1-6. Vyasa said The thousand eyed Indra, hearing this, again asked to Brihaspati that he would make preparations for war against Mahisasura. Without effort kingdoms are not attained; no - nor happiness, nor fame, nor anything; those who are weak, they extol effortlessness; but the powerful never praise that. Knowledge is the ornament of the ascetics and contentment is the ornament of the Brahmanas; but those who desire lordship over powers, effort and prowess to destroy one's enemies are their excellent ornaments. O Muni! I will kill this Mahisasura by my heroism as I had, of old, destroyed Vritra, Namuchi and Balasura. You are the Deva Guru; therefore you and my thunderbolt are my strength. The immortal Hah and Hara also will help me in this. O Guru! Preserver of my honour and prestige! Now recite the mantras calculated to remove all the obstacles towards my victory. I, too, am making preparations and raising up my own forces to wage up war against that Danava Mahisa.

7-13. Vyasa said On hearing Indra's words, Brihaspati smiled and said “O Lord of the Devas! I see you are bent on fight. I will neither stimulate you to fight nor shall I make you desist from the purpose. The issue is doubtful. There may be defeat or there may be victory.

O Lord of S'achi! You are not to blame at all in this matter; what is written in the Book of Fate will come to pass, be it victory or defeat. I am not aware of the future in this respect. O Child! You know already what an amount of suffering I had to endure in times gone by when my wife had been stolen. O Destroyer of the enemies! My wife had been stolen by Moon who turned out my enemy; living in my stage of an householder I was put to all sort of miseries, deprived of all my happiness. O Lord of the Suras! I am renowned in all the worlds as a man of much wisdom and intelligence. Where then was my intelligence, when Moon carried away, perforce, nny wife. O Lord of the Suras! To my mind, the success or failure depends entirely on destiny; yet intelligent ones should always resort to efforts and be energetic.

14-17. Vyasa said O King! On hearing the words of Brihaspati, pregnant with truth, Indra went with him to Brahma, took his refuge and saluting him said O Grand Sire! The Danava is collecting a big army, and wants to conquer and take possession of the Heavens. All the other Danavas have enrolled themselves in the list of his army; they are eager to fight and they are all very powerful and skilled in arts of warfare. I am therefore very afraid and have come to you. You know everything; please help me in this matter.

18-20. Brahma said We all will go today to the Mount Kailas’a and take S'ankara with us and go to Visnu. There all the Devas, assembled, will hold a council and consider the time and place, when it will be settled whether it is proper or not to fight. For one who dares to do any act without considering one's strength and without any judgment, certainly courts his own downfall.

21-35. Vyasa said O King! Hearing this, Indra with the other Lokapalas and Devas, headed by Brahma, went to Kailas'a. Then they came to S'ankara and sang vedic hymns to him. Mahes'vara became very much pleased and they taking Him went to Vaikuntha, the abode of Visnu. Indra saluted Visnu and sang hymns to him, and told him about his errand thus “Mahisa has become very haughty on account of the favour bestowed on him and therefore we are very afraid (and therefore ask your help to relieve us from this danger).” Visnu, then, hearing the cause of fear, told them “We all will fight and kill that Demon.” Vyasa said:-o king! Thus settling the question, Brahma, Visnu, and Hah and Indra and the other Devas riding on their own Vahanas (means of conveyance) respectively dispersed. While Brahma on his vehicle Swan, Visnu on his Garuda, S'ankara on his Bull, Indra on his elephant Airavata, Kartika on his peacock, and Yama, the god of death on his Vahana, the Buffalo, were on the point of going with the other Deva forces, the army of the Danava Mahisa met them on their way, all fully equipped with arms and weapons. A dreadful fight then ensued between the Devas and the Danavas.

Arrows, axes, Prasas, Musalas (clubs), Paras'us (pick axes), Gadas (clubs), Pattis'as, S'ulas (tridents), chakras (discus) S'akti (weapons), Tomaras, Mudgaras, Bhindipalas, Langalas, and various other deadly weapons appeared on the scenes with which they fought against one another. The Commander-in-Chief of Mahisa, the very powerful Chiksura, shot five sharp arrows at Indra. The ever-ready and light-handed Indra too, with his arrows cut off all of them and struck at his heart heavily with his Ardhachandra (half moon) arrow. The Commander-in-Chief, struck by this arrow fell senseless on the back of his elephant. Indra, then struck the trunk of the elephant with his Vajra (thunderbolt); the elephant then severely struck with the Vajra fled away into the Danava's forces. The Lord of the Danavas seeing this, got very angry and addressed the general Vidala “O Hero! You are very powerful; go then and kill first that haughty Indra; then kill Varuna and other Devas and come back to me.”

36-57. Vyasa said:-- The very powerful Asura Vidala, on receiving the order came up at once to Indra, mounted on a very furious elephant. Seeing him coming, Vasava shot at him angrily with very terrible and most powerful arrows that looked like deadly snakes. But the Demon, too, out off those arrows at once with his excellent arrows and quickly shot at Vasava fifty arrows, sharpened on stones. Indra cut off all those and, being infuriated, shot again sharp deadly serpent-like arrows at him, and cutting off again all his enemies'

arrows by arrows discharged from his bow, struck the elephant's trunk with his Gada (club). The elephant, being thus struck on his head, cried aloud in a distressed tone and being afraid turned back, thus killing the Danava forces as he fled away. The general Vidala, seeing the elephant fleeing away from the battle-field, mounted on a beautiful chariot and instantly appeared before the Devas to fight with them. Seeing the Danava coming again on a chariot, Indra shot at him sharp arrows after arrows like venomous snakes. The powerful Danava, too, infuriated hurled at him terrible arrows; then a sharp conflict ensued between Vasava and the Danava. Finding the Danava powerful, Vasava's senses were confounded with anger; he then took his son Jayanta before him and began to fight. Jayanta stretched his bow tight and shot at the breast of the Danava swelled with pride, five sharp arrows with his full strength. Thus shot at by the network of arrows, the Danava fell unconscious on the chariot; the charioteer then fled away with his chariot from the battle-field. Thus on the Danava Vidala becoming unconscious and being taken away from the field, the Dunduvis (drums) of the Devas were resounded and great acclamations of “Victory to the Devas” were heard. The Devas were very glad and sounded hymns before Indra; the Gandarbhas began to sing and the Apsaras began to dance. O king! Hearing the loud acclamations of victory to the Devas, Mahisa became very angry and ordered the Danava Tamra, the destroyer of enemy's pride, to go to the battle-field. Tamra appeared in the battle, and, coming face to face with many Deva warriors, hurled on them showers of arrows. Varuna appeared with his Pas'a weapon and Yama, mounted on his buffalo, appeared with his Danda (staff). A terrible fight then ensued between the Devas and Danavas and the weapons, arrows, axes, Musalas, S'aktis and Paras'us glittered in the fields. Yama raising his Danda with his hands struck at Tamra; but the powerful Tamra, though severely struck, was not at all moved and remained firm in his place in the field. On the other hand Tamra, violently drawing his bow, hurled a mass of sharp arrows at Indra and the other Devas. The Devas got angry and shot at the Danava multitudes of divine arrows sharpened on stone, and frequently called aloud “Wait, wait.” The Danava Tamra thus shot at by the arrows of the Devas, fell unconscious in the battle-field; the Danava forces got afraid and a cry of universal consternation and distress arose.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Fifth Skandha on the defeat of the Danava forces of Mahisa in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses.

English translation

1-8. Vyasa said O King! On the Daitya Tannra becoming unconscious Mahisa became very angry and, raising his Gada (club), came up before the Devas and said “Devas! O Ye powerless like crows; wait; with one stroke of Gada, I will kill you.” Thus saying, the powerful Mahisa swelled with pride, seeing Indra before him mounted on his elephant instantly struck him on his arms. Indra, again lost no time, and struck violently with his thunderbolt and cut the Danava's Gada into pieces, and came up very close, wanting to strike at him. Mahisa, too, becoming very angry took up his lustrous sword and came to Indra to attack him with this weapon. A fight then occurred between the two, terrible to all the Lokas and wonderful to the Munis, where various weapons were showered from both the sides. The Demon Mahisa spread then his S'amvari Maya, destructive to all the worlds and fascinating to the Munis.

Hundreds and hundreds of powerful buffalo-like appearances resembling Mahisa became, then, visible on the battle-field; they all began to kill the Deva forces with weapons in their hands.

9-14. Seeing this magic of the Danava, Indra became thunderstruck and very much confounded with terror. Varuna, Kuvera, the Lord of wealth, Yama, Fire, Moon, Sun, and other Devas all fled with terror. Indra then, being surrounded by the network of magic, began to call Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a in his mind. At the instant when they were called in mind, Brahma, Visnu and Mahes’a riding on respective conveyances Swan, Garuda, and Bull, came up there with best weapons in their hands for Indra's protection. Visnu seeing the play of that fascinating magic hurled his bright discus, Sudars'an; and caused the magic to vanish at once. Seeing the three, the Creator, the Preserver, and the Destroyer, the Danava Mahisa came up there with his Parigha (a club tipped with iron) weapon, desirous to fight with them.

15-16. Then the general Chiksura, Ugrasya, Ugravirya, Asiloma, Trinetra, Vaskala, Andhaka and other warriors came up to fight.

17-23. Those Proud Danavas, clad in armour and mounted on chariots with bows in their hands besieged the Devas, like a tiger attacking an heifer. Then those Danavas swelled with pride began to shower on arrows after arrows; the Devas, too, began to do the same, desiring to extirpate them.The General Andhaka, coming up to Hah, drew his bow with great force up to his ear and shot at him five sharp arrows tipped with poison. Vasudeva, the Destroyer of the enemies, cut off those arrows no sooner they came up before him; and He shot at the Danavas five arrows. Then Hari and the Danava struck each other with various weapons and arrows, swords, discus, Musala, clubs, S’akti, and Paras'u. Here, on the other hand, the fight lasted for fifty days between Mahes'a versus Andhaka; and it was a very close conflict, causing horripilation. Thus severe fights ensued between Vaskala and Indra, Mahisa and Rudra, Trinetra and Yama, Maha Hanu and Kuvera, Asiloma and Varuna.

24-39. The Danava Mahisa struck Garuda, the conveyance of Hari, with his club; Garuda, being very much distressed with the blow, sat down, gasping. Visnu then comforted the powerful Garuda, the son of Vinata and made him calm and quiet. Wanting to kill Andhaka, Janardana became infuriated, and, drawing his bow made of horn, call S'arnga, shot at him arrows after arrows. The Danava cut off all those arrows to pieces with his own mass of arrows. Then, becoming very angry, he shot fifty sharp arrows at Hari. Vasudeva quickly made all those arrows useless and hurled Sudars'ana Chakra with thousand spokes on the Danava with great violence. Andhaka thwarted this with his own discus and shouted aloud with such a great force that all the Devas became confused and confounded. Visnu's Chakra being baffled, the Devas became distressed with grief and the Danavas got elated. Seeing the Devas thus grieved, Visnu held aloft his Kaumodaki Gada (club) and came hurriedly before the Danava. Hari struck then with his Gada on the Danava's head whereon he fell senseless on the ground. The hot-tempered Mahisa, seeing Andhaka senseless, bellowed aloud and, terrifying Hari, came up there. Seeing him there, Vasudeva made such a thundering noise with his bow string that the Devas became highly glad. Then the Bhagavan shot showers of arrows on Mahisa; and Mahisa, too, cut those arrows while they were seen in the air. O king! Then a very close fight ensued between the two, Kes'ava struck on the head of the Danava with his club. Thus struck, he fell in a swoon on the ground and a general cry of distress arose amongst the Danavas. In a moment the Danava got up again, free from trouble; he then struck again on Visnu's head with his Parigha (a club mounted with iron, a mace). Struck by that mace, Janardan lay senseless; Garuda, seeing him thus unconscious, immediately took him away from the battle field.

40-55. When Visnu thus fled, Indra and the Devas were much distressed with fear and began to cry aloud. Hearing the Devas cry, S'ankara became wrathful and, quickly coming before Mahisa, struck him with his trident (S'ula). The wicked Mahisa made his weapon ineffectual and bellowed aloud and struck on the breast of S'ankara with his S’akti (a kind of missile). Thus wounded in his breast S'ankara did not feel any pain; rather, with his eyes red with anger. He struck him again with Trisula. Seeing S'ankara engaged with Mahisa, Hari becoming conscious came again on the battle-field. Seeing the two powerful Deva-chiefs, Hari and Hara, in the battle¬ field Mahisa became very much angry: he then assumed a buffalo body and wagging his tail to and fro came in front of them with a desire to fight. That terrible Mahisa of a huge body shook his horns and bellowed so deep like a thunder cloud that even the Devas got frightened. He began to hurl the huge mountain peaks with his two horns. The two powerful Devas Hari and Hara, began to shoot at the Danava deadly arrows after arrows. Seeing these two gods shower arrows upon him, Mahisa began to hurl mountains on them by his tail. Visnu cut off those mountains into hundred pieces by his arrow; and struck at him instantly with his Chakra. Struck thus by Chakra, the Lord of the Danavas fainted, but he instantly rose up with a human body. The mountain-like terrible Danava with a club in his hand frightened the Devas and uttered grave sounds like those of rumbling rain clouds. Hearing that, the Bhagavan Visnu sounded a more terrible sound with his Pahchajanya S'ankha (conchshell). Hearing the sound of that conchshell, the Danavas were struck with terror and the ascetic Risis and Devas became exalted with joy.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Fifth Skandha on the Deva Danava fight in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 versus by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Mahisa seeing the Danavas afflicted with grief, quitted his buffalo appearance, assumed a lion form and spreading this long manes began to roar aloud and fell amidst the Deva forces; then the Devas were terrified on seeing his sharp nails. That lion-form Mahisa first attacked so severely the Garuda with his nails, that his whole body was besmeared with blood; then he attacked Visnu's arms with his nails.

4-11. Seeing the Danava, Vasudeva Hah raised his discus in anger and attacked him with great force to kill him. Just when Hari struck the Danava violently with his Chakra, the powerful Danava quitted immediately his lion-form, assumed the buffalo form and struck Hari with his two horns. Vasudeva, thus pierced in his breast with the horns, became confounded and fled away as best as he could till he reached his own abode, Vaikuntha. Seeing Hari thus fleeing away, S'ankara, too, thought him invulnerable and fled to his Kailas'a mountain with fear. Brahma, too, fled to his own abode with terror; but the powerful Vasava took patience and remained steady in the battle. Varuna taking his S'akti waited patiently for battle. Yama, too, with his staff remained there ready to fight. Kuvera, the Lord of the Yaksas, remained very busy in close fighting with the Danavas; Fire, taking S’akti, also waited. The Sun and Moon, the Lord of the stars, both remained in firm resolve to fight with Mahisa, the lord of the Danavas.

12-22. O King! In the meanwhile, the Danava forces got angry and attacked them on all sides, shooting at the enemies a mass of dangerous serpent-like arrows. The Lord of the Danavas, Mahisa, too, assuming the buffalo appearance, reigned supreme in the middle. At this moment fierce sounds of the warriors on both the sides were heard. During the sharp contest of the Devas and Danavas, the sounds from the bowstrings and the clappings of the hands were heard like the roarings of thunder. The powerful Danava, then, swelled with pride, began to hurl the mountain tops with his horns, thus killing the Deva forces. Some by hoofs and some by the lashing of the tail, that angry Mahisa, very wonderful to behold, sent to the region of Death. Then the Devas and Gandarbhas became very much frightened; so much so, that Indra fled away at once on the sight of Mahisa. Indra thus retreating from the field, Yama, Kuvera, and Varuna all quitted the battle-ground with fear. Indra fled away quitting his Airavata elephant and Uchchais'rava horse; so Mahisa got the possession of the elephant and the horse, as well the heavenly cow of the Sun. So the Danavas considered themselves pre-eminently victorious and returned to their abodes. Next they wanted to go, as early as possible, to the Heavens, with all their forces. In no time Mahisa went to the abode of Indra, deserted by all the terror-stricken Devas and got the possession thereof. Then taking his seat on the beautiful throne of Indra, he made the other Danavas occupy the several seats of the other Devas.

He banished the Devas from the Heavens; the Devas, thus tormented began to wander in the caves of hills and dales for a period of good many years. O King! The Devas, at last, were quite tired and took the four-faced Brahma, the Creator's refuge. At that instant, the Lord of the world, the Rajas incarnate, the Originator of the Vedas, was seated on His lotus seat; surrounding Him were standing his mortal sons Marichi, etc., with their passions subdued, mind calm and beyond the sphere of the Vedas and Vedangas; there were there also Siddhas, Gandarbhas, Kinnaras, Charanas, Uragas, and Pannagas. The terrified Devas then began to praise and chant hymns to Brahma, the Lord of the world.

28-33. The Devas said “O Creator! O Lotus-born! O Thou, the Remover of the pains and afflictions of all this world! How is it that you are not moved with pity towards the Devas, seeing that we are defeated by the lord of the Danavas and have been banished from our abode; what more shall we say, our troubles are now indescribable, as we are living in the caves of hills and dales. O Creator! A son may be a hundred times guilty of offence; is it, then, that the father, devoid of any feeling of covetousness, deserts his sons and gives them trouble! We are oppressed by the Danavas, we who are wholly devoted to your lotus-feet, why are you today showing signs of indifference towards us! That wicked Danava is thoroughly enjoying to-day the Heavens of the Devas, is forcibly taking their share of the oblations of clarified butter in the Yajhas (sacrifices) from the Brahmanas; is enjoying the Parijata tree and also the heavenly milching cow, the jewel of the ocean. What more shall we describe to you the strange doings of the Asuras; O Lord of the Devas! You are perfectly aware of all that they strive and execute; for, by your knowledge, you know everything of this world; therefore, O Lord! We lie prostrate at your feet. That vicious Danava, of wicked character and full of mischievous actions, gives us troubles in various ways wherever we go; O Lord of the Devas! Thou art our only Protector; therefore, O Lord! Do what is good to us. Thou art the Awarder of the desires of the Devas. Thou art the First Creator of the world, and Preserver; therefore if Thou dost not do us our good, to whom else shall we take refuge, when we are so severely oppressed as if we are burnt in a forest conflagration! Who else is more lustrous, more beneficent and more peace-giving Governor?

34-35. Vyasa said O king! All the Devas, praising Him thus, bowed down to the Lord of creation with folded hands and saluted him, with their faces very heavy, overladen with deep sorrow. The Grand Sire of all the Lokas, seeing the plight of the Devas, consoled them with sweet words and made them happy.

36-43. O Suras! What shall I do? The Danava has become exceedingly haughty on account of his getting boons; he can be killed by females only; He is invulnerable by any male. What remedy is there now? Therefore, O Suras! Let us all go to Kailasa, the best of all the mountains; thence we will take S'ankara, the expert in doing the works of Gods, and go to Vaikuntha, where Visnu, the Deva of the Devas resides. There we all will unite and hold a counsel and decide what is best to do, to serve the purpose of the gods.

Thus making out the programme, Brahma riding on his Hamsa went to Kailasa, accompanied by all the Devas. At the same time S'iva came to know out of his introspection about the coming of Brahma and the other Devas and soon came out of his dwelling abode.

When they met each other, they saluted each other and felt very glad. The Devas then bowed down to them. Seats were given to the Devas; and when they sat respectively on their Asanas, the Lord of Parvati also took his own seat. S'iva asked the welfare of Brahma and the Devas and asked the reasons of their coming to Kailasa.

44. O Brahma! What has caused you to come here along with Indra and the other Devas? O highly fortunate one! Please mention it.

45-47. Brahma said O Deva of the Devas! The Danava Mahisa is oppressing all the Devas in the Heavens; they therefore terrified are wandering hither and thither in the caves and hills with Indra. Mahisa and the other Danavas are now accepting their share of Yajhas; the Lokopalas, being oppressed, have come to-day and are now taking shelter of Thee. O S'ambhu! Considering the situation serious, I have taken them with me here; therefore, O Deva, do that which is reasonable and by which the purpose of the Devas can be carried out. O Bhuta Bhavana! (The creator of the world) The whole charge and responsibility of all the Devas devolves on Thee.

48. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus, S'ankara smiled a little and spoke charming words to the Lotus-born in the following manner

49-55. O Bibhu! It is You that gave before this boon to Mahisa; and therefore it is you that have wrought this mischief. The Danava has become so strong a hero that he has caused terror to all the Devas even. Now where can we get such a noble woman who becomes able to kill that Danava, elated with pride. My wife nor your wife ought to go to battle; even if they, the good ladies go, how will they be able to fight? The fortunate wife of Indra, too, is not expert in the art of warfare; where else there is another lady who can kill this demon, blinded with pride. I, therefore, propose this; let us all go today to Visnu and, praising him with hymns, engage him quickly to this cause of the gods. Visnu is foremost amongst the intelligent; therefore it is highly advisable to execute all actions after duly consulting with him. He, by dint of his high intelligence, will find out means and effect our purpose.

Vyasa said O King! Brahma and the other Devas heard Rudra and approved heartily and saying, “Be it so” instantly rose up. At the time, seeing all the auspicious signs concerning the success of the gods, they all became glad; and, riding on their respective vehicles, drove towards the abode of Visnu. Favourable fragrant winds, pleasant to touch, began to blow gently, birds began to chant hymns of praise and signs of success were seen all along their way. The sky was clear and the quarters became free; in short, everything showed favourable all along their way.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter on the going of the Devas to Kailasa in the Fifth Skandha of S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Vyasa said Soon the Devas reached Vaikuntha, protected by Visnu; they at once began to look at the exquisite indescribable beauty of the place. At intervals they saw nice lovely divine houses, shining and appearing very splendid; pools and lakes were seen in front of them beautified with Kalhara lotus flowers. They began to see, at other places, rivers flowing; swans, cranes, Chakravakas and other aquatic birds were swimming there easily and warbling lovely sounds. At other places again, beautiful gardens came to their sight adorned exquisitely by Champaka, As'oka Mandara, Bakula, Amrataka, Tilaka, Kuruvaka and Mallika and various other flower trees, the cuckoos were seen there cooing melodiously, bees humming gently and peacocks dancing beautifully.

5-6. In the centre was situated the golden palace of Hari, towering to heavens, the rooms and quadrangles were all charming; at places, they were bedecked with gems and jewels and adorned with various paintings. There was the Divine Seat in the centre, composed wholly of gems and jewels; and Visnu was occupying this place. There were Visnu's Parisadas or attendants, Sunanda, Nandana, and others; they were so much devoted to their master that their hearts never become attached to any other thing; so they were devotedly singing His praises and chanting His hymns with undivided attention.

7-10. There were dancing the Apsaras (celestial nymphs) and the Devas, Gandarbhas, and Kinnaras were singing in melodious tunes. Those who love the chanting of the Vedas, such calm-tempered Munis were reciting the Vedic Suktas and thus highly extolled Him. The two lovely gate-keepers Jaya and Vijaya were waiting at the entrance gate with golden sticks in their hands; the Devas conning nigh the city of Visnu caught sight of them and said “Any of you may go and inform Visnu that Brahma, Rudra, and the whole host of gods are waiting at His door to see Him.”

11. Vyasa said O king! Hearing their words, Vijaya went away at once to Visnu; and, saluting Him, informed Him of the arrival of the Devas.

12-13. Vijaya said O Lord! Thou destroyest the enemies of the gods; hence Thou art the most worshipped of them. O Lord of Rama! The whole hosts of gods have come and are waiting at Thy door, O Bibhu!

Brahma, Rudra, Indra, Varuna, Fire and Yama and other gods, anxious to see Thee, are all praising Thee by proper hymns.

14-32. Vyasa said Hearing Vijaya's words, Visnu, the Lord of Rama became very anxious and soon went out of his room to see the Devas. Hari came up to them and seeing the Devas waiting at the doors very morose and tired, cheered them up by casting a favourable glance full affection and love. The gods bowed down and praised hymns to Jagannatha the Deva of the Devas, the enemy of the Daityas and revealed in the Vedas. O Deva of the Devas! Thou art the Creator, Preserver and the Destroyer of the worlds; Thou art the ocean of mercy and the sole refuge of this Universe; O Lord! We have come to Thee as our Great Refuge; therefore dost Thou save us from the present difficulty. Thus praised by the gods, Visnu said:- - O Immortals! Take your respective seats and speak how are you all? Why have you all in a body come here? Why are you so much depressed and worn out with cares?

Why do you look so melancholy? Say soon for what purpose you with Brahma and Rudra have come here. The Devas said “O Lord! The Asura Mahisa is very cruel and wicked; always addicted to vicious acts; now that most sinful Danava has become very much puffed up with pride and is tormenting us always. What more shall we say than this, he is appropriating to himself the share of the Yajhas performed by the Brahmins; we are therefore, terror-stricken and are wandering in mountains and fastnesses. O Destroyer of Madhu! He has become unconquerable due to his being granted the boon; considering, therefore, the gravity of our situation we have taken refuge unto Thee. O Krisna! Thou art acquainted with all the tricks and Maya of the Daityas; therefore Thou art capable to kill them. Therefore Thou alone art able to deliver us from the present difficulty; be pleased, therefore; to Devise means for that purpose. The Creator Brahma has granted him this boon that the demon could not killed by any man; therefore we are asking you where can we get a female who will be able to kill that hypocrite in battle. Mahisa has turned out very wicked on the strength of that boon; say, therefore, who amongst Lima, Laksmi, S'achi, or Vidya or any other woman will be able to kill him. Therefore, O Gracious One to faithful worshippers and attendants! Thou art the Preserver of this world; now Devise specially the cause of his death and carry out the purpose of the gods.” Vyasa said O king! Visnu on hearing their words, spoke smiling “We fought before; but this Asura could not at that time be killed. Hence if some beautiful female Deity be now created out of the collective energy and form of the S'aktis of each of the Devas, then that Lady would be able easily to destroy that Demon by sheer force. The Lady Deity then sprung from the collective energy of ours, would at once be able to destroy that Mahisa, elated on his getting the power, though he is skilled in hundreds of Mayas (magics). Therefore ask ye now all, with your wives respectively, boons from that portion which resides in you all in the form of Fiery Energy, that the collected energy thus manifested may assume the form of a Lady. We will then offer unto Her, all the Divine weapons, the trident, etc., that belong to us. That Deity, then, full of energy and with all the weapons in Her hands would kill that wicked Demon, vicious and swelled with vanity.”

33-46. Vyasa said On Visnu, the Lord of the Devas, saying thus, came out spontaneously, at once, of the face of Brahma, the brilliant fiery energy, very difficult to conceive. That energy looked red like gems and pearls, hot, at the same time, a little cool, having a beautiful form, and encircled by a halo of light. O King! The high- souled Hari and Hara, of mighty valor, were astonished to see this Fire, emitted from Brahma. Next came out of the body of S'ankara, His fiery spirit, quite in abundance and very wonderful to behold; it was silvery white, terrible, unbearable, and incapable of being seen even with difficulty. It extended like a mountain and looked horrible as if the incarnation of the Tamo Guna like another Tamo Guna (S'iva is the incarnation of Tamo Guna that destroys everything). It was very surprising to the Devas and very fearful to the Daityas.

Next a dazzling light of blue colour emanated from the body of Visnu. The light that came out of the body of Indra was hardly bearable, of a beautiful variegated colour, and comprised in itself the three qualities. Thus masses of lights came out respectively from Kuvera, Yama, Fire and Varuna. The other Devas, too, gave their shares of fiery lights, very lustrous and splendid. Then these all united into a great Mass of Fire and Light. Like another Himalayan mountain shone full their lustrous Divine light; Visnu and the other Devas were all extremely surprised to see this. While the Devas were thus looking steadfastly on that Fire, an exquisitely handsome Lady was born out of it, causing excitement and wonder to all. This Lady was Maha Laksmi; composed of the three qualities of the three colours, beautiful, and fascinating to the universe. Her face was white, eyes were black, her lips were red and the palms of her hands were copper-red. She was adorned with divine ornaments. The Goddess was now manifest with eighteen hands, though She had a thousand hands (in Her unmanifested state). Now She became manifest out of the mass of fire, for the destruction of the Asuras.

47-52. Janamejaya said O Best of the Munis! O Krisna! You are highly fortunate and you are all-knowing. Kindly describe, in detail the birth of Her body. O Deva! Please say whether the energies of all the gods united into one or remained separate? Whether Her body and Her limbs were all luminous. Was it that Her face, nose, eyes, etc., and all other parts of Her body were created out of the different fires respectively or whether was it that those limbs were fashioned when the different fires blended into one huge mass? Describe, in detail, the origin of the body and the several limbs thereof; also inform me the limbs that were produced out of the corresponding Deva's fiery part; as well tell me the several ornaments and several weapons given by the several Devas respectively. I am very desirous to hear all these from your lotus-like mouth. O Brahman! Hearing from your lotus-like mouth the life and doings of Maha Laksmi, the sweet juice as they are, I am as yet not satiated (and am desirous to hear more).

53. Suta said Veda Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, hearing his words addressed him in the following sweet words

54. "O Best of Kuras! Very fortunate you are. I will describe in detail, to the best of my understanding, the origin of Her body.

55. Even Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a and Indra are never competent enough to describe Her form properly.

56. As I already told you that She sprung at the instant the word was spoken, how then can I ascertain the form or likeness of the Devi.

57. She is constant, She is always existent; though She is one, yet She assumes different forms for the fulfilment of the Deva's ends, whenever their positions become serious.

58-59. Though the actor is one, yet for the entertainment of the spectators, he assumes different forms in the stage, so the Nirguna Devi, though formless, assumes in Her pastime, many different forms of Sattvic, Rajasic or Tamasic qualities, to fulfill the Deva's purposes.

60. There are various names given to Her, according as the works done by Her vary immensely in their natures, just as the meanings of one root vary, some being principal and some secondary, according to the meanings and objects they convey.

61. O King! I will now describe to you as far as my knowledge goes, the Excellent Form that came out of that mass of Celestial Light.

62. Her grand beautiful white lotus-like face was created out of the fiery energy of S'ankara.

63. Her glossy black beautiful hairs of the head, overhanging to the knees, were formed out of the light of Yama; these all came to a fine pointed end.

64. Her three eyes came out of the energy of Fire; the pupils of those eyes were of a black colour; the middle parts were of a white colour and the ends were red.

65. The two eyebrows of the Devi were black and came out of the spirit of Sandhya (twilights); they were nicely curved and were looking spirited, like the bow of the Cupid and they were shedding, as it were, cooling rays.

66. From the light of Vayu (air). Her two ears were created; they were not very long, nor very short, beautiful like the swinging seat (rocking chair) of the God of Love.

67. Her nose was fashioned out of the fire of Kuvera, the Lord of wealth; it looked like the til flower, glassy and exquisitely charming.

68. O King! Her pointed rows of glossy and brilliant teeth, looking like gems, came out of the energy of Daksa; they looked like the Kunda flowers.

69. Her lower lip was deep red and it came out of the fire of Aruna (the charioteer of the Sun); Her beautiful upper lip came out of the energy of Kartika.

70. Her eighteen hands came out of the Tejas of Visnu and Her red fingers came out of the Tejas of the Vasus.

71. Her breasts came out of the energy of Soma and Her middle (navel) with three folds was created out of the spirit of Indra.

72. Her thighs and legs were from Varuna and Her spacious loins came out from Earth.

73-74. O King! Thus from the various Tejas, contributed by the Devas, that Heavenly Lady came out. Her body and the several parts thereof were beautiful; Her form was incomparably graceful and the voice was exquisitely sonorous and lovely. The Devas, oppressed by Mahisasura, became overpowered with joy seeing this well decorated Devi, having beautiful eyes and teeth, and charming in all respects."

75. Visnu then addressed all the Devas to give all their auspicious ornaments and weapons. He said "O Devas! Better give, all you the various arms and weapons, endowed with strength, created out of your own weapons and give them all today to the Devi."

Here ends the Eighth Chapter of the Fifth Skandha on the description of the origin and the form of the Devi in S'rimad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-22. Vyasa said On hearing Visnu's words, the Devas became very glad and presented immediately their own weapons, ornaments and clothings. The Ksiroda (Milk) Ocean presented to Her gladly, the well fitted necklace, clear as crystal, and a pair of divine cloths, of a red colour, never becoming old and very fine. Vis'vakarma was very much gratified in his heart and presented a divine jewel to be worn in Her diadem or crest blazing like hundreds of suns; white earrings; bracelets for Her wrist, bracelets for Her upper arm, and other bracelets decked with various gems and jewels and anklets brilliant like gems, of a clear Sun-like lustre, decked with jewels, and tinkling nicely. The architect of the gods, the ocean of intellect, Vis'vakarma gave Her as offerings beautiful ornaments also for the neck, all very beautiful, as well as for the fingers decked with gems and jewels, all shining splendidly. Varuna gave for Her head garland of lotuses, never fading away, of such a sweet fragrance as bees constantly hover round them and the Vaijayanti garland for Her breast. The mountain Himalya gladly offered Her various gems and a beautiful lion, of a golden colour for Her conveyance. Then that beautiful Lady, having all the auspicious signs, wishing welfare to all, and decorated with the divine ornaments began to look grand and splendid, mounted on Her conveyance, the Lion. Visnu then created another thousand spoked discus (Chakram) from His own Chakra, capable to take off the head of any Asura, and offered it to Her. S'ankara created another excellent Tris'ula from his own Trident, terrible and demon-killing, and offered it to the Devi. Varuna created another bright conch from his own conch and offered it gladly to the Devi.

Fire offered Her a weapon named S'ataghni which kills violently the demons, as if that is another god of death. Maruta (wind), the chief of the gods, offered Her a wonderful bow and arrow case filled with arrows. The bow can be drawn with great difficulty and emits a very harsh sound. Indra created another dreadful thunderbolt from his own thunderbolt and gave it at once to the Devi; as well the beautiful sonorous bell that used to hang from the elephant Airavata. Yama, the God of Death, created another beautiful staff from his own sceptre which takes away when time comes, the life of all beings. Brahma gladly gave Her a divine Kamandalu, filled with the Ganges water; and Varuna offered Her a weapon called Pas'a. O King! Time gave Her an axe and a shield and VisVakarma gave Her a sharp Paras'u. Kuvera, the Lord of wealth, gave her a golden drinking cup, filled with wine; and Varuna offered Her a divine beautiful lotus. VisVakarma became very glad and gave Her the Kaumodaki gada, capable to kill the enemy of the gods and whence hundreds of bells are hanging, an impenetrable armour and various other weapons. The Sun gave to the Divine Mother his own rays. The Devas, seeing Her adorned with ornaments and weapons, began to praise and chant hymns to that most Auspicious Goddess, the Great Enchantress of the three worlds.

23-29. The Deva said “Salutation to S'iva, Salutation to the Most Auspicious; Thou art peace and nourishment; we salute again and again to Thee. Salutation to Thee, the Bhagavati Devi; Thou art the Goddess Rudrani (the terrible), we always salute again and again to Thee. Thou art the Kalaratri (the night of destruction at the end of the world); Thou art the Indrani. Thou art the Mother, we salute again and again to Thee; Thou art the success. Thou art the intelligence. Thou art the growth. Thou art the Vaisnavi; salutation again and again to Thee. Thou art within the earth; yet the earth does know know Thee. Thou art again the inmost of the earth and controllest the things within this earth; we offer our salutations to that Supreme Cause, the Highest Goddess. Thou art within this Maya (the unborn) yet the Maya does not know Thee. Thou residest again within the innermost of the Maya and directest that Unborn One, the Maya, we salute again and again to that Supreme Cause, the Great Directress, the S'iva (the most auspicious). O Mother! Do what is good to us; we are oppressed by our enemy, dost then protect us; by Thy own power dost Thou overpower and kill that Mahisa. That demon is vulnerable by woman only, he is deceitful, cunning, dreadful, and swollen with pride on his having got the blessing; he assumes many forms and torments the Devas. O One, devoted to the Bhaktas! Thou art the only refuge of all the gods; O Thou art the supreme goddess, we are very much harassed and oppressed by the Danava; therefore dost Thou now protect us; we bow down to Thee."

30. Vyasa said When the Devas had praised thus, the Highest Goddess, the Giver of all happiness, then smilingly said in the following auspicious terms

31. "O Devas! Today in the battle ground I will overpower that wicked Mahisa, of cruel disposition and take away his life."

32-40. Vyasa said Speaking thus in a melodious voice, the Supreme One smiled and again said "This world is all full of error and delusion. Really, it is very wonderful that Brahma, Visnu, Indra and other gods are all shuddering out of fear from Mahisa Danava. The power of Destiny is exceedingly great and terrible; its influence cannot be overcome even by the best of the Devas. O king! The Time is the Lord of happiness and pain; Time is, therefore, the God. The wonder is this that even those who can create, preserve and destroy this world, they are being overpowered and tormented by Mahisa. The Devi, thinking thus, smiled; then laughed and laughed very hoarsely; it seemed that a roar of laughter then arose. And the Danavas were struck with terror at that very dreadful sound. The earth trembled at that extraordinary sound; the mountains began to move and the vast oceans that remained calm began to be agitated with billows. The uproar filled all the quarters and the mountain Meru trembled. Then the Danavas, hearing the tumultuous uproar, were all filled with tremendous fear. The Devas became very glad and said thus "O Devi! Let victory be Yours; save us." The intoxicated Mahisa, too, hearing those words, became very angry. Mahisa, struck with terror at those words, asked the Daityas "O Messengers! Go and ascertain how has originated this sound.

41-48. Who has made this harsh sound? Bring that devil who has made this hoarse noise, be he a Deva, Danava, or anyone else unto me and I will kill that roaring villain, who, it seems, has been puffed with egoism and vanity. The Devas are not making this noise, for they are vanquished and terror-stricken; The Asuras are not doing so, for they are my subjects; then, who is the stupid fellow that has done so? Surely he is of very little understanding; his days are numbered; and I will carry him to the home of Death. Go you, ascertain the cause of sound and come back to me; then I will go there and destroy that wretch who made this noise to no purpose." Vyasa said No sooner the messengers heard these words of Mahisa, than they at once went to the Devi and saw that Her body and the several parts thereof were all very beautiful; She had eighteen hands. She was decorated completely with various ornaments all over Her body, all the auspicious signs were being seen in Her body and that She was holding excellent divine weapons. That auspicious Goddess beautiful, was holding in Her hands, the cup and drinking wine again and again. Beholding Her this form, they were afraid and fled at once to the Mahisa and informed him the cause of that sound.

49-54. The Daityas said "O Lord! We have seen one grown up woman; whose whereabouts we are quite ignorant. The Devi is decorated with jewels and ornaments all over Her body; She is not human nor Asuri but Her form is extraordinary and beautiful. That noble Lady is mounted on a lion, holding weapons on all Her eighteen hands and is roaring loudly; She is drinking wine; so it seems that She is puffed up with liquor. It is quite certain that She has no husband. The Devas are gladly chanting praises from the celestial space that Let Victory be to Her side and that She save the Devas, O Lord! We don't know at all who is that handsome woman? or whose wife is she; why has she come there? and what is Her motive? Sentiments of love, heroism, laughter, terror and wonder are all fully shining in Her; therefore we are very much overpowered by the halo emitted from Her; and we could not even see Her well.

Note Rasas means sentiments. The rasas are usually eight. Sringara, Hasya, Karuna, Raudra, Vira, Bhayanakah, Bibhatsadbhu tasangau, Chetyastau, Natyan, Rasah smritah but sometimes Santarasah, is added thus making the total number nine; sometimes a tenth, Vatsalyarasa is also added.

55. O King! In compliance with your order, we have come back to you no sooner we had seen the Lady, without even addressing Her in any way. Now order us what we are to do."

56-58. Mahisa said "O Best of ministers! O Hero! Under my command, go there with all the forces and use the means, conciliation, etc., and bring that woman, having a beautiful face (like the Moon), to me. If that Lady do not come even when the three policies, Sama (conciliation), Dana (making gifts), and Bheda (sowing dissensions in an enemy's party and thus winning him over to one's side, one of the four Upayas or means of success against an enemy) are adopted by you, then apply the last resort Danda, (or war) in such a way that Her life be not destroyed and bring that beautiful woman to me. I will gladly make Her, of black curling hairs, my queen-consort. In case that deer-eyed one comes gladly, then do my desires without causing any unpleasant feeling; (a cessation of sentiment). I am enchanted on hearing about Her beauties and wealth."

59-67. Vyasa said The prime minister, on hearing the words of Mahisa, took with him elephants, horses, and chariots and hurriedly went to the desired place. On coming near to the Devi, the minister began to address Her in sweet words from a sufficient distance in a very humble and courteous way. O Sweet speaking! Who art Thou? What has caused Thee to come here? O Highly fortunate! My master has asked through me these questions. My master cannot be killed by all the Devas and men; he has conquered all the Lokas (worlds).

O Beautiful-eyed! On account of getting his boon from Brahma, the Lord of the Daityas has become very powerful and consequently being very proud, assumes different forms at will. He, our King-Emperor Mahisa, the lord of the earth, hearing about Thy beauty and dress, has expressed a desire to see Thee. O Beautiful one!

Whether he will appear before Thee in a human form? He will do whatever Thou likest. O Deer-eyed One! Be pleased now to go to that intelligent King. In case Thou dost not go, we will bring the King, Thy devotee, to Thee. O Lord of the Devas! Our King has heard of Thy beauty and grandeur and has become very much submissive to Thee. We will therefore do exactly what Thou desirest. Therefore, Thou having thighs thick and round like those of a young of an elephant! Be pleased to express what Thou likest and we will do quickly as Thou desirest.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the worship offered by the gods to the Devi and the weapons offered by them in the Maha Puranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-16. Vyasa said The Maha Maya, that Excellent Lady, hearing thus the words of the prime minister of Mahisa, laughed and spoke with a voice, deep like that of a cloud, thus O Minister-in-chief! Know Me as the Mother of the gods; my name is Maha Laksmi. It is I that destroy all the Daityas. I am requested by all the Devas to kill Danava Mahisa; they have been oppressed and deprived of their share of Yajha offerings. Therefore I have come here today alone, without any army to take away his life. O Good One! I am pleased with your sweet words of welcome, in showing me marks of respect.

Had you not behaved thus, I would have certainly burnt you to ashes by my fiery sight, which is the universal conflagration at the break up of the world. O Minister! Who is there that gets not pleased with sweet words! Go you to Mahisa and speak to him the following words of mine “O Villain! Go down to Patala (the nether regions) at once if you have any desire to live. Otherwise, I will slay you, the wicked one, in the battle-field; you will have to go to the house of Death, pierced by my mass of arrows. O Stupid One! Know that this is merely kindness shown unto you, that I have told you to go soon to Patala and that the Devas get possession of their Heaven, with no delay. O One of weak intellect! Therefore dost Thou leave possession of this sea-girt earth and go alone without any delay to Patala, before my arrows are shot at you. O Asura! Or if you desire to fight, then come at once with your powerful warriors; I will destroy all of them. O One of dull intellect! I will kill you in battle, just as I killed before in yugas after yugas countless Asuras like you. O Passionate creature! Better shew that your efforts in holding weapons have been crowned with success by your being engaged in battle against Me; otherwise they will all be useless. O Stupid! You thought that you would be vulnerable alone to women hence you oppressed the Devas entitled to worship; O wicked one! No longer show your pride on the strength of your getting the boon from Brahma, that you would be vulnerable only to the females. Thinking it advisable to observe the words of the Creator, I have assumed this incomparable Eternal Female appearance and I have come here to slay you, O wicked one! O stupid one! If you have any desire for your life, then quit this Heaven and go to Patala, infested with snakes, or anywhere else you like.”

17-28. Vyasa said Hearing these words of the Devi, that minister, surrounded by forces, replied in reasonable words thus “O Devi! You are speaking in words befitting a woman and puffed up with pride. You are a woman; the lord of the Daityas is a hero; how can a battle be engaged between you two. It seems to me impossible. Your body is delicate, a girl in full youth; especially you are alone and Mahisa is of huge body and powerful; so the fight comes next to impossibility. He has elephants, horses, chariots, infantry, etc., and countless soldiers all armed with weapons. Therefore, O Beautiful One! He will find no difficulty in killing you in battle as an elephant finds no difficulty in treading over the Malati flowers. Rather, if I utter anything harsh to you, that would go against the sentiment of love, with you; therefore I cannot speak rudely to you out of my fear not to interrupt the above feeling. True, that our king is an enemy of the gods; but be has become extremely devoted to you. Therefore it is wise to speak words full of conciliation or generosity. Were it otherwise, I would have shot arrows at you and would have killed you in as much as you have thus boasted in vain and spoken so dire a falsehood, resting merely on the strength of your youthful pride and cleverness. My master has become fascinated on hearing your extraordinary beauty hardly to be seen in this world; it therefore behoves me to speak sweet words to you for the sake of pleasing my master. O Large-eyed! This kingdom and the wealth thereof are all yours; in fact, Mahisa will be your obedient servant; therefore, better forsake your anger, leading to your death; and cultivate friendship with him. O Sweet Smiling One! I am falling at your feet; you better go to him and become at once queen-consort. O

Handsome Woman! No sooner you become the queen of Mahisa than you will get at once all the pure wealth of the three worlds and the unbounding happiness of this world.”

29-45. The Devi said “Minister! I now speak what is pregnant with goodness and wisdom to you, according to the rules of the S'astras, keeping in view also the cleverness that you have shown in using your words. Now I come to understand from your talk, that you are the chief secretary of Mahisa; and therefore your nature and intelligence are like those of a beast. And how can he be intelligent, whose ministership is occupied by a man of your nature! Nature has ordained connection between two persons of like nature. O Stupid One! Did you think a little beforehand the meaning of your words when you told me of my feminine nature? Though I am not apparently a man, yet my nature is that of the Highest Purusa (Man);

I shew myself simply in a feminine form. Your master asked before from Brahma that he would prefer death, if possible, at the hands of a woman; therefore, I consider him quite illiterate and ignorant of the sentiment, worthy of a hero. Because to die at the hands of a woman is very painful to one who is a hero; and this is gladly welcome to one who is a hermaphrodite. Now see that your master Mahisa has shown his intelligence, when he courted his death from the hands of a woman. For that very reason, I have come here in the shape of a woman to effect my purpose; why shall I fear, then, to hear your words, contradictory to those of the S'astras. When Fate goes against any one, a grass comes like a thunderbolt; and when fate goes in favour of anyone, a thunderbolt becomes as soft as a bundle of cotton. What does it avail even when one possesses an extensive army or various weapons in abundance, taking shelter in a wide extending fort? What will his soldiers do to him, whose death has come close at hand? Whenever, in due time, the connection of the JTva (the human soul) with this body is brought about, then his pleasures, pains and death are written. Know this as certain, very certain, that death will come to him in the manner as written by the hands of Fate; it will never be otherwise. As the birth and death of Brahma and other gods are ordained, your death has been similarly ordained; no, there is no need of taking the example further than this. Those who are tied up by the hands of death are surely fools and of extremely blunt intellect, if they think simply on the strength of their getting some boons “that they would never die.” Therefore go quickly to your king and speak to him what I have said; you will then surely obey what he commands you to do. If he wants his life, he, with his retinue, would at once go down to Patala; let Indra and the other Devas get possession of the Heavens and their share of Yajhas. If he holds a contrary opinion, let him be eager to go to the house of Death and come and fight with Me. If he thinks that Visnu and the other Devas have fled from the battle-fields, he has nothing to boast of; for he has not shewn his manliness at all even then; for his victory is solely due to his having got the boon from Brahma.”

46-52. Vyasa said Hearing these words of the Devi, the Danava began to think whether I ought to fight or to go to Mahisa? The King has become very enamoured and has sent me hither to negotiate for marriage; how then will I be able to go to him if I make this affair unpleasant and interrupted in the middle in its course of harmony. Now it is wise for me to go to the King without fighting; let me then go as early as possible in this way and inform him about this whole affair. The King is exceptionally intelligent and experienced; he will consult with his other experienced ministers and do what is best. Therefore I ought not to fight here rashly; for victory or defeat would alike be distasteful to my monarch. Whether this Lady kills me, or I kill this Lady, the king will be angry in either case. I will therefore go now to the king and tell him what the Devi has said; he will do whatever he likes.

53-66. Vyasa said Thus that intelligent son of the minister argued and went to the king. Then, bowing down before him, he began to say thus O King! That excellent woman, fascinating to the world, the beautiful Devi is sitting on a lion with weapons in all her eighteen hands. O King! I told her “O Beautiful Lady! Be attached to Mahisasura; you will become, then, the queen-consort of the king, the lord of the three worlds. You will certainly then be his queen- consort; he will pass his life, ever obedient to you like an obedient servant. O Beautiful One! If you choose to make Mahisa your husband, you will become fortunate amongst women and will enjoy ever all the wealth of the three worlds.” Hearing my these words, that large-eyed woman, puffed up with egoism, laughed a little and said thus “Your king is born of a buffalo and is the worst of brutes; I will sacrifice him before the Devi for the benefit of the gods. Is there any woman in this world so stupid as to select Mahisa as her husband?

O You stupid! Can a woman like me ever indulge in bestial sentiments! A female buffalo has got horns; she, being excited with passion, may select your Mahisa with horns as her husband and come to him bellowing. I am not stupid nor like her so as to make him my husband. O Villain! I will fight and destroy the enemies of the gods in the battle-field. Or if he desires to live, let him flee to Patala. O King! Hearing those rough words uttered by Her in a moment of madness, I have come to you, thinking also how to redress this wrong. O King! Only I feared not to interrupt in your love sentiment; and therefore I did not fight with Her; especially, without Your command, how can I engage myself in useless excitement? O Lord of the Earth! That handsome woman rests maddened on Her own strength; I do not know what is in the womb of future or whatever is destined to happen, will surely come to pass. You are the sole master in this matter; I will do whatever you order me. The matter is very difficult to be reflected upon; whether it is better to fight or it is better to fly away, I cannot say definitely."

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said The King Mahisasura, maddened with pride, heard the messenger's words and called the aged and experienced ministers and said thus O Ministers! What am I to do now? Better judge you all well, and speak out definitely to me. Is it that this Devi has been created by the Devas like the Maya of Sambarasura and thus has appeared before us? You are all dexterous and know where to apply the four means of success, viz., conciliation, gift or bribery, sowing dissensions, and war; and therefore you would better tell me which one of the above four, I am to adopt now.

4-7. The ministers said O King! One should always speak true and at the same time pleasant; the wise ones should then select only those which are beneficial and apply them. O King! As a medicine, though bitter, cures diseases, so true words, though appearing unpleasant, lead to beneficial results. Those that are simply pleasant, are generally injurious as to their effects. O Lord of the Earth! The bearers and approvers of truth both are very rare; truth speakers also are very difficult to be seen; laudatory sycophancy is found in a great measure in this world. O King! Nobody in the three worlds knows what will be good or what will lead to inauspicious results? How can we then definitely pronounce our judgment in this difficult matter?

8-9. The King said Let each of you say separately, according to his own intellect, what is his opinion; I will hear them all and consider for myself. Clever persons should hear the opinions of several persons, then judge for himself what is the best and then adopt that as what is to be done.

10. Vyasa said Hearing his words, the powerful Virupaksa came out foremost of all and began to say pleasant words to the King.

11-16. O King! Please take for certain, what has been spoken by that ordinary woman, swelled with vanity, as words simply to scare you. The efforts and courage of a woman are known to all; who will be afraid therefore, to hear abusive language from a woman, praising her ownself in matters of warfare? O King! You have conquered the three worlds by your own heroic valour; now if you acknowledge your inferiority, out of fear to a woman, you would be subject to very much disgrace in this world. Therefore, O King! I will go alone to fight with Chandika and I will kill Her. You can stay here now without any fear.

O King! See my prowess now; I am just now going with my army and I will kill that violent Chandika, maddened with pride, or I will tie Her down by a coil of snakes and bring Her before you; then that Lady, seeing Herself helpless, will become quite submissive to you; there is no doubt in this.

17-30. Vyasa said Hearing these words of Virupaksa, Durdhara said O King! Virupaksa is very intelligent; what he has said just now is all reasonable and true. O King! You are intelligent; hear my words full of truth also. As far as I think, I consider that woman with beautiful teeth as passionate. For that woman of broad hips has expressed a desire to bring you under control by making you fearful; the mistresses, proud of their beauty generally use such words when they become passionate. When they behave in this way, people call these amorous gestures. These crooked words of mistresses are the chief causes in attracting dear persons unto them. Those who are skilled in the art of love affair, some of them can know these things thoroughly well. O King! That woman has said, “I will pierce and kill you by arrows, face to face, in the battlefield.” The sense of this is different. The wise persons that are clever and experienced in the art of finding out the cause, declare that the above sentence is pregnant with deep and esoteric meaning. You can easily see that the handsome women have no other arrows with them; their side-glances are their arrows. And their words carry their hidden meanings, and, expressing their desires, are their flowers. O King! Brahma, Visnu and Mahes’a even have no powers to shoot arrows at you; how can, then, that helpless woman, who appears so passionate, dart real arrows at you? O King! That lady said “O Stupid! I will kill your King by my arrow-like eye-sight.” But the messenger was wanting in that power to appreciate; so he, no doubt, understood her words in their contrary sense. The saying of that lady, “I will lay your lord in the death-bed in the battle-field” is to be taken in the light of inverted sexual intercourse, where woman is above the man. Her utterance, “I will take away the vitality (life) of your lord” is also significant. The semen virile is known as the vitality (life). Therefore the above expression means that she will make you devoid of your virility. There can be no other meaning. O King! Those women that are excellent shew by too much of their covert expressions (innuendos) that they select and like very much their beloved. The experts only in these amorous affairs will be able to appreciate these things. Knowing thus, dealings ought to be made with Her so that the harmony in amorous sentiments be not broken.

O King! Sama (conciliation) and Dana (gifts) are the two means to be adopted; there is no other way. By these two, that Lady, whether she be proud or angry, is sure to have brought under control; I will go now and bring Her before you by such sweet words. O King! What is the use of my talking too much? I will make Her submissive to you like a slave girl.

31-44. Vyasa said Hearing those words of Durdhara, the Danava Tamra, who was very experienced in finding out the real nature, said

“I am telling you what is sanctioned by virtue and is at the same time full of sweet amorous feelings, pregnant with deep meanings. Kindly hear; O Giver of honour! This intelligent woman is not at all passionate nor devoted to you; nor has that woman used any covert expressions to you. O Great Hero! This is strange indeed that a Lady, beautiful, handsome, and of strange features, at the same time alone and helpless, has come here to fight. A good-looking woman, powerful, and having eighteen hands is never heard of, nor ever seen by me in these three worlds. She is holding in each of Her hands powerful weapons. O king! All these seem to be the contrary actions of Time. O King! I saw ominous dreams during the night; and I conclude, therefore, that great dangers are over our heads. Early in the morning twilight, I saw in my dream that a woman, wearing a black raiment, was weeping in the inner courtyard; that some inauspicious events are forthcoming can be easily judged from the above. O King! The birds were screaming hoarsely in every house and various calamitous events were seen in various houses; at this time that woman, firmly resolved, was challenging you to fight; it, therefore seems to me that there is something very serious in this matter. O Lord! This woman is neither human, nor a GandharvT, nor the wife of any Asura. Only to cause delusion to us, she, this wondrous Maya has been created by the gods. O King! In no case, weakness is to be resorted; it is wise by all means to fight as best as possible; what is inevitable will come to pass; this is my opinion. No one is able to unriddle the doings of the Devas, whether they would be auspicious or inauspicious. Therefore intelligent ones should weigh pros and cons carefully and remain patient and steady. O King! Life or death is at the hands of Destiny; Nobody, therefore, can do it otherwise.”

45-51. Hearing this, Mahisasura said “O Highly fortunate Tamra! Better, then, stand for fight, fully resolved and go to that Lady, beautiful, and conquer Her according to rules of justice and bring Her before me. In case She does not come under your control in fight, kill

Her; but if She comes round, then show Her honour; do not kill Her. O All-knowing! You are a great hero and at the same thoroughly conversant with Kama S'astra (science of love); therefore conquer that Fair One by any means you can. O valiant Tamra, of mighty prowess! Go then with a mighty force and ponder over again and again and find out Her intention. Is She prompted by passion or by real inimical feeling or by any other motive? Try to find out whose Maya is this? Know all these beforehand; then find out the remedy; next fight with Her according to your strength and prowess. Weakness should not be shown nor merciless behaviour is to be resorted; you should behave with Her according to the bent of Her mind."

52. Vyasa said O king! Thus hearing the King's words, Tamra coming as if under the sway of Death, saluted the king Mahisa and marched away with his army.

53-66. That wicked Danava, who, on his way, began to see all the fearful inauspicious signs, indicative of Death, became surprised and was caught with fear. When he arrived at the spot, he saw the Devi standing on a lion, while She was decorated with all the weapons and instruments, and all the Devas were chanting hymns to Her. Tamra, then bowed down before Her with humility and modesty and addressed Her with sweet words, according to the rules of the policy of conciliation. "O Devi! Mahisa, the lord of the Daityas, has become enchanted on hearing Your beauty and qualifications and has become desirous to marry You. O Beautiful One! You would better be graciously pleased with that conqueror of the Immortals, the Mahisasura; O Thou of delicate limbs! Make him your husband and enjoy all the exquisite pleasures of the Nandana garden as best as you can. The end and aim of attaining this human form, beautiful in every respect and the abode of all bliss, is to enjoy, in every way, all the pleasures of human existence and to avoid the sources of all troubles. This is the rule.

"O Thou of beautiful thighs like those of the young of an elephant! Your soft and delicate lotus-like hands are fit to play only with nice balls of flowers; why then are You holding in Your hands all the weapons and arrows? What is the use of holding ordinary arrows, when those two eye-brows like bows, are existing with You? What need have you to take ordinary arrows when you are graced with those piercing eye sights, your arrows. The war is exceedingly painful in this world; those who know thus ought never to fight. It is only those human beings that are prompted by greed that fight with each other. What to speak of those sharpened arrows, one ought not to fight with flowers even; O Devi! You can well say who is it that feels pleasure, when one's own body is pierced? Therefore, O Delicate One! Gladly you can worship Mahisa, the lord of the world and the object of worship of the Devas and Danavas. Then he will satisfy all your desires. What more to say, you will no doubt be his queen-consort. O Devi! If one tries one's best, it is doubtful whether one would be crowned with success; therefore keep my this request; you will surely get all the best pleasures. O Beautiful! You are well acquainted with all the politics; therefore you better enjoy thoroughly the pleasures of the kingdom for full many years. And if you marry Mahisa you will have beautiful sons and those sons again will be kings; and enjoying the pleasures of your full grown womanhood, you will no doubt, be happy in your old age."

Here ends the Eleventh Chapter of the Fifth Book on the appearing of the Danava Tamra before the Devi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said The World-Mother, hearing Tamra’s words, spoke laughing a little and with a deep voice like that of a rumbling thunder cloud.

2-13. The Devi spoke “O Tamra! Go and say to your Lord Mahisa who, it seems, is stupid, whose end is nigh, who has become very passionate, and who is void of knowledge what is proper and what is improper. I am not like your grown up mother, the she-buffalo, having horns, eating grass, with a long tail and a big-belly. I do not like to have Visnu, the god S'ankara, Brahma, Kuvera, Varuna, or Fire. How then can I select a beast? If I do so, I will be an object of much censure amongst the several worlds. I am not desirous of any more husband; my Husband is existing; though He is the Lord of all. Witness of All, yet He is not the Actor; He is without any desires and He is calm and tranquil. He, the S'iva, is devoid of any Prakritic qualities, without any attachment, the Great Infinite, without anyone to rely on, without any refuge, omniscient, omnipresent, the Great Witness, the Full, and the seat of the Full, the Auspicious. He is the abode of all, capable to do all, the peaceful, capable to create everything and He is seeing everywhere. How can I then leave Him and try to serve the dull, stupid Mahisa? Let him come and fight with this understanding that he will be defeated and be made the conveyance of Yama, the God of Death or the carrier of water of the human beings. And if that impious heretic desire to live, let him fly at once to Patala with all his demon comrades; else I will slay him in battle. See! The combination of similar substances leads to happiness; and if out of ignorance, the connection takes place between things entirely different in their natures, it becomes at once the source of all pains and troubles. You are a thorough illiterate when you ask me to worship your lord; do you not see me endowed with exquisite beauty? and what is your Mahisa? A buffalo with horns; how can then creation become possible between us? Better fly away or fight if you like; I will kill you and your friends, and if you leave the region of Heavens and the share of Yajha, then you will become happy."

14-30. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying, the Devi howled and roared so loudly that it appeared strange and it caused a great terror to the Danavas who took it as the great dissolution of the universe at the end of a Kalpa. The earth and the mountains trembled; the wives of the Danavas, had miscarriages at that terrific noise. Tamra hearing that sound was terrified; his mind became unsteady and he at once fled to Mahisa. O King! The Danavas present in the city became deaf; thy fled and became very anxious and were absorbed in the thought whence and how that sound came. The lion, too, enraged and, raising up its manes, roared so loud that the Daityas became very much terrified. Mahisa, too, became confounded to see Tamra returning; he then held a council with his ministers what ought to be done next? Mahisasura said "O best of the Danavas! Shall we now take our shelter within the forts? Or shall we go out and fight? Or will it be favourable to us if we fly away? You all are intelligent and versed in all the S'astras and unconquerable by your foes; therefore ought you all to consult over the the matter in utmost privacy for our success at the present moment. The root of Kingdom lies in the council in the secret place (cabinet) and Statesmanship; if this counsel be kept well preserved in secrecy, then that Kingdom is also kept entire; therefore it is highly incumbent that the plan be kept in strictest confidence amongst the good and virtuous ministers. If the plan be out, then destruction comes both to the King and his Kingdom; hence the plan must be kept secret by those wanting glory, lest it be taken advantage of and rendered ineffective by other persons. O Ministers! Now declare, taking due consideration of time and place, after duly discussing and ascertaining what is the best course to adopt, what would be beneficial and full of reason and intelligence. First find out the cause why this powerful woman, created by the Devas has come here alone and helpless? That woman is challenging us to fight. What more wonder can there be than this? Who can say in the three worlds what the result will be, whether it will be good or otherwise? Victory comes not to many persons nor defeat comes to a single individual; therefore victory or defeat lies at the hands of the Luck and Destiny. Those who plead for place, policy, statesmanship, they say what is Fate? Is there anyone who has seen Fate? (Adrista) No one has seen His appearance. It may be argued that there may exist such a thing as Fate; to which it might be replied, what proofs are there for such an existence? Thus the weak persons alone hold it out as their only hope; nowhere are seen energetic persons who can fulfil their ends by their own efforts, by those who enrol themselves under Fate. Therefore “effort,” “energy” are the words of the heroes and “Fate” is the word of the cowards. You should all consider today these subjects fully and intelligently and then decide what are we to do?”

31-39. Vyasa said Thus hearing the King, the famous Vidalaksa with folded hands spoke thus O King! First it should be definitely ascertained whose wife is she, this woman possessing large eyes? Whence and for what purpose has she come here; next what ought to be done should be decided. It seems to me that the Devas, knowing that your death will ensue from the hands of a woman, have created very carefully this lotus-eyed woman out of their own essences. And they are lying in wait, unknown to anybody in the celestial space with a desire to see the battle but really to fight with you. In due time, they will undoubtedly help this woman. When the war will ensue, Visnu and the other Devas will put this woman in front and slay us all. Whereas this Devi will slay you. This is their earnest desire. O King! I have come to know this beforehand; but what will be the actual result I cannot say. I cannot say also whether it is advisable for You to fight now; therefore it would be better if you consider yourself well on this matter of the gods and do accordingly.

Our duty, the duty of your servants lies in this That we should sacrifice at any moment our lives for the preservation of your prestige and to enjoy with you whenever you are enjoying. But, O King! It is extremely advisable to ponder over this very carefully when we see that this woman, though alone, is challenging us to fight who are armed with powerful soldiers.

40-44. Durmukha said O King! I know for certain, that we will not get victory in this battle; still we ought not to show our backs; for that would lead us to sheer disgrace. Even in our encounter with Indra and other Devas, we did nothing hateful and blameable; then how can any of us fly away when we come face to face with a helpless woman? Therefore fight we must; that is certain; let whatever happen. What is inevitable, must come to pass. Thus considered, what need we care for the result? If we die in the battle, we will get name and fame; if we be victorious, we will get happiness. Thus thinking both the cases, we must fight today. Death is inevitable when our longevity expires; our prestige will suffer if we fly away; therefore we ought not to spend uselessly our time in thus expressing our vain regret for life or for death.

45-51. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Durmukha’s words, Vaskala, the eloquent speaker, thus spoke to the king, with clasped hands and his head bowed down. O King! You need not think thus in agony with this unpleasant affair; alone I will kill that Chandika, of unsteady eyes. O Best of kings! To be always prompt and energetic indicates that one is steady in one’s heroic valour; to consider one’s enemy as dreadful is contrary to above; so we ought now to take recourse to heroic valour. O King! Therefore I will discard fear altogether and fight out valiantly; I will no doubt, send Chandika in the battlefield to the abode of Death. I fear not Yama, nor Indra, nor Kuvera, nor Vayu nor Agni, nor Visnu, nor S’ankara, nor Moon nor Sun; I do not fear any of them; what fear can I, then, entertain of that vain arrogant woman, who has got none to support her. I will kill Her with these arrows, sharpened on stones. You can see today the prowess of my arms and enjoy peace; you will not have to go to battle anymore to fight with Her.

52-65. Vyasa said O King! Vaskala having said thus to the lord Mahisa in a haughty spirit, Durdhara bowed down and said thus O Lord of the earth! Let the purpose be whatsoever, with which the beautiful Devi with eighteen hands, the creation of the gods, may come hither, I will vanquish Her. O King! I think, it is simply to terrify you, as the Suras have thus created this Maya woman; therefore, do you forsake your delusion by knowing this merely as a scare. O King! Such is the statesmanship;

now hear about the workings of the ministers. Ministers in this world are of three kinds (1) Sattvik; (2) Rajasik and (3) Tamasik. Those ministers in whom the Sattva quality is predominant, they perform their Master's duties according to their own strength. The Sattvik Mantris (ministers) are well versed in their Mantra S'astras (the policies and statesmanship), virtuous and one- pointed in their thoughts, they never do any injury to their king and they fulfil their own purposes. The Rajasik Mantris are of different sorts; they are always after their own interests; at times, whenever they like, they do the State duties. The Tamasik Mantris always look of their own interests out of their greedy nature; they serve their ends even by ruining the regal interests. It is the Tamasik Mantris that are influenced by the bribes from the enemies, become separated at their hearts from their own masters and give out the secrets to the enemies, while staying in their homes. They always advise alienation policy like the sword ensheathed in a scabbard; and when the time of war comes, they always frighten their masters. Therefore, O King! Never put your trust on ministers; if you do so, they will always hinder you in your actions and counsels; what harm cannot be done by those ministers that are treacherous, greedy, deceitful and void of any intelligence and always addicted to vicious acts, when they are trusted! Therefore, O King! I will go myself to the battle and serve your purpose; you need not be at all anxious in this matter. I will soon bring before you that vicious woman; I will do your actions by my own strength and powers. Let you be calm; and look at my strength, fortitude and valour.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the holding of counsel by Mahisasura in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 Slokas by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! The two powerful Danavas Vaskala and Durmukha, well-versed in arts of warfare, went out for battle, maddened with their prowess. The two Danavas, elated with vanity, went to the battle-field and began to address the Devi in voice deep as the rumbling of a cloud. O Beautiful Devi! You better choose and worship the Lord of the Daityas, that high-souled Mahisasura who has conquered all the Devas. He will come before you in privacy in a human shape, with all auspicious signs and adorned with beautiful ornaments. O Sweet smiling One! better place your highest feelings of love on the lovely Mahisa as your husband, and you will get all the pleasures of the three worlds as you desire. O Sweet speaking! In short, if you select him as your husband, you will be the mistress of those incomparable worldly happinesses that women always aspire.

7-13. Hearing thus the words of Vaskala and Durmukha, the Devi said "O Stupid! Do you think Me as deluded by passion? Do I not possess strength and intelligence that I will worship that hypocrite Mahisa as husband? See! The ladies of a high family select those persons that are equal in rank as far as family and distinctions, qualifications and propriety of conduct are concerned or those who are superior in beauty, cleverness, intelligence and other qualifications. Then how can a Devi, becoming passionate, worship the worst of all beasts, the beast Mahisa? O two Asuras! Go you immediately to your King Mahisa resembling in his body like an elephant and having a pair of horns and tell him. Go either to Patala (the nether regions) or come and fight with Me; the Lord of the Devas will no doubt be happy if the war ensues. O Stupid! My advent here cannot go in vain; I will easily slay you and then depart; knowing this do as you like. O Beast! Without conquering Me, you would get no shelter either in the heavens, or in this earth, or in the caves of mountains?"

14-25. Vyasa said Hearing thus, the two powerful Daityas, with eyes reddened with anger, firmly resolved to fight and took bows and arrows in their hands. O Descent of Kuru! The Devi then made a terrible noise and fearlessly stood there. The two Danavas then began to shoot dreadful arrows at Her. For the victory of the Devas, the Devi also begin to hurl arrows after arrows on the two Danavas, emitting a sweet sound. Vaskala first came forward with no delay; and Durmukha stood aloof there simply as a witness. The terrible fight then ensued between the Devi and Vaskala; arrows, swords and weapons were seen shining in the air and raised terror to those that were dull in intellect. Then the Mother of the Universe seeing Vaskala growing turbulent shot at him five arrows sharpened on stone. The Danava, too, cut off the arrows of the Devi and hurled seven arrows at Her, seated on a lion. The Devi cut off the Danava's arrows and shot at that hypocrite, sharpened arrows and began to laugh frequently. She again cut off his arrows with Ardhachandra arrow; Vaskala then pursued the Devi with a club in his hands to slay Her. Seeing the arrogant Danava with club in his hands, Chandika Devi struck him down on the ground with Her own club. The very powerful Vaskala fell down on the ground but rose up within a very short time and hurled again on the Devi his club. Seeing him again attacking Her, the Devi got angry and pierced him with Her trident; Vaskala fell down, thus pierced, and died.

26-38. Vaskala falling thus dead on the field, the soldiers of the wicked demon routed; whereas the Devas became glad and repeatedly shouted aloud, “Victory to the Devi.” On this Daitya being slain, Durmukha came forward on the battle-field, filled with anger and accompanied by a stronger army. Mounted on a chariot, shielded all over his body with a coat of armour, Durmukha came before the Devi, shouting all along, “Wait, wait, O You weak woman!” and with bows and arrows in his hands. The Devi blew Her conchshell and made sounds by stretching Her bow in order to make the Danava infuriated with anger. The Asura then began to shoot sharp arrows after arrows like poisonous snakes. The Mahamaya, by Her own arrows, cut off those of Her enemy and began to shout loudly. The fight then raged furiously, when both parties began to use arrows, S’aktis, clubs, Musalas, and Tomaras. Blood began to flow in the battle-field in torrents like rivers and on the banks of that river of blood, were seen the severed heads of the dead bodies which looked like so many hollow shells of gourds, as if kept there by the attendant of the god of Death, for their swimming purposes. The battle-field, then, became very dreadful and impassable; at some places dead bodies are lying; wolves are feeding on their flesh; at other places are seen jackals, dogs, herons, crows, vultures, eagles, and other voracious birds and beasts and iron-tipped arrows, eating the dead bodies of those wicked demons. Air began to emit an offensive smell, because of its contact with these corpses; and there were heard the heart-rending sounds of various carnivorous birds and animals. Then the wicked Durmukha began, as if inspired by the god of Death, to address the Devi angrily and arrogantly with his right hand raised up before Her. “Your brain has become perverted; fly away just now or I will send you unto death, or you better accept the proud Mahisa, the lord of the Daityas, as your husband.”

39-50. The Devi said:-- “O Villain! I see your death at hand this very day; therefore you are deluded and therefore raving like a mad man. I will kill you today like Vaskala. O Stupid! Better fly away; or if you prefer death, then wait; I will slay you first; then the dull Mahisa, the son of a she-buffalo.” Hearing thus, Durmukha, as if prompted by Death, hurled dreadful arrows on the Devi. Instantly the Devi, too, cut off all his arrows and, infuriated with anger, pierced the Danava by sharpened arrows as Indra had pierced Vritrasura before. The fight then turned out very dreadful. O King! Weak persons become very afraid and strong ones become very excited. Instantly the Devi cut off the Asura’s bow and broke his chariot by five arrows. On seeing his chariot broken, the powerful Durmukha attacked on foot the Devi with his club, very hard to overcome. He knocked at the head of the lion with that club with great force; but the powerful lion did not become unsteady, though so very hard hit. Seeing the demon thus standing before Her, the goddess Ambika cut down his head by her sharpened axe. On his head being thus severed, Durmukha fell down dead on the field. The band of Immortals, then, loudly shouted, “Victory to the Devi.” When Durmukha was slain, the Immortals from the celestial space began to chant praises and hymns to the Devi, showered down flowers on Her head and gave shouts of “Victory to the Devi.” The Risis, Siddhas, Gandarbhas, Vidyadharas, and Kinnaras all became very glad to see the Demon dead on the field.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the killing of Vaskala and Durmukha in S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Vyasa said Hearing the death news of Durmukha, Mahisasura became blind with anger and began to utter repeatedly to the Danavas, “O! What is this? What is this? Alas! That delicate woman has slain in battle the two heroes Durmukha and Vaskala! Lo! Now look at the wonderful workings of the Daiva (Fate). It is the acts virtuous, or otherwise that make men dependent; and the powerful Time awards pleasure or pain accordingly. The two powerful Demons are killed; what are we to do hereafter? You all judge and say what is reasonable at this critical juncture.”

5-23. Vyasa said When the powerful Mahisa said thus, his general Chiksura, the great warrior spoke as follows “O King! Why are you so anxious as to take away the life of a delicate woman? I will kill Her;” thus saying he departed for battle, mounted on his chariot and accompanied by his own army. The powerful Tamra accompanied him as his attendant; the sky and all the quarters became filled with the clamour of their vast army. The auspicious Devi Bhagavati saw them before Her and She made an extraordinary wonderful sound with Her conchshell, with Her bow string and with Her great bell. The Asuras heard that and trembled and fled, speaking amongst each other, “What is this?” The Chiksuraksa seeing them turning their backs, told them very angrily, “O Danavas! What fear has now overcome you? I will slay today this vain woman in the battle with arrows; so you should quit your fear and remain steady in battle.” Thus saying, the Danava Chieftain Chiksura came fearlessly before the Devi with bows and arrows in his hands and, accompanied by his army, angrily spoke thus “O Thou of large and broad eyes! Why are you roaring to terrify the weak persons! O the Soft limbed One! I have heard all about your deeds but I am not a bit afraid of You. O One of beautiful eyes! It is a matter of disgrace, rather sin, to kill a woman; knowing this my heart wants to pass over this act (does not like to do it, if my purpose be served without it).

O Beautiful One! The women fight with their side glances and amorous gestures; but I have never heard a woman like you coming to fight with arms and weapons. Even the delicate flowers, Malati, etc., cause pain on the bodies of beautiful women like you; so it is not advisable to fight against you with flowers even; what to speak of sharpened arrows! Fie on those who spend their lives according to the Ksatriya Dharma! Oh! Who can praise that Dharma which allows this dear body of ours to be pierced by sharpened arrows? This dear body is nourished by sweet food, by being smeared with oil, and by smelling the scents of beautiful flowers. Ought, then, one to destroy it by arrows from an enemy? Men get their bodies pierced by arrows and then become rich. Now is it possible for the riches to give pleasure afterwards when they caused such pains in the beginning? Even if this be so, fie on those riches! O Beautiful One! It seems you are not intelligent; why have you desired to fight instead of to enjoy sexual pleasures. O beautiful! What merits have you found in the battle that you have chosen this. Where you see the action of the axes and spears, striking each other with clubs, and hurling of sharpened arrows and weapons and where, when death comes, jackals come and feed upon the dead bodies, what merits have you been able to trace out in these things! It is only those cunning poets that praise these; they say that those who die in battle go to heaven! O Beautiful! Those sayings are, no doubt, mere flatteries. Therefore, O Excellent One! Go away anywhere else you like; or accept this king Mahisa, the tormentor of the Devas, as your husband.”

24-30. Vyasa said O King! The Danava Chiksura speaking thus, the Divine Mother addressed him thus O Stupid! Why are you speaking false words, having no significance, like a literary man giving out mere words only? You do not know anything of politics.

ethics, metaphysics; you serve the illiterate and stupid; therefore, you are also a first class illiterate; you do not know what are the royal duties; then what are you speaking before me? I will kill that Mahisasura in battle make the soil muddy with his blood, thus establish firmly My pillar of Fame and then go happily to My abode. Surely will I slay that vain vicious demon, the tormentor of the Devas. Better fight steadily. O Stupid! Better go to Patala with all the Danavas, if you and Mahisa desire to live any longer. And if you like to go unto death, then be ready and fight without any delay; I will slay you all; this is My firm resolve.

31-39. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the Devi’s words, the Danava, proud of his own strength, began to hurl instantly on Her showers of arrows, as if another shower of rain burst upon Her. The Devi cut off those arrows into pieces by Her sharp arrows and shot at him dreadful arrows like poisonous snakes. Then their fight became astounding to the public; the Divine Mother, then, struck him with Her club so much that he fell down from his chariot. That vicious demon, thus struck by the club, remained senseless near to his chariot for two muhurtas, fixed like a mountain. Tamra, the tormentor of the foes, seeing him thus, could not remain steady and came forward to fight with Chandika. The Devi seeing him laughed and said, “O Danava! Come, Come, I will instantly send you unto death. Or, what is the use of your coming? You are so weak that you can be called lifeless. What is that stupid Mahisa doing now? Is he thinking out the way to save his life? You all are too weak; no use in killing you, all my labours will go in vain, if that wicked Mahisa, the enemy of the gods, be not slain. Therefore, do you go to your home and send here your king Mahisa. I am staying here in that form in which that wicked one likes very much to see Me.”

40-56. Hearing Her words, Tamra became very angry and drawing his bow up to his ear, began to hurl arrows after arrows on Chandika

Devi. The Bhagavati, too, had her eyes reddened with anger and drawing Her bow began to shoot arrows quickly at the demon, wishing to kill, as early as possible, the enemy of the gods. In the meanwhile, Chiksura regained his senses, and taking up again his bow in an instant, came before the Devi. Then Chiksura and Tamra, the two valiant warriors, began to fight dreadfully with the Devi.

Maha Maya then, became very angry and began to hurl arrows after arrows so incessantly that all the armours of all the Danavas became pierced and were cut down to pieces. The Asuras, thus pierced by arrows, became infuriated with anger and hurled angrily a network of arrows upon the Devi. The Danavas, thus struck with sharp arrows and filled with cuts and wounds looked like the red Kims’uka flowers in the spring. The fight then grew so severe between Tamra and Bhagavati that the seers, the Devas, were all struck with wonder. Tamra struck on the head of the lion with his dreadful hard Musala (club), made of iron, and laughed and shouted aloud. Seeing him thus vociferating, the Devi became angry and cut off his head by her sharp axes in no time. The head being thus severed from the body, Tamra, though headless, for a moment turned round his Musala and then fell down on the ground. The powerful Chiksura, seeing Tamra thus falling down, instantly took up his axe and ran after Chandika. Seeing Chiksura with axe in his hand, the Bhagavati quickly shot at him five arrows. With one arrow, his axe was cut down, with the second arrow his hands were cut and with the remaining ones his head was severed from his body. Thus when the two cruel warriors were slain, their soldiers soon fled away in terror in all directions.

The Devas were exceedingly glad at their downfall and showered gladly flowers from the sky and uttered shouts of Victory to the Devi. The Risis, Gandarbhas, the Vetalas, the Siddhas and Charanas were all very glad and began to utter repeated, “O Goddess! Victory, victory be Yours.”

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Fifth Skandha on the killing of Tamra and Chiksura in S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha

Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the two Demons slain by the Devi, Mahisasura became very much amazed and sent the powerful Asiloma and Vidalaksa and the other Danavas to the battle to kill the Devi. The Danavas, all very skilled in the art of warfare, marched on for battle, fully equipped with weapons and clad in armour, and we attended by a vast army. They arrived there and saw the Divine Mother with eighteen hands taking Her stand on a lion, with axes and shield in Her hands.

4-5. The calm-tempered Asiloma appeared before the Devi ready to kill the Daityas, saluted Her and smilingly said O Devi! Why have You come here? and what for You are killing these faultless Daityas? O Beautiful One! Tell all these to me truly. We will make treaty with you.

6-17. Take gold, jewels, pearls and any other excellent things the you like and retire from the field as early as passible. Why do you like this warfare tending to increase misery; the wise persons say that it leads to the destruction of all happiness. Your body is very delicate; it cannot bear the stroke of flowers even; then why are you suffering the stroke of weapons on your bodies; I am very much puzzled to think these things. See! The cleverness is judged when peace is the result thereof; for it leads always to happiness. Then why are you liking to fight which will lead only to pain and suffering. Happiness is only to be had and pain is to be avoided; this is the rule. O Devi! That happiness is again of two kinds Permanent and transitory. The pleasure that comes out of the knowledge of Atmajhan is permanent and that which is derived from enjoyments is transitory; these who know truly the Veda S'astra, they avoid this transitory pleasure of enjoyments. If you follow the opinion of the Mimamsakas and do not believe in the existence of future births, even then you ought not to fight; when you have got this youthful age, you ought to enjoy the excellent pleasures in this world. O One of lean stomach! And if you doubt in the existence of the other worlds after death, even then you ought to desert from fighting and perform, in this life, such actions as will lead you to the attainment of Heavens. This fully developed womanhood is transient; knowing this do virtuous actions always; the wise ones always avoid tormenting others; thus one ought to perform things not contradictory to Dharma, Artha and Kama. Therefore, O Auspicious One! Do You also things virtuous always. O Mother! Why are you killing these Daityas without any cause? There is, again, the feeling of mercy; the lives again of all are dependent on Truth. Therefore the sages always preserve piety, mercy and Truth. O Beautiful One! Then what is the use in Your killing these Demons? Please say explicitly on this point.

18-27. The Devi said O Powerful one! Hear why I have come here and why I am killing the Daityas? I answer your question on the above points. O Demon! I, though merely a spectator, always go about all over the worlds, seeing the justices and injustices done by the several souls there. Never I possess any desire of enjoyment, nor have I greed for anything, nor have I enmity with any creature. Only to preserve the virtue and religion and to keep up the righteous, I roam over the worlds. This is My vow and I always adhere to it. To preserve the good and to put down the evil doers is My duty. Many Avataras are to take their incarnations, cycles after cycles, to preserve the Vedas; therefore I incarnate Myself in yugas after yugas. Now the wicked Mahisa is ready to destroy the Devas; seeing this, I have come here to kill him. I tell you verily that I will slay that vicious powerful Mahisasura, the enemy of the gods. Knowing this, you remain or depart, as you desire. Or you can go to Mahisa, that impious son of a she-buffalo, and say what is the use in sending other Asuras to the battle; he can come himself and fight. If your king likes to make a treaty, then let him avoid his enmity with the Devas and go down to the Patala. Let him return to the Devas whatever he has taken perforce from them and go to the Patala, where Prahlada is residing.

28-29. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Devi's words, Asiloma asked gladly, before the Devi, the powerful Asura Vidalaksa Well, Vidalaksa! You have heard just now all what the Devi has said; now are we to observe treaty or declare war. What are we to do under the circumstances?

30-34. Vidalaksa said Our king knows full well that his death will certainly take place in the battle; knowing this, he is not willing to make peace, out of his egoism and vanity. He is seeing before him daily the deaths of the Danavas and still he has sent us to battle. Who can overcome the destiny? The duty of a servant is a very difficult one; he will have to be always submissive and obedient, without caring the least for his own self-respect; just as the dancing dolls are completely under the hands of the actors and their movements vary according to the pulling of the wires employed in making them dance. How can we then go to our master and say such hard words as he would give away to the Devas all the gems and jewels and go down to Patala with other Danavas. One considers it one's duty to speak pleasant words though untrue; true words cannot be beneficial; true and at the same time beneficial words are very rare in this world; at such critical cases, one ought to remain silent. Especially heroes ought never to excite their kings by useless words; this is the essence of politics. We should never go and advise our king with eagerness what is best or to ask advice from him about such things; the king would then certainly be very angry. Therefore we ought to do our duties to the king, even if our lives be at stake. To consider our lives as nothing and to fight for our king are what is best for us.

35-57. Vyasa said O King! Thus thinking, the two heroes then wore their coats of armour, mounted on their chariots and, with bows and arrows in their hands, became ready for fight. First Vidalaksa shot seven arrows; the great warrior Asiloma stood aloof at a distance as a mere witness. The Divine Mother cut off those arrows to pieces with Her arrows, no sooner they reached Her, and then shot at Vidalaksa three arrows sharpened on stone.

The demon Vidalaksa fell senseiss by these arrows on the battle¬ field and after a short while died, as if ordained by Fate. Seeing Vidalaksa thus dead, Asiloma took up his bows and arrows and came up, for fight. The hero, then, raising his left hand, said briefly, thus “O Devi! I know that death is inevitable to the Danavas; still I am ready to fight; for I am dependent and Mahisa is of very dull intellect; he cannot make any distinction between what is really good and what is merely pleasant. I will never speak before him unpleasant words, though beneficial. Rather I will sacrifice my life in the battle-field than advise him anything, be that auspicious or inauspicious. The Danavas are being killed no sooner they are shot at by your arrows; seeing this I consider Fate superior to all.

Prowess does not lead to any success; Fie on one’s prowess! Thus saying, the Demon began to shower arrows after arrows on the Devi; the Devi, too, cut them to pieces with Her own arrows before they came to Her; and, becoming angry, soon pierced him with arrows. The Devas witnessed this sight from above. The body of the Demon was then covered with cuts and wounds; blood began to flow from them; the Demon consequently began to shine like the jovial Kimsuka tree. Asiloma then lifted aloft his heavy iron club and ran after Chandika and hurt the lion on his head with anger. Not caring at all this severe stroke of the club inflicted by that powerful Demon, the lion tore asunder his arms with his claws. Then that dreadful Demon leapt with club in his hand and got up the shoulder of the lion and hit the Devi very hard. O King!

The Devi, then, baffled the hit and cut off the Demon’s head with Her sharp axe. The head being thus severed, the Demon was thrown on the ground with great force; seeing this, a general cry of distress arose among his soldiers. The Devas shouted aloud “Victory to the Devi” and chanted hymns to Her. The drums of the Devas resounded and the Gandarbhas began to dance in great joy. Seeing the two Demons thus lying dead on the battlefield, the lion killed some of the remaining forces by his sheer strength and ate up others, and made the battlefield void of any persons. Some fled away in great distress to Mahisasura. The fugitives began to cry aloud, “Save us, save us” and said, “O King! Asiloma and Vidalaksa are both slain; and those soldiers that remained were eaten up by the lion.” Thus they told and plunged the King in an ocean of dire distress. Hearing their words, Mahisa became absent minded through pain and grief and began to think over the matter with great anxiety.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the slaying of Vidalaksa and Asiloma in S’rimad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Vyasa said O King! Hearing those words, the King Mahisa in anger addressed the charioteer Daruka “Bring over my chariot quickly. That chariot is drawn by one thousand excellent horses, is bedecked with banners, flags, and ensigns, is furnished with various arms and weapons, and is endowed with good wheels of a white colour, and beautiful poles in which the yoke is fixed.” The charioteer brought the chariot instantly and duly informed the king, “O King! I have got the chariot ready at your door, your beautiful chariot, bedecked with beautiful carpets and various arms and weapons.” Hearing that the chariot had been brought, Mahisa thought, the Devi might not care him, seeing him ugly faced with a pair of horns and therefore decided to assume a human shape and then go to the battle. The beauty and cleverness are the delights of women; therefore I will go before Her, with a beautiful body and with all the cleverness and dexterities. For I will never be delighted with anything but that woman looking at me with fondness and becoming passionately attached to me.

8-33. Thus thinking, the powerful King of the Demons quitted the buffalo appearance and assumed a beautiful human shape. He put on beautiful ornaments, armplates, etc., and wore divine cloths and had garlands on his neck and thus shone like a second Kandarpa, the god of Love. Taking, then, all the arrows and weapons, he mounted on the chariot, and attended by his army, went to the Devi, elated with power and vanity. The Devi blew Her conchshell when She saw Mahisasura, the lord of the Danavas, come before Her with a handsome appearance, tending to captivate the minds of mistresses and surrounded by many powerful and valiant warriors. The King of the Demons heard the blow of the conchshell, wondrous to all, came up before the Devi and smilingly spoke to Her thus O

Devi! Whatever person there exists in this world, this wheel of Samsara (the eternal round of births and deaths), be he or she a man or a woman, everyone always hankers after pleasure or happiness. And that pleasure is derived in this world by the combination of persons with each other; never is it seen where this combination is absent. Again this combination is of various kinds; I will mention them; Hear. Union is of various kinds according as it arises out of affection or out of natural consequences. Of these, I will now speak of unions coming out of affection, as far as my understanding goes. The union that comes between father, mother and their sons arises out of affection; it is therefore good. The union between brother and brother is middling, for mutual interests of give and take are there between the two. In fact, that union is considered as excellent which leads to happiness of the best sort and that union which leads to lesser happiness is known as mediocre. The union amongst the sailors, coming from distant lands, is known as natural. They come on various errands concerning their varied interests. This combination, because it offers the least amount of happiness, is considered as worst. The best union leads in this world to best happiness. O Beloved! The constant union of men and women of the same age is considered as par excellence; for it gives happiness of the very best sort. Both the parties, men and women, are elevated when they want to excel each other in their family connections, qualities, beauty; cleverness, dress, humility and propriety of conduct. Therefore, O Dear! If you establish with me that conjugal relation, you will get, no doubt, all the excellent happiness. Specially I will assume different forms at my mere will. All the Divine jewels and precious things that I have acquired after defeating Indra and the other Devas in battle, and others are lying in my palace; you can enjoy all of them as my queen consort or you can make a charity of them as you like. O Beautiful One! I am your servant; consequently, at your word, I will no doubt quit my enmity with the Devas. In short, I will do anything that leads to your pleasure and happiness. O Sweet speaking One! O Large-eyed One! My heart is enchanted very much with your beauty; I will do, therefore, as you order me. O One having a broad hip! I am very much distressed; I now take refuge unto You.

O One having beautiful thighs! I am very much struck with the arrows of Cupid, and I am very much discomforted; therefore, save me. To protect one who has come under one's refuge is the best of all virtues. O One of a somewhat whitish body! O One having a slender waist! I will spend the remaining portion of my life in serving you as your obedient servant. Never will I act contrary to your orders to the risk even of my life. Take this as literally true and do accordingly. I now throw aside all my weapons before Your feet; O Large eyed! I am very much distressed by the arrows of Cupid; dost Thou therefore show Thy mercy on me. O Beautiful One! Never I showed my weakness to Brahma and the other Devas; but today I acknowledge that before You. I have defeated Brahma and others; they are fully acquainted with my prowess in the battlefield. But, O Honoured Woman! Though I am so powerful, I now acknowledge myself as your servant. Better look at me and grant your mercy.

