. These seven Pitris are according to the other Puranas. Seeing the beautiful and lovely forms of the Pitris, He made arrangements for their food in the form of S'raddhas and Tarpanas, etc. (funeral ceremony and peace- offerings), etc. (S'radh, solemn obsequies performed in honour of the manes of deceased ancestors.)

Taking bath, performing S'radh ceremony upto Tarpanam (peace- offerings), worshipping the Devas and doing Sandhya thrice a day; these are the daily duties of the Brahmanas. If any Brahmana does not perform daily the Trisandhyas, S'raddha, Tarpanam, worship and the reciting of the Vedas, he becomes devoid of fire like a snake without any poison. He who does not perform the devotional service of the Devi, who eats food not offered to S'ri Hari, who remains impure till death, is not entitled to do any karma whatsoever. Thus, introducing the S'raddhas, etc., for the Pitris, Brahma went to His own abode. The Brahmanas went on doing the S'raddhas for the Pitris, but the Pitris could not enjoy them and so they remained without food and were not satisfied. They all, being hungry and sad, went to the Council of Brahma and informed Him everything from beginning to end. Brahma then created out of His mind one daughter very beautiful, full of youth and having a face lovely, as if equal to one hundred moons. That woman was best in all respects whether in form, beauty, qualities or in learning. Her colour was white like the white Champaka flower and her body was adorned all over with jewel ornaments. This form was very pure, ready to grant boons, auspicious and the part of Prakriti. Her face was beaming with smiles; her teeth were very beautiful and her body showed signs of Laksmi (i.e., of wealth and prosperity). Her name was Svadha. Her lotus-feet were situated on one hundred lotuses. She was the wife of the Pitris. Her face resembled that of a lotus and Her eyes looked like water lilies. She was born of the lotus born Brahma. The Grand¬ father Brahma made over that daughter of the nature of Tusti (Contentment) to the hands of the Pitris and they were satisfied. Brahma advised the Brahmanas privately that whenever they would offer anything to the Pitris, they should offer duly with the mantra Svadha pronounced at the end. Since then the Brahmanas are offering everything to the Pitris, with the Mantra Svadha uttered in the end. Svaha is laudable, when offerings are presented to the Gods and Svadha is commendable when offerings are made to the Pitris. But in both the cases, Daksina is essential. Without Daksina (sacrificial fee), all sacrifices are useless and worthless. The Pitris, Devatas, Brahmanas, the Munis, the Manus worshipped the peaceful Svadha and chanted hymns to Her with great love. The Devas, Pitris, Brahmanas, all were pleased and felt their ends achieved when they got the boon from Svadha Devi. Thus I have told you everything about Svadha. It is pleasing to all. What more do you want to hear? Say. I will answer all your questions.

19. Narada said “O Thou, the Best of the knowers of the Vedas! O Muni Sattama! I want now to hear the method of worship, the meditation and the hymns of Svadha Devi. Kindly tell me all about this.”

20-27. Narayana said You know everything about the all- auspicious Dhyan, Stotra, as stated in the Vedas; then why do you ask me again? However I will speak out this for the enhancement of knowledge. On the thirteenth day of the Dark Fortnight in autumn when the Magha asterism is with the Moon and on the S'raddha day. One should worship with care Svadha Devi; then one should perform S'raddha. If, out of vanity, a Brahmin performs S'radh without first worshipping Svadha Devi then he will never get the fruits of Tarpanam or S'radh. “O Devi Svadhe! Thou art the mind-born daughter of Brahma, always young and worshipped by the Piths. Thou bestowest the fruits of S'raddh. So I meditate on Thee." Thus meditating, the Brahmin is to pronounce the motto (mula mantra) and offer the Padyam, etc., on the S'alagrama stone or on the auspicious earthen jar. This is the ruling of the Vedas. The motto is "Om Hrim, S'rim, Klim, Svadha Devyai Svaha." She should be worshipped with this Mantra. After reciting hymns to the Devi, one is to bow down to the Svadha Devi. O Son of Brahma! O Best of Munis! O Skilled in hearing! I now describe the stotra which Brahma composed at the beginning for the bestowal of the desired fruits to mankind. Listen.

Narayana said The instant the Mantra Svadha is pronounced, men get at once the fruits of bathing in the holy places of pilgrimages. No trace of sin exists in him at that time; rather the religious merits of performing the Vajapeya sacrifice accrue to him.

28-36. "Svadha," "Svadha," "Svadha," thrice this word if one calls to mind, one gets the fruits of S'radh, Tarpanam, and Bali (offering sacrifices). So much so, if one hears with devotion during the S'radh time the recitation of the hymn to Svadha, one gets, no doubt, the fruit of S'radh. If one recites the Svadha mantra thrice every time in the morning, midday and evening, every day, one gets an obedient, chaste wife begetting sons. The following is the hymn (Stotra) to Svadha "O Devi Svadhe! Thou art dear to the Pitris as their vital breaths and thou art the lives of the Brahmanas. Thou art the Presiding Deity of the S'radh ceremonies and bestowest the fruits thereof. O Thou of good vows! Thou art eternal, true, and of the nature of religious merits. Thou appearest in creation and disappearest in dissolution. And this appearing and disappearing go on forever. Thou art Om, thou art Svasti, Thou art Namas Kara (salutation); Thou art Svadha, Thou art Daksina, Thou art the various works as designated in the Vedas. These the Lord of the world has created for the success of actions." No sooner Brahma, seated in His assembly in the Brahma Loka, reciting this stotra remained silent, than Svadha Devi appeared there all at once. When Brahma handed over the lotus-faced Svadha Devi over to the hands of the Pitris, and they gladly took Her to their own abodes. He who hears with devotion and attention this stotra of Svadha, gets all sorts of rich fruits that are desired and the fruits of bathing in all the Tirthas.

Here ends the Forty-fourth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the story of Svadha Devi in the discourse between Narada and Narayana in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-63. Narayana said The excellent, most sweet stories of Svaha and Svadha are told; now I will tell you the story of Daksina; hear attentively. In early days, in the region of Goloka, there was a good-natured GopT named Sus'ila, beautiful, Radha's companion and very dear to S'ri Hari. She was fortunate, respected, beautiful, lovely, prosperous, with good teeth, learned, well qualified and of exquisitely handsome form. Her whole body was tender and lovely like Kalavati (one versed in 64 arts; moon). She was beautiful and her eyes were like water lilies. Her hips were good and spacious; Her breasts were full; she was Shyama (a kind of women having colour like melted gold; body being hot in cold and cool in summer; of youthful beauty); as well She was of the Nyagrodha class of women (an excellent woman. Stanau Sukathinau Yasya Nitambe cha Vis'alata. Madhye Ksma bhavedya Sanyagrodha parimandala). Always a smile sweetened Her face; and that looked always gracious. Her whole body was covered with jewel ornaments. Her colour was white like the white champakas. Her lips were red like the Bimba fruits; Her eyes were like those of a deer.

Sus'TIa was very clever in amorous sciences. Her gait was like a swan. She was specially versed in what is called Prema Bhakti (love towards God). So She was the dearest lady of S'ri Krisna. And She was of intense emotional feelings. She knows all the sentiments of love; she was witty, humorous, and ardent for the love of S'ri Krisna, the Lord of the Rasa circle. She sat by the left side of S'ri Krisna in the presence of Radha. S'ri Krisna, then cast His glance on Radha, the Chief of the Gopis and hung down His head through fear. Radha's face turned red; the two eyes looked like red lilies; all Her bodies began to quiver out of anger and Her lips began to shake. Seeing that state of Radha, Bhagavan S'ri Krisna disappeared, fearing that a quarrel might ensue. Sus'TIa and other GopTs seeing that the peaceful Krisna of Sattva Guna and of lovely form had disappeared, began to tremble with fear. Then one lakh Koti GopTs seeing Krisna absent and Radha angry, became very much afraid and bowing their heads down with devotion and with folded palms began to say frequently, "Radhe! Protect us, protect us," and they took shelter at Her feet. O Narada! Three lakh Gopas also including Sudama and others took shelter at the lotus feet of S'ri Radha out of fear. Seeing, then, Krisna absent and Her companion Sus'ila running away, Radha cursed her thus "If Sus'ila comes again to this Goloka, she will be reduced to ashes." Thus cursing Her companion Sus'ila out of anger, Radha, the Darling of the Deva of the Devas, and the Lady of the Rasa circle went to the Rasa circle and called on Krisna, the Lord of the same. Not being able to find out S'ri Krisna, a minute appeared a yuga to Her and she began to say "O Lord of Pranas! O Dearer than My life! O Presiding Deity of my life! O Krisna! My life seems to depart from Thy absence! Come quickly and show Thyself to me. O Lord! It is through the favour of one's husband that the pride of women gets increased day by day. Women's safeguards of happiness are their husbands. Therefore women, who are helpless creatures, ought always to serve their husbands according to Dharma. The husband is the wife's friend, presiding deity and the sole refuge and the chief wealth. It is through husbands that women derive their pleasures, enjoyments, Dharma, happiness, peace and contentment. If husbands are respected, wives are respected and if husbands are dishonoured, women are dishonoured too. The husband is the highest thing to a woman. He is the highest friend. There is no better friend than him. The husband is called Bharta because he supports his wife; he is called Pati, because he preserves her; he is called S'vami, because he is the master of her body; he is called Kanta because he bestows the desired things to her; he is called Bandhu, because he increases her happiness; he is called Priya, because he gives pleasure to her; he is called Is'a, because he bestows prosperity on her; he is called Pranes'vara, because he is the lord of her Prana; and he is called Ramana, because he gives enjoyment to her. There is no other thing dearer than husband. The son is born of the husband; hence the son is so dear. The husband is dearer to a family woman than one hundred sons. Those who are born in impure families, cannot know what substance a husband is made up of. Taking Baths in all the Tirthas, giving Daksinas in all the Yajhas (sacrifice), circumambulating round the whole earth, performing all austerities, observing all vows, making all great gifts, holy fastings, all that are dictated in the S'astras, serving the Guru, the Brahmanas and the Devas all cannot compare to even one sixteenth part with serving faithfully the feet of the husband. The husband is the highest; higher than the Spiritual Teacher (Guru), higher than the Brahmanas, higher than all the Devas. As to man, the Spiritual Teacher who imparts the Spiritual Knowledge is the Best and Supreme, so to the women their husbands are the best of all. Oh! I am not able to realise the glory of my Dearest, by Whose favour I am the Sole Ruler of one lakh Koti Gopis, one lakh Koti Gopas, innumerable Brahmandas, and all the things thereof, and all the lokas (regions) from Bhu (earth) to Goloka. Oh! The womanly nature is insurmountable.” Thus saying, Radhika began to meditate with devotion on S’ri Krisna. Tears began to flow incessantly from Her eyes. She exclaimed, “O Lord! O Lord! O Ramana! Shew Thyself to me. I am very much weak and distressed from Thy bereavement.” Now the Daksina Devi, driven out from Goloka; practised Tapasya for a long time when She entered into the body of Kamala. The Devas, on the other hand, performed a very difficult Yajha; but they could not derive any fruit therefrom. So they went to Brahma, becoming very sad. Hearing them, Brahma meditated on Visnu for a long time with devotion. At last Visnu gave Him a reply. Visnu got out of the body of Maha Laksmi a Martya Laksmi (Laksmi of the earth) and gave Her Daksina to Brahma.Then with a view to yield to the Devas the as a fruits of their Karmas, Brahma made over to the Yajha Deva (the Deva presiding the sacrifice) the Devi Daksina, offered by Narayana. Yajha Deva, then, worshipped Her duly and recited hymns to Her with great joy. Her colour was like melted gold; her lustre equalled koti Moons; very lovely, beautiful, fascinating; face resembling water lilies, of a gentle body; with eyes like Padma Palasa, born of the body of Laksmi, worshipped by Brahma, wearing celestial silken garments, her lips resembling like Bimba fruits, chaste, handsome; her braid of hair surrounded by Malati garlands; with a sweet smiling face, ornamented with jewel ornaments, well dressed, bathed, enchanting the minds of the Munis, below the hair of her forehead the dot of musk and Sindura scented with sandalpaste, of spacious hips, with full breasts, smitten by the arrows of Kama Deva (the God of Love). Such was the Daksina Devi. Seeing Her, the Yajha Deva fainted. At last he married her according to due rites and ceremonies. Taking her to a solitary place, he enjoyed her for full divine one hundred years with great joy like Laksmi Narayana. Gradually then Daksina became pregnant. She remained so for twelve divine years. Then she duly delivered a nice son as the fruit of Karma. When any Karma becomes complete, this son delivers the fruits of that Karma. Yajha Deva with His wife Daksina and the above named Karmaphala, the bestower of the fruits of actions, gives the desired fruits to all their sacrificial acts and Karmas. So the Pundits, the knowers of the Vedas, say. Really he, henceforth, began to give fruits to all the persons of their acts, with his wife Daksina and son, the bestower of the fruits of the actions. The Devas were all satisfied at this and went away respectively to their own abodes. Therefore, the man who performs Karmas, generally known as Karma Kartas, should pay the Daksina (the Sacrificial fee) and so he completes at once his actions. It is stated in the Vedas, that no sooner the Karma Karta pays the Daksina, than he obtains the fruits of his Karmas at once. In case the Karma Karta, after he has completed his acts, does not pay either through bad luck or through ignorance, any Daksina to the Brahmanas, its amount is doubled if a Muhurta passes away and if one night elapses, its amount is increased, to one hundred times. If three nights pass away, and the Daksina not paid, the amount last brought forward, is increased again to hundred times; if a week passes, the last amount is doubled, and if one month passes away, the Daksina is multiplied to one lakh times. If one year passes away, that is increased to ten millions of times and the Karma, also, bears no fruit. Such a Karma Karta is known as taking away unfairly a Brahmana’s property and is regarded as impure. He has no right to any further actions. For that sin, he becomes a pauper and diseased.

Laksmi Devi goes away from his house, leaves him, cursing him severely. So much so that the Pitris do not accept the S’radh, Tarpanam offered by that wretched fellow. So the Devas do not accept his worship, nor the Fire accepts the oblations poured by him. If the person that performs sacrifices does not pay the sacrificial fee that he resolves to pay and he who accepts the offer does not demand the sum, both of them go to hell. But if the performer of the sacrifices does not pay when the priests demand the fee, then the Yajamana (the performer of the sacrifices) only falls down to hell as the jar, severed from the rope, falls down. The Yajamana (pupil) is denominated as a Brahmasvapahari (one who robs a Brahmana's property); he goes ultimately to the Kumbhipaka hell. There he remains for one lakh years punished and threatened by Yama's messengers. He is then reborn as a Chandala, poor and diseased. So much so that his seven generations above and his seven generations below go to hell.

64-65. O Narada! Thus I have narrated to you the story of Daksina. What more do you want to hear? Say. Narada said "O Best of Munis! Who bears the fruits of that Karma where no Daksina is paid. Describe the method of worship that was offered to Daksina by Yajha Deva." Narayana said Where do you find the fruit of any sacrifice without Daksina? (i.e., nowhere.) That Karma only gets fruits where Daksinas are paid. And the fruits of the acts void of any Daksina, Bali who lives in the Patala only enjoys; and no one else.

66-71. For, in olden times, it was ordained by Vamana Deva that those fruits would go to the king Vali. All those that pertain to S'radh not sanctioned by the Vedas, the charities made without any regard or faith, the worship offered by a Brahmin who is the husband of a Vrisala (an unmarried girl twelve years in whom menstruation has commenced), the fruits of sacrifices done by an impure Brahmana (a Brahmana who fails in his duties), the worship offered by impure persons, and the acts of a nnan devoid of any devotion to his Guru, all these are reserved for the king Bali. He enjoys the fruits of all these. O Child! I am now telling you the Dhyan Stotra, and the method of worship as per Kanva S'akha of Daksina Devi. Hear. When Yajha Deva, in ancient times got Daksina, skillful in action, he was very much fascinated by her appearance and being love- stricken, began to praise her"O Beautiful One! You were before the chief of the Gopis in Goloka. You were like Radha; you were Her companion; and you were loved by Sri Radha, the beloved of S'ri Krisna.

72-97. In the Rasa circle, on the Full Moon night in the month of Kartik, in the great festival of Radha, you appeared from the right shoulder of Laksmi; hence you were named Daksina. O Beautiful One! You were of good nature before; hence your name was Sus'ila. Next you turned due to Radha's curse, into Daksina. It is to my great good luck that you were dislodged from Goloka and have come here. O highly fortunate One! Now have mercy on me and accept me as your husband. O Devi! You give to all the doers of actions, the fruits of their works. Without you, their Karmas bear no fruit. So much so, if you be not present in their action the works never shine forth in brilliant glory. Without Thee, neither Brahma, nor Visnu nor Mahes'a nor the Regents of the quarters, the ten Dikpalas, can award the fruits of actions. Brahma is the incarnate of Karma. MahesVara is the incarnate of the fruits of Karmas; and I Visnu myself is the incarnate of Yajhas. But Thou art the Essence of all. Thou art the Para Prakriti, without any attributes, the Para Brahma incarnate, the bestower of the fruits of action. Bhagavan S'ri Krisna cannot award the fruits of actions without Thee. O Beloved! In every birth let Thou be my S'akti. O Thou with excellent face! Without Thee, I am unable to finish well any Karma." O Narada! Thus praising Daksina Devi, Yajha Deva stood before Her. She, born from the shoulder of Laksmi, became pleased with His Stotra and accepted Him for Her bridegroom. If anybody recites this Daksina stotra during sacrifice, he gets all the results thereof.

If anybody recites this stotra in the Rajasuya sacrifice, Vajapaya, Gomedha (cow sacrifice) Naramedha (man sacrifice), AsVamedha (horse sacrifice), Langala Sacrifice, Visnu Yajha tending to increase one's fame, in the act of giving over wealth or pieces of lands, digging tanks or wells, or giving fruits, in Gaja medha (elephant sacrifice), in Loha Yajha (iron sacrifice), Svarna Yajha (gold sacrifice), Ratna Yajha (making over jewels in sacrifices), Tamra Yajha (copper), S'iva Yajha, Rudra

Yajha, S'akra Yajha, Bandhuka Yajha, Varuna Yajha (for rains), Kandaka Yajha, for crushing the enemies, S'uchi Yajha, Dharma Yajha, Papa mochana Yajha, Brahmani Karma Yajha, the auspicious Prakriti Yaga, sacrifices, his work is achieved then without any hitch or obstacle. There is no doubt in this. The stotra, thus, is mentioned now; hear about the Dhyanam and the method of worship. First of all, one should worship in the S'alagrama stone, or in an earthen jar (Ghata) Daksina Devi. The Dhyanam runs thus "O Daksina! Thou art sprung from the right shoulder of Laksmi; Thou art a part of Kamala; Thou art clever (Daksa) in all the actions and Thou bestowest the fruits of all the actions. Thou art the S'akti of Visnu, Thou art revered, worshipped. Thou bestowest all that is auspicious; Thou art purity; Thou bestowest purity. Thou art good natured. So I meditate on Thee." Thus meditating, the intelligent one should worship Daksina with the principal mantra. Then with the Vedic Mantras, padyas, etc.

(offerings of various sorts) are to be offered. Now the mantra as stated in the Vedas, runs thus "Om S'rim Klim Hrim Daksinayai Svaha." With this mantra, all the offerings, such as padyas, arghyas, etc., are to be given, and one should worship, as per rules, Daksina Devi with devotion. O Narada! Thus I have stated to you the anecdote of Daksina. Happiness, pleasure, and the fruits of all karmas are obtained by this. Being engaged in sacrificial acts, in this Bharatavarsa, if one hears attentively this Dhyanam of Daksina, his sacrifice becomes defectless. So much so that the man who has got no sons gets undoubtedly good and qualified sons; if he has no wife, he gets a best wife, good natured, beautiful, of slender waist, capable to give many sons, sweet speaking, humble, chaste, pure, and Kulma; if he be void of learning, he gets learning; if he be poor he gets wealth; if he be without any land, he gets land and if he has no attendants, he gets attendants. If a man hears for one month this stotra of Daksina Devi, he gets over all difficulties and dangers, bereavements from friends, troubles, inprisonments, and all other calamities.

Here ends the Forty-fifth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the anecdote of Daksina in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said “O Thou, the foremost of the Knowers of the Vedas! I have heard from you the anecdotes of many Devis. Now I want to hear the lives of other DevTs also. Kindly describe.”

2. Narayana said “O Best of the Brahmanas! The lives and glorious deeds of all the DevTs are described separately. Now say, which lives you want to hear.”

3. Narada said:--“o Lord! SasthT, Mangala ChandT, and Manasa, are the parts of Prakriti. Now I want to hear the lives of them.”

4-22. Narayana said O Child! The sixth part of Prakriti is named as SasthT. The DevT SasthT is the Presiding Deity of infants and children; She is the Maya of Visnu and She bestows sons to all. She is one of the sixteen Matrikas. She is known by the name of Devasena. She performs Vratas (vows); She is the chaste and dearest wife of Skanda. She decides on the longevity of children and is always engaged in their preservation. So much so, that this Siddha YoginT always keeps the children on her side.

O Best of Brahmanas! I will now talk about the method of worshipping this DevT and the history about Her bestowing children that I heard from Dharma Deva. Hear. Svayambhuva Manu had one son Priyavrata. He was a great YogTndra and remained in practising austerities. So he was not inclined to have any wife. At last by the effort and request of Brahma, he got himself married. But many days passed, and he could not see the face of a son. Then Maharsi Kas’yapa became his priest in

and when the sacrifice was over, he gave the sacrificial offering called charu to his wife Malini. On eating the charu, the queen Malini become pregnant. For twelve Deva years she held the womb. After twelve years she delivered a full developed son, of a golden colour; but the son was lifeless and his two eyeballs were upset. At this, the friends' wives became very sorry and began to weep. The mother of the child became so very sorrowful that she became senseless. O Muni! The King himself took the son on his breast and went to the burning ground. There with his child on his breast he began to cry aloud. Rather he got himself ready to quit his own life than leave the son from away his breast. At this time he saw in the space overhead an aerial car, white as crystal, made of excellent jewels, coming towards him. The car was shining with its own lustre, encircled with woven silken cloth, which added to its beauty. Innumerable garlands of variegated colours gave it a very nice and charming appearance. On that car was seated a Siddha Yogini, very beautiful, of a lovely appearance of a colour like that of white champakas, always youthful, smiling, adorned with jewel ornaments, ever gracious to show favour to the devotees. On seeing Her, the King Priyavrata placed the child from his breast on the ground and began to worship Her and chant hymns to Her with great love and devotion. And he then asked that peaceful lady, the wife of Skanda, Who was shining like a summer sun "O Beautiful! Who art Thou? Whose wife art Thou and whose daughter art Thou? From Thy appearance it seems that Thou art fortunate and respected amongst the female sex."

23-24. O Narada! In ancient times, when the Daityas dispossessed the Devas of their positions, this Lady was elected as a general and got victory for the Devas; hence She was named Devasena. Hearing the words of the King Priyavrata, Devasena, who fought for the Devas and was all good to the whole world, said

25-42. O King! I am the mind-born daughter of Brahma. My name is Devasena. The Creator before created Me out of His mind and made Me over to the hands of Skanda. Amongst the Matrikas, I am known as Sasthi, the wife of Skanda. I am the sixth part of Prakriti; hence I am named Sasthi. I give sons to those who have no sons, wives to those who have no wives, wealth to the poor, and I give works to those who are workers (karmis.)

Happiness, pain, fear, sorrow, joy, good, and wealth and adversity all are the fruits of Karmas. As the result of one's Karmas, people get lots of sons and it is due to the result of one's Karma again that people are denuded of all the issues of their family. As the result of Karma, the people get dead sons; and as the result of Karma the people get long lives. All enjoy the fruits of their Karmas, whether they be well qualified, or deformed or whether they have many wives, or whether they have no wife, whether they be beautiful, religious, diseased, it is all through Karmas, Karmas. Disease comes out of their Karmas. Again they get cured by their Karmas. So, O King! It is stated in the Vedas that Karma is the most powerful of all. Thus saying, Devasena took the dead child on her lap; and, by the wisdom, early made the child alive. The King saw the child, of a golden colour got back his life and began to smile. Thus bidding goodbye to the King, Devasena took the child and became ready to depart. At this the King's palate and throat got dry and he began again to chant hymns to Her. The Devi Sasthi became pleased at the stotra made by the King. The Devi then addressed the King and said "O King! All that is stated in the Vedas, is made up of Karmas. You are the son of Svayambhuva Manu, and the Lord of the three worlds. You better promulgate My worship in the three worlds and you yourself worship Me. Then I will give you your beautiful son, the lotus of your family. Your son, born in part of Narayana, will be famous by the name of Suvrata. He will be well-qualified, a great literary man, able to remember his conditions in his former lives, the best of Yogis, performer of one hundred Yajhas, the best of all.

bowed down by the Ksattriyas, strong as one lakh powerful elephants, wealthy, fortunate, pure, favourite of literary persons, learned and bestower of the fruits of the ascetics, renowned and bestower of wealth and prosperity to the three worlds.” Thus saying Devasena gave the the child to the king. When the king pronnised that he would promulgate Her worship, the Devi granted him boons and went up to the Heavens.

43-57. The king, too, becoming very glad and surrounded by his ministers, returned to his own abode and informed all about the son. The ladies of the house, become highly delighted when they heard everything. On the occasion of the son’s getting back his life, the king performed everywhere auspicious ceremonies. The worship of Sasthi Devi commenced. Wealth was bestowed to the Brahmins. Since then, on every sixth day of the bright fortnight in every month, great festivals in honour of Sasthi Devi began to be celebrated.

Since then, throughout the kingdom, on every sixth day after the birth of a child in the lying-in-chamber, Sasthi Devi began to be worshipped. On the twenty-first day, the auspicious moment, at the ceremony of giving rice to a child for the first time, when sixth months old, and on all other auspicious ceremonies of the children, Sasthi Devi’s worship was made extant and the king himself performed those worships with great care and according to due rules. Now I will tell you about the Dhyanam and method of worship and stotra as I heard from Dharma Deva, and as stated in Kauthuma S’akha. Hear. He has said In a S’alagrama stone, in a jar, on the root of a Bata tree, or drawing the figure on the floor of the rooms, or making an image of Sasthi Devi, the sixth part of Prakriti and installing it, one should worship the Devi. The Dhyanam is this:- - “O Devasena Thou art the bestower of good sons, the giver of good luck; Thou art mercy and kindness and the progenitor of the world; Thy colour is bright like that of the white Champaka flowers. Thou art decked with jewel ornaments. Thou art pure, and the highest and best Devi. Obeisance to Thee! I meditate on Thee.” Thus meditating.

the worshipper should place flower on his own head. Then again meditating and uttering the principal mantra one is to offer the Padya (water for washing feet), Arghya, Achamaniya, scents, flowers, dhup, lights, offerings of food and best roots and fruits and one should worship thus with various things Sasthi Devi. “Om Hrim Sasthi Devyai Svaha” is the principal Mantra of Sasthi Devi. This great Mantra of eight letters a man should repeat as his strength allows. After the Japam, the worshipper should chant hymns with devotion and undivided attention and then bow down. The Stotra (hymn) of Sasthi Devi as per Sama Veda is very beautiful and son- bestowing.The lotus-born Brahma has said If one repeats (makes Japam) this eight lettered mantra one lakh of times, one gets certainly a good son. O Best of Munis! Now I am going to say the auspicious stotra of Sasthi Devi as composed by Priyavrata. Hear.

58-73. One’s desires are fulfilled when one reads this very secret stotra. Thus the King Priyavrata said “O Devi, Devasena! I bow down to Thee. O Great Devi! Obeisance to Thee! Thou art the bestower of Siddhis; Thou art peaceful; obeisance to Thee! Thou art the bestower of good; Thou art Devasena; Thou art Sasthi Devi, I bow down to Thee! Thou grantest boons to persons; Thou bestowest sons and wealth to men. So obeisance to Thee! Thou givest happiness and moksa; Thou art Sasthi Devi; I bow down to Thee. Thou thyself art Siddha; so I bow down to Thee. O Sasthi Devi! Thou art the sixth part of this creation; Thou art Siddha Yogini, so I bow down to Thee. Thou art the essence. Thou art Sarada; Thou art the Highest Devi. So I bow down again and again to Thee. Thou art the Presiding Deity Sasthi Devi of the children; I bow down to Thee.

Thou grantest good; Thou Thyself art good and Thou bestowest the fruits of all Karmas. O Thou O Sasthi Devi! Thou shewest thy form to thy devotees; I bow down to Thee! Thou art S’uddha Sattva and respected by all the persons in all their actions. Thou art the wife of Skanda. All worship Thee. O Sasthi Devi! Thou hadst saved the Devas. So obeisance to Thee O Sasthi Devi! Thou hast no envy, no anger; so obeisance to Thee. O SuresVari! Give me wealth, give me dear things, give me sons.

Give me respect from all persons; give me victory; slay my enemies. O Mahesvari! Give me Dharma; give me name and fame; I bow down again again to Sasthi Devi. O Sasthi Devi! worshipped reverentially by all! Give me lands, give me subjects, give me learning; have welfare for me; I bow down again and again to Sasthi Devi." O Narada! Thus praising the Devi, Priyavrata got a son, renowned and ruling over a great kingdom through the favour of Sasthi Devi. If any man that has no son, hears this stotra of Sasthi Devi for one year with undivided attention, he gets easily an excellent son, having a long life. If one worships for one year with devotion this Devasena and hears this stotra, even the most barren woman becomes freed from all her sins and gets a son. Through the grace of Sasthi Devi, that son becomes a hero, well qualified, literate, renowned and long-lived. If any woman who bears only a single child or delivers dead children hears with devotion for one year this stotra, she gets easily, through the Devi's grace, a good son. If the father and mother both hear with devotion, this story during the period of their child's illness, then the child becomes cured by the Grace of the Devi.

Here ends the Forty-sixth chapter of the Ninth Book on the anecdote of Sasthi Devi in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-25 Narayana said O Narada! I have now narrated the anecdote of Sasthi as stated in the Vedas. Now hear the anecdote of Mangala Chandi, approved of by the Vedas and respected by the literary persons. The Chandi, that is very skilled in all auspicious works and who is the most auspicious of all good things, is Mangal Chandika. Or the Chandi who is an object of worship of Mangala (Mars), the son of earth and the bestower of desires is Mangala Chandika. Or the Chandi who is an object of worship of Mangala of the family of Manu who was the ruler of the whole world composed of seven islands and the bestower of all desires is Mangala Chandi. Or it may be that the Mula Prakriti, the Governess, the Ever Gracious Durga assumed the form of Mangala Chandi and has become the Ista Devata of women. When there was the fight with Tripurasura, this Mangala Chandi, higher than the highest was first worshipped by Mahadeva, stimulated by Visnu, on a critical moment. O Brahmin! While the fighting was going on, a Daitya threw out of anger one car on Mahadeva and as that car was about to fall on Him, Brahma and Visnu gave a good advice when Mahadeva began to praise Durga Devi at once. Durga Devi that time assuming the form of Mangala Chandi appeared and said “no fear no fear” Bhagavan Visnu will be Thy Carrier buffalo. I will be also Thy S’akti in the action and Hah, full of Maya, will also help Thee. Thou better slayest the enemy that dispossessed the Devas. O Child! Thus saying, the Devi Mangala Chandi disappeared and She became the S’akti of Maha Deva.

Then with the help of the weapon given by Visnu, the Lord of Lima killed the Asura. When the Daitya fell, the Devas and Risis began to chant hymns to Mahadeva with devotion and with their heads bent low. From the sky, a shower of flowers fell instantaneously on Maha Deva’s head. Brahma and Visnu became glad and gave their best wishes to Him. Then ordered by Brahma and Visnu, S’ankara bathed joyously. Then He began to worship with devotion the Devi Mangala Chandi with padya, Arghya, Achamaniya and various clothings.

Flowers, sandal paste, various goats, sheep, buffaloes, bisons, birds, garments, ornaments, garlands, Payasa (a preparation of rice, ghee, milk and sugar), Pistaka, honey, wine, and various fruits were offered in the worship. Dancing, music, with instruments and the chanting of Her name and other festivals commenced. Reciting the Dhyan as in Madhyandina, Mahadeva offered everything, pronouncing the principal Radical Mantra, “Om Hrim S’rim Klim Sarvapujye Devi Mangala Chandike Hum Phat Svaha” is the twenty- one lettered Mantra of Mangala Chandi. During worship, the Kalpa Vriksa, the tree yielding all desires, must be worshipped. O Narada! By repeating the Mantra ten lakhs of times, the Mantra Siddhi (success in realising the Deity inherent in the Mantra) comes. Now I am saying about the Dhyanam of Mangal Chandi as stated in the Vedas and as approved by all. Listen. “O Devi Mangala Chandike! Thou art sixteen years old; Thou art ever youthful; Thy lips are like Bimba fruits. Thou art of good teeth and pure. Thy face looks like autumnal lotus; Thy colour is like white champakas; Thy eyes resemble blue lilies; Thou art the Preserver of the world and thou bestowest all sorts of prosperity. Thou art the Light in this dark ocean of the world. So I meditate on Thee.” This is the Dhyanam. Now hear the stotra, which Mahadeva recited before Her.

26-37. Mahadeva said Protect me. Protect me, O Mother! O Devi Mangal Chandike! Thou, the Destroyer of difficulties! Thou givest joy and good. Thou art clever in giving delight and fortune. Thou the bestower of all bliss and prosperity! Thou, the auspicious. Thou art Mangala Chandika. Thou art Mangala, worthy of all good. Thou art the auspicious of all auspicious; Thou bestowest good to the good persons. Thou art worthy to be worshipped on Tuesday (the Mangala day); Thou art the Deity, desired by all. The King Mangala, born of Manu family always worships Thee. Thou, the presiding Devi of Mangala; Thou art the repository of all the good that are in this world. Thou, the Bestower of the auspicious Moksa. Thou, the best of all; Thou, the respository of all good; Thou makest one cross all the Karmas; the people worship Thee on every Tuesday; Thou bestowest abundance of Bliss to all. Thus praising Mangala Chandika with this stotra, and worshipping on every Tuesday, S'annbhu departed. The Devi Sarva Mangala was first worshipped by Mahadeva. Next she was worsh ipped by the planet Mars; then by the King Mangala; then on every Tuesday by the ladies of every household. Fifthly she was worshipped by all men, desirous of their welfare. So in every universe Mangal Chandika, first worshipped by Mahadeva, came to be worshipped by all. Next she came to be worshipped everywhere, by the Devas, Munis, Manavas, Manus. O Muni! He who hears with undivided attention this stotra of the Devi Mangala Chandika, finds no evils anywhere. Rather all good comes to him. Day after day he gets sons and grandsons and so his prosperity gets increased, yea, verily increased!

38-58. Narayana said O Narada! Thus I narrated to you the stories of Sasthi and Mangala Chandika, according to the Vedas. Now hear the story of Manasa that I heard from the mouth of Dharama Deva.

Manasa is the mind-born daughter of Maharsi Kas'yapa; hence she is named Manasa; or it may be She who plays with the mind is Manasa. Or it may be She who meditates on God with her mind and gets rapture in Her meditation of God is named Manasa. She finds pleasure in Her Own Self, the great devotee of Visnu, a Siddha Yogini. For three Yugas She worshipped S'ri Krisna and then She became a Siddha Yogini. S'ri Krisna, the Lord of the GopTs, seeing the body of Manasa lean and thin due to austerities, or seeing her worn out like the Muni Jarat Karu called her by the name of Jarat Karu. Hence Her name has come also to be Jarat Karu. Krisna, the Ocean of Mercy, gave her out of kindness. Her desired boon; She worshipped Him and S'ri Krisna also worshipped Her. Devi Manasa is known in the Heavens, in the abode of the Nagas (serpents), in earth, in Brahmaloka, in all the worlds as of very fair colour, beautiful and charming. She is named Jagad Gauri as she is of a very fair colour in the world. Her other name is S'aivT and she is the disciple of S'iva. She is named Vaisnavi as she is greatly devoted to Visnu. She saved the Nagas in the Snake Sacrifice performed by Pariksit, she is named NagesVari and Naga Bhagini and She is capable to destroy the effects of poison. She is called Visahari. She got the Siddha yoga from Mahadeva; hence She is named Siddha Yogini; She got from Him the great knowledge, so she is called Maha Jhanayuta, and as she got Mritasamjivani (making alive the dead) she is known by the name of Mritasanjivani. As the great ascetic is the mother of the great Muni Astik, she is known in the world as Astika mata. As She is the dear wife of the great high-souled Yogi Muni Jarat Karu, worshipped by all, she is called as Jarat

Karupriya, Jaratkaru, Jagadgauri, Manasa, Siddha Yogini, Vaisnavi, Naga Bhagini, S'aivi, NagesVari, Jaratkarupriya, Astikamata, Visahari, and Maha Jhanayuta; these are the twelve names of Manasa, worshipped everywhere in the Universe. He who recites these twelve names while worshipping Manasa Devi, he or any of his family has no fear of snakes. If there be any fear of snakes in one's bed, if the house be infested with snakes or if one goes to a place difficult for fear of snakes or if one's body be encircled with snakes, all the fears are dispelled, if one reads this stotra of Manasa. There is no doubt in this. The snakes run away out of fear from the sight of him who daily recites the Manasa stotra. Ten lakhs of times repeating the Manasa mantra give one man success in the stotra.

He can easily drink poison who attains success in this stotra. The snakes become his ornaments; they carry him even on their backs. He who is a great Siddha can sit on a seat of snakes and can sleep on a bed of snakes. In the end he sports day and night with Visnu.

Here ends the Forty-seventh Chapter of the Ninth Book on Manasa's story in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-30. Narayana said O Narada! I will now speak of the Dhyanam and the method of worship of S’ri Devi Manasa, as stated in the Sama Veda. Hear. “I meditate on the Devi Manasa, Whose colour is fair like that of the white champaka flower, whose body is decked all over with jewel ornaments, whose clothing is purified by fire, whose sacred thread is the Nagas (serpent), who is full of wisdom, who is the foremost of great Jhanins, who is the Presiding deity of the Siddhas, Who Herself is a Siddha and who bestows Siddhis to all.” O Muni! Thus meditating on Her, one should present Her, flowers, scents, ornaments, offerings of food and various other articles, pronouncing the principal Seed Mantra. O Narada! The twelve lettered Siddha Mantra, to be mentioned below, yields to the Bhaktas their desires like the Kalpa Tree. Now the Radical mantra as stated in the Vedas is “Om Hrim S’rim Klim Aim Manasa Devyai Svaha.” Repetition of this, five lakhs of times, yields success to one who repeats. He who attains success in this mantra gets unbounded name and fame in this world. Poison becomes nectar to him and he himself becomes famous like Dhanvantari. O Narada! If anybody bathes on any Samkranti day (when the sun enters from one sign to another) and going to a private room (hidden room), invokes the Devi Manasa Is’ana and worships Her with devotion, or makes sacrifices of animals before the Devi on the fifth day of the fortnight, he becomes certainly wealthy, endowed with sons and name and fame. Thus I have described to you the method of worship of Manasa Devi. Now hear the anecdote of the Devi as I heard from Dharma. In olden days, men became greatly terrified on earth from snakes and took refuge of Kas’yapa, the supreme amongst the Munis. The Maharsi Kas’yapa became very afraid. He then with Brahma, and by His command composed a mantra following the principal motto of the Vedas. While composing this mantra, he intensely thought of the Devi, the Presiding Deity of that Mantra, through the power of his Tapasya and through the mental power, the

Devi Manasa appeared and was named so, as She was produced from the sheer influence of mind. On being born, the girl went to the abode of S'ankara in Kailas'a and began to worship Him and chant hymns to Him with devotion. For one thousand Divine years, the daughter of Kas'yapa served Mahadeva when He became pleased. He gave her the Great Knowledge, made Her recite the Sama Veda and bestowed to her the eight-lettered Krisna mantra which is like the Kalpa Tree. S'rim Hrim Klim Krisnaya Namah was the eight lettered Mantra. She got from Him the Kavacha (amulet) auspicious to the three worlds, the method of worship and all the rules of Purascharana (repetition of the name of a deity attended with burnt offerings, oblations, etc.) and went by His command to perform in Puskara very hard austerities. There she worshipped Krisna for the three Yugas. S'ri Krisna then appeared before Her. On seeing Krisna, immediately the girl, worn out by austerities, worshipped Him, and she was also worshipped by S'ri Krisna. Krisna granted her the boon, "Let you be worshipped throughout the world" and departed. O Narada! She was thus first worshipped by the Supreme Spirit, the Devi Krisna; secondly by S'ankara; thirdly by the Maharsi Kas'yapa and the Devas. Then she was worshipped by the Munis, Manus, Nagas, and men; and She became widely renowned in the three worlds. Kas'yapa gave Her over to the hands of Jaratkaru Muni. At the request of the Brahmin Kas'yapa, the Muni Jarat Karu married Her. After the marriage, one day, being tired with his long work of Tapasya, Jarat Karu laid his head on the hip and loins of his married wife and fell fast asleep. Gradually the evening came in. The sun set. Then Manasa thought, "If my husband fails to perform the Sandhya, the daily duty of the Brahmanas, he would be involved in the sin of Brahmahatya. It is definitely stated in the S'astras, that if any Brahmana does not perform his Sandhya in the morning and in the evening, he becomes wholly impure and the sins Brahmahattya and other crimes come down on his head." Arguing thus, these thoughts in her mind, as commanded by the Vedas, at last she awakened her husband, who then got up from his sleep.

31-60. The Muni Jarat Karu said "O Chaste One! I was sleeping happily. Why have you thus interrupted my sleep? All his vows turn out useless who injures her husband. Her tapas, fastings, gifts, and other meritorious works all come to vain who do things unpleasant to her husband. If she worships her husband, she is said to have worshipped S'ri Krisna. For the sake of fulfilling the vows of the chaste women. Hah himself becomes their husbands. All sorts of charities, gifts, all sacrifices, fastings, practising all the virtues, keeping to truth, worshipping all the Devas, nothing can turn out equal to even one-sixteenth part of serving one's husband. She ultimately goes with her husband to the region of Vaikuntha, who serves her husband in this holy land Bharata. She comes certainly of a bad family who does unpleasant acts to her husband or who uses unpleasant words to her husband. She goes to the Kumbhipaka hell as long as the Sun and Moon last and then she becomes born as a Chandali, without husband and son." Speaking thus, Jarat Karu, the best of the Munis, became angry and his lips began to tremble. Seeing this, the best Manasa, shivering with fear, addressed her husband

I have broken your sleep and awakened you, fearing you might miss your time of Sandhya. I have committed an offence. Punish me as you think. I know that a man goes to the Kalasutra hell as long as the Sun and Moon last in this world, who throws an obstacle when any man eats, sleeps or enjoys with the opposite sex. O Narada! Thus saying, the Devi Manasa fell down at the feet of her husband and cried again and again. On the other hand, knowing the Muni angry, and ready to curse her, the Sun came there with Sandhya Devi. And He humbly spoke to him with fear"O Bhagavan! Seeing Me going to set, and fearing that you may miss Dharma, your chaste wife has awakened you. O Brahmin! Now I am also under your refuge; forgive me. O Bhagavan! You should not curse Me. The more so, a Brahmana's heart is as tender as the fresh butter. The anger of a Brahman lasts only half the twinkling of an eye (Ksan). When a

Brahmana becomes angry, he can burn all this world and can make a new creation. So who can possess an influence like a Brahmana.

A Brahmin is a part of Brahma; he is shining day and night with the Tejas of Brahma. A Brahmana meditates always on the Eternal Light of Brahma.” O Narada! Hearing the words of the Sun, the Brahmin became satisfied and blessed Him. The Sun also went to His own place, thus blessed daily. To keep his promise, the Brahmin Jaratkaru quitted Manasa. She became very sorry and began to cry aloud with pain and anguish. Being very much distressed by the then danger, she remembered Her Ista Deva, Mahadeva, Brahma, Hah and Her father Maharsi Kas’yapa- On the very instant when Manasa remembered S’ri Krisna, the Lord of the Gopis, Mahadeva, Brahma and Maharsi Kas’yapa appeared there. Then seeing his own desired Deity S’ri Krisna, superior to Prakriti, beyond the attributes, Jaratkaru began to praise Him and bowed down to Him repeatedly. Then bowing down to Mahadeva, Brahma and Kas’yapa, he enquired why they had come there. Brahma, then, instantly bowed down at the lotus feet of Hrisikes’a and spoke in befitting words at that time if the Brahmin Jaratkaru leaves at all his legal wife, devoted to her own Dharma, he should first of all have a son born of her to fulfil his Dharma. O Muni! Any man can quit his wife, after he has impregnated her and got a son. But if without having a son, he leaves his wife, then all his merits are lost as all water leaks out of a sieve or a strainer. O Narada! Hearing thus the words of Brahma, the Muni Jaratkaru by his Yogic power recited a Mantra and touching the navel of Manasa spoke to her“O Manasa! A son will be born in your womb self-controlled, religious, and best of the Brahmanas.

61-77. That son will be fiery, energetic, renowned, well-qualified the foremost of the Knowers of the Vedas, a great Jhanin and the best of the Yogis. That son is a true son, indeed, who uplifts his family who is religious and devoted to Hari. At his birth all the Pitris dance with great joy. And the wife is a true wife who is devoted to her husband, good-natured and sweet-speaking and she is religious, she is the mother of sons, she is the woman of the family and she is the preserver of the family. He is the true friend, indeed, the giver of one’s desired fruits, who imparts devotion to Hari. That father is a true father who shows the way to devotion to Hari. And She is the True Mother, through whom this entering into wombs ceases for ever, yea, for ever! That sister is the true kind sister from whom the fear of Death vanishes. That Guru is the Guru who gives the Visnu Mantra and the true devotion to Visnu. That Guru is the real bestower of knowledge who gives the Jhanam by which S’ri Krisna is meditated in whom this whole universe, moving and non-moving from the Brahma down to a blade of grass, is appearing and disappearing. There is no doubt in this. What knowledge can be superior to that of S’ri Krisna. The knowledge derived from the Vedas, or from the sacrifices or from any other source is not superior to the service to S’ri Krisna. The devotion and knowledge of S’ri Hari is the Essence of all knowledge; all else is vain and mockery. It is through this Real Knowledge; that this bondage from this world is severed. But the Guru who does not impart this devotion and knowledge of S’ri Hari is not the real Guru; rather he is an enemy that leads one to bondage. Verily he kills his disciple when he does not free him. He can never be called a Guru, father or friend who does not free his disciple from the pains in the various wombs and from the pains of death. Verily he can never be called a friend who does not show the way to the Undecaying S’ri Krisna, the Source of the Highest Bliss. So, O Chaste One! You better worship that Undecaying Para Brahma S’ri Krisna, Who is beyond the attributes.

O Beloved! I have left you out of a pretence; please excuse me for this. The chaste women are always forgiving; never they become angry because they are born of Sattvagunas. Now I go to Puskara for Tapasya; you better go wherever you like. Those who have no desire have their minds always attached to the lotus feet of S'ri Krisna." O Narada! Hearing the words of Jaratkaru, the Devi Manasa became very much distressed and bewildered with great sorrow. Tears began to flow from her eyes. She then humbly spoke to her dearest husband "O Lord! I have not committed any such offence, as you leave me altogether when I have thus broken your sleep.

78-115. However kindly show Thyself to me when I will recollect you. The bereavement of one's friend is painful; more than that is the bereavement of a son. Again one's husband is dearer than one hundred sons; so the bereavement of one's husband is the heaviest of all. To women, the husband is the most beloved of all earthly things; hence he is called Priya, i.e., dear. As the heart of one who has only one son is attached to that son, as the heart of a Vaisnava is attached to S'ri Hari; as the mind of one-eyed man to his one eye, as the mind of the thirsty is attached to water, as the mind of the hungry is attached to food, as the mind of the passionate is attached to lust, as the mind of a thief is attached to the properties of others, as the mind of a lewd man to his prostitute, as the mind of the learned is attached to the S'astras, as the mind of a trader is attached to his trade, so the minds of chaste women are attached to their husbands." Thus saying, Manasa fell down at the feet of her husband. Jaratkaru, the ocean of mercy, then, took her for a moment on his lap and drenched her body with tears from his eyes. The Devi Manasa, too, distressed at the bereavement of her husband also drenched the lap of the Muni with tears from her eyes. Some time after, the true knowledge arose in them and they both became free from fear. Jaratkaru then enlightened his wife and asked her to meditate on the lotus feet of S'ri Krisna the Supreme Spirit repeatedly; thus saying he went away for his Tapasya. Manasa, distressed with sorrow, went to his Ista Deva Mahadeva on Kailas'a. The auspicious S'iva and Parvati both consoled her with knowledge and advice. Some days after, on an auspicious they and on an auspicious moment she gave birth to a son born in part of Narayana, and as the Guru of the Yogis and as the Preceptor of the Jhanins. When the child was in mother's womb, he heard the highest knowledge from the mouth of Mahadeva; therefore he was born as a Yogindra and the Spiritual Teacher of the Jhanins. On his birth, Bhagavan S'ankara performed his natal ceremonies and performed various auspicious ceremonies. The Brahmanas chanted the Vedas for the welfare of the child; various wealth and jewels and Kiritas and invaluable gems were distributed by S'ankara to the Brahmanas; and Parvati gave one lakh cows and various jewels to others. After some days, Mahadeva taught him the four Vedas with their Angas (six limbs) and gave him, at last, the Mrityumjaya Mantra. As in Manasa's mind there reigned the devotion to her husband, the devotion to her Ista Deva and Guru, the child's name was kept Astika.

Astika then got the Maha Mantra from S'ankara and by his command went to Puskara to worship Visnu, the Supreme Spirit. There he practised tapasya for three lakh divine years. And then he returned to Kailas'a, to bow down to the great Yogi and the Lord S'ankara, Then, bowing down to S'ankara, he remained there for some time when Manasa with her son Astika went to the hermitage of Kas'yapa, her father. Seeing Manasa with son, the Maharsi's gladness knew no bounds. He fed innumerable Brahmanas for the welfare of the child, and distributed lakhs and lakhs of jewels. The joy of Aditi and Diti (the wives of Kas'yapa) knew no bounds;

Manasa remained there for a long, long time with his son. O Child! Hear now an anecdote on this. One day due to a bad Karma, a Brahmana cursed the king Pariksit, the son of Abhimanyu; one Risi's son named S'ringi, sipping the water of the river Kaus'iki cursed thus "When a week expires, the snake Taksaka will bite you, and you will be burnt with the poison of that snake Taksaka." Hearing this, the King Pariksit, to preserve his life, went to a place, solitary where wind even can have no access and he lived there. When the week was over, Dhanvantari saw, while he was going on the road, the snake Taksaka who was also going to bite the king. A conversation and a great friendship arose between them; Taksaka gave him voluntarily a gem; and Dhanvantari, getting it, became pleased and went back gladly to his house. The king Pariksit was lying on his bed-stead when Taksaka bit the king. The king died soon and went to the next world. The king Janamejaya then performed the funeral obsequies of his father and commenced afterwards the Sarpa Yajha (a sacrifice where the snakes are the victims). In that sacrifice.

innumerable snakes gave up their lives by the Brahma Teja (the fire of the Brahmins). At this, Taksaka became terrified and took refuge of Indra. The Brahmins, then, in a body, became, ready to burn Taksaka along with Indra, when, Indra and the other Devas went to Manasa. Mahendra, bewildered with fear, began to chant hymns to Manasa. Manasa called his own son Astika who then went to the sacrificial assembly of the king Janamejaya and begged that the lives of Indra and Taksaka be spared. The king, then, at the command of the Brahmanas, granted their lives. The king, then, completed his sacrifice and gladly gave the Daksinas to the Brahmins. The Brahmanas, Munis, and Devas collected and went to Manasa and worshipped Her separately and chanted hymns to Her. Indra went there with the various articles and He worshipped Manasa with devotion and with great love and care; and He chanted hymns to Her. Then bowing down before Her, and under the instructions of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a, offered her sixteen articles, sacrifices and various other good and pleasant things. O Narada! Thus worshipping Her, they all went to their respective places. Thus I have told you the anecdote of Manasa. What more do you want to hear. Say.

Narada said "O Lord! How did Indra praise Her and what was the method of His worshipping Her; I want to hear all this."

116-124. Narayana said Indra first took his bath; and, performing Achamana and becoming pure. He put on a fresh and clean clothing and placed Manasa Devi on a jewel throne. Then reciting the Vedic mantras he made Her perform Her bath by the water of the Mandakini, the celestial river Ganges, poured from a jewel jar and then He made Her put on the beautiful clothing, uninflammable by fire. Then He caused sandalpaste to be applied to Her body all over with devotion and offered water for washing Her feet and Arghya, an offering of grass and flowers and rice, etc., as a token of preliminary worship. First of all the six Devatas Ganes'a, Sun, Fire, Visnu, S'iva, and S'iva were worshipped. Then with the ten lettered mantra, "Om Hrim S'rim Manasa Devyai Svaha" offered all the offerings to Her. Stimulated by the God Visnu, Indra worshipped with great joy the Devi with sixteen articles so very rare to any other person. Drums and instruments were sounded. From the celestial heavens, a shower of flowers was thrown on the head of Manasa. Then, at the advice of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a, the Devas and the Brahmanas, Indra, with tears in his eyes, began to chant hymns to Manasa, when his whole body was thrilled with joy and hairs stood on their ends.

125-145. Indra said "O Devi Manase! Thou standest the highest amongst the chaste women. Therefore I want to chant hymns to Thee. Thou art higher than the highest. Thou art most supreme.

What I now praise Thee? Chanting hymns is characterised by the description of one's nature; so it is said in the Vedas. But, O Prakriti!

I am unable to ascertain and describe Thy qualities. Thou art of the nature of S'uddha Sattva (higher than the pure sattva unmixed with any other Gunas); Thou art free from anger and malice. The Muni Jaratkaru could not forsake Thee; therefore it was that he prayed for Thy separation before. O Chaste One! I have now worshipped Thee. Thou art an object of worship as my mother Aditi is. Thou art my sister full of mercy; Thou art the mother full of forgiveness. O Sures'vari! It is through Thee that my wife, sons and my life are saved. I am worshipping Thee. Let Thy love be increased. O World-

Mother! Thou art eternal; though Thy worship is extant everywhere in the universe; yet I worship Thee to have it extended further and further. O Mother! Those who worship Thee with devotion on the Sankranti day of the month of Asudha, or on the Naga Pahchami day, or on the Sankranti day of every month or on every day, they get their sons and grandsons, wealth and grains increased and become themselves famous, well gratified, learned and renowned. If anybody does not worship Thee out of ignorance, rather if he censures Thee, he will be bereft of Laksmi and he will be always afraid of snakes. Thou art the Griha Laksmi of all the householders and the Raja Laksmi of Vaikuntha. Bhagavan Jarat Karu, the great Muni, born in part of Narayana, is Thy husband. Father Kas'yapa has created Thee mentally by his power of Tapas and fire to preserve us; Thou art his mental creation; hence thy name is Manasa. Thou Thyself hast become Siddha Yogini in this world by thy mental power; hence thou art widely known as Manasa Devi in this world and worshipped by all. The Devas always worship Thee mentally with devotion; hence the Pundits call Thee by the name of Manasa. O Devi! Thou always servest Truth, hence Thou art of the nature of Truth. He certainly gets Thee who always thinks of Thee verily as of the nature of truth." O Narada! Thus praising his sister Manasa and receiving from her the desired boon, Indra went back, dressed in his own proper dress, to his own abode. The Devi Manasa, then, honored and worshipped everywhere, and thus worshipped by her brother, long lived in Her father's house, with Her son.

One day Surabhi (the heavenly cow) came from the Goloka and bathed Manasa with milk and worshipped Her with great devotion and revealed to Her all the Tattva Jhanas, to be kept very secret. (This is now made the current story wherever any Lingam suddenly becomes visible.) O Narada! Thus worshipped by the Devas and Surabhi, the Devi Manasa went to the Heavenly regions. O Muni! One gets no fear from snakes who recites this holy Stotra composed by Indra and worships Manasa; his family descendants are freed from the fear due to snakes. If anybody becomes Siddha in this Stotra, poison becomes nectar to him. Reciting the stotra five lakhs of times makes a man Siddha in this Stotra. So much so that he can sleep on a bed of snakes and he can ride on snakes.

