Between You and me, as long as anything is left owing, we will go on like this in the world's way. Give me back my blanket, and then we shall be one. Let no rift open through quarreling. Let no deceit be hidden in the belly. Tuka says: You are the knowing one, Hari. You are the one making me speak in this worldly tongue.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram wants the dispute with God settled so that nothing stands between them. While any debt remains unpaid they must keep dealing with each other in worldly terms, claim and counterclaim; but once the blanket is returned, the two can become one. He pleads that their quarrel not harden into a real breach, and that no hidden deceit be carried in the heart on either side. The whole bargaining is the language of love insisting on honesty. He ends by handing the truth back to God: Hari is the all knowing one, and it is the Lord Himself who has put this worldly haggling on Tukaram's lips.

GATHA 1077 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, God the taker

मराठी मूळ

मुळींचा तुह्मां लागला चाळा । तो गोपाळा न संडा ॥1॥
घ्यावें त्याचें देणें चि नाहीं । ये चि वाहिं देखतसों ॥ध्रु.॥
माझी तरी घोंगडी मोठी । गांडीची लंगोटी सोडिस ना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे म्यां सांडिली आशा । हुंगिला फांसा येथुनियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your old habit clings to You from the very beginning. You will not give it up, O Gopala.

You only take; there is nothing You give back. This is all I ever see.

My blanket is a big one; You will not even loosen the rag over Your backside.

Says Tuka, I have abandoned all hope. I have sniffed out the trap from here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your old habit has clung to You from the very start; You will not give it up, Gopala. You only take; there is nothing You ever give back. This is all I have ever seen. My blanket is a big one, yet You will not even loosen the rag over Your backside. Tuka says: I have given up all hope. From here I have sniffed out the trap.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram accuses Krishna, with a lover's tartness, of being a born taker. From the beginning the Lord has had this habit and will not break it: He seizes everything and returns nothing, and that, Tukaram says, is all he has ever witnessed of Him. The contrast is bitter and comic: Tukaram surrenders a whole blanket, while God will not part with so much as the loincloth covering Him. So he gives up hoping for any bargain on equal terms. What looks like complaint is really recognition: he has caught the scent of the trap, that to deal with God is to be taken wholly and given nothing of the old self back.

GATHA 1078 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the thief who cannot be caught

मराठी मूळ

घोंगडियास घातली मिठी । न सोडी साटी केली जीवें ॥1॥
हा गे चोर धरा धांवा कोणी । घरांत राहाटे चहूं कोणी ॥ध्रु.॥
नोळखवे म्यां धरिला हातीं । देहएादिप माय लाविली वाती ॥2॥
न पावे धांवणें मारितो हाका । जनाचारीं तुका नागवला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have clutched the blanket tight and will not release it; I have staked my life on this.

Here is the thief, catch Him, someone run! He wanders through the four corners of the house.

I hold Him in my very hands, yet He cannot be recognized. My mother lit the lamp of this body.

My cries bring no rescue; I call out and call out. Says Tuka, in this worldly game, I have been stripped bare.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have clutched the blanket tight and will not let go; I have staked my very life on it. Here is the thief, catch Him, somebody run! He moves through all four corners of the house. I hold Him in my own hands, yet He cannot be recognized. My mother lit the lamp of this body. No rescue comes for all my crying; I call out and call out. Tuka says: in this worldly game, Tuka has been stripped bare.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries thief, and the thief is God. He grips the blanket, all he has, staking his life on keeping it, while raising the alarm that a robber roams every corner of the house. The deepest twist is that he is holding the thief in his own hands and still cannot recognize Him: God is nearer than anything, yet unseen. The lamp his mother lit is this body, the dim light by which he gropes after a presence he cannot make out. His shouts bring no help, because no outside rescuer can save him here. He ends owning the loss: in the world's game he has been robbed of everything, and that very stripping is God's doing.

GATHA 1079 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, robbed of the last possession

मराठी मूळ

आतां मी देवा पांघरों काई । भिकेचें तें ही उरे चि ना ॥1॥
सदैव दुबळें नेणें चोर । देखोनि सुनाट फोडितो घर ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं मजपाशीं फुटकी फोडी । पांचांनीं घोंगडी दिली होती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जना वेगळें जालें । एक चि नेलें एकल्याचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now what shall I cover myself with, O God? I have nothing left, not even what I begged for.

He is always poor, this wretch, and the thief knows it. Seeing the house deserted, he breaks in.

I had nothing to my name, not even a cracked cowrie. The five had given me a blanket.

And even that one possession of this solitary soul has been carried away. Says Tuka, I have been set apart from everyone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now what shall I cover myself with, O God? Not even what I begged for is left. He is always poor, this wretch, and the thief knows it; seeing the house empty, he breaks in. I had nothing to my name, not even a cracked cowrie. The five had given me a blanket. Even that one thing of this lonely soul has been carried off. Tuka says: I have been set apart from everyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands utterly destitute before God, asking what is left to cover his nakedness. Even his beggar's portion is gone. He casts himself as the perpetual poor man whom the thief, knowing his house is bare, robs precisely because there is nothing to guard. He owned not even a cracked cowrie shell; the one blanket he had was a gift of the five, the elders or the five elements that compose the body. Now that single possession of his solitary soul has been taken too. The closing line carries the cost of total surrender: stripped of all, he finds himself cut off and set apart from everyone, alone with the God who took it all.

GATHA 1080 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the thief within

मराठी मूळ

मी माझें करित होतों जतन । भीतरिल्या चोरें घेतलें खानें ॥1॥
मज आल्याविण आधीं च होता । मज न कळतां मज माजी ॥ध्रु.॥
घोंगडें नेलें घोंगडें नेलें । उघडें केलें उघडें चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चोरटा चि जाला साव । सहज चि न्याय नाहीं तेथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I was guarding what was mine, but the thief within took what I had stored.

He was there even before I arrived, dwelling within me without my knowing.

The blanket is gone, the blanket is gone. I have been left utterly naked.

Says Tuka, the thief Himself has become the honest one. In that place, ordinary justice does not hold.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I was guarding what was mine, but the thief inside took what I had stored. He was already there before I came, dwelling within me without my knowing. The blanket is gone, the blanket is gone. I have been left utterly naked. Tuka says: the thief Himself has become the honest one. In that place, ordinary justice does not hold.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram discovers that the robber was never outside; the thief lives within. He kept watch over what he called his own, only to find that an inner presence had quietly emptied his store. That presence was there before he ever arrived, indwelling and unnoticed: God, the true Self closer than the self he guarded. With the blanket gone he stands wholly bare, every covering of ego stripped away. The final paradox is that the thief turns out to be the only honest one, and that where God is at work, the ordinary rules of justice and ownership simply do not apply.

GATHA 1081 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, crying out before the market closes

मराठी मूळ

घोंगडें नेलें सांगों मी कोणा । दुबळें माझें नाणीत मना ॥1॥
पुढें तें मज न मिळे आतां । जवळी सत्ता दाम नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सेटे महाजन ऐका कोणी । घोंगडियाची करा शोधणी ॥2॥
घोंगडियाचा करा बोभाट । तुका ह्मणे जंव भरला हाट ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My blanket has been stolen. To whom shall I complain? I am poor; no one brings my plight to mind.

I cannot get it back now. I have neither power nor a coin.

O moneylenders and elders, let someone hear me. Search for this blanket.

Says Tuka, raise a hue and cry about this blanket while the market is still full.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My blanket has been stolen. To whom shall I complain? I am poor; no one even brings my plight to mind. I cannot get it back now. I have neither power nor a coin. Merchants and elders, let someone hear me: search for this blanket. Tuka says: raise the hue and cry about this blanket while the market is still full.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is a poor man crying robbery in a crowded marketplace. The blanket, all he had, is gone, and being poor he has no one who will take up his cause or even keep his trouble in mind. He has neither the power nor the money to recover it himself, so he appeals to the merchants and town elders to hear him and hunt for it. The urgency is in the last line: he must raise the outcry now, while the market is still full and there are people to hear, before the chance is lost. Read as the soul's plea, it is the call to seek the lost self and cry out to God now, in this life, while there is still time.

GATHA 1082 Worldly Metaphors

Loss as gain, the holy thief

मराठी मूळ

माझें घोंगडें पडिलें ठायीं । माग तया पायीं सांपडला ॥1॥
चोर तो भला चोर तो भला । पाठिसी घातला पुंडलिकें ॥ध्रु.॥
चोर कुठोरि एके चि ठायीं । वेगळें पाहावें नलगेच कांहीं ॥2॥
आणिकांचीं ही चोरलीं आधीं । माझें तयामधीं मेळविलें ॥3॥
आपल्या आपण शोधिलें तींहीं । करीन मी ही ते चि परी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें हित चि जालें । फाटकें जाउन धडकें चि आलें ॥5॥ ॥12॥
सर्प भुलोन गुंतला नादा । गारुडियें फांदां घातलासे।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My blanket has been found right where it was dropped. The trail leads straight to those feet.

That thief is a fine one, a fine one indeed. Pundalik has held Him there from behind.

The thief and his stolen goods are all in one place; there is no need to look anywhere else.

He had stolen others' blankets before mine; mine was mingled in with the rest.

They searched and found their own by their own effort. I too shall do the same.

Says Tuka, my loss has been my gain. The tattered blanket went, and a whole one has come back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My blanket lay right where it had dropped. The trail led straight to those feet. That thief is a fine one, a fine one indeed. Pundalik has held him there from behind. The thief and all he has stolen are in one place; there is no need to look anywhere else. He had stolen others' blankets before mine, and mine was mixed in with the rest. They searched and found their own by their own effort. I will do the same. Tuka says: my loss has become my gain. The tattered blanket went, and a whole one has come back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays on the image of God as a thief who steals the self. He finds the trail of all he has lost leads straight to Vitthal's feet, and he is glad of it, because Pundalik has pinned the thief in place at Pandhari, where he cannot run. Since the thief and all his loot sit in one spot, the seeker need search nowhere else: he goes to those feet and reclaims himself, as others have done before him. The whole point lands in the last line: what looked like theft and loss is the best thing that could happen, because the worn-out self was taken and a whole one given back.

GATHA 1083 Longing and Separation

Cry for rescue, snared by desire

मराठी मूळ

हिंडवुनि पोट भरी दारोदारीं । कोंडुनि पेटारी असेरया ॥1॥
तैसी परी मज जाली पांडुरंगा । गुंतलों तो मी गा सोडीं आतां ।
माझें मज कांहीं न चलेसें जालें । कृपा तुज न करितां ॥ध्रु.॥
आविसें मिनु लावियला गळीं । भक्ष तो गिळी म्हणउनियां ।
काढूनि बाहेरी प्राण घेऊं पाहे । तेथे बापुमाये कवण रया ॥2॥
पक्षी पिलयां पातलें आशा । देखोनियां फांसा गुंते बळें ।
मरण नेणें माया धांवोनि वोसरे । जीवित्व ना जालीं बाळें ॥3॥
गोडपणें मासी गुंतली लिगाडीं । सांपडे फडफडी अधिकाअधिक ।
तुका म्हणे प्राण घेतला आशा । पंढरीनिवासा धाव घालीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a performing animal led from door to door to fill its keeper's belly, then shut inside a box: just so has been my fate, O Panduranga.

I am entangled; release me now. Nothing of mine is in my own hands without Your grace.

Like a fish whose throat is hooked on bait it swallowed greedily, being drawn out with its very life being taken. Who is there as father or mother in that moment?

Like a bird that flies to feed its young and is caught in a snare by force; it does not know death is near, love drives it on, and it can save neither its own life nor its children.

Like a fly entangled in sweetness, struggling, sinking deeper and deeper. Says Tuka, desire has taken my very breath. O Dweller of Pandhari, come rushing to my aid.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like a performing animal led door to door to fill its keeper's belly, then shut in a box: such is my fate, O Panduranga. I am entangled; release me now. Nothing of mine is in my own hands without your grace. Like a fish whose throat is hooked on the bait it greedily swallowed, being dragged out as its very life is taken: who is father or mother in that moment? Like a bird that flies to feed its young and is caught by force in a snare; it does not know death is near, love drives it on, and it can save neither its own life nor its children. Like a fly stuck in something sweet, struggling, sinking deeper and deeper. Tuka says: desire has taken my very breath. O Dweller of Pandhari, come rushing to my aid.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out that desire has trapped him, and he piles up images of creatures caught by their own appetites. The fish swallows the bait and is hauled out to die; the bird flies to feed its young and is snared; the fly lands on sweetness and sinks deeper the more it struggles. In each case the very thing that drew them is what kills them, and no one can help them in that moment. He names his own state as exactly this: entangled, unable to free himself by his own strength. So he turns the whole weight of the poem into a single plea to Panduranga, the Dweller of Pandhari, to come and pull him out, because grace alone can do what his own hands cannot.

GATHA 1084 Autobiography

Humility, the world bows to God

मराठी मूळ

यातिहीन मज काय तो अभिमान । मानी तुज जन नारायणा ॥1॥
काय सुख मज तयाची हे खंती । आपुलाला घेती गुणभाव ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रव्यामुळें माथां वाहियेली चिंधी । होन जयामधीं होता गांठी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन वंदितो वेगळा । मजसी दुर्बळा काय चाड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am of humble birth. What pride can I have? It is You the people honor, O Narayana.

What happiness can their esteem give me? Each one acts only from his own nature and self-interest.

It was for the sake of the gold coin tied within that one carried a rag upon his head.

Says Tuka, the world bows to something else entirely. What does a wretch like me care for their approval.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am of humble birth. What pride could I have? It is you the people honor, O Narayana. What happiness would their esteem give me? Each one acts only from his own nature and his own interest. It was for the sake of the gold coin tied inside it that a man carried a rag upon his head. Tuka says: the world bows to something else entirely. What does a wretch like me care for their approval.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to take any credit when people honor him. He says plainly that he is low-born and has nothing to be proud of: whatever respect comes his way is really directed at Narayana, the God within. He sees through the motive behind such respect with a sharp image: people only honor the wrapping for the sake of the gold tied inside it, the way a man would carefully carry a worthless rag because a coin is knotted in it. So their bowing is to the treasure, never to him. He wants none of their approval, because it is not his in the first place.

GATHA 1085 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God as nursing mother

मराठी मूळ

शीतळ साउली आमुची माउली । विठाई वोळली प्रेमपान्हा ॥1॥
जाऊनि वोसंगा वोरस । लागलें तें इच्छे पीइन वरी ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपा तनु माझा सांभाळी दुभूनि । अमृतजीवनी लोटलीसे ॥2॥
आनंदाचा ठाव नाहीं माझा चित्तीं । सागर तो किती उपमेसी ॥3॥
सैर जाये पडे तयेसी सांकडें । सांभाळीत पुढें मागें आस ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता कैसी ते मी नेणें । लडिवाळ तान्हें विठाईचें ॥5॥
रामचरित्र - अभंग ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our mother is a cool shade. Vitthal has come overflowing with the milk of love.

Going to her lap, I cling there, and drink my fill of all that I desire.

She tends to my body with her grace, nourishing it; the nectar of immortal life pours forth.

There is no room in my chitta to hold this joy. What measure can even the ocean be?

Wherever she goes, if trouble presses, she watches over her child before and behind.

Says Tuka, I do not know what worry is. I am the suckling infant of Vitthal, my mother.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our mother is a cool shade. Vitthal has come overflowing with the milk of love. Going to her lap, I cling there and drink my fill of all I want. She tends my body with her grace, nourishing it; the nectar of deathless life pours forth. There is no room in my heart to hold this joy. What measure could even the ocean be? Wherever she goes, if trouble presses, she watches over her child in front and behind. Tuka says: I do not know what worry is. I am the suckling infant of Vitthal, my mother.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of Vitthal not as a distant lord but as a nursing mother, and of himself as the infant at her breast. He pictures her as cool shade and overflowing milk: he climbs into her lap, clings, and drinks his fill, and her grace nourishes him with the nectar of deathless life. The joy is more than his heart can hold; even the ocean is too small a measure for it. Because the mother watches her child front and back wherever danger comes, the seeker is left with nothing to fear: a suckling infant of God simply does not know what worry is.

GATHA 1086 Sacred Stories

The Name, even Rama wept

मराठी मूळ

रामा वनवास । तेणें वसे सर्व देश ॥1॥
केलें नामाचें जतन । समर्थ तो नव्हे भिन्न ॥ध्रु.॥
वनांतरीं रडे । ऐसे पुराणीं पवाडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें ऋषिनेम । ऐसा कळोनि कां भ्रम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama went to the forest, and by that exile He came to dwell in every land.

He preserved the power of His name; the Capable One is never truly separate.

He wept in the forest. Such are the heroic deeds recorded in the Puranas.

Says Tuka, knowing this to be the vow of the sages, why still be deluded?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama went to the forest, and by that exile he came to dwell in every land. He kept the power of his name; the Capable One is never truly separate. He wept in the forest. Such are the heroic deeds the Puranas record. Tuka says: knowing this is the vow the sages keep, why still be deluded?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads Rama's forest exile as something other than mere misfortune. By going into banishment, Rama came to dwell everywhere, and he held fast to the power of his Name, so the Capable One was never really cut off from his own strength. Tukaram does not hide that the Puranas record Rama weeping in the forest; even God in human form passed through grief. He takes this as the very example the sages hold to as a vow, and ends by asking the listener why, knowing all this, one should still stay deluded about one's own trials.

GATHA 1087 The Power of the Name

The Name, liberated while living

मराठी मूळ

राम ह्मणे ग्रासोग्रासीं । तो चि जेविला उपवासी ॥1॥
धन्यधन्य तें शरीर । तीर्थांव्रतांचे माहेर ॥ध्रु.॥
राम ह्मणे करितां धंदा । सुखसमाधि त्या सदा ॥2॥
राम ह्मणे वाटे चाली । यज्ञ पाउलापाउलीं ॥3॥
राम ह्मणें भोगीं त्यागीं । कर्म न लिंपे त्या अंगीं ॥4॥
ऐसा राम जपे नित्य । तुका ह्मणे जीवन्मुक्त ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who says Rama with every morsel of food, that one has truly feasted even while fasting.

Blessed, blessed is that body. It is the very home of all pilgrimages and vows.

One who says Rama while going about daily work abides in sukha-samadhi always.

One who says Rama while walking the road performs a sacrifice with every step.

One who says Rama in pleasure or in renunciation: no karma clings to that one's being.

Says Tuka, the one who chants Rama without ceasing is a jivanmukta, liberated while still living.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who says Rama with every morsel of food has truly feasted even while fasting. Blessed, blessed is that body. It is the very home of all pilgrimages and vows. One who says Rama while going about daily work abides always in sukha-samadhi. One who says Rama while walking the road performs a sacrifice with every step. One who says Rama in pleasure or in renunciation: no karma clings to that one's body. Tuka says: the one who chants Rama without ceasing is a jivanmukta, liberated while still living.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the Name of Rama the whole of religious practice, folded into ordinary life. Saying Rama at every mouthful turns even a fast into a feast; that body becomes the gathering-place of all pilgrimages and vows, so no journey or rite is needed elsewhere. Repeating the Name through daily work, walking, pleasure, or renunciation keeps a person in steady bliss, makes each step a sacrifice, and lets no karma stick. The claim he lands is the boldest one: such a constant chanter is a jivanmukta, free while still alive in the body, with nothing further to attain.

GATHA 1088 Sacred Stories

Mythology, why not bow

मराठी मूळ

तारी ऐसे जड । उदकावरी जो दगड ॥1॥
तो हा न करी तें काई । कां रे लीन नव्हां पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सीळा मनुष्य जाली। ज्याच्या चरणाचे चाली ॥2॥
वानरां हातीं लंका । घेवविली ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He floated heavy stones upon the water. What then can He not do?

Why have you not dissolved yourself at His feet?

A stone became a woman by the steps of His feet.

Says Tuka, Lanka was seized by the hands of monkeys.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He floated heavy stones upon the water. What then can he not do? Why have you not dissolved yourself at his feet? A stone became a woman by the steps of his feet. Tuka says: Lanka was seized by the hands of monkeys.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram recalls Rama's deeds to shame the listener into surrender. He floated heavy stones on the sea, turned a stone into the woman Ahalya by the touch of his feet, and took the fortress of Lanka with nothing but an army of monkeys. The point of stacking up these impossibilities is a single question aimed at the hearer: if he can do all this, what can he not do, and why then have you not yet dissolved yourself at his feet? The marvels are not told for their own sake; they are an argument for self-surrender now.

GATHA 1089 The Power of the Name

The Name, become what you chant

मराठी मूळ

राम ह्मणतां राम चि होइजे । पदीं बैसोन पदवी घेइजे ॥1॥
ऐसें सुख वचनीं आहे । विश्वासें अनुभव पाहें ॥ध्रु.॥
रामरसाचिया चवी । आन रस रुचती केवीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चाखोनि सांगें । मज अनुभव आहे अंगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By chanting Rama, one becomes Rama Himself. Sitting at His feet, one receives the supreme station.

Such bliss lies in the word itself. Test it with faith and see for yourself.

Once you have tasted the flavor of Rama's essence, how can any other taste appeal to you?

Says Tuka, I speak having tasted it myself. I carry this experience in my very being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Saying Rama, you become Rama himself. Sitting at his feet, you receive the supreme station. Such bliss lies in the word itself. Test it with faith and see for yourself. Once you have tasted the flavor of Rama's essence, how could any other taste appeal to you? Tuka says: I speak having tasted it myself. I carry this experience in my own body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a startling claim: the one who says Rama does not merely praise Rama but becomes Rama, and seated at his feet receives the highest station. He insists the bliss is in the word itself, not in some distant reward, and invites the listener to test it with faith and verify it firsthand. The image of taste carries the argument: once you have known the flavor of Rama, every lesser pleasure loses its savor. He closes by staking it on his own experience, saying he speaks not from hearsay but from what he carries in his own body.

GATHA 1090 The Power of the Name

The Name, syllables that save all

मराठी मूळ

रामराम उत्तम अक्षरें । कंठीं धरिलीं आपण शंकरें ॥1॥
कैसीं तारक उत्तम तिहीं लोकां । हळाहळ शीतळ केलें शिवा देखा ॥ध्रु.॥
हा चि मंत्र उपदेश भवानी । तिच्या चुकल्या गर्भादियोनि ॥2॥
जुन्हाट नागर नीच नवें । तुका ह्मणें म्यां धरिलें जीवें भावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama, Rama: these supreme syllables were held in His own throat by Shankara Himself.

See how they carry all three worlds. They cooled the deadly poison within Shiva.

This very mantra was given as instruction to Bhavani, sparing her from the round of womb-births.

Old or new, high or low, cultured or plain: Says Tuka, I have embraced it with my whole jiva and devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama, Rama: these supreme syllables Shankara himself held in his throat. See how they carry all three worlds. They cooled the deadly poison within Shiva. This very mantra was given as instruction to Bhavani, sparing her from the round of womb-births. Old or new, high or low, plain or refined: Tuka says: I have embraced it with my whole life and devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exalts the two syllables of Rama's Name by pointing to who has relied on them. Shiva himself held them in his throat, and they cooled the deadly halahala poison he swallowed at the churning of the ocean; they are strong enough to carry all three worlds across. The same Name was the very teaching Shiva gave to Bhavani, freeing her from the cycle of birth in the womb. Tukaram says the Name works whatever one's standing, ancient or new, high or low, and ends by declaring that he has taken hold of it with his whole life and heart.

GATHA 1091 The Power of the Name

The Name, sins burned, death barred

मराठी मूळ

राम ह्मणतां तरे जाणता अणतां । हो का यातिभलता कुळहीन ॥1॥
राम ह्मणतां न लगे आणीक सायास । केले महा दोष तेही जळती ॥ध्रु.॥
राम ह्मणे तया जवळी नये भूत । कैचा यमदूत ह्मणतां राम ॥2॥
राम म्हणतां तरे भवसिंधुपार । चुके वेरझार म्हणतां राम ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणें हें सुखाचें हें साधन । सेवीं अमृतपान एका भावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By saying Rama, the knowing and the unknowing are both saved, whatever their caste or lineage.

By saying Rama, no other effort is needed. Even the greatest sins are burned away.

By saying Rama, no ghost or demon can approach. Where is the messenger of death when Rama is on one's lips?

By saying Rama, one crosses the ocean of worldly existence. The endless back-and-forth of rebirth comes to an end.

Says Tuka, this is the instrument of happiness. Drink this nectar with one-pointed devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By saying Rama, the learned and the unlearned are both saved, whatever their caste or lineage. By saying Rama, no other effort is needed. Even the greatest sins are burned away. By saying Rama, no ghost or demon can come near. Where is the messenger of death when Rama is on the lips? By saying Rama, you cross the ocean of worldly existence. The endless coming and going of rebirth ends. Tuka says: this is the instrument of happiness. Drink this nectar with one-pointed devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the Name as a complete and equal path, open to everyone regardless of caste or lineage. Saying Rama needs no other discipline added to it: it burns away even the gravest sins, keeps every ghost and demon at bay, and leaves the messenger of death with no foothold. More than protection in this life, it carries a person across the whole ocean of worldly existence and ends the endless back-and-forth of rebirth. He calls it simply the instrument of happiness and urges the listener to drink this nectar with single-pointed devotion.

GATHA 1092 Sacred Stories

Mythology, surrender or fight

मराठी मूळ

पैल आला राम रावणासी सांगती । काय निदसुरा निजलासी भूपति ॥1॥
अवघें लंकेमाजी जाले रामाचे दूत । व्यापिलें सर्वत्र बाहेरी भीतरी आंत ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघे अंगलग तुझे वधियेले वीर । होई शरणागत किंवा युद्धासी सादर ॥2॥
तुका म्हणे ऐक्या भावें रामेसी भेटी । करूनि घेई आतां संवंधेसी तुटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama has arrived, they tell Ravana. Why do you sleep, O king, lost in slumber?

All within Lanka have become Rama's messengers. He has pervaded everything, outside and inside.

All your closest warriors have been slain. Either surrender now, or come prepared for battle.

Says Tuka, meet Rama in the feeling of oneness, and sever your tie to the enemy within, once and for all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama has arrived, they tell Ravana. Why do you sleep, O king, lost in slumber? All within Lanka have become Rama's messengers. He has filled everything, outside and inside. All your closest warriors have been slain. Either surrender now, or come ready for battle. Tuka says: meet Rama in the feeling of oneness, and cut your tie to the enemy within, once and for all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells the moment Rama reaches Lanka, but turns it inward. The warning shouted to the sleeping Ravana, that Rama has pervaded everything outside and inside and that all his champions are already dead, becomes a warning to the listener's own ego. Ravana is given only two choices, surrender or fight, and the poem clearly wants surrender. Tukaram makes the lesson explicit at the end: meet Rama in the felt sense of oneness, and use that meeting to sever, finally, the tie to the inner enemy, the proud self that resists God like Ravana resisting Rama.

GATHA 1093 Sacred Stories

Mythology, love's own arrows

मराठी मूळ

समरंगणा आला । रामें रावण देखिला ॥1॥
कैसे भीडतील दोन्ही । नांव सारुनियां रणीं ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमसुखाचें संधान । बाणें निवारिती बाण ॥2॥
तुकयास्वामी रघुनाथ । वर्म जाणोनि केली मात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On the field of battle, Rama beheld Ravana.

See how these two shall clash, having pushed their boats into the river of war.

With arrows born of love's own bliss, shaft wards off shaft.

Says Tuka, Raghunath is my master. Knowing the vital point, He delivered the final defeat.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On the field of battle, Rama beheld Ravana. See how these two will clash, having pushed their boats into the river of war. With arrows born of love's own bliss, shaft wards off shaft. Tuka says: Raghunath is my master. Knowing the vital point, he struck the final blow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the climactic battle between Rama and Ravana, but colors it with his own devotion. The two warriors face off and let their arrows fly, shaft meeting shaft, yet he calls Rama's arrows arrows of love's own bliss, so even the fight is touched by sweetness for the devotee watching it. The poem ends by naming Rama, Raghunath, as Tukaram's own master and crediting him with knowing the vital point and delivering the decisive, final blow. The single stroke that ends Ravana stands for the master's power to strike down whatever stands against him.

GATHA 1094 Sacred Stories

Praise of Rama, the bond cut

मराठी मूळ

केला रावणाचा वध । अवघा तोडिला संबंध ॥1॥
लंकाराज्यें बिभीषणा । केली चिरकाळ स्थापना ॥ध्रु.॥
उदार्याची सीमा । काय वणूप रघुरामा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा दाता । रामें सोडविली सीता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ravana was slain, and the entire web of bondage was cut away.

Bibhishana was established as king of Lanka for all time.

How shall I describe the measure of Raghurama's generosity?

Says Tuka, my Giver is Rama, who set Sita free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ravana was killed. The whole tangle of bondage was cut away. Bibhishana was made king of Lanka, and set there for all time. How can I tell the size of Raghurama's giving? Tuka says: my Giver is Rama, who set Sita free.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells the close of the Rama story as a single act of liberation. The killing of Ravana is not only a battle won; it is the cutting of every bond, the freeing of what was held captive. He points to Rama's generosity by two gifts: a kingdom given to Bibhishana forever, and Sita set free. Calling Rama "my Giver," Tukaram folds himself into that same rescue, as if the freeing of Sita is the pattern of how Rama frees him too.

GATHA 1095 The Power of the Name

The Name, whoever holds Rama becomes Rama

मराठी मूळ

रामरूप केली । रामें कौसल्या माउली ॥1॥
राम राहिला मानसीं । ध्यानीं चिंतनीं जयासी ।
राम होय त्यासी । संदेह नाहीं हा भरवसा ॥ध्रु.॥
अयोध्येचे लोक । राम जाले सकळीक ॥2॥
स्मरतां जानकी । रामरूप जाले कपि ॥3॥
रावणेसी लंका। राम आपण जाला देखा ॥4॥
ऐसा नित्य राम ध्याय । तुका वंदी त्याचे पाय ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama made His mother Kausalya into His very own form.

Whoever holds Rama in the mind, in meditation and contemplation, becomes Rama. Of this there is no doubt. Hold to this conviction.

All the people of Ayodhya became Rama.

By remembering Janaki, even the monkeys took on Rama's form.

Even Ravana's Lanka: Rama Himself became it. See this.

Says Tuka, whoever meditates on Rama thus, without ceasing, I bow at his feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama made his mother Kausalya into his own form. Whoever holds Rama in the mind, in meditation, in thought, becomes Rama. There is no doubt in this; hold to it for certain. All the people of Ayodhya became Rama. By remembering Janaki, even the monkeys took on Rama's form. Even Ravana's Lanka: Rama himself became it. See this. Tuka says: whoever meditates on Rama like this, without stopping, I bow at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a sweeping claim: you become what you steadily hold in the mind, and what is held is Rama. He stacks instance on instance to leave no escape from it: the mother, the whole city, the monkeys, even enemy Lanka. Whatever touches Rama, in love or in remembrance, is turned into Rama's own form. The point is not mythology but the law inside it, that ceaseless contemplation of God remakes the one who contemplates. So he ends by bowing not to Rama alone but to anyone who lives that practice, since such a person has already become what they meditate on.

GATHA 1096 Sacred Stories

Rama's return to Ayodhya, public joy

मराठी मूळ

आनंदले लोक नरनारी परिवार । शंखभेरीतुरें वाद्यांचे गजर ॥1॥
आनंद जाला अयोध्येसी आले रघुनाथ । अवघा जेजेकार आळंगिला भरत ॥ध्रु.॥
करिती अक्षवाणें ओंविाळती रघुवीरा । लक्ष्मीसहित लक्ष्मण दुसरा ॥2॥
जालें रामराज्य आनंदलीं सकळें । तुका ह्मणे गाईवत्सें नरनारीबाळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The people rejoiced, men and women and all their families, as conches, kettle-drums, and horns rang out together.

Great joy arose in Ayodhya when Raghunath returned. Cries of "Jai Jai!" filled the air, and Bharat was embraced.

They scattered akshata and waved the lamp before Raghuvira, who stood with Lakshmi on one side and Lakshmana on the other.

Rama's kingdom was established and all were filled with joy. Says Tuka, like cows with their calves, men, women, and children rejoiced together.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The people rejoiced, men and women and whole families, while conches, kettledrums, and horns rang out together. Joy rose in Ayodhya when Raghunath came home. Cries of "Jai, Jai" filled the air, and Bharat was embraced. They scattered grains of rice and waved the lamp before Raghuvira, who stood with Lakshmi on one side and Lakshmana on the other. Rama's kingdom was set up and everyone was filled with joy. Tuka says: like cows with their calves, men and women and children rejoiced together.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the homecoming of Rama to Ayodhya as pure shared gladness. The whole town turns out, every instrument sounds, and the long separation ends in Bharat's embrace and the welcoming rites of rice and lamp. He shows Rama flanked by Lakshmi and Lakshmana, the picture of a kingdom restored to its rightful order. The closing image, cows running to their calves, names what the joy actually is: not ceremony but the natural rush of love toward what was lost and is now returned.

GATHA 1097 Sacred Stories

Rama's kingdom, the womb-cycle ended

मराठी मूळ

जालें रामराज्य काय उणें आम्हांसी । धरणी धरी पीक गाई वोळल्या ह्मैसी ॥1॥
राम वेळोवेळां आम्ही गाऊं ओविये। दिळतां कांडितां जेवितां गे बाइये ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वप्नीं ही दुःख कोणी न देखे डोळां । नामाच्या गजरें भय सुटलें काळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रामें सुख दिलें आपुलें । तयां गर्भवासीं येणें जाणें खुंटलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama's kingdom has come. What do we lack? The earth bears her harvest; cows and buffaloes yield freely.

Again and again we shall sing Rama's glory, while grinding, while husking, while eating, O sisters.

Not even in dreams does sorrow appear before anyone's eyes. By the resounding of the Name, fear was loosed even from Death.

Says Tuka, Rama has given His own bliss to all. For those who have received it, the coming and going through the womb is ended.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama's kingdom has come. What do we lack? The earth holds her harvest; cows and buffaloes give milk freely. Again and again we will sing Rama's praises, O sisters, while grinding, while pounding the grain, while eating. No one sees sorrow even in a dream. By the loud ringing of the Name, fear was loosed even from Death. Tuka says: Rama has given his own bliss to all. For those who have received it, the coming and going through the womb is ended.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes life under Rama's rule as a world where lack itself has disappeared. The land yields, the cattle give freely, and the Name is sung not in a temple hour but woven into grinding, pounding, and eating, the plain labor of women's days. He raises the claim by stages: no sorrow even in dreams, then fear gone even from Death. The last line names the deepest stake. The bliss Rama gives ends rebirth itself, the endless coming and going through the womb, so the outward plenty is a sign of an inward release.

GATHA 1098 The Power of the Name

The Name, who it has saved

मराठी मूळ

अहल्या जेणें तारिली रामें । गणिका परलोका नेली नामें ॥1॥
रामहरे रघुराजहरे । रामहरे महाराजहरे ॥ध्रु.॥
कंठ शीतळ जपतां शूळपाणी । राम जपतां अविनाश भवाणी ॥2॥
तारकमंत्रश्रवण काशी । नाम जपतां वाल्मीक ऋषि ॥3॥
नाम जपें बीज मंत्र नळा । सिंधु तरती ज्याच्या प्रतापें शिळा ॥4॥
नामजप जीवन मुनिजना ॥ तुकयास्वामी रघुनंदना ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama saved Ahalya; the Name carried the courtesan to the highest world.

Rama, Hari, Raghuraj, Hari.

Shiva's throat was cooled by chanting the Name; Bhavani became immortal by repeating it.

In Kashi, the dying receive it as the liberating mantra. By chanting, Valmiki became a great sage.

Nala received the seed-mantra of the Name, by whose power even stones floated across the sea.

The Name is the life-breath of the sages. Says Tuka, Raghunandan is my Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama saved Ahalya; the Name carried the courtesan to the highest world. Rama, Hari, Raghuraj, Hari; Rama, Hari, great King, Hari. Shiva's throat was cooled by chanting the Name; Bhavani became deathless by repeating it. In Kashi the dying receive it as the mantra that frees. By chanting it, Valmiki became a great sage. Nala received the seed of the Name, and by its power even stones floated across the sea. The Name is the very life of the sages. Tuka says: Raghunandan is my Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lists who the Name has rescued, and the list is built to show that no one is too low or too far gone. A woman turned to stone, a courtesan, the dying at Kashi, a former robber, and stones themselves that floated when the Name was written on them. The point is the reach of the Name, not the worth of those it reached. Even Shiva and Bhavani are named, so that the practice the poem urges is the same one the gods keep. He ends by claiming Rama as his own Lord, placing himself among the saved.

GATHA 1099 The Power of the Name

The Name, glory beyond my words

मराठी मूळ

मी तों अल्प मतिहीन । काय वणूप तुझे गुण । उदकीं तारिले पाषाण । हें महिमान नामाचें ॥1॥
नाम चांगलें चांगलें । माझे कंठीं राहो भलें । कपिकुळ उद्धरिलें । मुक्त केलें राक्षसां ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रोणागिरि कपिहातीं । आणविला सीतापती । थोर केली ख्याति । भरतभेटीसमयीं ॥2॥
शिळा होती मनुष्य जाली । थोर कीतिन वाखाणिली । लंका दहन केली । हनुमंते काशानें ॥3॥
राम जानकीजीवन । योगियांचे निजध्यान । राम राजीवलोचन । तुका चरण वंदितो ॥4॥ ॥14॥
श्लोकरूपी अभंग - ॥6॥
तुजवाचुनी मागणें काय कोणा । महीमंडळीं विश्वव्यापकजना ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am small and dull of wit. How can I describe Your glories? You made stones float upon the water. Such is the glory of the Name.

May the Name, beautiful and beautiful, remain well at my throat. Through it, the monkey race was uplifted and the demons were liberated.

The mountain Drona was brought by a monkey's hands, O Lord of Sita. Great was the glory at the time of reunion with Bharat.

A stone became a woman; that vast fame is told far and wide. Hanuman burned Lanka by his firebrand.

Rama, the life of Janaki, the yogis' own innermost meditation, the lotus-eyed One. Says Tuka, I bow at His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am small and dull of mind. How can I tell your glories? You made stones float on the water. Such is the greatness of the Name. The Name is good, so good; let it stay well at my throat. Through it the monkey clan was lifted up and the demons were set free. The mountain Drona was carried in a monkey's hands, O Lord of Sita. Great was the fame at the meeting with Bharat. A stone became a woman; that vast fame is told everywhere. Hanuman burned Lanka with his firebrand. Rama, the life of Janaki, the yogis' own inward meditation, the lotus-eyed one. Tuka says: I bow at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens by confessing he is too small to praise Rama, then praises by pointing to deeds rather than spinning words. Floating stones, the carried mountain, a stone made woman, burning Lanka: each is offered as proof of what the Name and the Lord can do. His one prayer is small and concrete, that the Name simply stay at his throat, since that is all a dull mind needs. The grand acts and the modest request meet in the same trust: the power belongs to Rama and the Name, and Tukaram's part is only to keep it on his lips and bow.

GATHA 1100 Prayers

Prayer, only You can carry me across

मराठी मूळ

जीवभावना पुरवूं कोण जाणे । तुजवांचुनी होत कां रावराणे ॥1॥
नसे मोक्षदाता तिहींमाजि लोकां । भवतारकु तूजवांचुनि एका ।
मनीं मानसीं चिंतितां रूपनाम । पळे पाप ताप भयें नास काम ॥2॥
हरी नाम हें साच तुझें पुराणीं । हरीहातिचें काळगर्भादियोनी ।
करूं मुखवाणी कैसी देशघडी । तुजवांचुनि वाणितां व्यर्थ गोडी ॥3॥
भवभंजना व्यापक लोक तिन्ही । तुज वाणितां श्रमला शेषफणी ।
असो भावें जीव तुझ्या सर्व पायीं । दुजें मागणें आणीक व्यर्थ काई ॥4॥
दिनानाथ हे साक्ष तूझी जनासी । दिनें तारिलीं पातकी थोर दोषी ।
तुका राहिला पायिं तो राख देव। असें मागतसे तुझी चरणसेवा ॥5॥
उभा भींवरेच्या तिरी राहिलाहे । असे सन्मुख दिक्षणे मूख वाहे ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From whom should I ask, if not from You, O all-pervading Lord of the world? Who but You can fulfill the longings of the jiva? Who else could, even among kings and emperors?

There is no giver of liberation in all three worlds save You, the one who carries beings across worldly existence. By contemplating Your name and form in mind and in manas, sin, suffering, and fear are all destroyed, and desire itself perishes.

Your name is proclaimed true in all the Puranas. From Your hands come death and the womb-cycle of rebirth.

How shall my tongue fashion words worthy enough? Without You, all speech and sweetness are empty. O Destroyer of worldly bonds, Pervader of three worlds, even Shesha with his thousand tongues grew weary praising You.

Let this jiva rest wholly at Your feet. Any other prayer is vain.

You are the Lord of the lowly; Your own record testifies: You have saved great offenders and the deeply fallen. Says Tuka, I remain at Your feet. Keep me, O God. I ask only for the service of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From whom should I ask, if not from you, O all-pervading Lord of the world? Who but you can fill the longings of the jiva? Who could, even among kings and emperors? In all three worlds there is no giver of liberation but you, the one who carries beings across this existence. When I hold your name and form in the mind, sin, suffering, and fear are destroyed, and desire itself dies. Your name is told true in the Puranas; from your hands come death and the cycle of the womb. How can my tongue make words good enough? Without you all speech and all sweetness are empty. O breaker of worldly bonds, you who fill the three worlds, even Shesha with his thousand tongues grew tired praising you. Let this jiva rest wholly at your feet. Any other asking is in vain. You are the Lord of the lowly; your own record shows it: you have saved great offenders and the deeply fallen. Tuka says: I stay at your feet. Keep me, O God. I ask only for the service of your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer that argues itself into one request. Tukaram asks who else there is to turn to, and answers that no king, no other god, no power in the three worlds can give liberation, only the Lord who carries beings across. He admits his own words are too weak, since even the thousand-tongued serpent Shesha tired of praising, so eloquence is not the offering. What he leans on instead is the Lord's own record of saving great sinners, which makes him a fit candidate rather than a hopeless one. He strips his asking down to a single thing: not gifts or escape, but to rest at the feet and serve there, which he calls the only request that is not vain.

GATHA 1101 The Power of the Name

Praise of Pandhari, Vitthal the mother of seekers

मराठी मूळ

महापातकांसी पळ कांप थोर । कैसे गर्जती घोष हे नामवीर ॥1॥
गुणगंभीर हा धीर हास्यमुख । वदे वदनीं अमृत सर्वसुख ।
लागलें मुनिवरां गोड चित्तीं । देहभावना तुटलियासि खंती ॥2॥
ठसा घातला ये भूमिमाजी थोर । इच्छादाना हा द्यावयासी उदार ।
जया वोळगती सिद्ध सर्वठायीं । तुझें नाम हें चांगलें गे विठाई ॥3॥
असे उघडा हा विटेवरि उभा । कटसूत्र हें धरुनि भक्तिलोभा ।
पुढें वाट दावी भवसागराची । विठो माउली हे सिद्धसाधकांची ॥4॥
करा वेगु हा धरा पंथ आधीं । जया पार नाहीं सुखा तें च साधीं ।
म्हणे तुका पंढरीस सर्व आलें । असे विश्व हें जीवनें त्याचि ज्यालें ॥5॥
धना गुंतलें चित्त माझें मुरारी । मन घेउनी हिंडवी दारोदारीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Before the mighty champions of the Name, great sins flee in terror, trembling with fear. How noble they are, these heroes: deep, poised, smiling, speaking nectar and perfect joy from their lips.

The sages have found it sweet in their chitta; all sorrow of body-consciousness is ended. They have left their deep imprint upon this earth.

This generous Lord gives whatever is desired. All powers attend Him everywhere.

Your name is beautiful, O Vitthal, mother of all. He stands openly upon the brick, holding the string at His waist for the sake of His devoted lovers.

He points the way across the ocean of worldly existence. This Vitthal is the mother of saints and seekers.

Come, make haste, take this path first. The joy at its end is without limit.

Says Tuka, all the world has come to Pandhari. This creation is nourished by His life alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Before the mighty champions of the Name, great sins flee in terror and tremble. How noble these heroes are: deep, steady, smiling, speaking nectar and all joy from their lips. The sages have found it sweet in the heart; all the sorrow of body-thought is ended. They have left their great mark on this earth. This generous Lord gives whatever is desired; all powers wait on him everywhere. Your name is good, O Vithai, mother of all. He stands openly upon the brick, holding the string at his waist, out of love for his devotees. He shows the way across the ocean of this world. This Vitthal is the mother of saints and seekers. Come, make haste, take this path first; the joy at its end has no limit. Tuka says: all the world has come to Pandhari. This whole creation is kept alive by his life alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises the saints of the Name and the God they stand at, and turns the praise into a summons. The lovers of the Name are heroes before whom sin itself flees, calm and smiling, with sweetness on their lips and the weight of body-bound sorrow gone. Then he turns to Vitthal, standing plainly on the brick at Pandhari with the string at his waist, and calls him not a distant king but a mother to saints and seekers. The closing urgency is the point: hurry, take this path before any other, because the joy at its end is endless and all that lives is sustained by this one Lord.

GATHA 1102 Prayers

Prayer, cut my bondage to the inner enemies

मराठी मूळ

मरे हिंडतां न पुरे यासि कांहीं । मही ठेंगणी परी तें तृप्त नाहीं ॥1॥
न दिसे शुद्ध पाहातां निजमती । पुढें पडिलों इंद्रियां थोर घातीं ।
जिवा नास त्या संगती दंड बेडी । हरी शीघ्र या दुष्टसंगासि तोडीं ॥2॥
असीं आणिकें काय सांगों अनंता । मोहो पापिणी दुष्टमाया ममता ।
क्रोध काम यातना थोर करी । तुजवांचुनी सोडवी कोण हरी ॥3॥
निज देखतां निज हे दूरि जाये । निद्रा आळस दंभ यी भीत आहे ।
तयां विस्त देहीं नको देउं देवा । तुजवांचुनी आणिक निास्त हेवा ॥4॥
करीं घात पात शंका लाज थोरी । असे सत्य भाव बहू भक्ति दूरी ।
नको मोकलूं दीनबंधु अनाथा । तुका वीनवी ठेवुनी पायिं माथा ॥5॥
पैल सांवळें तेज पुंजाळ कैसें । सिरीं तुबिनलीं साजिरीं मोरवीसें ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mind runs about and dies in its wandering, yet nothing is ever enough. The whole earth is too small, and yet it finds no satisfaction.

Looking closely at my own nature, I find no trace of purity. I have fallen into a great calamity before the senses.

Evil company brings ruin, chains, and punishment to the jiva. O Hari, swiftly cut this bond of evil association.

What more shall I tell You, O Ananta? Moha, sin, cruel illusion, and possessiveness oppress me. Lust and anger inflict great torment. Who but You, O Hari, can set me free?

Looking at my own self, the self flees far away. Sloth, laziness, and hypocrisy stand before me like walls. Do not let them take root in this body, O God. Besides You, I have no other longing.

Fear of harm, of falling, doubt, and great shame surround me. True feeling and devotion are still far away. Do not abandon this orphan, O friend of the lowly. Says Tuka, pleading with his head at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mind runs about and dies in its wandering, yet nothing is ever enough; the whole earth is too small, and still it is not satisfied. Looking closely at my own nature, I find no purity. I have fallen before the senses into great ruin. Evil company brings the jiva ruin, chains, and punishment. O Hari, quickly cut this bond of bad company. What more shall I tell you, O Ananta? Delusion, sin, cruel illusion, and possessiveness; anger and lust torment me terribly. Who but you, O Hari, can set me free? When I look for my true self, it flees far away. Sleep, sloth, and hypocrisy stand before me like walls. Do not let them take root in this body, O God; besides you I have no other longing. Fear of harm, of falling, doubt, and great shame surround me; true feeling and devotion are still far off. Do not abandon this orphan, O friend of the lowly. Tuka says: I plead with my head at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes an honest inventory of his own inner enemies and asks God to do what he cannot. He sees that the restless mind can never be filled, that the whole earth is too small for it, and that searching himself he finds no purity, only the grip of the senses. He names the foes plainly: delusion, lust, anger, possessiveness, sloth, hypocrisy, doubt, shame. The poem does not pretend to defeat them; it confesses they stand like walls and that even devotion is still far away. So the whole prayer rests on God's mercy, not the seeker's strength, asking the friend of the lowly not to abandon an orphan who has nowhere else to turn.

GATHA 1103 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the dark form that steals the mind

मराठी मूळ

हरे त्यासि रे देखतां ताप माया । भजा रे भजा यादव योगिराया ॥1॥
जया कामिनी लुब्धल्या सहस्रसोळा । सुकुमार या गोपिका दिव्य बाळा ।
शोभे मध्यभागीं कळा चंद्रकोटी । रुपा मीनली साजिरी माळकंठीं ॥2॥
असे यादवां श्रेष्ठ हा चक्रपाणी । जया वंदिती कोटि तेहतीस तीन्ही ।
महाकाळ हे कांपती दैत्य ज्यासी । पाहा सांवळें रूप हें पापनासी ॥3॥
कसीं पाउलें साजिरीं कुंकुमाचीं। कसी वीट हे लाधली दैवांची।
जया चिंतितां अग्न हा शांति नीवे। धरा मानसीं आपला देहभाव ॥4॥
मुनी देखतां मूख हें चित्त ध्याय। देह मांडला भाव हा बापमाय।
तुक्या लागलें मानसीं देवपीसें । चित्त चोरटें सांवळें रूप कैसें ॥5॥
असे नांदतु हा हरी सर्वजीवीं । असे व्यापुनी अग्न हा काष्ठ तेवीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At the sight of Him, all pain and illusion are destroyed. Worship Him, worship the Lord of the Yadavas, the King of yogis.

Sixteen thousand women were enamored of Him, the divine, tender cowherd girls. He shines in their midst like ten million moons, adorned with a garland upon His beautiful throat.

He is the greatest among the Yadavas, the Discus-bearer, whom the thirty-three crore gods revere. Even mighty Death and the demons tremble before Him. Behold this dark form that destroys all sin.

How lovely are His feet, touched with vermillion. How fortunate is the brick that has received Him. By meditating on Him, even fire becomes peaceful. Hold His form in the mind; let the body-sense be His.

The sages, upon seeing His face, are absorbed in meditation. Their whole being, in devotion, becomes both father and mother.

Says Tuka, the madness of God has seized my mind. How my chitta is stolen by this dark-complexioned thief.

This Hari dwells in all living beings, pervading them as fire pervades wood.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At the sight of him all pain and illusion are destroyed. Worship him, worship the Lord of the Yadavas, the King of yogis. Sixteen thousand women were drawn to him, the tender, divine cowherd girls. He shines in their midst like ten million moons, a lovely garland on his throat. He is the greatest of the Yadavas, the bearer of the discus, whom the thirty-three crore gods honor. Even great Death and the demons tremble before him. Look at this dark form that destroys all sin. How lovely are his feet, marked with vermillion. How fortunate is the brick that has received him. By meditating on him, even fire grows cool and still. Hold his form in the mind; let the body-sense be his. The sages, seeing his face, sink into meditation; their whole being, in love, becomes father and mother to him. Tuka says: the madness of God has seized my mind. How my heart is stolen by this dark-complexioned thief. This Hari lives in all beings, filling them as fire fills wood.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls people to worship Krishna by showing how everything bends toward him. The gopis, the crores of gods, even Death and the demons, all are drawn or made to tremble before the dark form that destroys sin. He moves from this cosmic awe to a tender intimacy: lovely feet on the brick, fire growing calm at the thought of him, sages dissolving into meditation when they see his face. Then he turns it on himself and confesses the "madness of God," calling Krishna a thief who has stolen his heart. The last line lifts it back out: this same Krishna is no distant idol but the life dwelling in every being, as hidden and total as fire inside wood.

GATHA 1104

Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, clean the mirror of the Name

मराठी मूळ

घटीं बिंबलें बिंब हें ठायिठायीं । तया संगती नासु हा त्यासि नाहीं ॥1॥
तन वाटितां क्षीर हें होत नाहीं । पशू भिक्षतां पालटे तें चि देहीं ।
तया वर्म तो जाणता एक आहे । असे व्यापक व्यापुनी अंतर्बाहे ॥2॥
फळ कदनळीं सेवटीं येत आहे । असे शोधितां पोकळीमाजि काये ।
धीर नाहीं त्यें वाउगें धीग जालें । फळ पुष्पना यत्न व्यर्थ गेले ॥3॥
असे नाम हें दर्पणें सिद्ध केलें। असे बिंब तें या मळा आहे ठेलें ।
कैसें शुद्ध नाहीं दिसे माजिरूप। नका वाढवूं सीण हा पुण्यपाप ॥4॥
करा वर्म ठावें नका सोंग वांयां। तुका वीनवीतो पडों काय पायां ।
तुज पुत्र दारा धन वासना हे । मग ऊरलें शेवटीं काय पाहें ॥5॥
मना सांडिं हे वासना दुष्ट खोडी । मती मानसीं एक हे व्यर्थ गोडी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sun reflects in every pot, yet it is never diminished by their breaking.

Though the body is distributed, the essence is not lessened. An animal grazes and what it eats transforms within that very body. Only the One who knows the secret truly exists, pervading everything inside and out.

The fruit of the plantain comes only at the very end. If you search within, you find only hollow emptiness. Those without patience lose heart in vain; their efforts toward fruit and flower come to nothing.

The Name is like a mirror made ready: the reflection is there, but a film of dirt clings to it. How can the inner form appear when the surface is not clean? Do not increase the torment of merit and sin.

Know the secret and stop this empty show. Says Tuka, what more can I say? Must I fall at your feet? Your children, spouse, wealth, and desires: when these are gone, what remains at the end?

O mind, abandon this wicked, stubborn habit. This longing for worldly sweetness in the buddhi and mind is utterly vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sun is reflected in every pot, here and there, yet breaking the pots does not destroy it. Though the body is shared out, the essence is not lessened. An animal grazes, and what it eats is changed within that same body. Only the One who knows the secret truly exists, filling everything inside and out. The plantain's fruit comes only at the very end; search within and you find only hollow emptiness. Those without patience lose heart for nothing, and their striving for fruit and flower goes to waste. The Name is like a mirror made ready: the reflection is there, but a film of dirt clings to it. How can the inner form show when the surface is not clean? Do not pile up the torment of merit and sin. Know the secret; stop the empty show. Tuka says: what more can I say, must I fall at your feet? Children, wife, wealth, desire are yours; when these are gone, what is left at the end? See it. O mind, give up this wicked, stubborn habit; this longing for worldly sweetness in the mind is in vain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images to teach that the one Self is everywhere undivided and that the only work is to clean what hides it. The sun in many pots, unbroken when the pots break, says the essence is not lost when bodies pass; the plantain that fruits only at the end warns against impatience. His central figure is the Name as a mirror already prepared: the divine reflection is present, but a film of dirt, the chase after merit and sin and worldly sweetness, keeps the inner form from showing. He grows almost blunt, asking the mind to drop its stubborn habit and stop the empty show. The closing question is the sharp edge: children, wife, wealth, and desire all belong to God and fall away, so what will be left at the end if not the Self the mirror was meant to reveal?

GATHA 1105 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, fix your love on Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

असे हीत माझें तुज कांहीं एक । धरीं विठ्ठलीं प्रेम हें पायिं सूख ॥1॥
ऐसा सर्वभावें तुज शरण आलों । देहदुःख हें भोगितां फार भ्यालों ।
भवतारितें दूसरें नाहिं कोणी । गुरु होत कां देव तेहतीस तीन्ही ॥2॥
जना वासना हे धना थोरि आहे । तुज लागली संगती ते चि सोये ।
करीं सर्व संगी परि त्यागु ठायीं । तुका विनवीतो मस्तक ठेवुनि पायीं ॥3॥ ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have one thing to say for your benefit: fix your love on Vitthal, for joy lies at His feet.

With all my being, I have come to Your refuge. I have suffered greatly enduring the body's pain.

There is no other who can carry you across this world, be it a guru or all thirty-three crore of gods.

The world's longing for wealth is strong, and the company you have kept has shaped your way. Be engaged with everything, yet inwardly remain detached.

Says Tuka, I place my head upon Your feet and beg You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have one thing to say for your good: fix your love on Vitthal, for joy lies at his feet. With all my being I have come to your refuge. I have suffered greatly bearing the body's pain. There is no other who can carry you across this world, not a guru, not all the thirty-three crore gods. People's craving for wealth is strong, and the company you keep has shaped your way. Be engaged with everything, yet stay detached within. Tuka says: I place my head at your feet and beg you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks first to a listener, then to God, and the two halves hold one teaching. To the listener he gives a single counsel: place your love on Vitthal, because that is where joy actually lies, and no guru or crowd of gods can carry you across instead. He names the obstacle plainly, the strong pull of wealth and the shaping force of bad company. His practical instruction is the householder's path, to be fully engaged with everything outwardly while staying inwardly detached. Then he turns to God and shows what he asks for himself, the same refuge he urges on others, with his head laid at the feet.

GATHA 1106 Longing and Separation

Helpless prayer, entangled in karma

मराठी मूळ

सुटायाचा कांहीं पाहातों उपाय । तों हे देखें पाय गोवियेले ॥1॥
ऐसिया दुःखाचे सांपडलों संदी । हारपली बुद्धि बळ माझें ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रारब्ध क्रियमाण संचिताचें । वोढत ठायींचे आलें साचें ॥2॥
विधिनिषेधाचे सांपडलों चपे । एकें एक लोपे निवडेना ॥3॥
सारावें तें वाढे त्याचिया चि अंगें । तृष्णेचिया संगें दुःखी जालों ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां करीं सोडवण । सर्वशक्तिहीन जालों देवा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I was looking for a way to escape, but then I found my feet entangled.

Caught in this trap of sorrow, my buddhi and strength have both failed me.

The pull of prarabdha, kriyamana, and sanchita karma has come bearing down upon me in truth.

I am caught between injunction and prohibition; one suppresses the other, and nothing can be discerned.

The more I try to end it, the more it grows by its own force. Craving has made me miserable.

Says Tuka, now rescue me, O God. I have become utterly without strength.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I look for some way to escape. Then I see that my feet are already tied. I am caught in this trap of sorrow. My buddhi is gone; my strength is gone. The pull of prarabdha, of kriyamana, of sanchita karma has come bearing down on me, and it is real. I am pinned between what I must do and what I must not do; one cancels the other, and I cannot tell them apart. Whatever I try to clear away grows larger from its own root. Craving keeps company with me, and I am wretched. Tuka says: now set me free, O God. I have become utterly without strength.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment when self-effort runs out and only grace is left. He wanted to escape worldly bondage, but every attempt only showed him how tied he already was: his reason and willpower failed, and the three kinds of karma pressed down on him as solid fact. He is caught between rule and prohibition, unable to discern the right move, and discovers that the more he tries to end his trouble the more it grows from craving itself. So he stops struggling and simply hands the rescue over to God, admitting he has no strength of his own. The point is the limit of striving: when the knot tightens under your own hands, surrender is the only door.

GATHA 1107 Prayers

Fear, crying out for rescue

मराठी मूळ

भय वाटे पर । न सुटे हा संसार ॥1॥
ऐसा पडिलों कांचणी । करीं धांवा ह्मणउनी ॥ध्रु.॥
विचारितों कांहीं । तों हें मन हातीं नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । येथें न पुरे रिघावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am afraid that I shall never escape this worldly existence. I have fallen into such a trap; therefore I cry out for Your help.

Whenever I try to think, the mind is not in my hands.

Says Tuka, O God, even my entry here is not within my reach.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Fear takes hold of me. This worldly life will not release me. I have fallen into such a trap. So I cry out for You to come running. I try to think it through. Then I find the mind is not in my hands. Tuka says: O God, even my way in here is beyond my reach.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names plain fear and asks for help in the same breath. He sees that samsara will not let go of him, and that he has fallen into a snare he cannot work loose. When he tries to reason his way out, he finds even his own mind is not under his control. He confesses that he cannot manage so much as his entry here, which is why he calls on God to come running. The poem makes helplessness itself the prayer: the trap is real, the mind is unreliable, and the only move left is to cry out.

GATHA 1108 Longing and Separation

Longing, the stranger calling home

मराठी मूळ

येगा येगा पांडुरंगा । घेई उचलुनि वोसंगा ॥1॥
ऐसी असोनियां वेसी । दिसतों मी परदेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
उगवूनि गोवा । सोडवूनि न्यावें देवा ॥2॥
तुज आड कांहीं । बळ करी ऐसें नाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हृषीकेशी । काय उशीर लाविसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, O Panduranga, come! Take me up in Your arms.

Though I belong to You, I appear as a stranger.

Untangle this knot and carry me away, O God.

Nothing has the power to stand in Your way.

Says Tuka, O Hrishikesha, why do You delay?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, O Panduranga, come. Lift me up into Your lap. Even though I belong to Your house, I look like a stranger here. Untangle this knot, O God; loosen me and carry me away. There is nothing strong enough to stand in Your way. Tuka says: O Hrishikesha, why do You take so long?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls God like a child reaching to be picked up. He insists he belongs to God's own household, yet finds himself wandering as if he were a foreigner, far from where he should be. He asks God to untie the knot that holds him and carry him home, reminding God that nothing has the power to block Him. The closing line presses the point with loving impatience: if no obstacle can stop You, then why the delay? The poem turns belonging into a claim, almost a demand, that grace not keep him waiting.

GATHA 1109 Devotion to Vitthal

Tenderness, God as nursing mother

मराठी मूळ

माझी विठ्ठल माउली । प्रेमें पान्हा पान्हायेली ॥1॥
कृवाळूनि लावी स्तनीं । न वजे दुरी जवळूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
केली पुरवी आळी । नव्हे निष्ठ कोंवळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घांस । मुखीं घाली ब्रह्मरस ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My Vitthal is a mother overflowing with the milk of love.

Holding me tenderly, she places me at her breast and will not let me go.

She fulfills every wish of mine; she is gentle, never harsh.

Says Tuka, she feeds me mouthfuls of the essence of Brahman.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My Vitthal is my mother, her breasts full and flowing with the milk of love. She holds me close and lays me at her breast and will not let me move away from her. She grants every demand I make; she is gentle, never harsh. Tuka says: she puts the mouthful in, and it is the nectar of Brahman.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures Vitthal not as a distant lord but as a nursing mother. The milk is the milk of love, and the mother keeps the child pressed to her breast, refusing to let it stray. She indulges every wish and is never severe, the opposite of a god who tests and punishes. The last line lifts the image: what she feeds the child, mouthful by mouthful, is brahmarasa, the very essence of the Absolute. So ordinary mother-love becomes the channel of the highest reality, and devotion is fed like an infant, not earned.

GATHA 1110 Prayers

Devotion as claim on God's duty

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी उतराई । भाव निरोपूनि पायीं ॥1॥
तुह्मी पुरवावी आळी । करावी ते लडिवाळीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आमचा हा नेम । तुह्मां उचित हा धर्म ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । जाणों सांगितली सेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have paid our debt by offering our devotion at Your feet.

Now fulfill our wishes and indulge us as You would Your own children.

This is our practice; it is Your rightful duty too.

Says Tuka, O God, we know the service that has been asked of us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have paid what we owe, laying our love and faith at Your feet. Now You must grant our wishes and indulge us like Your own children. This is our practice; granting it is Your rightful duty. Tuka says: O God, we know the service that has been asked of us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of the bond between devotee and God as a mutual settling of accounts. The devotees have cleared their debt by offering their whole devotion at God's feet; now they claim the other side of the bargain, that God indulge them as a parent indulges children. He frames this not as begging but as God's own dharma, the duty owed in return. The closing line says they have done the service that was asked of them, so the rest falls to God. The poem makes devotion a relationship of reciprocal obligation, holding God to His side of love.

GATHA 1111 The Moral Ideal

Moral warning, the guilt of silent consent

मराठी मूळ

केलें पाप जेणें दिलें आन्मोदन । दोघांसी पतन सारिके चि ॥1॥
विष नवनीता विष करी संगें । दुर्जनाच्या त्यागें सर्व हित ॥ध्रु.॥
देखिलें ओढाळ निघालिया सेता । टाळावें निमित्या थैक ह्मुण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जोडे केल्याविण कर्म । देखतां तो श्रम न मानितां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who commits a wrongdoing, and the one who approves of it, both fall equally.

Poison mixed with butter makes the butter poisonous. Safety lies in keeping far from the wicked.

When you see a stray animal entering the field, drive it away at once as a precaution.

Says Tuka, karma accrues even from witnessing a deed. One who sees and does not object still shares the burden.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who does a wrong, and the one who approves of it, both fall the same way. Poison mixed into butter turns the butter to poison. All good lies in keeping away from the wicked. When you see a stray animal getting into the field, drive it off at once, as a safeguard. Tuka says: karma gathers even without doing the deed. The one who sees it and lets it pass still carries the weight.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the excuse of the bystander. He sets the doer of a wrong and its approver on the same level: both fall together, because consent is its own act. The image of poison ruining good butter shows how nearness to evil contaminates, so he counsels keeping clear of the wicked altogether and acting at once, like driving a stray beast out of a planted field before it ruins the crop. His sharp point is that karma accrues from witnessing too: to see wrong and not object is to share its burden. The poem turns the spotlight on our own habit of looking away, not on contempt for the wrongdoer.

GATHA 1112 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the all-Vitthal life

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठल गीतीं विठ्ठल चित्तीं । विठ्ठल विश्रांति भोग जया ॥1॥
विठ्ठल आसनीं विठ्ठल शयनीं । विठ्ठल भोजनीं ग्रासोग्रासीं ॥ध्रु.॥
विठ्ठल जागृतिस्वप्नी सुषुप्त । आन दुजें नेणती विठ्ठलेंविण ॥2॥
भूषण अळंकार सुखाचे प्रकार । विठ्ठल निर्धार जयां नरां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ते ही विठ्ठल चि जाले । संकल्प मुराले दुजेपणें ॥4॥
तेथें प्रेमाचा सुकाळ । टाळमृदंगकल्लोळ ।
नासे दुष्टबुद्धि सकळ । समाधि हरिकीर्त्तनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐकतां हरिकथा । भक्ति लागे त्या अभक्तां ॥2॥
देखोनि कीर्तनाचा रंग । कैसा उभा पांडुरंग ॥3॥
हें सुख ब्रह्मादिकां । ह्मणे नाहीं नाहीं तुका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal in one's songs, Vitthal in the chitta, Vitthal as one's rest and sustenance.

Vitthal at one's seat, Vitthal at one's bed, Vitthal in every morsel of food.

Vitthal in waking, dreaming, and deep sleep; those who know nothing other than Vitthal.

Vitthal is their ornament, their happiness, their everything.

Says Tuka, they too have become Vitthal. All sense of duality has dissolved.

Where their love abounds, cymbals and drums resound. All wicked buddhi is destroyed in the samadhi of Hari's kirtan.

Even the faithless, hearing Hari's story, find devotion stirring. Seeing the joy of kirtan, Panduranga Himself stands watching.

Says Tuka, this happiness is not available even to Brahma and the other gods.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal in their songs, Vitthal in their mind, Vitthal their rest and their nourishment. Vitthal in their sitting, Vitthal in their sleeping, Vitthal in every mouthful of food. Vitthal in waking, in dreaming, in deep sleep; they know nothing other than Vitthal. Vitthal is their ornament, their every kind of happiness, the one thing certain to them. Tuka says: they too have become Vitthal; every separate intention has dissolved into oneness. There the love overflows, cymbals and drums break into waves of sound. All wicked thought is destroyed; the kirtan of Hari is itself samadhi. Hearing the story of Hari, even the faithless feel devotion stir. Seeing the color of the kirtan, look how Panduranga Himself stands there. Tuka says: this joy is not had even by Brahma and the gods. No, not by them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a life so soaked in Vitthal that nothing else is left. The Name fills song, mind, food, seat, bed, and runs through all three states of waking, dreaming, and dreamless sleep, until the devotees know nothing but Vitthal and at last become Vitthal, their sense of a separate self dissolving. He then turns to the kirtan itself: amid the surge of cymbals and drums, love overflows, every wicked thought burns away, and the singing becomes its own samadhi. The power of it reaches even the faithless, whose devotion stirs at hearing Hari's story, while Panduranga is said to stand present in the very joy of the chant. The closing claim is deliberately steep: this happiness surpasses what even Brahma and the high gods can reach.

GATHA 1113 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, guard the mind

मराठी मूळ

गति अधोगति मनाची युक्ति । मन लावीं एकांतीं साधुसंगें ॥1॥
जतन करा जतन करा । धांवतें सैरा ओढाळ तें ॥ध्रु.॥
मान अपमान मनाचें लक्षण । लाविलिया ध्यान तें चि करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मन उतरी भवसिंधु । मन करी बंधु चौ†याशीचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Elevation or downfall is the mind's own doing; it is the mind's own skill that governs all. Steady the mind in solitude and the company of the holy.

Guard it, guard it carefully. It runs wild, bolting and straying without restraint.

Honor and insult are both the mind's own making. Whatever it is trained upon, that is what it produces.

Says Tuka, the mind can carry you across the ocean of worldly existence. The same mind can bind you in the cycle of eighty-four lakh births.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rising up or falling down is the mind's own work; it is the mind's skill that decides. Set the mind in solitude and in the company of the holy. Guard it, guard it well. It bolts and runs wild, straying off like an unruly beast. Honor and insult are both the mind's own making; whatever you fix it on, that is what it produces. Tuka says: the mind can carry you across the ocean of worldly life. The same mind can bind you to the cycle of eighty-four lakh births.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the mind the single hinge between liberation and ruin. Whether a person rises or sinks is decided by the mind alone, so he urges steadying it in solitude and in the company of the holy. He repeats the warning to guard it, because by nature it bolts and strays like an animal that will not stay in its pen. Honor and insult, he says, are the mind's own fabrications, and it manufactures whatever it is trained upon. The two-edged close is the lesson: this same mind can ferry you across samsara or chain you to countless rebirths, so everything turns on how you train it.

GATHA 1114 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari the market of love

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीस दुःख न मिळे ओखदा । प्रेमसुख सदा सर्वकाळ ॥1॥
पुंडलिकें हाट भरियेली पेंठ । अवघें वैकुंठ आणियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
उदमासी तुटी नाहीं कोणा हानि । घेऊनियां धणी लाभ घेती ॥2॥
पुरलें देशासी भरलें सिगेसी । अवघी पंचक्रोशी दुमदुमीत ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे संतां लागलीसे धणी । बैसले राहोनि पंढरीस ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In Pandhari, sorrow finds no remedy elsewhere; here the medicine is the joy of love, at all times and forever.

Pundalik has opened the market and set up a grand fair, bringing all of Vaikuntha to this place.

In this trade no one suffers loss; all who come take their fill and leave with profit.

The whole land is filled and overflowing; the five-krosha precinct rings with the sound.

Says Tuka, the saints have found their fill and have settled down to remain in Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In Pandhari sorrow finds no medicine anywhere; here the joy of love is the cure, always, at every hour. Pundalik has filled the market and set up the stalls; he has brought the whole of Vaikuntha here. In this trade nothing is lost and no one is harmed; all who come take their fill and carry away the gain. It fills the whole country and brims to the brink; the five-krosha precinct rings and roars with it. Tuka says: the saints have taken their fill and have settled down to stay in Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures Pandhari as a marketplace where the only goods on sale are the joy of love. There is no remedy for sorrow anywhere else, but here that joy is constantly available, because Pundalik has set up the stalls and drawn the whole of Vaikuntha down to this one town. He calls it a trade in which no one ever loses: everyone who comes takes their fill and leaves richer. The abundance overflows the whole land and fills the five-krosha sacred precinct with sound. The closing line gives the proof: the saints, having had their fill, have chosen to settle and stay, because nowhere else gives what this place gives.

GATHA 1115 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the trade in trust

मराठी मूळ

द्वारकेचें केणें आलें या चि ठाया । पुढें भक्तराया चोजवीत ॥1॥
गोविलें विसारें माप केलें खरें । न पाहे माघारें अद्यापवरी ॥ध्रु.॥
वैष्णव मापार नाहीं जाली सळे । पुढें ही न कळे पार त्याचा ॥2॥
लाभ जाला त्यांनीं धरिला तो विचार । आहिक्य परत्र सांटविलें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज मिळाली मजुरी । विश्वास या घरीं संतांचिया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The divine abundance of Dwaraka has come to this very place, as the Lord goes searching for His devotees.

He was bound here by love; the measure was weighed as true and full, and He has not looked back since.

The Vaishnavas who came to be measured were never shortchanged, nor will the full extent of this abundance ever be known.

Those who gained this profit held firm to this wisdom, storing up the wealth of both this world and the next.

Says Tuka, I too have received my wages, through the trust placed in the house of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The rich cargo of Dwaraka has come to this very place, the Lord moving ahead to seek out His devotees. He was bound here by love; the measure was weighed true and full, and to this day He has not turned back. The Vaishnavas who came to be measured were never shortchanged, and even now the full extent of this wealth is not known. Those who took this profit held firmly to that wisdom, storing up the wealth of both this world and the next. Tuka says: I too have been paid my wages, through the trust placed in this house of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram keeps the marketplace image and casts God's grace as the priceless cargo of Dwaraka, now arrived at Pandhari with the Lord Himself going out to find His devotees. He says God was bound to this place by love and has never turned away, and that the measure dealt to the Vaishnavas was always honest and full, its abundance beyond reckoning. Those who took the profit clung to that insight and laid up wealth for both worlds, this life and the next. Tukaram ends by naming his own share: he has received his wages too, and the wage came through one thing, the trust he placed in the company of the saints. Devotion is drawn as honest commerce in which faith is the capital and grace the inexhaustible return.

GATHA 1116 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Pandhari, sins burned away

मराठी मूळ

सुरवर येती तीर्थॉ नित्यकाळ । पेंठ त्या निर्मळ चंद्रभागा ॥1॥
साक्षभूत नव्हे सांगितली मात । महिमा अत्यद्भुत वर्णवेना ॥ध्रु.॥
पंचक्रोशीमाजी रीग नाहीं दोषा । जळती आपैसा अघोर ते ॥2॥
निविनषय नर चतुर्भुज नारी । अवघा घरोघरीं ब्रह्मानंदु ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्यापें नाहीं पुष्पलेश । जा रे पंढरीस घेई कोटि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gods come daily for pilgrimage to this holy place. The pure Chandrabhaga is the marketplace.

This is no hearsay; it is eyewitness testimony. The wonder is beyond all telling.

Within the five-krosha boundary, no sin can enter; all impurities are burned away of their own accord.

The men are free of all sense-objects; the women bear four divine arms. Every household rings with the bliss of Brahman.

Says Tuka, if you do not have so much as a fragment of a flower of merit, go to Pandhari and receive a crore in return.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The gods come here for pilgrimage every single day; the pure Chandrabhaga is their marketplace. This is not hearsay; it is what I have seen with my own eyes. The greatness of it is too wonderful to put into words. Within the five-krosha boundary no sin can enter; even the most dreadful sins burn up of their own accord. The men here are free of the pull of the senses; the women bear four divine arms. House after house rings with the bliss of Brahman. Tuka says: you who have not so much as a flower-petal of merit, go to Pandhari and receive ten million in return.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Pandhari as a place where the ordinary order is overturned by holiness. The gods themselves come daily, and the river Chandrabhaga is the meeting ground; he insists this is firsthand witness, not rumor, and its glory defeats words. Inside the sacred precinct no sin can take hold, and even the gravest sins burn away on their own. He paints the residents as transfigured: the men untouched by the senses, the women bearing Vishnu's four arms, every home filled with the bliss of Brahman. The closing call is generous and pointed: even one with not a petal's worth of merit should go there, for the place returns a fortune for nothing, grace far out of proportion to what is brought.

GATHA 1117 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the learned fool

मराठी मूळ

विचार नाहीं नर खर तो तैसा । वाहे ज्ञान पाठी भार लगड तैसा ॥1॥
वादावाद करणें त्यासी तों च वरी । गुखाडीची चाड सरे तों च बाहेरी ॥ध्रु.॥
सौभाग्यसंपन्न हो कां वृद्ध प्रतिष्ठ । चिकरूनि सांडी पायां लागली ते विष्ठ ॥2॥
नाहीं याति कुळ फांसे ओढी तयासी । तुका ह्मणे काय मुद्रासोंग जिाळसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A man without discernment is no better than a donkey, carrying the load of knowledge on his back like dead weight.

One may argue and debate with such a person, but only until the urge to defecate drags him away.

Even one blessed with fortune, age, and prestige still clings to the excrement that sticks to the feet.

No caste or clan can save such a one; the noose drags him down all the same.

Says Tuka, what will you gain by keeping up this pretense of sectarian marks and seals?

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man with no discernment is just like a donkey, carrying the load of knowledge on his back as dead weight. You can argue and debate with such a one, but only until the urge to relieve himself drags him outside. Even a man rich in fortune, old age, and prestige still clings to the filth stuck to his own feet. No caste, no clan can save him; the noose drags him down all the same. Tuka says: what will you gain by keeping up this costume of marks and seals?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks learning without discernment. He compares the undiscerning scholar to a donkey hauling a load it cannot use: knowledge sits on the back as dead weight, never digested. His earthy image deflates pretension, the great debater whose high talk lasts only until the body's plain needs pull him away, and the man of wealth, age, and status who still grasps at filth. He insists that caste and clan are no rescue when the end comes; the noose takes everyone the same. The closing question turns on the reader: the outward marks and seals of piety are a mere costume, so examine whether your own religion is discernment or just display.

GATHA 1118 The Moral Ideal

Moral law, the mirror

मराठी मूळ

देव होसी तरी आणिकांतें करिसी । संदेह येविशीं करणें न लगे ॥1॥
दुष्ट होसी तरी अणिकांतें करिसी । संदेह येविशीं करणें न लगे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जें दर्पणीं बिंबलें । तें तया बाणलें निश्चयेसीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you are divine, you will make others divine. Of this there is no doubt.

If you are wicked, you will make others wicked. Of this there is no doubt.

Says Tuka, what is reflected in the mirror is what has lodged in that one, fixed and certain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you are divine, you will make others divine. There is no doubt about this; nothing more need be done. If you are wicked, you will make others wicked. There is no doubt about this; nothing more need be done. Tuka says: what is reflected in the mirror is exactly what has lodged in the one standing before it, fixed and certain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states a law about how character spreads. What a person carries inside is what they pass on to others: the divine breed the divine, the wicked breed the wicked, with no exception to argue about. The closing image of the mirror seals it: the reflection shows only what is actually there, nothing added and nothing hidden. The point lands on self-examination. If you would know what you truly are, look at what you produce in the people around you.

GATHA 1119 Social Criticism

Social criticism, false piety

मराठी मूळ

कलिधर्म मागें सांगितले संतीं । आचार सांडिती द्विजलोक ॥1॥
ते चि कळों आतां येतसे प्रचिती । अधर्मा टेंकती धर्म नव्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
तप व्रत करितां लागती सायास । पिाळतां पिंडास गोड वाटे ॥2॥
देव ह्मणऊनी न येती देऊळा । संसारा वेगळा तरी कां नव्हे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज धरितां गुमान । ऐसे कोणी जन नरका जाती ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints foretold the ways of the Kali age: the twice-born abandon righteous conduct.

That very thing is now plain in practice. They incline toward irreligion; this is not dharma.

Austerity and vows require effort, and feeding the body feels more pleasant.

They call themselves religious yet do not come to the temple. If they were truly devoted, why would they not stand apart from worldly life?

Says Tuka, those who carry such conceit go to naraka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints foretold the ways of the Kali age: the twice-born would abandon right conduct. That very thing can now be seen in practice. They lean toward what is unholy; this is not dharma. Austerity and vows take effort, while feeding the body feels pleasant. They call themselves devout, yet they do not come to the temple. If they were truly given to God, why would they not stand apart from worldly life? Tuka says: those who carry such conceit go to naraka.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures the religious people of his day against what they claim to be. The saints predicted that in the Kali age even the high-born custodians of dharma would drop right conduct, and he sees it happening: they choose comfort over discipline, feeding the body rather than keeping vow and austerity. The test he applies is simple. A man who calls himself devout but will not even come to the temple, who clings to worldly life, is wearing the name without the thing. The warning at the end is aimed not at birth or title but at that conceit, the self-deception of claiming a devotion one does not live.

GATHA 1120 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, beyond all praise

मराठी मूळ

नमो विष्णुविश्वरूपा मायबापा । अपरा अमुपा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
विनवितों रंक दास मी सेवक । वचन तें एक आइकावें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझी स्तुति वेद करितां भागला । निवांत चि ठेला नेति नेति ॥2॥
ऋषि मुनि बहु सिद्ध कविजन । वणिनतां ते गुण न सरती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें काय माझी वाणी । जे तुझी वाखाणी कीर्ती देवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I bow to You, O Vishnu, O Universal Form, Father and Mother, boundless and immeasurable Panduranga.

I, a lowly servant, implore You: hear this one word of mine.

Even the Vedas grew weary praising You and rested in stillness, saying "not this, not this."

Rishis, munis, siddhas, and poets have described Your virtues, yet their accounts never reach an end.

Says Tuka, what then is my small voice, that it should proclaim Your glory, O God?

IN PLAIN WORDS

I bow to you, Vishnu, Universal Form, Mother and Father, boundless and beyond measure, Panduranga. I, a poor servant, beg you: hear this one word of mine. Even the Vedas grew tired praising you and fell silent, saying "not this, not this." Rishis, munis, many siddhas, and poets have told your virtues, and still their telling never comes to an end. Tuka says: what then is my small voice, that it should proclaim your glory, O God?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens with full prostration to Vishnu as Panduranga, calling him parent of all and beyond every limit. Then he names why praise can only be an act of love, never of measurement. The Vedas themselves wore out and could only say neti neti, not this, not this; the great sages and poets describe his qualities endlessly and never reach the end. Against all of them, Tukaram sets his own voice as nothing. The humility is the worship: he sings precisely because he knows he cannot contain what he sings about.

GATHA 1121 Devotion to Vitthal

Grateful surrender, fear undone

मराठी मूळ

अंतरीचा भाव जाणोनिया गुज । तैसे केले काज पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
घातले वचन न पडेचि खाली । तू आह्मा माउली अनाथांची ॥ध्रु.॥
मज याचकाची पुरवावी आशा । पंढरीनिवासा मायबापा ॥2॥
नाशिली आशंका माझिया जीवाची । उरली भेदाची होती काही ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां केलो मी निर्भर । गाईन अपार गुण तुझे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Knowing the hidden feeling within, You have done what was needed, O Panduranga.

The word You have spoken never falls to the ground. You are the mother of the helpless.

Fulfill the hope of this beggar, O Dweller of Pandhari, Father and Mother.

The fear within this jiva is destroyed; whatever remnant of doubt and duality remained has gone.

Says Tuka, now I am unburdened. I shall sing Your boundless virtues.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Knowing the hidden feeling in my heart, you have done exactly what was needed, Panduranga. The word you speak never falls to the ground. You are the mother of the helpless. Fulfill the hope of this beggar, Dweller in Pandhari, Mother and Father. The fear in my soul is destroyed; whatever was left of doubt and division is gone. Tuka says: now I am unburdened. I shall sing your boundless virtues.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is giving thanks for a prayer already answered. He says Vitthal read the unspoken feeling in his heart and acted on it, and that God's given word never fails. The fruit is inward: the fear that gripped his soul is gone, and with it the last residue of doubt and the sense of separation between himself and God. Freed of that weight, he is light, nirbhara, with nothing left to carry. So the song that follows is not a request but the overflow of relief, praise that comes because there is nothing more to fear.

GATHA 1122 The Nature of God

Trust, the guardian on the road

मराठी मूळ

उदार कृपाळ अनाथांचा नाथ । ऐकसी मात शरणागतां ॥1॥
पाचारितां उभा राहासी जवळी । पाहिजे ते काळीं पुरवावें ॥2॥
चालतां ही पंथ सांभाळिसी वाटे । वारिसील कांटे खडे हातें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता नाहीं तुझ्या दासां । तूं त्यांचा कोंवसा सर्वभावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Generous, compassionate, Lord of the helpless, You hear the word of those who seek refuge.

When called, You stand near at once, providing what is needed in that very moment.

Even as we walk the road, You watch over us, clearing thorns and stones with Your own hands.

Says Tuka, Your servants carry no worry, for You are their tender guardian in every way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Generous, merciful, Lord of the helpless, you hear the word of those who come for refuge. When you are called, you stand near at once and give what is needed in that very moment. Even as we walk the road, you watch over the path, clearing thorns and stones away with your own hands. Tuka says: your servants carry no worry, for you are their tender guardian in every way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what it is like to be under God's care. Vitthal hears those who take refuge and comes the instant he is called, supplying the need in the moment it arises, not later. The road imagery makes the care concrete and continuous: God does not merely wait at the end but walks the way, clearing the thorns and stones with his own hands. The conclusion is the reason a devotee can live without anxiety. When the guardian is this near and this attentive, worry has nothing left to feed on.

GATHA 1123 Prayers

Prayer, fame against the feet

मराठी मूळ

काय कीर्ती करूं लोक दंभ मान । दाखवीं चरण तुझे मज ॥1॥
मज आतां ऐसें नको करूं देवा । तुझा दास जावा वांयां विण ॥ध्रु.॥
होइल थोरपण जाणीवेचा भार । दुरावेन दूर तुझा पायीं ॥2॥
अंतरींचा भाव काय कळे लोकां । एक मानी एकां देखोवेखीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे पाय आतुडती । ते मज विपित्त गोड देवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What use is fame, worldly respect, or pride? Show me Your feet, O God.

Do not let this happen, O Lord: that Your servant should go to waste for nothing.

If greatness and the burden of self-importance grow, I shall drift far from Your feet.

What do people know of the feeling within? They judge one another merely by appearances.

Says Tuka, even hardship is sweet to me, O God, if it brings me to Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What use to me is fame, the world's respect, or pride? Show me your feet, O God. Do not let this happen, Lord: that your servant should be wasted for nothing. If greatness and the burden of self-importance grow in me, I shall drift far from your feet. What do people know of the feeling within? They judge one another only by appearances. Tuka says: even hardship is sweet to me, O God, if it brings me to your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying against his own success. He sees that fame and the world's esteem are not rewards but dangers, because the swelling of self-importance is exactly what would carry him away from God's feet. He asks not to be lost that way, dismissing the crowd's judgment as mere reading of appearances, blind to the heart. The radical turn is at the end: he would rather have suffering than honor, because hardship can keep him close while praise pulls him off. The thing prayed for is nearness to the feet, and everything else, even good fortune, is weighed only by whether it helps or hinders that.

GATHA 1124 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, desire reined in

मराठी मूळ

मानावया जग व्हावी द्रव्यमाया । नाहीं ते माझिया जीवा चाड ॥1॥
तुझ्या पायांसाठीं केली आराणूक । आतां कांहीं एक नको दुजें ॥ध्रु.॥
करूनियां कृपा करीं अंगीकार । न लवीं उसीर आतां देवा ॥2॥
नव्हे साच कांहीं कळों आलें मना । ह्मणोनि वासना आवरिली ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां मनोरथ सिद्धी। माझे कृपानिधी पाववावे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To be honored by the world, one needs wealth and worldly illusion. My jiva has no taste for these.

I have made all my preparations for Your feet alone. Now I want nothing else.

Accept me graciously, O God; do not delay any further.

I have come to see that nothing in this world is real, and so I have reined in all desire.

Says Tuka, now bring my mind's longings to fulfillment, O Treasury of mercy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To be honored by the world, one needs wealth and worldly illusion. My soul has no taste for these. I have made all my preparations for your feet alone. Now I want nothing else. Show your grace and accept me; do not delay any longer, O God. I have come to see that nothing here is real, and so I have reined in all desire. Tuka says: now bring my heart's longing to its fulfillment, O Treasury of mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram clears away what most people live for and names the one thing he keeps. Worldly honor runs on wealth and illusion, and he says plainly that his soul has lost the appetite for it. Having seen that nothing in this world is real, he has pulled in his desires and turned every preparation toward God's feet alone. What remains is a single petition, and an impatient one: accept me, do not delay. The surrender is complete enough that he can ask God to finish the work, bringing the one longing that is left to its fulfillment.

GATHA 1125 Devotion to Vitthal

Vow, shameless dancing love

मराठी मूळ

आतां माझा सर्वभावें हा निर्धार । न करीं विचार आणिकांसी ॥1॥
सर्वभावें नाम गाईन आवडी । सर्व माझी जोडी पाय तुझे ॥ध्रु.॥
लोटांगण तुझ्या घालीन अंगणीं । पाहीन भरोनि डोळे मुख ॥2॥
निर्लज्ज होऊनि नाचेन रंगणीं । येऊं नेदी मनीं शंका कांहीं ॥3॥
अंकित अंकिला दास तुझा देवा । संकल्प हा जीवा तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now my resolve, with all my being, is this: I shall not consult anyone else.

With all my being, I shall sing the Name with love. Your feet are my only gain.

I shall prostrate myself in Your courtyard and gaze upon Your face with eyes brimming full.

Without shame, I shall dance in the open arena, allowing no doubt to enter my mind.

Says Tuka, I am marked and sealed as Your servant, O God. This is the vow of my jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now my resolve, with my whole being, is this: I will consult no one else. With my whole being I will sing the Name in love. Your feet are my only gain. I will throw myself down in your courtyard and gaze at your face with my eyes brimming full. Without shame I will dance in the open arena and let no doubt enter my mind. Tuka says: I am marked and sealed as your servant, O God. This is the vow of my soul.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a vow and stakes his whole being on it. He will no longer take counsel anywhere else; the Name sung in love is now his single occupation, and God's feet his only treasure. The devotion he describes is unguarded and physical: prostration in the courtyard, eyes filled with looking at God's face, and dancing in the open without caring how it looks. The shamelessness is the proof of the vow. He calls himself marked and sealed, ankita, fully owned, and declares that this self-giving is settled in the depth of his soul, not a passing mood.