34. Vyasa said O King! Mahisa, the lord of the Daityas, having said so, that beautiful Bhagavati laughed loudly and spoke smiling

35-45. The Devi said I do not desire any other body than the Supreme One! O Demon! I am His Will-power; I therefore create all these worlds. I am His S'iva (auspicious) Prakriti (Nature); That Universal Soul is seeing Me. It is owing to His proximity that I am appearing as the Eternal Consciousness, manifesting Itself as this Cosmos. As irons move owing to the proximity of magnets, I, too, though inert, owing to His proximity, work consciously. I do not desire to enjoy the ordinary pleasures; you are very dull and stupid; there is no doubt in this, when you desire sexual union. For women are considered as chains to hold men in bondage. Men bound up by iron chains can obtain freedom at any time, but when they are fastened by women, they can never obtain freedom. O Stupid! You now want to serve the source of urine, etc. Take refuge under Peace; peace will lead you to happiness. Great pain arises from connection with women; you know this; then why are you deluded? Better avoid your enmity with the Devas and roam over the world anywhere you like. Or, if you desire to live, go to Patala; or fight with Me. Know this for certain that I am stronger than you. O Danava! The Devas collected have sent Me here; I tell you this very truly; I am satisfied with you by your words of friendship; therefore dost thou fly away while you are living. See! When words are uttered seven times amongst each other, friendship is established between saints. That has been done so amongst us; so there is friendship now between you and me; I won't take away your life. O hero! If you desire to die, fight gladly; O powerful one! I will, no doubt, kill you.

46-65. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the Bhagavati's words, the Danava, deluded by passion, began to speak in beautiful sweet words O Beautiful One! Your body and the several parts thereof are very delicate and beautiful. A mere sight of such a lady makes one enchanted. Therefore, O Beautiful faced one! I fear very much to strike against your body. O Lotus-eyed One! I have subjugated Hah, Hara, the Lokapalas and the several other Devatas; I therefore ask whether it is proper for me to fight with you! O Fair one! If you like, you marry and worship me, or you can return to your desired place whence you have come. You have declared friendship with me; I therefore do not like to strike any weapons on you. I have now spoken for your good and welfare. You can gladly go away. O beautiful one! You are a fair woman with beautiful eyes; what fame shall I earn by killing you! O One of slender waist! Murdering a woman, a child, and a Brahmin certainly makes the murderer liable to suffer the consequences thereof. I will certainly carry you today to my place without killing you. If I use force to you, I will not get happiness; for, in such cases, the application of force leads to no happiness. O One having good hairs! I salute before you and speak that a man cannot be happy without the lotus face of a woman; similarly a woman cannot be happy without a man's lotus face. Where comes off the good combination between these two, then the highest pitch of happiness is conceived and pain arises on the disjunction thereof. True that you are well decked with ornaments all over your body but you seem wanting in cleverness; for you are not worshipping me. Who has advised you to renounce enjoyments? O Sweet speaking One! If this be true; then surely he is your enemy; he has deceived you. O Dear! Leave your this stubbornness and marry me; both of us shall then be happy. Visnu shines well with Kamala, Brahma looks splendid with Savitri, Rudra is well associated with Parvati and Indra with S'achi, so I will shine well with you; there is no doubt in this. No woman can ever be happy without any good husband. And why are you not then, acknowledging me your husband even when you have got him. O Beloved! Where is now that Cupid of dull intellect? Why is he not troubling you with his maddening delicate five arrows? O Fair one! I think that Madana (the god of Love) out of his pity to you, seeing that you are very weak is not striking his arrows on you as he has done to me. O One looking askance! Or it may be that I have got some enmity with that Cupid; else why is he not shooting arrows at you? Or my enemies the Devas have advised the God of Love not to dart his arrows on you.

O One of slender body! As Mandodari had to marry afterwards, when she became passionate, a hypocrite, and so she had to repent thinking that she had not married before a beautiful auspicious king, so I think, O One, having eyes like the young of a deer! You, too, will have to repent like her if you decline to marry me now.

Here ends the Sixteenth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the conversation between the Devi and Mahisasura in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus, the Devi asked the Danava, “Who is that Mandodari? Who is that king who was not first taken by her? And who is that king whom she married afterwards? And how did she repent afterwards? Describe all these in detail to me.”

3-26. Thus asked by the Devi, Mahisa began to say “O Devi! There is a place, named Simhala, noted in this earth and decorated with various trees and prosperous with wealth and grains. A virtuous king, named Chandrasena, used to reign there; he was calm, peaceful, truthful, heroic, charitable, steady, forbearing, well versed in polities, ethics and morals vast as a wide ocean, learned in S’astras, knowing all forms of religions and much skilled in archery. He was mindful in governing his subjects and he used to punish according to the laws of Justice. The king had a beautiful well- qualified wife, very handsome and broad-hipped. She was very much devoted to her husband and always engaged in religious acts and of good conduct. This wife, endowed with all auspicious signs, gave birth to a beautiful daughter in her first delivery. The King Chandrasena, the father, was very pleased to have this beautiful daughter and gladly called her by the name of Mandodari. This daughter began to grow daily like the phases of the Moon. When she grew ten years old, she became very handsome. The King now became anxious to have a suitable bridegroom and used to think of it everyday. The Brahmins then told the king that there was a prince named Kambugriva, the intelligent son of the powerful king Sudhanva of Madra; this prince was endowed, with all kingly qualifications and versed in all knowledge and was therefore a fit match for your daughter. The king then asked his dear qualified wife that he would like to marry his daughter to Kambugriva. The queen, hearing this, asked her daughter Mandodari that her father was desiring to marry her to Kambugriva, the son of the king of Madra.

Hearing her mother’s words, Mandodari spoke thus “O Mother! I have got no desire to marry; I will not accept any husband; I will take the vow of leading a chaste virgin life and thus pass the rest of my life. O Mother! There is nothing more miserable in this ocean of world than dependence; I therefore prefer to lead incessantly a life of severe asceticism. The Pundits versed in the S'astras say that taking up the vow of separateness and independence leads to salvation; I will thus be liberated; I have no need for a husband. At the time of marriage ceremony, one has to say before the consecrated Fire that one will remain always a dependent to one's husband in every way; besides in a father-in-law's house, one has to pass one's time as a slave, as it were, to one's mother-in-law and to husband's (younger) brothers; again one will have to think oneself as happy when one's husband is happy and as unhappy when one's husband is unhappy; this is the worst of all miseries. Again if the husband marries again another woman, then this misery of having a co-wife is extreme. O Mother! Jealousy arises then towards even one's own husband and therefore suffering is endless. Therefore what happiness can there be in this dream-like worlds; especially with women who are made dependent by Nature? O Mother! I heard that in days of yore the religious son of Uttanapada, Uttama was younger than Dhruva; and yet he became King. And the King Uttanapada banished his dear wife, solely devoted to her husband, without any cause, to the forest. Therefore women have to suffer such diverse pains while their husbands are living; and if by chance the husband dies, then women get interminable pains; the widowhood becomes the only source of grief and sorrow. Again if the husband be in foreign lands, women become subjected to the fire of Cupid, and then the house becomes an object of more agony. Thus whether the husband lives or dies, there is no happiness at any time. Thus, according to my opinion, I ought never to accept any husband."

27-31. The Mother then told her husband all about what the daughter had said. Mandodari would accept the vow of a life-long virgin; she had no desire to marry. She had brought forward many faults in a worldly life and thus would perform vows and Japams and pass her time alone.

She did not yearn after a husband. The King, hearing thus, came to know, that his daughter had no intention to marry and so began to pass his time without giving away his daughter in marriage. Thus the daughter lived in family protected by her father and mother; by that time signs of puberty were seen in the body of the daughter. Her comrades requested her repeatedly to select a bridegroom; but she spoke many words of wisdom and did not show any inclination for marriage.

32-44. Once, on an occasion, that beautiful faced woman went out with her female attendants on a pleasure trip to a garden, beautified with various trees. There the slender bodied one began to play and enjoy with her comrades in picking up various flowers and beautiful flowering creepers. Just at that time, the famous King of Kosala, the powerful Virasena came there accidentally. Alone he was on his chariot, attended by a few soldiers; his large army and retinue were coming slowly behind him at some distance. Her comrades, then, looking at that King from a distance, told Mandodari, "O friend! Seel Somebody, strong and beautiful, like a second God of Love is coming towards us, mounted on a chariot. I think some King he will be and we are very lucky that he has come here." While thus talking, the King arrived there. The King, looking on that blue coloured woman with beautiful eyes became surprised and getting down from the chariot, asked the maidservant, "O Gentle one! Who is this woman with large eyes! Who is her father? Tell me this without any delay." The attendant smiling, told him thus O Beautiful-eyed One! Pray speak first who are you? What for have you come here? What do you want to do here? The female attendant thus asking him, the King replied There is a very beautiful country named Kosala, in this earth; I am the King of that place; my name is Virasena. My fourfold army is coming at my will at my back. I have lost my way and have come here. Know me as the King of the country Kosala.

45-49. The female attendant said “O King! This lotus-eyed one is the daughter of the King Chandrasena; her name is Mandodari. She has come here in this garden for sporting.” Hearing thus the attendant’s words, the King replied “O Sairandhri! You appear to be smart; therefore make the King’s daughter understand my following words clearly! O Sweet-eyed one! I am the King descended from the Kakutstha line; O fair woman! Marry me according to the rules of Gandarbha marriage.”

Note:-- Gandharva marriage: one of the eight forms of marriage; this form of marriage proceeds entirely from love or the mutual inclination of a youth and maiden without ceremonies and without consulting relatives.

“O broad hipped One! I have no other wife; you are a beautiful woman, of a good family and of a marriageable age; I therefore like to marry you? Or your father may marry you to me according to rules and ceremonies; if so, I will no doubt be your husband as you desire.”

50-55. Mahisa said O Devi! The female attendant, expert in the science of love, hearing the King’s words, spoke to the daughter smilingly and in sweet words. “O Mandodari! A very good-looking beautiful King of the solar dynasty has come here; he is very pretty, powerful, and of your age; O Beautiful! The King is entirely devoted to you and loves you very much. O Large-eyed One! Your time of marriage has come and yet you have not married; rather you are against it. Your father is, therefore, always very sorry and remorseful. See! How many a time your father sighed and told us, ‘O attendants! Always serve my daughter and awaken her to this.’ But you are engaged in penances and austerities, in Hatha Dharma; therefore we cannot request you on this matter. The Munis have said To serve the husband is the highest virtue of a woman. O Large-eyed! Women get Heaven if they serve their husband; therefore you better marry according to rules and ceremonies.”

56. Mandodari said I am not going to marry; better that I should perform an extraordinary tapasya (asceticism); O Girls! You go and ask the King desist in his request; why is he shamelessly looking at me.

57-59. The female attendant then said, “O Devi! Passion is very hard to conquer; time is also surmountable with difficulty; so know my advice as the medicinal diet and keep my request. And if you do not keep it, surely danger will befall you.” Hearing this, Mandodari replied, “O attendant! I know whatever is ordained by Fate will inevitably come to pass; for the present, I am not going to marry at all.”

60-61. Mahisa said The female attendant, knowing this her obstinate view, told the King “O King! This woman likes not a good husband; you would better go wherever you like.” The King heard and did not want to marry that woman any more; and, being sad and broken-hearted, went back with his army to Kosala.

Here ends the Seventeenth Chapter of the Fifth Skandha on Mandodari’s accounts in the Mahapuranam, S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Mahisa said O Devi! Mandodan had a sister Indumati; unmarried and endowed with all auspicious signs. She grew up in time to a marriageable age. The Svayambara assembly (a marriage in which the girl chooses her husband from among a number of visitors assembled together) was then called for the marriage of the maiden Indumati. The Kings from various parts came there and the maiden Indumati selected from among them a beautiful strong king, of noble lineage and endowed with all auspicious signs. At that time, by the undescribeable power of Destiny, Mandodari seeing the deceitful, cunning, and hypocrite King of Madra, became passionate and desired to marry him.

5-17. That slender woman Mandodari then addressed her father thus "O Father! Seeing the King of Madra in this assembly, I am desirous to marry him; so perform also my marriage ceremony now." When the king heard this request from her own daughter privately, he became very glad and began with promptness, to make preparations for the marriage. He invited the King of Madra to his own palace and gave him in marriage his own daughter Mandodari, according to due rites and ceremonies with an abundance of dowry and wealth. The King of Madra Charudesna became very glad to marry the beautiful Mandodari and went back with her to his own abode. The King Charudesna then enjoyed her for good many days; when one day a maid-servant found the king in sexual intercourse with another maid-servant in a lonely place and divulged this to Mandodari; she finding the king in that state became angry and rebuked him with a slight smiling countenance. Again, on another occasion, Mandodari saw the king willingly engaged in amusements and sports with an ordinary beautiful woman and became very sorry and thought thus When I saw him in the Svayamvara, I could not recognise him as a cheat; I am deceived by this King; Oh! What a wrong act have I done through delusion. This King is a rogue and he is totally shameless and has no dislike for contemptible things; it is now too late to repent for him. How can I have any affection for this husband; fie on my living now! I forsake from this very day all the pleasures with my husband and all other worldly pleasures, and I take recourse now to contentment alone. I have committed a very wrong act that I ought never to have done; therefore it causes intense pain to me now. If I now commit suicide, then that sin will never forsake me, and I must have to enjoy the consequences thereof. And if I return to my father's house, I will not be happy there, for my companions seeing me thus will, no doubt, ridicule me. Therefore, it is now advisable for me to avoid all the sensuous pleasures, become dispassionate and remain here patiently and abide by the strange combinations of Time.

18-20. Mahisa said Thus that women lamented and remorsed and began to remain there, very much sorrowful and distressed, renouncing thoroughly all the pleasures of the world. O Auspicious One! I am the king, yet you are showing your dislike for me; know, eventually, you, too, will be passionate and entertain afterwards an illiterate coward. Keep my word even now, it will be of great benefit and it will serve as a medicinal diet to you as to all women. In case you do not follow my advice, you will have to meet with extreme pain and misery, certainly.

21-25. Hearing the words of Mahisasura, the Devi said O you fool! Go to the lower worlds or stand up for fight; I will send you and the other Danavas unto death and then go away at my pleasure. O Demon! I take up form to preserve the righteous, whenever they suffer pain in this earth. O Lord of the Daityas! Formless, birthless I am; yet, at times, I take up form and be born to save the Devas. Know this firmly. O wicked Mahisa! The Devas prayed to Me for your destruction. Therefore I will not rest until I kill you. I speak all these truly to you. Therefore fight or go to Patala, the abode of the Asuras; I speak truly to you again that I will destroy you wholly.

26-51. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Devi's words, the Danava took up his bow and came to the battle, fully stretching the string of his bow up to his ears, and began to shoot sharpened arrows with great force at the Devi. The Devi, too, hurled with anger, arrows tipped with iron and cut off the Asura's arrows to pieces. The fight between them rose to such a terrible pitch that it caused terror to both the Devas and the Danavas, trying hard to be victorious over each other. In the midst of the terrible encounter, the demon Durdhara came up to fight and made the Devi angry and shot arrows, all terribly poisonous and sharpened on stones, at Her. The Bhagavati, then, got very angry and hit him hard with sharp arrows. Durdhara, struck thus, fell down dead on the battlefield like a mountain top. The demon Trinetra, well skilled in the uses of arrows and weapons, seeing him killed, came up to fight and shot at the Great Goddess with seven arrows. Before these arrows came on Her, She cut them to pieces with Her sharp arrows and by Her trident killed Trinetra. Trinetra thus killed, Andhaka quickly came in the battlefield and struck violently on the head of the lion with his iron club. The lion killed that powerful Andhaka by striking the demon with his nails and, out of anger, began to eat his flesh. Mahisasura became greatly astonished at the death of these Asuras and began to shoot pointed arrows, sharpened on stone, at Her. The Devi Ambika cut his arrows into two before they came on Her and struck the Demon on his breast by Her club. That vile Mahisasura, the tormentor of the Devas, fell in a swoon under the stoke of the club but patiently bore it and, at the next moment, came again and struck the lion on his head by his club. The lion, too, by his nails rent that great Asura to pieces. Mahisasura, then, quitting the man-form took up the lion-form and by his claws cut the Devi's lion and wounded him very much by his nails. On Mahisasura taking up this lion-form.

the Devi became very angry and began to shoot arrows after arrows at him all very terrible, sharp and like poisonous snakes. Then the Asura quitting the lion form assumed the appearance of a male elephant, oozing out juice from his temples and began to hurl the mountain tops by his trunk. Seeing the mountain peaks thus hurled on Her, She cut them off to pieces by Her sharp arrows and began to laugh. The Devi's lion on the other hand, sprang on the head of the elephant Mahisa and by his claws rent him to pieces. To kill the Devi's lion, then, Mahisa quitted his elephant-form and assumed the appearance of a Sarabha, more powerful and terrible than lion. The Devi seeing that Sarabha became angry and struck on the head of that Sarabha with Her axe; the Sarabha, too, attacked the Devi.

Their fight became horrible; Mahisasura, then, assumed the appearance of a buffalo and struck the Bhagavati by his horns. That horrible Asura, of hideous appearance, swinging his tail, began to attack the thin bodied Devi. That violent Asura caught hold of the mountain peaks by his tail and, whirling them round and round, hurled them on the Devi. That vicious soul, then, maddened with his strength, laughed incessantly and addressed thus “O Devi! Be steady in the battlefield. I will send you today unto death, and your youth and beauty too. You are an illiterate fellow as you have come maddened to fight with me. Really you are deluded in your pretensions that you are very strong; this idea of yours is absolutely false. I will kill you first and the hypocrite Devas after who want to vanquish me by standing up a woman in their front.”

52-53. The Devi said “O Villain! Do not boast; keep yourself firm in the fight. Today I will kill you and make the Devas discard their fear. O Wretch! You are a Sinner; you torment the Devas and terrify the Munis. Let me have my drink of sweet decoction of grapes. And then I will slay you undoubtedly.”

54-70. Vyasa said O King! Saying thus, the Devi, wrathful and eager to kill Mahisasura, took up the golden cup filled with wine and drank again and again. When the Devi finished Her drink of the sweet grape juice. She pursued him with trident in Her hands, to the great joy of gladdening all the Devas. The Devas began to rain showers of flowers on the Devi and praised Her and shouted victories to Her with Dundubhi (a Divine drum) Jai, Jiva; victory, live. The Risis, Siddhas, Gandarbhas, Pis’achas, Uragas, and Kinnaras witnessed the battle from the celestial space and became very much delighted. On the other hand, Mahisasura, the hypocrite Pundit, began to assume various magic forms and struck the Devi repeatedly. The Devi Chandika, then, infuriated and with eyes reddened, pierced violently the breast of that vicious Mahisa with Her sharp trident. The Demon, then, struck by this trident, fell senseless on the ground; but got up in the next moment and kicked the Devi forcibly. That Great Asura, thus kicking the Devi, laughed repeatedly and bellowed so loudly that the Devas were all terrified with that noise. Then the Devi held aloft the brilliant discus of good axle and of thousand spokes and loudly spoke to the Asura in frontO Stupid! Look! This Chakra will sever your throat today; wait a moment, I am sending you instantly unto death. Saying this, the Divine Mother hurled the Chakra. Instantly that weapon severed the Danava’s head from his body. The hot streams of blood gushed out from his neck as the violent streams of water get out from mountains, coloured red with red sandstones. The headless body of that Asura moved, to and fro, for a moment and then dropped on the ground. The loud acclamations of “Victory” were sounded to the great joy of the Devas. The very powerful lion began to devour the soldiers that were flying away, as if he was very hungry. O King! The wicked Mahisasura thus slain, the Demons that remained alive were terrified and fled away, very much frightened, to Patala. The Devas, Risis, human beings and the other saints on this earth were all extremely glad at the death of this wicked Demon. The Bhagavati Chandika quitted the battlefield and waited in a holy place. Then the Devas came there with a desire to praise and chant hymns to the Devi, the Bestower of their happiness.

Here ends the Eighteenth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the killing of the Danava Mahisasura in S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O King! Then Indra and all the Devas became very glad to see the great Mahisasura slain; they all began to praise and chant hymns to the World-Mother.

2-33. The Devas said It is by thy Power that Brahma becomes able to create this world, Visnu, to preserve, and MahesVara to destroy during the Pralaya time (the Great Dissolution) of this universe. But when they are bereft of Thy Power, they are quite unable to do such. Therefore, O Devi! Thou art undoubtedly the Prime Cause in the preservation and destruction of this whole Universe. O Devi; Thou art, in this world. Fame, idea and ideal, memory; Thou art the goal, mercy, compassion, faith, constancy, earth; Thou art Kamala, the Mantra Ajapa, respiration and perspiration, nourishment, Jaya, Vijaya (the destroyer of obstacles; a name of Durga); Thou art contentment, correct notion, measure, intellect, Rama (Laksmi), (wealth), knowledge, forgiveness, beauty, intelligence; Thou art the S’akti (power) of Rudra, Thou art Girija and the Energy of God Uma and all other forces in this universe; this is known to everyone in the three worlds. Without any or all of these forces, no one is able to perform any action. Thou art the Supreme Cause of all this world. Therefore everything rests on Thee. If Thou wert not the upholding Power, how could Kurma (in the Tortoise Incarnation) and Ananta have upheld this world? O Mother! Wert Thou not this Earth, could all these world-load of things have rested on the sky? O Mother! Those human beings that worship Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Moon, Fire, Yama, the God of Death, Vayu, Ganes'a, and the other Devas, they are certainly deluded by Thy Maya. Could all those Devas do any action or any favour without Thy Energy? O Mother! Those that offer in any Sacrifice, a profuse quantity of ghee (clarified butter) as oblations to the several Devas, they are certainly conceived to be of very narrow views; Wert Thou not the Svaha, could it have been possible for those Devas to get the offered oblations at that very instant? Certainly, therefore, they are fools and ignorant persons. There is no doubt in this. O Mother! Thou givest the several objects of nourishment and enjoyment to all the beings in this universe by Thy parts (the several transformations of these material things); it is Thou that nourishest the Devas, Thy devotees, as well as the others (the Danavas, according to their Karma). O Mother! As the owner of any garden plants, with pleasure, the beautiful trees in his garden for his delight and, finding some of them not to bear any fruits or leaves or of a bitter taste, does not cut them off by their roots, so, O Devi! Thou hast brought into existence these Daityas out of their inferior Karmas and Thou art supporting them. Knowing that the Daityas like to enjoy the celestial nymphs. Thou hast, out of compassion, killed them by their arrows in the battlefield, to afford them facilities in their re-birth in Heavens and thus to enjoy the Deva women which they could not have got in any other possible way. Therefore this Thy dealings with them are to fulfil their intentions and not to kill them. O Mother! It is a great wonder that to kill these Asuras Thou hadst to assume this Divine Body; Thou couldst have done so by Thy mere will. It seems that this act of Thine is but a mere Pastime. There is no other cause for this. O Devi! Those human beings that do not worship Thee in this dreadful age of Kali, they are certainly deceived by the cunning Purana makers who have deluded them to worship Hari and Hara, who are Thy creations. Oh! What an amount of evil has befallen to those poor souls! O Devi! Those men know that the Devas, tormented by the Asuras, are Thy devotees, and yet they worship them; certainly such fellows, holding the lighted torches in their hands, plunge deep into the darkest waterless wells. O Mother! Thou art the Vidya (Blissful Intelligence) and Thou grantest pleasure and liberation; Thou art the Avidya, (Great Delusion) and thus Thou causest bondage and pain in this world. O Mother! Thou only destroyest the affliction of the human beings; those that want liberation worship Thee, and those that are ignorant and attached to worldly enjoyments do not worship Thee. What more can be said than this, that Brahma, Visnu, Mahesa

and the other Devas incessantly worship Thy adorable lotus-feet; but those men that are of dull intellect and are mistaken, they do not meditate Thy feet and, therefore, they come again and again into this ocean of world. O Chandika! It is through the grace of the dust of Thy lotus-feet that Brahma, Visnu, and MahesVara are creating, preserving and destroying this universe. Therefore, O Goddess! Those men that do not serve Thee, are certainly very unfortunate. O Mother of the Universe! Thou art the Goddess of speech of the Suras and the Asuras; thus if Thou didst not dwell in their mouths, they would not have been able to utter a single word; therefore, O Goddess! How can men speak, when they are thus deprived of Thee! O Mother! It is due to the curse of Bhrigu Muni that Hah takes several incarnations as Fish, Tortoise, Boar, Man-Lion, and deceitful Dwarf Incarnations; all these show clearly the dependence of Hah,

*N.B. - The Devas and the Daityas are the opposite polarities of the same creation.

How, then, can they avoid the fear of death when they serve these dependent incarnations! O Mother! It is well known that the male generative organ of S'ambhu, the Mahadeva fell unto the ground, owing to the curse of Bhrigu Muni, when he went to the hermitage of the Risis. How can, then, happiness come in this world or in the next, to those who worship such a S'ambhu who wears human skulls on His body! O Devi! Those that worship Ganes'a, born of the above qualified Maha Deva are awfully mistaken; they are especially quite ignorant of Thee, the Goddess of the Universe, that can be easily worshipped and that can give the fourfold aims of human existence. O Devi! It is out of Thy kindness that Thou hast slain with Thy arrows the enemies and thus hast translated them into Heavens; otherwise they would have certainly gone down to Hell owing to their own Karmic effects. Brahma, Hari, Hara and the other Devas cannot realise Thy greatness; how can, then, ordinary men know Thee, when they are deluded by immeasureably strong Sattva, Rajas and Tannas qualities. O Mother! Those who do not worship Thy lotus-feet as very hard to be brought within this mind and therefore worship this visible Sun and Fire, they cannot grasp the Essence of the Vedas, demonstrated by hundreds of passages of S'ruti; they are deluded and simply suffer pains. O Mother! I think that the influences of Thy Sattva, Rajas and Tamas qualities are widely known in this world; those qualities as taught in various deluding schools of Tantras by various persons, stimulate people to the worship of Visnu, MahesVara, Sun and Ganes'a and thus detract them from worshipping Thee. O Mother! Those that detract thus the Brahmanas from worshiping Thy lotus-feet and advise them through the Agamas, to worship Hari, Hara and others. Thou dost not get angry with them, rather Thou dost shew Thy kindness to them and make them widely celebrated as possessing the occult powers of enchanting, bringing others under their control, or attracting towards them various other persons. In the Satya Yuga, Sattva Guna was more powerful and therefore the untrue S'astras could not rear their heads; but in this Kali Age, owing to the Sattva Guna being not so powerful, the lower qualities have got preponderance; so these so- called clever Pundits instead of worshipping Thee, worship Hari,

Hara and the other Devas, the products of their fancy and hide Thee. O Mother! Thou art the Brahma Vidya, the knowledge of the Supreme Consciousness, Thou givest liberation to Thy devotees when they succeed in their Yogas. Therefore the pure Sattvik Muni meditate on Thee and Thee alone. Those that get themselves diluted in Thee, they are very blessed; what more to speak of them in their praise, they will no longer have to suffer any pains in their mother's wombs! O Mother! Thou art inherent as Chit S'akti (the power of consciousness) in the Supreme Spirit and therefore He is become manifest specially as this Great Cosmos and becomes known as the Creator, Preserver, and Destroyer of this world, fashioned out of five elements. O Devi! What male can by his own power work out this Jagat Prapancha, enjoy it and move in this, without the aid of Thy power. O Bhagavati! This universe has been created by Thee; Thou art, therefore, its Mother. The twenty-four Essences or Tattvas are inert; how can they without Thy Chits'akti, create this universe? O Devi! Never can these senses and organs, endowed with Guna and Karma, do any work or bestow any fruits without Thy energy.

O Mother! Wert thou not Svaha, the instrumental cause in the sacrifice, how could the Devas have got their shares of the ghee offered in the Yajhas by the Munis! Therefore, O Devi! Thou art, no doubt, preserving this universe. O Bhagavati! It is Thou that hast created this world in the beginning; it is Thou that art preserving the gods Hah, Hara and others; it is Thou that art destroying this universe. Therefore, O Brahman! The Devas cannot know Thy deeds; how can, then, the men who are of dull intellect, know Thee. O Mother! Thou hast now saved the Devas by killing this terrible Mahisasura. O Mother! All the Vedas have not been able to know exactly all Thy movements; how can we, of dull intellect, praise Thee! O Mother! Thou has served our cause by killing our enemy, the wicked Danava, the inconceivable source of pain to all the world by this act of Thine, Thy fame has spread far and wide in this universe; therefore, O Thou of renowned prowess! Thou art the Mother of this world; save us, and maintain us by Thy mercy.

34-35. Vyasa said O King! The Devas having praised the Devi thus, the Devi addressed them gently "O Devas! Say if you have any other difficult thing for Me to do; remember Me whenever any difficult crisis occurs to you; I will destroy that evil."

36-42. The Devas said "O Devi! All our purposes have been served when Thou hast killed lately our enemy Mahisasura. Now dost Thou do for us so that we can always recollect Thy lotus feet, and our Bhakti be firm and steadfast towards Thee. It is only the Mother the bears the thousand offences of the son; we, therefore, cannot say why men, knowing this, do not worship the Mother of the Universe. There are two birds always dwelling in this body, Jivatma (human soul) and the Paramatma (the Supreme Soul). They are so very intimate friends toward each other that they never separate. But there is no other third friend that can bear the faults of these two. Therefore the embodied soul that forsakes Thee, his friend, can never attain any welfare; what more to say on this! That vicious soul is very unlucky amidst the Devas and men, no doubt. He who on attaining this excellent human body, attained with much difficulty, does not remember Thee frequently by words and deeds, is certainly the vilest of men. O Devi! Whether in times of distress or happiness. Thou art our Saviour; therefore dost Thou protect us with Thy best weapons. O Devi! There is no other means of our security than the Grace of the dust of Thy Feet."

43. Vyasa said O King! The Devas having prayed to the Devi thus, the Devi vanished then and there. The Devas, seeing the disappearance of the Devi, were sufficiently struck with surprise.

Here ends the Nineteenth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the prayer and hymns to the Devi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Janamejaya said O best of Risis! I have now seen the wonderful excellent deeds of the Devi for the enhancement of peace in this world. Though I have heard from thy lotus face these nectar¬ like words, still I am not satisfied. O best of Munis! What did the chief Devas do when the Goddess disappeared, kindly say to me. O Bhagavan! I think those Jivas cannot fully comprehend these excellent sacred deeds of the Devi, that are less fortunate and have done not many meritorious deeds in this world. O Muni! What to speak of the less fortunate souls, even the Mahatmas who are well versed in hearing such things, can hardly be satiated on hearing the Devi's deeds. O! Fie to those, that do not hear of these things, the essence of essences, on hearing which men become Immortals. The Mother's Lila is to preserve the Devas as well as the great Munis and to serve as a boat for the human beings to cross this ocean of world. How can, then, the grateful souls forsake Her? The Pundits versed in the Vedas declare, that the Devi's life is able to fulfil all the desires. Therefore the liberated souls that want liberation, the worldly souls, the diseased all ought to drink incessantly the nectar-like nectar of Devi's doings. Especially the kings that are engaged in Dharma, in earning wealth and in enjoyments, ought to hear Her life. O Muni! When the liberated souls drink the nectar-like doings of the Devi, what doubt can there be with the ordinary human beings, to listen with rapt devotion those wondrous things! O Best of Munis! It is those that worshipped the Goddess Bhavani in their previous births with beautiful Kunda flowers, Champaka flowers and Bel leaves, they have, it is inferred, in their present births become possessed of rich enjoyments. And those devoid of any devotion, that obtained this human body in the land of Bharata and did not worship the Mother Goddess, they are, in the present births, without grains and riches, diseased, and void of any issues. Wander they always as servants, carrying out orders, and bearing on the burden loads; day and night, they seek for their own selfish ends, yet they cannot get their belly full meals. The blind, deaf and dumb; lame and lepers suffer pain and misery in this earth; seeing them, it should be inferred that they never worshipped the Goddess Bhavani. And those that are wealthy, prosperous, attended by numerous attendants and are always enjoying, like kings, it is to be inferred that they certainly worshipped the lotus feet of the Mother Goddess in their past lives.

12-15. Therefore O Son of Satyavati! As you are kind-hearted, kindly narrate before me the excellent deeds of the Devi. O best of Munis! Where did the Goddess, Maha Laksmi, created out of the energies of all the gods, depart after She had slain the Mahisasura and had been worshipped and praised by the Devas? O highly Fortunate one! You told me that She vanished from the sight of the Devas; now I like to know where is She staying now, whether in the Heavens or in the Land of Mortals? Did She melt away then and there or did She descend to Vaikuntha or did She go to the mountain Sumeru? O Muni! Narrate all these duly before me.

16-50. Vyasa said O King! I told you before about the beautiful Mani Dvipa; that island is the place of sport to the Devi and very dear to Her. In that place Brahma, Visnu, Mahadeva were transformed into females; they afterwards became males and were engaged in their respective duties. That place is grand and splendid and is in the centre of the ocean of Nectar; the Devi Ambika assumes various forms there as She likes; and She sports there. To that Mani Dvipa the auspicious Devi departed after She had been praised by the Gods, to that place where sports always the eternal Bhagavati BhuvanesVari, the incarnate of Para Brahma. When the Highest Goddess vanished, the Devas installed, on the throne of Mahisasura, the powerful King S'atrughna, endowed with all auspicious qualities, the Lord of Ajodhya and descended from the Solar line. After making him thus the King, Indra and the other Devas went to their respective abodes on their own conveyances. O King!

The Devas having gone to their places, the subjects were governed on this earth according to Dharma; and they passed their times in ease and comfort. It used to rain, then, timely and the earth was covered with plenty of grains and wealth; the trees were all filled with fruits and leaves and gave enjoyment to people. The cows with their udders full like earthen pots gave such a profuse quantity of milk that men began to milk them whenever they liked. The rivers' waters were all clear and cooling; and they flowed full in regular channels; the birds grouped round them. The Brahmanas, versed in the Vedas, were engaged in performing sacrifices; the Ksattriyas observed their virtues and were engaged in doing charities and in their education; the kings held their rods of justice and were engaged in governing their subjects; though the several kings were busy with various arms and weapons, they all became fond of peace. Thus no wars nor quarrels were seen amongst the subjects; and the mines yielded plenty of wealth to the people. O best of Kings! There were the Brahmans, Ksattriyas, Vais'yas and S'udras who became the devotees of the Goddess. The Brahmanas and Ksattriyas used, then, to perform so many sacrifices that, at every nook and corner in this globe, the sacrificial altars and the sacrificial posts became visible. The female sex became gentle and of good behaviour, truthful and chaste towards their husbands respectively. Atheism and unrighteous acts vanished entirely from the face of the earth; the people left all dry discussions; they argued only about the S'astras that did not go in contra-distinction to the Vedas. Nobody liked to quarrel with each other; poverty, and evil inclinations were checked; the people everywhere lived in happiness. Untimely death was not there; so the people had no bereavements with their friends; no distress was seen. Famine, want of rains, and deadly plagues were out of sight. The people had no illness even; and jealousies and quarrels vanished. O King! all men and women began to sport merrily everywhere like the Gods in Heaven. Theft, atheism, deceit, vanity, hypocrisy, lustfulness, stupidity, and the anti-Vedic feelings were not to be seen. O Lord of the Earth! All the men were then extremely devoted to their Dharma and engaged in serving the Brahmanas. The Brahmins were also, according to the three-fold plan of the creation, Sattvik, Rajasik and Tamasik. The Sattvik Brahmins were all versed in the Vedas, clever and truthful; they were kind, they controlled their passions and they did not accept any presents from others. Filled with their ideas of Dharma, they used to perform their Purodasa and other such sacrifices with Sattvik rice, etc., but never, never did they immolate any animals.* O King! The Sattvik Brahmanas gave charities, studied the Vedas and offered sacrifices for themselves. These were their three ordained actions. They were busy in these. O King! The Rajasik Brahmanas were versed in the Vedas and acted as priests to the Ksattriyas

*N.B. - Where the victim is fastened during the time of immolation, and ate flesh as sanctioned by recognised rules. They were busy with their six duties. They offered sacrifices on their own behalf, assisted others in sacrifices, took gifts, made charities, studied and taught others the Vedas. The Tamasik Brahmanas were angry, attached to worldly objects, and jealous. They studied very little of the Vedas and spent most of their time in serving the kings. O King! Mahisasura was killed, all the Brahmanas were glad and began to practise Dharma according to the Vedas, observed vows and made charities. The Ksattriyas began to govern the subjects, the Vaisya carried on their trading business and the other tribes went on with their agriculture, preservation of the cows, and lending money on interest. Thus all men became vary glad on the death of Mahisa. Devoid of cares and anxieties, the subjects got much wealth! The cows were endowed with suspicious signs and gave plenty of milk and the rivers flowed full of waters. The trees looked splendid with abundance of fruits; men were without diseases: in short, people had no mental agony and too much or too little of rains were not there; S'alavas, mice, birds, and seditions we not extant. O King! The beings died not prematurely; rather enjoyed incessantly, their full health and possessed lots of riches; especially beings, engaged in the Vedic Dharma, served the lotus feet of Chandika and thus spent their lives.

Here ends the Twentieth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the peace of the world in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! I am describing to you that excellent pure life and doings of the Devi that destroy all the sins of all the beings and make them happy. In days of yore, there were two very powerful demons S'umbha and Nis'umbha; they were two brothers, strong heroes and invulnerable by the male persons. Those two wicked Asuras were surrounded with numerable Danavas; they tormented always the Devas. Then the Goddess Ambika, for the good of the Devas, killed S'umbha and Nis'umbha with all their attendants in a very dreadful battle. In the battlefield the Devi killed their main assistants Chanda Munda and the exceedingly terrible Rakta Vija and Dhumralochana. When the Devi destroyed those Danavas, the Devas became fearless; the Devas then went to the beautiful Sumeru mountain and praised Her and chanted hymns to Her.

7-8. Hearing about the names of S'umbha and Nis'umbha, Janamejaya asked O best of Munis! Who were those two Asuras? How came they to be most powerful? Who put them here? Why were they vulnerable to women only? Under whose tapasya and under whose boon did they become so strong? And why did that great Devi kill them? Describe all these to me in detail.

9-20. Vyasa said O King, I am describing to you that beautiful anecdote where the Devi's holy deeds are involved. Hear. This incident full of all that is good, destroys the hearer's all sins and grants them all their desired ends. In days of yore, S'umbha and Nis'umbha, the two fair and good looking brothers came out of Patala to this earth. These two Asuras, when they grew to their manhood, performed severe asceticism in Puskara, the holy place of pilgrimage, the most purifying place in this world and they refused to eat rice and water. They became so very skilled in their Yoga practices that they passed away in their one posture and seat one Ajuta (10,000) years. Thus they performed very difficult Tapasya. Then the God Brahma, the Grandsire of all, became pleased with their asceticism and appeared before them, riding on His vehicle, the Swan. The Creator, seeing them thus deeply merged in meditation, asked them to get up from that state and told them thus “I have become pleased with your asceticism. I fulfil the desires of all the Lokas; I have now come to you, pleased to see you so very strong in your ascetic practices; better ask your desired boons from me; I will grant them to you.” Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Grandsire’s wards, S’umbha and Nis’umbha got up from their meditation; concentrating their attention towards Him, circumambulated Him and bowed down to Him with their hearts full of reverence. The two Asuras were very weak, lean and thin by their hard tapasya and they looked very humble. They fell down before Him like a piece of wood and began to speak in a sweet voice, choked by intense feelings. O Brahman! O Deva of the Devas! O Thou, the Ocean of Mercy! O Destroyer of fear of the devotees! O Lord! If Thou art pleased then dost Thou grant us immortality. There is nothing in this world more fearful than death; we two have taken refuge unto Thee, being afraid of this death. O Thou, Ocean of mercy! O Creator of the world! O Lord of the Devas! O Universal Soul! Protect us from this fear due to the terrible Death.

21-23. Brahma said Is this the boon that you ask? This is in every way, against the Law of Nature; for no one, in these three Lokas, can grant this boon to anybody. When one becomes born, one must die; and when one dies, one must be born again. This Law is ordained in this world by the Supreme Creator of this Universe, from time immemorial. Therefore all the beings must die; there is no doubt in this. Better ask any other boon that you desire; I will grant that to you.

24-27. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of Brahma, the two Danavas pondered over the matter and bowed down to the Prajapati, the Lord of the Creation and said O Merciful One! Grant us then so that we shall be invulnerable to any of the male of the Immortal Devas down to human beings and birds and deers; this is the boon that we ask. Where exists the woman so powerful as to kill us? We never fear any woman in all the three Lokas. O Lotus-born! We, the two brothers, want not to be killed by any male; the females are naturally weak therefore we need not fear them.

28-58. Vyasa said O King! Hearing their words, the Grandsire Brahma gladly granted them their desired boon and returned to His own abode. On Brahma going away, the two Danavas, too, returned to their own places. They then appointed the Muni Bhrigu as their priest and began to worship him. Bhrigu, the best of the Munis, then, on an auspicious day and when the star was benign, got a beautiful golden throne built and gave it to the king. S’umbha, being the eldest, was then installed on the auspicious throne as the king; the other brave and excellent demons began to assemble there quickly for serving him. The two great warriors Chanda and Munda, proud on account of their great strength came there with their large armies, chariots, horses, and elephants. Similarly the valiant warriors Dhumralochana, hearing that S’umbha had become their King, came there with his own army. There came up also at that time the great warrior Rakta Vija, more powerful on account of his getting a boon, attended by his army of two Aksauhini soldiers. O King! Hear why this Rakta Vija became so very unconquerable; whenever this Asura was wounded by any weapon, if one drop of blood fell on the ground, at once would be created so many innumerable Asuras, resembling his wicked nature and with similar weapons in their hands. The Asuras born of this blood would have similar appearances and would be similar in strength and ready to fight at once when they were born. That great warrior, the great Demon Rakta Vija was unconquerable in battle for this very reason and no being could now kill him. The other Asuras, when they heard that S’umbha had become their king, came up there with their armies consisting of four divisions of elephants, chariots, cavalry and infantry and began to serve him. The army of S’umbha and Nis’umbha thus became countless; and they forcibly conquered and got possession of all the kingdoms that existed then on the surface of the earth. Then Nis’umbha, the destroyer of enemies, collected his army and marched up to the Heavens without any delay to conquer Indra, the Lord of S'achi. He fought very hard with all the Lokapalas on all sides when Indra struck him on his breast with His thunderbolt. Nis'umbha fell unconscious on the ground with that blow when his soldiers, defeated in the battle, fled away on all sides. S'umbha, the destroyer of the enemies' forces, hearing the unconscious state of the younger brother, came up at once on the field and shot at the Devas with multitudes of arrows. The untiring S'umbha fought so violently that Indra and the other Devas and Lokapalas were defeated. S'umbha then took away, perforce, the position of Indra and he occupied the Celestial Tree and Heavenly milching cow that yielded all desires and other excellent things over which Indra used to reign. In fact, that high-souled Asura got the dominion of the three Lokas and took away all those that were offered at the sacrifices. He became highly glad on getting the Nandana Garden and was extremely delighted when he drank the celestial nectar. He then defeated in battle Kuvera, the god of wealth and occupied his kingdom. He defeated the Moon, Sun, and Yama, the God of Death and occupied their positions. Surrounded by his army, Nis'umbha dispossessed Varuna, Fire, and Air of their kingdoms and began to reign in their stead. Thus deprived of their kingdoms, prosperity and wealth, the Devas left the Nandana Garden and fled, out of terror, to the caves of hills and mountains. Thus deprived of all their rights, the Devas without any weapons, without any lustre, without any home, and without anywhere to go, began to wander in lonely forests. O King! All the Immortals began to knock about in lonely gardens, mountain caves and rivers; and nowhere they found happiness; for happiness depends entirely unto the hands of Fate. O Lord of men!

Even those fortunate souls, who are powerful, and wealthy and wise, meet at times with distress and poverty. O King! How marvellous are the ways and manners of Time! It makes kings and donors beggars; it renders the powerful, weak; literates, illiterates; and it makes great warriors into terrible cowards. O King! Vasava performed one hundred horse-sacrifices and got the excellent Indra's position; but again be fell into extreme difficulties; thus runs the wheel of Time.

59. It is Time that bestows the gem of knowledge to a person and it is Time again that deprives that very same man of his wisdom and makes him a great sinner.

60-61. The Bhagavan Visnu takes incarnations, under the control of Time, in several lower wombs as boar, etc., and Maha Deva carries on His body the human skulls, that are not even fit to be touched. When Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a and others suffer such painful things, then one need not wonder at the workings of the Great inscrutable Time.

Here ends the Twenty-first Chapter of the Fifth Book on the conquest of the Heavens by S'umbha and Nis'umbha in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Vyasa said O King! When the Devas were all defeated, S'umbha began to govern all their kingdoms; thus one thousand years passed away. The Devas, on the other hand, deprived of their kingdoms, were all drowned in an ocean of cares and anxieties; at last they began to feel very much and were greatly afflicted. They asked with reverence their own Guru Brihaspati, "O Guru! What are we to do now? O All knowing! You are the Great Muni; kindly say unto us if there be any means by which we can get rid of this our present crisis. There are thousands of Vedic Mantrams which yield the desired results, if they are worshipped with due rites and ceremonies and if all the rules be observed thereof. O best of Munis! Many Yajhas are mentioned in the Vedas that yield all the desired results; you know them all; so kindly perform those Yajhas. Do all those ceremonies duly that are ordained in the Vedas for the killing of enemies; O Descendant of Angirasa! You ought to perform as early as possible those sacrifices for magical purposes to destroy the Danavas so that all our miseries come to an end."

8-22. Brihaspati said "O Lord of the Suras! All the mantras mentioned in the Vedas yield the desired results, but subservient to the Great Destiny only; they do not give results of themselves but do so in obedience to to the laws ordained by Nature. You all are the presiding Deities of the Vedic Mantras; but, now, by the strange irony of Time, you are put to difficulties and troubles; what can I do now in this case? See! Indra, Agni, Varuna, and other gods are invoked in sacrifices; how, then, can sacrificial ceremonies do good when you are put to so great difficulties. Therefore there is no remedy to those which will take place unavoidably; but those who are wise declare that in such cases means are to be adopted. Some sages say that Fate is strong but those who advocate the cause of taking remedial means say that Fate is powerless; remedies or manly exertions lead to all success. But, O King of the Devas! The embodied souls ought to resort to both Fate and Remedies; it is never advisable to depend solely on Fate. Therefore, it is advisable to think out again and again as far as one's own Intellect goes, the best remedies. O Devas! I have thought over again and again on this subject and say to you my opinion. Hear. In days of yore, the Bhagavati, being appeased, killed Mahisasura; and when you all praised and chanted hymns to Her, She gave you this boon that She will remove all your sorrows and troubles no sooner you remember Her, and She told that you all must remember Her whenever any difficulty would arise to you out of this Great Destiny. She would, then, free you all of your ocean of great difficulties. Therefore do you all now go to the highly sacred and exquisitely beautiful Himalayan mountains and worship the most worshipful Chandika Devi with your love and devotion. Know all the rules of the Seed mantra of Maya and be engaged in taking Her name accompanied with burnt offerings. I have come to know, by Yogic power, that She will be pleased with You. I see that today your difficulties will come to an end; there is not the least doubt in this. I have heard that the Devi resides always in the Himachal; if you worship and praise and chant hymns to Her, She will certainly grant you your desired boons. Therefore fully decide on this thing and go to the Himalayas. O Devas! She will fulfil all your desires and carry out all your intentions."

23-24. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus his words, the Devas departed to the Himalayas and they became all merged in the devotional worship of the Supreme Goddess and began to meditate constantly in their hearts the Seed mantra of Maya (Hrim). They bowed down to the Goddess Maha Maya, the Discarder of all the fears of Her Bhaktas and began to chant hymns to Her with perfect devotion.

25-42. O Goddess! Salutation to Thee! O Thou, the Lord of the Universe! the Lord of our hearts! Thou art the Everlasting Bliss and the Giver of bliss to the Devas! Salutation to Thee! Thou art the Destroyer of the Danavas and Thou art the Giver of all desires of human beings. Thou canst be approached with devotion. Salutation to Thee! O Thou, the Incarnate of all the Devas! Thy names are endless; Thy forms are endless; none can count them. Thou residest always as the Force Incarnate in all the actions, in the Creation, Preservation and Dissolution of Beings. O Goddess! Thou art the Memory, Constancy, Intelligence, Old Age. Thou art the nourishment, contentment; Thou upholdest all; Thou art the beauty, peace, good knowledge, prosperity and happiness. Thou art the Goal, fame, and intellect and Thou art the Eternal Seed unmanifested. We now bow down to those forms of Thine through which Thou dost serve the purpose of the Devas in this world as we are now in need of peace. Thou art forgiveness and mercy; Thou art the Yoga Nidra (a state between sleep and wakefulness); Thou art the kindness and Thou residest in all the beings in so many forms, great and grand, and so very celebrated; O Goddess! Thou hadst already served the cause of the gods in killing our great enemy Mahisasura, puffed up with vanity. Therefore Thy mercy is well known amongst the gods; what more. Thy mercy is known, since very ancient times and it is narrated in the Vedas. What wonder is there that a mother nourishes gladly her own sons and preserves them carefully! For Thou art the Mother of the Devas; Thou art the great source of help to them; therefore dost Thou fulfill all their desires with Thine whole heart. O Devi! We do not know the limit of Thy qualities nor of Thy forms; O Goddess! Thou art worshipped by the whole Universe. Thou art fully competent to save all from dangers; we are objects of Thy pity; dost Thou save us from our present troubles! Thou art capable to kill enemies without shooting any arrrows, without striking any blows, without hurling any trident, axes, S'aktis, clubs, or any other weapons; merely by Thy mere will Thou canst kill; still for sports and for the good of all beings Thou incarnatest and fightest for the sake of Lila. The ignorant persons know such things as birth, death, etc., that this world is not eternal; that no actions can be without any cause; we, therefore, ascertain by reasoning and inference that Thou art the Supreme Cause of this whole Universe. Brahma is the Creator, Visnu is the Preserver, and Mahes'a is the Destroyer; so it is related in the Puranas. Thou again hast given birth to these three Gods in the respective cycles; therefore Thou art the Mother of all; there is no doubt in this. O Devi! In days of yore, these three Devas worshipped Thee; Thou Wert pleased and gavest them all the best powers. Being thus endowed with Thy powers, they have been able to create, preserve and destroy this Universe beautifully. Art they not foolish, though they be Yatis (persons of self-controlled nature), who do not worship the Universal Mother, the Consciousness Incarnate, the Giver of liberation, on Whose feet are worshipped by the Devas, and worshipping Whom, one gets the fruits of all one's desires? Certainly those Vaisnavas, Sauras (worshippers of the Sun) and Pas'upatas (worshippers of S'iva) are foolish braggarts who do not meditate Thee as the embodiment of Kamala (prosperity), modesty, beauty, continuancy. Fame, nourishment. O Mother! The Asuras, Hah, Hara and other great Devas worship Thee in this world; therefore those mortals are certainly deceived by their Creator that do not worship Thee on the surface of this earth. O Devi! Hari himself serves the lotus feet of Laksmi by colouring them (toes and other fingers of the feet) red with lac juice; Hara is very anxious to serve the lotus feet and take the dust thereof of Parvati; Laksmi and Parvati are but Thy part manifestations; therefore to serve them is, in other words to serve Thee. What to speak of other persons, even those who can discriminate between real and unreal and those who have left their worldly homes and have become dispassionate towards worldly objects, even those Munis worship forgiveness and mercy, that are but Thy parts; therefore who is there in this world that does not serve Thy lotus-feet! O Devi! Those human beings plunge into the dreadful wells of this Samsara, the round of birth and death, and are deprived of all pleasures, who do not serve Thy lotus feet. What more can be said than the fact that those fallen beings suffer terribly from poverty, humility, leprosy, headache, and the chronic enlargement of spleen. O Mother! Those persons are void of any wealth and wife; they are the carriers of loads of wood and collect grass and leaves and show their skill in such acts; they are of little understanding and never they served in their previous births Thy lotus-feet. This we have come to know very well within our heart of hearts.

43-47. Vyasa said O King! When all the Devas thus eulogised, instantly the Devi Ambika, full of youth and beauty appeared there out of mercy. That extraordinary beautiful Bhagavati, endowed with all auspicious signs, and adorned with the Divine clothings, ornaments, and garlands and sandal paste, etc., appeared before the Devas. Before Whom, even the world enchanter Cupid bows down; with such beautiful. Divine appearance, the Devi emerged from the mountain cave in order to take Her ablutions in the Ganges. That Devi, sweet voiced like a cuckoo, gladly smiling began to say to the Devas, singing hymns to Her, in a voice deep like that of a rumbling cloud.

48. The Devi said O Best of Suras! Whom are you praising constantly in this place? What do you want! Why are you so anxious and seem to be so much care-worn? Do please tell all this to Me in detail.

49. Vyasa said O King! The Devas were first enchanted by Her beauty and softness; then, being encouraged by Her sweet words, began to speak with great joy.

50-57. O Devi! We pray toThee, O Lord of his Universe! We bow down to Thee. O Thou, the Ocean of mercy! Protect us from all the troubles; we are very much care-worn and tormented by the Daityas. O Great Goddess! In ancient times Thou didst kill Mahisasura, the source of troubles to all and then told us to remember Thee whenever any difficulty would arise.

Then Thou wouldst undoubtedly remove all the troubles arising from the Daityas no sooner we remember Thee. O Devi! We have now remembered Thee for that very reason. At present the two dreadful Asuras, S'umbha and Nis'umbha have sprang up and are creating great disturbances; and they cannot be killed by any male beings. The powerful Raktavija and Chanda Munda and other Asuras united have dispossessed the Devas of their Heavens. Thou alone art our goal and refuge; without Thee there is none other to save us. Therefore, O Beautiful One!

Thou dost do this work for the Devas who are extremely troubled and distressed. O Powerful Devi! The Devas are always at the services of Thy lotus feet; still the very powerful Danavas are throwing them into dangers; O Mother! Thou art the Preserver of the distressed; therefore dost Thou preserve the Devas, devoted to Thee. O Mother! The Danavas, being very much emboldened by their powers, are creating many havocs on the surface of the Earth; now remembering that, in the beginning of the Yugas, Thou didst create all this Universe, Thou dost now ought to protect all this Universe.

Here ends the Twenty-second Chapter of the Fifth Book on the eulogising of the Devi by the Devas in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Vyasa said O King! When the tormented Devas praised thus, the Devi created from Her body another supremely beautiful form. This created form, the Ambika Devi, became known in all the worlds as Kaus'iki, as She came out of the physical sheath of the Devi Parvati. When Kaus'iki was created out of the body of Parvati, the Parvati's body became transformed and turned out into a black colour and became known as Kalika. Her terrible black appearance, when beheld, increases the terror even of the Daityas. O King! This Devi is now become known in this world as Kalaratri, the night of destruction, at the end of the world, identified with Durga, the Fulfiller of all the desires. The Ambika Devi, then, began to look splendid, decked with various ornaments; Her beautiful form began to look very lovely. The Devi Ambika then smiled a little and said, “Better be fearless; I will slay just now your enemies. It is My incumbent duty to carry out your purposes; I will therefore slay in battle Nis’umbha and others for the sake of your happiness.”

8-30. Thus saying, the Devi Bhagavati, elated with pride, mounted on lion and, taking Kalika with Her, entered into the city of S’umbha, the enemy of the gods. Ambika went to a garden adjoining the city accompanied by Kalika, and began to sing in such a sweet melodious tune that enchants even the God of Love, who fascinates the whole world. What more can be said than the fact that, hearing that sweet melodious song, the birds and beasts became enchanted; the Devas then began to feel much pleasure from the Sky. In the meanwhile Chanda, Munda the two dreadful Asuras, and attendants of S’umbha, came out accidentally there on their sportive excursions and saw the beautiful Ambika Devi singing and Kalika Devi sitting before Her. O best of Kings! No sooner Chanda, Munda saw the extraordinary beauty of the Goddess Bhagavati, than they went at once to S’umbha. On approaching towards the lord of the Daityas sitting in his room, they bowed down and told thus in a sweet voice - "O King! Here has come from the Himalayas a woman accidentally, mounted on a lion; Her limbs are shining with all good signs so much so that even the God of love would be enchanted by Her sight. Nowhere, in the Devalokas, the Gandarbha Lokas or in this earth can be found such a beautiful lady; we never saw nor heard about such a lady before. O King! That lady is singing so beautifully and pleasingly to all that even the deer are standing motionless by Her side enchanted, as it were, by Her melodious voice. O King! That Lady is fit for you; therefore determine first whose daughter is this lady, what for she has come there and then marry Her. Know this as certain that such a beautiful lady is not to be found anywhere in this world. Therefore do you bring Her to your house and marry Her. O Lord of men! You have acquired all the gems and jewels of the Devas; why not, then, accept this Gem in the form of a lady? O King! You have taken by force the exquisitely beautiful Airavata elephant of Indra, the Parijata Tree, the seven faced horse Uchchais’rava, and many other jewels. You have acquired by your might the Prince of Jewels, the celestial car of the Creator Brahma, ensigned by the emblematic Swan. You have dispossessed Kuvera of his treasure of the value of a Padma (one thousand billion) and Varuna, the God of oceans, of his white umbrella. O King! When Varuna was defeated, your brother Nis’umbha took perforce his Pas’a weapon. O King! The Great Ocean gave you, out of terror, various jewels and honoured you by presenting a garland of lotuses which never fade away. What more can be said than the fact that you have conquered the Death and took away His force and that you have easily conquered Yama, the God of Death and have taken from Him His horrible staff. O King! You have brought that Heavenly cow which came out when the ocean was churned; that cow is still with you; what more to say than that Menaka and other Apsaras are under your control. Thus you have got by your strength all the jewels. Why, then, are you not taking this exquisitely beautiful lady, the Prince of Jewels, amongst women. O King! All the jewels in your house, will serve their real purpose, no doubt, then and then only when they will shine with this queen of jewels, this Lady. O Lord of the Daityas! There cannot be seen in all the Trilokas such a Beautiful Lady as this that I have now described before you. Therefore bring this Beautiful Lady quickly and accept Her as your wife.

31-35. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the sweet words of Chanda and Munda, S’umbha spoke gladly to Sugriva who was close by “Go, Sugriva, do my messenger’s work; you are well skilled in these things. Speak so that the Beautiful Lady of thin waist may come over to me. Those who are well versed in the science of amorous love declare that only two methods are to be adopted by the clever persons towards the female sex (1) conciliation and gentle words and (2) gifts and presents. For if the policy of division or sowing dissensions be applied, then hypocrisy is shewn and that means the improper manifestation of love sentiment; whereas if chastisement be applied then the love sentiment becomes interrupted. Therefore, the wise have condemned these as corrupt means. O Messenger! Where is that woman who does not come round excited with passion when good and sweet words are spoken to her in accordance with the S'ama and Dana methods?"

36-37. Vyasa said Sugriva, hearing the nice skilled words of S'umbha went hurriedly to the spot where existed the Mother of the Universe. He saw the Fair Lady mounted on a lion, saluted Her and spoke gently and sweetly as follows

38-49. The messenger said "O Beautiful One! S'umbha, the enemy of the Gods and the King of all, is beautiful in all respects, the ruler of the three Lokas, a great hero and conqueror of all. Hearing your beauty and loveliness, that high-souled monarch is so much attached to you and has become so very passionate that he has sent me to you to express his views. O One of delicate limbs! Please hear what that Lord of the Daityas has spoken to Thee, after duly saluting Thee, words full of love and affection towards Thee O Beloved! I have defeated all the Devas and have thus become the Lord of the three worlds; specially I partake of all the offerings made in sacrificial acts and ceremonies, without moving away from my house. I have taken away all the gems, jewels and wealth that belonged to the Devas; consequently the abode of the Gods has become now worthless, on account of all its jewels being carried sway. O Fair One! I am now enjoying all the jewels that exist in the Trilokas; so much so that all the Devas, Asuras, and human beings are passing away their times, subservient to Me. But no sooner Thy qualifications reached my ears Thou hast penetrated into my heart and has made me completely subservient to Thee; O Fair One! What am I to do now? Whatever Thou commandest, I am ready to do that; verily I am now Thy servant; so Thou oughtest to save me from the darts of passion. O One having swan-like eyes! I am verily made your captive. Specially I am extremely agitated by the arrows of Cupid; therefore dost Thou serve me when Thou wilt be made the Lord of the three worlds and thus enjoy the incomparably excellent things. O Beloved! I will remain ever Thy obedient servant up to the last moment of death. O Excellent One! I cannot ever be killed by the Devas, Asuras and human beings. O Fair faced One! Thou wilt be always prosperous and fortunate. Thou wilt be able to sport anywhere Thou likest. O Devi! Please ponder over the above words of the Lord of the Daityas in Thy heart and speak out Thy views gladly and with the same sweetness in reply; O Brisk One! I will go immediately to S'umbha and inform him about Thy mind."

50. Vyasa said O King! The Devi, ready to serve the cause of the Gods, heard the messenger's gentle words and replied smiling and sweetly.

51-66. S'ri Devi spoke I know fully well S'umbha and Nis'umbha; the King S'umbha is very powerful, the conqueror of all the Devas, and the destroyer of enemies. He is the repository of all good qualities, the enjoyer of all pleasures, very valorous, charitable and is beautiful, in fact a second Cupid. He is adorned with thirty-two auspicious signs; particularly he is a hero and cannot be killed by the Devas or human beings. O Messenger! Knowing this I have come here to have a look of that great warrior S'umbha. The jewel comes in contact with gold to increase its lustre; so I have come here from afar to see my husband. On seeing all the Devas, Gandharbhas, Raksasas and the eminent beautiful persons on the earth I have come to know that they are all terror stricken and almost unconscious and shudder at the name of S’umbha. So, on hearing about his abilities, I have now come here to see him. O Messenger!

O Fortunate One! Better now go back to the great hero S’umbha and speak to him in private the following sweet words of Mine “That you are foremost amongst the powerful; beautiful of the beautifuls, skilled in all the branches of learning, well qualified, charitable, clever, born of a high noble family, energetic, and conqueror of the Devas; especially, by the sheer force of your arms, you are so much exalted and you now enjoy all the gems and jewels. Therefore, O King! Knowing your qualifications, I have come truly of my own accord to your city with the desire of getting for Me a husband. O High-souled One! I am fit for your consort. O Lord of the Daityas! There is a slight hitch in My marriage. It is this: In my early days while I was playing with My comrades, I promised before them privately partly out of childishness and partly out of vanity for bodily strength that I will certainly marry that hero who is powerful like Me and who will defeat Me in battle, thus testing his powers and weaknesses. My comrades laughed at my words and spoke with wonder, ‘Why has this girl made such an extraordinarily difficult promise?’ Therefore, O Monarch! Better marry Me and fulfil My desires after knowing My strength and defeating Me in a battle. O Beautiful One in all respects! Better come yourself or your younger Nis’umbha and perform the marriage ceremony after defeating Me in the battlefield.”

English translation

1-12. Vyasa said O King! The messenger was thunderstruck with Devi's words and said "O Beautiful Lady! What art Thou speaking? It seems that Thou dost not think on this matter, owing to Thy feminine nature. O Devi! Thou art boasting in vain; how canst Thou expect to conquer S'umbha in a battle when he has conquered Indra and other Devas and many other Danavas? Lotus-eyed One! There is no hero in the three worlds that can conquer S'umbha in battle; Thou seemest to be a mere trifle before that King of Demons in a face-to-face fight. O Fair One! Nowhere ought to be said any words without being thought over; one must weigh one's own and other's might and then speak accordingly. The King S'umbha, the Lord of the three worlds, enchanted by Thy fascinating beauty, is desirous of Thee; therefore dost Thou fulfill his desires and become his beloved wife. Thou better now abandonest Thy illiterate nature and worhippest S'umbha or Nis'umbha; I am speaking for Thy good; so keep my words. The amorous love sentiment is the best of nine prevailing sentiments. Therefore every intelligent being ought to cherish with gladness this amorous feeling. And if Thou, O Weak girl! dost not go to S'umbha, then that Lord of the Earth will become very angry and will order his servants to take Thee perforce before him. O Fair One! Those proud Demons will carry Thee by holding Thy hair before S'umbha; there is no doubt in this. O thin bodied One! Better forego Thy boldness in every way and keep Thy self-respect. Thou art the object of respect and admiration and so should go before him. What difference is there between the fight which makes one's body liable to cuts and wounds by sharp arrows and pleasures that arise out of sexual intercourse! These are like the two opposite poles; therefore judge what is useless and what is useful and keep my good advice. Thou shalt be exceedingly happy if Thou servest S'umbha or Nis'umbha."

13-19. The Devi spoke "O Messenger! You are fortunate; you are well trained to speak out truth; I know full well that S'umbha and Nis'umbha are strong. Still out of My childish nature, the promise that I made before I cannot undo it. Therefore speak to the powerful S'umbha or Nis'umbha that none can be my husband simply from his beauty without defeating Me in battle no one can marry Me. So conquer Me soon and marry Me as you like. Though of a weaker sex, I have come here to fight; know this as certain. Therefore if you be capable, fight and do the duty of a warrior. And if you be terrified by seeing my trident or if you want your life, quit the Heavens and this earth and go down to Patala without any delay. O Messenger!

Go just now to your master and tell him sweetly these words. Then that powerful Lord of the Danavas will judge what ought to be done.

O Knower of Dharma! To speak out truth before an enemy, before one's own master is certainly the duty of a messenger in this world; therefore go quickly and tell him what are verily true."

20-21. Vyasa said O King! The messenger was quite surprised to hear the bold words, though full of reason and morals, of the Devi, puffed up by the vanity of Her strength and departed. Coming to the Lord of the Daityas, the messenger bowed down before his feet and told him sweet words, full of morals, in a very humble way after pondering over and over again what he would say.

22-29. The messenger said O King! Words, true and the same time sweet, ought to be spoken before one's master; but these are very rare in this world. On the other hand, if unpleasant words be spoken, the King gets very angry. So I am very anxious now. O King! Whether that lady is weak or strong, whence has She come, whose wife is She, I have not been able to ascertain all these. How then can I say about Her conduct? But, on seeing that harsh speaking woman, I have come to understand this much that She is exceedingly haughty and has come to fight. O King! You are very intelligent; therefore judge what ought to be done after hearing only what that lady has told me to speak to you. That Lady said "In days of childhood, while I was playing, out of my childish nature, I promised before my comrades that I would marry that valiant warrior who would defeat me thoroughly in a battle and thus curb My pride. O best of kings! You are religious; so you ought to make My word turn out false. Bring Me under your control by defeating Me in a battle." O King! Hearing these words I have returned; now do whatever you like. That Lady is determined to fight and is waiting there, firmly mounted on a lion, and with various weapons in Her hands. Now judge and do what is best.

30. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of Sugriva, the king S'umbha asked his hero brother Nis'umbha who was close by.

31-32. O Brother! You are intelligent; speak out truly what ought to be done now? The lovely woman is challenging us to fight. Shall I go to fight or you would go with forces? I will do whatever you say.

33-34. Nis'umbha said O King! It is not proper that you or I would go to the battlefield. Better send Dhumralochana to the field quickly. Let that hero go there and defeat that beautiful Lady and bring Her here. You can then marry Her.

35. Vyasa said Hearing thus his younger brother's words, S'umbha filled with anger, instantly sent Dhumralochana who was close by to battle.

36-40. S'umbha said "O Dhumralochana! Take a vast army and go at once to the battlefield and bring that stupid Lady, vainly boasting of Her strength. If any Deva, Danava or any other powerful human being take Her side, kill him instantly. Slay Her companion the Goddess Kali and bring Her too. Do all these responsible duties and return quickly. That Chaste Lady is to be protected by all means. The body of that thin Lady is very delicate; so shoot arrows at Her very carefully and see that they are not sharp. But kill those that will help Her with weapons in their hands. Try your best to protect Her, never to kill Her.

41-60. Vyasa said O King! No sooner ordered thus by the king, Dhumralochana bowed down to the king, and, accompanied by sixty thousand Danava forces, quickly went to the battlefield and saw there that the Lady was sitting in a beautiful garden. Seeing that deer-eyed Lady, Dhumralochana began to address Her with great humility and in sweet words full of reason and goodness. O Devi! O highly Fortunate One! Hear! S'umbha is very much distressed owing to Thy absence. Lest there be any break in the love sentiments, that King, a wise statesman, sent a messenger with instructions to speak Thee in sweet and suitable terms; but, O fair One! That messenger, on arriving before the King had told all the contrary words. O Knower of love sentiments! Hearing thus the messenger's words, my lord S'umbha, sick with love, has become immersed in cares and anxieties. That messenger had not been able to realise the true meaning of Thy words. O honourable Lady! The sentence uttered by Thee, "He who will conquer me in battle" is full of deep meanings; he was stupid; hence he could not realise the meaning of the word "battle" intended by Thee. O Beautiful One! "Battle" means two different things according to persons for whom it is intended; it is of two kinds One out of excitement and another out of sexual intercourse. With Thee, the sexual intercourse is intended; and with any other enemy, excitement in a real fight is meant. Out of these, the fight of sexual intercourse is full of sweetness and the fight with enemies is painful. O Beautiful One! I know Thy intentions fully. In Thy heart reigns that fight of sexual intercourse. Knowing me as expert in these affairs, the king S'umbha has sent me today to Thee with a vast army. O highly Fortunate Lady! Thou art clever and shrewd; hear my gentle words; serve S'umbha, the lord of the three worlds, the destroyer of the Deva's pride. Thou wilt be the dearest queen-consort and enjoy the best pleasures. The powerful S'umbha knows the real meaning of the fight of sexual intercourse; so he will easily conquer Thee. When Thou wilt shew various amorous gestures, he will also show his feelings. And the Kalika Devi, your companion will remain with Thee as a helping mate in your vital pleasures. The lord of the Daityas, expert in the science of love, will certainly conquer Thee engaged in amorous fight and will lay Thee stretched on a soft bedding and will make Thee tired; he will make Thy body covered with blood by striking with nails and he will bite Thy lips to pieces; then Thou wilt perspire profusely and wilt cease fighting. Thus Thy mental desire for fight - sexual intercourse - will be satisfied. O Beloved! At Thy mere sight S'umbha will be completely subject to Thee. Therefore dost Thou keep my sweet and beneficial words. Thou art an honourable Lady; and Thou wilt be highly honoured by all if Thou marryest S'umbha. Those are certainly very unfortunate who like fighting with weapons. O Beloved! The sexual intercourse is always favourite to Thee; therefore it is not worthy of Thee to fight with weapons. Therefore dost Thou make the king free of sorrows by pouring on him Thy mouth nectar and by making his heart bud forth by Thy kicking, as Bakula and Kurubaka trees blossom forth when drenched with mouth nectar and Asoka tree gets blossomed by the kicking of women.

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the description and Dhumralochana giving the news in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Vyasa said O Janamejaya! When Dhumralochana ceased speaking, the Devi Kalika made a wild laughter and began to speak sweetly thus O Stupid! Skilled in flattery, you know only how to use jugglery of words like an actor; do you think that your ends will be served if you speak only sweet words; this can never be. O Stupid! Fight now; there is no need of useless words. You are strong and have been sent by that wicked Demon with a great army. This Devi, out of wrath, will kill you, S'umbha, and Nis'umbha and other commanders by Her arrows and will then return to Her abode. Where is that stupid S'umbha? And where is this Devi, the Great Enchantress of the Universe!

Their marriage in this world is entirely out of question and can never take place. O Stupid! What do you think that a lioness becoming very passionate, would make an ordinary jackal her husband? or would a she-elephant prefer an ass? or would a heavenly Cow like a bison? Go to S'umbha and Nis'umbha and tell truly to them "Fight or go instantly to Patala."

8-10. Vyasa said O Fortunate One! The Demon Dhumralochana, hearing thus the Kalika's words, became very angry and spoke with reddened eyes "O Ugly One! I will slay Thee and this lion infatuated with pride in battle and take this Fair One to the king. O Kali! I have not been able to do this, simply it would break our amorous love sentiments. O Quarrelsome One! Otherwise I would have undoubtedly slain Thee just now with my sharpened arrows tipped with irons."

11. Hearing thus, Kalika said O Fool! Why do you boast vainly? this is not the religion of a hero with bows and arrows in their hands. Shoot your arrows with all your might; I will send you to the realm of Death.

12-31. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the Devi's words, Dhumralochana caught hold of his very strong bow and began to shoot arrows after arrows at Kalika. Indra and the other Devas came out to see the fight on their best cars in the celestial space and shouted "Victory to the Devi" and thus eulogised Her. Then a deadly fight ensued between them with arrows, axes, clubs, S'aktis, and Musalas and various other weapons. Kalika cut off at the very outset all the asses that carried the chariot by Her arrows and next broke his chariot and began to laugh repeatedly. O Bharata! Then Dhumralochana becoming angry mounted on another chariot and began to shoot deadly arrows at Kalika. Kalika Devi, too, out off those arrows into pieces before they reached Her and shot arrows after arrows on the Danava in quick succession. Thousands of his soldiers near to him were killed; the asses and the charioteer were killed and the chariot was broken. She cut off his arrows by Her swift serpent-like arrows and blew Her conchshell. The Devas seeing this became very glad. Dhumralochana, seeing himself displaced from his chariot, took up with anger his very strong Parigha weapon and came near to the chariot of the Devi. Then the Danava, terrific like death, began to abuse the Devi and said "O Ugly tawny-eyed Kali! I will kill Thee just now." Thus saying, he suddenly went near to Her and when he was about to throw his Parigha weapon on Her, the Ambika Devi burnt him to ashes simply by Her loud shout (of defiance). Seeing Dhumralochana burnt to ashes, his soldiers became panic-stricken, and fled away immediately, crying aloud "O Father! O Father!" The Devas saw this and and gladly showered from high heaps of flowers on the Devi. O King! The battle ground then assumed a dreadful appearance; at some places the slain Danavas; at others, the horses; at other places elephants and at some other places the asses lay scattered on the field. The herons, crows, vultures, the Pis'achas of the class Batabaraphas and jackals and other carnivorous animals, began to dance wildly and clamour hideously at the sight of the dead bodies, lying on the field. The Ambika Devi then quitting the field, went to a distant place and blew Her conchshell so furiously and terribly that S'umbha heard that terrific noise, while he was sitting in his own residence. At the next moment, he saw that the Danava forces had retreated, and they were coming there crying. Some of them were besmeared with blood all over the bodies; some had got their feet, some their arms, cut asunder, some were devoid of eyes, some had got their backs broken; some had their waists broken; some got their necks broken and some were going on bedsteads. Seeing them thus, S'umbha and Nis'umbha asked them "Where is Dhumralochana? Why have you all retreated? And why have you not brought that Lady? Where are the other forces? Who has blown this horrible conch-shell? O Fools! Inform me quickly and truly all these things."

32-33. The soldiers said "O King! Dhumralochana has been slain by Kalika; She has destroyed all the soldiers and has done extraordinary deeds." O King! Know the blowing of the conchshell that has caused terror in the hearts of the Danavas and has enhanced the joy of the Devas and is being resounded in the celestial space, is that done by the Ambika Devi. (Note: In the Markandeya Purana, Ambika killed Dhumra.)

34-45. O Lord! When the Devi broke the chariot of Dhumralochana by the multitude of Her arrows and killed the horses and at last slew Dhumralochana himself, when all the forces were slain by Her who appeared like a lion and when the rest of the army retreated, the Devas seeing all these were very much gladdened and showered flowers from the celestial sky. O King! We have come to a perfect conclusion that we will not get the victory; now consult with your expert ministers and do what is needful. O King! The Supreme Goddess of the Universe is waiting there alone to fight with you without any help of any other forces; this is a great wonder to us. O King! Intoxicated with Her power, that Girl, fearless, is reigning there taking Her stand on the lion. All these seem wonderful to us. O King! Consult with your councillors and out of the four policies peace, fight, retreat or remaining neutral, accept what is best. O Tormentor of the foes! True! There are no forces with the Devi, but the whole host of the Devas will take up Her cause in crisis, there is no doubt. In due time, Hari and Hara both will come and assist Her; now the guardians of the several quarters, the Lokapalas are waiting by Her side in the celestial space. O Tormentor of the Gods! Know that the Gandarbhas, Kinnaras, and human beings all will come timely and help Her. O King! We guess all these. But that Lady does not want the assistance of anyone nor does She expect that any other body would do the work for Her. You must know this certainly, that She alone can destroy this whole Universe. What to speak of the Danavas only! O Highly Fortunate One! Knowing all these, do as you like. It is the duty of the servants to speak beneficial and at the same time true words with moderation.

46-51. Vyasa said O King! S'umbha, the tormentor of others, hearing their words asked his younger brother in private "O Brother! This Kalika has slain today Dhumralochana with his forces; the few retreated and came over to me. Now the Ambika Devi, puffed up with pride is blowing Her conchshell. Brother! The ways of Time are knowable even to the wise. The grass becomes a thunderbolt and the thunderbolt becomes like a grass and powerless. Know thus the course of Destiny. O Fortunate One! Now I ask you, what are we to do now? Are we to entertain yet the desire of enjoying Ambika, or are we to fly away from here or are we to fight on? Say quickly. Though younger, in times of difficulty, I consider you as my elder."

52-54. Hearing thus the S'umbha's words, Nis'umbha said "O Sinless One! Flight or taking refuge in a fort is not reasonable. To fight with this Lady is the best course. I will take the best generals and soldiers with me and will slay that Lady and quickly return. And if Fate be strong and prove it otherwise, then, after my death, think out again and again and do what is best."

55-60. Hearing thus the younger brother's words, S'umbha said,

"You better wait; let Chanda and Munda go to the battle, surrounded with forces. To kill a hare it is not necessary to send an elephant. This is a very trifling matter; the two great warriors Chanda and Munda will be freely able to slay Her." Thus saying his younger brother, the King S'umbha addressed Chanda Munda, who were waiting before him, thus O Chanda! O Munda! Take your forces and go quickly to kill that shameless Lady, puffed up with pride. O Pair of Warriors! Kill that tawny-eyed Kalika in the battle and bring that Ambika Devi here quickly. Do this Great Service. And if that haughty Ambika be unwilling to come here, though taken as a captive, then kill that Durga, the ornament of the battle, too, by sharp arrows.

English translation

1-17. Vyasa said O King! Thus ordered, the two strong warriors Chanda and Munda hurriedly went to the battle, accompanied by a vast army. There they saw the Devi, intent on doing good to the Gods. Then they began to address Her in conciliatory words. O Lady! Dost Thou not know that the extraordinarily strong S’umbha and Nis’umhha, the Lords of the Daityas have crushed down the Devas and vanquished Indra and have become intoxicated with their victory? O Fair One! Thou art alone! Only Kalika and Thy Lion are with Thee! It is Thy foolishness that Thou art desirous to conquer S’umbha, who is endowed with all power. I think there is no adviser to Thee, man nor woman; the Devas have sent Thee here simply for Thy destruction. Think, O Delicate One! over the powers of Thine as well as those of Thy enemy. Vainly dost Thou boast of Thy having eighteen hands. Before the great warrior S’umbha, the conqueror of the Devas, many hands and many weapons will be useless; they will prove mere burdens. So dost Thou fulfil what reigns in the heart of S’umbha, the destroyer of the legs and the uprooter of the teeth of Airavata elephant. Vain is Thy boast, O Beloved!

Follow my sweet words; they will do good to Thee, O Large-eyed One! They will destroy Thy pains and give Thee bliss. Those actions that lead to pain are to be avoided by the wise; and those that bring in happiness are to be served by the Pundits, versed in the S'astras. O Sweet speaking one! Thou art clever. Look at the great strength of S'umbha with Thy eyes. He has enhanced his glory by crushing down the Devas. And if Thou thinkest the gods superior, that is false, for the wise men do not rely on the mere guess, full of doubts; they believe what they actually see. S'umbha, hard to be conquered in battles, is the great enemy of the Gods; they have been crushed down by him, and have therefore sent Thee here. O Sweet smiling One! Thou hast been deceived by their sweet words; they, prompted by their selfish ends, have sent Thee here simply to give Thee trouble. The friends that come with certain business and selfish ends are to be rejected. Friends out of religious motives are only to be sought for refuge. Verily I tell Thee that the gods are terribly selfish. Therefore dost Thou serve S'umbha, the conqueror of Indra and the lord of the three worlds; he is a hero, beautiful, lovely, cunning and thoroughly expert in the science of amorous love. Thou wilt get the prosperity of all the worlds by the mere command of S'umbha; therefore make a firm resolve and serve that splendid husband S'umbha.

18-30. Vyasa said O King! The Universal Mother, hearing the words of Chanda spoke with a voice deep as thunder. O Boor! Why do you use false deceitful words? Fly away just now. Why shall I make S'umbha my husband, disregarding Hah, Hara and the other Devas? O You, a veritable Fool! I have no necessity for My lord; I have got nothing to do with my lord. I Myself am the Lord of all the beings; and I preserve this whole Universe with all the lords and beings therein. Note this. In ancient times I saw thousands and thousands of S'umbha and Nis'umbha and I slew them all. I sent hundreds and hundreds of Daityas and Demons to the realm of Death. Before Me the hosts of Devas were destroyed in yugas after yugas. Today the Daityas again will go unto destruction. The Time has come to destroy the Daityas; why, then, are you struggling in vain with your followers for your lives? Fight now and keep the Dharma of the warriors; death is inevitable; thinking thus, the high- souled ones should keep their name, fame, and respect. What business have you to do with S'umbha and Nis'umbha? Follow the warrior's Dharma and go to Heavens, the abode of the gods. S'umbha, Nis'umbha and your other friends and followers, all will follow you and will come here no doubt. O Stupid One! I will put an end to all the Danavas today. Therefore cast aside your weakness and go on, fight. I will slay you and your brother just now; next I will kill the proud Rakta Vija, Nis'umbha and S'umbha and the other Danavas in the battle field and will then go to My desired place. Now remain here if you like or fly away quickly. You have been fed in vain because you fear to fight. What use is there now in using sweet words like a weak and distressed man. Well! Take up your arms now and fight.

31-61. Vyasa said O King! Chanda and Munda, elated with pride got excited at the Devi's words, became angry and made a violent noise with their bow strings. The Devi, too, blew Her conchshell so loudly that the ten quarters of the sky reverberated; in the meanwhile, the powerful lion became very angry and roared loudly. Hearing that sound Indra and other Devas, the Munis, Yaksas, Siddhas, and Kinnaras became all very glad. A dreadful fight than ensued between Chandika and Chanda with arrows, axes and other weapons, causing terror to the weak. Then Chandika Devi became very wrathful and cut off to pieces all the arrows shot by Chanda and then hurled arrows serpent-like on him. Then the sky over the battle ground seemed to be overcast with arrows just as the clouds get covered over with locusts, dreadful to the cultivators. In the meanwhile Munda, exceedingly terrible, came up to the field, taking with him his army and becoming impatient with anger began to shoot arrows. Seeing that multitude of arrows, Ambika got very angry; out of Her frowny look. Her eyebrows became crooked. Her face became black, and Her eyes turned red like Kadali flowers; at this time suddenly came out of Her forehead Kali. Wearing the tiger's skin, cruel, covering Her body with elephant's skin, wearing a garland of skulls, terrible, with a belly like a well dried up, mouth wide open, with a wide waist, lip hanging loosely, with axe, noose, S'iva's weapon, in Her hands. She looked very terrible like the Night of Dissolution. She began to lick frequently and forcibly dashed into the Danava army and began to destroy it. She angrily began to take the powerful Danavas by Her arms and pouring them into Her mouth crushed them with Her teeth. Taking the elephants with bells by Her own power in Her hands She put them all into Her mouth and swallowed them all with their riders and began to laugh hoarsely. Thus camels, horses and charioteers with chariots all She put into

Her mouth and began to chew them all grimly. O King! Seeing that the forces were being thus destroyed, the two great warriors Chanda and Munda began to shoot arrows after arrows without intermission and covered the Devi with them. Chanda hurled the Sudarsan-like disc, lustrous like the Sun, with great force against the Devi, and frequently shouted thundering cries. Seeing him roaring and the lustrous disc coming towards Her like another sun. She shot at him arrows sharpened on stones so that the warrior Chanda became overpowered by them and lay down senseless on the ground. The powerful Munda seeing his brother unconscious became very much distressed with grief; but he got angry and began to shoot arrows immediately on the Devi. Chandika Devi hurled the weapon named Isika and thus cut off to pieces all the dreadful arrows of Munda in a moment and shot Ardha Chandra (semi-circular) arrow at him. With this arrow the powerful Asura was deprived of his pride and made to lie down unconscious on the earth. Munda thus lying on the ground, a great uproar arose amidst the army of the Danavas; and the Devas became delighted in the sky. In the meanwhile Chanda became conscious and taking a very heavy club hurled it violently on the right hand of Kalika. Kalika rendered that blow useless and instantly tied down that Asura by Her Pasa weapon, purified by Mantras. Munda again rose up, and, seeing his brother in that fastened condition, came to the front well armoured and with an exceedingly strong weapon called S'akti. Seeing the Asura coming. She instantly fastened him down like his brother. Taking the powerful Chanda and Munda like hares and laughing wildly. Kali went to Ambika, and said "I have brought the two beasts very auspicious as offerings in this sacrificial war. Kindly accept these." Seeing the two Danavas brought, as if they were the two wolves, Ambika told her sweetly O Thou, fond of war! Thou art very wise; so dost not commit the act of envy nor dost leave them; think over the purport of my words and know that it is Thy duty to bring the Devi's work to a successful issue.

62-65. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of Ambika, Kalika spoke to Her again "In this war-sacrifice there is this axe which is like a sacrificial post; I will offer these two as victims to Thy sacrifice. Thus no act of envy will be committed (i.e., killing in a sacrifice is not considered as envy)." Thus saying, the Kalika Devi cut off their heads with great force and gladly drank their blood. Thus seeing the two Asuras killed, Ambika said gladly Thou hast done the service to the gods; so I will give Thee an excellent boon. O Kalika! As Thou hast killed Chanda and Munda, henceforth Thou wilt be renowned in this world as Chamunda.

Here ends the Twenty-sixth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the killing of Chanda and Munda in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-14. Vyasa said O King! Seeing the two Danavas killed in the battle, the remnant soldiers all fled away back to S'umbha. Some of them were cut and wounded in many places by arrows, some had their arms severed, some were bleeding; thus they entered crying into the sky. On reaching the lord of the Daityas, they began to make frequently the noise indicative of danger and exclaimed, “O King! Save us. Save us; Kalika is devouring everything today. The two great warriors Chanda and Munda, the tormentors of the Devas, were slain by Her; all the soldiers were devoured by Her; we have fled away panic-stricken. O Lord! Kalika has rendered the battlefield horrible by the dead bodies of elephants, horses, camels, warriors, and foot soldiers. A river of blood is flowing there of which the flesh of the soldiers is sufficient mud, their hairs are like aquatic plants, the broken chariot wheels are like whirlpools, the severed arms and feet are like fishes and their heads look like Tumbi fruits

(long gourds). O King! Save your line; go quickly to Patala. The Devi has become angry and will, no doubt, destroy our race. Even the lion is eating away the Danavas; and the Kalika Devi is killing innumerable Danavas by Her arrows. Therefore, O King! What intentions are you cherishing in your mind? Is it that you have desired to be merely slain with your younger brother Nis'umbha! And what good purpose will this cruel woman, destroying your race, serve, for Whose sake, you have desired to kill all your friends? O King! Victory or defeat in this world are under the Daiva. The wise never risk to meet with great difficulties for the gratification of an ordinary whim. O Lord!

Look at the wonderful deeds of that Great Creator! What more wonder can there be than this that a woman alone killed all the Danavas. O King! You have conquered by the help of your army all the Lokapalas (guardians of the quarters of the sky); but now that Lady, though alone and unsupported by anybody, is challenging you to fight.

15-24. O King! In ancient times, in the holy pilgrimage of Puskara, the sacred place of the Devas, you performed austerities when Brahma, the Grandsire of all the worlds, came to you to grant a boon. Then you asked the boon and wanted to become to be immortal. But when Brahma refused to grant it you wanted from him and were granted that you would not be killed by any male being, be he a Deva, Danava, a man, Naga, Kinnara, Yaksa, or any other person. O Lord! For that very reason we think now that this Lady has timely come to kill you. Think over it seriously and cease fighting. O King! This Devi is the great Maha-Maya, the Highest Prakriti; It is She that devours everything at the end of a Kalpa. This auspicious Devi is the Creatrix of all the worlds and the Devas. She is the embodiment of the three qualities, endowed with all the powers. She is Tamasi, i.e., is the Destructrix of the whole world. This Devi can never be conquered. Imperishable, Eternal, She is the Sandhya and the Refuge of the Devas. She is Gayatri, the Mother of the Vedas. She is All-knowing and always manifested. This Undecaying Lady is void of any Prakritic attributes, though She at times possesses attributes. She is Success Incarnate and bestows success to all; She is Bliss Herself and gives bliss to all. This Gauri bids all the Devas discard all their fears. She is S'uddha Sattva. Thus knowing, O King! Quit thy inimical feelings to Her; seek refuge unto Her; the Devi would then certainly protect you. Be obedient to Her and save your race. Then the remnant Danavas will be able to live for a very long time."

25. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus, S'umbha, the conqueror of the Devas, told them truly in words becoming of a hero.

26-42. S'umbha said "O Fools! Hold your tongue.You have fled because your desire to live is very strong. So you better go to Patala without any delay. This world is under the control of Fate; so I need not think about Victory. I am under this Fate just as Brahma and other Devas are under it. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Yama, Agni, Varuna, Surya, Chandra, and Indra are all under the sway of this Destiny. O Fools! Whatever is inevitable will certainly come to pass. What need I think over it then? The effort also comes to be of such a nature as will lead to that ordained by Fate. Thus thinking, the wise never grieve; especially the wise ones never leave their own Dharma for fear of death. The happiness, pain, longevity, birth and death of all the embodied souls are all determined by Fate when their proper time arrives. Seel When the time is over, Brahma, Visnu and Mahadeva, the lord of Parvati die away; on the expiration of their terms of lives, Indra and other Devas go to destruction. Similarly I am also completely under the sway of time; so what doubt is there that I, too, will go to destruction when I have observed my own Dharma! This Lady is challenging me to fight of Her own will; how can I fly away and live hundreds of years. I will fight today. Let the result come whatever it may. I will gladly take the victory or defeat whatever the case may be. The learned approving of the cause of effort declare Fate as fictitious; those who realise their sayings know that they are full of reason. Without exertion no end can be achieved; weak persons depend on the destiny. Foolish persons say that Fate is strong; but the wise do not say so. There is no proof whether Fate exists or not; in fact what is called Fate is invisible; how can it then be seen? Has anybody seen Fate? It is simply a scare for the illiterate; remedy only to console one's mind in times of distress. Simply proximity to a grindmill without any man's effort cannot grind a material. Therefore if exertion be made in proportion to the gravity of the work, success is sure to ensue; if exertion be made less in proportion, the work does not come to a successful issue. If time, place and one's enemies' forces be correctly taken into account and then if the proper attempts be made, success follows; thus Brihaspati has said."

43-44. Vyasa said O King! Thus making a firm resolve to send the powerful Raktabija to the battle with a vast army; S'umbha said "O Raktabija! You are a very powerful hero; therefore do you go to the battle. O Fortunate One! Fight as you are the strength of your forces."

45-46. Raktabija said "O King! You need not be a bit anxious for this work.Certainly I will either slay Her or I will bring Her under your control. Please see my skill in this warfare; that Lady, favourite of the gods, is worth nothing; I will just now conquer Her and make Her your slave."

47-50. Vyasa said O Best of Kurus! Thus saying, the powerful Raktabija mounted on his chariot and went to the battle accompanied by his forces. The battalion consisted of cavalry, infantry, chariots and elephants. Thus surrounded he departed from the city for that Devi, seated on a mountain top. Then the Devi, seeing him coming, blew Her conchshell; the Danavas were terrified at that sound and the joy of the Devas increased. Hearing that sound Raktabija came very hurriedly to Chamunda and began to speak to Her sweetly.