English translation

1. Narada said “O Bhagavan! Who was that Surabhi, who came down from the region of Goloka. I want to hear Her life. Kindly describe.”

2-23. Narayana spoke “O Devarsi! The Devi Surabhi sprang in the Goloka. She was the first in the creation of cows; and, from Her, all the other cows have come. She is the Presiding Deity of the cows. I will now speak Her history from the very beginning. Hear. Before,

She appeared in the holy Vrindaban. One day the Lord of Radha, surrounded by the GopTs, was going gladly with Radha to the Holy Vrindavan. There he began to enjoy in a solitary place with great pleasure. He is All Will and suddenly a desire arose in His mind that He would drink milk. Then He created easily the Devi Surabhi, full of milk, with Her calf, from His own left side. The calf of Surabhi is nothing else but Her wish personified. Seeing Surabhi, S’ridama milked Her in a new earthen jar. The milk is more sweet than even the nectar and it prevents birth and death! The Lord of the GopTs drank the milk. What milk dropped out of the jar, created a big tank! The tank measured one hundred Yojanas in length and in breadth and is known in Goloka by the name of KsTrasagara. The GopTkas and Radha play therein. At the will of S’rT Krisna, Whose Nature is All Will, that tank become full of excellent gems and jewels. Then, from every pore of Surabhi, there appeared suddenly one lakh koti Kamadhenus (cows who yields according to one’s desires). So much so that every Gopa who used to live there in Goloka had one Kamadhenu and each house had one such. Their calves again became so many that no limit can be put to them. Thus, by degrees, the whole universe was filled with cows. This is the origin of the Cow Creation. O Narada! Surabhi was first worshipped by Bhagavan S'rT Krisna. Therefore She is so much honoured everywhere. On the day next the DivalT night (new moon in the month of October), Surabhi was worshipped by the command of S'ri Krisna. This is heard from the mouth of Dharma Deva. O Child! Now hear the Dhyanam, Stotra, and the method of worship of Surabhi as mentioned in the Vedas. I will now speak on this. "Om Surabhyai namah," is the principal six- lettered mantra of Surabhi. If anybody repeats this mantra one lakh times, he becomes Siddha in this mantra. This is like Kalpa Vriksa (a tree yielding all desires) to the devotees. The Dhyanam of Surabhi is mentioned in the Yajur Vedas. Success, prosperity, increase and freedom come as the result of worshipping Surabhi. The Dhyanam runs as follows "O Devi Surabhi! Thou art Laksmi, Thou art best. Thou art Radha; Thou art the chief companion of S'ri Radha, Thou art the first and the source of the cow-creation. Thou art holy and Thou sanctifiest the persons; Thou fufillest the desires of the devotees and Thou purifiest the whole universe. Therefore I meditate on Thee." Reciting this Dhyanam, the Brahmanas worship the Devi Surabhi in jars, on the heads of cows, or on the pegs where cows are fastened or on S'alagrama stone or in water or in fire. O Muni!

He who worships with devotion on the next day morning after Divali night, becomes also worshipped in this world. Once a day in the Varahakalpa Surabhi did not yield milk, by the influence of Visnu Maya. The Devas became very anxious. Then they went to the Brahmaloka and began to praise Brahma. At His advice, Indra began to chant hymns (Stotra) to Surabhi

24-33. The Devendra said "O World-Mother! O Devi! O Maha Devi! O Surabhi! Thou art the source of the cow creation. Obeisance to Thee! Thou art the dear companion of Radha; Thou art the part of Kamala; Thou art dear to S'ri Krisna; Thou art the mother of cows, I bow down to Thee. Thou art like the Kalpa Vriksa (a tree yielding all desires). Thou art the Chief of all; Thou yieldest milk, wealth and prosperity and increase thereof. So I bow down to Thee. Thou art auspicious. Thou art good. Thou bestowest cows. Obeisance to Thee! Thou givest fame, name and Dharma. So I bow down to Thee." O Narada! Thus hearing the praise sung by Indra, the eternal

Surabhi, the originator of the world, became very glad and appeared in the Brahmaloka. Granting boon to Mahendra, so very rare to others and desired by him, Subrabhi went to the Goloka. The Devas, also, went back to their own abodes. The whole world was now full of milk; clarified butter came out of the milk; and from clarified butter sacrifices began to be performed and the Devas were fed and they became pleased. O Child! He who recites this holy Stotra of Surabhi with devotion, gets cows, other wealth, name, fame and sons. The reciting of this Stotra qualifies one as if he had bathed in all the sacred places of pilgrimages and he had acquired the fruits of all the sacrifices. Enjoying happiness in this world, be goes in the end to the Temple of S'ri Krisna. There living long in the service of Krisna, he becomes able to be a son of Brahma.

English translation

1-4. Narada said “O Bhagavan! I have heard all the anecdotes of Prakriti, as according to the S’astras, that lead to the freedonn from birth and death in this world. Now I want to hear the very secret history of S’ri Radha and Durga as described in the Vedas. Though you have told me about their glories, yet I am not satisfied. Verily, where is he whose heart does not melt away on hearing the glories of both of them! This world is originated from their parts and is being controlled by them. The devotion towards them frees one easily from the bonds of Samsara (rounds of birth and death). O Muni! Kindly describe now about them.”

5-44. Narayana said O Narada! I am now describing the characters of Radha and Durga, as described in the Vedas; listen. I did not describe to anybody this Secret which is the Essence of all essences and Higher than the highest. This is to be kept very secret. Hearing this, one ought not to divulge it to any other body. Radha presides over the Prana and Durga presides over the Buddhi. From these two, the Mulaprakriti has originated this world. These two S’aktis guide the whole world. From the Mahavirat to the small insect, all, moving or non-moving, are under the Mulaprakriti. One must satisfy them. Unless these two be satisfied, Mukti cannot be obtained.

Therefore one ought to serve Mula Prakriti for Her satisfaction. Now of the two in Mula Prakriti, I will describe fully the Radha Mantra. Listen. Brahma, Visnu, and others always worship this mantra. The principal mantra is “S’ri Radhayai Svaha.” By this six lettered mantra Dharma and other fruits all are obtained with ease. If to this six lettered Mula mantra Hrim be added, it yields gems and jewels as desired. So much so, if thousand koti mouths and one hundred koti tongues are obtained, the glory of this mantra cannot be described. When the incorporeal voice of Mula Prakriti was heard in the Heavens, this mantra was obtained, first by Krisna in the Rasa Mandalam in the region of Goloka where all love sentiments are played. (The Vedas declare him as Raso vai Sah). From Krisna, Visnu got the Mantra; from Visnu, Brahma got; from Brahma Virat got, from Virat, Dharma, and from Dharma I have got this Mantra. Repeating that Mantra, I am known by the name of Risi. Brahma and the other Devas meditate always on the Mula Prakriti with greatest joy and ecstasy. Without the worship of Radha, never can the worship of S’ri Krisna be done. So men, devoted to Visnu, should first of all worship Radha by all means. Radha is the Presiding Deity of the Prana of S’ri Krisna. Hence S’ri Krisna is so much subject to Radha. The Lady of the Rasa Mandalam remains always close to Him. Without Her S’ri Krisna could not live even for a moment. The name Radha is derived from “Radhnoti” or fulfills all desires. Hence Mula Prakriti is termed Radha. I am the Risi of all the mantras but the Durga Mantra mentioned in this Ninth Skandha. Gayatri is the chhanda (mantra) of those mantras and Radhika is the Devata of them. Really, Narayana is the Risi of all the mantras; Gayatri is the chhanda; Pranava (om) is the Vija (seed) and BhuvanesVari (the Directrix of the world) is the S’akti. First of all the principal mantra is to be repeated six times; then meditation of the great Devi Radhika, the S’akti of the Risis is to be done, as mentioned in the Sama Veda. The meditation of Radha is as follows O Devi Radhike! Thy colour is like white Champaka flower; Thy face is like the autumnal Full Moon; Thy body shines with the splendour of ten million moons. Thy eyes look beautiful like autumnal lotus; Thy lips are red like Bimba fruits. Thy loins are very heavy and decked with the girdle (Kanchi) ornament; Thy face is always gracious with sweet smiles; Thy breasts defy the frontal globe of an elephant. Thou art ever youthful as if twelve years old; Thy body is adorned all over with ornaments! Thou art the waves of the ocean of S’ringara (love sentiments.) Thou art ever ready to show Thy grace to the devotees; on Thy braid of hair garlands of Mallika and Malati are shining; Thy body is like a creeping plant, very gentle and tender; Thou art seated in the middle of Rasa Mandalam as the Chief Directrix; Thy one hand is ready to grant boons and another hand expresses "Have no fear." Thou art of a peaceful appearance; Thou art ever youthful; Thou art seated on a jewel throne; Thou art the foremost guide of the Gopikas; Thou art dearer to Krisna than even His life; O Parame'svari! The Vedas reveal Thy nature. Meditating thus, one is to bathe the Devi on a S'alagrama stone, jar, yantra or the eight petalled lotus and then worship Her duly. First the Devi is to be invoked; then Padya and Asana, etc., are to be offered, the principal Mantra being pronounced at every time an offering is given. After giving water for washing both the feet, Arghya is to be placed on the head and Achamaniyam water to be offered three times on the face. Madhuparka (an oblation of honey, milk etc.) and a cow giving a good quantity of milk are next to be offered. Then the yantra is to be thought of as the bathing place where the Devi is to be bathed. Then Her body is to be wiped and a fresh cloth given for putting on. Sandalpaste and various other ornaments are next to be given. Various garlands of flowers with Tulasi Manjari (flower stalks) Parijata flower and Satapatra etc., then, are to be offered. Then within the eight petals, the family members of the Devi are to be thought of; worship is next to be offered in the right hand direction (with the hands of the watch). First of all,

Malavati on the petal in front of (on the east) the Devi, then MadhavT on the southeast corner, then Ratnamala on the south, Sus'ila on the south-west, Sas'ikala on the west, Parijata on the north-west, Paravati on the north and the benefactions Sundari on the north-east corner are to be worshipped in order. Outside this, Brahmi and the other Matrikas are to be worshipped and on the Bhupuras (the entrances of the yantra,) the Regents of the quarters, the Dikpalas and the weapons of the Devi, thunderbolt, etc., are to be worshipped. Then all the attendant Deities of the Devi are to be worshipped with scents and various other articles. Thus finishing the worship, one should chant the Stotra (hymns) named Sahasra-nama (thousand names) Stotra with care and devotion. O Narada! The intelligent man who worships thus the RasesVari Devi Radha, becomes like Visnu and goes to the Goloka.

He who performs the birthday anniversary of S'ri Radha on the Full- Moon day of the month of Kartik, gets the blessings of S'ri Radha who remains near to him. For some reason Radha, the dweller in Goloka was born in Brindaban as the daughter of Vrisavanu. However, according to the number of letters of the mantras that are mentioned in this chapter, Purascharana is to be made and Homa, one-tenth of Purascharana, is to be then performed. The Homa is to be done with ghee, honey, and milk; the three sweet things mixed with Til and with devotion.

45. Narada said "O Bhagavan; Now describe the Stotra (hymn) Mantra by which the Devi is pleased."

46-100. Narayana said O Narada! Now I am saying the Radha Stotra. Listen. O Thou, the Highest Deity, the Dweller in Rasa Mandalam! I bow down to Thee; O Thou, the Chief Directrix of the Rasa Mandalam; O Thou dearer to Krisna than His life even, I bow down to Thee. O Thou, the Mother of the three Lokas! O Thou the Ocean of mercy! Be pleased. Brahma, Visnu and the other Devas bow down before Thy lotus feet. Thou art Sarasvati; Thou art Savitri; Thou art S'ankari; I bow down to Thee; Thou art Ganga; Thou art Padmavati; Thou art Sasthi; Thou art Mangala Chandika; Thou art Manasa; Thou art Tulasi; Thou art Durga; Thou art Bhagavati; Thou art Laksmi; Thou art all, I bow down to Thee. Thou art the Mula Prakrit!; Thou art the Ocean of mercy. Obeisance to Thee! Be merciful to us and save us from this ocean of Samsara (round of birth and death). O Narada! Anybody who remembers Radha and reads this Stotra three times a day does not feel the want of anything in this world. He will ultimately go to Goloka and remain in the Rasa Mandalam. O Child This great secret ought never to be given out to any. Now I am telling you the method of worship of the Durga Devi. Hear. When any one remembers Durga in this world, all his difficulties and troubles are removed. It is not seen that anybody does not remember Durga. She is the object of worship of all. She is the Mother of all and the Wonderful S'akti of Mahadeva. She is the Presiding Deity of the intellect (Buddhi) of all and She controls the hearts of all and She removes the great difficulties and dangers of all. Therefore She is named Durga in the world. She is worshipped by all, whether a S'aiva or a Vaisnava. She is the Mula Prakriti and from Her the creation, preservation and destruction of the universe proceed. O Narada! Now I am saying the principal nine lettered Durga Mantra, the best of all the Mantras. "Aim Hrim Klim Chamundayai Vichche" is the nine lettered Vija mantra of S'ri Durga; it is like a Kalpa Vriksa yielding all desires. One should worship this mantra by all means. Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a are the Risis of this mantra; Gayatri, Usnik and Anusthubha are the chhandas; Mahakali, Maha Laksmi and Sarasvati are the Devatas; Rakta Dantika, Durga, and Bhramari are the Vijas. Nanda, Sakambhari, and Bhima are the S'aktis and Dharma (Virtue), Artha (wealth) and Kama (desires), are the places of application (Viniyoga). Assign the head to the Risi of the mantra (Nyasa); assign the chhandas to the mouth and assign the Devata to the heart. Then assign the S'akti to the right breast for the success and assign the Vija to the left breast.

Then perform the Sadamga Nyasa as follows Aim Hridayaya namah, Hrim S'irase Svaha, Klim S'ikhayam Vasat, Chamundayai Kavachaya Hum, Vichche Netrabhyam Vausat, "Aim Hrim Klim Chamundayai Vichche" Karatalaprisihabhyam Phat. Next say touching the corresponding parts of the body "Aim namah S'ikhayam, Hrim Namah" on the right eye; "Klim Namah" on the left eye, "Cham Namah" on the right ear, "Mum namah" on the left ear, ndam Namah" on the nostrils; "Vim Namah" on the face; "Chchem Namah" on the anus and finally "Aim Hrim Klim Chamundayai Vichche" on the whole body. Then do the meditation (dhyan) thus "O Chamunde! Thou art holding in Thy ten hands ten weapons, viz., Khadga (axe). Chakra (disc), Gada (club), Vana

(arrows), Chapa (bow), Parigha, Sula (spear), Bhus'undi Kapala, and Khadga. Thou art Maha Kali; Thou art three-eyed; Thou art decked with various ornaments. Thou shinest like Lilanjan (a kind of black pigment). Thou hast ten faces and ten feet. The Lotus born Brahma chanted hymns to Thee for the destruction of Madhu Kaitabha; I bow down to Thee." Thus one should meditate on Maha Kali, of the nature of Kamavija (the source whence will comes). Then the Dhyanam of Maha Laksmi runs as follows O Maha Laksmi, the destroyer of Mahisasura! Thou boldest the garland of Aksa (a kind of seed), Paras'u (a kind of axe), Gada (club), Isu (arrows), Kulis'a (the thunderbolt) Padma (Lotus), Dhanu (bow), Kundika (a student's waterpot), Kamandalu, Danda (rod for punishment), S'akti (a kind of weapon), Asi (sword), Charma (shield) Padma (a kind of waterlily), Ghanta (bell,) S'urapatra (a pot to hold liquor), S'ula (pickaxe), Pas'a (noose) and Sudarsana (a kind of weapon). Thy colour is of the Rising Sun. Thou art seated on the red Lotus. Thou art of the nature Mayavija (the source whence female energy comes). So Obeisance to Thee! (The Vija and the Devi are one and identical). Next comes the Dhyanam of Maha Sarasvati as follows O Maha Sarasvati! Thou boldest bell, pickaxe, plough (Hala), Conch shell, Musala (a kind of club), Sudars'ana, bow and arrows. Thy colour is like Kunda flower; Thou art the destroyer of S'umbha and the other Daityas; Thou art of the nature of VanMja (the source whence knowledge, speech comes). Thy body is filled with everlasting existence, intelligence and bliss. Obeisance to Thee! O Narada! Now I am going to say on the Yantra of Maha Sarasvati. Listen. First draw a triangle. Draw inside the triangle eight petalled lotus having twenty-four leaves. Within this draw the house. Then on the Yantra thus drawn, or in the S'alagrama stone, or in the jar, or in image, or in the Vanalingam, or on the Sun, one should worship the Devi with oneness of heart. Then worship the Pitha, the deities seated also on the dais, i.e., Jaya, Vijaya, Ajita, Aghora, Mangala and other Pitha S'aktis. Then worship the attendant deities called Avarana Puja Brahma with Sarasvati on the east, Narayana with Laksmi on the Nairirit corner, S'ankara with Parvati on the Vayu corner, the Lion on the north of the Devi, and Mahasura on the left side of the Devi; finally worship Mahisa (buffalo). Next worship Nandaja, Raktadanta, S'akambhari, S'iva, Durga, Bhima, and Bhramari. Then on the eight petals worship Brahma, MahesVari, Kaumari, Vaisnavi, Varahi, Nara Simhi, Aindri, and Chamunda. Next commencing from the leaf in front of the Devi, worship on the twenty four leaves Visnu Maya, Chetana, Buddhi, Nidra (sleep), hunger, shadow, S'akti, thirst, peace, species (Jati), modesty, faith, fame, Laksmi (wealth), fortitude, Vriti, S'ruti, memory, mercy, Tusti, Pusti (nourishment), Bhranti (error) and other Matrikas. Next on the corners of the Bhupura (gates of the Yantra), Ganes'a Ksettrapalas, Vatuka and Yoginis are to be worshipped. Then on the outside of that Indra and the other Devas furnished with weapons are to be worshipped as per the aforesaid rules. For the satisfaction of the World-Mother various nice offerings and articles like those given by the royal personages are to be presented to the Mother; then the mantra is to be repeated, understanding its exoteric and esoteric meanings. Then Saptas'ati stitra (Chandi patha) is to be repeated before the Devi. There is no other stotra like this in the three worlds. Thus Durga, the Deity of the Devas, is to be appeased every day. He who does this gets within his easy reach Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksa, the four main objects of human pursuits (virtue, wealth, enjoyment and final beatitude). O Narada! Thus I have described to you the method of worship of the Devi Durga. People get by this what they want. Hah, Brahma, and all the Devas, Manus, Munis, the Yogis full of knowledge, the As'ramis, and Laksmi and the other Devas all meditate on S'ivani. One's birth is attained with success at the remembrance of Durga. The fourteen Manus have got their Manuship and the Devas their own rights by meditating on the lotus feet of Durga. O Narada! Thus I have described to you the very hidden histories of the Five Prakritis and their parts. Then, verily, the four objects of human pursuits Dharma, Artha, Kama and Moksa are obtained by hearing this. He who has no sons gets sons, who has no learning gets learning and whoever wants anything gets that if he hears this. The Devi Jagaddhatri becomes certainly pleased with him who reads with his mind concentrated on this for nine nights before the Devi. The Devi becomes obedient to him who daily reads

one chapter of this Ninth Skandha and the reader also does what is acceptable to the Devi. To ascertain before-hand what effects, merits or demerits, would accrue from reading this Bhagavata, it is necessary by examining through the hands of a virgin girl or a Brahmin child, the auspicious or inauspicious signs. First make a Sankalpa (resolve) and worship the book. Then bow down again and again to the Devi Durga. Then bring there a virgin girl, bathed well and worship her duly and have a golden pencil fixed duly in her hand and placed in the middle on the body. Then calculate the auspicious or inauspicious effects, as the case may be, from the curves made by that pencil. So the effects of reading this Bhagavata would be. If the virgin girl be indifferent in fixing the pencil within the area drawn, know the result of reading the Bhagavata would be similar. There is no doubt in this.

Here ends the Fiftieth Chapter of the Ninth Book on the Glory of S'akti in the Mahapuranam S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

Here ends the Ninth Book.

1-6. Narada said O Narayana! O Thou, the Supporter of this whole world! The Preserver of all! Thou hast described the glorious characters of the Devi, that take away all the sins. Kindly describe now to me the several forms that the Devi assumed in every Manvantara in this world as well as Her Divine Greatness. O Thou, full of mercy! Describe also how and by whom She was worshipped and praised; how She, so kind to the devotees, having been thus pleased, fulfilled their desires. I am very eager to hear these, the very best and blissful characters of the Devi. S’ri Narayana said Hear, O Maharsi! The glories and greatness of the Devi Bhagavati leading to the devotion of the devotees, capable of giving all sorts of wealth and destroying all sins. From the navel lotus of Visnu, the holder of the Chakra (discus), was born Brahma, the Creator of this universe, the great Energetic One, and the Grand Sire of all the worlds.

7-14. The four faced Brahma, on being born, produced from His mind Svayambhuva Manu and his wife S’atarupa, the embodiment of all virtues. For this very reason, Svayambhuva Manu has been known as the mind-born son of Brahma. Svayambhuva Manu got from Brahma the task to create and multiply; he made an earthen image of the Devi Bhagavati, the Bestower of all fortunes, on the beach of the sanctifying Ksira Samudra (ocean of milk) and he engaged himself in worshipping Her and began to repeat the principal mystic mantra of Vagbhava (the Deity of Speech). Thus engaged in worship, Svayambhuva Manu conquered by and by his breath and food and observed Yama, Niyama and other vows and became lean and thin. For one hundred years he remained standing always on one leg and became successful in controlling his six passions lust, anger, etc. He meditated on the feet of that Adya S'akti (the Primordial S'akti) so much that he became inert like a vegetable or mineral matter. By his Tapas the Devi, the World Mother appeared before him and said “O King! Ask divine boons from Me.” Hearing these joyous words, the King wanted his long cherished and heart-felt boon, so very rare to the Devas.

15-22. Manu said O Large eyed Devi! Victory to Thee, residing in the hearts of all! O Thou honoured, worshipped! O Thou! the Upholdress of the world! O Thou, the Auspicious of all auspicious!

By Thy Gracious Look, it is that the Lotus born has been able to create the worlds; Visnu is perserving and Rudra Deva is destroying in a minute. By Thy command it is that Indra, the Lord of S'achi, has got the charge of controlling the three Lokas; and Yama, the Lord of the departed, is awarding fruits and punishing according, to their merits or demerits, the deceased ones. O Mother! By Thy Grace, Varuna, the holder of the noose, has become the lord of all aquatic creatures and is preserving them; and Kuvera, the lord of the Yaksas, has become the lord of wealth. Agni (fire), Nairrit, Vayu (wind), Is'ana and Ananta Deva are Thy parts and have grown by Thy power. Then, O Devi! If Thou desirest to grant me my desired boon, then, O Thou! the Auspicious One! Let all the great obstacles to my work of procreating in this universe and increasing my dominions die away. And if anybody worships this great Vagbhava Mantra or anybody hears with devotion this history or makes others hear this, they all shall be crowned with success and enjoyment and Mukti be easy to them.

23-24. Specially they would get the power to remember their past lives, acquire eloquence in speaking, all round beauty, success in obtaining knowledge, success in their deeds and especially in the increase of their posterity and children. O Bhagavati! This is what I want most.

Here ends the First Chapter of the Tenth Book on the story of Svayambhuva Manu in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. The Devi said "O King! O Mighty armed One! All these I grant unto you. Whatever you have asked for, I give them to you. I am very much pleased with your hard Tapasya and with your Japam of the Vagbhava Mantra. Know Me that My power is infallible in killing the Lords of the Daityas. O Child! Let your kingdom be free from enemies and let your prosperity be increased. Let your devotion be fixed on Me and in the end you will verily get Nirvana Mukti." O Narada! Thus granting the boon to the highsouled Manu the Great Devi disappeared before him and went to the Bindhya Range. O Devarsi! This Bindhya mountain increased in height so much so that it was well nigh on the way to prevent the course of the Sun when it was arrested by Maharsi Agastya, born of a kumbha (water jar). The younger sister of Visnu, VaradesVari, is staying here as Bindhyavasini. O Best of the Munis! This Devi is an object of worship of all.

7-8. Saunaka and the other Risis said O Suta! Who is that Bindhya Mountain? And why did He intend to soar high up to the Heavens to resist the Sun's course? And why was it that Agastya, the son of Mitravaruna quietened that rising mountain? Kindly describe all these in detail.

9-15. O Saint! We are not as yet satisfied with hearing the Glories of the Devi, the ambrosial nectar, that have come out of your mouth. Rather our thirst has been increased. Suta said O Risis! There was the Bindhya Mountain, highly honoured and reckoned as the chief of the mountains on the earth. It was covered with big forests and big trees. Creeping plants and shrubs flowered these and it looked very beautiful. On it were roaming deer, wild boars, buffaloes, monkeys, hares, foxes, tigers and bears, stout and cheerful, with full vigour and all very merrily. The Devas, Gandharbhas, Apsaras, and Kinnaras come here and bathe in its rivers; all sorts of fruit trees can be seen here. On such a beautiful Bindhya Mountain, came there one day the ever joyful Devarsi Narada on his voluntary tour round the world. Seeing the Maharsi Narada, the Bindhya Mountain got up and worshipped him with padya and arghya and gave him a very good Asana to sit. When the Muni took his seat and found himself happy, the Mountain began to speak.

16-17. Bindhya said "O Devarsi! Now be pleased to say whence you are coming; your coming here is so very auspicious! My house is sanctified today by your coming. O Deva! Your wandering is, like the Sun, the cause of inspiring the beings with freedom from fear. So, O Narada! Kindly give out your intention as to your coming here which seems rather wonderful."

18-28. Narada said “O Bindhya! O Enemy of Indra! (Once the mountains had a very great influence. Indra cut off their wings and so destroyed their influence. Hence the mountains are enemies of Indra). I am coming from the Sumeru Mountain. There I saw the nice abodes of Indra, Agni, Yama, and Varuna. There I saw the houses of these Dikpalas (the Regents of the several quarters), which abound in objects of all sorts of enjoyments.” Thus saying, Narada gave out a heavy sigh. Bindhya, the king of mountains, seeing the Muni heaving a long sigh, asked him again with great eagerness, “O Devarsi! Why have you heaved such a long sigh? Kindly say.” Hearing this, Narada said “O Child! Hear the cause why I sighed. See! The Himalaya Mountain is the father of Gauri and the father-in-law of Mahadeva; therefore he is the most worshipped of all the mountains. The Kailas'a Mountain again, is the residence of Mahadeva; hence that is also worshipped and chanted as capable of destroying all the sins. So the Nisadha, Nila, and Gandhamadana and other nnountains are worshipped at their own places. What more than this, that the Sumeru Mountain, round whom the thousand- rayed Sun, the Soul of the universe, circumambulates along with the planets and stars, thinks himself the supreme and greatest amongst the mountains, “I am the supreme; there is none like me in the three worlds.” Remembering this self-conceit of Sumeru, I sighed so heavily. O Bindhya! We are asceties and though we have no need to discuss these things, yet by way of conversation I have told this to you. Now I go to my own abode.”

1-16. Suta said O Risis! Thus advising, the Devarsi, the great Jhani and Muni going wherever he likes, went to the Brahmaloka. After the Muni had gone, the Bindhya became immersed in great anxiety and becoming always very sorrowful, could not get peace. What shall I do now so as to overthrow Meru? Until I do that, I won't be able to get the peace of my mind or my health. The highsouled persons always praised me for my enthusiasm and energy. Fie to my energy, honour, fame and family! Fie to my strength and heroism! O Risis! With all these cogitations in his mind, Bindhya came finally to this crooked conclusion “Daily the Sun, stars and planets circumambulate round the Sumeru; hence Sumeru is always so arrogant; now if I can resist the Sun's course in the heavens by my peaks. He will not be able to circumambulate round the Sumeru. If I can do this, certainly I will be able to curb the Sumeru in his pride.” Thus coming to a conclusion, Bindhya raised his arms that were the peaks high up to the heavens and blocking the passage in the Heavens, remained so and passed that night with great uneasiness and difficulty, thinking when the Sun would rise and he would obstruct His passage. At last, when the morning broke out, all the quarters were clear. The Sun, destroying the darkness, rose in Udaya Giri. The sky looked clear with His rays; the lotus, seeing Him, blew out with joy; while the excellent white water-lilies, at the bereavement of the Moon, contracted their leaves and closed as if at the separation of one's lover, gone to a distant place. The people began to do their own works on the appearance of the day; the worship of the gods, the offerings to the Gods, the Homas and the offerings to the Piths were set a going on (in the morning, afternoon and evening respectively). The Sun marched on in His course. He divided the day into three parts, morning, midday, and afternoon.

First of all he consoled the eastern quarter which seemed like a woman suffering from the bereavement of her lover; then he consoled the south eartern corner; then as He wanted to go quickly towards the south, His horses could not go further. The charioteer Aruna, seeing this, informed the Sun what had happened.

17. Aruna spoke “O Sun! The Bindhya has become very jealous of the Sumeru as You circumambulate round the Sumeru Mountain daily. He has risen very high and obstructed your course in the Heavens, hoping that you would circumambulate round him. He is thus vying with the Sumeru Mountain.”

18-26. Suta said O Risis! Hearing the words of Aruna, the charioteer, the Sun began to think thus “Oh! The Bindhya is going to obstruct My course! What can a great hero not do, when he is in the wrong path? Oh! My horses' motions are stopped to-day! The fate is the strongest of all (Because Bindhya is strong today by Daiva, therefore he is doing this). Even when eclipsed by Rahu (the ascending node) I do not stop for a moment even; and now obstructed in My passage, I am waiting here for a long time. The Daiva is powerful; what can I do?” The Sun's course having been thus obstructed, all from the Gods to the lowest became helpless and could not make out what to do. Chitragupta and others ascertain their time through the Sun's course; and that Sun is now rendered motionless by the Bindhya mountain! What a great adverse fate is this! When the Sun was thus obstructed by the Bindhya out of his arrogance, the sacrifices to the Devas, the offerings to the Pitris all were stopped; the world was going to rack and ruin. The people that lived on the west and south had their nights prolonged and they remained asleep. The people of the east and the north were scorched by the strong rays of the Sun and some of them died; some of them lost their health and so forth. The whole earth became devoid of S'raddhas and worships and a cry of universal distress arose on all sides. Indra and the other Devas became very anxious and began to think what they should do at that moment.

Here ends the Third Chapter of the Tenth Book on the obstruction of the Sun's course by the Bindhya Mountain in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-2. Suta said O Risis! Then Indra and all the other Devas taking Brahma along with them and placing Him at the front, went to Mahadeva and took His refuge. They bowed down to Him and chanted sweet and great hymns to Him, Who holds Moon on His forehead, Deva of the Devas, thus

3-5. O Thou, the Leader of the host of Gods! Victory to Thee! O Thou, Whose lotus feet are served by Lima, Victory to Thee! O Thou, the Giver of the eight Siddhis and Vibhutis (extraordinary powers) to Thy devotees. Victory to Thee! O Thou, the Background of this Great Theatrical Dance of this Insurmountable Maya! Thou art the Supreme Spirit in Thy True Nature! Thou ridest on Thy vehicle, the Bull, and residest in Kailas'a; yet Thou art the Lord of all the Devas.

O Thou, Whose ornament is snakes. Who art the Honoured and the Giver of honours to persons! O Thou! the Unborn, yet comprising all forms, O Thou S'ambhu! That findest pleasure in this Thy Own Self! Victory toThee!

6-9. O Thou, the Lord of Thy attendants! O Thou, Giris'a! The Giver of the great powers, praised by Maha Visnu! O Thou, That livest in the heart lotus of Visnu, and deeply absorbed in Maha Yoga! Obeisance to Thee! O Thou that can'st be known through Yoga, and nothing but the Yoga itself; Thou, the Lord of the Yoga! We bow down to Thee. Thou awardest the fruits of yoga to the Yogins. O Thou, the Lord of the helpless! The Incarnate of the ocean of mercy! The Relief of the diseased and the most powerful! O Thou, whose forms are the three gunas, Sattva, Rajo, Tamas! O Thou! Whose Emblem (carrier) is the Bull (Dharma); Thou art verily the Great Kala; yet Thou art the Lord of Kala! Obeisance to Thee! (The Bull represents the Dharma or Speech).

10. Thus praised by the Devas, who take the offerings in sacrifices the Lord of the Devas, whose emblem is Bull, smilingly told the Devas in a deep voice

11.0 Thou, the excellent Devas! The residents of the Heavens! I am pleased with the praises that you have sung of Me. I will fulfil the desires of you, all the Devas.

12-15. The Devas said O Lord of all the Devas! O Giris'a! Thou whose forehead is adorned with Moon! O Thou, the Doer of good to the distressed. O Thou, the Powerful! Dost Thou do good to us. O Thou, the Sinless One! The Bindhya Mountain has become jealous of the Sumeru Mountain, and has risen very high up in the Heavens and he has obstructed the Sun's course, thereby causing great troubles to all. O Thou, the Doer of good to all! O Is'ana! Dost Thou check the mountain's abnormal rise. How can we fix time if the Sun's course be obstructed! And when there is no knowledge, what is now the time, the sacrifices to the Devas and the offerings to the Pitris are now almost dead and gone. O Deva! Who will now protect us? We see Thee as the Destroyer of the fear of us and of those who are terrified. O Deva! O Lord of Giris'a! Be pleased with us.

16-18. S’ri Bhagavan said O Devas! I have no power to curb the Bindhya Mountain. Let us go to the Lord of Rama and pay our respects to Him. He is our Lord, fit to be worshipped. He is Gobinda, Bhagavan Visnu, the Cause of all causes. We will go to Him and tell Him all our sorrows. He will remove them.

19. Hearing thus the words of Giris'a, Indra and the other Devas with Brahma placed Mahadeva at their front and went to the region of Vaikuntha, trembling with fear.

English translation

1-5. Suta said Then the Devas, on arriving at Vaikuntha, saw the Lord of Laksmi, the Deva of the Devas, the World-Teacher, with his eyes beautiful like Padma Palasa (lotus-leaves), shining with brilliance and began to praise Him in a voice choked with intense feelings of devotion, thus “Victory to Visnu! O Lord of Rama! Thou art prior to the Virat Purusa. O Enemy of the Daityas! O Thou, the Generator of desires in all and the Bestower of the fruits of those desires to all! O Gobinda! Thou art the Great Boar and Thou art of the nature of Great Sacrifices! O Maha Visnu! O Lord of Dharma! Thou art the Cause of the origin of this world! Thou didst support the earth in Thy Fish Incarnation for the deliverance of the Vedas! O Thou Satyavrata of the form of a Fish! We bow down to Thee. O Thou! The Enemy of the Daityas! The Ocean of mercy! Thou dost do the actions of the Devas out of mercy. O Thou! the Tortoise Incarnation! That grantest Mukti to others! Obeisance to Thee!

6-18. O Thou! That didst assume the form of a Boar for the destruction of the Daityas Jaya and others and for raising the earth from the waters! Obeisance to Thee! Thou didst assume that form - Half man and half Lion of the Nrisimha Murti and tore asunder Hiranya Kas'ipu, proud of his boons, by Thy nails. We bow down to Thee! Obeisance to Thee! That in Thy Dwarf Incarnation, didst deceive Bali, whose head got crazed by the acquisition of the kingdom over the three Lokas. We bow down to Thee, that in Thy Paras'u Rama Incarnation, didst slay Karta Viryaryuna, the thousand handed, and the other wicked Ksattriyas! Obeisance to Thee! That wert born of the womb of Renuka as the son of Jamadagni. Obeisance to Thee, of great prowess and valour, that in Thy Rama Incarnation as the son of Das'aratha, didst cut off the heads of the wicked Raksasa, the son of Pulastya!

We bow down again and again to Thee, the Great Lord, that in Thy Krisna incarnation, didst deliver this earth from the clutches of the wicked King Duryodhana, Kamsa and others and didst establish the religion by removing the then prevailing vicious ideas and doctrines. We bow down to Thy Buddha Incarnation, that Great Deva who didst come down here to put a stop to the slaughtering of the innocent animals and to the performance of the wicked sacrificial ceremonies! Obeisance to the Deva! When almost all the persons in this world will turn out in future as MIechchas and when the wicked Kings will oppress them, right and left. Thou wilt then incarnate Thyself again as Kalki and redress all the grievances!

We bow down to Thy Kalki Form! O Deva! These are Thy Ten Incarnations, for the preservation of Thy devotees, for the killing of the wicked Daityas. Therefore Thou art called as the Great Reliever of all our troubles. O Thou! Victory to Thee! The Deva Who assumest the forms of women and water for destroying the ailings of the devotees! Who else can be so kind! O Thou, the Ocean of mercy!” O Risis! Thus praising the yellow robed Visnu, the Lord of all the Devas, the whole host of the Devas bowed down to Him and made Shastamgas. Then Visnu Gadadhara, hearing their hymns, gladdened them and spoke 19-27. S’ri Bhagavana said “O Devas! I am pleased with your stotra. You need not be sorrowful. I will remove all your troubles that have become unbearable to you. O Devas! I am very glad to hear the praises that you have offered on Me.

Better ask boons from Me. I will grant them though very rare even and obtained with difficulty. Any person who rises early in the morning and recites with devotion this stotra sung by you, will never experience any sorrow. O Devas! No poverty, no bad symptoms, no Vetalas nor planets nor Brahma Raksasas nor any misfortunes will overtake him. No disease, due to Vata (windy temperament). Pitta (bile) and Kapha (phlegm) nor untimely death will visit him. His family will not be extinct and happiness will always reign there. O Devas! This stotra can give everything.

Both the enjoyment and freedom will come within anyone's easy access. There is no doubt in this. Nov what is your difficulty? Give out. I will remove it at once. There is not a bit of doubt in this." Hearing these words of S'ri Bhagavan, the Devas became glad and spoke to Visnu.

English translation

1-6. Suta said O Risis! Hearing the words of the Lord of Laksmi, all the Devas became pleased and they spoke. The Devas said O Deva of the Devas! O Maha Visnu! O Thou, the Creator, Preserver and the Destroyer of the Universe! O Visnu! The Bindhya mountain has risen very high and it has stopped the Sun's course. Therefore all the works on earth are suspended. We are not receiving our share of Yajhas. Now where we will go, what we will do, we do not know. S'ri Bhagavan said "O Devas! There is now in Benares the Muni Agastya of indomitable power, in devoted service of that Primordial S'akti Bhagavati, the Creatrix of this Universe. This Muni alone can put a stop to this abnormal Bindhya Range. Therefore it behoves you all to go to that fiery Dvija Agastya at Benares where the people get Nirvana; the Highest Place and pray to him (to kindly fulfil your object)."

7-19. Suta said: - O Risis! Thus ordered by Visnu, the gods felt themselves comforted and, saluting Him, went to the city of Benares.

In a moment they went to the Holy City of Benares, and bathing there at the Manikarnika ghat, worshipped the Devas with devotion and offered Tarpanas to the Piths and duly made their charities. Then they went to the excellent As'rama of the Muni Agastya. The hermitage was full of quiet quadruped animals; adorned with various trees, peacocks, herons, geese and Chakravakas and various other birds, tigers, wolves, deer, the wild boars, rhinoceros, young elephants, Ruru deer and others. Though there were the ferocious animals, yet the place was free from fear and it looked exceedingly beautiful. On arriving before the Muni, the gods fell prostrate before him and bowed down again and again to him. They then chanted hymns to him and said O Lord of Dvijas! O Thou honoured and most worshipful! Victory to Thee. Thou art sprung from a water jar. Thou art the destroyer of VatapT, the Asura. Obeisance to Thee! O Thou, full of S'ri, the son of Mitravaruna! Thou art the husband of Lopamudra. Thou art the store house of all knowledge. Thou art the source of all the S'astras. Obeisance to Thee! At Thy rise, the waters of the ocean become bright and clear; so obeisance to Thee! At Thy rise (Canopus) the Kas'a flower blossoms. Thou art adorned with clots of matted hair on Thy head and Thou always livest with Thy disciples. S'ri Rama Chandra is one of Thy chief disciples. O great Muni! Thou art entitled to praise from all the Devas! O Best! The Store-house of all qualities! O great Muni! We now bow down to Thee and Thy wife Lopamudra! O Lord! O very Energetic! We all are very much tormented by an unbearable pain inflicted on us by the Bindhya Range and we therefore take refuge of Thee. Be gracious unto us. Thus praised by the gods, the highly religious Muni Agastya, the twice born, smiled and graciously said

20-27. O Devas! You are the lords of the three worlds, superior to all, highsouled, and the preserver of the Lokas. If you wish, you can favour, disfavour, do anything. Especially He who is the Lord of heavens, whose weapon is the thunderbolt, and the eight Siddhis are ever at his service is your Indra, the Lord of the Devas. What is there that he cannot do? Then there is Agni, Who burns everything and always carries oblations to the gods and the Pitris, Who is the mouth piece of the Devas. Is there anything impracticable with him!

O Devas! Then again Yama is there amongst you, the Lord of the Raksasas, the Witness of all actions, and always quick in giving punishment to the offenders, that terrible looking Yama Raja. What is there that he cannot accomplish?

still, O Devas! if there be anything required by you that awaits my co-operation, give out at once and I will do it undoubtedly. Hearing these words of the Muni, the Devas became very glad and joyfully began to say what they wanted. O Maharsi! The Bindhya mountain has risen very high and thwarted the Sun's course in the Heavens. A cry of universal distress and consternation has arisen and the three worlds are now verging to the ruins. O Muni! Now what we want is this that Thou, by Thy power of Tapas, curbest the rise of this Bindhya Mountain. O Agastya! Certainly, by Thy fire and austerities, that mountain will be brought down and humiliated. This is what we want.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Tenth Book on the Devas' praying to the Muni Agastya for checking the abnormal rise of the Bindhya Range in the Maha Puranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. Suta said Hearing the words of the Devas, Agastya, the Best of the Brahmins promised that he would carry out their works. O Risis! All the Devas then became very glad when the Muni, born of the water jar, promised thus. They then bade good-bye to him and went back gladly to their own abodes. The Muni then spoke to his wife thus "O daughter of the King! The Bindhya Mountain has baffled the progress of the Sun's course and has thus caused a great mischief. What the Munis, the Seers of truths said before referring to Kas'i, all are now coming to my mind when I am thinking why this disturbance has overtaken me. They said that various hindrances would come to him at every step, who is a Sadhu intending to settle at Kas'i. Let him who wants Mukti, never quit Kas'i, the Avimukta place in any case. But, O Dear! Today I have got one hindrance during my stay at Kas'i." Thus talking with much regret on various subjects with his wife, the Muni bathed in the Manikarnika ghat, saw the Lord Vis'ves'vara worshipped Dandapani and went to the Kala Bhairava. He said in the following terms "O Mighty armed Kalabhairava! Thou destroyest the fear of the Bhaktas; Thou art the God of this Kas'i City. Then why art Thou driving me away from this Kas'idham. O Lord! Thou removest all the obstacles of the devotees and Thou preservest them. Then why, O Destroyer of the sorrows of the Bhaktas! art Thou removing me from here? Never I blamed others; nor did I practise any hypocrisy with any person nor did I lie; then under what sin. Thou art driving me away from Kas'i." O Risis! Thus praying to Kala Bhairava, the Muni Agastya, born of water jar and the husband of Lopamudra, went to Saksi Ganes'a, the Destroyer of all evils and seeing and worshipping Him, went out of Kas'i and proceeded to the south. The Muni, the ocean of great fortune, left Kas'i; but he became very much distressed to leave it and he remembered it always. He began to march on with his wife. As if riding on his car of asceticism he arrived at the Bindhya mountain in the twinkling of an eye and saw that the Mountain had risen very high and obstructed the passage of the Sun in the Heavens. The Bindhya Mountain, seeing the Muni Agastya in front, began to tremble and as if desirous to speak something to the earth in a whisper became low and dwarfish and bowed down to the Muni and fell down with devotion in sastangas with devotion just like a stick dropped flat on the ground before the Muni.

Seeing the Bindhya thus low, the Muni Agastya became pleased and spoke with a gracious look "O Child! Better remain in this state until I come back. For, O Child! I am quite unable to ascend to your lofty heights." Thus saying, the Muni became eager to go to the south; and, crossing the peaks of the Bindhya, alighted gradually again to the plains. He went on further to the south and saw the S'ri S'aila Mountain and at last went to the Malayachala and there, building his As'rama (hermitage), settled himself. O Saunaka! The Devi Bhagavati, worshipped by the Muni went to the Bindhya Mountain and settled there and became known, in the three worlds, by the name of Bindhyavasini.

22-26. Suta said Anybody who hears this highly pure narrative of the Muni Agastya and Bindhya, becomes freed of all his sins. All his enemies are destroyed in no time. This hearing gives knowledge to the Brahmanas, victory to the Ksattriyas, wealth and corn to the Vais'yas and happiness to the S'udras.

If anybody once hears this narrative, he gets Dharma if he want Dharma, gets unbounded wealth if he wants wealth and gets all desires if he wants his desires fulfilled. In ancient times Svayambhuva Manu worshipped this Devi with devotion and got his kingdom for his own Manvantara period. O Saunaka! Thus I have described to you the holy character of the Devi in this Manvantara. What more shall I say? Mention please.

English translation

1. Saunaka said “O Suta! You have described the beautiful narrative of the first Manu Svayambhuva. Now kindly describe to us the narratives of other highly energetic Deva-like Manus.”

2-3. Suta said “O Risis! The very wise Narada, well versed in the knowledge of S’ri Devi, hearing the glorious character of the first Svayambhuva Manu, became desirous to hear of the other Manus and asked the Eternal Narayana O Deva! Now favour me by reciting the origin and narratives of the other Manus."

4. Narayana said O Devarsi! I have already spoken to you everything regarding the first Manu. He had worshipped the Devi Bhagavati, and thus he got his foeless kingdom. You know that then.

5-24 Manu had two sons of great prowess, Priyavrata and Uttanapada. They governed their kingdoms with fame. The son of this Priyavrata, of indomitable valour, is known by the wise as the second Svarochisa Manu. Dear to all the beings, this Svarochisa Manu built his hermitage near the banks of the Kalindi (the Jumna) and there making an earthen image of the Devi Bhagavati, worshipped the Devi with devotion, subsisting on dry leaves and thus practised severe austerities. Thus he passed his twelve years in that forest; when, at last, the Devi Bhagavati, resplendent with brilliance of the thousand Suns, became visible to him. She got very much pleased with his devotional stotrams. The Devi, the Saviour of the Devas, and Who was of good vows, granted to him the sovereignty for one Manvantara. Thus the Devi became famous by the name Tarini Jagaddhatri. O Narada! Thus, by worshipping the Devi Tarini, Svarochisa obtained safely the foeless kingdom. Then establishing the Dharma duly, he enjoyed his kingdonn with his sons; and, when the period of his manvantara expired, he went to the Heavens. Priyavrata's son named Uttama became the third Manu.

On the banks of the Ganges, be practised tapasya and repeated the Vija Mantra of Vagbhava, in a solitary place for three years and became blessed with the favour of the Devi. With rapt devotion he sang hymns wholly to the Devi with his mind full; and, by Her boon, got the foeless kingdom and a continual succession of sons and grandsons. Thus, enjoying the pleasures of his kingdom and the gifts of the Yuga Dharma, got in the end, the excellent place, obtained by the best Rajarsis. A very happy result. Priyavarata's another son named Tamasa became the fourth Manu. He practised austerities and repeated the Kama Vija Mantra, the Spiritual Password of Kama on the southern banks of the Narmada river and worshipped the World Mother. In the spring and in the autumn he observed the nine nights' vow (the Navaratri) and worshipped the excellent lotus eyed Deves'i and pleased Her. On obtaining the Devi's favour, he chanted excellent hymns to Her and made pranams. There he enjoyed the extensive kingdom without any fear from any foe or from any other source of danger. He generated, in the womb of his wife, ten sons, all very powerful and mighty, and then he departed, to the excellent region in the Heavens.

The young brother of Tamasa, Raivata became the Fifth Manu and practised austerities on the banks of the Kalindi (the Jumna) and repeated the Kama Vija Mantra, the spiritual password of Kama, the resort of the Sadhakas, capable to give the highest power of speech and to yield all the Siddhis, and thus he worshipped the Devi. He obtained excellent heavens, indomitable power, unhampered and capable of all success and a continual line of sons, grandsons, etc. Then the unrivalled excellent hero Raivata Manu established the several divisions of Dharma and enjoying all the worldly pleasures, went to the excellent region of Indra.

Here ends the Eighth Chapter of the Tenth Book on the origin of Manu in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Narayana said O Narada! I will now narrate the suprenne glories of the Devi and the anecdote how Manu, the son of Anga, obtained excellent kingdom by worshipping the Devi Bhagavati. The son of the king Anga, named Chaksusa became the Sixth Manu.

One day he went to the Brahmarsi Pulaha Risi and taking his refuge said O Brahmarsi! Thou removest all the sorrows and afflictions of those that come under Thy refuge; I now take Thy refuge. Kindly advise Thy servant how he may become the Lord of an endless amount of wealth. O Muni! What can I do so that I may get the sole undisputed sway over the world? How my arms can wield the weapons and manipulate them so that they may not be baffled? How my race and line be constant and my youth remain ever the same, undecayed? And how can I, in the end, attain Mukti? O Muni! Kindly dost Thou give instructions to me on these points and oblige.

Hearing thus, the Muni wanted him to worship the Devi and said “O King! Listen attentively to what I say you today. Worship today the all auspicious S'akti; by Her grace, all your desires will be fulfilled.”

8. Chaksusa said “O Muni! What is that very holy worship of S’ri Bhagavati? How to do it? Kindly describe all these in detail.”

9-20. The Muni said O King! I will now disclose all about the excellent Puja of the Devi Bhagavati. Hear. You recite (mentally) always the seed mantra of Vakbhava (Speech) (The Deity being Maha Sarasvati). If any one makes japam (recites slowly) of the Vakbhava Vija thrice a day, one gets both the highest enjoyment here and, in the end, release (Mukti). O Son of a Ksattriya! There is no other Vija Mantra (word) better than this of Vak (the Word). Through the Japam of this Vija Mantra comes the increase of strength and prowess and all successes. By the Japam of this.

Brahma is so powerful and has become the Creator; Visnu preserves the Universe and MahesVara has become the Destroyer of the Universe. The other Dikpalas (the Regents of the quarters) and the other Siddhas have become very powerful by the power of this Mantra, and are capable of favouring or disfavouring others. So, O King! You, too, worship the Devi of the Devas, the World Mother and ere long you will become the Lord of unbounded wealth. There is no doubt in this. O Narada! Thus advised by Pulaha Risi, the son of the King Anga went to the banks of the Viraja river to practise austerities. There the king Chaksusa remained absorbed in making Japam of the Vakbhava Vija Mantra and took for his food the leaves of the trees that dropped on the ground and thus practised severe austerities.

The first year he ate leaves; the second year he drank water and in the third year he sustained his life by breathing air simply and thus remained steady like a pillar. Thus he remained without food for twelve years. He went on making Japam of the Vakbhava Mantra and his heart and mind became purified. While he was sitting alone, absorbed in the meditation of the Devi Mantra, there appeared before him suddenly the ParamesVari, the World Mother, the Incarnate of Laksmi. The Highest Deity, full of dauntless fire and the Embodiment of all the Devas, spoke graciously in sweet words to Chaksusa, the son of Anga.

21-29. O Regent of the earth! I am pleased with your Tapasya. Now ask any boon that you want. I will give that to you. Chaksusa said "O Thou, worshipped by the Devas! O Sovereign of the Deva of the Devas! Thou art the Controller Inside; Thou art the Controller Outside. Thou knowest everything what I desire in my mind. Still, O Devi! When I am so fortunate as to see Thee, I say Thou grantest me the kingdom for the Manvantara period." The Devi said "O Best of the Ksattriyas! I grant unto you the kingdom of the whole world for one manvantara. You will have many sons, very powerful, indeed, and well qualified. Your kingdom will be free from any danger till at last you will certainly get Mukti." Thus granting the excellent boon to Manu, She disappeared then and there, after being praised by Manu, with deep devotion. The Sixth Manu, then favoured by the Devi, enjoyed the sovereignty of the earth and other pleasures and became the best of the Manus. His sons became the devotees of the Devi, very powerful and expert and became respected by all and enjoyed the pleasures of the kingdom. Thus getting the supremacy by the worship of the Devi, the Chaksusa Manu became merged in the end in the Holy Feet of the Devi.

English translation

1-4. Narayana said Now the Seventh Manu is the Right Hon'ble His Excellency the Lord Vaivasvata Manu S'raddha Deva, honoured by all the kings, and the Enjoyer of the Highest Bliss, Brahnnananda.

I will now speak of this seventh Manu. He, too, practised austerities before the Highest Devi and by Her Grace, got the sovereignty of the earth for one Manvantara.

The Eighth Manu is the Sun's son, known as Savarni. This personage, a devotee of the Devi, honoured by the kings, gentle, patient and powerful king Savarni worshipped the Devi in his previous births and, by Her boon, became the Lord of the Manvantara.

5. Narada said O Bhagavan! How did this Savarni Manu worship in his previous birth the earthen image of the Devi. Kindly describe this to me.

6-13. Narayana said O Narada! This Eighth Manu had been, before, in the time of Svarochisa Manu (the second Manu), a famous king, known by the name of Suratha, born of the family of Chaitra, and very powerful. He could well appreciate merits, clever in the science of archery, amassed abundance of wealth, a generous donor, a very liberal man and he was a celebrated poet and honoured by all. He was skilled in all arts of warfare with weapons and indomitable in crushing his foes. Once on a time, some of his powerful enemies destroyed the city of Kola, belonging to the revered king and succeeded in besieging his capital wherein he remained. Then the king Suratha, the conqueror of all his foes went out to fight with the enemies but he was defeated by them. Taking advantage of this opportunity, the king's ministers robbed him of all his wealth. The illustrious king then went out of the city and with a sorrowful heart rode alone on his horse on the plea of having a game and walked to and fro, as if, absent-minded.

14-25. The king, then, went to the hermitage of the Muni Sumedha, who could see far-reaching things (a Man of the Fourth Dimension). It was a nice, quiet As'rama, surrounded by quiet and peaceful animals and filled with disciples. There in that very sacred As'rama, his heart became relieved and he went on living there.

One day, when the Muni finished his worship, etc., the king went to him and saluted him duly and humbly asked him the following “O Muni! I am suffering terribly from my mental pain. O Deva on the earth! Why I am suffering so much though I know everything, as if I am quite an ignorant man. After my defeat from my enemies, why does my mind become now compassionate towards those who stole away my kingdom. O Best of the knowers of the Vedas! What am I to do now? Where to go? How can I make me happy? Please speak on these. O Muni! Now I am in want of your good grace.” The Muni said “O Lord of the earth! Hear the extremely wonderful glories of the Devi that have no equal and that can fructify all desires.

She, the Maha Maya, Who is all this world, is the Mother of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a. O King! Know verily that it is She and She alone, that can forcibly attract the hearts of all the Jivas and throw them in dire utter delusion.

She is always the Creatrix, Preservrix and Destructrix of the Universe in the form of Hara. This Maha Maya fulfills the desires of all the JTvas and She is known as the insurmountable Kalaratri. She is Kali, the Destructrix of all this universe and She is Kamala residing in the lotus. Know that this whole world rests on Her and it will become dissolved in Her.

She is therefore, the Highest and Best. O King! Know, verily, that he alone can cross the delusion (Moha) on whom the Grace of the Devi falls and otherwise no one can escape from this Anadi Moha.”

Here ends the Tenth Chapter of the Tenth Book on the anecdote of the King Suratha in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. The king Suratha spoke “O Best of the twice born! Who is that Devi that you spoke just now? Why the Devi deludes all these beings? What for does She do so? Whence is the Devi born? What is Her Form? and what are Her qualities? O Brahmin! Kindly describe all these to me.”