GATHA 1126 The Nature of God

Honest doubt, the unsolved riddle

मराठी मूळ

जनीं जनादनन ऐकतों हे मात । कैसा तो वृत्तांत न कळे आह्मां ॥1॥
जन्म जरा मरण कवण भोगी भोग । व्याधि नाना रोग सुखदुःखें ॥ध्रु.॥
पापपुण्यें शुद्धाशुद्ध आचरणें । हीं कोणांकारणें कवणें केलीं ॥2॥
आह्मां मरण नाश तूं तंव अविनाश । कैसा हा विश्वास साच मानूं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं चि निवडीं हा गुढार । दाखवीं साचार तें चि मज ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I hear this teaching that God dwells in all beings. Yet how this can be so is not clear to me.

Who endures birth, old age, and death? Who suffers disease and countless ailments, joy and sorrow?

Sin and virtue, purity and impurity of conduct: for whom were these made, and by whom?

We are subject to death and destruction, while You are imperishable. How can I truly hold this faith as real?

Says Tuka, You alone can resolve this mystery. Show me what is true.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I hear the teaching that God dwells in all beings. Yet I cannot see how this can be. Who is it that bears birth, old age, and death? Who suffers disease and countless ailments, joy and sorrow? Sin and merit, pure and impure conduct: for whom were these made, and by whom? We are subject to death and decay, while you are imperishable. How can I hold this faith as truly real? Tuka says: you alone can untie this knot. Show me what is true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a real difficulty instead of pretending it away. He has heard that God lives in every being, but he cannot reconcile it with experience. If God is in all, then who exactly is the one suffering birth, age, sickness and death, and who bears the weight of sin and merit? The contradiction sharpens: we perish, God does not, so how can the two be one. Rather than force a glib answer, he hands the riddle back to God as the only one who can resolve it, asking to be shown the truth directly. The honesty is itself a form of devotion: he wants the real thing, not a comforting slogan.

GATHA 1127 The Moral Ideal

Moral law, false words punished

मराठी मूळ

यथार्थ वाद सांडूनि उपचार । बोलती ते अघोर भोगितील ॥1॥
चोरा धरितां सांगे कुठो†याचें नांव । दोघांचे ही पाव हात जाती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असे पुराणीं निवाड । माझी हे बडबड नव्हे कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who abandon honest, straightforward speech in favor of hollow ceremonial words shall suffer terrible consequences.

When a thief is caught, he names an innocent person, and both end up losing their hands and feet.

Says Tuka, this verdict is found in the Puranas. This is not just my own idle chatter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who abandon honest, straight speech for hollow, fine-sounding words will suffer terrible things. When a thief is caught and names an innocent man, both of them lose their hands and feet. Tuka says: this verdict stands in the Puranas. This is not just my idle chatter.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns about the cost of crooked speech. To trade plain honesty for impressive, empty words is not harmless; it brings real ruin. His example shows how the lie spreads the harm: a captured thief who falsely names an innocent man drags that innocent down with him, and both are maimed. The point is that false words do not stay private; they take other people down too. He closes by insisting this is not his own grumbling but a judgment already set down in the Puranas, so the hearer cannot dismiss it as one man's opinion.

GATHA 1128 The Necessity of Experience

Lived experience, the patient one

मराठी मूळ

धीर तो कारण साहे होतो नारायण । नेदी होऊं सीण वाहों चिंता दासांसी ॥1॥
सुखें करावें कीर्तन हषॉ गावे हरिचे गुण। वारी सुदर्शन आपण चि किळकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
जीव वेची माता बाळा जडभारी होतां । तो तों नव्हे दाता प्राकृतां यां सारिखा ॥2॥
हें तों माझ्या अनुभवें अनुभवा आलें जीवें । तुका ह्मणे सत्य व्हावें आहाच नये कारणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who endures with patience becomes Narayana Himself. He does not let His servants suffer or carry worry.

Sing kirtan joyfully; sing the glories of Hari with delight. Sudarshana, His discus, drives away the shrieking death-force.

A mother stakes her very life for her child when the danger is mortal. Yet He is no ordinary mortal, bound by such limits.

Says Tuka, this has come to me through direct experience, lived in this very life. One need not seek proof elsewhere; there is no call for that at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who holds steady with patience becomes Narayana himself. He does not let his servants grow weary or carry worry. Sing kirtan with joy; sing the virtues of Hari with delight. His discus, Sudarshana, drives away death itself. A mother spends her own life for her child when mortal danger comes. Yet God is no ordinary giver, limited like such people. Tuka says: this has come to me through my own experience, lived in this very life. It need not be made true by other proof; there is no call for that.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from what he has lived, not from what he has read. The one who endures with patience is met by Narayana, who will not let his servants tire or sink into worry; the right response is joyful kirtan, the singing of Hari's virtues, while the Lord's discus keeps even death at bay. He reaches for the strongest human image of self-giving, a mother who would die for her child, only to say God surpasses it, because he is no ordinary giver bound by mortal limits. The weight of the abhanga rests on the last line: this is direct experience, anubhava, and Tukaram refuses to send the listener looking for outside proof, since the thing has already proved itself in his own life.

GATHA 1129 Faith and Trust

Faith, no more rebirth

मराठी मूळ

पुढें आतां कैंचा जन्म । ऐसा श्रम वारेसा ॥1॥
सर्वथाही फिरों नये । ऐसी सोय लागलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
पांडुरंगा ऐसी नाव । तारूं भाव असतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चुकती बापा । पुन्हा खेपा सकळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With such a path ahead, where is the question of rebirth? This is the fatigue that such a path removes.

Once this bearing is found, one must never, ever turn back.

Panduranga is the vessel; while devotion abides, the passage holds.

Says Tuka, all future rounds of birth and death are done, O my father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With such a path now ahead, where is there any more birth? This is the labor that such a path takes away. Once this bearing is found, one must never turn back at all. Panduranga is the boat; while devotion is there, the crossing holds. Tuka says: all the journeys are over now, O father; there will be no more rounds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram announces that the cycle of rebirth has ended for him. Having found the path, he asks where rebirth could even come from now, since the path itself lifts off the long fatigue of repeated lives. The one condition is steadiness: once the right bearing is found it must never be abandoned. The crossing image carries the assurance, with Panduranga as the boat that holds as long as devotion, bhava, remains aboard. The final line states the result plainly: the journeys are finished, there will be no more rounds of birth and death.

GATHA 1130 Worldly Metaphors

The essence, holding Rama in the heart

मराठी मूळ

दुद दहीं ताक पशूचें पाळण । त्यांमध्यें कारण घृतसार ॥1॥
हें चि वर्म आह्मां भाविकांचे हातीं । ह्मणऊनि चित्तीं धरिला राम ॥ध्रु.॥
लोहो कफ गारा अग्नीचिया काजें । ये†हवी तें ओझें कोण वाहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खोरीं पाहारा जतन । जोंवरि हें धन हातीं लागे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Milk, curds, and buttermilk serve to nourish and sustain, but among all of these, clarified butter is the essence.

This is the secret in the hands of us devotees, and therefore we have held Rama in our chitta.

Iron ore, slag, and gravel serve the work of fire; without that purpose, who would bear such a load?

Says Tuka, one must watch and guard with care, until this great treasure comes into hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Milk, curds, buttermilk: these feed and keep an animal alive. But among them the clear butter is the essence. This secret is in the hands of us who have faith. So we have held Rama in the heart. Iron ore, slag, gravel: they all serve the work of fire. Otherwise, who would carry such a load? Tuka says: guard the mine, keep watch with your pickaxe, until this wealth comes into your hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram works through homely images to name the one thing worth keeping. From milk you can draw curds and buttermilk, but the real essence is the ghee hidden inside it; from rough ore you smelt out the metal. In the same way, behind the whole spread of life there is one essence, and the secret of finding it lies in the hands of those who have faith. That is why he holds Rama in his heart. The closing image is mining: keep watch and dig with care, because the treasure does not come without guarding the work until it surfaces.

GATHA 1131 The Saints

The saints, weapons of mercy

मराठी मूळ

वीर विठ्ठलाचे गाढे । किळकाळ पायां पडे ॥1॥
करिती घोष जेजेकार । जळती दोषांचे डोंगर ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षमा दया शांति । बाण अभंग ते हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें बळी । ते चि एक भूमंडळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The warriors of Vitthal are so mighty that the shrieking death-force itself falls prostrate at their feet.

They raise the cry of Jai Jai, and mountains of faults are burned to ashes.

Forgiveness, compassion, and peace: these are the indestructible weapons in their hands.

Says Tuka, they alone are truly powerful upon this earth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The warriors of Vitthal are mighty. The force of death falls at their feet. They raise the cry of victory, and mountains of faults burn away. Forgiveness, mercy, peace: these are the unbreakable arrows in their hands. Tuka says: they alone are the strong ones on this earth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines strength by calling the devotees of Vitthal the true warriors. Their power is shown by what bows before them: even the dreaded force of death falls at their feet, and when they cry out the name in joy, whole mountains of sin are reduced to ash. Their weapons are not iron but forgiveness, compassion, and peace, and he calls these unbreakable. The poem overturns the usual measure of might: the one who can forgive and stay at peace, not the one who can strike, is the only powerful person on earth.

GATHA 1132 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the open door of the Name

मराठी मूळ

ऐकें रे जना तुझ्या स्वहिताच्या खुणा । पंढरीचा राणा मनामाजी स्मरावा ॥1॥
मग कैचें रे बंधन वाचे गातां नारायण। भवसिंधु तो जाण ये चि तीरी सरेल ॥ध्रु.॥
दास्य करील किळकाळ बंद तुटेल मायाजाळ । होतील सकळ रिद्धसिद्धी ह्मणियारीं ॥2॥
सकळशास्त्रांचें सार हें वेदांचें गव्हर । पाहातां विचार हा चि करिती पुराणें ॥3॥
ब्राह्मण क्षेत्री वैश्य शूद्र चांडाळां आहे अधिकार । बाळें नारीनर आदि करोनि वेश्या ही ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अनुभवें आह्मीं पाडियलें ठावें । आणीक ही दैवें सुख घेती भाविकें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, O people: here are the marks of your true welfare. Hold the Lord of Pandhari within your mind, and remember Him always.

Then what bondage can there be? Singing the name of Narayana, this ocean of worldly becoming will recede to this very shore.

The shrieking death-force will serve you as a slave. The net of illusion will be broken. All riddhi-siddhi will come at your bidding.

This is the essence of all the scriptures, the innermost core of the Vedas. All the Puranas arrive at this one conclusion.

Brahmin, warrior, merchant, laborer, the most shunned: all have authority here. Children, women, men, and even the courtesan.

Says Tuka, we have proven this through our own experience. Other fortunate souls too shall taste this joy, through devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, people, here are the marks of your own good. Remember the Lord of Pandhari in your mind. Then what bondage is left? Singing the name of Narayana, the ocean of worldly life drains away at this very shore. The force of death will serve you like a slave; the net of illusion will break; every power will come at your call. This is the essence of all scriptures, the inner core of the Vedas. Look, and the Puranas reach this same conclusion. Brahmin, warrior, merchant, laborer, the lowest outcaste: all have the right to it. Children, women, men, even the courtesan. Tuka says: we have proved it by our own experience. Other fortunate, faithful souls will taste this joy too.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is preaching the path of the Name and stripping away every barrier to it. Hold the Lord of Pandhari in mind and sing Narayana, he says, and the bondage of the world dissolves right here, not in some far heaven; death itself becomes a servant and illusion falls apart. He grounds the claim in authority, calling this the single point on which all the Vedas and Puranas converge. Then comes his most radical turn: this right belongs to everyone, naming caste by caste down to the most shunned, and including children, women, and even the courtesan, the people religion usually shuts out. He seals it not with citation but with witness: we know this because we have lived it, and others will too.

GATHA 1133 Faith and Trust

Faith, do not fret

मराठी मूळ

न करीं तळमळ राहें रे निश्चळ । आहे हा कृपाळ स्वामी माझा ॥1॥
अविनाश सुख देईल निर्वाणी । चुकतील खाणी चौ†याशीच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिकिया जीवां होईल उद्धार । ते ही उपकार घडती कोटि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांडीं संसाराचा छंद । मग परमानंद पावसील ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not fret; remain steady and calm. My Master is compassionate.

In the end, He will give imperishable joy, and the cycle of eighty-four lakh births will cease.

Other jivas too will be uplifted; countless acts of grace will follow.

Says Tuka, abandon the pursuits of worldly life, and you shall attain the highest bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not fret. Stay still. My Master is full of mercy. In the end he will give imperishable joy, and the eighty-four lakh wombs will be escaped. Other souls too will be lifted up, and countless acts of grace will follow. Tuka says: drop your craving for worldly life, and then you will reach the highest bliss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is steadying an anxious heart with a promise about who God is. The cure for the inner trembling is not more effort but trust: the Master is merciful, so be still. What he promises is total, an imperishable joy and release from the long round of rebirths counted as eighty-four lakh wombs. He widens it beyond the self, saying other souls will be saved as well and grace will multiply. The one thing asked in return is to let go of the obsessive pull of worldly life, and the highest bliss follows.

GATHA 1134 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the donkey of the world

मराठी मूळ

कां रे दास होसी संसाराचा खर । दुःखाचे डोंगर भोगावया ॥1॥
मिष्टान्नाची गोडी जिव्हेच्या अगरीं । मसक भरल्यावरी स्वाद नेणे ॥ध्रु.॥
आणीक ही भोग आणिकां इंद्रियांचे। नाहीं ऐसे साचे जवळी कांहीं ॥2॥
रूप दृिष्ट धाय पाहातां पाहातां। न घडे सर्वथा आणि तृष्णा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कां रे नाशिवंतासाटीं। देवासवें तुटी करितोसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have you become the donkey of worldly life, O man, carrying mountains of sorrow upon your back?

The sweetness of fine food lingers only at the tip of the tongue. Once the leather bag is full, it knows no more taste.

So too with every other pleasure of the senses: nothing real, nothing lasting, remains close at hand.

The eye is never satiated, no matter how long you gaze at beauty. Craving remains.

Says Tuka, why, for the sake of what is perishable, do you sever your bond with God?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have you become the donkey of worldly life, carrying mountains of sorrow? The sweetness of fine food lasts only at the tip of the tongue; once the belly is full, it knows no taste. So with every other pleasure of the senses: nothing real, nothing close to lasting, stays. The eye is never filled, however long it gazes at beauty; the thirst stays. Tuka says: why, for the sake of what perishes, do you cut yourself off from God?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the listener to look hard at the bargain they have made with the senses. He pictures the worldly person as a pack-donkey, hauling loads of sorrow for a wage that never satisfies. Each pleasure he examines turns out hollow: food tastes only on the tongue and then nothing, and the eye that feasts on beauty is never full, so craving simply renews itself. The point is not that the senses are evil but that they cannot deliver what they promise. The closing question is the sting: it makes no sense to break with God, who is lasting, for the sake of things that are guaranteed to perish.

GATHA 1135 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, God the provider

मराठी मूळ

बैसोनि निश्चळ करीं त्याचें ध्यान । देईल तो अन्नवस्त्रदाता ॥1॥
काय आह्मां करणें अधिक सांचुनी । देव जाला ऋणी पुरविता ॥ध्रु.॥
दयाळ मयाळ जाणे कळवळा । शरणागतां लळा राखों जाणे ॥2॥
न लगे मागणें सांगणें तयासी। जाणे इच्छा तैसी पुरवी त्याची ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे लेई अळंकार अंगीं । विठ्ठल हा जगीं तूं चि होसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sit still and meditate upon Him. He, the giver of food and clothing, will provide.

Why should we hoard more than we need? God has taken the debt upon Himself; He is the fulfiller.

He is tender-hearted, compassionate, knowing the distress of all. He knows how to keep faith with those who seek refuge.

There is no need to ask or to instruct Him. He knows each desire and fulfills it as it is.

Says Tuka, wear the Vaishnava marks upon your body. Vitthal in this world becomes none other than you yourself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sit still and meditate on him. He gives food and clothing; he will provide. Why should we hoard more than we need? God has made himself the debtor, the one who fulfills. He is kind, tender, he knows our distress; he knows how to keep faith with those who take refuge. There is no need to ask him or to instruct him. He knows each desire and fulfills it as it is. Tuka says: wear the marks of the devotee on your body. Vitthal in this world becomes you yourself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counsels a surrender that lets go of anxious provision. Sit and meditate, he says, because the one who supplies food and clothing will not fail, so hoarding is needless. He turns the relation around in a daring image: God has taken the debt upon himself and become the one obliged to provide, the tender one who keeps faith with whoever seeks refuge. Because God already knows every desire, there is no need to ask or instruct him. The closing line lands the intimacy: take on the devotee's marks, and Vitthal in this world comes to live as your very self.

GATHA 1136 Worldly Metaphors

The hidden worth, gold and clay

मराठी मूळ

सोनियांचा कळस । माजी भरिला सुरारस ॥1॥
काय करावें प्रमाण । तुह्मी सांगा संतजन ॥ध्रु.॥
मृत्तकेचा घट । माजी अमृताचा सांट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हित । तें मज सांगावें त्वरित ॥3॥
सेतावर - अभंग 3

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A golden goblet filled with liquor. What measure of worth should one place on it? You tell me, O saints.

An earthen pot filled with nectar.

Says Tuka, tell me quickly what is truly beneficial.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A golden goblet, but filled with liquor. What worth should one give it? Tell me, O saints. An earthen pot, but holding nectar. Tuka says: tell me quickly what is truly good for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram poses a riddle to the saints about where real worth lies. He sets two vessels side by side: gold filled with liquor, and plain clay filled with nectar. The outward value is reversed by the contents, so the costly cup is worth nothing and the humble pot holds what saves. The question is not idle; it is about himself, asking which to prize, the splendid surface or the life-giving inside. By handing the answer to the saints and asking them to be quick, he shows that this is the urgent thing he needs settled.

GATHA 1137 Worldly Metaphors

The farm of the Name, a free harvest

मराठी मूळ

सेत करा रे फुकाचें । नाम विठोबारायाचें ॥1॥
नाहीं वेठी जेवा सारा । जाहाती नाहीं ह्मणियारा ।
सरिक नाहीं रे दुसरा । धनी सारा तुझा तूं ॥ध्रु.॥
जपतप नांगरणी । न लगे आटी दुनवणी ॥2॥
कर्म कुळवणी ॥ न लगे धर्मपाळी दोन्ही ॥3॥
ज्ञानपाभारी ती फणी । न लगे करावी पेरणी ॥4॥
बीज न लगे संचिताचें । पीक पिकलें ठायींचे ॥5॥
नाहीं यमाचें चोरटें । विठ्ठल पागो†याच्या नेटें ॥6॥
पीक न वजे हा भरवसा । करी उद्वेग तो पिसा ॥7॥
सराये सर्व काळ । वांयां न वजे घटिकापळ ॥8॥
प्रेम पिकलें अपार । नाहीं सांटवावया थार ॥9॥
ऐसीये जोडी जो चुकला । तुका ह्मणे धिग त्याला ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cultivate this free field: the Name of Vithoba.

There is no forced labor, no tax to pay, no intermediary to satisfy. There is no rival; you yourself are the sole owner.

No plowing of austerity or penance is needed, no toilsome double-tilling.

No cultivation of ritual action is required, nor the upkeep of religious duty.

No sowing of the seed of accumulated karma is necessary; the crop ripens in its own place.

There is no fear of the thief called death, for Vitthal's watchman stands guard.

The crop never fails; only a fool would worry. It yields at all times; not a moment goes to waste.

Love has ripened beyond measure; there is no barn large enough to store it.

Says Tuka, shame upon the one who misses such a harvest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Plough this field that costs nothing: the Name of Vithoba. There is no forced labor, no tax, no overseer to please. There is no co-owner; you alone are the master. No ploughing of austerity, no toil of double tilling. No tilling of ritual works, no upkeep of the two religious duties. No need for the harrow of knowledge, no sowing to be done. No seed of stored-up karma is needed; the crop ripens of itself in its place. There is no thief named death here, for Vitthal's watchman stands guard. The crop never fails, be sure of it; only a madman frets. It yields at all times; not a moment is wasted. Love has ripened beyond measure; there is no barn big enough to store it. Tuka says: shame on the one who misses such a gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram builds an extended parable of farming to show how unlike all other paths the Name is. Ordinary spiritual work is laid out as the labor of a farm, ploughing, tilling, sowing, watching, paying dues, but the field of Vithoba's Name asks none of it: no austerity, no ritual, no accumulated karma to plant, and no landlord or tax over you, for you alone own it. Best of all, death, the thief who robs every other harvest, cannot enter, because Vitthal himself sets a guard. The crop here is not grain but love, and it ripens so abundantly that no storehouse can hold it. Against such a free and certain harvest, he says, only a fool would worry, and shame falls on anyone who lets it slip.

GATHA 1138 Worldly Metaphors

Warning, the unwatched field

मराठी मूळ

वोनव्या सोंकरीं । सेत खादलें पांखरीं ॥1॥
तैसा खाऊं नको दगा । निदसुरा राहुनि जागा ॥ध्रु.॥
चोरासवें वाट ॥ चालोनि केलें तळपट ॥
2॥ डोळे झांकुनि राती ॥
कूर्पी पडे दिवसा जोती ॥3॥
पोसी वांज गाय । तेथें कैची दुध साय ॥4॥
फुटकी सांगडी । तुका ह्मणे न पवे थडी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Neglecting to watch the field, the birds ate the crop.

Do not be deceived like that; wake up from your heedless sleep.

Walking alongside a thief, you were utterly ruined.

Closing your eyes at night, you fall into a pit by day.

Nurturing a barren cow, where is the milk or the cream?

Says Tuka, a broken raft will never reach the shore.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You did not watch the field, and the birds ate the crop. Do not be cheated like that. Wake up from your drowsy sleep. You walked the road with a thief, and you were ruined. You shut your eyes at night, and by day you fall into the pit. You feed a barren cow; where will the milk and cream come from? Tuka says: a broken raft never reaches the far shore.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against the heedlessness that throws away a whole life. Each image names the same failure: the unguarded field stripped by birds, the road walked beside a thief, eyes shut so that one stumbles into a pit. They all describe a soul too drowsy to keep watch over itself, letting the senses and bad company plunder it. The barren cow is effort spent on what can never yield, devotion to things that give nothing back. The closing image is the verdict: a cracked raft will sink before it crosses, so a life left unguarded never reaches the other shore.

GATHA 1139 Worldly Metaphors

Watchfulness, guarding the ripe harvest

मराठी मूळ

सेत आलें सुगी सांभाळावे चारी कोण । पिका आलें परी केलें पाहिजे जतन ॥1॥
सोंकरीं सोंकरीं विसावा तों वरा । नकोउभें आहे तों ॥ध्रु.॥
गोफणेसी गुंडा घालीं पागो†याच्या नेटें। पळती हाहाकारें अवघीं पांखरांची थाटें ॥2॥
पेटवूनि आगटी राहें जागा पालटूनि । पडिलिया मान बळ बुिद्ध व्हावीं दोनी ॥3॥
खळे दानें विश्व सुखी करीं होतां रासी । सारा सारूनियां ज्याचे भाग देई त्यासी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मग नाहीं आपुलें कारण । निज आलें हातां भूस सांडिलें निकण ॥5॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The harvest has come; guard it on all four sides. The crop is ripe, but you must watch over it carefully.

Do not rest while the grain is still standing.

Load the sling and hurl the stone with full force; the whole flock of birds will flee in panic.

Light your fire and keep watch through the night. When sleep threatens, let both strength and buddhi come alive in you.

When the threshing is done and the world is fed from the harvest, clear the floor and give to each their rightful share.

Says Tuka, once what is truly your own comes into your hands, there is nothing more to be done. The chaff has been separated and cast away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The harvest has come; guard it on all four sides. The crop is ripe, but it must be watched with care. Do not rest while the grain is still standing. Load the sling and hurl the stone with full force, and the whole flock of birds flees in panic. Light the fire and keep watch, changing your place. When sleep comes on, let both strength and buddhi wake in you. When the threshing is done and the world is fed from the heap, clear the floor and give each one their share. Tuka says: then there is nothing more for you to do. What is truly your own has come to hand; the chaff is cast away from the grain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the farming image into counsel on the final, watchful stretch of the path. Ripeness is not safety: the crop is ready precisely when the birds come, so the seeker must stay alert on all sides and refuse to rest while the grain still stands. Strength alone is not enough; when drowsiness threatens, discernment, buddhi, must wake with it. He pictures the harvest as something shared, the world fed and each given a rightful portion, so the gain is not hoarded. The end is the separation of grain from chaff: once what is truly one's own is in hand and the husk is thrown away, the work is finished and nothing more remains to do.

GATHA 1140 The Saints

Longing, give what little you can

मराठी मूळ

नका घालूं दुध जयामध्यें सार । ताकाचे उपकार तरी करा ॥1॥
नेदा तरी हें हो नका देऊं अन्न । फुकाचें जीवन तरी पाजा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज सगुणाची चाड । पुरवा कोणी कोड दुर्बळाचें ॥3॥
उतराधिपदें - 22

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you cannot offer milk, at least render the service of buttermilk. If not food, then at least offer a cup of plain water freely.

Says Tuka, I have a longing for saguna, for the Lord in manifest form. Will someone fulfill this helpless one's wish?

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you cannot pour out milk where the essence is, then at least do the kindness of buttermilk. If you will not give food, then at least give a cup of plain water freely. Tuka says: I have a longing for the Lord in his form, for saguna. Will someone fulfill this helpless one's wish?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads for grace and asks that it be given in whatever measure is possible. Using the language of hospitality, he says if the full gift of milk, the essence, is withheld, then even buttermilk will do; if not food, then at least free water. The graded request shows a man who will not demand much, only that he not be turned away empty. What he truly hungers for is darshan of the Lord in manifest form, saguna, God with a face and a name to love. He ends by naming himself helpless and casting the longing on the saints, asking simply that someone meet his need.

GATHA 1141 Autobiography

Singing for Rama alone

मराठी मूळ

क्या गाऊं कोई सुननवाला । देखें तों सब जग ही भुला ॥1॥
खेलों आपणे राम इसातें । जैसी वैसी करहों मात ॥ध्रु.॥
काहांसे ल्यावों माधर वाणी । रीझे ऐसी लोक बिराणी ॥2॥
गिरिधर लाल तो भावहि भुका । राग कला नहिं जानत तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What shall I sing? There is no one to listen. I see the whole world lost in delusion.

I play with my Rama on my own and let my words come as they will.

Why should I take on honeyed speech to please strangers? Giridhar, the mountain-lifter, hungers only for bhava.

Says Tuka, I know nothing of melody or the art of music.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What shall I sing? There is no one to listen. I look, and the whole world is lost in delusion. I play with my Rama on my own, and let my words come out as they will. Why should I borrow honeyed speech to please strangers? Giridhar, the lifter of the mountain, hungers only for bhava. Tuka says: I know nothing of melody or the art of music.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes singing that is meant for God and no one else. He notes that the world around him is too lost in delusion to hear, so he sings not to win an audience but to play with his Rama, letting the words fall as they come. He refuses to dress his speech in sweet, crafted phrases to flatter strangers, because that is not what God wants. The reason is his whole point: Giridhar, the mountain-lifter, hungers only for bhava, for genuine feeling, not for polish. So he gladly admits he knows nothing of melody or musical art; the love behind the song, not its skill, is the only thing that matters.

GATHA 1142 The Saints

Praise of the renunciant, the begging saint

मराठी मूळ

छोडे धन मंदिर बन बसाया । मांगत टूका घरघर खाया ॥1॥
तीनसों हम करवों सलाम । ज्या मुखें बैठा राजाराम ॥ध्रु.॥
तुलसीमाला बभूत च†हावे । हरजीके गुण निर्मल गावे ॥2॥
कहे तुका जो साई हमारा । हिरनकश्यप उन्हें मारहि डारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He left behind wealth and mansion to dwell in the forest; now he goes begging from door to door.

I bow to that mouth in which Raja Rama is ever seated.

He loves the tulsi garland and the sacred ash, and sings the pure virtues of Hari.

Says Tuka, our Sahib, our very own Master, once slew Hiranyakashipu.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He left his wealth and his mansion and went to live in the forest. He begs from door to door and eats what he is given. Three times over I bow to that mouth, the mouth in which Raja Rama is seated. He longs for the tulsi garland and the sacred ash, and he sings the pure virtues of Hari. Tuka says: He who is our Sahib, our own Master, is the one who once slew Hiranyakashipu.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is honoring the man who has given up everything for God and now lives by begging, and he is naming what makes that life worthy. The saint left wealth and a house behind and walks door to door, but his mouth holds Rama's name, his body bears the tulsi beads and sacred ash, and his voice sings Hari. So Tukaram bows three times to that mouth, not to the poverty but to what fills it. The closing line ties this Master to the God who once tore down the tyrant Hiranyakashipu: the same Lord who destroyed pride is the one the beggar-saint carries within.

GATHA 1143 The Saints

Devotion over caste, love over ritual

मराठी मूळ

मंत्रयंत्र नहिं मानत साखी । प्रेमभाव नहिं अंतर राखी ॥1॥
राम कहे त्याके पगहूं लागूं । देखत कपट अमिमान दुर भागूं ॥ध्रु.॥
अधिक याती कुलहीन नहिं ज्यानु । ज्याणे नारायन सो प्राणी मानूं ॥2॥
कहे तुका जीव तन डारू वारी । राम उपासिंहु बलियारी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He cares nothing for charms or spells; he does not keep love and bhava hidden within.

I bow at the feet of one who utters Rama's name. Seeing deceit and pride, I flee far away.

I make no distinction of high caste or no caste. Whoever knows Narayana, that living being I honor as truly alive.

Says Tuka, I would offer up jiva and body as a sacrifice for the sake of worshipping Rama, the powerful one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He cares nothing for charms and spells, and he keeps no test of them. He does not hide love and feeling inside him. I fall at the feet of anyone who says Rama's name. When I see deceit and pride, I run far away from it. I make no measure of high caste or no caste. Whoever knows Narayana, that one I count as a living being. Tuka says: I would throw down my life and body as a sacrifice. I am devoted with all my strength to the worship of Rama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming where worth truly lies and where it does not. Magic, spells, and shows of ritual mean nothing to him; what counts is open love and the name of Rama on the lips. He will bow at the feet of anyone, of any caste or none, who utters that name and knows Narayana, and he flees from deceit and pride wherever he meets them. The radical claim is that caste does not measure a person at all; knowing God does. He ends by offering his very life and body for the worship of Rama, holding nothing back.

GATHA 1144 Krishna Leela

Playful reproach of the butter-thief Krishna

मराठी मूळ

चुराचुराकर माखन खाया । गौळणीका नंद कुमर कन्हया ॥1॥
काहे बडाई दिखावत मोहि । जाणत हुं प्रभुपणा तेरा खव हि ॥ध्रु.॥
और बात सुन उखळसुं गळा । बांधलिया आपना तूं गोपाळा ॥2॥
फेरत वनबन गाऊ धरावतें । कहे तुकयाबंधु लकरी लेले हात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Stealing and eating butter, bit by bit: this is Nandakumar, the child Krishna.

Why do You show off before me? I know Your lordship and all Your ways.

And hear this too: Your neck was bound to the mortar, and You tied it there Yourself, O Gopala.

Says Tuka's friend, You who wander through forests grazing cows, You have taken a stick in Your hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stealing butter and eating it, little by little: this is Nandakumar, the child Krishna. Why do you show off your greatness before me? I know your lordship and all your ways well enough. And hear this too: your own neck was tied to the mortar, and it was you, O Gopala, who let yourself be bound. You wander from forest to forest, making the cows graze. Tuka's friend says: you have taken a herding stick in your hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to Krishna as a familiar, teasing the great Lord by reciting his childhood smallness. This is the same God of all greatness, yet here he is stealing butter, getting tied to a grinding mortar, and walking the woods behind cattle with a stick. The poet says, in effect, do not put on lordly airs with me, because I have seen you in these humble, human plays. The tenderness of the abhanga is the point: the supreme God chose to become a small cowherd boy who could be bound, and that nearness is what the devotee loves and claims to know.

GATHA 1145 Longing and Separation

Longing, the go-between and the bride

मराठी मूळ

हरिसुं मिल दे एक हि बेर । पाछे तूं फिर नावे घर ॥1॥
मात सुनो दुति आवे मनावन । जाया करति भर जोबन ॥ध्रु.॥
हरिसुख मोहि कहिया न जाये । तव तूं बुझे आगोपाये ॥2॥
देखहि भाव कछु पकरि हात । मिलाइ तुका प्रभुसात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O messenger, let me meet Hari just once; after that you may go home.

O mother, listen: the go-between has come to persuade me, and I who am in the full bloom of youth am ready to go.

The joy of Hari cannot be told by me in words. You will understand it only when you yourself have tasted it.

See my sincerity and take my hand. Unite Tuka with his Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O messenger, let me meet Hari just once; after that you may turn and go home. O mother, listen: a go-between has come to win me over, and I, in the full bloom of my youth, am ready to go. The joy of Hari cannot be told by me in words. You will understand it only when you taste it yourself. See how sincere I am, and take my hand. Tuka says: unite me with my Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sings as a young bride longing for her beloved, where the soul is the bride and Hari is the lord she aches to meet. A go-between, the saints or the inner pull toward God, has come to persuade her, and she is wholly ready to go. She tells her worried mother that the joy of God cannot be put into words; it can only be known by tasting it directly. The poem ends as a plea: see that my longing is real, take my hand, and bring me to my Lord. The sweetness of union is offered as something beyond report, available only to the one who goes.

GATHA 1146 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, death and the clinging mind

मराठी मूळ

क्या कहुं नहीं बुझत लोका । लिजावे जम मारत धका ॥1॥
क्या जीवनेकी पकडी आस । हातों लिया नहिं तेरा घांस ॥ध्रु.॥
किसे दिवाने कहता मेरा । कछु जावे तन तूं सब ल्या न्यारा ॥2॥
कहे तुका तूं भया दिवाना । आपना विचार कर ले जाना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can I say? These people will not understand. Death comes and carries them off with a shove.

Why do you cling to life? Death will not leave even a blade of grass in your hands.

Who is the madman who keeps calling things "mine"? When the body departs, everything you claimed is left behind.

Says Tuka, you have become a madman. Think it over before you go.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can I say? These people will not understand. Death comes and drags them off with a shove. Why do you cling to the hope of living? Death will not leave even a blade of grass in your hands. Who is the madman that keeps calling things his own? When the body goes, everything you claimed is left behind. Tuka says: you have become a madman. Think it over before you go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning the listener who lives as though life will not end. Death comes for everyone and takes them away with no gentleness, and it leaves nothing in the hand, not even a wisp of grass. To go on calling wealth and body and people mine is the act of a madman, because when the body falls all of it stays behind and only the soul departs empty. He turns the charge directly on the hearer: you are that madman. The point is not contempt but a shaking awake, so that one reckons with this truth while there is still time before the body goes.

GATHA 1147 Longing and Separation

Longing, death as sweet threshold

मराठी मूळ

कब मरूं पाऊं चरन तुम्हारे । ठाकुर मेरे जीवन प्यारे ॥1॥
जग रडे ज्याकुं सो मोहि मीठा । मीठा दर आनंदमाहि पैठा ॥ध्रु.॥
भला पाऊं जनम इन्हे बेर । बस मायाके असंग फेर ॥2॥
कहे तुका धन मानहि दारा । वोहिलिये गुंडलीयें पसारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When shall I die and find Your feet, O my Lord, my dearest life?

The death the world weeps over is sweet to me; that death is a sweet threshold into joy beyond.

Well have I received this birth, this one time. Enough of this entanglement with maya and its rounds.

Says Tuka, wealth, pride, and family: all of this is a bundle of baggage to be left behind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When shall I die and reach your feet, O my Lord, my dearest life? The death the world weeps over is sweet to me; that death is a sweet door into joy beyond. Well have I received this birth, this one time. Enough of this entanglement with maya and its rounds. Tuka says: wealth, pride, and family are all a bundle of baggage to be left behind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the common fear of death on its head and longs for it, because to him death is the moment of reaching God's feet. What the world mourns over is sweet to him; he calls it a doorway into a joy past anything here. He treats this human birth as the precious chance to finish with the endless turning of maya rather than to extend it. In the close he names what he is glad to drop at that door: wealth, pride, and family, all of it mere baggage. The claim is bold, that union with the Lord is worth more than the life everyone else clings to.

GATHA 1148 The Nature of God

The Lord who chases His servants

मराठी मूळ

दासों पाछें दौरे राम । सोवे खडा आपें मुकाम ॥1॥
प्रेमरसडी बांधी गळे । खैंच चले उधर ॥ध्रु.॥
आपणे जनसु भुल न देवे । कर हि धर आघें बाट बसावे ॥2॥
तुका प्रभु दीनदयाला। वारि रे तुज पर हुं गोपाला ॥3॥
ऐसा कर घर आवे राम । और धंदा सब छोर हि काम ॥ ध्रु॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama runs after His servants. He stands guard while they sleep.

He ties the rope of love around their neck and draws them wherever He leads. He does not let His own people go astray. He goes ahead and sits on the road, waiting.

Says Tuka, the Lord is compassionate to the lowly. I offer myself up to You, O Gopala.

Make it so that Rama comes home. Leave behind all other business and work.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama runs after his servants. He stands guard while they sleep. He has tied the rope of love around my neck and pulls me along where he wills. He does not let his own people stray. He goes on ahead and sits down on the road, waiting. Tuka says: the Lord is kind to the lowly. I offer myself up to you, O Gopala. Make it so that Rama comes home. Leave behind all other business and work.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reverses the usual picture: it is not only the devotee who seeks God, but God who runs after the devotee. The Lord stands watch while his servants sleep, binds them with a rope of love, and even goes ahead to sit waiting on the road so they cannot lose their way. The mood is one of being held by a tenderness that will not let go. Tukaram offers himself wholly to Gopala and gives one instruction to the listener: set aside every other occupation, because the one work that matters is making room for Rama to come home.

GATHA 1149 The Power of the Name

The Name, the Indweller knows

मराठी मूळ

इतन गोते काहे खाता । जब तूं आपणा भूल न होता ॥1॥
अंतरजामी जानत साचा । मनका एक उपर बाचा ॥2॥
तुकाप्रभु देसबिदेस । भरिया खाली नहिं लेस ॥3॥
मेरे रामको नाम जो लेवे बारोंबार । त्याके पाऊं मेरे तनकी पैजार ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you keep drowning when you could never truly be lost?

The Indweller knows the truth. The mind holds one thing; the mouth speaks another.

Says Tuka, the Lord pervades every land, every place. He fills all; not the slightest spot is empty.

Whoever takes my Rama's name again and again, I would lay my body as sandals at their feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you keep drowning, when you could never truly be lost? The Indweller knows the truth. The mind holds one thing and the mouth speaks another. Tuka says: the Lord fills every land and every place; he fills all, and not the smallest spot is empty. Whoever takes my Rama's name again and again, I would lay my body as sandals at their feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks why a person flounders in despair when, with God filling everything, they were never really lost. The trouble is the split between mind and mouth: saying one thing while holding another inside, when the Indweller sees straight through to the truth. He insists that the Lord pervades all places without leaving the least gap, so there is no nook where one is truly abandoned. The closing devotion is extreme on purpose: for anyone who repeats Rama's name constantly, Tukaram would make his own body the sandals at their feet. The Name, sincerely spoken, is what raises a person above the drowning.

GATHA 1150 The Power of the Name

The Name above all caste

मराठी मूळ

हांसत खेलत चालत बाट । खाणा खाते सोते खाट ॥1॥
जातनसुं मुजे कछु नहिं प्यार । असते की नही हेंदु धेड चंभार ॥2॥
ज्याका चित लगा मेरे रामको नाव । कहे तुका मेरा चित लगा त्याके पाव ॥3॥
आपे तरे त्याकी कोण बराई । औरनकुं भलो नाम घराई ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Laughing, playing, walking the road, eating, sleeping on the cot.

I have no love for caste. I do not distinguish between Hindu, the excluded, or any other.

Whoever fixes their chitta on my Rama's name, says Tuka, my chitta is fixed upon their feet.

To save oneself is no great virtue. To bring others to the Name is the true glory.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Laughing, playing, walking the road, eating food, sleeping on the cot. I have no love for caste. I draw no line between Hindu, the outcaste, or the leatherworker. Whoever fixes their mind on my Rama's name, Tuka says, my mind is fixed upon their feet. To save oneself alone is no great virtue; to bring others to the Name is the true glory.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a faith that lives inside ordinary life, in laughing, walking, eating, and sleeping, not apart from it. He flatly refuses caste as a measure, naming the most despised groups and saying he makes no distinction among them. What he honors is one thing only: whoever holds Rama's name in their mind, and to such a person his own mind bows at their feet. The sharp social claim is that birth counts for nothing while devotion counts for everything. He ends by raising the bar past private salvation: the real glory is to lead others to the Name, not merely to save yourself.

GATHA 1151 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, all creation serves

मराठी मूळ

काहे भूमि इतना भार राखे । दुभत धेनु नहिं दुध चाखे ॥1॥
बरसतें मेघ फलतेंहें बिरखा । कोन काम अपनी उन्होति रखा ॥2॥
काहे चंदा सुरज खावे फेरा । खिन एक बैठन पावत घेरा ॥3॥
काहे परिस कंचन करे धातु । नहिं मोल तुटत पावत घातु ॥4॥
कहे तुका उपकार हि काज । सब कररहिया रघुराज ॥5॥
जग चले उस घाट कोन जाय । नहिं समजत फिरफिर गोदे खाय ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why does the earth bear so great a burden? The milch cow does not taste her own milk.

The clouds rain and the trees bear fruit. Why do they keep up this giving without ceasing?

Why do the moon and the sun make their circuits? If they stopped for even a moment, they would be overwhelmed.

Why does the philosopher's stone turn metal to gold? Its value is never diminished, even when it is struck.

Says Tuka, service is the only work. The Lord of the Raghus makes all of them do it.

The world follows this path; who would go any other way? Those who do not understand keep stumbling again and again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why does the earth carry so great a weight? The milk-cow does not taste her own milk. The clouds rain and the trees bear fruit. What use do they keep of their own yield? Why do the moon and the sun go round and round? If they sat still for one moment, the whole order would be overwhelmed. Why does the philosopher's stone turn metal into gold? Its worth is never lost, even when it is struck. Tuka says: service is the only true work. The Lord of the Raghus makes them all do it. The world moves along this path; who would go any other way? Those who do not understand keep stumbling, again and again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the whole of nature as a single lesson in selfless service. The earth bears every burden, the cow gives milk she never drinks, the clouds and trees give without keeping, the sun and moon never stop their rounds, and the philosopher's stone enriches others without losing its own worth. He gathers all these and names the moral: service is the one real work, and it is Rama, the Lord of the Raghus, who sets every creature to it. This is offered as the natural path the world itself follows. The ones who go astray are those who refuse to understand it, and they keep stumbling because they have stepped off the road that everything else walks.

GATHA 1152 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, mount Krishna or be ruined

मराठी मूळ

नहिं एकदो सकल संसार । जो बुझे सो आगला स्वार ॥1॥
उपर श्वार बैठे कृष्णांपीठ । नहिं बाचे कोइ जावे लूठ ॥2॥
देख हि डर फेर बैठा तुका । जोवत मारग राम हि एका ॥3॥
भले रे भाई जिन्हें किया चीज । आछा नहिं मिलत बीज ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not one or two; the whole world is in the same boat. Whoever truly understands is the foremost rider.

The one who has mounted Krishna as their carrier is safe. All others go to ruin.

Says Tuka, seeing this danger, I have sat down in one place, watching the road, waiting for Rama alone.

Blessed, O brothers, are those who made something of their lives. Otherwise, a worthy seed is not easily come by.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is not one or two; the whole world is in the same boat. Whoever truly understands is the foremost rider. The one who has climbed onto Krishna as his mount is safe. All the rest go to ruin. Tuka says: seeing this danger, I have sat down in one place, watching the road, waiting for Rama alone. Blessed, O brothers, are those who made something of their lives. A worthy seed is not easily found again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the danger of being lost is universal; the whole world rides toward it together, not just a few. The one who understands this becomes the foremost, and his safety is in having mounted Krishna himself as his carrier, while everyone who has not is heading for ruin. Seeing the peril clearly, Tukaram has stopped running about and instead sits still, watching the road for Rama alone. He blesses those who used this life well and warns that a human birth, the worthy seed, is not easily come by again. The call is to climb onto God now, because the chance does not return readily.

GATHA 1153 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the end of seeking

मराठी मूळ

फीरतफीरत पाया सारा । मीटत लोले धन किनारा ॥1॥
तीरथ बरत फिर पाया जोग । नहिं तलमल तुटति भवरोग ॥2॥
कहे तुका मैं ताको दासा । नहिं सिरभार चलावे पासा ॥3॥
लाल कमलि वोढे पेनाये । मोसु हरिथें कैसें बनाये ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wandering and wandering, I traversed the whole path. At the shore, all greed for wealth dissolves away.

Pilgrimage, vows, austerity, and yoga I tried again. None of it stilled the restlessness of worldly disease.

Says Tuka, I am the servant of the one who does not cast away the burden He has taken on His head. The Lord is wrapped in a red blanket.

O, how has He arranged all this with me through Hari?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wandering and wandering, I crossed the whole path. At the shore, all my greed for wealth dissolved away. I tried pilgrimage, vows, austerity, and yoga again. None of it stilled the restless ache of worldly disease. Tuka says: I am the servant of the one who does not throw off the burden he has taken on his head. He is wrapped in a red blanket. O, how has he arranged all this with me, through Hari?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the story of his own long search and where it finally rested. He wandered the whole road of seeking, and only at the far shore did his greed for wealth fall away. Pilgrimages, vows, austerities, and yoga he tried over and over, but none of them quieted the restless sickness of worldly life. What gave him peace was becoming the servant of the Lord, the one who, once he takes a devotee's burden on his own head, never sets it down. He marvels at the end that God, wrapped in his red blanket, has somehow worked all this out with him through Hari, as a wonder he did not engineer himself.

GATHA 1154 Krishna Leela

Adoration of the cowherd, the call to the Name

मराठी मूळ

कहे सखि तुम्हें करति सोर । हिरदा हरिका कठिन कठोर ॥1॥
नहिं क्रिया सरम कछु लाज । और सुनाउं बहुत हे भाज ॥2॥
और नामरूप नहिं गोवलिया । तुकाप्रभु माखन खाया ॥3॥
राम कहो जीवना फल सो ही । हरिभजनसुं विलंब न पाई ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O friend, you make so much noise. The heart of Hari is hard and unyielding.

He shows no deed, no modesty, no shame. How much more of His mischief shall I tell you?

He has no name or form other than that of the cowherd. Says Tuka, this Lord has eaten the butter.

Say Rama. That alone is the fruit of life. Do not delay in the worship of Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O friend, you make so much noise. The heart of Hari is hard and unyielding. He shows no deed, no modesty, no shame. How much more of his mischief shall I tell you? He has no name or form other than the cowherd's. Tuka says: this Lord has eaten the butter. Say Rama. That alone is the fruit of life. Do not delay in the worship of Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

A gopi answers a friend who has been complaining about Hari, and her complaint is really praise. She lists his faults like a lover: he is stubborn, he keeps no rules, he has no shame; she could go on about his mischief, the butter he stole. But the teasing settles into the one thing that matters. This sweet thief has no form except the cowherd, and the same Lord is reached by saying Rama. So Tukaram turns from the play to the practice: the fruit of being alive is to speak the Name, and there is no reason to put it off.

GATHA 1155 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, all is hollow without Rama

मराठी मूळ

कवनका मंदर कवनकी झोपरी । एकारामबिन सब हि फुकरी ॥1॥
कवनकी काया कवनकी माया । एकरामबिन सब हि जाया ॥2॥
कहे तुका सब हि चेलनहार । एकारामविन नहिं वासार ॥3॥
काहे भुला धनसंपत्तीघोर । रामराम सुन गाउ हो बाप रे ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whose is the palace and whose the hut? Without Rama alone, everything is hollow.

Whose is the body and whose the illusion? Without Rama alone, all is in vain.

Says Tuka, all these are but a garland of passing things. Without Rama alone, not a single day has meaning.

Why are you lost in the frenzy of wealth and possessions? Listen, O father, and sing Rama, Rama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whose is the palace and whose the hut? Without Rama alone, everything is hollow. Whose is the body and whose the illusion? Without Rama alone, all is in vain. Tuka says: all these are a garland of passing things. Without Rama alone, not a single day has meaning. Why are you lost in the frenzy of wealth and possessions? Listen, O father, and sing Rama, Rama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips ownership of its weight by asking who really owns anything. Palace or hut, the body, the whole show of the world: none of it is yours, and without Rama all of it is empty. He calls the things people prize a garland of passing things, beads strung on a thread that breaks. The stakes are time itself, for without the Name no day of your life counts for anything. So he speaks gently to the listener as a father, naming the trap, the frenzy over wealth, and pointing past it to the one thing that lasts: sing Rama.

GATHA 1156 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, death undoes ownership

मराठी मूळ

राजे लोक सब कहे तूं आपना । जब काल नहीं पाया ठाना ॥1॥
माया मिथ्या मनका सब धंदा । तजो अभिमान भजो गोविंदा ॥2॥
राना रंग डोंगरकी राई । कहे तुका करे इलाहि ॥3॥
काहे रोवे आगले मरना । गंव्हार तूं भुला आपना ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Kings and all people call everything their own. When death comes, nothing remains to stand on.

All the mind's busyness, all worldly illusion, is false. Abandon pride and worship Govinda.

The Rana's splendor, the queen of the mountains. Says Tuka, all of it is God's doing alone.

Why do you weep over what must always pass? O foolish one, you have forgotten your own self.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Kings and all people call everything their own. When death comes, nothing remains to stand on. All the mind's busyness, all worldly illusion, is false. Abandon pride and worship Govinda. Tuka says: all of it is God's doing alone. Why do you weep over what must always pass? O foolish one, you have forgotten your own self.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the claim of ownership against the fact of death. Kings and ordinary people alike call things their own, but when death arrives there is no ground left to stand on. He names the whole inner bustle of the mind as false, and gives the cure in one line: drop pride and worship Govinda. The splendor people grasp at is not theirs in the first place; it is God's doing alone. So grief over what was always going to pass is misplaced, and the real loss is deeper: in chasing all this you have forgotten who you are.

GATHA 1157 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, white hair and the prayer for the highest good

मराठी मूळ

केते मालुम नहिं पडे । नन्हे बडे गये सो ॥1॥
बाप भाई लेखा नहिं । पाछें तूं हि चलनार ॥2॥
काले बाल सिपत भये । खबर पकडो तुका कहे ॥3॥
क्या मेरे राम कवन सुख सारा । कहकर दे पुछूं दास तुह्मारा ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How many have gone of whom nothing is now known, both the small and the great?

There is no count of fathers and brothers who went before. You too shall follow after them.

Black hair has turned white. Seize this awareness, says Tuka.

O my Rama, what is the highest happiness? Tell me. I ask as Your servant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How many have gone of whom nothing is now known, both the small and the great? There is no count of fathers and brothers who went before. You too shall follow after them. Black hair has turned white. Tuka says: seize this awareness. O my Rama, what is the highest happiness? Tell me. I ask as your servant.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counts the dead to wake the living. Countless people, low and high, have gone and left no trace; the line of fathers and brothers before you cannot even be numbered, and you are next in that line. He points to the plainest sign on your own body, hair gone white, and says: take hold of what it is telling you. The poem turns from warning to prayer in its refrain. Having faced death squarely, he asks Rama directly what the highest happiness is, and asks it humbly, as a servant who wants the true answer.

GATHA 1158 Appeals and Exhortations

Self-examination, why the false world is not yet let go

मराठी मूळ

तनजोबनकी कोन बराई । ब्याधपीडादि स काटहि खाई ॥1॥
कीर्त बधाऊं तों नाम न मेरा । काहे झुटा पछतऊं घेरा ॥2॥
कहे तुका नहिं समज्यात मात । तुह्मारे शरन हे जोडहि हात ॥3॥
देखत आखों झुटा कोरा । तो काहे छोरा घरंबार ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The world is seen with open eyes to be false and hollow. Then why have you not abandoned home and household?

What pride is there in the body and its youth? Disease and affliction will gnaw it all away.

I would build a name for myself, yet my name is nowhere. Why should I grieve over this false entanglement?

Says Tuka, O Lord, I cannot bring this home to you. I join my hands and take shelter at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The world is seen with open eyes to be false and hollow. Then why have you not abandoned home and household? What pride is there in the body and its youth? Disease and affliction will gnaw it all away. I would build a name for myself, yet my name is nowhere. Why should I grieve over this false entanglement? Tuka says: O Lord, I cannot bring this home to myself. I join my hands and take shelter at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the question on himself. You can see plainly that the world is hollow, so why are you still clinging to home and household? He punctures the two things people lean on, the body and its youth, by naming what waits for them: disease and decay will eat them up. He admits his own folly too, wanting a lasting name when no name endures, and asks why he keeps grieving over an entanglement he knows is false. The honesty ends in surrender: seeing all this, he still cannot make himself act on it, so he folds his hands and takes refuge at Rama's feet, where knowing alone could not carry him.

GATHA 1159 Renunciation

Renunciation, inward not outward

मराठी मूळ

मनसुं किया चाहिये पाख । उपर खाक पसारा ॥1॥
कामक्रोधसो संसार । वो सिरभार चलावे ॥2॥
कहे तुका वो संन्यास। छोडे आस तनकी हि ॥3॥
रामभजन सब सार मिठाई । हरि संताप जनमदुख राई ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devotion of Rama is the sweetest essence of all. It removes the affliction and the sorrow of birth and death.

True renunciation must be made within the mind. Outward show is nothing but dust spread over the surface.

The world of lust and anger is the burden upon the head, and it drives one endlessly forward.

Says Tuka, that is true renunciation: to give up even the longing for one's own body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The worship of Rama is the sweetest essence of all. It removes the affliction and the sorrow of birth and death. True renunciation must be made within the mind. Outward show is nothing but dust spread over the surface. The world of lust and anger is the burden upon the head, and it drives one endlessly forward. Tuka says: that is true renunciation, to give up even the longing for one's own body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures renunciation by where it happens. The real work is in the mind; robes and outward signs are only dust scattered on the surface, hiding nothing underneath. What actually weighs a person down is lust and anger, a load carried on the head that keeps driving them on through life after life. So he sets the bar at its highest: true renunciation is to let go even of the longing for your own body, the last and deepest attachment. And he frames the whole thing in sweetness rather than grimness, because the Name of Rama is itself the sweetest essence, and it is what dissolves the sorrow of birth and death.

GATHA 1160 The Power of the Name

The Name, the rasa that ends rebirth

मराठी मूळ

दुधभात घृत सकरपारे । हरते भुक नहि अंततारे ॥1॥
खावते जुग सब चलिजावे । खटमिठा फिर पचतावे ॥2॥
कहे तुका रामरस जो पावे । बहुरि फेरा वो कबहु न खावे ॥3॥
बारंबार काहे मरत अभागी । बहुरि मरन संक्या तोरेभागी ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you keep dying again and again, O unfortunate one? The count of your deaths is your own portion.

Milk, rice, ghee, and shakarpara remove hunger for a time, but they do not carry you across in the end.

Eat and enjoy through all the ages, yet time passes away. The sour-and-sweet of it all turns in the end to regret.

Says Tuka, the one who attains the rasa of Rama never again enters the rounds of samsara.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you keep dying again and again, O unfortunate one? The count of your deaths is your own portion. Milk, rice, ghee, and shakarpara remove hunger for a time, but they do not carry you across in the end. Eat and enjoy through all the ages, yet time passes away. The sour-and-sweet of it all turns in the end to regret. Tuka says: the one who attains the rasa of Rama never again enters the rounds of samsara.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts food that fills you for an hour with the one taste that frees you forever. Milk, rice, ghee, sweet shakarpara: they ease hunger now, but they cannot ferry you across death. You can feast through age after age, yet time still runs out, and the rich sour-and-sweet of all that pleasure leaves only regret behind. He names the cost of refusing the cure with stark pity: you die again and again, and that endless count is your own portion, the harvest of your choices. The way out is a different taste entirely, the rasa of Rama, and whoever truly drinks it is never pulled back into the rounds of birth and death.

GATHA 1161 The Power of the Name

The Name, this body can reach Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

ये हि तन करते क्या ना होय । भजन भगति करे वैकुंठे जाय ॥1॥
रामनाम मोल नहिं वेचे कबरि । वो हि सब माया छुरावत झगरी ॥2॥
कहे तुका मनसुं मिल राखो । रामरस जिव्हा नित्य चाखो ॥3॥
हम दास तीन्हके सुनाहो लोकां । रावणमार विभीषण दिई लंका ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am the servant of those who hear this truth. Listen, O people: He who slew Ravana gave Lanka to Vibhishana.

What is it that this body cannot accomplish? Through bhajan and bhakti, one reaches Vaikuntha.

The Name of Rama has no price and is never put up for sale. All else is maya, the cause of strife and entanglement.

Says Tuka, stay joined with your own mind. Let your tongue taste the rasa of Rama every day.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am the servant of those who hear this truth. Listen, O people: he who slew Ravana gave Lanka to Vibhishana. What is it that this body cannot accomplish? Through bhajan and bhakti, one reaches Vaikuntha. The Name of Rama has no price and is never put up for sale. All else is maya, the cause of strife and entanglement. Tuka says: stay joined with your own mind. Let your tongue taste the rasa of Rama every day.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists that this very human body is enough to reach God. He offers proof from the story: the Rama who killed Ravana then handed the whole of Lanka to Vibhishana, so the Lord's generosity is past measuring. There is nothing this body cannot do once it turns to bhajan and bhakti; the goal is Vaikuntha, and it is in reach. The Name is the one thing that has no price and cannot be bought or sold, while everything else is maya that only breeds conflict. So the instruction is simple and daily: keep your mind gathered and let your tongue taste Rama's rasa every single day.

GATHA 1162 Sacred Stories

Mythology, the rescuing deeds of the Lord

मराठी मूळ

गोबरधन नखपर गोकुल राखा । बर्सन लागा जब मेंहुं फत्तरका ॥1॥
वैकुंठनायक काल कौंसासुरका । दैत डुबाय सब मंगाय गोपिका ॥2॥
स्तंभ फोड पेट चिरीया कसेपका । प्रल्हाद के लियें कहे भाई तुकयाका ॥3॥ ॥22॥
॥ साख्या ॥ 30 ॥
तुका बस्तर बिचारा क्यों करे रे । अंतर भगवा न होय।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He lifted Mount Govardhan on His fingernail and sheltered Gokul when the rain of stones came pouring down.

The Lord of Vaikuntha, the destroyer of Kansa the demon: He drowned the demons and called the gopis back.

He split the pillar and tore open the belly of Hiranyakashipu for the sake of Prahlada. Says Tuka's brother, hold this in your heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He lifted Mount Govardhan on his fingernail and sheltered Gokul when the rain of stones came pouring down. The Lord of Vaikuntha, the destroyer of Kansa the demon: he drowned the demons and called the gopis back. He split the pillar and tore open the belly of Hiranyakashipu for the sake of Prahlada. Tuka's brother says: hold this in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gathers three rescues into a single litany of the Lord's protective power. He held Govardhan on one fingernail to shelter Gokul from the storm of stones; he is the Lord of Vaikuntha who destroyed the demon Kansa, drowned the demons, and brought the gopis back; he burst from the pillar and tore open Hiranyakashipu to save the child Prahlada. The pattern across all three is the same: when the devotee is in danger, God acts, and acts without limit. The closing line names the purpose of the recital, to keep these deeds in the heart as the ground of trust.

GATHA 1163 The Power of the Name

The Name, garland of sayings on inner truth and the hero of bhakti

मराठी मूळ

भीतर मैला केंव मिटे रे । मरे उपर धोय ॥1॥
रामराम कहे रे मन । औरसुं नहिं काज ।
बहुत उतारे पार । आघे राख तुकाकी लाज ॥1॥
लोभीकें चित धन बैठे । कामीन चित्त काम ।
माताके चित पुत बैठें । तुकाके मन राम ॥1॥
तुका पंखिबहिरन मानुं । बोई जनावर बाग ।
असंतनकुं संत न मानूं । जे वर्मकुं दाग ॥1॥
तुका राम बहुत मिठा रे । भर राखूं शरीर ।
तनकी करुं नावरि । उतारुं पैल तीर ॥1॥
संतन पन्हयां लें खडा । राहूं ठाकुरद्वार ।
चलत पाछेंहुं फिरों । रज उडत लेऊं सीर ॥1॥
तुकाप्रभु बडो न मनूं न मानूं बडो । जिसपास बहु दाम ।
बलिहारि उस मुखकी । जीसेती निकसे राम ॥1॥
राम कहे सो मुख भलारे । खाये खीर खांड ।
हरिबिन मुखमो धूल परी रे । क्या जनि उस रांड ॥1॥
राम कहे सो मुख भला रे । बिन रामसें बीख ।
आव न जानूं रमते बेरों । जब काल लगावे सीख ॥1॥
कहे तुका में सवदा बेचूं । लेवेके तन हार ।
मिठा साधुसंतजन रे । मुरुखके सिर मार ॥1॥
तुका दास तिनका रे । रामभजन निरास ।
क्या बिचारे पंडित करो रे । हात पसारे आस ॥1॥
तुका प्रीत रामसुं । तैसी मिठी राख ।
पतंग जाय दीप परे रे । करे तनकी खाक ॥1॥
कहे तुका जग भुला रे । कहएा न मानत कोय ।
हात परे जब कालके । मारत फोरत डोय ॥1॥
तुका सुरा नहि सबदका रे । जब कमाइ न होये ।
चोट साहे घनकि रे । हिरा नीबरे तोये ॥1॥
तुका सुरा बहुत कहावे । लडत विरला कोये ।
एक पावे उंच पदवी । एक खौंसां जोये ॥1॥
तुका मा†या पेटका । और न जाने कोये ।
जपता कछु रामनाम । हरिभगतनकी सोये ॥1॥
काफर सोही आपण बुझे । आला दुनियां भर ।
कहे तुका तुम्हें सुनो रे भाई । हिरिदा जिन्होका कठोर ॥1॥
भीस्त न पावे मालथी । पढीया लोक रिझाये ।

निचा जथें कमतरिण । सो ही सो फल खाये ॥1॥
फल पाया तो खुस भया । किन्होसुं न करे बाद ।
बान न देखे मिरगा रे । चित्त मिलाया नाद ॥1॥
तुका दास रामका । मनमे एक हि भाव ।
तो न पालटू आव । ये हि तन जाव ॥1॥
तुका रामसुं चित बांध राखूं । तैसा आपनी हात ।
धेनु बछरा छोर जावे । प्रेम न छुटे सात ॥1॥
चितसुं चित जब मिले । तब तनु थंडा होये ।
तुका मिलनां जिन्होसुं । ऐसा विरला कोये ॥1॥
चित मिले तो सब मिले । नहिं तो फुकट संग ।
पानी पाथर येक ही ठोर । कोरनभिगे अंग ॥1॥
तुका संगत तीन्हसें कहिये । जिनथें सुख दुनाये ।
दुर्जन तेरा मू काला । थीतो प्रेम घटाये ॥1॥
तुका मिलना तो भला । मनसुं मन मिल जाय ।
उपर उपर माटि घसनी । उनकि कोन बराई ॥1॥
तुका कुटुंब छोरे रे । लरके जोरों सिर गुंदाय ।
जबथे इच्छा नहिं मुई । तब तूं किया काय ॥1॥
तुका इच्छा मीटइ तो । काहा करे चट खाक ।
मथीया गोला डारदिया तो । नहिं मिले फेरन ताक ॥1॥
ब्रीद मेरे साइंयाके । तुका चलावे पास ।
सुरा सो हि लरे हमसें । छोरे तनकी आस ॥1॥
कहे तुका भला भया । हुं हुवा संतनका दास ।
क्या जानूं केते मरता । जो न मिटती मनकी आस ॥1॥
तुका और मिठाई क्या करूं रे । पाले विकारपिंड ।
राम कहावे सो भली रुखी । माखन खांडखीर ॥1॥ ॥30॥
ह्मणसी नाहीं रे संचित । न करीं न करीं ऐसी मात ॥1॥
लाहो घेई हरिनामाचा । जन्म जाऊं नेदीं साचा ॥ध्रु.॥
गळां पडेल यमफांसी । मग कैंचा हरि ह्मणसी ॥2॥
पुरलासाटीं देहाडा। ऐसें न ह्मणें न ह्मणें मूढा ॥3॥
नरदेह दुबळा । ऐसें न ह्मणें रे चांडाळा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगों किती । सेको तोंडीं पडेल माती ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can a poor garment do if the wearer's inside is not dyed with God? Outward washing cannot remove inner filth. Say Rama, Rama with your mind; you have no business with anything else.

The Name has ferried many across; uphold the honor of Tuka now. The greedy man's mind is fixed on wealth, the lustful one's mind on desire.

A mother's mind rests on her son. Tuka's mind rests upon Rama.

I call Tuka a bird-animal, a speaking creature of the garden. I shall not call the unholy ones saints, for they bear the brand of falseness.

Rama is very sweet, says Tuka; let me fill my whole body with Him. I shall make this body a boat and cross to the far shore.

I would stand at the doorstep of the saints, picking up the pebbles from their path. Walking behind them, I would gather the dust that rises from their feet upon my head.

Says Tuka's Lord: I do not honor the one who has much wealth. I am devoted to the mouth from which Rama's name comes forth.

A mouth that says Rama is a blessed mouth, as if it has eaten fine butter and sugar. A mouth without Hari is a mouth full of dust.

What caste is such a wretch? A mouth that says Rama is good; without Rama it is poison. I do not recognize comings and goings; one day death will teach its lesson.

Says Tuka, I sell a true commodity; the buyer must give his whole self. Sweet are the saints; for the fool, it is a blow upon the head.

I am the servant of those who worship Rama without expectation. What can the poor scholar do, stretching out his hands in want? Keep your love for Rama just as close and sweet, like the moth that goes to the flame and turns its body to ash.

Says Tuka, the world is deluded; no one heeds what is told. When death catches them by the hand, it twists and crushes them.

The true hero is not one of empty boasts, but one whose inner effort bears fruit. He endures the hammer's blow; the diamond emerges from its test.

Many claim to be heroes, but very few truly fight. One attains a high station; another finds only the scaffolds.

Says Tuka, illusion is a box that nobody recognizes. Only those who chant Rama's name walk the devotee's path.

A faithless one is one who thinks himself wise but has filled the world with harm. Says Tuka, listen, brothers: their hearts are hard as stone. Heaven is not won by a rosary used merely to impress people.

Even the lowly spider, spinning its humble web, eats the fruit of its labor. The one who found the fruit is glad and argues with nobody.

The deer does not see the arrow; its mind is captivated by music. Tuka is Rama's servant, with one unwavering feeling within.

That will not change, whether this body lives or goes. Says Tuka, bind your mind to Rama as tightly as a cow tied to a post. Though the calf runs free, the bond of love is never broken.

When heart meets heart, the body becomes cool. Says Tuka, to meet such a one is very rare. When hearts meet, everything meets.

Otherwise, companionship is useless, like water poured on stone; the body beneath is never wetted. Says Tuka, keep company only with those who double your happiness. The wicked one's face is blackened; his presence only diminishes love.

True meeting is when mind merges with mind. Rubbing surfaces together outwardly is of no worth.

Says Tuka, even if you abandon family, children, and spouse and shave your head, until desire itself has died, what have you accomplished? Says Tuka, when desire is extinguished, what does it matter if everything turns to dust? Once the churning-rod has yielded the butter, who keeps churning the buttermilk? The title of my Lord endures, and Tuka follows His decree. Only the true hero fights with me: the one who has given up all attachment to the body.

Says Tuka, it is well that I became a servant of the saints. Who knows how many deaths I would have died, had the mind's desires not been quenched? Says Tuka, what do I want with other sweets that fatten the body of vice? A dry roti with Rama's name is better than butter, sugar, and cream. Do not say you have no store of merit.

Do not say such a thing. Take the profit of Hari's name and do not let this birth go to waste.

When the noose of death falls upon your neck, how will you utter Hari's name? Do not think, O fool, that your days are fully spent. Do not say the human body is weak, O wretch.

Says Tuka, how many times shall I tell you? In the end, only dirt will fill your mouth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can a garment do if the wearer is not dyed within with God? Outward washing cannot remove inner filth. Say Rama, Rama with your mind; you have no business with anything else. The Name has ferried many across; uphold the honor of Tuka now. The greedy mind is fixed on wealth, the lustful on desire, the mother's on her son. Tuka's mind rests on Rama. I shall not call the unholy ones saints, for they bear the brand of falseness. Rama is very sweet, says Tuka; let me fill my body with him and make it a boat to cross to the far shore. I would stand at the saints' doorstep, gather the dust of their feet upon my head. Tuka's Lord says: I do not honor the one who has much wealth; I am devoted to the mouth from which Rama's name comes. A mouth that says Rama has eaten butter and sugar; a mouth without Hari is full of dust. Tuka says: I sell a true commodity, and the buyer must give his whole self; sweet to the saints, it is a blow on the fool's head. I am the servant of those who worship Rama without expectation. Keep your love for Rama close, like the moth that flies to the flame and turns its body to ash. The world is deluded; no one heeds what is told, until death catches them by the hand and crushes them. The true hero is not one of empty boasts; he endures the hammer's blow, and the diamond emerges from its test. Many claim to be heroes, but few truly fight. Illusion is a box that nobody recognizes; only those who chant Rama's name walk the devotee's path. The faithless one thinks himself wise but fills the world with harm; their hearts are hard as stone. Heaven is not won by a rosary used only to impress people. Even the lowly spider eats the fruit of its own labor. The deer does not see the arrow; its mind is captivated by the music. Tuka is Rama's servant with one unwavering feeling, and that will not change whether this body lives or goes. Bind your mind to Rama as a calf is bound to the cow; though the calf runs free, the bond of love is never broken. When heart meets heart, the body grows cool; such meeting is rare. When hearts meet, everything meets; otherwise company is useless, like water poured on stone that never wets what lies beneath. Keep company only with those who double your happiness. True meeting is mind merging with mind; rubbing surfaces together outwardly is worth nothing. Even if you leave family and children and shave your head, until desire itself dies, what have you done? Once the churning-rod has yielded the butter, who keeps churning the buttermilk? The title of my Lord endures, and Tuka follows his decree; only the true hero fights with me, the one who has given up all attachment to the body. It is well that I became a servant of the saints; who knows how many deaths I would have died had my mind's desires not been quenched? What do I want with other sweets that fatten the body of vice? A dry roti with Rama's name is better than butter, sugar, and cream. Do not say you have no store of merit. Take the profit of Hari's name and do not let this birth go to waste. When the noose of death falls on your neck, how will you utter Hari's name? Do not think, O fool, that your days are fully spent. Do not say the human body is weak, O wretch. Tuka says: how many times shall I tell you? In the end, only dirt will fill your mouth.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a long garland of short sayings, all circling one center: only the Name dyed into the inside of a person is real, and everything outward is dust. Tukaram measures worth not by wealth, learning, robes, or a shown-off rosary, but by the mouth that speaks Rama and the mind bound to him like a calf to its cow. He keeps testing devotion against its counterfeits: the boaster who calls himself a hero but will not fight, the renunciate who shaves his head while desire lives on, the rosary worn to impress. The real hero is the one who takes the hammer-blow and comes out a diamond, who gives up attachment to the very body. He warns plainly that the world ignores all this until death seizes it by the hand, so the work is now, today: prize the company of saints, drink the rasa of Rama, and do not waste this birth, because in the end only dirt fills the mouth that stayed silent.

GATHA 1164 The Saints

Saints, glory known only by becoming it

मराठी मूळ

संतांचा महिमा तो बहु दुर्गम । शाब्दकांचे काम नाहीं येथें ॥1॥
बहु धड जरी जाली ह्मैस गाय । तरी होईल काय कामधेनु ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंगें व्हावें तें आपण । तरी च महिमान येईल कळों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The greatness of the saints is truly unfathomable. Those who traffic in mere words have no place here.

Even if a buffalo became full and well-formed, would it become a kamadhenu?

Says Tuka, you must become that very thing yourself. Only then will its true glory come to be known.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The greatness of the saints is truly unfathomable. Those who traffic in mere words have no place here. Even if a buffalo became full and well-formed, would it become a kamadhenu? Tuka says: you must become that very thing yourself. Only then will its true glory come to be known.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the greatness of saints cannot be reached by talk. Clever speech has no standing here, because words describe from the outside and the thing itself is inward. His image makes the point sharp: a buffalo may grow fat and well-formed, but it will never become the wish-granting cow Kamadhenu, for likeness on the surface is not the same nature. The only path to knowing what a saint is, is to become one. Glory of this kind is not observed; it is lived, and revealed only from within.

GATHA 1165 The Saints

Saints, not for sale at any price

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं संतपण मिळतें हें हाटीं । हिंडतां कपाटीं रानीं वनीं ॥1॥
नये मोल देतां धनाचिया राशी । नाहीं तें आकाशीं पाताळीं तें ॥1॥
तुका ह्मणे मिळे जिवाचिये साटीं । नाहीं तरी गोष्टी बोलों नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Saintliness cannot be bought in the marketplace. It is not found by wandering through shops, forests, or wildernesses.

It cannot be purchased for heaps of gold. It is not in the sky above or in the netherworld below.

Says Tuka, it is obtained only at the cost of the jiva. Otherwise, it is better not even to speak of it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Saintliness cannot be bought in the marketplace. It is not found by wandering through shops, forests, or wildernesses. It cannot be purchased for heaps of gold. It is not in the sky above or in the netherworld below. Tuka says: it is obtained only at the cost of the jiva. Otherwise, it is better not even to speak of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram denies every easy route to saintliness. It is not a thing on a stall to be bought, not found by roaming through shops or forests, not had for piles of gold, not hidden somewhere in the heavens or the underworld to be fetched. He names the one true price plainly: it costs the jiva, the very life or self of the seeker, who must give himself wholly. The closing line draws the line of seriousness. If you are not ready to pay that price, you should not even talk about it, because cheap words about saintliness are themselves a kind of falseness.

GATHA 1201 The Power of the Name

The Name, the lover is God

मराठी मूळ

नामाची आवडी तोचि जाणा देव । न धरी संदेह कांहीं मनीं ॥1॥
ऐसें मी हें नाहीं बोलत नेणता । आनुनि संमता संतांचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम ह्मणे तया आणीक साधन । ऐसें हें वचन बोलो नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख पावे या वचनीं । ज्याचीं शुद्ध दोन्ही मायबापें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know that one who loves the Name is truly God. Hold no doubt in your mind about this.

I do not speak this without understanding; I speak with the agreement and authority of the saints.

One should not say that other practices are needed for the one who chants the Name.

Says Tuka, joy is attained through these words by one whose both parents are pure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know this: the one who loves the Name is himself God. Hold no doubt of it in your mind. I do not say this without understanding. I say it with the agreement and authority of the saints. Do not say that such a one, who chants the Name, still needs some other practice. Do not speak that word. Tuka says: joy comes through these words to the one whose father and mother are both pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a sharp claim and then defends it as something he has the right to say. The lover of the Name is not merely on the way to God; he is God. To forestall the obvious objection, Tukaram insists this is not careless talk but the settled verdict of the saints. He then closes the door on any add-on: for the one who chants the Name, no further practice is needed, and to say otherwise is forbidden. The blessing of his words reaches the one of pure descent, the heart ready to receive it.

GATHA 1202 Worldly Metaphors

Lament, the self-made trap

मराठी मूळ

सुखें होतो कोठे घेतली सुती । बांधविला गळा आपुले हातीं ॥1॥
काय करूं बहु गुंतलों आतां । नये सरतां मागें पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
होते गांठी तें सरलें येतां । आणीक माथां रीण जालें ॥2॥
सोंकरिलियाविण गमाविलें पिक । रांडापोरें भिके लावियेलीं ॥3॥
बहुतांचीं बहु घेतलीं घरें । न पडे पुरें कांहीं केल्या ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे काही न धरावी आस । जावे हे सर्वस्व टाकोनिया ॥5॥
न मनावे तैसे गुरूचे वचन । जेणें नारायण अंतरे ते।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I was living in peace somewhere when I bound the noose around my own neck with my own hands.

What shall I do now? I am deeply entangled. There is no going forward or backward.

Whatever savings I had are spent, and a new debt has piled upon my head.

Without tending the field, the crop was lost. Wife and children have been driven to begging.

I have borrowed from many and taken many homes, yet nothing ever suffices.

Says Tuka, hold no longing for anything. Leave everything behind, cast it all away.

Do not follow any teaching that keeps you apart from Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I was living happily somewhere when I tied the noose around my own neck with my own hands. What can I do now? I am deeply tangled. I cannot go back or forward. Whatever I had saved is spent, and a new debt has piled on my head. I did not tend the field, so the crop was lost. My wife and children have been sent out to beg. I borrowed from many and took many houses, yet nothing is ever enough. Tuka says: hold no longing for anything. Leave it all behind; cast everything away. Do not heed any teaching that keeps you apart from Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in the voice of a man who ruined his own peace and is naming the wreckage honestly. The noose, the debts, the lost crop, the family driven to beg: these are the worldly entanglements a person ties for himself out of craving and never finds enough. Then he turns the picture into instruction. The way out is not more borrowing or more managing but letting go of longing altogether and casting the whole burden away. The final test he gives is simple: any teaching that separates you from Narayana is the wrong rope to pick up.

GATHA 1203 Sacred Stories

God answers the cry of love

मराठी मूळ

आड आला ह्मुन फोडियेला डोळा । बिळनें आंधळा शुक्र केला ॥1॥
करी देव तरी काय नव्हे एक । कां तुह्मी पृथक सिणा वांयां ॥ध्रु.॥
उलंघुनि भ्रताराची आज्ञा । अन्न ऋषिपत्न्या घेउनि गेल्या ।
अवघे चि त्यांचें देवें केलें काज । धर्म आणि लाज राखियेली ॥2॥
पितियासी पुत्रें केला वैराकार । प्रल्हादें असुर मारविला ।
बहुत विघ्नें केलीं तया आड । परि नाहीं कैवाड सांडियेला ॥3॥
गौळणी करिती देवाशीं व्यभिचार । सांडुनी आचार भ्रष्ट होती ।
तया दिले ते कोणासी नाही । अवघा अंतर्बाही तोचि जाला ॥4॥
देव जोडे ते करावे अधर्म । अंतरे तें कर्म नाचरावें ।
तुका ह्मणे हा जाणतो कळवळा । ह्मणोनि अजामेळा उद्धरिलें॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Shukra's eye was destroyed because he stood in the way. One who obstructs is made blind.

If God wills it, what is impossible? Why then do you exhaust yourself in vain, trying to stay separate?

The sages' wives disobeyed their husbands and carried food to Krishna. God accomplished all their work and preserved both duty and honor.

Prahlada turned against his own father, and the demon was slain. Though many obstacles were placed in the way, the devotee did not abandon his resolve.

The gopis committed vyabhichar, abandoning all propriety. Yet what they received, no one else has ever received: He became the inner-and-outer of their very existence, nothing held back.

Practice that which brings you nearer to God; shun the action that separates you from Him. Says Tuka, He knows the anguish of longing within you. That is why even Ajamela was saved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Shukra's eye was put out because he stood in the way; the one who obstructs is made blind. If God wills a thing, what cannot be done? Why do you wear yourself out in vain trying to stay separate? The sages' wives disobeyed their husbands and carried food to Krishna; God did all their work and kept their duty and their honor safe. Prahlada turned against his own father, and the demon was killed; many obstacles were thrown in his path, but he did not let go of his resolve. The gopis broke with all propriety to be with God; yet what they received, no one else has ever received: He became their inner and outer being, holding nothing back. Do whatever brings you near to God; shun the act that takes you from Him. Tuka says: He knows the anguish of your longing. That is why even Ajamela was saved.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stacks up the old stories to show one thing: God measures the heart's longing, not the outward keeping of rules. Across his examples the people who reach God all break some boundary, the sages' wives, Prahlada, the gopis, and what saves them is not propriety but the single-minded pull toward Him. Read carelessly this could sound like license; Tukaram is careful to give the real rule in the last lines. The standard is direction, not transgression: do what draws you near, drop what pulls you away. And the reason it can work at all is that God reads the cry inside, which is how even Ajamela, no saint, was lifted up.

GATHA 1204 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, save the human birth

मराठी मूळ

अरे गिळले हो संसारें । कांहीं तरि राखा खरें । दिला करुणाकरें । मनुष्यदेह सत्संग ॥1॥
येथें न घलीं न घलीं आड । संचितसा शब्द नाड । उठाउठीं गोड । बीजें बीज वाढवा ॥ध्रु.॥
केलें ते क्रियमाण । जालें तें संचित ह्मण । प्रारब्ध जाण । उरवरित उरले तें ॥2॥
चित्त खोटें चालीवरि । रोग भोगाचे अंतरीं। रसने अनावरी । तुका ह्मणे ढुंग वाहे ॥3॥
अग्न तापलिया काया चि होमे । तापत्रयें संतप्त होती । संचित क्रियमाण प्रारब्ध तेथें ।
न चुके संसारिस्थति । राहाटघटिका जैसी फिरतां चि राहिली । भरली जाती एके रितीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O people, the world has swallowed you whole! At least save something real. The compassionate Lord has given you a human body and the gift of holy company.

Do not place any obstacle here; do not speak the hollow word of fate. At once, with joy, plant the seed and let seed grow from seed.

What is done now becomes kriyaman. What is accumulated becomes sanchit. What remains is prarabdha: the leftover balance, the destiny already in motion.

When the chitta is crooked, following mere habit, and disease and unrestrained appetite rule the inner life, Says Tuka, the tongue carries the whole body behind it, right down to the rear.

When the body burns like a fire-offering, scorched by the three-fold miseries, sanchit, kriyaman, and prarabdha all converge there. The cycle of worldly existence never breaks. Like a water-wheel that goes on turning, one jar fills while the other empties.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O people, the world has swallowed you whole. At least save something real. The merciful Lord has given you a human body and the company of the holy. Do not raise an obstacle here; do not lean on the hollow word of fate. Right now, gladly, plant the seed and let seed grow from seed. What you do now becomes the action in motion; what you have stored up is the accumulated store; what is left over and already set going is your destiny. When the mind is crooked and runs on mere habit, when disease and appetite rule within, Tuka says: the tongue drags the whole body behind it, down to the backside. When the body burns like a fire-offering, scorched by the threefold misery, the stored, the present, and the destined all meet there. The round of worldly life never breaks. Like a water wheel turning, one jar fills while another empties.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is shaking people awake before the chance is gone. The human body and the company of the holy are the rare gifts, and the great temptation is to waste them by hiding behind fate as an excuse to do nothing. So he says plant the seed now: act, do not stall. He sets out the three kinds of karma plainly, what you do, what you have stored, what is already fixed, to show that an undisciplined life keeps all three turning. The crooked mind, the runaway appetite, the burning body: these keep the water wheel of birth and death spinning, one jar emptying as the next fills, until the seed of right action is finally planted.

GATHA 1205 The Power of the Name

The Name, the easy way through

मराठी मूळ

साधीं हा प्रपंच पंचाय अग्न । तेणें पावसील निजशांती रे ॥1॥
नारायणनाम नारायणनाम । नित्य करीं काम जिव्हामुखें ।
जन्मजराव्याधि पापपुण्य तेथें । नासती सकळ ही दुःखें ॥ध्रु.॥
शीत उष्ण वन सेवितां कपाट । आसनसमाधी साधीं । तप तीर्थ दान व्रत आचरण।
यज्ञ नाना मन बुद्धी । भोगाभोग तेथें न चुकती प्रकार जन्मजरादुःखव्याधि।
साहोनि काम क्रोध अहंकार । आश्रमीं अविनाश साधीं ॥2॥
घोकितां अक्षर अभिमानविधि । निषेध लागला पाठी । वाद करितां निंदा घडती दोष होय वज्रलेपो भविष्यति ।
दूषणाचें मूळ भूषण तुका ह्मणे । सांडीं मिथ्या खंती । रिघोनि संतां शरण सर्वभावें । राहें भलतिया िस्थती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Master this worldly life as the five fires of austerity. By doing so, you will attain your own innate peace.

Chant the name Narayana, Narayana; make this the constant work of tongue and lips. By this, birth, old age, disease, sin, virtue: all miseries are destroyed.

Through enduring heat and cold, forest austerities, posture and samadhi, through penance, pilgrimage, charity, vows and observances, through sacrifice and the disciplines of mind and intellect: the suffering of worldly existence is not escaped, nor the misery of birth, aging, disease and death. Endure lust, anger and pride, and through these hermitage-disciplines, realize the Imperishable.

But the pride of memorized learning breeds prohibitions and their shadows. Debate leads to slander and sin, and these will set like vajra-cement, impossible to remove.

Fault-finding at its root is nothing but pride wearing an ornament. Says Tuka, abandon this false anxiety. Surrender completely to the saints and abide in whatever state life brings.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Master this worldly life as the five fires of austerity, and through it you will reach your own deep peace. The name Narayana, the name Narayana: do this work always, with tongue and mouth. By it birth, old age, disease, sin and merit, all sorrows are destroyed. By bearing heat and cold, by forest penance, by posture and trance, by penance, pilgrimage, charity, vows and observances, by sacrifice and the disciplines of mind and intellect, the round of worldly life is still not escaped, nor the misery of birth, aging, disease and death. Endure lust, anger and pride, and through these disciplines realize the Imperishable. But the pride of memorized learning breeds prohibitions and their shadows behind it. Debate breeds slander and fault, and these set hard as stone, never to be removed. The root of fault-finding, Tuka says, is pride wearing an ornament. Drop this false anxiety. Take refuge in the saints with your whole heart, and stay in whatever state life gives you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the whole apparatus of austerity against the simple Name and finds the austerity wanting. Penance, pilgrimage, sacrifice, the disciplines of posture and intellect: he grants their effort but says they do not by themselves break the cycle of birth and death. The Name, spoken constantly, does the work the harder paths cannot. He then warns against the trap the learned fall into: memorized scripture breeds rules, debate, slander, and a fault-finding that hardens like cement. He names the root of all of it as pride dressed up as discernment, and points instead to whole-hearted surrender to the saints and contentment with whatever state life brings.

GATHA 1206 The Power of the Name

The Name, easier than every discipline

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे गुरुदास्य संसारियां । वैराग्य तरी भेणें कांपे विषयां । तैसें नाम पंढरीराया । जया सायास न लगती ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि गोड सर्वभावें । आंघोळी न लगे तोंड धुवावें । अर्थचाड जीवें । न लगे भ्यावें संसारा ॥ध्रु.॥
कर्मा तंव न पुरे संसारिक । धर्म तंव फळदायक । नाम विठ्ठलाचें एक । नाशी दुःख भवाचें ॥2॥
न लगे सांडणें मांडणें । आगमनिगमाचें देखणें । अवघें तुका ह्मणे। विठ्ठलनामें आटलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Serving a guru is not possible for the worldly-minded. The renunciant trembles at the sight of sense pleasures. But the Name of Pandhari's Lord requires no such effort.

Therefore it is sweet in every way: no bathing or rinsing of the mouth is required, no craving of self-interest in the soul, no need to fear the world.

Worldly action is never enough for the householder. Religious duty yields only limited fruit. The one Name of Vitthal alone destroys the sorrow of worldly existence.

There is no need to take up or put down anything, no need to study the scriptural traditions. Says Tuka, through the Name of Vitthal, all is resolved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Serving a guru is beyond the worldly-minded. The renunciant trembles with fear at the senses. But the Name of Pandhari's Lord asks no such struggle. So it is sweet in every way: no need to bathe, no need to rinse the mouth, no craving of gain in the soul, no need to fear the world. Worldly action is never enough for the householder. Religious duty gives only limited fruit. The one Name of Vitthal alone destroys the sorrow of worldly life. There is nothing to take up and nothing to put down, no scripture and tradition to study. Tuka says: through the Name of Vitthal, all of it is dissolved.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the Name beside the recognized paths and shows how much each one demands. Serving a guru is too much for the worldly; the renunciant lives in dread of the senses; ritual action and duty bind the householder and pay out only limited fruit. The Name of Vitthal asks none of this: no bathing, no purifying, no fear, no study, no taking up and putting down of practices. It is sweet precisely because it has no entry fee. The whole machinery of merit and discipline simply dissolves in the one Name.

GATHA 1207 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, serve without self-will

मराठी मूळ

नये इच्छूं सेवा स्वइच्छा जगाची । अवज्ञा देवाची घडे तेणें ॥1॥
देहाचा निग्रही त्याचें तो सांभाळी । मग नये किळ अंगावरी ॥ध्रु.॥
आपलिया इच्छा माता सेवा करी । न बाधी ते थोरी येणें क्षोभें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांडा देखीचे दिमाख । मोडसीचें दुःख गांड फाडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not desire the world's service on one's own terms. Doing so is an act of contempt toward God's command.

God takes care of the one who disciplines the body. Then one should feel no revulsion at whatever comes.

A mother serves the child of her own accord. That service does not become harmful because of the child's tantrums.

Says Tuka, abandon the vanity of outward show. The pain of stubbornness tears the arse open.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not seek to serve the world on your own terms; to do so is contempt toward God's command. God guards the one who disciplines the body; then no disgust at whatever comes should rise in you. A mother serves her child of her own accord; her greatness is not harmed by the child's tantrums. Tuka says: drop the vanity of outward show. The pain of stubbornness tears the backside open.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is correcting how service is done, not whether to do it. Service offered on your own terms, to be seen and admired, is really self-will, and he calls that an affront to God's command. The right kind of service is like a mother's care for her child: given freely, undisturbed by the child's tantrums, never lessened by ingratitude. The discipline is to give up the craving for show and to accept whatever comes without revulsion. His blunt closing line warns that stubborn self-importance brings its own crude and painful undoing.

GATHA 1208 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, truth needs no force

मराठी मूळ

सत्य सत्यें देतें फळ । नाहीं लागत चि बळ ॥1॥
ध्यावे देवाचे ते पाय । धीर सकळ उपाय ॥ध्रु.॥
करावी च चिंता। नाहीं लागती तत्वता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । शरण ह्मणवितां बरवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Truth itself bears fruit through truth. No force is needed.

Contemplate God's feet; patience is the remedy above all.

Worry need not be carried at all; it does not reach the essence of things.