51-62. O Girl! Do you think me weak and thus want to terrify me with the sound of a conchshell? O Lean One! Have you taken me to be a Dhumralochana? O Sweet speaking one! My name is Raktabija; I have come here for Thy sake. If Thou desirest to fight, be prepared; I am not a bit afraid of that. O Dear! You saw those who were weak; I do not belong to that class. Therefore dost Thou fight as Thou likest and then Thou wilt be able to ascertain my strength. O Beautiful! If Thou didst serve the old persons before, if Thou hadst heard the science of politics and morals, if Thou hadst studied the political economy, joined the assemblage of the Pundits or if Thou hast been well versed in literature and Tantras, then hear this my good counsel which will serve as a medicinal diet to Thee. Out of the nine sentiments, the S'ringara (Amorous love sentiments) and S'anti (Peace) are considered as the chief by the assemblage of the Pundits. Again out of these two, the love sentiment is the king. Drenched with this sentiment, Visnu lives with Kamala; Brahma, the four-faced, lives with Savitri; Indra with S'achi and S'ankara resides with his wife Lima. The tree stands with creepers surrounding it, the deer lives with his female deer, the pigeon lives with the female pigeon; thus all the beings are very attached to this sentiment of remaining in couples. Those who cannot enjoy owing to certain disease or illness, they are deprived by Fate of such enjoyments. Those who are ignorant of this love sentiment in couples, they are deprived of it by the sweet jugglery of words of the cheat and yet attached to the Peace sentiment. When delusion, the destroyer of Buddhi, the common sense, occurs, when the violent indomitable anger, greed, and lust arise, where, then, is the place for knowledge and dispassion? Therefore, O Auspicious One! Dost Thou marry the beautiful S'umbha or the powerful Nis'umbha.

63. Vyasa said O King! When Raktabija spoke all these words, standing before the Devi Kalika, Ambika and Chamunda began to laugh.

Here ends the Twenty-seventh Chapter of the Fifth Book on the description of the war of Raktabija in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Vyasa said O King! The Devi, hearing thus, laughed and spoke the following reasonable words, in a voice deep as a rumbling cloud O Dull brained one! Already I told to that messenger before in reply to you; why then do you boast in vain? If there be any such in the three worlds who can stand equal to Me in appearance, strength, and prosperity, I will marry him. Go to S'umbha and Nis'umbha and inform them that thus I promised before; therefore let any of them conquer Me in battle and then marry Me according to the prescribed rules. You have come here to execute the order of S'umbha; so either stand up and fight or fly to Patala with your King.

6-11. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the Devi's words, the Danava was filled with anger and began to shoot dreadful arrows at once on the Lion. Ambika, then, ready-handed, seeing the multitude of arrows coming in the sky like serpents, cut them off in a moment to pieces by Her sharp arrows. The Devi, then, drawing Her bow, shot arrows sharpened on stone at the great Asura Raktabija. Then that wicked Demon, thus shot at by the arrows, fell unconscious on the chariot. When he lay thus senseless, a great uproar arose amidst his army and the soldiers began to cry aloud saying, "Alas! We all are killed." Then S'umbha, the king of the Asuras, hearing the sound of Boomba (a danger cry by hands and mouth) ordered all the Danavas to be ready for the battle.

12. Then S'umbha said:-- Let all Kambojas go to the battle with all their forces; let other powerful heroes, especially the Kalakeyas, too, who are very strong heroes, go up for the battle. (Note: Kamboja, name of a people and their country. They inhabited the Hindoo Koosh mountain which separates the Giljit valley from Baikh and probably extended up to little Tibet and Ladak. The Kalakeyas may be the Afridis.)

13-33. Vyasa said O King! Thus ordered, all the fourfold army of S'umbha, viz., cavalry, infantry, elephants and chariots went out, intoxicated for war, to the battle ground where the Devi existed. The Devi Chandika, seeing the Danava forces coming near, made at once terrible sounds frequently. The Ambika Devi also made the sound with Her bowstring and blew Her conchshell. Kali, then, shouted aloud opening Her mouth widely. The powerful Lion, the Devi's Vahana, hearing the terrible sounds, roared so loudly that the Danavas were struck with strange terror. The powerful Danavas, then, hearing that sound became impatient with anger and shot arrows after arrows on the Devi. The wonderful horrible battle, then, ensued, causing horripilation and the S'aktis of Brahma and the other Devas began to come to Chandika Devi. The DevTs, the wives of the several Devas, then went, to the battlefield in their respective forms with ornaments and Vahanas as generally on such occasions. The S'akti (wife) of Brahma named Brahmani, mounting on the back of Her Swan came there with a string of beads and Kamandalu (an wooden waterpot used by ascetics). The VaisnavT with Her yellow robes came there mounted on Garuda (the sacred bird of Visnu, the carrier of Him) with conch, discus, club, and lotus in Her hands. The Devi S'ankari, the wife of S'iva, the Auspicious One, arrived on the back of Her Bull. The emblem of half-moon was on Her forehead while in Her hands She held snake, bracelet, and trident (Trisula) and the sign of fearlessness for Her devotees. The beautiful wife of Kartika, Kaumari Devi, looking like Kartika, came to fight there mounted on a peacock. The fairfaced Indrani, decked with ornaments on Her several limbs, came there to fight, with thunder¬ bolt in Her hand, mounted on the elephant Airavata. The Varahi Devi looking like a female boar, came also, seated on an elevated seat of departed souls (Preta). The Narasimhi, resembling Nrisimha (the Man Lion Incarnation) came there. The wife of Yama, looking fearful like Yama arrived there on the battlefield smiling and with staff in Her hand and mounted on the back of a buffalo. Thus the wives of Kuvera, Varuna, and other Devas came there with proper forms, Vahanas, ornaments, accompanied by their forces and all excited. Seeing them all, the Devi Ambika became glad; the Devas, too, became peaceful and expressed their great joy; the Danavas were afraid at the sight of them. S'ankara, auspicious to all the beings, came there to the battlefield, surrounded by these goddesses and thus said to Chandika Slay quickly all these Asuras, S'umbha, Nis'umbha and all other Danavas to serve the cause of the Devas. Let all the goddesses destroy the Danava race and thus free the world from dangers; they may, then, return to their own abodes. Let the Devas get their shares of sacrifices, let the Brahmanas perform the sacrificial acts, and let all the creatures, moving or not moving, be happy. Let all calamities such as proceed from drought, excessive rain, rats, foreign invasion, locusts and birds, bats, etc., come to an end. Let the clouds bestow rains regularly and let the cultivation yield ample harvests. Note here that rats bring in plague.

34-40. Vyasa said O King! When S'ankara, the Lord of the gods and Auspicious to all, said thus, a wonderful female ensued out of the body of Chandika, very furious, horrible, with hundreds of jackals surrounding and yelling; then that S'akti, of dreadful appearance, said to the five-faced S'iva, smiling O Deva of the Devas! Go quickly to the lord of the Daityas; do the duty of a messenger for us, O Destroyer of lust! O S'ankara! Tell that haughty lustful S'umbha and Nis'umbha leave the Heavens and go to Patala. Let the Devas reign in the Heavens; Indra go to his own beautiful throne; let all the Devas go to their appropriate places in Heaven and receive their sacrificial offerings duly. And if the Demons desire to live, let them go quickly to the city of Patala where other Danavas are dwelling. Else, if they like to die, let them go quickly to the battlefield and let their flesh be eaten up by Her jackals.

41. Vyasa said O King! Hearing Her words, S'ulapani went quickly to S'umbha, the lord of the Danavas, seated in the assennbly, and said thus 42-44. O King! I am Hara, the Destroyer of the Asura Tripura; now I have come to you for your good as a messenger of Ambika Devi. Quit the Heavens and Earth and go quickly to Patala where reside the powerful Bali and Prahlada, or if you like to court Death, come to fight; I will slay you all in a moment. O King! The Great Queen Ambika Devi has sent me with these instructions for your welfare and information.

45-63. Vyasa said Q King! Thus conveying the nectarlike, beneficial words of the Devi to the chief Daityas, S'iva, the Holder of the trident, returned to his own place. The S'akti that sent S'ambhu as a messenger to the Danavas is known in three worlds as S'iva Duti. The Daityas, thus hearing the rigorous words of the Devi, put on their coats of armour and taking their bows and arrows quickly went out to fight. They came with great force to the battlefield, stretched their bows to their ears and shot piercing arrows, sharpened on stone and tipped with iron, at the Chandika Devi. The Kalika Devi, too began to strike some with the trident, some with S'akti weapon, and some with clubs and rent them asunder and devoured them all, and began to roam in the field. Brahmani began to pour water from Her Kamandalu on the powerful Danavas in the battlefield and thus destroyed them. Mahes'vari, mounting on Her Bull gave violent blows by Her trident and thus lay them dead on the ground. Vaisnavi, with the blow of Her club, took away the lives of many Daityas and striking them with Her Discus out off the heads of several others. Indrani hurled Her thunderbolt on the chief Danavas, already struck by the feet of the elephant and lay them dead on the field. Narasimhi tore the strongest Danavas with the sharp nails and.

devouring them, walked to and fro and made dreadful sounds. S'iva Duti began to laugh hoarsely and laid the Danavas flat on the field, when they were at once devoured by Kalika and Chandika. Kaumari, seated on a peacock, by drawing the bowstring to Her ears hurled arrows sharpened on stone on the enemies and killed them to serve the cause of the gods. Varuni tied down the Danavas by Her Pasa weapons in a face to face fighting; thus they lay down senseless on the ground. O King! Thus the Matrikas, the goddesses, crushed the forces. Then the other powerful soldiers fled away terrified. The "Boomba" danger cry rose then loudly; on the other hand, the Devas began to shower flowers on the Devis. Hearing the distressful agonies of the Asuras and the shouts of victory of the Devas, Raktabija, the chief of the Danavas became very angry. Seeing specially the Danavas flying away and the Devas shouting, that powerful Demon came hurriedly to the battlefield with anger. Then with eyes reddened with anger, and with various weapons came before the Devi, Raktabija mounting on a chariot, and making sounds unusual with his bowstring.

Here ends the Twenty-eighth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the description of the fighting of the goddesses in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-21. Vyasa said O King! Please hear attentively about the extraordinary boon that was given by Mahadeva, the God of gods, to the great warrior, Raktabija. Whenever a drop of blood from the body of that great warrior will drop on the surface of the earth, immediately will arise innumerable Danavas, equal in form and power to him; thus the Deva Rudra granted the Demon the wonderful boon. Thus elated with the boon, he entered into the battlefield with great force in order to kill Kalika with Ambika Devi. Seeing the Vaisnavi S'akti, lotus-eyed, seated on the bird Garuda, the Demon struck Her with a violent weapon (named S'akti). She then baffled the weapon by Her club and hurled Sudars'ana disc on the great Asura Raktabija. Thus struck by the disc, blood began to ooze out from his body as the red stream of soft red sandstone comes out of a mountain-top. Wherever on the surface of the earth drops of blood fell from his body, then and there sprang out thousands and thousands of demons like him. Indrani, the wife of Indra, became very angry and struck the terrible Raktabija with his thunderbolt. Streams of blood then began to ooze out from his body. No sooner the drops of blood fell from the Demon's body, than were instantaneously born from the blood many powerful Asuras, of similar forms, having similar weapons and hard to be conquered in battle. Brahmani then becoming enraged struck at him with the staff of Brahma with greater force. Mahes'vari rent the Danava asunder by striking him with Her trident. Nara Simhi pierced the Asura with Her nails; Varahi struck at him with Her teeth. Then the Danava becoming angry shot at them all with sharpened arrows and pierced them all. Thus when the Matrika DevTs were pierced by the club and other various weapons of that great Asura, they got very angry and pierced the Danavas in return with shots of arrows. Kaumari, too, struck at his breast with Her weapon, named S'akti. The Danavas then got angry and hurled on them multitude of arrows and began to pierce them. O King! The Chandika Devi, getting angry, cut off his weapons into pieces and shot violently at him other arrows. O King! Thus struck by severe blows, when blood began to flow in profuse quantities from his body, thousands and thousands of Danavas resembling Raktabija sprang out instantly from it. So much so, that the heavens were all covered over with Raktabijas that sprang up from the blood. They all covered all over their bodies with coats of armour, began to fight terribly with weapons in their hands. Then the Devas, seeing that the innumerable Raktavijas were striking the Devi, became very much frightened and were distressed with sorrow. They began to talk with each other with sorrowful countenances that thousands and thousands of huge bodied warriors were springing from the blood. These were all very powerful; so how could they be destroyed! In this battlefield there were now left only the Matrikas, Kalika, and Chandika. It would be certainly extremely difficult for them to conquer all these Danavas. And if at that moment, S'umbha and Nis'umbha were to join them with his army, certainly a great catastrophe would occur.

22-28. Vyasa said O King! When the Devas were thus extremely anxious, out of terror, Ambika Devi said to the lotus-eyed Kali "O Chamunda! Open out your mouth quickly, and no sooner I strike Raktabija with weapons, you would drink off the blood as fast as it runs out of his body. Instantly I will kill those Danavas sprung from the blood with sharpened arrows, clubs, swords and Musalas; and you would then be able to devour them all at your will, and, then, roam in this field as you like. O Large-eyed One! You would drink off all the jets of blood in such a way that not a drop of it escapes and falls on the ground. And then when they will all be devoured, no more Danavas would be able to spring. Thus they will surely be extirpated; otherwise they will never be destroyed. Let me begin to strike blows after blows on Raktabija and you better drink off quickly all the blood, being intent on destroying the forces. O Chamunde! Thus, the Danavas being all exterminated, we will hand over to the Indra, the lord of the Devas, his Heavens without any enemy; and, thus, we can go peacefully and happily to our own places."

29-47. Vyasa said O King! The Chamunda Devi, of furious strength, hearing thus the Devi's words began to drink the jets of blood coming out of the body of Raktabija. The Devi Ambika began to cut the Demon's body into pieces and Chamunda, of thin belly, went on devouring them. Then Raktabija, becoming angry, struck Chamunda with his club. But though She was thus hurt severely.

She drank off the blood and then devoured all the limbs thereof. O King! Thus Kalika Devi drank off the blood of all other powerful wicked Danava Raktabijas that sprang out of the blood. Ambika thus destroyed them. Thus, all the Danavas, created out of the blood were devoured; then, there was left, lastly, the real Raktabija.

Ambika Devi then cut him asunder into pieces by Her axe and thus killed him. Thus, when the dreadful Raktabija was slain in the battle, the Danavas fled away trembling with fear. Without any weapons, covered all over their bodies with blood, and void of consciousness they uttered, dumb confounded "Alas! Alas! What has happened, what has happened." Thus crying, they told their King S'umbha thus "O King of Kings! Ambika Devi has killed Raktabija and Chamunda has drunk off all their blood. The carrier (Vahana) of Devi, the powerful ferocious Lion killed other powerful warriors and Kali devoured the remaining soldiers. O Lord of the Danavas! We have fled and come to you to give the news of the battle and to describe the wonderful doings of that Chandika Devi in the battlefield. O King! In our opinion, no one will be able to conquer that Lady, be he a Daitya, Danava, Gandarbha, Asura, Yaksa, Pannaga, Charana, Raksasa, or an Uraga. O King of Kings! The other Goddesses, Indrani and others, have come to the battle, on their own carriers respectively and are fighting with various weapons. O Lord of the Danavas! The Danava forces are all slain by them with the excellent weapons in their hands. Even Raktabija has been slain in no time. That Lion, of indomitable prowess, killed the Raksasas in the battle; The Devi alone is hard to conquer; how much more would it be impossible to conquer Her, when She has been joined with other goddesses. So consult with the ministers and do what is reasonable. In our opinion it is better to make treaty with Her and quit your enmity. O King! Think over the fact that that Lady destroyed all the Danavas and at last drank off the blood of Raktabija and at last killed him. What on earth can be more wonderful than this? O King! The Devi Ambika killed all the other Daityas and Chamunda devoured their blood, flesh, and all. Considering all this, it is now better for us to serve the Devi Ambika or fly away to Patala. No more fighting is desirable. She is not an ordinary woman; She is Maha Maya, there is not the least doubt in this. Only to serve the cause of the Gods, She has manifested Herself and is now destroying the Raksasas' race."

48. Vyasa said Hearing thus, S'umbha got confounded by Kala (Death), as his end was coming nigh, and said the following words, his lips quivering with anger.

49-54. You are struck with fear; so you all take the refuge of Chandika or fly down to Patala; but I will kill Her with all my exertion and effort. I conquered all the hosts of Devas and I have enjoyed their kingdom; shall I now, out of the fear of one Lady, fly and enter into the Patala. All my attendants, Raktabija and other heroes, are now slain in the battle and is it possible that I will now fly away out of the sake of preserving my life only. See! The death of all the beings is ordained by Kala and it is unavoidable. No sooner a being is born, he is liable to the fear of death. How can a man, then, out of fear of death, quit all his name and fame? O Nis'umbha! I will now go immediately to the battle, mounting on my chariot and will return after slaying Her in battle. And if I cannot kill Her, I will not then return any more. O Best of warriors! Better stand on my side with all your forces and kill that Lady in no time, with sharp arrows.

55-58. Nis'umbha said Today I will go to the battle and slaying that Kalika, will shortly return here with Ambika. O King! Do not think at all for that Lady; see my world-conquering strength and look at that weak woman; there is a vast difference. Cast aside your this great mental anxiety and trouble. Enjoy, O Brother, excellent things. I will bring that dignified Lady with all honours before you. O King! You ought not to go to the battle when I am alive. I will presently go to the fight and bring for you that Lady as a sign of our victory.

59-60. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying, the younger brother, proud of his own strength, went hurriedly to the battlefield, mounting on his big chariot. He was protected all over his body by his coat of armour and he was well provided with various weapons and all other accoutrements of war. The bards began to sing hymns to him and various other propitious ceremonies were being performed.

English translation

1-10. Vyasa said O King! Thus making a firm resolve that there would be either victory or death, the great warrior Nis'umbha went to fight with the Devi, with great excitement and with all his forces. S'umbha, too the Lord of the Daityas, accompanied by his forces, went after Nis'umbha; S'umbha knew full well the rules of warfare; therefore he remained a witness there. Indra and the other Devas and Yaksas, all stationed themselves in the celestial space, eager to see that fight, covered with clouds. Nis'umbha came to the field, and, taking the strong bow made of horns, began to shoot arrows after arrows at the Divine Mother with the object of frightening Her. Seeing Nis'umbha with his excellent bow, shooting arrows, Chandika began to laugh frequently. With a soft slow voice She spoke to Kalika "O Kali! See their foolishness! They have come before me, courting death. They are so much deluded by My Maya, that they yet expect victory when they have already witnessed the death of Raktabija and many Danavas. Hope is so very strong that it never quits a man.

How wonderful is this that some of their armies are destroyed, some are wounded, some are rendered senseless, some made powerless, some have fled; seeing all these, yet, they have come to fight, as it were, fastened by the cord of hope of victory. O Kali! Today I will certainly slay Nis'umbha and S'umbha. Their death is nigh; deluded by the Daivi Maya, they have come to Me. Therefore, in the face of all the Devas, I will kill them today."

11-24. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying, and suddenly drawing Her bow, Chandi covered Nis'umbha, in front, all over with a multitude of arrows. Nis'umbha, too, cut off those arrows into pieces by his sharp arrows; thus the fight became more and more dreadful between them. At this time, the lion of Bhagavati, came down upon the forces, quivering his manes, like a powerful elephant going down into a lake. By his nails and teeth, he tore asunder the bodies of the Danavas that fell before him and devoured them, as if they were infatuated elephants. That lion thus crushing down the soldiers, Nis'umbha came forward hurriedly, drawing his excellent bow. Hundreds of other generals of the Danavas came up there to kill the Devi, biting their lips and with their eyes reddened with anger. In the meantime S'umbha killed Kalika and came very hurriedly there with his forces to capture the Divine Mother. Coming to the battlefield S'umbha saw that the Divine Mother was standing before him; though She was looking very beautiful, fit for love sentiment, yet She was filled also with the sentiment of fiery wrath. At that time the large eyes of Bhagavati, the Beautiful in the three worlds, though naturally red, looked more red due to wrath. When S'umbha saw Her lovely features, the desire to marry Her and the hope of victory all vanished away from his mind; and he stood there with bow in his hand, firmly holding in his mind that he would die. Seeing the Danava in that state. She smiled and began to say, so that all the Danavas could hear. O Wretched Fools! If you all want to live, quit all your weapons here, go to the Patala or to the middle of the ocean. Or be slain in the battle by My arrows and go to heavens and enjoy there without any fear all the enjoyments and sports there. Weakness and heroism, both cannot be expected at one and the same time and at the same individual; therefore I am ordering you to dispel your fears. Now go wherever you find your ease and happiness.

25-35. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of the Devi, that haughty Nis'umbha ran forward, holding in his hand the sharpened axe and shield adorned with eight Chandras (embossed) and firstly struck with sword violently on the proud lion; then, whirling with great force that sword, hurled it upon the Divine Mother. The Devi, then, thwarted off the blow of the sword by Her club and struck at his arm by Paras'u. The warrior Nis'umbha, thus struck at his arm, patiently bore that hurt and struck at Chandika by his axe. The Devi then made such a terrible noise of bells that all the Daityas were struck with terror. Then She, desiring to kill Nis'umbha, began to drink nectar frequently. O King! Thus the terrible fight went on between the Devas and Danavas both trying to defeat the other party. Then began to dance in the battlefield, the cruel voracious dogs, jackals, vultures, herons, crows and other birds, very much gladdened. The battlefield was drenched with blood and the dead carcasses of innumerable Danavas, elephants, and horses. Nis'umbha, then, seeing the Danavas dead on the field, became very angry and ran forward with his terrible club before the Devi. That proud Asura struck first at the head of the lion with that club and laughed again and again and struck the Devi with that same club. The Devi, too, got very angry seeing Nis'umbha before Her and striking at Her. She then spoke thus

36. O You Stupid! Wait till I sever your head from your body by this axe. Soon you will be sent unto death with your head severed off your body.

37-64. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying the Chandika Devi instantly cut off the head of Nis'umbha by Her axe with great caution.

The head thus severed from the body by the blow of the Devi, the headless Demon began to roam there with great force with club in his hand. The Devas then got very much frightened; The Devi, then, cut off the hands and feet of that headless Demon with sharpened arrows. That vicious wretch fell down lifeless, on the ground like a mountain. The powerful Daitya Nis'umbha being thus killed, a great uproar arose amidst his panic stricken forces. The soldiers, covered all over their bodies with blood, left all their weapons in the field, began to make Boomba sound (a piteous cry with mouth and hands as sign of danger) and fled away to the King S'umbha. He, the tormentor of the foes, then asked them coming "Where is Nis'umbha now? Why have you fled away from the field?" Thus hearing the King's words, they bowed down and said O King!

Your brother Nis'umbha is lying dead on the battlefield. O King! The Devi killed all the Danava warriors that attended your brother; only we are left and have come here to give you the information. O King! Nis'umbha has been killed by the weapons of the Devi. So we think you ought not to go to the battle. Know this as certain that the Lady, the Highest Cause of this Universe has come here to destroy the Danavas, the object being to serve the cause of the Gods. This Lady is not an ordinary woman; She is the Supreme Force; Her doings are inconceivable; what more can be said than the fact that the Devas never can know Her! This Devi can assume various forms; She is the origin of Maya; She is very clever; She is adorned with various ornaments and is holding various weapons in Her hands. Her doings are incomprehensible; She is like a Second Night of Dissolution (at the end of the world); She is Perfect, endowed with all auspicious signs, capable to go beyond the insurmountable. This wonderful Devi is serving the cause of the gods and the Devas from the sky are singing hymns to Her. O King! It is now your paramount duty to fly away and save your life; if you live, you may have the chance for gaining the victory when time will turn out favourable; there is no doubt in this. It is Time that makes a strong man weak; and it is that very Time that makes that weak man strong again and stimulates him for victory. Time makes a generous donor a beggar and it is Time that makes the same beggar again a generous donor. Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'a, Indra and other Devas are all under the sway of this Time; so Time is the Sovereign of all. Therefore, O King! Wait for this Time. Now Time is favourable to the Gods and inimical to you. Therefore Time is destroying now the Daityas. But the course of Time is not the same throughout. O King! The actions of Time are various no doubt. Time creates men and Time destroys them. The time of creation is different from the time of destruction, this is evident to you before your eyes. See! When Time was favourable to you, you subject Indra and all other Devas and made them pay taxes to you; and now Time is unfavourable to you; so an ordinary weak woman is killing the powerful Danavas; Time, therefore, is doing favourable things and also unfavourable things. The host of Devas or the woman Kali is not the cause thereof. O King! The present Time is not favourable to you and the Daityas; knowing this, do as you like. Seel Indra, Visnu, Varuna, Yama and other prominent Devas all fled before in battle, quitting the weapons. So, knowing this world as subject to the control of Time, you can now fly away and go quickly to the Patala. For if you live, you will get in future all the pleasures; and if you be killed, your enemies will all be very glad and roam everywhere fearlessly, singing propitious songs.

Here ends the Thirtieth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the killing of Nis'umbha in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O King! S'umbha, the Lord of the Daityas, hearing the words of the soldiers, began to say, then, with eyes rolling with anger.

2-15. S'umbha said "O Fools! What are you saying all this? How can I do this unspeakably mean act and then hope to live? How shall I be able to roam in this world when I have become the cause the slaying of my brothers and ministers? Time is the more powerful cause of all that takes place, good or bad; so when this formless Time is the Supreme Ruler, what use is there in my brooding over the result? Let whatever come that is inevitable, let whatever be done that is destined to take place; death or life, I do not think of either. The more so when Time is never able, even when worshipped, to thwart off death or life when their proper moment arrives. See! The God of rain gives us rain in the rainy season; but, it is seen that sometimes it does not rain in the month of S'ravan (the rainy season); whereas it rains sometimes in the month Agrahayana, Pausa, Magha, or Phalguna (not the rainy season). Therefore it is evident that Time is not the chief factor. Fate is stronger than Time; Time is merely the instrumental cause. It is this Fate that has created all this universe; it cannot be rendered otherwise. I consider Fate Supreme; Fie on this one's own exertion! For, Lo! Nis'umbha, who had before conquered all the Devas, is slain today by an ordinary woman! Alas!

When Raktabija, too, had been slain, how can I desire to hold on to my life, foregoing all my name and fame! Even Brahma, who has created all this universe, will not sooner come to an end than his longevity expires. Four thousand Yugas constitute one day of Brahma; and in that one day fourteen Indras perished; so twice the life of Brahma constitute the life of Visnu; similarly twice the life period of Visnu constitute the life period of Mahes'a; and when their longevities expire, they come to an end. This visible earth, mountains, sun and moon all will perish; so it has been specially ordained by the Destiny; therefore, O Fools! I do not care a bit for the death. When a being is born, he must die; and when anyone dies, he will be born again, there is no doubt in this. So one ought to preserve one's name and fame which is more permanent in this transitory body. Prepare my chariot; I will go today to the battlefield; let victory or defeat come what it may, as Fate has ordained. I will soon go to fight."

16-33. Thus saying, S'umbha mounted on the chariot quickly and went where the Devi Ambika was staying. Then the four-fold army, cavalry, infantry, chariots, horses and elephants and innumerable soldiers, followed him with weapons in their hands. Going there to the Himalaya mountain, he saw the Divine Mother sitting on Her Lion. She appeared so very lovely as to enchant the three worlds. Her body was decorated with various ornaments, all the auspicious gems were manifest; the Devas, Gandarbhas, Yaksas and Kinnaras in the heavens were all worshipping Her with hymns and Parijata flowers; and the Devi was making beautiful sounds with bells and conches, indicative of Her victory. Seeing Her S'umbha was very much enchanted with passionate love and struck with, the five arrows of cupid, thought thus How wonderful is Her lovely countenance! See! How wonderful and amazing is Her skilfulness! Delicacy and capability to endure the hardships of war, though quite contrary to each other, are both in Her. What a wonder is this! Her bodies are extremely delicate and limbs are lean and thin; besides She is lately blooming into womanhood; still She does not feel any passion; this is undoubtedly very wonderful! She is exquisitely beautiful that can be desired of in one's mind; and though She is endowed with all the auspicious signs, yet She has no inclinations for all the pleasures and allurements of the world and is now slaying

the powerful Asuras; this is wonderful indeed! Now what steps are to be taken so that this Lady comes under my control? All the Mantrams also are not with me now to bring over this Swan-eyed Lady unto me. This proud lovely Lady is the incarnate of all Mantrams; how will She come under my control? This heroic Lady cannot be controlled by conciliatory words, allurements, dissensions; it is not advisable, too, to fly away from the battlefield and to go to Patala. What am I to do? Where shall I go in this critical moment? And if I die at the hands of this Lady, that death is not a glorious one; it will take away my fame. The death in a battlefield is conducive to one's well being, so the sages say, when both the parties are equally strong. The Devas have created this Lady stronger than even hundred strong men; She is a woman merely in name. This Lady is very powerful and has come here to destroy the Danavas; there is no doubt in this. What effect will conciliatory words now produce on Her; She has come to slay us; Will She be appeased with good words? Neither will allurements of precious things be of any avail, for She is decked with various arms and weapons; nor will it be of any use to sow dissensions between the Devas and Her. Further all the Devas are under Her control. Therefore it is far better to die than to fly; victory or death would come unto me today as Fate has ordained.

34-46. Vyasa said O King! Thus thinking in his mind, S'umbha became ready to shew his strength; and firmly resolved to fight, he said to the Devi before him Devi! Fight. But, O One of delicate limbs! Thy so much toil is in vain. Thou hast no sense at all; for Thou art doing contrary to the doings of woman-kind. The pair of eyes of women are their arrows; the eyebrows are their bows; their gestures and postures are their weapons and their hits are those persons who are skilled in amorous love sentiments. The dyes used in painting the bodies are their armours, their mental desires are their chariots, so sweet soft words and conversations are their trumpet sounds; women have no other things for their war preparations. Therefore, O

Beloved! Any other weapons are mere mockeries and ridiculous; their modesty is their ornament; impudence can never grace them. An exquisitely beautiful woman, if engaged in a fight will look harsh; especially when Thou wilt draw Thy bow, how wilt Thou be able to hide Thy breasts? When Thou wilt run with Thy club, where will Thy gentle treadings go? O Beautiful! Thy councillors are this Kalika and the stupid Chamunda. Chandika is Thy adviser; her voice is very hoarse; how can then she be able to nurse Thee? Again this Lion, the terror of all the beings, is Thy carrier. Therefore, O Dear! Leave aside all these and come over unto me. O Beautiful One! That Thou art ringing Thy bells and dost not sound. Thy lute goes quite against Thy beauty and youth. O Sensitive One! If Thou likest to fight, better assume an ugly appearance, let Thy nature be ferocious and cruel; let Thy colour be black like a crow; lips elongated, legs long, nails ugly, teeth horrible, and let Thy eyes be ugly or yellow like those of a cat. O Devi! Assume such an ugly appearance and stand firmly for the fight. O Deer-eyed One! Speak first harsh words unto me; then I will fight with Thee; my hand does not get up to strike Thee with handsome teeth, in the battlefield. Who art like a second Rati.

47. Vyasa said O Best of the descendants of Bharata! When S'umbha said thus, the Divine Mother, seeing him passionate, smiled and said

48-50. O Stupid One! Why are you so much distressed with passion? O Fool! If your hand does not come forward to strike weapons at Me, then fight with this ugly Kalika or Chamunda; they are your best compeers in the battlefield; they will fight with you; I will stand as a mere Witness. Thus saying, the Devi Bhagavati said to Kalika, in sweet words "O Kalika! Your nature is fierce; this S'umbha likes also the fierce; so kill him."

51-69. Vyasa said O King! That Kalika, the incarnate of Death, thus ordered, took up Her club immediately and became ready to fight, as if sent there direct by the God of Death. A dreadful fight then ensued between the two; and the highsouled Munis and the Devas were present there and witnessed the great event. S'umbha first struck at Kalika, raising his club. Kalika, then, struck S'umbha in return with her club violently. Instantly she made a dreadful sound, broke down his chariot, glittering like gold, into pieces, killed the horses of the chariot and slew the charioteer. Walking, then, on foot with a very heavy club in his hand, S'umbha struck with great anger on the breast of Kalika and began to laugh. Kalika, in the meanwhile, rendering his stroke useless, soon took up Her axe and cut off his left hand, pasted with sandal and decked with arms and weapons. His left hand thus out off, his whole body was drenched with torrents of blood; yet he came up with club in his hand and struck Kalika with it. Kalika, too, laughed and with Her scimitar cut off his right arm holding the club and ornamented with armlet. S'umbha became angry and came up violently to kick Her when Kalika quickly cut off his two legs. His arms and legs thus severed from his body, the Demon frightened Kalika and told Her, "Wait, wait." And soon he came up before Her. Seeing the Demon coming, Kalika severed his neck from his body like a lotus; blood began to gush out in continuous streams. O King! The head of S'umbha, thus severed from his body, fell on the ground like a mountain. Immediately the life left the body. Seeing the Danava fall down lifeless, Indra and the other hosts of Devas began to worship the Devi Bhagavati, Chamunda, and Kalika and chanted lovely hymns to them. The winds then began to blow pleasantly; all the quarters looked very clear and Fire in sacrificial altars, being circumambulated, became very propitious. On the other hand, those Daityas that remained alive quitted their arms and weapons, bowed down to the Divine Mother, and fled away one and all to the Patala. O King! I have now described in regular order to you how the Devi protected the Devas and destroyed S'umbha and other Asuras. Those human beings on the surface of the earth that read this anecdote from the beginning to the very end or hear it constantly, get all their desires fulfilled; there is no doubt in this. O King! Verily he gets a son who has not got any son; he gets abundance of wealth who is without any wealth; the diseased become cured of their diseases; what more can be said than the fact that he who hears this glorious deed of the Devi in its entirety, gets all that he desires. O King! That man who reads daily this holy anecdote or hears it, has never to fear from his enemies; in addition be gets liberation after leaving his this body.

1-4. Janamejaya said O Best of Munis! The glory of Chandika has been fully described by you. By whom was She worshipped in the ancient times after the reading and hearing of Her three glorious deeds (the killing of Madhu Kaitava, etc.)? Who was it that derived the best effects by worshipping the Devi, the Bestower of all desires? When and with whom was She pleased and then offered boons? O Ocean of mercy! Kindly narrate fully all these things to me. O Brahmana! Describe to me also the rules how the meditation, worship and Homa of the Great Devi are conducted. Suta said "O Risis! Krisna Dvaipayana, the son of Satyavati, was very glad to hear these questions of Janamejaya and began to describe how the worship, etc., of the Maha Maya, the Devi Bhagavati are to be done."

5-21. Vyasa said O King! In days of yore in Svarochisa Manvantara there was a king, named Suratha, very liberal-minded and devoted to govern well his subjects. He was truthful, active and energetic, and devoted to his Guru; he always served the twice-born and he never used to hold any sexual intercourse except with his legal wife. He was generous, not liking to quarrel with anybody, and expert in the science of archery. While he was thus governing his kingdom, the MIechchas, the hill tribes, turned out his enemies. They destroyed the city of Kola, became very haughty and turbulent and desired to conquer the whole earth by their sheer force. Thus accompanied by the great four-fold army elephants, chariots, cavalry and infantry they came to conquer the dominion of the King Suratha. A dreadful fight then ensued between the King and the dreadful MIechchas. O King! The MIechcha forces were not at all numerous whereas the armies of the king were large; still the MIechchas were lucky to win the battle. The King, defeated, fled to his own city which was a strongly fortified place. The good King, wise in statesmanship when he saw that his ministers had gone over to the enemies' party, became very anxious and thought whether it was advisable for him to wait for a better opportunity, remaining within his own extensive city, well guarded by a strong wall and ditch or it would be better to fight on. The King thought also that it would not at all be advisable to consult with his ministers who were, then, under the control of his enemies; what then would he do under the circumstances? Those vicious ministers could at any time deliver him to the hands of his enemies; what would then happen to him! Those men, that are avaricious, can do anything in this world; therefore it would never be advisable to trust them. The people under the sway of greed commit injury to their fathers, brothers, friends, acquaintances, their Gurus and the adored Brahmanas. When the ministers had joined with his enemies, they could well be classed with the vicious; no doubt in this. Never could they be trusted under the above circumstances. Thus pondering over the matter, the King became absent-minded, and, finding no remedy, went out of the city alone, mounted on a horse. The intelligent King, helpless, entered into a dense forest and thought where would he go now? Knowing, then, that there was, at a distance of three Yojanas from that place, a hermitage of the great ascetic the Sumedha Risi, the King went there. (N.B. A Yojana is a distance measuring four Krosas or eight or nine miles.)

22-33. O King! That hermitage was more beautiful than even the Heavens; it was on the bank of a river; various kinds of trees were there; it was frequented with wild animals having no enmity with each other; the whole place was echoed with the sounds of cuckoos. The students were studying and reverberating the atmosphere with their Vedic chants; hundreds of herds of deers were running

there; rice trees had grown there wildly at places and their harvests were collected at places; good flowery trees and others with delicious fruits were seen there; at places fragrant smells of oblations of ghee, etc., were coming; all these were delighting to any man who went or stayed there. The King Suratha was very glad to see that As'rama; he became fearless and wanted to stay there in the hermitage of the Brahmin. Fastening his horse at the root of a tree, the King approached humbly to the Risi, and saw that the Muni was seated on a deer skin under the shade of dense Sal trees. He was peaceful, lean and thin by tapasya. His stature was straight; and he was teaching his disciples and explaining to them the meaning of the Veda S'astras.

He was void of anger, greed, etc., beyond all the dualities, without any jealousy, always devoted to the contemplation of his Self, truthful and full of peace. Seeing him the King was filled with tears and prostrated before him and fell like a stick before him. The Muni, seeing him thus asked him to get up and enquired about his welfare. A disciple then at the sign of the Guru, gave him a Kus'asan, to take his seat. The King got up and at his permission took his seat on that kus'asan; the the Muni worshipped the King duly by offering to him water to wash his feet, and Arghya (an offer of green grass, rice, etc). Then the Muni asked him, "Who are you? What for are you come here? Why are you so anxious? Tell frankly all these that are not yet known to me. What do you want? Speak out your mind. Even if that be impracticable, I will no doubt try my best to accomplish your desired ends."

34-36. The King said "O Muni! I am the King Suratha; defeated by my enemy, I have left my kingdom, palace, and wife and have come to your refuge. O Brahmana! I am ready to do whatever you order me; on this surface of the earth there is no one but you who can protect me. Now I am very much terrified by my enemy; therefore I have come to you. O Muni! You protect those who come to seek your refuge; I have now come here to seek your shelter; so save me from this danger."

37-38. The Maharsi said "O King! Stay here without any fear; none of your enemies would be able to enter this hermitage by my power of Tapasya, even if they be very powerful. O Best of Kings! You will not be allowed to kill any animals here; you will have to sustain yourself on this wild rice, roots and fruits, etc., as the rules of the forest living permit."

39-48. Vyasa said Thus hearing his words, the King began to live there, with all purity and without any fear, on roots and fruits. Once the King, while taking rest under the shade of a tree, while thinking of various things, thought of his own house thus "My enemies have, no doubt acquired my kingdom, but they are vicious and wicked, shameless MIechchas and always addicted to sinful deeds; certainly they are tormenting my subjects. My elephants and horses are not regularly getting their food and have all become powerless; certainly they are suffering very much from my enemies. All the servants that were nourished by me before are now all suffering from troubles, having been subjected by my enemies. The wicked enemies are certainly squandering away my hoarded wealth to bad immoral purposes, in gambling, drinking and in revelling with prostitutes. Those MIechchas and my ministers are always intent on vicious acts; they do not know who are the proper persons to be given charities; so they will no doubt exhaust away my coffers in doing sinful acts." While the King was thus meditating, seated at the root of a tree, there came one man of the Vais'ya caste looking very distressed. The King saw and instantly bade him take his seat beside him; then the King asked the Vais'ya >- "O Noble One! Of what caste are you? Whence are you coming to this forest? What is your name? What for you look so pale and distressed? What calamity has befallen to you? O Good One! Two persons become friends whenever they speak seven words amongst them; according to this rule I am your friend; tell me, therefore, truly all these things."

49. Vyasa said The Vais'ya, hearing these words from the King, took his seat and felt himself much relieved and thinking that he has met with a saint, began to speak thus

50-52. O my Friend! I belong to the Vais'ya caste; my name is Samadhi; I was rich, never I had any jealousy towards anybody; always I used to speak truth and was devoted to religious acts. My wife and sons are very greedy of money and are irreligious; so they cut off all their affections and connections with me, very difficult to cut though, and have driven me out of the house on the pretext that I am very miserly. Thus forsaken by my relatives, I have now come to this forest. You look to be a fortunate man; therefore kindly, O Dear One! give me now your introduction and oblige.

53-55. The King said I am the King Suratha; lately I had a defeat from the dacoits; moreover my ministers deceived me; consequently I am deprived of my kingdom and have now come here. O Best of Vais'yas! Fortunately you have come to me today as my friend. We two will repose here gladly in this beautiful forest covered with trees. O Intelligent One! Now quit your sorrow; be calm and quiet and rest with me, at your leisure, here happily.

56-58. The Vais'ya said O King! My friends and relatives must have been helpless, very sorrowful and they are distressed at my absence; they must have been troubled very much by diseases and misfortunes no doubt and have become very anxious. O King! I cannot remain quiet; my mind is being troubled with the thought how my wife and sons are spending their times now in pain or happiness? I am always thinking when I would see again my sons, wife, relatives, friends, acquaintances and my house? I cannot make me calm and quiet.

59-60. The King said O Intelligent One! What pleasure can you expect to see your wicked sons and treacherous relatives who have driven you out of your house? Even the enemies are far better, provided they do good to us; what sorts of friends are they who impose on us afflictions and sorrows. Do you, therefore, make your mind calm and quiet and remain here in greatest peace and happiness.

61. The Vais'ya said O King! Even those that are wicked and cruel cannot quit their relatives. Today my mind is greatly agitated with the thought of my relatives; I cannot remain quiet.

62. The King said My mind too, is incessantly troubled with the thought of my kingdom. Come; let both of us go to the Muni and ask him what is the medicine for the cure of these our mental agonies.

63-64. Vyasa said O King! Thus making their determinations, they went humbly to the Muni to ask him what were the causes of their sorrows? The King then went close to him and bowing down before him, took his seat and began to ask calmly and quietly the Muni who was sitting calm and serene.

Here ends the Thirty-second Chapter of the Fifth Book on the King Suratha's going to the forest in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-8. The king Suratha said "O Muni! This Vais'ya is now become a friend of mine in this forest; he has been expelled from his home by his sons and wife and he has come lately here in this forest. He is now suffering very much from the bereavement of his family and has become very much troubled in his mind. He is not getting any peace whatsoever. I am also become like him and have become very distressed owing to my kingdom being robbed away. This thought, though really devoid of any substantial cause, is not leaving my heart now. Oh! My elephants and horses, now under my enemies, have become weak; My servants are suffering very much owing to my absence! My enemies will, within no time squander away forcibly all my hoarded riches. This thought is not giving me any happiness; nay, I cannot get any sleep owing to this care and anxiety. O Lord! I know that this world is false as a dream; yet my mind is so deluded that I cannot make me quiet. Who am I? What are those horses and elephants to me? They are not my brothers, sons, nor friends; yet I feel very much for them and am troubled with their troubles. O Muni!

I know these all are delusions; still I am not able to make my mind free from them. This is very wonderful indeed! What is the cause of all this? O Lord! Nothing is veiled from your sight, you are fully able to solve all these doubts. Therefore, O Ocean of mercy! Kindly explain to me and this Vais'ya the cause of all this delusion."

9. Vyasa said O King! When the King Suratha asked thus, the Muni in reply said to him the following words, full of wisdom, so that his delusion and sorrow might vanish.

10-25. The Muni said "O King! I ann telling you the cause of bondage as well the cause of release of all the beings in this Universe. She is known as Maha Maya. She is the Mula Prakriti, the state of equilibrium of the three Gunas, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. Even Brahma, Visnu, MahesVara, Indra, Varuna, Vayu, and the other Devas, Gandarbhas, Nagas, Raksasas, men, deer, animals, birds, trees and various kinds of creepers all are under Maya; thus they are all bound; again they all get release when they are released by that Maya. By Her is created all this world, moving and not moving, all the beings are caught in Her net and all are under the control of Her. You are a Ksattriya; so Rajoguna preponderates in you and your heart is thus rendered impure. She, by Her Maya, deludes even the minds of those who are Jhanins or wise; you are but an ordinary man compared to them. Even Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a, though possessed of vast wisdom, still roam, under the sway of Maya, in the three worlds completely deluded by their attachments to the sensual objects. O King! In the Satya Yuga, in ancient times Visnu Narayana himself performed a very hard tapasya in SVetadvipa. He passed away full ten thousand years in meditation, with the object of attaining the unbroken everlasting Bliss and becoming steadfastly attached to Brahma Vidya. O King! Brahma, too, became engaged in performing a tapasya, meditating the Primordial Force, Adya S'akti, in a very wonderful solitary place for the cessation of delusion. Once on a time Vasudeva Hah wanted to go to another place; he got up and started to see other places. Brahma, also, left his place and started for another destination.

When they met each other in their way, each one asked the other, “Who are you?” The Prajapati answered “I am the Creator Brahma.” Hearing thus the Brahma’s words, Visnu said “O You Stupid! I am Achyuta Visnu; therefore I am the Creator of this world. You are inferior to Me as there is so much of Rajoguna in preponderance in you. Know Me as the eternal Vasudeva, preponderating in Sattva Guna. Do you not remember that I fought a dreadful battle for you and thus saved your life a short while ago, I slew the two Danavas Madhu and Kaitava when you were much distressed by them and took My refuge. How then do you boast now!

O Fool! Quit your this vain boasting now. In this wide world, there is none superior to Me.”

26-31. The Risi said Thus engaged in disputing with each other, their lips were quivering with anger and their eyes got red. When, Behold! there appeared suddenly between those two disputants, a nectar-like white phallic emblem (Lingam), wonderfully long and extensive. Then a voice, from without anybody, broke out in the Heavens and addressed Brahma and Visnu who were quarrelling thus! Whoever amongst you will be able to go to the other end of this Lingam whether beyond its top or below its bottom, he is certainly the superior of you two; let one of you therefore go down to Patala and let the other go up to the Heavens. Leave off your useless disputations and take my word as proof. It is always advisable to select an umpire to decide such a quarrel as this that has sprung up between you two.

32-39. The Risi said O King! Hearing thus the divine word, both of them became ready and began energetically to measure the length of the wonderful Lingam that stood in front of them. Visnu went down to Patala and Brahma went up to Akas’a to measure the Lingam and thus to ascertain their superiority. Going down some distance Visnu got tired and doing his best, when he could not find out the end of the Lingam, he returned and remained at the desired meeting place. On the other hand, Brahma was ascending to the skies when he got one Ketaki flower dropping from the head of the Lingam. He became over glad and returned also to the desired meeting place. Brahma became very much elated with vanity and when he returned, he at once showed that flower to Visnu and spoke thus the false words:-- “O Visnu! This Ketaki flower has been obtained from the head of the Lingam. I have brought this to you simply that you would recognise it and be convinced in your heart.” Hearing these words of Brahma, Visnu saw the Ketaki flower and said “O Brahma! Who is your witness in this nnatter? He whose words are true, who is equal to all, who is intelligent, pure, and always of good conduct, he can be the witness in such matters of dispute.”

40-44. Brahma said “Who will come now as witness from that far off place? This Ketaki flower is the witness; this will give evidence.” Thus saying, Brahma requested Ketaki to give evidence; Ketaki soon replied thus to convince Visnu. O Visnu! I was on the head of Mahadeva; Brahma has brought me from there down to this place; you ought not therefore to have any doubt on this point. My word is the evidence; Brahma has gone to the other end of the Lingam. Some devotee of S’iva put me on His head and Brahma has got me down from there. Hearing thus the words of Ketaki, Visnu was very much astonished and said this “I cannot trust your word; if Maha Deva comes and speaks this Himself, then I can trust and take it as a proof.”

45-53. The Risi said O King! The eternal Maha Deva, hearing the words of Visnu, spoke thus to Ketaki with great anger, “O Liar! Do not utter such false words; You dropped down from My head and Brahma while ascending up, picked you up on the way. Now as you have told a lie, I will never take you; you are henceforth forsaken by Me.” Brahma was then very much put to shame; he bowed down to Visnu; Maha Deva, forsook the Ketaki flower from that date. O King! Such is the power of Maya; when Brahma, Visnu and other wise persons are so self-deluded by Her, what need to speak of other ordinary mortals! See! Visnu, the Lord of Laksmi, is self-deluded and is always deceiving the Daityas for the welfare of the Devas, without any fear whatsoever of the sin that he is thereby incurring. Though He is the Lord of all yet He has to take several incarnations in several wombs, forsaking the pleasures of the Heavens and fighting with the Daityas. O King! Visnu is omniscient and He is the Lord of this world; specially He is the only One, Supreme in the creation of the Gods. Now when Maya exercises such a powerful influence on Visnu, what wonder is there that the other ordinary beings would be deluded by Her? O King! That Highest Prakriti draws away violently the hearts of the wise and drags thenn down into the ocean of world. That Omnipresent Bhagavati is ever the cause of bondage of all when She casts Her net of delusion and She is again ever the cause of liberation when She imparts Her knowledge to them.

54. The King said O Brahman! What is the nature of Her? and what is the Supreme Force? What is the Cause of this creation? And where is Her highest place? Kindly narrate all these to me.

55-66. The Risi said O King! She is beginningless; therefore She had no origin at any time; that Highest Devi is Eternal and She is always the Cause of all Causes. (How then can any other be powerful like Her). O King! She resides in all the beings as the essential vital Force; deprived of that Force, every being is reduced to a dead carcass. She is pervading as the Universal Force of Consciousness in all the beings. The form of this S'akti (Force) is the form made up of consciousness itself, the Brahma. (For the force of Fire is Fire itself; it is not seen in any other form). Her appearances and disappearances at times are simply for serving the purposes of the Gods. O King! Whenever the Devas and men worship Her, Ambika makes Her appearance visible to destroy their pains and sufferings. She assumes various forms and possesses various powers. That Highest IsVari comes down of Her free will to serve Her some purpose or other. She is not like the Devas, under the control of Daiva or Fate; She is not under the influence of Time (as both Fate and Time are created by Her). She puts always every being to action according to his capacity. Purusa is not the Doer; He is simply the Witness. This whole Universe is the object seen. That Devi is the Mother of all this that is witnessed. She is the Manifested and She is the Unmanifested and She is the Effect also. She alone is the Actress and manifests thus the world and thus gives the colouring to the Purusa. When the Purusa is coloured thus, She destroys quickly these worlds. It is said that Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a are respectively the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer of the world; but this is merely a statement; really they are merely instruments in Her hands. Bhagavati has created them in reality for Her Pastime and stationed them in their respective posts. She has bestowed to them Her part manifestations, i.e., Sarasvati to Brahma, Laksmi to Visnu, and Girija to Mahes'a and has thus rendered them more powerful. They, the lords of the Devas, always meditate and worship Her as the Creatrix, Preservrix and Destructrix of this Universe. O King! I have thus described to you, as far as my intelligence and knowledge go, the holy greatness and the excellent glory of Her (in reality, I have not been able to come to the end of it).

“Aim Hrim Klim Chamundayai bichche” is the (9) nine lettered mantra.

Here ends the Thirty-third Chapter of the Fifth Book on the description of the greatness of the Devi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. The King said O Bhagavan! Kindly narrate to me in detail now the methods how to serve and worship the Goddess and the Mantrams that are used on such occasions.

2-12. The Risi said O King! I am now describing the method how to worship the Goddess. Hear. This leads to the fulfilment of all desires, to the liberation from one’s bondage, to self-realisation and to the destruction of all miseries. The worshipper has to perform his bath; then putting on a white cloth, he will have to perform his Vaidik and Tantrik Sandhya; then he should, with his heart controlled, perform his Achamana ceremony and select a good auspicious site for his own Pooja purposes. Next he should plaster the site with cow- dung and spread his sacred carpet (Asana) whereon he is to take his seat with a cheerful mind and sip water for Achamana three times. Then he is to collect the articles for worship according to his best capacity and place them duly in their respective positions. He is to perform Pranayama (regulate his breath); and then follows the Bhuta-S’uddhi, the purification of the old and the formation of the celestial body and Jiva-S’uddhi by which the Sadhaka becomes the Devata-maya; he then proceeds to Matrika Nyasa (i.e., setting mentally in their several places in the six Chakras and then externally by physical action the letters of the alphabet which form the different parts of the body of the Devata. He then places his hand on different parts of his body, uttering distinctly at the same time the appropriate Matrika for that part).

Bhuta-S'uddhi Dissolve earth into water, water into fire, fire into air, air into ether; ether into Ahamkara, Ahamkara into Mahat and Mahat into Prakriti, the final Cause. This process is called Bhuta- S'uddhi.

He is to mention then the time, date, tithi, and month of the year and make his Sankalpa; then he will have to assign to the different parts of his body the Matrika Mantrams duly as well as his own Mantram; next he is to meditate in his own body the seat of the different Devatas and do the internal worship. He is to breathe life into the Deity outside to be worshipped as well as within himself to be meditated and worshipped; then he is to do the same with the articles for worship and purify them by sprinkling with water and Astra or Phat Mantram, thus removing all sources of obstacles that are likely to interfere with the act. Next, on an auspicious copper plate, he is to draw inside a six-angled (hexagonal) figure (two triangles crossing each other with their vertices one upward and the other below) with white sandal paste or with eight perfumed things and outside this figure, an octagonal figure of eight petals; outside this he is to draw the boundary lines that is called the Bhupura. On each of the eight petals he is to write each letter of the nine-lettered Vija (Seed) Mantram and the ninth letter in the central ovum. Next by the Mantram by which breath is infused or by the Vedic Mantram he will have to place the Yantra in the proper position and then worship the Adhara S'akti (the vital Force) in the central ovum and the holy seat with the Pitha Mantrams. He will have to invoke the Devi, uttering the Seed Mantram over a golden plate or figure and carefully worship Her by offering seats and other articles duly as enunciated in the Yamala Tantras, etc. Then he will have to perform the six-fold worship of the Ganas in the six angles and worship Indra, etc., and Vajra and others in the Bhupura (the boundary) and thus finish the Pooja of the Yantra. (For the Pooja see the Prapancha Sara.) Note:- - Bhupura is what is thought over outside front or in the beginning. Here the Gana Devatas are first thought over and worshipped. Worship outside, worship inside and See the Deity in and out, everywhere and be free is the motto of the worship. In the absence of the Yantra, one will have to make a metalled image of Bhagavati and worship Her with the greatest caution with the Mantras as expounded by S'iva in the Tantrams (of Jamala and others). Note Yantra is that which restrains. This human body is the Yantra. And its imitation is placed outside in various shapes and figures. The Yantra is the mystical diagram used by the devotees for worship. Or one may use the Vaidik Mantrams in worshipping the Deity in accordance with the prescribed rules and with his mind controlled; then, merged in meditation, one is to mutter silently (perform the Japam of) the nine-lettered Mantram. (The Mantram is Krim Daksine Kalike Svaha). Japam (muttering or repeating silently the Mantram) is of two kinds Nitya (daily) and Pauras'charanik (repetition of the name of the deity accompanied with burnt offerings). In the Nitya Japam, Nitya Homas are performed and in the occasional Pauras'charanik Japam, one tenth of this is offerred; Abhiseka, too, is one-tenth of this Homa; Tarpanam is one-tenth of Abhiseka and the feeding of the Brahmanas is one-tenth of what is done in the Tarpanam. O King! Thus completing the Japam one is to read daily the Chandi (do the Chandipatha) where the three glorious deeds of the Devi are narrated; next he will have to allow the Deity invoked to depart to Her own place. The Navaratra Vrata (nine night vow) is next to be observed according to the proper rites and ceremonies. Hrim Mahisa Mardinyai Svaha is the Mantra.

13-31. In the bright fortnight of the month of Asvin or Chaitra, is to be observed the fasting of the Navaratra by those who desire for their own welfare. Homas are to be offered, many in number, and Mantrams are to be recited, the same as in one's own Mantram, good Payasam with sugar, ghee, and honey mixed is to be offered in this ceremony. Goat meat, or holy leaves of the Bel tree, or red Karavir flowers or til (sesamum seed) mixed with honey can be used instead in the Homa ceremony. The special days for the worship of the Devi are the eighth, ninth, or fourteenth day (tithi) of the half month. The feeding of the Brahmins must be done on each occasion. O King! Thus the poor become wealthy, the diseased get cured, and the persons that have no issue get obedient and well qualified sons. The King, expelled from his kingdom, gets back by the grace of Maha Maya, dominion over the whole earth and becomes able to destroy all those enemies of his, by whom he was before vanquished, when he worships the Devi. The persons, desirous of learning, get undoubtedly the learning honourable and auspicious, provided he worships the Devi with his senses restrained. Persons of all castes. Brahmins, Ksatriyas, Vais'yas or S'udras can become masters of all pleasures and happiness provided they worship with devotion the Devi, the Preserver of the World (the Jagaddhatri). A man or woman whoever performs the Navaratra vow always full of devotion, gets all the desired fruits. Whoever celebrates the holy Navaratra ceremony in the bright fortnight of the month of AsVin with his heart full of the thought of the Devi, gets all his desired fruits. O King! Now I am describing the rites and ceremonies; here a square raised platform or altar is to be made according to the prescribed rules; a water-jar is then to be placed on it with the Vedic mantrams and due rites and ceremonies. One will have to make a beautiful Yantra according to the previously laid rules and the water-jar is to be placed on it; then spread the beautiful Yava grains all around the jar. An awning or pandal is to be erected over the altar and the place of worship, and the site is to be decorated with flowers. Lights and Dhupas, incense and perfumes are then to be used in the hall of the Chandika Devi. O King! The Devi is to be worshipped thrice; morning, midday and evening; no miserliness is to be shown in spending wealth for this purpose. Light, dhup, good presents of rice and other edibles, flowers, and fruits of various kinds are to be offered in this worship of the Devi; the chanting of the hymns of the Vedas, songs, and music with the various instruments are to be done and a grand festivity is to be made. Moreover, note this carefully that virgins are to be worshipped duly with sandal, ornaments, clothings, various edibles, sweet scented oil, and beautiful garlands. (This worship of the virgins is one of the essentials.) Thus completing the worship of the Devi, Homa is to be done duly with Mantrams and other necessary articles on the eighth

or the ninth tithi. Lastly the Brahmins are to be fed duly; then the worshipper is to take his first meal after fasting (i.e., make paranam) on the tenth day; then presents and various articles are to be offered to the Brahmin, according to one's might and with devotion.

32-44. O King! Any man, or any chaste married woman or a chaste widow whoever performs thus the Navaratra Vrata gets in this world all the desired fruits and enjoys all sorts of enjoyments and gets unbounded happiness and after death goes to the highest place.

And if, owing to some cause or other, he has to take his birth again in this world, he would be born in an excellent family and would become endowed with good conduct and qualifications and get the unflinching devotion towards the Ambika Devi. O King! I have thus described to you the rules of the Navaratra ceremony; this vow is the best of all; highest and greatest pleasures and happinesses are obtained in worshipping thus the auspicious Maha Maya. O King! Better worship Chandika duly according to the prescribed rules; then you would be able, by Her grace, to conquer all your enemies and you will regain your excellent dominion, unshaken by any, and you will get again the highest pleasure and happiness when you will be reunited with your wife and sons in your own palace; there is no doubt in this. O Vais'ya! You, too, better worship the same Maha Maya, the Goddess of the Universe, worshipping Whom leads to the fructification of all desires. You will then be able to regain all your worldly pleasures in your own home and be respected by your relatives and acquaintances and finally, after your death, you will go to the holy abode of the Devi. There is no doubt in this. Those that do not worship the Devi, go to Naraka or hell; moreover they suffer much from various diseases in this world. Those that do not worship the Devi are always defeated by their enemies, are void of wife and sons, become stupid and suffer pains from their unsatisfied desires. And those that worship the Preservrix of this world with the Bel leaves, Karavira flowers, S'atapatra and Champaka flowers, that blessed man, devoted to the Devi, gets filled with all sorts of enjoyments. O King! What more can I say than this, that those who have worshipped the Devi Bhavani with the Mantrams approved by the Nigama S'astras, those very persons get honour in this world and are filled with all sorts of power and wealth. Verily, they stand foremost in the rank of best men, becoming the only repositories of all the best qualities in this world.

Here ends the Thirty-fourth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the methods of the worship of the Devi in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-12. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Risi's words, the king Suratha and Vais'ya, who were very distressed in their minds, became very much comforted and bowed down to the Muni with great humility and modesty. Their eyes expressed their gladness and their hearts were filled with loving devotion. Both of them, then, clever in speaking and of calm and quiet temper, began to address him with their folded hands. O Bhagavan! We were passing our days in a very humble and distressed spot; we are today purified by your good words, just as the country was rendered pure by Bhagiratha when he brought down the river Ganges here. The saints, adorned with purely good qualities, are incessantly engaged in doing good to others and how the people can be made happy. O Intelligent One! Surely we have come to this auspicious As'rama owing to our past good deeds (in previous births) and all our miseries are therefore brought to their ends today. There are good many persons that roam in this world for their selfish ends; very few there exist like you who are always ready to do good to others. O Muni! True that I am very much distressed but this Vais'ya is more distressed than me. Both of us, very much afflicted by the miseries of the world, have come gladly to your As'rama and are relieved of our bodily sufferings by your sight; and now, hearing your words, we are relieved also of our mental pain and sufferings. O Brahmana! We are very much blessed and our objects have been gained by your nectar-like words; O Thou, the Ocean of mercy! You have purified us, out of your unbounded mercy. We are quite tired of this world; knowing this, do you lead us beyond this world by holding our hands and by initiating us with Mantrams. O Best of Munis! We will first of all practise a very hard Tapasya (asceticism) and worship Bhagavati, the Awarder of happiness; then, seeing Her, we will go to our respective abodes. Now we expect the nine-lettered Mantram of the Devi from your mouth and practising the Navaratra varam we will fast and meditate on the Mantram.

[Note The nine-lettered Mantram is "Om Mahisamardinyai Svaha." Instead of Om, any of the following may be used Hrim, Klim, Aim, Strim, or Hum mentioned in Sarada Tilaka, Narayani Tantra, or in VisVasara Tantra (see page 125 of Tantra Sara).]

13-30. Vyasa said O King! When the king and Vais'ya prayed thus to the Muni Sumedha, the best of the Munis, gave them the auspicious Mantram with its seed (Vija) and as well what is to be meditated (Dhyan). On getting the Mantram (with Risi, Chhanda, seed S'akti, and Devata) duly, they welcomed the Muni and with his permission went to the holy bank of a river. Both of them were of delicate frames and both of them were fully determined; they went to a very solitary place and selected their place and took their seats there. There they spent one month in repeating silently the Mantram and in chanting the three glorious deeds of Chandi. In this short period of one month, they became very much attached to the lotus- feet of Bhavani and their minds were also much pacified. They attended to no other business; only they used to go to the Muni once a day and bowing down before him they returned to their own seats of Kus'a grass and gave themselves up to the meditation of the Devi and always repeated silently their Mantrams. O King! One year thus passed away; they then abstained from taking fruits and subsisted on the leaves of trees. Thus engaged in meditation and asceticism they passed away another year sustaining themselves with dry leaves only. O King! When the two years thus passed, they got in their dreams the beautiful vision of the Goddess Bhagavati. They were very much delighted to see in their dreams the Ambika Devi in red robes and decorated with various ornaments. They practised tapasya in the third year with water as their only food. Thus when they found that, after practising the tapas for three years, they could not see face to face the Devi they became very anxious to see the Devi and thought thus “When we have not been so fortunate as to see the Devi, Who art the Bestower of peace and happiness to the human beings, we will then leave our bodies, in deep distress and sorrow!” Thus thinking, the King prepared a beautiful triangular Kunda (pit), firm and of one hand measure. Lighting a fire in that pit, the King began to cut off slices of flesh from his own body and offered them as oblations to the fire. The Vais’ya, too, then did the same. O King! Both of them were very much excited and began to offer their blood as oblation to the Devi. The Devi Bhagavati, then, seeing them thus grieved, and that their hearts were over flown with devotion towards Her, appeared direct before them and said thus

31-32. O King! You are my favourite devotees; I am pleased with your Tapasya; now ask whatever you desire; I will grant you that boon. Then She spoke to the Vais’ya >- “O Highly Fortunate One! I am pleased; ask without any delay any boon; I will grant that just now.”

33-52. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of the Devi, the king Suratha was very much delighted and said thus “O Devi! Grant me this boon that I be able today to conquer my enemies with my own power and that I may regain my kingdom.” The Devi then spoke to him thus “O King! Go to your own abode; your enemies are now enfeebled and will certainly be defeated.

(Note The Devi has now withdrawn Her own power from the enemies with which they were filled before. This is the result of the real sacrifice to the Devi.)

O Fortunate One! Your ministers will all come and prostrate themselves before your feet and will be obedient to you; you can now go back to your city and govern your subjects happily. O King! Thus reign for Ajuta years (10,000 years) over your widely extended dominion; then, when you quit your body, you will again be born from Surya, and be known widely as Savarni Manu.” Vyasa said O King! The pure-natured Vais’ya said with folded hands “O Devi! I have nothing to do with house, sons, nor wealth. O Mother! The house, wealth and sons, all these are so many sources of bondage to this world and are very transitory like dreams. Therefore give me knowledge so that my ties to this world be cut asunder. Persons who are devoid of knowledge, those fools are merged in this ocean of world. The wise never prefer this Samsara; therefore they can cross this world. Vyasa said O King! Hearing this, the Mahamaya said to the Vais’ya, that stood in front of Her thus “O Vais’ya! No doubt you will acquire knowledge.” Thus granting boons to them, the Devi then and there disappeared. After the Devi had disappeared, the King bowed down to the Muni, mounted on his horse and expressed a desire to go back to his kingdom. Just at that time all his ministers and subjects came humbly before him, bowed down to him and standing before him with folded hands, said “O King! Your enemies all had acted very sinfully; hence they were all slain in battle; you be pleased now to remain in your city, free from any enemy and govern your subjects.” The King, hearing thus, bowed down to the Muni and with his permission, started towards his kingdom, surrounded by his ministers. On regaining his own kingdom, wife, relatives and kinsmen he began to enjoy the sea-girt earth. On the other hand, the Vais’ya became illumined with the Spiritual Knowledge and all his connections and attachments being completely severed, became free from all bondages. He became liberated in his lifetime and travelled always from one place of pilgrimage to another and passed away his time in singing the glorious deeds of the Devi. O King! Thus I have described to you the most wonderful character of the Devi, what fruits were obtained by the King and the Vais’ya on their worshipping Her, how the Daityas were killed by Her and about Her auspicious appearances on this earth. Oh! Such is the glory of the Devi, leading to fearlessness amongst Her devotees. The mortal who hears constantly this excellent pure narrative of the Devi Bhagavati, gets truly all the best and wonderful pleasures of this world. No doubt anybody who hears this wonderful incident, will obtain knowledge, liberation, fame, happiness and purity. The essence of all religions lies in this narration; therefore it leads, above all, to Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksa (religion, wealth, desire and liberation). It grants all desires to human beings.

53-54. Suta said O Risis! The Maharsi Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, versed in all the departments of knowledge, asked by the King Janamejaya, narrated to him this divine Samhita. The character of Chandika, the killing of the Daitya S'umbha, were thus narrated by the merciful Muni Veda Vyasa. O Munis! I, too, have described to you the main points of this Purana. Here ends the Fifth Book.

Here ends the Thirty-fifth Chapter of the Fifth Book on the receiving of the boons by the King Suratha and the Vais'ya Samadhi in the Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

The Fifth Book Completed.

English translation

1-12. The Risis (of the Naimisa forest) addressed Suta (fondly) O highly Fortunate One! Your nectar-like words are very sweet. We are not satiated with what you have described to us as the auspicious sayings of Dvaipayana Vyasa. O Suta! We desire to ask you again to narrate to us the auspicious sayings of this Purana, beautiful, famous, and sin-destroying and authorised by the holy Vedas. VisVakarma had a son, named Vritrasura, who was very well known, and very powerful. How was it that he had been slain by the high- souled Indra? VisVakarma was a powerful Brahmin and belonged to the gods' party; his son was stronger. How was it that he had been killed by Indra! The Devas are born of the Sattva qualities; men are born from the Rajasic qualities; and all the birds, etc., are born of the Tamasic qualities. This is the opinion of the Pundits, versed in the Puranas and Agamas. But in this act of slaying Vritrasura, a great contradiction arises; for the powerful Vritra was killed merely under a pretext by Indra, the performer of the hundred sacrifices, and endowed with Sattva qualities. And Indra was prompted to do so by Visnu, the head of those who possess Sattva qualities; while Visnu himself entered in disguise into the thunderbolt so that he could kill Vritra. The powerful Vritra entered into a treaty and kept himself peaceful when Indra and Visnu violated truth and treacherously killed him by Jalaphena (the watery foams). O Suta! The great wonder is this That Indra and Visnu turned out so bold as to forsake the truth. This, then, is therefore very clear that the high souled persons become deluded and act sinfully. The Heads of the Devas act very wrongly; they are reckoned as polite simply because they observe the mere outward forms of good conduct as approved by the S'astras. How can the mere observance of outward forms constitute politeness? Had Indra, who killed in disguise Vritra relying on his words, to suffer any punishment for the sin that he incurred in killing a Brahmana? It was told by you before that Vritra had been slain by the Devi Bhagavati; but the general belief is that Indra killed him.

Our minds are puzzled on this point. (So clear our doubts on this point.)

13-14. Suta said O Munis! Hear the incident of the killing of Vritrasura and the punishment that Indra had to suffer due to his sin of Brahmahatya (killing a Brahmin). This question was asked by the King Pariksit and replied by Vyasa, the son of Satyavati. I will tell you what Vyasa had told before.

15-18. Janamejaya asked O Best of Munis! How was it that in former days Indra, endowed with the Sattva qualities, killed Vritrasura, with the aid of Visnu? And how and why was it that he was killed again by the Goddess Bhagavati? O Lord of Munis! How could one body be killed by the two; our curiosity has been excited to hear the truth. What man is there that does not like to hear any more of the glorious deeds of the high-souled persons! Kindly narrate to us the slaying of Vritra by the Devi Bhagavati.

19-26. Vyasa said O King! You are blessed, since your taste to hear the events of Purana has grown so much; the Devas even get their thirst for drinking nectar; but when quenched, they do not like to drink any more. O King! Your name and fame are widely spread.

Your Bhakti (devotion) to the Puranas is growing more and more daily. A speaker gets very much delighted when his audience hears him with undivided attention. O Lord of the earth! The fight between Vritra and Vasava that occurred in days of yore is famous in the passages of the Vedas and the Puranas; as well as the suffering that Indra had to encounter as his punishment when he had killed the innocent son of Visvakarma. O King! The Munis, who fear sin very much, commit yet blameable acts under Maya; then what wonder is there that Visnu, and Indra would kill Tris'ira and Vritra merely under a plea. When Visnu, the incarnate of Sattva qualities, gets deluded by Maya and kills deceitfully the Daityas always, then how can you expect any other man to conquer mentally even the Maha Maya Bhavani, Who deludes all the beings! O King! It is under the compulsion of this Maya that the Bhagavan, the Infinite, the friend of Nara, Narayana, takes incarnations in thousands and thousands of Yugas in this Samsara as Fish, etc., and does deeds sometimes lawful and sometimes unlawful. The Devas and men, being confounded by his Maya, become upset and disordered and say "that this body, wealth, house, sons, wife and relatives are all mine" and being thus deluded sometimes do virtuous and sometimes sinful deeds. O King! There is not even one, on the surface of this earth, though he may be well versed in finding out cause and effect, the knowledge of the high and low, that can be free from this Great Delusion; he is from the very beginning tied up by the three Gunas of this Maya and that remains under Her control.

27-35. This explains that Visnu and Indra both were deluded by Maya and engaged in fulfilling their own selfish ends. They killed Vritras'ura under a pretext. O King! Hear! I am now describing to you the cause of enmity between Indra and Vritra. Vis'vakarma, the Prajapati, was great architect of the Gods, he was skilled, he was superior amongst the gods, a great ascetic and endeared by the Brahmins. He had enmity with Indra; and out of this enmity he created a son, very beautiful named him Tris'iraska Visvarupa. That son had three faces very beautiful and lovely. Visvarupa performed three different functions with his three different faces; with one, he used to study the Vedas, with the second he used to drink nectar (wine), and with the third he used to see simultaneously all the directions. Tris'ira renounced the pleasures of the world and began to practise a hard tapasya; he became a great ascetic, gentle, restrained in his passions and entirely devoted to his religion. He practised Panchagni-Sadhan in the summer season, tying his feet upwards on the branch of a tree with his head downwards; he remained in dew in the cold season, under water in the winter season. Thus he abstained from food and conquered his self and, forsaking all the worldly connections, practised a very hard tapasya; very difficult, indeed, for those who are of dull intellects.

36-49. Indra became very sad and dispirited to see him practise such a Tapasya and thought of the means so that he might not acquire his Indraship. The Pakasas'ana Indra remained always very anxious see the energetic penance practised by that ascetic of unbounded glory and his steady attachment towards it. He thought thus "This Tris'ira is becoming stronger day by day by his penance, so he will kill me. The wise never look an enemy with indifference whose strength daily becomes greater and greater." It is now my urgent duty to invent means how to baffle his Tapasya and he at last settled that lust is the great enemy of asceticism; the practice of devout austerities is destroyed complete by lust; so I must try this very day how the Muni becomes attached to worldly lust and enjoyments. The intelligent Indra, thinking thus, called the Apsaras Urvas'i, Menaka, Rambha, Ghritachi, and Tilottama and others proud of their beauties so that they might seduce Tri'sira, the son of Vi'svakarma. O Apsaras! I have now got a very grave task to fulfil; all of you help me in this respect. A great enemy of mine, difficult to conquer, is practising penance with his self-controlled. Start at once and with your dress suited to various amorous gestures and try hard to seduce him. Be all well with you; seduce him and remove the fever of my heart. O Apsaras! What more shall I say, I am restless since I have heard of his strength performing such hard austerities.

O Weak Ones! That powerful ascetic may acquire my place and thus dispossess me; this fear has possessed me. Therefore destroy my fear as quickly as possible. This is the task now given to you; get united and do this good to me. The Apsaras, hearing him, bowed down and said "O Lord of the Devas! Do not be afraid! We will try our best to seduce him. O highly Lustrous One! For the enticing away of the Muni, we will do all the things, dancing, music and other amorous gestures and practices, that will discard your fear. O King of the Gods! We will unsettle the mind of the Muni by our side glances and passionate gestures and postures, delude and tie him and then bring him under our control."

50-60. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying, the Apsaras went to Tris'ira and began to exhibit various amorous gestures and postures as stated in the Kama Sastra. They began to sing sometimes, sometimes to dance in tune with musical measures before the Muni. In short, they practised various amorous gestures to entice him away. But that ascetic, blazing with the fire of Tapas, did not notice even the Apsaras' various attempts; rather he kept all his senses under the control and remained like a deaf, dumb, and blind man. In that lovely hermitage of the Muni, the Apsaras sang and danced ravishingly and remained a few days there. But when they saw that the Muni Tris'ira did not swerve a bit from his meditative posture they returned tired, distressed to Indra and all, very fearful, began to address Indra with folded hands “O King! We tried our best and we could not in any way make the Muni unsteady, very hard to surmount. O Pakas'asana! Please invent other means; we could not make the self-controlled Muni move away an inch from his position; it is our good luck that that high-souled Muni, an incarnate of blazing fire have not cursed us!” Then dismissing the Apsaras, the evil- minded and dull Indra began to devise means, though totally unlawful, how to kill that good Muni. O King! That Indra abandoned all shame, and fear of sin and ultimately came to a highly blameable and sinful conclusion how to kill him.

Here ends the First Chapter of the Sixth Book on Tris'ira's austerities in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Vyasa said The extremely covetous Indra, then, mounted on his Airavata elephant and determined to kill the Muni. He went to him and saw him immersed in deep Samadhi, firmly seated in his posture and with his speech controlled. At that time, a halo of light emanated from his body and he looked like a second Sun and a blazing fire. Indra became very sad and dejected when he saw that. Indra then thought within himself thus “Oh! Can I slay this Muni, free from any vicious inclinations, and endowed with the power of Tapas, blazing like a fire! This is quite against the Dharma. But, Alas! He wants to usurp my position; how can I, then, neglect such an enemy?” Thus cogitating, Indra hurled at the Muni his swift going, infallible thunderbolt, the Muni remaining engaged in his penance and shining like the Sun and Moon. The ascetic, struck thus, fell on the ground and died, like a mountain peak struck by thunder falling on the ground and presenting a wondrous sight. Indra became very glad when he killed the Muni; but the other Munis then cried aloud “Oh! We are killed! Alas! What a crime has Indra committed today! Oh! The vicious Indra has killed today this jewel amongst the Munis without any offence! Let, then, this sinner reap the fruits of his sinful act without any delay.” Indra, then, went back soon to his own abode; on the other hand, the high-souled Muni, though killed, looked as it were, living by the lustre of his own body. Indra, then, seeing him lying like a living man thought that the Muni might get alive and so became very sad. While he was thus arguing in his mind, he saw before him a wood cutter named Taksa and began to speak to him for his own selfish ends thus “O Artisan! Cut all the heads of this Muni and keep my word; this highly lustrous Muni is looking as it were alive; therefore, if you sever his heads, he cannot be alive.” Taksa then cursed him and spoke thus.

12-14. “O King of the Devas! The neck of this Muni is very big and therefore cannot be severed; my axe is not at all fit for this work. Specially I cannot do such a blameable act. You have done a very heinous crime, quite against the law of the good persons; I fear sin; I will not be able to cut the heads of a dead man. This Muni is lying dead; what use is there in severing his head again? O Pakas'asana! The killer of the demon Paka! Why do you fear in this?”

15. Indra said “O Artisan! This Muni is my dire enemy. Life seems to be still lingering in his body; his body is still lustrous, I fear if the Muni be alive again!”

16. Taksa told “Do you not feel shame in doing this heinous crime, when you know everything? Do you not fear God for the crime of killing a Brahmin?”

17. Indra said I will make Prayas'chitta (penance) afterwards for the washing away of my sins; but my duty at present is to kill my enemy.

O Fortunate One! The wise men, clever in polity, say that enemies must be killed by any excuse whatsoever.

18. Taksa then replied “O Maghavan! You are doing this sinful deed out of your avarice; but, O Lord! I have no cause whatsoever; how then without any cause, can I engage myself in such a vicious act?”

19-20. Indra said “O Taksan! I will allot a share to you wherever there will be a sacrifice. The human beings will invariably offer to you the head of the animal killed at any sacrifice. Now cut his head according to this rule.”

21-42. Vyasa said O King! That Taksa became very glad when he heard thus from Indra and struck off the heads of the Muni with his very strong axe. O powerful King! When the three heads, thus severed, fell to the ground, thousands and thousands of birds came out of those heads in quick succession. The three groups of birds Kalavinkas, Tittiris and Kapinjalas came out very rapidly from the three heads in due succession. The Kapinjala birds came out of that mouth that used to chant the Vedas and used to drink Soma; the Tittiri birds came out of that mouth that used to see all the quarters as if it drank them; and the Kalavinka birds came out of that face that used to drink wine. Indra became very glad to see the birds thus coming out of his mouths and went back at once to his Heavens. O King! No sooner Indra went back, than Taksa came back to his own house and felt himself very pleased to receive his share of sacrificial things. On returning to his home, Indra thought that he had done his duty in slaying his powerful enemy. It did not pass in his mind that he had committed the Brahmahattya sin (i. e., that he had killed a Brahmin). When VisVakarma heard that his virtuous son had been killed, he became very angry (in his mind) and said that as Indra had killed his qualified son engaged in asceticism without any offence, he would create another son to kill Indra. Let the Devas see his strength and power of Tapasya and let Indra, too, reap the far-reaching effects of his own Karma. Thus saying, VisVakarma distressed with anger, offered oblations in the sacrificial Fire, reciting Mantram from the Atharvan Vedas, with the object of producing a son. When Homa was performed for eight nights consecutively, a man quickly came out of that burning fire, as if he was the Incarnate of Fire itself.

Seeing the lustrous son before him, come out of the fire and endowed with power and energy, VisVakarma said “O Indra's enemy! Grow by my power of asceticism.” When VisVakarma spoke these words, burning with anger, that brilliant fiery son began to grow, towering high above the Heavens. Within a moment that man looked a second God of Death and appeared like a mountain and shone like the God Himself. Then he spoke to his own father VisVakarma, who was very distressed “O Father! Put my name.

Pray, what use can I be to you? Why do you look so aggrieved and anxious; please explain to me all the causes. I make a firm vow today that will remove the cause of your sorrow. Father! Of what avail is that to his father when he is not able to remove his sorrows!” O Father! Shall I drink the ocean or crumble the mountains to dust or shall I obstruct the passage of the rising Sun or shall I kill Indra, Yama, or the other host of Devas or shall I root out the earth and throw it with all beings into the ocean?”

43-53. O King! Hearing thus the sweet words of his son, VisVakarma gladly told his mountain-like son “O my Son! You are capable to save me from troubles (Vrijina) hence you are named Vritra. O highly Fortunate One! Your brother, named Tris'ira, was a great ascetic; his three faces were all very strong. He was thoroughly conversant with the Vedas and the Vedangas and well versed in all the other knowledges. He remained always engaged in practising asceticism, surprising to the three worlds. Indra killed my qualified son with his thunderbolt; that wicked soul severed the three heads without any offence. Therefore, O Best of beings! Kill that vicious, shameless, deceitful, wicked Indra guilty of the sin of Brahmahattya.” O King! Thus saying, VisVakarma very much confounded with the breavement of his son, created various divine weapons. He prepared weapons specially suited to kill Indra, the best axes, tridents, clubs, S'aktis, Tomaras and bows made of horns and arrows, Parighas, Pattis'as, divine discus like the Sudars'an Chakra, divine inexhaustible arrow cases with arrows, nice Kavacha, very substantial air-like swift-going chariot looking like a cloud and capable to carry great loads; all these he created and gave over to his son. O King! VisVakarma, the best of architects, excited by anger, made ready all the equipments necessary for war and gave them to his son Vritrasura and sent him to kill Indra.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Having the Svastyayana ceremony (a performance of rite to secure welfare or avert calamity) performed by the Brahmanas versed in the Vedas, the powerful Vritra mounted on his chariot and started to kill Indra, the King of the Gods. The Danavas that were previously defeated by the Devas now knowing Vritrasura to be powerful, came up to him to serve his cause. The messengers of Indra, when they saw him ready for battle, hurriedly came to Indra and informed him all about his doings and other matters connected with it.

4-7. The messengers said O Lord! VisVakarma, having been very much grieved his son being slain, got very angry and by Abhichara process (an incantation with a design to injure or magic spells or charms used for a malevolent purpose) has created a son in order to kill you. That indomitable Vritrasura is now your powerful enemy; mounting on his chariot he is coming here to fight with you, surrounded by other Asuras. O highly Fortunate One! This enemy of yours is as high as the mountain Meru; he is now coming hurriedly to you, making a terrible noise; guard yourself carefully. O King! While Indra was hearing the messengers, the Devas came there panic- stricken and terrified and said:--

8-16. The Ganas said O Lord of the Suras! Ominous signs are being seen in the houses of the Gods; the birds are making sounds, very inauspicious and foreboding a great calamity. Crows, vultures, herons, falcons, and other ugly inauspicious birds are crying and making hoarse sounds on the tops of houses. Other birds are making incessantly harsh sounds like chichi koochy. The carriers of the several Devas are weeping and shedding tears always. O highly Fortunate One! On the tops of houses are heard very loud and very dreadful sounds of the crying Raksasis at dead of night. O Giver of honour! The flags on the chariots are falling to the ground without any trace of wind. Thus ominous signs are being visible on earth and in the air. O King of the Devas! The ugly faced women, wearing black clothes, are roaming from house to house and always repeating “Leave the house, and go away at once.” The Deva women while sleeping in their own temples are seeing in their dreams that terrible Raksasis, coming to them are cutting away their hairs on their heads and are frightening them. O Indra of the Devas! The inauspicious signs like these and earthquakes and the falling of the meteors are taking place. The jackals come in the courtyard of houses at night and yell horrible heartrending sounds. Lizards are moving always in the rooms and the several limbs of our bodies are shaking and thus making very inauspicious signs.

17. Vyasa said O King! Hearing their words, Indra became very anxious and called Brihaspati, the Deva Guru, and asked him

18-20. Indra spoke O Brahmana! Very inauspicious signs are being visible; dreadful winds are blowing and stars are falling from the skies what are all these? O Intelligent One! You are very wise and versed in the S'astras and the Guru of the Devas; you are omniscient and know very well how to remedy the evils. Therefore perform the rites by which enemies can be killed; do such as our miseries be all averted.

21-31. Brihaspati said “O Thousand-eyed! What shall I do? You have committed shortly a heinous crime; you killed that innocent Muni and so you have earned a very bad Karmic effect. Very violent sins and good deeds produce their effects very quickly. It is.

therefore, highly incumbent on those that desire for their own welfare, to take up any work with great discretion. It is never advisible to do any action that leads to the tormenting of others. Never do they find happiness who give pains to others. O Indra! You have committed Brahmahattya under the influence of greed and delusion; now suddenly has appeared the fruit of that act. O King of the Suras! This Vritra Asura is born invulnerable to all the Devas. That powerful indomitable Asura chief is now coming, mounted on a chariot, to kill you, surrounded by the other Danavas and taking with him the VisVakarma-made divine arms and weapons equal to thunderbolt. He is coming like a second Kala, as it were, to destroy the whole Universe. There is none in this Triloka, capable kill him; and his death will not also take place. While Brihaspati was thus speaking, a great tumultuous uproar rose at once. The Gandharbas, Kinnaras, Yaksas, Munis and other Immortals began to fly away from their quarters. Indra seeing the Devas flying away became very anxious and gave orders at once that all subservient to him must be ready at once for battle; they must go and call the Vasus, the Rudras, the twin AsVins, the Adityas, Pusa, Bhaga, Vayu, Kuvera, Varuna, Yama and the other Devas to come there at once. The enemy is well nigh; so let all the Devas come on their Vimanas quickly there.”

32-44. Thus ordering, Indra mounted on the Airavata elephant and taking the Sura Guru in front started from his own temple. The other Devas mounted on their respective carriers and, firmly resolved to fight, started with all their arms and weapons. On the other hand, Vritrasura surrounded by the Demons, came up to the beautiful mountain, adorned with trees, on the north side of the Manasarovara Lake. Indra, too, came there with Brihaspati in front and attended by all the other Devas to that mountain, north of the Manasa Lake and began to fight. A dreadful fight, then, ensued between Vritra and Indra with clubs, swords, Parighas, Pas'as, arrows, S'aktis, Parsus and other weapons. The terrible fight lasted for full one hundred human years, terrifying to the self-controlled Risis and all the human beings. Varuna first turned his back; then Vayu, then Yama, the Sun and Moon and then Indra fled from the battle-field. Seeing Indra and the other Devas flying away, Vritrasura came to the hermitage and there bowed down to his father who looked very glad; and he said O Father! I have carried out your orders; Indra and all the other Devas are defeated in the battle; as elephants and deer fly away seeing a lion, so the Devas all fled away to their respective abodes. I have taken the Airavata, the best of elephants, away from Indra who fled away on foot. O Bhagavan! I have brought the elephant here. Kindly accept it. O Father! It is not advisable to kill a man who is terrified, therefore I did not kill them. Now kindly order anything else that I may fulfil your desires. All the Devas fled away from the battle¬ field, very much tired and terrified; and what more to say than this that Indra, too, fled, leaving his elephant on the field.

45-54. Vyasa said O King! VisVakarma became very glad to hear his son's words and said “Today I can rightly say that I have got my son and that my life is successful. O son! To-day you have sanctified me; my cares and worries are abated; my mind is also calm to see your wonderful prowess. O Child! Now hear attentively what I say. O highly intelligent One! Now carefully sit in your steady posture (Sthirasan) and practise Tapasya. Never trust anybody;

Indra is now your enemy, ever ready to find your faults, and clever in sowing dissensions between you and your well-wishers. O Son! Tapasya is not an ordinary thing; Laksmi (prosperity) is obtained thereby; excellent kingdoms, increase of vigour, and victories in battles are obtained. Therefore worship Hiranyagarbha and get excellent boons from him; then kill this vicious Indra, guilty of the sin Brahmahattya. Worship the auspicious Creator calmly and carefully. The four-faced Brahma then will be pleased and grant you your desired boon. First please the Creator of indomitable prowess, from Whose womb has sprung all this Universe, and get, then, immortality from Him. Then kill that guilty Indra, my enemy. O Son! My feeling of enmity due to the killing of my son reigns always in my mind; I cannot go to sleep peacefully nor do I get peace in any way. The vicious Indra killed my son; O Vritra! What more shall I say to you; I am merged in the ocean of sorrows; save me.”

55-60. Vyasa said O King! Thus hearing his father's words, Vritrasura became inflamed with anger and, getting his permission, set out gladly to practise Tapasya. He then went to the Gandhamadan mountain and performed his bath in the holy and auspicious river Manda Kini, and, preparing a Sthirasan, took his seat in the Kus'a grass, to practise the tapasya. He left off gradually taking his food, then subsisted on water only and remained engaged in Yoga; and, seated in Sthirasan meditated incessantly on Prajapati, the Creator of this Universe. Indra, on the other hand, knowing Vritrasura engaged in tapasya became very anxious and sent to him Gandharvas, Yaksas, Pannagas, Kinnaras, Vidyadharas, Apsaras and other Deva messengers, all of unbounded vigour to create obstacles in his austerities. These Gandharvas and other Deva Yonies, expert in exercising magical spells, tried many ways and means and various gestures and postures to create disturbances in his penance; but that great ascetic Vritra, the son of Vis'vakarma did not swerve a bit from his meditative state.

Here ends the Third Chapter of the Sixth Book on the defeat of the Deva army and on Vritra's tapasya in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-17. Vyasa said O King! The Suras that wanted to create hindrance in Vritra's tapasya, seeing him firmly resolved, became disappointed in the fulfilment of their objects and returned to their own abodes. Thus full one hundred years passed away. The four¬ faced Brahma, the Grandsire of the Lokas, came there mounted on his carrier the Swan, and said “O Vritra! Be happy; now quit your meditation and ask boon; I will grant you the boon that you choose.

O Child! Your body has become very lean and thin through your penance. I am now very pleased to see your this very hard tapasya. Welfare be to you. Now ask the boon that you desire.” Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the clearly distinct nectar-like sweet words of the Creator Brahma, Vritra shed tears of joy and suddenly stood up. And going to him, bowed down gladly before His feet, and, with folded hands, spoke to Him, Who is desirous to grant him boons, in a tremulous voice. O Lord! Today I have been fortunate to see Thee who art generally seen with great difficulty; and I have acquired thus the posts of all the Devas; O Lotus-seated One! I have got an insatiable desire burning within me. Thou art omniscient. Thou knowest everything; still I am speaking out my mind. O Lord! Grant that my death does not occur with iron, wood, dry or wet substances or with bamboos or any other weapons and let my strength and valour be increased very much in the battle; for, then, I will be unconquerable by all the Devas with all their armies. Vyasa said O King! Thus prayed for, Brahma said to him smiling “O Child! get up; I grant that your desired boon will always be fulfilled; now go to your own place. Your death won't occur with dry or wet substances or with stones or wood. I say this truly unto you.” Thus granting the boon, Brahma went to His Brahmaloka. Vritra, too, became very glad on receiving his desired object, and returned to his own abode. The highly intelligent Vritra informed the father about the boon granted to him; Vis'vakarma became very glad to hear it. O highly fortunate

One! Let all bliss and good fortune come unto you; kill Indra, my greatest enemy. Go and kill the murderer of my son Tris'ira, the vicious Indra and return to me. Be victorious in the battle and become the Lord of all the Devas and remove my mental agony due to the killing of my son. A son becomes then really a son when he obeys the commands of his father and when he feeds plentifully good many people on the Sraddha day (after his father's death) and when he offers Pinda at Gaya. Therefore, O Son! Keep my words and try to remove my sorrows. Know this as certain that Tris'ira never vanishes from my mind. Tris'ira was very truthful, amiable and good-natured; he was an ascetic and foremost amongst the Vedic scholars. The wicked Indra killed my dear son without any offence.