3-9. The Muni spoke O King! I will now describe the nature of the Devi Bhagavati and why does She take Her Form in due time. Listen. In ancient days, when Bhagavan Narayana, the king of the Yogis, was lying in deep sleep on the ocean on the bed of Ananta, after He had destroyed the Universe, there came out of the wax of his ear the two Danavas, Madhu and Kaitabha, of monstrous appearances. They wanted to kill Brahma, who was lying on the lotus coming out of the navel of Bhagavan. Seeing the two Daityas Madhu and Kaitabha and seeing also Hah asleep the Lotus-born Brahma became very anxious and thoughtNow Bhagavan is asleep; and these two indomitable Daityas are ready to kill me. Now what am I to do? Where to go? How shall I get ease? O Child! Thus thinking, the high souled Lotus born suddenly came to a practical conclusion. He said “Let me now take refuge to the Goddess Sleep, Nidra, the Mother of all and under Whose power Bhagavan Hah is now asleep.”

10-24. Brahma then began to praise Her thus “O Devi of the Devas! O Upholdress of the world! Thou grantest desires of Thy devotees. O Thou auspicious! Thou art Para Brahma! By Thy Command all are doing respectively their works in their proper spheres! Thou art the Night of Destruction (Kala Rath); Thou art the Great Night (Maha Rath). Thou art the greatly terrible Night of Delusion (Moha Rath); Thou art omnipresent; omniscient; of the nature of the Supreme Bliss. Thou art regarded as the Great. Thou art highly worshipped; Thou art alone in this world as highly intoxicated; Thou art submissive to Bhakti only; Thou art the Best of all the things; Thou art sung as the Highest; Thou art modesty; Thou art Pusti (nourishment); Thou art forgiveness (Ksama); Thou art Beauty (Kanti); Thou art the embodiment of mercy; Thou art liked by all; Thou art adorned by the whole world; Thou art of the nature of wakefulness, dream and deep sleep; Thou art the Highest; Thou art alone Highest Deity; Thou art highly attached to the Supreme Bliss. There is no other thing than Thee. There is One only and that is Thee. Hence Thou art denominated as One; Thou becomest again the two by contact with Thy Maya. Thou art the refuge of Dharma, Artha and Kama; hence Thou Thou art Three; Thou art the Turiya (the fourth state of consciousness) hence Thou art Four. Thou art the God of the five elements; hence Thou art Panchami (five); Thou presidest over the six passions Kama, anger, etc.; hence Thou art Sasthi; Thou presidest over the seven days of the week and Thou grantest boons seven by seven; hence Thou art Seven. Thou art the God of the eight Vasus; hence Thou art Astami; Thou art full of the nine Ragas and nine parts and Thou art the Goddess of nine planets; hence Thou art Navami. Thou pervadest the ten quarters and Thou art worshipped by the ten quarters; hence Thou art named Das'ami (the tenth day of the fortnight); Thou art served by the Eleven Rudras, the Goddesses of eleven Ganas and Thou art fond of Ekadas'i Tithi; hence Thou art denominated Ekadas'i; Thou art twelve armed and the Mother of the twelve Adityas; hence Thou art Dvadas'i; Thou art dear to the thirteen Ganas; Thou art the presiding Deity of Visve Devas and Thou art the thirteen months including the Malas Masa (dirty month), hence Thou art Trayodas'i. Thou didst grant boons to the fourteen Indras and Thou gavest birth to the fourteen Manus; hence Thou art Chaturdas'i. Thou art knowable by the Pahchadas'i. Thou art sixteen armed and on Thy forehead the sixteen digits of the Moon are always shining; Thou art the sixteenth digit (ray) of the Moon named Ama; hence Thou art Sodas'i. O Deves'i! Thou, though attributeless and formless, appearest in these forms and attributes. Thou hast now enveloped in Moha and Darkness the Lord of Rama, the Bhagavan, the Deva of the Devas. These Daityas, Madhu and Kaitabha are indomitable and very powerful. So to kill them, Thou better dost awake the Lord of the Devas.”

25-34. The Muni said Thus praised by the Lotus-born, the Tamasi Bhagavati (the Goddess of sleep and ignorance), the Beloved of Bhagavan, left Visnu and enchanted the two Daityas.

On being awakened, the Supreme Spirit Visnu, the Lord of the world, the Bhagavan, the Deva of the Devas, saw the two Daityas. Those two monstrous Danavas, beholding Madhu Sudana, came up before Him, ready to fight. The hand-to-hand fight lasted amongst them for five thousand years.

Then the two Danavas, maddened by their great strength, were enchanted by the Maya of Bhagavati and told the Supreme Deity, “Ask boon from us.” Hearing this, the Bhagavan Adi Purusa, (the Prime Man) asked the boon that both of them would be killed that day by Him. Those two very powerful Danavas spoke to Hah again, “Very well. Kill us on that part of the earth which is not under water.” O King! Bhagavan Visnu, the Holder of the conch and club, spoke “All right. Indeed! Let that be so.”

Saying this He placed their heads on His thigh and severed them with His disc (chakra). O King! Thus Maha Kali, the Queen of all the Yogas arose on this occasion when the praise was offered Her by Brahma. O King! Now I will describe another account how this Maha Laksmi appeared on another occasion. Listen.

1-6. The Muni said O King! The powerful Asura Mahisa, born of a she-buffalo, defeated all the Devas and became the Lord of the whole universe. That indomitable Danava seized forcibly all the rights of the Devas and began to enjoy the pleasures of the kingdom over the three worlds. The Devas, thus defeated, were expelled from their abodes in Heavens. They took Brahma as their Leader and went to the excellent regions where Maha Deva and Visnu resided and informed them of all that had been done by that vicious Asura Mahisa. They said “O Deva of the Devas! The insolent Mahisasura has become unbearable and he has taken possessions of the rights and properties of the whole host of the Devas and he is now enjoying them. Both of you are quite capable to destroy the Asura. So why do you not devise means to annihilate him in no time!”

7-10. Hearing these pitiful words of the Devas, Bhagavan Visnu became quite indignant. S’ankara, Brahma and the other Devas all were inflamed with anger. O King! From the face of the angry Hah, then emanated an Unusual Fire, brilliant like thousand Suns. Then by and by emanated fires also from the bodies of all the Devas who were filled then with joy. From the mass of fire thus emanated there came out a beautiful Female Figure. The face of this figure was formed out of the fire that emanated from the body of Maha Deva. Her hairs were formed out of the fire of Yama and Her arms were formed out of the fire that emanated from Visnu.

11-21. O King! From the fire of the Moon came out two breasts; from the fire of Indra came out Her middle portion; from the fire of Varuna, appeared Her loins and thighs; from the fire of Earth, Her hips were formed; from the fire of Brahma, Her feet were formed; from the fire of the Sun, Her toes were formed; from the fire of the Vasus, Her fingers were formed; from Kuvera's fire, Her nose came out; from the excellent tejas of Prajapati, teeth; from the fire of Agni, Her three eyes; from the fire of the twilights. Her eye-brows and from the fire of Vayu, Her ears appeared.

O Lord of men! Thus Bhagavati Mahisamardini was born of the Tejas (fiery substances) of the Devas. Next S’iva gave Her the S’ula (weapon spear); Visnu gave Sudars'ana (Chakra); Varuna gave the conchshell; Fire gave S'akti (weapon); Vayu gave Her bows and arrows; Indra gave Her thunder bolt and the bell of the elephant Airavata; Yama gave Her the Destruction Staff (Kala Danda); Brama gave Her the Rudraksa, rosary and Kamandalu; the Sun gave Her, in every pore the wonderful rays; the Time (Kala) gave Her sharp axe and shield; the oceans gave Her the beautiful necklace and new clothes (two in number); VisVakarma gladly gave Her the crown, ear¬ rings, kataka, Angada, Chandrardha, tinklets; and the Himalayas gave Her the Lion as Her Vehicle and various gems and jewels.

22-30. Kuvera, the Lord of wealth gave Her the cup filled with the drink; Bhagavan Ananta Deva gave Her a necklace of snakes (Naghara). Thus the World Mother, the Devi, became honoured by all the Devas. The Devas, very much oppressed by Mahisasura, then, chanted various hymns of praise to the World Mother MahesVari Maha Devi.

Hearing their Stotras, the Deves'i, worshipped by the Devas, shouted aloud the War-Cry. O King! Mahisasura, startled at that War- Cry, came to Bhagavati with all his army corps. Then that great Asura Mahisa hurled various weapons in the air and overcast the sky with them and began to fight with great skill. The several generals Chiksura, Durdhara, Durmukha, Vaskala, Tamraka, Vidalaksa and various other innumerable generals as if Death incarnate, accompanied Mahisa, the chief Danava. A fierce fight then ensued. Then the Devi Who enchants all the beings, became red-eyed with anger and began to kill the generals of the against party. When the generals were killed one by one Mahisasura, skilled in the science of magic, came up quickly to the front of the Devi.

31-40. The Lord of the Danavas, then, by his magic power, began to assume various forms. Bhagavati, too, began to destroy his those forms. Then the Daitya, the crusher of the Devas, assumed the form of a buffalo and began to fight. The Devi then fastened the animal, the Asura, the Death of the Devas, tightly and cut off his head by Her axe. The remainder of his forces, then, fled away in terror and disorder with a loud cry. The Devas became very glad and began to chant hymns to the Devi. O King! Thus the Laksmi Devi appeared to kill Mahisasura. Now I will describe how Sarasvati appeared. Listen. Once on a time the two very powerful Daityas S’umbha and Nis'umbha were born. They attacked the Devas, oppressed them and seized their houses and rights. The Devas became dispossessed of their kingdoms and went to the Himalayas and offered stotras to the Devi with the greatest devotion “O Deves’i!

O Thou, skilled in removing the difficulties of the Bhaktas! Victory to Thee! O Thou, the Sinless One! Old age and death cannot touch Thee. O Thou! Death incarnate to the Danavas! O Deves’i! O Thou, of mighty valour and prowess! O Thou, the embodiment of Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a! Unbounded is Thy might; Thou canst be easily reached by the power of devotion. O Thou, the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer! O MadhavT! O Thou, the Giver of Bliss! Thou dancest with great joy at the time of the dissolution of all the things (Pralaya).

41-50. O Thou, full of mercy! O Deva Deves’T! Be gracious unto us. O Thou, the Remover of the sufferings of the refugees! We now come unto Thy protection. The terror of S’umbha and Nis'umbha is like an endless ocean unto us. Save, save us from their fast clutches. O Devi! save us O King! verily.” When the Devas praised thus, the daughter of the Himalayas, Bhagavati became pleased and asked “What is the matter?” In the meanwhile, there emitted from the physical sheath of the Devi another Devi Kaus'iki who gladly spoke to the Devas “O Suras! I am pleased with Thy Stotra. Now ask the boon that you desire.” The Devas then asked for the following boon “O Devi! The two famous Daityas S’umbha and Nis'umbha have attacked forcibly the three worlds. The wicked Lord of the Danavas, S’umbha, has overcome us by the power of his arm and is now tormenting us without any break. Kindly devise some means to kill him.” The Devi said “O Devas! Be patient. I will kill these two Daityas, S’umbha and Nis'umbha and thus remove the thorn on your way. At an early date I will do good to you.” Thus saying to Indra and the other Devas the merciful Devi disappeared at once before their eyes. The Deva with their hearts delighted went to the beautiful Sumeru Mountain and dwelt there in the caves thereof.

Here the servants of S’umbha and Nis'umbha Chanda and Munda, while they were making their circuits, saw the exquisitely beautiful Devi, the Enchantress of the world, and came back to S’umbha their King and said

51-60. “O Destroyer of enemies! O Giver of honour! O Greal King! You are the Lord of all the Daityas and are fit to enjoy all the gems and jewels. To-day we have seen an extraordinary beautiful woman jewel. She is fit to be enjoyed by you. So now you would better bring that perfectly beautiful woman and enjoy. No such enchanting women can be seen amongst the Asura women Naga Kanyas Gandharbha women, DanavTs or men.” Hearing thus the words of the servant, S’umbha, the tormentor of the foes, sent a Daitya named Sugriva as a messenger to Her. The messenger went to the Devi as early as possible and spoke to Her all that S’umbha had told him. “O Devi! The Asura S’umbha is now the conqueror of the three worlds and respected by the Devas. O Devi I

He is now enjoying all that is best, the gems and jewels; O Devi! I am his messenger sent here to convey to you his message as follows O Devi! I am the sole enjoyer of all the jewels. O Beautiful¬ eyed! You are a gem; so you would worship me. O Fair One! All the gems and jewels that are in the Deva loka, in the Daitya loka, or amongst the regions of men, are under my control. So you would lovingly worship me.” The Devi said “O Messenger! True that you are speaking for your King; but I made a promise before, how can I act against it? O Messenger! Hear what I promised.

61-70. Whoever in the three worlds will conquer Me by sheer force and thus crush My vanity, whoever will be as strong as Myself, He can enjoy Me. So the King of Daityas can prove My promise true and by sheer force can marry Me. What is there with him that he cannot do? So, Messenger! Go back to your master and tell him all this so that the powerful S’umbha may fulfil My promise.” Hearing thus the words of the Great Devi, the messenger went back to S’umbba and informed him everything regarding the Devi's sayings. The very powerful Lord of the Daityas, S’umbha became very angry at the unpleasant words of the messenger and commanded the Daitya named Dhumraksa “O Dhumraksa! Listen to my words with great attention. Go and catch hold of that wicked woman by her hairs and bring her to me. Go quickly; do not delay.” Thus commanded, the very powerful and the best of the Daityas, Dhumraksa, went at once to the Devi with sixty thousand Daityas and cried aloud to Her

“O Auspicious One! You would better worship quickly our Lord S’umbha, who is very powerful and mighty; you will then acquire all sorts of pleasures; else I will hold you by your hairs and take you to the Lord of the Daityas.”

71-80. Thus addressd by Dhumraksa Daitya, the enemy of the Devas, the Devi said “O Powerful One! O Daitya! What you have spoken is perfectly right, but tell me first what you or your king S’umbha can do to Me?” When the Devi said thus, the Daitya Dhumralochana rushed on Her at once with arms and weapons.

With one loud noise, MahesVari burnt him immediately to ashes. O King! The other forces were partly crushed by the Lion, the vehicle of the Devi and partly fled away in disorder to all the quarters; some became senseless out of fear. S’umbba, the Lord of the Daityas, became very angry to hear this. His face assumed a terrible form with eyebrows contracted. Then he became impatient with anger and sent in order Chanda, Munda and Raktabija.

The three powerful Daityas went to the battle and tried their might to capture the Devi. The Devi Jagaddhatri, of violent prowess, seeing that these three Daityas were coming to Her, killed them by Her trident and laid them prostrate on the ground. Hearing their death with all their army, S’umbha and Nis'umbha came in their own persons arrogantly to the battlefield. S’umbha and Nis'umbha fought for a time with the Devi a terrible fight and became tired, when the Devi killed them outright. When the Bhagavati, Who is all this world, killed S’umbba and Nis'umbha, the Devas began to praise Bhagavati the Supreme Deity of Vak (Word) incarnate.

81-93. O King! Thus I have spoken to you in due order the manner in which the beautiful Kali, Maha Laksmi and Sarasvati incarnated themselves on the earth. That Supreme Deity, the Devi Parames'vari thus creates, preserves, and destroys the Universe. You better take refuge of that highly adored Devi, that causes the distinction and the delusion of this Universe. Then only you will attain success. Narayana said The king Suratha, hearing these beautiful words of the Muni, took refuge of the Devi, that yields all desired objects. He built an earthen image of the Devi and, with concentrated attention, thought wholly of the Devi and began to worship Her with devotion. When the worship was over, he offered sacrifices of the blood of his body to the Devi. Then the World-Mother, the Deity of the Devas, became pleased and appeared before him and asked him Accept the boon that you desire. When the Devi said thus, the king asked from the MahesVari that excellent knowledge whereby the ignorance is destroyed and as well the kingdom free from any dangers or difficulties. The Devi said “O King! By My boon, you will get your foeless kingdom in this very birth as well as the Jhanam that removes ignorance. O King! I will tell you also what you will be in the next birth. Hear. In your next birth, you will be the son of the Sun and be famous as Savarni Manu. By My boon you will be the Lord of the Manvantara, become very powerful and you will get good many sons.” Thus granting him this boon, the Devi disappeared. By the Grace of the Devi, Suratha became the Lord of the Manvantara. O Sadhu! Thus I have described to you the birth and deeds of Savarni. He who hears or reads this anecdote with devotion, will be a favourite of the Devi.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Tenth Book on the anecdote of Savarni Manu in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. S'n Narayana spoke O Child Narada! Hear now the wonderful anecdotes of the births of the remaining other Manus. The mere remembrance of these birth anecdotes causes Bhakti to grow and well up towards the Devi. Vaivasvata Manu had six sons viz., Karusa, Prisadhra, Nabhaga, Dista, Saryati, and Tris'anku. All of them were stout and strong. Once they all united went to the excellent banks of the Jumna and began to practise Pranayama without taking any food and became engaged in worshipping the Devi. Each of them built separately an earthen image of the Devi and worshipped Her with devotion and with various offerings. In the beginning, they took the dry leaves of the trees that dropped of themselves for their food; then they drank water only, then breathed air only; then the smoke from the fire of the Homa; then they depended on the Solar Rays. Thus they practised tapasya with great difficulties. The continual worship of the Devi with the greatest devotion made them conscious of their clear intellect, destructive of all sorts of vanities and delusions, and the Menu's sons thought only of the Hallowed Feet of the Devi; their intellects were purified and they were greatly wondered to see within their Self the whole Universe. Thus they practised their Tapasya full twelve years when Bhagavati, the Ruling Principle of this Universe resplendent wiih the brilliance of the thousand Suns, appeared before them. The princes with their intelligences thus purified saw Her, bowed down and, with their lowly hearts, began to chant hymns to Her with greatest devotion. "O Is'ani! O Merciful! Thou art the Devi presiding over all. Thou art the Best. So Victory to Thee! Thou art known by the Vagbhava Mantra. Thou gettest pleased when the Vagbhava Mantra is repeated. O Devi! Thou art of the nature of Klim Kara (of the form of Klim). Thou gettest pleased with the repetition of Klim Mantra. O Thou, that gladdenest the Lord! Thou bestowest joy and pleasure in the heart of the King of Kama. O Maha Maya! When Thou art pleased. Thou givest that Unequalled Kingdom. O Thou that increasest the enjoyments! Thou art Visnu, Surya, Hara, Indra and the other Devas." When the highsouled princes praised Her thus, Bhagavati became pleased and spoke to them the following sweet words "O Highsouled Princes! You all have worshipped Me and practised, indeed, very hard tapasyas and thus you have become sinless and your intellects and hearts have become thoroughly purged and thus purified. Now ask boons that you desire. I will grant them ere long to you." The Princes said "O Devi! We want unrivalled Kingdoms, many sons of long longevity, continual enjoyment of pleasures, fame, energy, freedom in all actions, and as well the good and keen intelligence. These will be beneficial to us." The Devi said Whatever you have desired, I grant them to you all. Besides I give you another boon. Listen attentively. By My Grace you all will be the Lords of the Manvantaras and acquire strength that will experience no defeat, and you will get prosperity, fame, energy, powers, and a continual line of descent and abundant full enjoyments.

22-32. Narayana said After the World Mother Bhramari Devi granted them these boons, the princes chanted hymns to Her and then She instantly vanished. The very energetic princes acquired in that birth excellent kingdoms and abundance of wealth. They all had sons and thus established their families, and became the Lords of Manvantara in their next births. By the Grace of the Devi, the first of the princes Karusa became the Ninth Manu, the exceedingly powerful Daksa Savarni; the second prince Prisadhra became the Tenth Manu, named Meru Savarni; the third prince, the highly enthusiastic Nabhaga became the Eleventh Manu, named Surya Savarni; the fourth prince Dista became the Twelfth Manu, named Chandra Savarni; the powerful fifth prince S'aryati became the Thirteenth Manu named Rudra Savarni and the sixth prince Tris'anku became the Fourteenth Manu named Visnu Savarni and became the celebrated Lord of the world.

33-41. Narada questioned "O Wise One! Who is that Bhramari Devi? What is Her Nature? What for She takes birth? Kindly describe all this beautiful and pain destroying anecdotes to me. I am not satiated with the drinking of the nectar of the Glories of the Devi; my desire to hear further more is as strong as ever. As the drink of the nectar takes away death, so the drink of this anecdote of the Devi takes away the fear of death." Narayana said O Narada! I will now narrate the wonderful glories of that unthinkable, unmanifested World Mother, leading to Mukti. Hear, as a Mother behaves towards

Her child kindly and without any hypocrisy, so the World Mother in all Her lives manifests Her merciful sincere dealings for the welfare of the humanity. In days gone by, in the nether regions, in the city of the Daityas, there lived a powerful Daitya named Aruna. He was a furious Deva Hater and a pakka hyprocrite. With a view to conquer the Devas, he went to the banks of the Ganges in the Himalayas, practised a very bard Tapasya, to Brahma, taking Him to be the Protector of the Daityas. First influenced by Tamo Guna, he withheld in his body the five Vayus and partook only the dry leaves and repeated, the Gayatri Mantra and practised austerities. Thus he practised for full ten thousand years. Then for another ten thousand years the Daitya lived drinking some drops of water only; then for another ten thousand years he remained by inhaling air only; and then for another ten thousand years he did not take any thing and thus practised he his wonderful Tapasya.

42-49. Thus practising his Tapasya a sort of wonderful halo of light emitted from his body and began to burn the whole world. This thing then appeared a great wonder. All the Devas then exclaimed. "Oh! What is this! Oh! What is this!" And they trembled. All were very much terrified and took refuge of Brahma. Hearing all the news from the Devas, the four-faced Bhagavan rode on His vehicle, the Swan, and with the Gayatri went very gladly to where the Daitya was practising his austerities and saw that the Daitya was immersed in meditation with his eyes closed; and he looked, as it were, blazing with fire, as if a second Fire himself. His belly had become dried up, body withered and the nerves of the bodies, too, became almost visible; only the life breath was lingering there. Brahma then spoke to him "O Child! Auspices to you! Now ask the boon that you desire." Hearing these gladdening nectar-like words from the mouth of Brahma, Aruna, the chief of the Daityas opened his eyes and saw Brahma in his front. Seeing Brahma before him with a rosary of beads and Kamandalu in his hand and attended by Gayatri and the four Vedas, muttering the name of the Eternal Brahma, the Daitya rose up and bowed down to Him and sang to Him various Stotras.

50-59. Then the intelligent Daitya asked from Brahma the following boon that "I shall not die. Grant this." Brahma then gently explained to him "O Best of the Danavas! See that Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara and others are not free from this limitation of death!

What to speak then for others! I cannot grant you a boon that is an impossibility. Ask what is possible and just. The intelligent persons never show an eagerness to an impossibility." Hearing the above words of Brahma, Aruna again said with devotion "O Deva! If Thou art unwilling to grant me the above boon, then, O Lord! Grant me such a boon, as is practicable, that my death shall not be caused by any war, nor by any arms or weapons, nor by any man or any woman, by any biped or quadruped or any combination of two and grant me such a boon, such a large army as I can conquer the Devas." Hearing the words of the Daitya, Brahma said "Let that be so" and went back instantly to His own abode. Then, puffed up with that boon, the Daitya Aruna called on all the other Daityas that lived in the nether regions. The Daityas, that were under his shelter, came and saluted him, as their king and, by his command, they sent messengers to the Heavens to fight with the Devas. Hearing from the messenger that the Daityas were willing to fight with the Devas, Indra trembled with fear and went instantly with the Devas to the abode of Brahma. Taking Brahma, too, along with them from there.

they went to the Visnu Loka and took Visnu with them and all went to the S'iva Loka.

60-70. There they all held a conference how to kill the Daitya, the enemy of the Gods. While, on the other hand, Aruna, the king of the Daityas surrounded by his army, went ere long to the Heavens.

O Muni! The Daitya, then, through the power of his Tapas, assumed various forms and seized the rights and possessions of the Moon, the Sun, Yama, Agni and all the others. All the Devas, then, dislodged from their stations went to the region of Kailas'a and represented to S'ankara about their own troubles and dangers respectively. Then, what was to be done on this subject, on this, great discussions cropped up. When Brahma said, that the death of the Daitya would not ensue from any fight, with any arms or weapons, from any man or woman, biped, quadruped or from any combination of the above two. Then the Devas became all anxious and could not find out any solution at that instant, when the Incorporeal Voice was clearly heard in the Heavens Let you all worship the Queen of the Universe. She will carry out your work to success. If the king of the Daityas, always engaged in muttering the Gayatri, forsakes the Gayatri any how, then his death will occur. Hearing this gladdening Celestial Voice, the Devas held the council with great caution. When it was settled what ought to be done, Indra asked Brihaspati and said "O Guru Deva! You would better go to the Daitya for the carrying out of the Devas' ends and do so that he forsakes the Devi Gayatri ParamesVari. We will all now go and meditate on Her. When She will be pleased. She will help us.

71-77. Thus commanding Brihaspati and thinking that the beautiful Protectress of Jambu Nada would protect them the Devas all started to worship Her and, going there, began the Devi Yajha and with great devotion muttered the Maya Vija and practised asceticism. On the other hand, Brihaspati went ere long in the garb of a Muni to the Daitya Aruna. The king of the Daityas then asked him "O Best of Munis! Whence and why have you come here. Say, O Muni! Where have you come? I am not one of your party. Rather I am your enemy." Hearing the above words, Brihaspati said When you are worshipping incessantly the Devi whom we too worship, then say how you are not a one on our side! O Saint! The vicious Daitya, hearing the above words and deluded by the Maya of the Devas, forsook the Gayatri Mantra out of vanity and therefore he became weak, bereft of the Holy Fire.

78-85. Then Brihaspati, having succeeded in his work there, went to the Heavens and saw Indra and told him everything in detail. The Devas became satisfied and worshipped the Highest Deity. O Muni! Thus, a long interval passed, when one day the World Mother, the Auspicious Devi appeared before them. She was resplendent with the brilliance of ten million suns and looked beautiful like ten millions of Kandarpas (Gods of love). Her body was anointed with variegated colours, etc.; She wore a pair of clothings; a wonderful garland suspended from Her neck; Her body was decked with various ornaments and in the fists of Her hands there were wonderful rows of hornets (large black bees). Her one hand was ready to grant boons and Her other hand was ready to hold out "no fear." On the neck of Bhagavati, the Ocean of Mercy, and peaceful, were seen the variegated garlands with large black bees all round. Those male and female bees singing incessantly all round Her the Hrimkara Mantra (the First Vibration of Force), kotis of black bees surrounded Her. The All-auspicious Bhagavati, praised by all the Vedas, Who is all in all, composed of all. Who is all good, the Mother of all. Omniscient, the Protectress of all, was adorned fully with dress.

86-96. Seeing suddenly the Devi, in their front Brahnna and the other Devas became surprised and by and by they got relieved and gladly began to chant hymns of praise to Bhagavati, Whose Glories have been written in the Vedas.

The Devas said "O Devi! Obeisance to Thee! Thou art the Highest Knowledge and the Creatrix, Preservrix and the Destructrix of the Universe. O Thou, the Lotus-eyed! Thou art the Refuge of all! So we bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou art collectively and individually VisVa, Taijasa, Prajha, Virat and Sutratma. O Bhagavati. Thou art differentiated and undifferentiated; Thou art the Kutastha Chaitanya (the Unmoveable, Unchangeable Consciousness). So we bow down to Thee. O Durge! Thou art unconcerned with the creation, preservation and destruction; yet Thou punishest the wicked and art easily available by the sincere devotion of Thy Bhaktas. O Devi!

Thou scorchest and destroyest the ignorance and sin of the embodied souls. Hence Thou art named Bharga. So we bow down to Thee. O Mother! Thou art Kalika, Nila Sarasvati, Ugra Tara, Mahogra; Thou assumest many other forms. So we always bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou art Tripura Sundari, Bhairabi, Matangi, Dhumavati, Chhinnamasta, S'akambhari and Rakta Dantika. Obeisance to Thee! O Bhagavati! It is Thou that didst appear as Laksmi out of the milk ocean (Ksira Samudra). Thou hadst destroyed Vritrasura, Chanda, Munda, Dhumralochana, Rakta Bija, S'umbha, Nis'umbha and the Exterminator of the Danavas and thus. Thou didst do great favours to the Devas. So, O Gracious Countenanced! Thou art Vijaya and Ganga; O Sarade! We bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou art the earth, fire. Prana and other Vayus and other substances. O Merciful! Thou art of the form of this Universe; the Deva form, and the Moon, Sun and other Luminous forms and of the Knowledge Form.

97-109. O Devi! Thou art Savitri; Thou art Gayatri; Thou art Sarasvati; Thou art Svadha, Svaha, and Daksina. So we bow down to Thee. Thou art, in the Vedas, the Agamas, “Not this, not this.” Thou art what is left after the negation of all this. This all the Vedas declare of Thy True Nature thus as the Absolute Consciousness in all. Thus Thou art the Highest Deity. So we worship Thee. As Thou art surrounded by large black bees. Thou art named Bhramari. We always make obeisance to Thee! Obeisance to Thee! Obeisance to Thy sides! Obeisance to Thy back! Obeisance to Thy front! O Mother! Obeisance to Thy above! Obeisance to Thy below! Obeisance to everywhere round of Thee! O Thou, the Dweller in Mani Dvipa! O Maha Devi! Thou art the Guide of the innumerable Brahmandas! O World Mother! Let Thou be merciful to us. O Devi! Thou art higher than the highest. O World Mother! Victory be to Thee! All Hail! O Goddess of the universe! Thou art the Best in the whole universe; Victory to Thee! O Lady of the world! Thou art the mine of all the gems of qualities. O ParamesVari! O World Mother! Let Thou be pleased unto us.” Narayana said Hearing those sweet, ready and confident words of the Devas, the World Mother said in the sweet tone of a Mad Cuckoo:- “O Devas! As far as granting boons to others is concerned, I am ever ready. I am always pleased with you. So, O Devas! Say what you want.” Hearing the words of the Devi, the Devas began to express the cause of their sorrows. They informed Her of the wicked nature of the vicious Daitya, the neglect of the Devas, the Brahmanas and the Vedas and the ruins thereof, and the dispossession of the Devas of their abodes and the receiving by the Daitya of the boon from Brahma; in fact, everything what they had to say, duly and vigorously. Then the Bhagavati Bhramari Devi sent out all sorts of black bees, hornets, etc., from Her sides, front and forepart.

110-120. Innumerable lines of black bees then were generated and they joined themselves with those that got out of the Devi's hands and thus they covered the whole earth. Thus countless bees began to emit from all sides like locusts. The sky was overcast with the bees; and the earth was covered with darkness. The sky, mountain peaks, trees, forests all became filled with bees and the spectacle presented a grand dismal sight. Then the black bees began to tear asunder the breasts of the Daityas as the bees bite those who destroy their beehives. Thus the Daityas could not use their weapons nor could they fight nor exchange any words. Nothing they could do; they had no help but to die. The Daityas remained in the same state where they were and in that state they wondered and died. No one could talk with another. Thus the principal Daityas died within an instant. Thus completing their destruction, the bees came back to the Devi. All the people then spoke to one another “Oh!

What a wonder! Oh! What a wonder!” Or like this “Whose Maya is this! What a wonder that She will do like this!” Thus Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a became merged in the ocean of joy and worshipped the Devi Bhagavati with various offerings and shoutings of chants “Victory to the Devi” and showered flowers all around. The Munis began to recite the Vedas. The Gandharbas began to sing.

121-127. The various musical instruments, Mridangas, Murajas, the Indian lutes, Dhakkas, Damarus, S'ankhas, bells, etc., all sounded and the three worlds were filled with their echoes. All with folded palms chanted various hymns of praise to the Devi and said “O Mother! Isani! Victory to Thee!” The Maha Devi became glad and gave to each separate boons and when they asked “for unshakeable devotion to Thy lotus feet,” She granted them that also and disappeared before them. Thus I have described to you the glorious character of the Bhramari Devi. If anybody hears this very wonderful anecdote, he crosses at once this ocean of the world. Along with the glories and greatness of the Devi, if one hears the accounts of Manus, then all auspiciousness comes to him. He who hears or recites daily this Greatness of the Devi, becomes freed from all his sins and he gets himself absorbed in the thoughts of the Devi (Sajuya). Note The Mantra is here not merely the Seed, the Spiritual Password, but it connotes, besides the idea of the password, the Adi First vibration and it exhibits the First Spiritual Form, endowed with the highest feelings of Faith, Wisdom, Bliss and Joy, displayed with the grandest colours, startling thrills, rapt enchanting signs, gestures, and postures, the shooting forth of all powers, the sources of Siddhis, that cannot be ordinarily conceived in the worldly concerns. Their faint echoes govern this mighty world. The Mantras are seated in the six chakras or plexuses or the six Laya centres in the spinal cord. Within these chakras, the transformations of the Tattvas take place. Some vanish. Some appear and so on. Remark In this chapter we find clearly the mention of the several names of the ten Das'a Maha Vidyas.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Tenth Book of the account of Bhramari Devi in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa and here ends as well the Tenth Book.

English translation

1-13. Narada said O Bhagavan! O Thou, the Eternal One! O Narayana! O Lord of the past and the future! Thou art the Creator and the Lord of all the beings that lived in the past and that will come into existence in the future. Thou hast described to me the highly wonderful and excellent anecdote of the Exalted Devi. How She did assume the forms of MahakalT, Maha Laksmi, Maha Sarasvati and Bhramari, for the fulfilment of the Devas' purposes and how the Devas got back their possessions by the Grace of the Devi. All you have described. O Lord! Now I want to hear the rules of Sadachara (right way of living), the due observance of which by the devotees pleases the World-Mother. Kindly describe them.

Narayana said O Knower of Truth! Now I am telling you those rules of the right way of living, which rightly observed, always please Bhagavati. Listen first, I will talk of the Brahmins, how their welfare is secured, what the Brahmanas ought to do on getting up early in the morning from their bed. From the sunrise to the sunset the Brahmanas should do all the daily and occasional duties (Nitya and Naimittik Karmas) and they are to perform the optional works for some particular object such as Puttresti Yajha and other good works (not acts of black magic as killing, causing pain and inconveniences to others, etc.). It is the Self alone and not the Father, Mother, etc., nor any other body that, helps us on our way to that happiness in the next world. Father, Mother, wife, sons and others are helps merely to our happiness in this world. None of them are helpful to us in bettering our states in the next world.

Deliverance of one's Self depends verily on his own Self. Therefore one should always earn and store dharma (religion) and observe always there the right conduct to help one in the next world. If Dharma be on our side, this endless sea of troubles can be safely crossed. The rules of right living as ordained by Manu in S'rutis and Manu Smritis are the principal Dharmas. The Brahmanas should always be observant to their Dharma as ordained in the S'astras, S'ruti and Smriti. Follow the right conduct and then you will get life, posterity and increase of happiness easily here and hereafter. By right conduct, food is obtained and sins are easily destroyed; the right conduct is the auspicious principal Dharma of men. Persons of right living enjoy happiness in this world as well as in the next. Those, who are veiled in darkness by Ignorance and thus wildly enchanted, can verily see their way to Mukti if they follow the Great Light revealed to them by Dharma and the right conduct. It is by Sadachara, that superiority is attained. Men of right conduct always do good deeds. From good deeds, knowledge comes. This is the advice of Manu.

14-24. Right way of living is the best of all the Dharmas and is great Tapasya (asceticism). The knowledge comes from this Right Living. Everything is attained thereby. He who is devoid of Sadachara, is like a S'udra, even if he comes of a Brahmin family. There is no distinction whatsoever betwen him and a S'udra. Right conduct is of two kinds (1) as dictated by the S'astras, (2) as dictated by the popular custom (Laukika). Both these methods should be observed by him who wants welfare for his Self. He is not to forsake one of them. O Muni! The village Dharma, the Dharma of one's own caste, the Dharma of one's own family and the Dharma of one's own country all should be observed by men. Never, never he is to do anything otherwise. With great loving devotion that is to be preserved. Men who practise wrong ways of living, are censured by the public; they always suffer from diseases. Avoid wealth and desires that have no Dharma in them. Why? If in the name of dharma, painful acts (e. g. killing animals in sacrifices) are to be committed, those are blamed by the people; so never commit them. Avoid them by all means. Narada said "O Muni! The S'astras are not one, they are many and they lay down different rules and contradictory opinions. How then Dharma is to be followed? And according what Dharma S'astra?" Narayana said S'ruti and Smriti are the two eyes of God; the Puranam is His Heart. Whatever is stated in S'ruti, the Smriti and the Puranams is Dharma; whatever else is written in other S'astras is not Dharma. Where you will find differences between S'ruti, Smriti and Puranas, accept the words of the S'rutis as final proofs. Wherever Smriti disagrees with the Puranas, know the Smritis more authoritative.

And where differences will crop up in the S'rutis themselves, know that Dharma, too, is of two kinds. And where the differences will crop up in the Smritis themselves, consider, then, that different things are aimed at. In some Puranas, the Dharma of the Tantras is duly described; but of these, which go against the Vedas, they are not to be accepted any means.

25-37. Tantra is accepted as the authoritative proof then and then only when it contradicts not the Vedas. Whatever goes clearly against the Vedas can in no way be accepted as a proof. In matters concerning Dharma, the Vedas is the Sole Proof. Therefore that which is not against the Vedas can be taken as proof; otherwise not. Whoever acts Dharma according to other proofs than what is ordained in the Vedas, goes to the hell in the abode of Yama to get his lesson. So the Dharma that is by all means to be accepted as such, is what is stated in the Vedas. The Smritis, the Puranas, or the Tantra S'astras can be taken also as authoritative when they are not conflicting to Vedas. Any other S'astras can be taken as authoritative when it is fundamentally coincident with the Vedas. Else it can never be accepted.

Those who do injury to others even by the blade of a Kus'a grass used as a weapon, go to hell with their heads downwards and their feet upwards. Those that follow their own sweet free will, that take up any sort of dress (e. g. Bauddhas), those that follow the philosophical doctrines called Pas'upatas, and the other hermits and saints and persons that take up other vows contrary to the religions of the Vedas, for example, the Vaikhanasa followers, those who brand their bodies by the hot Mudras, at the places of pilgrimages, e. g. Dvarka, etc., they go to hell with their bodies scorched by red hot brands (Tapta Mudras). So persons should act according to the excellent religions commanded by the Vedas. Everyday he should get up from his bed early in the morning and think thus "What good acts have I done, what have I given as charities? Or what I advised others to do charities what greater sins (Mahapatakas) and what smaller sins have I committed?" At the last quarter of the night he should think of Para Brahma. He should place his right leg on his left thigh and his left on his right thigh crosswise keeping his head straight up and touching the breast with his chin, and closing his eyes, he should sit steadily so that the upper teeth should not touch the lower jaw.

He should join his tongue with his palate and he should sit quiet, restraining his senses. He should be S'uddha Sattva. His seat should not be very low. First of all he should practice Pranayama twice or thrice; and within his heart he should meditate the Self of the shape of the Holy Flame or the Holy Light. (Om Mani Padma Hum.)

38-49. He should fix his heart for a certain time to that Luminous Self whose Eyes are everywhere. So the intelligent man should practise Dharana. Pranayama is of six kinds (1) Sadhuma (when the breaths are not steady), (2) Nirdhuma(better than the Sadhuma), (3) Sagarbha (when united with one's mantra), (4) Agarbha (when the practice is without the thought of any mantra), (5) Salaksya (when the heart is fixed on one's Deity) and (6) Alaksya (when the heart is not fixed on one's Deity). No yoga can be compared with Pranayama. This is equal to itself. Nothing can be its equal. This Pranayama is of three kinds, called Rechaka, Puraka and Kumbhaka. The Pranayama consists of three letters. A, U, M, i. e. of the nature of "Om". Or, in other words the letter A, of the Pranava Om indicates Puraka, the letter "U" denotes Kumhhaka and the letter "M" denotes Rechaka. By the Ida Nadi (by the left nostril) inhale as long as you count "A" (Visnu) thirty-two times; then withold breath, i.e., do Kumbhaka as long as you count "U" (S'iva) sixtyfour times and by the Pingala Nadi (the right nostril) do the Rechaka, i.e., exhale the breath as long as you count "M" (Brahma) for sixteen times. O Muni! Thus I have spoken to you of the Sadhuma Pranayama. After doing the Pranayama as stated above, pierce the Six Chakras (i. e., plexuses) (called Sathakra bheda) and carry the Kula Kundalini to the Brahma Randhra, the brain aperture, or to the thousand petalled lotus in the head and meditate in the heart the Self like a Steady Flame. (The Nadis are not those which are known to the Vaidya or the Medical S'astras. The latter are the gross physical nerves. The Nadis here are the Yoga Nadis, the subtle channels (Vivaras) along which the Pranik currents flow. Now the process of piercing the six Chakras (or nerve centres or centres of moving Pranik forces) is being described. Within this body, the six nerve centres called Padmas (Lotuses) exist. They are respectively situated at the (1) Muladhara (half way between Anus and Linga Mula), called the Sacral Plexus; (2) Linga Mula (the root of the genital organs); called postatic plexus; (this is also called Svadhisthana) (3) Navel, the Solar Plexus (4) Heart, the cardiac Plexus, (5) Throat (6) Forehead, between the eye brows there; the lotus in the forehead, called the cavernous plexus (Ajna Chakra) has two petals; in these two petals, the two letters "Ham" "Ksam" exist in the right hand direction (with the bands of the watch; going round from left to right keeping the right side towards one circumambulated as as a mark of respect). I bow down to these which are the two- lettered Brahma. The lotus that exists in the throat laryngeal or pharyngeal plexus has sixteen petals (vis'uddha chakra); in these are in due order in right hand direction the sixteen letters (vowels) a, a, i, I, u, u, ri, ri, Iri, Iri, e, ai, o, au, ann, ah; I bow down to these which are the sixteen lettered Brahma. The lotus that exists in the heart, the cardiac plexus (anahata chakra), has twelve petals; wherein are the twelve letters k, kh, g, gh, n, ch, chh, j, jh, h, t, th;

I bow to to these twelve lettered Brahma. The Solar plexus forms the Great Junction of the Right and Left sympathetic chains Ida and Pingala with the Cerebro spinal Axis. The lotus that exists in the navel, called the Solar Plexus, or Epigastric plexus (Manipura Chakra) has ten petals wherein are the ten letters d, dh, n, t, th, d, dh, n, p, ph, counting in the right hand direction (that is clockwise) (and the action of this clock is vertical in the plane of the spinal cord; also it may be horizontal). The lotus that exists at the root of the genital organ, the genital plexus or postatic plexus has six petals. The petals are the configurations made by the position of Nadis at any particular centre. Svadhisthana chakra or Svayambhu Linga, wherein are situated the six letters, b, bh, m, y, r, I; I bow down to this six-lettered Brahma. (These are the Laya Centres). The lotus that exists in the Muladhara, called the sacral or sacrococcygeal plexus has four petals, wherein are the four letters v, s', s, s. I bow down to these four-lettered Brahma. In the above six nerve centres or Laya Centres, or lotuses, all the letters are situated in the right hand direction (clockwise).

(Note All the nerves of the body combine themselves in these six nerve centres or Laya Centres. Each of these centres is spheroidal and is of the Fourth Dimension. At each centre many transitions take place, many visions take place, many forces are perceived and wonderful varieties of knowledge are experienced. These are called the Laya Centres. For many things vanish into non-existence and many new Tattvas are experienced.) Thus meditating on the Six Chakras or plexuses, meditate on the Kula Kundalini, the Serpent Fire. She resides on the four petalled lotus (Centre of S’akti) called Muladhara Chakra (Coccygeal plexus); She is of Rajo Guna; She is of a blood red colour, and She is expressed by the mantra “Hrim,” which is the Mayavija; she is subtle as the thread of the fibrous stock of the water lily. The Sun is Her face; Fire is Her breasts; he attains

Jivan mukti (liberation while living) within whose heart such a Kula Kundalini arises and awakens even once. Thus meditating on Kula Kundalini, one should pray to HerHer sitting, coming, going, remaining, the thought on Her, the realisation of Her and chanting hymns to Her, etc., all are Mine, Who is of the nature of all in all; I am that Bhagavati; O Bhagavati! All my acts are Thy worship; I am the Devi; I am Brahma, I am free from sorrow. I am of the nature of Everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss. Thus one should meditate of one's own-self. I take refuge of that Kula Kundalini, who appears like lightning and who holds the current thereof, when going to Brahmarandhra, in the brain, who appears like nectar when coming back from the brain to the Muladhara and who travels in the Susumna Nadi in the spinal cord. Then one is to meditate on one's own Guru, who is thought of as one with God, as seated in one's brain and then worship Him mentally. Then the Sadhaka, controlling himself is to recite the following Mantra “The Guru is Brahma, the Guru is Visnu, it is the Guru again that is the Deva Mahes'vara; it is Guru that is Para Brahma. I bow down to that S’ri Guru.”

Here ends the First Chapter of the Eleventh Book on what is to be thought of in the morning in the Maha Puranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-42. Narayana said Even if a man studies the Vedas with six Amgas (limbs of the Vedas), he cannot be pure if he be devoid of the principle of right living (Sadachara) and if he does not practise it. All that is in vain. As soon as the two wings of the young ones of birds appear they leave their nests, so the chhandas (the Vedas) leave such a man devoid of Sadachara at the time of his death. The intelligent man should get up from his bed at the Brahma muhurta and should observe all the principles of Sadachara. In the last quarter of night, he should practise in reciting and studying the Vedas. Then for some time he should meditate on his Ista Deva (his Presiding Deity). The Yogi should meditate on Brahma according to the method stated before. O Narada! If meditation be done as above, the identity of JTva and Brahma is at once realised and the man becomes liberated while living. After the fifty-fifth Danda from the preceding sunrise, i.e., 2 hours before the sunrise comes the Usakala; after the fifty seventh Danda comes the Arunodayakala; after fifty eighth Danda comes the morning time; then the Sun rises. On should get up from one's bed in the morning time. He should go then to a distance where an arrow shot at one stretch goes. There in the south-west corner he is to void his urines and faeces. Then the man, if he be a Brahmachari, should place his holy thread on his right ear and the householder should suspend it on his neck only. That is, the Brahmachari, in the first stage of of his life should place the holy thread over his right ear; the householder and the Vanaprasthis should suspend the holy thread from the neck towards the back and then void their faeces, etc. He is to tie a piece of cloth round his head; and spread earth or leaves on the place where he will evacuate himself. He is not to talk then nor spit nor inhale hard. One is not to evacuate oneself in cultivated lands, that have been tilled, in water, over the burning pyre, on the mountain, in the broken and ruined temples, on the ant-hills, on places covered with grass.

on road side, or on holes where living beings exist. One ought not to do the same also while walking. One ought to keep silence during both the twilights, while one is passing urine or voiding one's faeces, or while one is holding sexual intercourse, or before the presence of one's Guru, during the time of sacrifice, or while making gifts, or while doing Brahma Yajha. One ought to pray before evacuating, thus “O Devas! O Risis! O Pis'achas! O Uragas! O Raksasas! You all who might be existing here unseen by me, are requested to leave this place. I am going to ease myself here duly.” Never one is to void oneself while one looks at Vayu (wind), Agni (fire), a Brahmana, the Sun, water or cow. At the day time one is to turn one's face northward and at the night time southward, while easing oneself and then one is to cover the faeces, etc., with stones, pebbles, leaves or grass, etc. Then he is to hold his genital organ with his hand and go to a river or any other watery place; he is to fill his vessel with water then and go to some other place.

The Brahmana is to use the white earth, the Ksattriya is to take the red earth, the Vais'ya is to use the yellow earth and the S’udra is to apply the black earth and with that he is to cleanse himself. The earth under water, the earth of any temple, the earth of an anthill, the earth of a mouse hole, and the remnant of the earth used by another body for washing are not to be used for cleansing purposes. The earth for cleansing faeces is twice as much as that used in case of urine clearance; in the cleansing after sexual intercourse thrice as much. In urine cleansing the earth is to be applied in the organ of generation once, thrice in the hand. And in dirt clearing, twice in the organ of generation, five times in anus, ten times in the left hand and seven times in both the hands. Then apply earth four times first in the left feet and then on the right feet. The house holder should clean thus; the Brahmachari is to do twice and the Yatis four times.

At every time the quantity of wet earth that is to be taken is to be of the size of an Amalaki fruit; never it is to be less than that. This is for the clearance in the day time. Half of these can be used in the night time. For the invalids, one-fourth the above measurements; for the passers-by, one-eighth the above dimensions are to be observed. In case of women, S’udras, and incapable children, clearings are to be done till then when the offensive smell vanishes. No numbers are to be observed. Bhagavan Manu says for all the Varnas the clearing is to be done till then when the offensive smell vanishes. The clearing is to be performed by the left hand. The right hand is never to be used. Below the navel, the left hand is to be used; and above the navel the right hand is to be used for clearing. The wise man should never hold his water pot while evacuating himself. If by mistake he catches hold of his waterpot, he will have to perform the penance (prayaschitta).

If, out of vanity or sloth, clearing be not done, for three nights, one is to fast, drinking water only, and then to repeat the Gayatri Mantra and thus be purified. In every matter, in view of the place, time and materials, one's ability and power are to be considered and steps are to be taken accordingly. Knowing all this, one should clear oneself according to rule. Never be lazy here. After evacuating oneself of faeces, one is to rinse one's mouth twelve times; and after passing urine and clearing, one is to rinse four times. Never less than that is to be done. The water after rinsing is to be thrown away slowly downwards on one's left. Next performing Achaman one is to wash one's teeth. He is to take a tiny piece, twelve Angulas (fingers) long (about one foot) from a tree which is thorny and gummy. The cleansing twig (for teeth) is thick like one's little finger. He is to chew the one end of it to form a tooth brush. Karanja, Udumbara (figtree). Mango, Kadamba, Lodha, Champaka and Vadari trees are used for cleansing teeth. While cleansing teeth, one is to recite the following mantra “O Tree! Wherein resides the Deity Moon for giving food to the beings and for killing the enemies! Let Him wash my mouth to increase my fame and honour! O Tree! Dost Thou please give me long life, power, fame, energy, beauty, sons, cattle, wealth, intellect, and the knowledge of Brahma.” If the cleansing twig be not available and if there be any prohibition to brush one's teeth that day, (say, Pratipad day, Amavas, Sasthi and Navami), take mouthfuls of water, gargle twelve times and thus cleanse the teeth. If one brushes one's teeth with a twig on the new moon day, the first, sixth, ninth and eleventh day after the Full or New Moon or on Sunday, one eats the Sun (is it were, by making Him lose his fire), makes his family line extinct and brings his seven generations down into the hell. Next he should wash his feet and sip pure clean water thrice, touch his lips twice with his thumb, and then clear the nostrils by his thumb and fore finger. Then he is to touch his eyes and ears with his thumb and ring finger, touch his navel with his thumb and little finger, touch his breast with his palm and touch his head with all his fingers.

Here ends the Second Chapter of the Eleventh Book on cleansing the several parts of the body in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. S’n Narayana said O Narada! There are the six kinds of Achamana (1) S’uddha, (2) Smarta, (3) Pauranik, (4) Vaidik, (5) Tantrik and(6) S’rauta. The act of cleaning after evacuating oneself of urine and faeces is known as S’uddha S’aucha. After cleaning, the Achannan, that is performed according to rules, is named as Smarta and Pauranik. In places where the Brahma Yajha is performed, the Vaidik and S’rauta Achamanas are done. And where acts, e.g., the knowledge of warfare are being executed, the Tantrik Achaman is done. Then he is to remember the Gayatri Mantra with Pranava (Om) and fasten the lock of hair on the crown of his head, thus controlling all the hindrances (Bighna Bandhanam). Sipping again, he is to touch his heart, two arms, and his two shoulders. After sneezing, spitting, touching the lower lip with teeth, accidentally telling a lie, and talking with a very sinful man, he is to touch his right ear (where the several Devas reside). On the right ear of the Brahmanas reside Fire, Water, the Vedas, the Moon, the Sun, and the Vayu (wind). Then one is to go to a river or any other reservoir of water, and there to perform one's morning ablutions and to cleanse his body thoroughly. For the body is always unclean and dirty and various diets are being excreted out of the nine holes (doors) in the body. The morning bath removes all these impurities. Therefore the morning bath is essentially necessary. The sins that arise from going to those who are not fit for such purposes, from accepting gifts from impure persons or from the practice of any other secret vices all are removed by the morning ablutions. Without this bath, no acts bear any fruit. Therefore everyday, this morning bath is very necessary. Taking the Kus'a grass in hand, one is to perform one's bath and Sandhya. If for seven days, the morning ablutions are not taken, and if for three days, the Sandhyas are not performed, if for twelve days, the daily Homas be not performed, the Brahmanas become S’udras. The time for making the Homa in the morning is very little; therefore lest ablutions be done fully which would take a long time and hence the time for the Homa might elapse, the morning bath should be performed quickly. After the bath the Pranayama is to be done.

Then the full effects of bath are attained. There is nothing holier in this world or in the next than reciting the Gayatri. It saves the singer who sings the Gayatri; hence it is called Gayatri. During the time of Pranayama, one must control one's Prana and Apana Vayus, i.e., make them equal. The Brahmin, knowing the Vedas and devoted to his Dharma, must practise Pranayama three times with the repetition of Gayatri and Pranava and the three Vyarhitis (Om Bhu, Om Bhuvar, Om Svah).

While practising, the muttering of Gayatri is to be done three times. In Pranayama, the Vaidik mantra is to be repeated, never a Laukika Mantra is to be uttered. At the time of Pranayama, if anybody's mind be not fixed, even for a short while, like a mustard seed on the apex of a cow-horn, he cannot save even one hundred-and one persons in his father's or in his mother's line. Pranayama is called Sagarbha when performed with the repetition of some mantra; it is called Agarbha when it is done simply with mere meditation, without repeating any mantra. After the bathing, the Tarpanam with its accompaniments, is to he done; i.e., the peace offerings are made with reference to the Devas, the Risis, and the Pitris (whereby we invoke the blessings from the subtle planes where the highsouled persons dwell). After this, a clean pair of clothes is to be worn and then he should get up and come out of the water. The next things preparatory to practise Japam are to wear the Tilaka marks of ashes and to put on the Rudraksa beads. He who holds thirty-two Rudraksa beads on his neck, forty on his head, six on each ear (12 on two ears), twenty four beads on two hands (twelve on each hand) thirty-two beads on two arms (sixteen on each), one bead on each eye and one bead on the hair on the crown, and one hundred and eight beads on the breast, (251 in all) becomes himself Maha Deva. One is expected to use them as such. O Muni! You can use the Rudraksas after tieing, stringing together with gold or silver always on your S'ikha, the tuft of hair on the head or on your ears. On the holy thread, on the hands, on the neck, or on the belly (abdomen) one can keep the Rudraksa after one has repeated sincerely and with devotion the five lettered mantra of S'iva, or one has repeated the Pranava (Om). Holding the Rudraksa implies that the man has realised the knowledge of S'iva Tattva. O Brahman! The Rudraksa bead that is placed on the tuft or on the crown hair represents the Tara tattva, i.e., Om Kara; the Rudraksa beads that are held on the two ears are to be thought of as Deva and Devi, (S'iva and S'iva).

22-37. The one hundred and eight Rudraksa beads on the sacrificial thread are considered as the one hundred and eight Vedas (signifying the Full Knowledge, as sixteen digits of the Moon completed; on the arms, are considered as the Dik (quarters); on the neck, are considered as the Devi Sarasvati and Agni (fire). The Rudraksa beads ought to be taken by men of all colours and castes. The Brahmanas, Ksattriyas and Vais'yas should hold them after purifying them with Mantras, i.e., knowingly; whereas the S'udras can take them without any such purification by the Mantras, i.e., unknowingly. By holding or putting on the Rudraksa beads, persons become the Rudras incarnate in flesh and body. There is no doubt in this. By this all the sins arising from seeing, hearing, remembering, smelling, eating prohibited things, talking incoherently, doing prohibited things, etc., are entirely removed with the Rudraksa beads on the body; whatever acts, eating, drinking, smelling, etc., are done, are, as it were, done by Rudra Deva Himself. O Great Muni! He who feels shame in holding and putting on the Rudraksa beads, can never be freed from this Samsara even after the Koti births. He who blames another person holding Rudraksa beads has defects in his birth (is a bastard). There is no doubt in this. It is by holding on Rudraksa that Brahma has remained steady in His Brahmahood untainted and the Munis have been true to their resolves. So there is no act better and higher than holding the Rudraksa beads. He who gives clothing and food to a person holding Rudraksa beads with devotion is freed of all sins and goes to the S'iva Loka. He who feasts gladly any holder of such beads at the time of S'radh, goes undoubtedly to the Pitri Loka. He who washes the feet of a holder of Rudraksa and drinks that water, is freed of all sins and resides with honour in the S'iva Loka. If a Brahmana holds with devotion the Rudraksa beads with a necklace and gold, he attains the Rudrahood. O Intelligent One! Wherever whoever holds with or without faith and devotion the Rudraksa beads with or without any mantra, is freed of all sins and is entitled to the Tattvajhana. I am unable to describe fully the greatness of the Rudraksa beads. In fact, all should by all means hold the Rudraksa beads on their bodies.