Says Tuka, it is good to be called one who has taken refuge, with sincere devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Truth bears its fruit through truth; no force is needed. Contemplate God's feet; patience is the remedy above all. There is no need to carry worry at all; it never reaches the heart of things. Tuka says: with sincere love, it is good to be called one who has taken refuge.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is quieting the anxious effort that people bring to the spiritual life. Truth does its own work and ripens on its own; you do not have to push it. The single practice he names is to rest the mind on God's feet, with patience as the whole method. Worry is useless because it never touches the real nature of things. What is good, he says, is simply to be one who has truly taken refuge, with sincere love.

GATHA 1209 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fraud guru

मराठी मूळ

साधक जाले कळी । गुरुगुडीची लांब नळी ॥1॥
पचीं पडे मद्यपान । भांगभुकान हें साधन ॥ध्रु.॥
अभेदाचें पाठांतर । अति विषयीं पडिभर ॥2॥
चेल्यांचा सुकाळ । पिंड दंड भंगपाळ ॥3॥
सेवा मानधन । बरे इच्छेनें संपन्न ॥4॥
सोंगाच्या नरकाडी । तुका बोडोनियां सोडी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The seekers of this age have become like the long pipe of a smoking vessel.

Their practice is intoxication, cannabis, and liquor.

Parading the lesson of non-duality, they are enslaved to sense pleasures.

They have a surplus of disciples and a regime of begging-bowl, staff, and cannabis.

Their service and honor are merely wages earned for their own desires.

Says Tuka, I will shave these frauds bare and drive them out.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The seekers of this age have become like the long pipe of a smoking vessel. Their practice is intoxication, cannabis, and liquor. They parade the lesson of non-duality while they are slaves to the senses. They have a surplus of disciples and a regime of begging bowl, staff, and cannabis. Their service and their honor are only wages earned for their own desires. Tuka says: I will shave these frauds bare and drive them out.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram aims his scorn at a hollow kind of religion that was thriving in his time. The man who calls himself a seeker is really living on the smoking pipe, on intoxicants, while mouthing the high doctrine of non-duality to cover a life enslaved to the senses. The marks of the role, the disciples, the begging bowl, the staff, become a business run for the holder's own appetite and honor. The pattern he attacks is the use of spiritual language and trappings as a livelihood for the ego, and his harsh closing image is meant to strip that disguise off it.

GATHA 1210 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the net of illusion

मराठी मूळ

मज पाहातां हें लटिकें सकळ । कोठें मायाजाळ दावीं देवा ॥1॥
कोणाचा कोणासीं न धरे संबंध । आहे शुद्धबुद्ध ठायींचे ठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काढा काढा जी मोह बुंथा जाळ । नका लावूं बळें वेड आह्मां ॥2॥
जीव शिव कां ठेवियेलीं नांवें । सत्य तुह्मां ठावें असोनियां ॥3॥
सेवेच्या अभिळासें न धरा चि विचार । आह्मां दारोदार हिंडविलें ॥4॥
आहे तैसें आतां कळलियावरी । परतें सांडा दुरी दुजेपण ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे काय छायेचा अभिलाष। हंस पावे नाश तारागणीं ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To me, all this appears false. Where do You show me this net of illusion, O God?

No one truly holds connection with anyone else. All is shuddha-buddh, right where it always was.

Remove this veil, this net of delusion. Do not force this madness upon us.

Why have You set up the names "jiva" and "Shiva" when You know the truth?

Out of longing for Your service, I do not pause to reason. You have led me wandering from door to door.

Now that the truth has become clear, cast aside all duality and separateness far away.

Says Tuka, why cling to shadows? The swan perishes chasing the reflection of stars.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I look, all of this is false. Where is this net of illusion You show me, O God? No one truly holds any bond with anyone else. Everything is pure and awake, just where it always was. Take away, take away this veil, this net of delusion. Do not force this madness upon us. Why have You set up the names jiva and Shiva, when You yourself know the truth? Out of longing for Your service, I do not stop to reason; You have led me wandering from door to door. Now that the truth is clear, throw away all this duality and separateness, far off. Tuka says: why long for a shadow? The swan dies chasing the reflection of the stars.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the side of one who has seen through the world and turns, half in complaint, to ask God why the illusion was ever set up. To him every separate bond looks false and everything is already pure and awake exactly as it stands. The names jiva and Shiva, soul and Lord, he treats as labels God himself laid over a single reality. He admits his own longing made him chase after God from door to door without stopping to think. The closing image is the warning: chasing the appearance of separateness is like the swan that dives at the stars reflected in water and perishes for a shadow.

GATHA 1211 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the body is time's toy

मराठी मूळ

पंचभूतांचा गोंधळ । केला एकेठायीं मेळ । लाविला सबळ । अहंकार त्यापाठीं ॥1॥
तेथें काय मी तें माझें । कोण वागवी हें ओझें । देहा केवीं रिझे । हें काळाचें भातुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
जीव न देखे मरण । धरी नवी सांडी जीर्ण । संचित प्रमाण । भोगा शुभा अशुभा ॥2॥
इच्छा वाढवी ते वेल । खुंटावा तो खरा बोल । तुका ह्मणे मोल । झाकलें तें पावेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The five elements have been gathered in tumult, thrown together in one place. Behind them, a powerful ahamkar has been set.

What is "I" or "mine" in all this? Who carries this burden? Why should one delight in a body that is merely time's plaything?

The jiva does not see death. It sheds the worn and takes up the new. Accumulated karma is the measure: whether experience is auspicious or inauspicious.

Desire keeps extending its vine. The true word is what cuts it at the root. Says Tuka, what lies hidden shall be attained.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The five elements were gathered in a tumult and joined together in one place, and behind them a strong sense of I was set. What in this is I or mine? Who carries this burden? Why delight in a body that is only time's plaything? The soul does not see death; it takes a new body and drops the worn-out one. The stored-up karma is the measure of what it must undergo, good or bad. Desire keeps stretching out its vine. The true word is what cuts it at the root. Tuka says: what lies hidden shall be reached.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at the body as a temporary heap and asks who is really there to claim it. The five elements were thrown together and an ego attached behind them, so the I and the mine have no solid owner; the body is only time's toy. The soul, not seeing its own death, simply trades the old body for a new one, and the karma it has stored decides what it will suffer or enjoy. The one thing worth doing is to cut the climbing vine of desire at the root with the true word. When that craving is cut, what was hidden, the real self, is finally reached.

GATHA 1212 Longing and Separation

Longing, asking everyone for God

मराठी मूळ

पुसावेंसें हें चि वाटे । जें जें भेटे तयासी ॥1॥
देव कृपा करील मज । काय लाज राखील ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघियांचा विसर जाला। हा राहिला उदेग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता वाटे । कोण भेटे सांगेसें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I feel the urge to ask everyone I meet: will God show me His grace? Will He guard my honor?

All other concerns have been forgotten; only this restless yearning remains.

Says Tuka, worry fills me. Who is there that I might meet and ask?

IN PLAIN WORDS

I feel I must ask this of everyone I meet: will God show me His grace? Will He guard my honor? I have forgotten every other concern; only this restless yearning is left. Tuka says: worry fills me. Who is there I can meet and ask?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is in the grip of a single longing and lets it show without dressing it up. The one question he wants to put to everyone he meets is whether God will be gracious to him and keep his honor safe. That ache has crowded out every other concern in his life, leaving only the restlessness of waiting. The poem ends on the loneliness of such longing: he is full of worry and cannot find anyone who can answer the only question that matters to him.

GATHA 1213 Prayers

Prayer to be unmade, the burdensome "I"

मराठी मूळ

जाळा तुह्मी माझें जाणतें मीपण । येणें माझा खुण मांडियेला ॥1॥
खादलें पचे तरि च तें हित । ओकलिया थीत पिंड पीडी ॥ध्रु.॥
तरि भलें भोगे जोडिलें तें धन । पडिलिया खानें जीवनासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज तारीं गा विठ्ठला । नेणतां चि भला दास तुझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Lord, burn away this knowing "I" of mine. It has set itself up as my very mark and measure.

What is eaten must be digested; only then is it beneficial. If it is vomited out, the undigested lump torments the body.

It is good to spend the wealth one has earned. Hoarding it becomes a pit that swallows one's very life.

Says Tuka, save me, O Vitthal. Your servant is better off not knowing too much.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Burn away this knowing "I" of mine, O Lord. It has set itself up as my mark and measure. What you eat does you good only when it is digested. Vomited up, the undigested lump torments the body. It is good to spend the wealth you earn. Hoarded, it becomes a pit that swallows your life. Tuka says: save me, O Vitthal. Your servant is better off not knowing too much.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for God to destroy the very thing most people work to build: the self-aware "I" that takes itself as the measure of everything. He gives two homely figures for why this knowing harms him. Food only nourishes once it is digested; left as an undigested lump it sickens you, and so a cleverness you cannot absorb only torments you. Earned wealth is good only when spent; hoarded, it becomes a pit that swallows your life, and so does hoarded self-importance. He ends by asking to be kept simple: he would rather be God's servant who does not know too much than a man undone by his own knowing.

GATHA 1214 Autobiography

Gratitude, the lowly one God claimed

मराठी मूळ

याती मतिहीन रूपें लीन दीन । आणीक अवगुण जाणोनियां ॥1॥
केला त्या विठ्ठलें माझा अंगीकार । ऐसा हा विचार जाणोनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
जें कांहीं करितों तें माझे स्वहित । आली हे प्रचित कळों चित्ता ॥2॥
जालें सुख जीवा आनंद अपार । परमानंदें भार घेतला माझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Knowing me to be of humble birth, dull of wit, plain of appearance, and full of every other fault, Vitthal still accepted me as His own.

Whatever I do works for my own good; this recognition has become clear in my chitta.

The jiva is flooded with immeasurable joy, for the Supreme Bliss has taken up my burden.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am of humble birth, dull of wit, plain to look at, and full of every other fault. Knowing all this, Vitthal still took me as his own. Knowing this, I see it clearly: whatever I do works for my own good. This recognition has become plain in my chitta. My jiva is flooded with measureless joy. The Supreme Bliss has taken up my burden. Tuka says: this is the whole of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks honestly at himself and finds nothing to recommend him: low birth, a slow mind, plain looks, every fault. The wonder of the abhanga is that none of this disqualified him; Vitthal accepted him exactly as he was. Out of that acceptance comes a settled trust that whatever he does now turns to his own good, because God is the one steering it. He names the felt result without inflating it: a joy too large to contain, and the relief of a man whose burden has been picked up and carried by the Supreme Bliss itself.

GATHA 1215 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, trust that lets go of asking

मराठी मूळ

बहु उतावीळ भक्तीचिया काजा । होसी केशीराजा मायबापा ॥1॥
तुझ्या पायीं मज जालासे विश्वास । म्हणोनियां आस मोकलिली ॥ध्रु.॥
ऋषि मुनि सिद्ध साधक अपार । कळला विचार त्यांसी तुझा ॥2॥
नाहीं नास तें सुख दिलें तयांस । जाले जे उदास सर्वभावें ॥3॥
तुका म्हणे सुख न माये मानसीं । धरिले जीवेंसी पाय तुझे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are most eager for the cause of devotion, O Keshiraja, Father and Mother.

I have placed my trust at Your feet, and so I have let go of all expectations.

Sages, mystics, the perfected, and seekers beyond number have understood Your nature.

To those who became wholly detached in every way, You gave imperishable joy.

Says Tuka, the happiness cannot be contained in the manas. I have clasped Your feet with my very jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are so eager for the work of devotion, O Keshiraja, my Mother and Father. I have placed my trust at your feet, and so I have let go of every expectation. Sages, mystics, the perfected, and seekers beyond counting have understood your nature. To those who grew wholly detached, in every way, you gave joy that does not perish. Tuka says: the happiness will not fit inside my manas. I have clasped your feet with my very jiva.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram addresses Vitthal as the God who is keenest of all to help the devotee, and as both mother and father at once. Because he trusts those feet completely, he can stop asking for anything: the trust replaces the petition. He recalls that countless sages and seekers came to know God's nature, and that the gift God gave them, an imperishable joy, went to those who had let go of everything else. Then he points to his own state: a happiness too large for the mind to hold, born not of clever effort but of clasping God's feet with his whole life.

GATHA 1216 The Necessity of Experience

Awe, watching Maya from the shore

मराठी मूळ

माया मोहोजाळीं होतों सांपडलों । परि या विठ्ठला कृपा आली ॥1॥
काढूनि बाहेरि ठेविलों निराळा । कवतुक डोळां दाखविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाचे उडे माया करी कवतुक । नासिवंत सुखें साच केलीं ॥2॥
रडे कुंथ्दे दुःखें कुटितील माथा । एकासी रडतां तें ही मरे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज वाटतें नवल । मी माझे बोल ऐकोनियां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I was caught in the net of illusion, but Vitthal's grace descended upon me.

He pulled me out and set me apart, letting me watch the spectacle with my own eyes.

Illusion dances and performs its tricks, making perishable joys seem real.

Some weep and beat their heads in grief. While mourning for one, the mourner also perishes.

Says Tuka, wonder arises in me as I hear my own words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I was caught in the net of delusion. But Vitthal's grace came to me. He pulled me out and set me apart, and let my own eyes watch the show. Maya dances and leaps and plays her tricks, making perishable joys seem real. Some weep and beat their heads in grief. Mourning for one, the mourner himself dies too. Tuka says: wonder rises in me as I hear my own words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being snared in the net of delusion and then lifted clear of it by Vitthal's grace, set apart so that he now watches Maya as a spectator rather than a captive. From that vantage he sees the whole performance for what it is: an illusion that dances and dazzles, dressing perishable things up as real and worth grieving. He notes the cruelty of the trick, that a mourner is so bound to what dies that he dies along with it. The last line is the awe of a man surprised by his own clarity, hearing words come out of him that he could not have spoken from inside the net.

GATHA 1217 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the burden laid on God

मराठी मूळ

देहभाव आह्मी राहिलों ठेवूनि । निवांत चरणीं विठोबाच्या ॥1॥
आमुच्या हिताचा जाणोनि उपाव । तो चि पुढें देव करीतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
ह्मणउनी नाहीं सुख दुःख मनीं । ऐकिलिया कानीं वचनाचें ॥2॥
जालों मी निःसंग निवांत एकला । भार त्या विठ्ठला घालूनियां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों जयाचे अंकित । तो चि माझें हित सर्व जाणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have set aside the body-sense and rest quietly at the feet of Vithoba.

Knowing what is good for me, God Himself takes care of what lies ahead.

Therefore, neither joy nor sorrow arises in the manas when words reach my ears.

I have become detached, at ease, and alone, having placed my entire burden upon Vitthal.

Says Tuka, He to whom I belong, He alone knows my true welfare.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have set aside the body-sense and rest quietly at Vithoba's feet. Knowing what is good for me, God himself takes care of what lies ahead. So neither joy nor sorrow rises in my manas when words reach my ears. I have become unattached, at ease, alone, having laid my whole burden on Vitthal. Tuka says: the one I belong to, he alone knows my true good.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets go of identifying with the body and settles, quiet, at Vithoba's feet. Once he trusts that God knows his welfare and is managing whatever is to come, the future stops being his to worry over. The practical fruit is evenness: praise or blame, pleasant or harsh words, no longer swing his mind, because he is no longer the one in charge of outcomes. Having handed the entire burden to Vitthal, he can be detached, at peace, and alone, content that the one he belongs to is the only one who truly knows what is good for him.

GATHA 1218 Faith and Trust

Faith, the ripe fruit holding its stem

मराठी मूळ

आलें फळ तेव्हां राहिलें पिकोन । जरी तें जतन होय देंठीं ॥1॥
नामें चि सिद्ध नामें चि सिद्ध । व्यभिचारबुद्ध न पवतां ॥ध्रु.॥
चालिला पंथ तो पावईल ठाया । जरि आड तया नये कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मध्यें पडती आघात । तेणें होय घात हाणी लाभ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fruit, once ripe, has only to hold fast to its stem.

Through the Name alone, all is accomplished, so long as the buddhi does not turn faithless.

The one who walks the path will reach the destination, if nothing obstructs the way.

Says Tuka, the blows that fall in the middle are what determine loss and gain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fruit, once ripe, has only to hold fast to its stem. By the Name alone, all is accomplished; by the Name alone, all is accomplished, so long as the buddhi does not turn unfaithful. The one who walks the path will reach the destination, if nothing blocks the way. Tuka says: it is the blows that fall along the road that decide the loss and the gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives a single steady image for the spiritual life: a ripe fruit need do nothing but keep its hold on the stem until it falls in its own time. In the same way the Name accomplishes everything by itself, and the devotee's only task is not to let the buddhi turn faithless and let go. He says plainly that whoever stays on the road will arrive, provided nothing obstructs him. The warning lands in the last line: the real test is the blows that come midway, for it is how you meet them, not the destination itself, that decides whether you gain or lose.

GATHA 1219 Renunciation

Renunciation, the sweetness of solitude

मराठी मूळ

निरोधाचें मज न साहे वचन । बहु होतें मन कासावीस ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि जीवा न साहे संगति । बैसतां एकांतीं गोड वाटे ॥ध्रु.॥
देहाची भावना वासनेचा संग । नावडे उबग आला यांचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव अंतरे ज्यामुळें । आशामोहोजाळें दुःख वाढे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I cannot bear words of restraint. My mind grows deeply troubled.

That is why the jiva cannot bear company. Sitting alone feels sweet.

I am weary of the body-identification and the company of desire. They have become repellent to me.

Says Tuka, whatever causes God to recede, whatever multiplies through the net of craving and delusion, that only increases sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I cannot bear words of restraint. My mind grows deeply troubled by them. So my jiva cannot bear company. Sitting alone feels sweet to me. The body-sense, the company of desire: I no longer want them. I have grown sick of them. Tuka says: whatever causes God to recede, whatever multiplies through the net of craving and delusion, that only increases sorrow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a turning point where the ordinary pulls of life have become unbearable to him. Talk that hems him in agitates his mind, and company itself has lost its appeal, while solitude has begun to taste sweet. He has grown weary of identifying with the body and of keeping company with his own desires; they now repel rather than attract him. The closing line names the principle behind the recoil: anything that pushes God further away, anything that feeds the net of craving and delusion, can only enlarge sorrow, so he turns from it toward the solitude where God draws near.

GATHA 1220 Longing and Separation

Complaint, the unreachable God

मराठी मूळ

तुजशीं संबंध चि खोटा । परता परता रे थोंटा ॥1॥
देवा तुझें काय घ्यावें । आप आपणां ठकावें ॥ध्रु.॥
जेथें मुदल न ये हातां । व्याज मरावें लेखितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा । त्रिभुवनीं तुझा ठसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This relationship with You is simply false. Keep retreating, again and again, O Incomplete One.

What is there to receive from You, O God? One only ends up deceiving oneself.

Where the principal itself cannot come to hand, one only exhausts oneself calculating the interest.

Says Tuka, such is Your imprint across all three worlds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This bond with you is simply false. Keep backing away, again and again, O Incomplete One. What is there to receive from you, O God? You only end up cheating yourself. Where the principal itself never comes to hand, you wear yourself out reckoning the interest. Tuka says: such is your imprint across the three worlds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in the voice of a wounded lover and a frustrated creditor at once, calling the whole arrangement with God false because God keeps withdrawing. He pushes the complaint to its edge, even naming God "the Incomplete One," the one who never fully gives himself. His ledger image carries the sting: if you cannot even lay hold of the principal, the original promised presence, then counting up the interest is wasted effort that only exhausts you. The closing line widens the charge from his own case to all three worlds, saying this elusiveness is simply God's mark everywhere. Read against itself, the harshness is a goad: it points at the soul's own grasping, calculating relationship to God, which can never reach a Presence that refuses to be possessed.

GATHA 1221 Longing and Separation

Reproach, the debtors at God's door

मराठी मूळ

या चि हाका तुझे द्वारीं । सदा देखों रिणकरी ॥1॥
सदा करिसी खंड दंड । देवा बहु गा तूं लंड ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखें गोविसी भोजना । लपवूनियां आपणां ॥2॥
एकें एक बुझाविसी । तुका ह्मणे ठक होसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At Your door I see only debtors, calling out again and again.

You always impose cuts and penalties. O God, what a thorough scoundrel You are.

You lure with the promise of a feast, all while hiding Yourself away.

You put one off, then the next. Says Tuka, You are a cheat through and through.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At your door I see only debtors, calling out again and again. You are always cutting and fining what is owed. O God, what a thorough rogue you are. You lure people with the promise of a feast, all while hiding yourself away. You put one off, then the next. Tuka says: you are a cheat through and through.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up scolding names for God, picturing Vitthal's door crowded with debtors who keep crying out and never get paid in full. God, he says, behaves like a hard moneylender who docks and penalizes every claim, dangles the promise of a feast, and then keeps himself out of sight. The complaint is a lover's, not an unbeliever's: only someone certain God is real and worth waiting on would protest this loudly at being kept waiting. Aimed inward, it exposes the bargaining mind that comes to God as a creditor expecting payout, and meets instead a God who will not be reduced to a transaction.

GATHA 1222 Longing and Separation

Holy stubbornness, refusing every payoff

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी जाणों तुझा भाव । दृढ धरियेले पाव ॥1॥
फांकुं नेदूं चुकावितां । नेघों थोडें बहु देतां ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुता दिसाचें लिगाड । आलें होत होत जड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां । नेघें सर्वस्व ही देतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We know Your nature. We have seized Your feet firmly.

We will not be shaken loose when You try to slip away; we will not accept the little, even when You offer much.

This entanglement has gone on for many days and grown heavy.

Says Tuka, now I will not accept even all that You have to give.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We know your nature. We have seized your feet and hold them firm. We will not be shaken loose when you try to slip away. We will not take the little, even when you offer much. This entanglement has dragged on for many days and grown heavy. Tuka says: now I will not accept even everything you have to give.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram and his companions have caught on to God's evasive ways and decided to outlast them, gripping his feet and refusing to be shaken off no matter how he tries to slip free. They will not be bought off with small consolations, even generous ones, because those are not what they came for. The long entanglement has become heavy, and so the demand sharpens to its extreme: he wants neither little nor much, not even all that God could give. What he is holding out for is God himself, the giver and not the gifts, and nothing less than that will release his grip.

GATHA 1223 Longing and Separation

Reckoning, the debt God must settle

मराठी मूळ

रिण वैर हत्या । हें तों न सुटे नेंदितां ॥1॥
हें कां नेणां पांडुरंगा । तुह्मी सांगतसां जगा ॥ध्रु.॥
माझा संबंध तो किती। चुकवा लोकाची फजिती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे या चि साठीं । मज न घेतां नये तुटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Debt, enmity, and bloodshed: these do not end without being discharged.

You know this well, O Panduranga; You Yourself teach it to the world.

My claim upon You is clear enough. Clear it and spare me the shame before the world.

Says Tuka, this is precisely why there can be no severance without Your taking me in.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Debt, enmity, bloodshed: these do not end until they are discharged. Do you not know this, O Panduranga? You yourself teach it to the world. How large is my claim on you? Settle it, and spare me the shame before the world. Tuka says: this is the very reason there can be no parting until you take me in.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a legal and moral argument onto God: certain debts, like enmity and bloodshed, cannot simply be waved away; they must be settled before they release you. He reminds Panduranga that this is God's own teaching to the world, so God cannot pretend not to know it. He casts his bond with God as just such an outstanding account and asks God to clear it and spare him public disgrace. The conclusion turns the logic into a claim on grace: because the debt is real and unsettled, God is not free to part from him until God has taken him fully in. The harshness points at the devotee's own insistence that God honor the relationship he has staked his life on.

GATHA 1224 Longing and Separation

Aggrieved love, the honor never sought

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं मागितला । तुह्मां मान म्यां विठ्ठला ॥1॥
जे हे करविली फजिती । माझी एवढी जना हातीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं केला पोट । पुढें घालूनि बोभाट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धरूनि हात । नाहीं नेले दिवानांत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I never asked You for any honor, O Vitthal.

Yet what humiliation You have brought upon me, placing me in the hands of the people.

I never made a public uproar, throwing myself before You with my complaints.

Says Tuka, I never took You by the hand and hauled You into court.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I never asked you for any honor, O Vitthal. Yet look at the humiliation you have brought on me, handing me over into the hands of the people. I never made a public uproar, throwing myself before you with my complaints. Tuka says: I never took you by the hand and dragged you into court.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram protests that whatever exposure and shame he now suffers, he never went looking for it. He asked God for no honor and no status, yet finds himself delivered into the hands of the crowd, made a public spectacle. He insists he behaved with restraint throughout: he did not throw a loud scene before God, did not seize God by the hand and haul him before a court to force a judgment. The grievance is the wounded protest of a devotee who feels mishandled by the very God he trusted, and it quietly turns the listener toward examining how much of our own exposure we blame on God while claiming clean hands ourselves.

GATHA 1225 The Nature of God

The mirror God, you see your own dealing

मराठी मूळ

तूं पांढरा स्पटिक मणी । करिसी आणिकां त्याहुनि ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि तुझ्या दारा । न येत ठकती दातारा ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझी ठावी नांदनूक । अवघा बुडविला लोक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याचें घेसी । त्यास हें चि दाखविसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are a white crystal, and You make others even more so than Yourself.

That is why those who do not come to Your door are the ones who are cheated, O Generous One.

Your way of dwelling is well known: You have submerged the entire world.

Says Tuka, whoever You take something from, You show them exactly this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are a white crystal. You make others into your own color. So those who never come to your door are the ones who get cheated, generous Lord. Your way of living is well known: you have drowned the whole world. Tuka says: whatever you take from a person, that is exactly what you show them back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teasing out a hard truth about how God deals with us. He calls God a clear crystal that takes on and returns whatever color is placed against it: God gives back to each person what that person brings. So the loss falls on those who never approach God's door at all, because they never offer anything to be returned. The line about drowning the whole world points at how this same law sweeps everyone along. The closing turn is the key: God shows you your own dealing, mirrors your own measure back to you, so the quality of what you receive is set by the quality of what you give.

GATHA 1226 Longing and Separation

Bold prayer, indignant at others' pain

मराठी मूळ

बोलतों निकुरें । नव्हेत सलगीचीं उत्तरें ॥1॥
माझे संतापलें मन । परपीडा ऐकोन ॥ध्रु.॥
अंगावरि आलें । तोंवरि जाईल सोसिलें ॥2॥
तुज भक्तांची आण देवा । जरि तुका येथें ठेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I speak with bluntness. These are not the easy words of familiarity.

My mind is enraged at hearing of the suffering of others.

Whatever has fallen upon me, I have endured until now.

Says Tuka, I swear by Your devotees, O God: if You mean to keep Tuka here, then You must act.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am speaking bluntly. These are not the soft words of friendship. My mind is on fire when I hear of the suffering of others. Whatever has come upon me, I have borne it until now. Tuka says: I swear to you by your devotees, God: if you mean to keep Tuka here, then act.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram drops the easy tone of a familiar friend and speaks to God without softening. What enrages him is not his own pain, which he has endured in silence, but the suffering of other people. He makes that the ground of a demand: he will not stay quiet and polite while others are crushed. The oath sworn by God's own devotees is his most binding form of pleading, and the stakes are plain: if God wants Tuka to keep living and serving here, then God must intervene and end the suffering he cannot bear to watch.

GATHA 1227 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the small God we set before us

मराठी मूळ

बुद्धीचा जनिता लक्ष्मीचा पति । आठवितां चित्तीं काय नव्हे ॥1॥
आणिकां उपायां कोण वांटी मन । सुखाचें निधान पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
गीत गावों नाचों छंदें वावों टाळी । वैष्णवांचे मेळीं सुखरूप ॥2॥
अनंत ब्रह्मांडें एके रोमावळी । आह्मी केला भोळीं भावें उभा ॥3॥
लडिका हा केला संवसारसिंधु ॥ मोक्ष खरा बंधु नाहीं पुढें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याच्या नामाचे अंकित । राहिलों निंश्चत त्याच्या बळें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is the source of buddhi and the lord of Lakshmi. What is impossible when He is recalled in the chitta?

Why would the mind scatter itself after other remedies? Panduranga is the treasure of all happiness.

Let us sing, let us dance, let us clap our hands in rhythm, blissful in form, in the company of the Vaishnavas.

Infinite universes rest in a single hair on His body. We, with artless devotion, have made Him stand before us.

This ocean of worldly existence has been made into a mere toy. Moksha is the true companion; there is none other beyond.

Says Tuka, I am marked by the Name of that One. I remain undisturbed by His strength.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is the source of wisdom and the husband of Lakshmi. When he is held in the heart, what cannot be done? Why scatter the mind after other remedies? Panduranga is the treasure of all joy. Let us sing, let us dance, let us clap in rhythm, full of bliss in the company of the Vaishnavas. Countless universes rest in a single hair of his body, yet with simple love we made him stand before us. This ocean of worldly life has been turned into a plaything. Liberation is the true kinsman; there is nothing beyond it. Tuka says: I am marked by his Name. By his strength I rest with nothing to fear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the immensity of God beside the intimacy of devotion and lets the two press against each other. The same one who is the source of all intelligence and consort of Lakshmi, in whom infinite universes hang from a single hair, is the one whom artless devotees have coaxed into standing on the brick at Pandhari. That is the marvel he points at: the simple love of the Vaishnavas brings the boundless God down to a form you can sing and dance before. Once he is held in the heart, the whole frightening ocean of worldly life shrinks to a toy. The closing claim names where Tukaram stands: he belongs to the Name, and on that strength alone he rests without fear.

GATHA 1228 The Nature of God

God as mother, no need to plan

मराठी मूळ

न लगे मायेसी बाळें निरवावें । आपुल्या स्वभावें ओढे त्यासी ॥1॥
मज कां लागला करणें विचार । ज्याचा जार भार त्याचे मायां ॥ध्रु.॥
गोड धड त्यासी ठेवी न मगतां । समाधान खातां नेदी मना ॥2॥
खेळतां गुंतलें उमगूनी आणी । बैसोनियां स्तनीं लावी बळें ॥3॥
त्याच्या दुःखेंपणें आपण खापरीं । लाही तळीं वरी होय जैसी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे देह विसरे आपुला । आघात तो त्याला लागों नेदी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother need not send her child an invitation; the child is drawn to her by its own nature.

Why then should I make any plans? Whoever is God's own, God as Mother bears that one's every burden.

She keeps the good and nourishing food ready for the child without being asked, and does not let the child's mind be unsettled while eating.

When the child wanders off in play, she notices and brings it back, sits it down, and presses it to her breast by force.

When the child is in pain, she herself suffers; she turns and leaps like grain popping in the fire.

Says Tuka, she forgets her own body and does not let any harm touch the child.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother does not need to be invited by her child. By her own nature she is drawn to it. So why should I make plans? Whoever is God's own, God as mother carries their whole burden. She keeps the good, sweet food ready without being asked, and does not let the child's mind be troubled while it eats. When the child wanders off in play, she notices, brings it back, sits it down, and presses it to her breast by force. When the child is in pain, she suffers too; she leaps and turns like grain popping in the fire. Tuka says: she forgets her own body, and lets no harm touch the child.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the anxious habit of planning our own rescue by changing the picture: God is not a master to be petitioned but a mother who comes by her own nature. A child does not arrange for its mother's care; she is already drawn to it, already feeding it, already chasing it down when it strays. So the devotee's striving and scheming is beside the point, because God carries the whole burden of the one who belongs to God. The image of the mother leaping like grain bursting in the fire when her child hurts is the heart of it: God's love is not cool and managerial but anguished, self-forgetting, fiercely protective. The teaching is to stop calculating and rest in that care.

GATHA 1229 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the Brahmin who scorns the Name

मराठी मूळ

ब्राह्मण तो नव्हे ऐसी ज्यासी बुद्धि । पाहा श्रुतीमधीं विचारुनि ॥1॥
जयासी नावडे हरिनामकीर्तन । आणीक नृत्य न वैष्णवांचें ॥ध्रु.॥
सत्य त्याचे वेळे घडला व्यभिचार । मातेसी वेव्हार अंत्यजाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें मानी आनसारिखें । तात्काळ तो मुखें कुष्ट होय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is no true Brahmin who holds such notions. Look into the scriptures and consider carefully.

One who does not love the kirtan of Hari's name, and does not love the dancing of the Vaishnavas:

at the very moment of his conception, his mother committed adultery with one cast out by society.

Says Tuka, whoever thinks otherwise about what is said here, let leprosy appear on his face at once.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is no true Brahmin who holds such notions. Look into the scriptures and think it through. One who does not love the kirtan of Hari's name, who does not love the dancing of the Vaishnavas: at the very moment he was conceived, his mother lay with an outcast. Tuka says: whoever thinks otherwise about what is said here, let leprosy break out on his face at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the proudest claim of birth, Brahmin status, and stakes it entirely on love of God rather than on lineage. The pattern he attacks is the man who wears the rank yet feels no love for Hari's kirtan and no joy in the dancing of devotees. Against him Tukaram hurls the most violent insult available in his world, denying the man's very pedigree, and tops it with a curse on anyone who would soften the claim. The intensity is deliberate provocation: he is shattering the assumption that the sacred thread makes a man holy. What makes a Brahmin, he insists, is not blood but a heart that loves the Name.

GATHA 1230 Social Criticism

True caste is devotion, not birth

मराठी मूळ

ब्राह्मण तो याती अंतेज असतां । मानावा तत्वता निश्चयेसी ॥1॥
रामकृष्णें नाम उच्चारी सरळें । आठवी सांवळें रूप मनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शांति क्षमा दया अलंकार अंगीं । अभंग प्रसंगीं धैर्यवंत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गेल्या शडऊर्मी अंगें । सांडुनियां मग ब्रह्मं चि तो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if one is born into a family the world despises, he should be considered a true Brahmin in spirit and in truth.

If he sincerely chants the names Rama and Krishna and holds that beautiful dark form in his mind, if peace, forgiveness, and compassion adorn his being, if he is unshakable and courageous in every situation,

Says Tuka, once the six waves of bodily existence are cast aside and conquered, such a one is Brahman itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even a man born into a family the world despises should be held a true Brahmin, truly and for certain, if he chants the names Rama and Krishna with a clean heart and keeps that dark, beautiful form in his mind. If peace, forgiveness, and compassion adorn him, if he stays unbroken and brave in every situation, Tuka says: once the six waves of bodily life are thrown off and conquered, he is Brahman itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the bright half of Tukaram's teaching on caste, the mirror of his attack on the false Brahmin. He says plainly that birth into a despised family is no bar at all: the lowest-born devotee who loves Rama and Krishna with a sincere heart is to be honored as a true Brahmin. The marks he names are inward, peace, forgiveness, compassion, steadfast courage, not ritual or descent. And he carries it to its limit: when such a one masters the six surges of bodily existence, he is not merely worthy but is Brahman itself. Devotion and conquered passion, not the accident of birth, decide who is holy.

GATHA 1231 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false guru

मराठी मूळ

एक करिती गुरु गुरु । भोंवता भारु शिष्यांचा ॥1॥
पुंस नाहीं पाय चारी । मनुष्य परी कुतरीं तीं ॥ध्रु.॥
परस्त्री मद्यपान। पेंडखान माजविलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निर्भर चित्तीं । अधोगती जावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Some go about proclaiming themselves guru upon guru, with a crowd of disciples surrounding them.

They walk on two feet like men, yet they are dogs.

They have nurtured adultery, drunkenness, and gluttony.

Says Tuka, they proceed toward the lower realms with chitta utterly carefree.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Some keep proclaiming themselves guru, guru, with a crowd of disciples around them. They have no tails, they walk on two feet; they look like men, but they are dogs. They have nursed adultery, drinking, and gluttony. Tuka says: their minds are perfectly at ease as they head for the lower realms.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram aims this at the pattern of the self-appointed teacher who collects followers while feeding his own appetites. The sting of the image, men who are really dogs, is that the title and the crowd are mistaken for holiness when the inner life is given over to lust, drink, and greed. The most damning stroke is the last: such teachers feel no unease at all, their conscience untroubled even as they sink. The warning is for anyone tempted to measure a guide by the size of his following rather than by how he lives, and to examine whether one's own untroubled ease might itself be a sign of a downward road.

GATHA 1232 The Moral Ideal

Moral teaching, sin lives close at hand

मराठी मूळ

एका पुरुषा दोघी नारी । पाप वसे त्याचे घरीं ॥1॥
पाप न लगे धुंडावें । लागेल तेणें तेथें जावें ॥ध्रु.॥
कांहीं दुसरा विचार । न लगे करावा चि फार ॥2॥
असत्य जे वाणी । तेथें पापाची च खाणी ॥3॥
सत्य बोले मुखें । तेथें उचंबळती सुखें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे दोन्ही । जवळी च लाभहानी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where a man has two wives, sin dwells in that house.

One need not search for sin; wherever sin resides, one must go there to meet it.

No further deliberation is needed on this.

A tongue that speaks falsehood is itself a mine of sin.

But where truth is spoken from the mouth, happiness overflows.

Says Tuka, both profit and loss are always near at hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where a man keeps two wives, sin lives in that house. You need not go hunting for sin; where it lives, go there and you will meet it. There is nothing more to work out about this. A tongue that speaks falsehood is itself a mine of sin. But where the mouth speaks truth, joy overflows. Tuka says: both gain and loss are always near at hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes moral cause and effect concrete and close, not abstract or far off. He names a divided household and a lying tongue as places where harm simply dwells, so that one need not search for trouble; go where the wrong is and you will find its consequence. Set against the lying mouth is the truthful one, from which happiness overflows of its own accord. The closing line is the frame: profit and loss are not distant rewards and punishments but stand right beside every word and choice. How you live this moment is already the gain or the loss you are storing up.

GATHA 1233 Devotion to Vitthal

The Name burns karma away

मराठी मूळ

जळातें संचित । ऐसी आहे धर्म नीत ॥1॥
माझ्या विठोबाचे पाय । वेळोवेळां मनीं ध्याय ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदी कर्म घडों । कोठें आडराणें पडों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मळ । राहों नेदी ताप जाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Accumulated karma is burned away: such is the way of dharma.

Meditate upon the feet of my Vithoba again and again, in the mind.

He does not let wrongful action arise, nor let one fall into any wilderness of obstruction.

Says Tuka, He will not allow impurity to remain. He burns away the blaze of affliction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stored-up karma is burned away: this is the law of dharma. Meditate on the feet of my Vithoba again and again in your mind. He does not let wrong action arise, nor let you fall into any wilderness of confusion. Tuka says: he will not let the stain remain; he burns away the blaze of affliction.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers a single practice as the whole of dharma: hold the feet of Vithoba in the mind, again and again. He promises that this remembrance works on three fronts at once. It burns away the karma already accumulated; it keeps fresh wrongdoing from arising and keeps you from straying into confusion; and it does not let the stain of impurity settle or the fire of suffering keep burning. The claim is that constant remembrance of God is not one duty among many but the thing that cleans the past, guards the present, and quenches affliction altogether.

GATHA 1234 The Moral Ideal

Social criticism, the loose tongue among saints

मराठी मूळ

संतापाशीं बहु असावें मर्यादा । फलकटाचा धंदा उर फोडी ॥1॥
वासर तो भुंके गाढवाचेपरी । उडे पाठीवरि दंड तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
समय नेणें तें वेडें चाहाटळ । अवगुणाचा ओंगळ मान पावे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय वांयां चाळवणी । पिटपिटघाणी हागवणेची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should observe great restraint in the company of saints. The business of idle chatter only bursts one's own chest.

That one barks like a donkey, and for that it receives blows upon its back.

One who does not know the proper time or place is a prattling wanderer who earns only the foul dishonor that vice brings.

Says Tuka, why this useless babbling? It is nothing but the clacking stench of shit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the company of saints you must keep great restraint. The trade of idle chatter only splits your own chest open. Such a one barks like a donkey, and for that, blows land on his back. The one who does not know the right time or place is a babbling fool who earns only the foul shame that vice brings. Tuka says: what is the use of this empty prattle? It is nothing but the clattering stench of diarrhea.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is blunt about the discipline of speech in holy company. The pattern he attacks is the person who cannot hold his tongue, who chatters and shows off and times his words badly in a gathering meant for restraint. He piles on coarse images, braying like a donkey, earning blows, the clatter and stench of loose bowels, to make idle talk feel as ugly as it is. The point is self-examination, not contempt for any one person: empty babble gains nothing but disgrace, and even one's own chest is wounded by it. In the presence of the holy, silence and measured speech are themselves a practice.

GATHA 1235 The Saints

Saints, seek only their company

मराठी मूळ

घेसी तरी घेई संताची भेटी । आणीक ते गोष्टी नको मना ॥1॥
सर्वभावें त्यांचें देव भांडवल । आणीक ते बोल न बोलती ॥ध्रु.॥
करिसील तो करीं संतांचा सांगत । आणीक ते मात नको मना ॥2॥
बैससी तरी बैस संतां च मधीं । आणीक ते बुद्धि नको मना ॥3॥
जासी तरि जाई संतांचिया गांवां । होईल विसावा तेथें मना ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे संत सुखाचे सागर । मना निरंतर धणी घेई ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you would seek anything, seek the company of saints. Let no other thought enter your mind.

God is their only treasure; they speak of nothing else.

If you would keep company, keep it only with saints. Let no other counsel enter your mind.

If you would sit, sit only among saints. Let no other buddhi enter your mind.

If you would go anywhere, go to the village of saints. There alone will your mind find rest.

Says Tuka, the saints are the ocean of joy. O mind, drink your fill of them without ceasing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you would take anything, take the company of the saints. Let no other thought into your mind. With their whole being God is their wealth; they speak of nothing else. Whatever you do, keep the company of saints. Let no other talk into your mind. If you would sit, sit only among the saints. Let no other thinking into your mind. If you would go anywhere, go to the village of the saints. There your mind will find rest. Tuka says: the saints are oceans of joy. O mind, drink your fill of them without end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns every ordinary choice, what to seek, whom to keep company with, where to sit, where to go, into a single instruction: choose the saints. The refrain that no other thought should enter the mind makes it a discipline of attention, not just good advice. He gives the reason in passing: the saints' whole treasure is God, and they speak of nothing else, so to be near them is to be steeped in God. The promise at the end is rest and joy without limit, the mind drinking endlessly from an ocean. The path he describes is not a private effort but a matter of company: become what you stay near.

GATHA 1236 The Saints

Saints, a beggar in their village

मराठी मूळ

संतांचिये गांवीं प्रेमाचा सुकाळ । नाहीं तळमळ दुःखलेश ॥1॥
तेथें मी राहीन होऊनि याचक । घालितील भीक ते चि मज ॥ध्रु.॥
संतांचिये गांवीं वरो भांडवल । अवघा विठ्ठल धन वित्त ॥2॥
संतांचे भोजन अमृताचे पान । करिती कीर्तन सर्वकाळ ॥3॥
संतांचा उदीम उपदेशाची पेठ । प्रेमसुख साटीं घेती देती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें आणिक नाहीं परी । ह्मणोनि भिकारी जालों त्यांचा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the village of the saints, love is in abundance. There is no trace of sorrow or suffering.

I shall dwell there as a beggar; whatever alms they give, I shall accept.

In the village of the saints, the chief treasure is Vitthal Himself, their only wealth and property.

The saints' food is the drink of nectar. They sing kirtan at all hours.

The saints' trade is the market of instruction. They buy and sell the joy of love.

Says Tuka, there is nothing else there. That is why I have become their beggar.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the village of the saints, love is in plenty. There is no anguish, not a trace of sorrow. There I will live as a beggar; whatever alms they give, that is enough for me. In the village of the saints the chief wealth is Vitthal himself, their only riches. The saints' food is the drinking of nectar; they sing kirtan at every hour. The saints' trade is the marketplace of teaching; they buy and sell the joy of love. Tuka says: there is nothing else there, and so I have become their beggar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the company of saints as a whole village with its own economy, and asks for the lowest place in it. Its abundance is love, and it holds no sorrow at all; its single wealth is Vitthal himself, so there is nothing else to possess. He chooses to enter not as a peer but as a beggar, content with whatever alms of grace the saints hand down. The images of nectar-food, ceaseless kirtan, and a market where the only goods traded are teaching and the joy of love describe a life wholly given over to God. Because that village deals in nothing but God, Tukaram wants nothing but to live there on its charity.

GATHA 1237 The Saints

Praise of the saints, God serves them

मराठी मूळ

संतांचें सुख जालें या देवा । ह्मणऊनि सेवा करी त्यांची ॥1॥
तेथें माझा काय कोण तो विचार । वर्णावया पार महिमा त्यांचा ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्गुण आकार जाला गुणवंत । घाली दंडवत पूजोनियां ॥2॥
तीर्थॉ त्यांची इच्छा करिती नित्यकाळ । व्हावया निर्मळ आपणांसी ॥3॥
अष्टमा सिद्धींचा कोण आला पाड । वागों नेदी आड कोणी तया ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ते बिळया शिरोमणी । राहिलों चरणीं निकटवासें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God Himself is delighted by the saints. That is why He serves them.

Who am I, and what is my capacity to describe their glory?

The formless One took form and became the quality-bearing One. He prostrates before them and worships them.

The holy places long to visit them at all hours, in order to purify themselves.

What does the prestige of the eight supernatural powers matter? None of them can stand in the saints' way.

Says Tuka, they are the crown jewels of all the powerful. I have remained at their feet in intimate nearness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints have become God's own happiness. That is why he serves them. Who am I to weigh it? What capacity have I to tell the limit of their glory? The formless One took on form and quality; he bows down full length before them and worships them. The holy places long, at every hour, to visit the saints, so that they themselves may be made clean. What weight do the eight powers carry next to them? None of those powers can stand in their way. Tuka says: they are the crown jewels of all who are strong. I have stayed at their feet, living close.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lifts the saints above everything else by pointing at who waits on them: God himself. The formless takes form and prostrates before them, and the holy tirthas come to them to be purified, so the saints are the source rather than the receivers of holiness. Even the eight siddhis, the supernatural powers most seekers crave, cannot block or overshadow them. Against that height Tukaram refuses to rank himself; he only claims the one thing he wants, to live pressed close to their feet. The poem makes nearness to the saints, not power or status, the true treasure.

GATHA 1238 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, praise and insult touch nothing

मराठी मूळ

जो मानी तो देईल काई । न मनी तो नेईल काई ॥1॥
आह्मां विठ्ठल सर्वभूतीं । राहो चित्तीं भलतैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
आध्येन तें जना काई । जल्पें वांयांविण ठायीं ॥2॥
वंदी निंदी तुज तो गा। तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who honors You gives You nothing lasting. The one who insults You takes nothing real away.

For us, Vitthal dwells in all beings. Let Him remain in the chitta, however He will.

What can idle prattle do to anyone? Words spoken in vain settle nowhere.

Says Tuka, whether they praise or revile You, O Panduranga, it is You they touch.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who honors you gives you nothing that lasts. The one who insults you takes nothing real away. For us, Vitthal lives in every being. Let him stay in the heart however he wishes. What can idle chatter do to anyone? Words spoken for nothing settle nowhere. Tuka says: whether they praise you or revile you, O Panduranga, it is you they touch.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is steadying himself against the noise of human opinion. Praise adds nothing to God and insult subtracts nothing, so neither should rule a devotee's heart. Because Vitthal dwells in all beings, every word, kind or cruel, lands on God and not on a separate self. The point is not to silence others but to stop staking your peace on their verdict; empty talk has no place to settle when the heart is fixed on Panduranga. Surrender here means letting God remain in the chitta on his own terms, untouched by reputation.

GATHA 1239 Longing and Separation

Longing, asking to see and embrace the feet

मराठी मूळ

भावबळें कैसा जालासी लाहान । मागें संतीं ध्यान वर्णिनयेलें ॥1॥
तें मज उचित करूनियां देवा । दाखवीं केशवा मायबापा ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहोनियां डोळां बोलेन मी गोष्टी । आळंगुनि मिठी देइन पांयीं ॥2॥
चरणीं दृष्ट उभा राहेन समोर । जोडोनियां कर पुढें दोन्ही ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे उत्कंठित वासना । पुरवीं नारायणा आर्त माझें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the power of devotion, You became small. The saints of old have described Your meditation.

Show me that vision now, O Keshava, Father and Mother, in a form befitting me.

Let me see You with my own eyes and speak to You. Let me embrace Your feet and cling to them.

Let me stand before You with my gaze fixed upon Your feet and my two hands folded.

Says Tuka, my longing is desperate. Fulfill this yearning, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the strength of devotion you became small. The saints of long ago described how you meditate. Make that fitting for me now, O God; show it to me, Keshava, my mother and father. Let me see you with my eyes and speak to you. Let me embrace your feet and cling to them. Let me stand before you, my gaze on your feet, my two hands folded in front. Tuka says: my longing is desperate. Fulfill this ache of mine, O Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking for the personal, embodied vision that bhakti makes possible. He recalls that devotion drew the vast God down into a small, approachable form, the form the old saints contemplated, and he begs for that same nearness shaped to his own capacity. His requests are concrete and bodily: to see, to speak, to embrace the feet, to stand with folded hands before God. This is not an abstract realization he wants but a face-to-face meeting. He closes by naming the intensity plainly, calling his longing desperate and laying the whole ache before Narayana to satisfy.

GATHA 1240 Longing and Separation

Longing, the servant calls in the debt

मराठी मूळ

कृपाळु ह्मणोनि बोलती पुराणें । निर्धार वचनें यांचीं मज ॥1॥
आणीक उपाय नेणें मी कांहीं । तुझें वर्म ठायीं पडे तैसें ॥ध्रु.॥
नये धड कांहीं बोलतां वचन । रिघालों शरण सर्वभावें ॥2॥
कृपा करिसी तरि थोडें तुज काम । माझा तरि श्रम बहु हरे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज दाखवीं श्रीमुख । हरेल या भूक डोळयांची ॥4॥
आणीक दुसरें नये माझ्या मना । राहिली वासना तुझ्या पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
माझिये वारचें कांहीं जडभारी । तुजविण वारी कोण एक ॥3॥
तुझे आह्मी दास आमुचा तूं ऋणी । चालत दूरुनी आलें मागें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां घेतलें धरणें । हिशोबाकारणें भेटी देई ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Puranas say You are merciful. Their words are my certainty.

I know no other strategy. I simply fall where Your secret lies.

I cannot even speak a coherent sentence. I have taken refuge with all my being.

If You are gracious, it is a small matter for You, yet it removes my great burden of suffering.

Says Tuka, show me Your blessed face. The hunger of my eyes will be stilled.

My mind desires nothing other than You. My longing rests only at Your feet.

Whatever is heavy and burdensome upon me, who but You can relieve it?

We are Your servants, and You are our debtor. This claim has been running for a long time.

Says Tuka, I have sat down in protest now. Grant me an audience, that the account may be settled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Puranas say you are merciful; their words are my one certainty. I know no other strategy. I just fall where your secret lies. I cannot even speak a whole sentence straight. I have taken refuge with all my being. If you are kind, it is a small thing for you, yet it lifts my heavy burden of suffering. Tuka says: show me your blessed face, and the hunger of my eyes will be stilled. My mind wants nothing else. My longing rests only at your feet. Whatever lies heavy and crushing on me, who but you can lift it? We are your servants and you are our debtor; this claim has been running a long time from far back. Tuka says: now I have sat down in protest. Give me an audience, so the account can be settled.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram leans his whole case on one fact the scriptures repeat, that God is merciful, since he has no method or eloquence of his own. He admits he cannot argue or perform; he can only fall at the spot where God's mercy hides and take refuge completely. Then he presses a bold claim: a servant has served, so the master has become a debtor, and the debt is overdue. He stages a dharna, the old practice of sitting down at someone's door and refusing to leave until justice is given, and demands a face-to-face meeting to settle the books. The harshness is aimed at God in intimacy, not irreverence; longing has grown into a claim of right that only the sight of God's face can answer.

GATHA 1241 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting for the word of acceptance

मराठी मूळ

1242. कई मात माझे ऐकती कान । बोलतां वचन संतां मुखीं ॥1॥
केला पांडूरंगें तुझा अंगीकार । मग होइल धीर माझ्या जीवा ॥ध्रु.॥
ह्मणऊनि मुख अवलोकितों पाय । हे चि मज आहे थोरी आशा ॥2॥
माझिया मनाचा हा चि विश्वास । न करीं सायास साधनांचे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज होईल भरवसा । तरलों मी ऐसा साच भाव ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When will my ears hear the saints speak the word: that Panduranga has accepted me?

Only then will my jiva find courage.

Therefore I keep my gaze upon Your feet, waiting for that word. This alone is my great hope.

This one trust holds my mind. I seek no other practice.

Says Tuka, when I receive that assurance, I will know in truth that I have crossed over.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When will my ears hear the news, the word spoken from the saints' mouths: that Panduranga has taken you for his own? Only then will my life find courage. So I keep looking toward your face and your feet. This alone is my great hope. This one trust holds my mind. I attempt no other practice. Tuka says: when that assurance comes to me, I will know in truth, this is real, that I have crossed over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is waiting for a single confirmation: word from the saints that God has accepted him. He treats their voice as the trustworthy channel, the place where God's acceptance would be made known. Until that word comes his heart cannot rest, so he keeps his gaze on God's feet and stakes everything on this one hope. He sets aside every other spiritual technique, trusting that acceptance, not effort, is what carries a soul across. The poem captures the suspense of grace: the seeker has done all he can and now simply watches for the sign that he has been received.

GATHA 1242 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the God caught by devotion

मराठी मूळ

दोन्ही हात ठेवुनि कटीं । उभा भीवरेच्या तटीं । कष्टलासी साटीं । भक्तिकाजें विठ्ठला ॥1॥
भागलासी मायबापा । बहु श्रम केल्या खेपा । आह्मालागीं सोपा । दैत्या काळ कृतांत ॥ध्रु.॥
होतासी क्षीरसागरीं । मही दाटली असुरीं । ह्मणोनियां घरीं। गौळयांचे अवतार ॥2॥
केला पुंडलिकें गोवा । तुज पंढरीसि देवा। तुका ह्मणे भावा । साटीं हातीं सांपडसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With both hands placed upon His hips, He stands on the bank of the Bhima. You have wearied Yourself, O Vitthal, laboring for the sake of devotion.

O Father and Mother, You have toiled through many journeys for our sake. The fierce destroyer of demons has become gentle and easy for us.

You were resting in the ocean of milk, but the earth was overrun by demons. That is why You took birth in the house of cowherds.

Pundalik caught You in his snare and kept You in Pandhari. Says Tuka, You are caught by the hand of devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Both hands resting on his hips, he stands on the bank of the Bhima. You have worn yourself out, O Vitthal, laboring for the sake of devotion. O mother and father, you have toiled through many journeys for our sake. The fierce destroyer of demons has become gentle and easy for us. You were resting in the ocean of milk, but the earth was crowded with demons; that is why you took birth in the house of the cowherds. Pundalik caught you in his snare and held you here in Pandhari. Tuka says: you are caught in the hand of devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures Vitthal in his familiar pose, hands on hips at Pandharpur by the river, and reads tenderness into it: God has tired himself out for love of his devotees. He gathers the avatars into one thought, the Lord who slays demons made gentle for ordinary people, descending from the milk ocean into a cowherd's home because the earth needed him. The hinge is the story of Pundalik, whose devotion to his parents kept God standing and waiting at Pandhari. Tukaram turns the whole sweep of divine power into proof of one thing: the almighty God is willingly bound, caught and held in the hand of a devotee's love.

GATHA 1243 The Power of the Name

The Name, the formless made visible

मराठी मूळ

गोड जालें पोट धालें । अवचित वाचे आलें । ह्मणतां पाप गेलें । विठ्ठलसें वाचेसी ॥1॥
सत्य माना रे सकळ । उद्धरिला अजामेळ । पातकी चांडाळ । नामासाटीं आपुलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्त पावलें आनंदा । सुखसमाधीतें सदा । ह्मणतां गोविंदा । वेळोवेळां वाचेसी ॥2॥
हें जाणती अनुभवी । जया चाड तो चोजवी । तुका ह्मणे दावी । रूप तें चि अरूपा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The belly is full and satisfied. The word came to the lips unbidden. By merely saying Vitthal, sin departed from the tongue.

Believe this truth, all of you: Ajamela, sinner and fallen one, was redeemed for the sake of His Name alone.

The chitta has reached bliss and abides in samadhi always. By saying Govinda, again and again, at the lips.

Those who have tasted know this. The one who truly desires it cherishes it deeply. Says Tuka, He reveals that very form which is the formless.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The belly is full and content. The word came to my lips unasked. Just by saying Vitthal, sin left my tongue. Believe this truth, all of you: Ajamela, a sinner, a fallen chandala, was saved for the sake of His Name alone. The heart has reached joy and rests always in the bliss of samadhi, just by saying Govinda, again and again, at the lips. Those who have tasted it know this; the one who truly wants it cherishes it. Tuka says: He shows that very form which is the formless.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the Name as complete nourishment that needs no preparation. To utter Vitthal is enough to clear sin and fill the heart, and he cites Ajamela, the great sinner saved at death simply by calling a divine name, to insist that the Name's power has no limit and no precondition. Saying Govinda over and over keeps the chitta steadily in bliss, a samadhi reached by the tongue rather than by hard technique. Only those who have actually tasted this can confirm it; it is verified in experience, not argument. The closing claim is the boldest: through the Name the formless God makes himself visible in form.

GATHA 1244 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, surrounded by Hari

मराठी मूळ

आंत हरि बाहेर हरि । हरिनें घरीं कोंडिलें ॥1॥
हरिनें कामा घातला चिरा । वित्तवरा मुकविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
हरिने जीवें केली साटी । पाडिली तुटी सकळांसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेगळा नव्हे । हरि भोवे भोंवताला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hari is within, Hari is without. Hari has enclosed me inside the house.

Hari drove a wedge through desire and freed me from wealth's mastery.

Hari staked this very life in the transaction and severed all other ties.

Says Tuka, Hari is not separate from me. Hari surrounds me on every side.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hari within, Hari without. Hari has shut me up inside the house. Hari drove a wedge through my desire and freed me from the rule of wealth. Hari staked my very life in the bargain and cut off all my other ties. Tuka says: Hari is not separate from me. Hari is all around me, on every side.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being completely enclosed by God, inside and outside, with no exit left. He frames this takeover as a series of decisive acts by Hari: desire split open with a wedge, the grip of wealth broken, life itself put on the table and every competing attachment severed. What sounds like confinement is really liberation, since the bonds cut are the ones that held him captive. The closing line names the state plainly: Hari is no longer an other to be reached but the presence surrounding him on all sides and inseparable from him.

GATHA 1245 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, stolen by Hari and unfit for the world

मराठी मूळ

हरिनें माझें हरिलें चित्त । भार वित्त विसरलें ॥1॥
आतां कैसी जाऊं घरा । नव्हे बरा लौकिक ॥ध्रु.॥
पारखियांसी सांगतां गोटी । घरची कुटी खातील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निवांत राहीं। पाहिलें पाहीं धणीवरि ॥3॥
॥ भुपाळ्या ॥ अभंग ॥ 8 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hari has stolen my chitta. I have forgotten all burdens and wealth.

Now how shall I go home? It would not look right to the world.

If I tell this tale to strangers, my own household will thrash me.

Says Tuka, stay quiet, remain still. Gaze upon the Master to your fill.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hari has stolen my heart. I have forgotten every burden and all wealth. Now how can I go home? It would not look right to the world. If I tell this tale to strangers, my own household will beat me. Tuka says: stay quiet, stay still; gaze your fill upon the Master.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the helpless condition of one whose heart God has carried off: ordinary cares and possessions simply slip from mind. This leaves him unfit for normal life, unable to face the world's expectations or return to household duties as if nothing had happened. He knows the experience cannot be explained to outsiders, who would think him mad, so even his own people would scold him. His resolution is not to argue or perform but to fall silent and keep gazing at the Master until he is satisfied. The poem honors an inwardness that society cannot measure and chooses quiet absorption over reputation.

GATHA 1246 Prayers

Prayer, the lost child and the mother

मराठी मूळ

बोलोनि दाऊं कां तुह्मी नेणा जी देवा । ठेवाल तें ठेवा ठायीं तैसा राहेन ॥1॥
पांगुळलें मन कांहीं नाठवे उपाय । ह्मणऊनि पाय जीवीं धरूनि राहिलों ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यागें भोगें दुःख काय सांडावें मांडावें । ऐसी धरियेली जीवें माझ्या थोरी आशंका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माते बाळा चुकलिया वनीं । न पवतां जननी दुःख पावे विठ्ठले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Should I speak, or do You not already know, O God? Whatever You place before me, I shall remain there as You set me.

My mind has grown lame; I can think of no remedy. That is why I hold Your feet within my very jiva and remain.

In renunciation there is suffering, in enjoyment there is suffering. What is there to abandon or adopt? A great anxiety has seized my jiva.

Says Tuka, O Vitthal, when a child is lost in the forest and the mother cannot reach it, the child suffers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Should I speak it out, or do you not already know, O God? Whatever place you put me in, there I will stay, just so. My mind has gone lame; no remedy comes to it. So I have caught your feet within my life and stayed there. There is suffering in giving up, and suffering in enjoying; what is there to drop, what to take up? This great doubt has gripped my life. Tuka says: O Vitthal, when a child is lost in the forest and cannot reach its mother, the child suffers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays his helplessness openly before God, admitting he has run out of remedies and even out of clear sentences. He has tried the two usual paths, renunciation and enjoyment, and found suffering waiting in both, so he no longer knows what to abandon or pursue. Stuck in that doubt, he stops choosing and simply clings to God's feet, willing to remain wherever God places him. The closing image names the stakes: he is a child lost in the forest, and the pain is the pain of not reaching the mother. The prayer leaves the whole burden of finding with God.

GATHA 1247 Longing and Separation

Longing, kept dangling by God

मराठी मूळ

ऐसी वाट पाहे कांहीं निरोप कां मूळ । कंा हे कळवळ तुज उमटे चि ना ॥1॥
आवो पांडुरंगे पंढरीचे निवासे । लावूनियां आस चाळवूनी ठेविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय जन्मा येवूनियां केली म्यां जोडी। ऐसें घडीघडी चित्तां येतें आठवूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खरा न पवे चि विभाग । धिकारितें जग हें चि लाहों हिशोबें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I wait like this, watching for some message, some word from You. Does no compassion stir in You at all?

O Panduranga, Dweller of Pandhari, You stirred my longing and kept me dangling.

What have I truly gained by coming into this life? This question returns to the chitta again and again.

Says Tuka, the true portion never arrives. The world reviles me; this alone is what I have earned by the reckoning.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I keep watching the road like this. Why no message, why no word? Why does no tenderness for me stir in you at all? O Panduranga, you who dwell in Pandhari, you woke my longing and then left me hanging. What have I really gained by coming into this life? This question comes back to my heart again and again. Tuka says: the true share never reaches me. The world scorns me; by the reckoning, this is all I have earned.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram voices the bitterness of unanswered longing, the dark side of devotion. God himself stirred this thirst and then went silent, and Tukaram dares to ask whether any compassion moves in him at all. Left waiting, he questions the worth of his whole life and feels he has gained nothing real by being born. He even counts his account in the negative: the true portion never arrives, and the only thing his devotion has earned him is the world's contempt. The poem does not resolve the complaint; its honesty lies in addressing the protest straight to God rather than turning away from him.

GATHA 1248 Longing and Separation

Longing, shamed by the saints who were answered

मराठी मूळ

कां गा किविलवाणा केलों दीनाचा दीन । काय तुझी हीन शक्ति जालीसी दिसे ॥1॥
लाज येते मना तुझा ह्मणवितां दास । गोडी नाहीं रस बोलिली यासारिखी ॥ध्रु.॥
लाजविलीं मागें संतांची हीं उत्तरें । कळों येतें खरें दुजें एकावरूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी कोणें वदविली वाणी । प्रसादावांचूनि तुमचिया विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have You made me so pitiable, the lowliest of the low? Has Your power itself grown less?

Shame comes to my mind when I call myself Your servant. There is no sweetness, no flavor, in words such as these.

Before me the replies of the saints have been put to shame. By one thing, the truth of another becomes clear.

Says Tuka, who has made my tongue speak? None but Your grace, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have you made me so pitiable, the lowest of the low? Has your own power somehow grown weak? Shame comes to my mind when I call myself your servant. There is no sweetness, no flavor, in words like these. The answers you gave the saints before me are now put to shame. By one case the truth of another becomes clear. Tuka says: who has made my tongue speak at all? Nothing but your grace, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a sharp argument from his own track record. God answered the earlier saints, so to leave Tukaram in misery makes those past rescues look unreliable, as if God's power had run out. He feels the shame of calling himself a servant of a master who does not act, and finds no sweetness in such an empty title. The logic is pointed: one unanswered case throws doubt on every answered one, so God's reputation is at stake. Yet the protest folds back into humility at the end, as Tukaram admits even his voice and complaint are themselves gifts of God's grace, leaving the appeal squarely with Vitthal.

GATHA 1249 Confession and Sin

Confession, surrender to His care

मराठी मूळ

जळो माझें कर्म वायां केली कटकट । जालें तैसें तंट नाहीं आलें अनुभवा ॥1॥
आता पुढें धीर काय देऊं या मना। ऐसें नारायणा प्रेरिलें तें पाहिजे ॥ध्रु.॥
गुणवंत केलों दोष जाणायासाठीं। माझें माझें पोटीं बळकट दूषण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अहो केशीराजा दयाळा । बरवा हा लळा पाळियेला शेवटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let my deeds burn. All the fuss I made was in vain. Whatever dispute I raised never came to fruition in experience.

How now can I give patience to this mind? O Narayana, what You have ordained must simply be accepted.

I was made virtuous only to recognize my own faults. The fault of "mine, mine" sits stubborn and strong within.

Says Tuka, O compassionate Keshiraja, how beautiful this tender care You have kept for me until the very end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let my deeds burn. All the fuss I made was for nothing. Whatever quarrel I raised never came true in my own experience. How can I steady this mind now? O Narayana, whatever You have set in motion, that must be accepted. I was made virtuous only so that I would see my own faults. The fault of "mine, mine" sits stubborn and strong inside me. Tuka says: O compassionate Keshiraja, how beautifully You have tended this love of mine, right to the very end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is owning that all his striving and arguing came to nothing in actual experience, and he stops fighting it. He hands the steadying of his restless mind over to Narayana, accepting whatever God has ordained. Then he names the sharp turn: the very virtue he was given was a tool to expose his own fault, the deep, stubborn grip of "mine, mine." He ends not in despair but in gratitude, seeing that God's tender care held him all the way to the end.

GATHA 1250 Longing and Separation

Longing, the soul as captive bride

मराठी मूळ

कामें नेलें चित्त नेदी अवलोकुं मुख । बहु वाटे दुःख फुटों पाहे हृदय ॥1॥
कां जी सासुरवासी मज केलें भगवंता । आपुलिया सत्ता स्वाधीनता ते नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रभातेसि वाटे तुमच्या यावें दर्शना । येथें न चले चोरी उरली राहे वासना ॥2॥
येथें अवघे वांयां गेले दिसती सायास । तुका ह्मणे नास दिसे जाल्या वेचाचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Desire has stolen my chitta and will not let me gaze upon Your face. Great sorrow wells up. The heart is ready to burst.

Why, O Lord, have You made me into this bride at the in-laws' house, where I have no freedom, no sovereignty of my own?

At dawn I long to come for Your darshan, but no stealth works here. The desire lingers and remains.

All my labors here appear to have gone to waste. Says Tuka, the ruin of everything spent is plain to see.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Desire has carried off my chitta and will not let me look upon Your face. Great sorrow rises in me. My heart is ready to burst. Why, O Lord, have You made me a bride sent to her in-laws, where I have no freedom and no power of my own? At dawn I long to come for Your darshan, but no stealth works here. The desire stays and will not leave. Here all my labors seem to have gone to waste. Tuka says: I can plainly see the ruin of everything I spent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a young bride trapped in her in-laws' house, a figure for the soul bound to worldly life with no freedom of its own. Desire has stolen his attention and keeps him from even seeing God's face, and the ache is so sharp the heart could burst. He longs at dawn for darshan, but there is no way to slip free; the craving simply stays. The poem lands on the loss: all his effort feels wasted, and he can see plainly that what he spent has come to ruin, which is itself the cry that turns the soul back toward God.

GATHA 1251 Prayers

Prayer, renouncing the world's ways

मराठी मूळ

जळोत तीं येथें उपजविती अंतराय । सायासाची जोडी माझी तुमचे पाय ॥1॥
आतां मज साहे येथें करावें देवा । तुझी घेई सेवा सकळ गोवा उगवूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
भोगें रोगा जोडोनियां दिलें आणीकां । अरुचि ते हो कां आतां सकळांपासूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असो तुझें तुझे मस्तकीं । नाहीं ये लौकिकीं आतां मज वर्तनें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let those things that give rise to obstacles here be burned. The fruit of all my labors is Your feet alone.

O God, help me to endure this now. Let me serve You by unraveling this whole tangle.

Through indulgence I joined disease to myself and gave it to others. Let there now be distaste for all of this.

Says Tuka, let what is Yours remain upon Your head. I shall no longer conduct myself in worldly ways.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the things that raise obstacles here be burned. The fruit of all my labor is Your feet alone. Now, O God, help me to bear this. Let me serve You and untangle this whole knot. Through indulgence I joined disease to myself and passed it on to others. Let there now be distaste for all of it. Tuka says: let what is Yours stay upon Your head. I will no longer live in the worldly way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for everything that obstructs him to be burned away, declaring that the only fruit he wants from all his effort is God's feet. He asks God to help him endure and to untangle the whole knot of his entanglements. He confesses that his own indulgence bred a disease he then spread to others, and he asks now for nothing but distaste for all of it. He places the burden back on God and resolves to stop conducting himself in the ordinary worldly way.

GATHA 1252 Longing and Separation

Longing, the love that will not be reined in

मराठी मूळ

न संगतां तुह्मां कळों येतें अंतर । विश्वीं विश्वंभर परिहार चि न लगे ॥1॥
परि हे अनावर आवरितां आवडी । अवसान ते घडी पुरों देत नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय उणें मज येथें ठेविलिये ठायीं । पोटा आलों तईपासूनिया समर्थ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघी आवरिली वासना । आतां नारायणा दुसरियापासूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without my telling You, You know my inner state. Before the one who pervades the universe, no defense is needed.

Yet this love-longing is uncontrollable. Even as I try to restrain it, it will not let a single moment of composure hold.

What do I lack in the place where You have kept me? I have been strong since the day I was born.

Says Tuka, I have reined in all desires from everything else. Now, O Narayana, from all others.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without my telling You, You already know my inner state. Before the one who fills the whole universe, no defense is needed. Yet this love-longing will not be held back. Even as I try to restrain it, it will not let one moment of calm hold. What do I lack in the place where You have kept me? I have been strong from the day I was born. Tuka says: I have reined in every desire toward all other things. Now, O Narayana, I turn from everything else.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begins by admitting there is no point pretending before Vishvambhara, who pervades all things and already knows his heart. But the very love he feels is the one thing he cannot govern: it allows him no moment of composure. He examines himself and finds he lacks nothing in the station God has placed him in, and that his strength was given from birth. So he closes by gathering up every desire that scatters toward other things and turning it, single-pointed, toward Narayana alone.

GATHA 1253 Prayers

Surrender, the helpless take refuge

मराठी मूळ

तुजसवें आह्मीं अनुसरलों अबळा । नको अंगीं कळा राहों हरी हीन देऊं ॥1॥
सासुरवासा भीतों जीव ओढे तुजपाशीं । आतां दोहळिवशीं लज्जा राखें आमुची ॥ध्रु.॥
न कळतां संग जाला सहज खेळतां । प्रवर्तली चिंता मागिलांचियावरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असतां जैसें तैसें बरवें । वचन या भावें वेचुनियां विनटलों ।3॥ ॥8॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We helpless ones have followed You. O Hari, do not let Your skill remain hidden from us or leave us destitute.

We dread the life at the in-laws' house, and our jivas are drawn toward You. Now, in our vulnerable state, protect our honor.

Without knowing it, our bond with You was formed while playing innocently, and now anxiety about the future has set in.

Says Tuka, as long as You are present, all is well. With this faith, I have spent my words and surrendered myself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We helpless ones have followed You. O Hari, do not keep Your power hidden from us; do not leave us destitute. We dread the life at the in-laws' house, and our jivas are drawn toward You. Now, in our fragile state, guard our honor. Without knowing it, our bond with You was formed while we played innocently, and now worry about the future has set in. Tuka says: as long as You are present, all is well. With this faith I have spent my words and given myself over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Speaking again as helpless brides, the souls who have followed Hari, Tukaram begs God not to hold back his saving power or abandon them. The dread of the in-laws' house is the dread of worldly bondage, while the heart is pulled toward God, and he asks that their honor be protected in this vulnerable hour. He notes that the bond with God was formed almost unknowingly, in innocent play, and only later did fear for the future arise. He rests it all on one assurance: while God is present, all is well, and on that faith he surrenders himself completely.

GATHA 1254 The Saints

Praise of the saints, the unseen made seen

मराठी मूळ

रवि दीप हीरा दाविती देखणे । अदृश्य दर्षने संतांचे नी ॥1॥
त्यांचा महिमा काय वणूप मी पामर । न कळे तो साचार ब्रह्मादिकां ॥ध्रु.॥
तापली चंदन निवविती कुडी । त्रिगुण तो काढी संतसंग ॥2॥
मायबापें पिंड पाळीला माया । जन्ममरण जाया संतसंग ॥3॥
संतांचें वचन वारी जन्मदुःख । मिष्टान्न तें भूकनिवारण ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जवळी न पाचारितां जावें । संतचरणीं भावें रिघावया ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sun, the lamp, and the diamond reveal what is visible, but the darshan of the saints reveals what is invisible.

How can I, a lowly one, describe their greatness? Even Brahma and the other gods cannot fully know it.

As sandalwood cools the heated body, the company of saints removes the three gunas.

Parents nourish the body with love, but the company of saints ends birth and death.

The words of the saints relieve the suffering of birth, just as fine food satisfies hunger.

Says Tuka, one should go to the saints' feet without even being called, surrendering there with devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sun, the lamp, and the diamond show what can be seen, but the darshan of the saints shows what cannot be seen. How can I, a lowly one, describe their greatness? Even Brahma and the other gods do not truly know it. As sandalwood cools a body that burns, the company of saints draws out the three gunas. Parents nourish the body with love, but the company of saints ends birth and death. The words of the saints relieve the suffering of birth, the way good food satisfies hunger. Tuka says: one should go to the saints' feet without even being called, and take refuge there with devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram raises the company of saints above every ordinary light: the sun, lamp, and diamond reveal only visible things, but the saints reveal the invisible Reality. He confesses their greatness is beyond his power to describe, beyond even Brahma's full knowing. Through plain images he names what their company actually does: it cools the burning soul like sandalwood, draws out the three gunas, and unlike parents who feed only the body, it ends the whole cycle of birth and death. The conclusion is a directive to himself and the listener, go to the saints uninvited and surrender at their feet, because that refuge is where liberation is found.

GATHA 1255 Appeals and Exhortations

The Name, exhortation to all

मराठी मूळ

हरि हरि तुह्मीं ह्मणा रे सकळ । तेणें मायाजाळ तुटईल ॥1॥
आणिका नका कांहीं गाबाळाचे भरी । पडों येथें थोरी नागवण ॥ध्रु.॥
भावें तुळसीदळ पाणी जोडा हात । ह्मणावा पतित वेळोवेळां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ही तंव कृपेचा सागर । नामासाटीं पार पाववील ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All of you, say Hari, Hari. By doing so, the web of maya will be torn apart.

Do not load yourselves with useless burdens, for great deception lies in that direction.

With devotion, offer a tulsi leaf and water with folded hands, and call yourself a fallen one again and again.

Says Tuka, He is an ocean of grace and will carry you across for the sake of His Name alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All of you, say Hari, Hari. By that, the web of maya will be torn. Do not load yourselves with useless burdens; great ruin lies in that direction. With devotion, offer a tulsi leaf and water; fold your hands; call yourself fallen, again and again. Tuka says: He is an ocean of grace and will carry you across for the sake of His Name alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls everyone to the simplest practice: just say the Name, Hari, Hari, and the net of maya is cut. He warns against piling on useless burdens, because that road leads only to ruin. The path he points to costs almost nothing: a tulsi leaf, water, folded hands, and the honest admission "I am fallen," repeated again and again. The reassurance that lands it is that God is an ocean of grace who will ferry the soul across purely for the sake of His own Name.

GATHA 1256 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the ruinous son

मराठी मूळ

ऐसे कुळीं पुत्र होती । बुडविती पूर्वजा ॥1॥
चाहाडी चोरी भांडवला । वांटा आला भागासी ॥ध्रु.॥
त्याचियानें दुःखी मही । भार तेही न साहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ग्रामपशु । केला नाशु अयुषा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Such are the sons born in certain families: they drown their own ancestors.

Tale-bearing, theft, and quarreling have become their inheritance.

The earth is made sorrowful by them and can scarcely bear their weight.

Says Tuka, these village-beasts have destroyed their own life spans.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Such are the sons born in some families: they drown their own ancestors. Tale-bearing, theft, and quarreling have become their inheritance. The earth is made wretched by them and can barely bear their weight. Tuka says: these village-beasts have wasted their own lifespans.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns a hard eye on a familiar pattern: a son whose conduct disgraces the very ancestors who should be honored, dragging their name down. Instead of a worthy inheritance, all such a person carries forward is slander, theft, and constant quarreling. The image of the earth scarcely able to bear his weight names the stakes: a life that is pure burden, useless to everyone. The point is not contempt for one man but a warning against the pattern, a life squandered and turned into ruin, and an invitation to examine whether one is living that way.

GATHA 1257 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false devotee

मराठी मूळ

गांठोळीस धन भाकावी करुणा । दावूनि सज्जना कींव पीडी ॥1॥
नाठेळाची भक्ति कुचराचें बळ । कोरडें वोंगळ मार खाय ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडोव्यासी घाली देवाची करंडी । विल्हाळ त्या धोंडी पूजा दावी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे माकडाचे छंद । अवघे धंदधंद सिंदळीचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The miser begs for mercy while hoarding wealth knotted tight, and by displaying pity to good people, he torments them.

The rogue's devotion is a bully's strength: hollow and filthy, it earns only blows.

He puts God's basket over a decoy and worships stones as if they were sacred.

Says Tuka, such are the monkey's antics; all of it is the trickster's trade.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The miser begs for mercy while hoarding wealth knotted tight, and by putting on a show of pity before good people, he torments them. The rogue's devotion is a bully's strength: hollow, filthy, it earns only blows. He covers God's basket over a decoy and worships mere stones as if they were holy. Tuka says: such are a monkey's antics; all of it is the trickster's trade.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the religion of pretense: a man who guards his hoarded wealth yet whines for mercy, and wears a mask of piety that only wears down sincere people. He calls this kind of devotion a bully's bluff, hollow inside, fit only to be struck down. The man performs worship that is all surface, hiding the real and bowing to dead stones for show. The closing image, a monkey's restless antics and a swindler's trade, points at the pattern of hollow display, asking the listener to check whether their own devotion is inward and real or just a performance.

GATHA 1258 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, wake before the road runs out

मराठी मूळ

कैसें असोनि ठाउकें नेणां । दुःख पावाल पुढिले पेणा ॥1॥
आतां जागें रे भाई जागें रे । चोर निजल्या नाडूनि भागे रे ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां नका रे भाई नका रे । आहे गांठीं तें लुटवूं लोकां रे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एकांच्या घायें । कां रे जाणोनि न धरा भये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How is it that, knowing full well where you stand, you act as though you do not? You will suffer at the next halt on the road.

Wake up now, O brothers, wake up! The thief has tricked the sleeping ones and fled.

Do not, brothers, do not let what you still hold in your hands be plundered by others.

Says Tuka, seeing another fall by a single blow, why do you not take heed and feel fear?

IN PLAIN WORDS

How is it that, knowing exactly where you stand, you act as though you do not? You will suffer at the next stop on the road. Wake up now, O brothers, wake up. The thief has cheated the sleeping ones and run off. Do not, brothers, do not let what you still hold in your hands be plundered by others. Tuka says: when you see another felled by a single blow, why do you not take heed and feel afraid?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shakes the listener awake: you know your true situation, so why live as if you do not, when the next halt on this journey will bring suffering? Spiritual life is treated as a road, and the wealth in hand is the time and devotion still left; the "thief" robs whoever stays asleep. He urges them not to let that remaining store be plundered through carelessness. The final question turns it personal: people fall around you in a single stroke, so let that be the warning that wakes a healthy fear in you before it is your turn.

GATHA 1259 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the counterfeit gain

मराठी मूळ

मुदल जतन जालें । मग लाभाचें काय आलें ॥1॥
घरीं देउनि अंतर गांठी । राख्या पारिख्यां न सुटे मिठी ॥ध्रु.॥
घाला पडे थोडें च वाटे । काम मैंदाचें च पेटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वरदळ खोटें । फांसे अंतरिंच्या कपटें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the principal has been kept intact, what profit has actually come?

One hands over the valuables at home and cannot free oneself from the grip of keepers and appraisers. Though the loss seems small, the fire of soft desire keeps smouldering.

Says Tuka, the surface is counterfeit, and the deceit within lays its traps.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the principal has only been kept intact, what profit has really come? You hand over the valuables in your house and cannot pull free from the grip of the keepers and appraisers. The loss looks small, yet the fire of soft desire keeps smouldering. Tuka says: the surface is counterfeit, and the deceit within sets its traps.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the language of trade and lending to expose worldly life as a bad deal. Merely preserving your capital, the bare span of your life, yields no real profit if you gain nothing of God. You surrender your true valuables and find yourself unable to escape the grip of the people and appetites that hold them. The danger is that the loss seems trivial while a quiet smouldering desire keeps burning; he warns that the whole attractive surface is counterfeit and the deceit hidden inside it is what lays the traps.

GATHA 1260 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, ready to leave with God

मराठी मूळ

मज अंगाच्या अनुभवें । काई वाईट बरें ठावें ॥1॥
जालों दोहींचा देखणा । नये मागें पुढें ही मना ॥ध्रु.॥
वोस वसती ठावी । परि हे चाली दुःख पावी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घेऊं देवा । सवें करूनि बोळावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By direct experience of my own being, I have come to know what is good and what is bad.

I have seen both sides, and the mind no longer turns back or forward.

I know the abandoned settlements, yet this habitual path brings only suffering.

Says Tuka, let us take God as our companion and bid farewell to all of this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the direct experience of my own being, I now know what is bad and what is good. I have seen both sides, and my mind no longer turns back or forward. I know the deserted settlements well, yet this same old path brings only suffering. Tuka says: let us take God as our companion and bid farewell to all of this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from firsthand experience, not hearsay: he has tasted both good and bad and now sees them clearly, so his mind no longer swings backward in regret or forward in craving. The image of abandoned settlements names how he knows where the familiar worldly road leads, places already emptied out, and that this same path yields only suffering. Having weighed it all, he makes his choice: take God as the one companion for the journey and say goodbye to everything else.

GATHA 1261 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, truth and no gap

मराठी मूळ

पाववावें ठाया । ऐसें सवें बोलों तया ॥1॥
भावा ऐसी क्रिया राखे । खोटएा खोटेपणें वाखे ॥ध्रु.॥
न ठेवूं अंतर । कांहीं भेदाचा पदर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवें भावें । सत्या मानविजे देवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Speak only such words as would lead him to the true destination.

Let your actions accord with your bhava, and falsehood will be known for what it is by its own falseness.

Keep no gap, no fold of separation between you and the other.

Says Tuka, with one's whole jiva and devotion, let God be honored by truth alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Speak to him only words that carry him to the true place. Let your acts match what is in your heart. A false thing shows its own falseness. Keep no distance. Let no fold of separation come between you and the other. Tuka says: with the whole soul and with love, let God be honored by truth, and by truth alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is laying down a rule for how to deal with another person and with God at once. Speak only what leads the other toward the truth, and let your conduct line up with your inner devotion, because anything false will betray itself in time. He then asks for closeness with no screen between self and other, no fold of separation held back. The whole teaching lands on one demand: honor God with the entire living soul, and let that honoring be made of truth, nothing else.

GATHA 1262 Social Criticism

Social criticism, spectacle over service

मराठी मूळ

मोल देऊनियां सांटवावे दोष । नटाचे ते वेश पाहोनियां ॥1॥
हरिदासां मुखें हरिकथाकीर्तन । तेथें पुण्यें पुण्य विशेषता ॥ध्रु.॥
हरितील वस्त्रें गोपिकांच्या वेशें । पाप त्यासरिसें मात्रागमन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहा ऐसें जालें जन । सेवाभक्तिहीन रसीं गोडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

People pay to see the actor's costumes and store up his vices along with the viewing.

But when devotees sing Hari's name and katha-kirtan, there merit piles upon merit, in full measure.

They steal garments and dress in the gopis' guise; with that disguise comes the sin of forbidden transgression.

Says Tuka, see what people have become: devoid of seva, they seek only the sweetness of rasa in mere spectacle.

IN PLAIN WORDS

People pay money to watch the actor's costumes, and they store up his vices as they watch. But where Hari's devotees sing his name and his story, merit piles on merit, in full measure. Men steal the women's clothes and dress in the gopis' guise; with that disguise comes the sin of forbidden union. Tuka says: look what people have become. Empty of service, they crave only the sweetness of the show.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets two ways of looking at devotion side by side and names the difference. Paying to watch a performer play the divine drama only loads you with the watcher's appetites; true merit comes when devotees actually sing Hari's name and tell his story. He turns sharp on men who dress up as the gopis, costume that carries the sin it imitates rather than the love. The pattern he attacks is craving the sweetness of the spectacle while skipping the service that alone makes it holy, and the examination is meant for our own hunger for show over substance.

GATHA 1263 Longing and Separation

Longing, the worn pilgrim at the feet

मराठी मूळ

बहुक्षीदक्षीण । आलों सोसुनियां वन ॥1॥
विठोबा विसांवया विसांवया । पडों देई पायां ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतां काकुलती । आलों सोसिली फजिती ॥2॥
केली तुजसाटीं । तुका ह्मणे येवढी आटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have come exhausted, worn thin through many wastes, having endured the wilderness.

O Vithoba, rest, rest. Let me fall at Your feet.

I have come with desperate supplication, having endured humiliation after humiliation.

Says Tuka, all this grinding toil I have borne only for Your sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come worn thin, exhausted, having endured the wilderness. O Vithoba, rest, rest. Let me fall at your feet. I have come with desperate pleading, having borne humiliation after humiliation. Tuka says: all this grinding labor I have carried, and I carried it only for your sake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram arrives at God like a traveler at the end of a hard road and asks for one thing: to lay himself down at Vithoba's feet. He does not hide the cost of the journey, naming the exhaustion, the wilderness, the repeated humiliation he has swallowed to get here. The word he uses for the feet is rest itself, the place where the toil finally stops. The whole poem turns on the last line: every bit of that suffering was endured for God's sake, and so it has a single destination.

GATHA 1264 Prayers

Prayer, hold me with no gap

मराठी मूळ

कां गा धर्म केला । असोन सत्तेचा आपुला ॥1॥
उभाउभीं पाय जोडीं । आतां फांकों नेदीं घडी ॥ध्रु.॥
नको सोडूं ठाव । आतां घेऊं नेदीं वाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे इच्छा । तैसा करीन सरिसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, why did You ordain dharma as law over me, when Your own authority was already total?

I stand here, face to face, hands joined. Do not let me be parted from You even for a moment.

Do not abandon this place; do not give me a gap, not even the room to stray.

Says Tuka, whatever Your wish, I will act in exact measure with it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O God, why did you set dharma as a law over me, when your own power was already complete? I stand here, face to face, hands joined. Do not let me be parted from you for even a moment. Do not leave this place. Do not give me even the room to stray. Tuka says: whatever you wish, I will do, in exact measure with it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram half-protests and half-pleads: if God's authority over him is already total, why lay down dharma as a separate rule he must keep? Standing with joined hands, he asks not for guidance but for nearness so close that no moment and no gap is left for him to wander. He wants God to occupy the very space where straying could happen, so that drifting becomes impossible. His surrender is complete in the final line, where he hands over his own will entirely, promising to act exactly in step with God's wish.

GATHA 1265 Longing and Separation

Longing, dry knowledge and the ache for darshan

मराठी मूळ

तुमची तों भेटी नव्हे ऐसी जाली । कोरडी च बोली ब्रह्मज्ञान ॥1॥
आतां न बोलावें ऐसें वाटे देवा । संग न करावा कोणांसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुह्मां निमित्यासी सांपडले अंग । नेदावा हा संग विचारिलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी राहिली वासना । आवडी दर्शनाची च होती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your meeting, O Lord, has become what is no meeting at all. All talk of Brahman-knowledge is dry words.

Now, O God, I feel I should speak no more, and should keep no one's company.

My body has become an occasion for others; upon reflection, I have decided not to give this company.

Says Tuka, my longing remains; it was always only the love of Your darshan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your meeting, Lord, has turned into what is no meeting at all. All this talk of Brahman-knowledge is dry words. Now, O God, I feel I should speak no more, and keep no one's company. My body has become an occasion others use; on reflection, I have decided not to give this company. Tuka says: my longing stays. It was always only the love of seeing you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is grieving that what passes for union with God has gone hollow, and that high talk of Brahman-knowledge tastes dry to him because it is not the thing he wants. He resolves to withdraw into silence and solitude, having noticed that his own body and presence have become a stage for other people's use. So he decides to give that company no longer. Underneath the withdrawal one desire is left untouched: he never wanted abstract knowledge, only the living sight of God, the darshan that his whole longing was always aimed at.

GATHA 1266 Prayers

Devotional counsel, guard what is yours

मराठी मूळ

आहे तें चि आह्मी मागों तुजपाशीं । नव्हों तुज ऐसीं क्रियानष्टें ॥1॥
न बोलावीं तों च वर्मे बरें दिसे । प्रकट ते कैसे गुण करूं ॥ध्रु.॥
एका ऐसें एका द्यावयाचा मोळा । कां तुह्मां गोपाळा नाहीं ऐसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लोकां नाहीं कळों आलें । करावें आपुलें जतन तों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I ask of You only what already is. We are not among those whose practice has come to ruin.

Before one speaks, the inner truth is visible. How can I make such qualities openly manifest?

One passes the bundle to another; do even You, O Gopala, not have such a one?