18-33. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the father's words, that extremely indomitable Vritrasura mounted on his chariot and quickly got out of his father's house. The proud Asura, then, marched to the battle, accompanied with his vast army, to the sounding of the conch-shells and war drums. Vritra, versed in politics and morals, exhorted his soldiers before marching and said “To-day we will kill Indra and possess the kingdom of the Immortals, freed of all enemies.” O King! Thus, accompanied by his soldiers, and raising a tremendous war-cry terrifying to the Devas, the Asura set out for battle. O Bharata! The King of the Devas, knowing that the Asura is quite at hand, became overwhelmed with terror and ordered at once the soldiers to be ready for the battle and called quickly all the Lokapalas and sent them all for the battle. The highly lustrous Indra, the tormentor of the foes, arrayed his troops in order according to Gridhra Vyuha (the method in which the vultures arrange themselves while flying) and stayed there. On the other hand Vritra, the slayer of enemies, dashed unto that place with all swiftness. A dreadful fight then ensued between the Devas and Danavas; the two parties, desirous to get victory over the other, fought awfully hard. When the blaze of the battle fire shone to a very high pitch, the Devas dropped with sorrow while the Asuras became excited with joy. The Devas and Danavas struck each other with Tomaras, Bhindipalas, axes, Paras'us, Pattis'as, and various other weapons. When the dreadful battle rose to a high pitch causing horripilation, Vritra became very angry and suddenly caught hold of Indra and denuding him of all clothes and armours swallowed him; he, then, remembering his former enmity, became very glad and stayed there. When Indra was thus devoured by Vritra, the Devas were overwhelmed with terror and cried out frequently, with great distress "O Indra! O Indra!" All the Devas became very dejected and grieved in their hearts to see Indra denuded of his armour and clothes in the belly of Vritra and bowed down to Brihaspati and said "O Indra of the Brahmans! You are our best Guru what are we to do now? Though the gods tried their best to save Indra still Vritra has devoured him. We are all powerless, what can we do without Indra? O Lord! Perform quickly magic spells (Abhichara process) which will lead to our Indra's liberation."

34. Brihaspati said "O Suras! The king of the gods is swallowed by Vritra, he has been quite disabled; but Indra is living in his bowels; attempt therefore must be made that he comes out while living."

35-54. Vyasa said O King! The Devas became very anxious to see Indra in that plight and took all the ways and means carefully how he might be freed. Then they created a state tending to cause yawning, very powerful and irresistible and calculated to destroy one's enemy. Vritrasura then yawned and his mouth got widely opened and extended. In the meanwhile Indra, the destroyer of one's enemies' strength, contracted all his limbs and came out of the expanded mouth of the Asura and fell down. Since that time, this state of yawning has become prevalent amongst the beings. The Devas were all glad to see Indra thus come out. When Indra thus got out, he fought again with Vritra for 10,000 years (Ajuta years). The fight was very dreadful, causing horripilation. On one side all the Devas joined in the battle; on the other side, the pre-eminently powerful Vritra, the son of VisVakarma fought. When Vritrasura got more and more energy in the battle, Indra became gradually dwindled and was at last defeated. Indra became very much grieved when he found himself defeated; the Devas also were very dejected to see this. Indra and the other Devas quitted the battle-field and fled away. Vritrasura too, quickly arrived and occupied the Heavens. Vritra began to enjoy by force the Heavenly gardens and took the Airavata elephant. O King! The Asura, the son of Tvasta, took away all Vimanas (the self-moving chariots of gods), Uchchais'rava, the best of horses, the heavenly cow, the giver of desires, the Parijata tree, the Apsaras, and all other jewels of the Heavens. The Devas, on the other hand, deprived of their shares in sacrifices and driven away from their Heavens, suffered very much. Vritrasura became puffed up with vanity, when he got possession of the Heavens. VisVakarma, too, became very happy at that time and began to enjoy pleasures along with his son. O Bharata! The Devas, then, united with the Munis and they began to consult about their own welfare. When the Devas took Indra with them and went to Maha Deva in the Mount Kailas'a and bowed down to His feet very humbly and, with folded hands, spoke thus:-- O Deva of the Devas! O Maha Deva! Thou art the MahesVara and the unbounded Ocean of Mercy! We are defeated by Vritrasura and we are very much terrified. Save us, O S'ambhu! Thou dost good to all the beings; dost thou tell us, therefore, truly what are we to do now, when that powerful Danava has dispossessed us of our Heavens. O Mahes'a! Now dislodged, where are we to go? We are not finding any remedy by which our miseries can be destroyed. O Bhuta Bhavana! We are very much pained; help us; O merciful One! That Vritrasura has become intoxicated with vanity due to his being granted the boon. Therefore destroy him.

55-57. S'ankara said "O Devas! We will keep Brahma in the front and let all of us go to the residence of Hari and there consult with Him how to destroy this unruly Vritra. The Janardana Vasudeva is fully capable to do all actions. He is powerful, knower of pretexts, highly intelligent, ocean of mercy, and fit to be asked by all for protection. Without Him, the Deva of the Devas, no success is possible in any action. Therefore all of us ought to go there for the success in our undertaking."

58-62. Vyasa said O King! Thus settling their plan of action, Indra and other Devas took S'ankara and Brahma with them and went to the abode of Hari, who protects all and is gracious to His devotees. They, then, began to chant Purusasukta hymns to Him and thus they praised the God Hari, the Guru of this Universe. The Janardan Hari, the Lord of Kamala, then, appeared before them and, after showing his respect, addressed them thus O Lord of the several Lokas! What have brought you all together with Brahma and S'ankara hither? O best of Suras! Please tell me the reason of your coming here. Vyasa said O King! Thus hearing Hari's words, the Devas could not reply anything; rather almost all of them remained with an anxious look with their hands folded, overwhelmed with cares.

Here ends the Fourth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the defeat of the Devas by Vritra in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Vyasa said O King! Narayana, the Lord of Laksmi, and Knower of the essences of all subjects, seeing the Devas extremely attached to him and anxious, spoke to them thus O Suras! Why have you kept silent? Tell me why you have all come, let it be good or bad, tell me; I will try to remove your miseries. The Devas said O Lord! Is there anything unknown to you in this Triloki; You know everything; why then art Thou asking us again and again? In ancient times You in your Dwarf incarnation overspread the three worlds by Your three feet and thus bound the King Vali in his own premises and gave over the sovereignty over the Devas to Indra. O All Pervading One! It is You who deluded the Daityas and procured nectar for the Devas, and it is You who sent them to the house of Death.

Therefore, O Lord! You are the one and only one that is capable in warding off all the evils that befall on the Devas.

6-31. Thus hearing the Devas' words, Visnu said “O Suras! You need not fear; I know one remedy, approved by all, by which that Daitya might be killed so that you would be happy. I am now giving out to you. Your welfare, your benefit must be looked at by me whether by the exercise of my intelligence or by using my prowess, by wealth pretext or by any other means whatsoever. Four means, viz., conciliation, gifts, sowing discord, or punishment are mentioned by the wise statesmen to be applied to friends and specially to the enemies. Brahma was worshipped by Vritra with severe austerities and He granted boons and it is due to the influence of that favour that this Asura has become indomitable. The more so that Vis'vakarma created him from the sacrificial fire; it is through all these causes that the Demon Vritrasura, conqueror of the enemies' stronghold, has grown up so very powerful that he can hardly be conquered by any being. O Suras! First peace must be negotiated with him; then deceive him, otherwise the enemy will be very difficult to conquer. First entice hinn and bring hinn under control; then kill hinn. Now take the Risis and Gandharbas with you and go where the powerful enemy Vritrasura is residing and make a treaty with him; thus he will be conquered. Swear on oath and accede to the terms he proposes and thus create faith in him; then cultivate friendship with him; lastly, when time will come, kill that powerful enemy. O Suras! I will also enter, unseen by anybody, into the excellent weapon of Indra, his thunderbolt and will help him in due time. Wait till the period of his longevity expires; otherwise his death will never take place. Now go to that Asura, with Gandharbas and Risis and cunningly cultivate friendship between him and Indra, by conciliatory words; when he begins thus to put his confidence, then deceive him.

I will enter hiddenly into the strong well covered thunderbolt. When Indra will come to know that the Demon has put complete faith in him, he will hurl his thunderbolt against him and thus the enemy will be killed and not otherwise. O Lord of the Devas! Do not consider for the present the act of treachery that you will commit: take my help and kill that wicked Demon with thunderbolt. To practise hypocrisy with an hypocrite is not considered a sin; specially no powerful enemy can be killed only by the well known rules applicable to warriors, without any deceit. I also deceived, before, Vali, with my dwarf body and again I deceived all the Demons by showing myself as a beautiful woman; therefore to practise deceit with a strong deceitful enemy is never considered a sin. Know this. O Devas! Now you all conjointly worship the Devi Bhagavati with Mantras and prayers and take Her shelter; the Yoga Maya, then, will help you.

We, too, worship that Devi, the Highest Prakriti, the Incarnate of pure Sattva Guna, Who grants success, bestows us all our desires. Who is Herself the object of desires, and Who is never realised by any except by those Yogis, self-controlled pure men. Indra, too, will certainly be able to kill his enemy in battle if he worships Her; for the Maha Maya, the Creatrix of Delusion, will, when worshipped, delude that Demon. Thus deluded by Her Maya, Vritrasura will easily be killed by him; there is no doubt in this, what more do you want than this that everything will be successfully accomplished when the Devi Ambika is propitiated and gets well pleased. She regulates the hearts of all and is the Cause of all causes. Without Her worship no one's desires can be expected to be accomplished. Therefore, O Best of Suras! Worship the Universal Mother, the Prakrit! Devi with greatest devotion and with greatest purity for the destruction of your enemy. Seel In days of yore, I fought for five thousand years, dreadfully with the two Demons Madhu and Kaitabha and then killed them. I worshipped, then, the Maha Maya, the Highest Prakrit!; She was thus pleased and deluded the two Asuras; thus the two powerful Asuras puffed up with vanity were deluded and thus I could kill those terrible Daityas under a pretext. Therefore, O Suras! You, too, worship that Highest Prakrit! with the greatest devotion; She will then surely fulfill your desires.

32-49. O King! When the intelligent Visnu enlightened thus the Devas, they went to the top of the Mount Sumeru, adorned with the Mandara trees, and, remaining at a secluded place, recited slowly Her Mantrams and thus engaged in asceticism and meditation, began to chant hymns and praise that Universal Mother, the Holder of the world, the Remover of all world ailings, and the Creatrix, Preservatrix and Destructrix of the world and the Bestower of all desires to Her devotees. The Devas said "O Devi! Be graciously pleased unto us! O Thou, the Destructrix of the afflictions of the distressed! We have taken refuge unto Thy lotus-feet. We have been defeated by Vritrasura in the battle, we are very much oppressed and afflicted. O Thou, the Highest Reality! O Thou, the Mother of the whole Universe! Protect us as a Mother protects her child; we are fallen into this difficulty arising from our enemies. O Mother! Nothing is hidden from Thy knowledge in the three worlds. Why art Thou taking no notice of us, that are being tormented by the Asuras! O Mother! Thou createst, preservest, and destroyest the three worlds; Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a are created by Thy mere will and are doing all Thy works. Mother! They are not independent; by the contraction of Thy eye-brows, they are directed and enjoy all the pleasures. The Mother protects her sons afflicted with various difficulties and dangers, even when they are found guilty of various offences. It is Thou that hast made this rule; then why, O Merciful! Art Thou not protecting us who are quite innocent and whom Thou dost know as having taken refuge unto Thy lotus-feet. O Devi! If Thou thinkest that we forget Thee, being too much attracted by the enjoyments that Thou hast been pleased to confer unto us and therefore we are proper not to be looked upon with Thy merciful eyes, we would say that this is quite true; but, O Mother! Nowhere is seen a feeling of a Mother to Her child; we are no doubt, objects of Thy mercy and favour always. Besides there is no fault of us in this matter, O Mother! that we do not worship Thee and become immersed in sensual enjoyments; for Thy creation, the Moha (delusion) is very powerful and deludes us. O Mother! Thou art naturally Merciful! Knowing these, why art Thou not showing mercy unto us. O Devi! Thou hadst killed before in battle, for our sake, the powerful Daitya Chief Mahis'asura, very terrible to all the beings. Then why art not Thou, O Mother! killing this dreadful Vritrasura? O Mother! Thou hadst killed the two brother Daityas, S'umbha and Nis'umbha, extraordinarily powerful, and the other Daityas that followed them; O Thou, the embodiment of mercy! Similarly destroy now this deceitful strong Vritrasura. O Mother! Delude this proud Asura so that he could not manifest, in the least, his power. We are very much troubled by the Asuras and overwhelmed with terror from them; Thou savest us; for there is no other in the three worlds that can by his own force remove the sorrows and sufferings of the Devas. O Mother! Though Thou hast shown favour towards Vritra, now dost kill him soon, whose nature is cruel and tormenting to others. O Bhavani! Better dost Thou save him from sin by Thy holy arrows. Otherwise that vicious Asura will surely enter into the hideous Hell. It is for his welfare that Thou oughtest to kill him. Those that had been before enemies of the Gods, Thou didst purify them by weapons in the battle-field and hadst sent them to the Nandana Garden in the Heavens. O Thou, the Mercy personified! Was it not that Thou didst not save them from hell? Then why art not Thou killing this Vritrasura! We know this for certain that the Asura is Thy enemy, not Thy servant; for that mischievous soul is giving us trouble. O Mother! How can he be Thy servant and devotee who torments the Devas that are always engaged in worshipping Thy lotus feet. O Mother! How can we perform Thy worship? The flowers and other articles used in worship all are created by Thee; especially we and the Mantras, in fact, everything is the manifestation of Thy power. Therefore, O Bhavani! We worship Thee by laying ourselves prostrate on Thy feet. Be'st Thou pleased. Those men are blessed that worship with devotion Thy lotus feet for crossing this ocean of world. O Devi! Those Yogins that want final liberation and forsake therefore all attachments, vikaras and delusions, even they attain success then only when they meditate Thy lotus feet. Those that are great Sacrificers and know best the essence of the Vedas, even they when they offer oblations to the sacrifice, utter "Svaha" that is cheering to the Devas and "Svadha" very consoling to the Pitris; thus they always think of Thee (for Svaha and Svadha are Thy names only). O Mother! Thou art the retentive power and memory. Thou art the beauty. Thou art the peace. Thou art the Buddhi (intellect) well known to clarify men's minds; and Thou art the prosperity and wealth of all these three worlds. O Devi! Those that worship Thee, Thou givest them, out of mercy, those wealth in some way or other.

50-57. Vyasa said O King! Thus worshipped by the Devas, the Devi Bhagavati appeared before them in a very beautiful form, thin, adorned with all ornaments. Her two hands holding a noose, and goad, and the other two hands making signs to discard all fear and ready to grant boons; Her loins very beautiful, girdled with a gold band with small bells pending and making sweet tinkling sounds; Her feet with anklets (ornaments) making sweet sonorous sounds with tiny tinkling bells. Her voice was exceedingly sweet and lovely. Her forehead was adorned with the crescent of the Moon and on Her head was glittering a diadem of jewels. Her lotus-face adorned with sweet soft smiles and with Her three beauteous lotus-eyes looking like Indibaras. Her body was of a red colour like the Parijata flowers and Her limbs were marked with red sandal-paste. She was dressed in a red attire. The Devi looked well pleased, like an ocean of infinite mercy, wearing complete dress suited to happy interviews, the Creatrix of all this Cosmos, the Highest, the Knower of all, the Directrix of all, and the Great Upholder of all. She looked like an embodiment of the Truth of all Vedantas and the Incarnate of ever Existence, Intelligence, Bliss, the Maha Devi Bhagavati BhuvanesVari. The Devas all bowed down before Her standing in front of them. The Mother then spoke "What business have you got here? Speak to Me."

58-59. The Devas said "O Bhagavati! Vritrasura is tormenting much the Devas; Bewitch him. O Devi! Do such as he can trust the Devas; and impart then strength on our weapons such as he can be killed." Vyasa said "O King! That will be done." Saying thus, the Devi departed then and there. The Devas became very glad and returned respectively to their abodes.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the praising of the Devi by the Devas in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Thus getting the boons from the Devi, the Devas and the Risis blazing with their asceticism, all united and consulted with each other; then they went to the excellent As'rama of Vritra. There they saw Vritra in a sitting posture and with his own Tejas (fiery spirit in him) as if ready to burn the three worlds and to devour all the Devas. The Risis, then, spoke to Vritra the sweet words full of sentiments for the serving of the Devas' ends, according to the principle of conciliation.

4-23. “O highly fortunate Vritra! Terrific to all the Lokas! Yo have now established your dominion in all the places over this whole Universe; but your enmity with Indra is the only cause to interrupt you in your happiness; there is no doubt in this. This enmity has increased much the anxiety of you both and therefore has grown very painful. Neither you nor Indra can go to sleep peacefully, there is always that fear hanging on you both, on account of that enmity. And, see! A long long while has passed away since the last battle was fought between you two; yet all the Devas, Asuras, men and other subjects, are feeling a sense of oppression and pain. In this world happiness is the only thing to be sought for and pain is to be avoided; this is the eternal state of things. Never does that man who practises enmity with another, get happiness; this has been ascertained by the wise. It is only those brave warriors, that found taste in warfare, that approve of battles; but the wise that are expert in amorous enjoyments do not like battle as destroying the sensual enjoyments; they do not like fighting with flowers even; what to say with sharpened arrows! In a battle, the victory is doubtful but the shooting of arrows is certain. This world is dependent on Fate (Daiva, i.e., dependent on the cosmic rulers or deities or Devas of the Universe), so is victory or defeat. So knowing this, one ought never to fight. Bathing in proper time, taking food and sleeping in fixed times and having a chaste serving wife, these are the means towards happiness in this world. While in warfares, shooting terrible arrows and striking with fierce axes take place; what happiness can there possibly exist? Rather the enemy finds pleasure there. There is a saying that death in battles leads one to Heaven, but this is merely an enticing statement, inciting one to war! Really it is fruitless. Supposing that happiness comes ultimately to those who pain their bodies by being shot with arrows and who allow their carcasses being devoured by the crows and jackals, then no man, even of dull understanding, will like this, what to speak of intelligent persons! Therefore, O Vritra! Let everlasting peace and friendship be established between you and Indra; both of you in that case will derive everlasting peace and happiness. Moreover if the enmity between you terminates from this instant, then we, the ascetics and Gandharbas will, no doubt, be able to remain in our own respective As'rams with great comfort. O Powerful Hero! Owing to incessant wars between you and Indra, the Munis, Gandharbas, Kinnaras and beings are day and night, suffering very much. For the happiness of all peace-loving persons, we, the Munis, the residents of the forest, earnestly desire that there be formed friendship between you two. We desire that you, Indra and all the Jivas get happiness. O Vritra! We stand as mediators in this treaty between you and Indra; we will make each party swear on oath and thus make it conducive to the happiness of both. Indra will now swear on oath before you on the terms that you will dictate and thus will make your heart cheerful. Know this verily that this earth stands on Truth, the sun rises for the sake of Truth, the winds blow all along for Truth and the boundless ocean never oversteps its limit for Truth. Therefore let your friendship, be established on Truth.

Thus tied together by bonds of friendship let you two sleep, play, make sports in water and sit together happily.”

24-28. Vyasa said:-- O King! Hearing the Maharsi's words, the highly intelligent Vritra began to say “Risis! You are possessed with knowledge and many other qualifications and you are ascetics;

you are therefore to be respected by me. You are the Munis and therefore you never speak anywhere falsehood; your conduct is good and you practise rite and ceremonies; you are calm; therefore you do not know the causes of pretexts. The intelligent should never cultivate friendship with a knave, licentious person who is void of understanding, an infamous, and a shameless person, specially if he be an enemy. This vicious Indra is shameless, deceitful, licentious, and the killer of a Brahmana; therefore no faith can ever be placed on such persons. You are saints and added with all good qualifications; therefore your minds never play in the mischievous thoughts of others; it is because your heart is calm and quiet that you cannot understand the minds of the deceitful and treacherous; therefore you ought never to stand as mediators between any two persons.”

29-32. The Munis said “O King! All the creatures certainly enjoy the fruits of their Karmas, whether good or bad; how then, can persons, of perverted intellect, obtain peace when they do mischief to others. The treacherous persons certainly go to hell and suffer miseries always. The slayers of Brahmanas and the drunkards may get liberation; but never the faithless and those who go against their friends get off free; these will have to suffer undoubtedly in the hells. Therefore, O Knower of all things! Give out clearly what is going on exactly in your mind and the exact terms that you want; and the treaty will be made between you and Indra exactly according to those terms.”

33-34. Vritra said “O highly fortunate Munis! I can enter into a treaty of peace with Indra only on the condition that Indra with all the other Devas will not kill me in day or in night with any dry or liquid substance or with wood, stone, or thunderbolt and on no other terms.”

35-68. Vyasa said O King! The Risis then gladly accepted his word and brought Indra there and recited to him the terms of the treaty of peace. Indra, then, swore, an oath, before the Munis with Fire as the Witness that he would comply with the terms of the treaty, and was thus freed from his heavy thoughts and felt that he had been rid of a fever. Vritra, then, relied on Indra's words; became his friend, and began live, play and enjoy with him. They felt pleasure by their union and began to roam sometimes in the Nandana Garden, sometimes in the Gandha Madana, sometimes on the shores of oceans, Vritra was very much delighted when they were thus united in friendship; but Indra watched him to find his faults; thus sometime passed. A few years passed away after the treaty had been concluded. And the straight-forward Vritra began to place very much confidence on Indra; but Indra meditated on the means how to kill him. One day Visvakarma, knowing that his son Vritrasura placed implicit confidence on Indra, called his son and said “O my son Vritra! Hear my good words. See, it is never advisable to trust anybody with whom there has arisen once the enmity. Indra is your greatest enemy; he always intends evil to you; therefore do not trust him any more. Indra is never to be trusted, who is always covetous, inimical, rejoicing at others sufferings, licentious and addicted to others' wives; vicious, deceitful, finding faults with others, always jealous, a juggler, and puffed up with vanity. O Child! What more shall I say than this fact that that villain, without fearing sin, easily entered into the womb of his mother and cut the crying child in the womb into seven pieces and then each seventh part again into seven parts, thus altogether into forty-nine parts. Therefore O my son! He is never to be trusted on any account. He who is always addicted to vicious deeds never feels shame in perpetrating again another crime.” Vyasa said:-- O King! Vritra's death time drew nigh; hence he could not take his father's words as auspicious, though he was warned by his father in words full of meaning. One day, in the evening time, at a very inauspicious dreadful moment, Indra saw Vritra on the shore of an ocean and began to think of the boon granted by Brahma to the Asura thus “Now this is the terrible evening time; this cannot be called day nor can it be called night.

and this demon is also here alone in this solitary place; it is advisable therefore to effect his death by force, there is no doubt in this.” Thus arguing in his mind, Indra remembered the Undecaying Soul Hah. Bhagavan, the Best of Purusas came there, unseen by anybody, and entered into the thunderbolt; Indra quickly collected himself to kill Vritrasura; but he thought how he could slay this Demon, unconquerable in the battle; and if he did not slay his enemy then by deceit, then his enemy would continue to live, and it would be impossible for him to get his own welfare. While he was thus thinking, he saw the foam of the waters of the ocean as big as a mountain; thinking that foam not to be dry nor wet and considering that foam not to be any weapon, he easily took that foam and instantly remembered with a heartful devotion the Highest Force BhuvanesVari. On Her remembrance, the Bhagavati infused Her part into that foam and the thunderbolt, instilled with the force of Narayana, was covered, too, by that foam. Indra, then, hurled the thunderbolt covered with foam on Vritra; and the Demon, thus struck, instantly fell down like a mountain. When Vritrasura was thus killed, Indra became very glad; the Risis began to praise him with various hymns. Indra, then, with all the other Devas worshipped the Devi, through Whose Grace the enemy had been killed and they praised Her with various hymns. The image of the Bhagavati the Supreme S'akti was built of ruby and installed in the Nandana Garden. O King! Since then all the Devas used to worship the Devi thrice a day, morning, midday and evening and since then the S'ri Devi became the tutelary deity of the Gods. Indra worshipped then Visnu also, the Highest of the Gods. When the terrible powerful Vritrasura was killed, the auspicious wind began to blow gently; the Devas, Gandharbas, Rakhsasas, and Kinnaras began to roam about with great joy. Vritrasura was deluded by the Maya of Bhagavati, and Her force entered into the foam; hence Indra was capable to kill him suddenly and it is, for this reason, that the Devi, the Goddess of the world, is known in the three worlds as “Vritranihantri,” the slayer of Vritra. But at the first sight Indra killed him by means of the foam; hence the people say that Vritra was killed by Indra.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the slaying of Vritrasura in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-16. Vyasa said O King! Now seeing Vritra slain, Visnu, the Deva of the Devas, went to Vaikuntha; but, with this fear reigning supreme in his mind that it was He that virtually slew him. Indra, too, then became afraid of the sin committed by him and returned to his Heavens. The Munis, too, became very anxious and thought what great sin they have committed in cheating Vritrasura. It is the company of Indra that now made their name “Munis” as meaningless. The Munis thought thus “Oh! Vritra on our words trusted Indra and we have thus turned out today traitors in company with that traitor Indra. Attachment and affection is the cause of all mischief. Fie on that attachment! It is, as it were, tied by the cord of affection that we had sworn falsely on oath and thus deceived Vritra. Those that deliberately guide others to vicious acts or those that advise or incite others to do sinful acts or those that side with the sinners certainly partake of the fruits of the sin committed. Visnu, too, committed the sin, though he had Sattva Guna preponderance, when he entered into the thunderbolt and thus helped Indra in killing Vritra. It seems that henceforth the people, when selfish, won't hesitate to commit afterwards any sinful act when they will see that Bhagavan Visnu could have done, in concert with Indra, such a vicious thing. Of the four virtues Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksa, Dharma and Moksa are very rare in the three worlds. Artha (wealth) and Kama (desires) are everywhere recommended as excellent and therefore held very dear; Dharma is now merely in name and is the cause of the vanity of the Pundits (no one now really practises Dharma with devotion). Thus arguing, the Munis became very much afflicted in their minds and went back to their own hermitages respectively, broken-hearted and absent-minded. O Bharata!

Hearing of the death of his son by Indra, VisVakarma wept very much and he become disgusted very much with the affairs of the world. He went to the place where lay his son Vritra and became pained very much to see him in that state; and he performed his cremation and other funeral obsequies according to the prescribed rules. He then bathed, performed his Tarpanam (peace-offering) and funeral ceremonies due to a person in the first year of his death. Then his heart became afflicted with sorrow and he cursed the vicious Indra saying that as Indra had killed his son, enticing him by falsely swearing on oath, so Indra, in his turn would suffer a heavier suffering, to be inflicted by Vidhi (the Great Creator of Universe). O King! Thus cursing Indra, VisVakarma, very much afflicted due to the loss of his son, went to the top of the Mountain Meru and began to practise a hard tapasya.

18-40. Vyasa said O fortunate One! What are you asking? and what is the nature of your doubt? The fruit of one's Karma is certainly to be enjoyed, whether it be auspicious or inauspicious. Be he weak or strong. Be he a Deva, an Asura or a human being, everyone in fact, will have to suffer for one's Karma, good or bad, to its full extent, whether it be done a little or too much. See! It was Visnu that gave advice to Indra and entered into his thunderbolt and helped him when Indra was ready to kill Vritra; but when there had been Indra's difficult time, Visnu did not help Indra in any way. Therefore, O King! It is clear that when one's time is favourable, everybody turns out friends; but when Fate turns adverse, nobody is seen to come forward to help. When Fate is against anybody, one's father, mother, wife, or brother, servant, friend or one's own son becomes quite incapable to help anybody. The man, who does good or bad acts, suffers for his deeds. When Vritra was killed, everyone went back to their respective homes; but Indra, the Lord of S’achi, became very much deprived of his energy and brilliancy due to the sin of his killing a Brahmin; all the Devas, then, blamed him as a

Brahmaghataka (the killer of a Brahmin). They talked further that no other body would have been able to even indulge the idea of killing a Muni who was an intimate friend and who placed full confidence on him when Indra had sworn on oath that he would be a friend to Vritra. O King! Everywhere then there was this gossip in the assemblages of the gods, in their gardens, at the meetings of the Gandharbas that Indra had deceived Vritra who had relied on him, on the words of the Munis and then killed him by pretext, and so had done, indeed, a horrible crime. Indra had now forsaken the eternal proofs of the Vedas; and he had become a Bauddha; therefore he could have easily killed Vritra. No other body, save Visnu and Indra, could have acted contrary to their words, as clearly evidenced by the manner in which Vritra had been killed. These remarks, similar to those mentioned above, became everywhere current and Indra heard all of them, tending to his own disgrace. O King! Fie on that man's life that is blamed everywhere! Fie on that man whose fame has been marred amongst the people. Such a person becomes laughed at by his enemies, when seen by them on the way. The royal saint Indradyumna (Rajarsi) was made to get down, though sinless, from Heavens when his good deeds expired. Why, then, would not vicious persons be made to descend? The king Yayati had to get down from Heavens for his very little fault and had to pass eighteen Yugas in the form of a crab. What more can be said than the fact that even the Bhagavan Achyut Hah had to take several incarnations in the wombs of boar, crocodile, etc., out of the curse from a Brahmin, due to his cutting off the bead of the wife of Bhrigu. Though omnipresent, yet he had to take the appearance of a dwarf and had to beg from the King Vali's palace. What more troubles and miseries than this can be inflicted on those that had sinned viciously. O Ornament of Bharata! Ramchandra, too, had to experience, due to the curse of Bhrigu, terrible miseries on the bereavement of Sita Devi. Similarly Indra, too, for his sin of killing a Brahmin, was so much terrified that he could not get his healthy condition though he remained in his own house, endowed with all sorts of prosperity and wealth. Seeing, then, Indra lustreless, knowledge-less, almost void of consciousness, and overwhelmed with fear, his wife S'achi, the daughter of Puloma, spoke to him thus "O Lord! Your dreadful enemy has been killed; why are you, then, sighing so much, being afflicted with so much terror? O Lord! You have destroyed your enemy; then why are you so much anxious? why are you then so much remorseful and drawing such deep heavy sighs like an ordinary man? I am not seeing any other powerful enemy of yours; then, why do you look so anxious and bowed down with cares, as if you look quite unconscious."

41-44. Indra said "O Devi! True that I have no other powerful enemy, yet I do not find peace nor any happiness. I fear for the sin Brahmahattya in my house. O Devi! This Nandana Garden, the city of Kuvera, the lord of riches, this nectar forest, the sweet music of the Gandbarbas, the beautiful dance of the Apsaras, all these now do not give the least pleasure to me. What more can I say than this that the beautiful Lady like you, most beautiful amidst the three worlds, and other beautiful ladies, the Heavenly cow, the Mandara tree (one of the five trees of the celestial region), the Parijata tree (the flower tree), the Santana tree, the Kalpa tree (yielding all desires) and the Harichandan (saffron tree) and others cannot give pleasure to me. What to do, where to go, so that I get happiness, O Beloved! This thought makes me uneasy. And so I am not able to get happiness in my own thought."

45-60. Vyasa said Thus speaking to his most distressed wife, Indra got out of his house and went to the exceedingly beautiful lake, named Manasarovara. Indra there entered into the tubular stalk of the lotus, his body becoming very lean and thin out of the fear and sorrow. Nobody could recognise him as he was overpowered by his terrible sin. He then began to behave himself, as regards feeding and enjoying, like a snake; and he became ovewhelmed with thought, helpless, and his organs were out of order. He remained hidden in the water. When Indra, the king of the Devas, thus fled away out of the fear of his Brahmahattya sin, the other Devas became very anxious; everywhere various evil signs manifested themselves. The Risis, Siddhas and Gandharbas were very much panic-stricken, as various disturbances and violent symptoms covered all over the world without any king. Grains began to grow very scanty, due to want of rains; the streams were almost dry and very little water was there in the tanks. In such a state of anarchism, all the inhabitants of the celestial regions, the Devas and Risis consulted and installed the king Nahusa in the place of Indra. O King! Nahusa, though virtuous, became, under the sway of Rajoguna, influenced by lust and thus he got very much addicted to worldly enjoyments. He began to amuse himself in the Garden of Paradise, surrounded by the Apsaras or celestial nymphs. One day he heard of the excellent qualifications of S'achi Devi, the wife of Indra, and desired to acquire her. Then he spoke to the Risis The Devas and you, united, have installed me in the office of Indra; but why does not the Indrani (the wife of Indra), come to me so long? If you want to do what I like, then quickly bring S'achi here before me for my gratification. I am now Indra and therefore the god of the Devas and all the worlds; therefore bring today quickly Indrani to my house. Hearing thus the words of the king Nahusa, the Devas and DevarsTs became anxious and went to S'achi, and, with their heads bowed down, spoke thus "O Wife of Indra! The wicked Nahusa is now desiring you; he became angry and told as to send you to him quickly; O Devi! We have made him Indra and are therefore under him; what shall we do now under these circumstances?" S'achi, the wife of Indra, hearing their words, became absent-minded and spoke to Brihaspati, thus "O Brahmana! I now take refuge unto you."

61-62. Brihaspati said "O Devi! Do not be afraid of Nahusa; he has been deluded by Moha. O Child! I won't forsake the eternal religion and thus I won't give you over to the hands of Nahusa. No doubt that wretch suffers the severest torments in Hell to the end of Pralaya (the Great Dissolution) who quits and hands over the distressed person under one's refuge to another. O Good One! Be comfortable; I will never forsake you."

English translation

1-11. Vyasa said O King! Hearing that the wife of Indra had taken refuge under Brihaspati, the King Nahusa became very angry towards Brihaspati and spoke to the Devas “ O Devas! I hear that the stupid son of Angirasa has given protection to Indra and has kept her in his house; I will therefore kill him quickly.” Seeing the terrible Nahusa thus angry, the Devas and Risis consoled him and said O King of kings! Do not be angry; quit this vicious motive yours. See, the Risis in all the Dharma S'astras, have declared the holding of illicit connection with other's wives as a very heinous crime and have blamed it very much. You can consider that the daughter of Puloma is always chaste, devoted to her husband and very good- natured. How can she, when her husband is alive, take another husband? O Lord! You are now the Lord of the three worlds and hence the Defender of Faith and Religion; and if a person like you act irreligiously, all the subjects will then go to annihilation. One who is a Lord should always observe the rules of good conduct. Besides there are many other celestial women in this Heaven as beautiful as S'achi; you can satisfy your thirst with them. Mutual love is recognised by the wise as the true originator of amorous dealings; ravishing a woman by force destroys all amorous sentiments. O King! And if the mutual love be similar and equal in all respects, then comes the true happiness; you have now got the post of Indra; therefore quit this idea of holding illicit connection with other's wives and indulge in other good thoughts. Demerits destroy prosperity and merits increase it. Therefore, O King! Leave all these bad thoughts and make your heart take a good turn and be happy.

12-15. Nahusa said “O Devas! Where were you all when Indra stole away the wife of Gautama and when the Moon stole away the wife of Brihaspati? It is easy to give advice to others but to act according to that is very rare in this world. O Devas! Let the qualified Devi come to me you will derive much benefit from it and the Devi, too, will get Her highest happiness; there is no doubt in this. I tell you truly that in no other way I will be satisfied; bring Indrani here quickly, whether by good words or by force.”

16-17. The Devas and Munis heard the words of the king Nahusa, smitten by the Cupid's arrows, got terrified and said “We will bring Indrani to you by gentle words.” Saying thus, they went to the house of Brihaspati.

18-21. Vyasa said O King! The Devas, going to the house of Brihaspati, spoke thus with folded hands O Guru! We know that Indrani has taken shelter in your house; we will have to hand her over today to the king Nahusa for we all united have made over the post of Indra to Nahusa. Let this beautiful Lady now choose and worship him. Hearing these awful words of the Devas, Brihaspati said to them “O Devas! This chaste woman, devoted to her husband, has now taken my shelter; therefore I can never part with her.” The Devas said “O Guru! Kindly advise then - if you do not part with S'achi Devi - how the king Nahusa be pleased; if he becomes angry, it will then be very difficult to please him.”

22-31. Brihaspati said “O Devas! Let S'achi now go to Nahusa, and tempt him with enticing words and make this condition that when her husband's death will be known to her, she will then accept Nahusa as her husband. How could she accept another husband when her husband was alive. Therefore let her now go in quest of her high-souled husband. Let S'achi thus make condition with him and, thus deceiving him, let her try her best to bring back her husband. O King! Then, after coming to this conclusion, Brihaspati and other Devas went with Indrani to the king Nahusa. Seeing them come, especially looking at Indrani the artificial king Nahusa became very glad and said to Indrani “O Beloved! Today I am become the real Indra. O beautiful-eyed One! Worship me as your husband; see the Devas now have made me to be worshipped by all the gods.” When Nahusa spoke thus, the Devi S'achi became filled with great shame; she began to tremble and said to the king “O Lord of the Devas! I desire to ask a boon from you. Better wait till I ascertain whether Indra is dead or alive, there is this doubt in my heart whether he lives or whether he is dead. O King of kings! Let me, first of all, clear my doubts. Kindly excuse me and wait till then. I tell this truly that after I ascertain the fact, I will worship you. I do not know anything whether Indra is dead or whether he has gone any where else.” When S'achi Devi spoke thus, Nahusa became very glad and saying “let it be so” dismissed her.

32-47. Thus having received permission from the King to depart, S'achi hurriedly went to the Devas and spoke to them to try their best to bring Indra back as soon as possible. O King! Hearing these sweet and holy words of Indrani the Devas intently consulted with each other how they could get back Indra. They then went to Vaikuntha and began to praise with hymns the original Deva, the God Visnu, the Lord of the Universe, kind to those that seek His refuge. The Devas, skilled in speaking, spoke to Visnu with a very troubled heart“O Lord! Indra, the Lord of the Devas, is very much troubled with his sin Brahmahattya. Where is he staying now, invisible to all the beings? O Lord! He is now overcome with the sin Brahmahattya by killing Vritra, the best of the Brahmins. We ask your skilful and intelligent advice. O Lord! You are the sole refuge of him as well as of us. We are now involved in a great difficulty. Kindly show us the way how we, as well as Indra, can get out of this difficult crisis.” Hearing the pitiful words of the Devas, Visnu said Let Indra perform the As'vamedha sacrifice (Horse sacrifice) for the purification of his sins. By this Yajha, that can destroy all sins, Indra will be purified and he will regain his Indraship; there is no doubt in this. The more so because the Devi, the Universal Mother, will be pleased with his Horse sacrifice and will destroy all his sins, Brahmahattya and others. Lo! Merely remembering Her destroys heaps of sins; and, if by this Horse sacrifice. She be pleased, what wonder is there that sins of a more grave nature would be destroyed! And let Indrani worship Bhagavati daily; happiness will undoubtedly be gained by worshipping that most Auspicious One! By this the King Nahusa will be particularly deluded by the World Mother and will then be quickly destroyed by the sin committed by himself. And Indra, purified by AsVamedha, will soon regain his position and all his wealth. O king! Thus hearing the sweet beneficial words of Visnu of indomitable prowess, the Devas went to the spot, where resided Indra. Brihaspati and the other Devas consoled the distressed Indra and made him celebrate duly in right order, the Horse sacrifice the greatest of all sacrifices. Indra then distributed his sin Brahmahattya amongst the trees, rivers, mountains, women, and the earth.

48-51. Thus casting aside his sin on all the above things, Indra became again free from his sin, and, getting rid of his fever and uneasiness, abided by the time and remained there invisible in the tubular stem of the lotus. Doing that wonderful act, the Devas started from there and reached their own abodes. The daughter of Puloma, suffering from her bereavements from Indra, spoke then to Brihaspati with great sorrow “O Lord! Why is my husband still invisible to me, when he has performed the AsVamedha sacrifice? Kindly show me the way how I can get a sight of him.”

52-62. Brihaspati said “O Devi! Worship the most Auspicious Bhagavati; surely She will make your husband sinless and you will see him. The Devi Ambika, the Upholdress of the Universe, will desist the King Nahusa from doing the wrongful act and it is She that will delude him by Her Maya and get his downfall from the Heavens. O King! When Brihaspati spoke thus, S'achi Devi got initiated by him in the Devi Mantram, capable to secure success in any undertaking.

Thus getting the Mantram from her Guru, She began to worship the Devi Bhuvane'svari duly with flowers, sacrificial victims and other necessary articles for worship. Thus Indrani, with a view to see her husband, performed the worship of the Devi; she quitted all the articles of enjoyment and luxury and assumed the garb of an ascetic; thus some time passed away, when the Devi was pleased and appeared before her on the back of a Swan, in Her peaceful form, ready to grant boons to Indrani. She looked, then, fiery like thousands of Moons; Her lovely beauty appeared in rays like thousands and thousands of fixed lightnings. The four Vedas personified began to praise Her in hymns from the four sides. Her two hands were adorned with a noose and a goad, and Her two other hands made signs to grant boons and to discard all fear. The Vaijayanti garland of clear crystal-like gems suspended from Her neck up to Her feet. Her face was adorned with smiles and signs as if she would grant favours. She had three eyes and was the ocean of mercy and the Mother of all the Jivas from a worm up to Brahma.

Her two heavy breasts were filled with unbounded ocean of nectar¬ like juice of Peace and Mukti. She was the Goddess of innumerable worlds, the Goddess of all and the Highest, endowed with all the knowledges and the Incarnate of the Undecaying and Immoveable Brahma. The Devi, then, began to address S'achi, the wife of Indra, in pleasant words and in voice deep like a rolling thunder.

63-69. The Devi said O Darling to Indra! Better now ask your desired boon. I am much pleased with your worship. O Beautiful One! I have come here to grant you boon. To see Me is not an easy task; by the collected merits, acquired in thousands and thousands of births one is able to See Me. Hearing the words of the Devi, S'achi Devi, the wife of Indra, fell prostrate before Her feet and began to speak to the Highest Goddess, the Bhagavati, Who seemed graciously pleased “O Mother! I now desire from Thee, that I may see my husband whom I attained after great difficulty, that I be freed from the fear arising out of King Nahusa and I want that Indra be reinstated as Indra as he was before.” The Devi said “O Lady of the Devas! Better go with this My messenger (Duti) to Manasarovara; there is installed My fixed form, named VisVakama. You will see your Indra staying there very sorrowful and overwhelmed with terror. I will delude the King Nahusa within a very short period. O large-eyed One! Be calm and quiet; I will fulfil your desires; soon I will delude that king and deprive him of the seat of Indra.”

70-71. Vyasa said The wife of Indra accompanied the messenger of the Devi and quickly reached the presence of her husband Indra. She was very pleased to see her long-wished for husband, in the state disguise.

Here ends the Eighth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the praising of the Bhagavati by the wife of Indra and on getting the sight of Indra in the Mahapuranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said Indra was quite surprised to see in this state of solitude his dear wife S'achi, large-eyed and overwheinned with much sorrow and spoke thus “O Beloved! I am remaining here alone this desolate place unnoticed by all the Jivas; O Auspicious faced One! How have you come to know this! And how is it that you have come here!”

3-5. S'achi said O Lord of the Devas! I have been able to know this place where you are staying by the grace of Bhagavati's Feet and I will get you back by Her grace. The Devas and Munis all united have installed the King Nahusa in your throne. That fellow says “O fair One! I am now made the King Indra; therefore you worship me as your husband.” And thus oppresses me always. O Destroyer of other's strength! That vicious one speaks to me thus; I am weak; What can I do to him?

6. Indra said “O Beautiful One! I am now here waiting for the proper opportunity; O auspicious One! You should also make your mind calm and remain there, and wait for the proper time.”

7-12. Vyasa said: - O King! After Indra had spoken thus, S'achi Devi became sorrowful, drew a deep sigh and, trembling, said “O Fortunate One! How can I stay there? That vicious man, puffed up with vanity and proud of his position will forcibly bring me under his control. The Devas and Munis say this to me out of his fearO Beautiful One! The Lord of the Devas is now very much distressed with the arrows of the Cupid; therefore go and worship him. O Tormentor of foes! How can the Brahmin Brihaspati protect me, being himself powerless and under the control of the Devas. O Lord! This is now my grave anxiety; I am a weak woman, having none to protect me and therefore always under the guidance of a man. Fate is now against me; how can I keep myself religious? I am a chaste woman, devoted to my husband; I have got no shelter there; who will protect me when I fall into misery!

13-21. Indra said “O Beautiful One! I will now tell you one means which, if you adopt, will no doubt preserve your character in times of crisis. Women cannot preserve their chastity when they are protected by others by thousand and one means; for lust penetrates into their restless minds and carries them to impure ways. It is the good and pure character that preserves a woman from a vicious course; therefore O Smiling One! You adopt this good conduct and character and remain steady in your place. In case that deceitful wicked King Nahusa shows his violence upon you, then take time and secretly cheat him, O Madalase! Go to him when there will be no other body present and say:"“o Lord of the world! Please come to me on a conveyance carried by the Risis (great ascetics), I will then be very delighted and gladly yield myself to you; this is certainly my vow.” O Beautiful One! When you will say thus, that King, blinded by passion, will engage the Munis for the carriers of his conveyance. The ascetics, then, will be angry and curse him; the Munis will certainly burn him by the fire of their wrath; and the Divine Mother will no doubt help you. He who remembers the lotus-feet of the Ambika Devi never meets with any difficulties; and if there arises any difficulty, know certainly that it is for his immeasurable benefit. Therefore worship, with your whole heart, the Mother of the Universe, Who resides in the jewelled island (Mani Dvipa) according to the words of the Guru Brihaspati.

22-25. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the Indra's words, S'achi Devi said “Let it be so” and went to Nahusa, filled with confidence and inspiration to carry on the future work. Nahusa was very glad to see S'achi Devi and spoke thus “O Sweet-speaking One! Are you all right? I am now completely yours; you have fulfilled my word; therefore I say truly that I am your servant. O Gentle-speaking One! When you have come to me, know that I am very glad. O Smiling One! Do not feel any shame before me. I am now your devotee; worship me. O large eyed One! Speak out what is that dear thing that I can do for you? I will carry that out at once.”

26-27. S'achi said “O Lord Vasava! You have done all the works; now I have got one desire to ask from you, kindly fulfil this and then I will be yours. O One full of auspiciousness! Now fulfil my desire; I am speaking this to you.”

28. Nahusa said “O Thou, having a face sweet like the Moon! Speak out your desire; I will carry it out. O Beautiful One with nice eye-brows! Even if that be unattainable, I will give that to you.”

29-31. S'achi said “O King of Kings! I cannot trust you; Swear on oath that you will fulfill my desire. O King! A truthful King very rare on this earth; I will speak out my desire when I will be convinced that you are bound by truth. O King! When you will fulfil my desire, I will always remain under your control; this I speak truly to you.”

32. Nahusa said “O Beautiful One! On all the sacrifices and gifts that I have ever made, I swear, on all my merits, that I will certainly carry out your word.”

33-37. S'achi said “Indra has got for his vehicles the horse Uchchais'rava, the Airavata elephant and the chariot; Vasudeva has got vehicle Garuda; Yama has got his buffalo; S'ankara his Bull; Brahma his Swan; Kartika has got his peacock and Ganes'a has got his mouse. But now, O Lord of the Devas! I want to see your vehicle, never witnessed before: I want to see the Munis and the great ascetics, observing vows, to be your vehicle; this is not Visnu's, Rudra's nor of the Devas, and Raks'asas. O King! Let the Munis carry your conveyance, this is my ever burning desire. O King of this earth! I know you the highest of all Devas; let your glory and splendour increase ever and ever; this is the intense desire reigning in my heart.”

38-56. Vyasa said O King! Hearing S'achi's words, Nahusa, weak in intellect, laughed and beguiled by the Maya of Bhagavati began to praise her and said at once “O Beautiful One! Truly you have made a nice suggestion of my vehicle. O One having luxuriant hairs!

I will soon carry out your words. O Sweet-smiling One! Whoever is effeminate and of weak virility, he is never able to engage the Munis as his carriers; no doubt, my unbounded strength will be rendered manifest when I come to you on a vehicle carried by the Munis. What wonder is there that the seven Risis (the seven stars of the constellation Great Bear) and all the Devarsis would carry me, knowing me as the most capable and superior in all the three worlds by virtue of my sheer asceticism?" Vyasa said O King! The King Nahusa became very pleased and dismissed S'achi Devi. He, then, with a heart flamed with passion, called the Munis and said: -"o Munis! I am now become Indra and endowed with all powers thereof; therefore you all do my work without being at all surprised. I have got the seat of Indra but Indrani is not coming to me. I called her to my presence and when I informed her of my desire. She had spoken to me with affection the following words:- O Indra of the Devas! O Giver of one's honour! Better come to me on a vehicle carried by the Munis and do thus the one thing for me that I like. O Maharsis! To carry out this task is, indeed, difficult for me; therefore do you all unite and, out of mercy, do this for me in all its completeness. My heart is being always burnt, as I am very much attached to the wife of Indra; so I take refuge unto you to do this wonderful work for me." Though this request was very indecent and greatly humiliating yet the Munis agreed to it, out of pity, and also impelled, as it were, by the great Fate. When the Great Seers, the Munis consented to this proposal, the King, whose heart was very much attached to the daughter of Puloma, became very glad and getting on the beautiful vehicle carried by the Munis, told them, move on quickly (Sarpa, Sarpa). Then the King Nahusa, getting very much impassioned, touched with his feet the heads of the Munis, and, being as it were smitten by the arrows of cupid, began to whip frequently the Risi Agastya, the best of the ascetics, who devoured the Raksasa Vatapi, who was the husband of Lopamudra and who drank out the ocean, saying move on, move on (Sarpa, Sarpa another meaning of which is Snake). The Muni, then, became very angry, on being thus whipped, and cursed him saying "'O Wicked One! As you are whipping me, saying Sarpa, Sarpa, so go and remain in the dense forest as a huge snake. When many years will elapse and when you will crawl on your own limb and suffer intense troubles, after that you will again come to heaven. You will be free from the curse when you will see the King Yudhisthira and hear from him the answers to several questions."

57-67. Vyasa said O King! Thus cursed, the King Nahusa began to chant hymns to that best of the Munis, and, while praising, fell from the Heavens and instantly turned into a snake. Brihaspati, then, quickly went to the Manasarovara Lake and informed Indra everything in detail. Indra became very glad on hearing in detail of the downfall of the King Nahusa from Heaven and remained there gladly. When the Devas and Munis saw this downfall into the earth of Nahusa, they all went to the Lake Manasarovara where Indra was staying. They then all encouraged Indra and honoured him by bringing hinn back to the Heavens. All the Devas and Risis installed Indra on the throne and then performed the Inauguration ceremony of the all auspicious Devi. On getting back his own throne. Indra, too, began to sport in the beautiful Nandana Garden with his dear consort S'achi, in the home of the Devas. Vyasa said O King!

Indra had to suffer such severe hardships on account of his slaying the Maharsi VisVarupa, the Lord of the Asuras. Subsequently through the grace of the Devi, he got back his own seat. O King! Thus I have narrated before you to my best, this excellent story of the killing of Vritrasura and thus have answered your question. O Ornament of the Kuru family! The fruits will be exactly according to the Karma done. The effects of the Karma done must be borne whether they be auspicious or inauspicious. (So Indra had to suffer for his Karma, the killing of a Brahmana.)

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Sixth Book on Indra's getting the fruits of his killing a Brahmana and on the downfall of the King Nahusa from the Heavens in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Janamejaya said “O Brahmana! You have described in detail the wonderful character of Indra, his displacement from his Heavens, and his suffering many hardships and at the same time, you have described very widely the greatness of the Highest Goddess of the world. But one doubt has arisen in my mind that Indra was very powerful and when he got the lordship over the Devas, which means in other words that no trouble would pain him, how was it that he had to feel pain and agony? He got the Lordship of the Devas and his highest position by performing one hundred Horse Sacrifices; how was it, then that he was again displaced from that position? O Ocean of mercy! Kindly explain to me the causes of all these. You know everything; you are the best of the Munis and the maker of the Puranas; I am your devoted disciple; therefore nothing there can be that cannot be mentioned to me. So, O highly fortunate One! Kindly remove my doubts.” Suta said Thus asked by Janamejaya, Vyasa the son of Satyavati gladly spoke, in due order, the following words

6-29. Vyasa said O King! Hear, then the causes that are certainly very wonderful. The seers say that Karma is of three kinds Sahchita (accumulated), Vartamana (present) and Prarabdha (commenced). Each of these is again subdivided into three, Sattvik, Rajasik, and Tamasik. The accumulated effects of Karmas done in many past lives is called Sahchita, O King! The effects of this Sanchita Karma, be it auspicious or inauspicious, be it for a long or for a short time, must have to be enjoyed by the beings whether they be good or bad. This Sahchita Karma done by the embodied beings in several previous births, can never be totally exhausted even in hundred Koti Kalpas without their being enjoyed. The Karma that is being done by a JTva and that has not as yet been completed, that is called Vartamana Karma. The Jivas do this Vartamana Karma, auspicious or inauspicious, in their present embodiments. At the time of birth, a part of the Sahchita Karma, the soul takes up for fructification. This part of Sahchita Karma is called Prarabdha Karma. This exhausts only when its effects have been fully borne out by the embodied soul. The beings cannot but bear the effects of this Prarabdha Karma. O King! Know this for certain that the effects of merits or demerits done previously must be borne by anybody, be he a Deva, or a man, or an Asura, or a Yaksa or a Gandharba. The acts done previously go to form the new births of all beings. When the Karma gets exhausted, then no more birth takes place. There is no doubt in this. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Indra and the other Devas, the Danavas, Yaksas, Gandharbas, all are under the control of this Karma. O King! Were it not so, how could they get bodies that are the causes of the enjoyments of pains and pleasures of all the beings. Therefore, O King! Out of the Sahchita Karmas done in many previous births, some Karmas get ripe in due time and they manifest themselves; those manifested Sahchita Karmas are called Prarabdha Karmas (those that are being enjoyed by an individual in the present birth). Impelled by this Prarabdha Karma, the Devas and the human beings, all do meritorious acts as well as sinful acts. Thus Indra out of his past meritorious acts attained his Indraship, and, out of his past sinful acts, committed the sin Brahmahattya and so he was dislodged from his Indraship. What doubt can exist here? O King! So Nara and Narayana, the sons of Dharma, had to take births out of their previous Karmas; again Arjuna and Krisna were born out of their Karmic effects as part incarnations of this Nara and Narayana. The Munis describe this Karma as the basis of the Puranas. Know that he is born of a Deva who is very wealthy and prosperous; he who is not born of the part of a Muni, never writes any spiritual treatise on Jhana or Knowledge; he who is not born of Rudra, never worships Rudra; who is not born of a Deva never distributes rice in charity; he who is not born of S'ri Visnu, never becomes the king and lord of the earth. O King! The embodied souls derive their bodies certainly from Indra, Agni, Yama, Visnu, and Kuvera. Indra presides over lordship, Agni presides over energy, Yama presides over anger, and Visnu presides over strength. He who is powerful, fortunate, enjoying many enjoyments, learned, charitable, is said to be born of a Devams'a. O Lord of the earth! Similarly the Pandavas and Vasudeva who was as glorious as Narayana were born of Devams'as. O King! Know this as quite certain that the bodies of the Jivas are the receptacles of pains and pleasures; and the embodied souls (Jivas) experience alternately pleasure and pain. No Jiva is independent; he is always under the Great Fate. He experiences birth, death, pleasure and pain, not out of his self will, but compelled and guided, as it were, by the unseen Fate.

30-41. O King! How very strong is that Fate can easily be judged by the following. The Pandavas were born in forest; then they went their own homes. They performed the Great Rajasuya Sacrifice by virtue of their own strength. After this they had to suffer their exiles in forest a much greater and more terrible hardship indeed! Next Arjuna performed a very hard asceticism when the Devas, not self- controlled, became pleased and granted him an auspicious boon.

Still he could not extricate himself from the hands of the terrible hardship; nowhere could be found the fruits of the merits acquired in the past when he was afterwards remaining in exile in his human body in the forest! The severe tapasya that he did in the Vadarikasrama in his past incarnation as Nara, the son of Dharma, did not bear any fruit in his Arjuna birth. Mysterious and inexplicable are the ways and means of Karma with which the bodies of the several beings are concerned. How could men get an idea of it when the Devas themselves are at a loss to solve it. Bhagavan Vasudeva had to take birth in the prison, a very critical and dangerous place; he was then carried by Vasudeva to the milkman Nanda's abode at Gokula; he remained there eleven years and thence came back to Mathura where he killed by force Kamsa, the son of Ugrasena. Then he released his sorrowful father and mother from the bonds of prison and made Ugrasena, the King of Mathura. Afterwards he went to Dvarka city, out of the fear of Kala Yavana, the King of the MIechchas; thus Janardana Krisna performed many great and heroic deeds, being impelled by Fate. Then he left his mortal coil at Prabhasa, a place of pilgrimage, along with his relatives and acquaintances and then ascended to his Vaikuntha abode. All the Yadavas, sons, grandsons, friends, brothers, sisters and ladies of the houses all died under the curse of a Brahmin. O King! I have thus described to you the inexplicable ways of Karma.

What more shall I say than the fact that Vasudeva was killed by the arrows of a hunter!

Here ends the Tenth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the phase of Karma in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Janamejaya said "O King of the Brahmanas! You said that Rama and Krisna took their incarnations to relieve the burden of earth. One great doubt arises in my mind on this point. At the end of the Dvapara Yuga, the Earth, burdened and oppressed very much, assumed, in anguish, the form of a cow and took refuge under Brahma. Brahma, then, went with the Earth to Visnu, the Lord of Laksmi, and thus prayed, "O Bibhu! Let You, with all the other gods, incarnate soon on earth at the house of Vasudeva to relieve the Earth of Her load, as well as to protect the righteous." When Brahma thus prayed, the Bhagavan Visnu incarnated as the son of Devaki, along with Balarama to lessen the burden of the Earth. And, in fact, he relieved, to a certain extent, the Earth by killing many vicious persons and many wicked and irreligious Kings. But, along with that, Bhisma, Drona, Virata, Drupada, Somadatta, and Kama, the son of the Sun were killed. But, See! that those who plundered afterwards His riches, and stole away the wives of Hari, those crores of Abhiras, S'akas, MIechchas, and Nisadas and other vicious people remained alive; and how could it, then, be said that the Earth was relieved when Krisna did not kill those people! O Fortunate One! When I see all the people in this Kali Yuga addicted to sinful acts, this great doubt is not going out of my mind (how the Earth had been relieved of Her load).

11-14. Vyasa said O King! As the Yuga changes, so the people changes in course of time. Nothing can alter its course, for this is caused by the Yuga Dharma (the Dharma peculiar to each Yuga). Therefore if all the subjects that are considered wicked and vicious according to the law of the Yuga Dharma, then this creation would be destroyed; hence Krisna killed only those Danavas and vicious Ksattriyas that were really the burden of Earth. O King! The persons that are devoted to religion take their births in the Satya Yuga; those that are fond of religion and wealth they become manifest in the Treta Yuga; those that like Dharma (religion), Artha (wealth) and Kama (desires), they are born in the Dvapara Yuga, and those that dote on wealth and lust, they are seen in the Kali Yuga. O King! Know this as certain that these characteristics, peculiar to each Yuga, never vary; and know this too, that Time, the Lord of Dharma and Adharma, is always present.

15-18. The King said "O Intelligent One! Where are those pious persons now that were born as high-souled religious persons in the Satya Yuga; where are those Munis now who were devoted to charity in the Treta or Dvapara Yuga? Again where will go these shameless and merciless persons, that are being seen now in this Kali Yuga, these vicious creatures that revile their own Gurus? O Highly Intelligent One! I am very eager to know how these religious matters are brought to a decision and settlement; kindly describe to me in detail all these secret truths."

19-30. Vyasa said:-- O King! Persons, born in the Satya Yuga, that perform acts of merit, go to the Deva Loka. O King! The Brahmins, Ksattriyas, Vais'yas and S'udras, if they remain in their own spheres and if they be devoted to religious acts, go to their respective spheres, earned by their meritorious deeds. By virtue of truth, mercy, charity, going to one's own wives, not injuring animals, and having no jealousy and showing mercy equally towards all, by practising these universal forms of religion, even the lowest castes, e.g., washermen and others all go to the Paradise. So in the Treta and Dvapara Yugas men go to Heaven by virtue of their merits, earned in practising their own Dharma; but in this Kali Yuga persons addicted to vicious acts go to terrible hells and remain there till the end of the Kali Yuga when they will be again born in this earth. O King! When the Satya Yuga begins and the Kali Yuga ends, at this junction time, the virtuous highsouled persons descend from Heaven and are born on this earth; and when the Kali begins and the Dvapara ends, the vicious souls come on the earth again from their hells. O King! Know this as the course of Time; it never becomes otherwise. See, then, that the Kali Yuga tends to do vicious things and the people, therefore, become vicious. At times, the birth of beings takes place otherwise than the laws of Yugas, out of the strange combinations of Fate (i.e., good persons are seen in the Kali and vicious persons are seen in the Satya). For this reason those that do meritorious acts in the Kali Yuga are born as men in the Dvapara; so the Dvapara good persons take their births as men in the Treta; and the Treta good persons are born as men in the Satya Yuga. Again those who are vicious in the Satya Yuga become persons of the Kali Yuga. The JTvas suffer miseries on account of their own bad Karmas; they again suffer more miseries by doing over and over again those bad Karmas by virtue of the Yuga Dharma.

31. Janamejaya said "O Bhagavan! Describe particularly the details of the Yuga Dharma. I am now very desirous to hear which Dharma is for which Yuga?"

32-54. Vyasa said O King! I will now show to you by example the influence of the religion peculiar to each Yuga; hear it attentively. O King! The hearts even of saints are quite disturbed by the Yuga Dharma. See! Your father was a religious and high-souled monarch; still the wicked Kali defiled his mind and prompted him to do an act very insulting to a Brahmana. Otherwise why would he, being a renowned prince amongst the Ksattriyas and a descendant of Yayati, thus go and encircle a snake round the throat of an ascetic Brahmin? Therefore, O King! All actions are being influenced by the Yuga Dharma. The Pundits, also recognise this. If you try your best to perform any religious act, even then the Yuga Dharma would prevail, yet you would be able to perform to a certain extent, a part of your intention. O King! In the Satya Yuga, the Brahmins were versed in the Vedas, always devoted to worship the Highest Force, with an ardent desire to see the Devi; they were devoted to Gayatri with Pranava, devoted to the meditation of Gayatri, always reciting silently Gayatri, and the Mayavija Mantram, the chief mantram. In every village, the Brahmins were very eager to erect temples of the Devi Maha Maya Ambika and were truthful, merciful and pure and devoted to their own respective works. The Ksattriyas, skilled in the science of the highest knowledge, were ever engaged in doing things ordained by the Vedas and were always intent in protecting well their subjects. The Vais'yas did their cultivation and trade and the S'udras always served the other three castes. Thus, in the Satya Yuga, all the Varnas (castes) were devoted to the worship of the Devi Ambika, the Highest S'akti; but in the Treta Yuga, the observance of the religion declined a little and in the Dvapara, it declined very much. O Ornament of Indra! Those who were Raksasas before, they become the Brahmins of the Kali Yuga; they are the flowers of atheists, deceptors of men, untruthful, without any Vedas, devoid of the Vedic practices, arrogant, cunning, egoistic, and capable only to serve the S'udras. Some of them try to find fault with the Sanatan Dharma and are the promulgators of various other creeds, wicked, fallen from their religion and given to much talking. O King! As Kali gets stronger, so the true religion declines and ultimately dies; and, in that proportion, the Ksattriyas, Vais'yas and S'udras are also devoid of their religion. When Kali will be in full swing, the Ksattriyas, Vais'yas and S'udras will all be untruthful, vicious; the Brahmins will act like S'udras and will accept other's gifts. O King! The women in the Kali Yuga would be very passionate, avaricious and ignorant. They would be very powerful and insolent, wilful, vicious and untruthful and so would be a source of pain to the society. They would think themselves vainly religious and learned and would be always ready to impart religious instructions and deceive their own husbands and be exceedingly vicious. O King! Our minds are purified by the food that we take; when our minds are pure, the Light of Dharma shines clearly. The customs and practices of Varna and As'rama Dharmas get intermixed with each other and so arises the fault of Dharma S'amkara (i.e., mixture of the several parts of religion with each other). When the Dharma S'amkara creeps in, the Varna S'ankara is seen (i.e., purity in blood and other matters of birth are lost). Thus, in the Kali Yuga, all the Dharmas will gradually die out and ultimately nothing will be heard about one's own religion. O King! In this Yuga even the religious high-souled persons will be found to do irreligious acts! The nature of Kali is so; nobody will be able to quit it. O King! Thus, in this age, men naturally commit vicious things; with ordinary means, therefore, no one becomes able to extricate from the worst vicious habits.

55-56. Janamejaya said "O Bhagavan! You know all and you are versed in all the S'astras; what will be the fate of so many persons in this Kali Yuga? If there be any path, kindly describe it to me."

57-65. Vyasa said O King! There is only one path and none other which can save a man from the sin of this Kali; and that is this The Jivas must meditate on the lotus-feet of the Highest Devi for the purification of all their faults and sins. O King! There is so much strength in Her sin-destroying Name, that the amount of sin in this world falls much less in proportion to that. Where, then, is the cause of fear? Her Name, uttered at random, even in an unconscious state, bestows so much unspeakable results that even Hari, Hara and others have not the capacity to know that. O King! The mere remembrance of the name of S'ri Devi is an atonement for a multitude of sins; then it behoves that every man, afraid of the Kali Yuga, residing in a place of pilgrimage, ought to remember incessantly the Name of the Highest Deity. Even if anybody cuts, pierces, and kills all the beings in this whole world, he won't be touched with the sins, if he bows down, with devotion, before the Devi. O King! I have narrated to you all the secret truths of all the S'astras. Consider all these fully and always worship the lotus-feet of the Devi. All men are reciting silently the Japam called the Ajapa Gayatri; still they do not know the glory of it; such is the powerful influence of Maya. All the Brahmanas are reciting in the depth of their hearts the Gayatri Mantram, yet they do not know the glory of it (otherwise they would have been liberated); such is the great influence of Maya. O King! I have described to you all that you asked me about the Yuga Dharmas; what more do you want to hear?

English translation

1-2. The King said “O Best of Munis! Tell me the names of the holy places of pilgrimage on the surface of this earth, the holy Ksetras and the holy rivers; what are the fruits acquired in bathing there and in making charitable gifts as well; also what are the rules of the journeys and acts there are to be conducted?”

3-34. Vyasa said Hear; I am describing to you various Tirthas or places of pilgrimage as well as those that are highly extolled as the best places favourite to the Devi. Amongst the rivers the following are reckoned as chief and holy The Ganges, Jumna, Sarasvati, Narmadda, Gandaki, Sindhu, Gomati, Tamasa, Cavery, Chandrahaga, Vetravati, Charmanvati, Saraju, Tapi, and Savramati. Besides these, there are hundreds of rivers on the surface of this earth; of them, those that fall into the ocean, they are holier and those that have not reached the ocean are less holy. Of those rivers that fall into the ocean, those that always flow with great current, they are comparatively holier; but in the two months S'ravan and Bhadra (15th July - 15th September) all the rivers are considered as if they are during their menstruation periods; at this time also some rivers carry water of the rains just sufficient to supply the villagers with water. O King! The following are the famous places of pilgrimages calculated to bestow merits:- Puskara, Kuruksettra, the holy Dharmaranya, Pravasa, Prayaga, Naimisaranya, and Arbudaranya. O King! Of the mountains, the following are considered as sacred S'ris'aila, Sumeru, Gandhamadana; of the lakes, the following are very holy and very famous Manasarovara, Vindusarovara and Aksoda; these are the chief lakes. To those Munis that meditate on their Atman, all the hermitages are sacred; still the hermitage of Badri is always considered very sacred and the most celebrated; here Nara and Narayana, the two famous Munis, practised their asceticism. The Vamanas'rama and S'atayupas'rama are also well known; thus every hermitage is named after the Muni that practised asceticism there. Thus innumerable holy places on the surface of the earth are mentioned by the Munis as tending to sanctify the hearts of the persons. At all these holy places, the Devi is worshipped in special sites consecrated to Her. All the sins are destroyed by their mere sight. The devotees of the Devi stay there, with rules obeyed. I will mention afterwards some of these places in the course of my narrations. O Best of kings! Going to these holy places, charity, vow, sacrifices, asceticism and good acts all depend on one another. The holy places of pilgrimages, asceticism, and observance of vows depend on the purity of the articles (Dravya S'uddhi), on the purity and one pointedness of actions (Kriya S'uddhi) and on the purity of the mind and heart (Chitta S'uddhi). Some may attain, at times, the Dravya S'uddhi and Kriya S'uddhi; but every one finds it very difficult and, indeed, rarely get the Chitta S'uddhi. O King! This mind always tries to seek shelter with various objects and is, therefore, always restless. How, then, can the purity of mind be effected, with ease, when it is occupied with all sorts of thoughts on various objects. Cupidity, anger, greed, pride, and egoism, these bring about all sorts of obstacles in the holy places of pilgrimages, in practising tapasya and in observing vows. O King! Non-injury, truthfulness, non-stealing, chastity and purity, controlling of senses, and observing one's own religion, all these bring about the fruits of the labour in visiting all tirthas. They bestow fruits that can be obtained by visiting all the tirthas. During one's pilgrimage, one forsakes one's Nitya Karma (daily duties) and one has to come in contact with various persons. Hence one's journey becomes fruitless; rather it becomes a source of sin. The waters of the sacred places can only wash the outside dirts and the impurities of the physical bodies; they can never wash the impurities of their inner minds. Were it the fact that the waters of the tirthas could purify their minds, why was it, then, that the Munis, residing on the banks of the Ganges, and devoted to God, ever indulged themselves with feelings of jealousy and enmity against each other. The humble Munis like Vas'istha, and the Risis like Vis'vamitra were always entangled in love and hatred and they were ever impatient with anger. Therefore it is evident that the internal purification, the purification of heart, the bathing in the Ghan Ganga flowing within, no doubt removes more the dirt than the Ganges and other places of pilgrimages. O King! No doubt this fact must be admitted on all hands that one's impurity of mind is washed away if by the strange combination of Fate, one comes in intimate contact with a man possessed of the Divine Knowledge. O King! The Vedas or S'astras, vows or austerities, sacrifices or gifts none can purify the heart. See! Vas'istha, the son of Brahma, though versed in the Vedas and residing on the banks of the Ganges, was under the control of love, hatred and other infirmities. Out of the enmity of Vis'vamitra and Vas'istha, arose the great battle named Adi Baka, astonishing even to the Gods. In this, the ascetic Vis'vamitra was cursed by Vas'istha, on account of some curse in connection with the king Haris'chandra and had to take his birth as a crane (Baka). The Risi Vas'istha was cursed also by Vis'vamitra and was born as a bird named S'arari. Thus the two powerful Risis were born as Adi Baka and lived on the banks of the Manasarovara and they fought for full ten thousand years (ajuta) terribly, out of anger, with their nails and beaks like two maddened lions.

35-36. The King asked "O Muni! Why were the two Maharsis, the two great ascetics and devoted to religion, involved in enmity with each other? Both of them were intelligent; how was it that they knowing the act of cursing to be a source of pain to men, cursed each other so painfully?"

37-48. Vyasa said:-- O King! In former times, there was born in the solar dynasty a king Haris'chandra, the son of Tris'anku; he was the best of the kings and reigned before Ramchandra. That King had no issue and therefore promised to Varuna, "O Lord of water and ocean! If I get a son born to me, I will perform a sacrifice, called Naramedha, where I will sacrifice my son for your propitiation." Varuna was very pleased with the king when he made such a vow; and the exquisitely beautiful queen held the foetus in the womb. Seeing his wife in the family way, the king was very pleased and performed all the purificatory ceremonies pertaining to the foetus in the womb. O King! When the queen was delivered of a son endowed with all auspicious signs, the king Haris'chandra was very glad and performed duly all the data Karma (natal) ceremonies and distributed as charity big sums of gold and many cows giving good quantities of milk. When the festivities on the birth of the child were celebrated in the palace on a grand scale, Varuna, the Lord of Waters, assuming the form of a Brahmin, came up there. The King, too, honoured him duly with seat and worshipped him regularly and asked him about his purpose, when Varuna spoke to him "O King! I am Varuna, the Lord of Waters; you promised before that you would perform Naramedha sacrifice where you would sacrifice your son; now do those things and keep your words true." The King became very much confused and was very much pained at heart. He then checked his mental feelings of pain and spoke to the Deva Varuna, with folded hands "O Lord! I will do the sacrifice duly and fulfil the promise that I made before you and keep my word. But, O Best of the Devas! My legal wife will be pure from her Sutika-S'auchak after one month, when I will perform the Naramedha sacrifice."

49-53. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of the king Haris'chandra, Varuna returned to his own abode; the King also became glad, but he was somewhat anxious for fear of the destruction of the child. When one month was complete, the sweet¬ speaking Varuna, the holder of the noose, assuming the form of a very pure Brahmin, again came there to the palace of the king to examine him. The King worshipped him duly and gave him the seat to sit and spoke, with humility, the following reasonable words:-- "O Lord! My son is not yet purified; how can he be tied to the sacrificial post for being immolated? Therefore I will perform that sacrifice when the boy becomes cleansed after a purificatory rite and becomes a Ksattriya. O Deva! If you know me as your humble servant, have mercy on me; I will then consider myself as blessed. See! The children, not passed through purificatory rites, are not entitled to any act; therefore wait for some time longer."

54-56. Varuna said "O King! You are deceiving me and putting off the time longer and longer; I now see that you were issueless before and now that you have got a son, you are bound up in an indissoluble tie of affection for a son. Whatever it be, I now go back to my home at your pitiful request; I will wait for some time longer and I will come again. O child! Let you then be true to your words; if it be otherwise, I will surely curse you and thus give vent to my angry feelings."

57. The King said O Lord of the Waters! After the completion of the Samavartan ceremony (a pupil's return home after finishing his holy study), I will duly sacrifice my son at the great Naramedha sacrifice; there is no doubt.

58-71. Vyasa said Varuna was very pleased at the King's words and quickly went back saying "Let it be so." The king also became comforted. On the one hand, the king Haris'chandra's son became widely known by the name of Rohita; and as he got older, he became gradually versed in all the sciences and became very clever and intelligent. That boy then came to know by degrees the cause of the sacrifice in full detail; and knowing that his death is quite certain, became very afraid and quickly fled away from the King and went and stayed in caves of mountains with a fearful heart. Then, when the proper time came, Varuna came up there to the royal palace, desirous to have the sacrifice and spoke to the King thus "O King! Now the prescribed time has come; therefore perform the sacrifice that you have resolved to celebrate." The King was very much pained to hear this and spoke with a very sad appearance "O Best of the Devas! What can I do now?

My son has fled away out of the fear of his life; I do not know his whereabouts." Varuna became very angry at these words and cursed him thus "O Liar! You are an hypocrite pundit; therefore you deceived me frequently. Let therefore the disease dropsy come and attack your body." Varuna, the Holder of the noose, cursing thus, went back to his own abode. The King was attacked with that disease, remained in his own residence, afflicted with cares and anxieties. Rohita, the son of the king Haris'chandra, heard about the severe illness of his father when he was very much tormented with that disease, as the curse of Varuna. One day a traveller told him "O son of the King! Your father is very ill with dropsy, due to the curse, and is very sorry. Certainly your brain has turned wrong; vain is your coming in this world; you have passed your life to no purpose, for you are staying still in this mountain cave, abandoning your sorrowful father. Certainly you are a bad disobedient son; what use is there in your keeping up this body? What purpose will be served by your birth? When you have got this body, you have abandoned that father and are staying in this solitary cave. Know this as certain that to sacrifice one's life is the duty of a good and obedient son; therefore what more shall I say now than this that your father the king Haris'chandra ailing from a severe illness is very sorry for you and is always weeping."

72-74. Vyasa said O King! Hearing from the passerby these good words, the prince Rohita wanted to go to his sorrowful father attacked with disease when Indra assuming a Brahmin form came up to him and began to speak to him when he was alone like one who was filled with mercy. O Son of a King! You are a fool; are you not positively acquainted with the fact that your father is in trouble; why then do you intend in vain to go there?

English translation

1-6. Indra said “O Prince! The King Haris’chandra promised before to Varuna that he would celebrate for his propitiation the great Naramedha sacrifice when he would offer his own son as a victim to be immolated. O Prince! You are very intelligent; can’t you grasp this idea that your father has become merciless due to his suffering in this illness and no sooner you go there than he will make you the victim and tie you to the sacrificial post when you will be slaughtered.” The indomitable Indra thus prohibiting the son, he began to stay there deluded by the Maya of the great Maha Maya. O King! Thus whenever the prince heard of his father’s severe illness, he wanted to go to his father, Indra repeatedly used to go to him and prevent him from doing so. On the other hand, the King Haris’chandra became very much afflicted, and, seeing his family Guru all-knowing well-wisher Vas’istha close by, asked him, “O Bhagavan! what am I to do now? I am now very impatient with the agonies of this disease and am very weak; besides I am very much afraid of it. Kindly give me a good advice and save me.”

7-9. Vas’istha said “O King! There is a good remedy for the cure of your disease. It is stated in the S’astras that the sons are of thirteen kinds; Aurasa, Ksattraja, Datrima, Kritrima; etc. Therefore pay the reasonable price and buy one good Brahmin boy and perform your sacrifice with that boy. O King! Thus Varuna will be pleased and you will be cured of your disease.”

10-24. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of Vas’istha, the King Haris’chandra addressed to his minister“O Minister-in-

Chief! You are very sharp and intelligent, therefore you better try your best and seek in my kingdom a Brahmin boy. In case a poor Brahmin be willing, out of his love for money, to give over his son, then give him any amount he wants and bring his son. O Minister! By all means, bring a Brahmin boy for this sacrifice; in other words, do not be miserly or act lazily to perform my business. You should pray to any Brahmin thus Take this money and give your son, who will be sacrificed in a sacrificial ceremony as a victim.” Thus ordered, the minister sought for a Brahmin boy in towns after towns, villages after villages, and houses after houses. Till, at last, he came to know that in his kingdom there was a poor distressed Brahmin named Ajigarta, who had three sons. Then the minister gave to the Brahmin that he wanted and purchased his second son named S’unahs’epha and brought him before the King. And handed him over to the King, saying that this Brahmin boy is fit for the sacrificial victim. The King then gladly brought the best Brahmins versed in the Vedas for the performance of the sacrifice, and collected all the articles requisite for the purpose. When the sacrifice was commenced, the great Muni VisVamitra, seeing S’unahs’epha tied, prohibited the King and said - “O King! Do not be so bold as to sacrifice this boy; let this boy be free. O long-lived One! I am asking this thing from you today and if you obey it, certainly it will do good to you. O King! This boy S’unahs’epha is crying; his cries are paining my heart and I am feeling pity for him. Hear my word and free this boy out of mercy.

See! The purehearted Ksattriyas, in ancient days, used to sacrifice their own bodies and thus preserve others’ bodies, so that they might attain the Heavens. And now you are killing this Brahmin boy forcibly so that you may preserve your own body; judge how vicious is this your act! Be merciful to this boy. O King! Everyone likes his own body to the same extent; you are feeling this yourself;

therefore if you take my word, then quit this boy."

25-36. Vyasa said O King! The King Haris'chandra was ailing very much; hence be did not pay any heed to the Muni's words and did not quit the boy. Thereupon the very fiery spirited VisVamitra became very angry with the King. Then VisVamitra, the son of Kus'ika, the foremost of the knowers of the Vedas, shewed mercy on S'unahs'epha and gave him the "Varuna Mantram." S'unahs'epha, very much afraid to lose his life, earnestly repeatedly remembered Varuna and uttered that mantram in pluta tone (lengthened or prolonged). Varuna, too, the ocean of mercy, knowing that the Brahmin boy was praising him with hymns came up to that spot and freed S'unahs'epha from his bondage and freed the King also from his disease and went back to his own abode. Thus the Maharsi Vis'vamitra became very glad to rescue the Muni's son from the jaws of death. The King Haris'chandra did not observe the words of Vis'vamitra; hence the son of Gadhi harboured within his heart anger towards the King. One day while the King Haris'chandra was riding in a forest and there, at midday, on the banks of the river Kaus'ik, when he desired to kill a boar, Vis'vamitra in the garb of an old Brahmin asked from him everything that he had, including his dominion and thus cunningly took away everything from the King. The Maharsi Vas'istha, seeing his Yajamana Haris'chandra suffering much, became wounded and felt pain in his mind. One day when he met casually with Vis'vamitra in a forest, he said "O wicked Ksattriya! A disgrace to your family! You have in vain put on the garb of a Brahmin; your religion is like a crane; you ate full of vanity; you boast for nothing. The best of kings, Haris'chandra is my client; be is faultless; still, O Fool! Why are you giving him so much trouble. As you are religious as a crane is religious, so take your birth as a crane." Vis'vamitra, thus cursed by Vas'istha, cursed Vas'istha in return, and said "O Vas'istha! As long as I will remain a crane, so long you also remain as S'arali or Adi bird."

37-42. Vyasa said O King! The two angry Munis thus cursed each other and the two were born as Crane and S'arali or Adi bird. The crane Vis'vamitra built its nest on the top of a tree on the Manasarovara lake and began to live there. Vas'istha, too, assumed the form of an Adi bird, and built his nest on the top of another tree and lived there. Thus the two Risis spent their days in full enmity towards each other. These two birds used to shriek so terribly loud that they became a nuisance to all; they fought daily with each other. They used to strike each other with beaks and wings and nails and thus they were covered all over their bodies with cuts and wounds and they were smeared with blood. They began to look like Kims'uka trees. Thus the two Risis, in the shape of birds, in their states of bondage, due to each other's curse, passed many years there.

43. Janamejaya said "O Brahmana! Kindly tell me how Vas'istha and Kaus'ika, the two Risis, became free from their curses; I am very curious to hear this."

44-54. Vyasa said Brahma, the Grandsire of his subjects, came there with all the Devas, filled with mercy, on seeing those two Risis at war against each other. Brahma, the Lotus-seated, made them desist from such a fight, consoled them and freed both of them from each other's curses. Then the Devas went back to their own abodes and the illustrious lotus-seated Brahma went to the Satyaloka, seated on his Swan. Maharsi Vas'istha and Vis'vamitra became then friends and were tied with bonds of affection at the advice of Brahma; they went back to their own As'ramas. O King! Now see, that the Maharsi Vas'istha, the son of Mitra-Varuna, fought for nothing with Vis'vamitra, so painful to both the parties. Who, then, amongst the human beings, the Danavas or the Devas can conquer his Ahamkara (egoism) and be always happy? Therefore the Chitta- S'uddhi, the purity of the heart (that purity which imparts to man the blessedness of God-vision) is very difficult even for the high-souled persons; with the greatest caution and utmost effort one has to practise for that. To those persons, that are void of this Chitta S'uddhi, it is all vain to go to places of pilgrimage, to make charities, to practise tapasya, to be truthful; in fact, anything, which is the means to attain Dharma, becomes useless. O King! S'raddha (Faith) is of three kinds (1) Sattviki, (2) Rajasiki and (3) Tamasiki to all persons in all their religious matters. The Sattvik faith is the only one of the three that yields entire results; and it is very rare in this world. The Rajasik faith, done according to due rules, yields half the results thereof and the Tamasik faith is fruitless and inglorious; the Tamasik faith arises with those persons that are overwhelmed with lust, anger, greed, etc. Therefore, O King! Keep to the company of the good and hear the S'astras, Vedanta, etc., and free the heart of worldly desires and then concentrate it to the worship of the Devi and live in a sacred place of pilgrimage. Men afraid and troubled with the defects of the Kaliyuga, should always take the name of the Devi, sing praises, and meditate on Her lotus feet. Thus the JTvas will not have any fear of Kali and the fallen vicious persons will easily be able to cross this ocean of the world and be free. There is no doubt in this.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the description of the battle between Adi and Baka after the discourse on S'unahs'epha in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Mahapuranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Janamejaya said "O Bhagavan! Maharsi Vas'istha was the mind-born son of Brahma; how is it then that you have named him as Maitra-Varuni. Is it that he got this name by some action or by some Gunas? Kindly tell me the origin of this name, O Best of speakers!"

3-4. Vyasa said O King! It is quite true that the illustrious Vas'istha was the noble son of Brahma but he had to quit that body due to the curse of the King Nimi and he had to take a second body from Mitra Varuna; hence he is named in this world as Maitra-Varuni.

5-6. The King said "O Bhagavan! How was it that the religious Vas'istha, the best of the Munis, the son of Brahma was cursed by the King? Oh! The Munis have to suffer the dreadful curse of Ksattriya kings! This seems very wonderful to me. O Knower of Dharma! Why did that king curse the innocent Muni? I am very curious to hear the cause of this; kindly tell me the cause of the curse."

7-30. Vyasa said O King! I told you already in particular all the causes of these. This Samsara is pervaded by the three Gunas of Maya, Sattva, Raja and Tama. Whether the kings practise their Dharma or the ascetics practise their tapas, all their actions are interpenetrated with these Gunas; therefore they cannot shine so brightly. The Kings, Munis performed very severe penances and austerities under the influence of lust, anger, greed and Ahamkara. O King! All, whether they be the Ksattriyas or the Brahmanas, who perform their sacrifices overpowered with this Rajo Guna, really.

none of thenn performs these actions guided by Sattva Guna. The King Nimi was cursed by the Risi and the Risi was cursed again by the King Nimi; thus they met with greater calamities and painful sufferings, the fruits from the hands of the powerful Fate. O King! In this world of the three Gunas, it is very difficult for the beings to get the Dravya S'uddhi, Kriya S'uddhi, and the pure effulgent Chitta S'uddhi, O King! Know this as the influence wielded by the Highest S'akti, the Mother of this Universe. Nobody is able to overstep it; but he, whom She favours, can cross in a moment this world, bounded by the three Gunas. What more can be said than the fact that Hah, Hara, and Brahma and the other Gods cannot free themselves without Her grace. Moreover, the sinners like Satyavrata and others become free when Her Grace comes upon them. Nobody in these three worlds can know what reigns in Her mind; again, this is also a certain fact that She gets Herself bound by Her own will to Her devotees. Therefore it is extremely desirable that one should have recourse to Sattviki devotion for the complete removal of faults and sins. And as the devotion with attachment and vanity is always injurious to men, therefore it is highly beneficial to quit it; there is no doubt in this. O King! There was a king named Nimi, born of the family of Iksaku. He was beautiful, well qualified, virtuous, truthful, charitable, endearing to his people, a sacrificer, of pure conduct and manners, ready to govern his subjects, intelligent and endowed with knowledge. For the benefit of the Brahmanas, that high-souled king established a city named Jayantupur in close vicinity to the hermitage of Gautama. Thus some time passed when this Rajasik idea arose in his mind that "I will perform a sacrifice extending for a good many years when I will give exhorbitant Daksinas (remunerations to the priests and Brahmins).” Getting permission from his own father Iksaku, he began to collect all the ingredients necessary for the sacrifice, as advised by the high-souled persons. He invited the all-knowing Munis and ascetics, versed in the Vedas and in conducting sacrifices, e.g., Bhrigu, Angira, Vamadeva, Gautama, Vas’istha, Pulastya, Richika, Pulaha, Kratu and others, all well-versed in the Vedas. Then that religious King Nimi, collecting all the materials necessary for sacrifice worshipped his own Guru Vas’istha and then spoke to him (the Guru) with great humility. O Best of Munis! I will perform a sacrifice; kindly perform this my sacrificial act; you are my Guru and therefore you know everything; so do this sacrifice for me. All the articles for this purpose are brought and cleansed. O Guru! Know that for five thousand years I mean to be engaged in this sacrifice, this is my Sankalpa (will). I will worship the Goddess Ambika in this sacrifice and for Her satisfaction I am arranging for it according to the prescribed rules. Hearing the King Nimi’s words, Vas’istha said “O best of Kings! Indra, the King of the Devas, has already selected me for his sacrificial ceremony. Now Indra is ready to do the sacrifice for the propitiation of the Highest S’akti and I have initiated him for five hundred years. Therefore, O King! You will have to wait till I complete the Indra’s Yajha. After fully completing all his works, I will come here.

Therefore, O King! Wait till then.”

31-42. The King said “O Best of Munis! I have already invited other Munis for this sacrifice and have collected all the materials; how, then, can I wait for you? O Brahmana! You are the foremost of those versed in the Vedas and you are the family Guru of the noble Iksaku. How is it, then, avoiding my work you are ready to go elsewhere O Best of Brahmins! Under the uncontrollable greed of wealth you have lost all senses and you are ready to go away without doing my work. This does not behove you.” O King! Though thus tempted by the King Nimi, the Risi Vas’istha went to the Indra’s sacrifice. The King, too, became absent-minded and selected for the sacrifice the Risi Gautama. He then commenced his sacrificial ceremony close to the ocean by the side of the Himalayan range and gave profusely the Daksinas. The King Nimi was engaged in this sacrificial act for five thousand years. In this the Rittviks (priests) were worshipped with sufficient wealth and cows; they were extremely glad. Then, when the five hundred years extending sacrifice of Indra was completed, the Risi Vas’istha came to see the King Nimi’s sacrifice and waited there to see the King. The king was then asleep; so the servants did not awake him from his sleep; and the King did not come to the Risi. Feeling insult at this, the Maharsi Vas’istha became infuriated with rage. Not seeing the King, he became very angry; and, subject to this, he cursed the King, When I am your lifelong Guru, especially when I prohibited you and you have forsaken me and selected another Guru and by your sheer force you are initiated, then be devoid of your body. Let your body fall off today.

43-50. Vyasa said The King’s attendants, hearing thus the curse given by Vas’istha to the King, instantly awoke him from his sleep and informed him that the Risi Vas’istha not seeing you, became very angry. The King Nimi, quite sinless, went then to the angry Vas’istha and humbly spoke to him the following reasonable words, pregnant with meaning. O Knower of Dharma! I am your Yajamana; though I repeatedly requested you to perform my sacrifice, yet you quitted me out of the covetousness and went somewhere else. I cannot be charged with any fault. You are the foremost of Brahmins; and knowing that contentment is the substance of your Dharma, you did not feel ashamed to do this blameable act. You are the son of Brahma; and, being versed in the Vedas and Vedangas, you are yet unaware of the subtle and very difficult nature of the Brahminic religion. Now you want to cast your own fault on my shoulders and you are trying in vain to curse me. Anger is more to be blamed than Chandala! The wise men should overcome it by all means. When you, infuriated with rage, have been able to curse me for nothing, then I now curse you, "Let your this body, inflamed with anger, drop off." O King! Thus the King cursed the Muni and the Muni cursed the King; and both of them were, therefore, very sorry.

51-52. Vas'istha then became troubled with cares and took shelter with Brahma and informing him about the great curse given by the King Nimi said:-- Father! The King has cursed me saying, "Let your body fall off today. Now the great trouble due to the falling off of the body has arisen. What am to do now?