Note The number one hundred and eight (108) signifies the One Hundred and Eight Vedas, the Brahman, the Source of all Wisdom and Joy.

Here ends the Third Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the glories of the Rudraksa beads in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Narada said O Sinless one! The greatness of the Rudraksa seed that you have described is verily such. Now I ask why is this Rudraksam so much entitled to worship by the people. Please speak clearly on this point. Narayana spoke O Child! This is the very question that was asked once by Kartika, the sixfaced One, to Bhagavan Rudra, dwelling in Kailas'a. What He replied, I say now. Listen. Rudra Deva spoke O Child Sadanana. I will dwell briefly on the secret cause of the greatness of the Rudraksa seed. Hear. In days of yore, there was a Daitya called Tripura who could not be conquered by any body. Brahma, Visnu and the other Devas were defeated by him. They then came to Me and requested Me to kill the Asura. At their request, I called in my mind the Divine Great weapon, named Aghora, beautiful and terrible and containing the strength of all the Devas, to kill him. It was inconceivable and it was blazing with fire.

For full divine one thousand years I remained awake with eyelids wide open in thinking of the Aghora weapon, the destroyer of all obstacles, whereby the killing of Tripurasura might be effected and the troubles of the Devas be removed. Not for a moment my eyelids dropped. There by my eyes were affected and drops of water came out of my eyes. Note here. How enemies are to be killed. It requires great thought, great concentration, great yoga and great powers. O Mahasena! From those drops of water coming out of my eyes, the great tree of Rudraksam did spring for the welfare of all. This Rudraksa seed is of thirty-eight varieties. From My Surya Netra, i.e.. My right eye, symbolizing the Sun, twelve yellow coloured (Pingala colour) varieties have come; and from my left eye representing the Moon, the Soma Netra, sixteen varieties of white colour and from my third eye on the top, representing Fire, i.e., the Agni Netra, ten varieties of black colour have come out. Of these the white Rudraksams are Brahmins and they are used by the Brahmanas; the red coloured ones are the Ksattriyas and should be used by the Ksattriyas and the black ones are S'udras and should be used by the Vaisyas and the S'udras.

12-19. One faced Rudraksa seed is the S'iva Himself, made manifest and rendered vivid; even the sin incurred in killing a Brahmana is destroyed thereby. Two faced or two headed Rudraksam is like the Deva and the Devi. Two sorts of sins are destroyed thereby. The three faced Rudraksam is like fire; the sin incurred in killing a woman is destroyed in a moment. The four faced Rudraksa seed is like Brahma and removes the sin of killing persons. The five faced Rudraksam is verily an image of Rudra; all sorts of sins, e.g., eating prohibited food, going to the ungoables, etc., are destroyed thereby. The six faced Rudraksam is Kartikeya. It is to be worn on the right hand. One becomes freed of the Brahmahatya sin. There is no manner of doubt in this. The seven faced Rudraksam is named Ananga. Holding this frees one from the sin of stealing gold, etc., O Mahasena! The eight faced Rudraksa is Vinayaka. Holding this frees one from the sin of holding an illicit contact with a woman of a bad family and with the wife of one's Guru, etc., and other sins as well. It enables one to acquire heaps of food, cotton, and gold; and in the end the Highest Place is attained.

20-35. The fruit of holding the eight faced Rudraksa seed has been said. Now I will talk of the nine-faced Rudraksam. It is verily the Bhairava made manifest. On the left hand it should be worn. By this, the people get both Bhoga (enjoyment) and Moksa (liberation) and they become powerful like Me and get themselves freed at once, without the least delay, of the sins incurred by committing thousands of abortions, hundreds of Brahmahattyas (killing the Brahmanas). Holding the ten-faced Rudraksa is verily wearing Janardana, the Deva of the Devas. The holding of which pacifies the evils caused by planets, Pis'achas, Vetalas, Brahma Raksasas, and Pannagas. The eleven-faced Rudraksam is like the Eleven Rudras. The fruits, the efficacy of which I now describe. Hear. The fruits obtained through the performance of one thousand horse sacrifices, one hundred Vajapeya sacrifices, and making gifts of one hundred thousand cows are obtained thereby.

If one wears the twelve-headed Rudraksam on one's ear, the Adityas get satisfied. The fruits of performing Gomedha and As'vamedha sacrifices are obtained thereby. No fear comes from burned buffaloes, armed enemies and wolves and tigers and other murderous animals. Also the several diseases of the body never come to him. The holder of the twelve-faced Rudraksa seed feels always happy and he is the master of some kingdoms He becomes freed of the sins incurred in killing elephants, horses, deer, cats, snakes, mice, frogs, asses, foxes and various other animals.

O Child! The thirteen faced Rudraksam is very rare; if anybody gets it, he becomes like Karti Keya and gets all desires fulfilled; and the eight siddhis are under his grasp. He learns how to make gold, silver and other metals; he attains all sorts of enjoyments. There is no manner of doubt in this. O Sadanana! If anybody holds the thirteen faced Rudraksam, he becomes freed from the sins incurred in killing mother, father and brothers.

O Son! If one holds on one's head the fourteen faced Rudraksam always, one becomes like S’iva. O Muni! What more shall I speak to you! The Devas pay their respects to one holding the fourteen faced Rudraksas and he in the end attains the Highest Goal, the state of S’iva. His body becomes verily the body of S’iva.

36-40. The Devas always worship the Rudraksa seed; the highest goal is attained by wearing the Rudraksam. The Brahmanas should hold on their heads at least one Rudraksam with devotion. A rosary of twenty-six Rudraksams is to be made and tied on the head. Similarly a rosary of fifty seeds is to be worn and suspended on the breast; sixteen each on each of the two arms; twenty-four Rudraksams to be worn on the wrists, twelve on each. O Sadanana! If a rosary be made of one hundred and eight, fifty or twenty-seven Rudraksams and if japam be done with that, immeasurable merits are obtained. If anybody wears a rosary of one hundred and eight seeds, he gets at every moment the fruit of performing the As'vamedha sacrifices and uplifts his twenty-one generations and finally he resides in the S’iva Loka.

Here ends the Fourth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the Greatness of the Rudraksam in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-14. Is'vara said O Kartikeya! Now I will speak how to count the Japam (repetition of the mantra) with the rosary. Hear. The face of Rudraksam is Brahma; the upper summit point is S'iva and the tail end of Rudraksam is Visnu. The Rudraksam has two-fold powers:-- It can give Bhoga (Enjoyment) as well as Moksa (Liberation). Then string or tie together, like a cow's tail, and like the snake's coiling a body, twenty-five five faced Rudraksa seeds, thorny and of red, white, mixed colours bored through and through. The rosary is to taper as a cow's tail tapers down. In stringing the beads into a rosary, it should be seen that the flat face of one Rudraksam is in front of the flat face of another Rudraksam;

so the tail, the pointed end of one, must come in front of the tail or the narrower end of another. The Meru or the topmost bead of the string must have its face turned upwards and the knot should be given over that. The rosary, thus strung, yields success of the Mantra (mantra-siddhi). When the rosary is strung, it is to be bathed with clear and scented water and afterwards with the Pahchagavya (cow-dung, cow urine, curd, milk, and ghee); then wash it with clear water and sanctify it with the condensed electrical charge of the Mantra. Then recite the Mantra of S'iva (Six limbed), with "Hum" added and collect the rosaries. Then repeat over them the Mantra "Sadyojata, etc.", and sprinkle water over it one hundred and eight times. Then utter the principal mantra and place them on a holy ground and perform Nyasa over it, i.e., think that the Great Cause S'iva and the World- Mother Bhagavati have come on them. Thus make the Samskara of the rosary (i.e., purify it) and you will find then that your desired end will be attained successfully. Worship the rosary with the Mantra of that Devata for which it is intended. One is to wear the Rudraksa rosary on one's head, neck or ear and controlling oneself, one should make japam with the rosary. On the neck, head, breast, or the ears or on the arms, the rosary should he held with the greatest devotion. What is the use in saying about it so often? It is highly meritorious and commendable to hold always the Rudraksam. Especially on such occasions as taking baths, making gifts, making japams, performing the Homas,or sacrifices to Visve Devas, in performing the Poojas of the Devas,in making Prayaschittams (penances), in the time of S'radh and in the time of initiation, it is highly necessary to hold Rudraksam. A Brahmin is sure to go to hell if he performs any Vaidik act without wearing any Rudraksam. Note It would be offering an insult to S'iva!

15-29. It is advisable to use the true Rudraksam with gold and jewel, on the head, neck or on one's hand. Never use the Rudraksam worn by another. Use Rudraksam always with devotion; never use it while you are impure. Even the grass that grows with the air in contact with the Rudraksa tree, goes verily to a holy region for ever. Jabala Muni says in the S'ruti If a man wearing Rudraksam commits a sin, he gets deliverance from that sin. Even if animals hold Rudraksam, they become S'iva; what of men! The devotees of S'ri Rudra should always use at least one Rudraksa on the head. Those great devotees, who with Rudraksam on take the name of the Highest Self S'ambhu, get themselves freed of all sorts of sins and pains. Those who are ornamented with Rudraksam are the best devotees. It is highly incumbent on those who want their welfare to wear Rudraksam. Those who hold Rudraksam on their ears, crown hair, neck, hands, and breast, get Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'vara under them as their Vibhutis (manifestations, powers). The Devas and all those Risis that started the Gotra, the Adipurusas (the first chief men in several families), held with reverence the Rudraksams. All the other Munis, that descended from their families, the ardent followers of S'rauta Dharma, the pure souled, held the Rudraksams. It may be, that many might not like at first to hold this Rudraksam, the visible giver of liberation and so well written in the Vedas; but after many births, out of the Grace of Mahadeva many become eager to take the Rudraksams. The Munis that are the Jabala Sakhis are famous in expounding the inestimable greatness of Rudraksams.

The effect of holding Rudraksams is well known in the three worlds. Punyam (great merit) arises from the mere sight of Rudraksams; ten million times that merit arises by its touch; and by wearing it, one hundred Koti times the fruit arises and if one makes Japam every day, then one lakh koti times the punyam arises. There is no manner of questionings in this.

30-36. He who holds in his hand, breast, neck, ears, head, the Rudraksams, becomes an image of Rudra. There is no manner of doubt in this. By holding Rudraksams, men become invulnerable of all the beings, become respected, like Maha Deva, by the Devas and Asuras and they roam on the earth like Rudra. Even if a man be addicted to evil deeds and commits all sorts of sins, he becomes respected by all, on holding Rudraksams. By this men are freed of the sin of taking Uchhista and of all the other sins. Even if you suspend a Rudraksam rosary on the neck of a dog and if that dog dies in that state, he gets liberation! Then what to speak of others!

By holding Rudraksams, men even if they be devoid of Japam and Dhyanam, become freed of all sins and attain the highest state. Even if one holds merely one Rudraksa seed purified and surcharged with Mantra S'akti, he uplifts his twentyone generations, gets to Heaven and resides there with respect. I am speaking now further of the Greatness of Rudraksam.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the Rudraksam rosaries in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. Is'vara said O Kartikeya! Kus'agranthi, JTvapattn and other rosaries cannot compare to one-sixteenth part of the Rudraksa rosary. As Visnu is the best of all the Purusas, the Ganga is the best of all the rivers, Kas'yapa, amongst the Munis, Uchchaihsrava amongst the horses, Maha Deva amongst the Devas, Bhagavati amongst the Devis, so the Rudraksam rosary is the best of all the rosaries. All the fruits that occur by reading the stotras and holding all the Vratas, are obtained by wearing the Rudraksam bead. At the time of making the Aksaya gift, the Rudraksam bead is capable of giving high merits. The merit that accrues by giving Rudraksam to a peaceful devotee of S'iva, cannot be expressed in words. If anybody gives food to a man holding the Rudraksam rosary, his twenty one generations are uplifted and he ultimately becomes able to live in the Rudra Loka. He who does not apply ashes on his forehead and who does not hold Rudraksam and is averse to the worship of S'iva is inferior to a chandala. If Rudraksam be placed on the head then the flesh-eaters, drunkards, and the associates with the vicious become freed of their sins. Whatever fruits are obtained by performing various sacrifices, asceticism and the study of the Vedas are easily attained by simply holding the Rudraksam rosary. Whatever merits are obtained by reading the four Vedas and all the Puranas and bathing in all the Tirthas and the results that are obtained by immense practice in learning all are obtained by wearing Rudraksam. If at the time of death, one wears Rudraksam and dies, one attains Rudrahood. One has not to take again one's birth. If anybody dies by holding Rudraksam on his neck or on his two arms, he uplifts his twenty-one generations and lives in the Rudra Loka. Be he a Brahman or a Chandala, be he with qualities or without qualities, if he applies ashes to his body and holds Rudraksam he surely attains S'ivahood. Be he pure or impure; whether he eats uneatables or be he a MIechha or a Chandala or a Great Sinner, any body if he holds Rudraksam is surely equal to Rudra. There is no doubt in this.

If any body holds Rudraksam on his head he gets Koti times the fruit; on his ears, ten Koti times the fruit, on his neck, one hundred Koti times the fruit; on his holy thread, ayuta times the fruit; on his arm, one lakh Koti times the fruit and if one wears Rudraksam on one's wrist, one attains Moksa. Whatever acts, mentioned in the Vedas be performed with Rudraksam on, the fruits obtained are unbounded. Even if a man be without any Bhakti and if he wears on his neck the Rudraksa rosary though he does always vicious acts, he becomes freed of the bondage of this world. Even if a man does not hold Rudraksa but if he be always full of devotion towards the Rudraksam, he attains the fruit that is got by wearing the Rudraksam and he attains the S'iva Loka and is honoured like S'iva. As in the country of Kikata, an ass which used to carry Rudraksam seed got S'ivahood after his death, so any man, whether he be a Jhani (wise) or Ajnani (unwise), gets S'ivahood if he holds Rudraksam. There is no doubt in this.

22-28. Skanda said "O God! How is it that in the country of Kikata (Bihar), an ass had to carry Rudraksa; who gave him the Rudraksams! And what for did he hold that?"

Bhagavan Is'vara said O Son! Now hear the history of the case. In the Bindhya mountain one ass used to carry the load of Rudraksam of a traveller. Once the ass felt tired and became unable to carry the load and fell down on the road and died. After his death the ass came to Me by My Grace, becoming Mahes'vara with trident in his hand and with three eyes. O Kartikeya! As many faces as there are in the Rudraksam, for so many thousand Yugas the holder resides with honour in the S'iva Loka. One should declare the greatness of Rudraksam to one's own disciple; never to disclose its glories to one who is not a disciple nor a devotee of Rudraksam nor to him who is an illiterate brute. Be he a Bhakta or not a Bhakta, be be low or very low, if he holds Rudraksam then he is freed from all sins. No equal can be to the merit of him who holds the Rudraksams.

29-39. The Munis, the Seers of truth, describe this holding on of Rudraksam as a very great vow. He who makes a vow to hold one thousand Rudraksams, becomes like Rudra; the Devas bow down before him. If thousand Rudraksams be not obtained, one should hold at least sixteen Rudraksams on each arm, one Rudraksam on the crown hair; on the two hands, twelve on each; thirty-two on the neck; forty on the head; six on each ear and one hundred and eight Rudraksams on the breast; and then he becomes entitled to worship like Rudra. If any body holds Rudraksam together with pearls, Prabala, crystal, silver, gold and gem (lapis lazuli), he becomes a manifestation of S'iva. If a body, through laziness even, holds Rudraksam, the sin cannot touch him as darkness cannot come near light. If any body makes japam of a mantram with a Rudraksa rosary, he gets unbounded results. Such a merit giving Rudraksam, if one such Rudraksam be not found in any one's body, his life becomes useless, like a man who is void of Tripundrak (three curved horizontal marks made on the forehead by the worshippers of S'iva). If any body simply washes his head all over with Rudraksam on, he gets the fruit of bathing in the Ganges. There is no doubt in this. One faced Rudraksam, the five faced, eleven faced and fourteen faced Rudraksams are highly meritorious and entitled to worship by all.

The Rudraksam is S'ankara made manifest; so it is always worshipped with devotion. The greatness of Rudraksam is such as it can make a king out of a poor man. On this point, I will tell you an excellent Puranic anecdote.

40-49. There was a Brahmin, named Girinatha in the country of Kosala. He was proficient in the Vedas and Vedamgas, religious and very rich. He used to perform sacrifices. He had a beautiful son named Gunanidhi. The son gradually entered into his youth and looked beautiful like Kandarpa, the God of Love. While he was studying at his Guru Sudhisana's house, he, by his beauty and youth captivated the mind of his Guru's wife named Muktavali. The Guru's wife became so much enchanted by his extraordinary beauty that she, being unable to control herself, mixed with him and for some time remained with him in secret enjoyment. Then feeling inconveniences, due to the fear of. his Guru, to enjoy her freely, used poison to the Guru, killed him and then he began to live freely with her. Next when his father, mother came to know about this, he put to death instantly his father and mother, administering poison to them. He became addicted to various pleasures and his wealth was exhausted gradually. He began to steal in Brahmans' houses and became addicted very much to drinking. His relatives outcasted him from the society for his bad behaviour and banished him outside the town. He then went into a dense forest with Muktavali; and he began to kill the Brahmins for their wealth. Thus a long time passed away; when at last he fell into the jaws of death.

50-54. Then to take him to the region of Death, thousands of the Yama's messengers came; at the same time the S’iva's messengers came from S’iva Loka. O Kartikeya! A quarrel then ensued between both the parties of Yama and S’iva. The Yama's messengers then said “O Servers of S’ambhu! What are the merits of this man that you have come to take him? First speak to us of his merits.” S’iva's messengers spoke “Fifteen feet below the ground where this man died, there exists the Rudraksam. O Yama's messengers! By the influence of that Rudraksam, all his sins are destroyed; and we have come to take him to S’iva.” Then the Brahmin Gunanidhi assumed a divine form and, getting on an aerial car went with S'iva's messengers before S'iva. O One of good vows! Thus I have described briefly to you the greatness of Rudraksam. This is capable to remove all sorts of sins and yield great merits.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the Greatness of Rudraksams in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. S’n Narayana said O Narada! When Gins'a thus explained to Kartikeya the greatness of Rudraksam, he became satisfied. Now I have spoken to you of the glories of the Rudraksams as far as I know. Now, as to our subject of right way of acting, I will now speak on other things that ought to be known. Listen. The seeing of Rudraksam brings in a lakh times of Punyam and koti times the merit arises from touching that; holding it brings in koti times merit; again if one makes the japam of a Mantra with that Rudraksam, one obtains merit one hundred lakh koti times and one thousand lakh koti times the merit. The merit in holding the Rudraksam is far superior to that in holding Bhadraksam. The Rudraksam seed that is of the size of an Amalaki is the best; which is the of the size of a plum, is middling; and which is of the size of a gram is the worst, this is my word and promise. The Rudraksam tree is of four kinds Brahmana, Ksattriya, Vais’ya, and S’udra. The white colour is Brahmana; the red colour is Ksattriya; the yellow colour is Vais'ya and the black coloured Rudraksam seed is S’udra. The Brahmanas are to use the white coloured Rudraksams; the Ksattriyas, the red coloured ones, the Vais'yas, the yellow coloured ones; and the S’udras, the black ones. Those Rudraksa seeds that are nicely circular, smooth, hard, and whose thorns or points are distinctly visible, are the best. Those that are pierced by insects, broken in parts, whose thorns are not clearly visible, with swells and holes and those that are coated over, these six varieties of Rudraksams are faulty. Those Rudraksams that have their holes by nature running through and through are best; and those that base their holes pierced by men are middling. The Rudraksa seeds that are all of uniform shape, bright, hard, and beautifully circular should be strung together by a silken thread. How to test the Rudraksa seed? As gold is tested by a touch stone; so the Rudraksam is tested by drawing lines on it; those on which the lines are most uniform, bright and beautiful are the best and they should be worn by the S’aivas. One should hold one Rudraksam on the crown hair, thirty on the head, thirty six on the neck; sixteen on each arm, twelve on each wrist, fifty on the shoulders, one hundred and eight Rudraksams in the place of the sacrificial thread; and the devotee should have two or three rounds on the neck. On the earrings, on the crown of the head, the head, on bracelets, on armlets, on necklace, on the ornament worn on the loins one should hold Rudraksam always, whether one sleeps or eats. Holding three hundred Rudraksams is the lowest; holding five hundred is middling; holding one thousand Rudraksams is the best; so one ought to wear one thousand Rudraksams. At the time of taking Rudraksam, on one's head, one should utter the Mantra of Isana; the mantra of Tat Purusa while holding on one's ears; Aghora mantra on one's forehead and heart; and the vija of Aghora mantra, i.e., “hasau” while holding on one's hands. One should wear the rosary of fifty Rudraksa seeds, suspended up to the belly, uttering the Vamadeva mantra, i.e., Sadyojatadi, etc., the five Brahma mantras, and the six- limbed S’iva mantra. One is to string every Rudraksa seed, uttering the root mantra and then hold it. One-faced Rudraksa reveals Paratattva (the highest Tattva); when worn, the knowledge of the highest Tattva arises; the Brahma is seen then. The two-faced Rudraksam is Ardhanaris'vara, the Lord of the other half which represents women (in the same person); if worn, Ardhanarisvara S’iva is always pleased with that man who holds it. The three-faced Rudraksam is Fire made manifest; it destroys in a moment the sin of killing a woman.

The three-faced Rudraksam is the three Agnis, Daksinagni, Garhapatya, and Ahavaniya; Bhagavan Agni is always pleased with that man who wears the three-faced Rudraksam. The four-faced Rudraksam is Brahma Himself. The wearer gets his prosperity enhanced, his diseases destroyed, the divine knowledge springs in him and his heart is always pleased. The five-faced Rudraksam is the five faced S’iva Himself; Mahadeva gets pleased with him who holds it. The Presiding Deity of the six faced Rudraksam is Kartikeya. Some Pundits take Ganapati to be the Presiding Deity of the six-faced Rudraksam. The presiding Deity of the seven-faced Rudraksam is the seven Matrikas, the Sun and the seven Risis. By putting on this, the prosperity is increased, health and the pure knowledge are established. It should be put on when one becomes pure. The Presiding Deity of the eight-faced Rudraksam is Brahmi, the eight Matrikas. By holding this, the eight Vasus are pleased and the river Ganges is also pleased. The putting on of this makes the JTvas truthful and pleasant-minded. The Devata of the nine-faced Rudraksam is Yama; holding this puts off the fears of Death. The Devata of the eleven-faced Rudraksam is ten quarters, the ten quarters are pleased with him who wears the ten-faced Rudraksam. The Devata of the eleven mouthed Rudraksam is the eleven Rudras and Indra. Holding this enhances happiness. The twelve-faced Rudraksam is Visnu made manifest; its Devatas are the twelve Adityas; the devotees of S’iva should hold this. The thirteen-faced Rudraksam, if worn, enables one to secure one's desires; he does nowhere experience failures. The Kama Deva becomes pleased with him who wears this. The fourteen-faced Rudraksam destroys all diseases and gives eternal health. While holding this, one ought not to take wine, flesh, onion, garlic, Sajha fruit, Chalta fruit and the flesh of the boar which eats excrements, etc. During the Lunar and Solar eclipses, during the Uttarayana S’amkranti or the Daksinayana S’amkranti, during the full Moon or the New Moon day, if Rudraksam be worn, one becomes instantly freed of all one's sins.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the greatness of one faced, etc., Rudraksam in the Maha Puranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. Narayana said O Great Muni! Now I shall tell you the rules of Bhuta S'uddhi, i.e., the purification of the elennents of the body (by respiratory attraction and replacement, etc.). Firstly, think of the Highest Deity Kundalini (the Serpent Fire) as rising up in the hollow canal Susumna in the Spinal Cord from the Muladhara (the sacral plexus) to the Brahmarandhra (the aperture supposed to be at the crown of the head). Next, the devotee is to meditate on the Mantra "Hamsa" and consider his Jivatma (the embodied soul) united with Para Brahma. Then think from leg to the knees in the form of a square Yantra (diagram as furnished with Vajra thunderbolt, represented by 63 lines at the four corners); consider this square as the earth, of a golden colour and represented by the letter "Lam," representing the Seed Mantra of earth. Next from the knee to the navel consider the semi-moon and at its two ends consider that the two Lotuses are situated. Consider this as the circle of water, of white colour, represented by the letter "Vam" the Seed Mantra of water. Then again from the navel to the heart consider it as of a triangular form and the Svastik mark at its three angles and think it as of fire and represented by the letter "Ram" its root Mantra, of red colour. Next from the heart to the centre of the eyebrows, consider as marked with six dots, with the Seed Mantra "Yam" of a smoke- coloured colour (dark-red) and of a circular appearance and consider it as air. Then again from the centre of the eyebrows to the crown of the head consider as Akas'a Mandalam (a region of ether) beautiful and clear and with "Ham" as its vija letter. Thus thinking consider firstly the earthy principle originated from watery principle, dissolved in water. Then think water as dissolved in fire, its cause; fire dissolved in air, its cause; and air dissolved in Akas'a ether, its cause; then consider Akas'a dissolved in its cause Ahamkara, egoism; then again Ahamkara dissolved in the Great Principle (Mahattatva); and Mahattatva again in its cause Prakriti and consider Prakriti again diluted in its cause, the Supreme Self. Then consider your ownself as the Highest Knowledge and only that. Think, then, of the Papa Purusa, the Sinful Man in your body. The size of this Man is that of a thunnb and it is situated in the left abdomen. The head of him is represented by Brahmahatya (murdering a Brahman); his area as stealing gold; his heart as drinking wine; his loins as going to the wife of his Guru, his legs as mixing with people who go to their Guru's wives, and his toes as representing other sins and venial offences. The Sinful Man holds axes and shield in his hands; he is always angry, with his head bent down and his appearance is very horrible. Inhale air through the left nostril thinking of "Vam" the Root Mantra of air and make Kumbhaka, i.e., fill the whole body with that air, and hold it inside, purifying the sinful man; then repeating "Ram," the seed Mantra of fire, think the sinful man with his own body burnt down to ashes. Then exhale outside through the right nostril those ashes of the Sinful Man. Next consider the ashes due to the burning of the Sinful Man, as rolled and turned into a round ball with the nectar seed of the Moon. Think steadily this ball as transformed into a golden egg by the Seed Mantra "Lam" of the earth. Repeat then, "Ham" the seed Mantra of Akas'a and think yourself as an ideal being; pure and clear, and shape thus your body and the several limbs.

Create, then, fresh in an inverse order from the Brahma the elements Akas'a, air, fire, water, earth and locate them in their respective positions. Then by the Mantra "Soham" separate the JTvatma from the Paramatma and locate the Jivatma in the heart. Think also that the Kundalini has come to the Sacral Plexus, after locating the JTvatma, turned into nectar by contact with the Highest Self, in the heart. Next meditate on the vital force, the Prana S'akti, thus located as follows There is a red lotus on a wide boat in a vast ocean of a red colour; on this lotus is seated the Prana S'akti. She has six hands holding, in due order, the trident, the arrows made of sugarcane, noose, goad, five arrows and a skull filled with blood. She is three-eyed. Her high breasts are decorated; the colour of Her body is like the Rising Sun. May She grant us happiness. Thus meditating on the Prana S'akti, Who is of the nature of the Highest Self, one ought to apply ashes on his body in order to attain success in all actions. Great merit arises from the application of ashes (besmearing ashes) on the body. I will now dwell on this subject in detail. Listen. This point of holding ashes on to the body is particularly proved in the Vedas and Smritis.

Here ends the Eighth Chapter in the Eleventh Book on Bhuta S'uddhi (purification of elements in the body) in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-43. S’n Narayana said The Brahmanas that will perform duly the S’irovrata, to be described in the following, are the only ones who will attain very easily the highest knowledge, destroying all Avidya or Ignorance. So much so that the rules of right living and right conduct as ordained in the S’rutis and Smritis are not necessary to be observed by those who duly and devotedly perform the S’irovrata (i.e., vow of the head; i.e., vow to apply ashes on the forehead). O Learned One! It is through this S’irovrata that Brahma and the other Devas have been able to get their Brahmahood and the Devahood. The ancient sages glorified highly this S’irovrata. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra and the other Devas all performed this S’irovrata. O Wise One! Those that performed duly this S’irovrata, all became sinless though they were sinful in every way. Its name is S’irovrata, inasmuch as it is mentioned in the first part of the Atharva Veda.

Only this vrata (vow) is called S'irovrata; no other thing is denominated by this name. By no other merit can this be acquired. O Muni! Different names are assigned to this vrata in different S’akhas; in fact, they are all one and the same.

N. B. - Pasupata vrata, S'ivavrata, etc., are the different names assigned to it. In all the S’akhas, the One Substance, Intelligence solidified named S'iva and the knowledge thereof is mentioned. This is “S’irovrata.” He who does not perform this S’irovrata, is irreligious and he is banished from all religious acts, though he is well-qualified in all branches of learning. There is no manner of doubt in this. This S’irovrata is like the blazing fire in destroying wholly the forest of sins. All knowledge fleshes before him who performs this S’irovrata. The Atharva S’ruti expounds the subtle and particularly incomprehensible things; this S’ruti declares the above S’irovrata as daily to be done; so it is one of the daily observances. “Fire is ashes,” “water is ashes,” “earth is ashes,” “air is ashes,” “ether or Akas'a is ashes," "all this manifest Universe is ashes." These six mantras stated in the Atharva Veda are to be recited; after this, ashes are to be besmeared all over the body. This is named the S'irovrata. The devotee is to put on these ashes named S'irovrata during his Sandhyopasana (practising Sandhya thrice a day); so long as the Brahma Vidya (the knowledge of Brahma) does not arise in him. One is to make a Sankalpa (resolve) of twelve years before one starts with this Vrata. In cases of incapability, a period of one year or six months, or three months or at least twelve days are to be adopted. That Guru is considered very cruel and his knowledge will come to an end who hesitates and does not impart the knowledge of the Vedas and other things to him who is purified by observing this S'irovrata. Know him certainly as a very merciful Guru who illumines the heart by Brahma Vidya just as God is very merciful and compassionate to all the living beings. One who performs one's own Dharmas for many births, acquires particular faith in this S'irovrata; others can have no faith in this. Rather he gets animosity for this vrata, because of the abundance of ignorance in him. So one ought never to advise on spiritual knowledge to an enemy who has no faith, rather who has hatred for any such thing. Those only that are purified by the observance of S'irovrata are entitled to Brahma Vidya; and none others. So the Vedas command Those are to be advised on Brahma Vidya who have performed S'irovrata. Even the animal becomes freed of his animalism, as a result of this vrata; no sin occurs in killing that animal; this is the decision of the Vedanta. It has been repeatedly uttered by Javala Risi that the Dharma of the Brahmanas is to put on the Tripundra (three curved lines of ashes on the forehead). The householders are instructed to put on this Tripundra by repeating the mantra "triyamvaka"' with Om prefixed. Those that are in the stage of the Bhiksus (Sannyasis, etc.,) are to put on this Tripundra uttering thrice the mantra "Om Hasah." Such is regularly stated in Javala S'ruti. The house holders and the Vanaprasthis (foresters) are to put on this Tripundra, uttering Triyamvaka mantra purified with "Haum" the pranava of S'iva prefixed.

Those that are the Brahmacharis are to use daily this Tripundra uttering the mantra "Medhavi," etc. The Brahmanas are to apply the ashes in three curved lines on the forehead. The God S'iva is always hidden under the cover of ashes; so the S'aivas, the devotees of S'iva are to use the Tripundra. The Brahmanas are to use daily this Tripundra. Brahma is the Prime Brahmin. When He used Tripundra on His forehead, what need to tell, then, that every Brahman ought always to use it! Never fail, out of error, to besmear your body with the ashes as prescribed in the Vedas and worship the S'iva Lingam. The Sannyasins are to apply Tripundra on their forehead, arms, chest, uttering the Triyamvaka mantra with Om prefixed and also the five lettered mantra of S'iva "Om Namah S'ivaya." The Brahmacharis should use Tripundra of ashes, obtained from their own fire, uttering the mantra "Triyayusam Jamadagneh," etc., or the mantra "Medhavi", etc. The S'udras in the service of the Brahmins are to use the ashes with devotion, with the mantra "Namah S'ivaya." The other ordinary persons can use the Tripundra without any mantra. To besmear the body all over with ashes and to put on the Tripundra is the essence of all Dharma; therefore this should be used always.

The ashes from the Agnihotra Sacrifice or from Virajagni (Viraja fire) are to be carefully placed on a clean and pure basin. Cleansing hands and feet, one is to sip (perform Achamana) twice, and then, taking the ashes in the hand, utter the five Brahma mantras "Sadyoyatam prapadyami," etc., and perform short Pranayama thrice; he is, then, to utter the seven mantras "Fire is ashes," "water is ashes," "earth is ashes" "Teja is ashes," "wind is ashes," "ether is ashes," "All this whatsoever is ashes" and purify and impregnate the ashes with the mantra by blowing out air through the mouth.

Then one is to think of Maha Deva, repeating the mantra "Om Apojyoti," etc., and apply dry ashes of white colour all over the body and become sinless. After this he is to meditate on the Maha Visnu, the Lord of the universe and on the Lord of the waters and repeat again the mantras "Fire is ashes" and mix water with the ashes. He is, then, to think of S'iva and apply ashes on his forehead. He is to think of the ashes as S'iva Himself and then, with mantras appropriate to his own As'rama (stages of life) use the Tripundra on his forehead, chest and shoulders.

By the middle finger and ringfinger he is to draw the two lines of the ashes from the left to the right and by his thumb draw a third line of ashes from the right to the left. These Tripundras are to be used in the morning, midday and in the evening.

Here ends the Ninth chapter of the Eleventh Book on the rules of S'irovrata in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-33. Narayana said O Knower of Brahma! O Narada! The ashes prepared from ordinary fire are secondary (Gauna). The greatness of this secondary ashes is to be considered by no means trifling; this also destroys the darkest ignorance and reveals the highest knowledge. It is of various kinds. Amongst the secondary ashes, that prepared from Virajagni is the best; it is equivalent to that obtained from Agnihotra Yajha and it is as glorious. The ashes obtained from the marriage sacrificial fire, that obtained from the burning of the Samidh fuel, what is obtained from the conflagration of fire are known as the secondary ashes. The Brahmanas, Ksattriyas and Vais'yas should use the ashes from the Agnihotra and the Viraja Fire. For the householders, the ashes from the marriage sacrificial fire are good. For the Brahmacharis, the ashes from the Samid fuel are good and for the S'udras the fire of the cooking place of the Veda knowing Brahmanas is good. For the other persons, the ashes obtained from the conflagration of fire are good. Now I will talk of the origin of the ashes obtained from the Viraja fire. The chief season of the Viraja fire sacrifice is the Full-moon night with Chitra asterism with the Moon. If this does not take place, the sacrifice may be performed at other seasons; and it should be remembered that the fit place is where one adopts as one's dwelling place. The auspicious field, garden or forest is also commendable for the above sacrifice. On the Trayodas'i Tithi, the thirteenth night preceding the full-moon night, one is to complete one's bathing and Sandhya; then one is to worship one's Guru and bow down before Him. Then, receiving his permission, the sacrificer is to put on pure clothing and perform the special Puja. Then with his white sacrificial thread, white garlands, and white sandal paste one is to sit on the Kus'a seat with sacrificial (Kus'a) grass in one's hands. With his face towards the east or north he is to perform Pranayama thrice.

Then he is to meditate on S'iva and Bhagavati and get mentally their permissions. “O Deva Bhagavan! O Mother Bhagavati! I will perform this vow for my life-time.” Thus making the resolve, he should start with this sacrifice. But this is to be known that this Vrata can be performed for twelve years, for six years, for three years, for one year, for six months, for twelve days, for six days, for three days, even at least for one day. But in every case, he must take mentally the permission of the Deva and the Devi. Now, to perform the Viraja Homa, one is to light the fire according to one's Grihya Sutras and then perform Homa with ghee, Samidh (fuel) or with charu (an oblation of rice, milk, and sugar boiled together). Then on the fourteenth lunar day (Chaturdas'i) one is to pray “Let the tattvas (principles) in me be purified” and then perform the Homa ceremony with Samidh, etc., as above-mentioned. Now recollecting that “My principles in my body are purified,” he is to offer oblations to the fire. In other words, uttering “Priththitattvas me sudhyatam jyotiraham viraja vipapma bhuyasam Svaha” one is to offer oblations to the Fire. Thus uttering the five element (Mahabhutas), five tanmatras, five Karmendriyas (organs of action), five Jhanendriyas (organs of perception), five Pranas, seven dhatus Tvak, etc., mind, buddhi (intellect), Ahamkara (egoism), Sattva, Raja, Tamah gunas, Prakriti, Purusa, Raga, Vidya, Kala (arts etc,) Daiva (Fate), Kala (time), Maya S’uddhavidya, Mahes'vara, Sada S’iva, S’akti S’ivatattva, etc., respectively by its own name, one is to offer oblations to the fire by the five-lettered Viraja Mantra; then the sacrificer will become pure. Then form a round ball of fresh cowdung and purifying it by Mantram place it on fire and carefully watch it. On that day, the devotee is to take Havisyanna (a sacred food of boiled rice with ghee). On the morning of the Chaturdas'i, he is to perform his daily duties as above and then to perform Homa on that fire; uttering the five lettered Mantra. He is not to take any food the rest of the time. On the next day, that is, on the full-moon day, after performing the morning duties, he is to do the Homa ceremony, uttering the Five lettered Mantra and then take leave of the Fire (invoked for worship). He is, then, to raise up the ashes. Then the devotee is to keep data (matted hair) or to shave clean his head or to keep only one lock of hair on the crown of the head. He is to take his bath, then; and if he can, then he should be naked or put on a red coloured cloth, hide, or one piece of rag or bark; he is to take a staff and a belt. Washing his hands and feet and sipping twice he by his two hands, is to pulverise the ashes and, uttering the six Atharvan Mantras, “Fire is ashes” and so forth, apply ashes from his head to foot. Then, as before, he is to apply ashes, gradually to his arms, etc., and all over the body uttering the Pranava of S’iva, “Vam, Vam.” He is to put on the Triyayusa Tripundra on his forehead. After he has done this, the Jiva (the embodied self) becomes S’iva (the Free Self) and he should behave himself like S’iva. O Narada! Thus, at the three Sandhya- periods; he is to do like this. This Pas’upata vrata is the source of enjoyment as well as liberation and as well as of the cessation of all brutal desires. By the performance of this vrata the devotee is to free himself gradually of his animal feelings and then to worship Bhagavan Sada S’iva in the form of a phallic symbol. The above bath ashes is highly meritorious and it is the source of all happiness. By holding the ashes, one's longevity is prolonged, one gets even great bodily strength, becomes healthy and his beauty increases and he gets nourishment. This using of ashes is for the preservation of one's own self; it is the source of one's good and of all sorts of happiness and prosperity. Those who use ashes (Bhas'ma) are free from the danger of plague and other epidemic diseases; this bhasma is of three sorts as it leads to the attainment of peace, nourishment, or to the fufilment of all desires.

Greatness Of The Three Kinds Of Bhasmas

Narada asked O Bhagavan! How is the above Bhasma of three kinds? I am eager to hear this. Kindly describe this to me. Narayana said O Narada! I am now talking of the three kinds of ashes; hearing this even destroys one's sins and brings in good fame. When a cow evacuates her dung, just as the cow dung leaves her and is far from reaching the ground, one should catch it with one's hand and this cow-dung burnt with “Sadyojatadi,” i.e., Brahma Mantra, becomes ashes which are called “S’antika Bhasma,” i.e., ashes producing peace. Before the cowdung is about to reach the ground, the devotee should take it with his hand and uttering the six lettered Mantra, he is to burn the cowdung. The ashes from this are called Paustik Bhasma, i.e., ashes leading to nourishment.

If the cowdung be burned with the Mantra “Haum,” the ashes of this are called “Kamada Bhasma,” i.e., ashes leading to the granting of desires. O Narada! On the full moon day, new moon day or on the eighth lunar day, a man is to get up from his bed early in the morning and be pure and go the cow enclosure. He is to salute the cows and take the cowdung, uttering the Mantra Haum. If he be a Brahmin, he is to collect the white cow dung; if he be a Ksattriya, he would take the red cow dung; a Vais'ya, yellow cow dung and if he be a S’udra, he would take the black cow dung. Then by the mantra “Namah” he is to form that into a ball and cover it with the husk of rice or some other grain and dry it in a sacred place, repeating the mantra “Haum.” Bring fire from a forest or from the house of a Veda-knowing Brahmin and reduce the cowdung to ashes by this mantra, uttering the mantra Haum. Next take out the ashes carefully from the fire place (Agni Kunda) and place it in a new jar or pot, again remembering the mantra “Haum”. Mix with the ashes the Ketaki dust, the Patala flower dust, the root of the fragrant grass called khas khas, saffron and other sweet scented things with the mantra “Satyojatam prapadyami,” etc. First perform the water bath, then the bath of the ashes. In case one cannot have the water bath, one is to have the ash bath. Washing the hands, feet and head with the mantra “Is'anah Sarvavidyanam,” etc., and uttering “Tatpurusa” one is to besmear one's face with ashes and by the mantra “Aghora” apply ashes on one's chest; with the mantra Vamadeva. He is to use ashes on his navel; and with the mantra “Sadyo data,” etc., all over his body; he is to quit his former cloth and put on another fresh cloth. Wash your hands and feet and sip (do Achaman). It will serve the purpose if one simply uses Tripundrak and if one does not besmear the whole body with ashes. Before the midday one is to use Bhasma with water; but after the midday with dry ashes one is to draw the Tripundra lines of ashes with the forefinger, middlefinger and ringfinger. The head, forehead, ears, neck, heart, and the arms are the places whereon the Tripundras are used. On the head the ashes are applied with five fingers and with the mantra “Haum”; on the forehead, the Tripundra is applied with mantra Svaha by the forefinger, mindlefinger and ringfinger; on the right ear, it is applied with “Sadyojata” mantra; on the left ear, with “Vamadeva” Mantra; on the neck with Aghora mantra by the middlefinger; on the chest with “Namah” mantra by the forefing middlefinger and ringfinger; on the right arm with vasat mantra by the three fingers; on the left arm with “Ham” mantra by the three fingers; and on the navel, the ashes are to be applied with the mantra Is'anah sarva devanam by the middlefinger. The first line in every Tripundra is Brahma; the second line is Visnu; and the third, the topmost line is Maha Deva. The line of ashes that is marked by one finger is Is'vara. The head is the place of Brahma; the forehead is the site of Is'vara; the two ears are the seats of the two As'vins and the neck is where Ganes'a resides. The Ksattriyas, Vais'yas, and S'udras are to use Tripundras without any mantra; they are also not to use the ashes on the whole of the body. The lowest classes (e.g. the chandalas, etc.,) and the uninitiated persons are to use the Tripundraks without any mantra.

English translation

1-20. S’n Narayana said O Devarsi Narada! Hear now the great secret and the fruits of besmearing one's body with ashes, yieding all desires. The pure cowdung of the Kapila (brown) cow is to be taken up by the hand before it reaches the ground. It should not be like mire, i.e., not like a liquid; it should not be also very hard nor should it emit a bad stench. And in case if the cowdung that has already fallen on the earth, has to be taken, it should be scraped off from the top and bottom; make it into a ball and then burn it in a pure fire, repeating the principal mantra. Take the ash and tie it in a piece of cloth and keep it in a pot. The pot in which the ashes are to be kept should be nice and good, hard, clean and sprinkled over for purification. Uttering the principal mantra, one is to keep the ashes in the pot. The pot may be of metal, wood, earth, or cloth; or it can be kept in any other nice pot. The ashes can be kept in a silken bag where the mohurs are kept. In going to a distant land, the devotee can take the ashes himself or kept with his accompanying servant. When it is to be given to somebody, it is to be given with both the hands; never with one hand. Never keep it in an unholy place. Never apply feet to the ashes, nor throw it in an ordinary place nor ever cross it by your legs. Use always the ashes after purifying it with mantra. These rules of holding the Bhasma are according to the Smritis. By holding Bhasma in this way, the devotee becomes, no doubt, like S’iva. The ashes, that the Vaidik devotees of S'iva prepare are to be taken with devotion. All can ask for that. But the ashes that the followers of the Tantra cult prepare, are taken by the Tantriks only; it is prohibited to the Vaidiks. The S’udras, Kapalikas, and other heretics (e.g., Jains, Buddhists) can use the Tripundras. Never do they conceive in their minds that they would not take the Tripundra. The holding on of Bhasma (ashes) is according to the Vedas. Therefore one who does not apply it falls down. The Brahmanas must use the Tripundras, repeating the mantra; and they are to besmear their whole body with ashes; if they don't do so, they are surely fallen. He can never expect to get liberation even after koti births who does not besmear his body with ashes devotedly and who does not hold the Tripundras. O Narada! The vile man who does not hold Bhasma duly, know the birth of that man as futile as is the birth of a hog. Consider that body as a burning ground which does not bear the Tripundra marks. The virtuous man should not cast a glance at him even. Fie on that forehead which does not carry the Tripundra! Fie on that village which has not a single temple of S’iva! Fie on that birth which is void of the worship of S’iva! Fie on that knowledge which is void of the knowledge of S’iva. Know them to be the slanderers of S’iva who mock at Tripundra. Those that put on the Tripundras, bear S’iva in their forehead. The Brahmin who is Niragnik (without the holy fire) is not nice in every way. So if the worship of S’iva be not done with any Tripundra is not praiseworthy, even it be attended with abundance of other offerings. Those who do not besmear their bodies with ashes or who do not use the Tripundras, get their previous good deeds converted into bad ones.

21-42. Unless the Tripundra mark is taken up according to the S’astras, the Vaidik Karmas (works) or those performed according to the Smritis prove injurious; the good works whatsoever done by any man count for nothing; the holy words heard seem as if unheard and the study of the Vedas counted as if not studied.

The study of the Vedas, Sacrifices, Charities, asceticisms, vows and fastings of that man, who does not use the Tripundra, all become fruitless. Without using Bhasma (ashes) if one wants liberation, then that desire is equivalent to live after taking poison. There is no doubt in this. The Creator has not made the forehead vertically high nor round; but he has made it slightly slanting and curved fit to have the Tripundra. Making thus the forehead, the Creator wants, as it were, to inform everyone that every one ought to use Tripundra marks; the curved lines also are made visible for this purpose. Still the igorant illiterate man does not put up the Tripundra. Unless the Brahmanas use the curved Tripundras, their meditation won't be successful; they will not have liberation, knowledge, nor their asceticism would bear any fruit. As the S’udras have no right in the study of the Vedas, so the Brahmans have not any right to perform the worship of S’iva, etc., unless they use the Tripundras. First of all, facing eastward, and washing hands and feet, he ought to make a resolve and then he takes a bath of the ashes mentally, controlling his breath. Then taking the ashes of the Agnihotra sacrifice he is to put some ashes on his own head, uttering “Is'ana” mantra. Then he is to recite the Purusa S’ukta Mantra and apply ashes on his face; with the Aghora mantra on his chest; with the Vamadeva mantra, on his anus; with Sadyojata mantra on his legs; and with the mantra Om, he is to besmear his whole body with ashes. This is called the bath of fire by the Munis. So bring all the actions to a successful issue one is to take first of all this bath of fire. Washing his hands, then, he is to make Achaman duly; and, according to the above-mentioned rules, he is to apply ashes on his forehead, heart, and all round the neck with the five mantras above-mentioned; or with each mantra he is to apply the Tripundras. Thus all works are fructified and he gets the right to do all the Vaidik actions. The S’udras, even, are not to use the ashes touched by the lowest classes. All the actions ordained by the S'astras are to be done after being besmeared with ashes of the Agnihotra sacrifice; otherwise no action will bear any fruit. All his truth, purity, Japam, offering, oblations to the sacrifice, bathing in the holy place of pilgrimage, and worshipping the gods become useless, who does not hold Tripundra. No fear of disease, sins, famine, or robbers comes to the Brahmins who use Tripundra and rosary of Rudraksa and thus remain always pure. In the end, they get the Nirvana liberation. During the time of Sraddhas (solemn obsequies performed in honour of the manes of deceased ancestors) the Brahmins purify the rows where persons are fed; so much so that the Devas glorify them. One must use the Tripundra marks before one performs any Sraddha, Japam sacrifice, offering oblations or worshipping the Visvedevas; then one gets deliverance from the jaws of death. O Narada! I am now speaking further of the greatness in holding the Bhasma; listen.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the greatness in holding the Tripundra and Bhasma in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-20. Narayana said O Best of Munis! What shall I describe to you the effects of using the Bhasma! Only applying the ashes takes away the Mahapatakas (great sins) as well as other minor sins of the devotee. I speak this truly, very truly unto you. Now hear the fruits of using simply the ashes. By using Bhasma, the knowledge of Brahma comes to the Yatis; the desires of enjoyments are eradicated; the improvement is felt in all the virtuous actions of the householders and the studies of the Vedas and other S'astras of the Brahmacharis get their increase. The S'udras get merits in using Bhasmas and the sins of others are destroyed. To besmear the body with ashes and to apply the curved Tripundras is the source of good to all beings. The S'ruti says so. That this implies the performance of sacrifices by all, is also asserted in the S'rutis. To apply ashes to the whole of the body and to use Tripundra is common to all the religions; it has nothing, in principle, contradictory to others. So the S'ruti says. This Tripundra and the besmearing with ashes is the special mark of the devotees of S'iva; this again is asserted in the S'ruti. This Bhasma and the Tripundra are the special marks by which one is characterised; it is said so in the Vaidik S'ruti. S'iva, Visnu, Brahma, Indra, Hiranyagarbha, and their Avataras, Varuna and the whole host of the Devas all gladly used this Tripundra and ashes. Durga, Laksmi, and Sarasvati, etc., all the wives of the gods daily anoint their bodies with ashes and use the Tripundras. So even the Yaksas, Raksasas, Gandharbhas, Sidhas, Vidyadharas, and the Munis have applied Bhasma and Tripundra. This holding on of ashes is not prohibited to anybody; the Brahmanas, Ksattriyas, Vais'yas, S'udras, mixed castes, and the vile classes all can use this Bhasma and Tripundra. O Narada! In my opinion they only are the Sadhus (saints) who use this Tripundra and besmear their bodies with ashes. In seducing this Lady Mukti (liberation is personified here as a lady) one is to have this gem of S'iva Lingam, the five lettered Mantra Namah S'ivaya as the loving principle, and holding on the ashes as the charming medicine (as in seducing any ordinary woman, gems, jewels and ornaments, love and charming medicines are necessary). O Narada! Know the place where the person, who has besmeared the holy with ashes and who has used Tripundra takes his food as where S'ankara and S'ankari have taken their food together. Even if anybody himself not using the Bhasma, follows another who has used the Bhasma, he will be soon honoured in the society even if he be a sinner. What more than this, if anybody himself not using the ashes, praises another who uses the Bhasma, he is freed from all his sins and gets soon honour and respect in the society. All the studies of the Vedas come to him though he has not studied the Vedas, all the fruits of hearing the S'rutis and the Puranas come to him, though he has not heard them, all the fruits of practised Dharma come to him though he has not practised any, if he always uses this Tripundra on his forehead and gives food to a beggar who uses Tripundra on his forehead. Even in courtries as Bihar (Kikata, etc., that have got a bad name) if there be a single man in the whole country whose body is besmeared with ashes and who uses this Tripundra, that is considered then as Kas'i (Benares city). Anybody, of a bad or of a good character, be he a Yogi or a sinner, using Bhasma, is worshipped like my son, Brahma. O Narada! Even if an hypocrite uses Bhasma, he will have a good future, which cannot be attained even by performing hundreds of sacrifices. If anybody uses Bhasma daily either through good companion or through neglect, he will be entitled, like me, to the highest worship. O Narada! Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara, Parvati, Laksmi, Sarasvati and all the other Devas become satisfied with simply holding on this Bhasma. The merits that are obtained by using only the Tripundra, cannot be obtained by gifts, sacrifices, severe austerities, and going to sacred places of pilgrimages. They cannot give one-sixteenth part of the result that accrues from holding the Tripundra. As a King recognises a person as his own, whom he has given some object of recognition, so Bhagavan S'ankara knows the man who uses Tripundras as His own person. They that hold Tripundras with devotion can have Bhola Natha under their control; no distinction is made here between the Brahmanas and Chandalas. Even if anybody be fallen from the state of observing all the Acharas or rules of conduct proper to his As'rama and if he be faulty in not attending to all his duties, he will be Mukta (freed) if he has used even once this Bhasma Tripundra. Never bother yourself with the caste or the family of the holder of the Tripundras. Only see whether the sign Tripundra exists in his forehead. If so, consider him entitled to respect. O Narada! There is no mantra higher than this S'iva Mantra; there is no Deity higher than S'iva; there is no worship of greater merit-giving powers than the worship of S'iva; so there is no Tirtha superior to this Bhasma. This Bhasma is not an ordinary thing; it is the excellent energy (semen virile) of fire of the nature of Rudra. All sorts of troubles vanish, all sorts of sins are destroyed by this Bhasma. The country where the lowest castes reside with their bodies besmeared with ashes, is inhabited always by Bhagavan S'ankara, Bhagavati Lima, the Pramathas (the attendants of S'iva) and by all the Tirthas. Bhagavan S'ankara, first of all, held this Bhasma as an ornament to his body by purifying it first with "Sadyo data," etc., the five mantras. Therefore if anybody uses the Bhasma Tripundra according to rules on his forehead, the writings written at the time of his birth by Vidhata Brahma will all be cancelled, if they had been bad. There is no doubt in this.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the greatness of Bhasma in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-17. Narayana said O Narada! Whatever is given as charities to any man besmeared with the holy ashes, takes away instantly all the sins of the donor. The S'rutis, Smritis, and all the Puranas declare the greatness of this Bhasma. So the twice-born must accept this. Whoever holds this Tripundra, of this holy ashes at the three Sandhya times, is freed from all his sins and goes to the region of S'iva. The Yogi who takes a bath of ashes throughout his body during the three Sandhyas, gets his Yoga developed soon. By this bath of ashes, many generations are lifted up. O Narada! This ash bath is many times superior to the water bath. To take once a bath of ashes secures to one all the merits acquired by bathing in all the sacred places of pilgrimages. There is no doubt in this. By this bath of ashes, all the Mahapatakas (great heinous sins) and other minor sins as well are instantly destroyed as heaps of wood are brought down to ashes in a moment by the fire. No bath is holier than this one. This is first mentioned by S'iva and He took Himself this bath. Since then this bath of ashes has been taken with great care by Brahma and the other Devas and the Munis for their own good in all the virtuous actions. This bath of ashes is termed the bath of fire. So he who applies ashes on his head, gets the state of Rudra while he is in this body of five elements. Those who are delighted to see persons with this ashes on their bodies are respected by the Devas, Asuras, and Munis. He who honours and gets up on seeing a man besmeared with ashes is respected even by Indra, the Lord of Heavens. Even if anybody eats any uneatables, then the sin incurred thereby won't touch him, if his body be then besmeared with ashes. He who first takes a water bath and then an ash-bath, be he a Brahmachari or an house-holder or an anchorite (Vanaprasthi) is freed of all sins and gets in the end the highest state. Specially for the Yatis (ascetics), this ash bath is very necessary. This ash bath is superior to the water bath. For the bonds of Nature, this pleasure and pain, are cut asunder by this ash bath. The Munis know this Prakriti as moist and wet; and therefore Prakriti binds men. If anybody desires to cut asunder this bondage of the body, he will find no other remedy for this in the three worlds than this Holy Bath of ashes.