Says Tuka, people have not come to understand this. Guard what is your own, while it may still be guarded.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I ask of you only what already is. We are not among those whose practice has fallen into ruin. Before a word is spoken, the inner truth is already seen. How should I make such qualities openly on display? One hands the bundle on to another; have you too, Gopala, not such a one? Tuka says: people have not come to understand this. Guard what is your own, while it can still be guarded.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists he asks God for nothing strange, only for what is already true, and he sets himself apart from those whose spiritual practice has collapsed. He resists putting his inner state on public show, since the truth in the heart is seen before any word is spoken. There is a quiet warning that devotion can be passed off lightly from hand to hand, like a bundle handed on, and he asks whether even God keeps such a one. The poem ends as counsel pointed at our own carelessness: most people never grasp this, so guard your inner treasure while it can still be guarded.

GATHA 1267 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, let things be and keep patience

मराठी मूळ

आह्मीं याची केली सांडी । कोठें तोंडीं लागावें ॥1॥
आहे तैसा असो आतां चिंतें चिंता वाढते ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलिल्याचा मानी सीण । भिन्न भिन्न राहावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मांपाशीं । धीराऐसी जतन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have already abandoned all that. Where now is there anything to attach ourselves to?

Let things remain as they are. Worry only breeds more worry.

I find weariness in everything already said. Let each remain separate.

Says Tuka, what we carry with us is patience itself, and that is our safeguard.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have already given all that up. What is left now to attach ourselves to? Let things stay as they are. Worry only breeds more worry. I find weariness in everything already said. Let each thing stay separate. Tuka says: what we carry with us is patience, and that is our safeguard.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from a place of having let go, where there is nothing left to grasp at. He counsels leaving things exactly as they are, because anxiety only feeds on itself and multiplies. Tired of going over old words and arguments, he chooses to let each matter rest apart rather than tangle them together. What remains as his only possession and protection is patience itself, the steady endurance that keeps the surrendered soul safe.

GATHA 1268 Faith and Trust

Faith, staking life on the meeting

मराठी मूळ

आह्मांपाशीं याचें बळ । कोण काळवरी तों ॥1॥
करुनि ठेलों जीवेंसाटीं । होय भेटी तोंवरि ॥ध्रु.॥
लागलों तों न फिरें पाठी । पडिल्या गांठी वांचूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवकाशें । तुमच्या ऐसें होवया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This strength is with us. Who can hold off Time until then?

I have staked my very life on this and will keep at it until the meeting happens.

Once I have set out, I will not turn back without the knot being tied.

Says Tuka, grant me this spaciousness of Yours so that I may become as You are.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This strength is with us. Who can hold off Time until then? I have staked my very life on this, and I will keep at it until the meeting comes. Once I have set out, I will not turn back without the knot being tied. Tuka says: grant me this spaciousness of yours, so that I may become as you are.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares the strength he leans on is already his, and asks who could keep Time at bay until the moment he longs for arrives. He has wagered his whole life on reaching God and will not stop until that meeting happens. He swears not to turn back until the bond is sealed, the knot tied that joins him to the Lord. The prayer rises to its boldest reach in the last line: give me your own spaciousness, so that I may become as you are.

GATHA 1269 Faith and Trust

Faith, the mother of many

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलें चि बोलें पडपडताळूनि । उपजत मनीं नाहीं शंका ॥1॥
बहुतांची माय बहुत कृपाळ । साहोनि कोल्हाळ बुझाविसी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतांच्या भावें वांटिसी भातुकें । बहु कवतुकें खेळविसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें जाणतसों वर्म । करणें तो श्रम न वजे वांयां॥3॥ ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I say the same words over and over, testing and re-testing them. No doubt arises in my mind.

You are the mother of many, supremely merciful. You endure their clamor and comfort them.

You distribute gifts to all according to their devotion and playfully set them all to play.

Says Tuka, I know this secret well: the effort spent is never wasted.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I say the same words over and over, testing them again and again, and no doubt rises in my mind. You are the mother of many, full of mercy. You bear their clamor and comfort them. You hand out gifts to each by their devotion, and playfully you set them all to play. Tuka says: I know this secret well. The effort spent is never wasted.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has turned his faith over and over, examining it until no doubt is left. He pictures God as a mother to countless children, patient with all their noise and quick to soothe them. This mother gives each child a portion measured to its own love and arranges the whole play in which they all take part. The settled conviction at the end is his secret: in serving such a God, no effort is ever thrown away.

GATHA 1270 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, delusion gone at the feet

मराठी मूळ

कोठें भोग उरला आतां । आठवितां तुज मज ॥1॥
आड कांहीं नये दुजें । फळ बीजें आणिलें ॥ध्रु.॥
उद्वेग ते वांयांविण। कैंचा सीण चिंतनें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गेला भ्रम । तुमच्या धर्में पायांच्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What experience remains now when I remember You?

Nothing else can come between us. The fruit has brought back the seed.

That agitation is now rendered empty. Where is the weariness in contemplation?

Says Tuka, all delusion has departed by the grace of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What experience is left now, when I remember you? Nothing else can come between us. The fruit has brought back the seed. That old restlessness is now empty. Where is the weariness in contemplation? Tuka says: all delusion has gone, by the grace of your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a state where remembering God leaves no separate experience to be had, because nothing can wedge itself between him and the Lord. The fruit has brought back the seed, the end and the beginning folded into one, with nothing further owed. The agitation that once drove him has emptied out, and contemplation now costs him no fatigue. He credits the whole release to one source: the grace of God's feet, by which delusion has simply departed.

GATHA 1271 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the world unnoticed

मराठी मूळ

संसार तो कोण देखे । आह्मां सखे हरिजन ॥1॥
काळ ब्रह्मानंदें सरे । आवडी उरे संचली ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वप्नीं ते ही नाहीं चिंता । रात्री जातां दिवस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ब्रह्मरसें । होय सरिसें भोजन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who notices worldly life? We have the friendship of Hari's devotees.

Time passes in brahmananda, and the gathered love remains, ever accumulating.

Not even in dreams is there anxiety as nights give way to days.

Says Tuka, nourished by brahmarasa, the meal is made whole.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who even notices worldly life? We have the friendship of Hari's people. Time passes in the bliss of Brahman, and the gathered love stays, always growing. Not even in dreams is there anxiety, as the nights give way to the days. Tuka says: fed on the nectar of Brahman, the meal is made whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that for one held in the company of Hari's devotees, ordinary worldly life simply goes unnoticed. The days fill with the bliss of Brahman, and the love among them keeps accumulating rather than fading. There is no anxiety left, not even in sleep, as night turns to day without strain. The image at the close is of a complete feast: nourished by the nectar of Brahman, the soul is fully fed and lacks nothing.

GATHA 1272 Longing and Separation

Longing, the abandoned child crying out

मराठी मूळ

पडियेलों वनीं थोर चिंतवनी । उसीर कां आझूनि लावियेला ॥1॥
येई गा विठ्ठला येई गा विठ्ठला । प्राण हा फुटला आळवितां ॥ध्रु.॥
काय तुज नाहीं लौकिकाची शंका । आपुल्या बाळका मोकलितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु खंती वाटे जीवा । धरियेलें देवा दुरी दिसे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have fallen in the forest in great anguish. Why have You delayed so long?

Come, O Vitthala, come! My very prana breaks as I call to You.

Have You no regard for what the world will say, abandoning Your own child like this?

Says Tuka, great sorrow weighs upon this jiva. O God, You who were held so close now appear far away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have fallen in the forest in great anguish. Why have you delayed so long? Come, O Vitthala, come! My very breath breaks as I call to you. Have you no fear of what the world will say, abandoning your own child like this? Tuka says: great sorrow weighs on this soul. O God, you who were held so close now seem far away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out as one lost in a wilderness of anguish, asking why God has stayed away so long. He calls Vitthala's name until his breath itself seems to break with the strain of calling. Then he presses God with a sharp question, like a child to a parent: does the Lord not care how it looks for him to abandon his own child? The grief lands in the last line, where the God he once held close now appears unbearably far, and the soul is left weighed down with sorrow.

GATHA 1273 Longing and Separation

Longing, the exile waiting for word

मराठी मूळ

आपुले गांवींचें न देखेसें जालें । परदेसी एकलें किती कंठूं ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि पाहें मूळ येतां वाटे । जीवलग भेटे कोणी तरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहातां अवघ्या दिसतील दिशा । सकळ ही वोसा दृष्टीपुढें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोणी न संगे वारता । तुझी वाटे चिंता पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Nothing of my own homeland can be seen anymore. How long shall I endure this foreign land alone?

Therefore I watch the road back home, hoping some life-dear one will come to meet me.

Looking in all directions, everything appears desolate before my eyes.

Says Tuka, no one brings me tidings of You. I feel only anxiety for You, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I can no longer see anything of my own homeland. How long can I endure this foreign land, all alone? So I keep watching the road back home, hoping some dear one will come to meet me. I look in every direction, and all I see before my eyes is desolation. Tuka says: no one brings me any news of You. I am sick with worry for You, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one stranded far from where he belongs, and his true home is God. The world he lives in is the foreign land; nothing of his real country, Panduranga, is in sight, and he asks how long a soul can bear that separation alone. So he watches the road, longing for some life-dear one to come with word of the Beloved. The poem turns the usual fear around: he is not anxious for himself but anxious for God, aching because no message comes, and that ache is itself the proof of his love.

GATHA 1274 Worldly Life

Recoil from the world, the forest of ruin

मराठी मूळ

जन तरी देखें गुंतलें प्रपंचें । स्मरण तें त्याचें त्यासी नाहीं ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि मागें परतलें मन । घालणीचें रान देखोनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
इंद्रियांचा गाजे गोंधळ ये ठायीं । फोडीतसे डोई अहंकार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा वासनेच्या आटें । केलीं तळपटें बहुतांचीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The world is entangled in its affairs and has no remembrance of Him.

Seeing this forest of destruction, my mind turns back in retreat.

The senses raise a tumult here, and ego splits the head with its blows.

Says Tuka, O God, by the driving force of vasana, many have been brought to ruin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I look at people and see them tangled in worldly affairs, with no remembrance of Him at all. So my mind turns back and retreats, seeing this forest of destruction. Here the senses raise a loud uproar, and ego splits the head with its blows. Tuka says: O God, driven by craving, many have been brought to ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing why he pulls back from ordinary life. He sees people swallowed up in their affairs, with no room left to remember God, and the sight makes his own mind retreat as from a forest where one gets lost and destroyed. In that forest the senses make a deafening din and the ego batters the head, so there is no quiet in which to hold the Name. The closing line names the engine behind it all: vasana, blind craving, has dragged countless people down, and Tukaram is warning himself first of all.

GATHA 1275 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, fill the house and be done with rebirth

मराठी मूळ

धांवे त्यासी फावे । दुजे उगवूनि गोवे ॥1॥
घ्यावें भरूनियां घर । मग नाहीं येरझार ॥ध्रु.॥
धणी उभें केलें । पुंडलिकें या उगलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठसा । गेला पडोनियां ऐसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who runs forward seizes it, while others, having set out, get entangled and bound.

Fill your house completely with Him, and then there will be no more coming and going.

Pundalik made the Lord stand still, freely, as an open gift.

Says Tuka, such an impression has been stamped upon the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who runs forward seizes Him; others set out but only get tangled and bound. Fill your whole house with Him, and then there is no more coming and going. Pundalik made the Lord stand still, freely, as an open gift. Tuka says: such an imprint has been left upon the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two ways of seeking: the one who runs straight to God lays hold of Him, while those who hesitate and complicate things only entangle themselves further. To fill the whole house with God is to leave no room for anything else, and that, he says, ends the endless coming and going of birth and death. He points to Pundalik, the devotee who, by his single-minded service, made the Lord stand waiting on the brick at Pandhari, freely given. That standing form is the lasting stamp left on the world: proof that wholehearted devotion makes God stay.

GATHA 1276 The Moral Ideal

The path of smallness, lower than the lowest

मराठी मूळ

लाहानपण दे गा देवा । मुंगी साखरेचा रवा ॥1॥
ऐरावत रत्न थोर । तया अंकुशाचा मार ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याचे अंगीं मोठेपण । तया यातना कठीण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाण । व्हावें लाहनाहुनि लाहन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, grant me smallness. The ant carries away a grain of sugar.

Airavata, great jewel of elephants, suffers the blow of the goad.

Whoever carries greatness in their being endures harsh torment.

Says Tuka, know this: one should become smaller than the smallest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give me smallness, O God. The ant carries off its grain of sugar. Airavata, the great jewel of elephants, takes the blow of the goad. Whoever carries greatness in himself endures harsh torment. Tuka says: know this, become smaller than the smallest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays not for power but for littleness, and gives a plain picture of why. The tiny ant carries off its sweet grain in peace, while Airavata, the mightiest of elephants, is the one struck and driven by the goad. Greatness, he says, brings hard punishment, because the larger you make yourself the more you are weighed, watched, and hurt. The teaching he draws out is to keep going lower, to become smaller than the smallest, since it is the small who eat the sugar and escape the goad.

GATHA 1277 The Moral Ideal

Humility, the reed that the flood spares

मराठी मूळ

निंचपण बरवें देवा । न चले कोणाचा ही दावा ॥1॥
महा पुरें झाडें जाती । तेथें लव्हाळे राहाती ॥ध्रु.॥
येतां सिंधूच्या लहरी । नम्र होतां जाती वरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळ । पाय धरिल्या न चले बळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Humility is beautiful, O God. No one's claim can stand against it.

Great floods carry away the trees, yet the tender reeds remain.

When the waves of the ocean come, those who bow humbly rise above them.

Says Tuka, when one takes to the feet in surrender, no force can prevail against that.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Humility is beautiful, O God. No one's claim can stand against it. Great floods carry away the trees, yet the tender reeds remain. When the ocean's waves come, those who bow let them pass over and rise again. Tuka says: when you take hold of the feet, no force can prevail.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises lowliness as a strength, not a weakness. He says no rival claim can defeat the humble, because there is nothing rigid in them to break. The floodwater snaps and sweeps off the tall trees, but the soft reeds bend and survive; the ocean's waves crash, yet whoever bows lets them pass and comes up unharmed. The point lands in the last line: the one who clings to God's feet in surrender cannot be overpowered by any force, for yielding is exactly what saves.

GATHA 1278 Social Criticism

Social criticism, poetry for scraps

मराठी मूळ

उष्टए पत्रावळी करुनियां गोळा । दाखविती कळा कवित्वाची ॥1॥
ऐसे जे पातकी ते नरकीं पचती । जोंवरी भ्रमती चंद्रसूर्य ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक नारायण घ्याई । वरकडा वाहीं शोक असे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They gather leftover leaf-plates and with them display their so-called poetic art.

Such transgressors will be cooked in naraka for as long as the sun and moon continue to revolve.

Says Tuka, take hold of the one Narayana. All else is lamentation and nothing more.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They scrape together leftover leaf-plates, and with that they show off their so-called art of poetry. Such sinners will be cooked in naraka for as long as the sun and moon keep turning. Tuka says: take hold of the one Narayana. Everything else is only grief.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a corruption of the poet's gift: making verse to beg leftovers and to parade one's cleverness rather than to praise God. He calls this a grave fault, condemned to long torment, because it turns a holy thing into a tool for the belly and for vanity. The contrast is the cure he names: lay hold of the one Narayana, the single true aim. Measured against that, every other use of one's words and life is wasted and ends in sorrow. The warning is aimed at the pattern of self-display, not at any one person's worth.

GATHA 1279 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false renouncer

मराठी मूळ

आवडीच्या मतें करिती भजन । भोग नारायणें ह्मणती केला ॥1॥
अवघा देव ह्मणे वेगळें तें काय । अर्थासाठीं डोय फोडूं पाहे ॥ध्रु.॥
लाजे कमंडल धरितां भोपळा । आणीक थीगळा प्रावरणा ॥2॥
शाला गडवे धातुद्रव्यइच्छा चित्तीं । नैश्वर्य बोलती अवघें मुखें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणें यांस देवा नाहीं भेटी । ऐसे कल्पकोटि जन्म घेतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They worship according to their own inclination and claim that Narayana has ordained their indulgence.

They say everything is God, so what is separate? Yet for the sake of gain they would gouge out eyes.

They feel shame holding a gourd-vessel or patched garments, yet in their chitta they covet metal objects and wealth, while their mouths proclaim renunciation.

Says Tuka, such people will never meet God, even if they take birth for crores of kalpas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They worship however they please, and say Narayana himself ordained their indulgence. They say all is God, so what is separate? Yet for the sake of gain they would gouge out eyes. They are ashamed to hold a gourd-bowl or wear patched cloth, but in their hearts they crave metal vessels and wealth, while their mouths preach renunciation. Tuka says: such people will never meet God, even if they take birth for crores of kalpas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes a gap between teaching and life. These people use lofty doctrine, all is God, nothing is separate, as a license to do whatever they want and call it divinely sanctioned, even while they would ruin others for profit. They are embarrassed by the real marks of the renouncer, the simple gourd and the patched robe, yet they secretly hunger for fine vessels and money, all the while preaching detachment. The verse names the cost bluntly: such doubleness keeps God forever out of reach, for no length of time can buy what only sincerity opens. The target is the pattern of hypocrisy, a mirror for any seeker to check his own heart against his words.

GATHA 1280 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the begging singer's shame

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणतां हरिदास कां रे नाहीं लाज । दीनास महाराज ह्मणसी हीना ॥1॥
काय ऐसें पोट न भरे तें गेलें । हालविसी कुले सभेमाजी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोटें केली विटंबना । दीन जाला जना कींव भाकी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why are you not ashamed to call yourself a haridasa? You call yourself a great lord of the poor while being lowly yourself.

Is your belly not filled that you must shake your lineage before the assembly?

Says Tuka, for the belly's sake you have brought disgrace upon yourself, becoming pitiable before all people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why are you not ashamed to call yourself a haridasa? You are lowly yourself, yet you call yourself a great lord of the poor. Is your belly so empty that you must shake your pedigree before the assembly? Tuka says: for the belly's sake you have brought disgrace on yourself, made yourself pitiable before everyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram challenges a man who wears the title of haridasa, servant of Hari, while using it to puff himself up. He calls himself a great patron of the poor though he is hollow inside, and parades his family name in the assembly to win standing. Tukaram traces it all to hunger: the man does this for his belly, to be fed and honored, and in doing so cheapens the sacred name he claims. The result is the opposite of dignity, he becomes an object of pity. The rebuke is aimed at the impulse to trade God's name for status and a meal, a temptation any performer of devotion can fall into.

GATHA 1281 Renunciation

Renunciation, the kingless king who owns nothing

मराठी मूळ

रिद्धसिद्धी दासी कामधेनु घरीं । परि नाहीं भाकरी भक्षावया ॥1॥
लोडें वालिस्तें पलंग सुपति । परि नाहीं लंगोटी नेसावया ॥ध्रु.॥
पुसाल तरि आह्मां वैकुंठींचा वास । परि नाहीं राहएास ठाव कोठें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी राजे त्रैलोक्याचे । परि नाहीं कोणाचें उणे पुरें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Riddhi and siddhi are our maidservants, and Kamadhenu dwells in our home, yet we have no bread to eat.

We have cushions, bolsters, and fine beds, yet we have no loincloth to wear.

If you ask, we dwell in Vaikuntha, yet we have no shelter anywhere.

Says Tuka, we are the kings of the three worlds, yet we owe nothing to anyone and need nothing from anyone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Riddhi and siddhi are our maidservants, and Kamadhenu lives in our house, yet we have no bread to eat. We have cushions, bolsters, and fine beds, yet we have no loincloth to wear. If you ask, we live in Vaikuntha, yet we have no shelter anywhere. Tuka says: we are kings of the three worlds, yet we owe nothing to anyone and need nothing from anyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in riddles that hold both halves of the devotee's life at once. By God's grace all powers and treasures are his, riddhi and siddhi as servants, the wish-cow at home, the seat of Vaikuntha, the kingship of the three worlds, yet in plain fact he has no bread, no cloth, no roof. The two sides do not cancel out; they describe one state. Having God, he is utterly rich; wanting nothing of the world, he is utterly poor, and free. The last line is the resolution: needing nothing and owing nothing, he is a king precisely because he possesses nothing.

GATHA 1282 Social Criticism

Social criticism, talk of Brahman, no purity

मराठी मूळ

घरोघरीं अवघें जालें ब्रह्मज्ञान । परि मेळवण बहु माजी ॥1॥
निरें कोणापाशीं होय एक रज । तरि द्या रे मज दुर्बळासी ॥ध्रु.॥
आशा तृष्णा माया कालवूनि दोन्ही । दंभ तो दूरोनि दिसतसे ॥2॥
काम क्रोध लोभ सिणवी बहुत । मेळवूनि आंत काळकूट ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें कांहीं हातां नये । आयुष्य मोलें जाये वांयांविण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In every household, Brahman-knowledge has supposedly dawned, yet all one finds is adulteration in their mix.

If anyone truly possesses even a grain of purity, please give it to me, a poor man.

Desire and greed, maya and ambition are churned together, and hypocrisy stands visible from afar.

Lust, anger, and greed exhaust one greatly, mixing deadly poison within.

Says Tuka, nothing of value comes from all that. Life is spent uselessly for nothing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In every house, knowledge of Brahman has supposedly dawned, yet all you find in the mix is adulteration. If anyone holds even a single grain of pure stuff, give it to me, a poor man. Desire and craving, maya and ambition are stirred in together, and hypocrisy is visible from far off. Lust, anger, and greed wear people out, churning deadly poison within. Tuka says: nothing of worth comes from all that. Life is spent uselessly, for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram mocks an age when everyone talks of having realized Brahman while their lives are wholly impure. He begs, half in irony, for even one grain of the genuine article, since none of it is real. What is actually mixed into these people is craving, illusion, and ambition, with hypocrisy so thick it shows from a distance. Inside, lust, anger, and greed grind away and brew a poison that exhausts them. The conclusion is stark: such hollow knowledge yields nothing, and a whole life goes to waste on it. The verse measures cheap spiritual talk against the cost of a life thrown away, and asks the listener to weigh his own.

GATHA 1283 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, all rites fulfilled in the offering

मराठी मूळ

अवघ्या भूतांचें केलें संतर्पण । अवघी च दान दिली भूमि ॥1॥
अवघा चि काळ दिनरात्रशुद्धी । साधियेली विधि पर्वकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघीं च तीर्थॉ व्रतें केले याग । अवघें चि सांग जालें कर्म ॥2॥
अवघें चि फळ आलें आह्मां हातां । अवघें चि अनंता समर्पिनलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All beings have been fed in full; the entire earth has been given in charity.

Every hour, day and night, has been devoted in purity; every auspicious observance and sacred occasion has been fulfilled.

All pilgrimages, vows, and sacrifices have been performed; every action has been completed in its entirety.

All fruits have come into our hands, and everything has been offered to You, O Ananta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All beings have been fed in full; the whole earth has been given away in charity. Every hour, day and night, has been spent in purity; every holy day and sacred season has been observed. All pilgrimages, all vows, all sacrifices have been performed; every act has been completed entire. All the fruit has come into our hands, and the whole of it has been offered to You, O Ananta.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sings of a single act that contains every act of merit. To feed all beings, give away the earth, keep every hour pure, observe every holy day, complete every pilgrimage, vow, and sacrifice: he claims all of it as done. The secret is in the last line. By offering the whole of it, and himself, to Ananta, the endless One, the surrender gathers up and fulfills every separate rite at once. He need not perform them piece by piece; love laid wholly at God's feet is the completion of them all, and so all their fruit returns to his hands only to be given back to God.

GATHA 1284 Worldly Life

Worldly life, few fruits ripen, few cross over

मराठी मूळ

महुरा ऐसीं फळें नाहीं । आलीं कांहीं गळती ॥1॥
पक्वदशे येती थोडीं । नास आढी वेचे तो ॥ध्रु.॥
विरुळा पावे विरुळा पावे । अवघड गोवे सेवटाचे ॥2॥
उंच निंच परिवार देवी। धन्या ठावी चाकरी ॥3॥
झळके तेथें पावे आणी । ऐसे क्षणी बहु थोडे ॥4॥
पावेल तो पैल थडी । ह्मणों गडी आपुला ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे उभा†यानें । कोण खरें मानितसे ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Fruits like the mahua are rare to find; some fall before they ripen.

Few reach full maturity, and most are lost along the way.

Only the rare one attains the goal; the final obstacles are the hardest.

High and low servants serve their master, and the master knows their service well.

Only a few reach the flash of grace in that instant. Whoever crosses to the far shore, we may call our true companion.

Says Tuka, who among them truly believes in both sides of the journey?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Fruits like the mahua are hard to find; some fall before they ripen. Few reach full ripeness, and most are lost on the way. Only the rare one reaches the goal; the last obstacles are the hardest. High and low servants serve the master, and the master knows each one's service. Only a few catch the flash of grace in that instant. Whoever crosses to the far shore, him we may call our true companion. Tuka says: of both kinds, who truly believes?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the orchard to speak about the spiritual journey. Like fruit that mostly drops before ripening, few seekers reach maturity; most are lost along the road, and the final stretch is the hardest of all. Servants high and low all serve, and the master sees each one's work, but only a rare few catch the flash of grace at the right moment. The one who actually crosses to the far shore, that is the companion worth keeping. The closing question turns it on the listener: among all who set out, who really has faith that carries them through to the end?

GATHA 1285 True Worship

True worship, the mind alone

मराठी मूळ

अवघ्या उपचारा । एक मनें चि दातारा ॥1॥
घ्यावी घ्यावी हे चि सेवा । माझी दुर्बळाची देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघियाचा ठाव। पायांवरि जीवभाव ॥2॥
चित्ताचें आसन । तुका करितो कीर्तन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All worship is rendered through the mind alone, O Generous One.

Accept this seva of mine, a poor man's offering to You, O God.

The foundation of everything rests upon Your feet, where the jiva-sense itself is placed.

Says Tuka, kirtan is the seat of chitta; this is where I perform my worship.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All worship happens in the mind alone, O Generous One. Take this seva, take it. It is the offering of a poor man, O God. The ground of everything is here: my life-sense laid upon Your feet. My seat is my own attention. Tuka says: there I sing Your kirtan; there I worship.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redraws what worship even is. He says all real worship is done in the mind, not in props or ritual show, and he hands over the one thing a poor man has to give: his whole attention. He places his very sense of being alive at Vitthal's feet and makes his own steadied mind the altar he sits at. The kirtan he sings is not a performance somewhere else; it is the worship itself, offered from inside.

GATHA 1286 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, nowhere else to go

मराठी मूळ

आली सलगी पायांपाशीं । होइल तैसी करीन ॥1॥
आणीक आह्मीं कोठें जावें । येथें जीवें वेचलों ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघ्या निरोपणा भाव । हा चि ठाव उरलासे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाळीं लळे। कृपाळुवे विठ्ठले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having found intimacy at Your feet, I will act however You will it.

Where else should I go? I have poured out my life here.

After letting go of everything, only this refuge remains.

Says Tuka, nurture my childlike ways, O merciful Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come close to Your feet now; I will do whatever You want. Where else would I go? I have spent my whole life here. Once I have let go of everything, this is the only refuge left. Tuka says: indulge my childish ways, merciful Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes surrender as the end of options, not a grand gesture. Having come near Vitthal's feet, he hands over his own will: he will do whatever God wants. The blunt question, where else would I go, names the truth that he has poured his entire life into this one place and has nothing held back. With everything else released, only this refuge remains, and he asks the merciful Vitthal to put up with his childlike demands like a parent with a small child.

GATHA 1287 Renunciation

Renunciation, drop 'I' and 'mine'

मराठी मूळ

देह आणि देहसंबंधें निंदावीं । इतरें वंदावीं श्वानशूकरें ॥1॥
येणें नांवें जाला मी माझ्याचा झाडा । मोहा नांवें खोडा गर्भवास ॥ध्रु.॥
गृह आणि वित्त स्वदेशा विटावें । इतरा भेटावें श्वापदझाडां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी हें माझें न यो वाचे । येणें नांवें साचे साधुजन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The body and all bodily relations should be condemned, while even dogs and pigs who are devoted should be honored.

By this understanding, the entanglement of "I" and "mine" is cleared away. Attachment is the fetter that binds the jiva to womb-dwelling.

One should feel disgust for home, wealth, and homeland, and embrace even wild beasts and trees.

Says Tuka, those holy ones who do not let "I" and "mine" cross their lips are the true saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Condemn the body and all the ties of the body. Honor instead even the dogs and pigs who love God. By this, the whole account of 'I' and 'mine' is wiped clean. Attachment is the very fetter that drags the soul back into the womb. Turn away in disgust from house and wealth and homeland; meet instead the beasts and trees of the wild. Tuka says: those whose mouths never say 'I' and 'mine' are the true saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram inverts the ordinary scale of high and low. He tells you to scorn the body and its relations, and to bow instead before even dogs and pigs if they are turned toward God, because devotion outranks birth. The point of all this is to clear the ledger of 'I' and 'mine,' since that attachment is the chain that keeps pulling the soul back into birth after birth. He pushes it to the edge: prefer the wild over home, wealth, and country, and read the closing line as the test, the true saint is simply the one in whom 'I' and 'mine' have gone silent.

GATHA 1288 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, lay down the burden

मराठी मूळ

देवाचिये माथां घालुनियां भार । सांडीं किळवर ओंवाळूनि ॥1 ॥
नाथिला हा छंद अभिमान अंगीं । निमित्याचे वेगीं सारीं ओझें ॥ध्रु.॥
करुणावचनीं लाहो एकसरें । नेदावें दुसरें आड येऊं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांडीं लटिक्याचा संग । आनंद तो मग प्रगटेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Place your burden upon God's head and cast off the carcass as an offering.

This pointless vanity clings to your body; swiftly surrender its weight to the one appointed.

With words of compassion, gain everything in a single stroke, and let nothing else come in the way.

Says Tuka, abandon the company of falsehood, and joy will then reveal itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lay your burden on God's head; cast off this carcass like an offering waved away. This useless craving, this pride, clings to your body; quickly hand its weight to the One appointed to carry it. With words asking for mercy, win everything in a single stroke, and let nothing else come between. Tuka says: drop the company of what is false, and then joy will show itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells you to stop carrying what was never yours to carry. The burden is the load of self-will and self-importance, and the body itself is called a carcass to be offered up, not clutched. He says vanity and craving stick to us, so set the weight down on the One whose job it is to bear it, and ask for mercy plainly, in one stroke, with nothing else allowed to interfere. The last line names the condition: as long as we keep company with the false, joy stays hidden; let that go, and it appears on its own.

GATHA 1289 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, only Vitthal remains

मराठी मूळ

देह नव्हे मी हें सरे । उरला उरे विठ्ठल ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि लाहो करा । काळ सारा चिंतनें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवासाटीं । देव पोटीं पडेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the realization dawns that "I am not this body," only Vitthala remains.

Therefore take this profit and spend your entire time in contemplation.

Says Tuka, for the sake of the jiva, God will enter the belly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When 'I am not this body' becomes true, the body falls away and Vitthal alone is left. So make your profit of it; spend all your time in remembrance. Tuka says: for the sake of the soul, God will come to rest in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the whole turn in one line: the moment the conviction 'I am not this body' is real, the body drops out of the way and only Vitthal remains. He treats this as the one worthwhile gain, so he urges you to use your time well and pour it into constant remembrance. The closing promise is intimate, for the soul's sake God will come and settle within you, taking up residence in the heart.

GATHA 1290 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the one essence

मराठी मूळ

पृथक मी सांगों किती । धर्म नीती सकळां ॥1॥
अवघियांचा एक ठाव । शुद्ध भाव विठ्ठलीं ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षराअक्षराचा भाग । करा लाग पंढरीये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आगमींचें । मथिलें साचें नवनीत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How long shall I explain separately the dharma and ethics for everyone?

The one foundation for all is pure bhava toward Vitthala.

For the sake of the perishable and the imperishable, set your course toward Pandhari.

Says Tuka, this is the fresh butter churned from all the scriptures.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long should I spell out separately the duty and the right conduct for everyone? There is one ground for all: pure love toward Vitthal. For the perishable and the imperishable alike, set your steps toward Pandhari. Tuka says: this is the fresh butter churned out of all the scriptures.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cuts through the endless lists of rules. Rather than reciting a different dharma for each person and case, he points to one foundation that holds for everyone: pure-hearted love for Vitthal. Whatever you are after, the passing things or the lasting, he says the road runs through Pandhari. The final image makes the claim plainly, this single teaching is the butter churned from the whole ocean of scripture, the essence left when all the rest is set aside.

GATHA 1291 Social Criticism

Social criticism, selling merit

मराठी मूळ

पुण्यविकरा तें मातेचें गमन । भाडी ऐसें धन विटाळ तो ॥1॥
आत्महत्यारा हा विषयांचा लोभी । ह्मणावें तें नाभी करवी दंड ॥ध्रु.॥
नागवला अल्प लोभाचिये साटीं । घेऊनि कांचवटि परिस दिला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हात झाडिले परत्रीं । श्रम तो चि श्रोत्रीं वेठी केली ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Selling merit is like trafficking one's own mother. Such wealth earned by hire is a defilement.

He who is greedy for sense-pleasures is a self-murderer; his punishment cannot even be properly named.

The foolish one is cheated for a trifle, giving up the philosopher's stone for glass beads.

Says Tuka, he has shaken off all claims to the next world. The very effort meant for scripture has been turned into forced labor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To sell your merit is like trafficking your own mother. Wealth earned that way is defilement. The man greedy for pleasures is his own murderer; his punishment can hardly be named. The fool is robbed for a trifle: he hands over the philosopher's stone and takes glass beads in return. Tuka says: he has washed his hands of the next world, and the very labor meant for scripture he has turned into drudgery.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the practice of trading spiritual merit for money, and he makes the comparison deliberately shocking: it is like selling your own mother, and the gain is pure defilement. The greed for sense-pleasure is self-murder, a slow killing of one's own life, deserving a penalty too great to name. His sharpest image is the bad bargain, giving away the stone that turns iron to gold and accepting worthless glass in exchange, which is exactly what trading the eternal for a trifle amounts to. Read it as a warning to examine the pattern in oneself: when effort that could go toward the scriptures gets bent into mere money-labor, the next world is forfeited.

GATHA 1292 True Worship

True worship, inward meditation

मराठी मूळ

अंतरींचें ध्यान । मुख्य या नांवें पूजन ॥1॥
उपाधि तें अवघें पाप । गोड निरसतां संकल्प ॥ध्रु.॥
आज्ञा पाळावी हा धर्म । जाणते हो जाणा वर्म ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वृत्त । अविट हे सहज िस्थति ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Inward meditation is the truest worship by this name.

All disturbance is sin; it is sweet when mental resolve dissolves.

To obey God's command is the real dharma. O knowing ones, know this secret well.

Says Tuka, this effortless natural state is an inexhaustible abiding condition.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Meditation within: that is what truly deserves the name worship. Every added trapping is sin; it turns sweet the moment the scheming mind dissolves. To keep God's command is the real duty. You who understand, understand this secret. Tuka says: this is the steady state, an unspoiled, natural abiding.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram locates worship inside, in steady inward meditation, and says that alone earns the name. The outer trappings and contrivances he calls sin, not because ritual objects are evil but because the busy, scheming mind they feed is the obstacle; the moment that resolve-making mind quiets, everything turns sweet. He reframes duty too: real dharma is simply obeying God's will, and he calls out the ones who already know to actually grasp this. The end names the goal, an effortless, natural condition that does not stale or break, abiding on its own.

GATHA 1293 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, no service is enough

मराठी मूळ

मूळ करणें संतां । नाहीं मिळत उचिता ॥1॥
घडे कासयानें सेवा । सांग ब्रह्मांडाच्या जीवा ॥ध्रु.॥
सागर सागरीं । सामावेसी कैंची थोरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । शरण ह्मणवितां बरवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can one serve the saints at their very root? What is truly fitting is not easily found.

Tell me, O Jiva of the universe, how is such service even to be done?

The ocean merging into the ocean: where is the greatness in that?

Says Tuka, it is beautiful to take refuge and call oneself surrendered.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I serve the saints at their very root? What would truly be fitting is not to be found. By what means is such service even done? Tell me, O Soul of the universe. When the ocean merges into the ocean, where is the greatness in that? Tuka says: with true feeling, it is good simply to take refuge and call oneself surrendered.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that he cannot repay the saints; nothing he could offer would be adequate to what they are. He asks the Soul of the universe, the very God who lives in the saints, how such service is even possible, since the giver is so small beside the gift. The image of the ocean pouring into the ocean undercuts any pride: when you merge into something infinitely greater, you add no greatness of your own. So the honest move, he says, is the humble one, with sincere feeling simply to take refuge and let yourself be called surrendered, and that is enough.

GATHA 1294 The Power of the Name

The Name, a bonfire of faults

मराठी मूळ

बरवी नामावळी । तुझी महादोषां होळी ॥1॥
जालें आह्मांसी जीवन । धणीवरि हें सेवन ॥ध्रु.॥
सोपें आणि गोड । किती अमृता ही वाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अच्युता । आमचा कल्पतरु दाता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Beautiful is the garland of Your Name; it makes a bonfire of the greatest faults.

It has become our very life and water, and we drink it to full satiation.

It is simple and sweet, surpassing even amrita in its abundance.

Says Tuka, O Achyuta, You are our wish-fulfilling tree, our giver.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Beautiful is the roll of Your names; it makes a bonfire of the greatest sins. It has become our life, our water; we drink it to the full. It is simple and it is sweet, more abundant than even the nectar of immortality. Tuka says: O Achyuta, You are our wish-granting tree, our giver.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises the Name as both purifier and sustenance. Reciting the string of God's names burns up even the gravest faults the way fire consumes a heap, leaving nothing. More than a cure, the Name has become his very life and his drinking-water, taken to satisfaction. He marvels that it is at once easy to use and sweet, and richer than amrita, the nectar of the gods, and closes by calling Achyuta the wish-granting tree, the giver who supplies all this freely.

GATHA 1295 The Saints

Saints, water to the thirsty

मराठी मूळ

त्रुशाकाळें उदकें भेटी । पडे मिठी आवडीची ॥1॥
ऐसियाचा हो कां संग । जिवलग संतांचा ॥ध्रु.॥
मिष्टान्नाचा योग भुके । ह्मणतां चुके पुरेसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माते बाळा । कळवळा भेटीचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a thirsty person finds water, an embrace of love follows at once.

Seek such company: the company of saints, intimate and dear to the jiva.

When fine food meets true hunger, there is fullness; no need to say more.

Says Tuka, like a mother meeting her child, there is a deep tenderness in that reunion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When a thirsty man finds water, he embraces it with longing. Keep that kind of company: the company of saints, dear and close to the soul. When real hunger meets good food, it is filled; there is no more to say. Tuka says: like a mother meeting her child, there is a deep ache of tenderness in that meeting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes why the company of saints matters by pointing to plain bodily need. A thirsty man does not weigh whether to drink; he seizes the water with longing, and that is the love we should feel for the saints, who are as close to the soul as life itself. The second image says the same: true hunger meeting good food is simply satisfied, no argument needed. He ends on the tenderest note, a mother reunited with her child, to show that meeting the saints is not cool approval but a warm, aching gladness.

GATHA 1296 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the absent listener

मराठी मूळ

कुचराचे श्रवण । गुणदोषांवरि मन ॥1॥
असोनियां नसे कथे । मूर्ख अभाग्य तें तेथें ॥ध्रु.॥
निरर्थक कारणीं । कान डोळे वेची वाणी ॥2॥
पापाचे सांगाती । तोंडीं ओढाळांचे माती ॥3॥
हिताचिया नांवें । वोस पडिले देहभावें ॥4॥
फजीत करूनि सांडीं । तुका करी बोडाबोडी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The crooked one's hearing is base; his mind dwells on the faults and virtues of others.

Though present at the sacred katha, the foolish and unfortunate one is truly absent.

He wastes his ears, eyes, and speech on worthless matters.

Companions of sin, their mouths are filled with the filth of the unrestrained.

In the name of welfare, they are hollow, emptied out by body-identification.

Says Tuka, expose them, shame them, and have done with the wrangling.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The crooked man's listening is mean: his mind runs on other people's faults and merits. He sits in the holy telling and is not there at all; the fool, the luckless one, is absent in his own seat. He spends his ears, his eyes, his speech on worthless things. Companions of sin, their mouths are full of the dirt of the unbridled. In the name of doing good, they are hollow, emptied out by clinging to the body. Tuka says: shame them, expose them, and have done with the wrangling.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a person who is physically present at the sacred story but spiritually absent, because his mind is busy auditing everyone else's faults and virtues instead of listening. Such a one wastes the very faculties given for devotion, ears, eyes, and tongue, on worthless chatter, keeps the company of the reckless, and lets his mouth fill with their filth. He looks as if he is pursuing the good, but he is hollowed out by attachment to the body. The blunt close, expose and shame and be done, points at the pattern of distracted, fault-finding hearing; hold it up to yourself and stop the endless quarreling that feeds it.

GATHA 1297 Autobiography

Honest reproof, no enemy in it

मराठी मूळ

जग तरि आह्मां देव । परि हे निंदितों स्वभाव ॥1॥
येतो हिताचा कळवळा । पडती हातीं ह्मुन काळा ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं कोणी सखा । आह्मां निपराध पारिखा ॥2॥
उपक्रमें वदे । तुका वर्मासी तें भेदे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The world is God to us, yet we must criticize its ways.

A deep concern for welfare arises within us: they are falling into the hands of Death.

We have no personal enemy; we are blameless and impartial toward all.

Says Tuka, through earnest speech, one pierces to the vital point.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The whole world is God to us. Yet we still criticize its ways. A deep concern for what is good rises in us, because people are falling into the hands of Death. We have no friend we favor and no enemy we hate; we are blameless and even toward all. We speak by trying to help. Tuka says: such speech pierces to the vital point.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the charge that his rebukes are unkind. He holds two things at once: the world is God to him, and its conduct still has to be named for what it is. The concern that drives his criticism is that people are sliding toward death while they live badly. He insists he has no personal target, no favorite and no foe; he is impartial. His words cut to the quick precisely because they aim at the fault, not at the person, and because their only motive is the listener's good.

GATHA 1298 Devotion to Vitthal

Kirtan, the simple secret of joy

मराठी मूळ

सोपें वर्म आह्मां सांगितलें संतीं । टाळ दिंडी हातीं घेउनि नाचा ॥1॥
समाधीचें सुख सांडा ओंवाळून । ऐसें हें कीर्तन ब्रह्मरस ॥ध्रु.॥
पुढती घडे चढतें सेवन आगळें । भक्तिभाग्यबळें निर्भरता ॥2॥
उपजों चि नये संदेह चित्तासी । मुक्ति चारी दासी हरिदासांच्या ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मन पावोनि विश्रांती । त्रिविध नासती ताप क्षणें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints taught us a simple secret: take cymbals and the dindi-flag in your hands and dance.

Wave away even the bliss of samadhi as an offering, for kirtan is itself the essence of Brahman.

In its progression, devotion only deepens, and by the power of devotional fortune comes utter fulfillment.

No doubt should arise in the chitta, for the four kinds of mukti are maidservants to the devotees of Hari.

Says Tuka, when the mind finds rest, the threefold afflictions are destroyed in an instant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints told us a simple secret: take cymbals and the dindi-flag in your hands, and dance. Wave away even the bliss of samadhi like an offering you give up; this kirtan is itself the essence of Brahman. As it goes on, the practice only rises higher, and by the strength of devotional fortune comes full contentment. Let no doubt arise in the mind: the four kinds of liberation are maidservants to the servants of Hari. Tuka says: when the mind finds rest, the threefold afflictions are destroyed in a moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram passes on what the saints handed him: the way is not hard. You pick up cymbals and flag and dance in kirtan, and that singing is the very taste of Brahman, higher than the silent bliss of samadhi, which you can wave away as a lesser offering. He says the practice keeps deepening of itself, and that liberation is no longer something to chase: the four classic kinds of mukti wait like servants on those who serve Hari. The point is to drop doubt and let the mind rest in the Name, and when it does, the threefold suffering of life burns off in an instant.

GATHA 1299 Social Criticism

Social criticism, caste cannot stain the divine

मराठी मूळ

गंगा न देखे विटाळ । तें चि रांजणीं ही जळ ॥1॥
अल्पमहदा नव्हे सरी । विटाळ तो भेद धरी ॥ध्रु.॥
काय खंडिली भूमिका । वर्णा पायरिकां लोकां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अगीविण । बीजें वेगळीं तों भिन्न ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Ganga does not see pollution; it is the same water whether in the river or in a pot.

The small and the great cannot be equated; it is division itself that perceives defilement.

Has the earth been broken into separate pieces for people of different castes and ranks?

Says Tuka, until they are separated from the fire, the seeds remain distinct.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Ganga sees no pollution. It is the same water whether it flows in the river or sits in a clay pot. The small and the great are not equal, and it is division itself that sees defilement. Has the earth been cut into separate pieces for people of different castes and ranks? Tuka says: it is only before they meet the fire that the seeds stay separate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the logic of caste pollution. The Ganga does not register impurity; its water is one water, river or pot, so what is truly holy cannot be stained by the vessel that holds it. The sense of defilement, he says, lives in the mind that insists on ranking high over low, not in reality. The earth was never carved into separate plots for separate castes. His closing image asks the listener to look at the destination: distinct seeds look different now, but in the fire they all come to one end, and so do all people.

GATHA 1300 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, leave the burden on God

मराठी मूळ

देवावरिल भार । काढूं नये कांहीं पर ॥1॥
तानभुके आठवण । घडे तें बरें चिंतन ॥ध्रु.॥
देखावी निंश्चती । ते चि अंतर श्रीपती ॥2॥
वैभव सकळ । तुका मानितो विटाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The burden placed upon God should not be taken back for any reason.

When hunger and thirst remind us of Him, that itself is good contemplation.

Let unwavering faith be seen, for that alone is closeness to God.

Says Tuka, I regard all worldly grandeur as defilement.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not take back the burden once it is laid on God; do not take it back for any reason. When hunger and thirst remind you of Him, that remembering is good. Let unwavering trust be what shows; that alone is closeness to Shripati. Tuka says: I count all worldly grandeur as defilement.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what true surrender requires. Once you hand your cares to God, you do not quietly reclaim them; reaching for control again undoes the trust. He turns even bodily need to use: when hunger and thirst make you think of God, that is good contemplation, not a distraction. The proof of surrender is steady faith, and that faith itself is nearness to God. He ends by refusing the rival to surrender, treating all worldly splendor as something defiling rather than something to want.

GATHA 1301 Renunciation

Renunciation, pride spat out for the Name

मराठी मूळ

थुंकोनियां मान । दंभ करितों कीर्तन ॥1॥
जालों उदासीन देहीं । एकाविण चाड नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
अर्थ अनर्थ सारिखा । करूनि ठेविला पारिखा ॥2॥
उपाधिवेगळा । तुका राहिला सोंवळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Spitting upon pride, I devote myself to kirtan, abandoning all pretense.

I have become indifferent to this body; I have no attachment to anything but the One.

Gain and loss have become equal to me; I have made all worldly things foreign.

Says Tuka, free from all disturbance, I remain pure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I spit on honor and give myself to kirtan, throwing away all pretense. I have grown indifferent to the body; I care for nothing but the One. Gain and loss have become the same to me; I have made all worldly things strangers. Tuka says: free of every disturbance, I stay pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the inner cost and reward of his path. He despises social honor and the urge to perform, so he sings kirtan with the pretense stripped out. He has stopped caring about the body and wants nothing but God alone. With that, gain and loss flatten into one indifferent thing, and the whole world becomes foreign to him. Cut loose from these entanglements, he says he is left clean and undisturbed, the purity here being inward freedom, not ritual cleanness.

GATHA 1302 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the Name turned into trade

मराठी मूळ

काय हएाचें घ्यावें । नित्य नित्य कोणें गावें ॥1॥
केलें हरिकथेनें वाज । अंतरोनी जाते निज ॥ध्रु.॥
काम संसार । अंतरीं हे करकर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हेंड । ऐसे मानिती ते लंड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can be gained from such people? Who should sing daily for them?

They have turned the telling of Hari into a trade, while their true nature retreats within.

Worldly desire and household life churn noisily within them.

Says Tuka, those who honor such people are shameless wretches.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is there to gain from such people? Who should sing for them, day after day? They have made the telling of Hari into a trade, while their true self slips away inside. Worldly desire and household life churn and grate within them. Tuka says: those who honor such people are shameless wretches.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram condemns the pattern of using devotion as a business. He asks what a sincere singer gains by performing for people who have turned the telling of Hari's story into a paid trade, since their real self drains away even as they perform. Inside them desire and household concern keep grinding; the kirtan is only a front. His harshest line falls on those who praise and prop up such performers. The target is the corruption of selling the Name and the flattery that rewards it, a warning to examine one's own motive in worship.

GATHA 1303 Autobiography

Autobiography, speech given by the Giver

मराठी मूळ

वदे साक्षत्वेंसीं वाणी । नारायणीं मिश्रित ॥1॥
न लगे कांहीं चाचपावें । जातों भावें पेरीत ॥ध्रु.॥
भांडार त्या दातियाचें। मी कैचें ये ठायीं ॥2॥
सादावीत गेला तुका । येथें एकाएकीं तो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My speech flows merged in witness-nature, blended into Narayana.

I need not fumble for anything; I go sowing with devotion.

That treasury belongs to the Giver; what place do I have here?

Says Tuka, he went calling out, and there, suddenly, alone with the One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My speech speaks as a witness, blended into Narayana. I need not grope for anything; I go on sowing with love. The treasury belongs to that Giver; what claim have I here? Tuka says: he went on calling out, suddenly here, alone with the One.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram disowns himself as the author of his words. He speaks as a witness whose voice is merged with Narayana, so he never has to fumble or strain; he simply scatters the seed in devotion. The whole store he draws from is God's, the Giver's, not his own, and he asks what standing he could possibly claim over it. The poem ends with him still calling out the Name, surprised to find himself set down here alone with the One, the giver of the very speech he is using.

GATHA 1304 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, why not chant Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

ऐसी जिव्हा निकी । विठ्ठल विठ्ठल कां न घोकी ॥1॥
जेणें पाविजे उद्धार । तेथें राखावें अंतर ॥ध्रु.॥
गुंपोनि चावटी । तेथें कोणा लाभें भेटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळा । देवाविण अमंगळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Such a fine tongue you have; why does it not chant Vitthala, Vitthala?

Where salvation is to be found, one should preserve the inner distance.

By getting entangled in idle chatter, what meeting brings any gain?

Says Tuka, without God, all skill is inauspicious.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have such a fine tongue; why does it not chant Vitthal, Vitthal? Where deliverance is to be found, there keep your mind. By tangling yourself in idle chatter, what meeting gives you any gain? Tuka says: without God, all cleverness is foul.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a simple question on the listener. You have been given a tongue, so why waste it on anything but the Name, Vitthal, Vitthal? He tells you to keep your attention fixed where rescue actually lies, on God, not on gossip and empty talk that lead to no worthwhile meeting. The closing line is the edge of it: skill, eloquence, talent, whatever you are proud of, is inauspicious and unclean if God is left out of it. The invitation is to redirect a good faculty toward its true use.

GATHA 1305 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, ornaments need a true marriage

मराठी मूळ

साजे अळंकार । तरि भोगितां भ्रतार ॥1॥
व्यभिचारा टाकमटिका । उपहास होती लोकां ॥ध्रु.॥
शूरत्वाची वाणी । रूप मिरवे मंडणीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जिणें । शर्त्तीविण लाजिरवाणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ornaments befit a woman who is with her husband.

On an adulteress, they are misplaced and bring ridicule from all.

To speak of bravery, to display one's beauty in adornments:

Says Tuka, without proper discipline, such a life is shameful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ornaments look right on a woman who is with her husband. On an unfaithful woman they are out of place and bring her the scorn of all. To boast of bravery, to show off your beauty in fine adornments: Tuka says: without true discipline, such a life is shameful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses a marriage image to test the worth of outward show. Jewelry fits a faithful wife but looks absurd on one who has betrayed the bond, and it earns her mockery rather than admiration. He reads spiritual life the same way: parading your courage or decking yourself in fine display means nothing if the underlying fidelity is missing. The point lands on discipline and faithfulness as what gives the outward signs their value; without that inner commitment, the whole performance is a shameful pretense, an invitation to examine whether one's display rests on anything real.

GATHA 1306 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false giver of powers

मराठी मूळ

मानामान किती । तुझ्या क्षुल्लका संपत्ती ॥1॥
जा रे चाळवीं बापुडीं । कोणी धरिती तीं गोडी ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धसिद्धी देसी। आह्मीं चुंभळें नव्हों तैसीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठका । ऐसें नागविलें लोकां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much honor do you claim from your petty wealth?

Go and impress the gullible; let those who like such things be charmed by them.

Even if you offer riddhis and siddhis, we are not like innocents to be won over.

Says Tuka, O deceiver, this is how you have cheated the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How much honor do you claim from your petty wealth? Go, charm the helpless; let whoever likes such things be sweetened by them. Even if you hand out riddhis and siddhis, we are not simpletons to be won that way. Tuka says: O cheat, this is how you have robbed the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses a tempter who offers worldly status and occult powers. He mocks the small wealth and honor being dangled, telling the man to go beguile the gullible who still find such things sweet. Even the famous powers, riddhis and siddhis, do not move him; he is not naive enough to be bought by them. He names the dealer a cheat, saying this very bait of powers and prestige is how he has stripped and fooled the world. The warning is against trading the goal of God for spiritual or material trinkets.

GATHA 1307 Longing and Separation

Longing, come forward, Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

पाहातोसी काय । आतां पुढें करीं पाय ॥1॥
वरि ठेवूं दे मस्तक । ठेलों जोडूनि हस्तक ॥ध्रु.॥
बरवें करीं सम । नको भंगों देऊं प्रेम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चला । पुढती सामोरे विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What are you gazing at? Now step forward.

I stand here with hands folded, waiting to place my head upon Your feet.

Set things right and balanced; do not let love be broken.

Says Tuka, come, Vitthala, come forward to face me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What are you looking at? Now step forward. Let me set my head on your feet; I stand here with hands joined. Make things right and level; do not let love be broken. Tuka says: come, Vitthal, come forward to meet me.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a lover's direct address to God in the midst of longing. Tukaram asks Vitthal why he merely gazes and stays distant; he wants God to take the step forward. He is already in position, hands folded, waiting only to lay his head on those feet. His plea is for things to be set right between them, for the love not to be allowed to break off. The whole abhanga is an ache for closeness fulfilled, calling the God of Pandhari to come face to face.

GATHA 1308 The Saints

Saints, who is truly a devotee

मराठी मूळ

भक्त ऐसे जाणा जे देहीं उदास । गेले आशापाश निवारूनि ॥1॥
विषय तो त्यांचा जाला नारायण । नावडे धन जन माता पिता ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्वाणीं गोविंद असे मागेंपुढें । कांहीं च सांकडें पडों नेदी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्य कर्मा व्हावें साहे । घातलिया भये नकान जाणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know these as devotees: those who are indifferent to the body and have cast off all bonds of hope and desire.

For them, sense-objects have themselves become Narayana. Wealth, people, mother, and father are no longer dear to them.

At the final hour, Govinda stands before and behind them, allowing no hardship to befall.

Says Tuka, one must hold to truth in one's actions and not turn away even when fear strikes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know these as devotees: those who are indifferent to the body, who have cut away the snares of hope and desire. For them, the objects of the senses have themselves become Narayana; wealth, people, mother and father are no longer dear. At the last hour, Govinda stands before them and behind them, and lets no hardship touch them. Tuka says: hold fast to truth in your acts, and do not turn away even when fear strikes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defines who really counts as a devotee. They sit loose to the body and have cut the binding cords of hope and craving. For them the world of the senses is no longer a snare but is seen as Narayana himself, so money, relations, even mother and father lose their grip. He promises that at the final, deathward moment Govinda guards such a one front and back, letting no hardship break through. The closing line turns it into a charge: stay true in what you do and do not flinch when fear comes, for that is the devotee's mark.

GATHA 1309 The Nature of God

Discernment, the lamp and the sun

मराठी मूळ

तों च हीं क्षुल्लकें सखीं सहोदरें । नाहीं विश्वंभरें वोळखी तों ॥1॥
नारायण विश्वंभर विश्वपिता । प्रमाण तो होतां सकळ मिथ्या ॥ध्रु.॥
रवि नुगवे तों दीपिकाचें काज । प्रकाशें तें तेज सहज लोपे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देहसंबंध संचितें । कारण निरुतें नारायणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

These petty friends and relatives hold sway only so long as the Lord of all has not been recognized.

Narayana, the sustainer, the father of the universe: once He becomes the true measure, all else is illusion.

Until the sun rises, the lamp has its work to do; but in that greater radiance, its light is naturally extinguished.

Says Tuka, all bodily relations are the fruit of accumulated karma. The true cause lies in Narayana alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These petty friends and kinsmen hold their sway only while the Lord of all has not been recognized. Narayana is the sustainer, the father of the universe. Once He becomes the one measure, everything else is false. Until the sun rises, the lamp has its work. In that greater light, the lamp goes out on its own. Tuka says: bodily relations are the fruit of past karma. The true cause is in Narayana alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets ordinary family ties against the one reality and shows which one is borrowed. Petty friends and relatives feel central only as long as Narayana, the sustainer and father of all, has not been recognized; once He is taken as the true measure, everything else shows itself as illusion. He gives the homely image of a lamp: useful in the dark, but the moment the sun rises it is naturally extinguished, not blown out. So too our bodily relations are real enough as fruits of accumulated karma, but they are effects, not the cause. The cause, the thing that does not pass when the light comes, is Narayana alone.

GATHA 1310 The Nature of God

The one goal, the rare walker

मराठी मूळ

यज्ञ भूतांच्या पाळणा । भेद कारीये कारणा । पावावया उपासना । ब्रह्मस्थानीं प्रस्थान ॥1॥
एक परी पडिलें भागीं । फळ बीजाचिये अंगीं । धन्य तो चि जगीं । आदि अंत सांभाळी ॥ध्रु.॥
आवशक तो शेवट । मागें अवघी खटपट । चालों जाणे वाट । ऐसा विरळा एखादा ॥2॥
तुका होवोनि निराळा । क्षराअक्षरावेगळा । पाहे निगमकळा । बोले विठ्ठलप्रसादें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the nurturing of all beings, distinctions have been made, so that through worship one may set out toward the seat of Brahman.

What falls to each one's share bears fruit from its own seed. Blessed is the one in this world who safeguards both the beginning and the end.

The final goal alone is essential; all the striving that came before is struggle. Rare is the one who knows the way to walk it.

Says Tuka, standing apart, beyond both the perishable and the imperishable, Tuka looks upon the art of the Vedas and speaks by the grace of Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the keeping of all beings, distinctions are made, so that through worship one may set out toward the seat of Brahman. What falls to each one's share bears fruit from its own seed. Blessed in this world is the one who guards both the beginning and the end. The final goal alone is what matters; all the striving before it is struggle. Rare is the one who knows how to walk the way. Tuka says: standing apart, beyond the perishable and the imperishable, Tuka looks upon the art of the Vedas and speaks by the grace of Vitthala.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why the world is full of differences and what to do with them. The distinctions among beings are not random; they are arranged so that through worship a soul can set out toward Brahman, and what each person reaps grows from the seed they themselves sowed. The point he keeps returning to is the end: only the final goal is essential, and all the prior effort is mere struggle until it arrives. He honors how rare it is to actually walk that path through to its end, and he claims his own words come not from cleverness but from a place beyond the perishable and imperishable, spoken by Vitthala's grace.

GATHA 1311 The Nature of God

Holy complaint, why the division

मराठी मूळ

वेदपुरुष तरि नेती कां वचन । निवडूनि भिन्न दाखविलें ॥1॥
तुझीं वर्में तूं चि दावूनि अनंता । होतोसी नेणता कोण्या गुणें ॥ध्रु.॥
यज्ञाचा भोक्ता तरि कां नव्हे सांग । उणें पडतां अंग क्षोभ घडे ॥2॥
वससी तूं या भूतांचे अंतरीं । तरि कां भेद हरी दावियेला ॥3॥
तपतिर्थाटणें तुझे मूतिनदान । तरि कां अभिमान आड येतो ॥4॥
आतां क्षमा कीजे विनवितो तुका । देऊनियां हाका उभा द्वारीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the Vedas are the Purusha, why did speech divide and distinguish things, setting them apart as different?

You Yourself revealed Your own secrets, O Ananta, yet by what quality do You now act as though unknowing?

If You are the enjoyer of sacrifice, tell me why: when offerings fall short, why does perturbation arise in You?

You dwell within all these beings, O Hari, yet why have You shown division?

If austerities, pilgrimages, and offerings of Your own image all exist, why does pride still stand in the way?

Says Tuka, I am standing at Your door, calling out to You. Please forgive me now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If the Vedas are the Purusha, why did speech divide things and set them apart as different? You revealed Your own secrets, O Ananta. By what quality do You now act as if You do not know? If You are the enjoyer of sacrifice, tell me: when the offering falls short, why does anger rise in You? You live inside all these beings, O Hari. Then why have You shown division? If austerities and pilgrimages and offerings of Your own image are all real, why does pride still stand in the way? Tuka says: I am standing at Your door, calling out to You. Forgive me now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns prayer into honest argument, pressing God with the contradictions God seems to permit. If scripture is one with the Purusha, why does its speech keep dividing reality into separate things; if Hari truly dwells inside every being, why has He let division appear at all? He even points at God's apparent moods: a Lord who claims to enjoy sacrifice yet is perturbed when offerings fall short, and a path of austerity and pilgrimage that still leaves pride in the way. The questions are not mockery but a lover's complaint, and Tukaram ends by dropping the case: he is simply standing at the door, calling out, asking to be forgiven.

GATHA 1312 Autobiography

Cry from the fire, run to me

मराठी मूळ

लोहागांवीं स्वामींच्या अंगावर ऊन पाणी घातलें - तो अभंग ॥1॥
जळे माझी काया लागला वोणवा । धांव रे केशवा मायबापा ॥1॥
पेटली सकळ कांति रोमावळी । नावरे हे होळी दहन जालें ॥ध्रु.॥
फुटोनियां दोन्ही भाग होऊं पाहे । पाहातोसी काय हृदय माझें ॥2॥
घेऊनि जीवन धांवें लवलाहीं । कवणाचें काहींहीं न चले येथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Composed when hot water was poured over the Swami at Lohagaon.

My body is burning; a wildfire has caught hold of me. Run to me, O Keshava, my mother and father!

My entire skin and every hair is ablaze. This conflagration cannot be contained; I am consumed.

My body is on the verge of splitting in two. What are You gazing at, as my heart breaks apart?

Take up life-giving water and run here without delay, for nothing of anyone else can avail here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Composed when hot water was poured over him at Lohagaon. My body is burning; a wildfire has caught me. Run to me, O Keshava, my mother and father. My whole skin and every hair is ablaze. This fire cannot be held back; I am being consumed. My body is about to split in two. What are You gazing at, while my heart breaks apart? Take up the life-giving water and run here at once. Here nothing of anyone else can help.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a cry torn out of real bodily agony, scalded by hot water, and turned straight toward God. Tukaram calls Keshava his mother and father and begs Him to run, because the burning has caught his whole skin and every hair and cannot be held back. The sharpest line is the reproach in the middle: what are You merely watching for, while my heart breaks. He insists that in this extremity no human help avails; only God can bring the water that saves, so the pain itself becomes the most direct possible prayer.

GATHA 1313 Prayers

Refuge, You are my mother

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे माझी तूं होसी जननी । आणीक निर्वाणीं कोण राखे ॥4॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, you are my mother. At the final hour, who else will protect me?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: You are my mother. At the final hour, who else will protect me?

WHAT IT MEANS

This single surviving line closes a prayer of utter dependence. Tukaram names God not as master or king but as mother, the one who holds a child who cannot hold itself. The question is not rhetorical despair but the logic of refuge: when death comes, every other support falls away, so there is no one else who can protect him. By stating it as a question he leaves the answer to God, which is itself the act of surrender.

GATHA 1314 Social Criticism

Social criticism, bhakti over birth

मराठी मूळ

अभक्त ब्राह्मण जळो त्याचें तोंड । काय त्यासी रांड प्रसवली ॥1॥
वैष्णव चांभार धन्य त्याची माता । शुद्ध उभयतां कुळ याती ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसा हा निवाडा जालासे पुराणीं । नव्हे माझी वाणी पदरींची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आगी लागो थोरपणा । दृष्ट त्या दुर्जना न पडो माझी ॥3॥
नामदेव व पांडुरंग यांनी स्वप्नांत येऊन स्वामींस आज्ञा केली कीं कवित्व करणें - ते अभंग ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the face of a devotionless Brahmin be burned! What whore gave birth to him?

Blessed is the Vaishnava, even if born a cobbler. Blessed is his mother; both his lineage and caste are purified.

This verdict has been established in the Puranas; these are not my own words from my own pocket.

Says Tuka, let fire consume all claims to greatness. May my eyes never fall upon such a wicked person.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the face of a Brahmin without devotion be burned. What woman gave birth to him? Blessed is the Vaishnava, even if born a cobbler. Blessed is his mother; both his lineage and his caste are made pure. This verdict is set down in the Puranas; these are not my own words from my own pocket. Tuka says: let fire take all claims to greatness. May my eyes never fall on such a wicked person.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram overturns the whole ranking of caste and stakes everything on devotion. A Brahmin with no love for God he treats as worthless, while a devotee born a cobbler he calls blessed, his very lineage and birth made pure by his bhakti. He guards himself against the charge of merely venting by insisting the verdict is scriptural, not his private opinion. The fire he calls down is aimed not at any person's body but at the pattern of hollow pride in high birth, the impulse to claim greatness from status while the heart stays empty; the warning is one we are meant to turn first on ourselves.

GATHA 1315 Autobiography

Autobiography, the command to sing

मराठी मूळ

नामदेवें केलें स्वप्नामाजी जागें । सवें पांडुरंगें येऊनियां ॥1॥
सांगितलें काम करावें कवित्व । वाउगें निमित्य बोलों नको ॥ध्रु.॥
माप टाकी सळ धरिली विठ्ठलें । थापटोनि केलें सावधान ॥2॥
प्रमाणाची संख्या सांगे शत कोटी । उरले शेवटीं लावी तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Namdev awakened me within a dream, and Panduranga came along with him.

They told me to compose poetry and not to speak idle words.

Vitthala struck his measuring rod and, clapping, made me alert. The prescribed count was told: a hundred crores.

Says Tuka, whatever remains at the end, I shall complete.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Namdev woke me inside a dream, and Panduranga came along with him. They told me to compose poetry and not to speak idle words. Vitthala struck His measuring rod and, clapping, made me alert. The set count was told: a hundred crores. Tuka says: whatever is left at the end, I shall complete.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the dream that he received as his calling to write. Namdev, the old saint, wakes him within the dream and comes accompanied by Panduranga himself, and the charge is simple and strict: make poetry, and speak no idle words. The image of Vitthala striking a measuring rod and clapping him awake makes the commission feel like an assignment with a fixed measure, a hundred crores of verses. Tukaram accepts the debt as his own, vowing to finish whatever portion of that count remains undone.

GATHA 1316 Autobiography

Longing, a place at the saints' feet

मराठी मूळ

द्याल ठाव तरि राहेन संगती । संतांचे पंगती पायांपाशीं ॥1॥
आवडीचा ठाव आलोंसें टाकून । आतां उदासीन न धरावें ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवटील स्थळ निंच माझी वृत्त । आधारें विश्रांती पावईन ॥22॥
नामदेवापायीं तुक्या स्वप्नीं भेटी । प्रसाद हा पोटीं राहिलासे ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You will give me a place, I shall remain in the company of the saints, at the feet of their assembly.

I have come, drawn by love, having cast everything aside. Now, do not remain indifferent toward me.

My nature is humble, seeking the lowest seat; with Your support, I shall find rest.

Namdev appeared at Tuka's feet in a dream, and that blessing remains lodged within my belly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If You give me a place, I will stay in the company of the saints, at the feet of their gathering. Drawn by love, I have come, having thrown everything aside. Now do not stay cold toward me. My nature is low; I seek the lowest seat. With Your support I will find rest. Namdev met Tuka in a dream, at his feet, and that blessing has stayed inside me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for one thing only: a place among the saints, and the lowest place at that. He has already left everything behind out of love, so he pleads with God not to turn indifferent now that he has come empty-handed. There is no claim of merit here; he calls his own nature humble and wants the seat at the very feet of the assembly, where with God's support he can finally rest. He seals the prayer by recalling the dream-meeting at Namdev's feet, a blessing he says still lives within him.

GATHA 1317 Worldly Life

Time and grace, carried across

मराठी मूळ

त्रिपुटीच्या योगें । कांहीं नव्हे कोणां जोगें । एक जातां लागें । एक पाठीं लागतें ॥1॥
मागें पुढें अवघा काळ । पळों नये न चले बळ । करितां कोल्हाळ । कृपे खांदां हरि वाहे ॥ध्रु.॥
पापपुण्यात्मयाच्या शक्ती । असती योजिल्या श्रीपती । यावें काकुलती। तेथें सत्तानायेका ॥2॥
तुका उभा पैल थडी । तरि हे प्रकाश निवडी । घातल्या सांगडी । तापे पेटीं हाकारी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Bound by the triputi, nothing is fully within anyone's grasp. When one passes, another follows at your heels.

Before and behind, Time looms everywhere. One cannot flee, and force is of no use. Even amid the clamor, compassionate Hari carries you upon His shoulders.

The powers of sin and virtue are arranged by God Himself. One must plead before the sovereign Lord.

Says Tuka, I stand on the farther shore. By the light of discernment and the raft He provides, He calls out from within the burning chest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bound by the three, nothing is fully in anyone's hold. When one thing passes, another follows at your heels. Behind and ahead, Time stands everywhere. You cannot run, and force does no good. Even in the uproar, compassionate Hari carries you on His shoulders. The powers of sin and virtue are arranged by God Himself. One must plead before the sovereign Lord. Tuka says: I stand on the far shore. By the light of discernment and the raft He gives, He calls out from within the burning chest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the trap of conditioned existence and then names the only way out. Caught in the triputi of knower, knowing, and known, no one truly owns anything; one trouble passes only for the next to take its place, and Time hems us in front and back so that neither flight nor force can save us. Since even the workings of sin and virtue are set up by God, the sane response is not struggle but pleading before the sovereign Lord. The rescue is entirely grace: compassionate Hari lifts you onto His own shoulders, gives the raft of discernment, and calls out to you even from inside the burning heart of your distress, until you reach the far shore.

GATHA 1318 The Necessity of Experience

Discernment, three kinds of seeing

मराठी मूळ

देखण्याच्या तीन जाती । वेठी वार्ता अत्यंतीं ॥1॥
जैसा भाव तैसें फळ । स्वातीतोय एक जळ ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहे सांगे आणि जेवी । अंतर महदांतर तेवी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हिरा । पारखियां मूढां गारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There are three kinds of seeing: by forced conscription, by hearsay, and by direct tasting.

As is the inner disposition, so is the fruit; the rain of the Swati star is one water, yet not one result.

One who sees, one who speaks, and one who partakes: the distance between them is vast beyond measure.

Says Tuka, a diamond is a diamond to the jeweler; to the ignorant, it is gravel.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There are three kinds of seeing: by forced labor, by hearsay, and by direct tasting. As the inner feeling is, so is the fruit. The rain of the Swati star is one water, yet not one result. One who only looks, one who only talks, and one who actually eats: the distance between them is vast. Tuka says: to the jeweler a diamond is a diamond; to the fool it is gravel.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sorts knowing into ranks and asks which one we actually have. There is seeing under compulsion, seeing by mere report, and seeing by direct tasting, and only the last is real possession. His images make the point: the same Swati rain yields pearl or poison depending on what receives it, and the gap between someone who only looks or talks about a thing and someone who has truly eaten it is immense. The closing line turns it on the reader: the same diamond is treasure to the one with the eye to know it and worthless gravel to the one without, so the difference lies not in the truth but in our capacity to receive it.

GATHA 1319 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, the dross burned off

मराठी मूळ

अनुभवें अनुभव अवघा चि साधिला । तरि ंस्थरावला मनु ठायीं ॥1॥
पिटूनियां मुसे आला अळंकार । दग्ध तें असार होऊनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी जिंकिला संसार । होऊनि किंकर विठोबाचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through experience upon experience, everything has been accomplished. Then the mind grew still, settled in its place.

Hammered in the crucible, the ornament emerges; what was dross has been burned away.

Says Tuka, we have conquered this world of becoming by becoming servants of Vithoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Through experience upon experience, the whole thing was won. Then the mind grew still and settled in its place. Hammered in the crucible, the ornament comes out; what was dross has been burned away. Tuka says: we have conquered this world of becoming by becoming servants of Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes arrival, not theory: it was direct experience piled on direct experience that finally accomplished everything, and the proof is a mind that has gone quiet and come to rest. He reaches for the goldsmith's image: the metal is hammered and fired in the crucible until the worthless dross burns off and only the true ornament remains, which is what happens to a life passed through devotion. The closing turn is his characteristic paradox: the way they conquered samsara was not by mastering it but by surrendering, by becoming servants of Vithoba.

GATHA 1320 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, desire turned to worship

मराठी मूळ

ऐसिया संपत्ती आह्मां संवसारी । भोगाचिया परि काय सांगों ॥1॥
काम तो कामना भोगीतसे देवा । आंळगणें हेवा चरण चुंबीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शांतीच्या संयोगें निरसला ताप । दुसरें तें पाप भेदबुद्ध ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहें तिकडे सारिखें । आपुलें पारिखें निरसलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can I describe the wealth of this household and the nature of its enjoyments?

O God, desire itself becomes devotion; I embrace Your feet and kiss them with longing.

Through union with peace, all suffering has dissolved. The bheda-buddhi alone is the remaining blemish.

Says Tuka, when I look in any direction, all is the same. The distinction between self and other has been erased.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I tell the wealth of this household and how its joys are tasted? O God, desire itself becomes longing for You; I hold Your feet and kiss them with love. Through union with peace, all the burning has dissolved. The one sin left is the mind that still sees difference. Tuka says: wherever I look, all is the same. The line between mine and another's has been wiped away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports the strange riches of a life given to God, where the very faculties that once chased the world now serve devotion. Desire has not been killed but redirected: the same craving that pulled outward now reaches only for God's feet, which he embraces and kisses. Resting in peace, the old fever of suffering has dissolved, and he names the single remaining flaw with precision, the bheda-buddhi, the mind that still divides reality into separate things. As even that dissolves, he sees sameness in every direction, and the wall between self and other simply disappears.

GATHA 1321 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, all is Rama alone

मराठी मूळ

राम राज्य राम प्रजा लोकपाळ । एक चि सकळ दुजें नाहीं ॥1॥
मंगळावांचूनि उमटेना वाणी । अखंड चि खाणी एकी रासी ॥ध्रु.॥
मोडलें हें स्वामी ठावाठाव सेवा । वाढवा तो हेवा कोणा अंगें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघें दुमदुमिलें देवें । उरलें तें गावें हें चि आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama is the king, Rama is the people, Rama is the guardian of the world. All is one; there is no second.

Nothing but auspiciousness issues from the tongue; the entire mine is a single treasure.

All posts and stations of service have been dissolved, O Lord. By whose effort could that longing now increase?

Says Tuka, God has pervaded and resounded through all things. What remains now is simply to sing of this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama is the king. Rama is the people. Rama is the keeper of the world. All is one; there is no second. Nothing but blessing comes from my tongue now; the whole mine is one single treasure. The posts and stations of service are all dissolved, O Lord. By whose effort could that old longing grow now? Tuka says: God has filled and resounded through everything. All that is left is to sing of this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting a state where the seer has stopped seeing two of anything. He names king, people, and protector, the whole order of the world, and says each one is Rama; there is no second thing anywhere. Because of that, his speech can produce nothing but auspiciousness, and the ranks and tasks of devotional service collapse, since service needs a servant set apart from a master. With no separate self left to crave, the only act remaining is to sing the God who fills it all.

GATHA 1322 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, only the doer tastes it

मराठी मूळ

निवडोनि वाण काढिले निराळे । प्रमाण डोहळे यावरि ते ॥1॥
जयाचा विभाग तयासी च फळे । देखणें निराळें कौतुकासी ॥ध्रु.॥
शूर तो ओळखे घायडायहात । येरां होइल मात सांगायासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी केळवते वाणी । केला निजस्थानीं जाणवसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The choice grain has been sorted and set apart; let their longings be the final measure.

Each one's share bears fruit for that one alone; to watch it unfold is a separate wonder.

The warrior recognizes the blow and the hand that delivers it, while for the rest it becomes merely a tale to tell.

Says Tuka, my speech now beckons with refinement. Awareness of the abode within has been established.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The good grain has been sorted out and set apart. Let their own longing be the measure of it. Each one's portion bears fruit for that one alone. To watch it unfold is its own wonder. The warrior knows the blow and the hand that struck it; for everyone else it is only a story to retell. Tuka says: my speech is ripening now. Awareness of the home within me has been set firm.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that spiritual realization cannot be borrowed; it is tasted only by the one who lives it. He compares it to grain already sorted: each person reaps the fruit of their own share, no one else's. The warrior who has actually been in the fight knows the wound and the hand behind it, while bystanders can only repeat the tale. He ends by saying his own words have ripened because awareness has settled in its own native place inside him.

GATHA 1323 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the sweet last day

मराठी मूळ

याजसाटीं केला होता आटाहास्ये । शेवटाचा दिस गोड व्हावा ॥1॥
आतां निंश्चतीनें पावलों विसांवा । खुंटलिया धांवा तृष्णेचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
कवतुक वाटे जालिया वेचाचें । नांव मंगळाचें तेणें गुणें ॥2॥
ह्मणे मुक्ति परिणिली नोवरी । आतां दिवस चारी खेळीमेळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For this very end all the toil was undertaken: that the last day might be sweet. Now, with certainty, I have found rest, for the race of craving has come to a halt.

Looking back, even the cost of it all seems a delight, and so it earns the name of blessing. Says Tuka, liberation has been wedded like a bride. Now let the remaining days be spent in joyful celebration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It was for this that all the effort was made: that the last day should be sweet. Now, with certainty, I have reached rest. The running of craving has stopped. Looking back, even the cost of it all feels like a delight; for that reason it earns the name of blessing. Tuka says: liberation has been wedded like a bride. Now let the few days that remain be spent in play and good company.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back over a whole life of striving and says it was all aimed at one thing: that the end should be sweet. He has arrived at that rest, and the thirst that kept him running has finally halted. From here even the price he paid looks like a gift, so he calls the whole thing a blessing. He pictures liberation as a marriage already completed, and asks only that the days still left be lived lightly, in joy and company.

GATHA 1324 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the master becomes the servant

मराठी मूळ

भक्तीचिया पोटीं रत्नाचिया खाणी । ब्रह्मींची ठेवणी सकळ वस्तु ॥1॥
माउलीचे मागें बाळकांची हरी । एका सूत्रें दोरी ओढतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
जेथील जें मागे तें रायासमोर । नाहींसें उत्तर येत नाहीं ॥2॥
सेवेचिये सत्ते धनी च सेवक । आपुलें तें एक न वंची कांहीं ॥3॥
आदिअंताठाव असे मध्यभाग । भोंवतें भासे मग उंचासनी ॥4॥
भावारूढ तुका जाला एकाएकीं । देव च लौकिकीं अवघा केला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the womb of devotion lie mines of jewels: all treasures, the very store of Brahman.

Like children following their mother, Hari draws all beings along on a single thread.

Whatever is asked before the King is never refused. By the power of service, the master himself becomes the servant and withholds nothing of his own.

The middle station abides between beginning and end; from the high seat, all appears to radiate outward.

Says Tuka, lifted at once into devotion, becoming one with the One, he has made everything in the world into God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the womb of devotion lie mines of jewels: every treasure, the whole store of Brahman. Like children walking behind their mother, Hari draws all beings along on a single thread. Whatever is asked before the King is never refused. By the power of service the master himself becomes the servant, and withholds nothing of his own. The middle station stands between beginning and end; from the high seat everything seems to shine outward. Tuka says: lifted all at once into devotion, becoming one with the One, he has made everything in the world into God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says devotion is not the poor relation of knowledge; it holds every treasure, the whole wealth of Brahman, in its lap. He pictures Hari pulling all creatures along like a mother her trailing children, on one unbroken thread. The startling claim is in the middle: before this King no request is denied, and the power of pure service is so great that the Lord himself takes the servant's place and holds nothing back. At the peak of it the devotee is lifted into oneness and sees God in everything there is.

GATHA 1325 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the easy path of the Name

मराठी मूळ

सांगतां दुर्लभ ज्ञानाचिया गोष्टी । अनुभव तो पोटीं कैचा घडे ॥1॥
भजनाचे सोई जगा परिहार । नेणत्यां सादर चित्त कथे ॥ध्रु.॥
नाइकवे कानीं साधन उपाय । ऐकतो गाय हरुषें गीत ॥2॥
नव्हे आराणूक जावयासी वना । वेध कामिमना हरिकथेचा ॥3॥
काळाच्या साधना कोणा अंगीं बळ । चिंतना मंगळ अष्टप्रहर ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी खेळों भातुकुलें । विभागासी मुलें भोळीं येथें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Talking about the matters of knowledge is difficult; how can true experience arise inwardly from words alone?

For the world, the easier path is devotion: even the ignorant find their chitta turning attentively to the sacred story.

The ear does not wish to hear of austere means and methods, but it gladly listens to joyful songs of praise.

There is no comfort in retreating to the forest; the devoted mind is absorbed in Hari's katha.

Who has the strength for Time's harsh discipline? Better to spend every watch of the day in auspicious contemplation.

Says Tuka, we play with simple toys; here, innocent children, we accept whatever share is given.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Talking about knowledge is hard; how can real experience arise inside from words alone? For the world the easier way is bhajan; even the ignorant find their mind turning to the sacred story. The ear does not want to hear of austere methods, but it gladly listens to glad songs of praise. There is no comfort in running off to the forest; the loving mind is absorbed in Hari's katha. Who has the strength for Time's harsh discipline? Better to spend every watch of the day in blessed remembrance. Tuka says: we play with little toys here; like simple children, we take whatever share we are given.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the dry path of knowledge against the path of loving song and chooses the second for ordinary people. Abstract teaching rarely turns into lived experience, but a sung story of God draws in even the unlearned and the inattentive. He admits the plain truth that the ear recoils from hard ascetic technique yet opens to joyful praise, and that fleeing to the forest brings no peace. Since few can endure the brutal disciplines that conquer time and death, he commends simple, day-long remembrance, and calls himself and his fellows children content to play with small things and accept whatever God gives.

GATHA 1326 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, leave the knowing to God

मराठी मूळ

जाणपण बरें देवाचे शिरीं । आह्मी ऐसीं बरीं नेणतीं च ॥1॥
देखणियांपुढें रुचे कवतुक । उभयतां सुख वाढतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
आशंकेचा बाधा नाहीं लडिवाळां । चित्त वरि खेळा समबुद्धि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिशा मोकळ्या सकळा । अवकाशीं खेळा ठाव जाला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the knowing rest upon God's head; we are better off remaining innocent and unlearned.

Before discerning eyes, the play delights, and joy grows for both sides.

No affliction of doubt touches the beloved child; the chitta rests upon the play with equanimity.

Says Tuka, all directions have been set free, and in the open expanse, a place for play has been found.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the knowing rest on God's head; it is better for us to stay innocent and unlearned. Before watching eyes the play delights, and joy grows on both sides. No bite of doubt touches the beloved child; with an even mind it rests upon the play. Tuka says: all the directions have been set free, and in the open space a place for play has been found.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands the burden of knowing back to God and chooses to remain like an unschooled child. He uses the image of a child playing under its parent's watchful eye: the play delights the watcher, and the joy passes both ways. Because the child trusts completely, no anxiety can reach it; it stays even and untroubled while it plays. In that trust the whole horizon opens up, and the open space itself becomes the ground for free, fearless play.

GATHA 1327 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, words are only sweet-cakes

मराठी मूळ

वचनांचे मांडे दावावे प्रकार । काय त्या साचार कौतुकाचे ॥1॥
जातां घरा मागें । उरों नेणें खंती । मिळाल्या बहुतीं फांकलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
उदयीं च अस्त उदयो संपादला । कल्पनेचा केला जागेपणें ॥2॥
जाणवूनि गेला हांडोरियां पोरां । सावध इतरां करुनी तुका ॥3॥
स्वामीस संतांनीं पुसलें कीं तुह्मांस वैराग्य कोण्या प्रकारें जालें तें सांगा - ते अभंग ॥ 3 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What manner of delight are these sweet-cakes of words laid out on display? What genuine wonder is there in them?

When you return home, no sorrow lingers behind; what gathered in multitude scatters again.

In the dawn itself, sunset was already accomplished; all that imagination conceived was done while still awake.

Says Tuka, he went ahead, having alerted the wandering children and made the rest watchful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These are sweet-cakes of words laid out for show; what real wonder is in them? When you go home, no sorrow stays behind; what gathered in a crowd scatters again. In the dawn itself the sunset was already done; all that imagining built was finished while still awake. Tuka says: he went on ahead, having warned the wandering children and made the rest watchful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Asked by the saints how his detachment came about, Tukaram first warns that fine words are like ornamental sweets, pretty to display but empty of real substance. He notices that gatherings disperse and leave nothing behind, the way a crowd scatters when you turn for home. The heart of it is the line about dawn already holding sunset: he saw, while wide awake, that everything imagination builds is already finished, already passing. Having seen this through, he moves on ahead and leaves a warning for those still caught up in the play.

GATHA 1328 Autobiography

Autobiography, how detachment came

मराठी मूळ

याति शूद्र वैश केला वेवसाव । आदि तो हा देव कुळपूज्य ॥1॥
नये बोलों परि पाळलें वचन । केलियाचा प्रश्न तुह्मीं संतीं ॥ध्रु.॥
संवसारें जालों अतिदुःखें दुखी । मायबाप सेखीं कर्मलिया ॥2॥
दुष्काळें आटिलें द्रव्यें नेला मान । स्त्री एकी अन्न अन्न करितां मेली ॥3॥
लज्जा वाटे जीवा त्रासलों या दुःखें । वेवसाय देख तुटी येतां ॥4॥
देवाचें देऊळ होतें तें भंगलें । चित्तासी जें आलें करावेंसें ॥5॥
आरंभीं कीर्तन करीं एकादशी । नव्हतें अभ्यासीं चित्त आधीं ॥6॥
कांहीं पाठ केलीं संतांचीं उत्तरें। विश्वासें आदरें करोनियां ॥7॥
गाती पुढें त्यांचें धरावें धृपद । भावें चित्त शुद्ध करोनियां ॥8॥
संताचें सेविलें तीर्थ पायवणी । लाज नाहीं मनीं येऊं दिली ॥9॥
टाकला तो कांहीं केला उपकार । केलें हें शरीर कष्टवूनि ॥10॥
वचन मानिलें नाहीं सहुदानचें । समूळ प्रपंचें वीट आला ॥11॥
सत्यअसत्यासी मन केलें ग्वाही । मानियेलें नाहीं बहुमतां ॥12॥
मानियेला स्वप्नीं गुरुचा उपदेश । धरिला विश्वास दृढ नामीं ॥13॥
यावरि या जाली कवित्वाची स्फूर्ति । पाय धरिले चित्तीं विठोबाचे ॥14॥
निषेधाचा कांहीं पडिला आघात । तेणें मध्यें चित्त दुखविलें ॥15॥
बुडविल्या वहए बैसलों धरणें । केलें नारायणें समाधान ॥16॥
विस्तारीं सांगतां बहुत प्रकार । होईल उशीर आतां पुरे ॥17॥
आतां आहे तैसा दिसतो विचार । पुढील प्रकार देव जाणे ॥18॥
भक्ता नारायण नुपेक्षी सर्वथा । कृपावंत ऐसा कळों आलें ॥19॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें सर्व भांडवल । बोलविले पांडुरंगें ॥20॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am of humble birth; trade was my family's occupation. Our ancestral deity has been God from the very beginning.

It is not proper for me to speak of this, but you saints have asked, so I honor your question. Worldly life made me exceedingly sorrowful.

My parents died in hard times. Famine seized our wealth and honor; my wife died crying for food.

Shame gripped my soul, and I grew weary of suffering when the trade began to fail. God's temple was in ruins, and my heart felt the urge to restore it.

I began doing kirtan on Ekadashi, though my mind had no prior practice in it. I memorized some teachings of the saints with faith and reverence.

I would sing their compositions and hold the refrain, purifying my chitta with devotion. I drank the sacred water from the saints' feet and let go of all shame.

Whatever small good I did was earned by toiling with this body. I did not heed the advice of easy-going people, for complete disgust with worldly life had taken hold.

I made my own mind the witness of truth and falsehood and did not bow to popular opinion. In a dream, I received my Guru's instruction and held firm faith in the Name.

After that came the inspiration for poetry, and I held Vithoba's feet in my chitta. There was some persecution that caused me grief in between.

When my manuscripts were drowned, I sat in protest, and Narayana comforted me. To describe it all in detail would take too long; let this suffice.

Things stand now as you see them; what lies ahead, only God knows. The Lord never forsakes his devotee; this much I have come to understand.

Says Tuka, my entire capital is Panduranga, who made me speak.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am of low birth; trade was my family's work. From the very start our family deity has been God. It is not right for me to speak of this, but you saints have asked, so I answer. Worldly life made me deeply sorrowful. My parents died in hard times. Famine ate up our wealth and our standing; one wife died crying for food. Shame gripped me, and I grew sick of suffering when the trade failed. God's temple lay in ruins, and my heart wanted to restore it. I began doing kirtan on Ekadashi, though my mind had no practice in it before. I memorized some sayings of the saints, with faith and reverence. I would sing their songs and hold the refrain, purifying my mind with devotion. I took the water from the saints' feet and let no shame come into my mind. Whatever small good I did, I did by wearing out this body. I did not heed the advice of easy-going people; complete disgust with the world had taken hold of me. I made my own mind the witness of true and false, and did not bow to popular opinion. In a dream I received my Guru's teaching, and held firm faith in the Name. After that came the rising of poetry, and I held Vithoba's feet in my mind. Some persecution struck me and grieved me in between. When my manuscripts were drowned, I sat in protest, and Narayana brought me peace. To tell it all in detail would take too long; let this be enough. Things stand now as you see them; what comes next, only God knows. Narayana never forsakes his devotee; this much I have come to know. Tuka says: my whole capital is Panduranga, who made me speak.