53-69. O Father! Kindly tell me from whom shall I take my birth and take such means as I can get a body like what I have now. Also by Your unbounded power, do so that I can retain the knowledge in that body as I have at present; You are fully competent to do this." O King! Hearing thus the words of Vas'istha, Brahma spoke thus to his dear son Go and enter into the Tejas (essence) of Mitra Varuna and remain contented; then you will get, in due time, a body not born of any womb and you will be again religious, truthful, knower of the Vedas, all-knowing and worshipped by all; there is no doubt in this. When Brahma said this, the Maharsi Vas'istha bowed down to the Grand Sire, and circumambulating him, went to the abode of Varuna. Then he quitted his excellent body; and, with his subtle body, the part of his Jiva, entered into the body of Mitra Varuna. Then once on a time Urvas'i, exquisitely beautiful and lovely, surrounded by her comrades, went wilfully into the abode of Varuna. Mitra-Varuna, the two Devas became very passionate to see that Apsara (the celestial nymph) endowed with youth and beauty and being enchanted with the arrows of cupid, and, being senseless, addressed to the Deva Kanya Urvas'T, beautiful in all her parts, thus:-- "O Lovely One! Seeing you, we are very much troubled with the arrows of cupid; O Beautiful One! Select us and remain and enjoy here at your pleasure." When they said thus, Urvas'T became attached to them; and, under their control, began to stay in the house of Mitra Varuna. When Urvas'T began to remain there, strongly attached to them, the semen of Mitra Varuna dropped in an uncovered jar. And the two beautiful sons of the Risis were born out of that; Agasti was the first child and Vas'istha the second. Thus, out of the semen of Mitra Varuna, the two ascetics were born. The first Agasti turned out a great ascetic in his childhood and resorted to forest; Iksaku the best of Kings, selected Vas'istha as his family priest. O King! Iksaku, the best of Kings, nursed him for the welfare of his own line; the more so, because to know that he was the Muni Vas'istha; and thus he was very pleased with him. Janamejaya! Thus I have described to you about the getting of another body by Vas'istha, due to the curse of Nimi, and have also described his re-birth in Mitra-Varuna's family.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the birth of Vas'istha from Mitra Varuna in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said “The getting back of another similar body by Vas’istha is certainly described by you. Now tell me how the King Nimi got another body.”

2-31. Vyasa said O King! The Risi Vas’istha only got back his body; but the King Nimi did not get back his body what had been cursed by Vas’istha. The priests engaged at the sacrifice by Nimi began to consider, when the Risi Vas’istha cursed him, in the following way Oh! What a wonderful thing is this? Before the sacrifice is complete, the King Nimi has been cursed; this is against what we had expected; What can we do? What is inevitable must come to pass; how can we thwart it? By various Mantrams, they kept alive the body of the King in which breathing was still going on a little; and they prevented the body from decaying by worshipping the body with various Mantra S’aktis and kept it in a stationary state. When the sacrificial ceremony was completed, the Risis began to praise the gods with hymns whereon the Devas became pleased and came to that spot. When the Munis informed the Devas fully of the condition of the King’s body, the Devas spoke to the sorrowful King thus “O Performer of good vows! We are all pleased with your sacrifice; now ask boons from us. O King! You ought to get an excellent birth as the fruit of performing this sacrifice. So ask what body, the body of a Deva or of a man, you desire? Or you can ask, if you like, for another similar body, that your priest Brihaspati has got quitting his first body whereby he has become proud and is now staying in the Loka of Yama." O King! At these words the King Nimi was very glad and spoke to them thus O Devas! I have no aspiration for the body that is always liable to destruction; I therefore want to reside on the top of the eyelids of all the beings. Therefore I ask this boon that I be able to move in the shape of Vayu (air) on the top of the eyes of all the beings. Thus said, the Devas spoke to the soul of Nimi "O King! Pray to the most auspicious Deity, the Devi, the Highest Goddess. She has been pleased with this sacrifice; therefore your prayer will certainly be granted." Hearing thus, the King began to pray with various hymns with intense devotion, in tremulous voice, the Devi. The Devi became pleased and appeared before him. Seeing Her shining like a crore of suns and looking exceedingly lovely and beautiful, all the persons there became very happy. They began to think themselves as very blessed and as having done all what they had to do. Knowing the Devi Bhagavati pleased, the King asked this boon from her"O Devi! Give me that knowledge, pure and simple, whereby final liberation is obtained. Also, I may be able to reside on the top of the eyes of all the beings." The Devi, the Lord of the Devas, the Mother of the World being highly pleased, said thus "O King! At the expiry of this your Prarabdha Karma, you will acquire pure knowledge and you will reside on the tops of the eyes in the shape of Vayu, and through your residing there the beings will twinkle, i.e., open and close their eyes. The men, beasts, and birds will twinkle due to your residing there; but the Immortals will always remain with a steadfast gaze; they will not twinkle." Thus granting him the boon, and addressing all the Munis the Bhagavati, the Highest Deity, disappeared. When the Devi disappeared from their sight, the Munis then thought much and they took the body of the King Nimi to burn it duly. For the sake of getting a son from Nimi, the high-souled Munis performed Homa ceremony (oblations to the fire) and placing the piece of wood Arani on his body began to utter Mantrams and burned his body. When the woods were thus burned, a son, endowed with all auspicious signs, looking like a second Nimi, was born to them. As this son was born due to the burning of the Aranis, the boy was named Mithi, and as it came out of the body of Janaka, the boy was named Janaka. O King! As the King Nimi lost his body, i.e., became Videha through the curse of Vas'istha, all his descendants were known as Videha. Thus the son of Nimi was well known as the King Janaka. He built a beautiful city on the banks of the Ganges; the city became famous also by his name (Janakapuri). The King Janaka beautified this city with many forts, arcades, markets and many nice buildings and palaces; and his city was full of wealth and grains. O King! All the Kings of this line became famous by the name of Janaka and all were endowed with the Supreme knowledge and known as Videha. O King! I have now described to you the story of the King Nimi who got disembodiedness (Videhatva) out of the curse.

32-35. The King said "O Bhagavan! You have described the cause why the King Nimi was cursed; my mind has grown very doubtful and restless on hearing it. The Risi Vas'istha was the son of Brahma and the best of the Brahmins; especially he was the royal priest; how was it, then, that he was cursed by the King! Why did not the King Nimi forgive him as he was the Guru and a Brahmin? Why he became angry, when he performed such a great, auspicious sacrifice? He was born of the family of Iksaku and he knew well the truths of the religion; then how was it that he became subject to anger and cursed his own Guru Brahmin."

36-46. Vyasa said O King! It is very hard and rare for the persons not possessed of self-restraint to forgive; especially when one is fully capable, it is very rare to find one in the three worlds, who can forgive. He who has forsaken all attachments and has conquered hunger and sleep and is always engaged in the Yoga practices, even that ascetic Muni is not capable to conquer completely lust, anger and greed and Ahamkara, etc., the passions raging in the mortal coil. None existed before in this whole world who conquered his passions! None exists now and none will be born ever-after. Hardly will be seen any in this earth, or the Heavens, or the Loka of Brahma or in Vaikuntha, even in Kailasa, that has conquered completely his passions! What can be said in regard to the ordinary mortals of this earth when the sons of Brahma, the Maharsis, ascetics, Risis are all pierced by the Sattva, Rajas, or Tamo Gunas. Behold! The Kapila was the Knower of S'ankhya and always engaged in his Yoga practices and he was a pure and holy soul; yet, by strange combinations of Fate, he became angry and burnt to ashes the sons of the King Sagara. O King! Out of Ahamkara, these three worlds are created; therefore this world and Ahamkara are related to each other as effect and cause; how then the Jivas that are born of this Samsara can extricate themselves from this Ahamkara? Brahma, Visnu and Mahes'a are also pierced by those three Gunas; different feelings are seen in their different bodies. Therefore it need hardly be said that the manifestation of the pure Sattva Guna alone is not to be seen in any of the human beings; for the three Gunas reside in a mixed way in all persons. Sometimes the Sattva preponderates; sometimes the Rajas and sometimes the Tamas preponderates. Sometimes they reside together, the three balancing one other.

47-63. O King! Only that Eternal Highest Purusa is undecaying and untainted and can hardly be measured or seen by all the beings. That Highest Soul, the Highest of the High, is Nirguna (void of the three Gunas); and She who resides in all the beings and is hardly knowable by the small intellectual persons, that Highest S'akti, the Incarnate of Brahma, is also Nirguna (void of attributes). Paramatma (the Highest Soul) and the Highest Force are also One; their Forms are not different. When such a knowledge arises, then the Jivas can be free from all sins and faults and blemishes. From that knowledge comes the liberation, this is sounded in the Vedanta S'astra like Dindima S'abda (thousands of small drums). He, who comes to know That, is freed from the endless cycle of birth and death composed of the three Gunas; there is no doubt in this.

O King! Knowledge is of two kinds The first is considered as coming from sound; this comes out of the knowledge of the meaning of the Vedas by the help of intellect. But this is full of fancies.

agreements and doubts some of which are bad and some are good. The beings are led into errors by these discussions; errors cause destruction of intellect; and when the intellect is gone, the knowledge also goes away with it. Whereas the second kind of knowledge comes from intention or feeling within the depths of heart and brain and it is called Aparoksa Jhana. This knowledge is very rare to the beings. When one comes in contact with a Sad-Guru (a good teacher), then one gets this Aparoksa Jhana. From the sound knowledge, no successful results can issue; and, therefore it cannot give Aparoksa Jhana. Hence great effort is to be made for getting this Aparoksa Jhana. O King! As darkness cannot be destroyed merely by talking of light, without lighting any lamp, so the knowledge of sound merely cannot destroy the darkness of the inside. That Karma (action) is called True Karma which does not lead to bondage, and that Knowledge is the True Knowledge which leads to liberation. Other actions are only meant for one's own selfish enjoyments and other knowledges are merely the skill in arts. Good behaviour, doing good to others, having no anger, forgiveness, patience, and contentment are the best brilliant fruits of True Knowledge. O King! Without knowledge, without asceticism, and without the Yoga practices, the lust and other passions can never be destroyed. The minds of the JTvas are naturally restless and without control; all the beings are completely under the sway of their minds; thus they roam on the surface of the earth as good, middling and bad. Lust, anger, etc., orginate from this mind; and when mind is conquered, then those feelings can no more arise. O King! Therefore it was that Yayati forgave when S'ukracharya did wrong before. The King Nimi could not forgive Vas'istha in the same way. Yayati; the best of kings, though cursed by S'ukracharya, the son of Bhrigu, did not curse in return but he took upon himself the old age. O King! Some kings are naturally peaceful, whereas some other kings are wicked by their nature. Therefore, in this matter, whose fault is this, how can we ascertain? See! In ancient times the Haihayas, out of their greed of wealth, and being thus insensible destroyed completely, out of anger, the Brahmin priests of the family of Bhrigu. What more than this that those Ksattriyas did not consider the sin

Brahmahattya; rather out of their dire anger, they cut to pieces the sons of those Brahmanas, that were in embryos in their mother's wombs.

Here ends the Fifteenth Chapter in the Sixth Book on the Nimi's getting of another body and the beginning of the story of Haihayas, in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Janamejaya said In whose family were born those Ksattriya Haihayas that killed in ancient times the Bhargavas, disregardless of the sin incurred in killing a Brahmin? O Grandsire! Never do the good persons become angry without a serious cause; therefore kindly state why they got angry. How was the enmity caused between them and the priests? As far as I can think, the cause is not so simple a one as led to this enmity between the Ksattriyas and the priests. Otherwise why then would they slay the offenseless Brahmins, fit to be worshipped; and how was it that the Ksattriyas, though they were so very powerful, did not fear to commit a sin. O Muni! Can any Ksattriya Chief kill a Brahmin, worthy of the highest respect, merely on a trifling cause! Describe to me, then, how this happened. A great doubt has thus arisen in my mind.

6. Suta said O Risis! Vyasa, the son of Satyavati, became very pleased when he was asked this question by Janamejaya, and, recollecting the whole course of events regarding the Haihayas, began to narrate it.

7-22. Vyasa said O son of Pariksit! I will now narrate that wonderful story of old that I know fully; now hear this very attentively. In ancient times there was a King named Kartaviryarjuna of the family of Haihaya. He was of thousand hands, powerful, and always ready to observe religious duties. He was the incarnation of Hah, and the disciple of Maharsi Dattatreya and the worshipper of the Supreme Force (Adya S'akti). He was well known as a perfect adept in the Yoga practices and of a very charitable disposition. But this King was the client of the Brahmins of the Bhargava clan. He was always devoted to performing sacrifices, exceedingly religious, and always engaged in making gifts. So many a time did he perform the great sacrifices and gave a profuse quantity of wealth to the Bhargavas. Due to the gifts and presents of Karta Virya, the Bhargava priests became possessed of many horses, and gems and jewels and so became wealthy and prosperous on the surface of this earth. O King! When Kartaviryarjuna, the best of Kings, left the mortal coil and got up to Heavens, his descendants became entirely void of any wealth by the indomitable influence of Time. Now, on a certain occasion, the Haihayas had to perform certain actions which necessitated a vast sum of money; they came to the Bhargavas and humbly prayed for a very large amount of wealth. But the Brahmins, out of their greed of money, replied they had no money and thus they did not give any money whatsoever. Rather the Bhargavas thought that the Haihayas would perforce take their wealth, and, fearing thus, some of them buried all their valuables underneath the ground; and others gave as charities to the Brahmanas. The greedy Bhargavas, bewildered with fear, thus transferred all their properties elsewhere, quitted their homes and fled away to mountains and other places. The greedy Brahmins did not give any wealth to their Yajamanas (their clients) though they saw them very much distressed; but they fled away out of fear to mountains and fastnesses where they found shelter. At last the Haihayas, the best of the Ksattriyas, became very sorry till, at last, for the sake of their good actions, they went to the Bhargavas' houses for the sake of money and found they had quitted their homes and fled away; their homes were all vacant. Then they began to dig underneath their houses for money and some got the money thus. Then the Ksattriyas began to labour hard and got hordes of money from underneath the ground. Next they raided upon other Brahmanas' houses and dug and excavated and searched for more money. The Brahmins were helpless and, crying, all took their refuge, out of fear, under the Bhargavas.

23-42. The Ksattriyas made an exhaustive search of the Brahmanas' houses and got lots of money. They then charged the Brahmanas as having had spoken falsehood and they became very angry, and killed the Brahmanas with arrows who took their refuge. O King! The Haihayas were so very angry at that time that they went wherever the Bhargavas took their shelter and cut asunder the foetus in the wombs of their Bhargavas' wives and thus they roamed all over on the surface of the earth. Wherever they saw any Bhargava, be he a minor, or a youth or a old man, at once they killed him with sharp arrows, disregarding the sin Brahmahattya. When the Bhargavas were thus all killed, then they caught hold of their wives that were pregnant and destroyed their wombs. When the vicious Ksattriyas thus destroyed the lives in their wombs, the helpless women began to cry like the awe-stricken ewe. Then the other Munis, the inhabitants of the sacred places of pilgrimages, seeing the Haihaya Ksattriyas inflamed with anger, said "O Ksattriyas! Quit your terrible anger towards the Brahmins. Being the best of the Ksattriyas, you are killing the foetus in the wombs of the pregnant Brahmana ladies! You are doing, no doubt, a very vicious and unjustifiable act! You should know that an act, very bad or very good, bears fruit in this life; therefore those that seek their welfare should entirely omit this exceedingly hateful and vicious act." Then the exceedingly angry Haihayas told the merciful ascetics You all are saints; therefore you do not know the real import of what are called vicious acts.

Those Bhargavas, thoroughly dexterous in cunning pursuits, deceived our largehearted forefathers and stole away all their gold and jewels, as thieves do with a passerby on a road. These Bhargavas are cheats, vain persons and their persuasions are like herons. A great act had to be done by us and we wanted money at 25 per cent interest with all the becoming humility; yet they did not give us the money; rather seeing on their face their clients distressed and sorrowful they spoke that they had no money, no money and then they remained silent. True, they got all their money from Kartavirya; but it may be questioned why they stored it? Why did not they perform sacrifices with that? Why did not they give sufficient money to the other priests (Yayakas) that did the sacrifices. Never should any Brahmin hoard his money; he should give that in charity and enjoy at his pleasure. O Twice-born! In amassing wealth, there exist three fears Fear from the thieves and robbers, fear from the King, fear from dreadful fire accidents, and especially great terrible fear from the cheats. This is the nature of wealth; it leaves its preserver. See, moreover, when a hoarder of money dies, he certainly has to quit it. If a wealthy man, before dying, performs sacrifices and other good pious acts by his earned money, then he gets certainly good states in future; otherwise, he quits his wealth, to no purpose and earns a bad state in his future life; there is no doubt in this. We humbly wanted to pay a quarter interest and asked money for the performance of a great act; yet they, the greedy ones, were doubtful about our promise; and though our priests, they did not give us the money. O Maharsis! Gift, enjoyment and destruction, these are the three courses which any wealth has to pass through; those persons that have done good deeds, enjoy their wealth and give as charities and thus they make a good and real use of their money; and of those that are vicious, their wealth goes away in ruin and to no purpose. He who does not enjoy nor give in charities but is only clever in hoarding and who is a miser, the Kings punish him by all means, that man who cheats himself and who suffers only pains and miseries. For that reason, we are now ready to kill those Brahmins, the vilest of men, the cheats, though they are our Gurus. O Maharsis! You are great persons; therefore you do not be angry after you have come to know all these.

43-51. Vyasa said Thus consoling the Munis, with reasonable words, the Haihayas began to roam about, in search of the wives of the Bhargavas. The Bhargava wives were very much distressed with fear and became very lean and thin. They fled away to the Himalayan Mountain weeping, and crying, and trembling with fear. Thus the Bhargavas were being killed by those vicious greedy Haihayas, infuriated with anger, and as they liked. O King! This greed is the greatest enemy of a man, residing in his own body; this greed is the root of all evils, of all sins. Life is in danger due to this covetousness. It is due to this greed that quarrels ensue amongst the several castes, the Brahmins, etc., and that the human beings are very much troubled with thirst after worldly enjoyments. This greed makes a man forsake all his religious rites and long existing customs and observances of his family; and it is due to this avarice of gold that men kill their fathers, mothers, brothers, friends. Gurus, sons, acquaintances, sisters, and sisters-in-law and others. Really when a man is bent on avarice, nothing heinous remains to him that cannot be done by him. This greed is a more powerful enemy than anger, lust and egoism. O King! Men abandon their lives for their greed; what more can be said than this? So one should be always alert on this. O King! Your forefathers, the Pandavas and Kauravas, were all religious and they followed the path of virtue and goodness. Yet they all were ruined simply for this greed. See! The dreadful fight and separation amongst the relatives took place where there were the high-souled persons like Bhisma, Drona, Kripacharya, Kama, Vahlika, Bhimasena, Yudhisthira, Arjuna, and Kes'ava, only through the avaricious feelings. In this battle Bhisma, Drona and the sons of Pandavas were all slain; the brothers and fathers were all slain in battle. Thus what improper acts and mischiefs can there be that cannot be committed when the human minds are overpowered by this greed? O King! The vicious Haihayas slew the Bhargavas all through this avarice.

English translation

1-3. Janamejaya said “Munis! How did the Bhargava wives cross this endless sea of troubles and how was the family of Bhrigu re¬ established on the surface of this earth? And what did the greedy Haihayas, the vilest of the Ksattriyas, do after they killed the Bhargavas? Describe all these in detail and satisfy my curiosity. O Thou, Ocean of austerities! I am not satisfied with the drink of your nectar like words, very holy and leading to happiness in this world and to good merits in the next.”

4-28. Vyasa said O King! I will now narrate to you the sin destroying virtuous story how the Bhargava wives crossed their great hardships and the ocean of troubles, very difficult to cross. The Bhargava wives, when they were very much harassed by the Haihayas, went to the Himalayas, overwhelmed with terror and disappointment. There on that mountain they erected an earthen image of S’ri Gauri Devi by the banks of the Ganges and worshipped Her and, firmly resolved to die, began to fast. The Devi Jagadambika appeared to those religious women in their dreams and said “A son will be born of My essence to one of you from one of her thighs; that son will redress all your wants.” Thus speaking, the Devi Bhagavati disappeared. Those women when they woke up were very glad; one of them that appeared very clever, becoming very much anxious out of the fear of the Ksattriyas; preserved the foetus in one of her thighs for the propagation of the family. Her body became luminous; she then fled, overwhelmed with terror. The Ksattriyas, seeing that Brahmani, came quickly upon her and said “See! This pregnant Bhargava wife is flying away hastily; seize her and take away her life.” Thus saying, all of them raised their axes, and pursued her. Then that woman seeing them coming, wept out of fear. She cried, out of terror, for the preservation of the child in her womb; and the child seeing her mother helpless and distressed, trembling with fear and with tears in her eyes having no one to protect her and awfully oppressed by the Ksattriyas as if a pregnant deer has been attacked by a lion and is crying about, angrily burst out of the thigh of his mother, and quickly came out like a second Sun. That good looking boy took away the power of sight of those Ksattriyas by his brilliant lustrous light; no sooner the Haihayas saw that boy than they got blind. Like those that are born blind; they then began to roam in the caves of mountains and thought within themselves, what an evil turn of Fate had overtaken them! They thought thus “Oh! The mere sight of that boy has turned us blind; what a great wonder is this! Certainly this is due to the influence of the Brahmini wife; this is, no doubt, the great effect of her virtue of chastity. We have greatly oppressed the Bhargava women. They have become very sorry and distressed; now we cannot tell what more evils do these women, of true resolve, inflict on us!” Thus pondering, those Ksattriyas deprived of their eyes, helpless, and their minds bewildered, took refuge of those Brahmin ladies. The ladies, seeing them again come, were the more terrified; but those Ksattriyas bowed down before them with folded hands for the restoration of their sights and said "O Mother! We are your servants. Be gracious unto us. O Auspicious Ones! We are vicious Ksattriyas; O Mothers! What an amount of offence we have committed to you. O Beautiful Ones! We have become blind, no sooner we have seen you. O Angry Ones! No more we can see your lotus-like faces, as if we are born blind; O Mother! The spirit of your asceticism is so very wonderful! We are sinners; therefore by no means we can get our sight; therefore we have taken refuge unto you all; better give us back our eyesight and preserve our honour. O Mother! Blindness is more dreadful than death; therefore do you show your mercy on us. Be pleased unto us and restore our eyesights and make us your slaves; no sooner we get back our sights, we will cease from these vicious acts and go to our homes. In future, we will never commit such heinous acts; from today we all become servants of the Bhargavas and we will serve them. Forgive all our sins that we committed unconsciously; we promise that, in future, there will no more be any enmity between the Bhargavas and Ksattriyas. O good-looking Ones! You pass your days happily with your sons; we ever bow down before you. O Auspicious Ones! Be graciously pleased unto us; no more we will cherish any inimical feelings towards you."

29-44. Vyasa said O King! The Bhargava lady heard their words and was thunderstruck and seeing those Ksattriyas bowing down before her, blind and distressed, consoled them and said, "O Ksattriyas! I have not taken away your sights nor am I displeased in any way with you. Now hear what is the real cause. This child of Bhargava, born of my thigh, is exceedingly angry towards you and has therefore made your eyesight still and to no purpose. For the greed of wealth, you have slain the close relatives of this boy, those that were quite innocent and virtuous ascetics and you have slain their children that were in their mothers' wombs; this boy has come to know all those things. O children! When you were slaying the children of the Bhargavas in their mothers' wombs, I then bore within my thighs this child for one hundred years. This son of mine though as yet in the womb, has mastered all the Vedas within so very short a time for the propagation of the Bhargava clan. Now this Bhargava son is infuriated with anger for your slaying his father and is now ready to kill you all. My son! Whose divine effulgence has destroyed your eyesights, is born of grace of the Highest Goddess, the Bhagavati Bhuvanes'vari; therefore do not consider this boy as an ordinary being. Now bow down with humility before this my son Aurvya (born from the thighs); this son may be pleased by your bowing down and may restore you your eyesights.

Vyasa said:-- O King! Hearing thus the words of the Brahmin lady, the Haihayas began to praise the boy with hymns. With great humility, they bowed down to the best of the Munis, born of the thighs. The Risi Aurvya, then, became pleased and spoke thus to the Haihayas who were deprived of their eyesights "Better go back to your own homes. O Kings! And read these following words derived from my this story. Whatever is inevitable and created by the hands of gods must come to pass. Knowing this, no one ought to be sorrowful on any such matters. Let you all regain your eyesights as before and forego your anger and go to your own homes respectively at your own will. Let the Risis, too, get peace and happiness as before." When the Maharsi Aurvya ordered thus, the Haihayas got back their eyesights and went at their leisure to their own homes; on the other hand the Brahmin lady went to her own hermitage, with her Divine-spirited child and began to nourish him. O King! Thus I have described to you the story of the killing of the Bhargavas and how the Ksattriyas, actuated by greed, did so very vicious acts.

45-48. Janamejaya said "O Ascetic! Hearing this exceedingly heart-rending act of the Ksattriyas, I come to know, that greed is the sole cause of it and both the parties had suffered so much, simply out of this insatiable greed. O King of Munis! I want to ask you one more question in regard to this point. How the sons of the Kings came to be known Haihayas in this world? Amongst the Ksattriyas, some are called Yadavas for they ware descended from the family of Yadu; some were known as Bharata, for they were descended from Bharata. But was some king named Haihaya born before in their family or were they known as such on account of other actions? I desire to hear of it. Kindly describe this to me and oblige."

49-56. Vyasa said O King! I am describing in detail to you of the origin of the Haihayas. Hear. The sins are destroyed and the merits accrue on hearing this story. O King! Once on a time Revanta, the son of the Sun, very beautiful and of boundless lustre, was going to Visnu in Vaikuntha, mounted on the beautiful Uchchais'rava, the jewel of the horses. When he was going on horseback with a desire to see the God Visnu, the Goddess Laksmi saw that child of the Sun. The Goddess Laksmi, born out of the churning of the ocean, on looking at the beautiful appearance of her brother Horse, also born out of the churning of the ocean, became very much astonished and steadily gazed on him. The Bhagavan Visnu, capable to show both favour and disfavour, saw the beautiful Revanta, of good figure, coming on horseback; and lovingly asked Laksmi "O Beautiful One! Who is coming here on horseback, as it were, enchanting to the three worlds!" At that time, the Goddess Laksmi was accidentally looking intently on the horse; so she did not reply, though repeatedly asked by the Bhagavan.

57-68. The Laksmi Devi, always restless, was very much intent on the horse and was enchanted and She was looking steadily with great affection on the horse. Seeing this, the Bhagavan became angry and said "O Beautiful-eyed One! What you are looking at so intently? Are you so much enchanted with the sight of the horse that you are not speaking to me a single word, though I am repeatedly asking you so often! You lovingly dwell on all the objects; hence your name is Rama; your mind is also very restless, therefore you would be known as Chanchala Devi (the restless Devi). O Auspicious One! You are restless like ordinary women; you can never stay steadily for a certain time at any one place. While sitting before Me, you are enchanted with the sight of a horse; then you be born as a mare in that world of men, full of dreadful troubles, on the surface of the earth. The Goddess Laksmi became very much affrightened at the sudden curse given by Hari, a matter as it were ordained by the Devas, and began to cry aloud, shuddering with pain and sorrows. Laksmi Devi, then of sweet smiles, frightened, bowed down with great humility to her own lord Narayana and said thus O Deva of the Devas! O Govinda! You are the Lord of this world and the Ocean of mercy. O Kes'ava! Why have you inflicted on me so dreadful a curse for such a minor fault of mine! O Lord! I never saw you before so very angry; Alas! Where has now gone that affection, so natural and undying, that you showed towards me! O Lord! It is not proper to hurl a thunderbolt on one's own relations; but it is advisable to cast it on the enemies. I am always fit for receiving boons from you. Why have you made me now an object, fit for curse. O Govinda! I will quit this life in Your presence. I will never be able to live, separated from You. O Lord! Be graciously pleased and say when shall I be free from this dreadful curse and regain Your happy companion?

69. The Bhagavan said "O Devi! When you will get a son in the world like me, you will no doubt come again to be my companion."

English translation

1-5. Janamejaya said How did the Goddess Laksmi, the daughter of the ocean, come to be born as a mare, when cursed by the Bhagavan in His moment of anger, and what did Revanta do at that time? In what country was the Devi born as a mare and how did She pass Her time alone like one whose husband had gone abroad. O Muni! How long and in what forest unfrequented by persons did she pass her time, thus deprived of the companion of her husband and what did she do at that time? When was she reconciled with her husband Vasudeva? and how did she get a son, when she lived in a state of separation from her husband. O best of Aryas! I am very curious to hear this excellent story. So describe this in full details to me.

6. Suta said O Risis! Thus questioned by Janamejaya, the Dvaipayan Muni began to recite the story in its full details.

7-24. Vyasa said:-0 King! I will now describe to you the pleasing story of the Puranas in a clear distinct language; hear. Revanta, the son of the Sun, became terrified to see Vasudeva, the Deva of the Devas cursing the Laksmi Devi and, after bowing down to Janardan, the Lord of the world, went off. Seeing the anger of Visnu, the Lord of the world, he went quickly to his father and informed him of the curse delivered by Narayana to the Goddess Laksmi. And the Laksmi Devi, the lotus-eyed, thus cursed, got the permission of Narayana and with a grieved heart bowed down to him and came down to the world of mortals. She took the form of a mare and went to the spot where the wife of the Sun (named Chchaya) practised her asceticism in ancient times. The place was the confluence of the river Kalindi and the Tamasa, and decorated with lovely forests and trees situated north of the mountain named Suparnaksa, yielding all desires. There she meditated with her whole heart the auspicious Mahadeva S'ankara, the Giver of all desires, thus That Mahadeva is holding the Tris'ula (the trident) on his arms; His forehead is adorned with beautiful cooling semi-Moon; He has five faces, each face having three eyes; His throat is coloured blue; He has ten arms; His body is white like camphor; He wears a tiger's skin; His upper garment is of elephant's skin; and snakes are his holy thread; He is holding the one-half of the body of Gauri and his neck is adorned with garlands of human skulls. The Goddess Laksmi, the daughter of the ocean, assuming the form of a mare, thus practised severe asceticism in that place of pilgrimage. O King! With a feeling of intense dispassion (Vairagyam) towards the worldly things. She spent the divine one thousand years in the meditation of Mahadeva, the God of the Gods. After that period, the Highest Lord Mahadeva, mounting on His bull, came there with His consort Parvati and appeared before the Laksmi Devi, perceptible by his eyes.

Appearing thus with His host of His own persons. He then spoke to Laksmi, dear to Hari, now practising ascetism in the form of a mare, "O Auspicious One! You are the Mother of this whole Universe and your Husband is the Creator of these worlds and is capable to give all desires. Why are You, then, practising asceticism, when He is present? What is the cause of this? O Devi! Why are You praising hymns to me, instead of to Vasudeva S'ri Hari, Who is capable to yield enjoyments and final liberation, and Who is the Preserver and the Lord of this world. O Devi! Work should be done according to the authority of the Vedas; it is stated in the Vedas that the husband is the lord of a woman; therefore it is never advisable to fix one's mind entirely on another person. The eternal Dharma of women is to serve their husbands; whether the husband be a saint or a sinner, the woman, desirous of her welfare, should serve her husband in every way. O Daughter of the Ocean! Your husband Narayana is fit to be served by all and He is capable to yield all desires. Why are you then worshipping Me, and leaving the Lord of the Goloka, the Deva of the Devas."

25-32. Laksmi said O Deva of the Devas! O Seat of Auspiciousness! I know that You are soon pleased with Your servant. My husband has cursed me. O Ocean of mercy! Kindly save me from this curse. O S'ambhu! When I informed my husband of my mental agonies, graciously and mercifully He then pointed out how I might be freed of this curse thus "O Kamale! When Your son will be born, then You will be freed of this curse and will, no doubt, come back and live in this Heaven of Vaikuntha." Thus spoken, I have come in this hermitage to make tapas and to worship Thee, knowing that Thou art the Bhagavan, the Lord of Bhavani, the Lord of all and the Giver of all desires. O Lord of the Devas! How can I get a son without the intercourse of My husband? Though I am guiltless, my husband has forsaken me and is living in Vaikuntha. O MahesVara! Thou art doing good to all persons; and if Thou art pleased with me, then grant me a boon. O Lord! I know full well that there is no distinction between Him and Thee. O Lord of Girija! This truth I have come to learn from my husband. O Hara! You are the same thing that He is and what is He is the same as You; there is not the least doubt in this. O Thou, full of auspiciousness! Recognising the Sameness without any distinction between Him and Thee, I am meditating on Thee. Had it been otherwise, then I would certainly have been guilty when I take Thy refuge and meditate on Thee.

33-36. S'ankara said "O Devi, the daughter of the Ocean! Tell truly before me how you have been able to realise the identity between Him and Me. The Devas, Munis and the Maharsis, versed in the Vedas, get their understandings baffled by wrong argumentations and never realise the identity without any difference between us. Almost everywhere you will perceive that many of my devotees blame me. Specially in this Kali Yuga due to the influence of Time, this happens to a very great extent in many cases. O Auspicious One! Let that go! How have you come to know this matter, which is difficult even for the liberal-minded persons to comprehend. Know that this perception of the identity between me and Hari is very rare."

37-38. Vyasa said O King! When Mahadeva asked thus with great pleasure, the Devi Kamala, the darling of Hari, gladly replied the essence of the matter to Mahadeva.

39-43. Laksmi said "O Deva of the Devas! One day Bhagavan Visnu, seated in the Padmasana posture, was immersed in deep meditation. I was very much astonished at this. When His meditation was over and when He was in a pleasant mood, I asked Him with great humility, O Deva of the Devas! I know that You are the Lord of the world and Master of this whole Universe; when Brahma and the other Devas were united and churned the great ocean, I came out of the waters and looked all around to know who is the superior one whom I can select as my husband and then, thinking You as the superior to all the Devas, I accepted You as my husband. Now whose meditation You are doing again? A great doubt has thus occurred in my mind. O Lord! You are my most Beloved; now disclose to me your innermost desire and thought."

44-49. Visnu said:-- "O Beloved! Hear now, whom I am meditating. I am meditating in the lotus of My heart that Mahadeva MahesVara, the Highest of all the Devas. Mahadeva, the Deva of the Devas, of indomitable prowess, sometimes meditates on Me and sometimes I meditate on the Lord of the Deva, S'ankara, the Destroyer of Tripura I am dear to S'iva as his life is dear to him and S'ankara is similarly dear to me. The hearts of us both are attached to each other in the most secret way possible; therefore there is not the least difference betwixt us both. O large-eyed One! Those men who being my devotees hate S'ankara, certainly go to hell. I speak this very truly unto you." O Mahes'vara! When I asked him this question when he was all alone, that Deva of the Devas, the Highest Visnu thus said to me. Therefore I am meditating on You, knowing that You are His beloved. O Mahes'a! Now find out means by which I can mix with My husband.

50-59. Vyasa said O King! Mahadeva, skilled in speech, hearing thus the words of Laksmi, consoled Her with sweet words and said - "O Beautiful! Be peaceful; I am pleased with Your tapasya; soon You will come in contact with Your husband. There is not the least doubt in this. When I will send the Bhagavan, the Lord of the world. He will come before you in the shape of a horse, to satisfy your desires. I will send the Madhusudana, the Deva of the Devas, in such a manner, as he will come in the form of a horse, passionately attached to you. O One of good eye brows! Thus you will get a son equivalent to Narayana; and the son will be the King on this earth and will be undoubtedly worshipped by all. O fortunate One! After you get your son, you will go to Vaikuntha with Narayana and will reside there as His Beloved. Your son will be famed by the name of Ekavira; and from him will propagate the Haihaya dynasty on the earth. O Kamale! You were blind by prosperity, and, becoming passionate, you forgot the Devi ParamesVari, residing in your heart. Therefore you have experienced such a result. Therefore, to expiate that sin, take Her refuge by all means. O Devi! If your heart remained attached to the Highest Devi the blissful Bhagavati, your heart would never have got attached to the Uchchais'rava horse. Vyasa said O King! Thus granting boons to Laksmi Devi, He with his consort Lima vanished away in her presence.

60-62. Kamala Devi, lovely in all respects, whose toe nails are always rubbed by the gems on the coronets of the Devas, began to meditate on the lotus-feet of Ambika and in expectation of his beloved Hah, in the shape of a horse, praised and chanted hymns frequently to the Highest Goddess, in words choked with feelings of intense love.

English translation

1-3. Vyasa said O King! Thus granting the boon to the Goddess Laksmi, S’ambhu quickly returned to the lovely Kailas’a, adorned with Apsaras (celestial nymphs) and frequented and served by the Gods. He then despatched his expert attendant Chitrarupa to Vaikuntha to bring the purpose of Laksmi to a successful issue. He said to him thus “O Chitrarupa! Go to Hah and speak to him on my behalf that He would go and remove the sorrows of His distressed and bereaved wife and thus make Her comfortable.”

4-9. Thus ordered, Chitrarupa started immediately and reached at once Vaikuntha, the highest place, covered all over by the Vaisnavas. The place was diversified with lots of various trees, with hundreds of lovely lakes, and echoed with sweet lovely sounds of swans, Karandavas, peacocks, parrots, cuckoos and various other birds and adorned with beautiful places, decked with flags and banners. It was filled with charming dancings, music and other artistic things. There were the lovely Bakula, As’oka, Tilaka, Champaka and other trees; and the beautiful tree Mandara looked beautiful and shed all around the sweet fragrance of its sweet flowers for a long distance. Thus seeing the lovely nice palace of Visnu and the two doorkeepers Jaya and Vijaya standing with canes in their hands, Chitraratha bowed down to them and said Well! You go quickly and inform the Supreme Soul Hah that a messenger has come under the orders of the Bhagavan S’ulapani and is now waiting at His doors.

10-18. Hearing his words, the intelligent Jaya went to Hah and, with folded hands, said “O Thou Ocean of Mercy! O Kes’ava! O Lord of Rama! O Deva of the Devas! A messenger has come from the Lord of Bhavani and is waiting at the doors. I do not not know on what important business he has come. Please order whether I will bring him before You or not. On hearing the Jaya’s words, Hari, aware of the inner feelings, knew at once the cause and said O Jaya! Bring before me the messenger come from Rudra. Thus hearing, Jaya called the S’iva’s servant, of a graceful form, and brought him to the presence of Janardana. Chitrarupa, of variegated appearance, prostrated himself flat before Him in the form of a stick and stood up and remained with folded hands. The Bhagavan Narayana, Whose carrier is Garuda, saw that servant of S’iva, of variegated appearance and full of all humility, and became very much astonished. The Lord of Kamala then smiled and asked Chitrarupa - “O Pure One! Is it all well with Mahadeva, the Lord of the Devas and his other families and attendants? On what business has He sent you here? What does He want me to do? Or tell me if I have to do any other business of the gods.”

19-34. The messenger said “O Thou, the Knower of all that is within one’s heart! There is nothing in this world hidden from Your knowledge; when is that which I will say unknown to you! O Thou, the Knower of present, past and future! I am now saying to you what S’ambhu has told me to inform You. He has said O Lord! The Goddess Laksmi is Your dear consort. She, the daughter of the Ocean, and the Bestower of all success, though an object fit to be meditated by Yaksas, Kinnaras, Naras and Immortals, is now undergoing severe penance at the confluence of Kalindi (the Jumna, the daughter of Kalinda) and the Tamasa. What is there in the three worlds that can be happy without that Mother of the worlds and the Giver of all desires? O Lotus-eyed One! What pleasure do You feel in abandoning Her? O All-pervading One! Even he who has no riches or who is very weak maintains his wife; then why have You, being the Lord of the worlds, forsaken your wife, without any offence. Who is worshipped by the whole universe. O Lord of the world! What advice shall I give to You? He whose wife suffers in the world, is blamed by his enemies. O Omnipresent One! Fie on his such a life!

O Lord of the worlds! Your enemies’ desires are satisfied when they see Her very miserable. They are laughing and mocking and saying O Devi, Kes’ava has now forsaken you; you can spend happily your time with us now. Therefore, O Lord of the Devas! Bring that Lady back unto your palace and place Her unto your lap. Who is of good demeanour, beautiful, par excellence and endowed with all auspicious signs. O Deva! Accept, please, your sweet-smiling wife and be happy. Though I am at present not in bereavement of my dear wife, yet when I remember my former state of bereavement, I feel very much trouble. O Lotus-eyed One! When Sati Devi, my beloved Wife, quitted Her life, in Daksa's house, I felt unbearable pain, O Kes'ava! Let no other body in this world suffer such pain, I now remember only the suffering and mental agonies that I felt on Her bereavement; I do not give it out to others. After a long time, practising severe Tapasya (asceticism) I got Her back in the form of Girija, who felt herself burnt up as it were by the anger She felt on account of censure cast on Me in the Daksa's house and thus quitted Her life. O Murari! What happiness you have felt in forsaking your dear wife and in remaining thus alone for one thousand years. Console your fortunate young wife with good teeth and bring her back to your place. O Bhagavan! Lastly, the Lord Bhavani, the Originatrix of these worlds, told me to speak thus to you O Destroyer of Kamsa! Let nobody remain even, for a moment, without Laksmi, the Highest Goddess. O Long-lived One! You better assume the form of a horse and go and worship her. Then have a child of yours in the womb of your sweet-smiling wife and bring her back to your house."

35-42. Vyasa said O Ornament of Bharata's race! Hearing thus the words of Chitrarupa, Bhagavan Hari told that he would do what S'ankara had told him to do and thus sent the messenger back to S'ankara. The messenger departing, Hari assumed the form of a beautiful horse and immediately left Vaikuntha with a passionate intent for the place where Laksmi was staying in the form of a mare and practising her austerities. Coming there, he saw that the Devi Bimala was staying in the form of a mare. The mare, too, seeing the horse form of her husband Govinda, recognised him and, chaste as she was, remained there with astonishment and tears in her eyes. Then those two copulated on the famous confluence. The wife of Hah, in the shape of a mare, became pregnant and, in due time, gave birth to a beautiful well qualified child. The Bhagavan then graciously smiled on her and spoke in words suited to the time, "O Dear! Now quit this mare form and assume your former appearance. O Lovely-eyed One! Let both of us assume our own forms and go to Vaikuntha; and let your child remain in this place."

43-48. Laksmi said "O Lord! How can I go leaving here this child, born of my womb. It is very difficult to quit the attachments for one's own child. Know this, O Lord! O High-souled One! This child is young and of small body; therefore it is quite incapable to protect itself. If I forsake it on the bank of this river, it will be an orphan, what will happen to it then? O Lotus-eyed One! My mind is now in full attachment towards it. How can I quit this helpless child and go?" When Laksmi and Narayana resumed their divine bodies and mounted on the excellent Vimanas, the Devas began to praise them with hymns. When Narayana expressed his desire to go, Kamala said "O Lord! You better take this child; I am unable to forsake it. O Lord! O Slayer of Madhu! This child is dearer to me than my life; see its body resembles exactly like you. Therefore we would take this child with us to Vaikuntha."

49-54. Hari spoke "O Dear! You need not be sorry; let this child remain here happily; I have arranged for its preservation and safety. O Beautiful One! There is a great act to do in this world. That will be executed by your child. For this reason I am leaving it here. I am now describing to you the above story. The famous King Yayati had a son named Turvasu; his father kept his name as Hah Varma; he is known by this name. That king is now practising asceticism for getting a son for one hundred years in a place of pilgrimage. O Laksmi! I have begot this son for him. I will go there and send the King here. O Beautiful-faced One! I will give this son to that King, desirous of an issue. He will take this son and go back to his house."

55. Vyasa said O King! Thus consoling his beloved, whose abode is in the Lotus and placing the child there in that position. He mounted on an excellent car with Laksmi and went to Vaikuntha.

Here ends the Nineteenth Chapter in the Sixth Book on the origin of Haihayas from a mare in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Janamejaya said "O Bhagavan! A great doubt has arisen in my mind on this subject. Who was it that took away that son, when both Laksmi and Narayana left it, in that forlorn state, in a forest without any person there to look after?"

3-11. Vyasa said O King! No sooner Laksmi and Narayana departed from that place, one Vidyadhara, named Champaka, mounting on a beautiful celestial car came there at his free will, sporting with a woman named Madanalasa. There they saw that one lovely child, exquisitely beautiful like a Deva's son, was playing alone as it liked. They then, quickly descended from their chariot and picked it up. Vidyadhara became very glad as a beggar becomes glad, when he gets a hoard of jewels. On taking that newly born beautiful child like a Cupid, Champaka gave it to the Devi Madanalasa. Madanalasa took it and became very much astonished; and her hairs stood at their ends. She clasped it to her bosom and kissed it frequently. O Bharata! Taking that child on her lap as if her own child, Madanalasa embraced it and kissed it and got the highest happiness. Then both of them took that child and mounted on the car. The lean Madanalasa then laughingly queried "O Lord!

Whose child is this? Who has left it in this forest? It seems to me Maha Deva, desirous to give me a son, has given it unto me."

12-18. Champaka said I will just now go and ask the all-knowing Indra whose child is this, whether it is of a Deva, Danava or Gandharva. If he orders, I will purify this child found thus in this forest by the Veda Mantrams and then accept it as my own. It is not advisable to do a thing suddenly without knowing all the details. Thus saying to his wife Madanalasa, Champaka went with a gladdened heart hurriedly to the city of Indra with that child in his arms. Champaka gladly bowed down at the feet of Indra and gave him all the information he knew about the child and stood at one side with folded hands and spoke, "O Lord of the Devas! I have got this child, beautiful as Cupid, in the sacred place of pilgrimage at the confluence of the Jumna and the Tamasa. O Lord of S'achi! Whose child is this? and why did they forsake it there? If you kindly permit, I will take this child as my own son. This child is very beautiful and liked very much by my wife; it is also the rule laid down in the S'astras that one can accept any child as the Kritrima son. Therefore it is my earnest desire that I purify this child by the Veda Mantrams and take it legally as my own son."

19-24. Indra said O Highly Fortunate One! Bhagavan Vasudeva, assuming the form of a horse, has produced this child out of the womb of Kamala in the form of a mare. He intends to give over the child, capable to destroy enemies to Turvasu, the son of Yayati, and thus will get a great purpose achieved by the child. That King, very religious, will be sent by Hah today and he will come for the child in that beautiful sacred place of pilgrimage. You better go back as early as possible and keep the child there as it was before till that king comes to that spot at the instance of the Devadeva Visnu. Do not waste a minute more. The King will be very sorry if he does not find the child there. Therefore O Champaka! Quit the attachment that you have for this child. You should know that this child will be famous in this earth as Ekavira (only one hero).

25-30. Vyasa said O King! Thus hearing the Indra's words, Champaka took the child and went back immediately to the spot whence he picked it up and keeping the child there as it laid, mounted on his car and went to his abode. At that instant, the husband of Laksmi, the Lord of the three worlds, went to the King, mounted on His car, beaming with effulgent rays. When the Bhagavan was descending from His aerial car, the King Turvasu was very glad to see Him and bowed down and laid himself prostrate on the ground. The Bhagavan, then, comforted the King, his own devotee, and said, "Get up, my child! Do away with your mental distress." The King also eagerly and full of devotion, began to utter verses in praise of the Bhagavan. O Lord of Rama! You are the presiding Deity of the Devas; Lord of the whole worlds. Ocean of Mercy and Giver of advice to all men. O Lord! Your sight is very rare even to the Yogis; being myself of a very slow dull intellect; I have been fortunate enough to see you. O Lord! This shews Your mercy.

31-54. Vyasa said O Bhagavan! O Infinite One! Those who are free from any desires and free from any attachment to worldly things, they alone are entitled to see Thee. O Deva of the Devas! I am bound in thousand and one desires. I am quite unfit to see Thee. There is no doubt in this. When Turvasu, the best of the kings, praised thus, Bhagavan Visnu became pleased and began to speak in the following pleasant words "O King! I am pleased with your asceticism; now ask your desired boon; I will grant it immediately." The King bowed down again to the feet of Visnu and said "O Murari! For the sake of a son, I have practised this tapasya; grant me a son like my Self." Narayana, the First-born of the Devas, hearing this King's request spoke to him in infallible words "O son of Yayati! Go to the confluence of the Yamuna and Tamasa. For you I have kept there today a son as you like and of indomitable prowess. O King! That child is begotten by me in the womb of Laksmi." The King became very glad to hear the sweet pure words of the Bhagavan. Thus granting him the boon, Visnu went with Rama to Vaikuntha. The King Turvasu, the son of Yayati, hearing these words, became exceedingly gladdened in his heart and mounting on a chariot, whose speed cannot be checked, went to the spot where lay the child. The king, of extraordinary genius, went there and saw that the exceedingly beautiful child, catching hold of his toe by one of his soft hands was sucking it by his mouth and was playing on the ground. The child was born of Narayana out of the womb of Kamala.

Therefore it resembled like Him. On looking at that beautiful lovely child, the famous King Harivarma's face got cheered up with the intensest delight. The King took it up with both of his hands and got merged in the Ocean of Bliss and taking gladly the scent of its head embraced it happily. On looking at the beautiful lotus-face of the child, the King, choked with tears from his eyes and with feelings of joy said "O Child! Narayana has given me, the child jewel in you; so save me from the terrors of the hell named Put. O Child! For full one hundred years I have practised a very hard tapasya for the sake of you. Pleased with that, the Lord of Kamala has given you to me for the happiness of my worldly career. Your Mother Rama Devi has forsaken Her own child for the sake of me and has gone away with Hah. O Child! That Mother is blessed whose face beams with joy by seeing the smiles in your lotus-face. O Delighter of my heart! The Lord of Rama, the Deva of the Devas, has made you, as it were, to serve as a boat for me for crossing to the other side of this Ocean of World." Thus saying, the King took the child and gladly went home. Knowing that the King had come very close to his city, the King's Minister and the city people, the subjects came forward with the priest and many other presents and offerings. The bards, singers and Sutas came in front of the King. The King as he entered into his city looked affectionately on his subjects and gladdened their spirits by enquiries of welfare. Then worshipped by the citizens, the King entered into the city with his child. As the King went along the royal road, the subjects showered on his head the flowers and fried rice. Then taking the child by his two arms, the King entered into his prosperous palace with his ministers.

The king next handed over the newly-born lovely child, as beautiful as Cupid, to the hands of his queen. The good queen took the child and asked the king "O King! Whence have you got this new born child as fascinating as the God of Love? Who has given this child to you? O Lord! Speak quickly. This child has stolen away my mind." The King gladly replied:-- "O Beloved! The Lord of Kamala, the Ocean of Mercy has given me this child; O Quick-eyed One! This child is born of Narayana's part and out of the womb of Kamala. O Devi! This child has strength, energy, patience, gravity and all other good qualities." Then the queen took the child in her arms and got the unbounded bliss. Great festivities began to be performed in the palace of the King Turvasu. Charities were given to those that wanted; music and singing of various sorts were performed. In this ceremony for the sake of his child, the king Turvasu put the name of the child as "Ekavira." Getting thus the child equivalent in form and qualities to Hah, the powerful Indra-like king became happy and freed from his debt due to his family line, became very cheerful and glad. O King! The king, powerful like his enemies, began to enjoy in his own palace with his all-qualified child, that was given to him by Narayana, the Lord of all the Devas. He was always served by his dear wife and all sorts of pleasures and he felt himself enjoying as a King would do.

Here ends the Twentieth Chapter in the Sixth Book on the son born of mare by Hari, in the Mahapuranam in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Vyasa said O King! In the meanwhile the King Turvasu performed the Jatakarma (a religious ceremony performed at the birth of a child) and other ceremonies of the child. The boy was nurtured duly and began to grow older day by day. The King began to enjoy his worldly life on getting this son and thought within himself that the boy had freed him from the three debts due to the Fathers, the Risis and the Devas. Next, in the sixth month, the King performed the Annaprasana ceremony (putting the boiled rice in the mouth of the child) and in the third year performed regularly his Chuda Karana (the ceremony of the first tonsure) ceremony. He distributed on those occasions various articles, wealth and cows to the Brahmanas and other articles to various other mendicants and made them glad. In the eleventh year, he performed the boy's holy thread (Upanayana) ceremony and tying the girdle made of a triple string of Munja grass and put the boy to learn archery. Next when the boy passed off proficiently in the study of the Vedas and in learning the kingly duties, the King desired to install him on the throne. The King Turvasu then collected with great care all the necessary articles for installation in an auspicious day, the combination of Pusya asterism and Arka Yoga. He called then the Brahmins, well versed in the Vedas and in the S'astras, and became ready, in accordance with due rites, to perform the installation ceremony of the prince. Waters were brought from various sacred places of pilgrimage and from the several oceans and on an auspicious day the King performed himself the installation of his son. When the ceremony was over the King gave away hoards of wealth to the Brahmins and giving the charge of his kingdom to his son, he went to the forest with a desire to ascend to the Heavens.

11-22. Thus placing Ekavira on the throne, the King Turvasu shewed respects to his ministers, and, controlling his senses went to the forest accompanied by his wife. On the top of the Mainaka mountain he took up the vow of Vanaprastha and sustaining his life on leaves and fruits began to meditate Parvati. Thus when his Prarabdha Karma ended, he left his mortal coil with his wife and went by virtue of his good deeds to the Indraloka. Hearing that the King had ascended to Heavens, his son Ekavira Haihaya performed his funeral ceremonies according to the rules laid down by the Vedas. The King's son, the intelligent Haihaya, performed, one after another, all the ceremonies due and began to govern the kingdom which was free from enemies. The virtuous King Ekavira remained duly obedient to his ministers after he got possession of his kingdom and began to enjoy all the best things. The powerful King one day went on horseback to the banks of the Ganges with the minister's son. Roaming about, he found there the boughs of trees had assumed a very graceful appearance, with loads of fruits, echoed with the sweet voice of the cuckoos and with the humming of the bees. Close by were the hermitages of the Munis, where the bucks were skipping about and at other places the Vedas were being chanted. The smoke was seen rising from the altars, where oblations were being offered and appeared to form like a black canopy in the Heavens. Full ripe grains were enhancing the beauty of the fields and the cowherdesses were merrily watching the fields. Places of recreations adorned with full blown lotuses and beautiful groves were attracting the attention of the visitors. The various trees, Piyala, Champaka, Panasa, Bakula, Tilaka, Kadamba and Mandara, and others were adorned with fruits, stealing away the minds of the people. At other places, other trees Sal, Tamala, Jack, Mango, Kali Kadamba, etc., stood gracefully. Next when the King went to the Ganges water, he saw the gay beautiful full blown lotuses were spreading their fragrant scents all around.

23-31. On the right side of these lotuses, he saw a lotus-eyed girl. She was shining like the gold, her beautiful hairs were long and curling; her throat was like a Kambu, belly thin, lips like the Bimba fruits, several other limbs well built and graceful, breasts risen a little, nose beautiful and all her body was exquisitely lovely; that lady just blooming into youth was suffering bereavements from her comrades and was very distressed and seemed bewildered. She was crying like an ewe in a dense lonely forest. Seeing her, the King asked her what was the reason of her sorrows? O Cuckoo-voiced One! You are as yet a girl; who has left you alone in this state? O Sweet One! Tell me where is your husband now or where is your father? O One looking askance! What is your trouble; explain it to me. O thin-bellied One! I will, no doubt, remove all your sorrows and troubles. O fair- limbed One! In my dominion nobody ever gives trouble to any other body. O lovely One! There is no fear in my kingdom from thieves or Raksasas; or any fear from any serious dangerous calamities on this earth, fear from lions, tigers or any other dangers while my sway is predominant.

32-41. O One of beautiful thighs! Why are you crying on this lonely bank of the Ganges? Tell me what is your pain? O Pure One! I can remove the pains and miseries, even of a serious nature, of men, whether they come from the Deva or human sources; and this is my principal vow. O Large-eyed One! Speak what is your inmost desire;

I will carry it out instantaneously. When the king thus spoke, that beautiful woman spoke in gentle words:-- O King! Hear the cause of my sorrows. O King! Why will the people cry, to no purpose, unless calamities come before them? O Mighty-armed One! I now tell you why I am weeping. O King! There was a very religious King named Rabhya in another province that is not yours. At first he had no issue. He had a very beautiful wife named Rukmarekha. She was clever, chaste and endowed with all auspicious qualities. But issueless as she was, she remained very sorry and, in a remorseful tone, she spoke to her husband Raibbya O Lord! I am barren; I have no sons; I am therefore a very unhappy creature. My life is in vain; what use is there in my living? When the queen thus spoke very distressedly, the king called the Brahmanas, versed in the Vedas, and began to perform an excellent sacrificial ceremony, in due accordance with the Vedic rules. With a desire to get a son, he made many presents in profuse quantities. When copious quantities of ghee were offered as oblations, there arose, from the fire, a girl beautiful in all respects and endowed with all auspicious signs.

42-53. Her teeth were very nice, eyebrows very lovely, face enchanting like a Full Moon, the lustre of the body lovely and of a golden colour; her hairs were fine and curling; her lips like the Bimba flowers; her hands and face were of a red colour; her eyes were red like lotus and her limbs were soft and gentle. When the girl arose from the fire, the priest (Hota) took that lean and thin lady of a nice waist by her arms and presented her to the King and said O King! Accept this daughter, endowed with all auspicious signs. When Homa was being performed, the daughter came up like the garland Ekavali; therefore this girl became famous in this world by the name EkavalT. O Ruler of the earth! Take this girl, resembling a son and be happy.

O King! Visnu, the Deva of the Devas, has given you this Jewel, this daughter; so be contented. Hearing thus the words of the priest, the King saw this good-looking girl and with gladdened heart took the beautiful daughter from his hands. Thus with that lovely daughter he went to his wife

Rukmarekha and said O Beautiful One! Take this daughter. The queen Rukmarekha felt the pleasure of having a son when she got in her arms that lotus eyed beautiful daughter. The King next performed the natal and other ceremonies of the daughter and did all other acts as if she had been a son to him duly in accordance with the rules. The King performed his own sacrificial ceremonies and gave away lots of Daksinas to the Brahmins and dismissed them and became very glad. That beautiful girl was nursed and cared after like a son and she grew older day by day. The Queen Rukmarekha was very gladdened to get her. On that very day the birthday festival was performed as on the occasion of the birth of a son. And that daughter grew older, very affectionate and dear to all.

54-61. O Lovely One! You are a king and intelligent too; I will describe to you all the details; Hear. I am the daughter of the minister to that King. My name is Yas'ovati. That daughter and I look alike and of the same age. Therefore the king has made me her comrade.

I spend my time day and night always with her as her constant dear companion. Ekavali likes very much to remain and sport wherever she finds sweet-scented lotuses; at other places she does not find happiness. At the distant banks of the Ganges many lotuses grow; therefore Ekavali goes there with great pleasure to that place with me and her other fellow mates. One day I told the King that Ekavali used to go daily to a distant solitary forest to see the lotus-lake. Then the King addressed her not to go and he got a lake built within the compounds of his palace and planted many lotus seeds therein. Gradually the lotuses began to blossom and the bees came there to drink honey. Still she used to go outside in search of lotuses. Then the King sent armed guards to accompany her. Thus that thin-bodied daughter of the King used to go daily to the banks of the Ganges for play, guarded by armed soldiers, accompanied by myself and other companions. Again when the sporting was over, she used to return to the palace.

Here ends the Twenty-First Chapter on the Sixth Book on the installation of Ekavira and the birth of Ekavali in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Yas’ovati spoke O King! One day Ekavali got up early in the morning and went to the banks of the Ganges, accompanied by her companions; they began to fan her with a chowrie. The armed guards accompanied her. Slowly she went where there were the lotuses in order to sport with them. I, too, went with her playing with the lotuses to the banks of the Ganges and both of us began to play with lotuses with the Apsaras. When both of us were deeply engaged in the play, then one powerful Danava, named Kalaketu, came up there suddenly with many Raksasas armed with parighas, swords, clubs, bows, arrows and tomaras and many other weapons. Ekavali was playing with the best lotuses when Kalaketu saw her in that state, blooming with beauty and youth as if like Rati, the Goddess of Love. O King! I then spoke to Ekavali “Look! Who is this Daitya that has come here unexpectedly; O Lotus-eyed One! Let us go into the central part of our armed guards.” O King! My companion and myself consulting thus, went out of fear immediately into the centre of the armed guards. Kalaketu was seized with the arrows of Cupid, and no sooner he looked at that beautiful young lady than he, with a very big club in his hand, hurriedly came to us, drove away the guards, and took away my lotus eyed companion, of thin waist. Then the young lady, helpless, began to tremble and cried aloud.

11-22. Seeing this, I spoke to the Danava Leave her and take me. The passionate Danava did not take me but he went away, taking my companion. The guards exclaimed “Wait, wait; don’t fly away with the girl; we are giving you a good lesson.” Thus saying, they made the powerful Danavas stop and both the parties engaged in a very terrible conflict, astounding to all. The followers of the Danavas, more cruel and all fully armed began at once to fight with great enthusiasm for their Master’s cause. Kalaketu himself began to fight afterwards terribly and killed the guards. He, then, with his followers, carried away my companion towards his own city. I, too, followed my companion, when I saw her thus carried away by the Danava and crying out of fear. I also walked crying aloud by those tracks as would enable my Sakhi to see me. She, too, seeing me, became somewhat consoled. Crying out repeatedly I approached her. She was already very distressed and when she saw me, she clasped me closely around my neck, perspiring and stunned and, becoming more distressed, cried aloud. Kalaketu then showed his liking for me and told that my quick-eyed companion was very afraid and that I might comfort her. He told me thus “O Dear! My city is like the Deva’s abodes; you will soon be able to go there. From today I become your slave, bound by love. Do not cry thus distressedly; be comforted.” In these words he told me to comfort my dear companion. Thus speaking, that villain made both of us mount on the beautiful chariot and making us sit by his sides went gladly and quickly to his own beautiful palace, followed by his army.

23-30. That Demon placed both of us in a beautiful house white washed and mirror-like and kept hundreds and thousands of Raksasas to watch and protect us. On the second day he called me in private “Your companion is very much distressed on the bereavement from her father and mother and is lamenting; make her understand and console her.” He told me to speak the following words to my companion “O One of beautiful hips! Be my wife and enjoy as you like. O One with a face beautiful like the Moon! This kingdom is yours; ever I am your obedient slave.” Hearing his unbearable harsh words I said “O Lord! I will not be able to speak her these words, disagreeable to her. You better speak this yourself.” When I spoke thus, that wicked Danava struck by the arrows of Cupid began to speak gently to my dear companion of thin belly, thus “O Dear One! Today you have successfully cast on me the Vasikarana Mantra (one of the Tantrik processes by which a lover is made to come under subjection); O Beloved! Therefore it is that my heart is stolen and so much brought under your subjection; this has converted me into a veritable slave of yours; then know this as certain that I am your slave; O Sweet One!

I am very much troubled by the Cupid’s arrows and I am semi¬ unconscious; therefore O Lean-bellied One! Worship me. O One of beautiful thighs! This youth is a very rare and transient thing; O Auspicious One! Now embrace me as your husband and make your youth a veritable success.”

31-36. Ekavali said “O Fortunate One! My father wanted to hand me over to a prince named Haihaya; I also mentally adopted him as my husband. You are certainly aware of the S’astras; how can I now abandon the eternal religion and the virtue of a woman and take up another husband. The girl must accept him to whom the father betrothes. The girl is under every circumstances dependent. Never do they get any independence.” Though Ekavali said thus, the vicious Daitya struck by Cupid’s arrows, did not desist and did not leave me and that larged-eyed companion. His city lies in Patala and is a very dangerous place; always it is guarded by Raksasas and surrounded by a moat; inside is built a beautiful and strong fort. Now my dear companion, the queen of my heart, is staying there with a grievous heart and I am here wandering hither and thither very much troubled on account of her bereavements.

37-46. Ekavira said "O Beautiful-faced One! How have you been able to get away from the city of that wicked demon and how have you been able to come here? I am perfectly at my wit's end. Say quickly all these. O Proud One! I doubt your words; the father of your dear companion resolved to give his daughter to Haihaya in marriage; now I am that Haihaya. I am the King by that name, on this earth; there is no other King by the name of Haihaya. Is it that your dear companion is meant for me? O Bhamini (passionate woman)! Remove my doubts; I will kill that villain Raksasa and bring just now your dear companion; there is no doubt in this. O One of good vows! Shew me that place, if it be known to you. Has anybody informed her father that She is suffering from so many troubles? Has her father come to know that her daughter has been stolen and carried away? And has he made any effort to rescue her from the hands of that villain Raksasa? Is it that the King is calm and quiet, knowing that his daughter has been kept in prison? Or is it that he is unable to free her from bondage? Say quickly all these things before me. O Lotus¬ eyed One! You have captivated my mind by describing the extraordinary qualities of your dear companion and have made me passionate too. Alas! When will it be that I will free my beautiful beloved from the greatest perilous situation and shall see her face and her eyes, beaming with joy. O Sweet-speaking One! Say, by what means I can go to that impassable city. How have you been able to come from there?"

47-63. Yas'ovati said O King! In my early age I got the Mantram of the Devi Bhagavati with its seed Mantram (mystic syllable involving in it the power connoted by the Devi) and how to meditate it. While I was in the Danava's place I thought out that at that juncture I would worship the powerful Chandika who gives instantaneously one's own desires. If I worship that S'akti, That fructifies all desires. That is all mercy to Her Bhaktas, certainly She will free my dear companion from this her bondage. Though She is really without form, yet She, without anybody's help, by Her own force. She is creating, preserving, and at the end of the Kalpa, destroying this Universe.

Oh! She is very wonderful indeed! Thus thinking I began to meditate that auspicious red-robed and red-eyed Devi, the Lady of the Universe, and recollected mentally Her form and repeated silently Her Vija Mantram. When I meditated thus for merely one month, Chandika Devi became, through my devotion, manifest to me in my dreams and began to speak in sweet nectar-like words "You are now asleep; go quickly to the beautiful banks of the Ganges. The enemy destroyer, the powerful Ekavira, the greatest of all the kings, will come there. Dattatreya, the Great Lord of the Munis, has given him my Mantra named Mahavidya; the King also constantly worships me devotedly with that. His mind is constantly attached to Me and he constantly worships Me. What more to say than this fact that the king, extremely devoted to Me, meditates on Me as the internal controller of all beings. That intelligent son of Laksmi will come for sport to the banks of the Ganges and will remove all your sorrows. That king Ekavira, versed in all the S'astras will kill the Raksasas in a dreadful battle and will rescue EkavalT. So now you pay heed to my word." Lastly, She told me that my companion should marry that beautiful King, endowed with all auspicious qualifications. Thus saying. She disappeared and I instantly woke up. Then I informed my lotus-eyed dear Sakhi all the details of my dream as well my worshipping the Devi; hearing this, her lotus-face beamed with joy and gladness. That sweet-smiling EkavalT very gladly told me, "O dear Companion! Go at once for our success. That truth-speaking BhagavatT Ambika DevT will release us from our bondage." O King! When my dear companion ordered me thus, I thought it proper, as also dictated to me in my dream, to go out and soon I did it. O King! Due to the grace of the Great DevT, I came to know the way and I also got the quick motion. Thus I have described to you the cause of my sorrow. O Hero! Who are you, whose son are you? Speak truly to me.

Here ends the Twenty-second Chapter in the Sixth Book on the narration to Haihaya the stealing away of EkavalT in S'rT Mad DevT Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Vyasa said O King! That powerful son of Laksmi, Haihaya, became very glad to hear these words of Yas'ovati and said

2-14. O One of beautiful thighs! Hear in reply to your query I am Haihaya, the son of Laksmi, and I am known in this world by the name of Ekavira. Now you have made my mind dependent. What am I to do now? where to go? Thus distressed with bereavement from your dear companion, my mind is struck with Cupid's arrows and is confounded with her extraordinary beauty that you just now described. Next you described her qualifications and my mind is ravished. Again when you described before me what she uttered in the presence of the Raksasa, I am struck with great wonder. Your dear companion Ekavali said before the vicious Danava Kalaketu, "I have already selected the King Haihaya. I will not select any other than him, this is my firm resolve." These words have converted me into her slave. O sweet-haired One! Say now what service can I do to you both? I am not acquainted with that wicked demon's palace; never I went to his city. O Fair-eyed One! Say how I can go there; for you are the only one that can lead me there. Therefore take me quickly to that place where your beautiful clear companion is staying. Your dear companion, the daughter of the King is very much afflicted with sorrow; soon I will free her, by destroying that cruel Raksasa. There is no doubt in this. O Auspicious One! I will rescue your dear companion and bring her to the city of yours and hand her over to the hands of her father. Then that King, the enemy destroyer, will perform the marriage ceremony of his daugther. I think this is the desire of your heart. O Sweet-speaking One! Know that that is also my desire. O Beautiful One! Now that desire will be fulfilled by your efforts. Show me quickly that place and see my prowess. O One with a face beautiful like the Moon! It seems that you will be able to do my work. Soon do such as I can kill that wicked demon, who steals others' wives. Now show me the way to the impassable city of that Raksasa.

15-26. Vyasa said:-o King! Hearing the sweet words of the prince, Yas'ovati became very glad and gently began to speak out how he could go to the demon's city. O King! Take the success-giving Mantra of Bhagavati and I would then be able to show you today the city guarded by the Raksasas. O King! Better arrange to take your vast army with you; for you will have to fight no sooner you go there. Kalaketu is personally a great warrior surrounded by Raksasas of great power and strength. Therefore be initiated in the Mantram of S'ri Bhagavati and accompany me. So you will surely be successful.

I will show you the way to the city of that Demon. Slay that vicious and vilest of the Raksasas and rescue my dear companion. Hearing thus, Haihaya was duly initiated into the great Mantram of Yoges'vari, named Trilokitilaka Mantra (Hrim Gauri Rudradayite Yoge S'vari Hum Phat Svaha is the Yoges'vari Mantra), by Maharsi Dattatreya, accidentally come there (as if ordained by Fate), the chief of Jhanins (the Gnostics), that is conducive to the welfare of the beings. Thus by the influence of the Mantram the King got the power of knowing all things and going everywhere with unobstructed speed. Then the King Haihaya quickly went with Yas'ovati to the impassable city of the Raksasas, accompanied by a vast army. The city was surrounded by snakes and guarded by the terrible Raksasas like the city of Patala. The messengers of the Raksasa, seeing the King coming, were struck with terror and crying aloud quickly went to Kalaketu. Kalaketu, struck with Cupid's arrows, was sitting beside Ekavali and was speaking many modest words when the messenger went there suddenly and said "O King! The attendant of this lady Yas'ovati is coming here with a prince and an army.

27-29. O King! We cannot tell exactly whether the prince is the son of Indra, named Jayanta or Kartikeya. After all, puffed up with the strength of his army, he is coming here. O King! The battle is imminent; now make your arrangements fully and carefully; fight with the son of a Deva or abandon this lotus-eyed Lady. O King! At a distance of three Yojanas from this place, be is staying with his army. Now equip yourself and quickly declare the war by blowing the war trumpets."

30-36. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the messenger's words, Kalaketu, the King of the Demons, became overwhelmed with anger and at once sent many powerful Raksasas, holding all sorts of weapons and spoke out to them "O Raksasas! With weapons in your hands, go before them quickly." Ordering them thus, Kalaketu asked in sweet words Ekavali who was in front and very distressed. O Thin-bellied One! Who is coming here? Is he your father or any other man coming with his army to release you. Speak this to me truly. If your father comes here to take you back, being very much distressed with your bereavement, I will never fight with him, if I come to know this truly; rather I will bring him to my house and worship him with the excellent horses, gems and jewels and clothings. Really I will show my full hospitality duly to him when he comes here. And if any other person comes, then I will take his life by the sharpened arrows; there is no doubt in this. Know this as certain whoever comes here for your rescue is brought by the hand of Death to me. Therefore, O Large-eyed One! Say who is this fool that is coming, not knowing me as the powerful and unconquerable Kala (Death).

37-38. Ekavali said "O Highly Fortunate One! I do not know who is this body coming to this side with a violent speed. O King! How can I know that when I am in this state of confinement in your house. This man is not my father nor my brother. Some other powerful man is coming here. I do not know exactly what for he is coming."

39-40. The Demon said My messengers say that your comrade Yas'ovati has taken with her that warrior and is coming to this side with great energy. Where has your clever companion gone now? O Lotus-eyed! There is no enemy in the three worlds strong enough to fight against me.

41-66. Vyasa said O King! Just then other messengers hurriedly came there terrified and spoke to Kalaketu who had been staying in the house, thus "O King! The army has come quite close to the city and how are you staying in the house, calm and quiet? Better march out of the city with your vast army as early as possible." The powerful Kalaketu, then, hearing their words, mounted on the chariot and quickly went out of his city. The King Haihaya, on the other hand, suffering from the bereavements of his dear lady, suddenly came there mounted on horseback. The terrible fight ensued then and there between the two and each one struck the other with sharpened weapons and the quarters all around blazed with their glitterings and slashings. When the terrible fight was going on, Haihaya, the son of Laksmi, struck Kalaketu, the King of the Daityas with a very powerful club (Gada). Thus struck by the Gada, the Lord of the Daityas fell on the ground like a mountain, struck by lightning, and died. All the Raksasas fled away on all sides, struck with terror. Yas'ovati went then very hurriedly with a gladdened heart to EkavalT and began to speak to her in terms of surprise and in sweet words O Dear! O Dear! Come, Come; the great warrior, the prince Ekavira has killed the Lord of the Daityas in a dreadful battle. That King is now waiting, tired in the midst of his soldiers.

He has already heard from me about your beauty and qualities; and now he is expecting to see you. O One Looking askance! Now satisfy your eyes and mind by seeing that King who is like the Cupid. When I described to him before on the banks of the Ganges your beauty and qualifications, he got enamoured of you and now he is suffering from bereavements and wants to see you. Thus, hearing, EkavalT determined to go to him and as she was yet unmarried, she became abashed and afraid. She thought how could she see the prince as she was unmarried. It might be that he being passionate would catch her by her arms. Thus, troubled with thought, that daughter of the King, with a sad look, and wearing poor clothes, EkavalT went with Yas'ovatT on a palanquin, carried on men's shoulders. Seeing that large-eyed daughter of the King coming there, the prince said "O Beautiful One! My two eyes are very thirsty to see you. Satisfy my eyes and mind by showing yourself to me." Seeing the prince passionate and the King's daughter very much abashed, Yas'ovatT, who knew the rules of modesty, thus spoke to the prince " O Prince! The father of my dear companion expressed a desire to betroth her to your hands. She is also obedient to you. Therefore your meeting will certainly take place. O King! Wait; take her to her father; and he will perform duly the marriage ceremony and betroth her to your hands. Know this to be quite certain." The King took her words to be quite just and true and taking those two ladies went with his army to the house of the father of EkavalT. EkavalT's father became very glad and cheerful to learn that his daughter was coming and, accompanied by his ministers, went hurriedly to her. After a long time the King saw his daughter in poor clothings and became highly pleased. Yas'ovatT then described in detail all what happened before the King. The King then with his minister brought with great love, courtesy and gentleness EkavTra to his house and on an auspicious day performed the marriage ceremony of him with EkavalT, in accordance with due ceremonies and rites. Then the King gave away many clothings, ornaments, jewels, and articles for fitting a house and many other things and worshipped duly and sent his daughter together with Yas'ovatT away with the King Haihaya. Thus the marriage ceremony was performed and the son of LaksmT gladly returned to his house and began to enjoy many pleasures with his wife. Then, in course of time, in the womb of EkavalT the King Haihaya got a son named KritavTrya. The son of this KritavTrya is known as Kartavirya. O King! Thus I have narrated to you the origin of the Haihaya dynasty.

English translation

1-5. The King Janamejaya said “O Bhagavan! I am not satiated with the drink of the divine sweet nectar-like words coming out of your lotus mouth. You have described to me in detail the wonderful and variegated story of the origin of the Haihaya dynasty; but, O Muni! There has arisen in my mind a curiosity to know something more on this subject. See the Bhagavan Visnu, the Lord of Laksmi, the Deva of the Devas, the Ruler of this whole Universe and the Cause of the Creation, Preservation and Destruction; yet that Best of Purusas S’ri Bhagavan had to assume a horse form. He is undecaying and independent, how then He came to be dependent? Clear this doubt of mine. O Best of Munis! You are omniscient; therefore satisfy my curiosity by describing this wonderful event.”

6-16. Vyasa said O King! Hear what I heard of yore from Narada how this doubt was removed. The mind-born son of Brahma, Maharsi Narada got powers to go everywhere by virtue of his Tapas, could know everything, was of a calm and quiet nature, dear to all and he was a poet. On one occasion he went out on tour round the world, playing with his lute in time with Svar and Tan. One day he came to my As’rama, singing many things concerning Brihat Rathantara Sama Veda and the sweet nectar-like Gayatri, the Giver of Liberation. O King! There was a very sacred place of hermitage, beaming as it were with happiness and self-knowledge, named S’amyaprasa, on the banks of the river Sarasvati. There was situated my hermitage. Seeing the lustrous Narada the son of the Grand Sire Brahma, coming, I got up and offered him duly Padya (water to wash his feet) and Argha (offerings of worship), etc., and worshipped him. When that Muni of indomitable lustre took his seat on the Asana, I sat beside him. When I found Narada, the Giver of Knowledge, at rest and quiet, I duly asked him the very same question that you have asked me just now. O Best of Munis! What happiness is there on the beings taking their birth in this world. I never found it in any place or in any concern, this I can say positively. Still why do the high minded persons do Karma, fascinated by the enchantments of the world. Look! I was born in an island. Just after my birth, my mother forsook me. Helpless, I grew in the forest as my Karma allowed. Next I performed a very severe tapasya before Mahadeva, the Deva of the Devas, on the mountain with a desire to have a son.

17-38. As a fruit of that I got S'uka as my son, the foremost of the Gnostics, and taught him completely the essence of the Vedas from the beginning to the end. O Devarsi! When my son got wisdom from you, he left this world even when I became very distressed on his bereavement and wept aloud and he went away to the next world. Very much afflicted for the parting of my son, I abandoned the great Mountain Meru. I got very lean due to the absence of my dear son whom I loved very much; and becoming very distressed and knowing this whole world to be an illusion, I remembered my mother and went to the Kuru Jangala district, as if bound up and controlled by the snares of Maya. When I heard that the King S'antanu had married my mother, I built my hermitage on the holy banks of the Sarasvati and remained there. When the King S'antanu went to the next world, my chaste mother remained with two sons. At that time Bhisma looked after their sustenance and maintained them. The intelligent Ganga's son Bhisma Deva installed Chitrangada on the throne. A short while after this, Chitrangada, too, looking like a second Cupid and extremely lovely, went to the jaws of death. The mother Satyavati was drowned in the sorrows for his son Chitrangada and began to weep for him. O King! Knowing my mother in that sorrowful condition, I went to her. Bhisma and I then consoled her with hopeful words. Bhisma Deva was averse to marrying and then becoming a King; and, therefore, he installed again the younger brother, the powerful Vichitravirya on the throne. O King! Bhisma defeated by his own prowess the kings and brought the two daughters of the King Kas'iraj and handed them over to Satyavati, so that she might give them over to Vichitravirya. Then, on an auspicious day, and in an auspicious Lagna (moment) when the marriage ceremony of my brother Vichitravirya was performed, I became glad. My brother, a good archer, was shortly afterwards attacked with consumption and thus he died without any issue. At this my mother became very sad and dejected. Seeing the husband dead, the two daughters of Kas'iraja became ready to preserve their religion of chastity and said to their mother-in-law, sorrowful and weeping We two shall accompany our husbands and become Sati (i.e., be burnt up with our husbands). O Devi! We will go to the Heavens with your son.

We, the two sisters united, will enjoy with him in the Nandana Garden. The mother was very much attached to them and with the permission of Bhisma Deva, very affectionately made them desist from this great attempt. When all the funeral obsequies of Vichitravirya were over, my mother consulted with Bhisma and remembered me in Hastinanagara. As soon as she remembered me, immediately I knew her mental feelings and hurriedly came to Hastinanagara and, with my head bowed, fell prostrate before her feet, and with folded hands addressed my mother who was very much inflamed with the fire of sorrow for the death of her son, thus:- - O Mother! Why have you called me here mentally? I see you are very much dejected; I am your servant; order me what I can do for you. O Mother! You are my greatest place of pilgrimage and you are my highest deity; I am very anxious since I have come here; say what you desire.

39-44. Vyasa said O Best of Munis! When I said thus and waited before her, then she looked at Bhisma standing close by and said "O Child! Your brother died of consumption; therefore I am very sorrowful, lest the family becomes extinct. O Intelligent One! For the continuance of the line, then, with the permission of the Ganga's son, I have called you here today by the Samadhi Yoga. O son of Paras'ara! You re-establish the name of S'antanu that is going now to be well nigh extinct. O Vyasa Deva! Relieve me soon from this sorrow of mine, lest this line be extinct. There are the two daughters of Kas'iraja, honest and good and endowed with youth and beauty.

O Highly Intelligent One! Better you cohabit with them and save the family of Bharata by begetting sons. You will not be touched with any sin.”

45-55. Vyasa said O DevarsTI Hearing the mother’s words, I became very anxious and humbly told her with great shame:-- “O Mother! To touch another’s wife is a very sinful act; knowing well the path of Dharma, how can I willingly and intentionally violate that? So also, the Maharsis say That the wife of a younger brother is like a daughter. Studying all the Vedas, how can I do this blame-worthy and adulterous act? To preserve a line of family by illegal ways is never to be done; for then the fathers of the sinners can never cross this ocean of world. How can he, who is the spiritual preceptor of all, and the writer of all the Puranas, do this act knowingly which is awfully strange and very bad and nasty in its nature.” My mother was very much plunged into the sea of sorrows for the bereavement of her son; so to preserve the family. She came again to me, weeping and said “O son of Paras’ara! If you follow my word, you won’t incur any sin. O Child! If the reasonable words of the Gurus be even faulty, one should obey them according to the tradition of the S’istas. Therefore, O Child! Keep my word and preserve my honour; no sin will touch you. O Child! Think very well. Your mother is very sorry and is immersed in the ocean of afflictions; therefore it is your paramount duty to make her happy by begetting child for the continuance of the family.” Hearing my mother speaking to me thus, Bhisma, the Ganga’s son, the expert in finding out truth in fine points with regard to Dharma, said to me O Dvaipayana! You are wholly sinless; you ought not therefore to argue on this point; obey your mother as she says and be happy.

56-61. Vyasa said O King! Hearing his words and nny mother’s request, I decided to do this very hateful act with a fearless heart without any suspicion. When Ambika finished her ablutions after menstruation, I gladly cohabited with her in the night; but that young lady seeing my ugly ascetic form, was not attached to me; I then cursed that beautiful woman thus

As you closed your eyes at the first cohabitation with me, your son will be born blind. O Muni! On the second day my mother enquired me when I was alone O Dvaipayana! Will there be born a son of the daughter of Kas’iraj? I then bowed my head with shame, and told, “Mother! The son will be born blind, through my curse.” O Muni! The mother then rebuked me harshly, “O Child! Why did you curse that the son of Ambika would be born blind?”

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter in the Sixth Book on the description of Viksepa S’akti in the discourse between Vyasa and Narada in the Mahapuranam S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-10. Vyasa said OKing! The mother became astonished to hear me. Becoming very anxious for a son, she began to speak to me. O Child! The wife of your brother, the daughter Ambalika of Kas'iraj, is a widow; she is very sorrowful; she is endowed with all auspicious signs and endowed with all good qualities; better cohabit with that beautiful young wife and get a child according to the tradition of the S'istas. Persons born blind are not entitled to kingdoms. Therefore take my word and procreate a beautiful son and thus keep my honour. O Muni! Hearing the mother's words, I began to wait in Hastinapura till Ambalika, the daughter of Kas'iraj, finished her ablutions after menstruation. That King's daughter, of curling hairs, came to me alone at her mother-in-law's order, and became very much abashed. Seeing me an ascetic with matted hairs on my head and void of every love sentiment, perspiration came on her face; her body turned pale and her mind void of any love towards me. When I saw that lady trembling and pale beside me, I angrily spoke "O One of beautiful waist! When you have turned out pale, considering your own beauty, let your son be of a pale colour." Thus saying I spent there that night with Ambalika. After enjoying her I took farewell from my mother and went to my place.

11-21. In due course, the two daughters of the King gave birth to two sons respectively, one blind and the other pale. The son of Ambika was named Dhritarastra; and the son of Ambalika was named Pandu, as his colour was pandu (pale). Mother became absent- minded when she saw the two sons in those states. After one year she again called me and said "O Dvaipayana! These two persons are not so fit to become kings; therefore beget one more son beautiful and according to my liking." When I consented, she became very glad and, in due course, asked Ambika to embrace me and give birth to a son, endowed with extraordinary qualities, and fit to preserve the line worthy of the Kuru dynasty. The bride did not then say anything on account of her bashfulness. But when I went in the night tinne according to my mother's order, to the sleeping room, Ambika sent to me a maid-servant of Vichitravirya, full of youth and beauty, and adorned with various ornaments and clothings. That maid-servant of beautiful hairs and of a swan-like gait adorned with garlands and red sandal-paste, came to me with many enchanting gestures and making me take my seat on the cot, became herself merged in love sentiments. O Muni! I became pleased with her gestures and amorous sports and passed the night, full of love towards her and played and cohabited with her. At last I gladly gave her the boon, "O Fortunate One! Your child, begotten by me, will be endowed with all good qualities, will be of good form, will be conversant with all the essences of Dharma, calm and quiet and truthful."

22-34. In due course, a child named Vidura was born to her. Thus I had three sons; and in my mind grew up Maya and affection that these were my sons. When I saw again those three sons, heroic and full of manliness, the only cause of my sorrow due to the bereavement of my son S'uka vanished away from my mind. O Lord of Dvijas! Maya is very powerful and extremely hard to be abandoned by those who are not masters of their senses; She enchants even the wise, though She does not possess any form nor any substratum nor any support. I could not find any peace, even in the forest, as my mind was attached to my mother and children. O Muni! My mind then began to oscillate like a pendulum and I remained sometime in Hastinapura and sometime on the banks of the Sarasvati. I could not stay in a certain fixed place. By discrimination, the knowledge sometimes flashed in my mind Whose sons are these? The attachment is nothing but merely a delusion. On my death they would not be entitled to perform my S'raddha ceremony. These sons are begotten by ways and manners not sanctioned by Dharnna; what happiness can they bring to me? O Muni! The powerful Maya has caused this delusion in me. What! Knowing this Samsara to be unreal, Alas! I have fallen into this well of the Darkness of delusion. Thus I repented when I thought over the matter deeply and when I was alone in a solitary place. When, subsequently, through the mediation of Bhisma, the powerful Pandu got the kingdom, I became pleased to see the prosperity of my son. O Muni! This is also the creation of Maya. The daughter of the King S'urasena, named Kunti, and the daughter of the King of Madra, named Madri became the two beautiful wives of Pandu. Pandu was cursed by a Brahmana that he would die if he cohabited with any woman; he therefore became dispassionate and quitting his kingdom, went to the forest with his two wives. Hearing Pandu gone to the forest I felt pain and went to my son who was staying with his wives and consoling him, came to Hastinapura, where I held a conversation with Dhritarastra and then came back to the banks of the river Sarasvati.

35-50. Pandu in his forest life, got five sons out of his wives by the Devas Dharma, Vayu, Indra, and the twin AsVins. Dharma, Vayu, and Indra begat respectively of Kunti the three sons Yudhisthira, Bhimasena and Arjuna; and the two AsVins begat of Madri the two sons Nakulu and Sahadeva. Once Madri, full of youth and beauty, was staying alone in a solitary place and Pandu seeing her embraced her and due to the curse, died. When the funeral pyre was ablaze, the chaste Madri entered into the fire and died a Sati. Kunti was prevented from doing so, as she was to nurse and look after her young children. The Munis then took the sorrowful Kunti, the daughter of S'urasena, bereft of her husband to Hastinapur and handed her over to the high-souled Bhisma and Vidura. When I came to hear this, my mind was greatly agitated to see the pain and pleasure that other people suffered. Bhisma, Vidura, and Dhritarastra began to nourish and support Yudhisthira and others as they considered them the sons of their dearest Pandu. The cruel and wicked sons of Dhritarastra, Duryodhana and others united with each other and began to quarrel horribly with the sons of Pandu. Dronacharya came there accidentally and Bhisma treated him with great respect and requested him to stay in Hastinapura and educate the sons of Kuru. Kama was the the son of Kunti, when she was young and unmarried; and he was quitted by her no sooner he was born. The charioteer Suta (or carpenter) Adhiratha found him in a river and nourished him. Kama was the foremost of the heroes and therefore the great favourite of Duryodhana. The enmity between Bhima and Duryodhana, etc., began to grow greater day by day. Dhritarastra, thinking the difficult situation of his children, fixed the residence of the sons of Pandu at the Varanavata city so that the quarrels might die away. Out of enmity, Duryodhana ordered his dear friend Purochana to build there a house of lac for the Pandavas. O Muni! When I heard that Kunti and her five sons were burnt in the lac-house, I became merged in the ocean of sorrows and thought that they were my grandsons. I was overwhelmed with sorrow and began to search after them in deep forests day and night till at last I found them in Ekachakra city, lean and thin and very much distressed with sorrow.

51-63. I became very glad to see them and sent them soon to the city of the King Drupada. Wearing the deer's skin, they went there dejected with sorrow in the Brahmin's dress and stayed in the royal court. The victorious Arjuna shewed prowess and pierced the mark (the eye of the fish) and obtained Krisna, the daughter of the King Drupada. By the order of the mother Kunti, the five brothers married her. O Muni! I became very glad to see that they were all married. The Pandavas, then, accompanied by PanchalT, soon went to Hastinapura. Dhritarastra then fixed Khandavaprastha as the residence of the Pandavas. Visnu, the son of Vasudeva, then performed the Yajha with the victorious Arjuna and satisfied the Great Fire. The Pandavas next performed the Rajasuya sacrifice and that made me very glad. Seeing the affluence and prosperity of the Pandavas and the great assembly hall beautiful and exquisitely artistic, Duryodhana was burnt up, as it were, with malice and made arrangements for play in dice, very injurious in its consequences. S'akuni was expert in playing deceitfully and Yudhisthira the son of Dharma, was not expert in this play. So Duryodhana made S'akuni play for him and stole away all that Yudhisthira had and insulted, at last, in the royal assembly, the daughter of Drupada, Yajhaseni and gave her much trouble. The Pandavas then went with PanchalT in an exile in the forest for twelve years. And I was very much grieved to hear this O Muni! Though I know all about the Sanatan Dharma, yet I was deluded and merged in these worlds of pains and pleasures. Who am I? To whom do these sons belong? My mind roams day and night on the thought of all these. O Muni! What shall I do? And whither shall I go? I don't find happiness anywhere; my mind is, as it were, floating in a rocking machine and it is never being fixed. O Best of Munis! You are all-knowing; solve my doubts so that my mental fever may be quietened and I may be happy.

1-13. Vyasa said O King! When I asked him why this delusion overtook me, Maharsi Narada smiled and said "O son of Paras'ara! You are thoroughly acquainted with all the Puranas. Why then are you making this question about the cause of my Moha (delusion). No embodied soul can exist in this Samsara without this Moha. Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, and the other Devas, S'anaka, Kapila and the other Risis, all these are surrounded by Maya and are thus travelling in this path of Samsara. The people know me as a Jhanin; but I, too, am deluded like an ordinary man. I am now speaking to you as certain as anything my of previous history now. I was deluded by Maya; hear it attentively. O Son of VasavTI Great troubles and pains were felt by me before, due to this Moha, for my wife. One day Parvata and I, the two Devarsis, went out together from the Devaloka to see the excellent portion of the earth named Bharata and came to the Martyaloka or the land of the mortals. We then began to travel over various places and saw the places of pilgrimages and the holy places and the beautiful hermitages of the Munis. Before we went out from the Devaloka, we consulted with each other and entered into this agreement that we would not hide our feelings from each other, whether they be good or bad, while we would travel over the face of the earth. Whether it be our desire to get food, or wealth or women for enjoyment, whatever arises in the mind of any of us, we would express that freely amongst ourselves. Thus making an agreement, we went out in right earnest as Munis to travel over the face of this earth. Thus roaming all over the face of the earth, at the end of the summer season, when the rainy season commenced we came to the beautiful city of the King named S'anjaya. The King showed us great respect and worshipped us with devotion. Since then we remained for four months at his house.