18-43. In ancient days the ashes were first offered to the Devi gladly by the Devas for their protection, their good and purification, when they first saw the ashes. Therefore anybody who takes this bath of fire, gets all his sins destroyed and he goes to S'iva Loka. He who daily uses this ashes has not to suffer from the oppression of the Raksasas, Pis'achas, Putanas and the other Bhutas or from disease, leprosy, the chronic enlargement of spleen, all sorts of fistulae, from eighty sorts of rheumatism, sixty four kinds of bilious diseases, twenty two varieties of phlegmatic diseases and from tigers, thieves, and other vicious planetary influences. Rather he gets the power to suppress all these as a lion kills easily a mad elephant. Anybody who first mixes the ashes with pure cold water and then besmears his body with that and puts on the Tripundras, attains soon the Highest Brahma. He who holds the Tripundra of ashes becomes sinless and goes to the Brahma loka. He can even wipe off the ordnances of the fate on his forehead to go to the jaws of Death, if he uses, according to the S'astras, the Tripundras on his forehead. If the ashes be used on the neck, then the sin, incurred through the neck, is completely destroyed. If the ashes be used on the neck, then the sin incurred by the neck, in eating uneatable things is entirely destroyed. If the ashes be held on the arms, then the sin incurred by the arms is destroyed. If it be held on the breast, the sin done mentally is destroyed. If it be held on the navel, the sin incurred by the generative organ is destroyed. If it be held on the anus, then the sin incurred by the anus is destroyed. And if it be held on the sides, then the sin incurred in embracing other's wives is destroyed. So, know fully, to use ashes is highly commendable. Everywhere three curved lines of ashes are to be used. Know these three lines as Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a; Daksinagni, Garhapatya fire and Ahavaniva fire; the Sattva, Rajas and Tamas qualities, Heaven, earth and Patala (nether regions). If the wise Brahmin holds properly the ashes his Mahapatakas are destroyed. He is not involved in any sin. Rather he, without any questionings, gets his liberation. All the sins, in the body besmeared with ashes, are burnt down by the ashes, which is of the nature of fire, into ashes. He is called Bhasmanistha (a devotee of Bhasma, i.e., ashes) who takes a bath of ashes, who besmears his body with ashes, who use the Tripundras of ashes, who sleeps in ashes. He is called also Atmanistha, a devotee of Atman (Self). At the approach of such a man, the Demons, Pis'achas, and very serious diseases run away to a distance. There is no doubt in this. In as much as these ashes reveal the knowledge of Brahma, it is called Bhasita from Bhasma, to shine; because it eats up the sins, it is called Bhasma; because it increases the eight supernatural powers Anima, etc., it is called Bhuti; because it protects the man who uses it, it is called "Raksa." As the sins are all destroyed by the mere remembrance of Bhagavan Rudra, so seeing the person using the Tripundra, the demons, bad spirits and other vicious hosts of spirits fly away quickly, trembling with fear. As a fire burns a great forest by its own strength, so this bath of ashes burns the sins of those who are incessantly addicted to sins. Even if at the time of death one takes a bath of ashes, though he has committed an inordinate amount of vices, all his sins are soon destroyed. By this bath of ashes, the Self is purified, the anger is destroyed; the senses are calmed down. The man who uses even once this Bhasma comes to Me; he has not to take any more births in future. On Monday Amavasya (also on the full moon day) if one sees the S'iva Lingam, with his body besmeared all over with ashes, one's sins will all be destroyed. (All the sins are not seen; hence the tithi is called Amavas.) If people use Bhasma daily, all their desires will be fructified whether they want longevity, or prosperity or Mukti. The Tripundra that represents Brahma, Visnu and S'iva is very sacred. Seeing the man with Tripundra on, the fierce Raksasas or mischievous creatures flee to a distance. There is no doubt in this. After doing the S'aucha (necessary cleanliness) and other necessary things, one bathes in pure cold water and besmears his body with ashes from head to foot. By taking the water bath only, the outward unclean things are destroyed. But the ash bath not only cleanses the outer external uncleanliness but cleanses also all the internal uncleanliness. So even if one does not take the water bath, one ought to take this ash bath. There is to be no manner of doubt in this.

44-47. All the religious actions performed without this ash bath seem as if no actions are done at all. This ash bath is stated in the Vedas. Its another name is the Fire Bath. By this ash bath both outside and inside are purified. So a man who uses ashes gets the entire fruit of worshipping S'iva. By the water Bath only the outside dirt is removed; but by this bath of ashes, outside dirts and inside dirts, both are fully removed. If this water bath be taken many times daily, still without an ash bath, one's heart is not purified. What more shall I speak of the greatness of ashes, the Vedas only appreciate its glories rightly! Yea, very rightly!

48-50. Or Maha Deva, the Gem of all the Devas, knows the greatness of this Bhasma. Those who perform rites and works prescribed by the Vedas, without taking this bath of ashes, do not get even a tithe of the fruits of their works done. Only that man will be entitled to the entire fruits of the Vedas who perform this bath of ashes duly. This is the opinion of the Vedas. This bath of ashes purifies more the things that are already pure; thus the S'ruti says. That wretch who does not take the bath of ashes as aforesaid is a Great Sinner. There is no doubt in this. By this bath greater interminable merits accrue than what is obtained by innumerable baths taken by the Brahmanas on the Varuni momentous occasion. So take this bath carefully in the morning, midday and evening. This bath of ashes is ordained in the Vedas. So know those who are against this bath mentioned in the Vedas, are verily fallen! After evacuating oneself of one's urine and faeces, one ought to take this bath of ashes. Otherwise men will not be purified. Even if one performs duly the water bath and if one does not take this bath of ashes, that man will not be purified. So he cannot get any right to do any religious actions. After evacuating one's abdomen of the outgoing air, after yawning, after holding sexual intercourses, after spitting and sneezing, and after easing oneself of phlegm, one ought to take this bath of ashes. O Narada! Thus I have described to you here the greatness of S'ri Bhasma. I am again telling you more of it specially. Listen attentively.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the greatness in holding the Bibhuti (ashes) in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Narayana said Only the twice born are to take this Tripundra on the forehead and the other parts of the body after carefully purifying the ashes by the mantra Agniriti Bhasma, etc. The Brahmans, Ksattriyas, and Vais'yas are known as the twiceborn, (the Dvijas). So the Dvijas ought to take daily this Tripundra with great care. O Brahmana! Those who are purified with the ceremony of the holy thread, are called the Dvijas. For these the taking of Tripundra as per S'ruti is very necessary.

Without taking this Vibhuti, any good work done is as it were not done. There is no doubt in this. Even the japam of Gayatri is not well performed if this Bhasma be not used. O Best of Munis! The Gayatri is the most important and the chief thing of the Brahmanhood. But that is not advised if the Tripundra be not taken. O Munis! As long as the ashes born of Agni are not applied on the forehead, one is not entitled to be initiated in the Gayatri Mantra. O Brahman! Unless ashes be applied on the forehead, no one will recognise you as a Brahmana. For this reason I take this holding of the merit-giving Tripundra as the cause of the Brahmanhood. I speak this verily unto you, that he is recognised as a Brahmana and literary on whose forehead there is seen the white ashes purified by the mantra. He is entitled to the state of a Brahmana who is naturally very eager to collect the ashes as he collects the invaluable gems and jewels.

11-20. Those who are not naturally eager to collect the Bhasma as they are naturally eager to collect gems and jewel, are to be known as Chandalas in some of their previous births. Those who are not naturally joyous in holding Tripundra, were verily Chandalas in their previous births; this I tell you truly very truly.

Those who eat roots and fruits without holding ashes go to the terrible hells. He who worships S'iva without having Bibhuti on his forehead, that wretch is a S'iva hater and goes to hell after his death. He who does not hold Bibhuti is not entitled to any religious act.

Without taking Bibhuti, if you make a gift of Tula Purusa made of gold, you won't get any fruits. Rather you will have to go to hell!

As the Brahmanas are not to perform their Sandhyas without their holy threads, so without this Bibhuti, one ought not also to perform one's Sandhya.

If at times a man by chance has no holy thread, he can do his Sandhya by muttering the Gayatri or by fasting. But there is no such rule in holding Bhasma.

If one performs Sandhya, without having any Bibhuti, he is liable to incur a sin; as without holding this Bhasma, no right can come to him to perform his Sandhya.

As a man of a lowest caste acts contrary and incurs a sin if he hears the Veda mantra, so a twice-born incurs a sin if he performs Sandhya without having his Tripundra. The twiceborn must therefore collect his thoughts with his heart intent on this Tripundra whether it be according to S'rauta or Smarta method; or in absence thereof the Laukika Bhasma. Of whatsoever sort is the Bhasma, it is always pure. In the Sandhya and other actions of worship, the twiceborn ought to be very careful and punctilious in using this Bhasma.

21-31. No sin can enter into the body of one besmeared with ashes. For this reason, the Brahmanas ought always to use ashes with great care. One is to hold the Tripundra, six Angulas high or greater by the fore, middle and ring fingers of the right hand. If anybody uses Tripundra, shining and brilliant, and extending from eye to eye, he becomes, no doubt, a Rudra. The ring-finger is the letter "A," the middle finger is "U" and the forefinger is "M"; so the Tripundra marks drawn by the above three fingers is of the nature of the three gunas. The Tripundra should be drawn by the middle, fore, and ring fingers in a reverse way (from the left of the forehead to its right). I will now tell you an anecdote, very ancient. Listen. Once Durvasa, the head of the ascetics, with his body besmeared with ashes and with Rudraksam, all over, on his body went to the region of the Pitris, uttering loudly, "O S'ankara, of the Form of All! O S'iva! O Mother Jagadambe, the Source of all auspiciousness!" The Pitris Kavya- Valas, etc., (Kavya Valanalah Somah Yamah schaivaryama Tatha, Agnisvattva, Varhisadah, Somapah Pitri Devatah) got up, received him heartily and gave him seats and shewed him great honours and respect and held many pure conversations with the Muni. During their talk, the sinners of the Kumbhipaka hell were crying, “Oh! Alas! We are killed, we are being killed. Oh! We are being burnt!” some others cried, “Oh! Oh! We are cut down.” Thus various cries and lamentations reached their ears.

32-40. Hearing their piteous cries, Durvasa, the prince of the Risis, asked with a grievous heart the Pitris, “Who are those crying?” The Pitris replied There is a city close to our place called “Samyamani Puri” of the King Yama where the sinners are punished. Yama gives punishment to the sinners there. O Sinless One! In that city the King Yama lives with his terrible black-coloured messengers, the personifications of Kala (the Destruction). For the punishment of the sinners, eighty-six hells exist there. The place is being guarded always by the horrible messengers of Yama. Out of those hells, the hell named Kumbhipaka is very big and that is the chief of the hells.

The ailings and torments of the sinners in the Kumbhipaka hell cannot be described in hundred years. O Muni! The S’iva-haters, the Visnu-haters, the DevT-haters are made to fall to this Kunda. Those who find fault with the Vedas, and blame the Sun, Ganes’a and tyrannise the Brahmanas fall down to this hell. Those who blame their mothers, fathers. Gurus, elder brothers, the Smritis and Puranas and those as well who take the Tapta Mudras (hot marks on their bodies) and Tapta S’ulas (i.e., those who being S’aivas act as they like) those who blame the religion (Dharma) go down to that hell.

41-50. We hear constantly their loud piteous cries, very painful to hear; hearing which naturally gives rise to feelings of indifference (Vairagyam). Hearing the above words of the Piths, Durvasa, the prince of the Munis, went to the hell to see the sinners. O Muni! Going there, the Muni bent his head downwards and saw the sinners when, instantly the sinners began to enjoy pleasures more than those who enjoy in the Heavens. The sinners became exceedingly glad. Some began to sing, some began to dance, some began to laugh; some sinners began to play one with one another in great ecstasy. The musical instruments Mridanga, Muraja, lute, Dhakka, Dundubhis, etc., resounded with sweet sonorous tones (in accordance with five resonants). The sweet fragrant smell of the flowers of Vasanti creepers spread all round. Durvasa Muni became surprised to see all this. The messengers of Yama were startled and immediately went to their King Yama and said “O Lord! Our King! A wondrous event occurred lately. The sinners in the Kumbhipaka hell are now enjoying pleasures more than those in the Heavens. O Bibhu! How can this take place! We cannot make out the cause of this. O Deva! We all have become terrified and have come to you.” Hearing the words of the messengers, Dharmaraja, mounting on his great buffalo, came there instantly and seeing the state of the sinners sent news immediately to the Heavens.

51-60. Hearing the news Indra came there with all the Devas, Brahma came there from His Brahmaloka; and Narayana came there from Vaikuntha. Hearing this, the regents of the quarters, the Dikpalas came there with all their attendants from their respective abodes. They all came there to the Kumbhipaka hell and saw that all the beings there are enjoying greater pleasures than those in the Heavens. They all were astonished to see this; and they could not make out why this had happened. “What a wonder is this! This Kunda has been built for the punishment of the sinners. When such a pleasure is now being felt here, the people won’t fear anything henceforth to commit sins. Why is this order of the Vedas created by God reversed? Why has God undone His own doing? What a wonder is this! Now a great miracle is before our sight.” Thus speaking, they remained at a fix. They could not make out the cause of this. In the meanwhile Bhagavan Narayana after consulting with the other Devas went with some Devas to the abode of S’ankara in Kailas’a. They saw there that S’ri Bhagavan S’ankara (with crescent of the Moon on His forehead) was playing there attended always by the Pramathas and adorned with various ornaments like a youth, sixteen years old. His parts of the body were very beautiful as if the mine of loveliness. He was conversing on various delightful subjects with His consort Parvati and pleasing Her mind. The four Vedas were there personified. Seeing Him, Narayana bowed down and informed him clearly of all the wonderful events. He said

61-75. “O Deva! What is the cause of all this? We cannot make out anything! O Lord! Thou art omniscient. Thou knowest everything. So kindly mention how is this brought about!” Hearing Visnu’s words. Bhagavan S’ankara spoke graciously in sweet words, grave as the rumbling of a rain-cloud “O Visnu! Hear the cause of this. What wonder is there? This is all due to the greatness of Bhasma (ashes)! What cannot be brought about by Bhasma! The great S’aiva Durvasa went to see the Kumbhipaka hell, besmearing his whole body with Bhasma and looked downwards while he was looking at the sinners. At that time, accidentally a particle of Bhasma from his forehead was blown by air to the bodies of the sinners in the hell. Thereby they were freed of their sins and they got so much pleasure! Such is the greatness of Bhasma! Henceforth the Kumbhipaka will no more be a hell. It will be a Tirtha (holy place of pilgrimage) of the residents of the Pitrilokas. Whoever will bathe there will be very happy. There is no doubt in this. Its name will be henceforth the Pith Tirtha.

O Sattama! My Lingam and the form of Bhagavati ought to be placed there. The inhabitants of the Pith Loka would worship them. This will be the best of all the Tirthas extant in the three Lokas. And if the PitrisVari there be worshipped, know that the worship of the Triloki is done. Narayana said Hearing thus the words of S’ankara, the Deva of the Devas, He thanked Him and, taking His permission came to the Devas and informed them of everything what S’ankara had said. Hearing this, the Devas nodded their heads and said, “Sadhu (well, very well)” and began to glorify the greatness of Bhasma. O Tormenter of the enemies! Hah, Brahma and the other Devas began to eulogise the glories of ashes. The Pitris became very glad to get a new Tirtha. The Devas planted a S’iva Lingam and the form of the Devi on the banks of the new Tirtha, and began to worship them regularly day by day. The sinners that were there suffering, all ascended on the celestial chariot and got up to Kailas’a. Even today they are all dwelling in Kailas’a and are known by the name of the Bhadras. The hell Kumbhipaka came to be built afterwards in another place.

76-84. Since that day the Devas did not allow any other devotee of S’iva to go to the newly created hell Kumbhipaka. Thus I have described to you the excellent greatness of the Bhasma. O Muni! What more can there be than the glories of the Bhasma! O Best of Munis! Now I am telling you of the usage of Urdhapundra (the vertical marks) according to the proper province of the devotees. Listen. I will now speak what I have ascertained from the study of the Vaisnava S’astras, the measure of Urdhapundra, according to the Anguli measurements, the colour, mantra, Devata and the fruits thereof. Hear. The earth required is to be seen red from the crests of hills, the banks of the rivers, the place of S’iva (S’iva Ksettram), the ocean beaches, the ant-hill, or from the roots of the Tulasi plants.

The earth is not to be had from any other places. The black coloured earth brings in peace, the red-colour earth brings in powers to bring another to one’s control; the yellow-coloured earth increases prosperity and the white-coloured earth gives Dharma (religion). If the Urdhapundra be drawn by the thumb, nourishment is obtained; if it be drawn by the middle finger, longevity is increased; if it be drawn by nameless or ring finger, food is obtained and if it be drawn by the fore finger, liberation is attained. So the Urdhapundras ought to be drawn by these fingers, only be careful to see that the nails do not touch at the time of making the mark. The shape of the Urdhapundra (the vertical mark or sign on the fore-head) is like a flame or like the opening bud of a lotus, or like the leaf of a bamboo, or like a fish, or like a tortoise or like a conch-shell.

85-95. The Urdhapundra, ten Angulis high is the super best; nine Angulis high, is best; eight Angulis high, is good; the middling Urdhapundra is of three kinds as it is of seven Angulas, six Angulas, or five Angulas. The lowest Urdhapundra is again of three kinds as it is four Angulas, three Angulas or two Angulas high. On the Urdhapundra of the forehead, you must meditate Kes'ava, on the belly you must think of Narayana; on the heart, you must meditate on Madhava; and on the neck, you must meditate on Govinda. So on the right side of the belly, you must meditate on Madhusudana; on the roots of the ears, on Trivikrama; on the left belly, on Vamana; on the arms, on S'ridhara; on the ears, Hrisikes'a; on the back, Padmanabha; on the shoulders Damodara; and on the head Brahmarandhra you must meditate on Vasudeva. Thus the twelve names are to be meditated. In the morning or in the evening time when you are going to make the Puja or Homa, you are to take duly, single-in-intent, the above names and make the marks of Urdhapundras. Any man, with Urdhapundra on his head, is always pure, whether he be impure, or of unrighteous conduct or whether he commits a sin mentally. Wherever he dies, he comes to My Abode even if he be of a Chandala caste. My devotees (Vira Vaisnavas or Mahavira Vaisnavas) who know My Nature must keep an empty space between the two lines of Urdhapundra of the form of the Visnupada (the feet of Visnu) and those who are my best devotees are to use nice Urdhapundras, made of turmeric powder, of the size of a spear (S'ula), of the form of the feet of Visnu (Visnu padah).

96. The ordinary Vaisnavas are to use with Bhakti, the Urdhapundras without any empty space, but the form of it is to be like a flame, the blossom of a lily or like a bamboo leaf.

97-110. Those who are Vaisnavas in name only can use Urdhapundra of both the kinds, with or without any empty space. They incur no sin if they use one without an empty space. But those who are My good devotees, incur sin if they do not keep an empty space between the two vertical lines (in the Urdhapundra three vertical lines are used). The Vaisnavas who use excellent vertical rod like Urdhapundras keeping an empty space in the middle and uttering the mantra "Kesvaya Namah" build My Temple there. In the beautiful middle space of Urdhapundra, the Undecaying Visnu is playing with Laksmi. That wretch, the twice-born who uses Urdhapundra without any empty apace kills Visnu and Laksmi, seated there. The stupid who uses Urdhapundra without a vacant space goes successively to twenty-one hells. The Urdhapundra should be of the size of a clear straight rod, lotus, flame, a fish with sharp straight edges and with vacant spaces between them. O Great Muni! The Brahmana should always use the Tripundra like the lock of hair on the crown of his head and like his Sacrificial thread; otherwise all his actions will be fruitless. Therefore in all ceremonies and actions the Brahmanas ought to use Urdhapundras of the form of a trident, a circle or of a square form. The Brahmana who knows the Vedas is never to use the semi-moonlike mark (Tilak) on his bead. The man who is of the Brahmin caste and follows the path of the Vedas should not even by mistake use any other mark than those above-mentioned. Other sorts of pundras (marks) that are mentioned in other Vaisnava S'astras for the attainment of fame, beauty, etc., the Veda-knowing Brahmanas should not use them. The Vaidik Brahmanas should not use even in error any other Tilaks than the curved Tripundras

If, out of delusion, the man, following the path of the Vedas, uses other sorts of Tripundras, he would certainly go down to hell.

111-118. The Veda-knowing Brahmanas would certainly go down to hell if they use other sorts of Tripundras on their bodies. Only the Tilakas, prescribed in the Vedas ought to be used by those who are devoted to the Vedas. Those who do not observe the duties of the Vedas would use Tilaks approved of by other S'astras. Those should use marks approved of by the Vedas whose Deity is that of the Vedas. Those who follow the Tantra S'astras different from the Vedas, should use marks approved of by the Tantras.

Maha Deva is the Veda's Deity and, ready to deliver from the bondages of the world. He has prescribed the Tilakas prescribed in the Vedas for the benefit of the devotees. The marks prescribed by Visnu, also a Deity of the Vedas, are also those of the Vedas. His other Avataras also use marks approved of by the Vedas. The Tripundras and the besmearing of the body with ashes are according to the Vedas. In the Tantra S'astra different from the Vedas, there is the usage of Tripundra and other marks. But they are not to be used by the Vaidiks. No never.

Those who follow the path of the Vedas should use the curved Tripundras and Bhasma on their foreheads according to the rules prescribed in the Vedas.

He who has obtained the highest state of Narayana, i.e., who has realised My Nature, ought to use always on their foreheads S'ula marks scented with fragrant sandalpaste.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the rules of using the Tripundra and Urdhapundra marks in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-24. Narayana said Now I am speaking of the very holy Sandhyopasana method of Sandhya worship of Gayatri, the Presiding Deity of the morning, midday and evening, and of the twice-born. Listen. The greatness of using Bhasma has been described in detail. No further need be stated on the subject. I shall talk, first of all, of the morning Sandhya. The morning Sandhya is to be done early in the morning while the stars are visible. When the Sun is in the meridian, the midday Sandhya is to be performed; and while the Sun is visibly going down, the evening Sandhya is to be recited over. Now again, the distinctions are made in the above three Sandhyas The morning Sandhya with stars seen is the best; with stars disappeared, middling; and with the Sun risen above the horizon, inferior. So the evening Sandhya, again, is of three kinds best, middling, and inferior. When the Sun is visibly disappearing, the evening Sandhya is the best; when the Sun has gone down the horizon, it is middling and when the stars are visible, it is inferior. The Brahmanas are the root of the Tree, the Sandhya Vandanam; the Vedas are the branches; the religious actions are the leaves. Therefore its root should be carefully preserved. If the root be cut, no branches or leaves of the tree will remain. That Brahmana who knows not his Sandhya or who does not perform the Sandhyas is a living S'udra. That Brahmana after his death verily becomes a dog. Therefore the Sandhyas must be observed every day. Otherwise no right comes at all to do any action. At the sunrise and the sunset the time for Sandhya is two Dandas (48 minutes) and if Sandhya be not done or rather neglected in the interval, the Prayas'chitta (penance) is to he paid duly (performed duly). If the proper time for Sandhya expires, one more offering of Arghya is to be made in addition to the three Arghayas daily made or the Gayatri is to be repeated one hundred and eight times before the Sandhya is commenced. In whichever time any action ought to be done, worship, first of all, the Sandhya Devi, the Presiding Deity of that time and do the actions proper to that time afterwards. The Sandhya performed in dwelling houses is ordinary; the Sandhya done in enclosures of cows is middling and on the banks of the rivers is good and the Sandhya performed before the Devi's temple or the Devi's seat is very excellent. The Sandhyopasana ought to be done before the Devi, because that is the worship of the very Devi. The three Sandhyas done before the Devi give infinitely excellent fruits. There is no other work of the Brahmanas better than this Sandhya. One can rather avoid worshipping S'iva or Visnu; because that is not daily done as obligatory; but the Sandhyopasana ought to be done daily. The Gayatri of the Great Devi is the Essence of all the mantras in the Vedas. In the Veda S'astras, the worship of Gayatri is most definitely pronounced. Brahma and the other Devas meditate in the Sandhya times on this Devi Gayatri and make a japam of that. The Vedas always make japams of Her. For this reason the Gayatri has been mentioned as the object of worship by the Vedas. The Brahmanas are called S'aktas inasmuch as they worship the Primal S'akti (Force) Gayatri, the Mother of the Vedas. They are not S'aivas nor Vaisnavas.

Firstly make the ordinary Achaman three times, and, while inhaling, drink a little of the water of Achaman, repeating "Om Kes'avaya Svaha, Om Narayanaya Svaha, Om Madhavaya Svaha." Then wash your two hands, repeating "Om Gobindaya Namah, Om Visnave Namah." Then by the root of the thumb rub the lips repeating "Om Madhu sudanaya Namah, Om Trivikramaya Namah." So rub the mouth, repeating "Om Vamamaya Namah, Om S'ridharaya Namah." Then sprinkle water on the left hand, saying "Om Hrisikes'aya Namah." Sprinkle water on the legs, saying "Om Padmanabhaya Namah." Sprinkle water on the head, saying "Om Damodaraya Namah." Touch the mouth with the three fingers of the right hand, saying "Om Samkarsanaya Namah." Touch the nostrils with the thumb and forefinger saying "Om Vasudevaya Namah, Om Pradyumnaya Namah." Touch the eyes with the thumb and ring- finger, saying "Om Aniruddhaya Namah, Om Purusottamaya Namah." Touch the ears with the thumb and ringfinger saying "Om Adhoksajaya Namah, Om Narasimhaya Namah." Touch the navel with the thumb and little finger saying "Om Achyutaya Namah." Touch the breast with the palm, saying "Om Janardanaya Namah." Touch the head saying "Om Upendraya Namah." Touch the roots of the two arms saying "Om Haraye Namah, Om Krisnaya Namah."

25-50. While sipping the Achaman water on the right hand, touch the right hand with your left hand; otherwise; the water does not become pure. While doing Achaman, make the palm and the fingers all united and close, of the form of a Gokarna (the ear of a cow) and spreading the thumb and the little finger, drink the water of the measure of a pea. If a greater or less quantity be sipped, then that would amount to drinking liquor. Then thinking of the Pranava, make the Pranayama, and repeat mentally the Gayatri with her head and the Turiya pada, i.e., Apojyotih rasomritam Brahma Bhurbhuvah svarom. Inhale the air by the left nostril (Purak), close both the nostrils (Kumbhak) and exhale the air, by the right nostril (Rechak). Thus Pranayama is effected. While doing Purak, Kumbhak and Rechak repeat the Gayatri every time; hold the right nostril with the right thumb and hold the left nostril with the ringfinger and little finger (i.e., don't use forefinger and middle finger).

The Yogis who have controlled their minds say that Pranayama is effected by the three processes Puraka, Kumbhaka and Rechaka. The external air is inhaled in Puraka; air is not exhaled nor inhaled (it is retained inside) in Kumbhaka; and air is exhaled in Rechaka.

While doing Puraka, meditate on the navel, the four-armed high- souled Visnu, of the blue colour (Syama) like the blue lotus. While doing Kumbhaka, meditate in the heart lotus the four-faced grandsire Brahma Prajapati, the Creator seated on the lotus and while doing

Rechaka meditate, on the fore-head, on the white sin-destroying S'ankara, pure as crystal. In Puraka, the union with Visnu is obtained; in Kumbhaka, the knowledge of Brahma is attained and in Rechaka, the highest position of IsVara (S'iva) is attained. This is the method of Achaman according to the Puranas. Now I am speaking of the all sin destroying Vaidik Achaman. Listen. Reciting the Gayatri mantra "Om Bhurbhuvah," sip a little water; this is the Vaidik Achaman after repeating the seven great Vyahritis Om Bhuh; Om Bhuvah, Om Svah, Om Mahah, Om Janah, Om Tapah, Om Satyam, repeat Gayatri and the head of the Gayatri Apojyoti Rasomritam Brahma Bhurbhuvah svarom and practise Pranayama three times. Hereby all sins are destroyed and all virtues spring. Now another sort of Pranayama Mudra is described The Vanaprasthis and Grihasthas would do Pranayama with five fingers, holding the tip of the nose; the Brahmacharis and Yatis would do Pranayama with the thumbs, little finger, and ring finger (avoiding middle and fore). Now I am speaking of the Aghamasana Marjana mantra. Listen. The Mantra of this Marjana is "Apohistha Mayobhuvah, etc." There are three mantras in this. There are three Padas in every mantra, prefix Om to every pada (thus nine times Om is to be prefixed); at the end of every pada sprinkle water on the head with the sacrificial thread and the Kus'a grass. Or at the end of every mantra do so. By the above Marjana (cleaning) the sins of one hundred years are instantly destroyed. Then making Achaman (taking a sip of water to rinse the mouth before worship), repeat the three Mantras "Om Suryas'cha ma manyus'cha, etc." By this act, the mental sins are destroyed. As marjana is done with Pranava, Vyarhitis, and Gayatri, so make Marjana by the three mantras "Apohistha, etc." Make your right palm of the shape of a cow's ear; take water in it and carry it before your nose and think thus "There is a terrible sinful person in my left abdomen, his colour is dark black and he is horrible looking." Recite, then, the mantras "Om ritamcha satyamchabhidhyat, etc." and "Drupadadiva Mumuchana, etc." and bring that Sinful Person through your right nostril to the water in the palm. Don't look at that water; throw it away on a bit of stone to your left. And think that you are now sinless. Next, rising from the seat, keep your two feet horizontal and with the fingers save forefinger and thumb, take a palmful of water and with your face towards the Sun, recite the Gayatri three times and offer water to the Sun three times. Thus, O Muni! The method of offering the Arghyas has been mentioned to you.

51-80. Then circumambulate, repeating the Surya Mantra. The one thing to be noted in offering Arghyas is this Offer once in the midday, and three times in the morning and three times in the evening. While offering the Arghya in the morning, bend yourself a little low; in offering the arghya in the midday, stand up; and while offering the arghya in the evening, it can be done while sitting. Now I will tell you why the Arghya is offered to the Sun. Hear. Thirty Koti Raksasas known as the

Mandehas, always roam on the path of the Sun (the mental Sun also). They are great heroes, treacherous and ferocious. They always try to devour the Sun, while they assume terrible forms. For this reason the Devas and the Risis combined offer the water with their folded hands to the Sun, while they perform the great Sandhya Upasana. The water thus offered, becomes transformed into the thunderbolt and burns the heads of the cruel demons (and throws them on the island Mandeharuna) Therefore the Brahmanas daily do their Sandhyopasana. Infinite merits accrue from this Sandhya Upasana. O Narada! Now I am speaking to you of the Mantras pertaining to the Arghya. No sooner they are pronounced the full effects of performing the Sandhyas are obtained. I am That Sun; I am That Light; I am That Atman (Self); I am S'iva; I am the Light of Atman; I am clear and transparently white; I am of the nature of all energy; and I am of the nature of Rasa (the sweetness, all the sweet sentiments). O Devi! O Gayatri! O Thou! Who art of the nature of Brahma! Let Thee come and preside in my heart to grant me success in this Japa Karma. O Devi! O Gayatri! Entering into my heart, go out again with this water. But Thou wouldst have to come again. Sit thus on a pure seat and with a single intent repeat the Gayatri, the Mother of the Vedas. O Muni! In this Sandhyopasana, the Khhechan Mudra ought to be done after practising the Pranayama. Hear now the meaning of the Khhechari Mudra. When the soul of a being leaves the objects of senses, it roams in the Akas'a, i.e., it becomes aimless when the tongue also goes to the Akas'a and roams there; and then the sight is fixed between the eyebrows; this is called the Khhechari Mudra. There is no Asana (seat) equal to Siddhasana and there is no Vayu (air) equal to the Khumbaka Vaya (suspension of air in the body).

O Narada! There is no Mudra equal to the Khhechari Mudra. One is to pronounce Pranava in Pluta (protracted) accents like the sound of a bell and, suspending his breath, sit quiet motionless in Sthirasana without any Ahamkara (egoism). O Narada! I am now talking of Siddhasana and its characteristic qualities. Hear. Keep one heel below the root of the genital and the other heel below the scrotum; keep the whole body and breast straight and motionless; withdraw the senses from their objects and look at the point, the pituitary body, between the eyebrows. This posture is called the Siddhasan and is pleasant to the yogis. After taking this seat, invoke the Gayatri. "O Mother of the Vedas! O Gayatri! Thou art the Devi granting boons to the Bhaktas. Thou art of the nature of Brahma. Be gracious unto Me. O Devi! Whoever worships Thee in the day gets his day sins destroyed and in the night, night sins destroyed. O Thou! Who art all the letters of the alphabet! O Devi! O Sandhye! O Thou who art of the nature of Vidya! O Sarasvati! O Ajaye! O Thou immortal! Free from disease and decay. O Mother! Who art all the Devas! I bow down to Thee." Invoke the Devi again by the mantra "Ojosi, etc," and then pray "O Mother! Let my japam and other acts in Thy worship be fulfilled with success by Thy Grace." Next for the freedom of the curse of Gayatri, do the things properly. Brahma gave a curse to Gayatri; Vis'vamitra gave a curse to Her and Vas'istha also cursed Her. These are the three curses; they are removed in due order by recollecting Brahma, Vis'vamitra and Vas'istha. Before doing Nyasa, one ought to collect oneself and remember the Highest Self; think in the lotus of the heart that Purusa (Person) who is Truth; who is all this Universe, who is the Highest Self and who is All knowledge and who cannot be comprehended by words. Now I am speaking of the Amganyasa of Sandhya; Hear. First utter Om and then utter the mantra.

Touch the two legs, saying "Om Bhuhpadabhyam namah"

Touch the knees, saying "Om Bhuva Janubhyam namah"

Touch the hip, saying "Om Svah Katibhyam namah"

Touch the navel, saying "Om Maharnabhyai namah"

Touch the heart, saying “Om Janah Hridayaya namah”

Touch the throat, saying “Om Tapah Kanthaya namah”

Touch the forehead, saying “Om Satyam Lalataya namah”

Thus perform the Vyarhiti nyasa.

Next perform the Karamganyasa thus Om Tat savituh ramgusthabhyam namah (referring to the thumb); Om Varenyam Tarjanibhyam namah (referring to the forefinger); Om bhargo devasya madhyama bhyam namah (referring to the middle finger); Om Dhimahi anamikabhyam namah (referring to the ringfinger); Om dhiyo yonah, Kanisthabyam namah (referring to the little finger); Om prachodayat kara tal pristhabhyam namah (referring to the upper part and lower part of the palm and all over the body).

81-106. Now I am speaking of the Amganyasa. Hear. Om tat savitur Brahma tmane hridayaya namah (referring to the heart.)

Om Varenyam Visnva tmane S’irase namah (referring to the head); Om bhargo devasya Rudratmane S’ikhayai namah (referring to the crown of the head); Om dhimahi S’aktyatmane Kavachaya namah (referring to the Kavacha); Om dhiyoyonah Kalatmane netratrayaya namah (referring to the three eyes); Om prachodayat sarvatmane astraya namah (referring to the Astra or armour, protecting the body). Now I am speaking of the Varnanyasa. O Great Muni! Hear. This Varnanyasa is performed by the letters in the Gayatri mantra. If anybody does this, he becomes freed of sins.

“Om Vi namah” on the legs;

“Om Tu namah” on the two knees;

“Om Va namah” on the two thighs;

“Om ni namah” on the generative organ;

“Om ya namah” on the hip;

“Om Rgo namah on the heart;

“Om De namah” on the breasts;

“Om hi namah” on the tip of the nose;

"Om dhi namah" on the two eyes;

"Om yo namah" on the space between the eye-brows; "Om yo namah" on the forehead;

"Om nah namah" to the east;

"Om pra namah" to the south;

"Om cho namah" on the west;

"Om da namah" on the north;

"Om ya namah" on the head;

"Om ta namah" on the whole body from head to foot.

Some Japakas (those who do the Japam) do not approve of the above nyasa. Thus the Nyasa is to be done. Then meditate on the Gayatri or the World-Mother. The beauty of the body of the Gayatri Devi is like that of the full blown Java flower. She is seated on the big red lotus on the back of the Hansa (Flamingo); She is holding the red coloured garland on Her neck and anointed with red coloured unguent. She has four faces; every face has two eyes. On her four hands are a wreath of flowers, a sacrificial ladle, a bead, and a Kamandalu. She is blazing with all sorts of ornaments. From the Devi Gayatri has originated first the Rig veda. Brahma worships the virgin Gayatri; on the idea of S'ri ParamesVari Gayatri has four feet. The Rig Veda is one; the Yajurveda is the second, the Samaveda is the third and the Atharva veda is the fourth foot. The Gayatri has eight bellies; the east side is the one; the south is the second; the west is the third; the north is the fourth; the zenith is the fifth; the nadir is the sixth; the intermediate space is the seventh and all the corners are the eighth belly. Gayatri has seven S'iras (heads); Vyakaranam (Grammar) is one; S'iksa is the second (that Amga of the Veda, the science which teaches the proper pronunciation of words and laws of euphony); Kalpa is the third (the Vedanga which lays down the ritual and prescribes rules for ceremonial and sacrificial acts); Nirukta is the fourth (the Vedanga that contains glossarial explanation of obscure words, especially those occurring in the Vedas); Jyotish or astronomy is the fifth; Itahasa (history) and Puranas is the sixth head; and Upanisadas is the seventh head. Agni (fire) is the mouth of Gayatri; Rudra is the S'ikha (the chief part); Her gotra (lineage) is Samkhyayana; Visnu is the heart of Gayatri and Brahma is the armour of Gayatri. Think of this MahesVari Gayatri in the middle of the Solar Orb. Meditating on the Gayatri Devi as above, the devotee should shew the following twenty-four Mudras (signs by the fingers, etc., in religious worship) for the satisfaction of the Devi (1) Sanmukh; (2) Samput; (3) Vitata (4) Vistrita; (5) Dvimukha; (6) Trimukha; (7) Chaturmukha; (8) Panchamukha;

(9) Sanmukha; (10) Adhomukha; (11) Vyapaka; (12) Anjali; (13) S'akata (14) Yamapas'a; (15) fingers intertwined end to end; (16) Vilamba (17) Mustika; (18) Matsya; (19) Kurma; (20) Varaha; (21) Simhakranta; (22) Mahakranta; (23) Mudgara; (24) Pallava. Next make japam once only of one hundred syllabled Gayatri. Thus twenty-four syllabled Savitri, "Jatavedase sunavama, etc.," forty-four syllabled mantra; and the thirty two syllabled mantra, "Tryamvakam Jajamahe, etc." These three mantras united make up one hundred lettered Gayatri. (The full context of the last Mantra is this Om Haum Om yum sah - Trayamvakam yajamahe Sugandhim Pusti Vardhanam. Urbharukamiva bandhanan mrityo muksiya ma mritat Bhur Bhhuvah. Svarom Yum Svah Bhurbhuvah Svarom Haum.) Next make japam of Bhurbhuvah Svah, twenty four lettered Gayatri with Om. O Narada! The Brahmanas are to perform daily the Sandhyo pasana repeating Gayatri, completely adopting the rules above prescribed and then he will be able to enjoy completely pleasures, happiness and bliss.

English translation

1-5. Narayana said If one divides or separates the padas while reciting or making Japam of the Gayatri, one is freed from the Brahminicide, the sin of Brahmahatya. But if one does so without breaking the padas, i.e., repeats at one breath, then one incurs the sin of Brahmahatya. Those Brahmanas who do the Japam of the Gayatri without giving due pause to the padas, suffer pains in hells with their heads downwards for one hundred Kalpas. O Gayatri!

Thou art of one foot, of two feet, of three feet and of four feet. Thou art without foot, because Thou art not obtained. Salutation to Thy Fourth Foot beautiful and which is above the Triloki (Rajas). This cannot obtain that. Firstly, Gayatri is of three kinds "Samputa," "Ekomkara," and "Sadomkara." There is also the Gayatri, with five Pranavas, according to the Dharma S'astras and Puranas. There is something to be noted while muttering or making the japam of the Gayatri Note how many lettered Gayatri you are going to repeat (make japam). When you have repeated one-eighth of that, repeat (make japam) the Turiya pada of Gayatri (i.e., the fourth Pada, the mantram parorajase Savadoma prapat) etc., (see the daily practices, page 107) once and then complete repeating the Gayatri. If the Brahmana makes the Japam (the silent muttering) in the above way he gets himself united with Brahma. Other modes of making the Japam do not bear any fruit. Om Gayatryasye kapadi dvipapi Tripadi chatus padasi nahi padyase namaste Turyaya dars'atayapadaya pare Rajase Sabado ma prapat. Gayatri is one-footed in the form of Triloki, two-footed, the Trayi Vidya from thy second foot; tripadi (all Pranas are thy third foot, chatuspadi, as the Purusa apadi without any foot, Parorajase above the Rajas, the dust; asau-that; adah this not prapat may obtain. The Yogis who are Urdharetas (hold Brahma charyam, continence) are to make Japam of the Samputa Gayatri (i.e., with Om). Gayatri with one pranava and as well the Gayatri with six pranavas. The householder Brahmachari or those who want moksa are to make Japam of Gayatri with Om prefixed.

6. Those householders who affix Om to the Gayatri do not get the increase of their families.

7-8. The Turiya pada (foot) of Gayatri is the mantra "Parorajase Savodoma prapat." (Brihad. up. v.14.7). Salutation to Thy beautiful Fourth Foot which is above the Triloki (Rajas). This cannot obtain that. The presiding deity of this mantra is Brahma. I am now speaking of the full Dhyanam (meditation) of this Brahma so that the full fruit of the Japam (recitation) may be obtained. There is a full blown lotus in the heart; its form is like the Moon, Sun, and the Spark of Fire; i.e., of the nature of pranava and nothing else. This is the seat of the inconceivable Brahma. Think thus. Now on that seat is seated well the steady constant subtle Light, the essence of Akas'a, the everlasting existence, intelligence and bliss, the Brahma. May He increase my happiness (see page 107 the daily practice of the Hindus by R. B. Sris Chandra Basu, on the Invocation of the Gayatri).

Note Aum! Gayatryasyekapadi dvipadi, tripadi, chatuspadasi, nahi padyase namaste turyaya dars' ataya padaya parorajase, savado maprapat O Gayatri! Thou art of one foot (in the farm of Triloki), of two feet (the Trayi vidya from Thy second foot) of three feet all Prana, etc., are Thy third foot and of four feet (as the Purusa). Thou art without foot because Thou art not obtained. Salutation to Thy beautiful fourth foot which is above the Triloki (Rajas). This cannot obtain that.

9. Now I am speaking of the Mudra of the Tunya Gayatri (1) Tris'ula, (2) Yoni, (3) Surabhi, (4) Aksamala, (5) Linga, (6) Padma and (7) Mahamudra. These seven Mudras are to be shewn.

10-14. What is Sandhya, that is Gayatri; there is no difference whatsoever between the two. The two are one and the same. Both are of the nature of Existence, Intelligence and Bliss. The Brahmanas would daily worship Her and bow down before Her with greatest devotion and reverence. After the Dhyanam, first worship Her with five upacharas or offerings. Thus Om lam prithivyatmane gandham, arpayami name namah. Om Ham akas'atmane puspam arpayami name namah. Om ram Vahnyatmane dipam arpayami name namah. Aum vam amritatmane naivedyam arpayami name namah. Om yam ram lam vam ham puspanjalim arpayami name namah. Thus worshipping with five upacharas, you must shew Mudras to the Devi.

15-16. Then meditate on the Form of the Gayatri mentally and slowly repeat the Gayatri. Do not shake head, neck and while making japam, do not show your teeth. According to due rules repeat the Gayatri one hundred and eight times, or twenty-eight times. When unable, repeat ten times; not less than that.

17-20. Then raise the Gayatri placed before on the heart (seat) by the mantra "Gayatrasyai kapadi Dvipadi, etc., and then bid farewell to Her after bowing down to Her and repeating the mantra "Omuttame S'ikhare Devi bhumyam parvata murdhani Brahmana ebhyobhya anujhata Gachcha Devi yathasukham" on the highest top of the mountain summit in earth (i.e., on the Meru mountain) dwells the goddess Gayatri. Being pleased with Thy worshippers go back.

O Devi! to Thy abode as it pleaseth Thee." (See page 110, The Daily Practices of the Hindus.)

The wise men never mutter nor recite the Gayatri mantra within the water. For the Maharsis say that the Gayatri is fire-faced (agnimukhi). After the farewell shew again the following mudras Surabhi Jhan, Surpa, Kurma, Yoni, Padma, Linga and Nirvana Mudras.

Then address thus "O Devi! O Thou who speakest pleasant to Kas'yapa! O Gayatri! Whatever syllables I have missed to utter in making Japam, whatever vowels and consonants are incorrectly pronounced, I ask Thy pardon for all my above faults." O Narada! Next one ought to give peace offerings to the Gayatri Devi.

21-33. The Chchhanda of Gayatri Tarpanam (peace offerings to Gayatri) is Gayatri; the Risi is VisVamitra; Savita is the Devata; its application (Niyoga) is in the peace offerings.

"Om Bhuhrigvedapurusam tarpayami."

"Om Bhuvah Yajurvedapurusam tarpayami."

"Om Svah Samaveda purusam tarpayami."

"Om Mahah Atharvaveda purusam tarpayami."

"Om Janah Itihasapurana purusam tarpayami."

"Om Tapah Sarvagama purusam tarpayami."

"Om Satyam Satyaloka purusam tarpayami."

"Om Bhuh bhurloka purusam tarpayami."

"Om Bhuvah bhuvoloka purusam tarpayami."

"Om Svah svarloka purusam tarpayami."

"Om Bhuh rekapadam Gayatrim tarpayami."

"Om Bhuvo dvitiyapadam Gayatrim tarpayami."

"Om Svastripadam Gayatrim tarpayami."

"Om Bhurbhuvah Svas'chatuspadam Gayatrim tarpayami."

Pronouncing these, offer the Tarpanams. Next add the word Tarpayami to each of the following words "Usasim, Gayatrim, Savitrim, Sarasvatim Vedamataram, Prithvim, Ajam, Kaus'ikim, Samkritim, Savajitim, etc.," and offer Tarpanams. After the Tarpanam is over, offer the peace-chantings, (S'antivari) repeating the following mantras.

"Om data vedase sunavama romam, etc." "Om Manastoka, etc."

"Om Tryamvakam Yajamahe, etc."

"Om Tachchhamyoh, etc."

Then touch all the parts of your bodies, repeating the two mantra, "Om atodeva, etc." And reciting the mantram "Svona Prithivi," bow down to the earth, after repeating one's name, Gotra, etc.

34-45. O Narada! Thus the rules of the morning Sandhya are prescribed. Doing works so far, bid farewell to the above-mentioned Gayatri. Next finishing the Agnihotra Homa sacrifice, worship the five Devatas, S'iva, S'iva, Ganes'a, Surya and Visnu. Worship by the Purusa Sukta mantra, or by Hrim mantra, or by Vyahriti mantra or by S'rischate Laksmis'cha, etc., place Bhavani in the centre; Visnu in the north east corner, S'iva in the south-east corner; Ganes'a in the south-west corner, and the Sun in the north-west corner; and then worship them. While offering worship with the sixteen offerings, worship by repeating sixteen mantras. As there is no other act more merit-giving than the worship of the Devi, so the Devi should first of all be worshipped. Then worship in due order the five Devatas placed in five positions. As the worship of the Devi is the chief object, so in the three Sandhyas, the worship of the Sandhya Devi is approved of by the S'rutis. Never worship Visnu with rice; Ganes'a with Tulasi leaves; the Devi Durga with Durba grass and S'iva with Ketaki flower. The under-mentioned flowers are pleasing to the Devi Mallika, Jati, Kutaja, Panasa, Palasa, Vakula, Lodha, Karavira, S'ins'apa, Aparajita, Bandhuka, Vaka, Madanta, Sindhuvara, Palas'a, Durbha, S'allaki, Madhavi, Arka, Mandara, Ketaki, Karnikara, Kadamba, Lotus, Champaka, Yuthika, Tagara, etc.

46-47. Offer incenses Guggul, Dhupa and the light of the Til oil and finish the worship. Then repeat the principal (male) mantra (make Japam). Thus finishing the work, study the Vedas in the second quarter of the next day; and in the third quarter of that day feed father, mother and other dependent relatives, with money earned by one's own self according to the traditions of one's family.

Here ends the Seventeenth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the description of Sandhya and other daily practices in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada spoke “O Bhagavan! I am now very eager to hear the special Puja of S’ri Devi. The people get their desires fulfilled if they worship Her.”

2-23. Narayana said O Devarsi! I shall now specially speak to you how the World Mother Bhagavati is worshipped; by worshipping Whom one easily gets objects of enjoyments, liberation and the destruction of all evils. Controlling one’s speech and making Achaman, one must make one’s sankalpa and perform Bhutas’uddhi, Matrikanyasa, sadanganyasa, placing conchshell and doing other necessary acts. Offering the ordinary Arghya, one should give special Arghya and with the mantra “Astraya Phat” sprinkle over all the articles brought for worship. Taking the Guru’s permission, he is to go on with his Puja. First worship the pitha or seat whereon the Devi would be placed; then perform dhyan (meditation of the Devi). Then with great devotion, offer to the Deva, the seats (Asana) and other articles of worship; then perform the bath of the Devi by the water of the Panchamrita (the five nectars). If anybody performs the bath ceremony of S’ri Devi with one hundred jars of sugarcane juice, he will not have to incur any future birth.

He who performs this bath, and recites the Veda Mantras, with mango juice or sugarcane juice gets for ever Laksmi ever and ever and Sarasvati bound at his doors. He who gets this sacred bath of the Devi with grape juice, along with his relatives and acquaintances dwells in the DevT-loka for as many years as there are atoms in the juice. He who bathes the Devi with the Vedic mantras, and with water scented with camphor, the fragrant aloe wood (aguru), saffron, and musk, becomes freed at once of the sins acquired in his hundred births. He who bathes the Devi with jars of milk, lives in the ocean of milk (ksira samudra) for one Kalpa. So he who does this bathing ceremony with jars of curd, becomes the lord of Dadhikunda (the reservoir of curd). He who performs the Snanams of the Devi with honey, ghee and sugar becomes the lord of these things. He who bathes the Devi with one thousand jars, becomes happy in this world as in the next. Note Make the liquid current flow pure in your body is the esoteric meaning of the bath. If you give Her a pair of silken clothes, you will go to the Vayu-Loka. If you give Her the jewel ornaments, you will become the Lord of gems and jewels. (Make your mind like the gem.) If anybody gives saffron, sandalpaste, musk, Sindura and Alaktak (red things), he will go to the Heavens and become there the Indra, the Lord of the Devas, in the next birth. Various flowers ought to be offered in S’ri Bhagavati’s worship; or the flowers of the season offered to the Devi will lead the devotee to Kailas’a. The devotee that offers the beautiful Bel leaves to the Devi never experiences anywhere pains and difficulties. The devotee who writes the Vija mantra of Maya “Hrim BhuvanesVaryai Namah” with red sandalpaste thrice on the tri-leaves of the Vilva tree leaf and offers this to the lotus feet of the Devi, becomes Manu by the merit of this virtuous act!

The devotee becomes the Lord of the whole universe who worships the Devi Bhagavati with ten millions of entire Vilva leaves, fresh, green and spotless.

24-40. If any devotee worships with ten millions of entire fresh green Kunda flowers, with eight scents, he gets surely the Prajapatihood. The worship of the Devi with ten millions of Mallika and Malati flowers besmeared with eight scents makes a man the four faced (Brahma); and one hundred millions of such flowers will make the devotee a Visnu. In days of yore, Visnu worshipped the Devi in the aforesaid way and so got His Visnuhood. If any devotee worships the Devi with one hundred Kotis of Mallika or Malati flowers, the man becomes certainly Sutratma Hiranyagarbha. In ancient days Hiranyagarbha worshipped thus the Devi with great devotion and so he became Hiranyagarbha! (These Hiranyagarbha, Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a were mere ordinary men before. See the Brihadaranyaka Upanisada). Note The eight scents refer to data mamsi Kapiyuta S'aktergandhas takam! So will be the results if Java, Vandhuka and Dadimi flowers be offered in the worship. Various other beautiful flowers can be offered duly to the Devi by the devotee. The merits accruing from such offers are not known even to the God IsVara. The flowers that spring in their proper seasons are to be offered every year to the Devi, repeating Her thousand names enumerated in the Twelfth Book or in the Kurma Purana. If the above worship be offered to the Devi, then that man, whether he be a sinner or a great sinner, will be freed from all the sins and after leaving his mortal coil, he will get, no doubt, the lotus feet of the S'ri Devi Bhagavati. Offer Dhupa made of black Aguru, camphor, sandalpaste, red sandalpaste, Sihlaka and Guggula, saturated with ghee in such a way as the whole room of S'ri Bhagavati scents with pure fragrant smell. The Devi Bhagavati becomes pleased with this and offers the lordship of the three Lokas to the devotee. The devotee, who offers daily the light of camphor to the Devi, goes to the Surya Loka. There is no doubt in this. With one's whole heart, one should give one hundred or one thousand lights to the Devi. The devotee should offer heaps of food consisting of six Rasas, the plates and dishes for chewing, sucking, licking and drinking, that is, all kinds of food solid, and liquid, mountain-like high. Always give food on golden flat plates and cups and various delicious sweet juicy nice heavenly fruits, nicely arranged on trays, cups and saucers. When S'ri Mahadevi Bhuvane'svari gets pleased, the whole universe gets pleased. For the whole Universe is all Devi; as a rope is mistaken for a snake, so this Mahadevi is mistaken for the universe.

41-59. Offer a jar of drinking Ganges water, cool and nice, scented with camphor to the Devi; then offer betels with camphor, cardamum, cloves, and various delicious scents. These all are to be offered with great devotion so that the Devi may be pleased. Next have music with lovely mridangas, flutes, murajas, Dhahkas and dundubhis and so please Her. The Veda mantras are to be recited, the Puranas are to be read and the hymns to be chanted. With whole head and heart offer to the Devi the umbrella and chamara, the two kingly offerings. Then circumambulate round Her and prostrate before Her and ask Her kindness and pray to Her to forgive all faults and shortcomings. The Devi is pleased with anybody who remembers Her even once! What wonder then that She will be pleased with all these offerings! The Mother is naturally merciful to her child. When She is loved with devotion, then She becomes very merciful. There is nothing strange here! On this point I will recite to you the history of Vrihadratha Rajarsi. Hearing which gives rise to Bhakti and Love.

Once in a certain region in the Himalayas there lived a bird called Chakravak. It flew over many countries and went once to Kas'idham. As a fruit of his Prarabdha Karma, that bird, desirous to find some rice beans, voluntarily went like an orphan round about the temple of S'ri Annapurna Devi. There circumambulating round the Devi Bhagavati the bird left the city Kas'i, that grants liberation and flew away to another country. In time the bird left his body and went to Heavens. There he assumed a heavenly form of a youth and began to enjoy various pleasures. Thus he enjoyed for two Kalpas. Then he got back to the earth and took his birth as the best in the Ksattriya family. He became celebrated as the king Vrihadratha in this world. That King was truthful, controlled his senses, and practised S'amyama and deep concentration and knew everything of the past, the present and the future. He conquered all the enemies and performed various sacrifices and became the Emperor of the sea-girt earth and acquired the very rare faculty in the knowledge of everything of his previous births. The Munis came to know of this from various rumours and came to the King. The King Vrihadratha duly entertained those guests. The Munis took their seats and asked "O King! We hear that all the events of previous births are vividly reflected in your memory. On this point great doubts have come upon us. Kindly describe in detail. By what Punyam (merits) you have come to know all about previous births and the knowledge of the past, the present and the future. We have come to you to know how you got this wonderful supersensual knowledge. Kindly say to us sincerely everything about this and oblige."