WHAT IT MEANS

The saints have asked Tukaram how renunciation came to him, and this is his answer, told straight. He traces it through loss: a trader's son, he watched famine kill his parents, swallow his wealth and standing, and take a wife who died crying for food, until shame and exhaustion broke his hold on the world. Out of that ruin he turned to rebuilding God's temple, to kirtan on Ekadashi, to memorizing and singing the saints' words and taking the dust of their feet without shame. He insists he trusted his own conscience over public opinion, received his Guru's teaching in a dream, fixed his faith on the Name and on Vithoba's feet, and even when persecuted and made to drown his own manuscripts, found that Narayana never abandoned him. He ends by giving all the credit away: his only capital is Panduranga, who put the words in his mouth.

GATHA 1329 Autobiography

Autobiography, do not honor me

मराठी मूळ

ऐका वचन हें संत । मी तों आगळा पतित । काय काजें प्रीत । करीतसां आदरें ॥1॥
माझें चित्त मज ग्वाही । सत्य तरलों मी नाहीं । एकांचिये वांहीं । एक देखीं मानिती ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु पीडिलों संसारें । मोडीं पुसें पिटीं ढोरें । न पडतां पुरें । या विचारें राहिलों ॥2॥
सहज सरलें होतें कांहीं । द्रव्य थोडें बहु तें ही । त्याग केला नाहीं । दिलें द्विजां याचकां ॥3॥
ि्प्रयापुत्रबंधु । यांचा तोडिला संबंधु । सहज जालों मंदु । भाग्यहीन करंटा ॥4॥
तोंड न दाखवे जना । शिरें सांदी भरें राणां । एकांत तो जाणां । तयासाटीं लागला ॥5॥
पोटें पिटिलों काहारें । दया नाहीं या विचारें । बोलावितां बरें । सहज ह्मणें यासाटीं ॥6॥
सहज वडिलां होती सेवा । ह्मणोनि पूजितों या देवा । तुका ह्मणे भावा । साटीं झणी घ्या कोणी ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen to this, O saints. I am the most fallen among all.

Why do you honor me with such affection? My own chitta bears me witness: I have truly not been liberated. Some believe in me because others do.

I was greatly tormented by worldly life, beaten and burdened like a pack animal. I stayed on only because I had no other recourse.

Whatever little wealth I had, much or small, I did not truly renounce; it was given to Brahmins and beggars. I severed bonds with wife, sons, and brothers, having naturally become destitute, a pitiable, luckless soul.

I could not show my face to anyone and took to hiding in forests and ravines; solitude was all I sought. My belly was beaten by hard labor; there is no mercy in that fate.

When people call me good, I accept it simply because it comes naturally. I served my elders as was our family custom, and so I worship this God.

Says Tuka, do not take me on the basis of mere sentiment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen to this, O saints. I am the most fallen of all. Why do you honor me with such love? My own mind is my witness: I have truly not crossed over. Some believe in me only because others do. Worldly life tormented me badly; I was beaten and loaded like a pack animal. I stayed on only because I had no other way out. Whatever little wealth I had, much or small, I did not really renounce; it was given away to Brahmins and beggars. I cut my bonds with wife, sons, and brothers, having simply become destitute, a luckless, wretched soul. I could not show my face to people and took to hiding in forests and ravines; solitude was all I wanted. My belly was beaten by hard labor; there is no mercy in such a fate. When people call me good, I take it only because it comes easily. I served my elders as was our family custom, and so I worship this God. Tuka says: do not take me up on the strength of mere feeling.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pushes back hard against being honored, calling himself the most fallen and refusing the saints' affection. He strips the romance out of his own story: he says his detachment was not noble renunciation but forced destitution, that he gave away his little wealth and broke family ties because he had been beaten down by loss, not because he had conquered desire. Even his solitude in forests and ravines he traces to shame and having nowhere else to go. The point of the harshness is honesty, turned on himself: he warns the saints not to trust him on sentiment, and grounds his worship in plain family custom rather than any claim to be liberated.

GATHA 1330 Autobiography

Autobiography, it was good I was ruined

मराठी मूळ

बरें जालें देवा निघालें दिवाळें । बरी या दुष्काळें पीडा केली ॥1॥
अनुतापें तुझें राहिलें चिंतन । जाला हा वमन संवसार ॥ध्रु.॥
बरें जालें जगीं पावलों अपमान । बरें गेलें धन ढोरें गुरें ॥3॥
बरें जालें नाहीं धरिली लोकलाज । बरा आलों तुज शरण देवा ॥4॥
बरें जालें तुझें केलें देवाईल । लेंकरें बाईल उपेक्षलीं ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे बरें व्रत एकादशी । केलें उपवासीं जागरण ॥6॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It was good, O God, that I went bankrupt. It was good that the famine afflicted me.

Through remorse, your remembrance took root, and worldly life became repulsive. It was good that I was humiliated before the world.

It was good that wealth and cattle were lost. It was good that I abandoned all concern for public opinion.

It was good that I came to you, O God, in surrender. It was good that I devoted myself to your service and let go of wife and children.

Says Tuka, it was good that I kept the Ekadashi vow, fasting and staying awake through the night.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It was good, O God, that I went bankrupt. It was good that the famine afflicted me. Through that remorse, the remembrance of you took root, and worldly life became something to spit out. It was good that I was shamed before the world. It was good that wealth and cattle were lost. It was good that I let go of all concern for what people think. It was good that I came to you in surrender, O God. It was good that I gave myself to your service and let go of wife and children. Tuka says: it was good I kept the Ekadashi vow, fasting and staying awake through the night.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns every disaster of his life into a thanksgiving. Bankruptcy, famine, public shame, the loss of wealth and cattle, even the letting go of wife and children, he names each one and calls it good. The hinge is the second line: the remorse those losses caused was exactly what made him remember God and grow sick of the world. He is not minimizing the pain; he is saying that ruin emptied his hands so completely that surrender became possible, and so the fasting and night vigil of Ekadashi are the last good thing on a list that began with catastrophe.

GATHA 1331 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the house emptied of desire

मराठी मूळ

1331. बोलावा विठ्ठल पाहावा विठ्ठल । करावा विठ्ठल जीवभाव ॥1॥
येणें सोसें मन जालें हांवभरी । परती माघारी घेत नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बंधनापासूनि उकलली गांठी । देतां आली मिठी सावकाशें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देह भारिला विठ्ठलें । कामक्रोधें केलें घर रितें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Speak of Vitthala, behold Vitthala, make Vitthala your jiva-bhava.

With this fervent longing the mind has overflowed, and it will not turn back again.

The knot of bondage has come undone, and a lasting embrace has been granted at leisure.

Says Tuka, Vitthala has filled this body, and desire and anger have been evicted from the house.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Speak Vitthala. See Vitthala. Make Vitthala your very life and feeling. With this longing the mind has overflowed, and it will not turn back again. The knot of bondage has come loose, and a long, unhurried embrace has been given. Tuka says: Vitthala has filled this body, and desire and anger have been thrown out of the house.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a single practice in three strokes: speak Vitthal, look at Vitthal, make Vitthal the very feeling of your life. He describes what that does: the mind brims over with longing and loses all wish to turn back. As the practice deepens, the knot that tied him to bondage simply slips open and he is held in an unhurried embrace. He ends with the result inside the body itself, Vitthal has moved in so fully that desire and anger have been evicted from the house like unwanted tenants.

GATHA 1332 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, born of myself, dead to myself

मराठी मूळ

मीचि मज व्यालों । पोटा आपुलिया आलों ॥1॥
आतां पुरले नवस । निरसोनी गेली आस ॥ध्रु.॥
जालों बरा बळी। गेलों मरोनि तेकाळीं ॥2॥
दोहींकडे पाहे । तुका आहे तैसा आहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have given birth to myself; I have emerged from my own womb. Now all vows are fulfilled, and all hope has dissolved.

I have grown truly strong, for at that moment I died to my old self. Says Tuka, looking in both directions, I am as I have always been.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have given birth to myself; I have come out of my own womb. Now all my vows are fulfilled, and all hope has dissolved. I have grown truly strong, for in that moment I died. Tuka says: looking on both sides, Tuka is just as he has always been.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes awakening as being born from himself, as if he were both mother and child of his own new life. With that birth every vow he made is met and every hope falls away, since there is nothing left to hope for. He says this strength came through a death: the old self died at the very moment the new one was born. Looking back at who he was and forward at who he is, he finds no real difference, because what he truly is was never born and never lost.

GATHA 1333 The Nature of God

Nonduality, the self must die

मराठी मूळ

जग अवघें देव । मुख्य उपदेशाची ठेव ॥1॥
आधीं आपणयां नासी । तरि उतरे ये कसीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ब्रह्मज्ञानाचें कोठार । तें हें निश्चयें उत्तर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ते उन्मनी । नास कारया कारणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The whole world is God: this is the essence of the highest teaching.

First annihilate the self, and it will prove true on the touchstone.

This is the storehouse of Brahman-knowledge; this is the final, certain answer.

Says Tuka, the unmani state brings the destruction of cause and effect.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The whole world is God. This is the heart of the highest teaching. First put an end to yourself. Then it holds up on the touchstone. This is the storehouse of the knowledge of Brahman. This is the final, sure answer. Tuka says: in the unmani state, the place beyond mind, cause and effect are destroyed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the whole teaching in one line: everything is God. But he names what it costs to see it. The self has to be annihilated first; only then does the claim hold up when tested, the way gold proves true on a touchstone. He calls this the storehouse of the knowledge of Brahman, the certain answer where seeking ends. In the unmani state, the silence beyond the working mind, the whole machinery of cause and effect falls away.

GATHA 1334 The Necessity of Experience

Practice and grace, the drop and the flood

मराठी मूळ

साधनांच्या कळा आकार आकृति । कारण नवनीतीं मथनाचें ॥1॥
पिक्षयासी नाहीं मारगीं आडताळा । अंतराक्षी फळासी चि पावे ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्तीची जोडी ते उखत्या चि साटीं । उणें पुरें तुटी तेथें नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें सांचत सांचणी । आजि जाली क्षणी एकसरें ॥33॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The arts and forms of spiritual practice are necessary, just as churning is needed to obtain butter.

For the bird, there is no barrier on its path through the sky; it flies straight to the fruit.

The wealth of devotion is meant precisely for this purpose; there is no shortage or loss in it.

Says Tuka, what has been accumulating drop by drop has today, in a single instant, been received all at once.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The arts and forms of practice are needed, the way churning is needed to get butter. But the bird meets no wall on its road through the sky; it flies straight to the fruit. The wealth of devotion is meant for just this; there is no shortage in it, no loss. Tuka says: what was gathering drop by drop has today, in one instant, come all at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds two truths side by side. Spiritual practice is real and necessary, like the churning that draws butter from milk; you cannot skip the work. Yet the goal is also direct, like a bird that meets no barrier in the open sky and goes straight to its fruit. Devotion is the wealth made exactly for this, and it never runs short. The point is the last line: what looked like slow accumulation, drop by patient drop, can arrive whole in a single instant, as grace.

GATHA 1335 The Necessity of Experience

Beyond speech, the mirror shows your own face

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं येथें वाणी । सकळां वणाअ घ्यावी धणी ॥1॥
जालें दर्पणाचें अंग । ज्याचा त्यासी दावी रंग ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका खळे दाणीं । करी बैसोनी वांटणी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Here, speech itself falls silent; no voice can satisfy all who hear.

It has become like a mirror: it shows each person their own color.

Says Tuka, I sit at the threshing floor and give out the grain to each according to their measure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here speech falls silent. No words can satisfy everyone who listens. This has become like a mirror: it shows each person their own color. Tuka says: I sit at the threshing floor and hand out the grain, to each according to their measure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at what cannot be told. Words run out, and no single explanation will fill every listener, because what each person receives is what they bring. The teaching works like a mirror: it gives you back your own face, your own color. So he likens himself to a man at the threshing floor, sitting and portioning out grain to each by their capacity, not forcing more than they can hold.

GATHA 1336 The Necessity of Experience

Discernment, keeping the one true wealth

मराठी मूळ

ठेविलें जतन । करूनियां निज धन ॥1॥
जयापासाव उत्पित्त । तें हें बीज धरिलें हातीं ॥ध्रु.॥
निवडिलें वरळा भूस । सार आइन जिनस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायण । भाग संचिताचा गुण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That which is one's true wealth has been kept carefully preserved.

The seed from which everything originates has been grasped in hand.

The chaff has been winnowed away, and the genuine article, the pure grain, has been secured.

Says Tuka, Narayana is the fruit of all accumulated merit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My true wealth has been kept safe, carefully stored away. The seed from which everything springs is now held in my hand. The chaff has been winnowed off; the real thing, the pure grain, is secured. Tuka says: Narayana is the fruit of all the merit gathered across lives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment of having sorted true from false. He has set aside his real treasure and is holding the very seed that everything grows from. The image is winnowing: blow off the chaff, keep only the genuine grain. And he names what that grain is. Narayana, God himself, is the fruit ripening out of all the merit a soul has gathered over many lives. The one thing worth keeping is God.

GATHA 1337 Devotion to Vitthal

The one doorway, Vithoba's feet within

मराठी मूळ

भ्रमना पाउलें वेचिलीं तीं वाव । प्रवेशतां ठाव एक द्वार ॥1॥
सार तीं पाउलें विठोबाचीं जीवीं । कोणीं न विसंभावीं क्षणभरि ॥ध्रु.॥
सुलभ हें केलें सकळां जीवन । कुंफ्कावें चि कान न लगेसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें सकळ ही कोड । पुरे मूळ खोड विस्ताराचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The steps of wandering were all in vain; the single doorway is found only when one enters the true place.

Those essential steps are the feet of Vithoba, held within the jiva. Let no one forget them even for a moment.

He has made the water of life easily accessible to all, so that none need even strain their ears.

Says Tuka, here all curiosity is satisfied; the root flaw of endless expansion is ended.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All the steps of wandering were wasted. The one doorway is found only when you enter the true place. The essential steps are Vithoba's feet, held inside the living soul. Let no one forget them, even for a moment. He has made the water of life easy for everyone; you need not even strain your ears. Tuka says: here every longing is met; the root flaw of endless spreading out is over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts restless seeking with arrival. All the wandering led nowhere; there is one door, and it opens only when you reach the true place. That place is Vithoba's feet, carried within the soul itself, and he warns against forgetting them for even a moment. God has made the water of life simple and within reach of all, no straining required. The closing line names the disease being cured: the mind's endless branching and expansion, which finally ends here, where every longing is satisfied.

GATHA 1338 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, call God by any name

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं जाणों नये पांडुरंगाविण । पाविजेल सीण संदेहानें ॥1॥
भलतिया नावें आळविला पिता । तरि तो जाणता कळवळा ॥ध्रु.॥
अळंकार जातो गौरवितां वाणी । सर्वगात्रा धणी हरिकथा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उपज विल्हाळे आवडी । करावा तो घडी घडी लाहो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should know nothing apart from Panduranga. Doubt will only bring suffering.

By whatever name you call upon the Father, He, the knowing one, responds with tender care.

Adornment flows when the tongue utters praise; Hari-katha is the satiation of every limb.

Says Tuka, that love wells up and overflows. Take its profit moment by moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know nothing apart from Panduranga. Doubt will only bring you pain. Call upon the Father by any name you like; he is the knowing one, and he answers with tender care. Praise adorns the tongue that speaks it; the telling of Hari's story fills every limb. Tuka says: that love wells up and overflows. Take its profit moment by moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram's counsel is single-minded: hold to Panduranga and nothing else, because doubt only multiplies suffering. He frees the listener from anxiety about getting it right. Call God Father by whatever name; the one who knows your heart will respond with tenderness. Praising him is itself an ornament, and reciting Hari's deeds nourishes the whole body. The love rises and spills over on its own, so he urges you to seize its gain again and again, hour by hour.

GATHA 1339 Worldly Life

Worldly folly, fruit without tending

मराठी मूळ

बीजापोटीं पाहे फळ । विध न करितां सकळ ॥1॥
तया मूर्ख ह्मणावें वेडें । कैसें तुटेल सांकडें ॥ध्रु.॥
दाविताया वाट। वेठी धरूं पाहे चाट ॥2॥
पुढिल्या उपाया । तुका ह्मणे राखे काया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who seeks fruit within the seed without tending it at all: call such a one a fool, a madman. How will he ever escape his straits?

He who is shown the way by a guide then tries to press that guide into forced labor.

Says Tuka, for the remedy that lies ahead, keep the body whole.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He looks for the fruit inside the seed but does no work at all to tend it. Call such a one a fool, a madman. How will he ever escape his trouble? Someone shows him the road, and then he tries to force that guide into labor. Tuka says: for the help that lies ahead, keep the body whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram aims this at a familiar self-deception: wanting the harvest while refusing the labor that grows it. Expecting fruit from a seed you never plant or water is madness, and it leaves you stuck. Worse is the one who, when shown the way, tries to drag the very guide into doing the work for him. The point turns on us, not on contempt: do not lean on others to carry what is yours, and keep the body sound, for the real remedy and effort still lie ahead.

GATHA 1340 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the man who slanders the Veda

मराठी मूळ

मातेचीं जो थानें फाडी । तया जोडी कोण ते ॥1॥
वेदां निंदी तो चांडाळ । भ्रष्ट सुतकिया खळ ॥ध्रु.॥
अगी लावी घरा । मग वसती कोठें थारा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वर्म । येरा नाचवितो भ्रम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who tears at his own mother's breasts: who can restore him?

He who slanders the Vedas is a chandal, fallen and ritually impure, a villain.

One who sets fire to his own house: where then will he find shelter and rest?

Says Tuka, here is the vital point: it is delusion that makes all the others dance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who tears at his own mother's breasts: who can mend such a man? He who slanders the Vedas is an outcaste, fallen, defiled, a wretch. He who sets fire to his own house: where will he then find shelter and rest? Tuka says: here is the vital point. It is delusion that makes all of them dance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stacks up images of self-destruction to expose one pattern. To revile the Vedas is like a child tearing at the mother who fed it, or a man burning down the very house meant to shelter him; you destroy the thing that sustains you and are left with nowhere to stand. He calls such a person fallen and defiled, harsh words aimed at the act, not at any soul beyond saving. The closing line names the real culprit: delusion is the puppeteer that makes all these self-wounding people dance. The warning is to watch for that delusion in oneself.

GATHA 1341 Social Criticism

Social criticism, who is a true Brahmin

मराठी मूळ

वेश वंदाया पुरते । कोण ब्राह्मण निरुते ॥1॥
ऐसें सांगा मजपाशीं । संतां निरवितों येविशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
असा जी प्रवीण । ग्रंथीं कळे शुद्धहीण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लोपें । सत्याचिया घडती पापें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who truly deserves the name Brahmin, beyond the outward form that earns a greeting?

Tell me this. I wish to lay the question before the saints for them to settle.

Let such a learned one come forward and show it. Scripture itself reveals who is devoid of purity.

Says Tuka, by concealing the truth, sins are made.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who truly deserves the name Brahmin, past the outward dress that earns a bow? Tell me this. I am laying the question before the saints to decide. Let the learned one come forward and show it. Scripture itself reveals who is empty of purity. Tuka says: by hiding the truth, sins are made.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram challenges the gap between the title and the life. A costume may earn an automatic greeting, but he asks who has earned the name by what they actually are, and he submits the question to the saints rather than ruling on it alone. Let any learned person prove it from scripture, which itself exposes who lacks inner purity. The closing line is the sharp turn: covering up the truth, pretending the badge is the reality, is not neutral. It manufactures sin. The aim is the pretense, and the call is to honest self-examination.

GATHA 1342 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, only Vitthal remains

मराठी मूळ

ज्या ज्या आह्मांपाशीं होतील ज्या शक्ति । तेणें हा श्रीपती अळंकारुं ॥1॥
अवघा पायांपाशीं दिला जीवभाव । जन्ममरणाठाव पुसियेला ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याचें देणें त्यासी घातला संकल्प। बंधनाचें पाप चुकविलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें उरला विठ्ठल । खाये बोले बोल गाये नाचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With whatever capacities I have, I will adorn the Lord.

At His feet I have laid the jiva-bhava entire. The ground of birth and death has been erased.

What was His to begin with, I have offered back to Him with solemn resolve. The sin of bondage has been averted.

Says Tuka, only Vitthala remains here now. He eats, He speaks, He sings, He dances.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With whatever powers I have, I will adorn this Lord of Lakshmi. The whole sense of being a separate self I have laid at his feet. The ground of birth and death is wiped away. What was always his, I have given back to him with a firm vow. The sin of bondage is escaped. Tuka says: only Vitthal is left here now. He eats, he speaks the words, he sings, he dances.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes total self-surrender and what remains after it. He offers every ability he has to honor God, and he lays the whole sense of being a separate self, the jiva-bhava, down at the feet. With that, the very ground of birth and death is erased. He frames it as returning what was never his to begin with, sealed by a vow, and this is what breaks the sin of bondage. The end is radical: with the separate self gone, only Vitthal is left, and it is now God who eats, speaks, sings, and dances through him.

GATHA 1343 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the spoiled children of love

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी आळीकरें । प्रेमसुखाचीं लेंकुरें ॥1॥
पायीं गोविली वासना । तुश केलें ब्रह्मज्ञाना ॥ध्रु.॥
येतां पाहें मुळा । वाट पंढरीच्या डोळां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्थळें । मग मी पाहेन सकळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the beloved children, born of love's delight.

Our desires are bound to Your feet; we have made even Brahman-knowledge into mere chaff.

I watch the road, my eyes set on Pandhari, pressing toward the source.

Says Tuka, once I reach that place, I will behold all things entire.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are children spoiled with love, born of the joy of love itself. Our every desire is tied to your feet. We have turned even the knowledge of Brahman into chaff. I watch the road, my eyes fixed on Pandhari, pressing toward the source. Tuka says: once I reach that place, then I will see everything entire.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a child secure in a parent's love, even a little willful with it, born of sheer delight rather than effort. Every wish he has is bound to God's feet, and from that vantage he treats even the lofty knowledge of Brahman as mere husk next to the living presence. His eyes stay on the road to Pandhari, straining toward the source. The last line holds the promise: arrival at that place is what will finally let him see all things whole.

GATHA 1344 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the feast already cooked

मराठी मूळ

आइत्याची राशी । आली पाकसिद्धीपाशीं ॥1॥
आतां सांडोनि भोजन । भिके जावें वेडेपणें ॥ध्रु.॥
उसंतिली वाट । मागें परतावें फुकट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वाणी । वेचों बैसोन ठाकणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A ready harvest has arrived at the kitchen, the cooking complete.

Should one now abandon the feast and go begging like a madman?

The road has been cleared and laid before you; to turn back now would be to go back empty.

Says Tuka, let me sit and spend my words at my appointed station.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A whole harvest of ready food has arrived, the cooking already done. Should you now leave the meal and go begging like a madman? The road has been cleared and laid out before you. To turn back now is to go back for nothing. Tuka says: let me sit at my appointed place and spend my words there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram mocks the folly of refusing what is already given. The meal is cooked and set; to walk away from it and go begging would be madness. The road is cleared and ready, so turning back gains you nothing but loss. The image points at the seeker who has been handed everything needed for the journey to God and still hesitates or wanders off. His own resolve is in the last line: he will stay at his appointed station and spend his words, his singing of God, right there, not chase elsewhere for what he already has.

GATHA 1345 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, let it ripen

मराठी मूळ

धन्ये शुद्ध जाती । धरीं लौकरी परती ॥1॥
ऐकिलें तें चि कानीं । होय परिपाक मनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कळवळा पोटीं । सावधान हितासाठीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भाव । त्याचा तो चि जाणां देव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is the pure lineage; quickly turn and come back.

Let what you have heard with your ears ripen within the mind.

Let concern well up deep within, wakeful for your own welfare.

Says Tuka, know that one's devotion itself is one's God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is the pure lineage; turn around quickly and come back. Let what you have heard with your ears ripen inside the mind. Let concern well up deep in you, wakeful for your own good. Tuka says: know that a person's own devotion is itself that person's God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is urging the listener to act on what they already know. Hearing the teaching is not enough; he wants it to settle and ripen in the mind until it changes you. The inner stir he calls for is a wakeful care for your own true welfare, not a vague feeling. His closing line lands the whole point: God is not somewhere outside waiting to be reached; the faith you carry is itself where God is found.

GATHA 1346 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, ready cash of grace

मराठी मूळ

जीवित्व तें किती । हें चि धरितां बरें चित्तीं ॥1॥
संत सुमनें उत्तरें । मृदु रसाळ मधुरें ॥ध्रु.॥
विसांवतां कानीं । परिपाक घडे मनीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जोडी । हाय जतन रोकडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How long is this life? Hold this firmly in your chitta.

The words of the saints are flowers: gentle, rasa-filled, and sweet.

When they settle in the ears, they ripen in the mind.

Says Tuka, this is a ready gain; it is immediate cash. Guard it well.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long is this life? Hold this firmly in your mind. The words of the saints are flowers: gentle, full of sweetness, sweet to the taste. When they rest in your ears, they ripen in the mind. Tuka says: this is a gain ready in hand; it is cash you can spend now. Guard it well.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens by making life's shortness the reason to listen now. He likens the saints' words to flowers, soft and sweet, and says that once they settle in you they ripen into something living in the mind. The force of the poem is in the last line: he calls this a ready gain, like cash in hand rather than a promise for later. So he tells you to guard it, because what is immediately available is also easily lost.

GATHA 1347 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, peace over ego

मराठी मूळ

अभिमानाची स्वामिनी शांति । महत्त्व घेती सकळ ॥1॥
कळोनि ही न कळे वर्म । तरि श्रम पावती ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्व सत्ता करितां धीर । वीर्यां वीर आगळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तिखट तिखें । मृदसखें आवडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Peace is the sovereign over ego; it draws all greatness to itself.

Even among those who know the secret, if the vital core is not truly grasped, all their effort is mere toil.

Patience holds dominion over all powers; in virility, this warrior stands above all others.

Says Tuka, the sharp remains sharp, but the gentle companion wins by love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Peace is the master over pride; it draws all greatness to itself. Even those who seem to know miss the secret, and so their effort is only toil. Patience rules over every power; in true strength this warrior stands above the rest. Tuka says: the sharp thing stays sharp, but the gentle companion wins by love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets calm against ego and gives calm the crown. Peace, he says, is what actually commands greatness, while a person who has missed the living core of the teaching wears himself out for nothing. He reframes strength: patience is the real power, and the one who holds it is the higher warrior, not the loud or forceful one. The closing image makes the choice plain: sharpness keeps its edge, but it is gentleness, won through love, that prevails.

GATHA 1348 The Moral Ideal

The meal of peace, no division

मराठी मूळ

भोजन तें पाशांतीचें । निंचें उंचें उसाळी ॥1॥
जैशी कारंज्याची कळा । तो जिव्हाळा स्वहिता ॥ध्रु.॥
कल्पना ते देवाविण । न करी भिन्न इतरीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पावे भूती । ते निंश्चती मापली ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The meal of peace tosses the low high and the high low, like the play of a fountain.

That tender warmth is one's own true welfare.

Let all imagination, apart from God, make no division elsewhere.

Says Tuka, the certainty that reaches into all beings has been measured out and settled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The meal of peace tosses the low up high and the high down low, like the play of a fountain. That tender warmth is your own true welfare. Let no imagining, apart from God, make any division anywhere else. Tuka says: the certainty that reaches into all beings has been measured out and settled.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures peace as a feeding fountain that overturns the usual ranking of high and low, lifting what was low and lowering what was high. That tender warmth, he says, is what truly serves you. The instruction at the center is to let the mind invent no divisions except as it rests in God. He closes with a settled certainty: the same reality reaches into every being, and this has already been measured out and fixed, not left in doubt.

GATHA 1349 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, only enough for the belly

मराठी मूळ

पोटापुरतें काम । परि अगत्य तो राम ॥1॥
कारण तें हें चि करीं । चित्तीं पांडुरंग धरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रारब्धी हेवा । जोडी देवाची ते सेवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बळ । बुद्धी वेचूनि सकळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Work only as much as the belly requires, but let your true urgency be for Rama.

This alone is the essential task: hold Panduranga in the chitta.

Let destiny handle the rest; invest your effort in the service of God.

Says Tuka, spend all your strength and buddhi on this service.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Work only as much as the belly needs, but let your real urgency be for Rama. This alone is the task that matters: hold Panduranga in the mind. Leave destiny to handle the rest; invest yourself in the service of God. Tuka says: spend all your strength and all your understanding on this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is ordering priorities, not abolishing work. He grants that one must labor enough to feed the body, but he reserves real urgency for Rama, naming devotion as the one task that counts. He tells you to stop wrestling with outcomes and let destiny carry what it will, putting your effort instead into serving God. The close raises the demand: not a portion but the whole of your strength and intelligence is to be spent here.

GATHA 1350 Appeals and Exhortations

The human birth, a refuge found

मराठी मूळ

बहुतां जन्मां अंतीं । जोडी लागली हे हातीं ॥1॥
मनुष्यदेहा ऐसा ठाव । धरीं पांडुरंगीं भाव ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु केला फेरा । येथें सांपडला थारा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाणे । ऐसे भले ते शाहाणे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

After countless births, this great fortune has at last come into our hands.

There is no place like the human body; fix your devotion on Panduranga.

After so much wandering, a refuge has at last been found here.

Says Tuka, those who recognize this are good. They are the truly wise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

After countless births, this great fortune has at last come into our hands. There is no place like the human body; fix your devotion on Panduranga. After so much wandering, a refuge has at last been found here. Tuka says: those who recognize this are good. They are the truly wise.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the human birth as a rare prize won only after long wandering through many lives. He treats the body not as a burden but as the one place from which devotion to Panduranga becomes possible, a refuge reached at last. The whole poem turns on not squandering this chance. To recognize what the human birth is for, and to act on it, is what he calls true wisdom.

GATHA 1351 The Nature of God

Nature of God, form is maya's stage

मराठी मूळ

रूप नांवें माया बोलावया ठाव । भागा आले भाव तयावरि ॥1॥
सींव वाटे परी न खंडे पृथिवी । शाहाणे ते जीवीं समजती ॥ध्रु.॥
पोटा आलें तिच्या लोळे मांडएांवरि । पारखी न करी खंतीं चित्तीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तीसाटीं हरिहर । अरूपीचें क्षरविभाग हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Name and form are maya, a stage on which devotion plays its part.

Boundaries and paths appear, yet the earth is never truly divided. The wise understand this within the jiva itself.

The child born from her womb rolls and plays in her lap. The mother makes no distinctions, no grief lodged in the chitta.

Says Tuka, for the sake of devotion, Hari and Hara both appear. This is how the Formless divides itself into perishable forms.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Name and form are maya, a stage where devotion plays its part. Borders and paths seem to appear, yet the earth is never really divided; the wise see this within the jiva itself. The child born from her womb rolls and plays in her lap, and the mother makes no distinctions, holds no grief in her heart. Tuka says: for the sake of devotion, Hari and Hara both appear. This is how the Formless divides itself into perishable forms.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains why God takes shape at all. Name and form belong to maya, he says, yet they are the very stage on which devotion can be played out. The borders we draw, like lines on the earth, are real to the eye but do not actually cut the one ground apart, and a mother makes no such divisions among her children. So the many divine forms, Hari and Hara alike, arise for the sake of devotion: the Formless lets itself be divided into perishable shapes so that love has something to hold.

GATHA 1352 Faith and Trust

Faith, the child's stubborn claim

मराठी मूळ

लेकराची आळी न पुरवी कैसी । काय तयापाशीं उणें जालें ॥1॥
आह्मां लडिवाळां नाहीं तें प्रमाण । कांहीं ब्रह्मज्ञान आत्मिस्थति ॥ध्रु.॥
वचनाचा घेईन अनुभव पदरीं । जें हें जनाचारीं मिरवलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी भोळवेची आटी । दावीन शेवटीं कौतुक हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can a mother not fulfill a child's demands? What is lacking in her?

For us, the dear and playful children, that is not the criterion: neither Brahman-knowledge nor abidance in the Self.

I will take the proof of Your words as my own experience, for You have displayed it openly before the world.

Says Tuka, this stubbornness of mine is born of simplicity. I will show this wonder at the very end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can a mother not meet a child's demand? What is lacking in her? For us, the dear and playful children, that is not the test: not knowledge of Brahman, not abiding in the Self. I will take the proof of Your words as my own experience, since You have shown it openly before the world. Tuka says: this stubbornness of mine comes from simplicity. I will show this wonder at the very end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to approach God through learning and presses a child's claim instead. A mother cannot deny her child, he reasons, and as God's playful children we are not measured by knowledge of Brahman or steadiness in the Self. He intends to hold God to God's own promises, treating them as something he will live and prove, not merely believe, because God has displayed them openly. He names his own insistence as simplicity rather than cleverness, and trusts that the wonder of it will be shown in the end.

GATHA 1353 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, serve the suffering

मराठी मूळ

आर्तभूतांप्रति । उत्तम योजाव्या त्या शक्ति ॥1॥
फळ आणि समाधान । तेथें उत्तम कारण ॥ध्रु.॥
अल्पें तो संतोषी। स्थळीं सांपडे उदेसीं ॥2॥
सहज संगम । तुका ह्मणे तो उत्तम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One's best powers should be directed toward the welfare of suffering beings.

The highest fruit and contentment are found precisely there.

The one who is content with little finds God readily in any place.

Says Tuka, that spontaneous union is the most excellent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your best powers should be turned toward the good of suffering beings. The highest fruit and the deepest contentment are found right there. The one content with little finds God readily in any place. Tuka says: that effortless union is the most excellent of all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells you where to aim your finest abilities: at the welfare of beings who suffer. He claims that the highest reward and real contentment are not found elsewhere but precisely in that service. He pairs this with a small, demanding condition, that the one satisfied with little meets God easily wherever he is. The poem ends by exalting a union that comes naturally out of such a life, rather than one forced or sought after.

GATHA 1354 Worldly Life

Worldly life, still the chitta

मराठी मूळ

मुळाचिया मुळें । दुःखें वाढती सकळे ॥1॥
ऐसा योगियांचा धर्म । नव्हे वाढवावा श्रम ॥ध्रु.॥
न कळे आवडी । कोण आहे कैसी घडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे थीत । दुःख पाववावें चित्त ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From the root cause, all sufferings multiply.

It is not the way of the yogi to increase this effort.

One does not know what love is, or what form the next moment may take.

Says Tuka, the chitta should be brought to a state of steady stillness in the face of suffering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From the root cause, all sufferings multiply. It is not the yogi's way to add to this toil. One does not know what one loves, nor what the next moment will hold. Tuka says: in the face of suffering, the chitta should be brought to steady stillness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces all sorrow back to a single root and warns against piling on more striving, which only feeds it; that, he says, is not the yogi's path. He underlines how little we actually control: we do not truly know our own desires, nor what shape the coming moment will take. Given that uncertainty, the answer he offers is not more effort but inner stillness. When suffering comes, the work is to settle the mind into steadiness rather than thrash against it.

GATHA 1355 The Power of the Name

The Name, the shared feast

मराठी मूळ

भाग्यवंतां हें चि काम । मापी नाम वैखरी ॥1॥
आनंदाची पुष्ट अंगीं । श्रोते संगीं उद्धरती ॥ध्रु.॥
पिकविलें तया खाणें किती । पंगतीस सुकाळ ॥2॥
तुका करी प्रणिपात । दंडवत आचारियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fortunate ones have but one task: to measure out the Name in vaikhari.

The body is nourished in the joy of it, and the listeners in their company are also uplifted.

When one has harvested a rich crop, how much can one eat alone? The whole assembly feasts in abundance.

Says Tuka, I bow down and prostrate before such teachers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fortunate ones have only one task: to measure out the Name aloud. The body is nourished in its joy, and the listeners gathered around are lifted up too. When you have harvested a rich crop, how much can you eat alone? The whole assembly feasts in plenty. Tuka says: I bow down and prostrate before such teachers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the one work of the blessed: to speak the Name aloud and keep it flowing. The joy of it nourishes the speaker, but he insists the gift cannot stay private, for those who listen are raised along with him. His image of the harvest makes the point: a rich crop is too much for one mouth, so the whole gathering is fed. He ends by bowing to the teachers who do exactly this, sharing the Name rather than hoarding it.

GATHA 1356 The Moral Ideal

Social criticism, counsel wasted on the proud

मराठी मूळ

लटिकें तें रुचे । साच कोणां ही न पचे ॥1॥
ऐसा माजल्याचा गुण । भोगें कळों येइल सीण ॥ध्रु.॥
वाढवी ममता । नाहीं वरपडला तो दूतां ॥2॥
कांहीं न मनी माकड । तुका उपदेश हेकड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Falsehood is relished easily, but truth is hard for anyone to digest.

Such is the character of the arrogant; they will learn its futility through suffering.

He who feeds his attachments and has not yet been caught by Death's messengers lives in false security.

Says Tuka, a monkey heeds nothing. Counsel to the unyielding is wasted.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Falsehood is relished easily; truth is hard for anyone to digest. Such is the nature of the arrogant; they will learn its emptiness only through suffering. He who keeps feeding his attachments, not yet seized by Death's messengers, lives in false safety. Tuka says: a monkey heeds nothing. Counsel given to the stubborn is wasted.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram observes how readily people swallow flattery and falsehood while truth goes down hard. The arrogant person, he warns, will only discover the hollowness of his way through the suffering it brings, not through advice. He points at the pattern of feeding one's attachments while imagining oneself safe, simply because Death's reckoning has not yet arrived. The closing line names the trap of stubbornness itself: counsel slides off a mind that will not receive it, the way it would off a restless monkey, so the warning is finally a call to examine whether you are that closed.

GATHA 1357 The Nature of God

Creation as God's play

मराठी मूळ

कौतुकाची सृष्टी । कौतुकें चि केलें कष्टी ॥1॥
मोडे तरी भलें खेळ । फांके फांकिल्या कोल्हाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणणियासाटीं। भय सामावलें पोटीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चेता । होणें तें तूं च आइता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This creation was made for sport, and through that sport, suffering was also created.

If the game breaks, so be it; when it scatters, there is a great commotion.

For the one who knows, fear itself is contained within the belly.

Says Tuka, wake up! That which is to happen, you yourself have brought about.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This whole creation was made for play. And through that play, suffering was made too. If the game breaks, that is fine. When it scatters, there is a great uproar. For the one who knows, fear is held inside the belly. Tuka says: wake up. Whatever is to happen, you yourself have already brought it about.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at the world and sees it as God's sport, and he refuses to pretend that the sport is gentle. The same play that makes the world also makes its pain. He stays calm about this: if the game falls apart, so be it, even when others raise a great commotion. The one who truly knows keeps fear contained instead of being ruled by it. His closing call, wake up, points to the hard truth that what comes to us is already shaped by our own doing, so the place to look is inward.

GATHA 1358 The Nature of God

The one and the apparent

मराठी मूळ

भोवंडींसरिसें । अवघें भोंवत चि दिसे ॥1॥
ठायीं राहिल्या निश्चळ । आहे अचळीं अचळ ॥ध्रु.॥
एक हाकेचा कपाटीं। तेथें आणीक नाद उठी ॥2॥
अभ्रें धांवे शशी । तुका असे ते तें दुसरें भासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When one is spinning, everything seems to whirl.

But when one stands still, the immovable is seen as immovable.

From one clap in the canyon, many echoes arise. The clouds run, and the moon seems to move.

Says Tuka, what exists is one thing, but what appears is something else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you are spinning, everything seems to spin. When you stand still in one place, the unmoving is seen as unmoving. From one shout in the canyon, more sounds rise up. The moon seems to run because the clouds are moving. Tuka says: what truly exists is one thing, and what appears is something else.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why the world looks the way it does, and where the error lives. The whirling is in the watcher, not the watched; stop spinning and the steady thing shows itself as steady. He gives two homely proofs: one clap in a canyon throws back many echoes, and the moon looks like it is running only because the clouds drift across it. The lesson is that motion and multiplicity are appearances thrown up by our own restlessness. What is real is single and still; what we see is the second thing, the seeming.

GATHA 1359 Faith and Trust

Belonging wholly to God

मराठी मूळ

नव्हों आह्मी आजिकालीचीं । काचीं कुचीं चाळवणी ॥1॥
एके ठायीं मूळडाळ । ठावा सकळ आहेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमचें आमचेंसें कांहीं । भिन्न नाहीं वांटलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जेथें असें । तेथें दिसें तुमचासा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are not the kind to be shaken by petty provocations.

Root and branch, we are planted in one place, and You know us entirely.

What is Yours and what is ours is not divided or parceled out.

Says Tuka, wherever I am, I appear as Yours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are not the kind who are shaken by today's little tricks and provocations. Root and branch, we are planted in one place, and you know all of us. What is yours and what is ours is not divided up or parceled out. Tuka says: wherever I am, there I appear as yours.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is declaring a settled belonging that no small provocation can disturb. He is not a sapling of the moment, easily uprooted; root and branch he is fixed in one place, fully known to God. From that footing he erases the line between mine and yours: nothing has been divided between them. The claim he lands is total. Wherever he happens to be, he shows up as God's own, with no separate self held back.

GATHA 1360 Renunciation

Renunciation, the worthy one's wealth

मराठी मूळ

योग्याची संपदा त्याग आणि शांति । उभयलोकीं कीतिन सोहळा मान ॥1॥
येरयेरांवरी जायांचें उसिणें । भाग्यस्थळीं देणें झाडावेसीं ॥ध्रु.॥
केलिया फावला ठायींचा तो लाहो । तृष्णेचा तो काहो काव्हवितो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाभ अकर्तव्या नांवें । शिवपद जीवें भोगिजेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The true wealth of the worthy is renunciation and peace; it brings honor and celebration in both worlds.

All else is borrowed from one another; at the place of fortune, debts must be cleared.

The gain from what one has already earned comes of itself, while the sting of craving only brings torment.

Says Tuka, the profit that comes by doing nothing is named liberation, and by it the jiva enjoys Shivpad.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The true wealth of the worthy is renunciation and peace. It brings honor and celebration in both worlds. Everything else is only borrowed from one another. At the place of fortune, debts must be cleared. The gain from what you have already earned comes on its own. The fever of craving only torments you. Tuka says: the profit that comes by doing nothing is named liberation, and by it the jiva enjoys Shivpad.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines wealth so that the truly rich person is the one who has let go. Renunciation and peace are the only holdings that bring honor in this world and the next; everything else is borrowed and must be repaid when the accounts are settled. What you have rightly earned arrives by itself, while craving for more only burns you. He names the strange profit at the center of the path: the gain that comes from doing nothing, from grasping at nothing, is liberation itself, and through it the soul comes to enjoy the state of Shiva.

GATHA 1361 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, freedom from death

मराठी मूळ

मरणा हातीं सुटली काया । विचारें या निश्चयें ॥1॥
नासोनियां गेली खंती । सहजिस्थति भोगाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
न देखें सें जालें श्रम । आलें वर्म हाता हें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कैची कींव । कोठें जीव निराळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The body has been released from the hands of Death by the strength of discernment.

Sorrow has vanished, and the sahaj-sthiti, the natural state of enjoyment, remains.

What once appeared as toil is no longer visible, for the secret has come into hand.

Says Tuka, where is the question of pity? Where is the jiva as something apart?

IN PLAIN WORDS

The body has been freed from the hands of death by the firm strength of discernment. Sorrow has been destroyed and is gone. The natural state of enjoyment remains. What once looked like toil can no longer be seen, for the secret has come into my hand. Tuka says: where is the question of pity now? Where is the jiva as something apart?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the inner shift after the truth becomes his own, not just a teaching. Clear discernment has loosened death's grip on the body, and the sorrow that fed on that fear has simply ended. What is left is the natural, effortless state, and the old sense of life as toil has vanished now that the secret is in hand. The two closing questions are the point: there is no one to pity and no separate self left over. The jiva that seemed to stand apart is not found anywhere.

GATHA 1362 Renunciation

Renunciation, the false ascetic

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे ब्रह्मचर्य बाइलेच्या त्यागें । वैराग्य वाउगें देशत्यागें ॥1॥
काम वाढे भय वासनेच्या द्वारें । सांडावें तें धीरें आचावाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
कांपवूनि टिरी शूरत्वाची मात । केलें वाताहात उचित काळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करी जिव्हेसी विटाळ । लटिक्याची मळ स्तुति होतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

True celibacy is not mere renunciation of one's wife, nor is true detachment simply leaving one's homeland.

Desire grows through the door of craving, and what must be dropped should be dropped with patient resolve.

One who trembles when tested yet boasts of valor has already squandered his opportunity.

Says Tuka, the tongue is defiled when it offers praise to what is false.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Celibacy is not just giving up your wife. Detachment is not just leaving your homeland. Desire grows through the door of craving. What must be dropped should be dropped with patient resolve. The man who trembles when he is tested, yet boasts of his courage, has wasted his chance when the time came. Tuka says: the tongue is defiled when it praises what is false.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the disguise off outward renunciation. Leaving a wife behind or wandering far from home proves nothing; desire enters through craving in the mind, and only steady inner resolve actually drops it. He points at the pretender who shakes with fear when truly tested and then brags of his valor, who let the real opportunity pass while posing as a hero. The closing line turns the examination onto speech itself: to praise such false courage, in oneself or another, is to defile the very tongue that speaks it. The warning is against the boast we are tempted to make, not contempt for the person.

GATHA 1363 Worldly Life

Worldly life, God in all enjoyment

मराठी मूळ

नको सांडूं अन्न नको सेवूं वन । चिंतीं नारायण सर्व भोगीं ॥1॥
मातेचिये खांदीं बाळ नेणे सीण । भावना त्या भिन्न मुंडाविया ॥ध्रु.॥
नको गुंपों भोगीं नको पडों त्यागीं । लावुनि सरें अंगीं देवाचिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नको पुसों वेळोवेळां । उपदेश वेगळा उरला नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not abandon food, and do not retire to the forest. Contemplate Narayana through all your daily enjoyments.

A child on its mother's shoulder knows no weariness.

Do not get entangled in pleasures, and do not fall into austere renunciation. Simply lean upon God's support.

Says Tuka, do not keep asking again and again. There is no instruction left beyond this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not give up your food. Do not run off to the forest. Think of Narayana in all your enjoyments. A child on its mother's shoulder knows no weariness. Do not get tangled in pleasures, and do not fall into harsh renunciation. Just lean your whole body on God's support. Tuka says: do not keep asking again and again. There is no instruction left beyond this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cuts away the false choice between indulgence and flight. You need not starve yourself or escape to the forest; remember Narayana right inside your ordinary meals and pleasures. He gives the image of a child carried on its mother's shoulder, feeling no tiredness because it is wholly held. So lean your full weight on God and avoid both traps, being snared by pleasure and being proud of austerity. The closing line is firm. Stop asking for more techniques; this surrender is the whole of the teaching, and nothing else remains to be told.

GATHA 1364 The Power of the Name

The Name, alertness of mind

मराठी मूळ

अवघी मिथ्या आटी । राम नाहीं तंव कंठीं ॥1॥
सावधान सावधान । उगवीं संकल्पीं हें मन ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडिलें तें मांडे। आघ्र उरल्या काळें दंडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें भागा । देउनि चिंतीं पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All effort is futile as long as Rama is not in your throat.

Be alert, be alert! Untangle the mind from its own projections.

What you abandoned will pile up again, and remaining karma will punish you in due time.

Says Tuka, accept what has come to your lot.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All your effort is false as long as Rama is not in your throat. Be alert, be alert. Untangle this mind from its own plans and projections. What you set aside will pile up again, and the karma that is left will punish you in time. Tuka says: take what has fallen to your lot, give it over, and think of Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the Name the test of whether anything we do is real. Without Rama on the tongue, all our striving is empty. So he calls for alertness and for untangling the mind from its own schemes, since whatever we merely push aside without uprooting will gather again, and the karma we left unfinished will come back to strike when its time comes. His resolution is to stop fighting fate and instead accept the lot that has come, hand it over, and keep the mind fixed on Panduranga.

GATHA 1365 The Necessity of Experience

Experience guarded, not preached

मराठी मूळ

न संगावें वर्म । जनीं असों द्यावा भ्रम ॥1॥
उगींच लागतील पाठीं । होतीं रितीं च हिंपुटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सिकविल्या गोटी । शिकोनि धरितील पोटीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सीण । होइल अनुभवाविण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not reveal the secret to the crowd; let the world remain in its delusion.

Otherwise, the undeserving will simply follow you, remaining empty and helpless.

They will memorize the phrases you teach and store them in their bellies.

Says Tuka, without actual experience, there will only be weariness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not tell the secret to the crowd. Let the world stay in its delusion. Otherwise the unworthy will simply trail after you, staying empty and helpless. They will memorize the phrases you teach and store them in their bellies. Tuka says: without real experience, there will only be weariness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counsels keeping the inmost truth from being handed out cheaply to a crowd. If you parade it, the unready merely attach themselves to you and remain as empty as before. Worse, they collect your phrases by heart and carry them around as borrowed words, mistaking memorized teaching for the thing itself. His warning lands on the difference between knowing and parroting: without lived experience, all that learning produces is exhaustion. The point is self-examination, asking whether what we hold is our own or merely stored words.

GATHA 1366 Worldly Life

Discernment before action

मराठी मूळ

जातिविजातीची व्हावयासि भेटी । संकल्प तो पोटीं वाहों नये ॥1॥
होणार तें घडो होणाराच्या गुणें । होइल नारायणें निमिनलें तें ॥ध्रु.॥
व्याघ्राचिये भुके वधावी ते गाय । याचें नांव काय पुण्य असे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे न करी विचार पुरता । गरज्याची माता पिता खर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not carry the intention of mingling the pure with the impure in one's belly.

Whatever is to happen will happen by its own nature; whatever Narayana has ordained will come to pass.

Should a cow be slaughtered to feed a tiger? What kind of merit is that?

Says Tuka, the one who does not think things through fully is like a donkey serving as father and mother to the desperate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not carry in your belly the intention of mixing what is fitting with what is not. Whatever is to happen will happen by its own nature. Whatever Narayana has ordained will come to pass. Should a cow be killed to feed a tiger? What kind of merit is that? Tuka says: the one who does not think a matter through fully is like a donkey serving as father and mother to the desperate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against acting from a confused intention that blends the proper with the improper. Outcomes unfold by their own nature, and what Narayana has ordained will arrive, so scheming to force things only muddies us. He drives it home with a sharp question: killing a cow to satisfy a tiger's hunger is no act of merit, however it dresses itself up. The closing image mocks the well-meaning fool who refuses to think a thing through and then exhausts himself playing both father and mother to every desperate demand. The aim is to examine our own undiscerning rush to help.

GATHA 1367 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, take the teaching in

मराठी मूळ

शाहाणियां पुरे एक चि वचन । विशारती खुण ते चि त्यासी ॥1॥
उपदेश असे बहुतांकारणें । घेतला तो मनें पाहिजे हा ॥ध्रु.॥
फांसावेना तरिं दुःख घेतें वाव । मग होतो जीव कासावीस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नको राग धरूं झोंडा । नुघडितां पीडा होइल डोळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the wise, a single word is enough; that very sign opens everything to them.

Teaching exists for many kinds of people, but what has been received must be taken into the mind.

If it does not take hold, suffering only grows, and the jiva becomes tormented.

Says Tuka, do not hold a grudge obstinately. If you refuse to open your eyes, the pain will only worsen.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the wise, one word is enough. That single sign opens everything to them. Teaching is given for many kinds of people, but what is received must be taken into the mind. If it does not take hold, suffering grows in vain, and then the jiva becomes tormented. Tuka says: do not hold a stubborn grudge. If you refuse to open your eyes, the pain will only get worse.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts the ready listener with the one who resists. A single word unlocks everything for the wise, while teaching meant for all kinds of people does nothing unless it is actually taken into the mind. When it fails to take hold, the suffering it was meant to end only grows, and the soul is left in torment. His final appeal is direct and personal: drop the stubborn grudge against the teaching, because refusing to open your eyes does not protect you. It simply lets the pain deepen. The hard word is aimed at the obstinacy itself, urging the listener to relent.

GATHA 1368 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, joy of contemplation

मराठी मूळ

अभिन्नव सुख तरि या विचारें । विचारावें बरें संतजनीं ॥1॥
रूपाच्या आठवें दोन्ही ही आपण । वियोगें तो क्षीण होत नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
पूजा तरि चित्तें कल्पा तें ब्रह्मांड । आहाच तो खंड एकदेसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा अनुभव यापरि । डोई पायांवरि ठेवीतसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is a wondrous joy in this contemplation; let it be considered well among the holy.

In the memory of His form, both states are one's own; through separation, one does not actually diminish.

True worship is to conceive the entire universe within the chitta; anything partial falls short.

Says Tuka, such is my experience. I place my head upon His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is a wondrous joy in this contemplation. Let it be weighed well among the holy. In the memory of his form, both states are my own, and through separation I do not truly grow less. True worship is to hold the whole universe within the chitta. Anything partial falls short, broken into one region only. Tuka says: such is my experience. I lay my head upon his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shares the fruit of dwelling on God and invites the holy to test it. Holding the memory of God's form, he finds that union and separation are both his own, so that even apartness does not actually diminish him. He raises worship beyond any single shrine or rite: real worship conceives the whole universe within the heart, and anything confined to one place or fragment falls short of it. He offers all this not as theory but as his own experience, sealing it with the simplest gesture of surrender, laying his head on God's feet.

GATHA 1369 The Nature of God

Nondual play, the spectacle of forms

मराठी मूळ

नटनाटए तुह्मी केलें याच साटीं । कवतुकें दृष्टी निववावी ॥1॥
नाहीं तरि काय कळलें चि आहे । वाघ आणि गाय लांकडाची ॥ध्रु.॥
अभेद चि असे मांडियेलें खेळा । केल्या दीपकळा बहुएकी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रूप नाहीं दर्पणांत । संतोषाची मात दुसरें तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have staged this drama and pageant so that our eyes might be delighted by the spectacle.

Otherwise, we already know the truth: the tiger and the cow are both made of wood.

The undivided is set forth as play, and one light has been displayed as many lamps.

Says Tuka, the image in the mirror is not the reality; the joy it brings is something else altogether.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You staged this whole drama and pageant for one reason: so our eyes would delight in the show. Otherwise we already know the truth. The tiger and the cow are both carved of wood. The undivided One is set out as a game. One light is shown as many lamps. Tuka says: the image in the mirror is not the thing itself. The joy of watching it is something else.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at the whole created world as a play God puts on for the pleasure of seeing it, not because it is finally separate from God. He gives the carver's image: the fierce tiger and the gentle cow are different shapes, but the same wood. So with all forms; one undivided reality is displayed as many, the way a single flame is shown in many lamps. The point is not to despise the spectacle but to know what it is: a reflection in a mirror, beautiful, yet not the substance. Knowing this, the delight remains, but you no longer mistake the show for the real.

GATHA 1370 The Necessity of Experience

Indwelling Lord, the inner sun

मराठी मूळ

रवीचा प्रकाश । तो चि निशी घडे नाश । जाल्या बहुवस । तरि त्या काय दीपिका ॥1॥
आतां हा चि वसो जीवीं । माझे अंतरी गोसावीं । होऊं येती ठावीं । काय वर्मे याच्यानें ॥ध्रु.॥
सवें असतां धणी । आड येऊं न सके कोणी । न लगे विनवणी । पृथकाची करावी ॥2॥
जन्माचिया गति । येणें अवघ्या खुंटती । कारण ते प्रीति । तुका ह्मणे जवळी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sun's own light destroys the night. However many lamps there may be, what can they do before it?

Let only this dwell within the jiva, this Master dwelling within. Through Him, all secrets are revealed.

When the Master is present, no one else can interfere, and no separate entreaty is necessary.

Says Tuka, the cycles of birth are ended by this. The reason is that love keeps Him near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sun's light destroys the night. However many lamps there are, what can they do once it rises? Let only this live in me now: the Master dwelling in my heart. Through Him all the hidden things become known. When the Master is with me, no one can come between us. I need make no separate plea. Tuka says: the rounds of birth all stop here. The reason is love, which keeps Him near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts the indwelling Lord with every lesser help, the way the sun outshines any number of lamps. He asks for one thing: that this inner Master be all that lives in his heart, because through that presence every secret stands revealed. When the Lord is already within and beside you, nothing can intrude and no separate petition is needed. He ends by naming the stakes: this presence ends the cycle of birth and rebirth, and the thing that holds the Lord close is simply love.

GATHA 1371 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the cheap and waiting Lord

मराठी मूळ

ऐसे सांडुनियां घुरे । किविलवाणी दिसां कां रे । कामें उर भरे । हातीं नुरे मृत्तका ॥1॥
उदार हा जगदानी । पांडुरंग अभिमानी । तुळसीदळ पाणी । चिंतनाचा भुकेला ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगे पुसावी चाकरी । कोणी वकील ये घरीं । त्याचा तो चाकरी । पारपत्य सकळ ॥2॥
नाहीं आडकाटी । तुका ह्मणे जातां भेटी । न बोलतां मिठी । उगी च पायीं घालावी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you look so pitiful, abandoning such treasure? Desire fills the chest, yet only dust remains in your hands.

Panduranga is the generous Lord of the world; He longs for nothing but a tulsi leaf, a little water, and your remembrance.

You need not formally request His service; He comes to your door on His own, taking charge of all your affairs.

Says Tuka, there is no obstacle in going to meet Him. Without even speaking, simply fall at His feet in silent embrace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you look so wretched, throwing away such treasure? Desire fills your chest, but only dust is left in your hands. Panduranga is generous, the giver to the whole world, and proud to own His own. He hungers only for a tulsi leaf, a little water, and your remembrance. You do not have to ask for His service. He comes to your door on His own and takes charge of all your affairs. Tuka says: there is no barrier to going and meeting Him. Without a word, just fall silent at His feet and hold them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram scolds the listener for chasing desires that leave the hands full of dust while the real treasure goes ignored. He sets the price of God absurdly low: Panduranga is generous and asks only a tulsi leaf, some water, and remembrance, not elaborate offerings. More than that, you need not even apply for His help; He comes to your door unbidden and manages your affairs Himself. The closing image names what is actually required: not eloquence or ritual, but to go, fall silent at His feet, and cling. The poem turns self-examination toward the false poverty of a heart that hoards desire while the door stands open.

GATHA 1372 The Saints

The saint, generous and unbroken

मराठी मूळ

उपकारी असे आरोणि उरला । आपुलें तयाला पर नाहीं ॥1॥
लाभावरि घ्यावें सांपडलें काम । आपला तो श्रम न विचारी ॥ध्रु.॥
जीवा ऐसें देखे आणिकां जीवांसी । निखळ चि रासि गुणांची च ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव तयांचा पांगिला । न भंगे संचला धीर सदा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The truly generous one has given everything and still remains full. He sees nothing as his own or as another's.

He seizes whatever beneficial work comes to hand and does not consider his own labor.

He sees all other jivas as he sees his own jiva: a pure treasury of virtues alone.

Says Tuka, God Himself is devoted to such a one, whose steadfast courage never breaks.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The truly generous one has given everything away and is still full. To him nothing is his own, and nothing is another's. Whatever good work falls to his hand, he takes it up; he does not weigh his own labor. He sees every other living being just as he sees his own life: a pure heap of virtues, nothing else. Tuka says: God Himself is bound to such a one, whose gathered courage never breaks.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the mark of a real saint by the way he holds self and others. He gives without depleting, because he has dropped the line between mine and yours, so giving costs him nothing. He takes up whatever good work comes without calculating his own effort, and he looks at every other person as he looks at his own life, seeing only a treasury of virtue. The closing claim names the stakes: God becomes indebted, even devoted, to a person whose steadiness never cracks. It is a portrait offered for the listener's own self-measurement.

GATHA 1373 The Saints

Longing for the saints, the rare meeting

मराठी मूळ

कोणा पुण्यें यांचा होईन सेवक । जींहीं द्वंदादिक दुरावलें ॥1॥
ऐसें वर्म मज दावीं नारायणा । अंतरीं च खुणा प्रकटोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु अवघड असे संतभेटी । तरि जगजेठी करुणा केली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मग नयें वृत्तीवरी । सुखाचे शेजारीं पहुडईन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By what merit might I become the servant of those who have overcome all duality?

O Narayana, reveal this secret to me, making the mark within manifest.

The meeting with a true saint is exceedingly rare; yet, O Lord of the universe, You have shown compassion.

Says Tuka, after that, I shall no longer be swept by the vrittis; I will recline at ease in the lap of bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By what merit could I become the servant of those who have driven off all duality? Show me this secret, Narayana; make the sign clear within my heart. Meeting a true saint is very hard. Yet, Lord of the world, You have shown mercy. Tuka says: after that I will not be dragged by the mind's moods. I will lie down at ease in the lap of bliss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays not to meet God directly but to be allowed to serve the saints, those who have overcome the pull of opposites. He asks Narayana to plant the inner mark that would make him fit for such service. He admits that the company of a true saint is exceedingly rare, then thanks the Lord, whose compassion grants it anyway. The reward he names is freedom from the restless turning of the mind, the vrittis, and a settled rest in bliss. The poem locates liberation in service to the saints rather than in any effort of his own merit.

GATHA 1374 The Moral Ideal

Vigilance, the self as witness

मराठी मूळ

क्षणक्षणां सांभिाळतों । साक्षी होतों आपुला ॥1॥
न घडावी पायीं तुटी । मन मुठी घातलें ॥ध्रु.॥
विचारतों वचनां आधीं । धरूनि शुद्धी ठेविली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मागें भ्यालों ॥ तरीं जालों जागृत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Moment by moment I guard myself, becoming my own witness.

I must not allow any break in my devotion to His feet; I have placed the mind under firm control.

I weigh my words before I speak and keep a steady awareness at all times.

Says Tuka, I was frightened by what happened before, and since then I have remained vigilant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Moment by moment I watch over myself; I have become my own witness. There must be no break in my hold on His feet, so I have taken my mind in my fist. I test my words before I speak and keep my awareness clean. Tuka says: I was frightened by what happened before. Since then I have stayed awake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the discipline of constant inner watchfulness, standing as witness over his own mind. The aim is single: never to let the grip on God's feet slip, so he keeps the mind clenched in his fist and weighs each word before it leaves him. He is honest about the source of this vigilance; an earlier fall, or near-fall, frightened him, and fear became the spur. The poem makes self-examination practical: liberation is not a one-time gain but a wakefulness held moment by moment, lest the old slippage return.

GATHA 1375 Devotion to Vitthal

Contemplation, the King of Pandharpur

मराठी मूळ

आणूनियां मना । आवघ्या धांडोळल्या खुणा । देखिला तो राणा । पंढरपूरनिवासी ॥1॥
यासी अनुसरल्या काय । घडे ऐसें वांयां जाय । देखिले ते पाय । सम जीवीं राहाती ॥ध्रु.॥
तो देखावा हा विध । चिंतनें तें कार्य सिद्ध । आणिकां संबंध । नाहीं पर्वकाळासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खळ । हो क्षणें चि निर्मळ । जाऊनियां मळ । वाळवंटीं नाचती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Gathering the mind inward, I searched all signs and directions and beheld the King, the one who dwells in Pandharpur.

For those who follow Him, nothing goes in vain. The sight of those feet abides steadfast in the jiva.

The method of seeing Him is this: through contemplation, the purpose is fulfilled. No other observance or auspicious season is needed.

Says Tuka, even the wicked are purified in an instant, their impurities washed away, and they dance in the open sands of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I drew my mind inward, searched through every sign and direction, and saw the King, the one who lives in Pandharpur. For those who give themselves to Him, nothing is wasted. The sight of those feet stays steady in the heart. This is the way to see Him: through contemplation the work is done. No other rite, no special holy day, is needed. Tuka says: even the wicked become spotless in a moment, their filth washed off, and they dance on the open sands of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports the fruit of turning the mind inward: searching through all outer signs, he finds the King of Pandharpur within. He insists that self-surrender to this Lord is never wasted and that the vision of His feet, once seen, holds firm in the heart. Then he names the method plainly and strips away the alternatives: contemplation alone accomplishes the goal, and no special ritual or auspicious calendar day is required. He closes with the radical reach of this path; even the worst person is purified in an instant and ends up dancing in joy on the riverbank sands of Pandhari.

GATHA 1376 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage, the road to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

धरितां ये पंढरीची वाट । नाहीं संकट मुक्तीचें ॥1॥
वंदूं येती देव पदें । त्या आनंदें उत्साहें ॥ध्रु.॥
नृत्यछंदें उडती रज । जे सहज चालतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गरुड टके । वैष्णव निके संभ्रम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When you set foot on the path to Pandhari, the difficulty of liberation vanishes.

The gods themselves come to bow at those feet with joy and celebration.

As pilgrims walk, the dust rises like a spontaneous dance.

Says Tuka, the Garuda-banner gleams, and the Vaishnavas move forward in beautiful procession.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Once you set foot on the road to Pandhari, the hardship of liberation is gone. The gods themselves come to bow at those feet, with joy and eagerness. As the pilgrims walk, the dust rises like a dance of its own. Tuka says: the Garuda-banner shines, and the Vaishnavas move on in their beautiful crowd.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the pilgrimage road itself the easy door to liberation; what is hard by other means becomes effortless once you simply start walking toward Pandhari. He raises the stakes by saying the gods come down to bow at the pilgrims' path, sharing their joy. The dust kicked up by the walking feet becomes a spontaneous dance, the whole road celebrating. The closing image is the moving procession of the Vaishnavas under the Garuda-banner, a picture meant to draw the listener onto the same road.

GATHA 1377 The Power of the Name

The Name, the taste of nectar

मराठी मूळ

नाम घेतां मन निवे । जिव्हे अमृत चि जरवे । होताती बरवे । ऐसे शकुन लाभाचे ॥1॥
मन रंगलें रंगलें । तुझ्या चरणीं ि◌स्थरावलें । केलिया विठ्ठलें । ऐसी कृपा जाणावी ॥ध्रु.॥
जालें भोजनसें दिसे । चिरा पडोनि ठेला इच्छे । धालियाच्या ऐसें। अंगा येती उद्गार ॥2॥
सुख भेटों आलें सुखा । निध सांपडला मुखा । तुका ह्मणे लेखा । आतां नाहीं आनंदा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I take Your Name, the mind is cooled and the tongue tastes nothing but nectar. Such are the auspicious omens of gain.

The mind is absorbed, absorbed in Your feet, made steady. Know that Vitthala has bestowed this grace.

It feels as though a great feast has been enjoyed; the appetite for desire has been satisfied, and words of contentment arise naturally from the body.

Joy has come to meet joy; a treasure has landed right in our mouths. Says Tuka, from now on, there is no measure to this bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I take Your Name, the mind grows cool and the tongue tastes only nectar. These are the good omens of true gain. My mind is soaked, soaked, and made steady at Your feet. Know that Vitthala has given this grace. It feels as if a full meal has been eaten; the hunger of desire is satisfied, and words of contentment rise on their own from the body. Joy has come to meet joy; a treasure has dropped right into my mouth. Tuka says: from now on there is no measuring this bliss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what taking God's Name actually does to a person from the inside. The mind cools, the tongue tastes nectar, and these sensations are the reliable signs that something real has been received. He attributes the steadiness of his absorbed mind not to his own effort but to Vitthala's grace. The Name satisfies like a full meal, quieting the hunger of craving so that contentment speaks by itself. He closes by naming the result: joy meeting joy, a treasure arriving unbidden, and a bliss past all measure.

GATHA 1378 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion as feast, time not wasted

मराठी मूळ

रुची रुची घेऊं गोडी । प्रेमसुखें जाली जोडी ॥1॥
काळ जाऊं नेदूं वांयां । चिंतितां विठोबाच्या पायां ॥ध्रु.॥
करुं भजन भोजन । धणी घेऊं नारायण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव धाला । होय तुझ्यानें विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us taste the sweetness, morsel by morsel. Through love's delight, a true gain has been made.

Let not a moment be wasted while contemplating Vithoba's feet.

Let devotion become our meal; let us take our fill of Narayana.

Says Tuka, the jiva is filled, O Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us taste the sweetness, bit by bit. Through the joy of love a true gain is made. Let us waste no moment, contemplating Vithoba's feet. Let devotion be our meal; let us eat our fill of Narayana. Tuka says: the soul is satisfied, Vitthala, by You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in the warm plural of shared practice, inviting others to savor devotion like food taken mouthful by mouthful. The gain he points to is the joy of love itself, not some later reward. He presses the urgency lightly: let no moment slip while the mind can rest on Vithoba's feet. Turning devotion into a meal and the Name into nourishment, he ends by naming the fruit; the soul is filled and satisfied, and that fullness comes from Vitthala alone.

GATHA 1379 The Power of the Name

The Name, urgent appeal to the world

मराठी मूळ

वेळोवेळां हें चि सांगें । दान मागें जगासि ॥1॥
विठ्ठल हे मंगळवाणी । घेऊं धणी पंगती ॥ध्रु.॥
वेचतसे पळें पळ । केलें बळ पाहिजे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुश्चित नका । राहों फुका नाड हा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Again and again I say this, asking the world for this one gift: let the blessed word Vitthala be spoken.

Let us feast on it together in abundance.

Every moment is being spent; we must muster our strength.

Says Tuka, do not remain doubtful or idle, for this opportunity is slipping away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Again and again I say only this; I beg the world for one gift. Let the blessed word Vitthala be spoken. Let us feast on it together, our fill, seated in a row. Every moment is being spent; you must put your strength into it. Tuka says: do not stay doubtful, do not sit idle. This chance is slipping away for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns outward and pleads with everyone, asking the whole world for a single gift: that the name Vitthala be said. He pictures it as a shared feast, all seated together and eating their fill of the Name. Then he names the pressure honestly; time is draining away moment by moment, so this calls for real effort, not drift. The closing warning is for self-examination: doubt and idleness let a priceless opportunity, the human chance to take the Name, leak away to nothing.

GATHA 1380 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Panduranga, sin cannot stay

मराठी मूळ

आणीक ऐसें कोठें सांगा । पांडुरंगा सारिखें ॥1॥
दैवत ये भूमंडळीं । उद्धार कळी पावितें ॥ध्रु.॥
कोठें कांहीं कोठें कांहीं । शोध ठायीं स्थळासी ॥2॥
आनेत्रींचें तीथाअ नासे । तीथाअ वसे वज्रलेप ॥3॥
पांडुरंगींचें पांडुरंगीं । पाप अंगीं राहेना ॥4॥
ऐसें हरें गिरिजेप्रति । गुहए िस्थती सांगितली ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे तीर्थ क्षेत्र । सर्वत्र हें दैवत ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, is there anywhere in this world a deity like Panduranga? He is the one who uplifts the age of Kali.

In every place there is something or other, but one must search each sacred site to know.

The merit of ordinary pilgrimages fades, but the holiness of Pandharpur stands firm like vajralep, the diamond-seal.

Whatever sin touches Panduranga's domain simply cannot remain there.

Thus did Hara tell Girija this hidden truth.

Says Tuka, this deity is the pilgrimage, the sacred field, and everything in between.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, where is there another deity anywhere on earth like Panduranga? He is the one who lifts up this age of Kali. Here something, there something; you must search each place to know. The merit of ordinary holy places wears away, but the holiness of Pandharpur holds firm like a diamond-seal. Whatever sin touches Panduranga's domain cannot stay there. This is the hidden truth Hara told Girija. Tuka says: this deity is the pilgrimage, the sacred field, and everything at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exalts Panduranga above every other deity by what He does: He is the rescuer of the present dark age. Other sacred places offer this or that partial merit, and one must hunt from site to site, but their virtue fades, while the holiness of Pandharpur is permanent, sealed like diamond. The strong claim is that no sin can survive contact with Panduranga's domain. He grounds this in the tradition that Shiva, here called Hara, taught it as a secret to Parvati, called Girija. The close gathers it all: this one deity is itself the pilgrimage, the holy field, and every sacred thing in one.

GATHA 1381 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, go to Pandhari now

मराठी मूळ

पुराणींचा इतिहास । गोड रस सेविला ॥1॥
नव्हती हे आहाच बोल । मोकळें फोल कवित्व ॥ध्रु.॥
भावें घ्या रे भावें घ्या रे । येगदा जा रे पंढरिये ॥2॥
भाग्यें आलेति मनुष्यदेहा । तो हा पाहा विठ्ठल ॥3॥
पापपुण्या करील झाडा । जाइल पीडा जन्माची ॥4 ॥
घ्यावी हातीं टाळदिंडी । गावे तोंडीं गुणवाद ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे घटापटा । न लगे वाटा शोधाव्या ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have savored the sweet essence of the histories told in the Puranas. These are not hollow, empty words or loose and pointless poetry.

Take it with devotion, take it with devotion, and go at least once to Pandhari.

By good fortune you have obtained a human body; behold Vitthala.

He will settle the account of sin and merit and end the suffering of birth.

Take the cymbals and the dindi-flag in hand and sing His praises with your mouth.

Says Tuka, you need not search for remote paths or philosophies.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have tasted the sweet essence of the old stories the Puranas tell. These are not idle words. This is not loose, empty poetry. Take it with faith, take it with faith, and go just once to Pandhari. By good fortune you have come into a human body. Now look: here is Vitthal. He will settle the account of your sin and merit. He will end the suffering of birth. Take cymbals and the dindi flag in hand, and sing his praises aloud. Tuka says: you need not go searching for far paths or clever philosophies.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing the listener toward one simple act before the human body is wasted. He insists his words are not poetry for its own sake; they carry the tested essence of the Puranas, so they should be received with faith, not weighed as literature. The chance is rare: a human birth is the one form in which you can stand before Vitthal at Pandhari, and that meeting settles the whole ledger of sin and merit and ends the round of birth. The method he names is plain and bodily, cymbals, the pilgrim flag, the Name sung aloud, not subtle argument. The point is that the high road of abstract philosophy is unnecessary when the direct road of devotion is open to anyone.

GATHA 1382 The Power of the Name

The Name, easy where ritual fails

मराठी मूळ

कर्म धर्म नव्हती सांग । उण्या अंगें पतन ॥1॥
भलत्या काळें नामावळी । सुलभ भोळी भाविकां ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रायिश्चत्तें पडती पायां । गाती तयां वैष्णवां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नुपजे दोष करा घोष आनंदे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rituals and duties cannot be performed perfectly; any flaw leads to a fall.

But the chanting of God's Name is easy and gentle, accessible to the devout at all times.

Even the penances themselves bow down before those Vaishnavas who sing.

Says Tuka, no fault arises from it. Sing the Name with joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rituals and duties can never be done perfectly. One small flaw, and you fall. But chanting God's Name is easy and gentle, open to the simple-hearted at any hour. The penances themselves come and fall at the feet of the Vaishnavas who sing. Tuka says: from this no fault can arise. Sing the Name with joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is setting two paths side by side and showing why one is safe. Ritual and prescribed duty demand exactness, and a single defect undoes the whole act, so the careful path is always near to failure. The Name asks no such precision; it is available to the unlettered and the trusting at any time and in any condition. He goes further: the very penances meant to repair ritual error bow before those who simply sing, because the singing has already done what penance was for. The closing point is that chanting carries no risk of fault at all, so it can be done freely and with joy.

GATHA 1383 The Nature of God

The nature of God, mad for His devotees

मराठी मूळ

पाहा रे हें दैवत कैसें । भक्तिपिसें भाविक ॥1॥
पाचारिल्या सरिसें पावे । ऐसें सेवे बराडी ॥ध्रु.॥
शुल्क काष्ठीं गुरुगुरी । लाज हरि न धरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अर्धनारी । ऐसीं धरी रूपडीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

See what this deity is like: He is mad with love for His devotees.

The moment you call, He comes running, just like that, as if drawn by a loud cry.

He rumbles along with a rough wooden beam, carrying loads. Hari bears no shame in this.

Says Tuka, He even assumes the form of Ardhanarishvara, taking on such forms as these.

IN PLAIN WORDS

See what kind of God this is: he is mad with love for those who love him. The moment you call, he comes, just like that, as if he were a servant answering a shout. He will groan under a load on a rough wooden beam. Hari feels no shame in this. Tuka says: he even takes the form of half-woman, half-man. He puts on such forms as these.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is marvelling at a God whose greatness shows itself as lowliness toward those who love him. This deity is not distant or proud; he is besotted with his devotees and comes the instant he is called, behaving like a hired servant rather than a sovereign. He will stoop to carry burdens like a laborer, and Hari counts no such humility as beneath him. The reference to Ardhanarishvara, the half-woman half-man form, shows that he freely takes on any shape, refusing to be fixed in a single dignified image. The wonder of the poem is that divine power expresses itself as willing servitude to love.

GATHA 1384 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, fix on the One

मराठी मूळ

बहुत सोसिले मागें न कळतां । पुढती काय आतां अंध व्हावें ॥1॥
एकाचिये अंगीं हें ठेवावें लावून । नये भिन्न भिन्ना चांचपडो ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण होईल तो ब्रह्मांडचाळक । आपणें चि हाके देईल हाके ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिलीं चेतवूनि सुणीं । कौतुकावांचूनि नाहीं छळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have suffered much in the past through ignorance. Now, going forward, should I remain blind?

Fix your attention on the One alone; do not grope about among many different things.

The one who moves the entire cosmos will Himself respond when called.

Says Tuka, He has roused the hounds and set them running. Without the sport of it, there is no tormenting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have suffered much in the past, not knowing better. Should I stay blind from here on? Fix yourself on the One alone. Do not go groping among many separate things. The one who turns the whole universe will himself answer when you call him. Tuka says: he has roused the hounds and set them running. Without his play, there is no torment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back on a life of suffering caused by ignorance and refuses to repeat it going forward. The remedy he names is single-pointedness: rest your attention on the one God rather than scattering it among many divided objects and concerns. He trusts that the very power that moves the cosmos will personally respond to a call, so the seeker is not abandoned. The closing image is harder: the hardships that chase us are themselves set in motion by God, like hounds loosed by their master. The point for self-examination is that even the torment is part of his sport, so it can be borne by turning to him rather than fleeing it.

GATHA 1385 The Nature of God

The nature of God, wonder at the play

मराठी मूळ

आश्चर्य या वाटे नसत्या छंदाचें । कैसें दिलें साचें करोनियां ॥1॥
दुजियासी तंव अकळ हा भाव । करावा तो जीव साक्ष येथें ॥ध्रु.॥
एकीं अनेकत्व अनेकीं एकत्व । प्रकृतिस्वभाव प्रमाणें चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करूं उगवूं जाणसी । कुशळ येविशीं तुह्मी देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am filled with wonder at this play and how You have made it so convincingly real.

This devotion is unfathomable to another; here, the jiva itself stands as witness.

In the One You show the many, and in the many You show the One, each according to its own nature.

Says Tuka, You know how to create and how to resolve. In this, O God, You are supremely skillful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am full of wonder at this strange game. How have you made it feel so truly real? To anyone else this devotion is beyond grasp; here the living soul itself stands as the witness. In the One you show the many; in the many you show the One, each according to its own nature. Tuka says: you know how to set the knot and how to undo it. In this, O God, you are the skillful one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is gazing at creation as a deliberate play and is astonished at how convincing the illusion is. He admits that this inner devotion cannot be proved to an outsider; the only witness to it is the soul that actually lives it. He sees God working both ways at once, hiding the many inside the One and revealing the One inside the many, fitting each form to its own nature. The closing image is of a knot: God alone knows how to tie up the world in apparent bondage and how to loosen it again. The poem rests in trust that the same hand that bound the soul is skillful enough to free it.

GATHA 1386 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, no setting, only dawn

मराठी मूळ

अस्त नाहीं आतां एक चि मोहोरा । पासूनि अंधारा दुरि जालों ॥1॥
साक्षत्वें या जालों गुणाचा देखणा । करीं नारायणा तरी खरें ॥ध्रु.॥
आठवें विसरु पडियेला मागें । आलें तें चि भागें यत्न केलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा विनोद देवासी । आह्मी तुह्मां ऐसीं दोन्ही नव्हों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now there is no setting; one single dawn remains, for I have left darkness far behind.

Through witnesshood, I have become the seer of all qualities. O Narayana, make this real.

Remembrance and forgetfulness have both been left behind; whatever came by destiny was accomplished through effort.

Says Tuka, my playfulness is with God alone. We are not two; there is no such division between us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now there is no sunset, only one single dawn. I have left the darkness far behind. As witness, I have become the one who sees all the qualities. O Narayana, make this true. Remembering and forgetting are both left behind me. Whatever came by my lot was carried through by effort. Tuka says: my play is with God alone. We two are not two; there is no such division between us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a settled state where the alternation of light and dark has ended and only an unbroken dawn remains. He has taken the standpoint of the witness, the one who watches all the changing qualities without being caught in them, and he asks Narayana to seal this as real and lasting. The pairs that used to move him, remembering and forgetting, have fallen away behind him, and what destiny brought he met with his own striving. The closing line lands the claim: his delight is with God alone, and the apparent two of devotee and Lord are not actually two. The verse stands in nondual joy without erasing the loving address.

GATHA 1387 The Nature of God

The nature of God, mine is the reckoning

मराठी मूळ

क्षर अक्षर हे तुमचे विभाग । कासयानें जग दुरी धरा ॥1॥
तैसे आह्मी नेणों पालटों च कांहीं । त्यागिल्याची नाहीं मागें चाड ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रतिपादिता तूं समविषमाचा । प्रसाद तो याचा पापपुण्य ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मां नाना अवगणीं । लागे संपादणी लटिक्याची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The kshara and the akshara, the perishable and the imperishable, are Your own divisions. Why, then, do You hold the world at a distance?

We, for our part, know nothing of changing. We have no longing for what has been renounced.

You are the one who governs the balance of good and evil; merit and sin are Your own dispensation.

Says Tuka, You endure all manner of slights, yet the reckoning with falsehood remains Yours alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The perishable and the imperishable are both your own divisions. So why do you hold the world at arm's length? As for us, we know nothing of changing. We have no craving left for what we gave up. You are the one who balances the even and the uneven. Merit and sin are your own dispensing. Tuka says: you put up with every kind of slight, yet the settling of accounts with falsehood is still yours to do.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is arguing gently with God about who owns the world's flaws. The whole division into perishable and imperishable is God's own arrangement, so he asks why God then keeps the world at a distance as if it were foreign to him. The devotee, for his part, no longer changes sides or hankers after what he renounced, so the instability is not on his end. Since God himself apportions merit and sin and holds the scale of even and uneven, the responsibility runs back to him. The closing point is that God endures countless slights patiently, but the final reckoning with falsehood is still his own work to carry out, not the devotee's burden to fear.

GATHA 1388 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, Hari the only kinsman

मराठी मूळ

सर्वरसीं मीनलें चित्त । अखंडित आनंदु ॥1॥
गोत पति विश्वंभरीं । जाला हरि सोयरा ॥ध्रु.॥
वोळखी ते एका नांवें । इतरभावें खंडणा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नांवें रूपें । दुसरीं पापें हारपलीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The chitta has merged with the essence of all things, and unbroken joy prevails.

Hari has become the true kinsman, the friend and lord of all.

Recognition comes through one Name alone; every other mode of perception is dissolved.

Says Tuka, through that Name and that form, all remaining sins are burned away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind has merged into the essence of all things, and the joy never breaks. Hari, who fills all worlds, has become my kinsman, my lord, my friend. Recognition comes through one Name alone. Every other way of seeing is cut off. Tuka says: through that Name and that form, all my other sins have vanished.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting a state of unbroken bliss in which his mind has dissolved into the essence underlying everything. The God who pervades all worlds is no longer abstract to him; Hari has become family, the close kinsman and friend and lord. He says true recognition comes by the single Name, and once that holds, every other mode of perceiving falls away as unnecessary. The closing line names the fruit: the Name and the form it carries burn off whatever sins remained. The poem links absorption in God directly to the simple practice of the Name.

GATHA 1389 The Nature of God

Experience, the trouble of the I

मराठी मूळ

मीं हें ऐसें काय जाती । अवघड किती पाहातां ॥1॥
नाहीं होत उल्लंघन । नसतां भिन्न दुसरें ॥ध्रु.॥
अंधारानें तेज नेलें। दृष्टीखालें अंतर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सवें देव । घेतां ठाव दावील ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is this thing called "I"? How difficult does it seem when you examine it?

No transgression actually occurs when there is nothing separate in the first place.

Darkness has not carried away the light; the distance is only beneath one's own gaze.

Says Tuka, God is with you. If you take Him along, He will show you the way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is this thing I call I? See how hard it is when you look closely. There is no real crossing of any line, since there is nothing separate to begin with. Darkness has not carried off the light. The gap is only beneath your own gaze. Tuka says: God is right with you. Take him along, and he will show you the place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the question on the sense of self, which seems solid until it is examined and then proves hard to find. He argues that no real transgression or separation has occurred, because there was never a genuine second thing apart from God for the self to fall away from. The seeming darkness has not actually destroyed the light; the apparent distance lives only in the way one looks, not in reality. The remedy is not effort to bridge a gap but companionship: God is already present alongside you. If you simply take him with you, he himself will reveal the true ground where no separation was.

GATHA 1390 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow poet

मराठी मूळ

कवेश्वरांचा तो आह्मांसी विटाळ । प्रसाद वोंगळ चिवडिती ॥1॥
दंभाचे आवडी बहिराट अंधळे । सेवटासि काळें होइल तोंड ॥ध्रु.॥
सोन्यासेजारी तों लाखेची जतन । सतंत ते गुण जैसेतैसे ॥2॥
सेव्य सेववता न पडतां ठावी । तुका ह्मणे गोवी पावती हीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are disgusted by the so-called master poets. They chew over God's grace and spit it out as refuse.

Blind and outward-looking in their love of pretense, their faces will blacken in the end.

So long as gold is nearby, one must guard the lacquer carefully; the qualities of each remain what they are.

Says Tuka, when the served and the server do not recognize each other, both fall into confusion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These so-called master poets are a defilement to us. They chew over God's grace and spit it out as garbage. Deaf and blind in their love of show, their faces will turn black in the end. As long as gold is near it, the lacquer must be guarded with care; each keeps its own true worth. Tuka says: when the one to be served and the one who serves do not know each other, both fall into a tangle.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a pattern, the showy religious performer who handles holy things for display. Such people take God's grace and degrade it, turning what is sacred into refuse through their love of pretense and their deafness to its real meaning, and he warns that this ends in disgrace. The image of gold beside lacquer points to the danger of confusion: the cheap thing can be mistaken for the precious unless each is recognized for what it truly is. His closing point is mutual misrecognition: when the worshipper does not really know the God he claims to serve, both ends of the relationship collapse into muddle. The verse asks the listener to test whether his own devotion is real worth or only imitation shine.

GATHA 1391 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, rein the restless mind

मराठी मूळ

वाढलियां मान न मनावी निश्चती । भूतांचिये प्रीती भूतपण ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि मना लावावी कांचणी । इंद्रियांचे झणी ओढी भरे ॥ध्रु.॥
एका एकपणें एकाचिये अंगीं । लागे रंग रंगीं मिळलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव निष्काम निराळा । जीवदशे चाळा चळणांचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When honor increases, one should not take it for granted. Love for beings should grow from genuine kinship with them.

Therefore, rein in the mind, lest the rush of the senses suddenly overwhelm it.

Through oneness with the One, the color of the dye takes hold when one is truly immersed.

Says Tuka, God is desireless and apart; the restless churning is the very nature of the jiva-condition.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When honor grows, do not take it for certain. Let your love for beings come from true kinship with them. So rein in the mind, in case the pull of the senses suddenly floods it. Through oneness with the One, in the body of the one absorbed, the dye takes its color when the colors meet. Tuka says: God is desireless and apart. The restless churning belongs to the state of the living soul.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is setting out how a person should hold himself as he is honored and pulled by the world. Rising honor should not be trusted as secure, and love for others should grow from genuine fellow-feeling, not from advantage. The mind needs a steady rein, because the senses can surge and sweep it away in a moment. He uses the image of dye taking hold only when the cloth is truly soaked: real change of color comes only through full immersion in the One. The closing contrast is the heart of it, God is desireless and untouched, while all the restless agitation belongs to the soul caught in the living condition, so the work is to settle that agitation rather than blame God for it.

GATHA 1392 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, God as witness to truth

मराठी मूळ

माया साक्षी आह्मी नेणों भीड भार । आप आणि पर नाहीं दोन्ही ॥1॥
सत्याचिये साटीं अवघा चि भरे । नावडे व्यापार तुटीचा तो ॥ध्रु.॥
पोंभिाळता चरे अंतरींचें दुःख । लांसें फांसें मुख उघडावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नव्हे स्फीतीचा हा ठाव । निवाडएासी देव साक्षी केला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are witnesses of maya, without regard for obligation or burden. There is neither self nor other; both are gone.

For the sake of truth, everything is endured. The commerce of loss holds no appeal.

One who merely grazes on appearances while the suffering within persists must eventually open his mouth and reveal the truth.

Says Tuka, this is no place for arrogance. God has been made the witness for the final verdict.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are witnesses of maya. We carry no regard for who will be offended or pleased. There is no self and no other; both are gone. For the sake of truth, all of it is borne. The trade that ends in loss has no appeal to us. One who only nibbles at appearances while the pain inside stays alive must at last open his mouth and speak the truth. Tuka says: this is no place for swagger. God has been made the witness for the final verdict.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the stance of one who has seen through maya and so is freed from worrying about pleasing or offending anyone. For such a person the division of self and other has dropped away, and truth is held even when holding it costs dearly, since a bargain that ends in spiritual loss is no bargain at all. He warns against the half-measure of grazing on surfaces while the real inner suffering goes untreated; sooner or later that hidden pain forces the truth out into the open. The closing point is that this whole matter leaves no room for boasting or pretense. The seeker has called God himself as the witness to the final reckoning, which means the only thing that counts is what is true before God, not what looks good before people.

GATHA 1393 The Saints

Adoration, the saint conquers Time

मराठी मूळ

संतां आवडे तो काळाचा ही काळ । समर्थाचें बाळ जेवीं समर्थ ॥1॥
परिसतां तेथें नाहीं एकविणें । मोहें न पवे सीण ऐसें राखे ॥ध्रु.॥
केले अन्याय ते सांडवी उपचारें । न देखें दुसरें नासा मूळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मुख्य कल्पतरुछाया । काय नाहीं दया तये ठायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who is loved by the saints becomes the conqueror even of Time, just as the child of a mighty one is mighty. In listening to him, there is no weariness; he guards against the suffering of attachment.