14-33. During the four months of the rainy season, the roads are always almost impassable; it is, therefore, wise to stay at one place. For eight months, the Dvijas should always remain abroad on some work or other. Thinking all these, we two began to stay in the house of the King S'anjaya. That liberal minded King gladly and with respect kept us as his guests and tendered to us all our requirements. The King had a very beautiful daughter named Damayanti, with good teeth. The King ordered her to take care of us. That large-eyed princess, of great discrimination, was very energetic, day and night. She began to serve both of us. In due time she gave us water for our bath, excellent meat, food, towels for cleaning and rubbing our faces, in fact, everything what we desired. She kept ready for us whatever we desired, fans, seats, beds, whatever were necessary for us. Thus she began to serve. We were also engaged in the study of our Vedas and in those practises that were approved by the Vedas. O Dvaipayana! I used to sing, then, with lute in my hands, the sweet lovely Sama Gayatri songs in tunes and good Svaras. The princess herself appreciated the songs and when she heard these Sama songs ravishing to one's mind, she became attached to me and showed signs of affection. Day by day the attachment towards me grew stronger. Seeing her attached to me, my mind also became attached to her. Thus that princess indulged in amorous sentiments towards me and began to make slight distinctions between the food and other things offered to me and Parvata. I got warm water for my bath and Parvata used to get cold water; I got nice curds when food was served to me whereas Parvata got only whey. I got nice white bedding for myself to sleep on whereas Parvata had merely a dirty sheet to lie down. Thus the princess began to serve me with great love and devotion but not so she served Parvata. The fair lady began to look at me with eyes of love; not so towards Parvata. Parvata was very much surprised to see all this and thought within himself, “What is this?” Parvata, then, asked me in private “O Narada! Speak out to me truly in detail. The princess shews with much gladness and affection her deep love towards you; she serves you with dainty dishes but she behaves not so with me. I therefore suspect when I see all these distinctions made between you and me, that the daughter of the King S’anjaya wants with her heart and soul to make you her husband. And you also want to make her your wife. 1 have come to know this by signs and symptoms; for affection and love reigning inside can be made out by outward expressions of eyes and face. Whatever this be, O Muni! Now speak truly to me; do never tell a lie. When we went out from the Heavens, we made out that agreement; now remember that.”

34-42. Narada said Thus questioned suddenly by Parvata, I became very much abashed and said “O Parvata! This large-eyes princess is ready to marry me and I am also very much attracted towards her.” When Parvata heard all these, he became very much angry and uttered repeatedly, “Fie! O Narada! Fie! O Narada! First you swore on oath and then you deceived me afterwards. Therefore, O Deceiver of friends! I curse you and let your face become that of a monkey.” When the high-souled Parvata cursed thus, the face turned immediately into that of a monkey, elongated and distorted. I did not excuse him, though he was my sister’s son. I also got angry and cursed him, “Certainly, your journey to the Heavens will be stopped. You will not be able to go to Heaven. O Parvata! When you cursed me so heavily for so trivial a fault of mine, I see you are very mean. Whatever it be, you will have to remain on earth so long.” At this Parvata became very sad and went out of the city. My face became immediately like that of a monkey. The daughter of the King became very sorry to see my face thus distorted into that of a monkey. I did not see her glad as she was before; but her desire to hear my playing with my lute remained the same as before.

43-52. Vyasa said O Muni! What happened next? How did you get yourself rid of your curse and how did you get your man-like face? Whither did Parvata Risi go! When and how did you again re-unite with each other? Kindly describe all these to me in detail. Narada said “O Highly Intelligent One! What shall I say about the nature of Maya? When Parvata went away angrily, the daughter of the King began to serve me with greater care than before. I remained there, though Parvata went away, and seeing my face monkey-like, I became very dejected and sorry and was specially troubled with the care and anxiety what would happen to me hereafter? The King S’anjaya saw that his daughter Damayanti was slipping into her youth and asked the prime minister about her marriage. He said “The time of marriage of my dear daughter has now come; I will now marry her in accordance with due rites and ceremonies. Now tell me particularly about a prince worthy of her, as we like, in beauty, qualifications, largeheartedness, calmness, patience and heroism and who is of a good family.” The minister said “O King! There are many princes on the face of this earth, worthy in all respects, of your daughter. Whomever you like, you can call on him and give him your daughter with elephants, horses, chariots, wealth, gems and jewels.”

53-57. Damayanti, knowing the intention of his father informed the King of her own desire by her nurse and attendant. The nurse went to the King and said “When my father will sit at his ease and comfort you would go and speak to him in private that I am enchanted with the enchanting Nada sound of the great lute played by the Maharsi Narada and have selected him as my bridegroom. No other person will be dear to me. O Father! Marry me with Narada and thus fulfil my desire; O Knower of Dharma! I won’t marry anybody but Narada. O Father! I am now merged in the Nada-ocean (sound ocean) of bliss, sweet and joyful, void of anything destructive of happiness, void of Nakra, alligators, and fishes, Timingala, etc. (injurious animals) and without any salty taste; my mind won’t be satisfied with any other thing.”

English translation

1-13. Narada said On hearing these words of her daughter from her nurse, the King addressed the queen Kaikeyi, of lovely eyes, standing close by, thus "Have you heard what the nurse has said? Damayanti has mentally chosen the monkey-faced Narada as her husband. What has she thought? Whatever it be, it is no doubt, an act of great foolishness. His face is monkey-like; how can I betroth my daughter to him? Where is an ugly beggar Narada? And where is my daughter Damayanti? The marriage between them is quite unjust; never it should take place. O Beautiful One of good hairs! Better call her before you in private and show her reasons approved of the S'astras and of the aged persons and make her desist from such a rash course." On hearing her husband's words, the mother of Damayanti called her in private and said "O Child! Where is your this beautiful face? And where is the monkey-like face of Narada? You are smart and quick; how have you been, then, deluded by such a Moha? O Child! You are the daughter of a king! Your body is gentle like a creeper. And Narada always besmears his body with ashes; so his body is very rough. O Spotless One! How will you change your words with him? Why do you shew your attachment to an ugly person? What pleasure do you feel thereby? You would be married to a beautiful prince; never follow this rash course; your father is very sorry to hear these from your nurse. O One of soft body! Judge this yourself, what intelligent man is there that is not sorry at the soft Malati creeper entwining a thorny tree? Even a stupid silly man would never feed a camel, that likes thorns, with soft betel-leaves. When your marriage time arrives, say yourself, who will not be sorry to see you going to Narada and embracing him by his arms! Nobody likes to speak with an ugly faced one; how will you be able to spend your time with him till your death!"

14-29. Narada said On hearing the mother's words, the gentle Damayanti, with her mind intently fixed on me, spoke to her mother, very much depressed in her spirits. "O Mother! What good face and beautiful form will avail, who is not in the path of love and who is quite ignorant of amorous feelings and sentiments! And what will the wealth and kingdoms of that unskilled illiterate person avail! The deer, that roam in the forest, getting enchanted by the Nada (sound) Rasa, give up their lives even to the singers. So they are fortunate. But fie to the persons who are illiterate and void of feelings of love! O Mother! Narada Risi is well conversant with the science of music with seven Svaras. No other man save Maha Deva knows this. Living with an illiterate person is courting death at every moment. One devoid of qualifications should be always avoided, by all means, though he be wealthy and of a beautiful form. Fie on the friendship with kings that are illiterate and puffed up with vain arrogance! A well-qualified man, be he even a beggar, is far better to be cultivated friendship with. Leaving other circumstances out of account, even to change words with such a well qualified man, makes one highly delighted. The man is very rare in this world, though he be weak, if he be well versed in the science of music and if he knows Svara, Grama, Murchchana and be skilled in eight sentiments of love. [Note Svara - Sadaja, Risabha, Gandhara, Madhyama, Panchama, Dhaivata and Nisada. Grama - the gradual increase and decrease in Svaras. Murchchana - the rising of sounds, an intonation; a duly regulated rise and fall of sound conducting the air and the harmony through the keys in a pleasing manner; changing the key or passing from one key to another; modulation; melody]. The man versed in the knowledge of Svara leads one to the Heaven of Kailas'a as the rivers Ganges and Sarasvati by their own merits lead one to Kailas'a. There is not the least doubt in this. He is a Deva in his human body who knows the Svara measure; and he who does not know the Svara and its seven grades is a beast though he has a human form - he who finds no delight when he hears the tune regulated by Murchchana and the seven Svaras. Do not consider the deer as beasts for they get enchanted when they hear the musical notes. The venomous snakes, though they have no ears, get delighted to hear the enchanting Svara Nada by their eyes. They even are to be praised; but fie on those human beings who have ears but who do not find any delight when they hear the Nada! The little children feel intense pleasure to hear the music, but fie, fie on those elders who are void of this musical sentiments! Does not my father know that Narada is ornamented with many qualifications? Who is there in the three worlds like him in singing the Sama songs! For this very reason, indeed! I have already selected him as my husband; afterwards, due to a curse, the Muni, the ocean of qualifications, got his face changed into that of a monkey. The Kinnaras, skilled in the science of music, have their faces horse-like; but are they not dear to all? What business have they to get good faces? They enchant the Devas even by their sweet ravishing songs. O Mother! Kindly tell my father that I have already chosen Narada as my husband. Therefore let him deliver me to his hands, without making any further requests in this matter."

30-40. Narada said On hearing the words of her daughter Damayanti, that unblameable pure queen knowing her attachment deep towards me, spoke to the King thus "O King! Now celebrate in an auspicious day and on an auspicious moment the auspicious marriage of Damayanti; the daughter has said that she has already selected Narada as her bridegroom and it cannot be other-wise." Thus prompted by the queen, the King S'anjaya performed the marriage ceremony of her daughter in accordance with due rites and customs and in an exceedingly becoming manner. O Risi! Thus I entered into the married life and remained there though my heart constantly burned with the thought of my monkey-face. Whenever the princess used to come to me for my service, I used to get tormented with the remembrance of my monkey-face; but her face beamed with gladness whenever she saw me; never she became sorry nor dejected, even for a moment, to see my face monkey-like.

Thus time passed on. One day the Muni Parvata suddenly came there, after making his sojourn to many places of pilgrimages. I showed him a great respect and gladly loved him and greeted him duly; he got himself seated in an excellent Asana and became very sorry to see me. I am his uncle and have entered into a married life; my face has become monkey-like. Therefore I am very much depressed in spirits and worried with the sad thought and has become lean and thin. Seeing this he was overwhelmed with pity. He then said "O Muni! The curse that I cast on you before out of my anger, I now withdraw. Hear. O Maharsi! Let your face be by my merits, again as good as it was before; I now feel pity for the daughter of the King."

41-52. Hearing thus, my heart also became gentle and instantly with a view to free him of my curse, I said "Let your journey to the Heavens be re-established. I now make this special favour on you as regards my curse on you before." O Dvaipayana! At his word, before our sight, my face became exceedingly handsome as it was before. The princess Damayanti became very glad and instantly she went to the mother and said "O Mother! At the word of Parvata, the great Muni, the curse of your son-in-law has been removed and his face has become handsome as before and the lustre of his body has also increased." The queen was very much filled with ecstasy and joy at Damayanti's words and went hurriedly and informed the King. The King S'anjaya gladly went at once to see the Muni. The great King became very glad and gave lots of wealth, gems and jewels to me and my nephew Parvata as a dowry. O Dvaipayana! Thus I have described to you my old story how I felt the strong influence of Maya. O Fortunate One! Owing to the illusory nature of the Gunas, like a magic, no embodied being in this world could have been happy before, or he is happy now or he will be happy hereafter. Lust, anger, greed, jealousy, attachment, egoism, and vanity, each one of these is very powerful;

nobody is able to conquer these. O Muni! The three Gunas Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the entire causes of the coming into this bodily existence of every being. O Dvaipayana! Once I was passing with Bhagavan Visnu, laughing and joking, making merriments through a forest, when suddenly I was transformed into a woman. Next I became the wife of a king enchanted by Maya, I remained in his house and gave birth to many children.

53-56. Vyasa said O Devarsi! A great doubt has now arisen in my mind at your word. O Muni! You are very wise; how then did you get womanhood; how again did you regain your manhood? Who was the king at whose house you stayed and how did you give birth to children; describe fully and satisfy my curiosity. Describe to me, now, the nature of Maya, extremely wonderful, by which this entire universe, moving and non-moving, all are enchanted. O Muni! Though I have heard your nectar-like words, capable to remove all the doubts, embodying the essence of all the S'astras, yet I am not fully satiated.

Here ends the Twenty-seventh Chapter of the Sixth Book on the marriage of Narada and his face getting transformed into that of a monkey in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Narada said O Thou whose only wealth consists in asceticism! I am now describing to you all those good stories; hear attentively. O Muni! This Maya and Her Power are incomprehensible even by those who are the foremost amongst the Yogins. This whole Universe, moving and non-moving, from Brahma to the blade of grass, is enchanted by that Unborn and Incomprehensible Maya; therefore no one can escape from the hands of that Maya. One day I wanted to see Hari, of wonderful deeds, and went out with lute in my hand from Satyaloka, to the lovely SVeta Dvipa (the residence of Visnu) singing the beautiful Sama hymns in tune with the seven Svaras. I saw there Gadadhara, the Deva of the Devas, with four arms holding disc in one of his hands. He resembled a newly-formed rain-cloud of S'yanna colour. He was illumined with the lustre of the Kaustubha jewel in his breast. He was wearing an yellow apparel.

His head was beautified with a lustrous crown. Thus the Bhagavan Narayana was playing in amorous movements with the daughter of the ocean, fully capable to give one delight and enjoyment. Seeing me, the lovely Devi Kamala, dear to Vasudeva, full of youth and beauty, decorated with ornaments, endowed with all auspicious signs, superior to all the women, went away at once (to another room) from the presence of Janardana. The breast of Laksmi Devi was becoming visible even through the cloth thrown over it; therefore she went hurriedly to the inner compartment. Seeing this I asked Janardana, the Deva of the Devas, the Lord of the worlds, and holding a garland of forest grown flowers thus:-- "O Bhagavan! O Slayer of Mura! O Padmanabha! Why has Kamala Devi, the Mother of all the Lokas, on seeing me coming here, gone out of Your presence. O Lord of the worlds! I am not a rogue nor a cheat; I have conquered my passions and am become an ascetic; I have conquered even Maya. Therefore O Deva! What is the cause of the departure of the Kamala Devi from here? Kindly explain this to me."

12-20. Narada said O Dvaipayana! Hearing my words, expressive of my pride, Janardana smiled and spoke to me in words sweet like the sound of a lute "O Narada! The rule in such cases is this The wife of any man whatsoever ought not to stay before any other male outsider than her husband. O Narada! It is very hard to conquer Maya; even those, who by Pranayama have conquered their Prana Vayu, their organs of senses and their food, even those Samkhya Yogins and the Devas are not able to conquer Maya. The words that you have just now uttered that you have conquered Maya are not fit to come out of your mouth; for by your knowledge of music, it seems that you are enchanted with the sounds of the music. Brahma, I, S'iva, and the other Munis, none of us has been able as yet to conquer that Unborn Maya; how, then, can it be possible that you or any other man can conquer that Maya! Any embodied being, be he a Deva, a human being, or a bird, no one is able to conquer that Maya Unborn. Whoever is endowed with the three Gunas, be he a knower of the Vedas, or a Yogin, or conqueror of his passions, or all knowing, is not able to conquer Maya. The Great Time (Kala) though formless, is one form of Maya and fashions this universe. All the JTvas are subservient to this Kala, be he a good literary person, or of a mediocre nature, or an illiterate brute. This Kala sometimes makes even a religious man that knows Dharma confounded and deluded; so you know the nature of Maya is very incomprehensible and Her ways mysterious." (Note: This Kala is of the fourth dimension, time and space.)

21-23. O Dvaipayana! Thus saying, Visnu stopped. I was greatly astonished and asked that Eternal Vasudeva, the Deva of the Devas, the Lord of the World, "O Lord of Rama! What is the form of Maya? How is She? What is the measure of Her strength? Where She resides? Whose substratum is She? Kindly tell these to me. O Preserver of the Universe! I am greatly desirous to see Maya; Shew

Her to me quickly. O Lord of Rama! I am very eager to know Maya. Be graciously pleased to describe tome the glory of Maya."

24-36. Visnu said Maya resides everywhere throughout this whole Universe; Her nature consists of the three Gunas; She is the substratum of all; She is omniscient, and acknowledged by all; invisible, and of diverse forms. O Narada! If you want to see Maya, then come quickly and mount with me on Garuda; we both will go elsewhere and I will shew you that Maya, invincible by those who have not conquered themselves. O Son of Brahma! Don't be depressed when you see Maya. Thus saying, Janardana Hah remembered Garuda and instantly he came to Hah. Janardana mounted on him and gladly made me also get up on his back and took me with Him. In a moment Garuda, went, at his command, with the speed of wind to the forest where the Bhagavan desired to go. Mounting on Garuda we passed and saw on our way beautiful forests, nice lakes, rivers, towns, villages, huts of cultivators, towns close to the mountains, huts for cow-keepers in cowsheds, the beautiful hermitages of the Munis, lovely Jhils, tanks and lakes beautified with big lotuses, flocks of ewes, packs of wild boars, etc., till, at last, we came to a place close to Kanauj. I saw there a beautiful divine tank; nice lotuses blossomed there, spreading their sweet fragrance all around; the bees were making lovely humming noise and ravishing away the minds of men; various flowers, lilies, etc., were beautifying the place; Geese, Karandavas, and Chakravakas and other acquatic fowls were playing with their cackling noise, the water was very sweet like milk; the tank was defying, as it were the ocean. Seeing such a wonderful tank, the Bhagavan told me "O Narada! See, how beautiful is this deep tank with its clear waters, and adorned all over with lotuses! The sweet voiced flamingoes are roaming on the lake making lovely sounds!

37-54. We will bathe in this tank and then go to the city Kanauj. Thus saying, He made me descend quickly from Garuda and He himself also got down. Then the Bhagavan smilingly caught hold of my fore¬ finger and repeatedly praising the glory of the tank took me to its bank. We rested a while on the cool umbrageous beautiful bank when S'ri Bhagavan said "O Muni! Better bathe you first in this tank; next I will bathe in this very holy pool of water. O Narada! Look! Look! How clear crystal-like is the water of this pool like the heart of a saint; see how it smells also fragrantly in contact with the lotuses on it." When the Bhagavan spoke thus to me; I kept my lute and deer skin aside and gladly went to the edge of the tank. Washing then my hands and feet I tied my hair lock and, taking Kus'a grass, I performed my Achaman and, purifying myself, began to bathe myself in that tank. While I was bathing. Hah was looking at me; by the time I took a dip, I saw that I quitted my male form and got a beautiful female form. Hah took away, then, my deer skin and lute and mounting on Garuda went away in a moment to His own residence. Getting the female form and decorated with excellent ornaments, my memory of my previous male form vanished at once; I forgot all about my famous lute and forgot also Jagannatha, the Deva of the Devas. I then came out of the tank in that enchanting woman form, saw the pool of water filled with clear limpid water and adorned with lotuses. Seeing that, I began to think "What is this?" and I became very much astonished. While I was thus meditating in my woman form, a king, named Taladhvaja, came there, all on a sudden, on a chariot, accompanied by numerous elephants and horses. The King looked like a second Cupid; he was decorated with various ornaments on his various limbs; he was just entering into his youth and he looked very enchanting. The King saw me at once and looking at me decked with divine ornaments and my moon-like face, was greatly astonished and asked me "O Kalyani! Who are you? Are you the daughter of a man or of a Naga (serpent) or of a Gandharva or of a Deva? I see you are now in your youth; why are you alone here? O Lovely-eyed!

Has any fortunate person married you? Or are you still unmarried? Speak all these truly to me. O Fair-haired One! What are you looking at in this tank? O One enchanting, as it were, like the Cupid! What is your desire? Say, O Slanting-eyed! My mind is ravished to hear your cuckoo-like voice. O One of thin waist! Choose me as your husband and enjoy various excellent things as you like."

Here ends the Twenty-eighth Chapter of the Sixth Book on Narada's getting the feminine form in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Narada said O Dvaipayana! When the King Taladhvaja asked me thus, I thought over earnestly and said thus “I do not know whose daughter I am; nor do I know quite certainly where are my father and mother; one man placed me here on this tank and has gone away, whither I do not know. O King! I am now an helpless orphan; what shall I do now? Where to go? What to do by which I can have my welfare? I am all the while thinking on these. O King! The Destiny is powerful; I have not the least control over it; you know Dharma and you are a King. Do now as you like. O King! Do nourish me; I have no father, no mother, nor any acquaintances and friends; there is no place for me also to stand on; therefore I am now your dependent.” When I spoke thus, the King looked at my face and became love-stricken for me; he then told his attendants to bring an excellent rectangular and spacious palanquin to be carried on four men’s shoulders, gilt and adorned with jewels and pearls, where soft sheets were spread inside and covered all over with silken cloths. Instantly the servants went away and brought for me a beautiful palanquin. I got on it to serve the best wishes of the King. The King also gladly took me home. In an auspicious day and in an auspicious moment he married me in accordance with due rites and ceremonies in the presence of the Holy Fire.

12. I became dearer to him than even his own life and the King, with great fondness, kept my name as Saubhagya Sundari.

13-20. The King then began to sport with me amorously according to the rules of the Kama S’astra in various ways and with great enjoyments and pleasures. He then left all his kingly duties and state affairs and he began to remain day and night with me deeply immersed in amorous sports; so much his mind was merged in me in these plays that he could not notice the long time that passed away in the interval. He used to drink the Varuni wine and, forsaking all the state affairs, began to enjoy me in nice gardens, beautiful lakes, lovely palaces, beautified houses, excellent mountains and enviable forests and became completely subservient to me. O Dvaipayana! Being incessantly engaged with the King in amorous sports and remaining obedient to him, my previous body, male ideas, or the birth of Muni, nothing whatsoever came in my memory. I remained always attached to him, being obedient to him with a view to be happy and I constantly thought over “that this King is very much attached to me, I am his dearest wife to all others; always he thinks of me, I am his chief consort, capable to give him enjoyment.” My mind became entirely his and I completely forgot the eternal Brahmajhan and the knowledge of the Dharma S’astras.

21-31. O Muni! Thus engaged in various amorous sports, twelve years passed away as if a moment and I could not perceive that. Then I became pregnant; and the King became very glad and performed all the ceremonies pertaining to my impregnation and holding of the child in my womb. In order to satisfy me, the King used to ask me always what things I liked; I used to be very much abashed; seeing this, the King used to be still more glad. Ten months thus passed away and in an auspicious Lagna and when the asterism was favourably strong, I gave birth to a son; the King became very glad and great festivities were held on the birth ceremony of the child. O Dvaipayana! When the period of the birth- impurity was over, the King saw the face of the child and was greatly delighted; I then became the dearest wife of the King. Two years after again I became impregnated; the second auspicious son was born. The King gave the name Sudhanva to the second son and on the authority of the Brahmins, kept the name of the eldest son as Viravarma. Thus I gave birth to twelve sons, in due course of time, to the King’s great liking; and I was engaged in rearing up those children and thus I remained enchanted. Again in due course, I gave birth to eight sons; thus my household was filled with happiness. The King performed the marriage ceremonies of all those children duly and befittingly; and our family became very large with sons and their wives.

32-52. Then I had some grandsons and they increased my attachment and the consequent delusion with their all sorts of playful sports. Sometimes I felt happy and prosperous and sometimes I felt pain and sorrow when my sons fell ill. Then my body and mind became very much troubled with sorrows. Again the quarrels amongst my sons and my daughters-in- law, brought terrible pain and remorse in my mind. O Best of Munis! Thus I was greatly immersed in the terrible ocean of these imaginary thoughts, sometimes happy and sometimes painful, and I forgot my previous knowledge and the knowledge of the S'astras. I was merged in the thought of myself being a woman and lost myself entirely in doing the household affairs. I began to think "that I have so many daughters-in-law; so many powerful sons of mine are playing together in my house; Oh! I am fortunate and full of merits amongst women" and thus my egoistic pride increased. Not for a moment even occurred the thought that I had been Narada; the Bhagavan had deceived me by His Maya. O Krisna Dvaipayana! I was deluded by Maya and passed away my time in the thought "that I am the king's wife, chaste and of good conduct following good Achara; I have so many sons and grandsons; I am blessed in this Samsara and that I am so happy and prosperous." One powerful king of a distant country turned out an inveterate enemy of my husband and came to the city of Kanauj to fight with my husband, accompanied by chariots, and elephants and the fourfold army. That enemy besieged the city with his army; my sons and grandsons went out and fought valiantly with him but owing to the great Destiny, the enemies killed all my sons. The King retreated and returned to his palace. Next I heard that powerful King killed all my sons and grandsons and had gone back to his country with his army. I then hurriedly went to the battlefield, crying loudly. O Long-lived One! Seeing my sons and grandsons lying on the ground, in that horrible and distressed state, I became merged in the ocean of sorrows and lamented and wept loudly and wildly, "O my Sons! Where have you gone leaving me thus? Alas! The pernicious Fate is very dominant, and very painsgiving and indomitable. It has killed me today." By this time, the Bhagavan Madhusudana came to me there in the garb of a beautiful aged Brahmin. His dress was sacred and lovely; it seemed he was versed in the Vedas. Seeing me weeping distressedly in the battlefield he said "O Devi! O cuckoo-voiced One! It seems you are the mistress of a prosperous house and you have got husband and sons! O thin-bodied One! Why are you thus lamenting and feeling yourself distressed! All this is simply illusion caused by Moha; think; who are you? whose sons are these? Now think of your best hereafter; Don't weep, get up and be comfortable, O Good-eyed one!

53-54. O Devi! To shew respect to your sons, etc., gone to the other worlds, offer them water and Til. The friends of the deceased ought to take their bath in a place of pilgrimage; never they should bathe in their houses. Know this as ordained by Dharma.

55-66. Narada said O Dvaipayan! When the old Brahmin thus addressed me, I and the King and other friends got up. The Bhagavan Madhusudana causing this creation, in the form of a Brahmana, led the way and I followed him quickly to that sacred place of pilgrimage. The Visnu Bhagavan, the Lord Janardana Hah, in the form of a Brahmin, kindly took me to the tank named Pumtirtha (male tirtha) and said "O One going like an elephant! Better take your bath in this tank; forego your sorrows that are of no use; now the time has arrived to offer water to your sons. Better think that you had millions of sons born to you in your previous births and for that your millions of sons and daughters lost their lives; you had millions of fathers, husbands, and brothers and you lost them again; O Devi! Now tell me for whom you will now grieve? All these, then, are merely mental phenomena; this world is full of delusion, false like a mirage and dream-like; the embodied souls, simply get pains and sorrows and nothing else." Narada said On hearing his words, I went to bathe in that Pumtirtha, as ordered by him. Taking a dip, I found that, in an instant, I became a man; the Bhagavan Hah, in his own proper form, was standing on the edge with a lute in his hand. O Brahmin! When getting out of the water, I came to the bank and saw the lotus-eyed Krisna, pure consciousness then flashed in my heart. Then I thought "that I am Narada; I have come to this place and being deluded by the Maya of Hah, I got the female form." When I was thinking thus. Hah exclaimed, "O Narada! Get up; what are you doing, standing in the water?" I was astonished; and, recollecting my feminine nature, very severe indeed, began to think why I was again transformed into a male form.

Here ends the Twenty-ninth Chapter of the Sixth Book on the Narada's getting again his male form in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-14. Narada said O Best of Munis! The King was greatly astonished to see me dip in the tank in a female figure and get up from the tank in a male figure and thought, “Where is my dearest wife? And how is this Narada Muni suddenly come here!” The King, not seeing his wife, lamented very much and cried frequently, “O my dear Wife! Where have you gone, leaving me here thus. Without you, O One of spacious hips! My life, palace and kingdom, all, are quite useless. O Lotus-eyed one! What shall I do? O Smiling One! Why is not my life getting out of my body, suffering thus from thy separation? Without you, my sentiment of love has left me for ever.

O Large-eyed One! Now I am lamenting for you. O Dear! Better give me your sweet reply; the love that you expressed at our first union, where has it gone now? O One with good eyebrows! Are you sunk in the water and have you given up your life? Or are you devoured by fishes or crocodiles? Or are you carried away by Varuna, the Deva of the waters, to my great misfortune? O One of beautiful limbs! You are blessed, as you have gone away with your sons; O sweet¬ speaking One! Your affection for them was not artificial. Is it right for you to go up to the Heavens, attached by affection for your sons, leaving me your distressed husband alone, thus weeping for your separation? O Dear! I have lost both, you and my sons; yet death is not carrying me away; O! How hard is my lot! What to do? Where to go? Rama is not now in this world. He knew what was the pain caused by the separation from one’s dearest wife. Oh! The cruel Fate has ordained very unwisely with great inconsistency the periods of parting from one another at different periods; when their minds and all other things are exactly the same in all circumstances of pleasure and pain. The practice of Sati (burning with one's deceased husband), as ordained by the Munis, is certainly for the good of the chaste women; but it would have been good no doubt, were there such practices allowed for the men to burn themselves with their deceased wives." Bhagavan Hari then spoke to the lamenting King in reasonable words and consoled him thus "O King! Why are you thus troubling yourself with pain and sorrow? Where has gone your dearest wife? Have you not heard anything of S'astras? or Have you not taken any shelter of any wise man!

15-27. Who was your wife? Who are you? Of what nature was your union and disunion and where did it take place? The union of wives and sons in this S'amsara is momentary like the meetings of persons on boats, while crossing a river. O King! Now go home, there is no use in your weeping thus in vain; the union and disunion of men are always under the control of Fate, the Daiva; therefore the wise should not lament for them. O King! Your union with the woman took place here; and now you have lost that beautiful, thin-bodied, large¬ eyed woman here also. Her father and mother you have not seen; you have got her like what is heard in the story of the crow and the Tal fruit; as you got her wonderfully, so you have lost her wonderfully. O King! Do not grieve; Time cannot be ruled over; go home and enjoy yourself subservient to Time. That beautiful woman has gone away in the manner she came to you; you ought to do your stately affairs in the way as you used to do before as the ruler of all. O King! Consider that if you weep day and night, that women will never return; why then are you giving vent to your sorrows in vain? Go now and have recourse to the path of the Yoga and thus while away your time. The enjoyable things come in course of time and they go away again in due course; therefore in this world of no gain whatsoever, the wise should never lament. Continuous pleasure or continuous pain does not always take place; pleasure and pain are never steady; they rotate always like a rotary instrument. Therefore, O King! Make your mind calm and quiet and rule happily your kingdom; or make over the charge of the kingdom to your sons and retire to the forest. This human body is seldom obtained; it is frail; therefore getting that body it is advisable to practise the realisation of the Supreme. O King! This organ of generation and this tongue reside also with the beasts, the peculiarity of human body is that knowledge can be realised in it; not in any other inferior births. Therefore leave your home, leave your sorrows for your wife; all this is the Maya of Bhagavan; by Her the world is deluded."

28-37. Narada said Bhagavan Hah speaking thus, the King bowed down to Him, the Deva of the Devas and finishing the bathing duties returned to his home. He then became possessed of dispassion and discrimination and making over the charge of his kingdom to his grandsons retired to the forest and realised the Supreme Knowledge. When the King went away, the Bhagavan began to laugh and laugh, seeing me again and again. I then told him, "O Deva! You have deceived me. I now come to know how great is the power of Maya. O Janardana! Now I remember all that I did in my feminine form. Tell me, O Hah! O Deva of the Devas! How I lost my previous consciousness, when I got down into the tank and bathed in it. O Lord of the world! Why was I enchanted, when I got the female form and when I got the King as my husband like S'achi's getting Indra. The same mind I had; the old Jivatma was there and the previous subtle body was there; how, then, I lost their memories? O Lord! Give out the cause of it and clear my doubts; a great doubt has arisen in my mind. Many enjoyments I had in my female form, drinking liquor and other prohibited things I tasted; O Slayer of Madhu! What is the cause of all these? I could not know then that I was Narada, as I now recognise clearly what I was in and what I did in my female form. Say the Why of all these things."

38-53. Visnu said:-- "Know, O Intelligent Narada! That all this is merely the Pastime of Maya. There are many states going on in the bodies of all the living beings. The embodied beings have got their waking, dream, deep sleep and Turiya (beyond all the three above- mentioned) states; then why you doubt that when there is another body, there would be also the change in the states? When a man sleeps, he knows not anything, he does not hear anything; but when he gets awake, he again comes to know everything completely. The Chitta gets itself moved by sleep; then mind gets different states by dreams and there arises a variety of feelings. A mad elephant is coming to kill me, and I am not able to fly away. What to do? Where to go? There is no place where I can quickly go; thus, in dreams, there arise different mental states. Sometimes we see in dreams that our departed grandfathers are come in our houses. I am seeing them, talking with them and I am dining with them. Whatever pain and pleasure are felt in dreams, when they awake, they know of what happened in their dreams and can also describe in details, recollecting what had then happened. O Narada! Know the power of Maya incomprehensible as the things seen in dreams cannot be certainly known that all those are false. O Muni! Neither I, nor S'ambhu, nor Brahma can measure the power wielded by Maya and Her three Gunas, very hard to fathom. How, then, can any ordinary mortal know them! Therefore, O Narada! None is able to fathom the Maya. This world, moving and non-moving, is fashioned out of the triple Gunas of the Maya; nothing whatsoever can exist without them. The predominant Guna in Me is Sattva; but Rajas and Tamas exist in me; being the Lord of this world, I cannot override the three Gunas. So your father, Brahma, is predominant in Rajo Guna; but Sattva and Tamas never leave Him, Our Maha Deva is predominant in Tamo Guna, but Sattva and Rajo are always with him. Therefore, no being can exist as separate from the three Gunas; this point I have settled in S'ruti. Therefore, O Lord of the Munis! Quit this endless Moha for the world, caused by Maya, and very hard to get over and worship Bhagavati, Who is of the nature of Brahman. O Intelligent One! Now you have seen the power of Maya; and you have enjoyed many things produced by Maya and you have realised the extremely wonderful nature of Her. Then why do you ask me further on this point?"

English translation

18-22. O Muni! When my Father learnt the cause of my cares, he smiled and spoke to me in sweet words “O Child! The Devas, the high-souled Munis, the wise ascetics and the Yogis subsisting on air only are not able to conquer this Maya. O Narada! The power of Maya is so very great that I, Visnu and S’ambhu, the Lord of Lima, none are able to know Her power.

That Mahamaya is creating, preserving and dissolving this world by Time, Karma, and Nature and other efficient causes. O Child! Know Her to be inconceivable and unapproachable. O Intelligent One! Do not be sorry nor should you be surprised about Maya’s great strength, for we all are deluded by Her.

23-25. O Dvaipayan! Thus advised by my Father, my wonder disappeared. I then asked permission of my Father Padma Yoni (Lotus-born) and went out on tour round the sacred places of pilgrimages and on my way, seeing by and by the chief Tirthas, I have now come here. Therefore, O Muni! Dost thou relinquish your sorrows for the extinction of the Kuru’s family and remain here and pass your time in great joy and happiness. One must bear the fruits of one’s Karma, good or bad; knowing this fully roam at your will wherever you like.

26-40. Vyasa said O King! Maharsi Narada thus kindling knowledge in me, went away; I also thought over his words. On the banks of the river Sarasvati, I composed this Devi Bhagavat to pass away my time during the excellent period of Sarasvata Kalpa. This Puranam is excellent; it is composed on the

here. Therefore, O King! Not the least doubt should be entertained. As a magician makes the wooden dolls dance in his hands at his will, so this world-enchanting Maya is making this world, moving and non¬ moving, dance from Brahma down to the blades of grass and all human beings. O King! Know Maya's triple Gunas to be the cause of this mind consisting of five organs of senses, that follows the Chitta (mind, buddhi and Ahamkara). Actions arise from the causes thereof; there is no doubt in this; what doubt, then, there can arise that all these creatures of different temperaments will come out of the different Gunas of Maya. Peaceful, terrible and stupid become the persons in contact with the Mayic Gunas. How, then, can they exist, bereft of them? As the cloth cannot exist without threads, so the embodied beings cannot exist in the world without the triple Gunas of Maya. There is no doubt in this. As a pot cannot be made without clay, so these bodies, Devas, human or birds, cannot be created without the Gunas. Brahma, Visnu and S'iva, too, are possessed of those three Gunas and therefore they become sometimes happy and satisfied, sometimes unhappy and dissatisfied and sometimes they become sad and remorseful as they are then under the influence of one Guna or the other. Brahma happens at times to be full of wisdom and knowledge, his temper peaceful, sweet and pleasant and his soul rapt in Samadhi, when he becomes possessed of Sattva Guna; again when he is void of Sattva and filled with Rajo Guna, His temper becomes unpleasant and his appearance gets dark and awful everywhere; and when he becomes grossly Tamasic, He becomes sorrowful and bereft entirely of intelligence.

41-51. Visnu, when resting in Sattva, becomes peaceful, sweet- tempered, and full of knowledge; when Rajo Guna preponderates in Him, He becomes void of sweetness and becomes awful to all the beings. Rudra becomes, too, peaceful and pleasant under the Sattva Guna, awful and void of sweetness under the Rajo Guna, and becomes sad and stupid under the Tamo Guna. O King! When Brahma, Visnu, Mahes'vara and the solar and lunar Kings, the fourteen lords of Manvantaras, Manu and others are under the control of the nnayic Gunas, what to speak of other ordinary mortals, men and the other Jivas. The whole world is under the control of Maya; the Devas, men and all other beings. None should doubt on this point. All the embodied beings labour under the directions of Maya; never can they work independently. This Maya is again always residing in the Highest Essence, the Samvit or the Universal Pure Consciousness. Thus Maya is dependent on the Highest Goddess, Who is of the nature of Samvit, and, stimulated by Her, resides in the hearts of all the Jivas. Therefore one ought to meditate, worship and bow down before the Bhagavati, the Creatrix of Maya and Who is of the nature of Samvit, Pure Existence, Intelligence and Bliss. Thus She becomes gracious and merciful and liberates the Jivas, giving them Her realisation and drawing together Her own Maya away from them. This whole cosmos is nothing but Maya and the Consciousness (Samvit) of the nature of Brahman is the Lord of Maya. For this reason that Beautiful One in the triple worlds, the Devi Bhagavati is known by the name BhuvanesVari, the Great Lady of the worlds.

52-60. O King! If the Jivas can fix their hearts on that Samvit, then Maya, born of the real and unreal, is quite unable to do any harm to them. No other Deva than the BhuvanesVari, of the nature of pure existence, intelligence and bliss is able to remove this Maya. O King! Darkness cannot destroy darkness; the Sun, Moon, Lightning or Fire can destroy it. Therefore it is highly incumbent on us to worship the Lady of Maya, the Samvit, the Mother with a cheerful heart to remove the Maya and Her Gunas. O King! Now I have narrated to you all the events concerning the killing of Vritrasura that you asked. What more do you want to hear now. O One devoted to vows! I have now described the first half of that Purana, which describes in detail the glory of S'ri Devi Bhagavati. This Purana, the secret of this Mother of the whole Universe, is not to be disclosed indiscriminately to anybody. Those that are peaceful, self-restrained, devoted, and possessed of Bhakti to the Devi, the disciples that are devoted to their Gurus and the eldest son, those are the fit recipients thereof. Whoever reads or hears with greatest devotion this Mahapuranam, equivalent to the Vedas, fraught with sound proofs and the essence of all talks, becomes, in this world, possessed of great wealth, becomes wise and passes his time in the greatest happiness. There is no doubt in this.

Here ends the Thirty-first Chapter on the Sixth Book on the glory of Maya in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Suta said Glad to hear the excellent divine stories of the Solar and Lunar races, the virtuous King Janamejaya, the son of ParTksit, again asked “O Lord! I am now very eager to hear the increase of the two lines of Kings. O Sinless One! You know everything. So kindly describe, in detail, the pure histories, capable to destroy sins, of the kings and their characters. The kings of the Lunar and the Solar races were great Bhaktas of the Highest S'akti, S'ri Bhagavati Devi; this I have heard. O Muni! Who wants not to hear further on the glorious anecdotes of the Bhaktas of the S'ri Devi?” When the Rajarsi asked thus, the Muni Krisna Dvaipayan, the son of Satyavati began to narrate gladly the several deeds of the Kings.

6-13. O King! I am now narrating to you in detail the origin, etc., of the Lunar and the Solar dynasties as well as of other kings in their connection. Hear attentively. The four-faced Brahma sprang from the navel of Visnu; engaged in practising Tapasya, he began to worship the Maha Devi Durga, extremely hard to conceive. Maha Devi, pleased at his worship, granted boon to Brahma; Brahma, the Grandsire of all the Lokas on thus getting the boon, became ready to create the world; but he could not create all on a sudden the human beings. Though the creation was eternally fashioned by the Pramatma Bhagavati, the four-faced Brahma thinking over in his mind variously, could not quickly spread it out and accomplish it as a veritable fact. Therefore He, the Prajapati, first created mentally the seven mind-born sons. These were known by the names of Marichi, Atri, Angira, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vais'istha. Next sprang Rudra from the anger of Prajapati, Narada from his lap; Daksa from his right thumb. Thus Sanaka and the other Risis were also his mind- born sons. O King! The wife of Daksa was born from the left thumb of Prajapati; this all-beautiful daughter is well known in all the Puranas by the name of Virini and Asikni. Narada, the chief of the Devarsis, was born, on some other occasion in her womb.

14-17. Janamejaya said “O Brahman! A great doubt arises in me to hear that the great ascetic Narada was born of Daksa in the womb of Virini. The Muni Narada indeed, was the son of Brahma; moreover be was the foremost of the ascetics and especially endowed with the knowledge of Dharma; how, then, can he be born of the womb of the Daksha's wife Virini. Well, if that be so, then describe, in detail, that wonderful story of the birth of Narada in the womb of Virini.

18-31. O Muni! Under whose curse, the high-souled Narada though very wise, had to leave his first body and be born again." Vyasa said O King, Brahma, the Self-born, with a view to create offspring, ordered first Daksa "Go and multiply innumerable children for the increase of the world." Thus ordered by his father the Prajapati Daksa produced five thousand powerful and heroic sons in the womb of Virini. Seeing all the sons of Daksa, desirous to multiply, the Devarsi Narada urged on, as it were, by Fate, began to laugh at them. How do you desire to multiply when you know not the dimensions and capacity of earth; so you will, no doubt, be put to ridicule and laughter. Rather, if you proceed on work, knowing beforehand the earth's capacity, your efforts will be fruitful. Otherwise, your attempt will no doubt, end in failures. Alas! You are awfully illiterate! Not knowing the dimensions of the world, you are ready to multiply your progeny; how, then, can you meet with success! Vyasa said O King! Hearing, all on a sudden, these words, Haryas'va and other sons began to speak with each other, "What this Muni has told, is very true. Let us then ascertain the earth's dimensions; we can easily multiply afterwards." Thus saying, they all went out to reconnoitre the earth. Thus excited at Narada's words, some went eastward, some southwards, some towards the north and some went to west all simultaneously and, as they liked, to make a survey of the earth. When the sons went away, Daksa became exceedingly sorry on their absence. Bent again on multiplying, he begat other sons; those sons again wanted to procreate. Seeing them, Narada again laughed and said:--Alas! What fools are you! Not knowing the dimensions of the earth, why are you ready to procreate? They were deluded by Narada's words, took them as true, and went out as their elder brothers did. Not being able to see those sons, Prajapati Daksa became very sorrowful for them and cursed Narada in rage.

32-38. Daksa said "O Evil-minded One! You have destroyed my sons; so be yourself destroyed; you will have to be born in the womb for your sin in causing the death of my sons; you have caused my sons to go abroad; so you must be born as my son." Thus cursed by Daksa, Narada had to take his birth in the womb of Virini. I heard also that the Prajapati Daksa begat afterwards sixty daughters in her womb. O King! Daksa, the great knower of Dharma, then gave up the sorrows for his sons and married his thirteen daughters to the high-souled Kas'yapa, ten daughters to Dharma, twenty-seven daughters to the Moon, two to Bhrigu, four to Aristanemi, two to Kris'as'va and the remaining two to Angira. Their sons and grandsons, the Devas and Danavas, became powerful but antagonistic towards each other. All of them were heroes and very Mayavis; so, deluded by their greed and jealousy, they quarrelled amongst each other.

Here ends the First Chapter in the Seventh Book on the beginning of the narrative of the Solar and the Lunar lines of kings in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said “O Highly Fortunate One! Kindly narrate in detail the spread of the families of those kings in the Solar line who were born and who were especially endowed with the knowledge of Dharma.”

2-8. Vyasa said O Bharata! I now speak to you exactly what I heard of yore, from Narada, the best of the Risis, how the Solar race spread. Once, on an occasion, the Muni S'riman Narada, on his tour, came at his will to my holy hermitage on the beautiful banks of the Sarasvati river. On seeing him I bowed down at his feet and then remained standing before him. I then gave him a seat and worshipped him with great esteem. I then said to him “O Best of Munis! You are worshipped by the whole universe; my retreat is sanctified by your coming. O All-knowing One! Kindly narrate the histories of the Kings that were famous in the family of the seventh Manu; they were unequalled as far as their origin was concerned and their diameters as well were wonderful. Therefore I am very eager to know, in detail, the history of the Solar race. O Muni! Describe shortly or in detail as the circumstances may require.” O King! When I made this question, Narada, the knower of the Highest Reality, gladly smiled, and, addressing me, began to describe the history of the Solar race.

9-26. Narada said O son of Satyavati! The history of the royal families is very holy and pleasant to hear; the more so when they are heard, one acquires Dharma and wisdom; therefore do you hear. In ancient times, Brahma sprang from the navel-lotus of Visnu and created the world. This is well known in every Purana. That self born.

all-powerful, all-knowing, the Doer of all, the Universal Soul practised Tapas in ancient times for Ajuta (ten thousand) years. By virtue of that Tapas, He got special powers to create the world. He meditated on the Auspicious Mother, and getting from Her the excellent powers. He created first the mind-born sons, all endowed with auspicious signs. Of them, Marichi became well known in this act of creation. His son Kas'yapa was respected by all and he was of great celebrity. He had thirteen wives, all daughters of Daksa Prajapati. The Devas, Daityas, Yaksas, Pannagas, beasts and birds all sprang from him. Therefore this creation is called the Kas'yapT creation. Amongst the Devas, the Sun is specially famous; his other name is Vivasvan. His son was named Vaivasvat Manu; he was a famous king. Besides, Manu had nine more sons. Iksvaku was the eldest. Their names are: (1) Nabhaga, (2) Dhrista, (3) S'aryati,

(4)Narisyanta, (5) Prans'u, (6) Nriga, (7) Dista, (8) Karusa, and (9) Risadhra. Iksvaku, the son of Manu was born first. He had one hundred sons, and Vikuksi was the wise and the eldest of these. I am now narrating how the nine sons, born afterwards of Manu, spread their families. Ambarisa was the son of Nabhaga; he was very truthful, powerful, and religious. He always governed his subjects justly. Dharstaka was the son of Dhrista; though he was a Ksattriya, he attained to Brahmanhood. He was naturally weak in fighting; always be was engaged in the works relating to the Brahmanas. Anarta was the well known son and Sukanya was the beautiful daughter of S'aryati. The King S'aryati gave his beautiful daughter in marriage to the blind Chyavana Risi; but the Risi, though blind, got his beautiful eyes again by the good character of the daughter. We heard that the As'vins, the Twins, the sons of the Sun, gave him back his eyesight.

27-29. Janamejaya said “O Brahmans! How is it that the King S'aryati married his lovely-eyed daughter Sukanya to the blind Chyavana Muni? I have got a great doubt on this point. The King gives his daughter in marriage to a blind person, if she be deformed.

ill-qualified or void of female signs. But the daughter, in this case, was beautiful. How then S'aryati, the Chief of Kings, gave over his daughter, knowing that the Risi was blind? O Brahmana! I am always an object of favour to you; so explain to me the cause of it.”

30. Suta said Glad to hear these words of Janamejaya, the Muni Dvaipayana smilingly said

31-50. S'aryati, the son of Vaivasvata, had four thousand married wives. All of them were endowed with auspicious signs and beautiful all of them were daughters of kings. They all were very obliging and dear to their husbands. But, out of all of these, the King had only one daughter exceptionally lovely and beautiful. The father and all the mothers loved exceedingly that sweet-smiling daughter. Not very far off the city, there was a beautiful lake of clear waters, like the Manasarovara lake. A Ghat way (steps) made of stones descended into the lake. Swans Karandavas, Chakravakas, Datyu'has, Sarasas and other birds used to play on its waters. Five varieties of lotuses were there in full bloom, bees were humming there all around. Various trees, S'al, Tamala, Sarala, Punnagas, As'okas, Banyans, Peepuls, Kadambas, rows of banana trees, Jambirs, Dates,

Panasas, Betelnut trees, cocoanut trees, Ketakas, Kanchanas, and other various beautiful trees encircled round the lake. Within these, the white Yuthikas, Mallikas, and other creepers and shrubs were seen beautifying the scenery. Especially there were, amongst them. Jack trees. Mango trees, tamarind trees, Karanjas, Kutakas, Palas'as, Neem trees, Khadiras, Bel trees, and Amalaki trees; and peacocks were sounding their notes, cuckoos were cooing their beautiful voices. Close to that place, there was, in a sacred grove covered over by trees, staying Chyavana Muni, the Bhrigu's son, of a tranquilled mind, and the chief of the ascetics. Thinking the place lovely and free from any obstacles, the Muni took his firm seat there and, collecting all his thoughts within himself, took the vow of non-speaking and controlling his breath became engaged in practising tapasya. Restraining his senses and foregoing eating and drinking, that Muni constantly meditated on Bhagavati of the nature of Sat, Chit and Ananda, O King! While he was thus meditating, the anthill grew up round and covered his body and nice creepers covered that also all round. O King! Long intervals passed away and it was covered over with ants; so much so that that intelligent Muni was covered entirely and looked like a heap of earth. O King! Once the King S'aryati wanted to play in an artificial wilderness and came there to the lake with his wives. S'aryati became at once deeply engaged in playing on the clear waters of the lake, surrounded by the beautiful females. On the other hand, the quick beautiful daughter Sukanya, picking up flowers here and there with her companions also began to play. Dressed in ornaments, Sukanya, walked to and fro; her anklets making a beautiful tinkling sound, till she came to the ant-hill of Chyavana Risi. She sportingly sat close to that anthill and instantly saw a shining substance inside through that, like fireflies. “What is this?” She thought and wishing to take it, took a thorn and became very eager to prick it up.

51-59. Slowly she went close to it and no sooner she got ready to prick it, than the Muni saw the beautiful, good-haired daughter as if to one's liking. The ascetic Bhargava, seeing that auspicious nice lady with nice teeth, spoke out in a feeble voice “What are you doing? O thin-bellied One! I am an ascetic; better go away from here. You have got such big-eyes, yet you do not see me. I therefore forbid you in your this attempt; do not pierce the anthill with thorn.” Though prevented, the daughter could not hear his words and asking “What was that?” pierced his two-eyes with thorns. Thus impelled by Fate, the princess sportingly pierced his eyes; but she suspected and thought “What have I done?” Thus becoming afraid she returned from that spot. His two eyes being pricked, the great Muni exceedingly pained, became very wrathful he incessantly gave vent to sorrows and remorse, being restless with pain. At that instant it happened that the king, nninisters, soldiers, elephants, horses, camels, so much so that all the beings that were there, had all their evacuations (passing their urines and faeces) stopped. Seeing thus happened all on a sudden, the King S'aryati was very much pained and became very anxious. All the soldiers came to the King and informed him of the stoppage of their evacuations. The King thought over the cause why this had happened.

60-65. Cogitating thus, the King returned home. Becoming very much troubled with cares and anxieties. He asked his soldiers and kinsmen “Who amongst you has done such an heinous act? On the west side of the lake the Maharsi Chyavana is practising the great tapasya in the midst of the forest; I think someone has done mischief to that king of ascetics, blazing like a fire; and therefore we are overcome with this disease. The highsouled aged son of Bhrigu has become specially proficient in his asceticism and has become supreme; I think someone must have injured him. Though I do not know who is that mischievous person that has shown him contempt or like that, this our state at present clearly shews that this is the fit punishment of that.” Hearing this, the soldiers said None of us has committed any mischief by word, mind or body; we know this very well.

Here ends the Second Chapter of the Seventh Book on the piercing of the eyes of Chyavana Muni in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Vyasa said O King! Thus the King, troubled with cares asked his soldiers, in an angry mood. Next he asked his friends in sweet words. The princess, seeing his father and his soldiers sorrowful, thought of her piercing the two eyes of the Muni with a thorn and thus spoke to the King O Father! While sporting in that forest, I came to see a very hard anthill covered with creepers and shrubs wherein I found two holes, O King! Through those small openings, I saw the two shining things as if they were fireflies and thinking them so I pierced them with thorns. At this time a faint voice I heard coming from that anthill. “Oh! I am killed!” I then took out my thorns and found them wet with water. “What is this!” I asked myself and was thunderstruck with fear; but I could not know what I pierced in that anthill. Hearing these gentle words of her daughter, the King S'aryati thought that that act had no doubt insulted the Muni and went at once to the anthill. He broke the anthill that covered the Muni and saw the suffering Chyavana aged in practising Tapasya, very much in pain. The King prostrated flat before the Muni and then with folded hands, praised him with hymns and humbly said to him “O Intelligent One! My daughter has done this wrong act while sporting; Therefore O high-souled One! What she had done unknowingly, do you forgive out of your own high-hearted-ness and liberality. I have heard that the ascetics are always void of anger; therefore now you have to forgive this daughter of the offence and thus shew your kindness.”

12-16. Vyasa said The Maharsi Chyavana, hearing thus the King's words and specially seeing his humble and distressed nature, said:- - O King! I never was angry a bit; your daughter had pained me; yet I am not angry and have not cast on her any curse; you better see, that I am innocent; much pain is felt by me due to my eyes being pricked. O King! It seems that you are sorry and troubled for that sin. Who can acquire happiness in this world who has committed a great offence to a Bhakta of the Devi, in spite he gets even S'iva as his Protector. O King! On the one hand, I am now worn out by old age, and then, on the other hand, I am deprived of my eyes; what shall be now my means? Please say, who will take care of the blind man?

17. The King said O Muni! The anger of the ascetics is transient; you are in practice of your tapasya; so your anger is a thing of impossibility. So kindly forgive the offence of the daughter. I have got many persons who will incessantly take care of you.

18-22. Chyavana said “O King! There is none of my relations with me; then I am now made blind; how shall I go on with my tapasya? I do not think that your servants will take care of me. O King! If you think it your duty to please me, then do my word, give me your lotus¬ eyed daughter to serve me and take care of me. O King! I will be very glad if I acquire your daughter; she will serve me when I will be engaged in my tapasya. O King! This, if observed, will satisfy me and all the troubles that are now with you and your army will no doubt disappear. O King! Think and grant me your daughter; I am an ascetic observing vows and if you give over your daughter to me, you will not incur any sin nor any fault.”

23-31. Vyasa said O Bharata! Hearing thus the Muni's words, the King S'aryati was immersed in cares and could not say anything whether he would or would not give over his daughter to him. The King thought, “My daughter is very fair like a Devakanya and this Muni is aged, ugly and specially he is blind; how then can I be happy if I give over my daughter to him. Who is there so stupid and vicious that knowing his good and bad, he for his own selfish happiness wants to deprive his beautiful daughter of the enjoyments of her married life. How will that fair eyebrowed daughter of mine pass her days happily in the company of this aged Muni when she will be overpowered by passion. The more so when the young beautiful ladies are not able to conquer their passions though possessed of husbands of their own standard and liking, how then can my daughter conquer her passion on getting this old blind husband! The exquisitely beautiful Ahalya married Gautama; but, seeing the youthful beauty of that lovely lady, Indra deceived her and took away her chastity. Till at last, her husband Gautama finding that action contrary to Dharma, cursed him. Now through the severe curse of that Brahmana many troubles may arise; so I cannot in any case give my daughter Sukanya over to him.” Thus thinking and absent-minded the King went back to his home and, being very distressed, called his ministers to form a council. O Ministers! What am I to do now? Is it advisable to give over my daughter to the Muni? Or is it better to suffer these pains? Judge and say what is the best course for me.

32. The Ministers said “O King! What shall we say in this critical juncture? How can you bestow your exceedingly beautiful daughter to that ugly unfortunate ascetic?”

33-45. Dvaipayana said At this moment, seeing her father and ministers troubled very much with cares, Sukanya understood at once everything by signs and hints; she then smilingly said to her dear father“O Father! Why are you looking so sad with cares? Perhaps you are very much troubled and sad for me. O Father! I have pained that Muni; so I will go and console him; what more than this that I will give up myself at his feet and please him.” Hearing these words of Sukanya, the King spoke to her very gladly before all the ministers. O Daughter! The Chyavana Muni is blind, aged and of a worn figure, especially of a very irritable temper; and you are a mere girl; how will you be able to serve him in that dreadful forest?

You are like Rati in beauty and loveliness; how can I bestow my daughter to that aged worn out, blind Muni for my own pleasure! The father marries the daughter to him who has got relations, who is of a proper age, strong, who has got unequalled grains and wealth, gems and jewels; never to a man void of wealth. O broad-eyed One! You are exquisitely handsome; and that ascetic is very old; see what an amount of difference lies between you two. The Muni, moreover, has past his marriageable age; so how can I give over my daughter. O Lotus-eyed! You always dwell in beautiful places; how can I now make you dwell for ever in thatched huts? O Cuckoo avoiced one! Rather will I and my soldiers die than to bestow you to that blind husband. Let whatever come it may, I will never lose patience; therefore, O One of good hips! Be quiet. I will never give you to that blind man. O my Daughter! I don’t care a straw whether my kingdom and my body live or die, but I will never be able to give you over to the ascetic. Hearing thus the father's words, Sukanya began to speak with a glad face the following sweet and gentle words 46-48. O Father! Do not trouble yourself for nothing with cares on my account. Give me over now to that best of Munis; then all the persons will be happy, no doubt. I will derive my intense pleasure there in that dense forest by serving with intense devotion my old husband, who is very holy. I have got not the least inclination towards these worldly enjoyments which are the sources of all troubles for nothing. My heart is now quiet. Therefore, O Father! I will become a chaste wife to him and act according to his liking.

49-54. Vyasa said O King! The Ministers were greatly amazed on hearing these words and the King also became greatly pleased and took her to the presence of the Muni. Going before him, he bowed down to the Muni and said “O Lord! Please accept duly this daughter for your Seva.” Thus saying, the King betrothed his daughter to him according to rules. Chyavana Muni also became very glad to receive her. The Muni took the daughter willingly for his Seva but refused other dowries that the King presented. Thus the Muni became pleased; immediately the soldiers began to evacuate and were very glad. Seeing this, the King's heart became filled with joy. When the King, thus finishing the betrothal ceremony of his daughter wanted to return home, the thin bodied princess then told her father 55-64. Sukanya said “O Father! Take away all my ornaments and clothings and give me for my use an excellent deer skin and one bark. O Father! I will dress myself like the wives of Munis and serve my husband in such a way as will bring to you the unparallelled undying fame in Heaven, Earth and the Nether regions; also I will serve my husband's feet so that I can derive the highest happiness in the next world. I am now full of youth, especially beautiful; do not think a bit that as I am wedded to an aged ascetic, that my character will be spoilt. As Vas'istha's wife Arundhati has attained celebrity in this world, so I will also attain success; there is no doubt in this. As the chaste wife Anasuya of Maharsi Artri has become widely known in this world so will I be known also and establish your fame.” The exceedingly religious King hearing all these words of Sukanya gave her deer skin and all other articles wanted. The King could not help weeping, when he saw that his daughter had dressed herself like the daughter of a Muni. He stood fixed, very sad, on that very spot. All the queens were exceedingly filled with sorrow to see the daughter dressed in bark and deer-skin. Their hearts quivered and they began to weep. O King! Then the King S'aryati bade good bye to the Muni, leaving there his daughter. He went with a grievous heart and returned to his own city, accompanied by the ministers.

Here ends the Third Chapter of the Seventh Book on the bestowing of the daughter of the King S'aryati to the Chyavana Muni in S'ri Mad

English translation

1-38. Vyasa said O King! When the King S'aryati departed, that virtuous lady devoted her tinne in serving her husband, and the Fire. She gave to the Muni for his food various delicious roots and fruits. She made him bathe with warm water; then making him put on the deer skin, she made him sit on the Kus'asan. (Seat made of the Kus'a grass.) Next she used to place in his front Kus'a, Til and Kamandalu and speak to him “O best of Munis! You are now to perform your daily rites (Nitya Karma).” When the Nitya Karma was finished, the lady used to catch him by his hand and make him sit on another seat. Next the princess brought fresh ripe fruits and cooked rice, grown without cultivation and gave to the Muni for his food. When the husband finished his meals, she gave him devotedly water for cleansing his mouth; then washing his hands and feet gave him the betelnuts and pan leaves. Next she made him sit on an excellent seat, and with his permission, performed her own bodily purifications. She then, used to eat the remnants, fruits and roots of the dishes of her husband; and coming next to her husband addressed him affectionately “O Lord! Order me what can I do now for you? If you like, I may shampoo your legs and feet.” Thus every day that princess devotedly spent her time in serving her husband.

At evening when the Homa ceremony was finished, she collecting delicious and soft fruits presented to him to eat. With his permission she, then, ate that were left of the fruits; next she prepared bedding soft to the touch and gladly made him sleep on it. When his dear husband thus laid himself on the bed, she shampooed his feet and legs and in the interval, asked him about the religious duties of the chaste wives of the family. When the Muni fell asleep in the night, she devotedly laid herself close to his feet and slept. During the summer season when her husband was perspiring, the lady used to fan him with cool breeze. She took off his troubles and thus served her husband. In the cold season, she collected firewood and lit them before him and used to ask him frequently "O Muni! Are you feeling pleasure in this?" That lady, dear to her husband, used to get up from her bed in the Brahma Muhurta before Sunrise, next made her husband get up and took him some short way off and there made him sit for calling on nature. She kept ready water and earth and stood in readiness at a suitable distance apart. Knowing that he had finished his calls for nature, she took him back to the As'ram, and washed his hands and feet with water duly making him sit on a convenient Asana. She then gave to him the pot for Achamana and then began to collect fuel. She used to bring pure clear water and made it hot; then she asked her husband fondly "O Husband! Have you finished cleaning your teeth? Warm water is ready; may I bring it to you? You better bathe with that, uttering your Mantrams. The time is now for performing the morning Sandhya and for performing Homa. Do the Homa regularly and worship the Devas." The princess, whose nature was pure and clean as anything, kept herself engaged daily in serving her husband, Chyavana Muni, with perfect gladness, austerity, and observing all the rules duly. Thus that beautiful-faced princess worshipped gladly Chyavana Muni, serving Fire and the guests daily. Then, once, on an occasion, the AsVin twins, the sons of Surya came sporting and at their pleasure, close to the hermitage of the Chyavana Muni. At that time the princess, beautiful in all respects, was returning home after her bath in a pure clear stream and came to the sight of the two AsVins. Being enchanted by her extraordinary lovely beauty, they thought she might be a Deva Kavya, quickly went to her and fondly questioned her"O slow moving One like an elephant! Look! We are the sons of Devas; we have come to you to ask some questions. O Excellent One! Wait for a moment; we request thus to you. O Sweet-smiling One! Please answer our questions truly and properly. O Lovely-eyed! Whose daughter are you? Who is your husband Why have you come here alone to bathe in this tank? O Lotus-eyed! You seem to be a second Laksmi; O Beautiful One! We want to know something; please reply exactly. O Beloved! Your feet are exceedingly gentle; why have you not put on any shoes; why are you walking barefooted? Our hearts are being troubled to see you walking thus barefooted? O Thin bodied One! Your body is very soft that you ought to have gone in a car; why are you thus walking on foot and in such an ordinary dress in this forest? Why have not hundreds of maid-servants accompanied you? O lovely faced One! Speak truly whether you are a princess or Apsara. O Sinless One! Blessed is your mother from whom you are born, blessed is your father. Specially the person with whom you are married, we are unable to describe his fortune. O Lovely eyed! This earth is being sanctified by the movements of your feet; consequently this garden is now purer today than the Devaloka. Boundless is the fortune of these deer and birds who can see you whenever they like; what more can we say than this that this forest is rendered very pure. O Fair One with fair eyes! It is needless to praise your beauty; speak truly who is your father and who is your husband; we like very much to see them."

39-56. Vyasa said O King! On hearing their words, the exquisitely beautiful princess bespoke to the twin Devas with much bashfulness I am the daughter of S'aryati; father has given me over, under the directions of the Daiva, to the Maharsi Chyavana. I am his chaste dear wife; the Maharsi is staying in this very place. O Twin Devas!

My husband is a blind ascetic and he is very aged. I gladly serve him day and night according to the rules of chastity amongst women. Who are you? And why have you come here? My husband is staying in the As'rama; kindly come and sanctify the As'rama. O King! The two AsVins heard her and said “O Auspicious One! Why has your father betrothed you, such a gem, to an old ascetic? It is very strange. Indeed! In this solitary forest you are shining like a steady lightning; what more can we say than this that we hardly find a beautiful lady like you, even in the Devaloka! Alas! The Deva dress and a full set of ornaments and blue dyes look well on you; this deer¬ skin and barks of trees in no way fit you. O Beautiful One! Your eyes are very large; yet the Creator has given you a blind husband; specially a very aged one; and you are wearing away by constantly dwelling with your blind husband in this forest. What more can be wrong for the Creator than this? O deer-eyed One! In vain you have selected him for your husband. At this period of your youth and beauty it does not look at all well to see you with your blind husband. You are versed in dancing and music; but your husband is blind and aged; when in dancing you will shoot your darts of love, on whom then, will those arrows fall? O large-eyed One! Oh! The Creator is certainly of a very little understanding! Else why would he have made you, so full of youthful vitality, the wife of a blind man? O lovely-eyed One! You are never fit for him; select another husband.

O Lotus-eyed One! Your husband is not only blind but an ascetic; so your life is quite useless; we do not consider it fit that you reside in this forest and put on this bark and deer-skin. O dark-eyed One! Your body and every limb thereof is very beautiful; judge well and make one amongst us your husband. O Proud One! Why are you being so very beautiful, spending your youth in vain in serving this Muni? No good signs are visible in this Muni; he cannot maintain nor protect you even; why are you, then, serving him in vain? O spotless One! Leave at once this Muni, quite incapable in giving any sort of pleasure, and marry one of us. O Beloved! Then you will enjoy in the Nandana Kanana or in the forest of Chaitratarha. O Proud One! How will you spend your time with the aged husband, being brought to so much humiliation and without any dignity and self-respect. You are endowed with all auspicious signs; moreover you are a princess; you are not ignorant of all enjoyments in this world; why then you like to live such an unfortunate life in vain in this forest? O Princess! Your face is exceedingly beautiful; your eyes are wide and your waist is thin. Your voice is sweet like a cuckoo. Who is more beautiful than you? Quit now your aged ascetic husband and marry one of us for your happiness; then you will be able to enjoy excellent celestial things in the heavens. O good-haired one! What pleasure can you derive by your staying in this forest with your blind husband! O deer¬ eyed One. It is very painful for you to serve at this young age of yours, to remain in this forest and serve this aged man. O Princess!

Is it that you like troubles and nothing else. O One with a face lovely like the Moon! We see that you are of a very soft body; so to collect water and fruits is never a duty fit for you.

Here ends the Fourth Chapter in the Seventh Book on the conversation between the two AsVins and the Princess Sukanya in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! Hearing their words, the princess began to tremble; but holding on patience she spoke to them in reserved terms thus You are the sons of Surya and you are the acknowledged deities amongst the gods; specially you know everything, I am a chaste virtuous woman. You ought not to speak to me in the above mannner. O Twin Devas! Father has betrothed me to the Muni practising the Yoga Dharma; besides I am chaste; how can I behave like a prostitute! This Sun is the Witness of the actions good or bad of all people; He is therefore looking on our actions also. Besides you both are born in the family of the high-souled Kas'yapa- Thus it is utterly wrong for you to utter such (irreligious and infamous) words. You know well the course of Dharma, what is religious and what is irreligious in this world which has got nothing substantial; how can a family woman leave her husband and serve another? Go wherever you like, O Sinless Devas! I am the daughter Sukanya of the King S'aryati, devoted to my husband. Otherwise I will curse you.

7-11. Vyasa said:-- O Bharata! Hearing these words, the As'vins were greatly surprised, and, afraid of the Muni, spoke again “O Princess! We are very much pleased to see your chastity; therefore, O Beautiful Woman! Ask boon from us; we will grant it for your welfare. O honoured Woman! We, the physicians of the gods, will certainly make your husband exceedingly beautiful and young, O Smart and Intelligent One! When we three will be exactly the same in figure, age and lustre! you better can make one of us your husband.” Hearing their words Sukanya became greatly amazed and went to her own husband and spoke everything what they, the God's physicians, said.

12-17. Sukanya said “O Husband! The AsVins, the Surya's sons, have come close to our As'rama. I have seen the two Devas and their bright bodies. Seeing me beautiful they were overpowered with passion and told me, “We will, be sure, make your blind husband, young, bright and give him his two eyes again; but you will have to make one condition. Hear it:-Your husband will be exactly like us and you will have to select your husband amongst three of us.” O Holy One! Hearing this as strange, I now come to inform you. Now judge and say what I am to do now. The Deva's Maya is very difficult to comprehend; the more so, when I do not know their intentions! O Omniscient One! I will act as you desire.”

18-19. Chyavana said “O Beloved! Go just now, at my word, to the AsVins and bring them, O auspicious One! before me. What more shall I say than this Go and observe, what they say, as early as possible. There is no need to think over this matter.”

20-25. Vyasa said O King! Thus getting the permission from her husband, Sukanya went immediately to them and said “O AsVins! You are the chief gods; now do as you say. I agree to observe what you desire.” Hearing her words, the two Devas then went to the Muni's As'rama and told the princess “Let your husband enter in the midst of the water." The aged Chyavana Muni went down quickly in the midst of waters to attain a good form. Next the two As'vins entered into the water of that tank. A few minutes after, the three persons came out of the tank. All were equally bright, equally beautiful, equally young and their limbs were decorated equally with earrings and various other ornaments. They all spoke simultaneously:-"o Auspicious One! There is no other woman beautiful like you, especially your face is very clean and fair; therefore select any one of us three as your husband. O Fair One! Whomever you love most, choose him."

26-30. Vyasa said O King! Sukanya then saw their bodies are equally bright and beautiful; not the least difference is to be found in beauty, age, voice and dress. She became doubtful on seeing their equal appearances. The princess, not being able to distinguish her husband, became very anxious and thought"What am I to do now? Whom to choose? They are exactly the same. I cannot distinguish who is my real husband? This may be the magic set up by the two AsVins. However, I am put to a great crisis. I won't ever select another who is not my husband. Therefore my death is well nigh; what to do now? The third form seen now may be also a Deva's son." Thus cogitating, she resolved to meditate on the Highest Prakriti, the Lady of the Universe, the most Auspicious One. Then the thin-bellied princess began to sing the hymns of the Bhagavati.

31-38. Sukanya said "O World-Mother! Under most painful circumstances I take refuge unto Thee; preserve my chastity; I bow down to Thy feet. O Devi! Salutations to Thee, born of lotus. O Thou, the dear consort of S'ankara! Salutations to Thee. O Thou favourite to Visnu, O Mother of the Vedas! O Sarasvati! Salutations to Thee, Thou hast created the world, moving and unmoving; Thou art preserving it without being least excited; again Thou art swallowing it for the peace and well-being of all. What more. Thou art the Most Worshipful Mother of Brahma, Visnu, and Mahes'a. Thou always illuminest the understanding of the illiterate and Thou always grantest liberation to the Jhanins. Thou art the Prime Prakriti in fullness and the Beloved of the Prime Purusa. Thou grantest Bhukti (enjoyment) and Mukti (freedom) to the souls that are cleansed and pure; Thou givest pain to those that are entirely void of knowledge and Thou grantest happiness to those that are endowed with Sattva Guna. O Mother! Thou bestowest Siddhi (the success, the eight supernatural powers), fame, and victory to the Yogis! Being merged in an ocean of bewilderment, I come now to take refuge unto Thee.

O Mother! The two Devas are playing hypocrisy with me; thus puzzled I can't fix my mind whom to select; therefore I am merged in an ocean of sorrow. Save me by showing my real husband. O Omniscient One! Knowing my vow of chastity dost Thou enlighten me so that I can know my husband."

39-58. Vyasa said O King! Thus pleased by the Sukanya's prayers, the Devi Tripura Sundari then imparted to her the pleasant Sattva Jhan (knowledge pertaining to Sattva Guna). She then looked again at the three personages, and though they were similar in appearance and beauty, instantly she recognised mentally her husband and chose him. When Sukanya selected the Muni Chyavana, the two Devas became greatly pleased to see that. The two Devas were pleased by the grace of Bhagavati; they were further pleased to see the Dharma of chastity and granted her the boon. They then bade good-bye to Chyavana and were ready to start to their own place when Chyavana being very much pleased to get through their grace, his beauty, youth and wife, interrupted them, saying "O high-minded Devas! You have done much good to me. I used to feel pain every day, in spite of my having this wife having good hairs! But owing to your mercy, I cannot describe how happy I am now in this world of woes and troubles. I was very aged and blind and was without any enjoyment but it is you that coming to this forest have brought to me eyes, youth and exquisite beauty. Therefore, O twin

Devas! I desire to do something good to you in return. Fie on him, who does not return anything for the good that he has received from a beneficent friend. That man remains indebted for ever in this world; therefore I am desirous to give you two now whatever you want. O twin Devas! Even if the Devas or the Asuras find it difficult to attain, I will give that to you to free myself of the debt I owe to you. I am greatly pleased at your good deed; therefore be kind enough to speak out whatever you desire." They began to consult with each other, and spoke to the Muni Chyavana who was seated with Sukanya beside him "O Maharsi! We have got all our desires by the grace of Father! Still it is difficult for us to drink some libation along with the other Devas and we thirst after that very strongly. At the great sacrifice of Brahma in the Golden Mountain (Kanakachala), Indra, the King of the Devas, ordered us not to drink Soma, as we were physicians. Therefore, O Knower of Dharma! O Ascetic! You will certainly do us a great favour if you can make us drink the Soma juice; we would be very glad and have our desires satisfied." Thus hearing the words of the As'vins, Maharsi Chyavana gladly spoke to them the following gentle words, O Twin Devas! I was blind and aged; but now I am become a young and beautiful man, and it is by your grace that I have got back my wife. Therefore I speak this truly before you that at the great sacrifice of the lustrous King S'aryati, I will gladly make you drink the Soma in the presence of Indra, the King of the Devas. Hearing these words of the Muni, the twin As'vins were greatly pleased and went back to the world of the Devas. And the Muni Chyavana, too, returned to his own As'rama with his wife Sukanya.

Here ends the Fifth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the getting of youth by Chyavana Muni in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Janamejaya said “O Muni! How did Maharsi Chyavana make these twin Devas drink Soma and how his words came out to be true. Human strength is insignificant compared to Indra's strength. Indra forbade the physicians, the AsVins, to drink the Soma juice. How then could the Muni give the right thereof. This is very wonderful. Therefore, O Thou, devoted to Dharma! O Lord! Describe in detail the doings of this Maharsi Chyavana. I am very anxious to hear it.”

4-10. Vyasa said O King! In that famous sacrifice of the King S’aryati, Chyavana Risi did wonderful feats. O Bharata! I am now narrating to you his entirely wonderful character. Hear it attentively. Maharsi Chyavana, illustrious like the Devas, began to enjoy with a cheerful mind and gladdened heart, with his beautiful wife Sukanya who was like a Deva Kanya. Now, once on an occasion, the wife of S'aryati became very anxious and trembling said to her husband weeping “O King! You have betrothed your daughter to the blind Muni Chyavana; now it is your duty to go and enquire whether the daughter is living or is dead. O Lord! What is my beautiful daughter doing with that husband. Please go just now to the Muni's As'rama and see about it. O Rajarsi! I always burn in pain and agony when I think of her. She must have become very lean and thin due to the troubles of Tapasya; please bring her quickly here to my presence. She is suffering an everlasting pain from having an aged blind husband; and it is quite likely she has become very lean and thin, I am anxious, therefore, to see my daughter lean and thin who is wearing barks of trees as her dress.”

11. S'aryati said “O broad-eyed One! I am going gladly just now to see my dear daughter and that Muni of severe vows.”

12-25. Vyasa said O King! Thus saying to his wife, distressed with sorrow, the King S'aryati mounted on his chariot and quickly went towards the As’rama of the Chyavana Muni. On reaching there, he saw the Maharsi Chyavana like a Deva's son. Seeing his body like that of Deva, the King became bewildered and began to think thus “What! Has my daughter done such an ugly act, blameable in the society! That Muni was very calm and quiet, penniless and very old; my daughter, perhaps, being overpowered with passion, killed him and has taken, no doubt, another husband. It is indeed difficult to control the God of Love, armed with his flowery bow: the period of youth is moreover very hard to conquer. So this daughter impelled by lust has thrown a dreadful stigma on the clear name of the family of the great Manu. Fie on him whose daughter in this world is of a vicious character! It seems that daughters are born for the expiation of all the sins committed by their fathers. But what an unjust act have I committed for my own selfish ends? It is highly incumbent on every father to betroth his daughter with every care possible to a bridegroom suitable in every respect; but I did not do it and now have got the fruits equivalent to my doing. If I kill my daughter, vicious and unchaste, I will incur sin due to killing a woman and moreover my daughter. I am the cause of this stain on Muni's line of descent. On the one hand, the scandal on one is very powerful; and the affection for a daughter is strong on the other. What am I to do now?” The King became merged in deep thoughts. At this time Sukanya accidentally saw her father thus drowned in anxious thoughts. Seeing him, Sukanya instantly came to her father's side and asked the King in sweet affectionate words. O King! How is it that your face has become so pale with anxious thoughts, seeing the Muni sitting in front of you, a young man with lotus-eyes. O Father! What are you thinking? You belong to the famous Manu's family; besides, you are a high-minded man; you ought not to be sad so suddenly; come quickly and bow your head down before my husband.

26. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the daughter's words, the King became impatient with anger and began to speak to her

27-36. O Daughter! Where is that aged blind ascetic Muni Chyavana and who is this youth intoxicated with lust? A great doubt has arisen in my mind. O Vicious Soul! Have you slain that Chyavana Muni and engaged yourself in such a sinful act? O You, a Disgrace to your family! Have you accepted another husband out of your desire of lust? My mind has became very much troubled on not seeing that Muni in this As'rama. O vicious One! Now I don't see the Muni; but instead of him, I see this bright person. And thus it is on account of your sinful behaviour that my mind is drowned in the ocean of cares. Then hearing her father's words, Sukanya smiled and gladly took him at once to her husband and said “O Father! He is your son-in- law; He is the same Chyavana Muni; there is no doubt here. The twin As'vins have given him this beautiful lustre and lotus-like eyes. The two As'vini Kumaras came accidentally to my Asrama and out of mercy no doubt they have made Chyavana such a nice young man. O King! I am not your that daughter that will do a vicious act as you think, beguiled by this beautiful form of the Muni. Father! Bow down before the Chyavana Muni. Ask him and he will tell you everything.” Hearing thus the daughter's words, the King went instantly to the Muni and bowed down before him and asked him affectionately thus 37-38. The King said “O Son of Bhrigu! How have you got your eyes back? Where has your old age gone? Kindly narrate all your details as early as possible. O Brahmana! Seeing your exquisitely beautiful form, a great doubt has arisen in me; so tell me everything in detail; I will be very glad, no doubt."

39-45. Chyavana said "O King! The two As'vins, the physicians of the Gods, came here on their own account and have done me this good out of their mercy. Owing to the benefit thus received, I have granted them the boon that I will make them drink the Soma juice in the Agnistoma Yajha of the King S'aryati. Thus I have got these beautiful eyes and the new youth; therefore, O King! Collect yourself and sit in the holy sacrificial seat." When the Brahmin Chyavana Muni spoke thus, the King S'aryati and his dear wife sat with greatest pleasure and began to talk on auspicious topics with the high-souled Muni. Then the Bhargava consoled the King and said I will perform your sacrifice; please collect all the necessary materials. I have promised to the As'vins that certainly I will make them drink the Soma juice. Therefore, O King! I will have to carry that out in your sacrifice. O King! If Indra be angry, I will stop him by my Tapas force and in the Agnistoma Yajha I will make the As'vins drink Soma.

46-58. Vyasa said O King! S'aryati, the lord of the earth, then gladly approved the proposals of Chyavana Muni. The King then shewed respects to the Muni and, with a pleasant attitude of mind, returned to his city with his wife, all the while talking of the Muni on the way. On a good auspicious day he, possessed of enormous wealth and prosperity prepared an excellent place for the performance of the sacrifice. The Muni Chyavana then invited Vas'istha and other respectable Munis and initiated the King S'aryati for the performance of the sacrifice. At the commencement of the sacrifice, Indra and the other Devas and the two As'vins all came to the sacrifice to drink Soma. Seeing the As'vins, Indra became afraid and asked the other Devas, "Why have the As'vins come here?" They are the physicians and, therefore, never fit to drink Soma. Who has brought them hither at this great Agnistoma Sacrifice? The Devas remained all silent. Chyavana Muni then became ready to offer Soma to the AsVins and Indra immediately stopped him saying They are already prohibited to drink Soma as a sacrificial share; so do not accept the vessel of Soma for them. Chyavana then said - "O Lord of S'achi! These are the Surya's sons; tell, then, truly why these are rendered unfit to drink Soma. They are not of mixed blood; they are born of the legal wife of Surya Deva. O Lord of the Devas! What is the fault then, of the AsVins, the physicians, that they be prohibited to drink Soma juice. Please reply. O Indra! This point must be settled by all the Devas here. I have promised to make them drink the Soma juice in this sacrifice. To keep my word I have initiated the King in this sacrifice. I will have my word fulfilled; there is no doubt in this. O Indra! They have given me my youth and bestowed my eyes and have done me great good. I will also do good to them to my best."

59. Indra said "The Devas have appointed these Devas their Physicians; therefore they are looked down upon in the society; so they are unfit to drink Soma. You need not make them drink Soma."

60-61. Chyavana spoke "O Indra! You have adulterated yourself with Ahalya; why are you, then, giving vent to your anger thus in vain. You have treacherously murdered Vritrasura; it is quite inappropriate for a vicious person like you to say that the AsVins cannot have the right to drink Soma. This is quite impossible." O King! On the springing of this dispute, no body spoke to Indra. The illustrious Bhargava, then, made them accept the Soma juice.

Here ends the Sixth Chapter of the Seventh Book on granting the AsVins the right to drink the Soma juice in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-2. Vyasa said O King! When the vessel filled with the Soma juice was given to the two AsVins, Indra became very angry and showing his strength, spoke thus to the Muni Chyavana. O Brahmana! Never will you be able to endow him with such a high honour. When you have shewn towards me your enmity, I will kill you, no doubt, exactly like VisVarupa.

3-4. Chyavana said “O Indra! Do not insult the two highsouled AsVins. They have given me beauty, youth and lustre and made me look like a second Deva. O Lord of the Devas! Just as the other Devas can take the vessel of Soma excluding you, so the two powerful AsVins can do the same towards you.”

5. Indra said “They are the physicians; so they cannot in any way have the right to accept the Soma cup. I will just now sever your head.”

6-29. Vyasa said O Ornament to the race of Bharata! At these words of Indra, the Muni made the AsVins accept the Soma cup, thus highly insulting, as it were, Indra and not taking any notice of his words. When the two AsVins accepted the cup with a desire to drink the Soma thereof, the powerful Indra saw it and said “If you make them drink Soma out of your own necessity, I will hurl thunderbolt on your head exactly in the same way as I did towards VisVarupa.”

The Muni became violently angry at this and made the AsVins drink the Soma according to due rites and ceremonies. Indra, too, angrily hurled thunderbolt on him in the presence of all the Devas. The weapon shed lustre like million Suns. Seeing the thunderbolt hurled on him, the powerful Muni made the Indra's thunderbolt stand stock still by virtue of his Tapas. The powerful Muni then adopted black magic to kill Indra and offered oblations of clarified butter and grains, purified by Mantrams, in the Fire. By the Tapas of Chyavana, of unbounded lustre, there sprang from the sacrificial hearth Kritya (A female deity to whom sacrifices are offered for destructive and magical purposes). And out of Kritya originated a very strong person, very cruel and of huge body, a great Demon. The horrible Demon, named Mada, was terrifying to all the beings. His body was huge like a mountain, teeth very sharp and terrible. Four teeth were hundred Yojanas long each, and his other teeth were ten Yojanas long. His arms were like mountains, very long and fierce; tongue, horrible, rough and so very long that it reached up to the heavens. His throat was like a mountain peak hard and of a furious appearance; nails resembled tiger's, hairs horrible. His body was jet black like lamp black; face very terrible, eyes bright like the conflagration fire and awful. One of his jaws touched the ground and the other touched the heaven. Thus was born the Demon, named Mada, of huge form. Looking at him, the Devas became suddenly frightened; Indra, too, got very much terrified at the sight of him and did not want to have any more fight. The Demon swallowed Indra's thunderbolt, looked at the sky, and stood up as if to swallow at once the whole Universe.

He became infuriated with rage and pursued Indra to devour him. Seeing this, the Devas cried aloud "Alas! We are slain." Indra had his arms disabled by Mantrams and so he could not hurl his thunderbolt though he wanted to do so. The Lord of the Devas, then, with thunderbolt in his hand, looked on the Demon as Death personified and remembered his Guru, skilled in the knowledge which is the proper time to perform a certain thing. The liberal- minded Brihaspati knowing the time of imminent danger, and that he is remembered by Indra, at once came to the spot. He then judged what to do in the present crisis and told Indra "O Indra! This cannot be averted even by Mantranns; what to speak of thunderbolt! This powerful Asura Mada has arisen from the sacrificial hearth by virtue of the Tapas of the Chyavana Muni. The Muni's power is especially felt here. O Lord of the Devas! Nobody, You, I, nor any other Deva will be able to resist him. Know this. Even Brahma cannot thwart the anger of one who is devoted to the S'akti, the Highest Force; Chyavana is the Bhakta of the Highest S'akti. So no other body is able to defeat him. He is the man himself to take back the Kritya that he has originated. There is no doubt in this. So it is better for you now to take the shelter of the Muni."

30-52. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus from his Guru, Indra went to the Muni and bowed down shuddering, before him. "O Muni! Forgive me and stop the Asura from his intention to slay the Devas.

O All knowing One! Be pleased, I will keep your words. O Bhargava! The two As'vins will, from this day, have the right to drink the Some juice. This I speak out to you in truth. O Brahmana! Be graciously pleased unto me. O Ascetic! Your intention will never be baffled. Especially I know you to be a knower of Dharma; so, you will never be able to make your word swerve from truth. The two As'vins will, by your grace, be able to drink always the Soma cup; and the King S'aryati's fame will also know no bounds. O Muni! Know that what I have done is simply to test your prowess in Tapas. O Brahmana!

Now do this favour to me and take back your, this Demon Mada, sprung from your sacrificial hearth and thus do good to all the Devas. There is no doubt in this." Thus spoken piteously by Indra,

Chyavana, who knew the Highest Reality, drew back within himself the anger arising from the enmity with Indra. Then the Maharsi Chyavana consoled the Devas that were very much perplexed and anxious out of terror of the Demon named Mada and divided the Asura into four parts (1) female sex, (2) drinking, (3) gambling and (4) hunting animals. When Mada was thus divided into four parts, the terror stricken Devas felt themselves relieved and saved and got consoled. Chyavana then placed the Devas in their respective stations and connpleted the sacrifice. As last, the religious Bhargava made first Indra and then the two AsVins drink the Soma Cups. O King! Thus Chyavana had the AsVins their Soma Cups by virtue of his power of Tapas. Thence the tank with the sacrificial post Yupa became famous and the Muni's As'rama also was renowned and honoured in all respects. The King S'aryati, too, became very glad at this sacrifice and completing the sacrifice returned with his ministers to his city. The Menu's son, the powerful religious King S'aryati governed his kingdom, free from any obstacles or other enemies. He had one son named Anarta; and Anarta had a son named Revata born to him.

Revata built the city of Kus'asthali in the midst of the ocean and began to live there. He enjoyed all the things in the countries named Anarta and others. Revata had one hundred sons of whom Kakudmi was the eldest and of pure character. He had one daughter very beautiful named Revati, endowed with all auspicious qualities. When the daughter reached a marriageable age, the King began to think where he could get a prince of a good noble family. That powerful King began to govern his people Anartas, with his headquarters at the Raivata hill. “Whom to betroth this daughter,” the King thought and settled that he would go to Brahma and ask him, the venerable omniscient Prajapati, worshipped by the Devas. Thus the King went with his daughter Revati to the Brahmaloka. There the Devas, Yajhas, Vedas, mountains, oceans and rivers all were shining with luminous bodies. There the eternal Risis, Siddhas, Gandharbas, Pannagas and Charanas were singing hymns to Brahma, standing with folded hands.

Here ends the Seventh Chapter of the Seventh Book on the twin As'vins drinking the Soma Cup in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, the Maha Puranam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Janamejaya said “O Brahmana! The King was a Ksattriya; how could he go himself with his daughter Revati to the Brahmaloka (the abode of Brahma)? I entertain a great doubt on this point. I heard of yore while conversing about matters connected with the Brahmins, that the Brahmin only who was self-restrained and the knower of Brahman could alone go to the Brahmaloka. The Satyaloka is very hard for the worldly people to go; so I doubt how the king could have gone with Revati from the Bhurloka to the Satyaloka. Man, when he discards his body, can go to the Heavens. So is recited in all the S'astras. How then, people, while, in their human bodies can go to the Brahmaloka. So cut asunder my doubts how the King Revata could go to the Brahmaloka to ask the Prajapati on certain matters.”

6-16. Vyasa said “O King! On the top of the mountain Sumeru, are located the Indra's heavens called Amaravati (the abode of the Immortals) the Samyamani city of Yama, the Satyaloka, the Vahniloka, the Kailasa, Vaikuntha the abode of Visnu, and others. The great archer Arjuna, the son of Pritha, went to the Indraloka and spent five years there. In ancient times, the Kings Kakutstha and others went to Indraloka, in their human bodies. Even the powerful Daityas used to conquer the Indraloka and resided there at their will and pleasure. In ancient times, when the sovereign of the earth, the King Mahabhisa went to the Brahmaloka, the most beautiful Ganga also was coming to the Brahmaloka. On the way the King saw Her.

O King! Accidentally at that time her clothings were cast aside by the wind; the King saw her partly in her naked state, and, overpowered with lust, smiled; Ganga also smiled. Seeing the states of them, Brahma instantly cursed them; and they had to come in this world and take their births. All the Devas, when oppressed by the Danavas, went to Vaikuntha and sang hymns to Hah, the Lord of Kamala. O King! Men can go to all the Lokas; in fact those high- souled men that perform Yajhas or severe asceticism and thus have acquired great merits, those performers of Sacrifices and ascetics surely go to the Heavens. O King! It is only the abundance of good merits that is the only cause of going to Heavens. So you ought not to entertain any doubts on this.”