60-71. Narayana said O Brahman! The very religious King Vrihadratha heard them and began to speak out all the secret causes for his knowledge of the past, the present and the future, thus O Munis! Hear how I acquired this knowledge. In my previous birth I was a very low bird chakravak. Once, out of my ignorance, I circumambulated round the temple of the Devi Bhagavati Annapurna at Kas'i. And, as the result of that, I lived in the Heavens for a period of two Kalpas and I have got this birth and I have got the knowledge of the past, the present and the future. O You of good vows! Who can ascertain what amount of merits accrues from remembering the Feet of the World-Mother. Remembering Her glories, I always shed tears of joy. Those who do not worship the adorable Deity Jagadamba are the Great Sinners and they are treacherous. Fie on their births! The worship of S'iva or Visnu is not eternal. Only the Jagadamba's worship is eternal. Thus it is stated in the S'rutis. What more shall I speak on this worship of the World-Mother, which is void of the best trace of any doubt. Everyone ought to serve devotedly the lotus feet of the Devi Bhagavati. There is no other act more glorious in this world than serving the feet of Jagadamba. It is highly necessary to serve the Highest Deity, whether in Her Saguna or in Her Nirguna aspect. (Eat the sugarcandy, holding it in any way. It makes no difference.) Narayana said Hearing the aforesaid words of the virtuous Rajarsi Vrihadratha, the Munis went back to their respective abodes. Such is the power of the Devi Jagadambika! So who can question about the certainty of the high merits arising from the Jagadambika's worship and who will not reply, when so questioned? Their births are really fruitful who possess faith in the Devi worship; but of those who have no such faith, there is some wrong mixture, no doubt; in their births.

English translation

1-24. Narayana said O Narada! Now I am speaking of the auspicious midday Sandhya, the practice of which leads to the wonderfully excellent results. Listen. Here the Achamana and other things are similar to those of the morning Sandhya. Only in meditation (Dhyanam) there is some difference. I will now speak of that. The name of the midday Gayatri is Savitri. She is ever a youthful maiden, of white colour, three-eyed; She holds in Her one hand a rosary, in Her other hand a trident and with Her two other hands She makes signs to Her Bhaktas to dispel fear and to grant boons. Riding on the bull. She recites the Yayur Vedas; She is the Rudra S’akti with Tamo gunas and She resides in Brahmaloka, She daily traverses in the path of the Sun. She is Maya Devi, beginningless; I bow down to Her. After meditating on the Adya Devi Bhagavati perform Achamanas and other things as in the morning Sandhya. Now, about the offering of Arghya (an offer of green grass, rice, etc., made in worshipping a God or Brahman). Collect flowers for Arghya; in the absence of flowers, the Bael leaves and water will serve the purpose. Facing the Sun, and looking upwards, offer the Arghya to the Sun upwards. Then perform other acts as in the morning Sandhya. In midday, some offer Arghya to the Sun, only with the recitation of the Gayatri mantra. But that is not approved of by the tradition and community; there is the likelihood of the whole work being thwarted or rendered fruitless. For, in the morning and evening Sandhyas, the Raksasas named the Mandehas become ready to devour the Sun. This is stated in the S'rutis. Therefore the midday offering of the Arghya is not for the destruction of the Daityas but for the satisfaction of the Devi; so with the mantra "Akrisnena, etc.," the offering of Arghya can be effected; and the reciting of the infallible Gayatri mantra is only to create disturbance in the shape of thwarting the action. So in the morning and evening, the Brahmana is to offer the Suryarghya, repeating the Gayatri and Pranava; and in the midday to offer flowers and water with the mantra "Akrisnena, rajasa etc.," else it will go against the S'ruti. In the absence of flowers, the Durba grass, etc., can be offered carefully as the Arghya; and the full fruits of the Sandhya will be secured. O Best of Devarsis! Now hear the important points in the Tarpanam (peace offerings). Thus

"Om Bhuvah purusam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Yajurvedam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Mandalam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Hiranyagarbham tarpayami name namah."

"Om antaratmanam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Savitrim tarpayami name namah."

"Om Devamataram tarpayami name namah."

"Om Samkritim tarpayami name namah."

"Om Yuvatim sandhyam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Rudranim tarpayami name namah."

"Om Nimrijam tarpayami name namah."

"Om Bhurbhuvah Svah purusam tarpayami name namah."

Thus finish the midday Sandhya mga Tarpanam. Now, with your hands raised high up towards the Sun, worship Him by the two mantras, praising thus "Om Udutyam Jatavedasam, etc.," "Om Chitram Devanam, etc." Next repeat the Gayatri. Hear its method. In the morning, repeat the Gayatri at the proper moment with hands raised; in the evening time with hands lowered and in the midday with hands over the breast. Begin with the middle phalanx (joint) of the nameless finger, then the phalanx at its root, then the phalanx at the root of the little finger, its middle phalanx and its top, then the tops of the nameless, fore and ring fingers, then the middle and finally the root of the ring finger (in the direction of the hands of the watch; avoiding the middle and root phalanx of the middle finger). Thus ten times it is repeated. In this way if the Gayatri be repeated one thousand times, the sins arising from killing a cow, father, mother, from causing abortions, going to the wife of one's Guru, stealing a Brahmana's property, a Brahman's field, drinking wine, etc., all are destroyed. Also the sins acquired in three births by mind, word, or by the enjoyments of sensual objects are thereby then and there instantly destroyed. All the labours of him, who works hard in the study of the Vedas without knowing the Gayatri, are useless. Therefore if you compare on the one hand the study of the four Vedas with the reciting of the Gayatri, then the Gayatri Japam stands higher. Thus I have spoken to you of the rules of the midday Sandhya. Now I am speaking of Brahma Yajha. Hear.

English translation

1-25. The twice born (Brahmana) is firstly to sip three times (make Achamana); then to make the marjana (sprinkle water) twice; he is to touch the water by the right hand and sprinkle water on his two feet. Next, he is to sprinkle with water his head, eyes, nose, ears, heart, and head thoroughly. Then speaking out the Des'a and Kala (place and time) he should commence the Brahma Yajha. Next for the destruction of all the sins and for getting liberation, he should have the Darbha (sacrificial grass, and the Kus'a grasses), two on his right hand, three on his left hand, one grass each on his seat, sacrificial thread, his tuft, and his heels. No sin can now remain in his body.

"I am performing this Brahma Yajha for the satisfaction of the Devata according to the Sutra," thus thinking he is to repeat the Gayatri thrice. Then he is to recite the following mantras "Agnimile purohitam, etc.," "Yadamgeti" "Agnirvai," "Mahavratanchaiva pantha," "Athatah S'amhitayas'cha vidamaghavat," "Mahavratasya," "Isetvorjetva," "Agna ayahi" "S'anno Devi rabbistaye," "Tasya Samamnayo" "Briddairadaich" "S'iksam pravaksyami," "Pancha Samvatsareti," "Mayarasatajabhetyeva," "Gaurgma," also he is to recite the two following Sutras "Athato Dharma Jijhasa," "Athato Brahma Jijhasa." Next he is to recite the mantra "Tachhamyoh" and also the mantra "Name Brahmane name stvagnaye namah prithivyai nama Osadhibhyoh namah". (These mantras are the famous mantras of the Rig Veda). Next perform the Deva-tarpanam, thus "Om Prajapati stripyatu", "Om Brahma stripyatu", "Om Vedas tripyantu," "Om Risayastri pyantu", " Om Devastripantu," "Om Sarvani chhandamsi tripyantu", "Om Om Kara stripyatu", "Om Vasat Kara stripyatu", "Om Vyarhitayas tripyantu", Om Savitri tripyatu", "Om Gayatri tripyatu", "Om Yajha stripyantu," Om Dyava prithivyau tripyatam. 26-54. Let all the other Acharyas be satisfied. “Om Ye Ke chasmat kule data aputra gotrino mritah. te grihnantu maya dattam vastranispidi to dakam.” Saying thus offer water squeezed out of a cloth. O Narada! Thus I have spoken to you of the rules of Brahma

Yajna. Whoever performs thus the Brahma Yajha gets the fruits of studying all the Vedas. Then performing, in due order, the VaisVa deva, Homa, S’raddha, serving the guests, and feeding the cows, the devotee is to take his meals during the fifth part of the day along with the other Brahmanas. Then the sixth and the seventh parts of the day he is to spend in reading histories and the Puranas. Then the eighth part of the day he is to devote in seeing the relatives, talking with them and receiving visits from other persons; then he will be prepared to perform the evening Sandhya. O Narada! I am now talking of the evening Sandhya. Listen. S’ri Bhagavati is pleased very quickly with him who performs the evening Sandhya. First make the Achaman and make the Vayu (air) in the body steady. With heart tranquilled and with the seat Baddha Padmasana, be calm and quiet while engaged in performing the Sandhya. At the commencement of all actions prescribed in the S’rutis and Smritis, first perform the Sagarbha Pranayama. In other words recite the mantra mentally for the due number of moments and make the Pranayama. Simply meditating is called Agarbha Pranayama. Here no mantra is necessary to be recited. Then have the Bhutas’uddhi (have the purifications of the elements) and make the Sankalpa. First of all, the purification of elements, etc., are to be done first; one becomes, then, entitled to do other actions. While doing Puraka (inhaling), Kumbhaka (retaining) and Rechaka (exhaling) in Pranayama, meditate on the Deity stated duly. In the evening time meditate on the Bhagavati Sandhya Devi thus The name of the then Gayatri Devi is Sarasvati. She is old, of black colour, wearing ordinary clothes; in her hands are seen conch shell, disc, club and lotus. On Her feet the anklets are making sweet tinkling sounds; on Her loins there is the golden thread; decked with various ornaments. She is sitting on Garuda. On Her head the invaluable jewel crown is seen; on Her neck, the necklaces of stars; Her forehead is shining with a brilliant lustre emitting from the pearl and jewel Tatamka ornaments. She has put on yellow clothes; Her nature is eternal knowledge and ever-bliss. She is uttering Sama Veda. She resides in the Heavens and daily She goes in the path of the Sun. I invoke the Devi from the Solar Orb. O Narada! Meditate on the Devi thus and perform the Sandhya. Then perform the Marjanam by the mantra “Apohistha” and next by the mantra “Agnis’cha ma manyus’cha.” The remaining actions are the same as before. Next, repeat the Gayatri and offer, with a pure heart, the offering of Arghya to the Sun for the satisfaction of Narayana. While offering this Arghya, keep the two legs level and similar and take water in folded palms and meditating on the Devata within the Solar Orb, throw it towards Him. The fool that offers Suryarghya in the water, out of ignorance, disregarding the injunctions of the S'rutis, will have to perform Prayas'chitta for that sin. Next, worship the Sun by the Surya mantra. Then taking one's seat, meditate on the Devi and repeat the Gayatri. One thousand times or five hundred times the Gayatri is to be repeated. The worship, etc., in the evening is the same as in the morning. Now I am speaking of the Tarpanam in the Evening Sandhya. Hear. Vas'istha is the Risi of the aforesaid Sarasvati. Visnu in the form of Sarasvati is the Devata; Gayatri is the Chhanda; its application is in the Evening Sandhya Tarpanam. Now the Tarpanam of the Sandhyanga (the adjunct of Sandhya) runs as follows

"Om Svah Purusam Tarpayami."

"Om Samavedam Tarpayami."

"Om Suryamandalam tarpayami."

"Om Hiranyagarbham tarpayami."

"Om Paramatmanam tarpayami."

"Om Sarasvatim tarpayami."

"Om Devamataram tarpayami."

"Om Samkritim tarpayami."

"Om Vriddham Sandhyam tarpayami "Om Visnu rupinim Usasim tarpayami."

"Om Nirmrijim tarpayami."

"Om Sarvasiddhi karinim tarpayami."

"Om Sarvamantra dhipatikam tarpayami." "Om Bhurbhuvah Svah Purusam tarpayami."

Thus perform the Vaidik Tarpanam. O Narada! Thus have been described the rules of the sin destroying evening Sandhya. By this evening Sandhya, all sorts of pains and afflictions and diseases are removed. And ultimately the Moksa is obtained. What more than this that you should know this Sandhya Bandanam as the principal thing amongst the good conduct and right ways of living. Therefore S'ri Bhagavati fructifies all the desires of the Bhaktas who perform this Sandhya Vandanam.

Here ends the Twentieth Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the description of Brahma Yajha, Sandhyas, etc., in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-55. Narayana said Now I shall speak of the Gayatri- puras'charanam. Hear. By its performance all the desires are obtained and all the sins are destroyed. On the tops of mountains, on the banks of the rivers, on the roots of Bel trees, on the edges of tanks, within the enclosures of the cows (cow-stalls), in temples, on the root of AsVattha trees, in gardens, in the Tulasi groves, in the Punya Ksetrams (holy places), before one's Guru, or wherever the mind feels exalted and cheerful, and gets strength, the Puras'charanam if performed, lead to a speedy success. Before commencing the Puras'charanam of a mantra (the Puras'charanam means repetition of the name of a deity or of a mantra attended with burnt offerings, oblations, etc.,) first Prayas'chitta (penance) is done in the shape of repeating one million times the Gayatri with the Vyarhitis. In any Vaidic Karma or in making Puras'charanam of the mantra of the Devatas Nrisinha, Surya, Varaha, etc., the first thing done is to repeat the Gayatri. Without the japam of Gayatri, no action is attended with success. The reason is this Every Brahman is a S'akta (a follower of S'akti); he cannot be a Vaisnava or S'aiva; for he is the worshipper of the Prime Force Vedamata Gayatri. Therefore obtain first the Grace of one's own Ista Devata Gayatri by Her Japam. Then worship the other Deities.

Thus one should purify one's japya mantra (the mantra that is to be repeated) by first repeating one million times the Gayatri; then one is to commence Puras'charanam. Again before purifying the mantra, one is to purify one's Atman (Self). In this purification of one's Atman three lakh times, in case of inability, one lakh times Gayatri is to be repeated without one's Atman's purification, the Japam, Homa and other actions all become useless. This is specially noted in the Vedas. By Tapas e.g., Japam, Chandrayana and Vrata, (asceticism) mortify your body. By offering Tarpanam (peace-offerings) to the Fathers and the Devas, one can get self purification. If you want to get the Heavens and if you want to become great, practise Tapasya. There is no other way. Tapasya is the intent calling of the Mother, That Call which penetrates through and through the Brahmanda. The Ksattriyas should cross difficulties and dangers by force of arms; the Vais'yas, by wealth; the S'udras, by serving the twice born; and the Brahmanas should cross difficulties and dangers, by Tapasya, Homa, Japam, etc. So the Brahmanas should always be cheerful and in prompt readiness to do Tapasya. Of all sorts of tapasyas, mortifying the body by observing vows and fastings is the best. So say the Risis. (This mortification of the body gives self-reliance and self intuition more surely and speedily than all the other studies and other practices.) The Brahmanas should purify themselves by following duly Krichhra Chandrayana vratas, etc., O Narada! Now I am speaking of the purification of food. Hear. The following four occupations of the Brahmanas are the bestAyachita, (without begging or asking for anything), Unchha, (the gathering in of handfuls of the corn left by the reapers), S'ukla (the maintenance derived by a Brahmana from other Brahmanas; a pure mode of life). And Bhiksu (begging). Whether according to the Tantras or according to the Vedas, the food obtained by the above four means is pure. What is earned by Bhiksa (begging) is divided into four parts one part is given to the Brahmanas; the second part is given to the cows; the third part is given to the guests, the fourth part is to be taken by him and his wife. Whatever is fixed for taking (swallowing) mouthfuls of food, that is to be taken on a tray or a platter. First throw a little cow-urine over that and count duly the number of mouthfuls. The mouthfuls are to be of the size of an egg; the house-holders are to take eight such mouthfuls and the Vanaprasthis are to take four such mouthfuls. The Brahmacharins can sprinkle their food with cow- urine nine times, six times, or three times as they like; while sprinkling, the fingers are to remain intact. The Gayatri is to be repeated also. The food offered by a thief, Chandala, Ksattriya or Vais'ya is very inferior. The food of a S'udra, or the companion with a S'udra or taking food in the same line with a S'udra leads one to suffer in the terrible hells as long as there are the Sun and Moon.

The Puras'charanam of Gayatn is repeating this twenty four lakh times (i.e., as many lakh times as there are syllables in the Gayatri). But, according to VisVamitra, repeating thirty two lakh times is the Puras'charanam of Gayatri. As the body becomes useless when the soul leaves the body, so the mantra without Puras'charanam is useless. The Puras'charanam is prohibited in the months of Jyaistha, Asadha, Pausa and Mala (dirty) months. Also on Tuesday, Saturday; in the Vyatipata and Vaidhriti Yogas; also in Astami (eighth), Navami (ninth), Sasthi (sixth), Chaturthi (fourth) Trayodas'i (thirteenth), Chaturdasi (fourteenth) and Amavasya (New Moon), Tithis (lunar days); in the evening twilight and in the night; while the star Bharani, Krittika, Ardra, As'lesa, Jyestha, Dhanistha, S'ravana, or the Janma naksatra (Birth time star) is with the Moon; while the signs Mesa, Karkata, Tula, Kumbha, and Makara are the Lagnas (signs in the ascendant). When the moon and the start are auspicious, especially in the bright fortnight, the Puras'charanam performed, gives the Mantra Siddhi. First of all repeat Svasti vachan and perform duly the Nandi mukha S'raddha and give food and clothing to the Brahmanas. Take the permission of the Brahmanas and begin the Puras'charanam. Where the S'iva Lingam exists, facing west, or in any S'iva temple, commence repeating the mantra. The other S'iva Ksettrams are Kas'i, Kedara, Maha Kala, S'ri Ksettra, and Tryamvakam. These five are the Great Ksettrams, known widely on this earth, for the fructification and the siddhis of the Mantras. At all other places than these, the Karma Chakra is to be drawn according to the principles of the Tantra. And then they will be fit for Puras'charanam. The number of times that the Puras'charanam (the repeating of the mantra) is done on the first day, the same number is to be continued every day until completion; not greater nor less than that and also no intermission or stoppage should occur in the interval.

The repeating of the Mantra is to be commenced in the morning and should be done up to midday. While doing this, the mind is to be kept free from other subjects, and it is to be kept pure; one is to meditate on one's own Deity and on the meaning of the mantra and one should be particularly careful that no inaccuracies nor omissions should occur in the Gayatri, Chhandas and in the repetition of the Mantra. One tenth of the total number of Puras'charanams that are repeated is to be used for the Homa purpose. The Charu is to be prepared with ghee, til, the Bel leaves, flowers, jaya grain, honey and sugar; all mixed, are to be offered as oblations to the fire in the Homa. Then the success in the Mantra comes (i.e., mantra siddhi is obtained or the Mantra becomes manifested). After the Puras'charanam one should do properly the daily and occasional duties and worship the Gayatri that brings in dharma, wealth, objects of desire and liberation. There is nothing superior an object of worship to this Gayatri, whether in this world or in the next. The devotee, engaged in the Puras'charanam, should eat moderately, observe silence, bathe thrice in the three Sandhya times, should be engaged in worshipping one's Deity, should not he unmindful and should not do any other work. He is to remain, while in water, to repeat the Gayatri three lakhs of times. In case the devotee repeats the mantra for achieving success in any other desired work (kamya karma), then he should willingly stick to it until the desired success is attained. Now is being told how to get success in ordinary Kamya karmas. When the sun is rising, repeat the Purascharanam mantra daily thousand times. Then one's life will be lengthened, no disease will occur, and wealth and prosperity will be obtained. If it be done this way, success is surely attained within three months, six months or at the end of one year. If the Homa (offering oblations to the fire) be offered one lakh times with lotuses besmeared with ghee (clarified butter), Moksa (liberation) is attained. If, before the Mantra- Siddhi, or the success in realising the Mantra, is attained, one performs Japam or Homam for Kamya Siddhi (to get certain desires) or moksa, then all his actions become useless. If anybody performs twenty-five lakh Homas by curd and milk, be gets success (Siddhi) in this very birth. So all the Maharsis say. By this the same result is attained that is got by the aforesaid means, i.e., by the eight-limbed Yoga, whereby the Yogis become perfect.

He will attain Siddhi if he be devoted to his Guru and keep hinnself under restraint for six months only (i.e., practise Samyama) as regards taking food, etc., whether he be incapable or his mind be attached to other sensual objects. One should drink Pahcha gavya (cow-urine, cow-dung, milk, curd, ghee) one day, fast one day, take Brahmana's food one day and be mindful in repeating the Gayatri. First bathe in the Ganges or in other sacred places and while in water repeat one hundred Gayatris. If one drinks water on which one hundred Gayatris are repeated, one is freed from all one's sins. He gets the fruit of performing the Krichhra vrata, the Chandrayana vrata and others. Be he a Ksattriya King, or a Brahmana, if he is to remain in his own house, hold As'rama and be engaged in performing Tapasya then he will be certainly freed of all his sins. Be he a house holder or a Brahmachari or Vanaprasthi, he should perform sacrifices, etc., according to his Adhikara (or his rights) and he will get fruits according to his desires. The Sagnik man (who keeps the Holy Fire) and other persons of good conduct and of learning and of good education should perform actions as prescribed in the Vedas and Smritis with a desire to attain Moksa. Thus one should eat fruits and vegetables and and water or take eight mouthfuls of Bhiksanna (the food got by begging). If the Puras'charanam be performed this way, then the Mantra Siddhi is obtained. O Narada! If the Puras'charanam be done with the mantra thus, his poverty is removed entirely. What more shall I say than this that if anybody hears this simply, his merits get increased and he attains great success.

Here ends the Twenty First Chapter of the Eleventh Book on Gayatri Puras'charanam in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-45. Narayana said O Narada! In connection with this Puras'charanann it comes now to my memory about the rules concerning the VaisVa Deva worship (An offering made to the VisVadevas; an offering to all deities made by presenting oblations to fire before meals). Hear. The five yajhas are the following (1) The Devayajha, (2) Brahma yajha, (3) Bhuta yajha, (4) Pitri yajha, and (5) Manusya yajha. Fireplace, the pair of stone pestles, brooms (for sweeping, etc.), sieves and other house-hold things of the sort, wooden mortars (used for cleansing grains from husk) and water- jars, these five are the sources of evils inasmuch as they are the means of killing. So to free one's self from the above sins, one is to sacrifice before the Vais'vadeva. Never offer oblations of Vais'vadeva on hearths, on any iron vessel, on the ground or on broken tiles.

They are to be offered in any sacrificial pit (Kunda) or on any sacrificial altar. Do not fire the hearth by fanning with hands, with winnowing baskets, or with holy deer skin, etc., but you can do so by blowing by your mouth. For the mouth is the origin of fire. If the fire be ignited by clothes, one is liable to get disease; if by winnowing baskets, then less of wealth comes; if by hands, one's death ensues. But if it be done by blowing, then one's success comes. (There is the danger of catching fire.)

One should sacrifice with curd, ghee, fruits, roots and vegetables, and water and in their absence with fuel, grass, etc., or with any other substances soaked with ghee, curd, Payasa or lastly with water. But never with oil or with salty substances. If one performs the Homa with dry or stale substances, one is attacked with leprosy; if anybody performs Homa with leavings of other food he becomes subdued by his enemy; if one does so with rude and harsh substances, he becomes poor and if one does with salty substances, he meets with a downward course, gets degraded in position and honour. You can offer oblations to VaisVadeva with burning coals and ashes from the north side of the fire of the hearth after the preparation of the meals. But you should never offer sacrifices with salty things. The illiterate Brahmana who eats before offering oblations to VaisVadeva goes headlong downwards into the Kala Sutra hell. Whatever food that you are intending to prepare, whether they be vegetables, leaves, roots or fruits, offer oblations to VaisVadeva with that if, before the Homa be performed of VaisVadeva, any Brahmachari comes, then take off, for the Homa, first something; and then give to the beggar and satisfy him and tell him to be off. For the Brahmachari mendicant can remove any defects that may occur to VaisVadeva but VaisVadeva is unable to remove any defects that may occur regarding the mendicant Brahmachari. Both the Paramahansa or Brahmachari mendicant are the masters of the prepared food (Pakkanna); so when anybody takes one's food without giving to any of these two, if they happen to come there, he will have to make the Chandrayana (religious or expiatory penance regulated by the moon's age, that is, waxing or waning). O Narada! After the offering given to Vais'vanara, one is to offer Gograsa, that is, mouthfuls of food to the cows. Hear now how that is done. The mother Surabhi, the beloved of Visnu, is always stationed in the region of Visnu (Visnupada); so O Surabhi! I am offering you mouthfuls of food. Accept it. "Salutation to the cows," saying this, one is to worship the cows and offer food to them.

Hereby Surabhi, the Mother of the cows, becomes pleased. After this, one is to wait outside for a period that is taken to milch a cow, whether any guests are coming. For if any guest goes back disappointed from any house without any food; he takes away all the punyams (merits) of the house-holder and gives him back his own sin. The house-holder is to support mother, father. Guru, brother, son, servants, dependants, guests, those that have come, and Agni (Fire). Knowing all these, he who does not perform the functions of the house-hold is reckoned as fallen from his Dharma both in this world and in the next. The poor house-holder gets the same fruit by performing these five Maha jajhas that a rich Brahmana gets by performing the Soma Yajha. O Best of the Munis! Now I am talking of the Pranagni Hotra or about taking food, knowing the rules of which makes a man free from birth, old age and death and from all sorts of sins. He who takes his food according to proper rules, is freed of the threefold debts, delivers his twenty one generations from the hells, obtains the fruits of all the Yajhas and goes unhampered to all the regions of the righteous. Think of the belly as Arani or the piece of wood for kindling the fire

(by attrition), think of the mind as the churning rod, and think of the wind as the rope, and then kindle the fire, residing in the belly; the eyes are to be considered as the sacrifice^ (the Addharyu), and consider fire in the belly as the result of churning. In this fire of the belly, one is to offer oblations for the satisfaction of Prana, etc., the five deities. First of all offer oblations to the Prana Vayu with food taken by the forefinger, middlefinger and thumb; next offer oblations to the Apana Vayu with the thumb, middle finger and the nameless (anama) finger; next offer oblations to the Vyana Vayu (breath) with the thumb, nameless finger and the little finger; next offer oblations to the Udana Vayu with the thumb, forefinger and the little finger and lastly offer oblations to the Samana Vayu with food taken by all the fingers. At the same time repeat respectively the mantras

“Om Pranaya Svaha,”

“Om Apanaya Svaha,”

“Om Samanaya Svaha,”

“Om Udanaya Svaha,”

“Om Vyanaya Svaha.”

Within the mouth, there is the Ahavaniya fire; within the heart, there is the Garhapatya fire; in the navel, there is the Dhaksinagni fire; below the navel, there is the Sabhyagni fire and below that there is the Avasathyagni fire. Think thus. Next consider the Speech as the Hota, the Prana as the Udgatha, the eyes as the Addharyu, the mind as the Brahma, the ears as the Hota and the keeper of the Agni, the Ahamkara (egoism) as beast (Pas’u), Om Kara as water, the Buddhi (intellect) of the house-holder as the legal wife, the heart as the sacrificial altar, the hairs and pores as the Kus’a grass, and the two hands as the sacrificial ladles and spoons (Sruk and Sruva.) Then think of the colour of the Prana mantra as golden the fire of hunger as the Risi (seer), Surya (the sun) as Devata, the chhandas as Gayatri and Pranaya Svaha as the Mantra uttered; also repeat “Idamadityadevaya namah” and offer oblations to the Prana. The colour of the Apana mantra is milk white. S’raddhagni is the Risi, the Moon is the Devata, Usnik is the chhandas, and “Apanaya Svaha,” “Idam Somaya na namah” are the mantras. The colour of the Vyana mantra is red like red lotuses; the fire Deity Hutasana is the Risi, the fire is the Devata; Anustup is the chhandas, “Vyanaya Svaha” and “Idamagnaye na namah” are the mantras. The colour of the Udana mantra is like that of the worm Indra Gopa; fire is the Risi; Vayu is the Devata, Brihati is the chhandas; “Udanaya Svaha” and “Idam Vayave na namah” are the mantras. The colour of the Samana mantra is like lightning; Agni is the Risi; Parjanya (the rains, water) is the Devata; Pankti is the chhanda; “Samanaya Svaha” and “Idam Parjanyaya na namah” are the mantras. O Narada! Thus offering the five oblations to the five breaths, next offer oblations to the Atman; the Bhisana Vahni is the Risi; the Gayatri is the chhanda; the Self is the Devata; “Atmane Svaha,” and “Idamatmane na namah” are the mantras. O Narada! He who knows this Homa of Pranagnihotra attains the state of Brahma. Thus I have spoken to you in brief the rules of the Pranagni hotra Homa.

Here ends the Twenty-Second Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the rules of VaisVadeva in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-20. Narayana said The best Sadhaka, then uttering after his meals, the mantra "Amritapidhanamasi." (O Water-nectar! Let Thou be the covering to the food that I have taken), should make Achaman (sip one Gandusa water) and distribute the remnant food (the leavings) to those who take the leavings. "Let the servants and maid-servants of our family that expect the leavings of food be satisfied with what leavings I give to them." "Let those inhabitants of the Raurava hell or other unholy places who have remained there for a Padma or Arbuda years and want to drink water, be satisfied with this water that I offer to them and let this water bring unending happiness to them." Repeating the above two mantras let the house¬ holder distribute the leavings of food to the servants and the water to those who want water respectively. Then opening the knot of the Pavitra (a ring of Kus'a grass worn on the fourth finger on certain religious occasions), let him throw this on the square mandalam or the ground. The Brahmana that throws this Kus'a grass on the vessel (Patra) is said to defile the vow of Brahmanas, taking their food. The Brahmana that has not yet washed his face after taking the food, or touching another such Brahmana or a dog, or a S'udra, should fast one day and then drink Pahchagabya and thus purify himself. And in case the Uchchista Brahmin (who has not washed his mouth and hands after meals) be touched by another Brahmin, who is not Uchchista, then simply bathing will purify him. By offering this Ekahuti (oblation once) according to rules mentioned above, one obtains the fruit of performing ten million sacrifices; and by offering this oblation five times one gets the endless fruit, of performing fifty million sacrifices, and if one feeds such a man who knows well how to do this Pranagnihoma, then he as well as he whom he feeds both derive full benefits and they ultimately go to heaven. The Brahmana acquires while taking each of his mouthful of food the fruit of eating Pahchagavya, who takes his food duly with the holy Pavitra Kus'a grass tied on his finger. During the three times of worship, the devotee is to do his daily Japam, Tarpanam and Homa and he should feed the Brahmins. Thus the five limbed Puras'charana is completely done. The religious man should sleep on a low bedding (lie on the ground); he is to control his senses and anger; he is to eat moderately, the things that are light, sweet and good; he is to be humble, peaceful and calm. He is to bathe thrice daily and not to hold any unholy conversation with any woman, a S'udra, one who is fallen, without any initiation, and who is an atheist; as well he should not speak in a language spoken by the chandalas. One is to bow down before him who is in the act of performing the Japam, Homa and worship, etc; one is not to talk with him. Never by deed, mind or word, on all occasions never speak about sexual intercourses; nor hold any contact with such people. For the relinquishment of this subject is called Brahmacharyam (continence) of the kings as well as of the house-holders. But one should go to one's legal wife during the night time after her menstruation duly according to the rules of the S'astras; the Brahmacharyam is not thereby destroyed. Man cannot repay the three-fold debts and he cannot aspire for moksa without procreating sons or without doing the duties of the house¬ holders, as prescribed by the S'astras. An attempt to do so becomes entirely fruitless like the breast on the neck of a goat. Rather it drags one downward. So the S'rutis say. So let yourself be free first from the debts due to the Devas, the debts due to the Risis and the debts due to the Piths. Make sacrifices first and then be free from the Devas' debt. Hold Brahmacharyam and be free from the Risis' debt. Offer til and water; that is, do S'raddhas and tarpanams and be free from the debt due to the Pitris. Then do readily practise your own Varnas'rama Dharma.

21-33. One is to practise Krichchra Chandra yana Vrata and to take for his food, milk, fruits, roots and vegetables, Habisyannam and food obtained by begging so that one may become sinless. One is to make japam for Puras'charanam. One is to avoid salt, salty or alkaline substances, acid, garlic, turnips, eating in Kamsa vessels, chewing betels, eating twice, putting on impure clothings, the intoxicating things and the unsastric nocturnal japam; also one is not to waste one's time over blaming and trying to find faults with the relatives, playing at dice, or talking at random with one's wife (so that evil effects may arise). One is to spend one's time in worshipping the Devas, reciting the hymns of praise, and studying the S'astras. One is to sleep on the ground, practise Brahmacharyam, and the vow of silence, bathe thrice, not practise anything which befits the S'udras only. One is to worship everyday, make charities duly and be always happy, recite stotras daily, do occasional Deva worships, have faith in one's Guru and Deva. These twelve rules are to ensure success to the devotee who does Puras'charanam. One is to daily praise the Sun, with one's face turned towards Him, do japam before Him; or one is to worship one's own Deity in front of fire or the image of any god, and do japam simultaneously. The devotee who practises Puras'charanam is to bathe, worship, do japam, meditate, practise Homa, Tarpanam, is to have no desires and to surrender all fruits to one's own desired Deity, etc. These are necessarily to be observed by him. Therefore while doing japam, Homa, etc., the devotee's mind is to remain always pleasant and satisfied. One should be ready to practise tapasya, to see the S'astras and be merciful to all the beings. As asceticism leads one to to heaven and to the attainment of one's desires, therefore know this that all the powers come to an ascetic. An ascetic can cause another's death (maran); he can injure others, cure diseases and kill all. Whatever the several Risis wanted from the Devi Gayatri and to that end made Puras'charanam and worshipped Her, they obtained from Her all those things. O Narada! I will speak of S'anti Karmas etc., in a future chapter. Here I will speak of those rules, etc., that are to be observed in Puras'charanam in as much as they play the principal part to success.

First of all shave yourself and have your hairs and nails, etc., cut off and bathe and be pure. Then perform the Prajapatya prayas'chitta for one's peace and purification and next do the puras'charanam of the Gayatri. Do not speak the whole day and night. Keep your thoughts pure. If words are to be spoken, speak only what you take as true. First recite Mahavyarhiti and then the Savitri mantra with Pranava prefixed. Then recite the sin-destroying mantra "Apohistha, etc.," and Svasti mati Sukta and "Pavamani Sukta." In every action, in its beginning and at its end one is to understand the necessity of doing the Japam, why and what for one is doing that.

One is to repeat the Pranava, the three Vyarhitis and Savitri ayuta times or one thousand times or one hundred times or ten times.

Then offer with water, the peace offerings (tarpanam) to the Acharya, Risi, Chhandas, and the Devas. Being engaged in action, do not speak any impure language of the MIechchhas or talk with any S'udra or any bad person. Do not talk with wife in the period of menstruation, with one who has fallen, with the low-class person, with any hater of the Devas and the Brahmanas, Acharyas and Gurus, with those who blame the fathers and mothers; nor show any disrespect to anybody. Thus I have spoken in due order about all the rules of Krichchhra vrata. Now I will speak of the rules of the Prajapatya Krichchhra, S'antapana, Paraka Krichchhra and Chandrayana.

34-54. One becomes freed of all the sins, if one performs the above five Chandrayanas. By the performance of the Tapta Krichchhra, all sins are burnt off in an instant. By the performance of the three Chandrayanas the people get purified and go to the Brahma Loka. By doing eight Chandrayanas, one sees face to face one's Devata, ready to grant boons. With ten Chandrayanas, one gets the knowledge of the Vedas and one acquires all what one wants.

In the observance of the Krichchhra Prajapatya Vrata, one has to take food once in midday for three days, once in the evening for three days, and for the next three days whatever one gets without asking anything from anybody. For the next three days one is not to take any thing at all and go on with one's work. These twelve days' work constitutes the Prajapatya Vrata.

Now about the rules of the S'antapana Vrata. On the preceding day one has got to eat food consisting of the mixture of cow urine, cow- dung milk, curd, ghee and the water of the Kus'a grass; the day following he is to fast. These two days' work constitutes the S'antapana Vrata.

Now about the Ati Krichchhra vrata. For the first three days, one is to eat one mouthful of food a day and for the next three days one is to fast. This is the Ati Krichchhra vrata. This vrata repeated three times is called Maha S'antapana vrata. Note According to the opinion of Yama, the fifteen days' work constitutes Maha S'antapana. For the three days one has to eat cow-urine; for the next three days, cow- dung, for the next three days, curd; for the next three days milk; and for the next three days one has to take ghee. Then one becomes pure. This is called the all sin-destroying Maha S'antapan Vrata. Now I am speaking of the nature of the Tapta Krichchhra Vrata.

The Tapta Krichchhra vrata is carried out for the twelve days. For the first three days, one has to drink hot water; for the next three days, hot milk; for the next three days, the hot ghee and for the next three days, air only. Everyday one has to bathe once only under the above rules, and remain self-controlled. If one drinks water simply everyday under the above conditions, that is called the Prajapatya vrata.

To remain without any food for twelve days according to rules is called the Paraka Krichchhra vrata. By this vrata, all sins are destroyed.

Now about the rules of taking food in the Chandrayana vrata. In the dark fortnight one will have to decrease one mouthful of food every day and in the bright fortnight one will have to increase one mouthful every day and one has to fast completely on the Amavasya (new moon) day. One has to bathe thrice daily during every Sandhya time. This is known as the Chandrayana Vrata.

In the S'is'u Chandrayana Vrata one will have to take four mouthfuls of food in the midday and four mouthfuls in the evening. In the Yati Chandrayana one has to take eight mouthfuls in the midday and to control his passions.

55. These abovementioned vratas are observed by the Rudras, Adityas, Vasus, and Maruts; and they are enjoying thereby their full safety.

Each of the above vratas purifies the seven Dhatus of the body in seven nights simply! First skin, then blood, then flesh, bones, sinews, marrows and semen are purified. There is no doubt in this. Thus purifying the Atman by the above vratas, one is to do religious actions. The work done by such a purified man is sure to be met with success. First control the senses, be pure and do good actions.

Then all your desires will be undoubtedly fructified. Fast for three nights, without doing any actions and see the result. (You will not do anything and you want self control! Is this a child's play?) Perform for three days the nocturnal vratas. Then proceed with your desired duties. If one works according to these methods, one gets the fruits of Puras'charanam. O Narada! By the Puras'charanam of S'n Gayatn Devi all desires are fulfilled and all sins are destroyed. Before doing Puras'charanam purify your body by perfornning the above vratas. Then you will get all your desires connpletely fulfilled. O Narada! Thus I have spoken to you of the secret rules of Puras'charanam. Never disclose this to any other body. For it is recognised equivalent to the Vedas.

Here ends the Twenty-third Chapter of the Eleventh Book on the Tapta Krichchhra vrata and others in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Narada said O Bhagavan! Thou art the ocean of mercy; kindly speak out to me in brief all the things and the duties to be observed and applied in the S'anti Karmas (the peace bringing acts) of Gayatri.

2-20. Narayana said O Narada! The question asked by you is esoteric. Never divulge this to a wicked person or any hypocrite. It is to be kept secret. While doing this S'anti Karma, the Brahmanas are to perform the Homas with fuel soaked in milk (Payah). If the fuel of the S'ami tree be offered in Homa ceremony, then diseases caused by planets are cured. If the Homa be performed with wet As'vaththa or Udumbara or other ksira trees, the diseases caused by demons and hob-goblins are cured. If one offers Tarpanam with one palmful of water, repeating the mantra "Suryam Tarpayami namah", the pending evils are also averted and troubles are ceased. The repetition of the Gayatri mantra with knees immersed in water averts all evils. The repetition of Gayatri with body immersed in water upto the throat, averts the danger of life; and the same with whole body immersed grants all success. This is the best of all the S'anti karmas, the acts that bring health, wealth, happiness and peace. While performing Homa, light with the fuel of Ksiravriksa (the trees that emit milky juice); place Pahchagavya in a vessel made of gold, silver, copper or wood of ksira trees, or in the vessels made of earth, without any knot or crack; utter the Gayatri mantra and offer one thousand homas. Sprinkle with water at every offering, touching the Pahchagavya with Kus'a grass, thousand times. Then offer the sacrifices there where calamities or nuisances are seen and meditate on the Highest Devata. Thus all the magic spells used by other persons for a malevolent purpose will be rendered nugatory. Bring under your control any Deva yoni, Bhute Yoni, or Pis'acha Yoni that causes you troubles; then they will quit the house, village, city.

way, even that kingdom. Now hear how they are brought under control. Prepare a sacrificial altar with sand, draw a square on it, place a Sula (spear) in its centre and plaster with Astagandha. For the sake of converting all the evils, repeat Gayatri mantra thousand times and impregnate it with the mantra, dig the ground and place or bury the Sula under it. Place on the level ground or sthandila a jar or Navaphala, a fruit made of gold, silver, or copper or a newly made earthen jar and enclose it with thread. Then have the sacred waters brought from the several Tirthas by the Brahmins and fill the jar, repeating the Gayatri Mantra. Put within this jar the twigs, then of Cardamom tree, sandal tree, karpura tree, jati, aparajita. Saha Devi, Patala, Mallika flower, Bel leaves, rice, barley. Til, mustard, asVattha, and udumbara trees and throw them within the jar. (The Ksira trees are AsVaththa, Udumbara, Plaksa, and Nyagrodha.) Doing all these, prepare one Kus'a Kurcha made of twenty seven Kus'a grass in the form of a braid of hair, round one end of a straight rod and tied in a knot and place it there. Then take your bath and repeat the Gayatri mantra over it one thousand times with your whole mind fully concentrated. Then the Veda knowing Brahmanas would recite the Saura mantra and sprinkle the man attacked by the demon with water and make him drink also the water saturated with the mantra and bathe him also with that. Then that person will be dispossessed of the devil and be happy. Even when the man (possessed by a devil), is going to die, he gets his life again if he be made to drink this water saturated with this mantra and have his bath with that. So a wise King must do this, with a desire to have a long life; and after he is sprinkled with this mantra-charged water he is to give one hundred cows to the Brahmanas as the Daksina.

21-44. The Daksina is to be given according to one's might; and specially what gives satisfaction to the Brahmanas. If one be terrified by a Devil or so or by the mischievous magic spells of others, one is to sit on Saturday under an As'vattha tree and repeat one hundred Gayatris. For the cure of all diseases, if one has to perform the Mrityunjaya Homa, one will have to do Homa with the Gulancha creeper, soaked in milk and deducting the knots thereof. For the pacification of fever, mango leaves soaked with milk ought to be used in the Homa ceremony. The wasting diseases are cured if Homa be performed with the leaves of the Vacha soaked in milk; phthisis or consumption is cured if Homa be performed with curd, milk and ghee. Again, if offerings be given to the Solar Deity and if Payasannam be given to him and if this be given to the consumptive patient, his disease will be cured. Again, on the Amavasya tithi (new moon day) if Homa be performed with Soma creeper (excluding the knot joints) soaked in milk, then consumption will be cured. If Homa be made with the flowers of the S'amkhya tree, then leprosy is cured; if the Homa be done with the seed of Apamarga, the Mrigis or the hysteric and epileptic fits are cured. So if Homa be performed with the fuel of Ksira trees, lunacy is cured; if, with the fuel of udumbara, meha (spermatorrhea) is cured; if with sugarcane juice, gonorrhea is cured; if with curd, milk and ghee or with the ghee of Kapila cow, the homa be performed, the Masurika disease or smallpox will be cured, and if Homa be performed with the fuels of Udumbara, Vata, and AsVatha be performed, then the diseases of cows, elephants and horses are cured. If the trouble be caused by many ants and ant-hills (Madhu Valmika) then perform the Homa ceremony with the fuel of Sami tree one hundred times and with the food prepared of ghee one hundred times and offer sacrifices with the rest of the food; then the above troubles will cease. If there be a earth quake or if there be seen flashes of lightnings, then homa is to be performed with the fuel of Vana Vetasa and the whole kingdom will be happy. If you surcharge any piece of iron with Gayatri mantra repeated hundred times and if you throw it in any direction then no fear will arise from that quarter out of fire, air, or any other enemy. If one be imprisoned, and if he repeats the Gayatri mentally, he will be liberated from the prison. If you touch the man possessed by a devil, disease or mortification and sorrow with the Kus'a grass and repeat the Gayatri mantra, and thus charge him with Divine electricity, that man will be liberated from the fear caused thereby. If you make the man possessed by devils, etc., drink the water charged with the Gayatn mantra or if you cast on his body the ashes charged with hundred Gayatris or tie those ashes on his head repeating the Gayatri mantra, he will be instantly freed of all diseases and will live for one hundred years in happiness. In case a man is unable to do fully all these himself, he can get all these done by other Brahmanas and pay Daksina (fees) to them duly for the same.

O Narada! Now I will tell you how nourishment and wealth are attained. Wealth is attained if the Homa be performed with red lotus or fresh Jati flower or with the S'ali rice or with the fuel of Bel tress, leaves, flowers, fruits or roots or with any portions thereof. If for one week the oblations be offered with fuel of Bel tree mixed with Payasa or with ghee one hundred times, then Laksmi Devi will surely be attained. If the Homa be performed with Laja (fried rice) mixed with curd, milk, and ghee, the daughter will be obtained. If for one week, the Homa be performed with red lotus, then gold is obtained. If the Tarpanam (peace offering) be offered to the Sun, then the treasures, gold hidden under the water, are obtained. If the Homa be performed with food (Anna) then Anna is obtained; if Homa be performed with rice, then rice is obtained.

45-51. If Homa be performed with calfdung, dried and powdered, then animals are obtained. If Homa be performed with Priyangu, Payasa or ghee then the progeny is obtained. If the oblations of Payasanna be offered to the Solar Deity and if the Prasadam (remnant) be given to one's wife under menstruation to eat, then excellent sons will be obtained. If the Homa be performed with the fuel of wet pointed Ksira trees, then longevity is attained. If Homa be performed with the fuel of the Palas'a tree, pointed and wet and mixed with curd, milk, and ghee for one hundred times consecutively, then longevity and gold are attained. If the Homa be performed with Durba grass, milk, honey or ghee, one hundred times, then longevity and golden lotus are obtained. If for one week the Homa ceremony be performed with the fuel of S'ami tree mixed with food, milk or ghee one hundred times of each or if for one week the Homa he performed with the fuel of Nyagrodha tree and afterwards one hundred Homas be made with Payasanna, the fear of unnatural death is removed.

52-60. That man can conquer death who can remain for one week living on milk only and who performs during that time hundreds, and hundreds of Homas and repeats the Gayatri, controlling his speech.

If anybody can fast three nights and control his speech and repeat Gayatri he gets himself freed from the hands of Death; or totally immersed in water if he repeats Gayatri, he will be saved from the impending danger of death. If anybody repeats the Gayatri mantra for one month, taking his seat under a Bel tree or performs Homa with Bel fruit, root or leaves, he gets kingdoms. (Know all the Mantrams are electric in their effects). Similarly if anybody performs Homa with one hundred lotuses, he gets a foeless kingdom. So one becomes the lord of a village if one performs Homa with Yavagu (barley gruel) and Salidhanya. If the Homa be performed with the fuel of Asvaththa tree, victory in battle is ensured and if the Homa be performed with the fuel of Akanda tree, then victory everywhere is ensured. If one hundred Homas be performed extending a week with Vetasa tree's leaves or fruits, dipped in milk and mixed with Payasa, the rainfall is ensured. Similarly if anybody repeats Gayatri for one week with his body upto navel immersed in water, the rainfall is ensured; on the contrary if the Homa be performed with ashes in water, then the cessation of heavy rainfall is ensured. The Homa with the fuel of Palasa gives Brahmateja; Homa with the flowers of Palasa gives everything desired. Homa with milk or drinking Brahmarasa, charged with mantra, increases the intellect; and the Homa with ghee gives Buddhi (medha) (intelligence).

61-69. Homa with flowers gives good smell; Homa with thread gives cloth; Homa with salt and honey mixed or Bel flowers gives one power to control anything and everything that is desired. If anybody bathes everyday immersed completely within water and sprinkles water on his body, he becomes cured of diseases and he becomes very healthy. If any Brahmana does these things for others, he becomes also no doubt healthy. If anybody wants to increase his life period he should practise good deeds and repeat Gayatri thousand times daily for one month. Thus his longevity will be increased. Two months' such practice gives long life and perpetual health; three month's such practice will give life, health, and wealth, four months such practice gives longevity, wealth, fame, women, sons, etc., five months such practice gives longevity, health, wealth, wife, sons and learning. So one should repeat this as many months in proportion to the number of his desires and he would get them. Again any Brahmana who stands on one leg without holding any other thing and raises both his hands and daily repeats three hundred Gayatris for one month, gets all his desires fulfilled. And if he repeats one thousand one hundred Gayatris, there is nothing in this world that is not met and attained with success. Controlling the Prana (inhaling) and Apana (exhaling) Vayu (breath), he who repeats daily three hundred Gayatris to the Devi, his highest desires are satisfied.

70-77. Vis'vamitra Risi says Standing on one leg, with both hands raised and controlling Vayu he who repeats daily one hundred Gayatris for one month, gets all his desires fulfilled. Similarly with three hundred or thousand repeatings, all things are attained. Submerged under water, if one repeats Gayatris as many times as mentioned above, he gets everything. If, for one year, with hands uplifted and without holding anything, anyone stands on one leg, controls one's breath and repeats Gayatri mantra three hundred times or thousand times, eating Havisyannam only in the night time, he becomes a Risi (Seer). This thing repeated two years gives infallible speech; three years gives knowledge of the present, past and future; four years will enable one to see face to face the Solar God; five years will give the eight Siddhis, lightness, etc., six years will enable one to assunne forms as he desires; seven years gives immortality; nine years gives Manuhood; ten years gives Indrahood; eleven years gives Brahma-hood; and twelve years gives the state of Parama Brahma.

78-90. O Narada! By these practices of Tapasyas you and other Risis have been able to conquer the three Lokas (regions). Some ate only vegetables; some fruits; some, roots; some simply water; some, ghee; some, Somarasa; whereas some others ate only charu and did tapasya. Some Risis practised this great Tapasya by eating very little for a fortnight only. Some ate food, only what they got by begging during the day; and some ate only Havisyanna. O Narada! Now hear the rules for the purification and expiation of sins. For the expiation of the sin incurred in stealing gold, one is to repeat three thousand Gayatris (daily) for one month; then the sin will be destroyed. By this act also the sins incurred by drinking or by going to one's Guru's wife are destroyed. Vis'vamitra Risi says The sin incurred by killing a Brahmana (Brahmahatya) is destroyed if one erects a shed in a forest and, living there, repeats three thousand Gayatris daily for one month. Those Brahmanas that have committed the Great Sins (i.e., Mahapatakas), become free, if they repeat one thousand Gayatris daily, submerged under water, for twelve successive days. By controlling speech and by practising Pranayama, if one repeats three thousand Gayatris daily for one month, one will be free from the Mahapatakas. If one practises one thousand Pranayamas repeating the Gayatri, one becomes freed also of Brahmahatya. If one draws upwards the Prana and Apana Vayus six times, repeating the Gayatri with collected mind, this destroys all the sins and it is called all-sin destroying Pranayama. If one practises this Pranayama one thousand times for one month, the lord of the earth becomes freed of all sins. If any Brahmana incurs the sin of killing a cow, for twelve days he is to repeat three thousand Gayatris daily for expiation. Similarly the repetition of ten thousand Gayatris removes the sin of going to those not fit to be gone into, eating the uneatables, stealing and killing and this act brings in peace. All sins are destroyed by performing one hundred Pranayamas with Gayatri. Again if there be a mixture of various sins, one will have to live in the forest for one month and repeat one thousand Gayatris or practise fasting and repeat three thousand Gayatris; thus all sins will be destroyed.

91-100. To repeat Gayatri twenty-four thousand times is equal to performing the Krichchhra vrata and to repeat sixty four thousand Gayatris duly is equal to performing the Chandrayana. If anybody repeats, in the morning and evening Sandhya times, the merit giving Gayatri one hundred times, with Pranayama, all his sins are destroyed. So, submerged under water, if one repeats the Gayatri Devi, meditating Her in the Sun, one hundred times daily, one's all the sins are fully destroyed. O Narada! Thus I have described to you all about averting or destroying the evils and the purification of various sins. All this is secret. Keep it carefully concealed. Never divulge this. Whoever divulges this will bring his own ruin. I have spoken to you, in brief, all about Sadachara (right way of living). If anybody practises this duly, according to rules, S'ri Mahamaya Durga Devi becomes pleased with him. If anybody wants to have both enjoyment and liberation, he is to practise all these daily, as well as the occasional, and Kamya (desired) duties duly according to rules. It is stated in all the S'astras, that this Achara (right way of living) is the foremost and the chief Dharma, the Deity of which is the Supreme Mother Herself. O Narada! That man who practises duly this Achara is, in this world, holy, happy and blessed. This I speak to you truly. If anybody desires to get the Devi Bhagavati's Grace, he should first of all set himself at once to practise this Sadachara. He who hears this gets wealth and great happiness. There is no doubt in this. Now speak what more you want to hear.

English translation

1-7. Narada said O Deva! The rules of Sadachara (right ways of living) and the all-sin-destroying unequalled Glories of the Devi Bhagavati have been described by Thee. And I, too, have heard the nectar of the Glories of the Devi from Thy lotus mouth. The Chandrayana and other Vratas; described by Thee, are very difficult to practise. So they are impracticable with the ordinary persons. Therefore, O Lord! Kindly describe those actions which can easily be carried out by common persons, at the same time, the Devi's Grace and Siddhis can be obtained by those practices. Again what thou hast described about the Gayatri in connection with Sadachara kindly say which are the chief and foremost as well as those that are more meritorious. O Best of the Munis! Thou hast told that there are the twenty-four syllables in the Gayatri. Kindly describe now their Risis, Chhandas, Devatas and other things that should be known regarding them and thus satisfy my longings.

8-27. S’ri Narayana said O Narada! The twice-born would have done what they ought to do if they be engaged in repeating their Gayatri only, whether they be able or not able to practise the Chandrayana and the other vratas. Whichever Brahmin repeats the Gayatri three thousand times and offers Arghya to the Sun in the three Sandhya times, the Devas worship him; what to speak of other ordinary persons! Whether he practises Nyasa or not, if anybody sincerely repeats the Gayatri Devi, Whose Nature is Existence, Intelligence, and Bliss and meditates on Her, even if he attains siddhi in one syllable even, then as a result of that, he can vie with the best of the Brahmanas, the Moon, and the Sun; nay, with Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'vara even! O Narada! Now I will tell in due order the Risis, Chhandas, and the Devatas of the twenty-four syllables of the Gayatri. The Risis, in due order, are (1) Varna Deva, (2) Attri, (3) Vas'istha, (4) S’ukra, (5) Kanva, (6) Paras'ara, (7) the very fiery

VisVamitra, (8) Kapila, (9) S’aunaka, (10) Yajnavalkya, (11) Bharadvaja, (12) the ascetic Jamadagni, (13) Gautama, (14) Mudgala, (15) Vedavyasa, (16) Lomas'a, (17) Agastya, (18) Kaus'ika, (19) Vatsya, (20) Pulastya, (21) Manduka, (22) the ascetic in chief Durvasa, (23) Narada and (24) Kas'yapa-

Now about the chhandas (1) Gayatn, (2) Usnik, (3) Anustup, (4) Brihati, (5) Pankti, (6) Trisnup, (7) Jagati, (8) Atijagati, (9) S’akkan, (10) Ati S’akkan, (11) Dhriti, (12) Ati Dhriti, (13) Virat, (14) Prastarapankti, (15) Kriti, (16) Prakriti, (17) Akriti, (18) Vikriti, (19) Samkriti, (20) Aksarapankti, (21) Bhuh, (22) Bhuvah, (23) Svah and (24) Jyotismati. The Devatas of the several letters in due order, are - (1) Agni, (2) Prajapati, (3) Soma, (4) Is'ana, (5) Savita, (6) Aditya, (7) Brihaspati, (8) Maitravaruna, (9) Bhagadeva, (10) Aryama, (11) Ganes'a, (12) Tvastra, (13) Pusa, (14) Indragni, (15) Vayu, (16) Vamadeva, (17) Maitra varuni (18) VisVadeva, (19) Matrika, (20) Visnu, (21) Vasu, (22) Rudra Deva, (23) Kuvera, and (24) the twin As'vini Kumaras. O Narada! Thus I have described to you about the the Devatas of the twenty-four syllables. The hearing of this destroys all sins and yields the full results of repeating the mantra Gayatri. (Note The Devatas, mentioned in the Gayatri Brahma Kalpa are different from those mentioned here.)