He causes others to abandon their wrongdoings through loving remedy, without seeing them as something to be destroyed at the root. Says Tuka, his very presence is the shadow of the wish-fulfilling tree. What compassion is not found there?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one the saints love conquers even Time, even death itself. He is mighty the way the child of a mighty one is mighty. Listen to him and there is no weariness; he guards you so the ache of attachment cannot reach you. He undoes your wrongs with gentle care. He does not look at you as something to be torn out by the root. Tuka says: his presence is the shade of the wish-granting tree. What kindness is not found there?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the saint by naming what nearness to him does. Because the saints love such a one, he stands above Time and death, sharing their strength the way a child shares a great parent's. To sit and listen to him is rest, not effort, and his guarding keeps the grief of attachment from touching you. The key is how he corrects: he heals a person's wrongdoing with patient care rather than condemning the person as something to be destroyed. So Tukaram calls him the shade of the kalpataru, the wish-granting tree, where every mercy is already present.

GATHA 1394 The Saints

The saints' rebuke, guard the root

मराठी मूळ

संतांच्या धीकारें अमंगळ जिणें । विश्वशत्रु तेणें सांडी परि ॥1॥
कुळ आणि रूप वांयां संवसार । गेला भरतार मोकलितां ॥ध्रु.॥
मूळ राखे तया फळा काय उणें । चतुर लक्षणें राखों जाणे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सायास तो एके ठायीं । दीप हातीं तई अवघें बरें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the reproach of the saints, the inauspicious life and its enmity with the world are abandoned. Family, beauty, and worldly life are all in vain once the Lord is released from them.

He who guards the root lacks nothing in the fruit; the discerning one knows how to preserve what matters. Says Tuka, let all effort be concentrated in one place. With a lamp in hand, everything becomes clear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the saints rebuke you, and the foul, hostile life is dropped. Family, beauty, the whole round of the world, all of it is wasted once you let go of the Lord. Guard the root, and the fruit will lack nothing. The wise one knows how to keep what matters. Tuka says: gather all your effort into one place. With a lamp in your hand, everything is well.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that being scolded by the saints is a gift, because their reproach is what makes a person abandon a low and quarrelsome life. He then weighs what is worth keeping: lineage, good looks, and all worldly business are thrown away the moment you lose hold of the Lord, who is the real treasure. The teaching turns on the root and the fruit; tend the source and nothing downstream falls short, and the discerning person knows to protect that source above all. So concentrate every effort in one place, on God, for with that one lamp in hand everything else becomes clear.

GATHA 1395 Faith and Trust

Faith, practice splits the rock

मराठी मूळ

ओलें मूळ भेदी खडकाचें अंग । आभ्यासासी सांग कार्यसिद्ध ॥1॥
नव्हे ऐसें कांहीं नाहीं अवघड । नाहीं कईवाड तोंच वरि ॥ध्रु.॥
दोरें चिरा कापे पडिला कांचणी । अभ्यासें सेवनीं विष पडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कैंचा बैसण्यासी ठाव । जठरीं बाळा वाव एकाएकीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A tender root can split solid rock; sustained practice leads to the fulfillment of any task. There is nothing that cannot be done; only until the doing is lacking does it seem impossible.

A rope can cut through stone when drawn back and forth patiently, and through habitual intake, even poison is tolerated. Says Tuka, where was there room for the child to sit, and yet within the womb, space was made all at once?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A tender root splits the body of solid rock. With steady practice, any task is carried through. Nothing is so hard that it cannot be done; it only looks impossible while you have not begun. A rope drawn back and forth saws through stone. By habit, even poison can be taken. Tuka says: where was there room for the child to sit? Yet inside the womb, space was made all at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching the power of sustained practice over what looks impossible. A soft root breaking open hard rock, a rope wearing a groove in stone, the body slowly learning to tolerate poison: each shows that patience and repetition accomplish what force cannot. He points out that things seem impossible only until you actually begin; the difficulty lives in the not-doing. The closing image of the unborn child, given room in the womb where there seemed to be none, says the same thing: what looks like no room and no way is provided for once the work is truly under way.

GATHA 1396 The Nature of God

Nondual reassurance, you are deathless

मराठी मूळ

अमर आहां अमर आहां । खरें कीं पाहा खोटें हें ॥1॥
न ह्मणां देह माझा ऐसा । मग भरवसा कळेल ॥ध्रु.॥
कैंचा धाक कैंचा धाक । सकिळक हें आपुलें ॥2॥
देव चि बरे देव चि बरे । तुका ह्मणे खरे तुह्मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are immortal, you are immortal. See whether this is true or false.

Simply stop saying 'this body is mine,' and then certainty will dawn. What fear is there? Everything belongs to you.

Says Tuka, God alone is good, God alone is good. You are the real ones.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are immortal, you are immortal. Look and see whether this is true or false. Just stop saying "this body is mine," and then the certainty will dawn in you. What is there to fear? What is there to fear? All of it is your own. God alone is good, God alone is good. Tuka says: you are the real one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is speaking straight to the listener, telling them their true nature is deathless. He does not ask for belief; he asks them to test the claim for themselves. The one thing that blocks the certainty is the habit of calling the body "mine," so he says simply drop that, and the knowing arises. Once you no longer take yourself to be the body, fear has nothing to stand on, because everything already belongs to you. Tuka closes by saying God alone is real, and that this same reality is what you yourself are.

GATHA 1397 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, empty and free

मराठी मूळ

काम नाहीं काम नाहीं । जालों पाहीं रिकामा ॥1॥
फावल्या या करूं चेष्टा । निश्चळ दृष्टा बैसोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
नसत्या छंदें नसत्या छंदें । जग विनोदें वि†हडतसे ॥2॥
एकाएकीं एकाएकीं । तुका लोकीं निराळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no work left, no work at all. I have become entirely empty and free.

Whatever playful movements arise, I watch them as a still witness. The world wanders about in needless pursuits, amusing itself with fabricated diversions.

Says Tuka, in the midst of all people, I remain alone and apart, one with the One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no work, no work at all. Look, I have become empty. Whatever moves happen now, I do them lightly, sitting still as a witness. With useless fashions, useless fads, the world wanders about amusing itself. Alone, utterly alone, Tuka stands apart among all people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the state of one for whom doing has ended. Nothing is left that he must accomplish, so he is emptied and free, and whatever actions still pass through him he performs lightly while resting as the unmoving witness behind them. From that stillness he sees the world for what it is: people wandering through made-up pursuits and passing fancies, entertaining themselves. So he stands alone in the midst of everyone, not isolated but inwardly apart, one with the One while others chase diversions.

GATHA 1398 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, dragging the body to the pyre

मराठी मूळ

हातीं घेऊनियां काठी । तुका लागला किळवरा पाठी ॥1॥
नेऊनि निजविलें स्मशानीं । माणसें जाळी ते ठाकणीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काडिलें तें ओढें । मागील उपचाराचें पुढें ॥2॥
नाहीं वाटों आला भेव । सुख दुःख भोगिता देव ॥3॥
याजसाटीं हें निर्वाण । केलें कसियेलें मन ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अनुभव बरा । नाहीं तरी सास्त होय चोरा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Taking a stick in hand, Tuka went after the corpse.

He carried it to the cremation ground, the very place where human bodies are burned.

What had been dragged along from past habits was now pulled out and thrown before him.

No fear arose; it is God who experiences both joy and sorrow.

For this purpose alone this extinction was made, and the mind was put to the test.

Says Tuka, experience is good. Without it, one becomes a slave to the thief.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stick in hand, Tuka went chasing the body down. He carried it off and laid it to rest in the cremation ground, the place where bodies are burned. What had been dragged along from old habits, he pulled out and threw down before him. No fear came. It is God who undergoes both joy and sorrow. For just this, he brought the end about and put the mind to the test. Tuka says: experience is good. Without it, you stay a slave to the thief.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram dramatizes the killing of body-identification. He pictures himself hunting down his own corpse-like attachment to the body and carrying it to the cremation ground, the only fit place for what is dead. The leftover pulls of old habit he drags out and casts before him too. No fear comes, because he has seen that pleasure and pain are God's to undergo, not his; for exactly this realization he forced the matter to its end and tested his own mind. The closing line names the lesson: real, tested experience is what frees you, and without it you remain in bondage to the thief, the deceiving sense of "I am the body."

GATHA 1399 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, kirtan dissolves the body

मराठी मूळ

कीर्तन चांग कीर्तन चांग । होय अंग हरिरूप ॥1॥
प्रेमाछंदें नाचे डोले । हारपला देहभाव ॥ध्रु.॥
एकदेशीं जीवकळा। हा सकळां सोयरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उरला देव । गेला भेव त्या काळें ॥3॥
एका तुमच्या नामाविण । अवघा सीण कळतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
संकल्पाचे ओढी मन । पापपुण्य सम चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायणीं । पावो वाणी विसांवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Kirtan is beautiful, kirtan is beautiful; through it, the body becomes Hari's very form.

Dancing and swaying in the ecstasy of love, body-identification dissolves.

Even this one fragment of the jiva is intimate kin to all.

Says Tuka, only God remains; fear departed in that very moment.

Apart from Your Name alone, all else is felt as weariness.

The mind is drawn along by its own intentions; merit and sin become equal.

Says Tuka, may my voice find rest in Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Kirtan is good, kirtan is good; in it the body becomes Hari's own form. Dancing, swaying in the rapture of love, the sense of being a body is lost. This single spark of life is the close kin of all. Tuka says: only God remained; in that moment fear was gone. Apart from Your Name alone, everything is felt as weariness. The mind is dragged along by its own plans; then merit and sin are the same. Tuka says: let my voice come to rest in Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising kirtan, the singing of God's name, as the thing that does the work. In the dancing and swaying of love the body itself takes on Hari's form and the gripping sense of "I am this body" falls away. From there he sees the small flame of life in him as kin to every other living thing. When only God is left, fear leaves with the self that feared. The second movement adds the contrast: everything that is not the Name feels like fatigue, and the mind, towed about by its own schemes, makes no real difference between good deeds and bad. So he asks only that his speech come to rest in Narayana.

GATHA 1400 Worldly Life

Worldly life, renunciation brings peace

मराठी मूळ

प्रारब्धा हातीं जन । सुख सीण पावतसे ॥1॥
करितां घाईळाचा संग । अंगें अंग माखावें ॥ध्रु.॥
आविसा अंगें पीडा वसे । त्यागें असे बहु सुख ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव भ्याला । अवघ्या आला बाहेरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

People are in the hands of destiny, experiencing joy and weariness accordingly.

By keeping company with the afflicted, one's own body gets stained.

Craving makes affliction cling to the body; in renunciation there is great happiness.

Says Tuka, the jiva grew afraid and came out of all of it entirely.

IN PLAIN WORDS

People are in the hands of their destiny, and so they meet joy and weariness. Keep company with the soiled, and your own body gets smeared. Where there is craving, suffering clings to the body. In letting go there is great happiness. Tuka says: the soul took fright and came out of all of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is contrasting bondage to the world with the relief of letting go. Driven by their past karma, people are tossed between pleasure and pain with no say in it. He warns that staying close to what defiles smears you the way handling something dirty stains the hands. The root is craving: where it lives, affliction sticks to the body, while renunciation brings a deep ease. So he says the jiva, frightened by the whole tangle, simply withdrew and came out of it altogether.

GATHA 1401 The Moral Ideal

Moral discipline, self-examination

मराठी मूळ

आशा ते करविते बुद्धीचा लोप । संदेह तें पाप कैसें नव्हे ॥1॥
आपला आपण करावा विचार । प्रसन्न तें सार मन गोही ॥ध्रु.॥
नांवें रूपें अंगीं लाविला विटाळ । होतें त्या निर्मळ शुद्ध बुद्ध ॥2॥
अंधळ्यानें नये देखण्याची चाली । चालों ऐसी बोली तुका बोले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Desire is what brings about the obliteration of buddhi. How can doubt be anything other than transgression?

One should examine oneself carefully; a serene and contented mind is the true essence.

Through name and form, defilement has been imposed upon that which was originally spotless, pure awareness.

Says Tuka, the blind cannot walk the path of those who see.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Desire is what wipes out the intellect. And how is doubt anything but sin? Examine yourself, by yourself; a calm and contented mind is the real witness and the heart of it. Through name and form, defilement has been smeared onto what was spotless, pure awareness. Tuka says: the blind cannot walk the way of those who see.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing to the inner work that real discipline requires. He names desire as the thing that destroys clear understanding, and treats nagging doubt as a kind of sin, since it corrodes faith. The remedy is honest self-examination, and the sign that you are on track is a serene, contented mind, which is itself the inner witness and the essence of the matter. What looked like impurity was never in the awareness itself; it was smeared onto a spotless, pure consciousness by the play of name and form. The closing line cautions that one who is inwardly blind cannot simply imitate the path of those who actually see.

GATHA 1402 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the nameless formless joy

मराठी मूळ

जळो आतां नांव रूप । माझें पाप गांठींचें ॥1॥
संतांचिया चरणरजें । उतरूं ओझें मातीचें ॥ध्रु.॥
लटिकियाचा अभिमान । होता सीण पावित ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अरूपींचें । सुख साचें निनांवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let name and form burn now. The sin knotted within me must go.

By the dust of the saints' feet, I shall cast off this earthly burden.

False pride was bringing me weariness.

Says Tuka, the true happiness is that of the Formless, the nameless joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let name and form burn now. Let this sin knotted inside me go. By the dust of the saints' feet I will set down this burden of earth. False pride was only bringing me weariness. Tuka says: the true happiness is the Formless one, the nameless joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is surrendering the very things he had clung to as himself. He asks that name and form be burned away, along with the sin he has carried bound up within. The means he names is humble: by the dust of the saints' feet he will lay down the heavy load of his bodily, earthly self. He confesses that the pride built on a false self only wore him out. What remains, and what he calls the only true happiness, is the formless, nameless joy of God, which has no name and no shape to lose.

GATHA 1403 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow ascetic

मराठी मूळ

निंदा स्तुती करवी पोट । सोंग दाखवी बोभाट ॥1॥
जटा राख विटंबना । धीर नाहीं क्षमा मना ॥ध्रु.॥
शृंगारिलें मढें । जीवेंविण जैसें कुडें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रागें । भलतें चावळे वाउगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The belly alone drives one to slander and to praise. All outward display and loud protestations are for show.

Matted hair, ash, and self-mortification are useless without patience and forgiveness in the mind.

A corpse, hollow through and through, no matter how it is adorned.

Says Tuka, it is in anger that he speaks: this one prattles on, to no purpose at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is the belly that makes a man slander and flatter. His whole act, his loud noise, is only for show. Matted hair, smeared ash, self-torture: useless, when there is no patience and no forgiveness in the mind. He is a corpse dressed up, hollow without life inside. Tuka says: in his anger he prattles on, saying any nonsense, all of it pointless.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking the pattern of showy religion practiced for the stomach's sake. Hunger and gain are what drive a man to flatter some and slander others, and his loud display is a performance, not devotion. The outward marks of an ascetic, matted hair, ash, harsh penance, are worthless when the inner qualities of patience and forgiveness are missing. Such a person is a dressed-up corpse, decorated on the outside but empty of real life within. The closing line shows the emptiness in action: stung and angry, he just rattles off whatever comes, to no purpose. The warning is meant to turn the listener toward examining their own motives, not toward contempt.

GATHA 1404 True Worship

True worship, cling firmly to His feet

मराठी मूळ

भिक्ष्यापत्र अवलंबणें । जळो जिणें लाजिरवाणें । ऐसियासी नारायणें । उपेक्षीजे सर्वथा ॥1॥
देवा पायीं नाहीं भाव। भक्ति वरी वरी वाव । समपिनला जीव । नाहीं तो हा व्यभिचार ॥ध्रु.॥
जगा घालावें सांकडें । दीन होऊनि बापुडें । हें चि अभाग्य रोकडें । मूळ आणि विश्वास ॥2॥
काय न करी विश्वंभर । सत्य करितां निर्धार । तुका ह्मणे सार । दृढ पाय धरावे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To go on relying on letters of recommendation and to live a shameful, dependent life: Narayana must surely forsake such a one.

If there is no true devotion at God's feet, all outward show of faith is faithlessness, a betrayal; it is false to claim one has surrendered the jiva.

To burden the world by becoming a pitiful beggar: this is misfortune manifest, undermining both the root and the trust.

What will the All-sustainer not do for one who is truly resolute? Says Tuka, the essence is this: cling firmly to His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To keep leaning on letters of recommendation, to live a shameful, dependent life: let such a life burn. Narayana is bound to forsake a man like that. If there is no love at God's feet, then all the show of devotion on the surface is empty. To claim you have offered up your life when you have not is a betrayal. To burden the world, turning beggar and acting pitiful: this is misfortune laid bare, and it eats away the root and the trust. What will the All-sustainer not do for the one who is truly resolute? Tuka says: this is the heart of it. Hold firmly to His feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing the line between dependence on the world and true reliance on God. He scorns the life that survives by trading on recommendations and pity, and says God himself turns away from such a person. Real devotion lives at God's feet, in love; without that inner ground, all visible piety is hollow, and to claim you have surrendered your life when you have not is a kind of betrayal. Going about as a pitiful beggar burdening others is not humility but plain misfortune that rots the very root of faith and trust. Against all that he sets the promise: there is nothing the All-sustainer will not do for one who is firmly resolved, so the whole of it comes down to holding fast to God's feet.

GATHA 1405 Faith and Trust

Faith, the Father's wealth

मराठी मूळ

भावबळें विष्णुदास । नाहीं नास पावत ॥1॥
योगभाग्यें घरा येती । सर्व शक्ति चालत ॥ध्रु.॥
पित्याचें जें काय धन । पुत्रा कोण वंचील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कडे बैसों । तेणें असों निर्भर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the strength of devotion, the servants of Vishnu are never destroyed.

By their yogic fortune, all powers come to their door.

Who would withhold a father's wealth from his own son?

Says Tuka, we sit upon His lap, and by that alone we are utterly secure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the strength of love, the servants of Vishnu are never destroyed. By their good fortune every power comes walking to their door. The father's wealth: who would withhold it from his own son? Tuka says: we sit on his lap, and by that we have nothing to fear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that devotion itself is the protection. The one who loves God is never undone; the powers that others chase come of their own accord to such a person's door. He frames it as inheritance: a son does not beg his father for what is already his, and no one can keep it from him. So the servant of Vishnu sits in God's lap like a child, and from that place fear simply does not reach him.

GATHA 1406 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow preacher

मराठी मूळ

कोरडएा गोठी चटक्या बोल । शिकल्या सांगे नाहीं ओल ॥1॥
कोण यांचें मना आणी । ऐकों कानीं नाइकोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
घरोघरीं सांगती ज्ञान । भूस सिणें कांडिती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आपुल्या मति । काय रितीं पोकळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dry lectures, clever quips, and learned recitations, all delivered without a drop of genuine feeling.

They do not truly hear with their own ears; one cannot bear to listen.

In every household they preach knowledge, yet all they are pounding is chaff and husk.

Says Tuka, following their own mati alone, they remain hollow and empty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dry talk, clever phrases, learned lines reeled off with no moisture in them. Who takes this to heart? You hear it with the ears, but you cannot really listen. House to house they preach knowledge, and all they pound is husk and chaff. Tuka says: trusting only their own cleverness, they stay empty.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a way of speaking, not putting down any one teacher. Words about God delivered with no living feeling are dry; clever recitation lands on the ear but never reaches the heart, so no one can truly take it in. He gives the sharp image of threshing husk: all the effort produces no grain, no real food. The warning turns inward too: when a person leans only on his own quick mind and skips the inward devotion, his teaching stays hollow.

GATHA 1407 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the seer settles

मराठी मूळ

नव्हतियाचा सोस होता । झडो आतां पदर ॥1॥
देखणें तें देखियेलें । आतां भलें सिाक्षत्वें ॥ध्रु.॥
लाभें कळों आली हानि । राहों दोन्हीं निराळीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एकाएकीं । हा कां लोकीं पसारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The yearning for what never existed has now ended; let that curtain finally drop.

What was to be seen has been seen. From now on, let witnesshood itself be the way of seeing.

Through gain, loss has been recognized; let them both stand apart.

Says Tuka, why then, in the midst of all people, is there still this display?

IN PLAIN WORDS

The craving for what was never real has ended; let that veil drop now. What was to be seen has been seen. From now, let it be enough just to witness. Through what I gained I came to know the loss; let the two stand apart. Tuka says: when it has all become one and clear, why is there still this show among people?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the quiet after seeing the truth. The old hunger for things that never had any substance is finished, so the screen that hid the real can fall away. Having truly seen, he no longer needs to grasp; he can simply stand as witness, holding gain and loss apart instead of being pulled by either. Then comes his honest puzzle: once everything has resolved into one, why does the world's display still go on at all?

GATHA 1408 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, peace held in the heart

मराठी मूळ

सोसें वाढे दोष । जाला न पालटे कस ॥1॥
ऐसें बरवें वचन । करितां तें नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
असे प्रारब्ध नेमें । श्रमुचि उरे श्रम ॥2॥
सुख देते शांती । तुका ह्मणे धरितां चित्तीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through endurance, faults only grow stronger; the tested character does not change.

But this is true: the right words, when spoken, become Narayana Himself.

Destiny keeps its appointed course, and effort only yields more effort.

Says Tuka, peace gives contentment to those who hold it steady in the chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Indulge a fault and it grows; once set, the grain of a man does not change. But this is true: speak the right word, and it becomes Narayana himself. Destiny holds to its fixed course, and effort only breeds more effort. Tuka says: peace gives contentment to the one who holds it steady in the heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets two hard facts beside one good one. A fault fed by indulgence only swells, and a settled character is slow to change; meanwhile destiny keeps its appointed course, and straining against it just produces more strain. The one thing that lifts this is speech rightly used: a true word does not stay mere sound, it becomes God present. So he points away from struggling to rearrange fate and toward holding peace in the heart, where contentment actually lives.

GATHA 1409 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the Name calls God running

मराठी मूळ

काय शरीरापें काम । कृपा साधावया प्रेम । उचिताचे धर्म । भागा आले ते करुं ॥1॥
देईन हाक नारायणा । तें तों नाकळे बंधना । पंढरीचा राणा । आइकोन धांवेल ॥ध्रु.॥
सातांपांचांचें गोठलें । प्रारब्धें आकारलें । आतां हें संचलें । असो भोगा सांभाळीं ॥2॥
फावली ते बरवी संधि । सावधान करुं बुद्धी । तुका ह्मणे मधीं । कोठें नेघें विसावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What need has the body to strain itself? Let the work be to win God's grace and love. Whatever duties destiny brings, let them be fulfilled.

I will call out to Narayana, for that call cannot be bound. The King of Pandhari will hear it and come running.

The elements and senses have gathered together, shaped by destiny. Let what has been accumulated serve the body's needs.

When a good opportunity comes, let us sharpen the buddhi. Says Tuka, do not stop for rest in the middle of the journey.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What work has the body to wear itself out with? Let the work be to win grace and love. Whatever duties fall to my share, those I will do. I will call out to Narayana, and that call cannot be bound by anything. The King of Pandhari will hear it and come running. The elements and senses have gathered, shaped by destiny; let what is gathered serve the body's needs. When a good chance comes, let me make my mind alert. Tuka says: do not stop anywhere along the way to rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is dividing labor between body and soul. The body need not be driven hard; the real task is to win God's grace and love, while the ordinary duties destiny assigns get done in their turn. His one sure method is to call out the Name, because that cry cannot be held or stopped, and the King of Pandhari hears it and comes running. The body, made of elements and senses by destiny, is left to its own upkeep, while he keeps his mind awake and refuses to halt for rest before the journey is done.

GATHA 1410 True Worship

True worship, the steady mind

मराठी मूळ

न लगे देशकाळ । मंत्रविधानें सकळ । मनें चि निश्चळ । करूनि करुणा भाकावी ॥1॥
येतो बैसलिया ठाया । आसणें व्यापी देवराया । निर्मळ ते काया । अधिष्ठान तयाचें ॥ध्रु.॥
कल्पनेचा साक्षी । तरि आदरें चि लक्षी । आवडीनें भक्षी । कोरडें धान्य मटमटां ॥2॥
घेणें तरि भाव । लक्षी दासांचा उपाव। तुका ह्मणे जीव । जीवीं मेळविल अनंत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No special time, place, or ritual is needed. Simply make the mind steady and cry out to God.

He comes to wherever you are seated; the Lord pervades all. A clean body is His dwelling place.

If He is the witness of all thought, then He watches with great eagerness, eagerly chewing even dry grain. What He wants is pure devotion.

He watches for the ways of His servants. Says Tuka, Ananta will unite the jiva within the jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No special time, no place, no ritual is needed. Just make the mind itself still and cry out for mercy. He comes to wherever you are sitting; the Lord fills every place. A clean body is his seat. He is the witness of every thought, so he watches you closely, and he eats even dry grain with delight; what he takes is your love. He watches for the ways of his servants. Tuka says: Ananta joins the life within the life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips worship down to its core. You do not need the right hour or shrine or rite; you need a still mind and an honest cry for mercy, and God, who pervades everything, arrives wherever you are seated, making a pure body his throne. Because he witnesses every thought, the outward offering hardly matters: he will gladly accept even plain dry grain, since what he is really after is the devotion behind it. Attentive to his servants' efforts, the Infinite then unites soul to soul, life within life.

GATHA 1411 Longing and Separation

Longing, beyond mere knowledge

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं आलें भक्तिसुख अनुभवा । तो मी ज्ञान देवा काय करूं ॥1॥
नसावें जी तुह्मी कांहीं निंश्चतीनें । माझिया वचनें अभेदाच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
एकाएकीं मन नेदी समाधान । देखिल्या चरण वांचूनियां ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have not yet tasted the bliss of devotion in my own experience. Of what use then is mere knowledge, O God?

O Lord, do not rest content with my words about non-duality.

The mind will not find peace until it has seen Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The bliss of devotion has not yet come into my own experience. So what shall I do with knowledge, my God? Lord, do not be satisfied with my words about non-duality. My mind will not be at peace until it has seen your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing to settle for the idea of God in place of God. He admits he has not yet tasted devotion as living experience, and so abstract knowledge is of no use to him. He even warns the Lord not to be content with his own talk of non-duality, as if correct doctrine could stand in for the real meeting. Nothing will quiet his mind, he says, except actually seeing God's feet; the longing is for presence, not for a finished thought about it.

GATHA 1412 Longing and Separation

Bold love, claiming the share

मराठी मूळ

मागतां विभाग । कोठें लपाल जी मग ॥1॥
संत साक्षी या वचना । त्यांसी ठाउकिया खुणा ॥ध्रु.॥
होइन धरणेकरी। मग मी रिघों नेदीं बाहेरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी अक्षर । तुज देवपणाचा भार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I come to claim my share, where will You hide?

The saints are witnesses to these words; they know the secret signs.

I will sit in protest and not let You out.

Says Tuka, I am the imperishable one, and the burden of Your Godhood rests on You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I come to claim my share, where will you hide then? The saints are witness to these words; they know the secret signs. I will sit at your door in protest and not let you slip out. Tuka says: I am the imperishable one, and the burden of being God rests on you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his claim on God like a creditor with a rightful debt. He insists he has a share owed to him and asks where God could possibly hide once he comes to collect, with the saints standing as witnesses who know the secret marks of this bond. He threatens a sit-in at the door, refusing to let God escape until the claim is met. His closing turn is daring: the devotee is the deathless self, while the very work of being God, of answering and providing, is laid squarely on God's own shoulders.

GATHA 1413 Prayers

Prayer, the work handed back

मराठी मूळ

मिटवण्याचे धनी । तुम्ही वेवसाय जनीं ॥1॥
कोण पडे ये लिगाडीं । केली तैसीं उगवा कोडीं ॥ध्रु.॥
केलें सांगितलें काम । दिले पाळूनियां धर्म ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां । असो तुमचें तुमचे माथां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the master of all that is to be erased, the one who wipes the ledger clean.

Who else would take on this burden? Solve the puzzles You have created.

The work assigned has been done; the dharma has been followed faithfully.

Says Tuka, now let whatever is Yours remain upon Your own head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the master who wipes the ledger clean. That is your trade among people. Who else would fall into this tangle? Untie the knots you yourself made. The work you told me to do is done; the dharma has been kept faithfully. Tuka says: now let what is yours rest upon your own head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram returns responsibility to God after doing his own part. He addresses God as the one whose business it is to erase debts and clear accounts, and asks who else would step into such a tangle; the knots, after all, are God's own making, so let God undo them. For his side, he has done the work he was given and kept the dharma faithfully. So he sets the rest down where it belongs: whatever remains is God's, and it should rest on God's head, not the servant's.

GATHA 1414 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the unbroken stream

मराठी मूळ

समपिनली वाणी । पांडुरंगीं घेते धणी ॥1॥
पूजा होते मुक्ताफळीं । रस ओविया मंगळीं ॥ध्रु.॥
धार अखंडित । ओघ चालियेला नित ॥2॥
पूर्णाहुति जीवें । तुका घेऊनि ठेला भावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My voice has been surrendered to Panduranga and takes its fill there.

Worship is offered through the fruit of liberation; the sweet essence flows through auspicious verses.

The stream of devotion runs unbroken and continuous.

Says Tuka, with the jiva as the final offering, I remain held fast by bhava.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My voice is surrendered to Panduranga and takes its fill there. The worship is made with the fruit of liberation; the sweet essence flows through the auspicious verses. The stream runs unbroken, the current moves on always. With the very life as the final offering, Tuka stands held fast by love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes worship that has become continuous and whole. He has given his voice over to Panduranga, and there it is satisfied; his offering is made with the fruit of liberation, and devotion's sweetness pours out through his sacred verses. He likens it to a stream that never breaks, a current always flowing. As in a fire-rite, the closing oblation is his own life itself, and having made it he simply stands, held in place by love.

GATHA 1415 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one imperishable thing

मराठी मूळ

अवघा चि आकार ग्रासियेला काळें । एक चि निराळें हरिचें नाम ॥1॥
धरूनि राहिलों अविनाश कंठीं । जीवन हें पोटीं सांटविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीरसंपित्त मृगजळभान । जाईल नासोन खरें नव्हे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां उपाधीच्या नांवें । आणियेला देवें वीट मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All form has been devoured by Time. Only Hari's Name stands apart, imperishable.

I have lodged the indestructible one at my throat and stored this life-giving treasure within my belly.

Bodily wealth is a mirage; it will perish, for it was never real.

Says Tuka, God Himself has filled me with disgust for all worldly concerns.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every form has been swallowed by Time. Only Hari's Name stands apart, never destroyed. I have kept the deathless one held at my throat and stored this life within my belly. Bodily wealth is a mirage; it will perish, for it was never real. Tuka says: now God himself has filled me with disgust for every worldly thing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs what survives against what does not. Time devours every shape and form; the single thing it cannot touch is the Name of Hari, which stands apart, imperishable. So he keeps that deathless Name at his throat and stores it within him as his real life, while he sees bodily wealth for what it is, a mirage bound to vanish because it was never solid to begin with. He adds that this clarity is itself God's gift: God has turned him away, filling him with distaste for all worldly concern.

GATHA 1416 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the one resolve

मराठी मूळ

बोलणें चि नाहीं । आतां देवाविण कांहीं ॥1॥
एकसरें केला नेम । देवा दिले क्रोध काम ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहेन ते पाय । जोंवरि हे दृष्ट धाय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मनें । हे चि संकल्प वाहाणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is nothing left to speak of now besides God.

I have made a firm resolve and given my lust and anger over to God.

I will gaze upon those feet until these eyes are satisfied.

Says Tuka, this is the one sankalpa the mind holds, the only resolve it carries.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is nothing left to speak of now except God. In one stroke I made my vow: I have handed my anger and my lust over to God. I will gaze at those feet until these eyes are filled. Tuka says: in the mind, this is the one resolve it carries.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a clean, total turn toward God. There is nothing else worth speaking of now; in a single decisive vow he hands over the two forces that usually drive a person, anger and lust, giving them to God rather than fighting them alone. What he keeps for himself is one act: to gaze at God's feet until his eyes are satisfied. He ends by saying this is now the mind's single resolve, the only intention it still holds.

GATHA 1417 The Necessity of Experience

The one foundation, unshaking ground

मराठी मूळ

येथूनियां ठाव । अवघे लक्षायाचे भाव ॥1॥
उंची देवाचे चरण । तेथें जालें अधिष्ठान ॥ध्रु.॥
आघातावेगळा । असे ठाव हा निराळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्थळ । धरूनि राहिलों अचळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From this place onward, all aims and intentions become clear.

The feet of God are the highest point; that is where my foundation has been established.

This place is free from all assault, standing wholly apart.

Says Tuka, I have taken my stand in this unshaking place and will not be moved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From this place onward, every aim of mine becomes clear. The feet of God are the highest point. That is where my foundation now stands. This place is free from any blow. It stands wholly apart. Tuka says: I have taken hold of this place and stay here, unmoved.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the single spot from which everything else falls into place. He fixes his foundation on God's feet, calling them the highest point a person can reach. Because that ground is set above every striving, no blow of the world can land on it; it stands apart from harm. So he plants himself there and refuses to be moved, treating the feet not as one support among many but as the one place that holds.

GATHA 1418 Worldly Life

Karma's crowded market, the bond that breaks

मराठी मूळ

भरला दिसे हाट । अवघी वाढली खटपट । संचिताचे वाट । वाटाऊनि फांकती ॥1॥
भोगा ऐसे ठायाठाव । कर्मा त्रिविधाचे भाव । द्रष्टा येथें देव । विरहित संकल्पा ॥ध्रु.॥
दिला पाडूनियां धडा । पापपुण्यांचा निवाडा । आचरती गोडा । आचरणें आपुलाल्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पराधीनें । जालीं ओढलिया ऋणें । तुटती बंधनें । जरि देवा आळविते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The marketplace of life appears crowded, and complication has only increased. The roads of accumulated karma diverge and scatter in all directions.

People experience their three kinds of karma according to their station. God alone is the witness here, free of all sankalpa.

The account of merit and sin has been settled clearly. Each one follows their own sweet way of conduct.

Says Tuka, those who are not their own masters are carried along by what has accumulated. The bonds will break only when God is called upon.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The market of life looks full, and the struggle has only grown. The roads of stored-up karma split and scatter every way. People taste their three kinds of karma, each by his station. God alone is the witness here, with no plan of his own. The account of sin and merit has been settled clearly. Each one walks his own sweet way of conduct. Tuka says: those who are not their own masters are dragged along by what they have piled up. The bonds break only when God is called.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at human life as a busy marketplace where stored karma fans out into countless paths and pulls each person along. He insists no one is freely choosing: people merely undergo the fruit of past deeds according to their station, while God stands by as a witness who imposes nothing of his own. The ledger of sin and merit is already closed, so each follows his fixed way and calls it sweet. The stakes are bondage, and Tukaram names the one exit: the chains snap only when God is called upon, not by managing one's own accounts.

GATHA 1419 Prayers

Prayer, the mind kept at the feet

मराठी मूळ

आला भागासी तो करीं वेवसाव । परि राहो भाव तुझ्या पायीं ॥1॥
काय चाले तुह्मीं बांधलें दातारा । वाहिलिया भारा उसंतितों ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीर तें करी शरीराचे धर्म । नको देऊं वर्म चुकों मना ॥2॥
चळण फिरवी ठाव बहुवस । न घडो आळस चिंतनाचा ॥3॥
इंद्रियें करोत आपुले व्यापार । आवडीसी थार देई पायीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नको देऊं काळा हातीं । येतों काकुलती ह्मणऊनि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever work destiny has allotted, let it be carried out, but let my devotion remain fixed at Your feet.

O generous Lord, what can I do but bear the burdens You have placed upon me?

Let the body perform the body's duties, but do not let the mind stray from the love of contemplation.

The restless senses may wander through many places; let there be no laziness in remembrance.

Let the senses carry out their functions, but let my love find its home at Your feet.

Says Tuka, do not hand me over to Time. That is why I come pleading to You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever work has fallen to my lot, let it be done. But let my devotion rest at your feet. What can I do, Lord, with the load you have tied on me? I shoulder the weight you have laid down. Let the body do the body's duties. But do not let my mind miss the heart of it. The restless senses move through many places. Let no laziness come into my remembrance. Let the senses carry out their work. But let my love find its home at your feet. Tuka says: do not hand me over to Time. That is why I come pleading to you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram accepts the work destiny has assigned without resisting it, asking only that the work not steal his inner attention. He draws a line between the body and the mind: let the body and the senses do their ordinary tasks, but let devotion and remembrance stay fixed at God's feet without slackening. The danger he names is being given over to Time, that is, to death and the wheel of mortality. So he comes not as a manager of his own fate but as one pleading, since the load was tied on him by the Lord and only the Lord can keep him from being handed over.

GATHA 1420 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Vitthal the only wealth

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां अवघें भांडवल । येथें विठ्ठल एकला ॥1॥
परतें कांहीं नेणें दुजें। तत्त्वबीजें पाउलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतसंगें । येणें रंगें रंगलों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our entire wealth is Vitthala alone.

We know nothing beyond that; those feet are the seed of truth itself.

Says Tuka, through the company of the saints, I have been dyed in this color.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All our wealth is here. It is Vitthal alone. We know nothing else beyond that. Those feet are the seed of truth itself. Tuka says: through the company of the saints, I have been dyed in this color.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that his entire capital, his whole store of worth, is Vitthal and nothing besides. He knows no second thing, because for him those feet are the very seed from which truth grows. Then he names how this single-mindedness took hold in him: not by his own effort but through the company of the saints. That fellowship dyed him in one color, the way cloth takes a dye, until no other allegiance remained.

GATHA 1421 Renunciation

Renunciation, bearing the blows

मराठी मूळ

साहोनियां टोले उरवावें सार । मग अंगीकार ख†या मोलें ॥1॥
भोगाचे सांभाळीं द्यावें किळवर । संचित चि थार मोडूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
महत्त्वाचे ठायीं भोगावी अप्रतिष्ठा । विटवावें नष्टां पंचभूतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मग कैंचा संवसार । जयाचा आदर तें चि व्हावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Endure the blows and preserve the essence; only then does acceptance come at its true price.

Let the carcass of indulgence be cast aside, breaking the chain of accumulated habit.

In the place of pride, bear dishonor willingly and make the five elements weary of their mischief.

Says Tuka, then what remains of worldly life? Let whatever is honored become the very thing you seek.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Take the blows and keep the essence safe. Only then does acceptance come at its true worth. Throw aside the carcass of indulgence. Break the chain of stored-up habit. Where you would be honored, bear dishonor instead. Make the five elements weary of their mischief. Tuka says: then what is left of worldly life? Let the very thing you honor be the thing you become.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes renunciation as something endured, not announced. You take the world's blows and guard the one essential thing through them, and only that earns acceptance at its real price. He asks the seeker to drop indulgence like a dead carcass and snap the chain of inherited habit, and where the self craves honor, to take dishonor on purpose until the body and its five elements tire of their old games. When that work is done, ordinary worldly life simply has nothing left to grip, and a person turns into the very thing he reveres.

GATHA 1422 True Worship

True worship, freedom from enmity

मराठी मूळ

निर्वैर होणें साधनाचें मूळ । येर ते विल्हाळ सांडीमांडी ॥1॥
नाहीं चालों येती सोंगसंपादणी । निवडे अवसानीं शुद्धाशुद्ध ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यागा नांव तरी निविनषयवासना । कारीयेकारणांपुरते विधि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे राहे चिंतनीं आवडी । येणें नांवें जोडी सत्यत्वेंशीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To become free of enmity is the root of all spiritual practice; everything else is mere play and pretense.

Outward performances will not hold up; purity and impurity are separated at the final test.

True renunciation means the extinction of all vasana for sense objects; rules are only for practical purposes.

Says Tuka, when the love of contemplation remains constant, that itself is the true bond with truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To be free of enmity is the root of all practice. The rest is only setting up and pulling down. Outward shows will not hold. Pure and impure are sorted out at the final test. Renunciation means the dying out of craving for sense things. Rules are only for getting the work done. Tuka says: let love rest in contemplation and stay. By that name alone is the true bond with truth gained.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram puts bearing no enmity at the very root of spiritual practice and dismisses the rest as busywork, mere arranging and dismantling. He warns that staged piety collapses at the end, when what is genuinely pure and impure gets separated. Real renunciation, he says, is not outward show but the inward dying out of craving, with rules kept only as far as they serve the work. The one thing that counts is a love that stays steady in contemplation; that alone, he insists, binds a person to truth.

GATHA 1423 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the learned beast

मराठी मूळ

पशु ऐसे होती ज्ञानी । चर्वणीं या विषयांचे ॥1॥
ठेवूनियां लोभीं लोभ । जाला क्षोभ आत्मत्वीं ॥ध्रु.॥
केला आणिकां वाढी पाक । खाणें ताक मूर्खासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मोठा घात । वाताहात हा देह ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even the learned become like beasts, chewing the cud of sense pleasures.

They heap greed upon greed, stirring agitation where the atman-state should dwell.

They cook elaborate meals for others yet feed themselves only buttermilk.

Says Tuka, what a great waste this human body becomes when it is so misused.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even the learned become like beasts, chewing over these sense things. They pile greed on greed, and stir up turmoil where the self should rest. They cook rich meals for others, but feed themselves only buttermilk. Tuka says: a great loss, this body laid waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his eye on learned people who, for all their knowledge, graze on sense pleasures like cattle chewing the cud. By heaping greed upon greed they wreck the very inwardness where the self should find rest. The sharp image of cooking feasts for others while living on thin buttermilk points at the pattern, not at any one person: knowing the good and serving it up to others while starving oneself of it. He calls the human body a great chance, and its misuse a ruin worth grieving, an invitation to look at one's own appetite.

GATHA 1424 The Nature of God

Nature of God, why the Name

मराठी मूळ

कां जी धरिलें नाम । तुह्मी असोनि निष्काम ॥1॥
कोणां सांगतसां ज्ञान । ठकाठकीचें लक्षण ॥ध्रु.॥
आवडीनें नाचें। आहे तरी पुढें साचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे प्रेम । नाहीं भंगायाचें काम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, why do You bear a Name when You are already desireless?

Whom are You teaching this knowledge to? It all seems like a divine game.

If there is something real beyond all this, let it reveal itself before us in love.

Says Tuka, the bond of love cannot be broken.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why, Lord, have you taken on a Name, when you are already free of all desire? Whom are you teaching this knowledge to? It looks like a game of give and take. If something true lies beyond all this, let it stand plain before us, in love. Tuka says: love is not a thing that can be broken.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a teasing question: if you want nothing and need nothing, why bother to wear a Name and play at teaching? The whole arrangement looks to him like a divine game, a back and forth with no necessity behind it. So he asks for the one thing he can stand on: if there is something truly real underneath the play, let it show itself plainly, and let it show in love. He ends by naming what cannot be undone in all this shifting game, the bond of love itself, which holds when arguments do not.

GATHA 1425 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, truth costs nothing

मराठी मूळ

खरें बोले तरी । फुकासाठीं जोडे हरी ॥1॥
ऐसे फुकाचे उपाय । सांडूनियां वांयां जाय ॥ध्रु.॥
परउपकार । एका वचनाचा फार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मळ । मनें सांडितां शीतळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one speaks the truth, Hari is gained for free. Such costless remedies exist, yet people abandon them and waste their lives.

The gift of a single sincere word to another is a great act of charity.

Says Tuka, when the mind releases its impurities, coolness and peace descend.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Speak the truth, and Hari is won for nothing. Such free remedies lie ready, yet people throw them away and waste their lives. One sincere word given to another is a great act of kindness. Tuka says: when the mind lets go of its filth, coolness comes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to remedies that cost nothing yet are constantly squandered. Simply speaking the truth, he says, wins Hari without any price, and a single sincere word to another counts as real charity. The waste he names is human, not God's: the means lie ready and free, and people still let their lives run out without using them. The closing image makes it bodily, when the mind releases its accumulated filth, a coolness and peace settle in, so the whole counsel turns inward toward cleaning one's own mind.

GATHA 1426 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, where God dwells

मराठी मूळ

दया क्षमा शांति । तेथें देवाची वसति ॥1॥
पावे धांवोनियां घरा । राहे धरोनियां थारा ॥ध्रु.॥
कीर्तनाचे वाटे । बराडिया ऐसा लोटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घडे । पूजा नामें देव जोडे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where compassion, forgiveness, and peace abide, there God dwells.

He runs to such a home and stays there, having found His true shelter.

He is drawn along the path of kirtan, rushing toward the one who calls.

Says Tuka, when worship is offered through the Name, God is joined.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where compassion, forgiveness, and peace are, there God lives. He comes running to that house and stays, having found his shelter. He is drawn down the path of kirtan, rushing toward the one who calls. Tuka says: when worship is offered through the Name, God is joined.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram locates God not in ritual but in three qualities: compassion, forgiveness, peace. Where those are present, God settles in and makes that heart his home. He pictures God as eager, running toward such a house and rushing down the road of kirtan toward whoever calls his Name. The point lands as a quiet instruction: the way to gain God is not elaborate worship but a gentle character and the Name on the lips, and to that He comes.

GATHA 1427 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the true guru

मराठी मूळ

शिष्यांची जो नेघे सेवा । मानी देवासारिखें ॥1॥
त्याचा फळे उपदेश । आणिकां दोष उफराटे ॥ध्रु.॥
त्याचें खरें ब्रह्मज्ञान । उदासीन देहभावीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्य सांगें । योत रागें येती ते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The guru who does not demand service from his disciples and treats them as he would treat God: his teaching bears fruit. For all others, the result is the opposite.

His is the true knowledge of Brahman, for he is indifferent to all body-identification.

Says Tuka, I speak the truth, though it angers those who hear it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The guru who takes no service from his disciples, who treats them as he would treat God: his teaching bears fruit. For all the others, the result runs the other way. His is the true knowledge of Brahman, for he is unmoved by body-feeling. Tuka says: I speak the truth, though those who hear it grow angry.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures a guru by one test: whether he demands service from his disciples or honors them as he would honor God. The teacher who takes nothing and reveres his pupils sees his teaching bear fruit; the one who feeds on their service produces the opposite. The reason is inward, the true guru is free of body-identification, so his knowledge of Brahman is real and not a pose. Tukaram knows this judgment stings those who live off their followers, and he says it anyway, the criticism aimed at the pattern of exploitation rather than at any single name.

GATHA 1428 Longing and Separation

Longing, the deathless one questioned

मराठी मूळ

माझी मेलीं बहुवरिं । तूं कां जैसा तैसा हरी ॥1॥
विठो कैसा वांचलासि । आतां सांग मजपाशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
तुज देखतां चि माझा । बाप मेला आजा पणजा ॥2॥
आह्मां लागलेंसे पाठी । बालत्व तारुण्यें काठीं ॥3॥
तुज फावलें तें मागें । कोणी नसतां वादिलागें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझ्या अंगीं । मज देखिल लागलीं औघीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Many of mine have died; yet You, O Hari, remain exactly as You are.

Vitthoba, how have You survived? Tell me this.

Before Your very eyes my father died, my grandfather, my great-grandfather. Childhood and youth have both followed us relentlessly to the very end.

You have had it easy all along; there was no one left to contend with You.

Says Tuka, looking upon You, I find all the tides of age washing over my own body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Many of mine have died. Why, Hari, do you stay just as you are? Vithoba, how have you stayed alive? Now tell me this. Before your very eyes my father died, my grandfather, my great-grandfather. Childhood and youth have hunted us down to the end. You have had it easy all along, with no one left to fight you. Tuka says: looking at you, I feel all the tides of age washing over my own body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram half-grieves, half-teases God for being deathless while everyone he loves is carried off. He has watched father, grandfather, and great-grandfather die under God's own gaze, and the stages of life, childhood and youth, hound mortals all the way to the grave. The complaint that God has had it easy, with no rival to outlast Him, voices the ache of a perishing creature standing before the one who does not perish. The stakes are mortality itself: gazing at the changeless Lord, Tukaram feels his own aging more sharply, and the poem turns longing for that deathless refuge into a cry.

GATHA 1429 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, guarding the mind

मराठी मूळ

आणीक कोणाचा न करीं मी संग । जेणें होय भंग माझ्या चित्ता ॥1॥
विठ्ठलावांचूनि आणीक जे वाणी । नाइकें मी कानीं आपुलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
समाधानासाटीं बोलावी हे मात । परि माझें चित्त नाहीं कोठें ॥2॥
जिवाहूनि मज ते चि आवडती । आवडे ज्या चित्तीं पांडुरंग ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें तो चि जाणे हित । आणिकांच्या चित्त नेदीं बोला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will not keep the company of anyone whose presence would disturb my mind.

My ears will hear no speech other than Vitthala's name.

For the sake of giving satisfaction I may utter some words, but my mind is nowhere in them.

More than my own life I love those in whose mind Panduranga is dear.

Says Tuka, only He knows what is truly good for me. I will not yield my mind to the words of anyone else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will not keep the company of anyone who would break my mind. My ears will hear no speech but Vitthal's. Sometimes I say a word to keep the peace, but my mind is not in it; it is nowhere there. More than my own life I love those who hold Panduranga dear in their minds. Tuka says: only He knows what is truly good for me. I will not give my mind to anyone else's words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is guarding his attention as the one thing he cannot afford to lose. He keeps away from company that would scatter his mind, and shuts his ears to any talk that is not Vitthal's. He admits he speaks politely to keep peace with people, but he warns that his heart is never in those words. What he truly loves are people who carry Panduranga inside; and what he refuses is to let anyone but God set the direction of his mind.

GATHA 1430 Renunciation

Renunciation, no half measures

मराठी मूळ

आशा हे समूळ खाणोनि काडावी । तेव्हां चि गोसावी व्हावें तेणें ॥1॥
नाहीं तरी सुखें असावें संसारीं । फजिती दुसरी करुं नये ॥ध्रु.॥
आशा मारूनिया जयवंत व्हावें । तेव्हां चि निघावें सर्वांतूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरीं योगाची तांतडी । आशेची बीबुडी करीं आधीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Desire must be uprooted completely. Only then should one become a renunciant.

Otherwise, stay happily in worldly life and do not add the disgrace of false renunciation. Kill desire and emerge victorious; only then step out from everything.

Says Tuka, if you are in a hurry for yoga, first drown the seed of desire entirely.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tear out desire by the root. Only then become a renunciant. If you cannot, then stay happily in the world; do not add a second disgrace. Kill desire and come out the winner; only then step away from everything. Tuka says: if you are in a hurry for yoga, first wipe out the seed of desire.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the costume of holiness without the inner change. Renunciation is real only when desire has been pulled up by the root; the outer robe means nothing while craving is still alive. He says plainly that if you cannot do that, it is better to stay in worldly life than to wear renunciation as a fraud, which only piles a second shame on the first. The order matters: kill desire first, win that battle, and only then walk away from everything. Anyone rushing toward yoga who skips this step is starting from the wrong end.

GATHA 1431 Faith and Trust

Faith, the never-forsaken

मराठी मूळ

निष्ठावंत भाव भक्तांचा स्वधर्म । निर्धार हें वर्म चुकों नये ॥1॥
निष्काम निश्चळ विठ्ठलीं विश्वास । पाहों नये वास आणिकांची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा कोणें उपेक्षला । नाहीं ऐकिला ऐसा कोणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Steadfast devotion is the devotee's own dharma. This determination, this essential secret, must never be abandoned.

Hold unwavering, desireless faith in Vitthala. Do not seek shelter from anyone else.

Says Tuka, has anyone who held such faith ever been forsaken? No one has ever heard of such a thing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Steadfast love is the devotee's own dharma. This is the secret; hold to it and do not miss it. Keep desireless, unshaken faith in Vitthal. Do not look for shelter from anyone else. Tuka says: who has ever been cast off who held this faith? No one has ever heard of such a thing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names what the devotee's true duty is: steady, wanting-nothing faith fixed on Vitthal alone, and never seeking refuge anywhere else. He calls this the essential secret that must not be lost. The poem rests its whole weight on a promise it then dares anyone to disprove: no one who held such faith was ever abandoned by God, and no such story has ever been heard. The claim is meant to settle the fear that drives people to scatter their faith among many shelters.

GATHA 1432 The Power of the Name

The Name, your open work

मराठी मूळ

नामाचें चिंतन प्रगट पसारा । असाल तें करा जेथें तेथें ॥1॥
सोडवील माझा स्वामी निश्चयेसीं । प्रतिज्ञा हे दासीं केली आह्मीं ॥ध्रु.॥
गुण दोष नाहीं पाहात कीर्तनीं । प्रेमें चक्रपाणी वश्य होय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कडु वाटतो प्रपंच । रोकडे रोमांच कंठ दाटे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the contemplation of the Name be your open enterprise. Wherever you are, do what you can.

My Lord will surely set us free; this is the pledge we devotees have made. In kirtan, He does not weigh merit or fault; through love, Chakrapani is won over.

Says Tuka, worldly life tastes bitter, but at the Name, goosebumps rise and the throat chokes with emotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let remembering the Name be your open work. Wherever you are, do what you can. My Lord will surely set us free; this is the pledge we servants have made. In kirtan He does not weigh your merits or your faults; through love Chakrapani is won. Tuka says: worldly life tastes bitter. At the Name, goosebumps rise and the throat chokes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the practice simple and portable: remember the Name wherever you happen to be, with whatever you have. He answers the worry about worthiness directly. In kirtan God does not audit your good and bad deeds; He is won by love alone, so no one is shut out for being a sinner. The bitterness of worldly life is set against the body's own response to the Name, the rising goosebumps and the choked throat, as evidence that this love is real and already at work.

GATHA 1433 The Power of the Name

The Name, defending its power

मराठी मूळ

नाम ह्मणतां मोक्ष नाहीं । ऐसा उपदेश करिती कांहीं । बधिर व्हावें त्याचे ठायीं । दुष्ट वचन वाक्य तें ॥1॥
नवविधीचा निषेध । जेणें मुखें करिती वाद । जन्मा आले निंद्य । शूकरयाती संसारा ॥2॥
काय सांगों वेळोवेळां । आठव नाहीं चांडाळा । नामासाठीं बाळा । क्षीरसागरीं कोंडिलें ॥3॥
आपुलिया नामासाठीं । लागे शंखासुरापाठीं। फोडोनियां पोटीं । वेद चारी काढिले ॥4॥
जगीं प्रसिद्ध हे बोली। नामें गणिका तारिली । आणिकें ही उद्धरिलीं । पातकी महादोषी ॥5॥
जे हे पवाडे गर्जती । नाम प्रल्हादाचा चित्तीं । जळतां बुडतां घातीं । राखे हातीं विषाचे ॥6॥
काय सांगों ऐशीं किती । तुका ह्मणे नामख्याती । नरकाप्रती जाती । निषेधिती तीं एकें ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Some teach that chanting the Name does not lead to liberation. One should become deaf to such wicked words.

Those who argue against the nine modes of devotion are born in disgrace, condemned to a sow's round of worldly life.

How many times must I say it? The fallen one has no memory: for the sake of the Name, the child was imprisoned in an ocean of milk.

For the sake of His own Name, the Lord pursued Shankhashura, tore open his belly, and retrieved the four Vedas.

It is well known: the Name alone saved Ganika the courtesan, along with many other great wrongdoers.

The Name of Prahlad lived in his chitta; whether burning, drowning, or poisoned, the Lord saved him with His own hands.

Says Tuka, how many such legends shall I tell? The glory of the Name is boundless. Those who deny it shall go to hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Some teach that saying the Name does not bring liberation. Be deaf to that; it is a wicked saying. Those who argue against the nine ways of devotion are born in disgrace, into a pig's round of worldly life. How many times must I say it? The fallen one forgets: for the Name's sake the child was held in the ocean of milk. For His own Name's sake the Lord went after Shankhasura, tore open his belly, and pulled out the four Vedas. The world knows it well: the Name alone saved Ganika the courtesan, and lifted many other great sinners. Prahlad held the Name in his heart; burning, drowning, poisoned, the Lord saved him by His own hand. Tuka says: how many such tales shall I tell? The glory of the Name is endless. Those who deny it go to hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is answering teachers who say chanting the Name cannot liberate, and he tells the listener to refuse such talk outright. He stacks well-known stories to make one point: the Name has a track record of saving the unworthy, the courtesan, and the endangered devotee, with God Himself intervening for the Name's sake. The harshness aimed at the deniers is pointed at the teaching, the contempt for devotion, not at any single person to be despised. The stakes he names are deliberately stark, hell for those who argue the Name away, because he is defending the one path he believes is open to everyone, especially the fallen.

GATHA 1434 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, death rides with birth

मराठी मूळ

किती या काळाचा सोसावा वळसा । लागला सरिसा पाठोवाठीं ॥1॥
लक्ष चौ†याशीची करा सोडवण । रिघा या शरण पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
उपजल्या पिंडा मरण सांगातें । मरतें उपजतें सवें चि तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माळ गुंतली राहाटीं । गाडग्याची सुटी फुटलिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How long will you endure the circling grip of Time, which follows you relentlessly?

Free yourselves from the eighty-four lakh births; take refuge in Panduranga.

The moment the body is born, death is its companion; the dying and the being born are joined together.

Says Tuka, like pots strung on a waterwheel, the chain is broken only when the pot shatters.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long will you bear the circling grip of Time, which keeps right at your heels? Free yourselves from the eighty-four lakh births; take refuge in Panduranga. The moment a body is born, death is its companion; the dying and the being born go together. Tuka says: like pots strung on a waterwheel, the chain breaks only when a pot shatters.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing the listener about how long they will keep enduring the wheel of time and rebirth. He sets the stakes plainly: birth and death are bound together, so every new body is already carrying its own death. The waterwheel image shows lives strung like pots, rising and falling endlessly, the cycle unbroken until a pot finally shatters and leaves the chain. Against this he offers one exit, taking refuge in Panduranga, as the way out of the eighty-four lakh births.

GATHA 1435 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, against empty cleverness

मराठी मूळ

गासी तरि एक विठ्ठल चि गाई । नाहीं तरि ठायीं राहें उगा ॥1॥
अद्वैतीं तों नाहीं बोलाचें कारण । जाणीवेचा श्रम करिसी वांयां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती करावी फजिती । लाज नाहीं नीतिं निलाजिरा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you wish to sing, sing only of Vitthala. Otherwise, remain silent where you stand.

In non-duality there is no need for speech; the labor of learning serves no purpose. Says Tuka, how much more disgrace will you invite? The shameless one has no sense of decency.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you will sing, sing only of Vitthal. If not, stay quiet where you are. In non-duality there is no need for talk; the labor of learning is wasted. Tuka says: how much disgrace will you bring on yourself? The shameless one has no decency.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is cutting away clever speech that pretends to be devotion. The choice he gives is simple: either sing of Vitthal or be silent, but do not fill the air with learned talk. He points out that the highest truth, non-duality, does not need words at all, so all the effort spent showing off knowledge is wasted labor. The sharp closing is aimed at the habit of empty display, the shamelessness of talking past actual love, and it asks the listener to examine that impulse rather than feed it.

GATHA 1436 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the test of the tongue

मराठी मूळ

जयाचिये वाचे नये हा विठ्ठल । त्याचे मज बोल नावडती ॥1॥
शत्रु तो म्यां केला न ह्मणें आपुला । जो विन्मुख विठ्ठला सर्वभावें ॥2॥
जयासी नावडे विठोबाचें नाम । तो जाणा अधम तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not care for the words of one whose mouth does not utter Vitthala's name. I have made an enemy of him.

I do not call my own anyone who has turned away from Vitthala with their entire being. Says Tuka, know that the one who does not love Vithoba's Name is the lowest of the low.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not like the words of anyone whose mouth does not bring out this Vitthal. The one who has turned away from Vitthal with his whole being, I have made my enemy; I do not call him my own. Tuka says: know that the one who does not love Vithoba's Name is the lowest of the low.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures people by one thing: whether the Name of Vitthal lives on their tongue. He speaks bluntly of making an enemy of those who have wholly turned away from God, and of refusing to count them as his own. The harshness is aimed at the turning-away itself, the deliberate rejection of the Name, not at a person to be looked down on for any other reason. For Tukaram the love of the Name is the dividing line of worth, and he will not soften where that love is absent.

GATHA 1437 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one authority

मराठी मूळ

आह्मांसी तों नाहीं आणीक प्रमाण । नामासी कारण विठोबाच्या ॥1॥
घालूनियां कास करितो कैवाड । वागों नेदीं आड किळकाळासी ॥ध्रु.॥
अबद्ध वांकडें जैशातैशा परी । वाचे हरि हरि उच्चारावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां सांपडलें निज । सकळां हें बीज पुराणांचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For us, there is no authority higher than the Name of Vithoba.

I have girded my loins and taken up His cause; I will not let the shrieking death stand in the way.

However broken, however crooked, in whatever manner possible, let the tongue utter Hari, Hari.

Says Tuka, we have found our true treasure. This is the seed of all the Puranas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For us there is no higher proof than Vithoba's Name. I have girded my loins and taken up His cause; I will not let cruel death stand in my way. However broken, however crooked, in whatever way it comes, let the tongue say Hari, Hari. Tuka says: we have found our own treasure. This is the seed of all the Puranas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the Name above every other authority and pledges himself to it like a fighter girding for battle, refusing to let even death block the path. He removes every excuse about doing it correctly: say Hari, Hari however clumsily or imperfectly, because the manner does not matter, only that the tongue keeps saying it. He calls this his found treasure and goes further, claiming the Name is the seed from which all the Puranas grow. The stakes he names are that the simplest practice, available to anyone, holds the whole of scripture inside it.

GATHA 1438 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the convenient creed

मराठी मूळ

जीव तो चि देव भोजन ते भक्ति । मरण तेचि मुक्ति पापांडएाची ॥1॥
पिंडाच्या पोषकी नागविलें जन । लटिकें पुराण केलें वेद ॥ध्रु.॥
मना आला तैसा करिती विचार । ह्मणती संसार नाहीं पुन्हा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाठीं उडती यमदंड । पापपुण्य लंड न विचारी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

These people say the jiva is God, eating is devotion, and death is liberation from sin.

By pampering the body they have deceived the world and made the Puranas and Vedas a lie.

They rationalize as they please and declare there is no rebirth.

Says Tuka, the rod of Yama will fall upon their backs. This debauched wretch reckons neither merit nor sin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These people say the jiva is God, that eating is devotion, that death is freedom from sin. By feeding the body they have robbed the world and made the Vedas and Puranas a lie. They reason however it suits them and declare there is no rebirth. Tuka says: the rod of Yama falls on their backs. This debauched fool weighs neither sin nor merit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a comfortable doctrine that turns indulgence into a creed: that the self is already God, that satisfying the body counts as worship, and that death simply cancels all sin. He sees this as self-serving reasoning that pampers the body, cheats people, and treats scripture as a lie to be explained away. The harshness lands on the pattern, the convenient logic that denies rebirth and stops weighing right from wrong, and it invites self-examination about whether one is rationalizing appetite as truth. He warns that consequence does not vanish just because one has argued it away.

GATHA 1439 The Saints

Saints, known only by their own

मराठी मूळ

भक्तांचा महिमा भक्त चिं जाणती । दुर्लभ या गति आणिकांसी ॥1॥
जाणोनि नेणते जाले तेणें सुखें । नो बोलोनि मुखें बोलताती ॥ध्रु.॥
अभेदूनि भेद राखियेला अंगीं । वाढावया जगीं प्रेमसुख ॥2॥
टाळ घोष कथा प्रेमाचा सुकाळ । मूढ लोकपाळ तरावया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हें तों आहे तयां ठावें । जिहीं एक्या भावें जाणीतलें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The greatness of devotees is known only to devotees; this state is unattainable for others.

Those who knew have become as if unknowing, savoring that very happiness. Without opening their mouths, they speak.

Within the undivided, they maintain the appearance of difference, so that the joy of love may grow in the world.

Cymbals, songs, and sacred katha bring an abundance of love to uplift even the dull and worldly.

Says Tuka, this is understood by those who have known it with single-minded devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The greatness of devotees is known only to devotees; this state is beyond others' reach. Knowing, they have become as if unknowing, happy in that very joy; without opening their mouths, they speak. Within the undivided they keep a hint of difference, so the joy of love can grow in the world. Cymbals, song, and katha bring a flood of love to carry across even the dull and worldly. Tuka says: this is known to those who have known it with single-minded love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the inner life of true devotees, which only fellow devotees can recognize. They have moved past the pride of knowledge into a glad simplicity, communicating from heart to heart more than by speech. Though they have realized the undivided reality, they deliberately keep a thread of two-ness, lover and beloved, so that devotional joy has room to flow and spread. The public forms, the cymbals, the singing, the sacred storytelling, are presented as the means by which that love reaches even the dull and worldly and lifts them across.

GATHA 1440 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, steadiness over craving

मराठी मूळ

आशा तृष्णा माया अपमानाचें बीज । नासिलिया पूज्य होईजेतें ॥1॥
अधीरासी नाहीं चालों जातां मान । दुर्लभ दरुषण धीर त्याचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं आणिकांसी बोल । वांयां जाय मोल बुद्धीपाशीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Desire, greed, and maya are the seeds of dishonor. Only by destroying them does one become truly worthy of reverence.

The impatient one loses respect even while walking; the sight of one with true steadfastness is rare.

Says Tuka, there is nothing more to say. Wisdom spent on the unworthy is wasted.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Desire, craving, and maya are the seeds of dishonor. Only by destroying them does one become worthy of reverence. The restless one loses respect even as he walks; the sight of a truly steady one is rare. Tuka says: there is nothing more to say. Wisdom spent on the unworthy is wasted.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the roots of disgrace, desire, craving, and the pull of maya, and says honor comes only when these are uprooted. He contrasts the restless person, who forfeits respect with every step, against the rare one whose steadiness makes even the sight of him precious. The closing line is a plain caution about discernment: pouring wisdom into someone who is unworthy of it is effort thrown away. The poem asks the listener to look at their own restlessness and craving rather than to judge another's.

GATHA 1441 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no womb of sorrow for the devotee

मराठी मूळ

चिंतनें सरे तो धन्य काळ । सकळ मंगळ मंगळांचें ॥1॥
संसारसिंधु नाहीं हरिदासा । गर्भवास कैसा नेणती ते ॥ध्रु.॥
जनवन ऐसें कृपेच्या सागरें । दाटला आभारें पांडुरंग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा भक्तांचे बंधन । दाखविलें भिन्न परी एक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is the time spent in contemplation of God; it is the most auspicious of all auspicious things.

For the devotees of Hari, there is no ocean of worldly life; they know nothing of the anguish of womb-dwelling.

Panduranga, that ocean of grace, has flooded both forest and habitation alike with His presence.

Says Tuka, though appearing separate, the devotees and God are one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is the time that wears away in thinking of God. It is the most auspicious of all auspicious things. For the servants of Hari there is no ocean of worldly life. They do not know the anguish of dwelling in the womb. Like an ocean of grace, Panduranga has flooded forest and town alike with himself. Tuka says: God showed the devotees and himself as separate, but they are one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the time given to remembrance and naming what it spares the one who gives it. For those who keep the Name of Hari, the great ocean of birth and death is not there to cross; they are released from the dread of being born again into a body. He sees the whole world, wild places and dwellings alike, drowned in Panduranga's grace, as though God's presence has overflowed everywhere. And he ends by collapsing the distance the poem itself relied on: the devotee and God look separate, but they are finally one.

GATHA 1442 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion above liberation, the love God carries home

मराठी मूळ

मोक्षाचें आह्मांसी नाहीं अवघड । तो असे उघाड गांठोळीस ॥1॥
भक्तीचे सोहळे होतील जीवासी । नवल तेविशीं पुरवितां ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याचें त्यासी देणें कोण तें उचित । मानूनियां हित घेतों सुख ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें देई संवसार । आवडीसी थार करीं माझे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Liberation is not difficult for us; it stands open and available to all who seek it.

But it is the celebrations of devotion that the jiva truly craves, and the wonder of those celebrations never grows stale.

To return to each one what is already theirs: this is the right thing to do, and in accepting this, we find joy.

Says Tuka, let the world go on as it will; just make my love the bundle You carry home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Liberation is not hard for us. It lies open in our bundle. The joys of devotion are what the soul will have. The wonder of them never wears out, however much is given. To give back to each what is already his own: this is the right thing, and taking it as my good, I take the joy. Tuka says: let the round of the world go on as it pleases; only give my love a place, make it your own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram puts devotion above the prize most seekers chase. Liberation, he says, is no difficult thing for him; it is already tucked away within reach. But what the soul truly wants is the festival of love itself, and that delight never goes stale no matter how much is poured out. Returning each thing to its rightful owner is only just, and he receives even that as joy. His one plea is not for release but that God keep his love and make it his own, while the world goes on however it will.

GATHA 1443 True Worship

The Name, no special hour for remembrance

मराठी मूळ

चिंतनासी न लगे वेळ । सर्व काळ करावें ॥1॥
सदा वाचे नारायण । तें वदन मंगळ ॥ध्रु.॥
पढिये सवौत्तमा भाव । येथें वाव पसारा ॥2॥
ऐसें उपदेशी तुका । अवघ्या लोकां सकळां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Contemplation requires no special hour; it should be done at all times.

Blessed is the mouth that always speaks the name of Narayana.

The noblest of all pursuits is pure devotion; everything else is mere show.

Says Tuka, this is the teaching he gives to all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Remembrance needs no fixed time. It should be done at all times. The mouth that always speaks Narayana, that mouth is blessed. The highest love is the dearest thing; here all the rest is empty show. Tuka says: this is what he teaches to all people, to everyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips remembrance of any condition of time or occasion. There is no appointed hour for it; it belongs to every moment. The mouth that keeps speaking Narayana is the auspicious one, and pure love of God is the one pursuit worth having, against which all display and elaboration is hollow. He frames it as open instruction, not private practice: this is the teaching he hands to everyone alike.

GATHA 1444 Worldly Life

The mind's snake-in-a-rope, resting in the all-pervading Lord

मराठी मूळ

अंतराय पडे गोविंदीं अंतर । जो जो घ्यावा भार तो चि बाधी ॥1॥
बैसलिये ठायीं आठवीन पाय । पाहीन तो ठाय तुझा देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
अखंड तें खंडे संकल्पीं विकल्प । मनोजन्य पाप रज्जुसर्प ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विश्वीं विश्वंभर वसे । राहों ऐसे दशे सुखरूप ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Obstacles create distance from Govinda. Every burden one takes up only hinders further.

Wherever I sit, I will remember Your feet and seek that place where You dwell, O God.

The continuous flow is broken by doubts and conflicting thoughts; like the snake seen in a rope, all such trouble is mind-born.

Says Tuka, the Lord pervades the entire universe. Let me remain in that blissful state.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Obstacles fall and make a gap from Govinda. Whatever burden you take up is the very thing that harms you. Wherever I sit, I will remember your feet. I will look for that place where you are, O God. The unbroken is broken by doubt inside the resolve; the sin is born of the mind, like a snake seen in a rope. Tuka says: the all-holding Lord lives in the whole world. Let me stay in such a state, made of happiness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces how distance from God opens up and how it closes again. Every load we pick up, every added concern, is the thing that wedges a gap between us and Govinda. So he resolves that wherever he is seated he will hold the Lord's feet in mind and keep seeking the place where God dwells. The break in steady remembrance comes from doubt rising inside resolve, and the fear or fault it breeds is mind-made, no more real than a snake mistaken in a coiled rope. Since the Lord pervades the entire world, he asks only to rest in that recognition and be made of its bliss.

GATHA 1445 The Nature of God

Nature of God, he weighs the heart, not the offering

मराठी मूळ

एकाचिया घाटएा टोके । एक फिके उपचार ॥1॥
ऐसी सवे गोविळया । भाव तया पढियंता ॥ध्रु.॥
एकाचेथें उिच्छष्ट खाय । एका जाय ठकोणि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सोपें । बहु रूपें अनंत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From one person He gladly eats the leftovers; another's offerings He finds tasteless.

Such is the nature of this cowherd boy: He values devotion above all else.

From one He eats the remnants of food; from another He slips away in jest.

Says Tuka, this is Ananta, the Infinite One, simple and beyond all forms.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From one man he eats with relish what is set before him. From another the same service tastes flat. Such is the way with the cowherd: it is the heart in it that he loves. From one he eats the food already tasted, the leftovers. From another he slips away and gives them the slip. Tuka says: he is simple, and his forms are many, without end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming what God actually responds to. From one person the cowherd gladly eats even leftover, half-eaten food; from another the most correct offering leaves him cold. The difference is not the gift but the love behind it, the heart he prizes above everything. With one he is intimate enough to eat their scraps; from another he simply slips away. The point is to examine our own offering: it is the inward devotion, not the outward show, that he meets, and this same God is at once utterly simple and endlessly many in his forms.

GATHA 1446 The Power of the Name

The Name, no qualification required

मराठी मूळ

कोठें नाहीं अधिकार । गेले नर वांयां ते ॥1॥
ऐका हें सोपें वर्म । न लगे श्रम चिंतना ॥ध्रु.॥
मृत्याचिये अंगीं छाये । उपाये चि खुंटतां ॥2॥
तुका म्हणे अवघे जन । येथें मन असों द्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no qualification needed here. Those who fail to see this waste their human lives.

Listen to this simple truth: contemplation requires no laborious effort.

In the shadow of Death, when all other remedies fail, let the mind rest here.

Says Tuka, let all people place their minds upon this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here no qualification is needed. The men who missed this wasted their lives. Listen to this simple secret: remembrance costs no hard labor. In the shadow of Death, when every other remedy is cut off, let the mind rest here. Tuka says: all people, let your mind stay in this place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram knocks away the gatekeeping around the path to God. No rank, learning, or qualification is asked here, and those who could not see this threw away their human birth. The secret is plain: remembrance demands no strenuous discipline. When death's shadow falls and every other means has run out, this is the one refuge left, the place where the mind can rest. He addresses it to everyone without exception, urging all people to fix the mind here.

GATHA 1447 The Nature of God

Nature of God, he becomes what you worship

मराठी मूळ

ज्याणें ज्याणें जैसें ध्यावें । तैसें व्हावें कृपाळें ॥1॥
सगुणनिर्गुणांचा ठाव । विटे पाव धरियेले ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघें साकरेचें अंग । नये व्यंग निवडितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जें जें करी । तें तें हरी भोगिता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

However one meditates upon Him, the Compassionate One becomes just that.

He is the abode of both saguna and nirguna, His feet placed upon the brick.

His entire being is sweet as sugar; no flaw can be found when you examine Him.

Says Tuka, whatever one does, Hari Himself is the one who experiences it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

However each one meditates on him, so the merciful one becomes for them. He is the dwelling of form and the formless, his feet set on the brick. His whole body is sweet, made of sugar; examine him and you find no flaw to pick out. Tuka says: whatever a man does, it is Hari himself who tastes it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a God who shapes himself to the worshipper. In whatever way you hold him in your heart, the compassionate one answers in just that form. He is the home of both the manifest and the unmanifest, yet he stands plainly with his feet on the brick at Pandhari. His whole being is sweet as sugar through and through, with no flaw to be separated out under scrutiny. And whatever anyone does, it is finally Hari who receives and tastes the doing, so the act and its fruit alike rest in him.

GATHA 1448 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord who plays among the lowly

मराठी मूळ

आचरती कर्मे । तेथें काळें कर्मधर्मे ॥1॥
खेळे गोविळयांसवें । करिती तें त्यांचें साहावें ॥ध्रु.॥
यज्ञमुखें घांस । मंत्रपूजेसी उदास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चोरी । योगियां ही सवें करी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where people perform their rites, He plays His part in the customs of dharma.

He plays with the cowherd boys, enduring whatever they do.

At the sacrificial altar He eats morsels, indifferent to the mantras and worship.

Says Tuka, He even commits the theft of butter; such is His mischief with all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where men perform their rites, there he too acts within the customs of dharma. He plays with the cowherd boys and bears whatever they do to him. At the sacrifice he takes his morsel by the mouth, careless of the mantras and the worship. Tuka says: he even steals, the thief, joining in the mischief, and he does it with the yogis too.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shows a God who is not bound to one kind of worshipper. Where people keep the rites, he plays his part within the forms of dharma; among the cowherd children he plays as one of them and endures their roughness. At the formal sacrifice he will quietly take his portion while remaining indifferent to the mantras and ceremony around it. He even takes part in their pranks, the butter-thief joining the mischief, and the same intimacy he shows the simple cowherds he shows the yogis. God meets each one in their own measure, the high discipline and the low play alike.

GATHA 1449 The Power of the Name

The Name, one Name beyond every distinction

मराठी मूळ

नामाचे पवाडे बोलती पुराणें । होऊनि कीर्तन तो चि ठेला ॥1॥
आदिनाथा कंठीं आगळा हा मंत्र । आवडीचें स्तोत्र सदा घोकी ॥ध्रु.॥
आगळें हे सार उत्तमा उत्तम । ब्रह्मकर्मा नाम एक तुझें ॥2॥
तिहीं त्रिभुवनीं गमन नारदा । हातीं विणा सदा नाम मुखीं ॥3॥
किोळयाची कीतिन वाढली गहन । केलें रामायण रामा आधीं ॥5॥
सगुण निर्गुण तुज ह्मणे वेद । तुका ह्मणे भेद नाहीं नांवा ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Puranas sing the glory of the Name; He Himself became kirtan.

In the throat of Adinatha, this mantra is supreme; He chants forever the hymn that delights Him.

This essence surpasses all that is excellent; Your Name, O God, is the supreme action of Brahman itself.

Narada, who wanders the three worlds, carries the veena in his hands and the Name upon his lips.

The poet Valmiki's fame has spread far and wide, for he composed the Ramayana even before Rama's advent.

Says Tuka, the Vedas call You both saguna and nirguna; in the Name there is no distinction at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Puranas tell the great deeds of the Name; the Name itself became kirtan and stayed. In the throat of the First Lord this mantra is supreme; he chants forever the hymn he loves. This essence is higher than the highest; your one Name is the very work of Brahman. Narada, who roams the three worlds, carries the veena in his hands and the Name on his lips always. The poet's fame grew vast and deep; he made the Ramayana even before Rama came. The Vedas call you both with form and without form. Tuka says: in the Name there is no division at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gathers witnesses to show the Name as the one supreme thing. The Puranas recite its powers, and it has settled into the world as kirtan itself. Even the First Lord, Shiva, keeps this mantra in his throat as the highest, chanting the hymn he loves; the Name is the very action of Brahman. Narada wanders the three worlds with veena in hand and the Name on his lips, and the poet's fame swelled so that he composed the Ramayana before Rama himself appeared, by the Name's power. The Vedas may speak of God as having form and as formless, but Tukaram lands the claim plainly: in the Name there is no such division, it holds the whole of God undivided.

GATHA 1450 The Saints

Saints, bow with a soft heart, not stiff learning

मराठी मूळ

भूतदयापरत्वें जया तया परी । संत नमस्कारीं सर्वभावें ॥1॥
शिकल्या बोलाचा धरीसील ताठा । तरी जासी वाटा यमपंथें ॥ध्रु.॥
हिरा परिस मोहरा आणीक पाषाण । नव्हे परी जन संतां तैसी ॥2॥
सरितां वाहाळां गंगे सागरा समान । लेखी तयाहून अधम नाहीं ॥3॥
आणीक अमुप होती तारांगणें । रविशशिमानें लेखूं नये ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं नरमता अंगी । नव्हे तें फिरंगी कठिण लोह ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With compassion toward all beings, in whatever way possible, bow to the saints with your whole being.

If you hold fast to the stiffness of book-learning, you will travel the road to Yama.

A diamond, a touchstone, a magnet, and an ordinary stone are all different; similarly, not all people are equal to the saints.

Streams and rivulets should be regarded with the same respect as the Ganga and the ocean; to think less of them is the lowest of views.

Innumerable stars fill the sky, but they should not be measured against the sun and the moon.

Says Tuka, without tenderness in the being, one is like a firangi blade: bright and hard, but it does not warm.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With compassion toward every creature, in whatever way you can, bow to the saints with your whole heart. If you hold to the stiffness of what you have read, you will go by the road to Yama. A diamond, a touchstone, a charm, and a plain stone are all different; so too people are not all equal to the saints. Streams and brooks should be honored the same as the Ganga and the sea; to count them as less is the basest view. Countless stars fill the sky, but they are not to be measured against the sun and the moon. Tuka says: with no tenderness in you, you are like a foreign blade, bright and hard iron that will not bend.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the soft heart, not book-learning, the test of reverence. He tells us to bow to the saints wholly, with compassion toward all beings, and warns that clinging to the rigidity of mere learning sends a man down the road of death. As a diamond, touchstone, charm, and common stone differ, so people differ in worth, and the saints are not to be leveled with the rest. Yet the small streams deserve the same honor as the Ganga and the ocean, and to belittle them is the lowest of views, just as the countless stars are not weighed against the sun and moon. He ends by turning it inward: a being without tenderness is like a hard foreign blade, gleaming and unbending iron, and the fault to examine is one's own stiffness, not another's.

GATHA 1451 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, nothing above Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

आणीक कांहीं मज नावडे मात । एक पंढरिनाथ वांचुनिया ॥1॥
त्याची च कथा आवडे कीर्तन । तें मज श्रवणें गोड लागे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संत ह्मणोत भलतें । विठ्ठलापरतें न मनी कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Nothing else appeals to me besides the Lord of Pandhari.

His story alone delights me in kirtan; it is His telling that sounds sweet to my ears.

Says Tuka, the saints may say whatever they wish, but I will hold nothing above Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Nothing else pleases me to hear, only the Lord of Pandhari, none but him. His story alone I love in kirtan; it tastes sweet to me in the hearing. Tuka says: let the saints say whatever they like, I hold nothing above Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares a single-pointed love and will not soften it. No talk pleases him except of Panduranga, the Lord of Pandhari; only the telling of God's story in kirtan delights his ear and tastes sweet. Then he holds his ground even against the saints: whatever they may counsel or claim, he will set nothing higher than Vitthal. It is a vow of exclusive devotion, and he refuses to let even holy company talk him out of it.

GATHA 1452 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, faith is the only measure

मराठी मूळ

ठेवा जाणीव गुंडून । येथें भाव चि प्रमाण ॥1॥
एका अनुसरल्या काज । अवघें जाणें पंढरिराज ॥ध्रु.॥
तर्कवितकानसी वाव न लागे सायासीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावेंविण । अवघा बोलती तो सीण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Set aside your cleverness and wrap it up. Here, devotion alone is the measure.

By following the one Lord of Pandhari, all is accomplished. No room is left for debate, logic, or strenuous effort.

Says Tuka, without devotion, all speech is mere toil.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wrap up your cleverness and set it aside. Here faith alone is the measure. Follow the one Lord of Pandhari and the work is done; the King of Pandhari knows all. There is no room here for reasoning back and forth, no need for strain. Tuka says: without faith, all that men say is only weariness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the seeker to bundle away his cleverness, because on this path faith is the one standard that counts. Surrender to the single Lord of Pandhari and everything needful is accomplished, for the King of Pandhari himself knows and handles all. Argument, counter-argument, and laborious effort have no place here. Without that inward faith, he says, all the speech in the world is only exhausting toil that arrives nowhere.

GATHA 1453 Devotion to Vitthal

The Name, where desire ends God dwells

मराठी मूळ

येथें दुसरी न सरे आटी । देवा भेटी जावया ॥1॥
तो चि ध्यावा एका चित्तें । करूनि रितें किळवर ॥ध्रु.॥
षडउर्मी हृदयांत । यांचा अंत पुरवूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खुंटे आस । तेथें वास करी तो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No other strategy will avail in reaching God.

He alone should be meditated upon with single-pointed chitta, after casting aside all that is refuse and dead.

The six waves within the heart must be thoroughly conquered.

Says Tuka, where desire comes to an end, there He takes up His abode.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here no second scheme will work to reach God. Meditate on him alone, with one mind, after emptying out all that is dead and waste. Conquer the six waves in the heart, every one, to the end. Tuka says: where desire runs out, there he comes to live.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is laying down the one path to God and refusing any backup plan. No clever second strategy will carry you there; only single-pointed remembrance, after you clear out everything dead and useless inside. The six waves he names are the surges of the body and mind, hunger and thirst, grief and delusion, age and death, the appetites that keep the heart churning. These must be quieted to their root. Then comes the radical claim: God takes up residence not where desire is satisfied, but where desire has ended.

GATHA 1454 Renunciation

Freedom is inner, piety is a performance

मराठी मूळ

मुक्त तो आशंका नाहीं जया अंगीं । बद्ध मोहोसंगीं लज्जा चिंता ॥1॥
सुख पावे शांती धरूनि एकांत । दुःखी तो लोकांत दंभ करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लागे थोडा च विचार । परी हे प्रकार नागविती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Liberated is the one who has no anxiety within. The bound one is the one attached to worldly delusion, shame, and worry.

The peaceful one finds joy in solitude, while the unhappy one makes a show of piety before the crowd.

Says Tuka, only a little reflection is needed, but these appearances deceive many.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one with no anxiety in him is free. The one bound to delusion carries shame and worry. The peaceful one holds to solitude and finds joy. The unhappy one stands in the crowd and makes a show of piety. Tuka says: only a little reflection is needed; but these appearances rob many.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is locating freedom and bondage inside, not in any outward state. The free person is simply the one with no fear or anxiety lodged in him; the bound person is the one tangled in worldly delusion, dragging shame and worry along. Real peace comes to the one who can keep to quiet and rest there, while the restless person performs his religion loudly in front of the crowd. Tukaram says the difference takes only a little honest reflection to see, yet the outward show deceives most people. The warning points at our own appetite for being seen as pious.

GATHA 1455 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the doctrine-shopper

मराठी मूळ

कानीं धरी बोल बहुतांचीं मतें । चाट त्यापरतें आणीक नाहीं ॥1॥
पावेल गौरव वोढाळाचे परी । दंड पाठीवरी यमदूतां ॥ध्रु.॥
शब्दज्ञानी एक आपुल्याला मतें । सांगती वेदांत भिन्नभावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक भाव न धरिती । पडिली हे माती त्यांचे तोंडीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who lends his ears to every opinion and follows many doctrines is the worst kind of fool.

He may win the honor of the brazen, but the rod of Yama's servants awaits his back.

Some, relying on mere word-knowledge and their own interpretations, preach Vedanta in contradictory ways.

Says Tuka, those who do not hold one single devotion have dirt thrown in their faces.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who takes every opinion to heart and follows many doctrines is the worst fool there is. He may win honor from the brazen, but the rod of Yama's servants waits on his back. Some, knowing only words and their own notions, teach Vedanta in contradictory ways. Tuka says: those who do not hold one single devotion get dirt thrown in their mouths.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking the habit of collecting doctrines instead of holding one. The man who lends his ear to every passing opinion looks well-read, but Tukaram calls him the worst kind of fool, because he is rooted in nothing. Such a person may earn applause from the equally shameless, yet the punishment of Yama is still waiting for him. He singles out the word-clever who preach Vedanta from their own scattered notions, contradicting each other. The point is not contempt for the seeker but a warning against the restless mind that prizes variety of opinion over one settled, lived devotion.

GATHA 1456 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, refusing liberation for love

मराठी मूळ

देवा ऐकें हे विनंती । मज नको रे हे मुक्ति । तया इच्छा गति । हें चि सुख आगळें ॥1॥
या वैष्णवांचे घरीं । प्रेमसुख इच्छा करी । रिद्धसिद्धी द्वारीं । कर जोडूनि उभ्या ॥ध्रु.॥
नको वैकुंठींचा वास । असे तया सुखा नास । अद्भुत हा रस । कथाकाळीं नामाचा ॥2॥
तुझ्या नामाचा महिमा । तुज न कळे रे मेघशामा । तुका ह्मणे आह्मां । जन्म गोड यासाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, hear this prayer: I do not want liberation. The desire for the joy of devotion is itself the greatest happiness.

In the homes of these Vaishnavas, I crave the bliss of love, where riddhi and siddhi stand at the door with folded hands. I do not want a place in Vaikuntha, for even that joy can end.

But the wondrous essence of the Name during kirtan is beyond compare. Says Tuka, the greatness of your Name is beyond even your own knowing, O dark-hued Lord. This is why, for us, birth itself is sweet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O God, hear this prayer: I do not want this liberation. Let my way be the way of longing for you; that is the higher joy. In the homes of these Vaishnavas I want only the joy of love, where riddhi and siddhi stand at the door with folded hands. I do not want a dwelling in Vaikuntha; even that joy can end. The wonder is in the taste of the Name during the telling. Tuka says: the greatness of your Name, O dark-hued one, you yourself do not know; this is why birth is sweet to us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the soul's highest prize and asking instead to keep on longing. He tells God plainly that he does not want liberation; the desire for devotion is itself the greater happiness. He would rather stand in the company of the devotees, where even the powers riddhi and siddhi wait humbly at the door, than take a permanent place in Vaikuntha, because any state you can be given is a state that can end. The unending thing is the taste of the Name during kirtan. He pushes the praise to its edge: the power of the Name is so great that God himself cannot measure it, and that is the very reason a human birth, which lets him sing it, is sweet.

GATHA 1457 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, exclusive devotion to Keshava

मराठी मूळ

न पूजीं आणिकां देवां न करीं त्यांची सेवा । न मनीं या केशवाविण दुजें ॥1॥
काय उणें जालें मज तयापायीं । तें मी मागों काई कवणासी ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिकाची कीर्ती नाइकें न बोलें । चाड या विठ्ठलेंविण नाहीं ॥2॥
न पाहें लोचनीं श्रीमुखावांचूनि । पंढरी सांडूनि न वजें कोठें ॥3॥
न करीं कांहीं आस मुक्तीचे सायास । न भें संसारास येतां जातां ॥4॥
तुका म्हणे कांहीं व्हावें ऐसें जीवा । नाहीं या केशवाविण दुजें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will not worship other gods, nor will I serve them. I hold nothing dear besides Keshava.

What have I lacked at His feet that I should go begging elsewhere?

I will not hear or speak the praises of another. I have no longing for anything but Vitthala.

My eyes will not gaze upon anything other than His blessed face. I will not leave Pandhari for any other place.

I will not toil for liberation, nor do I fear the cycle of birth and death.