17-18. Janamejaya said “O Muni! The King Revata went with his daughter Revati to the Brahmaloka; but what did he do when he went there? What did Brahma order him? And to whom did the King betroth his daughter, when ordered by Brahma? O Brahmana! Speak out all these in details to me now.”

19-21. Vyasa said “O King! Hear. When the King went to Brahmaloka to ask about the proper bridegroom of his daughter, there was going on singing and music; so he waited a while to find an opportunity when the assembly would have a leisure; but he was so very pleased with music that he could not desist from hearing it till the end. When the music was finished, the King bowed down to Brahma and shewed him his daughter and informed Him of his intention.”

22-26. The King said “O Deva! This good daughter is mine; now kindly say who will be her bridegroom. O Brahma! To whom shall I betroth this daughter? I have come to you to ask on this point I have searched for many princes and seen also a good many of them and none of them is to my liking and so my mind is not at rest. O Lord of the Devas! Therefore I have come to you. Kindly select one bridegroom for her. He is to be a Kulm (of good family), powerful, religious, liberal, and a prince endowed with all auspicious qualities. This is my prayer.” Vyasa said O King! Brahma, the lotus-born, the Creator of the world, hearing these words, laughed, thinking that a very long interval had passed away. He then said

27-43. O King! The princes that you thought would become the bridegroom of your daughter, all died; their sons and grandsons and their friends even have all passed away. The twenty-seventh Manvantara of the Dvapara Yuga is now going on; so none of the princes of your family are now existing. The Daityas sacked your city. Now Ugrasena, the King of Mathura, is reigning in that place. He belongs to the illustrious lunar family of Yayati. His son, the powerful Kansa, born of a Danava, began to do injuries always to the Devas; he threw his own father to the prison. Becoming very haughty, he began to govern himself the countries of other kings and began to tyrranise over the subjects. O King. The Earth became so much troubled by the armies of the wicked Demon Kings, that She became quite unable to bear further loads. So She went to seek refuge to Brahma. Brahma and the other Devas then began to say “O Earth! To remove your burden the lotus-eyed Narayana will incarnate Himself as part incarnation in the form of S'ri Krisna. He who is Narayana practised in ancient times, as the son of Dharma, a very severe asceticism, in company with his brother Nara in the sacred hermitage of Badari. Now this very Deva is born in the great family of Yadu in the womb of Devaki by Vasudeva and is now celebrated by the name of Vasudeva. O King! He has slain that vicious wicked Kansa and has installed Ugrasena in his place. The very powerful Jarasandha, the vicious King of Magadha, is the father-in-law of Kansa. On hearing the death of his son-in-law, he became infuriated with rage, came to Mathura, and raged a terrible war. Vasudeva defeated in a battle that Jarasandha, proud of his mighty valour. Though defeated, Jarasandha sent Kalayavana with his host of army to fight again with Krisna. Bhagavan Vasudeva, when he heard that the King of Yavanas arrived, sent away all the members of his family and the Yadavas to Dvarka and began to wait with his brother Balarama for the Yavana King. Then he went alone to the camp of Yavana and led him away to a mountain cave where was sleeping the King Muchu Kunda and had then the Yavana King slain by Muchukunda. Krisna then went to Dvarka. The city of Dvarka was then a dilapidated condition. Krisna brought together the artists and got built exquisitely the beautiful palaces, forts, and markets and stalls, etc., and so added to the beauty of the place. That Vasudeva, of mighty prowess, thus improving the city, made Ugrasena the King of that place; and Krisna is now waiting there with his friends. His elder brother Baladeva, the carrier of the plough, is celebrated.

Thus he with Musala in his hands is a great warrior and the part incarnation of Ananta Deva. He is the fit bridegroom of your daughter. So give your daughter in marriage, without any delay, according to the rules of the marriage ceremony to Sankarsana Balabhadra. After giving your daughter marriage, go to the hermitage of Badari and practise tapasya. That sacred retreat is the (park) recreation ground of the Devas, holy and yielding to human beings the objects of their desires.

44-46. Vyasa said “O King! Thus ordered by the lotus-born Brahma, the King went to Dvarka with his daughter. Reaching there he gave over his all auspicious daughter in marriage to Bala Deva duly according to the rules and regulations. At last, according to Brahma's injunction, he became engaged in severe austerities in the Badarikas'ram and, when the time of death arrived, left off his mortal coil on the banks of the river and went to the world of Gods.”

47-48. Janamejaya said “O Bhagavan! You have uttered one wonderful thing. One hundred and eight Yugas passed away when the King of Revata with his daughter was deeply absorbed in hearing music in the Brahmaloka yet neither the good King nor the daughter did get sufficiently old. How could this be! How could they have lived so long! Were their longevities ordained to be such a long period!”

49-56. Vyasa said “O King! The Brahmaloka is not touched by any vice nor sin; old age, hunger, thirst or fear of death nothing exists there; nor is there any other cause by which weariness comes. So what doubt there can be that the people there will be long-lived, free from old age and death! When the King S'aryati went up to the Heavens, his sons were all destroyed by the Raksasas; those that remained, they, terrified left Kus'asthali and fled on all sides. Vaivasvata Manu sneezed; owing to that, came out of his nose one powerful son; his name was Iksaku. He spread the Solar dynasty and became celebrated. Getting excellent initiation from the Maharsi Narada, he began to meditate the Devi constantly and practised severe tapasya for the spread of his race. O King! Iksaku had one hundred sons; Vikuksi was the eldest; he was powerful and endowed with great strength. Iksaku became king and lived in Ayodhya. He sent his fifty sons, the powerful S'akuni and others to Uttarapatha (Eastern) provinces for governing those countries. That high-souled monarch sent also other eight sons to govern the countries in the South. (Western). O King! He kept the remaining two sons by his side for his own service.”

Here ends the Eighth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the story of the King Revata and the spread of the Solar dynasty in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Vyasa said O King! Once on a time, the time for Astaka S'raddha (the funeral ceremony in honour of the departed) arrived. Seeing this, the King Iksaku ordered his son Vikuksi “O Child! Go immediately to the forest and bring carefully pure sanctified meat for the S'raddha purposes; see, that there be no neglect of duty.” Thus ordered, Vikuksi instantly went to the forest equipped with arms. He hunted in the forest lots of boars, pigs, deer, and hare. But he was so very tired with his journey in the forest and got so hungry that he forgot everything about the Astaka S'raddha and ate one hare there in the forest. The remaining excellent meat he brought and handed over to his father. When that meat was brought to be sprinkled for purification, the family priest Vas'istha, on seeing it, at once came to know that some portion had already been eaten and it was the remaining part. The leavings of food are not fit for the sprinkling purposes; this is the S'astric rule. Vas'istha informed the King of this defect in the food. In accordance with the Guru's advice, the King coming to know thus the violation of the rule by his son, became very angry and banished his son from his kingdom. The prince became known from that time as Sa'sada; he did not become the least sorry for his father's anger; he went to the forest and gladly remained there. He gladly passed his time absorbed in religion and sustained his life on forest fruits and roots. After sometime when his father died, he inherited his kingdom. On becoming the King of Ayodhya, S'as'ada had only one son; he became famous in the three lokas by the name of Kakutstha. He was known also by other names Indravaha and Puranjaya.

12. Janamejaya said “O Holy One! How and why was the prince named Kakutstha. Why was he known by the two other names? Speak all this to me.”

13-14. Vyasa said O King! When S'as'ada went to the Heavens Kakutstha became king. That religious king then began to govern the country of his father and grandfather with an authority supported by a powerful arm. At this time the Devas suffered a defeat from the Danavas and took refuge to Visnu, the Infallible and the Lord of the three worlds. The eternal great Visnu full of intelligence and bliss then addressed the Devas

15-16. Visnu said “O Devas! Go and pray to the King S'as'ada. He will be your ally and kill all the Demons. That King is religious; especially he is a worshipper of the Highest S'akti. He is a good archer and will come to help you. His strength is immense.”

17-18. Vyasa said O King! Indra and the other Devas hearing the nectar like words of Hari went to Ayodhya, to Kakutstha, the son of S'as'ada. Seeing the Devas at his palace, the king worshipped them duly and with great care and he asked them why they had come there.

19-20. The King said “O Devas! When you have favoured me by your presence here, I am blessed and sanctified; my life is crowned with success. Say what I can do for you; I will carry it out even if it be very hard for me to perform.”

21-22. The Devas said “O Prince! Please help and back us and defeat the Daityas, invincible by the Devas and form an alliance with Indra. O King! By the grace of the Highest S'akti, you have nothing unattained anywhere; so we have come to you by the order of Visnu.”

23-41. The King said “O Devas! I can back you and become your ally if Indra carries me on his back in the time of war. I will fight now with the Daityas for the Devas; but I will go to the battle-field on Indra's back; this I speak to you truly.” Vyasa said O King! The Devas then spoke to Indra “O Lord of S'achi! It is now your bounden duty to do this; so quitting shame, be a carrier to this King.” Indra got ashamed very much, but being requested frequently by Hah, at last assumed the appearance of a bull like the great Bull of S'iva. The King mounted on that bull to go to the war; he fought while taking his seat on the hump on the shoulders of the bull (Kakud); therefore he was named Kakutstha. The King was carried by Indra on his back hence he was named Indravaha; he conquered the Danavas in battle; hence he was called Puranjaya. The powerful King defeated the Danavas and gave away all their wealth to the Devas. He bade farewell to the Devas and returned to his own kingdom. Thus the alliance was formed with Indra. O King!

Kakutstha became very celebrated on this earth; his descendants became kings and were known as Kakutsthas and were all very famous here on this Earth. Kakutstha had one powerful son, named

Kakutstha by his legal wife; Kakutstha had the son Prithu, of mighty prowess. Prithu was the part incarnation personified of Visnu, and worshipper of the feet of the Supreme S'akti. His son was Visvarandhi; he became king and governed the kingdom. His son was Chandra; he came to be king, governed his subjects and multiplied very much his issues. Yuvanas'va was one of his sons; he was very powerful and spirited. S'avanta was the son of Yuvanas'va; he was very religious. He built a nice city named S'avanti like the Paradise of Indra. Brihadas'va was the son of the high-souled S'avanta; he had a son Kuvalayas'va. He became the Lord of the earth by the power of his arms. He killed Dhundu Danava; so he was very much celebrated by the name of Dhundumara. His son was Dridhas'va; he governed the earth; His son was S'riman Haryas'va. His son was Nikumbha; he became the King. Nikumbha had his son Varhanas'va. Kris'as'va was his son. His son was the powerful Parasenajit; his son's prowess knew no bounds. Parasenajit had the fortunate son Yauvanas'va. O fortunate One! The son of Yauvanas'va was S'riman Mandhata; he became the Lord of the Earth and for the satisfaction of the Devi Bhagavati had one thousand and eight palaces built in Benares and in the other chief places of pilgrimages. Maudhata was not born of his mother's womb but was born in the belly of his father. Then the ministers tore asunder the belly of his father and got him out.

42-43. Janamejaya said O fortunate One! What you said was never seen nor heard ever before since. This sort of birth is highly improbable. How was that beautiful son born in the belly of his father? Describe this in detail and satisfy my curiosity.

44-49. Vyasa said O King! The King Yauvanas'va had one hundred queens; yet he had no issues. The King always thought much about his son. Once the King, sorry and desirous of a son, went to the holy retreats of the Risis. On arriving there, he began frequently to respire heavily before the ascetics. The Risis became filled with pity on seeing his sorrowful condition. O King! The Brahmins that said to him O King! Why are you thus sorrowful and distressed? What is your sorrow that is troubling your heart? Speak truly. We will surely redress your grievance.

50-54. Yauvanas'va said “O Munis! I have got the kingdom wealth, excellent horses, one hundred illustrious chaste wives. I have no enemies in the three worlds; no one is stronger than me. All the Kings and ministers are obedient to my call. But O Ascetics! I have no son; this my sonless state is the only cause of my pain and sorrow. It has marred all my happiness. See! The persons that have no son cannot in any way go to Heavens. Therefore I am always being pained for this. You all are ascetics; you have taken great pains to learn the essence of the Veda S'astras. So kindly order me what sacrifice is fit for me to have a son. O Ascetics! If you feel any pity for me, kindly perform this good work for me.”

55-65. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the words of the King they were all filled with pity; and, with fulness of mind, made him to perform the sacrifice whose presiding deity was Indra. For the sake of the King, that he may get a son born to him, they had a jar filled with water by the Brahmins and purified and charged that jar with the Vedic Mantrams. The King got thirsty in the night and entered in the sacrificial ground; seeing the Brahmins asleep, the King himself drank that water, surcharged with the Mantram. The Brahmins consecrated and kept that water apart, according to due rules, surcharging with Mantrams, for the wife of the King; but the King, getting thirsty, himself drank that water unconsciously. Next morning the Brahmins seeing the jar of water empty, were startled very much with fear; the Brahmins then asked the King Who drank the water? When they came to know that the King himself drank the water, the Munis thought this to he an act of Daiva (Fate) and completing the sacrifice returned to their abodes. Then the King became pregnant by the power of the sacrificial Mantrams. After some time, the son became fully developed. Then the King's ministers, cutting his right bowel, got the son out. Out of the God's favour, the King did not die. When the ministers were troubled with the thought whose milk the child will suck, then Indra spoke out the child would drink (Man-Dhata) my forefinger and gave his finger into the child's mouth. For that reason his name was Mandhata. Thus I have described in detail the origin of Mandhata.

Here ends the Ninth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the story of Kakutstha and the origin of Mandhata in S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam the Maha Puranam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-11. Vyasa said O King! That King Mandhata, true to his promise, conquered one after another the whole world and became the paramount sovereign of all the other emperors and got the title “Sarvabhauma” (Sovereign of all the earth). O King! What more to speak of Mandhata's influence at that time than this that all the robbers, struck with his terror, all fled to the mountain caves. For this reason, Indra gave him the title “Trasadasyu.” He married Bindumati, the daughter of S'as'avindu. Her limbs were proportioned and perfect and so she was very beautiful. Mandhata had by that wife two sons (1) the famous Purukutstha and (2) Muchukunda. Purukutstha had his son Anaranya; this prince was celebrated by the name of BrihadasVa. He was very religious and deeply devoted to his father. His son was HaryasVa; he was religious and knew the Highest Reality. His son was Tridhanva; his son was Aruna. Aruna's son was Satyavrata; he was very avaricious, lustful, wicked and wilful. Once on an occasion that vicious prince, overpowered by lust, stole away the wife of one Brahmin and so created an hindrance in his marriage. O King! The Brahmins, united in a body, came to the King Aruna, bewailing and lamenting and uttered repeatedly Alas! We are ruined! The King addressed to the grieved subjects, the Brahmins “O Brahmins! What harm has been done to you by my son.”

Hearing thus the good words of the King, the Dvijas, versed in the Vedas, repeatedly blessed him and said:-0 King! You are the foremost of the powerful. So your son is like you. Today he has forcibly stolen away during the marriage ceremony a Brahmin daughter already given over in marriage.

12-36. Vyasa said O King! The highly religious King hearing the words of the Brahmins, took them to be true and said to his son “O One of evil understanding! You have rendered to-day your name useless by perpetrating this evil act. O Vicious One! Get away from my house! O Sinner! You will never be able to live in my territory!” Seeing his father angry, Satyavrata repeatedly said Father! Where shall I go? He said “Live with the Chandalas. You have stolen a Brahmin's wife and so has acted like a Chandala. Go and live with them happily. O Disgrace to your family! I don't like to get issues through you: you have obliterated this family's name. So, O Sinner! go wherever you like.” Hearing the the words from his angry father, Satyavrata instantly quitted the house and went to the Chandalas. The prince, wearing his coat of armour and holding bows and arrows, began to spend away his time with the Chandalas; but he could not get out of his breast his feeling of sympathy and mercy. When he was banished by his liberal minded angry father the Guru Vas'istha instigated the King to the above purpose. Satyavrata was therefore angry with Vas'istha, inasmuch as he, versed the Dharma S'astras, did not dissuade the father from banishing his son. His father, then, owing to some inexplicable cause, quitted the city and, for the sake of his son, went to the forest to practise austerities. O King! Owing to that sinful act, Indra did not rain at all in his kingdom for twelve years. O King! Just then Vis'vamitra, too, keeping his wife and children in that kingdom, began to practise severe austerities on the banks of the river Kaus'iki. The beautiful wife of Kus'ika then fell into great trouble how she could maintain the family. All the children, pained with hunger, began to cry, begging for Nibar rice food. The chaste wife of Kaus'ika became very much troubled seeing all this. She thought, seeing the children hungry, “Where am I to go now and from whom to beg, and what to do, inasmuch as the King was not then staying in the Kingdom. The husband is not also near; so who would protect my children? The boys are incessantly crying. Fie therefore to my life!” She thought also thus “My husband left me in this penniless state; we are suffering for want of money. He does not know these, though he is quite able. Save my husband, who else will support my sons? They will all die now of starvation. I might sell one of my sons, whatever I get out of that, I can support the others; this is now my highest duty. I ought not to do otherwise and kill all my children; so I will now sell one of my sons to support the others." Thus hardening her mind, she went out, tying the child by a rope round his neck. The Muni's wife, for the sake of the other children, fastened the middle son by a cord and got out of her house. The prince Satyavrata saw her distressed with pain and sorrow and asked "O Beautiful One! What are you now going to do? Who are you? This boy is crying; Why have you tied him by a rope round his neck? O Fair One! Speak out truly to me the cause of all this."

37-38. The wife said "O Prince! I am the wife of Vis'vamitra. These are my sons. I am now going, for want of food, to sell one of these out of my own accord. O King! My husband has gone away to practise tapasya; I do not know where he has gone. There is no food in the house; so I will sell one to support the other sons."

39-56. Satyavrata said "O Chaste One! Save your children. I will bring to you your articles of food from the forest till your husband does not come here. Daily I will fasten some food on a tree close by your As'rama. This I speak truly." The wife of Vis'vamitra, hearing these words of the prince, freed the child of the fastening and took him to her As'rama. The child was named afterwards as Galaba, due to his being fastened by the neck. He became a great Risi afterwards. The Vis'vamitra's wife then felt great pleasure in her home, surrounded by her children. Filled with regard, and mercy, Satyavrata duly performed his task and provided daily the family of Vis'vamitra with their food. He used to hunt wild boars, deer, buffaloes, etc., and used to take their flesh to the place where used to dwell the wife of Vis'vamitra and the children and tie that up to an adjoining tree. The Risi's wife used to give those to her children. Thus getting excellent food, she felt very happy. Now when the King Aruna went for tapasya to the forest, the Muni Vas'istha carefully guarded the Ayodhya city, and the palace and the household. Satyavrata, too, used to sustain his livelihood daily by hunting, accordig to his father's order; and abiding by Dharma, lived in the forest outside the city. Satyavrata cherished always in his heart, for some cause, a feeling of anger towards Vas'istha. When his father banished his religious son, Vas'istha did not prevent his father. This is the cause of Satyavrata's anger. Marriage does not become valid until seven footsteps are trodden (a ceremony); so the stealing away of a girl within that period is not equivalent to stealing away a Brahmin's wife. The virtuous Vas'istha knew that; yet he did not prevent the King. One day the prince did not find anything for hunting; he saw in the forest the cow of Vas'istha giving milk. Very much distressed by hunger, the King killed the cow like a dacoit, partly out of anger and partly out of delusion. He fastened part of the flesh to that tree for the wife of Vis'vamitra and the remainder he ate himself. O One of good vows! The Vis'vamitra's wife did not know that to be beef and thought it to be deer's and so fed her sons with that. Now when Vas'istha came to know that his cow had been killed, he was inflamed with anger and spoke to Satyavrata "O Vicious One! What a heinous crime have you committed, like a Pis'acha, by killing the cow? For the killing of the cow, the stealing of a Brahmin's wife and the fiery anger of your father, for these three crimes, let there come out on your head three S'ankus or three marks of leprosy as the signs for your crimes. From this day you will be widely known by the name of Tris'anku and you will show your Pis'acha form to all the beings."

57. Vyasa said: -- O King! The prince Satyavrata thus cursed by Vais'istha remained in that retreat and practised severe tapasya.

58. But he got from a Muni's son the excellent Mantram of the Highest auspicious Devi Bhagavati and became merged in the contemplation of that.

English translation

1. Janamejaya said “O Intelligent One! Did the prince Tris’anku free himself afterwards of the curse inflicted on him by the Muni Vas’istha.”

2-8. Vyasa said O King! Satyavrata, cursed by Vas’istha, was transformed into a demoniacal state (Pis’achatva); but he became a great devotee of the Devi and passed away his time in that As’rama. One day he repeating slowly the nine-lettered Mantram of the Bhagavati, wished to perform the Puras’charana ceremony (repeating the name of a deity attended with burnt offerings, oblations, etc.) of the said Mantra, came to the Brahmins, bowed down to them with great devotion and purity and said “O venerable gods of the earth! Kindly hear me; I with my head bowed down pray to you, that you all be my priests (Ritt-vigs). You are all versed in the Vedas; so kindly do for me duly the Homa ceremony equal to one-tenth part of Japam, for my success. O Brahmanas! My name is Satyavrata; I am a prince; you ought to do this work for me for my welfare.” Thus hearing the prince’s words the Brahmanas said “O Prince! You are cursed by your Guru and you are now turned into a demoniacal state. You have now no right to the Vedas; especially you are now in the Pis’acha state; it is blamed by all the persons; so now you are not fit to be initiated into the ceremony.”

9-14. Vyasa said O King! Hearing them, the prince got very sad and dejected and thought “Fie on my life! What shall I do now in living even in the forest. My father has forsaken me; I am banished from the kingdom; again, by the Guru’s curse, I have got this Pis’acha state; I therefore can’t decide what to do.” The prince, then, collecting fuel, prepared the funeral pile for himself, remembered the Chandika Devi and repeating Her Mantram, resolved to jump into the fire. Lighting the pyre in front, the prince bathed and standing, with clasped palms, began to chant the hymns to Maha Maya before entering into the fire. At this moment, the Devi Bhagavati, knowing that the prince was ready to burn himself, came instantly to the spot on the back of the lion, by the aerial route. She manifested Henself before him and spoke in a voice deep like a rain-cloud.

15-17. “O Virtuous One What is all this? What have you settled all these? Never throw yourself in fire; be patient. O Fortunate One!

Your father is now aged; he will give you his kingdom and will go to the forest for tapasya; therefore, O Hero! Do leave your depression of spirits. O King! Tomorrow the ministers of your father will came to you to take you there. By My Grace, your father will install you on the throne and, in due time, he will conquer his desires and will go undoubtedly to the Brahma loka.”

18-32. Vyasa said O Fortunate One! Thus saying, the Devi vanished at that spot; the prince, too, desisted from his purpose of entering into the fire. In the meanwhile, the highsouled Narada went to Ayodhya and at once informed everything to the King. The King became very sad and began to repent very much, hearing the son’s resolve to burn himself. The virtuous King, grieved at heart, for his son, said to his ministers “You all are aware of the turning out of my son. I have forsaken my intelligent son Satyavrata; though he was very spiritual and worthy to get the kingdom; yet, at my command, he instantaneously went away to the forest. Void of wealth, he, practising forgiveness, passed his time in study, particularly in spiritual knowledge; but Vas’istha Deva, cursed him and made him like a Pis’acha. Very much distressed by pain and sorow, he was ready to burn himself but the Maha Devi preventing him, he desisted from this purpose. So go hurriedly and, consoling my powerful eldest son, bring him at once to me. I am now calm and quiet and of a retiring disposition; so I am determined to practise tapasya. My son is now capable to govern the subjects; I will now install nny son on the throne and retire to the forest.” So he gladly sent his ministers to his son. The ministers, too, gladly went there and consoled the prince and, with respect, brought him to the Ayodhya city. Seeing Satyavrata with matted hair on his head, with dirty clothes, and thin and worn out with cares, the King began to think within himself “Oh! What a cruel act have I done, though I know everything about religion, in banishing my intelligent son, quite fit to govern my kingdom.” Thus thinking, he embraced his son by his arms and consoling him, made him sit by his throne. The King, versed in politics, then began to speak gladly with suffocated feelings of love to his son sitting by the side of him.

33-53. O Son! Your highest duty is to keep your mind always on religion and to respect the Brahmins. Never speak falsely anywhere nor follow any bad course in any way. Rather the words of the spiritual good persons ought to be fully observed; the ascetics ought to be worshipped. Senses must be controlled and the wicked cruel robbers are certainly to be slain. O Son! For one’s success, one should consult with one’s ministers and keep that as secret by all means. Any enemy howsoever insignificant he may be, a clever King should never overlook him. The ministers, if they be attached to other masters and if they come round afterwards, don’t trust them. Spies should be kept to watch friends and foes alike. Show your living regards to the religion always, and make charitable gifts. One ought not to argue in vain and always avoid the company of the wicked. O Son! You should worship the Maharsis and perform various sacrifices. Never trust women, those who are inordinately addicted to women, and the gamblers. Never is it advisable to be addicted too much to hunting. Always shew your back to gambling, drinking, music and to the prostitutes and try to make your subjects follow the same. Early in the morning at the Brahma Muhurta everyday you should get up from your bed and bathe and perform other analogous duties. O Son! Be initiated by the Guru in the Devi Mantra, and worship with devotion the Suprenne Force, the Bhagavati. Human birth is crowned with success by worshipping Her Lotus Feet, O Son!

He who performs once the great Puja of the Maha Devi and drinks the Charanamrita water (water with which Her feet are worshipped) has never to enter again in the womb of his mother; know this as certain. That Maha Devi is all that is seen and She Herself is again the Seer and Witness, of the nature of Intelligence. Filled with these ideas, rest fearless like the Universal Soul. Do your daily Naimittik (occasional) duties, go to the Brahmin's assembly and calling on them ask the conclusions of the Dharma S'astras. The Brahmins, versed in the Vedas and Vedantas, are objects of venerations and must be worshipped. Give, then, them always according to merits, cows, lands, gold, etc. Don't worship any Brahmin who is illiterate. Don't give to illiterates more than their belliful wants. O Child! Never trespass Dharma, out of covetousness, and remember always not to insult ever afterwards any Brahmanas. The Brahmins are the cause of the Ksattriyas, the more so they are the terrestrial gods; honour them with all your care! In this never flinch from your duties. Fire comes out of water; the Ksattriyas come out of the Brahmanas; iron comes out of stones. The powers of these flow everywhere. But if there be any clash between one thing and its source, then that clash dies away in the source. Know this as quite certain. The King who wants his own welfare and improvement must by gift and humility shew his respect especially to the Brahmins. Follow the maxims of morality as dictated in the Dharma S'astras. Amass wealth according to rules of justice and fill the treasury.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! Thus giving the advice to his son, the King Tris'anku was excited with feelings of love and, in a choked voice, said to his father that he would fulfil what he had been ordered. The King then called the Brahmins, versed in the Vedas and Mantrams, and had all the materials for installation collected quickly. He brought the waters from all the sacred places of prigrimages; he then called together with great respect all the kings. On a sacred day, the father installed his son on the throne and gave him, in accordance with due rites and ceremonies, the royal throne. The King then adopted with his wife the third Vanaprastha stage of life and practised a severe tapasya on the banks of the Ganges. Then in due course of time the King went to the Heavens. There he began to shine like a second Sun by the side of Indra, respected by all the gods.

7-10. Janamejaya said “O Bhagavan! You spoke before in course of conversation that Satyavrata was cursed by Vas'istha on the killing of his cow to become a Pis'acha; how then he got himself freed of this curse. There is a doubt on this point. Kindly clear it and oblige. Satyavrata was cursed; hence pronounced unfit to succeed to the throne. How was the Muni, by what actions, was he freed of the curse? How could the father bring back to his home his son of the form of a Pis'acha? O Viprarsi! Kindly narrate to me how the Muni was freed of his curse.”

11-18. Vyasa said Cursed by Vas'istha, Satyavrata became then and there transformed into a Pis'acha, very ugly, violent and terrible to all; but when he worshipped the Devi with devotion, immediately the Devi gave him a beautiful divine body. By the grace of the Devi, his sins were all washed away and his Pis'acha form vanished. Satyavrata, then, freed from his sins became very much vigorous and energetic. Vas'istha also became pleased with him, blessed thus by the Supreme Force and so was his father, too. When his father died, the virtuous Satyavrata became King, governed his subjects and performed various sacrifices and worshipped, too, the Eternal Mother of the Gods. O King! Tris'anku had a very beautiful son born to him, named Haris'chandra, endowed in all his limbs with auspicious signs. The King Tris'anku wanted to make his son Yuvaraja (the Crown prince) and then in his that very body while living, enjoy the Heavens. The King went to the As'rama of Vas'istha and gladly asked him, with folded palms, bowing down before him duly.

19-23. O Ascetic! You are the son of Brahma, versed in all the Vaidik Mantrams; so you are exceedingly fortunate; now I beg to inform you one thing; hear it gladly. I now desire to enjoy the happiness of the Heavens and all the enjoyments of the Devas, while I am in this body. To enjoy in the Nandana Garden, to live with the Apsaras and to hear the sweet music of the Devas and the Gandharbas, these ideas now have taken a strong hold of my heart. Therefore, O Great Muni! Engage me in such a sacrifice as will enable me, in this very body to live in the Svarloka. O Muni! You are fully competent to do this; therefore be ready for this. Have the sacrifice done and let me have quickly the Devaloka, so difficult to be obtained!

24-26. Vas'istha said "O King! It is exceedingly hard to live in the Heavens while in this mortal body. The departed only live in the Heavens by their merits, this is a known fact. Therefore, O Omniscient One! Your desire is hard to be attained. I am afraid of this. O King! The living men can hardly enjoy the Apsaras.

Therefore, O Blessed One! Do the sacrifice first. Then, when you leave this body, you will go to the Heavens."

27-31. Vyasa said O King! The Maharsi Vas'istha was already angry with the King; therefore when he spoke these words, the King heard and became absent-minded. He again spoke to the Maharsi:- - O Brahmana! If you do not allow me to do the sacrifice, on account of your haughtiness, I will have the sacrifice performed now by another priest. Vas'istha became very angry at the words of the King and cursed him "O evilminded One! Be as soon as possible a Chandala in this body. You have committed acts by which your path to the Heaven is obstructed. You have stolen a Brahmini's wife, and defiled the path of religion; you have killed the Surabhi Cow and you are a libertine. Therefore, O Sinner! Never you will go to the Heavens, even after your death."

32-56. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these harsh words from the Guru, Tris'anku became immediately Chandala in that very body. His golden earrings became turned into iron; the sweet sandal smell over his body smelled like faeces; his beautiful yellow clothings became blue, the colour of his body became like that of an elephant, due to his curse. O King! Those who are the worshippers of the Supreme Force can produce such things when they are angry; there is not the slightest doubt in this. Therefore one ought never to insult any devotee of the Supreme Force. The Muni Vas'istha is always engaged in repeating silently the Gayatri of the Devi. So what wonder is there that the body of the King will be reduced to such a wretched state by his rage. The King Tris'anku became very sorry to see his ugly body; he did not go home; rather he remained in the forest in that form and poor dress. He began to think, distressed with sorrow and over-powered with misery "My body is now blameable to the extreme, so what to do and where to go in this wretched state! I find no remedy to exhaust all my sufferings. If I go home, my son will be, no doubt, very much pained with sorrow. My wife, when she will see my Chandala appearance, she won't accept me; my ministers will not regard me as they used to do before. My friends and relations, when they will come to me, will not serve me with the former care. So it is far better to die than to live, thus despised. I will drink poison or drown myself in waters or hang myself. Or I will burn myself in the funeral pyre duly or I will quit this blameable life by starvation. But, Alas! I will be guilty of suicide; so again due to this sin I will be born a Chandala and I will be again cursed." Thus thinking, the King again thought that at present he ought not to commit suicide by any means. "I will have to suffer for my Karma; and, after due suffering, this Karma will be exhausted. So I will suffer in this forest for my Karma in this my body. Without the enjoyment of the fruits, the past actions can never die out; therefore all actions done by me, auspicious or inauspicious, I will enjoy or suffer in this place. Always to remain close to a holy As'rama, to wander in holy places of pilgrimage, to remember the Devi Ambika, and to serve the saints will now be my duties. Thus I will no doubt exhaust all my actions, residing in this forest; then, if chance permits, and if I meet with a saintly person, all my intentions will be crowned with success." Thus thinking, the King quitting his city went to the banks of the Ganges and repenting very much, remained there on the Ganges. The King Haris'chandra came to know the cause of his father's curse and with a sorrowful heart sent ministers to him. Like a Chandala, the King was respiring frequently; at this time the ministers went to him and bowing humbly, said: -- O King! Your son has ordered us to come here; we have come at his command; we are the ministers of the King Haris'chandra. Know this verily, O King! Kindly hear what the Crown Prince has said "Go and bring my Father here without any delay." Therefore, O King! Cast aside your mental agonies and come to the city. The ministers, the subjects all will be always at your service. We will all try our best to please Vas'istha, so that he may favour you. And that greatly illustrious Muni being pleased will certainly remove your sorrows quickly. O King! Thus your son has spoken to us many words; so now be pleased to go to your own abode.

57-64. Vyasa said O King! That Chandala-like King, hearing even their words thus, did not consent to go back to his house. Rather he told them "Ministers, go back, all of you to the city; and at my word, tell my son that I won't go back to my house. Better leaving off all idleness, you better govern the Kingdom carefully. Shew your respect specially to the Brahmins and perform various sacrifices and worship the Devas. I do not like in this blameable Chandala form to go to the city of Ayodhya with the high-souled ones; so you all go back to Ayodhya without any further delay. Install, at my order, my powerful son Haris'chandra on the throne and do all these stately duties." When the ministers heard thus the King ordering them, they began to cry very much, and, bowing down, they went away early out of the hermitage. On coming back to Ayodhya they regularly installed on a sacred day the King Haris'chandra with Abhiseka water, purified with Mantrams. Thus the powerful virtuous Haris'chandra, on being installed on the royal throne by the command of the King, remembered always his father and began to govern his Kingdom with his ministers according to the dictates of Dharma.

Here ends the Twelfth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the description of Vas'istha's curse on Tris'anku in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Janamejaya said “O Muni! I see that at the command of the King, the ministers installed Haris’chandra on the royal throne; but how Tris’anku got rid of his Chandala body, kindly say. Was it that he bathed in the holy waters of the Ganges and lived in the forest and when he died he was freed of the curse; or was it that the Guru Vas’istha favoured him by his grace and freed him of the curse? O best of Risis! I am extremely eager to hear the life of the King; therefore kindly describe to me in detail his wonderful career.”

4-16. Vyasa said O King! The King became gladdened in his heart to install his son on the throne and began to pass his days in that forest in the meditation of Bhagavati Bhavani. Thus some time passed when VisVamitra, the son of Kaus’ika, completing his course of Tapasya with an intent mind returned to his home to see his wife and sons. On coming back to his house, the intelligent Muni found his sons and other members of the family happy and well conditioned, became very glad and when his wife came to him for his service, asked herO Fair-eyed One! How did you spend your time in days of famine? There was nothing whatsoever of the stock of rice, etc., in the house; how then did you nourish these boys? Please speak to me. O Fair One! I was very busy with my austerities, I could not therefore come to you and see my boys; how then, O Beloved, and what measures did you resort to for their maintenance? O good and auspicious One! When I heard of the dire famine, I thought then “I have no wealth; so what shall I do if I go there?” Thus thinking I did not come then. O Beautiful One! At that time, one day I was very hungry and being very much tired I entered into the house of a Chandala, with the object of stealing. On entering the house I found the Chandala sleeping; then being extremely distressed with hunger,

I entered into his kitchen if I could find anything there. When the dishes were sought and turned, and when I was going to take cooked dog's flesh I immediately fell into the sight of that Chandala. He asked me very affectionately "Who are you? Why have you entered here at this hour of night? Why are your looking after the dishes? Speak what you want." O Beautiful One! When the Chandala asked me these questions, I was very much pressed by hunger and I spoke out my wants in a tremulous voice O Fortunate One! I am an ascetic Brahmin very much pained by hunger; I have entered your house stealthily and am looking out for some eatables from your cooking pots. O Intelligent One! I am now your guest in the form of a thief; I am now specially very hungry; so I will now eat your cooked meat; kindly permit me. Hearing these words, the Chandala spoke to me in words authorised by the S'astras O One of the Superior Varna! Know this to be the house of a Chandala; so never eat that flesh.

17-28. The human birth is very rare in this world; then again to be born a Dvija is more difficult; and to get Brahmanhood again in the Dvijas is exceedingly difficult. Are you not aware of this? They ought never to eat the defiled food who desire to attain to the Heavens; owing to Karma, the Maharsi Manu has denominated the seventh caste as Antyaja and has discarded them altogether. So, O Brahmin! I am now by my actions turned into a Chandala and so forsaken by all; there is no doubt in this. I am forbidding you so that this fault of Varna S'ankara may not suddenly attack you. Vis'vamitra said "O Knower of Dharma! What you are speaking is quite true; though a Chandala, your intelligence is very clear; hear, I will now speak to you the subtleties of the Dharma in times of danger. O Giver of respect! Always and by all means it is advisable to keep up the body if sin be thereby incurred, one ought to perform Prayas'chitta (penance) for its purification when the time of danger is over. But if one commits sin when the time is not one of danger, one gets degraded; not so in the time of danger. The man that dies out of hunger, goes to hell, no doubt. Therefore every man seeking for his welfare must satisfy his hunger. Therefore I intend to steal for preserving my body. O Chandala See! The sin, incurred in stealing during famine, which the Pundits have declared, goes to the God of rains until he does not pour forth rain." O Beloved! Just when I spoke these words, the God of Rains began to pour forth rain. O Beloved! Just when I spoke these words, the God of Rains began to pour forth rain so desired by all, like that coming out of the elephant's trunk. When the clouds thus poured forth rains with the glitterings of the lightnings, I felt very glad and left the house of the Chandala. O Beautiful One! Now speak out to me, how did you behave in that famine time, so terrible to all the beings.

29-48. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the above words of the husband, the sweet speaking lady spoke Hear, how I passed my time in times of famine. O Muni! After you had gone to practise Tapasya, the dire famine raged; and my sons, exhausted of hunger, became very anxious for food. I became very anxious to see the sons hungry; I then went out to the forest in quest of wild rice; and I got some fruits. Thus I spent some months by collecting the rice growing wildly in the forest; then in times these also could not be got and I became again anxious. The Nibara rice, too, is now not available and nothing is obtained also by begging; there are no fruits on the trees and no roots are found under the earth. The sons are crying in agony of hunger. What to do? And where to go? What am I to say now to the hungry boys? Oh God! Thus thinking on various ways, I at last came to this conclusion that I would sell one of my sons to a rich man and whatever price I can fetch, with that I will preserve the lives of the other sons. O Dear! Thus thinking, I became ready and went out. O Fortunate One! Then this boy began to cry aloud and became very distressed; yet I was so shameless that I took the crying boy and got out of my As'rama. At this time one Rajarsi Satyavrata seeing me very distressed, asked me "O One of good vows! Why is this boy weeping?" O Muni! I spoke to him "Today I am going to sell this boy." The King's heart became overfilled with pity, and spoke to me "Take back to your As'rama this boy. Daily I will supply you with meat for the food of your boys until the Muni returns home." O Muni! The King from that time used to bring, with great pity, daily the flesh of deer and boar killed by him in the forest and he used to tie that on this tree. O Beloved! Thus I could protect my sons in that fearful ocean of crisis; but that King was cursed by Vas'istha only for my sake. One day that King did not get any meat in the forest; so he slaughtered the Kama Dhenu (the cow giving all desires) of Vas'istha and the Muni became therefore very angry with him. The high-souled Muni, angry on account of the killing of his cow, called the King by the name of Tris'anku and made him a Chandala. O Kaus'ika! The prince turned into a Chandala because he came forward to do good to me, so I am very sorry for his sake. So it is your urgent duty to save the King from his terrible position by any means or by the influence of your powerful Tapasya.

49. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words from his wife the Muni Kaus'ika consoled her and said

50-55. O Lotus-eyed One! I will free the King of his curse, who saved you at that critical moment; what more than this that I promise to you that I will remove his sufferings whether it be by my learning or it be by my Tapas. Thus consoling his wife at that moment, Kaus'ika, the Knower of the Highest Reality, began to think how he could destroy the pains and miseries of the King. Thus thinking, the Muni went to the King Tris'anku, who was staying at that time very humbly in a village of the Chandalas, in the garb of a Chandala. Seeing the Muni coming, the King was greatly astonished and instantly threw himself before his feet like a piece of stick. Kaus'ika raised the fallen King and consoling him said O King! You are cursed, on my account, by the Muni Vas'istha. I will, therefore, fulfil your desires. Now speak what I am to do.

56-62. The King said With a view to perform a sacrifice I prayed to Vas'istha that I would perform a sacrifice, kindly do this for me. O Muni! Do that sacrifice, by which I can go to the Heavens in this my present body." Vas'istha became angry and said "O Villain! How can you go and live in the Heavens in this your human body?" I was very anxious to go to the Svarga (Heaven) so I again spoke to him "O Sinless One! I will then have the excellent sacrifice done by another priest." Hearing this, Vas'istha Deva cursed me, saying "Be a Chandala." O Muni! Thus I have described to you all about my curse. You are the one quite able to remove now my grievances. Distressed in pain and agony, the King informed him and became quiet. Vis'vamitra, too, thought how he could free him of his curse.

Here ends the Thirteenth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the coming of Vis'vamitra to Tris'anku in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-8. Vyasa said O King! Settling in his mind what to do, the great ascetic VisVamitra collected all the materials necessary for the sacrifice and invited all the Munis. Thus invited by VisVamitra, the Munis became informed all about the Sacrifice; but, owing to the fact that the Muni Vas'istha prevented them, none of them went to the sacrifice. When VisVamitra, the son of Gadhi, came to know this, he became very anxious and very sad and came to the King Tris'anku and sat. The Maharsi Kaus'ika then became angry and said "O King! Vas'istha preventing the Brahmins have all refused to come to the sacrifice. But, O King! See my power of tapasya; I will immediately fulfil your desires; I will instantly send you to the Heavens, the abode of the Gods." Thus saying, that Muni took water in his hand and repeated the Gayatri Mantram. He gave to the King all the Punyams (merits) that he collected for himself up to then. Giving him thus all the Punyams, he spoke to the King "O King! Throw away all idleness and go to the abode of the Gods you wanted to go. O King of Kings! Gladly go to the Heavens by the power of all the merits collected by me for a long time and let you fare well there."

9-20. Vyasa spoke O King! When the King of the Vipras, Vis'vamitra, spoke thus, the King Tris'anku, by virtue of the Muni's Tapas, got high up in the air without any delay like a quick flying bird. Thus getting up and up, when the King reached the abode of Indra, the Devas, seeing the terrible Chandala-like appearance of Tris'anku, spoke out to Indra:-- "Who is this person coming like a Deva with a violent speed in the air? Why does he look like a Chandala and is so fierce-looking?" Hearing thus, Indra got up at once and saw that one, the meanest of the human beings and knowing him to be Tris'anku, reproachingly said to him You are a Chandala, quite unfit for the Devaloka; so where are you going? You ought not to remain here; so go immediately back to the earth. O Destroyer of the enemies! Indra speaking thus, the King dropped from the Heavens and, like a Deva whose merits had been exhausted, fell down immediately. Tris'anku then cried out frequently "O Vis'vamitra! O Vis'vamitra! Being displaced from the Heavens I am now falling very violently; so save me from this trouble." O King! Hearing his cry and seeing him getting down, Vis'vamitra said "Wait, wait." Though displaced from Heaven, the King by virtue of the Muni's Tapas, remained stationed at that place in the middle of the air. Vis'vamitra then began to do Achaman (sip water) and commenced his great Sacrifice to create another new creation and a second Svargaloka (Heaven). Seeing his resolve, the Lord of S'achi became very anxious and eagerly came to the son of Gadhi without the least delay and said "O Brahmana! What are you going to do? O Saint! Why are you so very angry? O Muni!

There is no necessity to create another new creation. Order now what I am to do."

21. Vis'vamitra said "O Lord of the Devas! The King Tris'anku has become very miserable to have a fall from the Heavens. Therefore this is now my intention that you gladly take him to your own abode."

22-31. Vyasa said O King! Indra was thoroughly aware of his determined resolve and very powerful asceticism; so he accepted to do according to his word, out of terror. The Lord Indra then gave the King a bright and divine body and made him take his seat in an excellent car and taking leave of Kaus'ika went with the King to his own abode. Vis'vamitra became glad to see Tris'anku go to the Heavens with Indra and remained happy in his own As'rama. The King Haris'chandra now hearing that his father has gone to Heaven by virtue of his Tapes, began to govern his kingdom with a gladdened heart. The King of Ayodhya began then to live constantly with his clever wife full of youth and beauty. Thus time passed away; but the beautiful wife did not become pregnant. The King became very sorry and thoughtful. He then went to the holy hermitage of Vas'istha and bowing down informed him of his mental agony due to his getting no son. O Knower of Dharma! You are skilled in the Science of Mantrams. Especially you know everything of Daiva (Fate). So, O Giver of honour! Do for me so that I get a son. O Best of Brahmins! There is no salvation for one who has not got any son; you are well aware of this. Then why do you overlook my case when you can remove my sorrow. Even these sparrows are blessed who nourish their offsprings. And I am so very unfortunate that, day and night, I am immersed in cares and anxieties, due to my not having any son.

32. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these pitiful utterances of the King, Vas'istha thought over in his mind and spoke to him everything in particular.

33-41. Vas'istha said "O King! True you have spoken that in this world there is no other sorrow more painsgiving than the state of not having any issue. Therefore, O King! you worship with great care the water-god Varuna. He will crown your efforts with success. There is no other god than Varuna to grant sons. So, O Virtuous One!

Worship Him and you will get success. Both Fate and Self-exertion are to be respected by men; how can success come unless efforts are made. O King! Men who realise the Highest Truth should make efforts, guided by just rules; success comes to those who work; else never one is to expect success." Hearing these words of the Guru, of unbounded energy, the King made a fixed resolve and bowing himself down, went away to practise tapasya. On the banks of the Ganges, in a sacred place, seated on Padmasan, the King became merged in the meditation of the God Varuna with noose in his hand and thus practised severe asceticism. O King! When he was doing this, the god Varuna took pity on him and gladly came before his sight. Varuna, then, spoke to the King Haris'chandra "O Knower of Dharma! I am glad at your tapasya. So ask boons from me."

42-43. The King said "O God! I am without any son; give me a son, who will give me happiness and will free me from the three debts that I owe to the Devas, the Pitris and the Risis. Know that with that object I am doing this Tapasya." Then the God Varuna, hearing these humble words of the sorrowful King, smiled and said.

44-45. O King! If you get your desired well-qualified son, what will you do for me to my satisfaction? O King! If you perform a sacrifice in honour of me and fearlessly sacrifice your son there like an animal, I will then grant you your desired boon.

46-47. The King "O Deva! Free me from this state of sonless- ness; O Water God! When my son will be born, I will do your sacrifice with my son as an animal in that. This I speak truly to you. O Giver of honour! There is no suffering more unbearable than this one, not to have any son; so grant me a good son so that all my sorrows be vanished."

48. Varuna said "O King! You will get a son as you desire; go home; but see what you have spoken before be fulfilled and turned true."

49-55. Vyasa said Hearing these words from Varuna, Haris'chandra went back and told everything about his getting the boon to his wife. The King had one hundred exquisitely beautiful wives of whom, S'aivya was the lawful wife and queen and was very chaste. After some time, that wife became pregnant and the King became very glad to hear this and her longings in that state. The King performed all her purificatory ceremonies, and when ten months were completed, and on an auspicious Naksatra and on an auspicious day, she gave birth to a son, like that of a Deva son. On the birth of his son, the King, surrounded by the Brahmins, performed his ablutions and first of all performed the natal ceremonies and distributed innumerable jewels and much wealth; and the King's joy knew no bounds at that time. The liberal King gave away, in special charities, wealth, grains, and various jewels and lands and had the performance of music, dancing and other things.

Here ends the Fourteenth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the going to Heavens of Tris'anku and the commencement of Haris'chandra's narrative in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-7. Vyasa said O King! When there was going on in the King's palace, the grand festivities for the son's birth ceremonies, Varuna Deva came there in the holy Brahmin form. "Let welfare be on you."

Saying this, Varuna began to say “O King! Know me to he Varuna. Now hear what I say. O King! Your son is now born; therefore perform sacrifices in honor to me with your son. O King! Your defect of not having a son is now removed; so fulfil what you promised before.” Hearing these words, the King began to think “Oh! Only one lotus-faced son is born to me; how can I kill it. On the other hand, the powerful Regent (Lokapala) of one quarter is present in Brahmana form; and it never behoves one to show disrespect to a Deva or to a man who wishes welfare to us. Again it is very difficult to root out the affection for a son; so what am I to do now? How shall I preserve my happiness due to the birth of my son.” The King, then, with patience bowed down to him and worshipped him duly and humbly spoke to him in beautiful words, pregnant with reason.

8-10. O Deva of the Devas! I will obey your order no doubt and I will perform your sacrifice according to the Vedic rites and with profuse Daksinas (remuneration to priests, etc.) But, when in a sacrifice human beings are immolated as victims, both the husband and wife are entitled to the ceremony. Father becomes purified on the tenth day and mother on the expiration of one month after the son’s birth; so how can I perform the sacrifice until one month expires! You are omniscient and the master of all the beings; and you know what is Nitya Dharma. So, O Varuna Deva! I want one month time; and show mercy thus on me.

11-19. Vyasa said O King! The King Haris’chandra saying thus, Varuna Deva spoke to the King “O King! Welfare be unto you! Do your duties; I am now going back to my place. O King! I will come again after one month. Better finish the natal ceremonies and the Namakarana ceremony regularly and then perform my sacrifice.” O King! When Varuna Deva turned his back, the King began to feel happiness. Then the King gave as gifts millions of cows, yielding plenty of milk and ornamented with gold, and mountains of Til, sesamums to the Brahmins versed in the Vedas and kept his name, with formal ceremonies as RohitasVa. When one month became complete, Varuna Deva came again in a Brahmin form and frequently said “O King! Start the sacrifice just now!” The King, on seeing the God of Waters, at once fell into an ocean of anxieties and sorrows; he then bowed down and worshipping him as a guest, spoke to him with folded palms “O Deva! It is to my great fortune that you have landed your feet at my place; O Lord! My house has been sanctified to day. O Deva! I will do, no doubt, your desired sacrifice according to the rites and ceremonies. But see, the victims that have not their teeth come as yet are not fit for a sacrifice; so the versed Pundits say; so I have settled I would perform your great sacrifice, as desired by you, when the teeth will come out of my son.”

20-41. Vyasa said O Lord of men! Hearing thus, Varuna spoke “Let it be so” and went away. The King Haris’chandra became glad and passed his days in enjoyments in his household. When the teeth of the child got out, Varuna knew it and came again in a Brahmin garb in the palace and spoke “O King! Now commence my sacrifice.” Seeing the Brahmin Varuna there, the King, too, bowed down and gave him a seat and shewing all respects to him, worshipped him. He sang hymns to him and very humbly said with his head bent low “O Deva! I will perform your desired sacrifice with plenty of Daks’inas according to rites and ceremonies. But the child’s Chudakarana (the ceremony of tonsure) is not yet done; so the hairs that were at the birth time are still there and the child cannot be fit for sacrifice as long as those hairs exist. So I have heard from the elderly persons. O Lord of Waters! You know the S’astric rules; kindly wait till the Chudakarana is over. When the child will have his head shaven, I will certainly perform your sacrifice; there is no doubt in this.” Hearing these words, Varuna spoke to him again “O King! Why are you deceiving me like this so often? O King! Now you have all the materials ready for the sacrifice; only for your filial affection you are deceiving me. However, if, after the ceremony of tonsure, you do not perform my sacrifice, I will be angry and I will curse you. O King! I am going for the present; but see do not tell lies, being born in the family of Iksaku.” Instantly Varuna disappeared; the King, too, felt himself happy in his household.

When the ceremony of tonsure was commenced and grand festivities were held, on the occasion Varuna soon came again to the King’s palace. The queen was then sitting before the King with the child in her lap when Varuna came up there. The Brahmin Varuna then appeared like a Flaming Fire and spoke to the King in a clear voice “O King! Start the sacrifice.” Seeing him, the King was confused with terror and with folded palms, quickly bowed down to him. After worshipping him duly, he very humbly said “O Lord! Today I will perform your sacrifice. But kindly hear with attention my saying and then do what is advisable. O Lord! If you approve of this as reasonable, I then open my heart to you. The three Varnas Brahmanas, Ksattriyas, and Vais’yas become Dvijas (twice-born) only when they are duly purified according to proper rules and ceremonies; without any such purifications they are certainly S’udras. So the Pundits versed in the Vedas declare. My child is now an infant only; so it is like a S’udra. When his thread ceremony (Upanayan) will be performed, he will then be fit for the sacrifice; this the Veda S’astras declare. The Ksatttriyas are so purified in their eleventh year; the Brahmanas in their eighth year and the Vais’yas in their twelfth year. So, O Lord of the Devas! If you feel pity for your this humble servant, then wait till the Upanayana ceremony is over, when I will perform your grand sacrifice with my son. O Bibhu! You are the Lokapala; specially you are conversant with all the S’astric rules and have acquired the knowledge of Dharma. If you think my saying as true, then go to your home.”

42-51. Vyasa said Hearing these words, Varuna’s heart was filled with pity and so he went away instantly, saying “Let it be so.” Varuna going away, the King felt very glad and the queen, knowing the welfare of the son became glad too. Then the King gladly performed his state duties. After some time, the child grew ten years old. Consulting with the peaceful Brahmanas as well as his ministers, he collected materials for the Upanayana ceremony befitting his position. When the eleventh year was completed by his son, the King arranged everything for the thread ceremony but when his thoughts turned to Varuna’s sacrifice, he became very sad and anxious. When the thread ceremony began to be performed, the Brahmin Varuna came there. Seeing him, the King instantly bowed down and standing before him with clasped palms, gladly spoke to him O Deva! My son’s Upanayana being over, now my son is fit for the victim in the sacrifice; and by your grace, my sorrow that was within me as not having a son, has vanished. I speak truly before you that, O Knower of Virtue! after some mere time I have desired to perform your sacrifice with plenty of Daksinas. In fact, when the Samavartan ceremony will be over, I will do as you like. Kindly wait till then.

52-62. Varuna said O Intelligent One! You are very much attached to your son now and so by various reasonable plays of intellect, you are repeatedly deceiving me. However, I am going home today at your request but know certain that I will come again at the time of the Samavartan ceremony. (N. B.:-Samavartan means the return home especially of a pupil from his tutor’s house after finishing his course of study there.) O King! Thus saying, Varuna went away and the King became glad and began to perform duly his various duties. The prince was very intelligent; and as he used to see Varuna coming, now and then, at the time of the ceremonies, he became very anxious. He then made enquiries outside hither and thither and came to know of his own being about to be killed and he desired to quit the house instantly. He then consulted with the minister’s sons and came to a final conclusion and went out of the city to the forest. When the son had gone to the forest, the King became very much afflicted with sorrow and sent messengers in quest of him. When some time passed away, Varuna came to his house and spoke to the distressed King “O King! Now perform your desired Sacrifice.” The King bowed down to him and said “O Deva! What shall I do now? My son has become afraid and has gone away. I do not know where he has gone. O Deva! My messengers have searched for him in difficult places in mountains, in the hermitages of the Munis, in fact, in all the places; but they have not been able to find him out anywhere. My son has left his home; order now what I can do. O Deva! You know everything; so judge I have got no fault in this matter. It is certainly luck and nothing else.”

63-66. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of the King, Varuna became very much angry and when he saw that he was deceived so many times by the King, he then cursed, saying “O King! As you have cheated me by your deceitful words, so you be attacked by dropsy and be severely pained by it.” Thus cursed by Varuna, the King was attacked with that disease and began to suffer much. Cursing thus, Varuna went back to his own place and the King was much afflicted with that terrible disease.

English translation

1-4. Vyasa said O King! When Varuna went away, the King was very much laid down with that dropsy and daily his pains began to increase and he began to suffer extreme pains. O King! The prince, on the other hand, heard, in the forest, of the illness of his father and filled with affection, wanted to go to his father. A year had passed away and the prince desired very gladly to go to his father and see him. Knowing this, Indra came there. He came instantly in the form of a Brahmin and with favourable arguments desisted the prince, who was about to go to his father.

5-31. Indra said “O Prince! It seems you are silly; you know nothing of the difficult state policies. Therefore it is that you are ready to go, out of sheer ignorance, to your father. O Fortunate One! If you go there, your father will get his sacrifice, where a human victim is to be offered, performed by the Vedic Brahmanas and your flesh will be offered are oblations to the blazing Fire. O Child! The souls of all the beings are very dear; it is for that reason, for the sake of soul, that sons, wife, wealth and jewels are all dear. Therefore, though you are his dear son, like his son, yet he will certainly have you killed and get Homas offered, to free himself from the disease. O Prince! You ought not to go home now; rather when your father dies, you would certainly go there and inherit your Kingdom.” O King! Thus hindered by Vasava, the prince remained in that forest for one year more. But when the prince again heard of the severe illness of his father, he wanted again to go to his father, resolved to court the death of his ownself. Indra also came there in the form of a Brahman and, with reasonable words, repeatedly advised him not to go there. Here, on the other hand, the King Haris’chandra became very much distressed and troubled by the disease and asked his family priest Vas’istha Deva “O Brahmana! What is the sure remedy for the cure of the disease?” Vas’istha, the Brahma’s son, said “O King!

Purchase one son by giving his value; then perfornn the sacrifice with that purchased son and you will be free from the curse. O King! The Brahmins, versed in the Vedas, say that sons are of ten kinds, of whom the son, purchased by paying its proper value, is one of them. So buy one son. There will very probably be within your kingdom a Brahmin who might sell out of avarice, his son. In that case Varuna Deva will certainly be pleased and grant your happiness.” Hearing these words of the high-souled Vas’istha, the King became glad and ordered his minister to look after such a son. There lived in that King’s dominion one Brahmin, named Ajigarta, very poor; he had three sons. The minister spoke to him to purchase his son “I will give you one hundred cows; give one son of yours for the sacrifice. You have three sons named respectively S’unahpuchcha, S’unahs’epha and S’unolangula. Give me out of them one son and I will give you one hundred cows as his value.” Ajigarta was very much distressed for want of food; so when he heard the proposal, he expressed his desire to sell his son. He thought that his eldest son was the rightful person to perform funeral obsequies and offer Pinda and he therefore did not spare him. The youngest son, too, he did not spare also, as he considered that his own. At last, he sold his second son for the price of one hundred cows. The King then bought him and made him the victim for the sacrifice. When that boy was fastened to the sacrificial post, he began to tremble and very much distressed with sorrow began to cry. Seeing this, the Munis cried out in a very pitiful tone. When the King gave permission for the immolation of that boy, the slaughterer did not take weapons to slaughter him. He told that he would never be able to kill the boy, since he is crying in a very pitiful tone. When he thus withdrew himself from his work, the King then asked his councillors O Devas! What ought to be done now? S'unahs'epha then began to cry in a very pitiful voice; the people present there began to discuss and there arose a great noise on the affair. Then Ajigarta stood up in the midst of the assembly and spoke "O King! Be patient; I will fulfil your desire. I am desirous of wealth and if you give me double the amount, I will slay immediately the victim; and you can complete early your sacrifice." O King! He who is hankering after money, can always entertain feelings of enmity even towards his own son. There is no doubt in this.

32-35. Vyasa said O King! Hearing those words of Ajigarta, Haris'chandra gladly spoke to him "I will immediately give you another hundred excellent cows." Hearing thus, the son's father, avaricious of wealth, immediately resolved and became ready to slay his son. All the councillors seeing the father ready to slay his son, were struck with sorrow and began to lament exclaiming "Alas! This wretch, a disgrace to his family, is now ready to kill his own son. Oh! We never saw before such a cruel vicious person. This Brahmin must be a Demon in a Brahmin body!

36-38. Fie on you! O Chandala! What a vicious work are you now going to do? What happiness do you derive by slaying the son, the jewel of jewels, only to get some wealth? O Sinner! It is stated in the Vedas that the soul takes its birth from one's body; so how are you going to slay your soul!" When the hue and cry arose in the assembly, Vis'vamitra, the son of Kaus'ika, went to the King and, out of pity, said

39-56. O King! S'unahs'epha is very piteously crying; so let him be free; and then your sacrifice will be complete and you will be free of your disease. There is no virtue like mercy and there is no vice like killing (Himsa). What is written about killing animals in the sacrifice, is only meant for the persons inclined to sensual objects and to give them a stimulus in that direction. O King! He who wants his own welfare and who wants to preserve his own body ought not to cut another's body. He who pities equally all the beings, gets contended with a trivial gain and subdues all his senses; God is soon pleased with him. O King! You should treat all the Jivas like yourself and thus always spend your life, so dear to all. You desire to preserve your body by taking away the life of this boy; similarly why would he not try to preserve his own body, the receptacle of happiness and pleasures. O King! You have desired to kill this innocent Brahminboy; but he will never overlook this enmity of yours done in previous lives. If anybody kills another willingly, though he has got no enmity with him, then the one that is killed will certainly kill afterwards the slayer. His father, out of greed for money, is deprived of intellect and so has sold away his son. The Brahmin is certainly very cruel and sinful. There is no doubt in this. When one goes to Gaya or one performs an AsVamedha sacrifice or when one offers a blue bull (Nila Vrisabha), one does so on the consideration that one would desire to have many sons. Moreover the King has to suffer for one-sixth of the sins committed by anyone in his Kingdom. There is no doubt in this. Therefore the King ought certainly to prohibit any man when he wants to do a sinful act. Why then did you not prevent this man when he desired to sell his son? O King! You are the son of Tris'anku; especially you are born in the Solar line of Kings. So how have you desired, being born an Arya, to do an act becoming an An- Arya (non-aryan). If you take my word and quickly free this Brahmin boy, you will certainly derive virtue in your body. Your father was converted into a Chandala by a curse but I sent him in his very body to the Heavens. And you are well acquainted with this fact. Therefore, O King! Keep my word out of your love for that. This boy is very pitifully crying; so free him. I pray this from you in this your Rajasuya sacrifice and if you do not keep my word, you will incur the sin of not keeping my word. Do you not realise this? O King! You will have to give anything that a man wants from you in this sacrifice; but if you do otherwise, sin will attack you, no doubt.

57-59. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of Kaus'ika, the King Haris'chandra spoke thus O son of Gadhi! I am suffering very much from the dropsy; I will not be able therefore to free him. You can pray for some other thing. You ought not to throw obstacles in this my sacrifice. VisVamitra became very angry at this, and seeing the Brahmin boy very distressed, became sorrowful and mourned very much.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! When VisVamitra saw that the boy was crying very pitifully, he went to him with a merciful heart and said “O Child! I am giving you the Varuna Mantra; recollect this within your mind and if you go on repeating that Mantra silently, you will certainly fare well.” The sorrowful S’unahs’epha, hearing thus from VisVamitra, began to repeat silently in his mind the above Mantra, clearly pronouncing each letter. O King! No sooner S’unahs’epha repeated that Mantra than the kind-hearted Varuna came suddenly before the boy, greatly pleased with him. Everyone in the assembly became thoroughly surprised to see Varuna Deva come there and they all became glad and chanted hymns in honour of him. The diseased Haris’chandra was also thoroughly surprised, fell to his feet, and with folded palms began to sing hymns to Varuna, standing before him.

7-14. Haris’chandra said “O Deva of the Devas! I am very vicious; my intellect is much defiled; I am a sinner before you; O Merciful One! Now show your mercy and sanctify this humble self. I was very much troubled on not having a son; so I had disregarded your words; now show your mercy on me; what offence can cling to him whose intellect is already out of order? A beggar does not see his own faults; I am also in want of a son; so I could not see my defects. O Lord! Being afraid of the terrors of hell, I have deceived you. Those, who are sonless, cannot find rest anywhere. Especially he is barred from the Heavens. Being terrified by this dictate of S’astra, I have shown disregard to your words. O Lord! You are wise and I am ignorant; especially I am extremely afflicted by this terrible disease; I am also deprived of my son; so you ought not to take any notice of my faults. O Lord! I do not know where my son has gone; O merciful One! Perhaps he, being afraid of his life, has fled away to some forest. For your satisfaction, I have now commenced your sacrifice with this purchased boy; I gave an equivalent value and I have purchased this boy. O Deva of the Devas! Your sight only has taken away my infinite troubles; now if you be pleased, I can be free of my this disease dropsy and my troubles will all be over.” Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of that diseased King, Varuna, the Deva of the Devas, took pity on him and thus spoke.

15-22. Varuna said "O King! S'unahs'epha is uttering hymns of praise to me; he has become very distressed; so quit him. Your sacrifice, too, is now completed; now let you be free from your present disease." Thus saying, Varuna freed the King of his disease in the presence of all his councillors; the King became possessed of a beautiful body and got himself completely cured and shone bright before the assembly. Shouts of victory arose from the midst of the sacrificial ground when the Brahmin boy was freed of his bonds of rope, by the mercy of the high-souled Deva Varuna. The King became very glad on his being recovered immediately from his disease and S'unahs'epha, too, became free from his anxiety and pacified when he got himself liberated from his being immolated on the sacrificial post. Then the King Haris'chandra completed his sacrifice with great modesty. Afterwards S'unahs'epha addressed the councillors with folded palms and said O Councillors! You know well the Dharma; O Speakers of truth! Kindly specify according to the dictates of the Vedas. O Omniscient ones! Whose son am I now? Who is my most respectful father? Please deliver your judgment and I will take his refuge.

23-34. When S'unahs'epha spoke thus, the members of the assembly began to speak to each other, "The boy must be of Ajigarta; whose else can he be? This boy is born of the limbs of Ajigarta; and he has nursed him according to his might. So he must be his son; whose else can he be?" Varna Deva then told the people of the assembly, "The father of the boy sold his son for money; the King purchased him. So he can be said as the son of the King; or he may be called the son of Varuna, in as much as he freed him from his rope bondage. For, he who nourishes another with food, who saves one from one's fear, who protects one by giving money, who bestows learning to anybody and he who gives birth to any of the above five classes of persons can be called his father." O King! Thus some one turned out to be in favour of Ajigarta, some other in favour of the King; but nobody came to any definite conclusion. When matters stood in this doubtful condition, the omniscient all-respected Vas'istha Deva addressed the disputing members thus "O high- souled Ones! Kindly hear what the S'rutis say on this point. When the father has cut off his filial attachment and has sold his son, his fatherly connection has ceased then. No doubt this boy was purchased by the King Haris'chandra. But when the King fastened him to the sacrificial post, he cannot be called as the father. Again when this boy singing hymns in honour of Varuna, he being glad freed him of his bondage, so Varuna cannot be called his father. For whoever praises a god by the great Mantra, that Deva becomes pleased with him and gives him wealth, life, cattle, kingdom and even final emancipation. Rather Vis'vamitra saved the boy by giving him in his critical moment the powerful great Mantra of Varuna; hence the boy can be called as the son of Vis'vamitra and of none else."

35-40. Vyasa said O King! Hearing the words of Vas'istha, all the members of the assembly gave their unanimous consent and Vis'vamitra with his heart filled with love, exclaimed, "O Son! Come to my house." And caught hold of his right hand. S'unahs'epha, too, accompanied him and went away. Varuna also went to his own abode with a gladdened heart. The councillors, too, departed. Freed from his disease, the King gladly began to govern his subjects. At this time his son Rohita heard all about Varuna and became very glad and leaving the impassable forest passes and mountains.

returned home. The messengers informed the King of the arrival of the prince; the King heard and his heart overflowed with love and he gladly came there with no delay.

41-48. Seeing the father coming, RohitasVa became filled with love and overpowered with sorrow for long separation began to shed tears and fell prostrate at his feet. The King raised him up and embraced him gladly and smelling his head enquired of his welfare. When the King was thus asking his son, taking him on his lap, the hot tears of joy flowed from his eyes and fell on the head of the prince. The King and the prince then began to govern together his kingdom. The King described in detail all the events of the sacrifice where human victims are immolated. He started next the Rajasuya sacrifice, the best of all sacrifices, and duly worshipping the Muni Vas'istha, made him the Hota in that sacrifice. When this grand sacrifice was finished, the King respected the Muni Vas'istha with abundant wealth. Once, on a time, the Muni Vas'istha went gladly to the romantic Heaven of Indra; and Vis'vamitra, too, went there also and both the Munis then met with each other. The two Maharsis took their seats in that Heaven. But Vis'vamitra was astonished to see Vas'istha greatly respected in Indra's hall of assembly and asked him, thus

49. "O Muni! Where have you received this great honour and worship? O Highly Fortunate One! Who has worshipped you thus? Speak out truly."

50-53. Vas'istha said "O Muni! There is a King named Haris'chandra; he is very powerful and my client; that King performed the great Rajasuya sacrifice with abundant Daksinas. There is no other King truthful like him; he is virtuous, charitable, and ever ready in governing his subjects. O Son of Kaus'ika! I have got my worship and honour in his sacrifice. O best of Dvijas! Are you telling me to speak truly? Again I speak truly to you that there never was a King truthful, heroic, charitable, and very religious like him nor there will be such a one."

54. Vyasa said O King! Hearing such words, the VisVamitra, of a very angry temper, spoke to him with his reddened eyes

55-59. "O Vas'istha! Haris'chandra obtained a boon from Varuna when he made a certain promise; then he cheated Varuna with deceitful words. So he is a liar and cheat. Why are you praising then that King? O Intelligent One! Let us now stake all our virtues that we have earned since our birth by our asceticism and studies. You have praised exceedingly that King who is a great cheat; but if I cannot prove him to be a liar of the first order, I will lose all my virtues from my birth; but if it be otherwise, then all your virtues will be destroyed." Thus the two Munis quarrelled with each other and making this stake, departed from the Heavens and went to their respective As'ramas.

Here ends the Seventeenth Chapter in the Seventh Book on the freeing of S'unahs'epha and the curing of Haris'chandra in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-6. Vyasa said O King! Once on a time Haris'chandra went out to the forest on an hunting excursion; and, while roaming to and fro, he saw that a very beautiful lady was crying. The King, seeing this, took pity on her and asked "O Fair One! Why are you in this forest crying alone? O Large eyed One! Has someone pained you? What is the cause of your sorrow? Express this quickly before me. Why have you come here in this dreadful lonely forest? What are the names of your husband and your father? O Beautiful One! In My kingdom, no demon can give any trouble to another's lady; I will immediately kill him who has given you this trouble. O thin-bellied One! Be comfortable; do not weep; tell me why you are in this sorrowful state; know that no sinner can remain within my territory." Hearing the words of the King, the lady wiped out her tears by her hand and began to say

7-8. O King! I am Siddharupini, of the nature of success; to get me, Vis'vamitra is practising terrible austerities. So these troubles have arisen from him, the son of Kaus'ika. O King! For this reason I am sorry in Your kingdom. O One of good vows! I am a gentle lovely Lady; still that Muni is giving me so much trouble.

9-16. The King said "O Large-eyed One! No longer you will have to suffer any more pains. Be patient. I will go and make the Muni desist from his tapasya." Thus comforting the lady, the King went hurriedly to the Muni Vis'vamitra and, bowing down to him said with clasped palms O Maharsi! Why are you ailing your body by this terrible severe austerity! O Highly intelligent One! For what great noble cause are you practising this hard tapasya; speak truly to me.

O Son of Gadhi! I will fulfil your desires; there is no need of your practising this severe penance; please get out of it immediately. O Maharsi! You know everything; so what shall I say anything further? See! It ought not anyone to practise this extremely dreadful tapasya, causing troubles to the people within my territory. Thus prohibited by the King Haris'chandra, the Muni became very angry at his heart and went towards his own hermitage. The King, too, went back to his palace. The Muni on his arrival at his hermitage, began to cogitate in his mind, "Why has the King unjustly desisted me from my tapasya" and also the discussions that took place between him and Vas'istha. VisVamitra became very angry at his heart and ready to take the vengeance of this. He thought over on many points and created a terrible demon of a dreadful appearance in the form of a boar and sent it to the territory of the King Haris'chandra.

17-28. That terrible boar, of huge body, entered into the kingdom, raising a dreadful sound. The guards became afraid at his terrible noise. Entering into the forest, that boar began to whirl round and round and destroy the Malati forest, at another place the Kadamba forest, and at others the Yuthika forest. At other places he began to dig up the earth by his tusks and root out the Champaka, Ketaki, Mallika and various other trees. At other places again, he rooted out nice gentle Us'ira, Karavira, Muchukunda, As'oka, Vakula, Tilaka and other trees and so massacred the nice gardens and forests. The forest guards, then, taking their weapons, rushed forward on that boar. Those that were making garlands and the florists became very distressed and uttered uproars of consternation. That boar, as if an incarnate of Death, though routed out with flights of arrows, could not be terrified; rather when he began to harass the guards very much, they became very much afraid and being very distressed took the refuge of the King and, trembling, said "O King! Protect us.

Protect us.” And they cried piteously. Seeing the guards terrified and distressed, the King asked them Whom do you fear so much and why you are so distressed? Speak truly before me. O Guards! I do not fear the Deva nor the Demons; so tell me who has created this panic amongst you. I, no doubt, will send that vicious cheat unto the door of Death by this arrow, who has come against me in this world. What sort of enemy is that? What is his form? What is his power and where is he residing now; speak this quickly to me. Be that enemy a Deva or a Danava, I will slay him immediately by the multitude of arrows.

29-31. The Malakaras said The enemy is not a Deva, nor a Danava, Yaksa nor a Kinnara; it is a boar of a huge body that has entered into the forest. Very powerful, he is uprooting by his teeth all the beautiful flower trees; in fact, he is ruining all the gardens and forests. O King! We shot arrows on him, struck him with cudgels and hurled stones at him so much; yet he did not get a bit afraid; rather he turned back to kill us.

32-51. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words, the King’s fury knew no bounds and, immediately getting on horseback, he went towards the garden and forest. Then the horsemen, elephant drivers, charioteers and infantry, all followed him. When the King went there, he saw the terrible boar, of a huge body, whirling round and round and making the peculiar sound in the forest; and he witnessed also the destroyed condition of the forest and became very angry. He then drew his bow and arrows and fell down on him to take away his life. Seeing the King coming angrily towards him with bow and arrows in his hands, the boar began to sound more terribly and ran forward before him. The King saw the boar coming towards him with his mouth wide opened and began to shower arrows upon him to kill him. The boar immediately made those arrows useless, and very violently and quickly jumped and passed away, over the King. When the boar passed away, the King angrily drew his bow with great care and shot sharpened arrows at him. One moment the boar came in the King’s sight; and at another moment he vanished away; thus the boar began to flee, uttering all sorts of sounds. The King Haris’chandra then became very angry and drawing his bow pursued him, mounting on a horse, swift like the wind. The soldiers then entered the forest and scattered hither and thither; the King alone pursued the boar. The sun entered unto the meridian; and the King came to be alone in a lonely forest. His horse was fatigued, and he, too, was tired of hunger and thirst. The boar went away out of sight. The King also missed his way in that dense jungle and became greatly absorbed with intense cares and anxieties. He then began to think, “Where shall I now go? There is none to help me in this dense jungle. Especially I don’t know the right path.” While he was thus thinking, he saw, all on a sudden, a river with clear water in that lonely forest. He became much delighted to see the flowing river and, alighting from horseback, he drank that water and made the horse also drink it. He became much relieved by drinking; and though he was much bewildered not to find the right track, he wanted now to go to his own city. At this moment Vis’vamitra came up there in an old Brahmin form; the King also looking at him bowed down to the Brahmin garbed Vis’vamitra, who then spoke to the King “O King! Welfare be unto you! What for have you come here? O King! What object have you got in view in this lonely forest? Be calm and quiet and speak everything before me.”

52-58. The King said “O Brahmin! One powerful boar of a huge body entered into my garden and spoilt altogether all the gentle flower trees there. To desist that boar, I pursued him with bow in hand and went out of the city. That powerful boar, very swift and, as it were, a magician, has escaped my sight and gone away where I do not know. I pursued him and have come now to this place and I do not know where my soldiers have gone. O Muni! Now I am deprived of my men, I am hungry and thirsty. I do not know which is the road to my city; nor do I know where my soldiers have gone. O

Dear Lord! It is to my great fortune that you have come in this lonely forest. Now I want to return to my home; kindly shew me the way. I have completed my Rajasuya sacrifice. I always give everyone whatever he wants. This is known to everybody. O Dvija! If you want money for your sacrifice, then come with me to Ayodhya and I will give you abundance of wealth. I am Haris’chandra, the famous King of Ayodhya.”

Here ends the Eighteenth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the origin of the quarrel between Haris’chandra and Vis’vamitra in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-12. Vyasa said O King! Hearing thus the words of the King Haris'chandra, the Maharsi Kaus'ika smilingly said “O King! This Tirath is very sacred; if one bathes here, one is cleansed of one's sins and virtue springs up. So, highly fortunate One! Bathe in this and do peace-offerings (tarpanam) to your fathers. O King! This time is very auspicious and highly meritorious; so take a bath in this sacred Punya Tirtha and make charities as far as it lies in your power. Svayambhuva Manu says He, who arriving at a tirtha capable to give high merits (Punya), does not bathe and make charities, deceives himself; so he is the slayer of his soul, no doubt. So, O King! Do meritorious acts as best as you can in this excellent tirtha. Then I will shew you the way and you will go to Ayodhya. O Kakutstha! Today I will be pleased with your gifts and I will accompany you to show you the way; this I have decided.” Hearing the deceitful words of the Maharsi, the King took off his upper garments and tying the horse on to a tree, went towards the river to bathe according to due rites. O King! The accidental combination, that was to have been so (sure to come), so enchanted the King by the Muni's words, that he got himself entirely under the control of the Muni. He duly completed his bath and offered peace offerings to the Devas and the Piths and then spoke to Vis'vamitra. "O Lord! I am now making gifts to you. O Fortunate One! Cows, lands, jewels, elephants, horses, chariots or horses, etc., anything that you like I will give you just now. There is nothing that I cannot give. When I performed previously the Rajasuya sacrifice, I took, then, before all the Munis, this vow. So, O Muni! You are also present at this principal Tirtha (place of pilgrimage); so express what you desire; I will give you your desired object."

13-15. VisVamitra said "O King! Your glory is spread far and wide in this world; especially I have already heard that there is no second man charitable like you. The Muni Vas'istha has said The King of the solar dynasty, the Tris'anku's son, Haris'chandra is foremost and first amongst the kings in this world and there is no one so liberal-minded as he is; such a king there never was nor ever there will be. So, O King! Now the marriage time of my son has arrived; so I pray before you today, that you give me wealth to celebrate this marriage."

16. The King said:-- "O Brahmin! Yes! Celebrate the marriage ceremony; I will give you your desired wealth. What more can be said than this that whatever wealth you would want, I will give that abundantly. There is no doubt in this."

17-22. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of the King, the Muni Kaus'ika became ready to deceive him and originating the Gandharbi Maya, created a beautiful youth and one daughter aged ten years and showing them to the King, said, "The marriage of these two is to be celebrated today. O King! To marry the boys and the girls in the house-hold is to earn more merits than the Rajasuya sacrifice. So today you will get that desired fruit if you make charities for the marriage of this Brahmin Youth." The King was much enchanted by his Maya; so no sooner he heard those words, he immediately promised "That will be done," he did not raise any objection whatsoever. VisVamitra then showed the way and the King went to his city. VisVamitra, too, thus deceiving the King, went back to his As'rama. When the King was staying in Agnis'ala (cook-room), VisVamitra Muni went to him and said "O King! The marriage rites have been finished; so today give me what I desire in this sacrificial hall."

23-24. The King said "O Brahmin! Speak out what you want; now I like to get fame. So if there be anything in the world, that is not to be given by me, if you want, I will give that even to you, no doubt. The mortal, possessing all wealth, if he does not earn good name and fame, capable to give happiness to him in his next world, passes his life in vain."

25. VisVamitra said "O King! Give to this bridegroom, while within this sacred sacrificial altar, your entire kingdom with the royal umbrella and Chamara for fanning the king and elephants, horses, chariots, infantry and all the gems and jewels."

26-33. Vyasa said O King! The King Haris'chandra was deluded by his Maya; so no sooner he heard the Muni's words, he willingly said without the slightest consideration "O Muni! I give as you pray, my this vast dominion to you." The very cruel Vis'vamitra then said:-- "O King! I have accepted your offer; but O Intelligent One! Give now the requisite Daksina to complete your gift. Manu says gift without Daksina is fruitless; so to get the fruit of your gift give Daksina as duly fixed." The King was exceedingly surprised to hear this and said "O Lord! Kindly say what amount of wealth am I to give to you as Daksina. O Saint! Say the value of your Daksina. O Ascetic! Don't be impatient; I will give you the Daksina to that amount, no doubt." Hearing this, Vis'vamitra told to the King "At present give me two and a half loads of gold as Daksina." The King Haris'chandra became greatly amazed and promised "I will give you that," he then anxiously mounted on his horseback and became ready to go quickly. At this time, his soldiers who lost their road in quest of their king, came to him. They were very glad to see him; but, seeing him anxious, they began to praise him in great haste.

34-47. Vyasa said O King! Hearing their words, the King did not say anything, good or bad; but thinking on his own doing entered into the zenana. Oh! What have I promised to give? I have made a gift of all that I have; I am cheated in this matter by the Muni like one robbed by a thief in a wilderness. My whole dominion including my dress I have promised to give to him. Moreover I will have to pay besides two and a half loads of gold. My brain seems to have been completely destroyed. What to do now? I did not know the cunningness of the Muni. Therefore I am cheated by this deceitful Brahmin. It is next to impossible to understand the work of Daiva.

Oh! My Fate! What will happen to me now? Very much bewildered the King entered in the interior of the palace. The queen seeing her husband immersed in cares, enquired into the cause, thus "O Lord Why have you become so absent-minded? Kindly say what you are thinking now? O King! The son has come back from the forest before you completed your Rajasuya sacrifice; why then are you in grief now? Kindly speak out the cause of your sorrow. Nowhere is your enemy, strong or weak; only Varuna was angry with you; now he is also very satisfied. So there is nothing further for you to do to think. O King! Owing to cares, this body gets weaker and weaker day by day. So nothing is like cares to lead one to death." When his dear wife said so, the King expressed to her somewhat the cause of his cares, good or bad. But the King was much absorbed with his cares so that he could not eat nor sleep though his bedding was perfectly white and clear. Early in the next morning, when, getting up from his bed, he was doing anxiously his morning duties, VisVamitra came up there. When the sentinel informed the King of the arrival of VisVamitra, he gave order for him to enter. VisVamitra, the Looter of his all and everything, came before him and told the King who repeatedly bowed down to him "O King! Now leave your kingdom and give me the gold that you promised as Daksina and prove that you are truthful."

48-63. Haris'chandra said "O Lord! I have given you this vast dominion of mine; so my Kingdom has now become yours; I am leaving this Kingdom and going to somewhere else. O Kaus'ika! You need not think a bit for this. O Brahmana! You have taken my all according to the technical rule; so now I am unable to give you Daksina. If, in time, wealth comes to me, I will at once give you your Daksina." Saying him thus, the King told his wife S'aivya, and his son Rohita, "In this Agnihotra room I say that I have given my vast dominion to the Muni VisVamitra. Elephants, horses, chariots, gold and jewels all I have given to him along with my kingdom. What more than this that save us three, everything else I have given to him. O Maharsi! Take fully this prosperous dominion; we are going somewhere else to a forest or a mountain cave." The exceedingly virtuous Haris'chandra spoke thus to his wife and son, and, paying respects to the Muni, went out from his house. Seeing the King going thus away, his wife and son, afflicted with cares, followed him with their sad faces. Seeing thus, all the inhabitants of Ayodhya cried aloud, and great consternation and uproar arose in the city. O King! What is this act that you have done? How has this suffering come to you! O King! The great Fate, without any consideration, has certainly deceived you. The Brahmanas, Ks'attriyas, Vais'yas and S'udras, all the four Varnas gave vent to their sorrows, when they saw the King going away with his wife and son. The Brahmins and the other inhabitants of the city, all were afflicted with sorrows and began to abuse the vicious Brahmana saying that "He is a cheat, etc." O King! Give the gold for Daksina and then go; or say that you will not be able to give and I will then not take the Daksina. Or if you entertain within yourself any greed, then take back all your Kingdom. O King!

If you think that you have really made this gift, then give what you have promised. The son of Gadhi was saying so, when the King Haris'chandra very humbly bowed down to him with folded palms and said to him.

Here ends the Nineteenth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the taking away of Haris'chandra's Kingdom in the Maha Puranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-4. Haris'chandra said "O Muni! I will not take my food until I pay you your Daksina in gold; know this to be my resolve; therefore O One of good vows! Discard all your anxieties for Daksina. I am the King of the Solar dynasty; especially since the time I have completed my Rajasuya Sacrifice, I give to everyman whatever he desires. So, O Lord! How can it be possible that I will not give what I have voluntarily promised myself? O Best of Dvijas! I will certainly pay off your debt. I must give you the gold as you desire; be calm and patient; but you will have to wait one month; and on getting the money I will pay it off to you."

5-8. VisVamitra said "O King! Kingdom, treasury and strength are the three sources of income; but you are now deprived of all these. Whence, now, do you expect to get gold? O King! Vain are your hopes to get money; what am I to do now? You are now wealthless and how can I, out of greed, give you trouble? O King! Better say 'I will not be able to give you Daksina,' and I will then quit my strong expectation and go away as I like. And you, too, can think that you have no gold, so how can you give money and so you can go wherever you like with your wife and son."

9-20. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of the Muni, at his time of departure, the King said "O Brahmana! Be patient and I will certainly give you your Daksina. O Dvija! My wife, son and I myself are all healthy; so selling these, I will give you the money; there is no doubt in this. O Lord! Kindly enquire whether there is anyone who can purchase us and I will agree to become the slave with my wife and son. O Muni! You can sell all of us and the price you get, you can take two and a half loads of gold out of that and be pleased." Thus saying, the King went to Benares where S'ankara was staying with his dear consort Lima. The King saw the beautiful city, the sight of which makes one's heart dance with more joy and he said that he had become blessed. Then he went to the banks of the Bhagirathi and bathed in the Ganges and offered peace-offerings (Tarpan) to the Devas and the Pitris and completing the worship of his Ista Deva (his own Deity) looked around where he would go. The King entering into the beautiful city of Benares began to think that no human being is protecting this city but S'iva Himself is protecting it. So if he lives there, he would not be living in a city which has been given away by him to Vis'vamitra. The King, then, distressed much with pain and trouble and being very much bewildered, began to journey on foot with his wife and son and entered into the city and placed his confidence. At this moment he saw the Muni Vis'vamitra, wanting Daksina and humbly bowed down and spoke with folded palms "O Muni! My dear wife, my son and I myself are living here; you can take any of us and have your work done; or say what other work we will have to do for you."

21. Vis'vamitra said "You promised that you would pay Daksina at the end of one month; and today that one month is completed; if you remember, then give me the Daksina."

22. The King said "O Brahmana! You are wise and are endowed with the power of tapas (asceticism); as yet one month is not complete; still half a day is remaining; wait till then; and no longer."

23-27. Vis'vamitra said "O King! Let it be. I will come again and if you do not give me then, I will curse you. Thus saying Vis'vamitra went away. The King then thought within himself how be would pay him back what he had promised. There is no influential friend of mine in this Benares city who can help me with money; where then can I get the requisite money. I am a Ksattriya. Pratigraha (begging or accepting any gift) is forbidden to me and how can I beg or accept any gift! According to the code of Dharma, the offering of sacrifices (on one's own behalf), studying, and giving are the three duties ordained to a King. And if I die not paying a Brahmin's Daksina, I will be polluted with the sin of stealing a Brahmin's property and I will then be born a worm or will became a Preta. So to sell myself (and pay off the debts) is better than this."

28-33. Suta said O Risis! When the King was thus thinking humbly with his face bent downwards, and in a distracted state of mind, his wife spoke to him with tears in her eyes and in a voice, choked with feelings "O King! Discard all cares and keep your own Dharma, Truth. He who is divorced from Truth is forsaken like a Preta. O Best of all men! To keep one's Truth is one's Dharma; there is no other Dharma superior to it; so the sages declare. He whose words turn out false, his Agnihotra, study, and gifts and all action, become fruitless. Truth is very much praised in the Dharma S'astra and this Truth raises up and saves the virtuous souls. Similarly falsehood, no doubt, drags a vicious man to hell. The King Yayati performed the Horse sacrifice, and the Rajasuya sacrifice and went to Heavens but once he spoke falsely and so he was dislodged from the Heavens."

34. The King said "O Thou, going like an elephant! I have my son who will multiply my line; speak out what Thou wishest to say."

35. The Queen said "O King! The wives are meant for sons (your having me has been fulfilled as there is your son). So sell me for the money value and give the Daksina to the Brahmin. Let you not deviate from the Truth."

36-45. Vyasa spoke Hearing this, the King fainted. Afterward regaining consciousness, he wept with a grievous heart. O gentle One! What you have uttered just now has caused me much pain; am I such a Sinner as to forget entirely all your conversations and your sweet smiles! Alas! O Sweet-smiling One! You ought not to speak such words. O Fair One! How have you been able to utter these harsh words not fit to be spoken! Speaking thus, the King became impatient at the idea of selling his wife and fainted and fell to the ground. Seeing him fainted and lying flat on the ground, the Queen became grievously hurt and spoke with great compassion. O King! Whose evil have you done that you have fallen into this calamity? Alas! He who is accustomed to sleep in a room adorned with carpets is today like a humble man, sleeping on the ground! The King who gave crores and crores of golden mohurs to the Brahmins, that same King, my husband is lying now on the ground! Alas! What a painful thing! O Fate! What has this King done to you that You have thrown this Indra and Upendra like King in this dire calamity! Thus saying, the beautiful queen (of good hips) very much grieved by the sight of her husband's pain fell down unconscious on the ground. Then the boy prince, seeing father and mother both senseless, lying on the ground, became very much troubled, and, becoming hungry, cried,

"O Father! O Father! I am very hungry; give me food to eat; O Mother! O Mother! My tongue is being parched; give me food to eat," and the boy began to weep repeatedly.

Here ends the Twentieth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the earnestness of Haris'chandra to pay off the Daksina in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-5. Vyasa said O King! At this moment, the Muni VisVamitra, endowed with his power of tapas, came up there, very angry as if the God of Death, to ask of his wealth. Seeing him Haris'chandra fallen thus senseless on the ground, VisVamitra, then, began to sprinkle water on his body. O King! The man who is involved in a debt his troubles increase day by day. So get up and pay your promised Daksina. The King, thus sprinkled with water, cold as snow, regained his consciousness; but, seeing VisVamitra, he fainted again. At this, the Dvija VisVamitra consoled him and angrily spoke to him thus

6-10. O King! If you want to maintain your steadiness, give, then my Daksina. Look! It is Truth that makes the Sun shine; It is the Truth that has stationed this Earth in its position; what to speak more, even the Svarga is established on Truth; so the greatest Dharma lies in Truth. If the fruit of the thousand AsVamedhas be held in one pan and Truth be held on the other pan of the balance, then Truth outweighs the thousand horse sacrifices or what need I to speak all about this! O King! If you fail to give my Daksina before the Sunset, I will, no doubt, curse you. Saying this, VisVamitra went away. The King also became very terrified. The wealthless King was pained by the words of the Muni; but he was more troubled with the thought how he would pay him and keep to Truth.