English translation

1-18. Narayana said O Narada! O Great Muni! Now hear which are the S’aktis in due order of the twenty four syllables of the Gayatri Devi:-

(1) Varna Devi, (2) Priya, (3) Satya, (4) VisVa, (5) Bhadravilasini, (6) Prabha Vati, (7) Jaya, (8) S’anta, (9) Kanta, (10) Durga, (11) Sarasvati, (12) Vidruma, (13) Vis'ale'sa, (14) Vyapini, (15) Vimala, (16) Tamopaharini, (17) Suksma, (18) VisVayoni, (19) Jaya, (20) Vas'a, (21) Padmalaya, (22) Paras'obha, (23) Bhadra, and (24) Tripada.

Now hear the respective colours of the several syllables of the Gayatri Devi (1) like Champaka and AtasT flowers, (2) like Vidruma, (3) like crystal, (4) like lotus; (5) like the Rising Sun; (6) white like conchshell; (7) white like Kunda flower; (8) like Prabala and lotus leaves; (9) like Padmaraga, (10) like Indranilamani; (11) like pearls; (12) like Saffron; (13) like the black collyrium of the eye; (14) red; (15) like the Vaidurya mani; (16) like Ksaudra (Champaka tree, honey, water); (17) like turmeric; (18) like Kunda flower; and the milk (19) like the rays of the Sun; (20) like the tail of the bird S’uka; (21) like S’atapatra; (22) like Ketaki flower; (23) like Mallika flower; (24) like Karavira flower.

Now about their Tattvas (1) earth; (2) water; (3) fire; (4) air; (5) Akas'a (ether); (6) smell; (7) taste; (8) form; (9) sound; (10) touch; (11) male generative organ; (12) anus; (13) legs, (14) hands; (15) speech; (16) Prana (vital breath); (17) tongue; (18) eyes; (19) skin;

(20) ears; (21) Prana (up going breath); (22) Apana; (23) Vyana, (24) Samana.

Now about the Mudras of the syllables:-- (I) Sammukha; (2) Samputa; (3) Vitata; (4) Vistrita; (5) Dvinnukha, (6) Trimukha; (7) Chaturmukha; (8) Pahchamukha; (9) Sanmukha; (10) Adhomukha; (11) Vyapakanjali (12) S’akata; (13) Yamapas'a; (14) Grathita; (15) Sanmukhon mukha (16) Vilamba; (17) Mustika; (18) Matsya; (19) Kurma; (20) Varahaka; (21) Simhakranta, (22) Mahakranta; (23) Mudgara, and (24) Pallava.

The Mahamudras of the fourth foot of Gayatri are (1) Trisulayoni (2) Surabhi; (3) Aksa mala; (4) Linga; and (5) Ambuja. O Narada! Thus I have described to you all about the Mudras, etc., of the several syllables of the Gayatri. If during Japam, one thinks all these and at the same time repeats, all his sins are destroyed and his wealth gets increase and the fame attends on him.

English translation

1-3. Narada spoke O Bhagavan! Thou art the Lord of this world; Thou canst shew favour and disfavour both; Thou art specially versed in the sixty-four Kalas (arts of learning); Thou art the chief of the Yogis. I therefore ask Thee to solve a doubt of mine. By what Punyam a man can become free from all his sins and limitations and he can realise and become of the nature of Brahma. O Lord! And what are duly the Risis, Chhandas, Devatas, Dhyan, and Nyasa, etc., of this meritorious act? I want to hear.

4-25. Narayana said O Narada! There is but one and the only one way to this and though that is very secret, I will disclose that to you.

It is the Gayatri-Kavacha. It can destroy all sins. Therefore to recite or to hold it on one's body enables the man to become free from all his sins and to get all his desires fulfilled and he gets the Sayuya Mukti with the Devi (be merged in the DevT-Body). Now hear the Risis, Chhandas, etc., of this Kavacha Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'vara are the Risis; the Rik, Yajus, Sama and Atharva Vedas are the Chhandas; the Parama Kala Gayatri of the nature of Brahma is the Devata; “Tat” in Gayatri is the Vija; “Bharga” is the S’akti; and “Dhiyah” is the Kilaka; and its viniyoga (application) is in getting the Moksa (liberation.). With the first four syllables touch the heart; with the next three letters touch the head; with the next four letters touch the tuft on the crown of the head; with the next three letters on the Kavacha; with the next four letters on the eyes and with the last four letters make the Nyasa, all over the body repeating “Astraya Phat,”

O Narada! Hear now the Dhyanam of Gayatri, that grants all desires. The Gayatri Devi has five faces; one of which is of white colour; and the other four is of pearl, Vidruma, golden, and Nilakantamani colour respectively. Each face has got three eyes; on the head there is a crown of jewels and the digit of the Moon is shining there. Her body is composed of the twenty-four tattvas. She has ten hands On the top right and left hands there are two lotuses; lower down, there are disc and conch shell; lower down, there are rope and skull; lower down, there are noose and goad; and on the bottom hands right and left she is making signs of “No fear” and “ready to grant boons.” Thus meditating on S’ri Gayatri, one is to recite the Kavacha thus Let the Gayatri Devi protect my front; Savitri Devi protect my right; the Sandhya Devi, my back and the Devi Sarasvati, my left. Let my Mother Parvati Devi protect my quarters. Let Jalas'ayini protect the southeast; Yatudhana Bhayankari protect my South-west; Pavamanavilasini my north-west; Rudrarupini Rudrani protect my north-east. Let Brahmani protect my top and Vaisnavi protect my nether regions. Let the word “Tat” in the Gayatri protect my legs; “Savituh” protect my Knees; “Varenyam,” protect my loins;

“Bhargah,” my navel. Let “Devasya” protect my heart; “Dhimahi” protect my neck; “Dhiyah,” protect my eyes; “Yah,” protect my forehead; “Nah” protect my head; and “Prachodayat” protect the tuft on the crown of my head.

Again let the “Tat” of the twenty-four syllabled Gayatri protect my head; “Sa,” protect my forehead; “Vi” protect my eyes; “Tu” my cheeks; “Va,” protect my nostrils; “Re,” my mouth; “ni” protect my upper lip; “Yah” protect my lower lip; “Bha” within my face; “rgo,” protect my cheeks; “De,” my throat; “Va” my shoulders; “Sya” my right hand; “Dhi” my navel; “ma,” my heart, “Hi,” my belly; “Dhi,” my navel; “Yo” my loins; “Yo”, my anus; “nah,” my thighs, “Pra,” my Knees; “Cho” my shanks “Da” my heels; “Ya” my legs; and let “at” protect all my sides. O Narada! This divine Kavacha of the Devi Gayatri can baffle hundreds and thousands of obstructions and evils; can grant sixty-four Kalas and liberation. By the glory of this Kavacha, man can become free from all evils and can attain the state of Brahma. Moreover whoever reads or hears this acquires the fruits of making a gift of a thousand cows.

1-2. Narada said O Bhagavan! I have heard from you all about the Kavacha and the Mantra of S'ri Gayatri. O Deva Deva! O Thou, the Knower of the present, the past, and the future! Now tell about the Hridaya, the highest, the interior or esoteric Essence of the Gayatri, holding which, if one repeats the Gayatri, he acquires all the punyam (merits), I am desirous to hear this.

3-8. Narayana said O Narada! This subject on the Hridaya of Gayatri is explicitly written in the Atharva Veda. Now I will speak on that, the great secret, in detail. Listen. First, consider the Gayatri, the Devi, the Mother of the Vedas as of a Cosmic Form (Vira trupa) and meditate all the Devas as residing on Her Body. Now in as much as the Pinda and Brahmanda are similar, consider yourself as of the form of the Devi and meditate within yourself on the Devatas, thus The Pundits, the Knowers of the Vedas, say this He is not yet fit to worship the Deva and he is not an Adhikari as yet who has not been able to make himself a Deva; therefore to establish the knowledge of the oneness of the Deva and himself, he is to meditate the Devas within his body, thus:-o Narada! Now I will speak on the Hridaya of Gayatri, knowing which every man becomes able to become all the Devas. Listen. The Risi of this Gayatri Hridaya is Narayana; the Chhandas is Gayatri; and S'ri ParamesVari Gayatri is the Devata. Perform the Nyasa of this as mentioned before and taking your seat in a lonely place, meditate intently on the Devi with your heart and head well collected. Now I am speaking of the Arthanyasa. Hear. Meditate on the Devata Dyau on your head; the twin AsVins on the rows of the teeth; the two Sandhyas on your upper and lower lips; the Agni, Fire, within your mouth; Sarasvati, on the tongue;

Brihaspati on the neck; the eight Vasus on the two breasts; the Vayus, on the two arms; the Paryanya Deva on the heart; Akas'a, on the belly; Antariksam (the middle space) on the navel; Indra and

Agni, on the loins; Prajapati, the condensed form, as it were, of Vijhana, on the hip joints; the Kailas'a and the Malaya mountains on the two thighs; the Visvedevas on the two knees; VisVamitra on the shanks; the Sun's northern and southern paths, the Uttarayana and Daksinayana on the anus; the Piths on the thighs; the Earth on the legs; the Vanaspati on the fingers and toes; the Risis on the hairs of the body; the Muhurtas on the nails; the planets on the bones; the Ritus (seasons) on the blood and flesh; the Samvatsaras on the Nimisa (twinkling of eye) the Sun and the Moon on the day and night respectively. Thinking thus, repeat "I take refuge of the Divine Holy Gayatri, the Chief and most Excellent One, the Thousand eyed and I take refuge wholly unto Her."

Then repeat "I bow down to Tat savitur varenyam," "I bow down to the Rising Sun on the East," "I bow down to the Morning Aditya," "I bow down to the Gayatri, residing in the Morning Sun" and "I bow down to all." O Narada! Whoever recites this Gayatri Hridaya in the morning finds all the sins committed in the night all destroyed! Whoever recites this in the evening gets his sins of the day all destroyed! Whoever recites this in the evening and in the morning can rest assured to have become free of sins; he gets the fruits of all the Tirthas; he is acquainted with all the Devas; he is saved if he has spoken anything that ought not to have been spoken; if he has eaten anything that is not fit to be eaten; if he has chewn and sucked anything that ought not to have been chewn and sucked; if he has done anything that ought not to have been done and if he has accepted hundreds and thousands of gifts that ought never to have been accepted.

The sins incurred by eating with the others in a line cannot touch him. If he speaks lies, he will not be touched by the sins thereof; even if a non-Brahmachari recites this, he will become a Brahmachari. O Narada! What more shall I say to you of the results of Gayatri Hridaya than this that whoever will study this will acquire the fruits of performing thousand sacrifices and repeating the Gayatri sixty thousand times. In fact, he will get Siddhi by this. The Brahmana, who daily reads this in the morning will be freed of all the sins and go upwards to the Brahma (Loka) and is glorified there.

This has been uttered by Bhagavan Narayana Himself.

English translation

1. Narada said O All knowing One! Thou showest Thy grace to Thy devotees! Thou hast described this sin-destroying Gayatri Hridaya. Now describe Her Stava (hymn of praise).

2-29. Narayana said O World-Mother! O Thou, favouring Thy devotees! O Thou, the Prime Force, O Omnipresent! Infinite! S’ri Sandhye! I bow down to Thee. Thou art the Sandhya; Thou art the Gayatri, Savitri and Sarasvati; Thou art Brahmi, Vaisnavi and Raudri and Thou art red, white, and black (the colours of Gayatri, Savitri and Sarasvati) that Thou assumest respectively. O Bhagavati! Thou art always meditated by the Munis as young in the morning, full of youth in the mid-day, and aged in the evening. I bow down to Thee. Thou art seen by the Tapasvis (ascetics) as Brahmani, riding on Hamsa (swan), Sarasvati riding on Garuda, and Savitri riding on Bull. Thou art seen within by the ascetics as manifesting the Rigveda (in the form of Savitri) in this world, as manifesting Yayurveda in the middle space (antariksam) and as manifesting Samaveda everywhere in the Rudra loka, thus roaming in the three worlds. I bow down to Thee. O Devi! Thou art Rudrani in the Rudra loka, Vaisnavi in the Visnu loka, and Brahmani in the Brahma loka; thus Thou shewest Thy favour to the Immortals. O Devi! Thou art the Mother delighting the seven Risis (of the Great Bear); Thou art Maya. Thou grantest great many boons to Thy Bhaktas. Thou art sprung from the eyes and hands, tears and perspiration of S’iva and S’iva. Thou art the Mother of delights, Durga Devi, recited by the following ten names Varenya, Varada, Varistha, Varavarnini, Garistha, Varaha, Vararoha, Nilaganga, Sandhya and Bhoga Moksada. Thou art the Bhagirathi (the river Ganges) in this world; the Bhogavati in the Patala; and the Mandakini (the milky way) in the Heavens. Thou art in this world (Bhur loka) the all-enduring PrithvT (earth); Thou art the Vayu S’akti (air power) in the middle space

(Bhubhar Loka); Thou art the energy (the ocean of Tejas) in the Heavens (Svar loka); Thou art the Great Siddhi in the Mahar loka; Thou art Jana in the Janar Loka; Thou art Tapasvini in the Tapar loka; Thou art Truth (True Speech) in the Satya lokann. Thou art Kamala in Visnu loka; Gayatri in Brahma loka; and the other half of Hara as Gauri in the Rudra loka. O Devi! Thou art sung as Prakrit! - “Aham” “Om-Mahat” tattva and beyond that the Highest Sarva Brahma rupini and Samyavastha Prakrit!. Thou art the Para S’akti; Thou art the Parama S’akti; O Devi! Thou art the Tri-S’akti the Ichchha S’akti (the will power), the Kriya S’akti (power of action) and the Jhana S’akti (the force of knowledge).

Thou art the Ganga, Yamuna, Vipas'a, Sarasvati, Sarayu, Devika, Sindhu; Narmada, Iravati, Godavari, S’atadru; Kaveri, Kaus'iki, Chandra Bhaga, Vitasta, Gandaki, Tapini, Karatoya, Gomati, and Vetravati and other rivers; Thou art the Ida, Pingala, and Susumna nerves; Thou art Gandhari, Hastajihva, Pusa, Apusa, Alambusa, Kuhu, S'ankhini, Pranavahini and other nerves in the body; O Devi! Thou art the vital power in the lotus of the heart; Thou art Svapna naika in the throat; Thou art Sadadhara in the palate; and Thou art the Vindumalini S'akti in the pituitary space between the eyebrows.

Thou art the Kundalini in the Muladhara (sacral plexus), the Vyapini extending upto the roots of the hairs; Thou art Madhyasana on the crown of the head, and Thou art Manonmani in the Brahmarandhra. O Devi! What need there is in stating these? Suffice it to say that whatever there is seen in this universe, all art Thou; therefore, O S'ri Sandhya Devi! I bow down to Thee. O Narada! Thus I have spoken to you about the Gayatri-Stotra that gives all successes, destroys all sins, and yields all merits.

He who reads this in the Sandhya times, with all attention, will get sons if he has no sons, will get wealth if he has no wealth. There is no doubt in this. Whoever reads this Stotra gets the fruits of all Tirthas, all Tapasyas, all gifts, all sacrifices and all Yogas. He enjoys happiness in this world and finally gets the Moksa. The Munis who are engaged in Tapasyas read this Stotra. While bathing, if one reads this, merged under water, acquires the fruits of his being merged in the Sandhya. O Narada! I speak this verily, verily, verily, unto you that there is no trace of any doubt in this statement. Whoever will hear with devotion this Sandhya stotra, the nectar-like thing, will be freed from all sins.

English translation

1-3. Narada said O Bhagavan! O All-knowing One! O Thou versed in all the S'astras! I have heard from Thy mouth all the secrets of S'rutis and Smritis. Now I ask Thee, O Deva! How can the knowledge of that Veda Vidya (Learning) be obtained by which all sins are rooted out and destroyed, how is Brahmajhanam obtained and how can Moksa be obtained? How can death be conquered and how can the best results be obtained in this world and in the next. O Lotus-eyed One! Thou ought'st to describe fully all these to me.

4-9. Narayana said O Narada! O Highly Learned One! Sadhu! Sadhu! You have now put a nice question indeed! Now I will describe one thousand and eight names of the Gayatri Devi. Listen attentively. These all sin-destroying auspicious names were composed by Brahma and first recited by Him. Its Risi is Brahma; the Chhandas is Anustup; the Devata is Gayatri; its Vija is Halavarna (consonants) and its S'akti is Svaravarna (vowels). Perform the Anga Nyasa and the Kara Nyasa by the Matrika varnas (that is, by the fifty syllables). Now hear its Dhyanam, that will do good to the Sadhakas (the practisers). [N.B. Amga Nyasa - Touching the limbs of the body with the hand accompanied by appropriate Mantras. Kara Nyasa - assignment of the various parts of fingers and hand to different deities which is usually accompanied with prayers and corresponding gesticulations.] I worship the Kumari (virgin) Gayatri Devi, the Lotus-eyed One, riding on the Swan (the Pranas), and seated on a lotus (creation); Who is three-eyed and of a red colour; and Who is bright and decorated with gems and jewels of red, white, green, blue, yellow and other variegated colours; Who is holding in Her hands Kundika, the rosary, lotus and making signs as if ready to grant the desired boons and on whose neck is suspended the

10-16. Now I will recite the one thousand and eight names of the Gayatri, beginning with the syllable "a" and going on a, a, i, i, etc., in due order of the alphabets. Listen! Her ways and actions cannot be comprehended by intellect (Buddhi); She is therefore Achintya Laksana; She is Avyakta (unmanifested; unspeakable); She is ArthamatrimahesVari, (because She is the Controller of Brahma, etc.); She is Amritarnava madhyastha, Ajita and Aparajita. Thou art Animadigunadhara, Arka mandalasamsthita, Ajara, Aja, Apara, Adharma (she has no dharma, caste, etc.), Aksasutradhara, Adhara; Akaradaksakaranta (beginning with the syllable "a" and ending with the syllable "ksa", thus comprising the fifty syllables), Arisadvargabhedini (destroying the five passions), Anjanadripratikas'a, Anjanadrinivasini, Aditi, Ajapa, Avidya, Aravindanibheksana, Antarvahihsthita, Avidyadhvamsini, and Antaratmika. Thou art Aja. 156-159. O Narada! Thus I have described to you one thousand (and eight) names of Gayatri; the hearing of which yields merits and destroys all sins and gives all prosperity and wealth. Specially in the Astamitithi (eighth lunar day) if after one's meditation (dhyanam) worship, Homa, and japam, one recites this in company with the Brahmanas, one gets all sorts of satisfactions. These one thousand and eight names of the Gayatri ought not to be given to anybody indiscriminately. Speak this out to him only who is very devoted, who is a Brahmana, and who is an obedient disciple. Even if any devotee, fallen from the observances of Achara (right way of living), be a great friend, still do not disclose this to him.

160-165. In whatever house, these names are kept written, no cause of fear can creep in there and Laksmi, the Goddess of wealth, though unsteady, remains steady in that house.

This great secret yields merits to persons, gives wealth to the poor, yields moksa to those who are desirous of it, and grants all desires.

If anybody reads this, he gets cured of his diseases, and becomes freed from bondages and imprisonment. All the Great Sins, for example, murdering Brahmanas, drinking wine, stealing gold, going to the wife of one's Guru, taking gifts from bad persons, and eating the uneatables, all are destroyed, yea, verily destroyed! O Narada! Thus I have recited to you this Great Secret. All persons get, indeed, united with Brahma (Brahama sayujya) by this. True. True. True. There is not the least trace of doubt here.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the one thousand and eight names of the Gayatri in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Narada said I have heard the one thousand nannes or nama stotras equivalent in its fruits to S'ri Gayatri, highly potent in making a good fortune and tending to a splendid increase of the wealth and prosperity. Now I want to hear about how initiations in Mantrams are performed, without which nobody, be he a Brahmin, a Ksattriya, a Vais'ya or a S'udra, is entitled to have the Devi Mantra. O Lord! Kindly describe the ordinary (Samanya) and the special (vis'esa) rules thereof.

4-41. Narayana said O Narada! Listen. I am now telling you about the rules of initiation (Diksa) of the disciples, pure in heart. When they are initiated, they become entitled then and not before that, to worship the Devas, the Fire and the Guru. That method of instruction, and religious act and ceremony is called the Diksa (initiation) by which the Divine Knowledge is imparted; and at once flashes in the heart and mind of the initiated that Knowledge and all his sins are then destroyed. So the Pundits of the Vedas and the Tantras, say. (The Divine Knowledge is like lightning, fire, arising and permeating the body, mind, and spirit.) This Diksa ought to be taken by all means. This gives excellent merits and pure results. Both the Guru and the S'isya (disciple) ought to be very pure and true. (This is the first essential requisite. Then the results are instantaneous). First of all, the Guru is to perform all the morning duties, he is to take his bath and perform his Sandhya Vandanams. He is to return home from the banks of the river with his Kamandalu and observe maunam (silence). Then, in order to give Diksa, he is to enter into the assigned room (Yaga Mandapa) and take his seat on an Asana that is excellent and calculated to please all. He is to perform Achanara and do Pranayama. Then he should take water in his Arghya vessel and putting scents and flowers in that, charge that water with Phatkara mantra (that is, condense electricity Spirit in that). Then uttering the Phat mantra, he is to sprinkle the water on the doorways of the worshiproom and begin his Puja. Firstly, on the top of the door at one end invoke the Deity Gananatha by His mantra, at the other end invoke Sarasvati by Her mantra and at the middle, invoke Laksmi Devi by Her mantra duly and worship them, with flowers. Then, on the right side worship Ganga and Bighnes'a; and on the left side worship Ksettrapala and Yamuna, the daughter of the Sun. Similarly, on the bottom of the door, worship the Astra Devata by the Phat mantra. Then consider the whole Mandapa as inspired with the presence of the Devi, and see the whole place as pervaded by Her through and through. Then, repeat the Phat mantra and destroy the Celestial obstacles as well as those from the middle space (Antariksa); strike the ground thrice with the left heel and thus destroy the Terrene obstacles. Then touching the left branch on the left side of the choukat, put the right foot forward and enter into the Mandapa. Then instal the S'anti Kumbha (the peace jar) and offer the ordinary Arghya (Samanyargha). Next worship the Vastunatha and Padmayoni with flowers and Atapa rice and the Arghya water, on the south-west and then purify the Pancha Gavya. Next sprinkle all the Mandapa and the entrance gate with that Arghya water. And, while sprinkling with Arghya water, consider the whole space right through as inspired with the presence of the Devi and repeat the Mula Mantra with devotion and sprinkle with Phat mantra. The Karta, then, uttering the mantra "Phat," is to drive away all the evils from the Mandapa and uttering the mantra "Hum" sprinkle water, all around, thus pacifying the atmosphere and bringing peace into the hearts of all present.

Then burn the Dhupa incense inside and scatter Vikira (water, sandal-paste, yava, ashes, Durba grass with roots, and Atapa rice). Then collect all these rice, etc., again with a broom made of Kus'a grass to the north east corner of the Mandapa; making the Sankalpa and uttering Svasti vachana (invocation of good), distribute and satisfy the poor and orphans with feeding, clothing and money. Then he should bow down to his own Guru and take his seat humbly on the soft Asanam allotted to him with his face eastwards and meditate on the Deity (Ista Deva) of the mantra that is to be imparted to the disciple. After meditating thus, he is to do the Bhuta s'uddhi (purification of elements) and perform Nyasa, etc., of the Deya mantra (the mantra that is to be imparted to the disciple) according to the rules stated below, i.e., the Risi on the head; the chhandas in the mouth, the Ista Devata in the heart, Bija on the anus and S'akti Nyasa on the two legs. Then he is to make sound thrice by the clap of his palm and thus thwart off all the evils of the earth and the middle space and then make digbandhan (tieing up the quarters) by the mudra chhotika three times (snapping the thumb and forefinger together). Then perform the Pranayama with the Mula mantra of the would-be-lsta-Devata and do the Matrika Nyasa in one's own body, thus Om Am namah s'irasi, Om Am namah on the face, Om Im namah on the right eye, Om Im namah on the left eye, and so on, assign all the letters duly to their respective places. Then perform the Karanga Nyasa on the fingers and the Sadanga Nyasa thus Speak: Om Hridayaya namah, touching on the heart, utter Om S'irase svaha, touching the head; Om S'ikhayai Vasat, touching the tuft; Om Kavachaya Hum, touching on the Kavacha,

"Om netratrayaya Vausat," touching the eye, and "Om Astraya Phat" touching both the sides of the hand, the palm and its back. Then finish the Nayasa by doing the Varnanyasa of the Mula mantra in those places that are said in the cognate kalpas (i.e., throat, heart, arms, legs, etc.).

O Narada! Next consider within your body the seat of an auspicious Asana (a seat) and make the Nyasa of Dharma on the right side, Jhanam on the left side, of Vairagyam (dispassion) on the left thigh, prosperity and wealth on the right thigh, of non-Dharma in the mouth and of Non-Jhanam on the left side, Avairagyam (passion) on the navel, and poverty on the right side. Then think of the feet of the Asana (the body) as Dharma, etc., and all the limbs as Adharma (non-Dharma). In the middle of the Asana (body), i.e., in the heart consider Ananta Deva as a gentle bed and on that a pure lotus representing this universe of five elements. Then make Nyasa of the Sun, Moon, and Fire on this lotus and think the Sun as composed of twelve Kalas (digits) the Moon composed of sixteen Kalas (digits) and the Fire as composed of ten Kalas. Over this make Nyasa of Sattva, Raja and Tamo Gunas, Atma, Antaratma, Paramatma and Jhanatma and then think of this as his Ista's altar where the devotee is to meditate on his Ista Devata, the Highest Mother. Nyasa- assignment of the various parts of the body to different deities which is usually accompanied with prayers and corresponding gesticulations. Next the devotee is to perform the mental worship of the Deya Mantra Devata according to the rules of his own Kalpa; next he is to show all the Mudras, stated in the Kalpa for the satisfaction of the Deva. The Devas become very pleased when all these Mudras are shown to them.

42-46. O Narada! Now, on one's left side, erect an hectagon; inside it a circular figure; inside this again a square and then draw within that square a triangle and over it show the S'ankha Mudra. After finishing the Puja of the Six Deities at the six corners of the hectagon. Fire, etc., take the tripod of the S'ankha (conch-shell) and sprinkling it with Phat mantra, place it within the triangle. Utter, then, the Mantra "Mam Vahniman dalaya Das'a Kalatmane Amuka Devya Arghyapatrasthanaya namah" and thus worshipping the S'ankhya vessel place it within the mandala. Then worship in the S'ankha patra, the ten Kalas of Fire, beginning from the East, then south-east and so on. Sprinkle the S'ankha, conchshell, with the Mula Mantra and meditating on it, place the S'ankha (conch shell) on the tripod. Repeating the mantra "Am Surya mandalaya Dvadas'akalatmane Amukodevya Arghyapatraya namah" worship in the Arghyapatra S'ankha, sprinkle water in the S'ankha with the Mantra "Sam S'ankhya namah." Worship in due order the twelve Kalas of the Sun Tapini, Tapini, Dhumra, etc., utter the fifty syllables of the Matrika in an inverse order (i.e., beginning, see the Sarada Tilaka, with Ksam, Ham, Sam, Sam, S'am, etc.,) and repeating the Mula Mantra also in an inverse order, fill the S'ankha, three-fourths, with water. Next perform in it the Nyasa of Chandrakala and uttering the Mantra "Urn Soma mandalaya Sodas'akalatmane Amukademtaya Arghya-mritaya namah," worship in this conchshell. Next with Ankus'a mudra, invoke all the tirthas there, repeating the Mantra "Gange Cha Yamune chaiva, etc.," and repeat eight times the Mula Mantra (the basic Mantra). Then perform the S'adamga Nyasa in the water and with the Mantra "Hrida namah, etc.," worship and, repeating eight times the Mula Mantra, cover it with Matsyamundra. Next place on the right side of the S'ankha, the Proksani Patra (the Kos'a vessel from which water is taken for sprinkling) and put a little water in it. By this water sprinkle and purify all the articles of worship as well as one's own body and consider one's Atman as pure and holy.

47-81. After doing works thus far the until Vis'esarghya is placed, the devotee should erect Sarvato bhadra mandala within the altar and put the S'ali rice within its pericarp. Next spread Kus'a grass on that Mandala and put on one Kurcha, looking well and auspicious within it, made of twenty-seven Kus'a grass knotted with Venyagra granthi. Worship here the Adhara S'akti, Prakriti, Kurma, S'esa, Ksama, Sudhasindhu, Manimandala, Kalpa vriksa and Ista devata and the Pitha. (Durga Devi yoga pithaya namah). Then have an entire kumbha (waterjar) having no defect, wash it inside with Phat mantra, and encircle it with the red thread thrice as symbolising the three Gunas. Place within this jar the Nava ratna (nine jewels) with Kurcha and worshipping it with scents and flowers put them in the jar repeating the Pranava, and place that on the Pitha (seat). Next consider the Pitha and Kumbha (waterjar) as one and the same and pour waters from the Tirthas, repeating in an inverse order the Matrika Varnas (from Ksa to Ka) and fill it, thinking of the Ista Deva and repeating the basic mantra, put the new and fresh twigs (Pallavas) of AsVattha, Panasa and mango trees, etc., in the jar and cover its mouth and place over it fruits, rice, and chasaka (honey) and wrap it with two red cloths. Then perform the Prana-Pratistha and invoke the Spirit of the Devi by the Pranasthapana Mantra and show the Mudras, Avahana, etc., and thus satisfy the Devi. Then do the Sodas'opachara Puja of the Devi after me- ditating on the ParamesVari according to the rules of the Kalpa.

First offer "welcome" in front of the Devi and then duly offer the Padya, Arghya, Achamaniya water, Madhuparka, and oils, etc., for the bath. Then offer nice red silken clothes and various jewels, ornaments; repeating the Matrika syllables electrified with the Deya Mantra, worship the whole body of the Devi with scents and flowers. Next offer to the Devi the sweet scent of Kalaguru mixed with camphor and the Kas'miri sandalpaste mixed with Kasturi and various nice scented flowers, for example, the Kunda flowers, etc. Then offer the Dhupa prepared from Aguru, Guggula, Us'ira, sandalpaste, sugar, and honey and know that the Dhupa is very pleasing to the Devi. Next offer various lights and offerings of fruits, vegetables and feeding. Be particular to sprinkle everything with the water of the Kosa, thus purifying, before it is offered to the Devi.

Then complete the Anga Puja, and the Avarana-Puja of the Devi, then perform the duty of VaisVadeva. On the right side of the Devi erect an altar (sthandila) six feet square and instal Agni (Fire) there. Invoke there the Deity, thinking of Her Form and worship Her with scents and flowers. Then with the Vyarhiti Mantra with Svaha prefixed and Mula (Deya) Mantra perform the Homa ceremony with oblations, charu and ghee, twenty five times. Next perform Homa again with Vyarhiti. Next worship the Devi with scents, etc., and consider the Devi and Pitha Devata as one and the same. Then take leave of (visarjana) the Agni (Fire). Offer valis (sacrifices) all round to the ParsVadas of the Devi with the remnant charu of the Homa.

Now again worship the Devi with five offerings and offer betel, umbrella, chamara and others and repeat the Mula mantra thousand times. After finishing the Japam, place Karkari (a water-jar with small holes at the bottom, as in a sieve) on the rice in the north-eastern corner and invoke the Devi there and worship Her. Uttering the mantra "Raksa Raksa" moisten the place with water coming out of Karkari, and repeat the Phat mantra. After re-worshipping the Devi, place Karkari in due position. Thus the Guru finishes the Adhivasa (foregoing) ceremony and takes his meals with the disciple and sleeps that night on that altar.

82-106. O Narada! Now I am describing briefly about the Homa Kunda (a round hole in the ground consecrated to the Deity) and the Samskara ceremony of the Sthandila (the sacrificial altar). Uttering, first, the Mula Mantra, see, fix your gaze on the Kunda; then sprinkle it with water and the Phat mantra and drive away the evil-spirits from there. Then with mantra "Hum" again sprinkle it with water.

Then draw within it three lines Pragagra and Udagagra (on the eastern and northern sides). Sprinkling it with water and the Pranava, worship within the Pitha, uttering the mantras from Adhara S'aktaye namah to Amuka Devi Yoga Pithaya namah. Invoke, in that Pitha, the Highest One, Who is S'iva S'iva with all one-ness of heart and worship Her with scents and offerings. Then think for a moment the Devi as having taken bath and as one with S'ankara. Bring then fire in a vessel and taking a flaming piece thereof throw that in the south-west corner. Then purifying it by the gaze and quitting the portions of Kravyadah, impart the Chaitanya by "Ram," the Vahnivija repeat "Om" over it seven times. Shew, then, the Dhenumudra and protect it by Phat Kara and cover, veil, it with the mantra "Hum."

Then turn the fire, thus worshipped with sandalpaste, etc., thrice over the Kunda and with both the knees on the ground and repeating the Pranava, consider the Agni as the Virya of S'iva and throw it on the yoni of the Devi in the Pitha. Then offer Achamana, etc., to the Deva and the Devi and worship. Then light the flame with the mantra "Chit Pingala Hana Hana Daha Daha Pacha Pacha Sarvajha Jhapaya Svaha." Then utter the stotra to the Agni Deva with great love, repeating the mantra "Agnim Prajvalitam vande Jatavedam Hutas'anam suvarna varnamamalam samiddham Visvatomukham." Then perform the Sadamganyasa to the Agni Deva "Om Sahasrarchchise namah, Om Svasti Purnaya Svaha," "Om Uttistha purusaya vasat," "Om Dhuma vyapine Hum Om Sapta Jihvaya vausat" "Om Dhanur dharaya Phat." Repeating the above six mantras, perform the Nyasa on the heart, etc., the six places. Now meditate on the Agni as of a golden colour, three-eyed, seated on a lotus and holding in His four hands signs of granting boons, S'akti, Svastika and sign of "no fear," also meditate on Agni, as the seat of the greatest auspiciousness. Then moisten the Kunda on the top of the belt (mekhala) with water. Next spread the Kus'a grass all around and draw the Agni yantra over it, i.e., triangle, hectagon, circle, eight- petalled figure and Bhupura; rather have this drawing before the Agnisthapana. Now meditate this only. Then, within the Yantra, recite "VaisVanara Jataveda Lohitaksa sarvakarmani Sadhaya Svaha" and worship Agni. Then worship in the centre and in the hectagon at the corners worship the Saptajihva (seven tongues Hiranya, Gagana, Rakta, Krisna, Suprabha, Bahurupa, Atiraktika) and next worship within the pericarp of the lotus the Anga Devatas. Then recite the following mantras within the eight petals "Om Agnaye Jatavedase namah," " Om Agnaye Saptajihvaya namah," " Om Agnaye Havyavahanaya namah," "Om Agnaye AsVodarajaya namah,"

"Om Agnaye VaisVanaraya namah," "Om Agnaye Kaumara tejase namah," "Om Agnaye VisVamukhaya namah," "Om Agnaye Devamukhaya namah" and considering the forms to hold S'akti and Svastik, worship them. Then consider Indra and the other Lokapalas (Regents of the several quarters) situated in the east, south-east, and so on together with their weapons, the thunderbolt and the other weapons, and thus worship them.

107-134. O Narada! Next purify the sacrificial ladles, etc., sruk, sruva, etc., and ghee; then, taking ghee by sruva, go on with the Homa ceremony. Divide the ghee of the Ajyasthali (the vessel in which the ghee for the Homa purposes is kept) in three parts; take ghee from the right side and saying "Om Agnaye Svaha" offer oblations on the right eye of the Agni; take ghee from the left side and saying "Om Somaye Svaha" offer oblations on the left eye of the Agni; take ghee from the centre and saying,

"Om Agnisomabhyam Svaha," offer oblations on the central eye of the Agni. Take ghee again from the right side and saying "Om Agnaye Svistakrite Svaha" offer oblations to the mouth of the Agni. Then the devotee is to repeat "Om Bhuh Svaha,"

"Om Bhuvah Svaha," "Om Svah Svaha" and offer thrice the oblations; next he is to offer oblations thrice with the Agni mantra. After this, O Muni! for impregnation and each of the ten Samskaras, natal-ceremony, tonsure, etc., he is to repeat the Pranava Mantra and offer the eight oblations of ghee on each occasion. Now hear of the tenfold Samskaras (1) Impregnation, (2) Pumsavan (a ceremony performed as soon as a woman perceives the foetus to be quick), (3) Simantonnayana (a ceremony observed by women in the fourth, sixth or the eighth month of pregnancy), (4) data Karma (ceremony at the birth of a child), (5) Namakarana, (naming the child), (6) Niskramana (a ceremony performed when a new-born child is first taken out of the house into the open air usually in the fourth month), (7) Annapras'ana (when the rice is put in the mouth of the child), (8) Chudakarana (the ceremony of the first tonsure), (9) Upanayana (holding the sacrificial thread; (10) Godana and Udvaha (gift of cows and marriage). These are stated in the Vedas. Next worship S'iva Parvati, the Father and the Mother of Agni and take leave of them. Next in the name of Agni, offer five Samidhas (fuel) soaked in ghee and offer one oblation of ghee to each of the Avarana Devatas.

Then take the ghee by the S'ruk and covering it with the S'ruva, offer ten oblations to Agni, and Maha Ganes'a with mantras ending in Vausat,

The Maha Ganes'a mantras run as follows (1) Om, Om Svaha (2) Om S'rim Svaha, (3) Om S'rim Hrim Svaha, (4) Om S'rim Hrim Klim Svaha, (5) Om S'rim Hrim Klim Glaum Svaha, (6) Om S'rim Hrim Klim Glaum Gam Svaha, (7) Om S'rim Hrim Klim Glaum ityantah Gam Ganapataye Svaha, (8) Om Vara Varada ityantah Svaha, (9) Sarvajanam me Vas'am ityanto Svaha and (10) Anaya Svaha ityantah.

Next perform in the Agni the Pitha Puja and meditate on the Deya Istadeva and worship him. Next offer twenty-five oblations to his face, repeating the Mula Mantra. Then think of that and Agni Deva as one and the same, and then again as one with Atman. Then offer oblations to each of the Sadamga Devatas separately. Then search for the Nadis (veins) of Vahni and Ista Devata and offer twenty one oblations. Then offer oblations to each of the two Devatas separately. Next offer one thousand and eight oblations to the Ista Deva with Til soaked in ghee or with the materials enumerated in the Kalpa. O Muni! Thus finishing the Homa ceremony, consider that the Ista Deva (the Devi), Agni and the Avarana Deities are all satisfied. Then, by the command of the Guru, the disciple is to take his bath and perform his Sandhya, etc., and put on new clothes (cloth and chadar) and golden ornaments. He is to come then, to the Kunda with Kamandalu in his hand and with a pure heart. He is to bow down to the elders and superiors seated in the assembly and take his seat in his Asana. S'ri Guru Deva then would look at the disciple with kind eyes and think the Chaitanya of the disciple within his own (the Guru's) body. Then the Guru Deva would perform the Homa and look at the disciple with a divine gaze, so that the disciple becomes pure-hearted and able to get the favours of the Devas. Thus the Guru must purify all the Adhvas (the passages) of the body of the disciple.

Then the Guru is to touch respectively the feet, generative organ, navel, heart, forehead, and the head of the disciple with Kurcha (a bundle of Kus'a grass) and til soaked in ghee, in his left hand and offer at each touch eight oblations, repeating the mantra "Om adya S'isyasya Kaladhvanam S'odhayami Svaha, etc." Thus the Guru would purify Kaladhva (in the feet) Tattvadhva (in the generative organ), Bhuvanadhva (in the navel), Varnadhva (in the heart), Padadhva (in the fore-head) and Mantradhva (on the head), the six Adhvas and think these all to be dissolved in Brahma (Brahmalma).

135-155. Then, again, the Guru would think all these to be re-born from Brahma and transfer the Chaitanya of the disciple that was in him to the disciple. Then the Guru must offer Purnahuti and consider the Ista Devata, placed in the fire by the visarjana mantra for the Homa purposes, as entered into the water-jar. He is to perform again the Vyarhiti Homa and offer all the Amgahutis (oblations to all the limbs) of the fire and take leave of the fire withdrawing the Deity from the jar, into his own body. Uttering then the Vausat Mantra he would tie the eyes of the disciple with a piece of cloth and would bring him from the Kunda to the mandala and make the disciple offer puspanjali

(flowers in his palm) to the Ista deva. Then he would take away the bandage or piece of cloth from his eyes and ask him to take his seat in the seat Kusasana. Thus the Guru, after having purified the elements of the body of the disciple and performed the Nyasa of the Deya Mantra, would make the disciple sit in another mandala. Then he would touch the head of the disciple with the twigs (Pallavas) of the Kunda and repeat the Matrika Mantra and make him have his bath with the water of the jar which is considered as the seat of the Ista Deva. Then, for the protection of the disciple, he would sprinkle (abhiseka) him with the water of the Vardhani vessel placed already in the north-east corner. Then the disciple would get up and put on the pair of new clothes and besmear his whole body with ashes and sit close by the Guru. When the merciful Guru would consider that the S'iva S'akti has now passed out of his own body and that Divine Force, the Devi, has entered into the body of the disciple, i.e., charged the disciple with the pass. Thinking now the disciple and the Devata to be one and the same, the Guru would now worship the disciple with flowers and scents. The Guru would then place his right hand on the head of the disciple and repeat clearly in his right ear the Maha Mantra of the Maha Devi. The disciple is to repeat also the Maha Mantra one hundred and eight times and fall prostrate on the ground before the Guru and thus bow down to the Guru, whom the disciple now thinks as the incarnate of the Deva.

The disciple, the devotee of the Guru, would now give as a Daksina all his wealth and property for his whole life to the Guru. Then he would give Daksina to the priests and make charities to the virgins; the Brahmanas, the poor and the destitute and the orphans. Here he is not to be miserly in any way in the expenditure. O Narada! Thus the disciple would consider himself blessed and he would daily remain engaged in repeating the Maha Mantra. Thus I have described to you above

The most excellent Diksa. Thinking all these, you are to remain ever engaged in worshipping the lotus feet of the Great Devi. There is no Dharma higher than this in this world for the Brahmanas. The followers of the Vedas would impart this Mantra according to the rules stated respectively in their own Grihya Sutras; and the Tantrikas would also do the same according to their own Tantras. The Vaidiks should not follow the Tantra rules and the Tantriks are not to follow the Vaidik rules. Thus all the S'astras say. And this is the Sanatan Creed. Narayana said O Narada! I have described all about the ordinary Diksa that you questioned me. Now the essence in brief is this that you would remain always merged in worshipping the Para S'akti, the Highest Force, the Maha Devi. What more shall I say than this that I have got the highest pleasure and the Nirvana, the peace, that passeth all understanding, from my daily worshipping That Lotus Feet duly. Vedavyasa said O Maharaja! O Janamejayan! After having said this Diksatattva, the highest Yogi Bhagavan Narayana, meditated by the Yogis, closed his eyes and remained merged in Samadhi, in the meditation of the Lotus Feet of the Devi.

Knowing this Highest Tattva, Narada, the chief of the Risis, bowed down at the feet of the Great Guru Narayana and went away immediately to perform the tapasya so that he also might see the Maha Devi.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the Diksa vidhi or on the rules of Initiation in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-8. Janamejaya spoke to Veda Vyasa O Bhagavan! Thou art the knower of all the Dharmas and Thou art the chief, the crown of the Pundits, knowing all the S’astras. Now I ask Thee how is it that the twice-born have ceased to worship the Highest S’akti, the Gayatri and they now worship the other Devatas, on the face of the distinct command in the S’rutis that the worship of the Gayatri is nitya, that is, daily to be done at all times, especially during the three Sandhya times, by all those that are twice-born?

In this world some are the devotees of Visnu, some, the followers of Ganapati, some are Kapalikas, some follow the doctrines prevalent in China; some are the followers of Buddha or Charvaka; some of them again wear the barks of trees and others roam naked. So various persons are seen having no trace of faith in the Vedas.

O Brahmana! What is the real cause underlying secretly here in this! Kindly mention this to me. Again there are seen many men, well versed in various metaphysics and logic, our B.A.s and M.A.s but then, again, they have no faith in the Vedas. How is this? Nobody wants anything ominous to him consciously. But how is it that these so-called learned men are fully aware and yet they are wonderfully void of any trace of faith in the Vedas? Kindly mention the cause underlying this, O Thou! The foremost of the knowers of the Vedas.

There is, again, another question Thou hadst described before the glories of Manidvipa, the highest and the best place of the Devi. Now I want to hear how is that Dvipa greater than the great. Satisfy this servant of thine by describing these. If the Guru be pleased, he reveals even the greatest and the highest esoteric secret to his disciple.

9-10. Suta spoke Hearing the words of the King Janamejaya, the Bhagavan Veda Vyasa began to answer the questions in due order. The hearing of this increases the faith of the twice-born in the Vedas

11-30. Vyasa said Well has this been asked by you, O King! in due time and in an appropriate moment. You are intelligent and it seems that you have got the faith in the Vedas. I now answer. Listen. In ancient days, the Asuras, maddened with pride, fought against the Devas for one hundred years. The war was very extraordinary and remarkable. In this great war various weapons were used, variegated with numerous Mayas or ingenious devices. It tended to destroy the whole world. By the mercy of the Highest and the Most Exalted S'akti, the Daityas were overcome by the Devas in that Great War. And they quitted the Heavens and the Earth and went to the nether regions, the Patala. The Devas were all delighted and began to dwell on their own prowesses and became proud. They began to say "Why shall not victory be ours. Why are not our glories great? We are by far the best! Where are the Daityas? They are devils, powerless. We are the causes of creation, preservation and destruction. We all are glorious! Oh! What can be said before us in favour of the Asuras, the devils?" Thus, not knowing the Highest S'akti, the Devas were deluded. At this moment, seeing this plight of the Devas, the World Mother took pity on the Devas and, to favour them, O King! She appeared before them in the form of the Most Worshipful, the Great Holy Light. It was resplendent like ten million Suns, and cool as well like ten million Moons. It was brilliant and dazzling like ten million lightning flashes, without hands and feet, and exceedingly beautiful! Never was this witnessed before! Seeing this Extraordinary Beautiful Lovely Light, the Devas were taken aback;

Is this the work of the Daityas or some other great Maya (Mayic) played by them or is it the work of another for creating the surprise of the Devas!" O King! Then they all assembled together and decided to approach towards that Adorable Light and to ask It what It was. They, then, would determine its strength and decide what to do afterwards. Thus, coming to this ultimate conclusion, Indra called Agni and said "O Agni! You are the mouth-piece of the Devas. Therefore do you go first and ascertain distinctly what this Light is." Hearing thus the words of Indra, Agni, elated by his own prowess, set out immediately from the place and went to that Light. Seeing Agni coming, the Light addressed him thus "Who are you? What is your strength? State this before Me." At this Agni replied "I am Agni. All the yajhas, ordained in the Vedas are performed through me. The power of burning everything in this universe resides in me." Then that adorable Light took up a straw of grass and said "O Agni! If you can burn everything in this universe, then do you burn this trifling straw." Agni tried his best to burn the straw but he could not burn it. He got ashamed and fast went back to the Devas. Asked by the Devas, Agni told them everything and said "O Devas! Know verily that the pride cherished by us that we are supreme, is entirely false."

31-50. Indra then asked Vayu (wind) and said "O Vayu! You are dwelling in this universe, through and through; by your efforts, all are moving; therefore you are the Prana of all; it is possible that all forces are concentrated within you. Go and ascertain what is this Light? Verily I do not see any other person here than you who can ascertain this great adorable Light." Hearing these commendable words of Indra, Vayu felt himself elated and went at once to that place where was that Light. Seeing the Vayu, the Light, the Yaksa, the demi-god, the Spirit asked in a gentle language "Who are you? What strength is there in you? Speak out all these to me." At this, Vayu spoke arrogantly, "I am Matarisvan, I am Vayu; about my strength, I can move anything and I hold everything. It is through the strength of mine, that this universe is, and is alive and brisk with movements and works.” That Highest Mass of Light then replied “O Vayu! Move this straw that lies before you, and if you cannot, quit your pride and go back to Indra ashamed.” At this Vayu tried all his might but, alas! He could not move the straw a bit from that place!

Vayu then gave up his pride and returned to the Devas and spoke to them all about the Yaksa (a sort of demi-god, a ghost). O Devas! Our pride is vain; in no way can we be able to ascertain the nature of that Light. It seems that that Holy Light, adorable by all, is extraordinary. Then all the Devas spoke with one voice to Indra

“When You are the King of the Devas, better go yourself and ascertain the reality of Its Nature.” Indra, then, with great pride, went himself to the Light; the Light, too, began to disappear gradually from the place, and ultimately vanished from Indra’s sight. When Indra found that he could not even speak to That Light, he became greatly ashamed and began to conceive of his own nothingness. He thought thus “I won’t go back to the Devas. What shall I say to them? Never will I disclose to them my inferiority; one is better to die than do this. One’s self-honour is the only treasure of the great and honourable. If honour is gone, what use, then, is there in living?” O King! Then Indra, the Lord of Devas, quitted his pride and took refuge unto That Great Light which exhibited, ere long, such a glorious character. At this moment, a celestial voice was heard from the Heavens “O Indra! Go on now and do the japam, the reciting of the Maya Vija Mantra, the basic Mantra of Maya. All your troubles will, then, be over.” Hearing this celestial voice, Indra began to repeat the Maya Vija, the Seed Mantra of Maya, with rapt concentration and without any food.

51-61. Then on the ninth lunar day of the month of Chaitra when the Sun entered the meridian, suddenly there appeared in that place a Great Mass of Light as was seen before. Indra saw, then, within that Mass of Light, a Virgin Form in full youth. The lustre from Her body was like that of ten million Rising Suns; and the colour was rosy red like a full-blown Java flower. On Her forehead was shining the digit of the Moon; Her breasts were full, and, though veiled under the cloth, they looked very beautiful. She was holding noose and a goad in Her two hands and Her other two hands indicated signs of favour and fearlessness.

Her body was decked with various ornaments and it looked auspicious and exceedingly lovely; nowhere can be seen a woman beautiful like Her. She was like a Kalpa Vriksa (celestial tree yielding all desires); she was three eyed and Her braid of hair was encircled with Malati garlands. She was praised on Her four sides by the Four Vedas, Incarnate, in their respective Forms. The brilliancy of Her teeth shed lustre on the ground as if ornamented with Padmaraga jewels. Her face looked smiling. Her clothing was red and Her body was covered with sandalpaste. She was the Cause of all causes. Oh! She was all Full of Mercy. O King Janamejaya! Thus Indra saw, then, the Lima Parvati MahesVari Bhagavati and the hairs of his body stood on ends with ecstasy. His eyes were filled with tears of love and deep devotion and he immediately fell prostrate before the feet of the Devi. Indra sang various hymns to Her and praised Her. He became very glad and asked Her, “O Fair One! Art Thou that Great Mass of Light? If this be, kindly state the cause of Thy appearance.” O King! Hearing this, the Bhagavati replied.

62-83. This My Form is Brahma, the Cause of all causes, the Seat of Maya, the Witness of all, infallible and free from all defects or blemishes. What all the Vedas and Upanisadas try to establish, what ought to be obtained, as declared by all the rules of austerity, and for which the Brahmanas practise Brahmacharyam, I am all that. I have told you about that Brahma, of the nature of the Great Holy Light.

The sages declare that That Brahman is revealed by “Om” and “Hrim”, the two Vijas (mystic syllables) that are My two first and foremost Mantras wherein I remain hidden. I create this universe with My two parts (in My two aspects); therefore My Vija mantra is two. “Om” Vija is denominated as Sachchidananda (everlasting existence, intelligence and bliss) and “Hrim” Vija is Maya Prakriti, the Undifferentiated Consciousness, made manifest. Know, then. That Maya as the Highest S’akti and know Me as that Omnipotent Goddess at present revealed before your eyes. As moonlight is not different from the Moon, so this Maya S’akti in the state of equilibrium is not different from Me. (The powerful man and the power he wields are not different. They are verily one and the same.) During Pralaya (the Great Latency period), this Maya lies latent in Me, without there being any difference. Again at the time of creation, this Maya appears as the fructification of the Karmas of the Jivas. When this Maya is potential and exists latent in Me, when Maya is Antarmukhi, it is called Unmanifested and when the Maya becomes Kinetic, when the Maya is Bahirmukhi, when She is in an active Kinetic state, it is said to be Manifested. There is no origin or beginning of this Maya. Maya is of the nature of Brahma in a state of equilibrium. But, during the beginning of the creation. Her form consisting of the several Gunas appears, when Maya is Bahir Mukhi, She becomes Tamas, in Her Unmanifested state. O Indra! For this reason Her state of abstraction, and becoming introspective, this is Her Antarmukhi state; it is known as Maya and Her looking outward is Her Bahirmukhi state; it is denominated by Tamas and the other gunas. From this comes Sattva and then Rajas and Brahma, Visnu and Mahes’a are of the nature of the three gunas. Brahma has the Rajo guna in Him preponderating; in Visnu, the Sattva guna preponderates and in Mahes’a, the Cause of all Causes, is said to reside the Tamo guna. Brahma is known as of the Gross Body;

Visnu is known as of the Subtle Body; and Rudra is known as of the Causal Body and I am known as Turiya, transcending the Gunas.

This Tunya Form of Mine is called the state of equilibrium of the Gunas. It is the Inner Controller of all. Beyond this there is another state of Mine which is called the Formless Brahma (Brahman having no Forms). Know, verily, that my Forms are two, as they are with or without attributes (Saguna or Nirguna). That which is beyond Maya and the Mayic qualities is called Nirguna (without Prakritic attributes) and that which is within Maya is called Saguna. O Indra! After creating this universe, I enter within that as the Inner Controller of all and it is I that impel all the JTvas always to their due efforts and actions. Know, verily, that It is I that engage Brahma, Visnu and Rudra, the causes of the several works of creation, preservation and destruction of this universe (they are performing their functions by My Command).

Through the terror from Me the wind blows; through my terror, the Sun moves in the sky; through My terror, Indra, Agni, and Yama do their respective duties. I am the Best and Superior to all. All fear Me. Through My Grace you have obtained victory in the battle. Know, verily, that it is I that make you all dance like inert wooden dolls as My mere instruments. You are merely My functions. I am the Integral Whole. I give sometimes victory to you and sometimes victory to the Daityas; Yea, I do everything as I will, keeping My independence duly and, according to the Karmas, justly.

Oh! You all, have forgotten me though your pride and sheer nonsense. You have been carried deep into dire delusion by your vain egoism. And know now that to favour you, this My Adorable Light has issued suddenly. Hence forth banish ever from your heart all your vain boastings and idle pratings. Take refuge wholly unto Me with all your head, heart and soul, unto My Sachchidananda Form and be safe. (At times the Devas forget and so fall into troubles).

84-93. Vyasa said Thus saying, the Mula Pakriti, the Great Devi, the Goddess of the Universe, vanished from their sight. The Devas, on the other hand, began to praise Her then and there, with rapt devotion. Since that day, all the Devas quitted their pride and engaged themselves in worshipping the Devi devotedly. They worshipped the Gayatri Devi daily during the three Sandhya times and performed various Yajhas and thus they worshipped Bhagavati daily. Thus, in the Satya Yuga, everybody engaged themselves in repeating the Mantra Gayatri and worshipped the Goddess indwelling in the Pranava and Hrimkara. So, See now for yourself, that the worship of Visnu or S'iva or initiation in the Visnu Mantra or in the S'iva Mantra are not mentioned anywhere in the Vedas as to be done always and for ever. They are done for a while and not required any more when the objects are fulfilled; only the worship of Gayatri is always compulsory, to be done at all times, as mentioned in the Vedas. O King!

If a Brahmana does not worship the Gayatri, know, then, for certain, that in every way, he is sure to go down lower and lower. There is no doubt in this. A Brahmin is not to wait, no never, to do any other thing; he will have all his desires fulfilled if he worships only the Devi Gayatri. Bhagavan Manu says that a Brahmin, whether he does any other thing or not, can be saved if he worships only the Divine Mother Gayatri. (This worshipping the Gayatri is the highest, greatest, and most difficult of all the works in this universe). If any devotee of S'iva or Visnu or of any other Deity worships his desired Deity without repeating the Gayatri, he is sure to suffer the torments of hell. (But this age of Kali deludes the people and draws away their minds from reciting this Gayatri save a few of them.) O King! For this reason, in the Satya Yuga, all the Brahmanas kept themselves fully engaged in worshipping the Gayatri and the lotus feet of the Devi Bhagavati.