Says Tuka, if there is anything the jiva should desire, it is nothing other than Keshava.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will not worship other gods, nor serve them. I will hold nothing in mind but Keshava. What have I lacked at his feet, that I should go begging to anyone else? I will not hear or speak another's praise; I have no need but Vitthala. My eyes will not look on anything but his blessed face. I will not leave Pandhari for any other place. I will not toil for liberation, and I do not fear birth and death, coming or going. Tuka says: if the soul should want anything, let it want nothing but Keshava.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is taking a vow of single, exclusive love and naming everything it shuts out. He will not bow to other gods, will not borrow another's praises, will not let his eyes rest on any face but his Lord's, and will never leave Pandhari. He turns even spiritual ambition aside: he refuses to strain after liberation, and he is not afraid of the round of birth and death. Each line strips away one more thing a person might chase, until only Keshava is left. The claim is total: the rightful single object of a soul's desire is God, and nothing besides.

GATHA 1458 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, truth tested in the living

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे खळवादी मता च पुरता । सत्याची हे सत्ता उपदेश ॥1॥
साक्षत्वेंसी मना आणावीं उत्तरें । परिपाकीं खरें खोटें कळे ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे एकदेशी शब्द हा उखता । ब्रह्मांडापुरता घेईल त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका विनवणी करी जाणतियां । बहुमतें वांयां श्रमों नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is not the argument of a quarrelsome mind or a merely opinionated stance. This is the authority of truth itself, presented as teaching.

Let the answers be brought home to the mind through personal witness; ripening reveals what is true and what is false.

This word is not partial or limited; it will encompass the entire universe for whoever grasps it.

Says Tuka, I appeal to the discerning: do not exhaust yourselves chasing many doctrines.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is not the talk of a quarrelsome mind, nor a mere opinion held to its end. This is the authority of truth itself, given as teaching. Bring the answers home to your mind by your own witnessing; in the ripening, true and false become clear. This word is not partial or small; for whoever grasps it, it holds the whole universe. Tuka makes his appeal to the discerning: do not wear yourselves out chasing many doctrines.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is staking the worth of his teaching on truth, not on cleverness. He insists this is not the noise of a contentious man or one more stubborn opinion, but the plain authority of what is real. He asks the listener not to take it on his word but to test it in direct experience, because time and ripening will sort the true from the false. He claims the word is not narrow: rightly received, it opens onto the whole of reality. He closes with a plea to the discerning, the same warning he gives elsewhere, against exhausting oneself running after doctrine upon doctrine.

GATHA 1459 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, purify the mind daily

मराठी मूळ

या चि नांवें दोष । राहे अंतरीं किल्मष ॥1॥
मना अंगीं पुण्य पाप । शुभ उत्तम संकल्प ॥ध्रु.॥
बिजाऐसीं फळें । उत्तम कां अमंगळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त । शुद्ध करावें हे नित ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is called sin is merely the impurity that lingers within. Merit and sin dwell in the mind; pure and noble thoughts are their remedy.

As the seed, so the fruit: noble or inauspicious.

Says Tuka, the chitta should be purified every single day.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What we call sin is only the impurity that stays inside. Merit and sin live in the mind; pure and good resolve is where they turn. As the seed, so the fruit: good, or unwholesome. Tuka says: the mind should be made clean, every single day.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is relocating sin from the outer act to the inner state. What we name as sin is simply the residue that lingers in the heart; merit and sin both have their home in the mind, and it is intention that decides which way a life bends. He puts it as a law of nature: the fruit can only match the seed, so a noble resolve grows noble fruit and a foul one grows the opposite. From this follows the single instruction, framed not as a one-time cleansing but as daily work: keep the mind purified every day.

GATHA 1460 True Worship

True worship, the simple-hearted lover of the Name

मराठी मूळ

कुशळ वक्ता नव्हे जाणीव श्रोता । राहे भाव चित्ता धरूनियां ॥1॥
धन्य तो जगीं धन्य तो जगीं । ब्रह्म तया अंगीं वसतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
न धोवी तोंड न करी अंघोळी । जपे सदाकाळीं रामराम ॥2॥
जप तप ध्यान नेणे याग युक्ती । कृपाळु जो भूतीं दयावंत ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे होय जाणोनि नेणता । आवडे अनंता जीवाहूनि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is not the clever speaker, nor the learned listener. He simply holds devotion within his chitta.

Blessed is he in this world, truly blessed, for Brahman dwells within him.

He does not wash his face or take a ritual bath, yet he ceaselessly chants Rama, Rama.

He knows nothing of chanting, penance, meditation, or sacrificial technique, but he is compassionate and kind to all beings.

Says Tuka, he who knowingly becomes as if unknowing is dearer to the Infinite than the jiva itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is not the clever speaker, nor the learned listener. He just keeps devotion in his heart. Blessed is he in this world, truly blessed; Brahman lives in him. He does not wash his face or take a ritual bath, yet all day long he says Rama, Rama. He knows nothing of chanting, penance, meditation, or the rules of sacrifice, but he is kind and merciful to every creature. Tuka says: the one who, knowing, becomes as if he knew nothing is dearer to the Infinite than life itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming who really belongs to God, and it is not the skilled or the studied. It is the unremarkable man who simply holds love in his heart; Brahman dwells in him, and that makes him the blessed one. He keeps none of the outward forms, no ritual bath, no learned technique of penance or sacrifice, but the Name is always on his lips and he is gentle with every living thing. The closing line turns the usual hierarchy over: the soul who lays down its cleverness and becomes simple is dearer to God than anything. Learning is not the measure; mercy and the Name are.

GATHA 1461 The Power of the Name

The Name, the hour time cannot touch

मराठी मूळ

काळाचिया सत्ता ते नाहीं घटिका । पंढरीनायका आठवितां ॥1॥
सदाकाळ गणना करी आयुष्याची । कथेचे वेळेची आज्ञा नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
याकारणें माझ्या विठोबाची कीर्तिन । आहे हे त्रिजगतीं थोर वाट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन्मा आलियाचें फळ । स्मरावा गोपाळ तें चि खरें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Time has no power over the moment spent remembering the Lord of Pandhari.

Time forever counts down one's lifespan, but it has no command over the hour of sacred story.

For this reason, the fame of my Vithoba is known across the three worlds as supremely great.

Says Tuka, the true fruit of being born in this world is to remember Gopala. That alone is real.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Time has no power over the moment spent remembering the Lord of Pandhari. Time forever counts down our days, but it has no command over the hour given to sacred story. So the fame of my Vithoba is known across the three worlds as great. Tuka says: the true fruit of being born is to remember Gopala. That alone is real.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is setting one moment outside the reach of death. Time is always tallying our lifespan, drawing it down toward its end, but the moment given to remembering the Lord of Pandhari falls under no such count. The hour of kirtan, of sacred telling, is exempt from time's authority. That, he says, is why Vithoba's renown stands as supreme across the three worlds. He lands the claim plainly: the one real fruit of a human birth is to remember Gopala, and nothing else can be called real in the same way.

GATHA 1462 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the poet who never tasted grace

मराठी मूळ

घरोघरीं बहु जाले कवि । नेणे प्रसादाची चवी ॥1॥
लंडा भूषणांची चाड । पुढें न विचारी नाड ॥ध्रु.॥
काढावें आइतें। तें चि जोडावें स्वहितें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळे । परि होताती अंधळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In every household, many poets have appeared, but none of them know the taste of God's true grace.

The wretch craves ornaments of fame without considering the ruin ahead.

One should extract what is readily available and apply it for one's own true welfare.

Says Tuka, people understand this, yet they choose to remain blind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In every house many poets have appeared, but none of them knows the taste of grace. The wretch craves ornaments of fame and does not look ahead to the ruin. One should take up what is ready at hand and turn it to one's own true good. Tuka says: they understand it, yet they go on being blind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is turning a hard eye on verse-makers, his own trade, who write without ever tasting what they describe. Poets are everywhere, he says, but skill with words is not the same as knowing the flavor of grace. The one driven by craving for praise decorates himself with fame and never reckons with the ruin it leads to. The instruction is to take the grace that is freely available and use it for one's actual welfare. The sting is in the close: people see this clearly enough, yet they choose blindness anyway. The criticism points at the appetite for applause, not at any one person.

GATHA 1463 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, keep away from the corrupting eye

मराठी मूळ

नये पाहों मुख मात्रागमन्याचें । तैसें अभक्ताचें गुरुपुत्रा ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि बरें धरितां एकांत । तेणें नव्हे घात भजनासी ॥ध्रु.॥
नये होऊं कदा निंदकाची भेटी । जया द्वैत पोटीं चांडाळाच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नका बोलों त्यासी गोष्टी । जयाचिये दृष्टी पाप वाढे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not look upon the face of an adulterous person, nor, for a guru's son, upon that of a non-devotee.

Therefore it is good to keep to solitude, for this does no harm to one's devotion.

One should never meet a slanderer who carries duality in the belly of one truly fallen.

Says Tuka, do not even speak with one in whose gaze sin multiplies.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One should not look on the face of an adulterer, nor, for a guru's son, on the face of a non-devotee. So it is good to keep to solitude; that does no harm to devotion. Never meet the slanderer who carries duality in his belly, fallen as an outcaste. Tuka says: do not even speak with the one in whose gaze sin grows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is counseling the devotee to guard his company, because corrupting influence works through nearness. He uses sharp comparisons to mark the people to avoid: the one who betrays his vows, the non-devotee, the slanderer whose inner life is split and divisive. His remedy is solitude, which costs devotion nothing and protects it. The point is not to despise these people as persons but to recognize that close association with certain patterns, treachery, contempt, the appetite for tearing others down, will feed the same patterns in oneself. So he says do not even keep up conversation where the very gaze nourishes sin.

GATHA 1464 Social Criticism

Social criticism, kirtan sold for money

मराठी मूळ

कथा करोनिया द्रव्य घेती देती । तयां अधोगति नरकवास ॥1॥
रवरव कुंभपाक भोगिती यातना । नये नारायणा करुणा त्यांची ॥ध्रु.॥
असिखड्गधारा छेदिती सर्वांग । तप्तभूमी अंग लोळविती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तया नरक न चुकती । सांपडले हातीं यमाचिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who perform kirtan for money and take payment for it will descend to the lower regions and dwell in hell.

They shall endure the torments of Raurava and Kumbhipaka; Narayana will show them no mercy.

The sword's edge will cut their limbs, and their bodies will be rolled upon burning ground.

Says Tuka, they shall not escape hell, for they have fallen into the hands of Yama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who perform the sacred telling for money, taking and giving payment, go down to the lower worlds and dwell in hell. They suffer the torments of Raurava and Kumbhipaka; Narayana shows them no mercy. The sword's edge cuts their whole body, and they are rolled on burning ground. Tuka says: they do not escape hell, for they have fallen into the hands of Yama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is condemning the practice of turning kirtan into a paid transaction. To take money for the sacred telling is, in his eyes, to sell what cannot be sold, and he says the seller descends to the lowest worlds. He names the hells, Raurava and Kumbhipaka, and the tortures of blade and burning ground, insisting even Narayana withholds mercy here. The vivid punishments are meant to weigh the seriousness of the offense, not to gloat. The pattern under attack is making devotion a trade for profit; the self-examination he forces is whether we use what is holy as a means to gain.

GATHA 1465 Social Criticism

Social criticism, knowledge without devotion

मराठी मूळ

नाइकावे कानीं तयाचे ते बोल । भक्तीविण फोल ज्ञान सांगे ॥1॥
वाखाणी अद्वैत भक्तिभावेंविण । दुःख पावे सीण श्रोता वक्ता ॥ध्रु.॥
अहं ब्रह्म ह्मणोनि पिाळत पिंडा । नो बोलावें भांडा तया सवें ॥2॥
वेदबाहए लंड बोले जो पाषांड । त्याचें काळें तोंड संतांमध्ये ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे खंडी देवभक्तपण । वरिष्ठ त्याहूनि श्वपच तो ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not listen to the words of one who speaks of knowledge without devotion.

He who praises non-duality without the spirit of devotion brings only suffering and weariness to speaker and listener alike.

He claims "I am Brahman" while clinging to the body. Do not argue with such a person.

The one who speaks filth and heresy outside the bounds of the Vedas has a blackened face among the saints.

Says Tuka, whoever destroys the bond between God and devotee is lower than a shvapach.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not let his words into your ears: he teaches knowledge with no devotion in it; it is hollow. He praises non-duality with no love behind it. Speaker and listener both come away in pain and weariness. He says, "I am Brahman," while he still feeds and pampers his own body. Do not even argue with such a quarreler. The one who talks filth, who teaches heresy outside the Vedas, his face is blackened among the saints. Tuka says: whoever breaks apart God and devotee is lower than an outcaste who eats dog.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks a specific failure: the teacher who recites high Advaita doctrine, "I am Brahman," while clinging to and indulging the very body that claim is supposed to undo. He says such teaching is empty and wearying for everyone, because the words have no devotion in them; non-duality spoken without love does not free the listener, it tires him. The harshness is aimed at the pattern of using lofty knowledge as cover for self-indulgence, not at any one person. The test he applies is whether the teaching binds the devotee to God or tears that bond apart. By calling such a one lower than an outcaste, he refuses to let learned speech buy respect when the life behind it is hollow.

GATHA 1466 Social Criticism

Discipline, observe the rite until the mind dissolves

मराठी मूळ

वेदविहित तुह्मी आइका हो कर्में । बोलतों तीं वर्में संतांपुढे ॥1॥
चारी वर्ण जाले एकाचिये अंगीं । पापपुण्य भागीं विभागिलें ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रथम पाउलीं पावविला पंथ । आदि मध्य अंत भेद नाहीं ॥2॥
आंबे बोरी वड बाभुळा चंदन । गुणागुणें भिन्न अग्न एक ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मन उन्मन जों होय । तोंवरि हे सोय विधि पाळीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, O people, to the rites ordained by the Vedas. I speak these truths before the saints.

The four castes arose from one body; merit and sin were apportioned to each. From the very first step, the path was shown.

There is no difference of beginning, middle, or end. Mango, jujube, banyan, thorny acacia, and sandalwood are all different, but the fire that burns them is one.

Says Tuka, until the mind rises into unmana, observe the prescribed way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, all of you, to the works the Vedas ordain. I speak the heart of these things before the saints. The four castes arose from one single body; sin and merit were portioned out to each. From the very first step the path was shown; there is no real difference of beginning, middle, or end. Mango, jujube, banyan, acacia, sandalwood: different in their qualities, but the fire that burns them is one. Tuka says: until the mind passes into unmana, hold to this way, keep the prescribed rite.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks here to people who would drop their prescribed duties too soon, claiming they are above the rules. He grants that the differences are real on the surface, the four castes, the many kinds of wood, the merit and sin apportioned to each, yet the underlying fire, the one source, is single. His instruction is practical: do not abandon the prescribed observances until the mind has actually dissolved into the state beyond thought that he calls unmana. The point is that oneness is the destination, not a license to skip the path; until the mind truly rests in that, the rite still holds. He names this before the saints to mark it as sober teaching, not boasting.

GATHA 1467 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Brahman stands at Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

तीर्थांचे मूळ व्रतांचें फळ । ब्रह्म तें केवळ पंढरिये ॥1॥
तें आह्मीं देखिलें आपुल्या नयनीं । फिटलीं पारणीं डोळयांचीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जीवांचें जीवन सुखाचें सेजार । उभें कटीं कर ठेवूनियां ॥2॥
जनाचा जनिता कृपेचा सागर । दीनां लोभापार दुष्टां काळ ॥3॥
सुरवरां चिंतनीं मुनिवरां ध्यानीं । आकार निर्गुणीं तें चि असे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं श्रुती आतुडलें । आह्मां सांपडलें गीती गातां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The source of all pilgrimages and the fruit of all vows: Brahman in its fullness resides at Pandhari.

I have seen it with my own eyes, and the longing of my gaze has been satisfied.

He is the life of all jivas, the very companion of bliss, standing with hands placed upon His waist.

He is the creator of all beings, an ocean of mercy, full of love for the lowly and terrible to the wicked.

He is the subject of the gods' contemplation and the object of the sages' meditation; that same nirguna one abides here in form.

Says Tuka, even the Vedas could not fully grasp Him, but we have found Him simply by singing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The source of every pilgrimage, the fruit of every vow: Brahman itself, whole and entire, is here at Pandhari. I have seen it with my own eyes; the long thirst of my gaze is broken at last. He is the life of all living things, the very neighbor of bliss, standing with his hands resting on his hips. He is the maker of all people, an ocean of mercy, beyond measure of love to the lowly, death to the wicked. The gods hold him in thought, the sages in meditation; that same one beyond form stands here in form. Tuka says: the Vedas could not lay hold of him, but we found him simply by singing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is claiming that the whole point of pilgrimage and vows is already standing in plain sight at Pandhari, in the form of Vitthal with hands on his hips. The formless Brahman that the gods only contemplate and the sages only meditate on has, he says, taken visible form here, and he insists he has actually seen it. The closing turn is the sting and the joy: what the Vedas, with all their learning, could not grasp, ordinary devotees laid hold of just by singing his name. The poem sets the simple path of song and sight above the high road of doctrine, and roots the abstract in a particular God at a particular place.

GATHA 1468 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the measure filled to overflowing

मराठी मूळ

माझे मनोरथ पावले सिद्धी । तई पायीं बुिद्ध िस्थरावली ॥1॥
समाधान जीव राहिला निश्चळ । गेली हळहळ स्मरण हें ॥ध्रु.॥
त्रिविध तापाचें जालेंसे दहन । सुखावलें मन प्रेमसुखें ॥2॥
महालाभ वाचे वसे पांडुरंग । अंगोअंगीं संग अखंडित ॥3॥
जीवनाचा जाला ओलावा अंतरीं । विश्व विश्वंभरीं सामावलें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे माप भरी आलें सिगे । धारबोळ गंगे पूर वाहे ॥5॥
बहुतांच्या भाग्यें लागलें जाहाज । येथें आतां काज लवलाहें ॥ध्रु.॥
अलभ्य तें आलें दारावरी फुका । येथें आता चुका न पाहिजे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जिव्हाश्रवणाच्या द्वारें । माप भरा वरें सिगेवरि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My desires have been fulfilled, and now my buddhi rests steadily at His feet.

The jiva has found contentment and become still; all restlessness and agitation have ceased.

The threefold suffering has been burned away, and the mind is immersed in the bliss of love.

The great treasure of Panduranga abides on my tongue, and His presence is unbroken in every fiber of my being.

The moisture of living water has seeped into my innermost self, and the universe has merged into the Lord of the universe.

Says Tuka, the measure has been filled to the brim, and the Ganga runs in full flood. By the good fortune of many, this ship has arrived; now is the time to act with haste.

The unattainable has come to your very door for free; there should be no mistake now. Says Tuka, through the gates of tongue and ear, fill the measure to overflowing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My longing has reached its goal; now my mind rests steady at his feet. The soul has found its peace and grown still; all the burning and fretting is gone, and so is even the need to remember. The threefold suffering has burned away; the mind is sweetened with the joy of love. The great treasure, Panduranga, lives on my tongue; his nearness is unbroken in every limb. The wetness of living water has soaked through to my core; the whole world has merged into the Lord of the world. Tuka says: the measure is filled to the brim, and the Ganga runs in flood. By the good fortune of many the ship has come in; now is the time to act, quickly. What could never be reached has come free to your very door; do not miss it now. Tuka says: through the gates of tongue and ear, fill your measure past the brim.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram describing the state where wanting itself has ended; the mind no longer chases or even has to keep reminding itself of God, because the threefold suffering has burned off and love has taken its place. He piles up images of fullness: the Name living on his tongue, the world dissolving back into its Lord, a measuring vessel heaped past its rim, the sacred river in flood. Then he turns from his own experience to call others in. The unreachable has arrived for free at the doorstep, and the way to receive it is simple and within reach: through the tongue that sings the Name and the ear that hears it. The urgency is the heart of the poem; a rare chance has come, and he tells the listener not to waste it.

GATHA 1469 Prayers

Prayer, take me up out of the wheel

मराठी मूळ

पापपुण्यसुखदुःखाचीं मंडळें । एक एकाबळें वाव घेती ॥1॥
कवतुक डोळां पाहिलें सकळ । नाचवितो काळ जीवांसी तो ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वर्गाचिया भोगें सरतां नरक । मागें पुढें एक एक दोन्ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भय उपजलें मना । घेई नारायणा कडिये मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The circles of sin and merit, joy and sorrow, each overtake the other by turns.

I have watched this spectacle with my own eyes: Time makes all beings dance.

When the pleasures of heaven are exhausted, hell follows. Before and behind, each of the two alternates endlessly.

Says Tuka, fear has arisen in my mind. Take me upon Your hip, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The rings of sin and merit, of joy and sorrow, each overtakes the other by turns. I have watched the whole show with my own eyes: Time makes all living beings dance. When the pleasures of heaven run out, hell comes next; behind and ahead, the two keep trading places. Tuka says: fear has risen in my mind. Lift me onto your hip, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is looking at the wheel of reward and punishment and seeing no rest in it: merit buys heaven, but when the merit is spent, hell follows, and the two simply alternate without end. He calls it a spectacle, a dance that Time choreographs over every creature, and watching it honestly is what frightens him. The fear is not weakness but clear sight; he knows that even the highest reward is temporary and will reverse. So he does not ask for better fortune within the wheel. He asks Narayana to pick him up like a child onto the hip, to be carried out of the turning altogether by grace rather than earning.

GATHA 1470 Faith and Trust

Faith, God does not go back on his word

मराठी मूळ

वचना फिरती अधम जन । नारायण तो नव्हे ॥1॥
केला आतां अंगीकार । न मनी भार समर्थ ॥ध्रु.॥
संसाराचा नाहीं पांग । देव सांग सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कीर्त वाणूं । मध्यें नाणूं संकल्प ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The base may go back on their word, but Narayana never does.

He has now accepted me; the Capable One does not consider it a burden.

The scheme of worldly life holds nothing; God is the whole of everything.

Says Tuka, I will sing His glory and not let any doubts intrude.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Base people break their word, but Narayana is not like them. He has accepted me now; the Capable One does not feel me as a burden. The whole scheme of worldly life holds nothing; God is everything entire. Tuka says: I will sing his glory, and let no doubt slip in between.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rests his whole confidence on the reliability of God. People may take you up and then drop you, but Narayana, having once accepted him, will not treat him as a weight to be set down. From this he draws the conclusion that worldly life offers nothing solid to lean on, while God is the entirety. The closing line names the discipline that faith requires: he will keep singing the glory and refuse to let doubt creep in midway. The poem is less about feeling than about a settled decision to trust a promise that, unlike human promises, will hold.

GATHA 1471 Social Criticism

Social criticism, kirtan sold for a price

मराठी मूळ

कथा करोनियां मोल ज्यापें घेती । ते ही दोघे जाती नरकामध्यें ॥1॥
ब्रह्म पूर्ण करा ब्रह्म पूर्ण करा । अखंड स्मरा रामराम ॥ध्रु.॥
मधुरवाणीच्या नका पडों भरी । जाल यमपुरी भोगावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करीं ब्रह्मांड ठेंगणें । हात पसरी जिणें धिग त्याचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who perform kirtan for a price, and those who pay for it, both go to hell.

Fill yourselves with Brahman, fill yourselves with Brahman. Chant Rama, Rama without ceasing.

Do not fall for honeyed words, or you will end up enduring the torments of Yama's city.

Says Tuka, one who can make the universe seem small yet stretches out his hand to beg: cursed be his life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who tell the sacred story for a price, and those who pay them for it: both go to hell. Fill yourself full with Brahman, fill yourself full with Brahman; remember Rama, Rama, without a break. Do not fall under the spell of sweet honeyed words, or you will end up paying for it in Yama's city. Tuka says: a man who could make the whole universe look small, yet holds out his hand to beg, cursed be that life of his.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram condemns turning sacred storytelling into a transaction, and he puts both sides under the same judgment: the one who sells the kirtan and the one who buys it. Against the smooth, sweet-talking performer he sets the real thing, ceaseless remembrance of the Name, and warns that being charmed by honeyed delivery leads to suffering, not freedom. His sharpest line is about waste: a person whose spiritual reach is so vast he could make the cosmos seem tiny, who then shrinks himself to begging, has thrown his own life away. The criticism aims at the pattern of trading God for gain, and invites the listener to check whether his own devotion is for sale.

GATHA 1472 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, knowledge needs devotion to be whole

मराठी मूळ

गोड नांवें क्षीर । परी साकरेचा धीर ॥1॥
तैसें जाणा ब्रह्मज्ञान । बापुडें तें भक्तीविण ॥ध्रु.॥
रुची नेदी अन्न । ज्यांत नसतां लवण ॥2॥
अंधळ्याचे श्रम । शिकविल्याचें चि नाम ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तारा । नाव तंबु†याच्या सारा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Milk is called sweet, but sugar brings it to perfection. Know that Brahman-knowledge without devotion is just as incomplete.

Food without salt gives no pleasure.

The efforts of the blind are toil in name only, mere rote learning.

Says Tuka, steer the boat with the rudder of devotion and carry it safely across.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Milk is called sweet, but it is sugar that gives it its strength. Know that knowledge of Brahman is like this: poor and helpless without devotion. Food gives no taste when there is no salt in it. The toil of the blind man is effort in name only, learning by rote what he was told. Tuka says: steer the boat, carry it across with the rudder of devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Through a string of homely images, milk needing sugar, food needing salt, a boat needing a rudder, Tukaram makes one point: knowledge of Brahman is incomplete and even helpless on its own, and devotion is what completes it. The image of the blind man's toil names the danger of doctrine without love; it becomes mere recitation of what one was told, effort that goes nowhere. He is not dismissing knowledge but insisting it needs the thing that gives it savor and direction. The closing rudder image makes devotion not a decoration on knowledge but the very means by which one is carried across.

GATHA 1473 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, humility captures the Infinite

मराठी मूळ

नम्र जाला भूतां । तेणें कोंडिलें अनंता ॥1॥
हें चि शूरत्वाचे अंग । हरी आणिला श्रीरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा जाला पण । लवण सकळां कारण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाणी । पाताळ तें परी खणी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who became humble before all beings has captured the Infinite.

This is the true mark of valor: he has drawn Shri Ranga, Hari Himself, near.

Like salt that dissolves completely, he has become essential to all.

Says Tuka, water lies deep underground, yet one must dig to reach it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who became humble before all beings has fenced in the Infinite itself. This is the real mark of courage: he has drawn Hari, Shri Ranga, to himself. He became as everyone's, like salt that is the cause of taste in everything. Tuka says: the water is there in the depths, yet you still have to dig the well to reach it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines strength. The one who makes himself humble before every creature has, paradoxically, captured the uncapturable God, and that, not force, is true valor. He uses salt as the image of this humility: salt disappears into a dish yet makes everything taste right, so the humble person dissolves into service of all and becomes essential. The final line keeps it honest about effort. The water of grace is already present in the depths, but it does not pour out on its own; you must still dig the well, that is, do the work of becoming humble. Greatness here is won by lowering oneself, deliberately and steadily.

GATHA 1474 Prayers

Prayer, look past my merits and faults

मराठी मूळ

आपुल्या महिमानें । धातु परिसें केलें सोनें ॥1॥
तैसें न मनीं माझे आतां । गुणदोष पंढरिनाथा ॥ध्रु.॥
गांवाखालील वाहाळ । गंगा न मनी अमंगळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माती । केली कस्तुरीनें सरती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By its own glory, the philosopher's stone transforms base metal into gold.

Likewise, O Lord of Pandhari, do not look at my merits and flaws.

The Ganga does not consider the village drain impure.

Says Tuka, even common clay, when mixed with musk, passes for precious.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By its own power the philosopher's stone turned base metal into gold. In the same way, Lord of Pandhari, do not weigh my virtues and faults now. The Ganga does not count the drain below the village as unclean. Tuka says: even plain dirt, once mixed with musk, is taken as something worth having.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks Vitthal not to judge him by his own good and bad qualities, because his hope rests entirely on God's transforming power, not on his own worth. Three images carry the plea: the stone that makes base metal gold without asking what the metal deserves, the Ganga that does not refuse the dirty village runoff, and common dirt that becomes precious once it touches musk. In each, the lowly thing is lifted by contact with something greater, not by anything in itself. The prayer is an appeal to grace over merit; he does not claim to be worthy, he claims that God's nearness is what makes anything worthy.

GATHA 1475 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the greedy performer

मराठी मूळ

आशाबद्ध वक्ता । भय श्रोतयाच्या चित्ता ॥1॥
गातो तें चि नाहीं ठावें । तोंड वासी कांहीं द्यावें ॥ध्रु.॥
जालें लोभाचें मांजर । भीक मागे दारोदार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गोणी । माप आणि रितीं दोन्ही ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The speaker is bound by his own greed, and the listener's chitta trembles with fear.

The performer does not know what he sings; he merely opens his mouth for whatever is given.

He has become a cat of greed, begging from door to door.

Says Tuka, both the measure and the sack stand empty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The speaker is tied up by his own craving, and the listener's heart fills with unease. He does not even know what he is singing; he just opens his mouth for whatever you will hand him. He has turned into a cat of greed, begging from door to door. Tuka says: both the measuring cup and the sack are empty.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws the figure of a performer whose devotion has been hollowed out by greed, so that even the listener feels the wrongness of it. The man recites without understanding a word; his only real aim is the handout, and Tukaram likens him to a cat slinking from door to door. The closing image is the verdict: both the measure and the sack are empty, meaning there is nothing of substance on either side, no true knowledge given and no real gain kept. The portrait points at the pattern of mouthing sacred words for what they fetch, and quietly asks the listener whether his own singing is full or empty.

GATHA 1476 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hypocrite teacher

मराठी मूळ

तक्र शिष्या मान । दुग्धा ह्मणे नारायण ॥1॥
ऐशीं ज्ञानाचीं डोबडें । आशा विटंबिलीं मूढें ॥ध्रु.॥
उपदेश तो जगा । आपण सोंवळा इतका मांगा ॥2॥
रसनाशिश्नाचे अंकित । तुका ह्मणे वरदळ ि्स्पत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He gives buttermilk to his disciples and calls the milk an offering to Narayana.

Such are the tattered rags of his so-called knowledge; desire has ruined the fool.

He preaches to the world while keeping himself pure, as far removed from practice as one cast out.

Says Tuka, a slave to his tongue and his loins, his surface sheen is nothing but brass.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He hands his disciples buttermilk and calls the milk an offering to Narayana. Such are the tattered bundles of his knowledge; desire has made a fool of him and disgraced him. He preaches to the whole world while keeping himself apart and clean, as far from his own teaching as an outcaste is kept away. Tuka says: a slave to his tongue and his loins, his shine on the surface is only brass.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the teacher who keeps the good thing for himself and passes off the lesser thing on others, giving disciples buttermilk while reserving and renaming the milk. His knowledge, dressed up to look like wealth, is really rags, and craving has both fooled and shamed him. The deepest charge is the split between word and life: he preaches to everyone yet stays as far from his own teaching as one cast out, ruled underneath by appetite and lust. The brass that only looks like gold names the whole problem, a surface sheen with no metal behind it. The verse aims at the pattern of teaching one thing and living another, and asks the listener to test the shine.

GATHA 1477 The Moral Ideal

The ladder of stations, observance is everything

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मचारी धर्म घोकावें अक्षर । आश्रमीं विचार षटकर्मे ॥1॥
वानप्रस्थ तरी संयोगीं वियोग । संन्यास तो त्याग संकल्पाचा ॥ध्रु.॥
परमहंस तरी जाणे सहज वर्म । तेथें याती धर्म कुळ नाहीं ॥2॥
बोले वर्म जो चाले याविरहित । तो जाणा पतित श्रुति बोले ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं नाहीं नेमाविण । मोकळा तो सीण दुःख पावे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The celibate student's dharma is to study the sacred syllables. The householder's duty lies in the sixfold rites of his station.

The forest-dweller practices detachment within companionship. The sannyasi's true renunciation is the relinquishing of sankalpa itself.

The Paramahamsa knows the natural secret; for him, caste, family, and convention do not exist.

But whoever speaks of the secret yet acts against it should be known as a fallen one, so say the scriptures.

Says Tuka, without steadfast observance, there is nothing; the undisciplined one suffers in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The student's duty is to recite the sacred syllables. The householder's duty lies in the six rites of his station. The forest-dweller practices letting go even while he lives among others. The sannyasi's renunciation is the giving up of will itself. The Paramahamsa knows the natural secret; for him caste, family, and convention do not apply. But whoever speaks of the secret yet lives against it, know him as fallen; so the scriptures say. Tuka says: without steady observance there is nothing; the undisciplined one suffers for no reason.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram walks up the four stations of life, naming the one duty proper to each: the student recites, the householder performs his rites, the forest-dweller loosens his hold, the renouncer surrenders even his own willing. At the top stands the Paramahamsa, for whom caste and custom fall away because he has reached the natural secret. But the warning is the point: the secret is not a thing you can talk your way into. Anyone who preaches the freedom of the highest station while behaving against it is, by scripture's own word, a fallen man. The closing claim cuts both ways: discipline without realization is empty, but freedom claimed without discipline is fraud, and the man who skips the work simply suffers for nothing.

GATHA 1478 Autobiography

Self-portrait, the genuine renouncer

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी क्षेत्रींचे संन्यासी । देहभरित हृषीकेशी । नाहीं केली ऐशी । आशाकामबोहरी ॥1॥
आलें अयाचित अंगा । सहज तें आह्मां भागा । दाता पांडुरंगा । ऐसा करितां निंश्चती ॥ध्रु.॥
दंड धरिला दंडायमान । मुळीं मुंडिलें मुंडण । बंदी बंद कौपीन । बहिरवास औठडें ॥2॥
काळें साधियेला काळ । मन करूनि निश्चळ । लौकिकीं विटाळ । धरूनि असों ऐकांत ॥3॥
नव्हे वेषधारी । तुका आहाच वरवरी । आहे तैसीं बरीं। खंडें निवडितों वेदांची ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am a sannyasi of the field, my body filled with the Lord of the senses. I have not made such a thorough renunciation of desire and worldly enterprise.

Whatever comes to me unsought is naturally my share, for my benefactor is Panduranga. With this certainty I hold firm.

I have taken the staff of inner discipline, shaved my head in renunciation, and bound myself with the cord of the loincloth, wearing the outer garment of open sky. I have conquered Time by making the mind still.

In worldly eyes I keep the form of purity and dwell in solitude. Says Tuka, I am not a mere wearer of costumes; I am genuine, inside and out. I sift and sort the very syllables of the Vedas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am a sannyasi of this place, my body filled with the Lord of the senses. I have not made some grand show of giving up desire and worldly enterprise. Whatever comes to me unasked is my natural share, for Panduranga is my provider. Holding this, I am at peace. I have taken the staff of inner discipline, shaved my head at the root, bound myself with the cord of the loincloth, and worn the open sky for a robe. By stilling my mind I have conquered Time itself. In the world's eyes I keep the form of purity and live alone. Tuka says: I am no mere wearer of a costume; I am true within and without. I sift and sort the very syllables of the Vedas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes his renunciation from the inside, against the picture of the showy ascetic. He has not staged a dramatic abandonment of the world; instead he takes only what comes to him unbidden, trusting Panduranga as his sole provider, and that trust is what steadies him. The marks of his order, staff, shaved head, loincloth, the bare sky for clothing, he reads inwardly: real discipline, real cutting, real exposure, a mind stilled until Time has no grip on him. The sting in the poem is the distinction between the costume and the man. He insists he is not a veshadhari, one who merely puts on the robe; he is genuine inside and out, and his authority over the very words of the Veda comes from that, not from the outfit.

GATHA 1479 Renunciation

Rule of the hermit, the heart as the only seat

मराठी मूळ

निर्वाहापुरतें अन्न आच्छादन । आश्रमासी स्थान कोंपी गुहा ॥1॥
कोठें ही चित्तासी नसावें बंधन । हृदयीं नारायण सांटवावा ॥ध्रु.॥
नये बोलों फार बैसों जनामधीं । सावधान बुद्धी इंद्रियें दमी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घडी घडीनें साधावी । त्रिगुणांची गोवी उगवूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Take only enough food and clothing for sustenance. Let your hermitage be a hollow or a cave.

Let the chitta never be bound to anything. Store Narayana within your heart.

Do not speak too much or sit among crowds. Keep the buddhi alert and the senses under control.

Says Tuka, each moment should be won by untangling the entanglement of the three gunas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Take only enough food and clothing to get by. Let your dwelling be a hut or a cave. Let the mind be bound to nothing anywhere. Keep Narayana stored within your heart. Do not talk much or sit among crowds. Keep the understanding alert and the senses in check. Tuka says: each passing moment must be won, by untangling the knot of the three gunas.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a plain rule of life for one who wants God, given as a string of instructions. Tukaram strips outward needs to the minimum, food, clothing, a bare shelter, so nothing of the world's weight clings. The real instruction is inward: let the mind attach to nothing, and keep Narayana lodged in the heart as the one fixed point. Speech and company are cut back because they scatter attention, while the intellect stays watchful and the senses stay reined in. The closing line names the stakes: liberation is not won once and kept; it is won moment by moment, each instant a fresh untangling of the three gunas that keep weaving the self back into bondage.

GATHA 1480 Prayers

Surrender, holding God to his own promise

मराठी मूळ

जैसीं तैसीं तरी । शरणागतें तुझीं हरी ॥1॥
आतां न पाहिजे केलें । ब्रीद लटिकें आपुलें ॥ध्रु.॥
शुद्ध नाहीं चित्त । परी ह्मणवितों भक्त ॥2॥
मज कोण पुसे रंका । नाम सांगे तुझें तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

However imperfect we may be, we are still Yours, O Hari, surrendered at Your feet.

Now do not let Your own promise be proved false.

My chitta is not pure, yet I call myself Your devotee.

Who would pay attention to a poor wretch like me? Says Tuka, I simply repeat Your Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

However we are, good or bad, we are still Yours, Hari, fallen at Your feet for refuge. Now do not let it happen; do not let Your own pledge be proved false. My mind is not pure, yet I call myself Your devotee. Who would even ask after a beggar like me? Tuka says: I only speak Your Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes with empty hands and turns that emptiness into his claim. He admits he is not pure and not worthy, then makes the worthlessness itself the ground of his appeal: he has surrendered, so by Hari's own standing reputation as the saver of the fallen, the Lord cannot now abandon him. The poem holds God to his promise; to refuse this beggar would make that famous pledge a lie. Tukaram has nothing to offer except that he speaks the Name and calls himself a devotee, and he stakes everything on God's character rather than his own merit. It is the prayer of one who knows that no one else would bother with him, and that this is exactly why God must.

GATHA 1481 The Power of the Name

The Name, free and above the Vedas

मराठी मूळ

नाशवंत देह नासेल हा जाणा । कां रे उच्चाराना वाचे नाम ॥1॥
नामें चि तारिले कोटएान हे कोटी । नामें हे वैकुंठी बैसविले ॥ध्रु.॥
नामापरतें सार नाहीं त्रिभुवनीं । तें कां तुह्मी मनीं आठवाना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाम वेदांसी आगळें । तें दिलें गोपाळें फुकासाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This perishable body will surely perish. Why then do you not utter the Name with your tongue?

Through the Name alone, crores upon crores have been saved. Through the Name, they have been seated in Vaikuntha.

There is no greater essence in the three worlds than the Name. Why then do you not remember it in the mind?

Says Tuka, the Name surpasses even the Vedas, and Gopala has given it away for free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This perishable body will surely perish; know that. Why then will your tongue not utter the Name? By the Name alone, crores upon crores have been carried across. By the Name they have been seated in Vaikuntha. In the three worlds there is no essence greater than the Name. Why then do you not remember it in your mind? Tuka says: the Name surpasses even the Vedas, and Gopala has given it away for free.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the urgent question to a reluctant listener: the body is going to die, so why waste a tongue that could be saying the Name? He stacks the evidence, countless beings already saved and seated in Vaikuntha by the Name alone, to show this is the one essence worth anything in all three worlds. The reproach is gentle but real: the means of rescue is right there in the mouth and the mind, and people still neglect it. The boldest claim comes last. The Name stands higher than the Vedas themselves, the texts the learned guard and gatekeep, and yet Gopala has handed it out at no cost, to anyone, free. The hardest study and the simplest cry are not equal; the simple cry wins.

GATHA 1482 The Nature of God

God as mother, come and claim the love

मराठी मूळ

आळवितां बाळें । मातेतें सुख आगळें ॥1॥
द्यावें आवडी भातुकें । पाहे निवे कवतुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
लेववूनि अळंकार । दृष्टी करावी सादर ॥2॥
आपुलिये पदीं । बैसवूनि कोडें वंदी ॥3॥
नेदी लागों दिठी । उचलोनि लावी कंठीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे लाभा । वारी घ्या वो पद्मनाभा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a child cries out, the mother feels a joy beyond compare.

She gives the child its favorite toys and watches with delight.

She adorns it with ornaments and gazes at it lovingly.

She seats the child upon her own throne and bows before it with tender affection.

She will not let the evil eye touch it, lifting the child to her breast.

Says Tuka, come, claim the gift; come to Padmanabha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the child cries out, the mother feels a joy beyond all measure. She gives it the treats it loves and watches it, delighted. She dresses it in ornaments and gazes at it tenderly. She seats it on her own lap and fondly bows to it. She will not let the evil eye fall on it; she lifts it up and holds it to her throat. Tuka says: come, take the gain; come to Padmanabha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God as a mother and the devotee as her small child, to overturn how we imagine who wants whom. It is not the child working to win the mother; the mother's whole joy is the child, and she pours out treats, ornaments, gazing, a seat on her own lap, even a bow of love before it. She guards it from the evil eye and gathers it to her breast, doing all the seeking herself. The closing call lands the point as an invitation: the love is already waiting, the gain is already there, so simply come to Padmanabha. The devotee has only to cry out like the child and let himself be held.

GATHA 1483

The Power of the Name

The Name above all rites, and harm none

मराठी मूळ

तप तीर्थ दान व्रत आचरण । गातां हरिगुण वारूं नये ॥1॥
कोटि कुळें त्याचीं वाटुली पाहाती । त्या तया घडती ब्रह्महत्या ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलिया पापें न सुटे सायासें । कोणा काळें ऐसें निस्तरेल ॥2॥
व्हावें साहए तया न घलावें भय । फुकासाटीं पाहे लाभ घात ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हित माना या वचना ॥सुख दुःख जाणा साधे फुका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

While performing austerities, pilgrimages, charity, vows, and all observances, one must not stop singing the praises of Hari.

Countless generations of those who do will wait in vain, and the transgression of Brahma-murder accrues to them.

One who cannot rid oneself of personal wrongdoing through effort: how will one ever be free by such means?

Be helpful to others and do not frighten them. See, it costs nothing, yet both gain and loss hinge on it.

Says Tuka, heed this counsel. Know that joy and sorrow are governed for free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

While you do austerities, pilgrimages, charity, vows, every observance, do not stop singing the praises of Hari. Crores of generations of those who stop will wait in vain, and the guilt of Brahma-murder falls on them. One who cannot be freed of his own sins by effort: by what means, in what age, will he ever cross over? Be a help to others; do not put fear into them. See, it costs nothing, yet both gain and loss hang on it. Tuka says: take this counsel as your good. Know that joy and sorrow are settled for free.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram subordinates the whole machinery of religious works to one thing: never let the singing of Hari's praise stop, even mid-ritual. He warns that to abandon that singing is a ruin so deep he weighs it against Brahma-murder, the gravest of guilts, because effort and rites alone cannot scrub a man's own sin clean. Then he turns from ritual to conduct and names the real test: be of help to others and put fear into no one. He marks how cheap it is, it costs nothing, yet a person's whole gain or loss turns on it. The counsel he presses is that joy and sorrow are decided not by elaborate, expensive observance but by the free acts of remembering God and refusing to harm.

GATHA 1484 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the urgency that comes from merit

मराठी मूळ

देवासाटीं जाणा तयासी च आटी । असेल ज्या गांठीं पुण्यराशी ॥1॥
निर्बळा पाठवी बळें वाराणसी । मेला आला त्यासी अर्ध पुण्य ॥ध्रु.॥
कथें निद्राभंग करावा भोजनीं । तया सुखा धणी पार नाहीं ॥2॥
यागीं रीण घ्यावें द्यावें सुख लाहीं । बुडतां चिंता नाहीं उभयतां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे वर्म जाणोनि करावें । एक न घलावें एकावरी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know that only one who has a store of merit feels the urgency for God.

He sends the weak to Varanasi by force, and even one who dies on the way earns half the merit.

To break one's sleep during kirtan and to be disturbed during a meal for the sake of the story: there is no limit to that happiness.

In sacrifice, one may take on debt and give joy to others; when both go under, neither is burdened by anxiety.

Says Tuka, act with knowledge of the secret and do not pile one thing upon another.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know that only one with a hoard of merit feels the urgency for God. He sends the weak by force to Varanasi, and even one who dies on the road earns half the merit. To break your sleep for the kirtan, to be interrupted at your meal for the sake of the story: there is no limit to that happiness. In the sacrifice, take on the debt and give the joy to others; when both go under, neither is left burdened with worry. Tuka says: act knowing the secret of it, and do not pile one thing on top of another.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram observes that the very longing for God is itself a sign of stored-up merit; not everyone even feels the pull. He then prizes the small disruptions devotion costs, losing sleep for the kirtan, having a meal cut short for the holy story, as joys without limit, because they put God's tale ahead of the body's comfort. His odd-sounding counsel about sacrifice means: gladly bear the cost and debt yourself and let others have the happiness, for when self-interest is fully spent on both sides, no anxiety is left to anyone. The closing warning is to act with understanding of this secret and not to heap up observance upon observance mechanically; what matters is the spirit, the readiness to be inconvenienced for God and to carry the cost for others.

GATHA 1485 The Moral Ideal

Lowliness is the secret, the reed outlasts the tree

मराठी मूळ

अग्नीमाजी पडे धातु । लीन होउनि राहे अतु । होय शुद्ध न पवे घातु । पटतंतुप्रमाण ॥1॥
बाहएरंगाचें कारण । मिथ्या अवघें चि भाषण । गर्व ताठा हें अज्ञान । मरण सवें वाहातसे ॥ध्रु.॥
पुरें मातलिया नदी । लव्हा नांदे जीवनसंधी । वृक्ष उन्मळोनि भेदी । परि तो कधीं भंगेना ॥2॥
हस्ती परदळ तें भंगी । तया पायीं न मरे मुंगी । कोण जाय संगी । पाणोवाणी तयेच्या ॥3॥
पिटितां घणें वरि सैरा । तया पोटीं राहे हिरा । तैशा काय तगती गारा । तया थोरा होऊनि ॥4॥
लीन दीन हें चि सार । भव उतरावया पार। बुडे माथां भार । तुका ह्मणें वाहोनि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When metal enters fire, it becomes one with the flame, remaining pure and unharmed, like thread within cloth. All outward display is false talk.

Pride and arrogance are ignorance, carrying death along with them.

When a flood swells, the mightiest trees are uprooted, but the tender reed survives by bending.

The elephant shatters the enemy's army, yet the ant at its feet remains unharmed. Who can match the ant's gentle ways?

When struck by a hammer repeatedly, the diamond in the belly of the stone endures, while stones of that same size would shatter.

Says Tuka, lowness and smallness are the true essence for crossing the ocean of existence. Those who load their heads with the weight of their own doing will drown.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When metal goes into the fire, it sinks down and stays low, and so it comes out pure and unbroken, like thread held within the cloth. All outward show is nothing but empty talk. Pride and stiffness are ignorance; they carry death along with them. When the river floods and rages, the great trees are torn up and broken, but the slender reed lives on in the rush of water. The elephant shatters the enemy's ranks, yet the ant at its feet is not killed; who can keep up with the ant's gentle ways? When the hammer beats down hard, the diamond inside the stone endures, while pebbles of that same size are smashed. Tuka says: lowliness and smallness are the very essence for crossing the ocean of being. Those who carry the weight on their own heads will drown.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images to teach one truth: it is lowliness, not greatness, that survives. The metal that sinks low in the fire comes out pure; the reed that bends lives while the proud tree is uprooted; the ant at the elephant's foot is unharmed where armies are crushed; the diamond endures the hammer that shatters bigger stones. Each picture sets a small, yielding thing against a large, rigid one, and the small one wins. Against this he names pride and stiffness as ignorance, mere outward show that drags death behind it. The closing turns it into a rule for the spiritual life: meekness and smallness are the actual means of crossing the ocean of existence, and anyone who insists on carrying the weight of his own self-importance on his head will sink under it.

GATHA 1486 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the warriors of the Name

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी वीर जुंझार । करूं जमदाढे मार । तापटिले भार । मोड जाला दोषांचा ॥1॥
जाला हाहाकार । आले हांकीत जुंझार । शंखचक्रांचे शृंगार । कंठीं हार तुळसीचे ॥ध्रु.॥
रामनामांकित बाण । गोपी लाविला चंदन । झळकती निशाणें । गरुडटके पताका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काळ । जालों जिंकोनि निश्चळ । पावला सकळ। भोग आह्मां आमचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are warriors, champions in the battle. We have crushed the forces of sin and shattered their pride.

A great roar has gone up as the soldiers charge forward, adorned with conch and discus, wearing garlands of tulsi at their throats.

Arrows inscribed with Rama's name are launched; gopichandan is applied to the forehead. The banners and Garuda-flags gleam and flutter.

Says Tuka, we have conquered Time itself and stand firm. All the fruits of our devotion are now ours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are warriors, fighters in the field; we strike with crushing blows. The ranks were beaten down; the sins were broken and routed. A great cry went up as the fighters charged in, decked with conch and discus, garlands of tulsi at their throats. Arrows marked with Rama's name are loosed; sandal-paste of the gopis is set on the brow. The banners flash, the Garuda-flags fly. Tuka says: we have conquered Time and stand unshaken; the whole reward has come to us, our own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts the devotee's life as a battle and the devotees as a victorious army, turning the imagery of war onto the inner enemy. The forces routed are the sins; the weapons are the tokens of bhakti, conch and discus, tulsi garlands, arrows inscribed with Rama's name, sandal on the brow, banners and Garuda-flags raised high. The point is that devotion is not passive softness but a real conquest, fought and won with the Name and the Lord's signs as arms. The final boast is the heart of the ecstasy: they have beaten Time itself, the death that overtakes everything, and now stand unshaken. The whole fruit of devotion is theirs and cannot be taken back.

GATHA 1487 Renunciation

Renunciation, the free man and the bound

मराठी मूळ

आशाबद्ध तो जगाचा दास । पूज्य तो उदास सर्वजना ॥1॥
आहे तें अधीन आपुले हातीं । आणिकां ठेविती काय बोल ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणतिया पाठीं लागला उपाध । नेणता तो सिद्ध भोजनासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भय बांधलें गांठीं । चोर लागे पाठी दुम तया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who is bound by desire is a slave to the world. He who is detached is revered by all.

What you already have is in your own hands; why place it in another's keeping?

The learned one is burdened by complications, while the ignorant one is ready for the feast of grace.

Says Tuka, he who keeps fear knotted within is like a thief: his tail gives him away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who is bound by desire is the world's slave. He who is unattached is honored by everyone. What you already have is in your own hands; why hand it over to others and give them a say? Trouble dogs the one who thinks himself clever, while the simple one sits ready for the feast. Tuka says: he who keeps fear knotted in his bundle is like a thief; his own tail gives him away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws the sharp line between the man owned by his wants and the man who wants nothing. Desire makes you a slave to the whole world, dependent on everyone you hope to get something from, while detachment, owing nothing, asking nothing, is what earns real respect. He notes the irony that the clever, calculating man brings endless complications on himself, whereas the plain, unscheming one is the one actually ready to receive grace. The closing image is pointed but aimed at a pattern, not a person: fear and craving, kept hidden and knotted away inside, betray a man the way a thief is given away by his own tail. What you cling to in secret is exactly what exposes you.

GATHA 1488 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the meddler who spoils what was whole

मराठी मूळ

आणिकांसी तारी ऐसा नाहीं कोणी । धड तें नासोनि भलता टाकी ॥1॥
सोनें शुद्ध होतें अविट तें घरीं । नासिलें सोनारीं अळंकारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ओल शुद्ध काळी काळें जिरें बीज । कैंचें लागे निज हाता तेथें ॥2॥
एक गहू करिती अनेक प्रकार । सांजा दिवसीं क्षीर घुगरिया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे विषा रुचि एका हातीं । पाधानी नासिती नवनीत ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No one else ruins things quite like this:
they take what was whole and break it apart carelessly.

Gold in the house was pure and lasting;
the goldsmith spoiled it by fashioning ornaments.

A moist, pure, dark seed:
once handled, how can its original nature be found?

One grain of wheat is turned into endless forms:
porridge, milk-puddings, and sweet pastries.

Says Tuka, poison is palatable to one;
the cook ruins the butter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No one ruins things the way this kind of person does: he takes what was sound and breaks it apart for nothing. The gold in the house was pure and unfading; the goldsmith spoiled it by working it into ornaments. A moist, pure, dark seed: once it has been handled, how can its own nature be recovered? One single wheat grain is turned into a dozen forms: porridge, milk-pudding, sweet dumplings. Tuka says: poison tastes good to a certain hand; the cook spoils the butter.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram mocks the meddler who cannot leave a whole thing whole. Through a run of homely images, gold reworked into ornaments, a pure seed handled until its nature is lost, one honest grain of wheat tortured into a dozen fancy dishes, he shows how something simple and complete is fussed over and degraded in the name of improvement. The thrust is at our compulsion to elaborate and adorn what was already pure, mistaking the busywork for value. The closing barb, that poison can taste sweet to the wrong palate and the cook spoils even the butter, points the lesson at self-examination: beware the urge to refine and complicate, especially in spiritual things, when the plain and unhandled was already what was good.

GATHA 1489 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the forgotten death

मराठी मूळ

वाटे या जनाचें थोर बा आश्चर्य । न करिती विचार कां हिताचा ॥1॥
कोण दम ऐसा आहे यांचे पोटीं । येईल शेवटीं कोण कामा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय मानुनियां राहिले निंश्चती । काय जाब देती यमदूतां ॥2॥
कां हीं विसरलीं मरण बापुडीं । काय यांसी गोडी लागलीसे ॥3॥
काय हातीं नाहीं करील तयासी ॥ काय जालें यांसी काय जाणों ॥4॥
कां हीं नाठविती देवकीनंदना । सुटाया बंधनापासूनियां ॥5॥
काय मोल यासी लागे धन वित्त । कां हें यांचें चित्त घेत नाहीं ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे कां हीं भोगितील खाणी ॥ कां त्या चक्रपाणी विसरलीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am greatly amazed at these people.
Why do they not consider what is good for them?

What confidence do they carry in their bellies?
Who will come to their aid in the end?

What certainty makes them so complacent?
What answer will they give to Yama's messengers?

Have these wretches forgotten death?
What sweetness have they found in this world?

Is it not in their hands to do what must be done?
What has happened to them, I do not know.

Why do they not remember the son of Devaki and free themselves from their bonds?

Does it cost them any wealth or riches?
Why does their chitta not take hold of this?

Says Tuka, why will they fall into the pits of rebirth?
Why have they forgotten Chakrapani?

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am amazed at these people. Why do they not think about their own good? What confidence do they carry inside? Who will come to help them at the end? What certainty makes them so calm? What answer will they give to Yama's messengers? Have these poor souls forgotten death? What sweetness have they found in this world? Is it not in their own hands to do what must be done? What has happened to them, I do not know. Why do they not remember the son of Devaki and free themselves from their bonds? Does it cost them any wealth or money? Why does their mind not take hold of this? Tuka says: why will they fall into the pits of rebirth? Why have they forgotten Chakrapani?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is shaking the comfortable awake. He cannot understand the calm of people who never once think about what their own good actually is, who carry some unspoken confidence in the belly while no one will be there to help them at the last moment. He keeps pressing one fact they have managed to forget: death, and the messengers of Yama who will ask for an accounting. The release he points to costs nothing, no wealth, no money, only the remembering of God, the son of Devaki, Chakrapani; so the only thing that explains the neglect is a spell of forgetfulness. The question is meant to turn back on the listener: why do I too keep finding sweetness here and putting off the one thing that frees me?

GATHA 1490

Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, knowing yet blind

मराठी मूळ

काय एकां जालें तें कां नाहीं ठावें । काय हें सांगावें काय ह्मुण ॥1॥
देखतील डोळां ऐकती कानीं । बोलिलें पुराणीं तें ही ठावें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय हें शरीर साच कीं जाणार । सकळ विचार जाणती हा ॥2॥
कां हें कळों नये आपुलें आपणा । बाळत्व तारुण्य वृद्धदशा ॥3॥
कां हें आवडलें ि्रयापुत्रधन । काय कामा कोण कोणा आलें ॥4॥
कां हें जन्म वांयां घातलें उत्तम । कां हे रामराम न ह्मणती ॥5॥
काय भुली यांसी पडली जाणतां । देखती मरतां आणिकांसी ॥6॥
काय करिती हे बांधलिया काळें । तुका ह्मणे बळें वज्रपाशीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What happened to some is well known.
Why must it be told again?

They see it with their eyes, they hear it with their ears,
and what the Puranas say is also known to them.

They know full well that this body is not permanent and that all things are subject to change.

Why then does their own condition not become clear to them,
as childhood turns to youth and youth to old age?

Why are they so enamored of beloved, children, and wealth?
Who among them has ever been of lasting use to anyone?

Why is this precious human birth being wasted?
Why do they not chant Rama, Rama?

What spell of forgetfulness has overtaken them,
even as they watch others dying before their eyes?

Says Tuka, what will they do when they are bound by Death in the adamantine noose?

IN PLAIN WORDS

What happened to some, is it not known? Why must it be told again? They see it with their eyes, they hear it with their ears, and what the Puranas say is known to them too. They know well that this body is not permanent and that everything changes. Why then does their own state not become clear to them, as childhood turns to youth and youth to old age? Why are they so fond of beloved, children, and wealth? Who among them has ever been of lasting use to anyone? Why is this precious human birth being wasted? Why do they not say Rama, Rama? What forgetfulness has fallen on them, even as they watch others die before their eyes? Tuka says: what will they do when Death binds them in the hard noose?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sharpens the same charge: the danger is no secret. People have seen others die, heard it, read it in the Puranas, and they know in plain words that the body passes and everything changes. So this is not ignorance but a refusal to apply known truth to oneself; they watch their own bodies move from childhood to age and still cannot read the lesson written in it. Meanwhile they pour their love into spouse, children, and wealth, none of which has ever lastingly saved anyone, and let the rare human birth, the one chance to say Rama, slip away. The closing image is the cost: when Death's hard noose finally tightens, all the things they trusted will do nothing, and the question is whether I will wake before then or only after.

GATHA 1491 The Saints

Saints, the true warriors of God

मराठी मूळ

जुंझार ते एक विष्णुदास जगीं । पापपुण्य अंगीं नातळे त्यां ॥1॥
गोविंद आसनीं गोविंद शयनीं । गोविंद त्यां मनीं बैसलासे ॥ध्रु.॥
ऊर्ध पुंड भाळीं कंठीं शोभे माळी । कांपिजे किळकाळ तया भेणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शंखचक्रांचे शृंगार । नामामृतसार मुखामाजी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The true warriors in this world are the servants of Vishnu.
Neither sin nor merit clings to them.

Govinda is in their sitting, Govinda is in their sleeping,
Govinda is seated within their minds.

With upright tilak on their foreheads and the sacred necklace adorning their throats, even shrieking Death trembles before them in fear.

Says Tuka, adorned with conch and discus,
the nectar of the Name rests upon their lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The true warriors in this world are the servants of Vishnu. Neither sin nor merit clings to them. Govinda is in their sitting, Govinda is in their lying down; Govinda is seated within their minds. The upright tilak shines on their foreheads, the sacred garland adorns their throats; shrieking Death trembles before them in fear. Tuka says: adorned with conch and discus, the nectar of the Name rests upon their lips.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redraws what courage and victory mean. The real warriors are not soldiers but the servants of Vishnu, and their conquest is so total that neither sin nor merit can stick to them, since their whole life has been handed over. Govinda fills every posture and every moment, sitting, lying down, and the inner mind, so the constant remembering is itself their armor. The tilak and garland are not mere ornaments; marked this way, with the Name like nectar on the lips, they have made even Death tremble, because a person who has given everything to God has nothing left for Death to seize.

GATHA 1492 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, you reap what you bind

मराठी मूळ

जेणें नाहीं केलें आपुलें स्वहित । पुढिलांचा घात इच्छीतसे ॥1॥
संचितासी जाय मिळोनियां खोडी । पतनाचे ओंडीवरी हांव ॥ध्रु.॥
बांधलें गांठी तें लागलें भोगावें । ऐसियासी देवें काय कीजे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जया गांवां जाणे जया । पुसोनियां तया वाट चाले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who has not worked for his own true welfare yet wishes harm upon others.

He only adds fresh faults to his accumulated karma, eagerly clinging to the log of his own downfall.

What is tied in the bundle of one's past must be endured.
What can God do for such a person?

Says Tuka, if you wish to reach a certain place,
ask the way from those who know it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who has not worked for his own true good, yet wishes harm on others, only adds fresh faults to his stored-up karma and clings eagerly to the log of his own downfall. What is tied in the bundle of one's past must be borne. What can God do for such a person? Tuka says: if you want to reach some town, ask the way from those who know it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names a self-defeating pattern: the person who has done nothing for his own real welfare and instead wishes harm on others. Every such wish does not touch the other; it only piles new faults onto the karma he is already carrying, so he is hugging the very thing that drowns him. He must bear what his own past has tied into his bundle, and even God will not simply lift that load while the man keeps adding to it. The closing image points to the way out: as a traveler asks directions from those who know the road, this person should turn to the saints and to God rather than spend himself on resentment. The look is meant inward, at one's own grudges, not down at anyone else.

GATHA 1493 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord indebted to his devotees

मराठी मूळ

मानी भक्तांचे उपकार । रुणीया ह्मणवी निरंतर । केला निर्गुणीं आकार । कीर्त मुखें वणिनतां ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि जया जे वासना ॥ ते पुरवितो पंढरिराणा । जाला भक्तांचा आंदणा । ते उपकार फेडावया ॥ध्रु.॥
अंबऋषीकारणें । जन्म घेतले नारायणें । एवडें भक्तींचे लहणें । दास्य करी हा दासाचें ॥2॥
ह्मणियें करितां शंका न धरी । रक्षपाळ बिळच्या द्वारीं । भक्तीचा आभारी । रीग न पुरे जावया ॥3॥
अर्जुनाचे रथवारु । ते वागवी सर्वेश्वरु । एवडे भक्तीचे उपकारु । मागें मागें हिंडतसे ॥4॥
पुंडलिकाचे द्वारीं । सम पाउलीं विटेवरी । न वजे कट करीं । धरूनि तेथें राहिला ॥5॥
भावभक्तीचा अंकित । नाम साजे दिनानाथ । ह्मणोनि राहिला निवांत । तुका चरण धरोनि ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hari honors the devotees' service and considers himself forever indebted to them.
He took form out of the formless so that their praises might be sung.

Therefore, whatever desire a devotee holds, the King of Pandhari fulfills it.
He has given himself as a gift to his devotees to repay their kindness.

For the sake of Ambarisha, Narayana took birth;
so great is the debt of devotion that he serves his own servants.

With no hesitation he stands guard at the doorway of the devotee's dwelling, so bound by devotion that he cannot find a way to leave.

He served as Arjuna's charioteer;
such is the power of devotion that the Lord of all wanders along behind.

At Pundalik's door he stands evenly upon the brick, hands at his waist, and there he has remained, not moving away.

Marked by love and devotion, the name Dinanath suits him perfectly;
and so he stands in peace. Says Tuka: I hold fast to his feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hari honors the service of his devotees and calls himself forever in their debt. He took form out of the formless so that their praises could be sung. So whatever desire a devotee holds, the King of Pandhari fulfills it. He has given himself as a gift to his devotees, to repay their kindness. For the sake of Ambarisha, Narayana took birth; so great is the debt of devotion that he serves his own servants. Without hesitation he stands guard at the doorway of the devotee's house, so bound by devotion that he cannot find a way to leave. He was Arjuna's charioteer; such is the power of devotion that the Lord of all wanders along behind. At Pundalik's door he stands level upon the brick, hands at his waist, and there he has stayed, not moving away. Marked by love and devotion, the name Dinanath suits him well; and so he stands in peace. Tuka says: I hold fast to his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the usual picture upside down: it is God who counts himself the debtor. The formless one took form only so that praise could rise, and now he repays the love of his devotees by making himself their servant and the giver of their wishes. The examples make the claim concrete: Narayana took birth for Ambarisha's sake, became Arjuna's charioteer, guards the devotee's very doorway and cannot find a way to leave. The whole poem leads to the brick at Pandhari, where the same Lord stands level on the stone with his hands at his waist and has simply remained, held there by love alone. Because devotion binds him so completely, the name Dinanath, refuge of the lowly, fits him, and Tukaram's only response is to take hold of those waiting feet.

GATHA 1494 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fortune-tellers

मराठी मूळ

सांगों जाणती शकुन । भूत भविष्य वर्तमान ॥1॥
त्यांचा आह्मांसी कंटाळा । पाहों नावडती डोळां ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे जाती । पुण्यक्षयें अधोगती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who claim to read omens
and know the past, present, and future:
I am wearied by them and cannot bear to look upon them.

Says Tuka, when their store of merit is spent,
they sink to the lower realms.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who claim to read omens and to know the past, the future, and the present: I am wearied by them; I do not like to look at them with my eyes. Tuka says: when their store of merit runs out, they fall to the lower realms.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is dismissing the trade in omens and fortune-telling. Those who advertise knowledge of past, present, and future tire him; he will not even rest his eyes on them, because their show pulls attention toward signs and futures and away from God. The warning at the end is plain: whatever power or standing such display buys is borrowed against a limited store of merit, and when that store is spent the person sinks to the lower realms. The point is to examine our own appetite for predictions and credit, not to despise the people caught in it.

GATHA 1495 Prayers

Prayer, the beggar at the door

मराठी मूळ

ठाकलोंसें द्वारीं । उभें याचक भीकारी ॥1॥
मज भीक कांहीं देवा । प्रेमभातुकें पाठवा ॥ध्रु.॥
याचकाचा भार । नये घेऊं येरझार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दान । सेवा घेतल्यावांचून ॥3॥
सदाशिवावर अभंग ॥ 2 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I stand at your door, a beggar and a supplicant.

Give me alms, O God: send me the gift of love.

A beggar should not be made to come and go in vain.

Says Tuka, no gift is complete unless service has first been received.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come and stand at your door, a beggar, a supplicant. Give me some alms, O God: send me the gift of love. A beggar should not be made to go back and forth in vain. Tuka says: no gift is complete unless service has first been received.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands at God's door in the posture of a beggar, and the only alms he asks for is love itself, premabhatuka. He pleads not to be sent away empty and made to come and go for nothing, the way a beggar dreads a fruitless trip. The closing line carries the deeper request: a true gift is not complete unless the giver first accepts the receiver's service, so Tukaram is asking not only to be given love but to be taken into God's service. This abhanga is addressed to Sadashiva, Shiva as the ever-gracious one.

GATHA 1496 Prayers

Prayer, you already know my heart

मराठी मूळ

काय धर्म नीत । तुह्मां शिकवावें हित ॥1॥
अवघें रचियेलें हेळा । लीळा ब्रह्मांड सकळा ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम महादेव । येथें निवडला भाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेळे । माझें तुह्मां कां न कळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What dharma and right conduct should I teach you?
You have created the entire universe as effortless play.

O Mahadeva, your name is spoken here;
by it the devotion within is recognized.

Says Tuka, why does my intent at this moment not become clear to you?

IN PLAIN WORDS

What dharma, what right conduct should I teach you? You have made the whole universe in effortless play. O Mahadeva, your name is spoken here; by it the devotion within is recognized. Tuka says: why does my intent at this moment not become clear to you?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches himself: who is he to instruct God in dharma or right conduct, when the one he addresses fashioned the entire universe as effortless play? Set against that, his own asking sounds small, so he leans instead on the Name, Mahadeva, by which the true devotion hidden inside a person is brought to light. The poem then becomes one plain question, half complaint and half trust: if you see everything, why does my own intent right now not stand clear to you? It is the prayer of someone who would rather be known than have to explain himself, sure that God already reads the heart.

GATHA 1497 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the household nearness of God

मराठी मूळ

भांडावें तें गोड । पुरे सकळ ही कोड ॥1॥
ऐसा घरींचा या मोळा । ठावा निकटां जवळां ॥ध्रु.॥
हाक देतां दारीं । येती जवळी सामोरीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शिवें । मागितलें हातीं द्यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Quarreling with him is sweet, for it fulfills every longing.

Such is the familiar bundle of this household bond;
those who are nearest know it well.

When you call at his door, he comes forward to meet you.

Says Tuka, whatever Shiva is asked for,
he gives at once from his own hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even quarreling with him is sweet, for it satisfies every longing. Such is the homely bond of this household; those who are near know it well. When you call at his door, he comes forward to meet you. Tuka says: whatever Shiva is asked for, he gives at once from his own hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a closeness with God so intimate that even quarreling with him turns sweet and fills every desire, the way only family members can fight without losing love. This is the familiar bond of a household, and those who live near God know its ease firsthand. The signs of that nearness are simple: call at his door and he comes out to meet you, ask Shiva for anything and he hands it over at once himself. The poem invites the listener into that same domestic intimacy, where God is not a distant power to be appeased but a near one who answers the moment he is called.

GATHA 1498 Longing and Separation

Longing, kirtan dragged into brawling

मराठी मूळ

ऐसें कां जालें तें मज ही न कळे । कीर्तनाचे रळेपळे जगीं ॥1॥
कैसें तुह्मां देवा वाटतसे बरें । संतांचीं उत्तरें लाजविलीं ॥ध्रु.॥
भाविकां कंटक करिताती पीडा । हा तंव रोकडा अनुभव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाम निर्वाणीचा बाण । याचा अभिमान नाहीं तुह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why has it come to this? Even I cannot understand it.
The sacred art of kirtan has been reduced to brawling squabbles in the world.

O God, how can you find this acceptable?
The words of the saints have been put to shame.

The devout are tormented by thorny antagonists;
this is plain for all to see.

Says Tuka, the Name is the ultimate weapon.
Have you no pride in it?

IN PLAIN WORDS

How has it come to this? Even I cannot understand it: kirtan turned into quarrels and squabbles in the world. How does this seem all right to you, O God? The words of the saints have been put to shame. The devout are tormented by thorny troublemakers; this is a present, plain experience. Tuka says: the Name is the final weapon. Have you no pride in it?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram grieves over what has happened to kirtan, the singing of God's praise, which has been dragged down into brawling and squabbles, and he confesses he cannot make sense of it. He turns the question to God directly: how can you find this acceptable, when the words of the saints are being shamed and the sincere devotees are tormented by petty, thorn-like antagonists, something he says he watches happen plainly. The closing line is the sharpest: the Name is the ultimate weapon, the one defense the devout have, so does God have no pride, no zeal, in defending it? Beneath the protest is faith; only one who trusts God completely dares to scold him for not guarding his own glory.

Tukaram Gatha

तुकाराम गाथा

Original Marathi with English translation, a plain-language reading, and an explanation of what each abhanga means

Volume 4: Gatha 1501-2000 - 498 abhangas

About This Edition

This reading edition brings together four layers for every abhanga: the original Marathi, an English translation, a rendering in plain words, and a short explanation of its meaning.

The English layers are devotional reading aids. No translation can fully carry Tukaram's Marathi music, wordplay, cultural setting, or spiritual force. Readers are encouraged to return to the original and to consult Marathi teachers and established scholarly editions.

Marathi source: Tukaram Gatha on Marathi Wikisource. The source dataset identifies the Marathi text as public domain. English reading layers are from the Ananta Satsang online edition.

Editorial note: We ask forgiveness for any inaccuracies in rendering Tukaram Maharaj's original Marathi.

Contents

Gatha 1501-1550
50 abhangas

Gatha 1551-1600
50 abhangas

Gatha 1601-1650
50 abhangas

Gatha 1651-1700
50 abhangas

Gatha 1701-1750
50 abhangas

Gatha 1751-1802
50 abhangas

Gatha 1803-1852
50 abhangas

Gatha 1853-1902
50 abhangas

Gatha 1903-1952
50 abhangas

Gatha 1953-2000
48 abhangas

GATHA 1501 Longing and Separation

Longing, why give me eyes to see this

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी बैसलेती निर्गुणाचे खोळे । आह्मां कां हे डोळे कान दिले ॥1॥
नाइकवे तुझी अपकिर्त्त देवा । अव्हेरली सेवा न देखवे ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुले पोटीं तों राखियेला वाव । आह्मांसी कां भाव अल्प दिला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुःखी असें हें कळों द्या । पुढिलिया धंद्या मन नेघे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You sit wrapped in your formless state.
Then why did you give us eyes and ears?

I cannot bear to hear your glory being dishonored, O God,
nor can I watch your service being spurned.

You kept plenty of room within your own belly,
yet gave us only a meager portion of devotion.

Says Tuka, at least let it be known that I am in pain.
My mind will not engage with the worldly business that lies ahead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You sit wrapped in your formless state. Then why did you give us these eyes and ears? I cannot bear to hear your glory dishonored, O God, nor can I watch your service being spurned. You kept plenty of room inside your own belly, yet gave us only a small portion of devotion. Tuka says: at least let it be known that I am in pain. My mind will not turn to the worldly business that lies ahead.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a complaint that is really a plea. If God can sit serene and untouched in his formless state, why did he give his devotees eyes and ears that must now witness his glory dishonored and his service spurned? The pain is unbearable precisely because Tukaram loves God; he charges that God held back, keeping vast room within himself while handing the devotee only a meager portion of devotion, not enough to bear what he sees. He asks at least to be heard, to have his pain acknowledged, and he warns that his mind has no appetite left for the ordinary worldly tasks ahead. It is the cry of someone who wants more of God, not less, and blames the smallness of his given love for his distress.

GATHA 1502 True Worship

True worship, pretense wins no God

मराठी मूळ

सोंगें छंदें कांहीं । देव जोडे ऐसें नाहीं ॥1॥
सारा अवघें गाबाळ । डोळ्या आडील पडळ ॥ध्रु.॥
शुद्ध भावाविण । जो जो केला तो तो सीण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळे । परि होताती अंधळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God cannot be attained through pretense or indulgence.

Discard all that is worthless;
remove the veil from before your eyes.

Without genuine devotion, every effort is mere labor.

Says Tuka, people understand this,
yet they choose to remain blind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is not won by costume and show. Throw away all the worthless trash; lift the film that covers your eyes. Without pure feeling, whatever you do is only labor. Tuka says: people understand this, yet they become blind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cuts straight to the heart of worship: God is not reached by playacting, by displays and indulgent shows of piety. He tells the listener to throw out all that worthless trash and remove the film, the cataract, that keeps the eyes from seeing truly. Without shuddha bhava, pure and sincere feeling, every ritual and effort is just wasted toil. The sting is in the last line: people do understand this, and yet they choose to stay blind, keeping the comfortable show going. The poem turns the listener back on himself, to ask where his own worship is pretense and where it is real.

GATHA 1503 The Necessity of Experience

Equal vision, fearless of the world

मराठी मूळ

अवघीं भूतें साम्या आलीं । देखिलीं म्यां कैं होतीं ॥1॥
विश्वास तो खरा मग । पांडुरंगकृपेचा ॥ध्रु.॥
माझी कोणी न धरो शंका ।हो कां लोकां निद्वपद्व ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जें जें भेटे । तें तें वाटे मी ऐसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All beings have come to a state of equality before my eyes.
When did I ever see them otherwise?

That is true faith, born of Panduranga's grace.

Let no one doubt me, no matter what the world says,
whether in blame or praise.

Says Tuka, whatever I encounter,
I feel it as myself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All beings have come level before my eyes. When did I ever see them otherwise? This is true faith, born of Panduranga's grace. Let no one doubt me, whatever the world says, whether it blames or praises. Tuka says: whatever I meet, I feel it as myself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting a settled change in how he sees. Every creature now appears the same to him, with none above and none below, and he cannot recall a time it was different. He names the source plainly: this even vision is the gift of Panduranga's grace, and that is what true faith looks like. He then waves away all judgment of it, blame and praise alike, because the sight does not depend on the world's verdict. The closing line states the heart of it: whatever he encounters, he feels it as his own self.

GATHA 1504 The Nature of God

Trust the giver, wait for the hour

मराठी मूळ

सत्यसंकल्पाचा दाता नारायण । सर्व करी पूर्ण मनोरथ ॥1॥
येथें अळंकार शोभती सकळ । भावबळें फळ इच्छेचेंतें ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतरींचें बीज जाणे कळवळा । व्यापक सकळां ब्रह्मांडाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं चालत तांतडी । प्राप्तकाळघडी आल्याविण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana is the giver whose sankalpa is ever true.
He fulfills every longing of the mind.

Here all ornaments of devotion shine, for by the strength of pure intent, the fruits of longing are made real.

With tender care he knows the seed within;
he pervades the entire cosmos.

Says Tuka, haste will not do.
One must wait until the destined hour arrives.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana is the giver whose will always comes true. He fills every longing of the mind. Here every ornament of devotion shines, for by the strength of pure feeling the fruit of longing is made real. He knows with tender care the seed hidden inside; he fills the whole cosmos. Tuka says: haste does not work. You must wait until the destined hour arrives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching how God answers, and on whose clock. Narayana's resolve is never empty, so he completes whatever the heart truly longs for, and the wealth of devotion is what makes that longing bear fruit. God reads the seed buried in you, the inner feeling no one else sees, and he reaches into every corner of creation. Then comes the hard counsel: you cannot rush this. The fruit ripens only when its appointed hour comes, so devotion has to hold its trust and wait.

GATHA 1505 The Saints

Praise of the saints, compassion their capital

मराठी मूळ

काय वाणूं आतां न पुरे हे वाणी । मस्तक चरणीं ठेवीतसें ॥1॥
थोरींव सांडिली आपुली परिसें । नेणे सिवों कैसें लोखंडासी ॥ध्रु.॥
जगाच्या कल्याणा संतांच्या विभूति । देह कष्टविती उपकारें ॥2॥
भूतांची दया हे भांडवल संतां । आपुली ममता नाहीं देहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख पराविया सुखें । अमृत हें मुखें जरवतसे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What more can I describe? My words fall short.
I simply place my head at their feet.

Like the philosopher's stone, the saints have abandoned all their greatness;
they do not mind how they touch iron and transform it.

For the welfare of the world, the saints have taken form, tormenting their own bodies in selfless service.

Compassion for all beings is the saints' only capital;
they carry no attachment to their own bodies.

Says Tuka, their happiness lies in the happiness of others,
and this nectar is administered from their mouths.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What more can I say now? My words run out. I lay my head at their feet. Like the touchstone, the saints have thrown away their own greatness; they do not even notice how they touch iron and turn it to gold. For the good of the world the saints take form, wearing out their bodies in service. Compassion for all beings is the saints' only capital; they hold no attachment to their own bodies. Tuka says: their joy is in the joy of others, and this nectar pours from their mouths.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what a true saint actually is, and finds words too small for it, so he simply bows. He likens the saint to the philosopher's stone, which turns iron to gold without keeping any greatness for itself; the saint transforms others and takes no credit. Such beings take birth for the welfare of the world and spend their own bodies in service. Their entire wealth is compassion for every creature, with no clinging to themselves. The poem lands on this: the saint's own happiness lives inside the happiness of others, and that is the nectar their words give out.

GATHA 1506 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, death disarmed

मराठी मूळ

जन्मा आलों त्याचें । आजि फळ जालें साचें ॥1॥
तुह्मी सांभिाळलों संतीं । भय निवारली खंती ॥ध्रु.॥
कृत्याकृत्य जालों । इच्छा केली ते पावलों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काळ । आतां करूं न शके बळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today the true fruit of having been born has been realized.

O saints, you have sheltered me and removed all fear and sorrow.

My purpose has been fulfilled;
I have attained the very thing I desired.

Says Tuka, now Death can no longer wield its power over me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today the true fruit of being born has come. O saints, you have sheltered me, and my fear and grief are gone. I am made whole; I have reached the very thing I wanted. Tuka says: now Death can use no force on me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a day of arrival. He says the whole point of taking birth has finally borne fruit, and he credits the saints, whose shelter has lifted his fear and sorrow away. He feels complete, his deepest wish fulfilled. The closing claim is the boldest part: with this attained, Death has lost all its power over him, because what he has reached cannot be touched by it.

GATHA 1507 The Saints

Gratitude, grace beyond reckoning

मराठी मूळ

काय पुण्यराशी । गेल्या भेदूनि आकाशीं ॥1॥
तुह्मी जालेति कृपाळ । माझा केला जी सांभाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
काय वोळलें संचित । ऐसें नेणें अगणित ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नेणें । काय केलें नारायणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What stores of merit must have pierced through the very skies?

O saints, you have become merciful and have cared for me.

What accumulated karma could have ripened to bring this about?
I cannot measure it; it is beyond reckoning.

Says Tuka, I do not know what Narayana has done.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What heaps of merit must have torn through the very skies? O saints, you turned merciful and took care of me. What stored-up karma ripened to do this? I cannot count it. Tuka says: I do not know what Narayana has done.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is overwhelmed by a grace he cannot explain. He wonders what vast store of merit could have reached so high as to win this, since the saints have turned merciful and taken him into their care. He gropes for a cause in his past deeds and finds none he can measure. The poem ends in honest bafflement: he simply does not know what Narayana has worked on his behalf, and he stops trying to account for it.

GATHA 1508 Autobiography

Autobiography, the Name his only wealth

मराठी मूळ

असें येथींचिया दिनें । भाग्यहीन सकळां ॥1॥
भांडवल एवढें गांठी । नाम कंठीं धरियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिक तें दुजें कांहीं । मज नाहीं यावरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केली कोणें । एवढा नेणें लौकिक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the standards of this world, I am unfortunate and poor among all.

My only capital is the Name held at my throat.

Beyond this, I have nothing else.

Says Tuka, who has arranged even this small measure of worldly repute for me? I do not know.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the standards of this place, I am the unluckiest of all. My one fortune is this: I hold the Name at my throat. Beyond this I have nothing more. Tuka says: who has arranged even this much repute for me? I do not know.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is taking honest stock of himself. By every worldly measure he counts as poor and unfortunate, with no advantage to show. His sole capital is the Name kept always on his lips, and he owns nothing besides it. He does not even claim the little standing he has in the world; he wonders aloud who arranged it. The point is that whatever worth he has comes from the Name and from a hand he cannot name, not from himself.

GATHA 1509 The Power of the Name

The Name, the easy ship across

मराठी मूळ

गायें नाचें वायें टाळी । साधन कळी उत्तम हें ॥1॥
काय जाणों तरले किती । नाव ऐती या बैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
सायासाचें नाहीं काम । घेतां नाम विठोबाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निर्वाणीचें । शस्त्र साचें हें एक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Singing, dancing, clapping the hands:
this is the best spiritual practice for this present age.

Who knows how many have been saved by it?
Board this very ship and cross over.

No strenuous labor is required
when you take the name of Vithoba.

Says Tuka, this alone is the one true weapon for the final reckoning.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sing, dance, clap your hands: this is the best practice for this age. Who knows how many have crossed over by it? Board this very ship and cross. No hard labor is needed when you take Vithoba's name. Tuka says: this alone is the one true weapon for the final hour.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is offering the simplest path and pressing it on the listener. In this present age, he says, the highest spiritual practice is also the most open: to sing and dance and clap the divine name. Countless people have already crossed the ocean of the world this way, so he tells you to step aboard the same ship at once. Taking Vithoba's name asks no strenuous effort, no elaborate discipline. And in the last extremity, the hour of death, this Name is the one real weapon that holds.

GATHA 1510 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the form lodged in the heart

मराठी मूळ

सर्वकाळ माझे चित्तीं । हे चि खंती राहिली ॥1॥
बैसलें तें रूप डोळां । वेळोवेळां आठवे ॥ध्रु.॥
वेव्हाराची सरली मात । अखंडित अनुसंधान ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेध जाला । अंगा आला श्रीरंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At all times, this one longing remains lodged in my chitta.

The form I have seen stays before my eyes, and I recall it again and again.

All worldly transactions have been concluded; an unbroken awareness persists.

Says Tuka, the inner attraction has taken hold, and Shri Ranga has come to dwell within my body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At all times only this one longing stays in my mind. The form I have seen rests before my eyes; again and again I remember it. The talk of worldly dealings is finished; the awareness never breaks. Tuka says: the inner pull has taken hold, and Shri Ranga has come into my body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a mind wholly occupied by God. A single longing now stays in him at every moment, and the divine form he once beheld remains fixed before his eyes, returning to memory again and again. Ordinary worldly business has fallen silent for him, leaving an unbroken inner attention. He names the result: a deep attraction has gripped him, and Shri Ranga, the Lord, has come to dwell within his very body.

GATHA 1511 True Worship

True worship, practice what you preach

मराठी मूळ

जैसें दावी तैसा राहे । तरि कां देव दुरी आहे ॥1॥
दुःख पावायाचें मूळ । रहनी ठाव नाहीं ताळ ॥ध्रु.॥
माळामुद्रांवरी। कैंचा सोंगें जोडे हरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देखें । ऐसे परीचीं बहुतेकें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one lives as one preaches, then God is not far away at all.

The root of suffering is that outward conduct and inner truth do not match.

How can God be won through mere rosary beads and sectarian marks?

Says Tuka, look around: such are the majority.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you live as you teach, then God is not far off at all. The root of suffering is this: your conduct and your inner truth do not match. How can Hari be won by mere rosary beads and sect marks? Tuka says: look around, most people are like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at the gap between show and substance in religion. He says God comes near the moment your living matches your teaching, and that the real root of suffering is the split between outward conduct and inner truth. Beads, sectarian marks, and the costume of piety win nothing from Hari by themselves. He turns the satire on a pattern, not on a person: when he says most people are like this, he is naming the common temptation to wear devotion rather than live it, an invitation to check oneself.

GATHA 1512 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, every hour auspicious

मराठी मूळ

अवघा तो शकुन । हृदयीं देवाचे चरण ॥1॥
येथें नसतां वियोग । लाभा उणें काय मग ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे हरिच्या दासां । शुभकाळ अवघ्या दिशा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The greatest of all good omens is to hold God's feet within the heart.

When there is no separation from Him, what gain could possibly be lacking?

Says Tuka, for the servants of Hari, every moment is auspicious, and all directions are blessed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The greatest of all good omens is to hold God's feet in the heart. When there is no separation from Him, what gain could be missing? Tuka says: for the servants of Hari, every moment is auspicious, and all directions are blessed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is overturning the whole business of lucky days and favorable signs. The one true good omen, he says, is to carry God's feet within the heart. Once there is no separation from God, nothing worth gaining can be lacking, so no further sign is needed. For those who serve Hari, the conclusion follows on its own: every moment is the right moment and every direction is blessed, because the auspiciousness is in the union, not in the calendar.

GATHA 1513 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the untainted crystal

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मरूपाचीं कर्में ब्रह्मरूप । विरहित संकल्प होती जाती ॥1॥
ठेविलिया दिसे रंगाऐसी शिळा । उपाधि निराळा स्फटिक मणि ॥ध्रु.॥
नानाभाषामतें आळविती बाळा । प्रबोध तो मूळा जननीठायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें नमन जाणतियां । लागतसें पायां वेळोवेळां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The actions of one established in Brahman are themselves Brahman, arising and passing without sankalpa.

Just as a crystal appears to take on the color placed near it, though it is itself without taint, so it is.

Children are called by many names in many tongues,
but the true awakening lies in the mother alone.

Says Tuka, I bow before the wise.
Again and again I fall at their feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The actions of one settled in Brahman are themselves Brahman, rising and passing with no self-will behind them. A crystal seems to take on the color set beside it, yet the jewel itself stays untouched. Children are called by many names in many tongues, but the true waking is in the mother alone. Tuka says: I bow to the wise. Again and again I fall at their feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the one who is established in Brahman. Such a person's deeds are Brahman itself; they arise and fall away without any private willing driving them. He gives two images: like a clear crystal that seems to glow with whatever color is held near it while staying colorless in itself, the sage acts amid the world yet is untainted by it; and like a child known by many names in many languages while the real recognition rests in the mother, the many forms point back to one ground. Recognizing this, Tukaram bows again and again at the feet of those who truly know.

GATHA 1514 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, truth that cannot spoil

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं सुगंधाची लागती लावणी । लावावी ते मनीं शुद्ध होतां ॥1॥
वा†या हातीं माप चाले सज्जनाचें । कीतिन मुख त्याचें नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रभा आणि रवि काय असे आन । उदयीं तंव जन सकळ साक्षी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरा सत्याचा सायास । नवनीता नाश नाहीं पुन्हा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Fragrance does not need to be applied;
it arises naturally when the mind becomes pure.

The measure of a good person is in their hands;
glory and the name of Narayana are upon their lips.

Are the sun and its radiance separate things?
At dawn, all people bear witness to this.

Says Tuka, the labor of truth is worthwhile,
for butter, once churned, can never be destroyed again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Fragrance does not need to be applied; it rises on its own when the mind becomes pure. The measure is in the good person's own hands; glory and Narayana's name are on their lips. Are the sun and its light two separate things? At dawn everyone is witness. Tuka says: the labor of truth is worth it, for butter, once churned, can never be unmade again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching that real goodness shows itself without effort or display. A pure mind gives off virtue the way a flower gives off scent, with nothing applied from outside; the good person carries their own measure, with God's name and glory on their lips. He uses the sun and its light, which are never two things, to say that an inner state and its outward shining are inseparable, and everyone sees it as plainly as daybreak. The closing image makes it permanent: the effort spent on truth is never wasted, because truth, like butter once churned from milk, can never be dissolved back and lost.

GATHA 1515 The Saints

Social criticism, the proud devotee

मराठी मूळ

तीर्थाटणें एकें तपें हुंबरती । नाथिले धरिती अभिमान ॥1॥
तैसे विष्णुदास नव्हती साबडे । एकाचिया पडे पायां एक ॥ध्रु.॥
अक्षरें आणिती अंगासी जाणीव । इच्छा ते गौरव पूज्य व्हावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विधिनिषधाचे डोहीं । पडिले त्यां नाहीं देव कधीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Some grow proud through pilgrimages and austerities, claiming hollow honor for themselves.

The servants of Vishnu are not like that;
they are simple, and each one bows at the other's feet.

Book-learning brings a sense of self-importance and the desire to be revered and worshipped.