11-13. Suta said O Risis! At this time, a Brahmin, skilled in the Vedas, with many other Brahmins, started out of his house, at that very place. The queen, then seeing the Brahmin ascetic close by, addressed the King in words reasonable and in accordance with the Dharma, O Lord! A Brahmin is considered the father of the other three Varnas (i.e., Ksattriyas, Vais'yas, and S'udras) and a son can certainly take the father's things; so it is my intention that you beg your wealth from this Brahmin.

14-18. The King said "O One of thin waist! To beg suits the Brahmanas; it is prohibited to the Ksattriyas; I being a Ksattriya do not wish to take anything as gift. The Brahmins are the Gurus of all the Varnas. So they are always to be respected. It is not proper to beg from a Brahmin; especially the Ksattriyas never ask anything from the Brahmins; it is totally prohibited. Offering oblations, study, gift and the governing of subjects and protecting those that take refuge is the Dharma of the Ksattriyas but they would never, never, ask any other man 'Give, give,' and utter these words indicative of humility O Devi! The words 'I am giving you' are impressed within my heart; so I will earn money from some other source and give that to the Muni."

19-20. The Queen said "O King! Time keeps some men in one and the same state; again it throws others into troubles; Time it is that gives respect to one and again it is Time that gives disrespect to others. Time it is that makes one a donor and it is the same Time that makes another a beggar. So even the Risi Vis'vamitra, learned and endowed with the strength of Tapas, becoming angry has deprived you of your kingdom and happiness and has thus done quite an irreligious act in the shape of tormenting others. You can now judge in this the wonderful workings of Time."

21-22. The King said:-- "I would rather out off my tongue into two pieces by a sharp sword than I would quit my Ksattriya pride; and I would never be able to utter the words 'Give, give.' O Fortunate One! I am a Ksattriya; so I never ask anything of anyone. I always say that, by the strength of my arms, I will earn money and pay off my debt."

23-27. The Queen said "O King! Indra and the other Devas have given me over duly to your hands. So I am your religious (legal) wife; especially I have got education and I ought to be protected. Therefore O Luminous One! If you do not like to beg then you can sell me and pay off your Daksina." The King Haris'chandra became grieved very much to hear these words and lamented, saying, "O What a painful thing is this! What a painful thing is this!" His wife again spoke "O King! Will we, afterwards, be burnt by the fire of curse from a Brahmin and thus lowered very much? So keep my word now. You are selling me, not because that you are infatuated with desire for gambling nor you are deprived of all knowledge by enjoyments in worldly things nor you are selling me owing to avert the danger of your kingdom. It is that you are selling me to pay off the debt to your Guru. So nothing sinful a fault will be incurred by you. So sell me and keep to Truth and the fruits thereof."

Here ends the Twenty-First Chapter of the Seventh Book on the description of the sorrows of Haris'chandra in the Maha Puranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

1-6. Vyasa said O King! When the Queen Madhavi requested repeatedly the King, He said “O Good Auspicious One! When you have not met with any scruple to utter clearly these harsh and cruel words, I will do that act now which the most ruthless persons do not dare to do.” Saying this, the King went with his wife, very distressed, to the city. Placing her on the public road, the King cried out in a voice choked with feelings and eyes full of tears “O Citizens! Hear you all. Do any one of you require any maidservant? This lady is dearer to me than my life. If any of you be able to offer price of her as I will declare, then let him give it out quickly.” The Pundits then said “Who are you? Why are you come here to sell your wife?”

7. The King said “Are you asking me of my introduction? Hear then; I am a heartless brute and not fit to be called a man; or I am a Raksasa; nay, I am more than that; I am prepared to do this sinful act.”

8-11. Vyasa said O King! Hearing this, Kaus’ika suddenly assumed the form of an old man and came out and spoke to Haris’chandra I am master of boundless wealth; so I am able to give you the money you want; I am ready to purchase the maidservant by giving an equivalent wealth. Better give me the maidservant. My wife is exceedingly delicate; she is unable to do all the household work; so let me have the maid. But say quickly what value am I to pay? When the Brahmin spoke this, Haris’chandra felt his heart, as it were, torn asunder; so he could not for the moment speak anything.

12-15. The Brahmana said Take an equivalent annount of money according to the age, beauty, qualifications and capabilities of your wife and hand her over to me. Hear about the prices of the male and female servants as written in the Dharma S’astras The price of a female servant clever, good, well-qualified and possessing thirty-two auspicious qualities is one Koti gold mohurs; and the male servant similarly qualified fetches one Arbuda gold mohurs. Haris’chandra became very much pained to hear the Brahmin speaking thus; but he could not say anything. The Brahmin then placed in front of the King the money over a bark and caught hold of the hair of the Queen and was ready to drag Her.

16-21. The Queen said “Q Arya! Let me see once the lotus-face of my son; leave me once. Q Brahmin! Please see that it will be hard for me again to see this boy. Q Son! Behold! Your mother is now a slave. So, Q Prince, do not touch me. I am not fit now to be touched by you.” The boy, then, seeing the mother suddenly snatched away, cried out, “Q Mother! Q Mother!” and followed her with tears in his eyes. That boy tumbled at every step still he caught hold of the mother’s clothing by his hand and began to accompany her. The Brahmin, seeing this behaviour of the boy, became impatient with anger and began to beat him. Still the boy wept, saying, “Mother! Mother!” and never quitted the hold of his mother. The Queen said “Q Lord! Have mercy on me and purchase this boy also. Though you are purchasing me, yet without this boy I will not be able to do your work. My fate is bad; therefore this calamity has happened. Shew this favour to me.”

22-24. The Brahmin said Take this money and give me the boy too. For the Wise in the Dharma S’astras fix such to be the prices of a female and a male. The other Pundits make differences in the prices, e.g., one hundred, one thousand, one lakh, one crore and so on, according to the different qualifications. But for the female, who is skilled in all actions, modest, of good behaviour, and well qualified and, on whose body the thirty-two auspicious signs are seen, her price is one Koti gold mohurs and for a man qualified, one Arbuda gold mohurs.

25-35. Suta said:-- O King! The Brahmin then gave over the price of the boy as decided, in gold mohurs in front of the King over a bark and then tied both the mother and son. He, then, gladly and without any delay, carried them to his home. At the time of departure, the Queen circumambulated the King and, kneeling down, bowed down to him and, in that state of humility, began to speak If ever I have done any charities, if ever I have poured oblations on the Fire, if ever I have satisfied the Brahmins, then, by that virtue, Haris’chandra will again be my husband. Seeing his wife, dearer then his life, fallen on his feet, the King became very distracted and lamented, crying,

“Alas! Alas! The shadow of a tree never leaves the tree; but you being verily modest and endowed with all qualifications, are now separated from me.” Speaking thus reasonably with his wife, the King said to his son “O Child! Where will you go, leaving me here? Where shall I go now? and who will stop my miseries?” The King, then, spoke to the Brahmin “O Brahmin! The pain that I experience in the separation from my son, I did not feel on the occasion of quitting my kingdom or on my being exiled in a forest.

O Auspicious One! The husband, good natured in this world, nourishes always his wife and keeps her always in comfort and happiness. But I am such a bad husband of yours, as I have left you and made you float in the sea of sorrows. Born in the Iksaku family, I inherited the kingdom and its pleasures; but, Alas! Your getting such a husband has now been reduced to slavery! O Devi! I am merged in this ocean of sorrows and troubles. Who will rescue me, by narrating this story of the Puranas!”

36-40. Suta said O King! The Brahmin, then, began to take away the queen and the boy, whipping them, in the face of the King. Seeing his wife and son being dragged away in that state, the King’s pain knew no bounds and be frequently sighed and sighed and bitterly wept aloud. Alas! My dear wife, whom the Moon, the Sun, Wind or any other body could not see ere this, has become now reduced to slavery today! Oh! How beautiful and gentle are the fingers of my child? He has been sold off today, being born in the Solar Dynasty? Alas! Fie on my foolish understanding! Oh my Dear! Oh my child Rohitas’va! Your this wretched condition is due to my Anarya irrespectable bad maxims! Oh! Through the mockery of the Daiva, I have got this distress! Fie on Me!

41-42 Vyasa said The King was lamenting thus when the Brahmin disappeared with them, in the very tall trees and walls of palatial buildings. At this time the cruel fiendish Muni, endowed with great power of asceticism came there quickly, accompanied by his disciples.

43. Vis’vamitra said “O One of mighty arm! If you think it your duty to respect Truth, then pay me the Daksina of Rajasuya sacrifice that you promised before.”

44. Haris’chandra said “O Rajarsi! I bow down to Thee. O Sinless One! Now take the Daksina of the Rajasuya Sacrifice that I promised to pay you before.”

45. Vis’vamitra said:-- “O King! Whence have you collected these gold Mohurs that you are now paying me as my Daksina. How have you earned this? Say.”

46. Haris’chandra said “O Dvija! O Sinless One! What use is there in telling this to you. It will increase agony by hearing. O One of good vows!”

47. VisVamitra said “I won’t accept money earned not rightly.

Give what you have acquired by rightful means. Say truly how you have acquired it.”

48. Haris’chandra spoke “O Brahmin! I have sold my wife the Devi MadhavT for one Koti Gold Mohurs and my son for ten Kotis of gold Mohurs. So take this eleven Koti Gold Mohurs from me.”

49. Suta said Seeing the gold collected out of the sale of wife and son very small, and seeing the King overpowered with pain and sorrow, Kaus’ika angrily spoke

50-52. O King! The Daksina of the Rajasuya Sacrifice cannot be so small; so collect quickly other money to complete it. O Vilest of Ksattriyas! If you think this much to be proper for me, see first the enormous power of mine that I possess of my tapasya, practised duly, of my pure Brahmanyahood, of my violent power and of my chaste study and then you can pay my Daksina.

53. Haris’chandra said “O Bhagavan! I have sold just now my wife; and so wait for some time and I will collect more gold and will pay that to you.”

54. VisVamitra said “O King! The fourth part of the day is now remaining; I will wait till then. After this you won’t expect any other reply from me.”

English translation

1-5. Vyasa said O King! Speaking these harsh and cruel words to the King, the Muni took that money and went away. When VisVamitra went away, the King Haris'chandra became very much perplexed with sorrows and sighed frequently. He then began to say with his face bent downwards. "Suffering from constant pain and troubles, I am now turned into a Preta; if anybody finds me serviceable, he may purchase me with value in gold as proper; but he should do this quickly before the sun sets." Dharma, then, assuming the form of a heartless Chandala, came there quickly to test Haris'chandra. The body of that low mean person was of a black colour, his air looking ferocious, his belly elongated, body emitting stench odours, teeth very long, and his face, covered with beards.

He had one bamboo in his hand; in his neck, the bones of the dead were hanging and his chest was very distorted.

6. The Chandala said “I am in urgent need of a servant; I will keep you as my slave; say, then, quickly what is your price?”

7. Vyasa said O King! When the cruel, extremely ferocious and heartless Chandala said thus, the King Haris’chandra was surprised to see his appearance and said “Who are you?”

8-12. The Chandala said “O King! I am the famous Chandala, Pravira; you will have to remain always subject to me and to collect the clothes of the dead persons.” Hearing his word, the King said, “I want to be purchased by a Brahmin or a Ksattriya. See! The sages say, that the Dharma of good people is excellent; the Dharma of the persons intermediate is middling; and the Dharma of the mean is depressing. You belong to the low and mean class. So my Dharma cannot be observed if I remain in your house.” The Chandala said “O King! This is the Dharma of yours now mentioned by you; then why did you mention that anybody can purchase you; without any previous consideration, you spoke before me. He who speaks with preconsideration attains his desired object; but, O Sinless One! You did not consider and you spoke that ordinarily. However, if I take your words that you spoke first to be true, then you are no doubt, purchased by me.”

13. Haris’chandra said The villain that speaks untruth, goes downright to a terrible hell; so to become a Chandala is far better for me than to use an untrue word.

14-15. Vyasa said O King! When the King was speaking thus, the ascetic VisVamitra arrived there out of anger and impatience; he rolled his eyes and said This Chandala is come to give you your desired money; why, then, are you not giving me the remnant of my Daksina!

16. Haris’chandra said “O Kaus'ika! Nothing is unknown to you. My this body is born for the Solar Line; how then can I accept this slavery of a Chandala!”

17-20. Vis’vamitra said If you do not sell yourself to a Chandala, be certain that I will just now put you under my curse. Give me immediately my Daksina, be it whether from a Chandala or from a Brahmana. There is no other purchaser at present than this Chandala. But know this as certain that I won’t go back until I get my money. O King! If you do not give me money just now, then when half the Ghatika of the day is remaining, I will burn you up by my fire of anger.

21. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of VisVamitra, the King became almost dead; bewildered with fear, then he clasped the feet of the Risi and said, “Be friendly, please.”

22-23. Haris’chandra said “O Viprarsi! I am now very humiliated and have become very afflicted and distressed. Especially I am your Bhakta, I am your servant; so be graciously pleased and free me from this painful companion of a Chandala. O Muni! In lieu of my remnant Daksina, I will be your obedient slave; I will do your work and follow your commands.”

24. Visvamitra said “O King! You are then my slave, you will obey always my commands.”

25-26. Vyasa said O King! When VisVamitra said so, the King, out of joy, thought that he regained his life and said to Kaus’ika. Always I will obey your words; now order me what work I will have to do.

27-28. VisVamitra, then addressed the Chandala and said “O Chandala! Come to me and give me the price for this slave. I am now handing this slave over to you; give me the price and take him. I want money; I have no need for a servant.”

29. Vyasa said O King! When VisVamitra spoke thus, the Chandala, overflowed with joy, came immediately to the Risi

VisVamitra and said

30. O Dvija! The relief that you have given me by selling this servant, for that I will give you the ten Yoyanas wide land of Prayaga Mandalam, covered over with jewels.

31-36. Vyasa said O King! The Chandala then gave one thousand gems, one thousand jewels, one thousand pearls and one thousand gold Mohurs and VisVamitra took them. No signs of distraction nor unpleasantness were visible on the face of the King Haris’chandra. Rather he laid hold of his patience and thought within himself, “VisVamitra is now my master; I will do any work that he puts me in.” At this time, the incorporeal voice, the voice of the fourth dimensional space, sounded from the Heavens “O Fortunate One! You are freed from the Daksina, the debt before that you promised to give me.” A shower of flowers fell on the head of the King from the Heavens. At this time the powerful Indra and the other hosts of the Devas praised the King, saying “Sadhu! Sadhu! Well-done, Well-done.” The heart of the King was then filled with intense joy and the King then said to Kaus’ika

37-38. O Intelligent One! You are a greater benefactor to me than my father, mother and friend as you have freed me in a moment from my debts. So, O mighty armed one! Your words are beneficial to me. Now order what am I to do.

39. When the King said so, VisVamitra then said Go and observe from today the words of the Chandala. Let good befall on you! Thus saying, the Maharsi VisVamitra took the money given by the Chandala and went away to his own place.

Here ends the Twenty-third Chapter of the Seventh Book on the King Haris’chandra’s acknowledging of the slavery of the Chandala in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1. S’aunaka said “O Suta! Now describe as quickly as you can in detail what the King Haris’chandra did afterwards in the house of the Chandala.

2-14. Suta said When VisVamitra went away, the mind of the Chandala was filled with joy. He already gave to VisVamitra that amount of jewels; so he tied now the King and, telling him, “Do you now stand on the path of falsehood?” began to beat him with sticks. The King was already very much tired of the bereavements from his dear ones; now being beaten by the Chandala, his senses were lost. In this state the Chandala took him to his house and fastened him with a chain. Then the Chandala’s troubles were over and he fell asleep. The King lived in the Chandala’s house in that state fettered by a chain; but he did not take any food there. Incessantly he wept for his wife and son and others. “Alas! That thin lady, seeing the sad face of her son is now remembering me with a morose face. She is now perhaps thinking, with a grieved heart, that whenever the King will get the money, he will pay off the promised money to the Brahmin and then will free us from this yoke of slavery. Alas! When will that day come when will he see me and this crying child and speak with us. When the son will cry, saying, ‘I will go to my father; father!’ When will he come and speak with the child? That fawn eyed gentle woman does not know that I am now placed under a Chandala. Alas! I am deprived of my kingdom, friends; and I have sold away my wife and son; now I am bound in the chain of slavery of a Chandala. Alas! So many miseries have fallen on me all one after another.” Thus thinking incessantly about his dear consort and son, the King passed his days in the house of that Chandala. Four days passed; and on the fifth day the Chandala came there and rebuked the King with very harsh words and freed him from his

fastenings and said, “Go to the burial ground and collect the clothings of the dead bodies. There is a wide S’masan (burial ground) on the southern part of Kas’i; go and protect that and whatever is due to you, justly take that; do not leave it. Take this Jarjara club and go there quickly. Say to all that you are the messenger of Viravahu and this staff is his.”

15-33. Suta said O Risis! Thus Haris’chandra became a Chandala’s servant and was engaged in collecting the cloths of the dead persons. Thus ordered by the Chandala, whose duty was to collect the rags of the dead bodies, the King went to the burial ground. To the south of the city Kas’i, was situated the dreadful S’masana, scattered over with the garlands of the dead, bad odours were emitting on all sides and it was covered all over with smoke. Hundreds of jackals were yelling there and the ground was being reverberated by their yells. Vultures, jackals and dogs were at many places dragging the dead bodies. At other places were scattered heaps of bones; the whole ground was covered with the putrid smell of the dead. At some places it seemed that from within the funeral pyre, the half-burnt dead bodies were laughing wildly with their teeth wide open from their mouths. Thus the dead bodies looked terrible when being placed under fire. Lots of dead bodies were brought there and there was a great tumultuous uproar made by the cries of their friends and relatives. Oh! My son! My friend! My relative! My brother! My child! My dear wife! Oh! My cousin! Oh! My grandfather! Oh! My father! My grandson! My acquaintance! Where hast thou gone leaving me here! Come once and let me have a sight of thee! With such dreadful sounds as these, the burial ground was being echoed. Flesh, marrow, fat all were being burnt in the fire and a peculiar sound Son, Son was being produced there and creating voidness in the minds of the people. The fire was burning with a crackling noise. Thus the S’masana looked very terrible as if the universe was being destroyed at the end of a Kalpa. The King Haris’chandra arrived there; and, with extreme pain, he began to give vent to his sorrows. “My ministers, servants! Where are you all now? Where is kingdom that I got by a succession of inheritance! O my Son! O my dear wife! Where are you staying now, at what a long distance, leaving me here out of the Brahmin’s anger. Without Dharma man can never get auspicious fruits. So men should carefully earn Dharma.” The King, whose body was covered with dust and dirt, thought thus repeatedly; and at last, remembering the Chandala’s words, went out in quest of the dead. Out of this eventful cares and anxieties, his body became lean like a stick; still he ran, to and fro, and calculated thus “This dead body will fetch for its price one hundred gold mohurs; out of this, this belongs to the King; this to me, and this to the Chandala.” So he thought constantly and his state became awful. His face, arm, belly and feet and the other parts of body were all covered over with ashes and dust; the King wore a ragged cloth where hundred places were sewn over; his toes were all besmeared with all sorts of flesh, marrow, fat and other things. He began to satisfy his hunger out of the food that was prepared for all sorts of dead bodies; and, taking their garlands, he encircled his head with them. Day and night he did not sleep and always he sighed and sighed, crying, Alas! Alas! Thus one year passed away, as if it had been three hundred years.

Here ends the Twenty-fourth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the stay of Haris’chandra in the burning ground in the Maha Puranam, S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-12. Suta said Here, on the other hand, one day the boy RohitasVa went out with other boys to play at some place close to Kas'i. He first played with the his comrades; he then began to root out and collect, as far as he could, the Darbha (Kus'a) grass, with its ends and which had not deep roots. On being questioned why he was taking the Dharba grass, Rohita told his comrades that his master was a Brahmin and that he was collecting them for his satisfaction. Saying this, he began to collect carefully by his hands the sacrificial fuel (Samidha) and other fuel for the burning purposes. He collected the Palasa wood for Homa purpose and making it into a bundle with other articles already collected, took it on his head, but at every step he seemed to be fatigued. Feeling thirsty he went to a pool of water close by and keeping his load on the ground went down to drink water. Drinking water he rested a while and then as he had kept his load on the anthill, be began to take it back on his head, a very poisonous deadly serpent came out suddenly out of that anthill at the order of VisVamitra. The snake immediately bit the boy who instantly fell down and died. His comrades seeing RohitasVa dead went to the house of the Brahmin. With much anxiety the boys went soon out of fear, to his mother and said "O Brahmin's maidservant! Your son went out with us to play outside; but suddenly a poisonous snake bit him and he is dead." Rohita's mother, hearing these cruel words like thunder and lightning at once fell down on the ground like a plantain tree, cut off from its roots. The Brahmin, then, came and sprinkled water on her face. When she regained her consciousness, the Brahmin then angrily spoke

13-19. O wicked One! It is very inauspicious to cry at the evening time; especially the disfavour of the Goddess Laksmi; the poverty comes to the householder, you know this; why are you then weeping? Have you not a bit of shame in your heart? She made no reply at this. Rather very much immersed in grief for her son, she wept in a pitiful voice. Her body was covered with dust, hairs were dishevelled and her face covered all over with tears from eyes. She constantly wept out of sorrow. The Brahmin, then, became very angry and spoke to the queen "O Villain! O Wicked! Fie on you. I have bought you for money; yet you are hindering my luck. If you had this thought that you would not work under me, why did you take for nothing my money?" Thus repeatedly scolded by the Brahmin, she pitifully cried and spoke to the Brahmin in a voice choked with feelings "O Lord! My son has fallen into the jaws of death, being smitten by a serpent. O One of good vows! I will never be able to see him. So kindly permit me to go and see my boy." Saying thus, that lady began again to weep in a pitiful voice. The Brahmin became very angry and spoke thus 20-26. O Cheat! Your conduct is extremely blameable; you do not know how one commits a sin. The man who taking his pay from his master spoils his master's work, he goes to the terrible hell Raurava and is being scorched there. Living in the Hell for a short while, he is born as a cock. Or it is useless for me to give you this instruction of the Dharma S'astra, for to speak to such to an illiterate, cruel, low, hypocrite and liar and to one addicted to sinful acts is to sow seed on an usar land and to see it fruitless. Now if you have any fear for the afterlife, come and do the household affairs. Hearing this, she said to the Brahmin, trembling "O Lord! Be graciously pleased and shew your mercy on a maidservant. Only for a moment I will go to see the dead son of mine; so give me order to go there for a moment." That lady was deeply absorbed with sorrows for her son; then she put her head on the feet of the Brahmin and with a pitiful voice cried. The angry Brahmin with eyes reddened then began to speak.

27-41. What purpose of mine will be served by your son? Don't you know about my anger? Have you forgotten about my whipping? So be ready and do my household work without any delay. Hearing his words, the queen held her patience and began to do the household work. She spent half the night time, when she finished champooing his feet. When this was over, the Brahmin spoke to her"You can go now to your son; but see, finish his burning ceremonies and come back quickly. See that my morning works do not suffer." Thus getting the permission, the Queen went at that dead of night to look for her son, alone and weeping. Gradually she went out of the precincts of the city of KasT and there she saw her son like a poor man's son lying on the ground over leaves and pieces of woods. Seeing her son dead, the humble Queen was very troubled with sorrow like an antelope, straying from its herd and as a cow missing her calf. The Queen Madhavi then began to lament, in a very pitiful tone, thus "O my Son! Come once before me; say why you are angry. Qh! My child! You used to come frequently to me, uttering Ma! Ma! Then why are you not coming now?" Saying thus, she tumbling went and fell over his son. She, regaining her consciousness, embraced her son and placing her face on the face of the child began to weep pitifully. "Oh! My son! Oh! My child! Oh my Kumara! Oh! My Beautiful! and began to beat her head and her breast with her hands. O King! Where are you now? You used to look upon your son dearer than even your life. Your that son is now lying dead on the ground. Come and behold him once. It seems that the son has got back his life." Thus thinking she looked upon his face; but when it looked dead, she fell immediately unconscious. Getting back soon her consciousness, she held his face by her hands and said "O Child! Rise up from your sleep; awake; now is the dreadful night time; hundreds of jackals are yelling into our ears. Even Pretas, Bhutas, Pis'achas and Dakinis are roaming in packs and making terrible sounds Hum, Hum. Your comrades returned to their homes just at sunset; Why are you alone remaining here?

42-56. Suta said The thin-bodied queen, thus saying, began to lament, "Oh my Child! Oh! My son. Oh! Rohitas'va, O Kumara, why are you not replying to my words! Oh my Child! I am your mother; do you not recognise me; look at me once. O Child! I am deprived of my kingdom and exiled from my country; my husband has sold even his body and I am myself reduced to slavery. What man is there that can live in this state! I am living simply by seeing your lotus-face. The astrologer who cast your horoscope at your birth, calculated future events in your life; but where? none of them is fructified. They said that this child will be a hero, warrior, long-lived, very charitable man, and always ready to do the worship of the Devas, Dvijas and the Gurus. What more than this that the child will be one paramount sovereign and with his sons and grandsons will enjoy his kingdom. This boy will be the master of his senses and will fulfil the desires of his father and mother. Oh my Son! Now all those predictions have turned out false. O Child! You have on your palms so many auspicious signs, discus, fishes, umbrella, S'ri Vatsa, Svastika, flags, Kalas'a (earthen jar), Chamara and other signs; besides these, various other auspicious omens exist on your hands. Are all these become in vain today! O Son! You are the Lord of this whole dominion; but where are your that Kingdom now, those ministers, that royal throne, that umbrella, that axe, that vast amount of riches, that Ayodhya city, those palatial buildings, those elephants, horses, and chariots? Where have gone your subjects! O Child! Where have you gone now, quitting all these and even me! O beloved Husband! See the condition of your son who in his early childhood used to move on all fours (the hands and feet) and get up on your broad chest, anointed with Kumkum, and spoil it with dust; O King! Come once and witness the condition of your child who used to press, out of ignorance due to his young age, the Tilak on your forehead, prepared of Mriganabhi, (musk). Alas! Flies are now sitting on the lotus face today which I used to kiss over, covered with dirt; the insects are now stinging that. Oh! This I have got to witness now! O King! Come and see once your child is now sleeping on the ground like a poor man's dead son. O Fate! What bad act did I commit in my past life, that I have got to suffer so much in this life and I do not get an end of them! O Child! O Son! Oh, my Kumara! Oh! My Beautiful! Shall I not be able to see you once any more elsewhere?" The Queen Madhavi thus lamented very much when the warders of the city, hearing her lamentations awoke and came to her without any delay, greatly astonished. They asked her thus 57-77. Who are you? Whose son is this? Where is your husband? Why are you weeping here in this dead of night, without any fear? Though thus questioned, the thin Queen did not reply anything.

Being again asked, she remained silent; and in the next moment she was pained with extreme agony and began again to cry. Tears flowed incessantly from her two eyes out of her sorrow. The guards then began to suspect her and were greatly afraid. So much that hairs stood on their ends out of terror. They at once raised their arms and began to talk with each other. When this lady is not giving any sort of reply, she is then certainly not a woman; most probably she will be a Raksasi, knowing magic and destroying young children. So she should be killed with great attention. If she be not a Raksasi, then why she should stay in this dead of night outside the city? No doubt, this Raksasi has brought someone's child to eat here. Thus saying, they, without any delay, tied her hairs closely and some caught hold of her hand and some caught hold of her neck, saying Q Raksasi! where will you go now? The armed men, then dragged her perforce to the house of the Chandala and handed her over to him. All the people said "Q Chief of the Chandalas! We have caught today outside the city this child eating Raksasi; so you better take her quickly on the slaughter ground and slaughter her." The Chandala looked at her body and said, "This Raksasi is widely celebrated in this world. I know her from before; but nobody is able to see her. This Mayavini has devoured many sons of many persons. You all will acquire great merit when she will be slaughtered and your good name will be known to all and will last long. You better now go back to your own homes. The man who kills women, children, cows and Brahmins, who burns another's house with fire, who destroys the wayfares of others, who steals his Guru's wife, who quarrels with saintly persons, and who drinks wine, if killed, will certainly yield merits to the man who kills him. If such a one be a female or a Brahmin, no sin will accrue if he or she be slaughtered.

So it is my paramount duty to kill her." Saying this, the Chandala tied her closely and drawing her by her hairs, began to beat her with a rope. Then he told to Haris'chandra in terse language "O Slave!

Kill her; this woman is by her very nature wicked; so do not judge anything in this matter of killing her.” Hearing these harsh words, like the falling of a thunderbolt, the King shuddered. When he came back to his nature, he fearing lest a woman be killed, said to the Chandala “I am not at all able to carry this order out; so kindly make over this task to some other servant of yours. He will kill her. I will certainly carry out any other order that you would task me to do.” Thus hearing the King, the Chandala said Discard your fear and take the sword; this Mayavini kills always the children; so to kill her is meritorious; in no way whatsoever ought she to be saved. The King became very sorry and said Women should always be protected with care, never to be killed; the more so as the religious Munis have assigned greater sin in the killing of women. The man who kills consciously or unconsciously females, certainly becomes boiled in the Maha Raurava hell.

78-79. The Chandala said “Don’t you say this; take this sharp sword, lustrous like a lightning; where killing one engenders happiness to many, abundance of merits are acquired in doing that. This wicked fellow has eaten many children of this place; so kill her as early as possible and bring peace and happiness to the KasT people.”

80. The King said “O Chief of the Chandalas! I have taken the difficult vow from my childhood, not to kill any woman. Therefore I cannot exert myself in this matter of killing the woman as you order.”

81-82. The Chandala said “O Wicked Fellow! No work is superior which is not the master’s work. Why then are you cancelling today to carry out my order, when you are taking pay from me. The servant that spoils his master’s work, taking his money, is not freed from the hell even if he remains for ten thousand years there.”

83-86. The King said “O Lord of the Chandalas! Put me to some other task that is very difficult. I will do that easily. Or if you have an enemy, specify and I will kill him no doubt within an instant. I will give you the whole earth by killing him. Even if Indra comes against you with the other Devas, or Danavas, or Uragas, or Kinnaras, or Siddhas, or Gandharbas, I will slay him with my sharpened arrows, but I will never be able to kill a woman.” The Chandala, then, began to tremble with anger at these words and said to the King.

87-89. You are a servant and what you have spoken is not fit for a servant. Working as a slave of a Chandala, you are speaking the words of the gods. Therefore, O slave! hear now what I say; no need of exchanging any further words. O Shameless One! If you fear sin a bit why then did you accept the slavery in a Chandala’s house. Take this sword and cut off her head.” Thus speaking the Chandala gave him the axe.

Here ends the Twenty-fifth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the quarrels between Haris’chandra and Vis’vamitra in the Maha Puranam, S’ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Suta said The King Haris'chandra with his face bent low thus said to the Queen "O Young One! I am a great sinner, otherwise why shall I be ready to do this heinous act! However now sit before me. If my hand be capable to kill you, then it will cut off your head." Thus saying, the King took the axe and moved forward to cut her. As the King did not recognise her as His Queen, so the Queen did not recognise him as Her husband, the King. So the Queen, being very much strained with sorrow, began to utter with a view to court her death.

4-16. Q Chandala! If you like, I say something; hear my son is dead and is lying close to the outer skirts of the city. Wait till I bring my child before you and do his burning ceremonies. Next you can cut me off by your axe. The King said "Very well; let that be," and gave her permission to go to her dead son. Then the Queen, emaciated and pale, her body being covered all over with dust arrived at the burning ground and taking her dead son, bitten by a serpent, on her lap cried out loudly "Q Son! O my Child! O my young Son!" and referring to her husband said "Q King! See, today, the sad condition of your son, lying on the ground, as his bed. My son went to play with other boys and, bitten by a cruel poisonous serpent, left his life." Hearing the pitiful cry of that helpless woman, the King Haris'chandra went to the dead and took off the cover of his face. Due to the long exile and the difficulties thereof, the Queen was changed altogether in her outer form, so the King could not recognise her weeping as his wife. On the other hand the King, too, had not the curled hair on his head as before; it has turned into matted hair and his skin especially has become like the bark of a dried tree; so the Queen could not make out the King also. The King then noticed all the King making auspicious signs on the several limbs of that dead boy, poisoned all over and lying on the ground and began to think thus The face of the child is very beautiful like the Full Moon, nowhere there is any scar nor anything like this; the nose is high; the two cheeks are clean like a mirror and spacious; the hairs are blue, curling, similar, long and waving, the two eyes are widely expanded like a full blown lotus, the two lips are red like Bimba fruits; the chest is wide and spacious, the eyes are stretched up to the ears; the arms are extending up to the knees; the shoulders are elevated; the legs are elongated, yet god-like like a lotus stem; the appearance is grave, the fingers are fine, yet strong enough to hold the world; the navel is deep and the region of the shoulders elevated. Certainly this boy was born in a royal family. Alas! What a pain is this! The cruel Death has reduced him to this state!

17-21. Suta said Thus looking carefully that boy in the lap of his mother from his head to foot, the King Haris'chandra got back to his ancient recollections. He recognised the boy to be his and wept aloud repeating the words Oh! Oh! The tears flowed from his eyes and he said "This is my boy that has been reduced to this state! Oh! The cruel Fate!" Though the boy is dead, yet the King remained bewildered for a moment. The queen then spoke out of terrible pain "O Child! What sin is that which has caused this dire calamity, I cannot imagine!

22-27. O my Husband! O King! I am extremely worried of pains and troubles; leaving me thus, how is it and where you are passing away your time in a calm, quiet state! O Fortune! It is You that has brought about the loss of the Rajarsi Haris'chandra's dominion, the separation from his friends and what more, you have caused his wife and son to be sold! Has he done so much mischief to you!" Hearing her cries, the King's patience gave way and he came to recognise the Devi and the son and exclaimed, "She is my wife and the dead boy is my son. Oh! What a series of troubles, one coming after another." Being overpowered with extreme trouble and pain, the King fell unconscious on the ground; the Queen, too, looking at the King's state, fell motionless, and, void of senses, no sooner she recognised him as the King Haris'chandra. Some time after, the King and Queen both got back at the same time their

28-49. The King said:-"Q Child! Why my heart does not rend to thousand pieces, seeing today your gentle face pale and lifeless, that was once beautiful with curls of hairs! Q Rohita! When will you come to me saying in a sweet voice, 'Father! Father!' When shall I address you affectionately, 'Qh my child! Qh my child!' embracing you within my breast! Whose tawny coloured dust on his knees will spoil my clothes, lap and my body! Q Delightful Son! I have sold you as if an ordinary thing, though I am your father. As yet my pleasure of having a son is not satisfied. Qwing to the mockery of the mean Fate, my unbounded kingdom, friends, and abundance of riches all have vanished away! Finally I had one son and that too is now in the jaws of death! Qh! With what an amount of terrible pain I am being burnt up today when I am seeing the lotus-face of my son, smitten by a serpent and lying dead on the ground!" Thus speaking in a voice choked with feelings and with tears in his eyes, as soon as he was going to take his boy in his lap, he fell senseless on the ground. Seeing the King lying on the ground, S'aivya thus thought"Such is His voice as makes me certain that He is the King Haris'chandra, the best of men and the delighter of the learned men's hearts. His teeth are like those of the famous Haris'chandra just like to Mukul and his nose is elevated and soft like the Tila flower. But if he be Haris'chandra, how is it that he has come to this burning ground!" Thus thinking, while she looked at the King, leaving for the moment the sorrow for his son, joy, pain and surprise attacked her heart simultaneously; and she, in that state, fell down unconscious on the ground. Then gradually regaining consciousness, she spoke in a pitiful voice "O Fortune! You have caused to the King who was once like an Immortal, the loss of his kingdom, friends, and even the sale of his wife and son. And now you have transformed him into a Chandala! You are merciless, religionless, void of any justice as to what is just and what is unjust. You are shameless. So fie on you! O King! Where are gone today that royal umbrella, that throne, that Chamara, and that pair of fans on your both sides! Oh! What is this transformation caused by the Vidhata (the Ordainer of Fate)! When the high-souled King used to travel, all the kings used to remove as His servants the dust of the roads by their clothings! Oh! Is He the same King of Kings, Haris'chandra who is roaming in this unholy burning ground, burdened too much by his load of sufferings! Oh! Innumerable human skulls are lying here; the small earthen pots (brought for the purification of the bodies of the dead) are lying scattered close to each; the garlands of flowers for the dead, being intertwined with the hairs of the dead, are presenting a grim spectacle! The ashes, charcoals, half-burnt dead bodies, bones, and marrows all arranged one over another make the place more hideous. The marrows of the dead bodies have come out and are dried up by the sun. At places, vultures, and S'akunis are crying hideously and the crows and other birds, eager to eat flesh, are roaming to and fro. All the quarters of the sky are looking blue with the smoke, arising out of the burning of the dead. The Raksasas are constantly roaming hither and thither, gladly feasting on the human flesh. Is the King passing his days thus in this place? Alas! Oh! What a painful thing is this!" The daughter of the King, S'aivya, was overpowered with an awful sorrow; and clasping the neck of the King, began to lament again, in a pitiful voice. O King! You have spoken that you are a Chandala. Is this a dream? Or a Reality? O King! If it be true that you are a slave of the Chandala, then say to me; my mind is being deluded very much! (i.e., I cannot indulge this idea). O Knower of Dharma! You have shown your great zeal towards Dharma; and, for that reason, you are displaced from your royal throne! Now if such help comes out of worshipping the Brahmins and the Devas, then Dharma cannot stand and, along with it, the truth, simplicity and harmlessness cannot exist.

50-55. Suta said Hearing these words from the thin S'aivya, the King took a heavy sigh and then described to her in detail with tears flowing on his neck, how he got the Chandala state. The fearful Queen became very much pained to hear all this and heaving a deep sigh, described, as it was, how her son died. On hearing this, the King fainted and fell unconscious on the ground. Then regaining gradually his consciousness, he began to kiss, with his tongue, the face of his dead son. S'aivya then said in a choked voice "Now sever off my head and obey your master's word. O King! You will be saved then as having kept your truth; and your master's order would be carried out." Hearing this, the King fainted and fell down senseless. Getting up conscious in a moment, he began to weep bitterly.

56. The King said "O Beloved! How have you uttered such cruel words? How can I execute that which is hard even to utter!"

57-58. S'aivya said "O Lord! I have worshipped the Devi Gauri and other Devas and the Brahmins; so, with their mercy, I will get you as my husband in my future birth." Hearing this, the King again fell down instantly on the ground; getting up immediately, he was overpowered with sorrow and began to kiss the face of the dead son.

59-71. The King said "O Dear! I won't be able to suffer an longer for a long time. But, O thin-bodied One! See, I am so very unfortunate that I have no command even over my heart. If I enter into the fire without the permission of the Chandala, then I will have to become again the slave of a Chandala in my future birth. Think it over. After that I will have to go to the hell and be tormented there. But this too I find beneficial to me. Rather I will go to the hell Maha Raurava and there suffer for a long time the torments of the hell, yet

I do not like to live a little longer when my boy, the continuer of my family, has left his life out of the queer fancies of the Great Time and I be merged in the sorrows for my son. My body is now at the command of the Chandala. How can I in this state quit my life without his permission. If I leave my body, I will be indebted to him and I will have to suffer in hell. Let this be so; still I will leave off my body, the receptacle of all these pains and troubles. Nowhere, in the Triloki, is any pain like that felt in the demise of a son, not in crossing the Vaitarani nor in the Asipatravanam! So I will now throw myself on the burning fire along with the dead body of my son. So, O Thin¬ bodied One! You should now excuse me (i.e., do not prevent me). O Sweet-smiling One! I now permit you to go back to the house of the Brahmin. If ever I have given in charity riches, offered oblation to the fire, and given satisfaction to my superiors then, in the other world, I will get you and my son. But there is no such chance now in this world. O Sweet-smiling One! If ever I had given you offence while conversing or making jokes with you, now at the time of my parting, excuse them all. O Auspicious One! Never despise the Brahmin out of your pride as a Queen. Look on your master as a Deva and try all your best to satisfy him."

72-73. The Queen said "O Rajarsi! I will also throw myself on the burning fire. O Deva! I will not be able to carry on this burden, so I will accompany You. It is better for me to accompany you; so there will not be otherwise. O Giver of Honour! I will enjoy with You heaven or suffer with You in the hell." Hearing this, the King said "O Chaste One! Do as you please."

English translation

1-7. Suta said The King Haris’chandra then prepared the funeral pile and placed his son on it. Next he and his wife with folded palms merged themselves in the meditation of the ParamesVari, the Lady of of the Universe. That Hundred-eyed is reigning within these five Kosas (or sheaths) Annamaya, etc. She resides in the sacral plexus of the nature of Brahman, of the Purusa composed of Anna and Rasa. And She is the Ocean of Mercy. Wearing the red robe, She is ever ready with various weapons in Her hands for the preservation of the Universe. When the King was engaged thus in meditating on Her, Indra and all the Devas with Dharma in their front came to the King Haris’chandra with no delay. They all coming up said to the King “O King! Hear. I am the Grand Sire and here are present Dharma Himself, the Bhagavan Visnu, the Sadhyas, Vis’vadevas, Maruts, the Lokapalas, the Charanas, the Nagas, the Gandharbas, Siddhas, Rudras, the twin As’vins, and all the other Devas and Vis’vamitra himself. Vis’vamitra, who going ever the three worlds wishes to make friendship according to the law ordained by Dharma, is now himself desirous to grant you your desired objects.”

8. Dharma said “O King! Do not risk such an hazardous undertaking. I am Dharma; I am satisfied with your patience and forbearance, control of your senses, and the other Sattvic qualities and have therefore come to you.”

9-10. Indra said “O Haris’chandra! I have also come to you. So your good fortune knows no bounds today. You with your wife and son have conquered the Eternal World. O King! What is hardly attainable by any human being, you have conquered that, by dint of your own merits. So get up to the Heavens (vibrations of the Fourth¬ dimensional Space) with your wife and son.”

11-16. Suta said Indra then sprinkled over the dead son on the funeral piles, the nectar, destroying the fatal effect produced by unnatural death. At that time big showers of flowers were thrown on him and Dundubhis were sounded. In the meanwhile, the prince got up from the funeral pile. He got back his former beautiful body and he looked peaceful, healthy, and greatly satisfied. Haris’chandra embraced his son instantly in his bosom; the King and Queen also both regained their former beautiful appearance at that time and were decked with clothes and garlands. Their hearts were then deeply filled with great joy at their getting back their desired object and their health. Indra then said to the King “O Highly Fortunate One! Now ascend to the Heavens with your son and wife, by dint of your meritorious deeds and get the holy happy ends of your endeavours.”

17. Haris’chandra said:-- “O King of the Devas! The Chandala is my master; so until I get freedom from his bondage, I cannot go to the Heavens without his permission.”

18. Dharma said I am myself that Chandala and had assumed that form and shewed you the city of the Chandalas. Knowing that you will suffer.

19. What more than this, that I myself am that very Chandala, I am that very Brahmin and I am that very poisonous serpent who had smitten your boy. [Note: This is all the one and the same the Fourth Dimensional Space.] Indra said Haris’chandra! Now get up, by virtue of your own meritorious deeds to that place which is highly covetted by all the human beings that exist on earth.

20-24. Haris’chandra said “O King of the Devas! I bow down to you. Kindly consider what I say now. All the inhabitants of the city Kos’ala are in mourning, due to their being separated from me. How then, can I go to the Heavens leaving my sorrow-stricken subjects here. To abandon the Bhaktas, the devotees, is to incur the great sin due to the murder of a Brahmin, the killing of a woman, the drinking of liquors and the killing of a cow. O Indra! It is highly inadvisable to abandon a Bhakta who is always in service. How can one be happy when one abandons such devotees. So I will not go to the Heavens without them. You better go back to the Heavens. O Lord of the Devas! If my subjects can go with me, I am ready to go with them to the Heavens or to the Hell."

25. Indra said "O King! Some of them are more sinful, some are more meritorious; different grades of people exist there. So, O King! How can you desire all to go simultaneously to the Heavens."

26-29. Haris'chandra said "O Indra! It is through the power of the citizens that the Kings enjoy their kingdoms, perform great many sacrifices, and do many engineering works (in excavating tanks, etc.) There is no doubt in this. So I, too, have done religious acts and sacrifices through my citizens' help. They gave me all the articles necessary for kings. So how can I now quit them so that I may get the Heavens. O Lord of the Devas! If my subjects have no such Punyams as to enable them to go up to the Heavens, then let the Punyams done by me in giving away charities, in the performance of sacrifices, and other meritorious works be divided amongst them equally. If I myself enjoy S'varga for a very long time; but, if by your favour, I can enjoy with them even one day's residence in S'varga for my merits, that is also superior to me."

30-33. Suta said "Let that be;" saying thus Indra, the Lord of the three worlds, Vis'vamitra, and Dharma who were very pleased went immediately to Ayodhya from Kas'T by their yogic power. In an instant they reached Ayodhya, filled with the Brahmanas, Ksattriyas, Vais'yas, and S'udras; and Indra exclaimed to them all "Let all the citizens come before Haris'chandra, without any delay. Today they all will go to the Heavens by virtue of the Punyams of Haris'chandra." Thus saying, they took all the men to Haris'chandra. Then that religious King told his subjects, "Let you all now ascend with me to the Heavens."

34-40. Suta said Hearing these words of Indra and their King, they all became very glad. Then those who were engaged in their worldly desires, they handed over the charge of their worldly concerns to their own sons, gladly became ready to go up to the Heavens. The high-minded King Haris'chandra then installed his son Rohitas'va on the royal throne and permitted him to go to the beautiful city Ayodhya, filled with jolly and healthy inhabitants. Next addressing his son and friends, he took leave of them. Thus, by virtue of his own good deeds, the King Haris'chandra attained great celebrity. He then got up and took his seat in the aerial car that has no equal and that goes at will. It was beautifully adorned, very rare even to the Devas and decked with bells emitting jingling Kinkini sounds. The high- souled S'ukracharya, versed in the S'astras and the Guru of the Daityas, seeing, Haris'chandra in the Vimana, spoke thus

41. Oh! What is the glorious result of forbearance (Titiksa)! What is the great fruit of charity! Oh! Due to whose influence, the King Haris'chandra today has attained the same region with Mahendra!

42-43. Suta said Thus I have described to you all the doings of Haris'chandra. Any man, oppressed with sorrows and troubles, no doubt, attains constant happiness, if he hears it. What more than this, those who want SVarga get SVarga, those who want son get sons, those who want wife get wife, and those who want kingdoms get their kingdoms by hearing this incident.

Here ends the twenty-seventh Chapter of the Seventh Book on the going of Haris'chandra to the Heavens, in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-3. Janamejaya said "O Risi! Wonderful is the story of the religious Rajarsi Haris'chandra that you have described, the great Bhakta of S'ataksi Devi! Why is that auspicious S'iva, the wife of S'iva, called S'ataksT? Explain to nne, the cause of it, O Muni! And thus make my birth full of use and success. Who is there amongst the clear-minded that gets fully satisfied, when he hears the good deeds of the Devi? Each sentence, describing the good deeds of the Devi, gives the undecaying fruits of AsVamedha Sacrifice."

4-45. Vyasa said O King. Hear; I am describing the story of S'ataksT DevT. You are the great devotee of the DevT; so I have nothing that I cannot say to you. In olden times, there was a great Danava named Durgama: he was very cruel. He, the the son of Ruru, was born in the family of Hiranyaksa. Once be thought within himself thus "The Munis offer oblations by Mantras as ordained in the Vedas. And the Devas, eating the clarified butter (ghee) of these oblations, get nurtured and strengthened. The Vedas is the strength of the Devas; if the Vedas be destroyed, the Devas also would be destroyed. Thus it is advisable to destroy the Vedas. (There is no other easy way.)" Thus thinking, he went to the Himalayas to perform tapasya. He began to meditate Brahma in the space of his heart, and, taking air only, passed away his time. [Mark here that all the Devas reside in space, a magnitude of the Fourth Dimension.] He practised hard tapasya for one thousand years and the Devas and the Asuras and all the Lokas were agitated by the power of his Tejas (fiery lustre). Then the Bhagavan, the four-faced Brahma, became pleased with him and mounting on his carrier, the Swan came up there to grant him the boon. Brahma told clearly the Demon, sitting in Samadhi with his eyes closed, "Let all be well with you; now ask what you desire? Satisfied with your tapasya, I have come to grant you the boon." Hearing thus, the Demon got up from his Samadhi and worshipping Him duly, said "O Lord of the Devas! Give me all theVedas. O MahesVara! Let all the Vedic Mantrams, that are found in the three worlds, with the Brahmanas and the Devas, come to me and give me such strength as would enable me to conquer the Devas." Hearing this, the God Brahma, the author of the four Vedas, replied, "Let it be as you wish," and went away. From that time, the Brahmanas forgot all about the Vedas. So bathing, Sandhya, daily Homas, S'raddha, sacrifice, and Japam and other rites and performances, all became extinct. Then a cry of universal distress arose on the surface of this wide earth; the Brahmins began to say to each other"How has this happened! How has this come to pass! Now what are we to do? Where the Vedas have disappeared." Thus when great calamities befell on the earth, the Devas became gradually weaker and weaker, not getting their share of the sacrificial Havis. At this time, that Demon invested the city of Amaravati. And the Devas, not being able to fight with the Asura, of a thunder-like body fled to various directions. They took refuge in the caves of the mountain Sumeru and the inaccessible passes of the mountain and began to meditate on the Highest Force, the Great Goddess. O King! When oblations of clarified butter are offered to the Fire, those get transferred to the Sun (Suryaloka) and get transformed as rains. So when the Homa ceremonies disappeared, there was the scarcity of rain. The earth became quite dry and not a drop of water was found anywhere. The wells, tanks, pools, rivers all were dried up. And this state of "no rains" lasted one hundred years. Countless people, hundreds and thou- sands of cows, buffaloes and other beasts went to the jaws of death. The dead bodies of persons remained in heaps in every house; persons would not be found to perform their burning ceremonies. When such calamities were seen, the calm and quiet body of the Brahmans, in their earnestness to worship the Supreme Goddess, went to the Himalayas. They with their whole heart and without taking any food began to worship the Devi daily with their Samadhi, meditation and worship. O Mahes'ani! Shew mercy on us. O Mother! It's not praiseworthy to Thee to manifest Thy such anger on us, the low persons and guilty of all sins. So, O Deves'i! Forgive us. If Thou art angry on us for our faults, even then we may be excused, for Thou art the Internal Ruler within us all and we do whatever Thou impellest us to do. (The other Devas become pleased and give fruits when they are worshipped by Japam, and other Homa ceremonies; but that is not even possible due to the disappearance of the Vedic Mantrams from amongst us. But You are kind as mothers are towards their children whenever they remember.) So without Thee, there is no other rescue for these people. O MahesVari! Whatever Thou wiliest. Thou canst do that; so what art Thou seeing again and again? O Mahes'ari! How can we live without Water, what is called the Life. Now rescue us from this great difficulty. O Mother of the Worlds! O MahesVari! Be pleased. Oh the Ruler of the endless crores of Brahmandas! Obeisance to Thee! We bow down to Thee, the Unchangeable, of the nature of Intelligence. We again and again make obeisance to Thee, the Lady of the Universe and realisable by the Vedanta words (not this, not this). All the sayings of the Vedanta declare Thee, by negating (not this, not this) other transient objects as the Cause of all this Universe. We with all our hearts bow down to the Devi. When the body of the Brahmanas thus praised and chanted the hymns of MahesVari, She created innumerable eyes within Her body and became visible. Her colour was dark-blue (colour of the fourth dimension, space) like heaps of collyrium (eye-paint); eyes like the blue lotuses and expanded; breasts hard, regularly elevated round and so fleshy that they touched each other; four handed; with Her right hand, holding arrows; on the under hand holding lotus; on the upper-left hand holding a great bow and on the lower hand, carrying vegetables, fruits, flower and roots with abundance of juice, destroying hunger, thirst and fever. She was the Essence of all Beauty, lovely, luminous like the thousand Suns, and the ocean of mercy. That Upholder of the Universe, showed Her form and began to shed waters from Her eyes. For nine nights continuously, the heavy rains poured down out of the waters flowing from Her eyes. Seeing the misery of all the people, out of pity. She showered incessantly tears from Her eyes; and all the people and medicines were satisfied. What more than this, out of those tears, the rivers began to flow. The Devas that remained hidden in the mountain caves, now came out. Then the Brahmins, united with the Devas, began to praise and sing hymns to the Devi. Thou art known by the Vedanta Mahavakyas. We bow down to Thee. Thou ordained everything to all the worlds by Thy Maya; so again and again we bow down to Thee. Our Obeisance to Thee! Who art a Kalpa tree to the Bhaktas yielding all their desires! Thou assumest the body for the Bhaktas! Thou art always satisfied; without any equal; the Lord of the Universe! We bow down to Thee. As Thou, O Devi! hast innumerable eyes only for our welfare and peace, therefore Thou wilt be called henceforth by the name “S’ataksT.” O Mother! We are very much hungry; so we have no power to chant hymns to Thee; therefore, O MahesVari? Shew mercy on us and deliver to us our Vedas.

46-68. Vyasa said O King! Hearing these words of the Devas and the Brahmins, the Auspicious One gave them the vegetables, delicious fruits and roots to them that were on Her Hand, for their eating. After She was prayed. She gave to men sufficient quantity of various articles of juicy food and to the beasts, grass, etc., until new crops came out. O King, from that day She became famous by the name of S’akambhari (because She nourished all by vegetables, etc.) Great tumult arose and the Demon Durgama heard all from the emissaries and started out to fight with his weapons and army. He took one thousand Aksauhini armies with him (one Aksauhini army equals large army consisting of 21,870 chariots, as many elephants, 65,610 horses, and 109,350 foot) and, shooting arrows, he came quickly before the Devi and invested Her and the Deva army and the Brahmins. At this, a great tumultuous uproar arose and the Devas and the Brahmins united exclaimed “O Devi! Save us; save us.” The Auspicious Devi, then, for the safety of the Devas and the Dvijas created round them a luminous circle and She Herself remained outside. The terrible fight, then, ensued between the Devi and the Danavas. The Sun was covered with their incessant hurling of arrows; and the shooters could not shoot accurately on account of the darkness that then prevailed. Then by the collision of the arrows of both the parties, the arrows caught fire and the battlefield again became filled with light. The quarters on all aides resounded with harsh bow sounds and nothing could be heard. At this moment, came, out of the body of the Devi, the principal S’aktis (forces incarnate) Kalika, Tarini, Sodas’i, Tripura, Bhairabi, Kamala, Bagala, Matangi, Tripura Sundari, Kamaksi, Tulaja Devi, Jambhini, Mohini, Chchinnamasta, and ten thousand armed Guhya Kalis and others. Thirty-two S’aktis, sixty-four S’aktis, and then innumerable S’aktis, all armed, came out of the Devi successively. When the S’aktis destroyed one hundred Aksauhini forces, Mridangas, conch-shells, lutes and other musical instruments were sounded in the battle-field. At this time, the enemy of the Devas, Durgama, came in front and first fought with the S’aktis. The fight grew to such a terrible extent that, within ten days, all the Aksauhini troops were destroyed. So much so as the blood of the dead soldiers began to flow in torrents like rivers. When the fatal eleventh day arrive the Danava, wearing red clothes on his waist, red garlands on his neck and annointing his body all over with red sandal paste, celebrated a very grand festivity and mounted on his chariot and went out to fight. With the strenuous effort, he defeated all the S’aktis and placed his chariot before the Devi. Then a terrible fight ensued for two Praharas (six hours). The hearts of all shivered with horror. At this time, the Devi shot fifteen very awful arrows at the Danava. His four horses (Vahanas) were pierced by Her four arrows; the charioteer was pierced by one arrow; his two eyes were pierced by two arrows; his arms by two arrows, his flag by one arrow and his heart was pierced by five arrows. He then left his body before the Devi, vomitting blood. The vital spirit, the luminous counterpart, emitting from his body, merged in the space-like body of the Devi. The three worlds, then, assumed a peaceful appearance when that greatly powerful Danava was killed. Then Hah, Hara, Brahma and the other Devas began to praise and chant hymns to the World Mother with great devotion and in voices, choked with feelings.

69-73. The Devas said “O Auspicious One! Thou art the only Cause of this Illusion of this world, presenting an unreal appearance (while Brahnna is the Only Reality). So Thou art the Lady of all the beings (otherwise why it would be that Thou hast nourished all the beings with vegetables, etc). So, Obeisance to Thee, the S’akambharT! Hundred-eyed! O Auspicious One! Thou art sung in all the Upanisadas; The Destroyer of the Durganna Asura! We bow down to Thee, the Lord of Maya, the Dweller in the five sheaths Anna, Rasa, etc. We meditate upon Thee, the Lady of the universe, as demonstrated by Pranava Aum, whom the chief Munis meditate with their Nirvikalpa hearts (hearts free from any Vikalpa, doubts or ignorance). Thou art the Mother of the endless crores of universe! Thou assumest the Divine Bodies at times for our welfare! Thou art the Mother of Brahma, Visnu and others; we bow down to Thee with all our heart.

Thou art the Mother of all; so, out of mercy. Thou hast shed tears from the hundred eyes, to remove the miseries of the low humble persons. Thou art the Ruler of all!"

74-80. Vyasa said O King! Thus when Brahma, Visnu, Hara and the other Devas praised and chanted various hymns to the Devi and worshipped Her with various excellent articles. She became instantly pleased. Then the Devi, graciously pleased, handed over the Vedas to the Brahmanas. At last. She, the Cuckoo-voiced, made a special address to them. "These Vedas are the excellent parts of My body. So preserve these with your greatest care. The more so, when you all have seen with your own eyes what a great calamity befell on you when these Vedas went away out of your hands! You should all worship and serve Me (the Controller of the Space) always; there is no other thing higher than this that I can advise you for your welfare. Read always these My excellent glorious deeds. I will be pleased thereby and will destroy all your bad calamities and misfortunes. My name is Durga, because I have killed this demon Durgama; so he, who will take My name Durga and S'ataksi, he will be able to unveil my Maya and walk freely. No use in telling more than this that I tell you now, O Devas, the Essence of all essences Both the Suras and the Asuras would always serve Me and Me, alone."

81-83. Vyasa said O King! Thus giving pleasures to the Devas by these words, the Devi of the nature of Existence, Intelligence and Bliss disappeared before them. O King! This Grand Mystery I have described to you in detail; but this is the source of good to all; so keep it secret with every care. The person that hears daily with great devotion this Chapter, gets all that he wants and at last gets the worship in the Devi Loka.

Here ends the Twenty-eighth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the glory of the S'ataksi Devi in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-19. Vyasa said O King! Thus I have described the glory of the Devi. Now I will narrate, as far as I can, the excellent lives of the kings of the the Solar and the Lunar dynasties respectively. They all attained their excellent glories, simply because they were favoured by the Grace of the Highest S'akti; they were all the great devotees of the Supreme Deity. All their prowess, bravery, prosperity and all their glory, know that those all were derived from the mere parts of the Para S'akti. O King! Those Kings and others as well were able to out off the Tree of this World by the Axe of their Knowledge, simply because they were the devotees of the Para S'akti. So with all the care possible, the Lady of the Universe is to be worshipped and served. Men should avoid worshipping any other gods, as people avoid the husk to get the grain inside. O King! By churning the ocean of the Vedas, I have got the jewel as the lotus-feet of the Para S'akti; and I think that I have discharged all my duties and think myself satisfied and successful. Brahma, Visnu Rudra, and Is'vara are the four feet and Sada S'iva is the plank overhead; thus these five form the seat on which the Devi is seated. There is no other deity superior to Her. To show this (to the ordinary ignorant people) the Maha Devi has taken this seat composed of the five Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Is'vara and Sada S'iva. Superior to these five, what is stated in the Vedas as Vyaktam and in which all this Universe is sewn, as it were, crosswise and lengthwise, lying in and through, that is Bhuvanes'vari, the Goddess of the Universe.

[Note: Brahma, Visnu, Rudra, Is'vara and Sada S'iva are the Regents or the presiding Deities of earth, water, fire, air and Akas'a] No man can be free unless he until the Goddess. When men will be able to encircle the Akas'a, of the fourth dimension, as if it were an antelope skin, then they will be able to root out the miseries of the world, without knowing the nature of the Devi (i.e., impossible). Thus the SVetasVataropanisada says "Those that were engaged in meditation, Dhyana Yoga, they saw the Devi covered by the Gunas Sattva, Rajas and Tamas and the forces incarnate respectively of the several Devas." So to make the human birth a success, first avoid all companies, be it out of shame, or fear, or devotion, or out of love; then bring the mind and keep it steady in your heart and then be devoted to Her and consider Her as the Supreme. This is the Vedanta Dindima (the declaration of the Vedanta). Whoever takes the name of the Devi, either in sleeping, going or resting or in any other condition, he is certainly freed from the bondage of the world, no doubt. O King! So worship the MahesVari with all the care that you can. Go on step by step; first worship Her Virat Rupa (cosmic form); then Suksma Rupa (subtle form) and then her Antaryami Rupa (inner form, ruling within). Thus when your heart is purified, worship the Para S'akti, of the nature of Brahma, beyond this Maya, this Prapancha Ullasa, of the nature of Existence, Intelligence and Bliss. When the Chitta (heart) melts in Para S'akti, then comes the real Aradhana (the real worship). So dilute your heart in Her. O King! Thus I have described to you the sanctifying deeds of the extremely devoted kings of the Para S'akti, who were noble minded and religious. One who will hear this will acquire fame, dharma, intelligence, good end, and merits that have no equal. Now what else do you like to hear?

20-22. Janamejaya said "O Bhagavan! In olden times, the World mother Para S'akti handed over Gauri to Hara, Laksmi to Hari, and Sarasvati to Brahma, born of the lotus from the navel of Hari. Now I hear that Gauri is the daughter of Himalaya as well of Daksa; and Maha Laksmi is the daughter of the Ksiroda ocean (ocean of milk). They were all originated from the Prime Devi; how, then, Gauri and Laksmi came to be the daughters of others? O great Muni! This is next to impossible; so my doubt arises. O Bhagavan! You are quite competent to cut off all my doubts; so by your axe of knowledge, cut off my present doubt."

23-44. Veda Vyasa said O King! Hear. I am telling you this wonderful secret. You are greatly devoted to the Devi; so nothing there can be that I cannot disclose to you. Since the time the Great Mother gave over to Hara, Hari and Brahma, Gauri, Laksmi and and Sarasvati, respectively, these three Devas, Hara, etc. were performing their tasks, preserving, etc. O King! Once on a time, certain Danavas, named Halahalas were born. In time, they became very powerful and in a short time conquered the three worlds. What more than this, that they being elated with the boon granted to them by Brahma, took their forces and invested the Mount Kailas'a and the Vaikuntha regions!

Seeing this, Maha Deva and Visnu both made preparations for war. A terrible fight ensued between both the parties. For sixty thousand years the battle lasted incessantly but the result was stalemate.

Gradually there was a great cry of consternation in the two parties. When S’iva and Visnu with great effort destroyed the Danavas. O King! S’iva and Visnu then returned to their own houses and began to brag of their powers before their own S’aktis Gauri and Laksmi; whereas the Demons were killed on account of the S’aktis of Gauri and Laksmi. Seeing them boast, Gauri and Laksmi laughed not sincerely whereon the two gods were very much angry. They under the magic spell of the Prime Maya insulted them and even used offensive languages. Gauri and Laksmi quitted them and disappeared. A great uproar then arose in the worlds.

Both Hari and Hara became lustreless due to their insulting the two S’aktis. They become powerless and unconscious and turned out mad. Seeing this Brahma became very anxious. Hari and Hara are the two chief Deities; how then these two have become unable to perform the actions of the world! What is the cause? Why this calamity has sprung up out of season? Will there be a Pralaya (a general dissolution) of the world out of some offence, when no actions are being done! I know nothing about this. So how can I find a remedy! Being thus very distressed, he began to meditate with his eyes closed in the fourth dimensional space in the heart. O King!

The Lotus born Brahma then found out by his meditation that this calamity was brought about by the great wrath of the Para S’akti. He then tried to find out the remedy until Hah and Hara did not regain the former natural position. Brahma began by his own S’akti to carry on the functions of them both, viz., that of preservation and destruction for some time. The religious-minded Prajapati quickly called his son Manu and Sanaka, etc., the Risis, for bringing peace on the two great Gods! When they came to him, the great ascetic four-faced Brahma told them “I am now busy with many more works; so I am unable carry on my tapasya? By the wrath of the Highest Force, Hari and Hara have become somewhat distracted; so for the satisfaction of the Para S'akti I am performing the three functions, i.e., those of Creation, Preservation and Destruction. So you both practise this hard tapasya with the greatest devotion and bring about Her satisfaction. O sons! Do such as Hari and Hara gain their former states and then be united with their own S’aktis respectively. Your fame will increase thereby, no doubt. Rather that family where the two S’aktis will take their birth, will purify the whole world and that man himself will be crowned with success.”

45. Vyasa said O King! The pure-hearted Daksa and other mind- born sons of Brahma, hearing the words of the Grandsire expressed their desire to worship the Para S’akti and went to the forest.

Here ends the Twenty-ninth Chapter of the Seventh Book on birth of the Bhagavati in the house of Daksa in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad

Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

English translation

1-12. Vyasa said:-0 King! They went to the forest and fixed their seats on the slope of the Himalayan mountain and engaged themselves in repeating silently the seed Mantra of Maha Maya and thus practised their austerities. O King! One hundred thousand years passed in the meditation of the Para S'akti. The Devi, pleased, became visible to them. Her form was three-eyed, and of the form of Existence, Intelligence and Bliss (Sachhidananda); She was filled with mercy. In Her one hand there was the noose, in another hand, goad; in another hand there was the sign bidding her devotees discard all fear, and in the other hand She was ready to offer boons. The good-natured Munis, seeing this Form of the World Mother began to praise Her. "O Devi! Thou art existing separately in every gross body; we bow down to Thee. Thou art existing wholly (cosmically) in all the gross bodies; we bow down to Thee. O ParamesVari! Thou art existing separately in every subtle body; we bow down to Thee; Thou art existing universally in all the subtle bodies; we bow down to Thee, Thou art existing separately in all the causal bodies wherein all the Linga Dehas (subtle bodies) are interwoven; we bow down to Thee. Thou art existing universally in all the causal bodies; we bow down to Thee. Thou art of the nature of the unchangeable Brahma, the receptacle of all the Jivas and thus residest in all the bodies; so we bow down to Thee. Thou art of the nature of Atman, the Goal of all the beings; we bow again and spin to Thee." Thus the pure-natured Daksa and the other Munis praised Her with voice, choked with feelings of intense devotion and bowed down to Her feet. Then the Devi, pleased, spoke to them in a cuckoo voice. "O Highly Fortunate Ones! I am ever ready to grant boons; so ask what you desire." O King! Hearing thus, they asked that Hah and Hara both regain their former natural states and be united respectively with their S'aktis, Laksmi and Gauri. Daksa again asked "O Devi! Let your birth be in my family. O Mother! I will, no doubt.

consider myself as having then realised the fulfilment of my life. So,

O ParamesVari! Speak by Thy own mouth how Thy worship, Japam, meditation will be conducted as well the various fit places where they would be performed."

13-16. The Devi said "The insult shown towards my S'aktis has led to this calamitous state of Hah and Hara. So they should not repeat such crime. Now, by My favour, they will regain their health and, of the two S'aktis, one will be born in your family and the other will take Her birth in the Ksiroda Sagara, the ocean of milk. Hah and Hara will get back their S'aktis, when I will send them the chief Mantra. The chief Mantra of Mine is the said Mantra of Maya; this is always sweet to Me; so worship this Mantra and make Japam of this. The Form that you are seeing before you, this is My Bhuvanes'vari form (that of the Goddess of the Universe), or worship My Virat (cosmic) form; or Sachchidananda form. The whole world is my place of worship; so you can meditate on Me and worship Me always and in all places."

17-23. Vyasa said When the Bhuvanes'vari Devi living in the Mani Dvipa thus giving Her reply, went away, Daksa and other Munis all went to Brahma and informed him with great earnestness of everything that happened. O King! Thus Hah and Hara both became devoid of their haughtiness and got back their previous natures by the Grace of the Supreme Deity and were thus enabled to perform their functions as before. Then, on a certain time, the Devi Bhagavati, the Fiery Nature of the Para S'akti, took Her birth in the house of the Prajapati Daksa. O King! Everywhere in the Trilokas, great festivities were held. All the Devas became glad and showered flowers. The Dundubhis of the Devas were sounded by the hands and made very grave sounds. The pure-minded saints were gladdened; the Sun's rays looked purer and cleaner; the rivers were elated with joy and began to flow in their channels. When the World-auspicious Devi, the Destroyer of the birth and death of the Jivas took Her birth, everything looked propitious. The wise Munis named Her "Sati" as She was of the nature of Para Brahma and Truth Herself. The Prajapati Daksa handed over the Devi, who was before the S'akti of Mahadeva, to that Deva of the Devas, Mahadeva. Due to the misfortune of Daksa, the daughter of Daksa burnt Herself in a blazing fire.

24-25. Janamejaya said "O Munis! You have made me now hear a very inauspicious word. How can such a great thing of the nature of the Highest Intelligence come to be burnt up in a fire! The mere recollecting of Whose Name dispels the terrible danger of the burning up by the fire of Samsara, how can She be burnt up by fire, I am extremely eager to hear; kindly describe that to me in detail."

26-37. Vyasa said:-- O King! Hear. I am describing to you the ancient history of the burning of Sati. Once on a time, the famous Risi Durvasa went to the bank of the river Jambu and saw the Devi there. There he remained with his senses controlled and began to repeat silently the root Mantra of Maya. Then the Goddess of the Immortals, the Bhagavati was pleased and gave the Muni a beautiful garland as Her Prasada that was on Her neck, that emitted the sweet fragrance of Makaranda (juice of flowers; Jasamine). Whereon the bees were about to cluster. The Maharsi took it quickly and placed it on his head. He then hurriedly went to see the Mother to the place where Sati's Father, the Prajapati Daksa was staying and bowed down to the feet of the Sati. The Prajapati then asked him "O Lord! Whose extraordinary garland is this? How have you got this enchanting garland, rare to the mortals on this earth!" The eloquent Maharsi Durvasa then spoke to him with tears of love flowing from his eyes "O Prajapati! I have got this beautiful garland that has no equal, as the Prasada (favour) of the Devi." The Prajapati asked that garland then from him. He, too, thinking that there was nothing in the three worlds that cannot be given to the devotee of the S'akti, gave that garland to the Prajapati. He took that on his head; then placed it on the nice bed that was prepared in the bed-room of the couple. Being excited by the sweet fragrant smell of that garland in the night, the Prajapati engaged in a sexual intercourse! O King! Due to that animal action, the bitter enmity arose in his mind towards S'ankara and His Sati. He then began to abuse S'iva. O King! For that offence, the Sati resolved to quit her body that was born of Daksa, to preserve the prestige of the Sanatan Darma of devotion to Her Husband and burnt Her body by the fire arising out of Yoga.

38. Janamejaya said "O Muni! What did Maha Deva do, thus pained by the bereavement from His consort dearer than His life, when the Sati's body was thus consumed."

39-50. Vyasa said O King! I am unable to describe what happened afterwards. O King! Out of the fire of anger of S'iva, the Pralaya seemed to threaten the three worlds. Virabhadra came into existence with hosts of Bhadra Kalis, ready to destroy the three worlds. Brahma and the other Devas took refuge to S'ankara.

Though Mahadeva lost everything on Sati's departure. He, the Ocean of Mercy, destroyed the sacrifice of Daksa, cut off his head and instead placed the head of a goat, brought him back to life and thus made the Gods free from all fears. He, the Deva of the Devas, then became very much distressed and going to the place of sacrifice, began to weep in great sorrow. He saw that the body of the Intelligent Sati was being burnt in the fire of the Chita. He cried aloud Oh my Sati! Oh My Sati! And taking Her body on His neck, began to roam in different countries, like a mad man. Seeing that, Brahma and the other Devas became very anxious and Bhagavan Visnu cut off the body to pieces by His arrows. Wherever the parts fell, S'ankara remained there in so many different forms. He then said to the Devas Whoever will worship, with deep devotion in these places, the Bhagavati, will have nothing left unattained. The Highest Mother will remain close to them there. The persons that will make Puras'charana (the repetition) of the Mantrams, especially the Maya Vija (the root Mantra of Maya), their Mantrams will become, no doubt, fructified and become incarnate. O King! Thus saying, the Mahadeva, being very much distressed for Sati's departure, passed His time in those places, making Japam, Dhyanam and taking to Samadhi.

51-52. Janamejaya said Where, in what places the several parts of the Sati fell? What are the names of those Siddhapithas? And what is their number? Kindly describe these in detail, O Great Muni! No doubt I will highly consider myself blessed by hearing these words from your blessed mouth.

53-102. Vyasa said O King! I will now describe those Pithas (Sacred places), the mere hearing of which destroys all the sins of men. Hear. I describe duly those places where the persons desiring to get lordly powers and to attain success ought to worship and meditate on the Devi. O Maharaja! The face of Gauri fell in Kas'i; She is well known there by the name Vis'alaksi; that which fell in Naimisaranya became known by the name of Linga Dharini. This Maha Maya is known in Prayag (Allahabad) by the name of Lalita Devi; in Gandha Madan, by the name of Kamuki; in the southern Manasa, by Kumuda; in the northern Manasa, by Visvakama, the Yielder of all desires; in Gomanta, by Gomati and in the mountain of Mandara, She became known by the name of Kamacharini. The Devi is known in Chaitraratha, by the name of of Madotkata; in Hastinapura, by Jayanti; in Kanyakubja by the name of Gauri; in the Malaya Mountain, by Rambha; in the Ekamrapitha, by Kirtimati, in VisVe, by the name of VisVesVari; in Puskara, by the name of Puruhuta. She is known as Sanmarga Dayini in the Kedara Pitha; as Manda, in the top of the Himalayas; and as Bhadrakarnika in

Gokarna. She is known as Bhavani in SthanesVara, as Vilvapatrika in Vilvake; as Madhavi in S'ns'aila; as Bhadra in BhadresVara. She is known as Jara in Varaha S'aila; as Kamala in Kamalalaya; as Rudrani in Rudra Koti; as Kali in Kalanjara; She is known as Maha Devi in S'alagrama, as Jalapriya in S'ivalingam; as Kapila in Mahalingam, as MukutesVan in Makota. As Kuman in Mayapuri, as Lalitambika in Santana; as Mangala in Gaya Ksetra, as Vimala in Purusottama. As Utpalaksi in Sahasraksa; as Mahotpala in Hiranyaksa; as Amoghaksi in the Vipasa river; as Patala in Pundra Vardhana. As Narayani in SuparsVa, as Rudra Sundari in Trikuta; as Vipula Devi in Vipula; as Kalyani in Malayachala. As Ekavira, in Sahyadri; as Chandrika in Haris'chandra; as Ramana in Rama Tirtha; as Mrigavati in the Yamuna. As Kotivi in Kotatirtha; as Sugandha in Madhavavana; as Trisandhya in the Godavari; as Ratipriya in Gangadvara. As S'ubhananda in S'iva Kundam, as Nandini in Devikatata; as Rukmini in Dvaravati; as Radha in Brindavana. As Devaki in Mathura; as ParamesVari in Patala; as Sita in Chitrakuta; as Vindhyadhivasini in the Vindhya range. O King! As Mahalaksmi in the sacred place of Karavira, as Lima Devi in Vinayaka; as Arogya in Vaidyanatha; as MahesVari in Mahakala. As Abhaya in all the Usna tirthas, as Nitamba in the Vindhya mountain; as MandavT in Mandavya; as Svaha in MahesVaripura. As Prachanda in Chhagalanda, as Chandika in Amarakantaka; as Vararoha in SomesVara; as Puskaravati in Prabhasa. As Devamata in Sarasvati; as Paravara in Samudrtata; as Mahabhaga in Mahalaya, as PingalesVari in Payosni. As Simhika in Kritas'aucha; as Atis'ankari in Kartika; as Lola in Utpalavartaka; as Subhadra in S'ona Sangam. As the Mother Laksmi in Siddhavana; as Ananga in Bharatas'rama; as VisVamukhi in Jalandhara; as Tara in the Kiskindhya mountain. As Pusti in Devadaru Vana; as Medha in Kas'miramandalam; as Bhima in Himadri; as Tustii in VisVesVara Ksetra. As S'uddhi in Kapalamochana; as Mata in Kayavarohana; as Dhara in S'ankhoddhara; as Dhriti in Pindaraka; as Kala in Chandrabhaga river; as S'ivadharini in Achchoda; as Amrita in Vena; as Urvas'i in Vadari. As medicines in Uttara Kuru; as Kus'odaka in Kus'advipa; as Manmatha in Hemakuta; as Satyavadini in Kumuda.

As Vandaniya in AsVattha; as Nidhi in the Vais'ravanalaya; as Gayatn in the mouth of the Vedas; as Parvati near to S'iva. As Indrani in the Devalokas; as Sarasvati in the face of Brahma; as Prabha (lustre) in the Solar disc; as VaisnavT with the Matrikas. She is celebrated as Arundhati amongst the Satis, the chaste women and as Tilottama in the midst of the Ramas. Again this MahadevT of the nature of the Great Intelligence (Samvid) is always existent in the form of S'akti named Brahmakala in the hearts of all the embodied beings. O Janamejaya! Thus I have mentioned to you the one hundred and eight pithas (sacred places or seats of the Deity) and as many Devis. Thus are mentioned all the seats of the Devis and along with that, the chief places in India (the world). He who hears these excellent one hundred and eight names of the Devi as well as Her seats, gets himself freed from all sins and goes to the Loka of the Devi. O Janamejaya! His heart gets purified and is rendered blessed, no doubt, who duly makes jatra (sojourn) to all these seats of the Deity, performs S'raddhas, offers peace-offerings to the Pitris and worships with the highest devotion the Goddess and asks frequently the pardon of the World Mother. O King! After worship, one should feed the Brahmanas, well dressed virgins (Kumaris) and Vatukas with good eatables. All the tribes whether they be Chandalas, know them all to be of the nature of the Devi and therefore they should be worshipped. Never one is to accept any donation or gifts (Pratigrahas) in these seats of the Devi. The saintly persons should make Purascharanas (repeat the names of their own deities, attended with burnt offerings, oblations, etc.) of their own Mantrams with all their might in all these places and should never be miserly in their expenses on this account. He who starts to these sacred places, with devoted hearts filled with love, finds his Pitris in the higher and greater Brahma Loka for one thousand Kalpas and he gets the highest knowledge, crosses the ocean of the world and becomes free. Many a people have attained success by repeating these one hundred and eight names of the Deity. Any place wherein are kept those names, embodied in a book, becomes free from such dangers as plague, cholera or any misapprehensions from planetary Deities and so forth. Nothing remains to be attained by these persons who repeat these one hundred and eight names. That man, devoted to the Devi, certainly attains blessedness. That saintly person becomes of the nature of the Devi. The Devas bow down and worship him when they behold him! What then need be said that the saints would worship him! The Piths become pleased and get their good ends when these one hundred and eight names are read with devotion. These places are, as it were. Intelligence personified (Chinmaya) and places ready to yield freedom from bondage. Therefore, O King! Intelligent men should take their shelter in these places.

O King! Whatever secrets and other deeper secrets about the Great Goddess you asked to know from me, I described to you. What more do you want to hear. Say.

Here ends the Thirtieth Chapter of the Seventh Book on the birth of Gauri, the seats of the Deity, and the distraction of S'iva in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam, of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.

Note The number one hundred and eight is a holy number, got by taking the half of 216,000, the number of breaths inhaled by a child in the womb who promises to take the name of God at his every breath or by taking one-eighth of 864,000, the number of seconds in a day. The two zeros are then dropped. Thus the number signifies the one who fulfils one's promise.

1-2. Janamejaya said "O Muni! You told before that "the Highest Light took Her birth on the top of the Himalayas." Now describe to me in detail about this Highest Light. What intelligent man can desist from hearing these nectar-like words about the S'akti? The danger of death may come even to the Devas that drink nectars but no such danger can possibly come to those that drink the nectar of the Devi's glorious deeds.

3-43. Vyasa said "O King! You are blessed; you have attained what you are to attain in this life; you are taught by the high-souled men; you are fortunate since you are so sincerely devoted to the Devi. O King! Hear the ancient history:-Wherever the Deva of the Devas, the Mahes'vara rested while He was wandering all over the world in a distracted state, carrying the Sati's body that as burnt by fire. He spent his time there with his senses controlled, in Samadhi, forgetting all his knowledge of Samsara in deep meditation of the form of the Devi. At this time, the three worlds, with their objects, moving and immoving, with their oceans, mountains and islands became void of prosperity and power. The hearts of all the embodied beings became dried up, without any trace of joy; they were all burdened with anxious thoughts and remained indifferent. All were merged in the ocean of sorrows and became diseased. Planets retrograded and the Devas had their states reversed. The Kings were attacked with a series of ills and misfortunes. Adhibhantik and Adhidaivik (from material causes and from divine interference). At this time a great Asura, named Taraka, became unconquerable owing to his receiving a boon from Brahma. Being intoxicated by his power and heroism, he conquered the three worlds and became the sovereign ruler.The Brahma Prajapati, gave him boon to this effect that the legitimate son of S'iva would be able to kill him. And as at that time S'iva had no son, the great Asura, elated with joy, became infatuated and carried off all victories. All the Devas were banished from their places by his oppression; they remained always anxious owing to the want felt by them of a son of S'iva. "S'ankara has now no wife; how can He then have a son! We are very unfortunate; how can our work be accomplished? Thus oppressed with thoughts, all the Devas went to Vaikuntha and informed the Bhagavan Visnu of all that had happened, in privacy. The Bhagavan Visnu began to tell them the means, thus "O Devas! Why are you all so anxious when the Auspicious Goddess of the Universe, the Dweller in the Mani Dvipa, the Yielder of all desires like a Kalpa Vriksa is always wakeful for you. It is due to your faults that She is showing Her indifference; it is meant to teach us (not for our destruction but to show Her Infinite mercy). When a mother nourishes and frightens and reprimands a son, it is not that she has became merciless; so the World Mother, the Controller of the Universe, will never be merciless to you as regards your qualifications and defects. A son commits offence at every step who can bear that in these three worlds except the mother! So soon take refuge to the Highest Mother, the Goddess of the universe, with the sincerest devotion. She will certainly take action and help your cause. Thus ordering the Devas, Visnu with His consort Laksmi and the other Devas quickly went out to worship the Devi. Going to the Himalayas, they soon engaged themselves in doing the Puras'charana Karma (act of repeating the names of the Deity, attended with burnt oblations and offerings, etc.). O King! Those who were well versed with the performance of sacrifice to the Mother, began their sacrificial ceremonies and all began to hold vows, wz, Tritiyadi Vratani. Some were engaged in incessantly meditating on the Devi; some began to repeat Her names constantly; some began to repeat the Devi Sukta. Thus some devoted themselves to repeating names; others to repeating mantrams.

Again some wore engaged in performing severe (painful) Chandrayana and other Vratas. Some were doing Antarayagas (inner sacrifices); some wore doing Pranagnihotra Yagas; whereas others engaged themselves in Nyasadi, etc. Again some began to worship the Highest S'akti, the Goddess of the Universe, without any sleep or rest, by the seed mantra of Maya. O King! Thus many years of the Devas passed away. When the ninth Tithi came in the month of Chaitra on Friday, the Highest Light of the Supreme Force suddenly appeared in front of them. That Light was equal to Koti lightnings, of a red colour, and cool like the Koti Moons. Again the lustre was like the Koti Suns. The four Vedas personified, were chanting hymns all round Her. That mass of fire was above, below, on all sides, in the middle; nowhere it was obstructed. It had no beginning, nor end. It was of the form of a female with hands and feet and all the limbs. The appearance was not that of a male nor that of an hermaphrodite. The Devas, dazzled by the brilliant lustre, first closed their eyes; but at the next moment, holding patience when they opened again their eyes, they found the Highest Light manifesting in the form of an exceedingly beautiful Divine Woman. Her youth was just blooming and Her rising breasts, plump and prominent, vying as it were, with a lotus bud, added to the beauty all around. Bracelets were on Her hands; armlets on Her four arms; necklace on Her neck; and the garland made of invaluable gems and jewels spread very bright lustre all arouud. Lovely ornaments on Her waist making tinkling sounds and beautiful anklets were on Her feet. The hairs of Her head, flowing between Her ears and cheek sparkled bright like the large black bees shining on the flower leaves of the blooming Ketaki flower. Her loins were nicely shaped and exquisitely lovely and the hairs on Her navel gave additional beauty. Her exquisitely lively lotus mouth rendered more lustrous and beautiful by the shining golden ear-ornaments, was filled with betel leaves mixed with camphor, etc.; on Her forehead there was the half crescaut moon; Her eye-brows were extended and Her eyes looked bright and beautifully splendid like the red lotus; Her nose was elevated and Her lips very sweet. Her teeth were very beautiful like the opening buds of Kunda flowers; from Her neck was suspended a necklace of pearls; on Her head was the brilliant crown decked with diamonds and jewels; on Her ears, earrings were suspended like the lines on the Moon; Her hairs were ornamented with Mallika and Malati flowers; Her forehead was pasted with Kasmira Kunkuma drops; and Her three eyes gave unparallelled lustre to Her face. On Her one hand there was the noose and on Her other hand there was the goad; her two other hands made signs granting boons and dispelling fears; Her body shed lustre like the flowers of a Darima tree. Her wearing is a red coloured cloth. All these added great beauty. Thus the Devas saw before them the Mother Goddess, the Incarnate of unpretended mercy, with a face ready to offer Her Grace, the Mother of the Whole Universe, the Enchantress of all, sweet-smiling, saluted by all the Devas, yielding all desires, and wearing a dress, indicative of all lovely feelings. The Devas bowed at once they saw Her; but they could not speak with their voice as it was choked with tears. Then holding their patience, with much difficulty, they began to praise and chant hymns to the World Mother with their eyes filled with tears of love and devotion and with their heads bent low.

44-54. The Devas said We bow down to Thee, the Devi and the Maha Devi, always obeisance to Thee! Thou art the Prakriti, and the Auspicious One; we always salute to Thee. O Mother! Thou art of a fiery colour (residing as a Red Flame in the heart of a Yogi) and burning with Asceticism and Wisdom (shedding lustre all around). Thou art specially shining everywhere as the Pure Chaitanya; worshipped by the Devas and all the JTvas) for the rewards of their actions; We take refuge to Thee, the Durga, the Devi, we bow down to Thee, that can well make others cross the ocean of Samsara; so that Thou helpest us in crossing this terrible ocean of world. Mother! The Devas have created the words {i.e., the words conveying ideas are uttered by the five Vayus, Prana, etc., which are called the Devas) which are of the nature of VisVarupa, pervading everywhere, like the Kama Dhenu (the Heavenly Cow yielding all desires, riches, honor, food, etc.), and by which the brutes (the gods) become egotistical, O Mother! Thou art that language to us; so Thou fulfillest our desires when we praise and chant hymns to Thee. O Devi! Thou art the Night of Destruction at the end of the world; Thou art worshipped by Brahma; Thou art the Laksmi, the S'akti of Visnu; Thou art the Mother of Skanda; the S'akti of S'iva; Thou art the S'akti Sarasvati of Brahma. Thou art Aditi, the Mother of the gods and Thou art Sati, the daughter of Daksa. Thus Thou art purifying the worlds in various forms and giving peace to all. We bow down to Thee. We know Thee to be the great Maha Laksmi; we meditate on Thee as of the nature of all the S'aktis as Bhaghavati. O Mother!

Illumine us so that we can meditate and know Thee. O Devi! Obeisance to Thee, the Virat! Obeisance to Thee, the Sutratma, the Hiranyagarbha; obeisance to Thee, the transformed into sixteen Vikritis (or transformations). Obeisance to Thee, of the nature of Brahma. We bow down with great devotion to Thee, the Goddess of the Universe, the Creatrix of Mayic Avidya (the Nescience) under whose influence this world is mistaken as the rope as a garland is mistaken for a rope and again that mistake is corrected by whose Vidya.

We bow down to Thee who art indicated by both the letters Tat and Tvam in the sentence Tat Tvamasi (Thou art That), Tat indicating the Chit (Intelligence) of the nature of oneness and Tvam indicating the nature of Akhanda Brahma (beyond the Annamaya, Pranamaya, Manomaya, Vijnanamaya and the Anandamaya--the five Kos'as, the Witness of the three states of wakefulness, dream, and deep sleep states) and indicating Thee. O Mother! Thou art of the nature of Pranava Om; Thou art Hrim; Thou art of the nature of various Mantras and Thou art merciful; we bow down again and again to Thy lotus Feet. When the Devas thus praised the Devi, the In-dweller of the Mani Dvipa, the Bhagavati spoke to them in a sweet cuckoo voice.

55. O Devas! What for have you come here? What do you want? I am always the Tree, yielding all desires to my Bhaktas; and I am ready to grant boons to them.

56-57. You are my devotees; why do you care, when I am on your side? I will rescue you from the ocean of troubles, O Devas! Know this as My true resolve. O King! Hearing these words of deep love, the Devas became very glad and gave out all their causes of troubles.

58-65. O ParamesVan! Thou art omniscient and witness of all these worlds. What is there in the three worlds that is not known to Thee!

O Auspicious Mother! The Demon Taraka is giving us troubles day and night. Brahma has given him boon that he will be killed by the S'iva's son. O MahesVari! Sati, the wife of S'iva has cast aside Her body. It is known to Thee. What will the ignorant low people inform the one, Who is Omniscient? O Mother! We have described in brief all what we had to say. What more shall we say? Thou knowest all our other troubles and causes of sorrows. Bless us so that our devotion remains unflinched at Thy lotus feet; this is our earnest prayer. That Thou takest the body to have a son of S'iva is our fervent prayer to Thee. Hearing the Dava's words, Parames'vari, with a graceful countenance, spoke to them, thus "My S'akti will incarnate as Gauri in the house of Himalayas; She will be the wife of S'iva and will beget a son that will destroy Taraka Demon and will serve your purpose. And your devotion will remain steadfast at My Lotus feet. Himalayas, too, is worshipping Me with his wholehearted devotion; so to take birth in his house is to my greatest liking; know this.

66-73. Vyasa said "O King! Hearing the kind words of the Devi, the King of mountains was filled with love; and, with voice choked with feelings and with tears in his eyes spoke to the Goddess of the world, the Queen, of the three worlds. Thou hast raised me much higher, that Thou dost me so great a favour; otherwise where am I inert, and unmoving and where art Thou, of the nature of Existence, Intelligence and Bliss! It manifests the Greatness of Thy Glory. O Sinless One! My becoming the father of Thee indicates nothing less than the merits earned by me for doing, countless As'vamedha sacrifices or for my endless Samadhi. Oh! What a favour hast Thou shewn towards me! Henceforth my unparalleled fame will be spread throughout the whole Universe of five original elements that "The Upholder of the Universe, the World Mother has become the daughter of this Himalayas! This man is blessed and fortunate!" Who can be so fortunate, virtuous and merited as he whose daughter She has become. Whose belly contains millions of Brahmandas! I cannot describe what pre-eminent heavens are intended for my Piths, my family predecessors, wherein virtuous persons like myself are born.

O Mother! O ParamesVari! Now describe to me Thy Real Self as exemplified in all the Vedantas; and also Jhana with Bhakti approved by the Vedas in the same way that Thou hast shown already this favour to me, so that by That Knowledge I will be able to realise Thy Self.

74. Vyasa said "O King! Thus hearing the praise of Himalayas, the Goddess of the Universe, with a graceful look, began to speak the very secret essences of the S'rutis.

Here ends the Thirty-first Chapter of the Seventh Book on the birth of Parvati in the House of Himalayas in the Mahapuranam S'ri Mad Devi Bhagavatam of 18,000 verses, by Maharsi Veda Vyasa.