Here ends the Eighth Chapter in the Twelfth Book on the appearance of the Highest S'akti in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-20. Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! Once on a time, on account of an evil turn of Fate (Karma) of the human beings, Indra did not rain on this earth for fifteen years. Owing to want of rain, the famine appeared horribly; and almost all the beings lost their lives. No one could count in every house the number of the dead persons. Out of hunger the people began to eat horses; some began to eat bears and pigs, some began to eat the dead bodies while some others carried on any how their lives. The people were so much distressed with hunger that the mother did not refrain from eating her baby child and the husband did not refrain from eating his wife. O King! The Brahmanas then united and after due discussion, came to the conclusion that they would go to the hermit Gautama who would be able to remove their distress. So all of them wanted to go quickly to the hermitage of the Muni Gautama. They began to say “We hear that there is no famine in the hermitage of Gautama. Various persons are running there from various quarters.” Thus coming to a conclusion, the Brahmanas went to the Gautama’s As’rama with their cows, servants and relations. Some went from the east; some from the south; some from the west, and some from the north. Thus from various quarters the people flocked there. Seeing the Brahmanas coming there, the Risi Gautama bowed down to them and gave them a cordial welcome and served them with seats, etc. When all took their seats and became calm and quiet, Gautama enquired about their welfare and the cause of their arrival. They described everything about the dire famine and their own states and expressed their deep regret. Seeing them very much distressed, the Muni gave them word not to have any fear; he said “I am today become blessed by the arrival of the great ascetics and honourable persons like you. I am your servant. You consider all my houses as yours. Be quite comfortable. Bear no uneasiness. When your servant is alive, what fear do your entertain and whom do you fear? When the demerits are transformed into good merits by your mere sight, and when you have blessed my house with the dust of your holy feet, then who is more blessed than me? O Vipras! Kindly perform your Sandhyas, and Japams and rest here at ease.” Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! Thus consoling the Brahmanas, the Risi Gautama began to worship the Gayatri Devi with rapt devotional trance. “O Devi Gayatri! Obeisance to Thee! Thou art the Great Vidya, the Mother of the Vedas, Higher than the Highest; Thou art Vyarhiti represented by the Mantra ‘Om Bhur Bhuvah Svah,’ O Mother! Thou art the state of equilibrium, i.e., the Turiya; Thou art of of the Form of Hrim; Thou art Svaha and Svadha; Thou grantest the desires of the Bhaktas. Thou art the Witness of the three states, Jagrat (waking), Svapna (dreaming) and Susupti (deep sleep). Thou art the Turiya and Sachchidananda Brahma. O Devi! Thou resident in the Solar Orb and appearest as a ruddy girl in the morning, an youthful maiden at noon and a black old woman in the evening. O Devi! Obeisance to Thee! Now shew favour on us at this severe famine time when all the beings are well nigh on the way to destruction.”

21-40. Thus praised and worshipped, the World-Mother appeared and gave to the Risi one vessel (cup) full to the brim by which every one can he fed and nourished. The Mother told the Muni “This full vessel, given by me to you will yield whatever you wish.” Thus saying, the Devi Gayatri, Higher than the Highest, vanished. Then, according to the wish of the Muni, came out from that cup, mountains of cooked rice, various curries and sweetmeats, lots of grass and fodder, silken clothings, various ornaments and various articles and vessels for sacrificial purposes. In fact whatever the Muni Gautama wished, that came out of the brimful cup, given by the Devi Gayatri. Then the Muni Gautama called the other Munis that came there and gave them wealth, grains, clothing, ornament, and the sacrificial ladles and spoons and cows and buffaloes for the sacrificial purposes. The Munis then assembled and performed various yajhas. The place all round, then flourished and became so much prosperous that it looked like a second heaven. In fact whatever fair and beautiful there exist in the Trilokas, all came from the brimful cup given by the Devi Gayatri. At this time the Munis, with sandalpaste all over on their bodies, and decorated with very bright ornaments looked like the gods and their wives looked like goddesses. Daily utsabs began to be held in in the As’rama of Gautama. Nowhere were seen any diseases or dacoities and there was no fear from any such things. Gradually the As’rama’s boundary extended to one hundred Yojanas (4 hundred miles). Hearing this greatness of Gautama, many persons came there from various quarters. And the Muni Gautama, too, gave them words, “cast away fear” and fed them. The Devas, on the other hand, became very much satisfied by the various Yajhas and extolled the Muni’s greatness. So much so, that the famous Indra, the Lord of the Devas, came in the midst of the assembly and extolled his greatness, thus “This Gautama has fulfilled all our wishes and has verily become a Kalpa Vriksa (celestial tree yielding all desires). If this man had not done such things, in this hard famine time, we would not have got the Havih offered in sacrifices and the prospect of our lives would have been at stake.” O King Janamejaya! Thus the Muni Gautama fed and nourished for twelve years all the Munis, like his sons and that place came to be recognised as the chief centre (the Head Quarters) of the Gayatri Devi. Even today, all the Munis perform with devotion the Purasacharanams and worship thrice the Bhagavati Gayatri Devi. Even today the Devi is there seen as a girl in the morning, as a youthful maiden at noon, as an old woman in the evening. Then, once on a time, Narada, of best conduct, came there playing on his great lute and singing in tune the highest glories of Gayatri and took his seat in the assembly of the Munis.

41-62. Seeing the tranquil hearted Narada coming there, Gautama and the other Munis received him duly and worshipped him with the Padya and Arghya. In course of conversation he began to describe the glories of Gautama and said “O Best of Munis! I have heard from the mouth of Indra, in the assembly of the Devas, your glories as to your supporting and feeding the pure-hearted Munis and I have come to see you. By the Grace of S’ri Bhagavati Gayatri Devi, you have now become blessed. There is no doubt in this.” Thus saying, the Devarsi Narada entered into the temple of the Devi Gayatri and with eyes gladdened by love, saw the Devi there and offered due hymns in praise of Her and then ascended to the Heavens. Here, on the other hand, the Brahmanas that were fed by Gautama, became jealous at so much honour offered to Gautama and tried their best so that no further honour be paid to him. They further settled not to stay any longer in his As’rama, when the next good harvest season comes. (Thus his glories will wane). O King! Some days passed when good rains fell and there was an abundance of crops everywhere and the famine ended. Hearing this, all the Brahmins united, Alas! O King! to curse the Gautama. Oh! Their fathers and mothers are blessed in whom do not arise such feelings of jealousy! This all is the wonderful play of the powerful Time; it cannot be expressed by any person. O King! These Brahmins created, by Maya, an aged cow, who was to die and pushed her in the sacrificial hall of the Muni Gautama at the time of the Homa ceremony. Seeing that cow entering into the enclosure where the Homa was being performed, Gautama cried out “Hoorn Hoorn” when the cow fell there and died. And the other Brahmanas instantly cried out “Look! Look! The wicked Gautama has killed the cow.” Seeing this inconceivable event, Gautama was greatly nonplussed and, completing his Homa ceremony, entered into Samadhi and began to think the cause of it. Then, coming to know that this has been concocted by the Maya of the Brahmins, he became angry like Rudra at the time of dissolution; his eyes were reddened and he cursed the Risis, thus Oh vile Brahmins! When you are ready to cause mischief to me unjustly then let you be averse to meditate and do the japam of the Devi Gayatri, the Mother of the Vedas. For your this act, never you will be eager to perform any Vedic sacrificial acts or any action concerning thereof. There is no doubt in this. You will be always averse to the mantra of S’iva or the Tantra of S’iva. You will be always averse to Mula Prakrit! S’ri Devi, to Her Dhyanam, mantra, to any conversation regarding

Her; to the visiting of Her place or Temple, to do worship and other ceremonies to Her, to see the Grand Festivals of the Devi, to singing the names and glories of the Devi, to sit before the Devi and to adore Her.

63-81. O vile Brahmanas! You will be always averse to see the festivals of S’iva, to worship S’iva, to Rudraksa, to the Bel leaves, and to the holy Bhasma (ashes). You will be wholly indifferent to practise the right ways of living as presented in the Vedas and Smritis, to preserve your conduct good and to observe the path of knowledge to Advaita Jhanam, to practise restraint of senses and continence, to the daily practices of Sandhya Bandanam, to performing the Agnihotra ceremonies, to the study of the Vedas according to one’s own S’akha or to the daily studies thereof as to teach those things or to give, as gifts, cows, etc., or to perform the S’raddhas of the fathers, etc., or to perform Krichchra Chandrayana and other penances. O Vile Brahmanas! As you are ready to do these mean things, you will have to suffer for this that you will desist from worshipping the Most Adorable S’ri Bhagavati Devi and that you will worship the other Devas with faith and devotion and hold on your bodies S’amkha, Chakra and other signs. You will follow the Kapalikas, Bauddha S’astras and other heretics. You will sell your father, mother, brothers, sisters, sons and daughters and even your wives tool

You will sell the Vedas, Tirthas, and your Dharma. You will not feel ashamed in any way to sell all these. You will certainly have faith in Kapalika and Bauddha opinions, Pahcharatras and Kama S’astras.

O vile Brahmanas! You will not hesitate to go to your mother, daughters or sisters and you will always be licentious with others’ wives and spend your time in that. This is not to you only but to the women and men, all that will come in your families. Let the Gayatri Devi be always indignant with you and let you all go in the end to the Andha Kupa hells, etc. Vyasa said O Janamejaya! Thus taking the water symbolising the true rules and laws of creation, and cursing the Brahmanas, the Muni Gautama went hastily to see the Gayatri Devi and, on arriving at the temple there bowed down to Her. The Devi, too, became surprised to see their actions. O King! Even to day Her Lotus Face looks similarly astonished!

82-90. Then the Gayatri Devi told Gautama with amazement“O Gautama! The venom of the snake does not become less if you feed the serpents with milk; so never mind all these things; the Karmas take their peculiar turns; it is hard to say when will happen what things. Now be peaceful. Do not be sorry.” Hearing these words of the Devi, Gautama bowed down to Her and went thence to his own As’rama. Here, on the other hand, the Brahmanas forgot everything due to the curse of Gautama, of the Vedas and the Gayatri Mantra. They then began to look at this event with wonder as unique and extraordinary. All united they afterwards repented and going before Gautama, fell prostrate at his feet. But they could not speak any word out of shame. Only they said frequently “Be pleased, be pleased with us.” When all the assembly of the Brahmanas prayed to him for favour and grace, the Muni Gautama took pity on them and replied. My word will never turn out false. You will have to remain in Kumbhipaka hell upto the time when S’ri Krisna will take his incarnation. Then you will be born in the earth in the Kali age and whatever I have uttered will exactly come unto you. And if you are in earnest to avert my curse then go and worship the Lotus Feet of S’ri Gayatri Devi. The is no other remedy.

91-100. Vyasa said Thus dismissing the Brahmanas, Gautama Muni thought that all these occurred as a result of Prarabdha Karma and he became calm and quiet. For this reason, after S’ri Krisna Maharaja ascended to the Heavens, when the Kali age came, those cursed Brahmanas got out of the Kumbhipaka hell and took their births in this earth as Brahmins, devoid of the three Sandhyas, devoid of the devotion to Gayatri, devoid of faith in the Vedas, advocating the heretics’ opinion and unwilling to perform Agnihotra and other religious sacrifices and duties and they were devoid of Svadha and Svaha. They forgot entirely the Unmanifested Mula Prakriti Bhagavati. Some of them began to mark on their bodies various heretical signs, e.g., Taptamudra, etc.; some became Kapalikas; some became Kaulas; some Bauddhas and some Jainas. Many of them, though learned, became lewd and addicted to other’s wives and engaged themselves in vain and bad disputations. For these, they will have to go again surely to the Kumbhipaka hell. So O King! Worship with your heart and soul S’ri Bhagavati Parames’vari Devi. The worship of Visnu or S’iva is not constant (to be done everyday); only the worship of S’akti is to be constantly performed. For this reason whoever does not worship S’akti is sure to fall. Thus I have answered all your questions. Now I shall describe the highest and most beautiful place, Manidvipa of the Primal Force Bhagavati, the Deliverer from this bondage of world. Listen.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the cause of S’raddha in other Devas than the Devi Gayatri in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-20. Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! What is known in the S'rutis, in the Subala Upanisada, as the Sarvaloka over the Brahmaloka, that is Manidvipa. Here the Devi resides. This region is superior to all the other regions. Hence it is named "Sarvaloka." The Devi built this place of yore according to Her will. In the very beginning, the Devi Mula Prakriti Bhagavati built this place for Her residence, superior to Kailas'a, Vaikuntha and Goloka. Verily no other place in this universe can stand before it. Hence it is called Manidvipa or Sarvaloka as superior to all the Lokas. This Manidvipa is situated at the top of all the regions, and resembles an umbrella. Its shadow falls on the Brahmanda and destroys the pains and sufferings of this world. Surrounding this Manidvipa exists an ocean called the Sudha Samudra, many yojanas wide and many yojanas deep. Many waves arise in it due to winds. Various fishes and conches and other aquatic animals play and here the beach is full of clear sand like gems. The sea-shores are kept always cool by the splashes of the waves of water striking the beach. Various ships decked with various nice flags are plying to and fro. Various trees bearing gems are adorning the beach. Across this ocean, there is an iron enclosure, very long and seven yojanas wide, very high so as to block the Heavens. Within this enclosure wall the military guards skilled in war and furnished with various weapons are running gladly to and fro. There are four gateways or entrances; at every gate there are hundreds of guards and various hosts of the devotees of the Devi. Whenever any Deva comes to pay a visit to the JagadisVari, their Vahanas (carriers) and retinue are stopped here. O King! This place is being resounded with the chimings of the bells of hundreds of chariots of the Devas and the neighings of their horses and the sounds of their hoofs. The Devas walk here and there with canes in their hands and they are chiding at intervals the attendants of the Devas. This place is so noisy that no one can hear clearly another's word. Here are seen thousands of houses adorned with trees of gems and jewels and tanks filled with plenty of tasteful good sweet waters. O King! After this there is a second enclosure wall, very big and built of white copper metal (an amalgam of zinc or tin and copper); it is so very high that it almost touches the Heavens. It is hundred times more brilliant than the preceding enclosure wall; there are many principal entrance gates and various trees here. What to speak of the trees there more than this that all the trees that are found in this universe are found there and they bear always flowers, fruits and new leaves! All the quarters are scented with their sweet fragrance!

21-40. O King! Now hear, in brief, the names of some of the trees that are found in abundance there Panasa, Vakula, Lodhra, Karnikara, S'ins'apa, Deodara, Kanchanara, mango, Sumeru, Likucha, Hingula, Ela, Labanga, Kat fruit tree, Patala, Muchukunda, Tala, Tamala, Sala, Kankola, Nagabhdra, Punnaga, Pilu, Salvaka, Karpura, AsVakarna, Hastikarna, Talaparna, Pomegranate, Ganika, Bandhujiva, Jamvira, Kurandaka, Champeya, Bandhujiva, Kanakavriksa, Kalaguru (usually coiled all over with cobras, very black poisonous snakes), Sandaltree, Datetree,Yuthika, Talaparni, Sugarcane, Ksira-tree, Khadira, Bhallataka, Ruchaka, Kutaja, Bel tree and others, the TalasT and Mallika and other forest plants. The place is interspersed with various forests and gardens. At intervals there are wells, tanks, etc., adding very much to the beauty of the place. The cuckoos are perching on every tree and they are cooing sweetly, the bees are drinking the honey and humming all around, the trees are emitting juices and sweet fragrance all around. The trees are casting cool nice shadows. The trees of all seasons are seen here; on the tops of these are sitting pigeons, parrots, female birds of the Mayana species and other birds of various other species. There are seen rivers flowing at intervals carrying many juicy liquids. The Flamingoes, swans, and other aquatic animals are playing in them. The breeze is stealing away the perfumes of flowers and carrying it all around. The deer are following this breeze. The wild mad peacocks are dancing with madness and the whole place looks very nice, lovely and charming. Next this Kamsya enclosure comes the third enclosure wall of copper. It is square shaped and seven yojanas high. Within this are forests of Kalpavriksas, bearing golden leaves and flowers and fruits like gems. Their perfumes spread ten yojanas and gladden things all around. The king of the seasons preserves always this place. The king's seat is made of flowers; his umbrella is of flowers; ornaments made of flowers; he drinks the honey of the flowers; and, with rolling eyes, he lives here always with his two wives named Madhu S'ri and Madhava S'ri. The two wives of Spring have their faces always smiling. They play with bunches of flowers. This forest is very pleasant. Oh! The honey of the flowers is seen here in abundance. The perfumes of the full blown flowers spread to a distance of ten yojanas. The Gandharbhas, the musicians, live here with their wives.

41-60. The places round this are filled with the beauties of the spring and with the cooing of cuckoos. No doubt this place intensifies the desires of the amorous persons! O King! Next comes the enclosure wall, made of lead. Its height is seven yojanas. Within this enclosure there is the garden of the Santanaka tree. The fragrance of its flowers extends to ten yojanas. The flowers look like gold and are always in full bloom. Its fruits are very sweet. They seem to be imbued with nectar drops. In this garden resides always the Summer Season with his two wives S'ukra S'ri and S'uchi S'ri. The inhabitants of this place always remain under trees; otherwise they will be scorched by summer rays. Various Siddhas and Devas inhabit this place. The female sensualists here get their bodies all anointed with sandal paste and all decked with flower garlands and they stalk to and fro with fans in their hands. There is water to be found here very cool and refreshing. And owing to heat all the people here use this water. Next to this lead enclosure comes the wall made of brass, the fifth enclosure wall. It is seven yojanas long. In the centre is situated the garden of Hah Chandana trees. Its ruler is the Rainy Season.

The lightnings are his auburn eyes; the clouds are his armour, the thunder is his voice and the rainbow is his arrow. Surrounded by his hosts he rains incessantly. He has twelve wives (1) Nabhah S'ri, (2) Nabhahsya S'ri, (3) Svarasya, (4) Rasyasalini, (5) Amba, (6)

Dula, (7) Niratni, (8) Abhramanti, (9) Megha Yantika, (10) Varsayanti, (11) Chivunika, and (12) Varidhara (some say Madamatta). All the trees here are always seen with new leaves and entwined with new creepers. The whole site is covered all over with fresh green leaves and twigs. The rivers here always flow full and the current is strong, indeed! The tanks here are very dirty like the minds of worldly persons attached to worldly things. The devotees of the Devi, the Siddhas and the Devas and those that consecrated in their life times tanks, wells, and reservoirs for the satisfaction of the Devas dwell here with their wives. O King! Next to this brass enclosure comes, the sixth enclosure wall made of five fold irons. It is seven yojanas long. In the centre is situated the Garden of Mandara trees. This garden is beautified by various creepers, flowers and leaves. The Autumn season lives here with his two wives Isalaksmi and Urjalaksmi and he is the ruler. Various Siddha persons dwell here with their wives, well clothed. O King! Next to this comes the seventh enclosure wall, seven yojanas long and built of silver.

61-80. In the centre is situated the garden of Parijata trees. They are filled with bunches of flowers. The fragrance of these Parijatas extend upto the ten Yojanas and gladden all the things all around. Those who are the Devi Bhaktas and who do the works of the Devi are delighted with this fragrance. The Hemanta (Dewy) season is the Regent of this place. He lives here with his two wives Saha S'ri and Sahasya S'ri and with his hosts. Those who are of a loving nature are pleased hereby. Those who have become perfect by performing the Vratas of the Devi live here also. O King! Next to this silver, there comes the eighth enclosure wall built of molten gold. It is seven Yojanas long. In the centre there is the garden of the Kadamba tree. The trees are always covered with fruits and flowers and the honey is coming out always from the trees from all the sides. The devotees of the Devi drink this honey always and feel intense delight; the Dewy Season is the Regent of this place. He resides here with his two wives Tapah S'ri and Tapasya S'ri and his various hosts, and enjoys gladly various objects of enjoyments. Those who had made various gifts for the Devi's satisfaction, those great Siddha Purusas live here with their wives and relatives very gladly in various enjoyments. O King! Next to this golden enclosure well comes the ninth enclosure made of red Kum Kum like (saffron) Pusparaga gems. The ground inside this enclosure, the ditches or the basins for water dug round their roots are all built of Pusparaga gems. Next to this wall there are other enclosure walls built of various other gems and jewels; the sites, forests, trees, flowers birds, rivers, tanks, lotuses, mandapas (halls) and their pillars are all built respectively of those gems. Only this is to be remembered that those coming nearer and nearer to the centre are one lakh times more brilliant than the ones receding from them. This is the general rule observed in the construction of these enclosures and the articles contained therein. Here the Regents of the several quarters, the Dikpalas, representing the sum total of the several Dikpalas of every Brahmanda and their guardians reside. On the eastern quarter is situated the Amaravati city. Here the high-peaked mountains exist and various trees are seen. Indra, the Lord of the Devas, dwells here. Whatever beauty exists in the separate Heavens in the several places, one thousand times, rather more than that, exists in the Heaven of this cosmic Indra, the thousand-eyed, here. Here Indra mounting on the elephant Airavata, with thunderbolt in his hand, lives with S'achi Devi and other immortal ladies and with the hosts of the Deva forces. On the Agni (south-eastern) corner is the city of Agni. This represents the sum total of the several cities of Agni in different Brahmandas.

81-100. Here resides the Agni Deva very gladly with his two wives Svaha and Svadha and with his Vahana and the other Devas. On the south is situated the city of Yama, the God of Death. Here lives Dharma Raja with rod in his hand and with Chitragupta and several other hosts. On the south-westen corner is the place of the Raksasas. Here resides Nirriti with his axe in his hand and with his wife and other Raksasas. On the west is the city of Varuna. Here Varuna raja resides with his wife Varuni and intoxicated with the drink of Varuni honey; his weapon is the noose, his Vahana is the King of fishes and his subjects are the aquatic animals. On the north¬ western corner dwells Vayudeva. Here Havana Deva lives with his wife and with the Yogis perfect in the practice of Pranayama. He holds a flag in his hand.

His Vahana, is deer and his family consists of the forty nine Vayus. On the north resides the Yaksas. The corpulent King of the Yaksas, Kuvera, lives here with his S'aktis Vriddhi and Riddhi, and in possession of various gems and jewels. His generals Manibhadra, Puma bhadra, Maniman, Manikandhara, Manibhusa, Manisragvi, Manikar-mukadhari, etc., live here. On the north eastern corner is situated the Rudra loka, decked with invaluable gems. Here dwells the Rudra Deva. On His back is kept the arrow-case and he holds a bow in his left hand. He looks very angry and his eyes are red with anger. There are other Rudras like him with bows and spears and other weapons, surrounding him. The faces of some of them are distorted; some are very horrible indeed! Fire is coming out from the mouths of some others. Some have ten hands; some have hundred hands and some have thousand hands; some have ten feet; some have ten heads whereas some others have three eyes. Those who roam in the intermediate spaces between the heaven and earth, those who move on the earth, or the Rudras mentioned in the Rudradhyaya all live here. O King! Isana, the Regent of the north eastern quarter lives here with BhadrakalT and other Matriganas, with Kotis and Kotis of Rudranis and with Damaris and Vira Bhadras and various other S'aktis. On his neck there is a garland of skulls, on his hand there is a ring of snakes; he wears a tiger skin; his upper clothing is a tiger skin and his body is smeared with the ashes of the dead. He sounds frequently his Damaru; this sound reverberates on all sides, he makes big laughs called Attahasya, reverberating through the heavens. He remains always surrounded with Pramathas and Bhutas; they live here.

Here ends the Tenth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the description of Mani Dvipa in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-30. Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! Next to this Pusparaga mani enclosure wall comes the tenth enclosure wall, made of Padmaraga mani, red like the red Kunkuma and the Rising Sun. It is ten yojanas high. All its ground, entrance gates and temples and arbours are all made of Padmaraga mani. Within this reside the sixty four Kalas or Sub-S'aktis adorned with various ornaments and holding weapons in their hands. Each of them has a separate Loka (region) allotted and within this Loka he has get his own formidable weapons, Vahanas, families and their leaders or Governors. O King! Now hear the names of the sixty four Kalas. They are Pingalaksi, Vis'alaksT, Samriddhi, Vriddhi, S'raddha, Svaha, Svadha, Maya, Sahgha, Vasundhara, Trilokadhatri, Savitri, Gayatri, Tridas'esVsri, Surupa, Bahurupa, Skandamata, Achyutapriya, Vimala, Amala, Aruni, Aruni, Prakriti, Vikriti, S'risti, Sthiti, Samrhiti, Sandhya, Mata, Sati, Hamsi, Mardika, Vajrika, Para, Devamata, Bhagavati, Devaki, Kamalasana, Trimukhi, Saptamukhi, Surasura vimardini, Lambosthi, Urdhakes'i, Bahusirsa, Vrikodari Ratharekhahvaya, S'as'ireka, Gaganavega, Pavanavega, Bhuvanapala, Madanatura, Ananga, Anangamathana, Anangamekhala, Anangakusuma, Visvarupa, Suradika, Ksayamkari, Aksyobhya, Satyavadini, Bahurupa, S'uchivrata, Udara and Vagis'T. These are the sixty four Kalas. All of them have got luminous faces and long lolling tongues. Fire is always coming out from the faces of all of them. The eyes of all of them are red with anger. They are uttering We will drink all the water and thus dry up the oceans; we will annihilate fire, we will stop the flow of air and control it. Today we will devour the whole universe and so forth. All of them have got bows and arrows in their hands; all are eager to fight. The four quarters are being reverberated with the clashing of their teeth. The hairs on their heads are all tawny and they stand upwards. Each of them has one hundred Aksauhini forces under them. O King! What more to say than this that each of them has got power to destroy one lakh Brahmandas; and their one hundred Aksauhini forces also can do the same. There is nothing that is not impracticable with them. What they cannot do cannot be conceived by mind nor can be uttered in speech. All the war materials exist within their enclosures. Chariots, horses, elephants, weapons, and forces all are unlimited. All the war materials are ready at all times and in abundance. Next comes the eleventh enclosure wall built of Gomedamani. It is ten Yojanas high. Its colour is like the newly blown Java flower. All the ground, trees, tanks, houses, pillars, birds and all other things are all red and built of Gomedamani. Here dwell the thirty-two Maha S'aktis adorned with various ornament made of Gomedamani and furnished with various weapons. They are always eager to fight. Their eyes are always red with anger; their bees are like Pis'achas and their hands are like chakras (discs). "Pierce him," "Beat him," "Cut him," "Tear him asunder," "Burn him down," are the words constantly uttered by them. The inhabitants of the place always worship them. Each of them has ten Aksauhini forces. These are inordinately powerful. It is impossible to describe that. It seems that each S'akti can easily destroy one lakh Brahmandas.

Innumerable chariots, elephants, hordes, etc., and other vahanas are here. Verily all the war materials of the Devi Bhagavati are seen in this Gomedamani enclosure.

31-51. Now I am mentioning the auspicious, sin destroying names of these S'aktis:-- Vidya, Hri, Pusti, Prajha, Sini vali, Kuhu, Rudra, Virya, Prabha, Nanda, Posani, Riddhida, S'ubha, Kalaratri, Maharatri, Bhadra Kali, Kaparddini, Vikriti, Dandi, Mundini, Sendukhanda, S'ikhandini, Nis'umbha s'umbha mathani, Mahisasura marddini, Indrani, Rudrani, S'ankarardha saririni, Nari,

Nirayani Tris'ulini, Palini, Ambika, and Hladini. (See the Daksina Murti Samhita and other Tantras.)

Never there is any chance that they will be defeated anywhere. Hence if all those S'aktis get angry at any time, this Brahmanda ceases to exist. Next to this Gomeda enclosure comes the enclosure made of diamonds. It is ten yojanas high; on all sides there are the entrance gates; the doors are hinged there with nice mechanisms. Nice new diamond trees exist here. All the roads, royal roads, trees, and the spaces for watering their roots, tanks, wells, reservoirs, Saranga and other musical instruments are all made of diamonds. Here dwells S'ri BhuvanesVari Devi with Her attendants. O King! Each of them has a lakh attendants. All of them are proud of their beauty. Some of them are holding fans in their hands; some are holding cups for drinking water; some, betelnuts; some are holding umbrellas; some chowries; some are holding various clothings; some flowers; some, looking glasses; some, saffrons; some collyrium, whereas some others are holding Sindura (red lead). Some are ready to do the painting works; some are anxious to champoo the feet; some are eager to make Her wear ornaments; some are anxious to put garlands of flowers on Her neck. All of them are skilled in various arts of enjoyments and they are all young. To gain the Grace of the Devi, they consider the whole universe as trifling. Now I shall mention to you the names of the attendants of the Devi, proud of their possessing lots of amorous gestures and postures. Listen. They are Anangarupa, Anangamadana, Madanatura, Bhuvanavega, Bhuvanapalika, Sarvas'is'ira, Anangavedana, Anangamekhala, these are the Eight Sakhis. Each of them is as fair as Vidyullata. Each is adorned with various ornaments and skilled in all actions. When they walk to and fro with canes and rods in their hands in the service of the Devi, they look as if the lightning flashes glimmer on all sides.

52-71 On the outer portion of the enclosure wall, on the eight sides are situated the dwelling houses of these eight Sakhis and they are always full of various vahanas and weapons. Next to this enclosure of diamond comes the thirteenth enclosure wall made of Vaidurya mani. Its height is ten yojanas. There are entrance gates and doorways on the four sides. The court inside, the houses, the big roads, wells, tanks, ponds, rivers and even the sands are all made of Vaidurya mani. On the eight sides reside the eight Matrikas Brahmi, etc., with their hosts. These Matrikas represent the sum-total of the individual Matrikas in every Brahmanda. Now hear their names (1) Brahmi, (2) MahesVari, (3) Kaumari, (4) Vaisnavi, (5) Varahi, (6) Indrani, (7) Chamunda, and (8) Maha Laksmi. Their forms are like those of Brahma and Rudra and others. They are always engaged in doing good to the Universe and reside here with their own Vahanas and weapons.

At the four gates, the various Vahanas of Bhagavati remain always fully equipped. Somewhere there are Kotis and Kotis of elephants. At some places there are Kotis and Kotis of horses; at others there are camps, houses, at others there are swans, lions; at others there are Garudas; at other places there are peacocks, bulls and various other beings all fully equipped and arranged in due order. Similarly the above mentioned animals are yoked to Kotis and Kotis of chariots; there are coachmen (syces); at some places flags are fluttering high on them so as to reach the heavens and thus they are adding beauty. At other places the aerial cars are arranged in rows, countless, with various sounding instruments in them, with flags soaring high in the Heavens and endowed with various ensigns and emblems. O King! Next to this Vaidurya enclosure, comes the fourteenth enclosure wall built of Indranilamani; its height is ten Yojanas. The court inside, houses, roads, wells, tanks and reservoirs, etc., all are built of Indranilamani. There is here a lotus consisting of sixteen petals extending to many Yojanas in width and shining like a second Sudars'ana Chakra. On these sixteen petals reside the sixteen S'aktis of Bhagavati, with their hosts. Now I am mentioning the names of these. HearKarali, Vikarali, Lima, Sarasvati, S'ri, Durga, Usa, Laksmi, S'ruti, Smriti, Dhriti, S'raddha, Medha, Mati, Kanti, and Arya. These are the 16 S'aktis. They all are dark blue, of the colour of the fresh rain-cloud; they wield in their hands axes and shields. It seems they are ever eager to fight. O King! These S'aktis are the Rulers of all the separate S'aktis of the other Brahmandas. These are the

72-90. Being strengthened by the Devi's strength, these are always surrounded by various chariots and forces, various other S'aktis follow them. If they like, they can cause great agitation in the whole universe. Had I thousand faces, I would not have been able to describe what an amount of strength they wield. Now I describe the fifteenth enclosure wall. Listen. Next to this Indranilamani enclosure, comes the enclosure made of pearls (mukta), very wide and ten Yojanas high. The court inside, its space, trees, all are built of pearls. Within this enclosure there is a lotus with eight petals, all of pearls. On these petals reside the eight S'aktis, the advisers and ministers of the Devi. Their appearances, weapons, dresses, enjoyments, everything is like those of S'ri Devi. Their duty is to inform the Devi of what is going on in the Brahmandas. They are skilled in all sciences and arts and clever in all actions. They are very clever, skillful and clever in knowing beforehand the desires and intentions of S'ri Devi and they perform those things accordingly. Each one of them has many other S'aktis who also live here. By their Jhana S'akti they know all the news concerning the Jivas in every Brahmanda. Now I mention the names of those eight Sakhis. Listen. Anangakusuma, Anangakusuma-tura, Anangamadana, Ananga madanatura, Bhuvanapala, Gaganavega, S'as'irekha, and Gaganarekha. These are the eight Sakhis. They look red like the Rising Sun; and in their four hands they hold noose, goad, and signs of granting boons and "no fear." At every instant they inform S'ri Devi of all the events of the Brahmanda. Next to this comes the sixteenth enclosure wall made of emerald (marakata); it is ten Yojanas high; the court inside, its space, and houses and everything are built of emeralds (marakata mani). Here exist all the good objects of enjoyments. This is hexagonal, of the Yantra shape. And at every corner reside the Devas. On the eastern corner resides the four¬ faced Brahma; he lives with Gayatri Devi; he holds Kamandalu, rosary, signs indicating "no fear" and Danda (rod). The Devi Gayatri is also decorated with these. Here all the Vedas, Smritis, the Puranas, and various weapons exist incarnate in their respective forms. All the Avataras of Brahma, Gayatri, and Vyahritis that exist in this Brahmanda, all live here. On the south-west corner Maha Visnu lives with Savitri; He holds conch shell, disc, club, and lotus. Savitri has got also all these. The Avataras of Visnu that exist in every Brahmanda Matsya, Kurma, etc., and all the Avataras of Savitri that exist in every universe, all dwell in this place. On the north western corner exists Maha Rudra with Sarasvati. Both of them hold in their hands Paras'u, rosary, signs granting boons and "no fear."

91-110. All the Avataras of Rudra and Parvati (Gauri, etc.) facing south that exist in all the Brahmandas, dwell here. All the chief Agamas, sixty four in number and all the other Tantras reside here, incarnate in their due forms. On the south-eastern corner, the Lord of wealth, Kuvera, of Bhagavati, surrounded by roads and shops resides here with Maha Laksmi and his hosts holding the jar of jewels (Mani Karandika). On the western corner exists always Madana with Rati, holding noose, goad, bow and arrow. All his amorous attendants reside here, incarnate in their forms. On the north-eastern corner resides always the great hero Ganes'a, the Remover of obstacles, holding noose and goad and with his Pusti Devi. O King! All the Vibhutis (manifestations) of Ganes'a that exist in all the universes reside here. What more to say than this, that Brahma and the other Devas and Devis here represent the sum-total of all the Brahmas and the Devas and the DevTs that exist in all the Brahmandas. These all worship S'ri Bhagavati, remaining in their own spheres respectively. O King! Next come the seventeenth enclosure wall made of Prabala. It is red like saffron and it is one hundred Yojanas high. As before, the court inside, the ground and the houses all are made of Prabala. The goddesses of the five elements, Hrillekha, Gagana, Rakta, Karalika, and Mahochchhusma reside here. The colours and lustres of the bodies of the goddessses resemble those of the elements over which they preside respectively. All of them are proud of their youth and hold in their four hands noose, goad and signs granting boons and “no fear.” They are dressed like S’ri Devi and reside here always. Next to this comes the eighteenth enclosure wall built of Navaratna (the nine jewels). It is many yojanas wide. This enclosure wall is superior to all others and it is higher also. On the four sides there exist innumerable houses, tanks, reservoirs, all built of Navaratna; these belong to the DevTs, the presiding Deities of Amnayas (that which is to be studied or learnt by heart; the Vedas). The ten Maha Vidyas, Kali, Tara, etc., of S’ri Devi and the Mahabhedas, that is, their all the Avataras all dwell here with their respective Avaranas, Vahanas and ornaments. All the Avataras of S’ri Devi for the killing of the Daityas and for showing favour to the devotees live here. They are Pas’amkus’esVari, BhuvanesVari, Bhairavi, Kapala BhuvanesVari, Amkus’a BhuvanesVari, Pramada bhuvanesVari, S’ri Krodha BhuvanesVari, TriputasVarudha, Nityaklinna, Annapurna, Tvarita, and the other avataras of BhuvanesVari, and Kali, Tara and the other Mahavidyas are known as Mahavidyas. They live here with their Avarana Devatas, Vahanas, and ornaments respectively. (Note The Avarana Deities are the attendant Deities.) Here live also the seven Kotis of DevTs presiding over the Maha Mantras, all brilliant and fair like the Koti Suns. O King! Next to this enclosure wall comes the chief and crowning palace of S’rT DevT, built of Chintamani gems. All the articles within this are built of Chintamani gems. Within this palace are seen hundreds and thousands of pillars. Some of these pillars are built of Suryakantamani, some are built of Chandrakanta mani, and some are built of Vidyutkanta mani. O King! The lustre and brilliance of these pillars is so strong that no articles within this palace are visible to the eye. (Note The face of the Goddess Kali is so bright that it appears like a shadow, i.e., black.)

Here ends the Eleventh Chapter on the description of the enclosure walls built of Padmaraga mani, etc., of the Mani Dvipa in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-17. Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! The Ratnagriha, above mentioned, is the Central, the Chief and the Crowning Place of Mula Prakriti. [The nine jewels are (1) Mukta, (2) Manikya, (3) Vaidurya, (4) Gomeda, (5) Vajra, (6) Vidruma, (7) Padmaraga, (8) Marakata, and (9) Nila.] This is situated in the centre of all the enclosures. Within this there are the four Mandapas, i.e., halls built of one thousand (i.e., innumerable) pillars. These are the S'ringara Mandapa, Mukti Mandapa, Jhana Mandapa and Ekanta Mandapa; on the top there are canopies of various colours; within are many scented articles scented by the Dhupas, etc. The brilliance of each of these is like that of one Koti Suns. On all sides of these four Mandapas there are nice groups of gardens of Kas'mira, Mallika, and Kunda flowers. Various scents, and scented articles, for example, of musk, etc., are fully arranged in due order. There is a very big lotus tank here; the steps leading to it are built of jewels. Its water is nectar, on it are innumerable full-blown lotuses and the bees are humming always over them. Many birds, swans, Karandavas, etc., are swimming to and fro. The sweet scents of lotuses are playing all round. In fact, the whole Manidvipa is perfumed with various scented things. Within the S'ringara Mandapa, the Devi Bhagavati is situated in the centre on an Asana (seat) and She hears the songs sung in tune by the other Devis along with the other Devas. Similarly sitting on the Mukti Mandapa, She frees the Jivas from the bondages of the world. Sitting on the Jhana Mandapa, She gives instructions on Jhana, and sitting on the fourth Ekanta Mandapa, She consults with Her ministers, the Sakhis, Ananga Kusuma, etc., on the creation, preservation, etc., of the universe. O King! Now I shall describe about the main, Khas, room of S'ri Devi. Listen. The Khas Mahal palace of the Devi Bhagavati is named S'ri Chintamani Griha. Within this is placed the raised platform, the dais and sofa whereon the Devi taketh Her honourable seat. The ten S'akti-tattvas form the staircases. The four legs are (1) Brahma, (2)

Visnu, (3) Rudra, and (4) MahesVara. Sadas'iva forms the upper covering plank. Over this S'ri BhuvanesVara Maha Deva or the Supreme Architect of the Universe is reigning. Now hear something about this BhuvanesVara. Before creation while intending to sport, the Devi Bhagavati divided Her Body into two parts and from the right part created BhuvanesVara. He has five faces and each face has three eyes. He has four hands and He is holding in each hand speer, signs indicating do not fear, axe, and signs granting boons. He looks sixteen years old. The lustre of of His Body is more beautiful then Koti Kandarpas and more fiery than thousand Suns; and at the same time cool like Koti Suns. His colour is crystal white, and on His left lap S'ri BhuvanesVari Devi is always sitting.

18-29. On the hip of S'ri BhuvanesVari, is shining the girdle with small tinkling bells, built of various jewels; the ornaments on the arms are made of burnished gold studded with Vaiduryamanis; the Tatanka ornaments on Her ears are very beautiful like S'richakra and they enhance very much the beauty of Her lotus face. The beauty of Her forehead vies with, or defies the Moon of the eighth bright lunar day. Her lips challenge the fully ripened Bimba fruits. Her face is shining with the Tilaka mark made of musk and saffron. The divine crown on Her head is beautified with the Sun and Moon made of jewels; the nose ornaments are like the star Venus and built of transparent gems, looking exceedingly beautiful and shedding charming lustre all around. The neck is decorated with necklaces built of gems and jewels. Her breasts are nicely decorated with camphor and saffron. Her neck is shining like a conchshell decorated with artistic designs. Her teeth look like fully ripe pomegranate fruits. On Her head is shining the jewel crown. Her lotus face is beautified with alaka as if these are mad bees. Her navel is beautiful like the whirls in the river Bhagirathi; Her fingers are decorated with jewel rings; She has three eyes like lotus leaves; the lustre of Her body is bright like Padmaragamani cut and carved and sharpened on stone. The bracelets are adorned with jewel tinkling bells; Her neck ornaments and medals are studded with gems and jewels. Her hands are resplendent with the lustre of the jewels on the fingers; the braid of hair on Her head is wreathed with a garland of Mallika flowers; Her bodice (short jacket) is studded with various jewels.

30-45. O King! S'ri Devi is slightly bent down with the weight of Her very high hard breasts. She has four hands and She is holding noose, goad and signs granting boons and "do not fear." The all beautiful all merciful Devi is full of love gestures and beauties. Her voice is sweeter than that of lute; the lustre of Her body is like Kotis and Kotis of Suns and Moons if they rise simultaneously on the sky. The Sakhis, attendants, the Devas and the Devis surround Her on all sides. Ichcha S'akti, Jhana S'akti, and Kriya S'akti all are present always before the Devi. Lajja, Tusti, Pusti, Kirti, Kanti, Ksama, Daya, Buddhi, Medha, Smriti, and Laksmi are always seen here incarnate in their due Forms. The nine Pitha S'aktis, Jaya, Vijaya, Ajita, Aparajita, Nitya, Vilasini, Dogdhri, Aghora, and Mangala reside here always and are in the service of the Devi BhuvanesVari. On the side of the Devi are the two oceans of treasures; from these streams of Navaratna, gold, and seven Dhatus (elements) go out and assume the forms of rivers and fall into the ocean Sudha Sindhu. Because such a Devi BhuvanesVari, resplendent with all powers and prosperities, sits on the left lap of BhuvanesVara, that He has, no doubt acquired His omnipotence. O King! Now I will describe the dimensions of the Chintamani Griha. Listen. It is one thousand Yojanas wide; its centre is very big; the rooms situated further and further are twice those preceding them. It lies in Antariksa (the intervening space) without any support. At the times of dissolution and creation it contracts and expands like a cloth. The lustre of this Chintamani Griha is comparatively far more bright and beautiful than that of other enclosure walls. S'ri Devi Bhagavati dwells always in this place. O King! All the great Bhaktas of the Devi in every Brahmanda, in the Devaloka, in Nagaloka, in the world of men or in any other loka, all those that were engaged in the meditation of the Devi in the sacred places of the Devi and died there, they all come here and reside with the Devi in great joy and festivity.

46-59. On all sides rivers are flowing; some of ghee, some of milk, curd, honey, nectar, pomegranate juice, jambu juice, and some of mango juice, sugarcane juices are flowing on all sides. The trees here yield fruits according to one's desires and the wells and tanks yield water also as people desire. Never is there any want felt here of anything. Never are seen here diseases, sorrow, old age, decrepitude, anxiety, anger, jealousy, and envy and other lower ideas. All the inhabitants of this place are full of youth and look like one thousand Suns. All enjoy with their wives and they worship S'ri Bhuvanes'vari. Some have attained Salokya, some Samipya, some Sarupya and some have attained Sarsti and pass their days in highest comfort. The Devas that are in every Brahmanda all live here and worship S'ri Devi. The seven Koti Maha Mantras and Maha Vidyas here assume forms and worship the Maha Maya S'ri Bhagavati, Who is of the nature of Brahma. O King! Thus I have described to you all about this Manidvipa. The lustre of Sun, Moon and Kotis and Kotis of lightnings cannot be one Kotieth of one Koti part of Its lustre. At some places the lustre is like Vidrumamani; some places as are illumined like the lustre of Marakata Mani; some, like Surya Kanta mani and some places are rendered brilliant like Kotis and Kotis of lightnings. The light at some places is like Sindura; at some places like Indranilamani; at some places, like Manikya, and at some places like diamond. Some places are blazing like the conflagration of fire; and some places look like molten gold; some places seem filled with the lustre of Chandrakantamani, and some places look brilliant like Suryakantamani.

60-73. The mountains here are all built of gems and jewels; the entrance gates and enclosures are built of gems and jewels; the trees and their leaves all are of gems; in fact all that exist here are all of gems and jewels. At some places numbers of peacocks are dancing; at some places cuckoos are captivating the minds of persons by cooing in the fifth tune and at others doves and pigeons and parrots are making sweet cackling sounds. Lakhs and lakhs of tanks are there with their pure crystal-like waters. The Red lotuses have blown fully and enhanced the beauty of the place. The captivating scents of these lotuses extend to a distance one hundred Yojanas all round and gladden the minds of people. The leaves are rustling with gentle breeze. The whole sky overhead is radiant with the lustre of Chintamani gems and jewels. All the sides are illuminated with the brilliancy of the gems and jewels. O King! These jewels act like lamps. And the sweet scented trees emit their flagrance and it is transmitted by breeze all around. Thus these trees serve the purpose of dhup (scent). The rays of these gems pierce through the openings of the jewel screens on the houses and fall on the mirrors inside, thus causing a nice brilliant appearance that captivates the mind and causes confusion. O King! And what shall I say of this place, more than this, that all the powers, and wealth, all the love sentiments, all the dress suited to amorous interviews, all the splendours, fire, energy, beauty and brilliance, the omniscience, the indomitable strength, all the excellent qualities and all mercy and kindness are present here! The All Comprehending Bliss and the Brahmananda can always be witnessed here! O King! Thus I have described to you about the Manidvipa, the most exalted place of the Devi Bhagavati. At Her remembrance all the sins are instantly destroyed. The more so, if a man remembers the Devi and about this place at the time of death. He surely goes there. O King! He who daily reads the five Chapters, i.e., from the eighth to this twelfth chapter, is surely untouched by any obstacles due to the Bhutas, Pretas and Pis'achas. Especially the recitation of this at the time of building a new house and at the time of Vastuyaga ensures all good and auspiciousness.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the description of Mani Dvipa in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Vyasa said O King Janamejaya! Thus I have answered all your nice queries; also what Narayana spoke to the highsouled Narada is also said by nne. He who hears this greatly wonderful Puranam S’ri Devi Bhagavatam certainly becomes dear to the Devi and all his actions become fructified with success. Now as regards your mental distress, how you prevent any evil falling to your late father in his future life, I advise you to do the Yajna in the name of Bhagavati; and certainly your father will be saved. And you also better take the Most Excellent Mantra of the Maha Devi duly, according to rules; and your human life will then be crowned with success; (your life will be saved; thus you as well as your father will be saved).

5-12. Suta said O Risis! Hearing thus, the King asked Vyasa Deva to initiate in the Great Devi Mantra and thus to become his Guru. He was then initiated duly according to rules with the Great Mantra of Bhagavati united with Pranava. When the Navaratra period arrived, he called Dhaumya and other Brahmanas and performed the Navaratra Vrata so very dear to the Devi, according to his state. At this time for the satisfaction of the Devi, he caused this Devi Bhagavata Purana to be read by the Brahmanas and fed innumerable Brahmanas and Kumaris (virgins) and gave in charity lots of things to the poor, orphans, and the Brahmin boys and thus finished the Vrata. O Risis! Thus completing the Deviyajha, while the King was sitting on his seat, the fiery Devarsi Narada came there from above playing with his lute. Seeing him there, all on a sudden, the King got up, and paid due respects to him by asking him to take his seat, with other necessary things. When the Devarsi became relieved of his labour of journey, the King asked him about his welfare and then enquired into the cause of his coming there.

13-19. O Devarsi! Whence and what for are you now conning? By your arrival here I am become blessed and feel that my Lord has come to me; now what can I serve to you; kindly command and oblige. Hearing this, the Devarsi Narada said "O King! Today I saw in the Devaloka a very wonderful event. I wanted eagerly to inform that to you. Hence I have come here. Your father met with a bad turn of fate for his bad action. I saw today he assumed a divine form and he was going on a chariot. The Devas were praising him and the Apsaras were encircling him. It seemed he was going in that dress to the Mani Dvipa. O King! You performed the Navaratra Vrata and read the Devi Bhagavata; it seems, as a result of that, your father has now been rewarded with such a noble and good turn of fate. Now you have become blessed and your actions have borne fruits. You have delivered your father from the hell and so you have become an ornament in your family. Today your name and fame have extended to the Devaloka."

20-30. Suta said O Risis! Hearing these words from the mouth of Narada, the King Janamejaya became very much happy and delighted and fell prostrate at the feet of Vyasa Deva of glorious deeds and said O Best of Munis! By Thy Grace, today I have become blessed. Now what return can I pay to Thee save bowing down to Thee. I pray that Thou dost shew such favours to me ever and again. O Risis! Hearing these words of the King Janamejaya, Vadarayana Veda Vyasa blessed him and spoke to him in sweet words:-- "O King! Now leave all other actions. Read always the Devi Bhagavata and worship the Lotus Feet of S'ri Devi. Leave off all laziness and now perform the Devi Yajha with great eclat. And you will surely be able to cross this bondage of the world. True there are various Puranas, the Visnu Purana, the S'iva Purana, but those cannot compare with one sixteenth of this Devi Bhagavatam. In fact, this Purana is the Essence of all the Puranas. How can the other Puranas be compared with this, wherein is established the Devi

Mula Prakriti? Reading this Purana from the beginning to the end yields the result of reading the Vedas. So the wise persons should try their best to study it always." Thus saying to Janamejaya, Veda Vyasa departed. Then the pure minded Dhaumya and the other Brahmanas highly praised the Devi Bhagavatam and went to their desired places. And the King Janamejaya, on the other hand, began to read and hear always the Devi Bhagavatam and spent his days happily in governing his kingdom.

Here end the Thirteenth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the description of Janamejaya's Devi Yajha in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-17. Suta said “O Risis! In days of yore, from the Lotus Face of the Devi Bhagavata came out S’ri Mad Bhagavatam in the form of half a S’loka, as the decided conclusion of the Vedas. About what She gave instructions to Visnu, sleeping on a leaf of a Banyan tree, that same thing, the seed of the S’ri Mad Bhagavata, Brahma Himself expanded into one hundred Koti s’lokas. Then, Veda Vyasa, in order to teach his own son S’uka Deva, condensed them into eighteen thousand s’lokas, in Twelve Books and named it S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the present volume. That voluminous book comprising one hundred Koti s’lokas compiled by Brahma are still extant in the Deva loka. There is no Purana like the Devi Bhagavatam, so merit-giving, holy and capable to destroy all the sins. The reading of every line yields the fruits of performing many As’vamedha sacrifices. Human beings addicted to worldly affairs will get the merit of giving lands to the Brahmanas and they will enjoy also all the pleasures of the world and in the end will go to the region of the Devi, if they can hear, after they have fasted and controlled their passions, the recitation of this Puranam from the mouth of a Pauranik Brahmana, who has been worshipped and given clothings and ornaments and is considered as a second Veda

Vyasa. Or, if anybody writes the whole of the Devi Bhagavatam with his own hand or gets it written by a writer from the beginning to the end and gives to a Pauranik Brahmin the book placed in a box of the form of a lion made up of gold and a cow yielding milk with her calf with gold as his sacrificial fee; or if he feeds as many Brahmanas as there are the number of chapters of the Devi Bhagavatam and worship as many Kumaris (virgin girls) with saffron, sandalpaste and ornaments and feeds them with Paysanna, he gets the merits of giving lands and enjoys all the pleasures of the world and goes in the end to the region of the Devi. He has no want of anything who daily hears with rapt devotion this Devi Bhagavatam. One who has no wealth gets abundance of wealth, those who are students get knowledge, one who has no sons, gets sons if one hears this Devi Bhagavatam with true devotion. A barren woman, or one who bears still-born children or whose offsprings never live long or who bears only a single child, gets all her defects removed, if she hears this Devi Bhagavatam with a steadfast devotion. The house where this Purana is worshipped, Laksmi and Sarasvati dwell there, leaving their animosities towards each other. By the influence of this Devi Bhagavatam the Dakinis, Vetalas, Raksasas, and other ghosts cannot cast a glance even on its devotee. If anybody gets fever and if the S'ri Devi Bhagavatam be read touching him with a concentrated attention, all the complaints disappear. By reading this Bhagavatam, one hundred times even more difficult than the severe disease pthisis is cured.

18-20. If after performing the Sandhya, one reads only one chapter of this Bhagavatam with a collected mind, he soon acquires the Real Knowledge. O Muni S'aunaka! While going to read this Bhagavatam, first examine omens and then read. I have spoken already on this subject. If during the S'aradiya Puja (the autumnal Durga Puja), at the Navaratra period, one reads with devotion this Bhagavatam, the Devi Bhagavati becomes greatly pleased and awards him results more than his desires.

21-31. During the Navaratri period all can read well this book for the satisfaction of his Ista Deva (his own deity) whether he be a Vaisnava, S'aiva, Saura, Ganapatya or a S'akta. All can read this for the satisfaction of Laksmi, Uma and other S'aktis. The Vaidik Brahmanas are to recite this daily for the satisfaction of the Devi Gayatri. This Puranam is not contradictory to any sectarian belief. The reason of this being that to whatever deity he pays his worship, he must worship some S'akti or other, this is stated everywhere. So for the satisfaction of one's own S'akti, all can read this, without contradicting each other. Never any woman nor any S'udra, is to read this herself or himself, even out of ignorance; rather they should hear this from the mouth of a Brahmana. This is the rule of the S'astras. (The vibrations and the consequent results would be truer then.) O Risis! What more to say on this book than this, that this Puranam is the most excellent of all and yields great merits. It is the essence of the Vedas. This I tell you with great certainty. There is not the least doubt in this. Reading or hearing this yields results equivalent to reading or hearing the Vedas. I now bow to the Devi of the nature of Hrim and established by Gayatri, of the nature of Everlasting Existence, Intelligence and Bliss, Who stimulates our activities to the understanding of various subjects. Thus hearing the excellent words of Suta, the great Pauranik, all the Munis of Naimisaranya worshipped him specially and as the result of hearing this Puranam glady became the servants of the Lotus Feet of the Devi and they attained the Highest Rest. The Munis expressed their humility and gratitude to Suta frequently and bowed down to him again and again. And they said "O Suta! It is you that have saved us from this ocean of world." Thus (the great Bhagavata) Suta, the bee drinking the honey of the Lotus Feet of the Devi, recited before the assemblage of the best of the Munis this Puranam from the beginning to the end, the Secret of all the Nigamas and full of the Glories of the Devi Bhagavati. After this the Risis bowed down to him and he blessed and honoured

Then he went away to his desired place. Here the Devi Bhagavatam ends and is fully completed.

THE END.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Twelfth Book on the recitation of the fruits of this Puranam in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

Here ends as well the Full Treatise, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam.

Om. Om. Om. Om Tat Sat. Om Hah Om.

Notes

Kosala is a country situated, according to Ramayana, along the banks of the Sarayu (or Gogra). It was divided into Uttara-Kosala and Dakshina Kosala. The fornner is also called Ganda and it nnust have therefore signified the country, north of Ayodhya connprising Gonda and Bahraich. Aja and Dasaratha, etc., are said to have ruled over the province. At the time of Rama's death, his two sons Kusa and Lava reigned respectively at Kusavati in Southern Kosala in the defiles of the Vindhyas and at Sravasti in northern Kosala.