Says Tuka, those who have fallen into the wells of scriptural do's and don'ts will never find God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Some grow proud from their pilgrimages and their one austerity. They take a hollow pride and hold to it. The servants of Vishnu are not like that. They are simple, and each one bows at the other's feet. Book-learning brings a sense of self-importance to the body. It breeds the wish to be honored, to be revered and worshipped. Tuka says: those who have fallen into the deep wells of scriptural do's and don'ts never find God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two kinds of religious life and names what spoils one of them. The proud man uses pilgrimage, austerity, and learning to swell himself, to claim honor and demand worship; the true servant of Vishnu is simple and bows at the next devotee's feet. The point is the direction of the self: religion can be turned into a ladder for the ego, and then it lifts you away from God instead of toward him. He calls scriptural rules a deep well: a man can drown in his own correctness about do's and don'ts and never reach the Lord they were meant to point at. The test is not how much you have done, but whether it has made you small enough to bow.

GATHA 1516 Faith and Trust

Faith, God carries the burden

मराठी मूळ

पटे ढाळूं आह्मी विष्णुदास जगीं । लागों नेदूं अंगीं पापपुण्य ॥1॥
निर्भर अंतरीं सदा सर्वकाळ । घेतला सकळ भार देवें ॥ध्रु.॥
बिळवंत जेणें रचिलें सकळ । आह्मां त्याचें बळ अंकितांसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी देखत चि नाहीं । देवाविण कांहीं दुसरें तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the servants of Vishnu in this world, boldly unfurling our banners.
We will not let merit or sin touch us.

Within us there is freedom from worry at all times,
for God has taken the entire burden upon himself.

The Mighty One who fashioned all of creation is our strength, for we belong to him.

Says Tuka, we see nothing at all besides God;
there is nothing else for us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are the servants of Vishnu in this world, flying our banners boldly. We will not let merit or sin touch our bodies. Within us there is freedom from worry, always, at every hour, for God has taken the whole burden on himself. The Mighty One who made all of creation is our strength, for we are his and we belong to him. Tuka says: we see nothing at all except God. For us there is nothing else.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the confidence of total surrender, and Tukaram states its ground plainly. Having handed his whole life over to God, he says even merit and sin no longer cling to him, because he is no longer the one carrying the account; God carries the entire burden. The freedom from worry is not bravado but a consequence: if the Maker of everything is your strength and you are his, there is nothing left for you to defend. The last line names the root of it. He sees nothing besides God, so there is no second thing to fear or to manage.

GATHA 1517 The Power of the Name

The Name, scorn for the scorner

मराठी मूळ

कथेचा उलंघ तो अधमां अधम । नावडे ज्या नाम ओळखा तो ॥1॥
कासया जीऊन जाला भूमी भार । अनउपकार माते कुंसी ॥ध्रु.॥
निद्रेचा आदर जागरणीं वीट । त्याचे पोटीं कीट कुपथ्याचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दोन्ही बुडविलीं कुळें । ज्याचें तोंड काळें कथेमाजी ॥3॥
सांडोनी दों अक्षरां । काय करूं हा पसारा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who transgresses the sacred story is the lowest of the low.
Know him as wretched who does not love the Name.

Why live only to be a burden on the earth,
ungrateful to the mother's womb?

He who loves sleep and hates the vigil of devotion carries the worm of wrong living within his belly.

Says Tuka, he who darkens his face during the sacred recitation has drowned both his lineages.

Leaving aside these two syllables of the Name, what use is this entire show?

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who skips over the sacred story is the lowest of the low. Know him as wretched, the one who does not love the Name. Why live at all, just to be a weight on the earth, ungrateful to the womb that bore you? He who loves sleep and hates the night-vigil of devotion carries the worm of wrong living in his belly. Tuka says: he who darkens his face during the sacred recitation has drowned both his lineages. Leaving aside these two syllables of the Name, what use is all this show?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is hard on the man who turns away from the sacred story and the Name, and he means the turning-away, not the man. He measures a life by one thing: does it love the Name, or does it only consume the earth and waste the gift of birth? The sleeper who cannot bear the night-vigil is described as sick from the inside, fed by wrong habits, and the one who sulks through the recitation is said to ruin both the families he stands between. The closing question turns it back on us. Strip away the elaborate show of religion, and what is left that is actually worth anything except the two syllables of God's Name.

GATHA 1518 The Power of the Name

The Name, the childlike tongue

मराठी मूळ

विधिनिषेधाचा भारा । तेणें दातारा नातुडेसी ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि बोबडा उत्तरीं । वाचें जपें निरंतरीं ।
नाम तुझें हरी । भवसागरीं तारूं तें ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्वमय ऐसें वेदांचें वचन । श्रुति गर्जती पुराणें ।
नाहीं आणीक ध्यान । रे साधन मज चाड ॥2॥
शेवटीं ब्रह्मार्पण । या चि मंत्राचें कारण ।
काना मात्र वांयांविण । तुका ह्मणे बिंदुलीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The burden of rules and prohibitions makes you unreachable, O Giver.

Therefore with stammering, childlike speech,
my tongue repeats your Name ceaselessly,
O Hari, that raft upon the ocean of existence.

All is pervaded by you: thus thunder the Shrutis, thus proclaim the Puranas.
I have no other meditation, no other practice, no other desire.

At the end of every ritual comes the offering to Brahman.
That mantra is the reason for everything.
Says Tuka, without even a vowel mark or a dot, the Name alone suffices.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The burden of rules and prohibitions makes you unreachable, O Giver. So with stammering, childlike speech my tongue repeats your Name without stopping. Your Name, O Hari, is the raft on the ocean of this existence. All is filled with you: so thunder the Shrutis, so proclaim the Puranas. I have no other meditation, no other practice, no other longing. At the end of every ritual comes the offering to Brahman; that mantra is the reason for all of it. Tuka says: without even a vowel mark or a dot, the Name alone is enough.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the tangle of ritual rules against the simplicity of the Name and chooses the Name. He admits the heavy code of do's and don'ts can make God feel out of reach, so he drops it for a child's stammering repetition of Hari's Name, which he calls the raft across the ocean of birth and death. He grounds this in scripture itself: the Shrutis and Puranas say God pervades everything, so no further practice is needed. His final claim is the boldest. Every ritual ends by offering its fruit to Brahman anyway, so the Name, spoken plainly without even correct pronunciation, already carries the whole point and suffices on its own.

GATHA 1519 The Power of the Name

The Name, the soldier of Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

हरिनामाचें करूनि तारूं । भवसिंधुपार उतरलों ॥1॥
फावलें फावलें आतां । पायीं संतां विनटलों ॥ध्रु.॥
हरिनामाचा शस्त्र घोडा । संसार गाढा छेदिला ॥2॥
हरिनामाचीं धनुष्यकांडें । विन्मुख तोंडें किळकाळ ॥3॥
येणें चि बळें सरते आह्मी । हरिचे नामें लोकीं तिहीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों साचे । श्रीविठ्ठलाचे डिंगर ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Making a raft of Hari's Name, I have crossed the ocean of existence.

I have found it, I have found it!
I have surrendered at the feet of the saints.

With the Name of Hari as my sword and steed,
I have cut through the dense jungle of worldly life.

The Name of Hari is my bow and arrow;
shrieking death turns its face away in defeat.

By this strength alone we prevail in all three worlds:
the Name of Hari.

Says Tuka, we have truly become the soldiers of Shri Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I made a raft of Hari's Name and crossed to the far shore of this ocean of existence. I have found it, I have found it. I have surrendered at the feet of the saints. Hari's Name is my sword and my warhorse; with it I have cut through the dense thicket of worldly life. Hari's Name is my bow and arrows; cruel death turns its face away and flees. By this strength alone we prevail in all three worlds: by the Name of Hari. Tuka says: we have truly become the soldiers of Shri Vitthala.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram celebrates the Name as the one weapon that wins every battle a soul has to fight. He turns it into raft, sword, horse, bow, and arrows, an entire armory, and with it he crosses the ocean of existence, cuts through the jungle of worldly life, and routs death itself. The cry I have found it marks the joy of a man who has stopped searching, having surrendered at the saints' feet. The closing line names what he has become: not a master who owns the Name, but a soldier in Vitthal's service, his strength borrowed entirely from his Lord's Name.

GATHA 1520 Autobiography

Autobiography, words given as rain

मराठी मूळ

नव्हें हें गुरुत्व मेघवृष्ट वाणी । ऐकावी कानीं संतजनीं ॥1॥
देहपिंड दान दिला एकसरें । मुिळचें तें खरें टांकसाळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे झरा लागला नवनीत । सेविलिया हित पोट धाय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is not the ego of a teacher;
my words fall like rain, to be heard by the saints.

I have offered this body as a gift, all at once.
What is original and genuine is the mint itself.

Says Tuka, a stream of fresh butter has begun to flow.
If you partake of it, the belly is full and satisfied.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is not the pride of a teacher; my words fall like a rain-cloud, for the saints to hear. I have given this body away as a gift, all at once. What is original and true is the mint itself. Tuka says: a stream of fresh butter has begun to flow. Whoever takes it is helped, and the belly is filled and content.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the suspicion that he is setting himself up as a guru. He says his words are not his own self-importance but rain poured out for the saints, and he has already handed his whole body over as a gift, so there is no self left to be proud. The image of the mint says the truth he speaks is genuine coin struck at the source, not his invention. The flowing butter is his promise to the listener: this teaching is nourishment freely given, and whoever partakes of it is satisfied.

GATHA 1521 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the hidden witness

मराठी मूळ

घटीं अलिप्त असे रवि । अिग्न काष्ठामाजी जेवी । तैसा नारायण जीवीं । जीवसाक्षीवर्तनें ॥1॥
भोग ज्याचे तया अंगीं । भिन्न प्रारब्ध जगीं । विचित्र ये रंगीं । रंगें रंगला गोसावी ॥ध्रु.॥
देह संकल्पासारिखें । एक एकांसी पारिखें । सुख आणि दुःखें । अंगी कर्मे त्रिविध ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोडें । न कळे तयासी सांकडें । त्याचिया निवाडें । उगवे केलें विंदान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As the sun remains untouched by the water in a pot,
as fire dwells hidden within wood,
so does Narayana dwell within the jiva,
moving as the witness of the jiva.

Each one's experience belongs to their own body;
destinies are varied in this world.
The Lord is colored by color within this spectacle, dressed as the Gosavi.

The body follows the pattern of one's own sankalpa;
each is a stranger to the other.
Pleasure and suffering come from one's own threefold karma.

Says Tuka, this puzzle cannot be grasped by anyone.
Only by his own judgment is the intricate design revealed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As the sun stays untouched by the water in a pot, as fire lies hidden inside wood, so Narayana dwells within the living being, moving there as the witness of the being. Each one's experience belongs to his own body; in this world the destinies are different. The Lord is colored by the colors of this spectacle, dressed up as the Gosavi. The body follows the shape of one's own will; each is a stranger to the other. Pleasure and pain come from one's own threefold karma. Tuka says: this puzzle cannot be solved by anyone. Only by his own decision is the intricate design undone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how God lives inside every creature without being caught by what the creature goes through. Like the sun reflected in pot-water or fire latent in wood, Narayana dwells in the living being as a witness, present but untouched. Yet that same Lord seems to take on every role, wearing the costumes of the world's drama, while each body reaps the pleasure and pain of its own karma and stays a stranger to the rest. He admits the riddle of how the one untouched witness becomes all these separate, suffering selves cannot be cracked by human cleverness. Only God, who set up the design, can unravel it.

GATHA 1522 Longing and Separation

Longing, the gift of tears

मराठी मूळ

सद्गदित कंठ दाटो । येणें फुटो हृदय ॥1॥
चिंतनाचा एक लाहो । तुमच्या अहो विठ्ठला ॥ध्रु.॥
नेत्रीं जळ वाहो सदां । आनंदाचे रोमांच ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपादान । इच्छी मन हे जोडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let my throat choke with feeling;
let my heart burst open with this.

O Vitthala, let the one gain of contemplating you be mine.

Let tears flow ceaselessly from my eyes;
let goosebumps of joy cover my body.

Says Tuka, my mind longs for this gift of grace, this joining.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let my throat choke with feeling; let my heart break open with it. O Vitthala, let the one thing I gain be the thinking of you. Let tears flow from my eyes always; let the thrill of joy rise on my skin. Tuka says: my mind longs for this, the gift of your grace, this joining.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer not for relief but for deeper feeling. Tukaram asks for a choking throat, a breaking heart, ceaseless tears, and the bodily thrill of joy, the very signs that the thought of Vitthal has overwhelmed him. He calls remembering God the one gain worth having, the single profit he wants from his life. The final line names what he is really asking for: this flood of feeling is not something he can produce, it is a gift of grace, and what he longs for through it is union with the Lord.

GATHA 1523 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, God filling the sight

मराठी मूळ

जेथें देखें तेथें उभा । अवघ्या गगनाचा गाभा ॥1॥
डोळां बैसलें बैसलें । ध्यान राहोनि संचलें ॥ध्रु.॥
सरसावलें मन । केले सोज्वळ लोचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सवें । आतां असिजेत देवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever I look, there He stands, the very essence of all the sky.

Seated, seated within my eyes;
the vision has remained and pervaded all.

The mind has been drawn forward,
and the eyes have been made bright and clear.

Says Tuka, now let there be abiding with God always.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever I look, there he stands, the very core of the whole sky. He has settled in my eyes, settled there; the vision has stayed and spread through everything. My mind has been drawn forward; my eyes have been made clear and bright. Tuka says: now let me always abide together with God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a vision that has taken over his seeing. Wherever he turns, Vitthal is standing there, the essence filling all of space, until the form has lodged in his eyes and spread out to cover everything he looks at. This is not strain but ease: his mind is drawn toward God and his sight has been cleansed and brightened by what it beholds. The closing line is the only thing left to want. Having once seen God everywhere, he asks simply to go on abiding with him without break.

GATHA 1524 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the self dissolved

मराठी मूळ

तान्हे तान्ह प्याली । भूक भुकेने खादली ॥1॥
जेथें तें च नाहीं जालें । झाडा घेतला विठ्ठलें ॥ध्रु.॥
वास वासनेसी नाहीं । मन पांगुळलें पायीं ॥2॥
शेष उरला तुका । जीवा जीवीं जाला चुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Thirst has drunk up thirst itself.
Hunger has been consumed by hunger.

Where even the sense of 'there' has been dissolved,
Vitthala has swept it all clean.

No trace of desire remains;
the mind has become lame at his feet.

Says Tuka, what remains is the remainder.
The jiva has slipped away from the jiva's grasp.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Thirst has drunk up thirst itself. Hunger has eaten hunger. Where even the sense of a 'there' is gone, Vitthala has swept the whole place clean. No scent of desire is left; the mind has gone lame at his feet. Tuka says: what is left is only the remainder. The living being has slipped out of the living being's own grasp.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at a state where the seeking self has consumed itself and vanished. Thirst drinking thirst and hunger eating hunger mean the very craving that drove him has turned on itself and disappeared; Vitthal has swept the inner space so clean that even the sense of a separate place is gone. The mind, having reached the Lord's feet, can go no further and stops, lame, with no desire left to chase. What remains is only a remainder, and the jiva has lost its grip on itself: the small self that used to manage everything is simply no longer holding on.

GATHA 1525 Renunciation

Renunciation, naked and provided for

मराठी मूळ

पाणिपात्र दिगांबरा । हस्त करा सारिखे ॥1॥
आवश्यक देव मनीं । चिंतनींच सादर ॥ध्रु.॥
भिक्षा कामधेनुऐशी । अवकाशीं शयन ॥2॥
पांघरोनि तुका दिशा ॥ केला वास अलक्षीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With cupped hands as my vessel, naked as the sky,
my hands made alike.

God alone in my mind, and I am absorbed in contemplation.

Begging is my Kamadhenu, and the open sky is my bed.

Says Tuka, wrapping the directions around me as a shawl,
I have made my home in the invisible.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My cupped hands are my begging-bowl; I am naked as the sky, my hands made enough on their own. God alone is in my mind, and I am absorbed, intent, in nothing but contemplation. Begging is my wish-granting cow; the open sky is where I sleep. Tuka says: wrapping the directions around me as a shawl, I have made my home in the unseen.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the life of the radical renunciant who owns nothing and lacks nothing. He has no bowl but his own cupped hands, no clothes but the sky, no shelter but the open air, and yet he is provided for: begging itself is his Kamadhenu, the cow that grants every wish. The poverty is total and the contentment is total, because the one thing he holds is God, fixed in his mind. The closing image makes the surrender complete. With the four directions as his only shawl, he has settled his home in the invisible, in God beyond all form.

GATHA 1526 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the taste of Brahman

मराठी मूळ

विषयीं विसर पडिला निःशेष । अंगीं ब्रह्मरस ठसावला ॥1॥
लाभाचिया सोसें पुढें चाली मना । धनाचा कृपणा लोभ जैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गंगासागरसंगमीं । अवघ्या जाल्या ऊमिन एकमय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Forgetfulness of sense-objects has become complete. The essence of Brahman has settled deep within my being.

Driven by the eagerness of gain, the mind presses forward, like a miser's craving for wealth. Says Tuka, at the meeting of the Ganga and the sea, all the waves have become one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Forgetting of the sense-objects has become complete. The essence of Brahman has set firm within my body. Driven by the hunger for this gain, my mind presses on ahead, the way a miser craves more wealth. Tuka says: at the meeting of the Ganga and the sea, all the waves have become one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being so filled with God that the outer world drops away. He has forgotten the objects of the senses entirely, and the taste of Brahman has set hard inside him like something cast and fixed. Strikingly, he keeps the language of greed: his mind still rushes forward hungry for more of this, the way a miser can never have enough money, except here the craving is for God. The final image seals it. As the river loses itself where it joins the sea and the separate waves become one water, his separateness has merged into the one reality.

GATHA 1527 The Power of the Name

The Name, sins burned to ash

मराठी मूळ

कृष्णरामनाम मांडीं पां वोळी । तेणें होइल होळी पापा धुनी ॥1॥
ऐसा मना छंद लावीं रे अभ्यास । जया नाहीं नास ब्रह्मरसा ॥ध्रु.॥
जोडी तरी ऐसी करावी न सरे । पुढें आस नुरे मागुताली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें धरा कांहीं मनीं । यातायाती खाणीं चुकतील ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Set up rows of Krishna and Rama's Name.
By it, a Holi-fire will be made of sin's burning.

Let the mind take up this rhythm with passion,
for the essence of Brahman is never destroyed.

If you must acquire something, let it be that which never runs out, so that no future craving remains.

Says Tuka, hold this firmly in your mind,
and the matrix of births through different species will be escaped.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Set up rows of the names of Krishna and Rama. From that, a Holi-fire will rise, and it will burn your sins to ash. Set your mind to this practice; love it. The essence of Brahman is never destroyed. If you must gather something, gather what never runs out, so that no craving is left for later. Tuka says: hold this much in your mind, and you will escape the rounds of birth through womb after womb.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells you what to invest in and what the return is. He says to line up the names of Krishna and Rama on the tongue, like fuel laid in rows, and let them catch into a bonfire that burns sin away as Holi burns the old. He asks you to make this repetition a settled habit of the mind, because the taste of Brahman it gives is the one thing that cannot be destroyed. Everything else you could acquire runs out and leaves you craving more; the Name does not. Hold to it, he promises, and the wheel of rebirth through species after species comes to an end.

GATHA 1528 The Saints

The saints, the shard holds butter

मराठी मूळ

परमार्थी तो न ह्मणावा आपुला । सलगी धाकुला हेळूं नये ॥1॥
थोडा चि स्फुलिंग बहुत दावाग्नी । वाढतां इंधनीं वाढविला ॥ध्रु.॥
पितियानें तैसा वंदावा कुमर । जयाचें अंतर देवें वसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शिरीं वाहावें खापर । माजी असे सार नवनीत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A person devoted to the Supreme Goal, however young or seemingly insignificant, should never be treated lightly on account of familiarity.

A tiny spark can become a great forest fire when fed with kindling.

Even a father should bow before the child within whom God dwells.

Says Tuka, carry the earthen shard upon your head, for inside it lies the pure butter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not call a lover of God your own and treat him lightly. Do not slight one who is young or seems small just because you are close to him. A small spark becomes a great forest fire when it is fed with fuel. Even a father should bow to the child in whom God dwells. Tuka says: carry the broken clay pot on your head, for inside it is pure butter.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against measuring a devotee of God by his outward size or station. Familiarity tempts us to treat a young or humble person carelessly, but he says that is a mistake: a tiny spark, given fuel, becomes a forest fire, and the God-filled person can grow the same way. He pushes the point to its sharpest edge: even a father should bow before his own child if God lives within that child, because the relation of devotion outranks the relation of birth. The closing image makes it plain. The plain clay shard looks like nothing, yet the pure butter is inside it; honor what it holds, not how it looks.

GATHA 1529 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, the world is God

मराठी मूळ

ज्याचा ऐसा अनुभव । विश्व देव सत्यत्वें ॥1॥
देव तया जवळी असे । पाप नासे दरुषणें ॥ध्रु.॥
कामक्रोधा नाहीं चाली । भूतीं जाली समता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भेदाभेद । गेले वाद खंडोनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He whose experience is this, that the world is truly God:
God dwells near to that one, and sins are destroyed by his very sight.

Lust and anger lose their footing,
and equality toward all beings is established.

Says Tuka, all debates of difference and non-difference have been cut through and gone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one whose experience is this, that the whole world is truly God: God lives near to him, and sins fall away at the sight of him. Lust and anger lose their hold in him. He sees all beings as equal. Tuka says: for him the quarrels of difference and non-difference are cut through and gone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the person in whom realization has actually landed, not as theory but as lived experience: he sees the entire world as nothing other than God. Such a person carries God so close that even seeing him destroys the onlooker's sins. In him the two great drivers, lust and anger, have lost their footing, and every being looks equal to his eye. And the long philosophical war over whether the soul is different from God or one with it simply ends for him; he has cut through it, not by winning the debate but by passing beyond the need for it.

GATHA 1530 The Power of the Name

The Name, service from where you sit

मराठी मूळ

सेवा ते आवडी उच्चारावें नाम । भेदाभेदकाम निवारूनि ॥1॥
न लगे हालावें चालावें बाहेरी । अवघें चि घरीं बैसलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
देवाचीं च नामें देवाचिये शिरीं । सर्व अळंकारीं समर्पावीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आहे भावें चि संतोषी । वसे नामापाशीं आपुलिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The truest service is to utter the Name with love, setting aside all concern of duality and non-duality.

There is no need to stir or go anywhere outside;
everything is right here, simply sitting at home.

Offer all the names of God, like ornaments, upon God's own head.

Says Tuka, God is content with devotion alone and dwells near his own Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The truest service is to say the Name with love, putting aside all worry about difference and non-difference. You need not stir or go anywhere outside. Everything is right here, simply sitting at home. Offer all of God's names back upon God's own head, like ornaments. Tuka says: God is satisfied with devotion alone, and he dwells right beside his own Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips worship down to its core: the real service is to utter God's Name lovingly, dropping the head-debates about oneness and difference that go nowhere. He insists this needs no journey and no outward effort; the whole work is done sitting at home. The names of God are themselves ornaments, and you give them back by laying them on God's own head, returning to him what is already his. The reassurance at the end is the key: God asks for devotion and nothing more, and he is never far off, because he lives right next to his own Name on your tongue.

GATHA 1531 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the quarreling learned

मराठी मूळ

ज्ञानियांचे घरीं चोजवितां देव । तेथें अहंभाव पाठी लागे ॥1॥
ह्मणोनियां ऐसे सांडिले उपाय । धरियेले पाय दृढ तुझे ॥ध्रु.॥
वेदपारायण पंडित वाचक । न मिळती एक एकांमधीं ॥2॥
पाहों गेलों भाव कैसी आत्मनिष्ठा । तेथें देखें चेष्टा विपरीत ॥3॥
आपुलिया नाहीं निवाले जे अंगें । योगी करती रागें गुरगुरु ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मज कोणांचा पांगिला । नको बा विठ्ठला करूं आतां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the homes of the learned, when God is sought,
the sense of I-ness follows right behind.

Therefore I have abandoned all such methods and held firmly to your feet.

Scholars and reciters of the Vedas cannot agree among themselves.

I went to observe their steadfast abidance in the Self and found nothing but perverse behavior there.

Those whose own bodies have not found coolness,
those so-called yogis, growl at others in anger.

Says Tuka, I have no business with any of them.
Do not make me go to them, dear Vitthala.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the homes of the learned, when you go looking for God, the sense of I follows right behind. So I have let go of all those methods and held tight to your feet. The scholars and reciters of the Vedas cannot agree with one another. I went to see how steady they were in the Self, and I found only twisted behavior there. Those whose own selves have found no peace, those so-called yogis, growl at others in anger. Tuka says: I owe nothing to any of them. Do not make me go to them now, dear Vitthala.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains why he turned away from the houses of the learned and clung instead to God's feet. He noticed that wherever God is pursued through scholarship, ego comes trailing right behind, so the search feeds the very thing it should dissolve. He looked closely and found the experts contradicting each other and behaving in ways that betrayed their words; men whose own hearts had found no cooling were snapping at everyone else. The criticism is aimed at the pattern, the way knowledge curdles into pride and quarrel, not at any single person. His prayer is simple and self-protecting: keep me away from that, Vitthal; let me depend on you alone.

GATHA 1532 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीची वाट पाहें निरंतर । निडळावरी कर ठेवूनियां ॥1॥
जातियां निरोप पाठवीं माहेरा । कां मज सासुरा सांडियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
पैल कोण दिसे गरुडाचे वारिकें । विठ्ठलासारिकें चतुर्भुज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धीर नाहीं माझ्या जीवा । भेटसी केधवां पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I gaze constantly toward the road to Pandhari, my hand shading my brow.

Send word with those going to my natal home:
why have I been abandoned in this in-laws' house?

Who is that figure I see in the distance,
mounted on Garuda, four-armed, like Vitthala himself?

Says Tuka, my jiva has no more patience.
When, O Panduranga, will you come to meet me?

IN PLAIN WORDS

I watch the road to Pandhari without stopping, my hand held over my brow. Send word with those who are going to my mother's home: why have I been left here in this in-laws' house? Who is that I see far off, riding on Garuda, four-armed, looking like Vitthala himself? Tuka says: my soul has no patience left. When, O Panduranga, will you come and meet me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram writes as a bride stranded in her in-laws' house, gazing down the road to Pandhari for any sign of home. The image carries the soul's exile: this world is the harsh in-laws' house, and Pandhari, where Vitthal stands, is the mother's home it aches to return to. He begs travelers to carry a message back, asking why he has been abandoned, and his eyes strain at a far-off four-armed figure on Garuda, hoping it is the Lord come at last. The poem ends in raw impatience: the soul cannot wait any longer, and the only question that matters is when God will finally come.

GATHA 1533 The Power of the Name

The Name, the boat across existence

मराठी मूळ

ऐसी जोडी करा राम कंठीं धरा । जेणें चुके फेरा गर्भवास ॥1॥
नासिवंत आटी ि◌प्रयापुत्रधन । बीज ज्याचा सीण तें चि फळ ॥ध्रु.॥
नाव धड करा सहजरा नामांची । जे भवसिंधूची थडी पावे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काळा हाणा तोंडावरी । भाता भरा हरिरामबाणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make this one investment: keep Rama upon your tongue.
By it, the cycle of birth in the womb will cease.

The craving for spouse, children, and wealth is perishable;
the seed whose nature is toil yields only toil as its fruit.

Build a sound boat of the effortless names,
a boat that will reach the far shore of the ocean of existence.

Says Tuka, strike Death across the face.
Fill your quiver with arrows bearing the names of Hari and Rama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Make this one gain: keep Rama on your throat. By it the round of birth in the womb is broken. The craving for wife, children, and wealth all perishes; the seed that is toil bears only toil as its fruit. Build a sound boat out of the effortless names, a boat that reaches the far shore of the ocean of existence. Tuka says: strike Death across the face. Fill your quiver with arrows of the names of Hari and Rama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges one acquisition worth making: keeping Rama on the tongue, which breaks the endless return to the womb. He sets it against the things people actually chase, spouse, children, money, and says these all perish; a seed of toil can only grow into more toil. The Name, by contrast, is a well-built boat of effortless syllables that carries you across the ocean of worldly existence to the far shore. He ends with a fighter's image: do not cower before death; strike it in the face, and load your quiver with the names of Hari and Rama as your arrows.

GATHA 1534 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child crying for the breast

मराठी मूळ

पाहें मजकडे भरोनियां दृष्टी । बहुत हिंपुष्टी जालों माते ॥1॥
करावेंसे वाटे जीवा स्तनपान । नव्हे हें वचन श्रृंघारिक ॥ध्रु.॥
सत्यासाटीं माझी शब्दविवंचना । जोडिल्या वचनाचें तें नव्हे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी कळवळ्याची कींव । भागलासे जीव कर्तव्यानें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look at me with your full gaze, O Mother, for I have grown very weak and forlorn.
My jiva longs to nurse at your breast.

This is not romantic speech. It is a cry of truth.
My words are not artfully constructed but wrung from sincerity alone.

Says Tuka, this cry is born of anguish and deep compassion for my own condition.
My jiva is exhausted by the demands of duty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look at me, Mother, with your full gaze. I have grown weak and worn out. My soul wants to nurse at your breast. This is not pretty, romantic talk. It is the truth I must say. My weighing of these words is for the sake of truth; they are not strung together for effect. Tuka says: this is the cry of my own pity for myself. My soul is worn down by duty.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries to God as a child to its mother, asking for one full look and for the milk of the breast, which here means the infant's helpless dependence on divine love. He is careful to set the tone: this is not the ornamental, romantic talk of a poet showing off, but words wrung from real distress. He says he weighs his words for truth's sake, not to make them sound beautiful. The closing is an honest confession of his state: worn out by the demands of duty, he feels pity for his own condition, and out of that exhaustion the cry rises on its own.

GATHA 1535 Longing and Separation

Longing, the fawn calling its doe

मराठी मूळ

तुज ह्मणतील कृपेचा सागर । तरि कां केला धीर पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
आझुनि कां नये तुज माझी दया । काय देवराया पाहातोसि ॥ध्रु.॥
आळवितों जैसें पाडस कुरंगिणी । पीडिलिया वनीं तानभूक ॥2॥
प्रेमरसपान्हा पाजीं माझे आई । धांवें वो विठाई वोरसोनि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें कोण हरी दुःख । तुजविण एक पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They call you an ocean of mercy.
Then why have you delayed so long, O Panduranga?

Does my suffering still not move you to compassion?
What are you watching for, O King of Gods?

I call out like a fawn crying for its doe,
tormented by hunger and thirst in the forest.

O Mother Vithabai, pour forth the flowing milk of love.
Come running, overflowing with tenderness.

Says Tuka, who else will take away my sorrow
but you alone, O Panduranga?

IN PLAIN WORDS

They call you an ocean of mercy. Then why have you waited so long, Panduranga? Even now my suffering does not move you to pity? What are you watching for, King of Gods? I call out like a fawn crying for its doe, worn down by hunger and thirst in the forest. Pour the milk of love's sweetness for me, my Mother; come running, Vithabai, overflowing with tenderness. Tuka says: who else can take away my sorrow but you alone, Panduranga?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God on his own reputation: if everyone calls you an ocean of mercy, then your delay makes no sense, so why keep waiting? He asks, almost in complaint, what God is watching for while his servant suffers. Then the image shifts to a lost fawn crying for its doe in a forest, faint with hunger and thirst, and God becomes the mother whose milk is the sweetness of love. He begs Vithabai to come running, brimming over with tenderness. The closing reason is the whole point of the appeal: there is no one else who can lift this sorrow, so the delay leaves him with nowhere else to turn.

GATHA 1536 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, bread on the spike

मराठी मूळ

भक्ति तों कठिण शुळावरील पोळी । निवडे तो बळी विरळा शूर ॥1॥
जेथें पाहें तेथें देखीचा पर्वत । पायाविण भिंत तांतडीची ॥ध्रु.॥
कामावलें तरि पाका ओज घडे । रुचि आणि जोडे श्लाघ्यता हे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मना पाहिजे अंकुश । नित्य नवा दिस जागृतीचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Devotion is as difficult as bread impaled upon a spike.
Only the rare and valiant hero can claim it.

Wherever I look, I see a mountain of obstacles,
a wall built without foundation, raised in haste.

When one perseveres, the dish cooks to its full essence, and both flavor and glory are gained.

Says Tuka, the mind needs a goad.
Each day must bring fresh vigilance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Devotion is hard, like bread set on a spike. Only the rare, brave one can take hold of it. Wherever I look I see a mountain of obstacles, a wall raised in a hurry with no foundation. But when you keep at it, the dish cooks through to its full taste, and you gain both flavor and honor. Tuka says: the mind needs a goad. Every day must bring fresh wakefulness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is honest about how hard the path of devotion is. He compares it to snatching bread off a spike: it cannot be grabbed carelessly, and only the rare, courageous person manages it. The road looks like a mountain of obstacles, or a wall thrown up in haste with nothing under it, ready to fall. Yet he holds out the reward of persistence with a cooking image: stay at it and the dish finally cooks through, yielding both real flavor and real honor. The practical instruction at the end is that the restless mind must be kept under a goad, and the vigilance cannot be borrowed from yesterday; each day demands it new.

GATHA 1537 Prayers

Prayer, why does the Lord sleep

मराठी मूळ

पापी ह्मणों तरि आठवितों पाय । दोष बळी काय तयाहूनि ॥1॥
ऐशा विचाराचे घालूनि कोंडणी । काय चक्रपाणी निजलेती ॥ध्रु.॥
एकवेळ जेणें पुत्राच्या उद्देशें ॥ घेतल्याचें कैसें नेलें दुःख ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अहो वैकुंठनायका । चिंता कां सेवका तुमचिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I call myself one steeped in wrong, still I remember your feet.
Is any fault more powerful than that remembrance?

Having penned in such thoughts, O Chakrapani,
why do you lie sleeping?

You once lifted the sorrow of one who called your name with his son's purpose in mind.

Says Tuka, O Lord of Vaikuntha,
why should your own servant carry any worry?

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I call myself a sinner, still I remember your feet. Is any fault stronger than that remembrance? I have penned in these very thoughts, Chakrapani, so why do you lie sleeping? Once you lifted away the sorrow of one who called your name with only his son in mind. Tuka says: O Lord of Vaikuntha, why should your own servant carry any worry?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues his case to a God who seems unresponsive. He admits he may be a sinner, but counters that he still remembers God's feet, and asks whether any sin can outweigh that remembrance. Having boxed God in with this reasoning, he prods him: then why do you lie there asleep, Chakrapani? He recalls the saving of Ajamila, who called the name only because it was his son's name yet was rescued anyway, to show that God responds even to an accidental call. The conclusion turns the logic into reassurance and gentle reproach at once: if you are the Lord of Vaikuntha, your own servant has no business carrying worry.

GATHA 1538 The Power of the Name

The Name, the road to Vaikuntha thrown open

मराठी मूळ

उगविल्या गुंती । ऐशा मागें नेणों किती ॥1॥
ख्यात केली अजामेळें । होतें निघालें दिवाळें ॥ध्रु.॥
मोकलिला प्रायिश्चतीं । कोणी न धरिती हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मुक्त वाट । वैकुंठीची घडघडाट ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How many such knots have been untied before this, I do not know.

Ajamela made the case famous:
even his complete ruin was reversed.

Released from all need for penance, none could hold him back.

Says Tuka, the road to Vaikuntha was thrown wide open with a thunderous rumble.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How many such knots have been untied before this, I do not know. Ajamela made the case famous: even his utter ruin was turned around. He was freed from all need for penance, and no one could hold him back. Tuka says: the road to Vaikuntha was thrown wide open, with a thunderous roar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to the power of the Name by counting up the lives it has already untangled, too many to know. He names the famous case of Ajamila, a man whose life had collapsed into complete ruin, and yet was reversed when he uttered the divine name at the end. The Name freed him so completely that no penance was required and nothing could drag him back. The closing image is triumphant: the gate to Vaikuntha did not just open quietly, it swung wide with a thunderous roar, as if to announce that the worst sinner had been let through.

GATHA 1539 The Power of the Name

The Name, the easy way

मराठी मूळ

सरळीं हीं नामें उच्चारावीं सदा । हरि बा गोविंदा रामकृष्णा ॥1॥
पुण्य पर्वकाळ तीर्थॉ ही सकळ । कथा सिंधुजळ न्हाऊं येती ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघे चि लाभ बैसलिया घरा । येती भाव धरा एके ठायीं ॥2॥
सेळ्या मेंढ्या गाई सेवा घेती ह्मैसी । कामधेनु तैसी नव्हे एक ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें पाविजे अनंता । हें वर्म जाणतां सुलभ चि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Utter these simple names always:
Hari, Govinda, Rama, Krishna.

All merit, all holy seasons, all pilgrimages come to bathe in the ocean-waters of katha.

Sitting at home, every gain will come to you.
Hold your bhava firmly in one place.

Sheep, cows, and buffalo may give their service,
but not one of them is like the wish-fulfilling Kamadhenu.

Says Tuka, Ananta is easily reached by those who know this vital point.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Utter these simple names always: Hari, Govinda, Rama, Krishna. All merit, all holy seasons, all pilgrimages come to bathe in the ocean of katha. Sit at home, and every gain comes to you. Hold your bhava firmly in one place. Sheep and cows and buffalo give their service too, but not one of them is the wish-fulfilling Kamadhenu. Tuka says: Ananta is reached with ease by those who know this one vital point.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the whole spiritual economy and then collapses it into a single act. Merit, sacred calendars, and far pilgrimages are not chased; they come and bathe in the ocean of Hari's story, so the seeker can stay home and still receive everything, provided the heart is held steady in one place. The contrast of common animals with the Kamadhenu makes the point about quality: many practices yield some service, but only the Name yields whatever you wish. The vital point he wants understood is that God is not won by exertion across the world but by these plain names spoken always.

GATHA 1540 The Power of the Name

The Name purifies, God follows the devotee

मराठी मूळ

पवित्र तो देह वाणी पुण्यवंत । जो वदे अच्युत सर्व काळ ॥1॥
तयाच्या चिंतनें तरतील दोषी । जळतील रासी पातकाच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
देव इच्छी रज चरणींची माती । धांवत चालती मागें मागें ॥2॥
काय त्यां उरलें वेगळें आणीक । वैकुंठनायक जयां कंठीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवभक्तांचा संगम । तेथें ओघ नाम त्रिवेणीचा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sacred is the body, and blessed is the tongue that utters Achyuta's name at all times.

By his contemplation, even the guilty and faulty ones are carried across, and heaps of sin are burned to ash.

God himself desires the dust of such a devotee's feet and follows eagerly behind.

What else remains for those who carry the Lord of Vaikuntha at their throats?

Says Tuka, the meeting of God and devotee is itself the Triveni, the confluence where the stream of the Name flows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sacred is the body, and blessed is the tongue that utters Achyuta's name at all times. By thinking of him, even the guilty are carried across, and heaps of sin are burned to ash. God himself longs for the dust of such a devotee's feet, and runs eagerly behind him. What else is left to gain for those who carry the Lord of Vaikuntha at their throats? Tuka says: the meeting of God and devotee is itself the Triveni, where the stream of the Name flows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that the Name does not merely cleanse the devotee; it reverses the usual order between God and the worshipper. The body and tongue that hold Achyuta's name are themselves sacred, and even the guilty are ferried over while their stores of sin burn away. Then comes the bold turn: God himself craves the dust of the devotee's feet and chases after him. For one who carries the Lord at the throat there is nothing further to seek, because the simple meeting of God and devotee is already the holiest confluence, a Triveni made of the Name.

GATHA 1541 The Saints

Saints, the surest boat across

मराठी मूळ

पाप ताप दैन्य जाय उठाउठीं । जालिया भेटी हरिदासांची ॥1॥
ऐसें बळ नाहीं आणिकांचे अंगीं । तपें तिर्थॉ जगीं दानें व्रतें ॥ध्रु.॥
चरणींचे रज वंदी शूळपाणी । नाचती कीर्तनीं त्यांचे माथां ॥2॥
भव तरावया उत्तम हे नाव । भिजों नेंदी पाव हात कांहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मन जालें समाधान । देखिले चरण वैष्णवांचे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sin, suffering, and poverty vanish instantly
when one meets the devotees of Hari.

No other power in the world, whether austerity, pilgrimage, charity, or vows, can match this.

Even Shiva bows to the dust of their feet and dances upon their heads during kirtan.

For crossing the ocean of existence, this is the finest boat;
it does not let even your hands or feet get wet.

Says Tuka, my mind has found its peace in beholding the feet of the Vaishnavas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sin, suffering, and poverty go in an instant when one meets the devotees of Hari. No other power in the world, not austerity, not pilgrimage, not charity, not vows, has such strength. Even Shiva bows to the dust of their feet and dances on their heads in kirtan. To cross the ocean of birth, this is the finest boat; it does not let even your hands or feet get wet. Tuka says: my mind has found its peace in beholding the feet of the Vaishnavas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram ranks the company of saints above every other religious effort. Meeting Hari's devotees clears sin, suffering, and poverty at once, and he insists no austerity, pilgrimage, charity, or vow can match that power. He raises them higher still by saying Shiva himself reveres the dust of their feet and joins their kirtan. The boat image lands the claim: other paths are crossings where you still get soaked, but the saints carry you over the ocean of rebirth without your hands or feet even touching the water, which is why his own mind rests simply in the sight of them.

GATHA 1542 The Power of the Name

Kirtan, fortune on the tongue

मराठी मूळ

येणें बोधें आह्मी असों सर्वकाळ । करूनि निर्मळ हरिकथा ॥1॥
आह्मी भूमीवरी एक दइवांचे । निधान हें वाचे सांपडलें ॥ध्रु.॥
तरतील कुळें दोन्ही उभयतां । गातां आइकतां सुखरूप ॥2॥
न चळे हा मंत्र न ह्मणों यातीकुळ । न लगे काळ वेळ विचारावी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा विठ्ठल विसांवा । सांटवीन हांवा हृदयांत ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With this understanding, let us abide at all times, keeping ourselves pure through Hari's kirtan.

We are among the fortunate upon this earth;
this treasure has been found upon our tongues.

Both lineages are carried across, both the singer and the listener, for both are of the nature of bliss.

This mantra never fails. It does not ask for caste or lineage, nor need one consider the proper time or season.

Says Tuka, my Vitthala is my rest.
I will store this eagerness within my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With this understanding, let us abide at all times, keeping ourselves pure through Hari's kirtan. We are among the fortunate on this earth; this treasure has been found upon our tongues. Both lineages are carried across, the singer and the listener alike, for both are made of bliss. This mantra never fails; it does not ask for caste or lineage, and it needs no fixing of the right time or season. Tuka says: my Vitthal is my rest. I will store this longing in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counts the kirtan-singer among the truly fortunate, because the treasure he has found sits on his own tongue and asks nothing of fortune outside him. He widens the gift to include the listener as well: both lineages, singer and hearer, are ferried across, since both partake of bliss. The radical edge is in the third stanza, where he names what the Name does not require: it asks no caste, no lineage, no auspicious hour, so the door stands open to everyone the conventional rites would exclude. For himself, Vitthal is simply rest, a longing he chooses to keep stored in the heart.

GATHA 1543 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the fruit of many lives

मराठी मूळ

बहुतां जन्मींचें संचित । सबळ होय जरि बहुत । तरि चि होय हरिभक्त । कृपावंत मानसीं ॥1॥
असे भूतदया मानसीं । अवघा देखे हृषीकेशी । जीवें न विसंबे तयासी । मागें मागें हिंडतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निविनकार । शरणागतां वज्रपंजर । जे जे अनुसरले नर । तयां जन्म चुकलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Only when the merit of many births accumulates in great abundance does one become a devotee of Hari, with a mind that is gracious and compassionate.

Such a one holds compassion for all beings in the mind and sees Hrishikesha everywhere.
With their very jiva they do not forget him
and follow behind him wherever they go.

Says Tuka, the Lord is unchanging, a fortress of diamond for those who surrender.
Whoever has followed him has been freed from rebirth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Only when the merit of many births gathers in great abundance does one become a devotee of Hari, with a mind that is gracious and kind. Such a one holds compassion for all beings in the mind, and sees Hrishikesha everywhere. With his very life he does not forget him, and follows behind him wherever he goes. Tuka says: the Lord is unchanging, a fortress of diamond for those who surrender. Whoever has followed him has escaped rebirth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram frames true devotion as rare and hard-won, the harvest of merit stored across many lifetimes, so that becoming Hari's devotee is not a casual choice but a culmination. The marks of such a soul are inward and ethical: a mind softened to compassion for every creature, and an eye that sees Hrishikesha in all things. Devotion here is constant attention, never forgetting God and walking always behind him. The closing image gives the reward and the security together: the unchanging Lord becomes a diamond fortress for whoever surrenders, and that surrender is what ends the round of rebirth.

GATHA 1544 Worldly Metaphors

The Name, a ship of free treasure

मराठी मूळ

तारूं लागलें बंदरीं । चंद्रभागेचिये तिरीं ॥1॥
लुटा लुटा संतजन । अमुप हें रासी धन ॥ध्रु.॥
जाला हरिनामाचा तारा। सीड लागलें फरारा ॥2॥
तुका जवळी हमाल । भार चालवी विठ्ठल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The ship has docked at the harbor on the bank of the Chandrabhaga.

Loot it, O saints, loot it!
This treasure is immeasurable wealth.

The star of Hari's Name has risen, and the sail is set and billowing.

Says Tuka, I am the porter standing by.
It is Vitthala who carries the load.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The ship has docked at the harbor, on the bank of the Chandrabhaga. Loot it, O saints, loot it! This treasure is measureless wealth. The star of Hari's Name has risen, and the sail is set and billowing. Tuka says: I am the porter standing by. It is Vitthal who carries the load.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the riverbank at Pandhari into a docked treasure-ship and calls the saints to plunder it freely, because the wealth of the Name is without limit and there is no reason to hoard or ration it. The risen star and the full sail say the conditions are perfect; the moment to take is now. In the last line he refuses any credit for himself: he is only the porter standing by the cargo, while Vitthal is the one who actually carries the weight. The point is that grace, not the devotee's strength, does the real lifting.

GATHA 1545 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child crying for milk

मराठी मूळ

आळवीन स्वरें । कैशा मधुरा उत्तरें ॥1॥
यें वो यें वो पांडुरंगे । प्रेमपान्हा मज दें गे ॥ध्रु.॥
पसरूनि चोंची । वचन हें करुणेची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बळी । आह्मी लडिवाळें आळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will call out in sweet tones, with tender and beautiful words.

Come, O Panduranga, come! Give me the flowing milk of your love.

With open beak, these are words of mercy.

Says Tuka, we are your children, insistent in our playful pleading.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will call out in sweet tones, with tender, beautiful words. Come, O Panduranga, come! Give me the flowing milk of your love. With open mouth, these are words of mercy. Tuka says: we are your children, insistent in our playful pleading.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a hungry child crying for its mother, asking Panduranga to come and let down the milk of love. The sweet calling and tender words are not flattery; they are the only language the helpless infant has. The open mouth waiting to be fed makes the relationship plain: the devotee can only ask, the giving rests entirely with God. By calling himself a child stubborn in playful pleading, he claims the child's right to demand, for a true child does not earn the milk, it simply belongs to it.

GATHA 1546 Longing and Separation

Longing, eyes hungry for the form

मराठी मूळ

सकिळकांचें समाधान । नव्हे देखिल्यावांचून ॥1॥
रूप दाखवीं रे आतां । सहजरभुजांच्या मंडिता ॥ध्रु.॥
शंखचक्रपद्मगदा। गरुडासहित ये गोविंदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कान्हा । भूक लागली नयनां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The satisfaction of all will not come without beholding your form.

Show me your form now, adorned with four arms.

Come with conch, discus, lotus, and mace, O Govinda, and bring Garuda along with you.

Says Tuka, O Krishna, my eyes are hungry for your sight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No one is content without beholding you. Show me your form now, you who are adorned with four arms. Come with conch, discus, lotus, and mace, O Govinda, and bring Garuda with you. Tuka says: O Krishna, my eyes are hungry for your sight.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the craving is for darshan, the actual seeing of God, without which Tukaram says no one's heart can settle. He asks not for a vague presence but for the full, recognizable form: four arms bearing conch, discus, lotus, and mace, and Garuda alongside, the very figure of Govinda enthroned in devotion. The longing is located in the senses; he says his eyes themselves are hungry. The prayer insists that for the devotee, intellectual knowledge of God is not enough, and only the seen form will feed the ache.

GATHA 1547 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the names of the Lord

मराठी मूळ

पतितपावना । दिनानाथा नारायणा ॥1॥
तुझें रूप माझे मनीं । राहो नाम जपो वाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
ब्रह्मांडनायका । भक्तजनाच्या पाळका ॥2॥
जीवांचिया जीवा । तुका ह्मणे देवदेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Purifier of the Fallen, O Lord of the lowly, O Narayana.

Let your form remain in my mind.
Let my tongue forever chant your Name.

O Lord of the universe, O protector of your devotees.

Says Tuka, O Jiva of all jivas, O God of gods.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Purifier of the Fallen, O Lord of the lowly, O Narayana. Let your form stay in my mind. Let my tongue chant your Name forever. O Lord of the universe, O protector of your devotees. O Jiva of all jivas, Tuka says, O God of gods.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga is almost entirely a litany of God's names, and the naming is itself the prayer. Tukaram piles up titles that describe what God does for the helpless: purifier of the fallen, lord of the lowly, protector of devotees. Between them sits the single request, that the form stay fixed in the mind and the Name never leave the tongue. By calling him the Jiva of all jivas and God of gods, Tukaram places this protector of the small at the very source of all life, so the one who stoops to the lowly is also the highest of all.

GATHA 1548 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one task of the mind

मराठी मूळ

करीं हें चि काम । मना जपें राम राम ॥1॥
लागो हा चि छंद । मना गोविंद गोविंद ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मना । मज भीक द्यावी दीना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O mind, do this one task: chant Rama, Rama.

Let this one passion take hold: Govinda, Govinda.

Says Tuka, O mind, give this alms to me, a lowly one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O mind, do this one task: chant Rama, Rama. Let this one passion take hold: Govinda, Govinda. Tuka says: O mind, give this alms to me, a lowly one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks straight to his own mind and gives it a single assignment, narrowing all of spiritual life down to repeating the Name. He wants the restless mind, which fastens onto many passions, to fasten on just one: Govinda. The last line is striking because he begs from his own mind as a poor man begs alms, treating the simple act of remembrance as a charity he cannot command but must plead for. It admits how hard it is to hold the mind to even one thing, and how much the devotee depends on grace to do it.

GATHA 1549 The Nature of God

Nature of God, he runs to save his own

मराठी मूळ

आपुलिया लाजा । धांवे भक्तांचिया काजा ॥1॥
नाम धरिलें दिनानाथ । सत्य करावया व्रत ॥ध्रु.॥
आघात निवारी। छाया पीतांबरें करी ॥2॥
उभा कर कटीं । तुका ह्मणे याजसाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the sake of his own honor,
he runs to serve the needs of his devotees.

He bears the name Dinanath, Lord of the humble, to fulfill that vow.

He wards off every blow
and makes shade for his own with his pitambara.

Says Tuka, he stands with hands upon his waist for precisely this reason.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the sake of his own honor, he runs to serve the needs of his devotees. He took the name Dinanath, Lord of the humble, and he keeps that vow as true. He wards off every blow and makes shade for his own with his pitambara. Tuka says: he stands with his hands upon his waist for exactly this reason.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads Vitthal's saving acts as binding obligations God has placed on himself. Because he accepted the title Dinanath, Lord of the humble, his own honor is at stake, and so he runs to his devotees' aid to keep that vow true. The protection is concrete: he blocks the blows aimed at them and shelters them under his yellow garment. Even the familiar pose of Vitthal standing with hands on his hips, Tukaram says, is held for this single purpose, the readiness to defend his own.

GATHA 1550 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the proof on the battlefield

मराठी मूळ

साधावया भक्तिकाज । नाहीं लाज हा धरीत ॥1॥
ऐसियासी शरण जावें । शक्ती जीवें न वंची ॥ध्रु.॥
भीष्मपण केला खरा । धनुर्धरा रक्षीलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे साक्ष हातीं । तो म्यां चित्तीं धरियेला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To fulfill the devotee's cause, he sets aside all shame.

Such is the one to whom we should surrender, for he holds nothing back from us.

He proved his vow when he protected Arjuna on the battlefield.

Says Tuka, the proof is in his hands, and I have fixed him firmly in my chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To accomplish the devotee's cause, he sets aside all shame. Such is the one to whom we should surrender, for he holds nothing back from us with his life. He made his vow come true and protected the bearer of the bow. Tuka says: the proof is in his hands, and I have held him firmly in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to God's willingness to lose face for his devotees as the very reason to trust him. The God who will set aside shame to do a devotee's work is one who withholds nothing, and that is the safe place to surrender. He cites the warrior Arjuna, the bearer of the bow, whom the Lord shielded on the battlefield, as evidence that the promise is kept and not merely spoken. Because the proof is already in God's hands, Tukaram needs no further argument; he simply fixes this Lord firmly in his heart.

GATHA 1551 Prayers

Prayer, the cow and her calf

मराठी मूळ

धेनु चरे वनांतरीं । चित्त बाळकापें घरीं ॥1॥
तैसें करीं वो माझे आई । ठाव देऊनि राखें पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
न काढितां तळमळी । जिवनाबाहेर मासोळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कुडी । जीवाप्राणांची आवडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A cow grazes in the distant forest,
yet her mind remains with her calf at home.

In the same way, O my Mother,
keep me sheltered at your feet.

A fish pulled from water thrashes in torment
even before it is lifted out.

Says Tuka, such is this body's longing;
the jiva clings to the breath within it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cow grazes far off in the forest. All the while her mind is at home with her calf. Do that for me, O my Mother. Give me a place at your feet and keep me there. A fish out of water thrashes in pain; it suffers even before it is lifted out. Tuka says: such is this poor body's longing; the jiva clings to the breath inside it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking for one thing: that wherever he goes, his attention stay fixed on God. He gives two homely pictures to name the kind of attachment he means. The cow can wander far to graze, yet her heart never leaves the calf at home, so he asks the Mother to hold him at her feet that way. The fish shows the other side: torn from its element, it thrashes in agony, because the creature cannot live apart from what keeps it alive. He is saying that the soul clings to God the way breath clings to a living body, and prays that the bond never be broken.

GATHA 1552 The Saints

The saints, God defends his own

मराठी मूळ

हरिजनाची कोणां न घडावी निंदा । साहात गोविंदा नाहीं त्याचें ॥1॥
रूपा येऊनियां धरी अवतार । भक्तां अभयंकर खळां कष्ट ॥ध्रु.॥
दुर्वास हा छळों आला आंबऋषी । सुदर्शन त्यासी जिाळत फिरे ॥2॥
द्रौपदीच्या क्षोभें कौरवांची शांति । होऊनि श्रीपति साहे केलें ॥3॥
न साहे चि बब्रु पांडवां पारिखा । धुडाविला सखा बिळभद्र ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अंगीं राखिली दुगपधि । अश्वत्थामा वधी पांडवपुत्रां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let no one slander the devotees of Hari, for Govinda does not tolerate it.

He takes form and incarnates to grant fearlessness to his devotees and to bring ruin upon the wicked.

Durvasa came to torment Ambarisha,
but the Sudarshana disc chased him relentlessly.

When Draupadi was humiliated,
Shripati himself came forth and brought the Kauravas to grief.

He could not bear even a small slight shown against the Pandavas, and cast aside his friend Balarama for his partiality.

Says Tuka, he bore the stain upon his own body when Ashwatthama slew the sons of the Pandavas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let no one slander the people of Hari, for Govinda will not bear it. He takes form and comes down to earth, fearlessness to his devotees, ruin to the wicked. Durvasa came to torment Ambarisha, and the Sudarshana disc chased him without rest. When Draupadi was shamed, Shripati himself stepped in and brought the Kauravas to grief. He could not endure even a small unfairness against the Pandavas, and turned away his own friend Balarama for taking the wrong side. Tuka says: he took the stain on his own body when Ashwatthama killed the sons of the Pandavas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against scorning those who love God, because God himself stands behind them. He gathers familiar stories to make one point: the Lord takes form again and again to shield his devotees and to break the proud. The sage Durvasa learns this when the flaming disc hunts him across the worlds for tormenting the devotee Ambarisha; Draupadi learns it when Krishna answers her humiliation by ruining the house that shamed her. He even sets aside his own brother's favor when it falls on the wrong side, and he bears the grief of the slaughtered Pandava children as if it were a wound on his own body. The caution lands on us: to despise a devotee is to take a side God will not let stand.

GATHA 1553 The Power of the Name

The Name, caste dissolved in Brahman

मराठी मूळ

ज्यासी आवडी हरिनामांची । तो चि एक बहु शुचि ॥1॥
जपतो हरिनामें बीज । तो चि वर्णांमाजी द्विज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वर्णा धर्म । अवघें आहे सम ब्रह्म ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whoever loves the name of Hari is truly the most pure among all.

The one who chants Hari's name as a sacred seed is the true twice-born among all classes.

Says Tuka, the dharma of all castes is one,
for all is equal Brahman.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever loves the names of Hari is truly the most pure of all. The one who chants Hari's name as the sacred seed is the real twice-born among the castes. Tuka says: the dharma of all castes is one, for everything is the same Brahman.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the markers of ritual purity and rank and hands them to love alone. The one who is truly pure is not the one born high, but the one whose heart loves the Name; the true Brahmin, the real twice-born, is whoever holds Hari's name as the seed-syllable of his life. Then he names the ground under the claim: there is finally one dharma for all castes, because all of it, every person and rank, is the one equal Brahman. The line quietly abolishes the hierarchy it borrows its language from, putting devotion where birth used to stand.

GATHA 1554 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, dyed through in Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठल हा चित्तीं । गोड लागे गातां गीतीं ॥1॥
आह्मां विठ्ठल जीवन । टाळ चिपिळया धन ॥ध्रु.॥
विठ्ठल हे वाणी। अमृत हे संजिवनी ॥2॥
रंगला या रंगें । तुका विठ्ठल सर्वांगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal dwells sweetly in the chitta and tastes delightful when sung in song.

Vitthal is our very life;
cymbals and clappers are our only wealth.

The word Vitthal on the tongue is nectar,
a life-restoring elixir.

Says Tuka, I am dyed through and through in this color of Vitthal, in every limb.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal is in my mind. He tastes sweet when I sing him in song. For us Vitthal is life itself; the cymbals and clappers are our only wealth. The word Vitthal on the tongue is nectar, a herb that brings the dead back to life. Tuka says: I am dyed in this color, Vitthal in every limb.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a song about being saturated by the Name until nothing else is left. Vitthal lives in Tukaram's mind and turns sweet the moment it becomes song, so the singing itself is the joy. He sets the devotee's economy against the world's: cymbals and hand-clappers are the only wealth he counts, and Vitthal is not a help to life but life itself. The closing image is a dyer's: he has been dipped in this single color so completely that it has soaked into every limb, leaving no part of him his own.

GATHA 1555 The Power of the Name

The Name, the simple mantra

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठल विठ्ठल मंत्र सोपा । करी पापा निर्मूळ ॥1॥
भाग्यवंता छंद मनीं । कोडें कानीं ऐकती ॥ध्रु.॥
विठ्ठल हें दैवत भोळें। चाड काळें न धरावी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भलते याती । विठ्ठल चित्तीं ते शुद्ध ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mantra of Vitthal is simple and uproots all sin completely.

The fortunate carry this passion in their mind;
the blessed long to hear it with their ears.

Vitthal is a generous, guileless deity;
one should never hold back out of doubt.

Says Tuka, whoever holds Vitthal in their chitta, regardless of caste, becomes pure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal, Vitthal, the mantra is simple, and it pulls sin up by the roots. The fortunate carry this delight in their mind; the blessed long to hear it in their ears. Vitthal is a guileless, open-hearted god; never hold back from him out of doubt. Tuka says: whatever caste you are, hold Vitthal in your heart and you are pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making the path small enough that anyone can walk it. The mantra is only the name twice over, nothing learned or elaborate, yet it tears out sin at the root, so the whole power lies in the saying. He calls those who delight in it the fortunate ones, and urges that no one shrink back in doubt, because Vitthal is open and simple-hearted, not a god to be feared. The last line cuts the knot of birth: purity comes from holding Vitthal in the heart, and caste has no say in it.

GATHA 1556 The Nature of God

Nature of God, no patience with deniers

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणे विठ्ठल ब्रह्म नव्हे । त्याचे बोल नाइकावे ॥1॥
मग तो हो का कोणी एक । आदि करोनि ब्रह्मादिक ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं विठ्ठल जया ठावा । तो ही डोळां न पाहावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं। त्याची भीड मज कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not listen to one who says Vitthal is not Brahman.

Let such a person be anyone at all, even Brahma or the other gods.

One who does not know the place of Vitthal should not even be looked upon.

Says Tuka, I have no obligation whatsoever to such a person.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever says Vitthal is not Brahman, do not listen to his words. Let him be anyone at all, even Brahma, even the high gods. The one who does not know what Vitthal is, do not even set eyes on him. Tuka says: I owe such a person no deference at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram drawing a hard line around his faith. To deny that Vitthal is the supreme reality is, for him, the one error he will not hear out, no matter how exalted the speaker, even one of the gods. He goes further: a person who has no knowledge of Vitthal is not even worth looking at. The sharpness is aimed at the denial, not at any soul's worth; he is refusing the social pressure to be polite about what he holds to be the whole of the truth, and declaring that no rank earns his deference where Vitthal is dismissed.

GATHA 1557 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, death at your waist

मराठी मूळ

एक पाहातसां एकांचीं दहनें । सावध त्या गुणें कां रे नव्हा ॥1॥
मारा हाक देवा भय अटाहासें । जंव काळाऐसें जालें नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
मरणांची तंव गांठोडी पदरीं । जिणें तो चि वरि माप भरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धींग वाहाती मारग । अंगा आलें मग हालों नेदी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You watch the cremations of one person after another;
why do you not wake up?

Cry out to God with urgency and fear,
before Kala overtakes you as well.

The bundle of death already hangs at your waist;
whoever lives simply fills the measure until it is full.

Says Tuka, the heedless walk a wide road, but when Death seizes the body, it permits no movement at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You watch them burn one body after another. Why does that not wake you? Cry out to God in fear, with all your force, before Kala comes for you too. The bundle of death already hangs at your waist; to go on living is only to fill the measure higher. Tuka says: the heedless stride down a broad road, but once Death lays hold of the body, it lets you move no more.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the cremation ground to break our sleep. We see corpse after corpse burned and somehow stay convinced it does not concern us, so he asks why the sight does not wake us and tells us to call on God now, in urgency, before death arrives. He carries death close: it is a bundle already tied at our own waist, and every day of living only fills the measuring vessel nearer the brim. The wide, easy road of the heedless ends the same way for everyone; when Death finally grips the body it allows no further movement, so the time to cry out is while the body still answers.

GATHA 1558 The Saints

The saints, where devotees are scorned

मराठी मूळ

संतांसी तों नाहीं सन्मानाची चाड । परि पडे द्वाड अव्हेरितो ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि तया न वजावें ठाया । होतसे घात या दुर्बळाचा ॥ध्रु.॥
भावहीना आड येतसे आशंका । उचितासी चुका घालावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जया संकोच दर्शनें । तया ठाया जाणें अनुचित ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Saints do not crave honor or respect, yet the wicked who shun them come to grief.

Therefore one should not visit a place where devotees are scorned, for it brings ruin to the vulnerable.

For one devoid of bhava, suspicion arises and causes one to stray from what is proper.

Says Tuka, one should not go to a place where even the sight of a saint causes discomfort.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Saints do not crave honor or respect. But the scoundrel who turns them away comes to ruin. So do not go to a place where the devotees are slighted; it brings harm to the weak. In one who has no faith, suspicion creeps in and makes him stray from what is right. Tuka says: a place where even the sight of a saint causes discomfort is no place to go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is giving practical counsel about the company we keep. The saint loses nothing by being dishonored, since he never wanted honor in the first place; the loss falls on the one who scorns him. From this he draws a rule for the unsteady: stay away from gatherings where devotees are slighted, because the weak in faith are the ones harmed there. In such a place, doubt seeps into a person without firm devotion and quietly pulls him off the right path. So the warning is for our own protection: where the very sight of a holy person is unwelcome, our faith is in danger, and we should not go.

GATHA 1559 Worldly Life

Worldly life, no sweetness in the husks

मराठी मूळ

संसारसंगें परमार्थ जोडे । ऐसें काय घडे जाणतेनो ॥1॥
हेंडग्याच्या आळां अवघीं चिपाडें । काय तेथें गोडें निवडावीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ढेकणाचे बाजे सुखाची कल्पना । मूर्खत्व वचना येऊं पाहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मद्य सांडवी लंगोटी । सांगितला सेटीं विचार त्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Can one attain the highest good while remaining entangled in worldly life?
O wise ones, tell me how.

It is like sorting through the husks left by a crushing cart;
what sweetness can be found among those dry remnants?

To dream of comfort on a cot infested with bedbugs is foolishness trying to pass for wisdom.

Says Tuka, liquor strips a man even of his loincloth;
let this be the counsel given to the drunkard.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Can you win the highest good while still tangled in worldly life? O you who think you know, tell me how that happens. It is like the dry husks left in a crushing mill; what sweetness will you pick out from there? To dream of comfort on a cot crawling with bedbugs is foolishness trying to pass for sense. Tuka says: drink strips a man even of his loincloth; give the drunkard that for counsel.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is challenging the comfortable idea that one can chase the world and the highest good at once. He puts the question to the worldly-wise as a dare: show me how liberation is gathered while a man stays bound in his entanglements. Then he answers with hard images. Looking for the supreme good inside worldly life is like sifting the dried-out husks in a sugar mill for sweetness, or imagining rest on a bedbug-ridden cot; the search mistakes itself for wisdom. The drunkard who loses even his loincloth is his last figure: worldliness keeps promising satisfaction while it strips you, and the only honest counsel is to see what it is doing and let it go.

GATHA 1560 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, breeding will tell

मराठी मूळ

जातीचें तें चढे प्रेम । पक्षी स्मरे राम राम ॥1॥
ते काय गुण लागती येरां । कागा पिंजरा शोभेना ॥ध्रु.॥
शिकविलें तें सुजात सोसी । मग तयासी मोल चढे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेषधारी ॥ हिजडए नारी नव्हती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Innate love rises according to one's nature;
a bird remembers Ram, Ram on its own.

Such qualities do not attach to lesser creatures;
a crow in a cage does not become beautiful.

A well-born creature endures training gladly,
and its value only rises.

Says Tuka, a eunuch wearing woman's dress does not become a woman.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Love rises true when it is in the breed; the bird remembers Ram, Ram on its own. Such qualities never settle on the lesser kind; a crow in a cage does not turn beautiful. The well-born creature takes its training gladly, and then its worth climbs. Tuka says: a man dressed up as a woman does not become a woman.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that genuine devotion shows its native quality, and pretense cannot fake it. The fine parrot says Ram, Ram from its own nature, while a crow stays a crow even shut in the same cage and dressed up in the same setting. The point is about inwardness against costume: only the one with the real disposition takes the discipline gladly and grows in true worth. The final image of a man in woman's dress drives it home bluntly: outward show fools no one for long, and borrowed appearances do not change what a thing actually is. The examination is meant to fall on ourselves, on whether our devotion is native or merely worn.

GATHA 1561 Worldly Metaphors

Social criticism, the puddle frog

मराठी मूळ

वसनें थिल्लरीं । बेडुक सागरा धिक्कारी ॥1॥
नाहीं देखिला ना ठावा । तोंड पिटी करी हांवा ॥ध्रु.॥
फुगातें काउळें । ह्मणे मी राजहंसा आगळें ॥2॥
गजाहूनि खर । ह्मणे चांगला मी फार ॥3॥
मुलाम्याचें नाणें । तुका ह्मणे नव्हे सोनें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A frog living in a puddle dares to mock the ocean.

Having neither seen it nor known its whereabouts,
it slaps its mouth and boasts.

A puffed-up crow declares itself superior to the royal swan.

A donkey says it is far finer than an elephant.

Says Tuka, a coin of base metal can never become gold.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A frog that lives in a puddle dares to scorn the ocean. It has never seen it, does not know where it lies, yet it slaps its mouth and brags. A puffed-up crow says it outshines the royal swan. A donkey says it is far finer than the elephant. Tuka says: a gilded coin is not gold.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is mocking the loud confidence of the small and ignorant. The frog in its puddle ridicules the ocean it has never seen, which is exactly how a narrow mind judges what is vast: from inside its own little pool, with noise instead of knowledge. The crow against the swan and the donkey against the elephant pile on the same conceit, each lesser thing declaring itself the greater. The closing line is the test that strips all of it: a coin merely plated with shine is not gold underneath. The satire points at the pattern of empty self-praise, and quietly asks us whether our own claims are gold or only gilt.

GATHA 1562 The Nature of God

Nature of God, bound by 'mine'

मराठी मूळ

मुक्त होता परी बळें जाला बद्ध । घेउनियां छंद माझें माझें ॥1॥
पाप पुण्य अंगीं घेतलें जडून । वर्म नेणे कोण करिता तो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वांयां गेलें वांयां विण । जैसा मृगशीण मृगजळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Free it was, yet by the force of clinging to "mine, mine" it became bound.

Sin and merit clung fast to the body;
the person does not know the vital secret of who the real doer is.

Says Tuka, what goes to waste is lost entirely,
like a deer worn out by a mirage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It was free. Then by its own force it became bound, taking up the chant of mine, mine. Sin and merit clung to it and stuck fast. It does not know the secret of who the real doer is. Tuka says: it was wasted, lost for nothing, like a deer worn out chasing a mirage.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how a soul that was already free traps itself. Nothing from outside binds it; it binds itself by clutching at mine, mine, taking ownership of what was never its own. Once that grasping starts, sin and merit fasten onto it like a weight that will not come off, and it goes on suffering them because it has forgotten the one thing that frees: that it is not truly the doer at all. The deer chasing a mirage is the whole life in one picture, exhausting itself in pursuit of water that was never there, and Tukaram calls such a life wasted, lost for nothing.

GATHA 1563 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the saints are my family

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीये माझें माहेर साजणी । ओविये कांडणीं गाऊं गीत ॥1॥
राही रखुमाई सत्यभामा माता । पांडुरंग पिता माहियेर ॥ध्रु.॥
उद्धव अक्रूर व्यास आंबऋषि । भाई नारदासी गौरवीन ॥2॥
गरुड बंधु लडिवाळ पुंडलीक । यांचें कवतुक वाटे मज ॥3॥
मज बहु गोत संत आणि महंत । नित्य आठवीत ओवियेसी ॥4॥
निवृत्त ज्ञानदेव सोपान चांगया । जिवलगा माझिया नामदेवा ॥5॥
नागोजन मित्रा नरहरि सोनारा । रोहिदास कबिरा सोईंरया ॥6॥
परसो भागवता सुरदास सांवता । गाईन नेणतां सकळांसी ॥7॥
चोखामेळा संत जिवाचे सोइरे । न पडे विसर यांचा घडी ॥8॥
जीवींच्या जीवना एका जनादनना । पाटका कान्हया मिराबाई ॥9॥
आणीक हे संत महानुभाव मुनि । सकळां चरणीं जीव माझा ॥10॥
आनंदें ओविया गाईन मी त्यांसी । जाती पंढरीसी वारकरी ॥11॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा बिळया बापमाय । हरुषें नांदों सये घराचारी ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Pandhari is my natal home, O friend.
I sing its songs while grinding grain.

Rakhumai, Rukmini, and Satyabhama are my mothers;
Panduranga is the father of my natal home.

Uddhava, Akrura, Vyasa, and Ambarisha are my kin;
I honor brother Narada with love.

Garuda is my brother and dear Pundalik is the darling of them all.
I have a vast family of saints and great souls whom I remember always in my songs.

Nivritti, Dnyanadeva, Sopan, and Changdev are mine;
Namadeva is my dearest companion.

Nagoji, Mitra, Narhari the goldsmith,
Rohidas, Kabir, and Soyirabai are all my own.

Parso Bhagavat, Surdas, and Sawata I sing of, even the ones I do not know by name.

Chokhamela the saint is dear to my very life;
not a moment passes without remembering them.

Eknath Janardana is the life of my life,
and so are Patkar, Kanhaya, and Mirabai.

And all the other saints and great sages,
my life rests at their feet.

In joy I sing these verses for the pilgrims going to Pandhari.

Says Tuka, Vitthal is my mother and father;
in happiness, O friend, let us dwell in this household of devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pandhari is my mother's house, dear friend. I sing its songs while I grind the grain. Rakhumai, Rukmini, and Satyabhama are my mothers; Panduranga is the father of that house. Uddhava, Akrura, Vyasa, and Ambarisha are my kin; I honor brother Narada with love. Garuda is my brother, and dear Pundalik is the darling of them all. I have a vast family of saints and great souls, and I remember them always in my songs. Nivritti, Dnyanadeva, Sopan, and Changdev are mine; Namadeva is my dearest companion. Nagoji, Mitra, Narhari the goldsmith, Rohidas, Kabir, and Soyirabai are all my own. I sing of Parso Bhagavat, Surdas, and Sawata, and of the ones I do not even know by name. Chokhamela the saint is dear to my very life; not a moment passes without my remembering them. Eknath Janardana is the life of my life, and so are Patkar, Kanhaya, and Mirabai. And all the other saints and great sages: my life rests at their feet. In joy I sing these verses for the pilgrims walking to Pandhari. Tuka says: Vitthal is my mother and father; in happiness, dear friend, let us live in this household of devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reimagines his whole lineage around God and the saints. Pandhari is not a shrine he visits but his maher, the mother's house a married woman longs to return to, and he sings of it the way village women sang while grinding grain. He then names his real family: not blood kin, but the gods of Pandhari as his parents and a long roll of saints across regions and castes, from Dnyanadeva and Namadeva to Kabir, Rohidas, Chokhamela, and Mirabai, as his brothers and companions. The point of the long list is that devotion makes one family of people the world kept apart, and even the saints he cannot name belong to it. He ends by claiming Vitthal himself as mother and father, so that this household of devotion is the only home he wants to live in.

GATHA 1564 Worldly Life

The belly, hunger that follows everywhere

मराठी मूळ

पोट लागलें पाठीशीं । हिंडवितें देशोदेशीं ॥1॥
पोटाभेणें जिकडे जावें । तिकडे पोट येतें सवें ॥ध्रु.॥
जप तप अनुष्ठान। पोटासाटीं जाले दीन ॥2॥
पोटें सांडियेली चवी । नीचापुढें तें नाचवी ॥3॥
पोट काशियानें भरे । तुका ह्मणे झुरझुरुं मरे ॥4॥
आरत्या ॥ 13 ॥
जगदेश जगदेश तुज ह्मणती । परि या जनामाजी असशील युक्ति ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The belly clings to the back with hunger, driving one to wander from land to land.

Wherever one goes out of fear of the belly,
the belly comes right along.

Prayer, penance, and ritual observance
all become servants of the belly.

The belly has cast aside all dignity;
it makes a person dance before the lowly.

Says Tuka, what can ever truly fill this belly?
It simply wastes away, trembling unto death.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The belly clings to my back with hunger and drives me wandering from land to land. Wherever I run out of fear of the belly, the belly comes right along with me. Prayer, penance, and ritual all become its servants. The belly has thrown away every dignity; it makes a person dance before the lowly. Tuka says: what can ever truly fill this belly? It only wastes away, trembling toward death.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks plainly at how hunger bends a life. The belly is pictured as so empty it sticks to the spine, and it owns the man: he flees it, but it travels with him wherever he goes. He names the sharp shame in this, that even prayer, penance, and ritual get pressed into the belly's service, and that hunger will make a proud person dance and grovel before people he despises. The closing question is the bitter point: nothing ever truly fills the belly, it just keeps wasting and trembling toward death. He is not mocking the hungry; he is exposing how bodily need can quietly become the master that hollows out dignity and even devotion.

GATHA 1565 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, the lord beyond sin and merit

मराठी मूळ

पुण्यपापविरहित सकळां अधिपति । दृष्टा परि नळणी अलिप्त गति ॥1॥
जय देव जय देव जय पंढरिनाथा । श्रीपंढरिनाथा । नुरे पाप विठ्ठल ह्मणतां सर्वथा ॥ध्रु.॥
आगम निगम तुज नेणती कोणी । परि तूं भाव भक्ति जवळी च दोन्ही ।
नेणतां विधियुक्त राते पूजेनी । न माये ब्रह्मांडीं संपुष्टशयनीं ॥2॥
असुरां काळ भासे विक्राळ पुढें । पसरी मुखएक चावितो धुडें ।
भक्ता शरणागता चाले तो पुढें । दावी वाट जाऊ नेदी वांकडें ॥3॥
एकाएकीं बहु विस्तरला सुखें । खेळे त्याची लीळा तो चि कवतुकें।
तेथें नरनारी कवण बाळकें । काय पापपुण्य कवण सुखदुःखें ॥4॥
सकळा वर्मां तूं चि जाणशी एक । बद्ध मोक्ष प्राप्त आणि सुखदुःख।
जाणों ह्मणतां तुज टकलीं बहुतेकें । तुका ह्मणे शरण आलों मज राखें ॥5॥
दैत्यभारें पीडिली पृथुवी बाळा । ह्मणोनि तूज येणें जालें गोपाळा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Beyond sin and virtue, lord of all, the witness whose movement is untouched like the lotus. Victory to you, Lord of Pandhari.

All sin perishes when one utters the name of Vitthal. The scriptures cannot fathom you, yet you stand close to both devotion and love.

You cannot be contained in all the worlds, yet you rest upon the serpent's coils. To demons you appear as terrifying Death, jaws open wide.

But to devoted seekers you walk ahead, showing the way, never letting them stray. Alone, you have expanded into infinite bliss, playing your own game for your own delight.

There, what is man or woman or child? What is sin or merit, pleasure or pain? You alone know the innermost secret of all. Many have stumbled trying to know you.

Says Tuka, I have come to your refuge; protect me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Beyond sin and merit, lord of all, you are the witness whose course stays untouched, like the lotus in water. Victory to you, victory, victory, Lord of Pandhari; say Vitthal and no sin is left at all. The scriptures, both agama and nigama, do not know you, yet you stand close beside both faith and love. To the one who does not even know the rules but worships with feeling, you come; the whole universe cannot hold you, yet you rest there. To demons you loom ahead as terrible Death, jaws open, devouring. To the devotee who has surrendered you walk in front, showing the way, never letting them stray. Alone you spread yourself out into endless bliss; the play is yours, and you sport in it for your own delight. There, who is man, who is woman, who is child? What is sin, what is merit, what is pleasure or pain? You alone know the secret of all of it: bondage and release, and joy and sorrow. Many who said "I know you" were left baffled. Tuka says: I have come to your shelter; keep me safe.

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati praises Vitthal as the one who stands outside the whole ledger of good and bad. He is the witness, unstained as a lotus is unwetted, so merely saying his name burns up sin. Tukaram sets up a contrast that runs through the poem: scriptures and clever knowers cannot reach God, yet he draws near to plain faith and love, and even the worshipper who knows no ritual. The same God is two-faced by where you stand: terrible Death to the demon, a guide walking ahead to the one who surrenders. Behind both is one play, God expanding into all things for his own delight, where the categories of man, woman, sin, merit, and pain dissolve. Tukaram's response is not to claim knowledge, since the knowers were baffled, but to take refuge and ask to be kept.

GATHA 1566 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, the formless who takes every form

मराठी मूळ

भक्तिप्रतिपाळक उत्सव सोहळा । मंगळें तुज गाती आबळ बाळा ॥1॥
जय देव जय देव जय गरुडध्वजा । श्रीगरुडध्वजा। आरती ओवाळूं तुज भक्तीकाजा ॥ध्रु.॥
गुण रूप नाम नाहीं जयासी। चिंतितां तैसा चि होसी तयांसी ।
मत्स्य कूर्म वराह नरसिंह जालासी। असुरां काळ मुणि ठाके ध्यानासी ॥2॥
सहजर रूपें नाम सांवळा ना गोरा । श्रुति नेती ह्मणती तुज विश्वंभरा।
जीवनां जीवन तूं चि होसी दातारा । न कळे पार ब्रह्मादिकां सुरवरां ॥3॥
संतां महंतां घरीं ह्मणवी ह्मणियारा । शंखचक्रगदाआयुधांचा भारा ।
सुदर्शन घरटी फिरे अवश्वरा । सकुमार ना स्थूळ होसी गोजिरा ॥4॥
भावेंविण तुझें न घडे पूजन । सकळ ही गंगा जाल्या तुजपासून ।
उत्पित्त प्रळय तू चि करिसी पाळण । धरुनि राहिला तुका निश्चयीं चरण ॥5॥
काय तुझा महिमा वणूप मी किती । नामें मात्रे भवपाश तुटती ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Protector of devotees, festival of joy, even little children sing your auspicious praises. Victory to you, bearer of the Garuda banner; we wave the lamp before you for the sake of devotion.

Without name or form, you become whatever your devotees desire: fish, tortoise, boar, and Narasimha you became. Death to demons, yet the object of the sages' meditation.

Your true color is neither dark nor fair; the Vedas say 'not this, not this,' O sustainer of the universe. You are the life of all life, the giver, whose limits even Brahma and the gods cannot fathom.

In the homes of saints you gladly call yourself their servant, though you carry the weight of conch, disc, mace, and all weapons. The Sudarshana whirls ceaselessly; you are neither delicate nor large, but perfectly lovely.

Without true feeling your worship cannot be accomplished. All the holy rivers have sprung from you.

Creation, dissolution, and preservation you alone perform. Says Tuka, I hold fast to your feet with absolute certainty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Protector of the devoted, festival of joy, even small children sing your blessings. Victory to you, victory, victory, bearer of the Garuda banner; we wave the lamp before you for devotion's sake. You have no quality, form, or name of your own; yet as your devotees hold you in mind, so you become for them. You became the fish, the tortoise, the boar, Narasimha; you are Death to demons, and the goal the sages seek in meditation. Your true form has no name and is neither dark nor fair; the Vedas say "not this, not this" and call you sustainer of the world. You alone are the life of all that lives, the giver; even Brahma and the gods cannot find your far edge. In the homes of saints and great souls you let yourself be called their servant, though you bear the conch, disc, and mace, a whole weight of weapons. The Sudarshana wheels around you without ceasing; you are neither slight nor huge, but lovely. Without true feeling, your worship cannot be done; all the holy rivers have flowed out from you. Creation, dissolution, and the keeping of all things, you alone do it. Tuka says: I have caught hold of your feet and stay there, fixed and certain.

WHAT IT MEANS

The arati holds two truths about God together: he is formless and nameless in himself, yet he takes whatever form his devotee imagines. Tukaram lists the avatars, fish through Narasimha, as proof that the One without quality becomes terrible to demons and sweet to meditating sages alike. The Vedas can only point by negation, "not this, not this," and even Brahma cannot find God's limit; he is the life inside all life. The tender turn is that this same boundless one will be called the servant in a saint's house, though he carries every cosmic weapon. The condition the poem presses is bhav, true inner feeling: without it worship does not land, however correct the ritual. Tukaram ends not with argument but with grip, holding the feet with settled certainty.

GATHA 1567 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, beholding the feet that uplift

मराठी मूळ

पाहातां पाउले हे विष्णुमूर्ती । कोटिकुळां सहित जे उद्धरती ॥1॥
जय देव जय देव जय पंढरिराया । श्रीपंढरिराया। करुनियां कुरवंडी । सांडीन काया ॥ध्रु.॥
मंगळआरतीचा थोर महिमा । आणीक द्यावया नाहीं उपमा ।
श्रीमुखासहित देखे जो कर्मा । पासुन सुटे जैसा रवि नासी तमा ॥2॥
धन्य व्रतकाळ हे एकादशी । जागरण उपवास घडे जयांसी ।
विष्णूचें पूजन एकाभावेंसी। नित्यमुक्त पूज्य तिहीं लोकांसी ॥3॥
न वजे वांयां काळ जे तुज ध्याती । असे तुझा वास तयांच्या चित्तीं ।
धालें सुखें सदा प्रेमें डुल्लती । तीर्थॉ मिळन वास तयांचा वाहाती ॥4॥
देव भक्त तूं चि जालासी दोन्ही । वाढावया सुख भक्ति हे जनीं ।
जड जीवां उद्धार होय लागोनि । शरण तुका वंदी पाउलें दोन्ही ॥5॥
कंसरायें गर्भ वधियेले सात । ह्मणोनि गोकुळासी आले अनंत ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Beholding these feet of the supreme Vishnu, millions of families are uplifted. Victory to you, king of Pandhari.

I would offer my very body as a sacrifice. Great is the glory of the Mangal-Arati; no comparison can be found for it.

Whoever beholds the divine face is freed from all karma, just as the sun destroys darkness. Blessed is the vow-day of Ekadashi; fortunate are those who keep vigil and fast.

Worship Vishnu with single-minded devotion and become worthy of honor in all three worlds. Those who meditate on you never waste a moment; you dwell in their chitta.

Filled with bliss, they sway in love, and holy places long for their presence. You yourself have become both God and devotee, to increase the joy of devotion in this world.

For the deliverance of the dull and bound jivas, Tuka bows at both your feet in surrender.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Looking at these feet of the supreme Vishnu, millions of families are lifted up. Victory to you, victory, victory, king of Pandhari; I will make my offering and lay down this body. Great is the glory of the Mangal-Arati; nothing else can stand as its equal. Whoever sees the holy face is freed from his deeds, as the sun destroys the dark. Blessed is the vow-day of Ekadashi; fortunate are those who keep the vigil and the fast. Worship Vishnu with single feeling and you become worthy of honor in all three worlds. Those who meditate on you waste not a moment; you dwell in their hearts. Filled and happy, they always sway in love; and the holy places long to carry their presence. You yourself became both the God and the devotee, to grow the joy of devotion among people. For the rescue of the dull and bound jivas, Tuka bows in surrender at both your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati centers on the darshan of Vitthal's feet and face as the act that saves. To see the feet uplifts not just the seer but generations of his family; to see the face wipes out karma as the sun wipes out night. Tukaram raises the worth of the Mangal-Arati and of the Ekadashi vow, vigil, and fast, but he ties their fruit to single-minded feeling, not to mere observance. The devotees he describes are not waiting for a future reward; God already lives in their hearts and they sway, filled, in present love. The striking claim is that God became both deity and devotee, taking the devotee's part himself so that devotion would spread and grow among ordinary people. Tukaram places himself among the dull and bound jivas who need exactly this rescue, and surrenders at the feet.

GATHA 1568

Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, the vast one who became small

मराठी मूळ

घ्यावया अवतार जालें हें चि निमित्य । असुर संहारूनि तारावे भक्त ॥1॥
जय देव जय देव जय विश्वरूपा । श्रीविश्वरूपा । ओवाळीन तुज देहदीपें बापा ॥ध्रु.॥
स्थूळरूप होऊनि धरितसे सानें । जैसा भाव तैसा तयांकारणें ।
दैत्यांसी भासला सिहीं गजान । काळासी महाकाळ यशोदेसी तान्हें ॥2॥
अनंत वर्णी कोणा न कळे चि पार । सगुण कीं निर्गुण हा ही निर्धार ।
पांगलीं साई अठरा करितां वेव्हार । तो विळतसे गौळयांचें खिल्लार ॥3॥
तेहतिस कोटि तिहीं देवांसी श्रेष्ठ । पाउलें पाताळीं नेणती स्वर्ग मुगुट ।
गिंळलीं चौदा भूवनें तरि न भरे चि पोट । तो खाउन धाला गोपाळाचें उिच्छष्ट ॥4॥
महिमा वणूप तरि पांगलिया श्रुति । सिणला शेष चिरल्या जिव्हा करितां स्तुती ।
भावेंविण कांहीं न चले चि युक्ति । राखें शरण तुकयाबंधु करी विनंती ॥5॥
परमानंदा परमपुरुषोत्तमरामा । अच्युता अनंता हरि मेघश्यामा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The very purpose of incarnation was this: to destroy demons and to save the devoted. Victory to you, O cosmic form; I wave the lamp of this body before you, Father.

Taking on a vast form, you then become small; you appear to each according to their faith. To demons you seemed a terrifying lion; to Death you were the great destroyer; to Yashoda, a tiny infant.

No one can know your infinite measure; whether you are with form or formless remains beyond certainty. The Vedas spread themselves across eighteen branches but cannot capture you, while you tend the cattle of the cowherd folk.

Greatest among the thirty-three crore gods, your feet touch the netherworld while your crown escapes even heaven's gaze. You swallowed fourteen worlds yet your belly was not full, but you were satisfied eating the leftovers of a cowherd boy.

Says Tukayabandhu, the Vedas grew weary and Shesha's thousand tongues tired in your praise. Without devotion, no cleverness prevails; protect this one who has come to your shelter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The whole reason for the incarnation was just this: to destroy the demons and save the devoted. Victory to you, victory, victory, cosmic form; I wave the lamp of this body before you, Father. You take on a vast form, then you hold yourself small; as a person's feeling is, so you become for him. To the demons you looked like a fearsome lion; to Death you were the great destroyer; to Yashoda you were a tiny infant. None can know your endless measure; whether you have form or none stays beyond deciding. The Vedas spread out into eighteen branches and still cannot capture you, while you graze the cowherds' cattle. Greatest among the thirty-three crore gods, your feet reach the netherworld while your crown is past even heaven's seeing. You swallowed the fourteen worlds and still your belly was not full, yet you were satisfied eating a cowherd boy's leftovers. Tukayabandhu says: the Vedas grew weary and Shesha's thousand tongues tired in praising you; without feeling, no cleverness works. Keep me, I have come to your shelter, this is my prayer.

WHAT IT MEANS

The arati turns on the paradox of the immeasurable God who makes himself small. His incarnations have one purpose, to end the demons and save the faithful, and he meets each being in their own key: a lion to demons, the destroyer to Death, an infant to Yashoda. Tukaram piles up the contrast: the Vedas in their eighteen branches cannot net him, yet he is content grazing cattle; he can swallow the fourteen worlds unfilled, yet is satisfied by a cowherd boy's scraps. The point is that greatness and lowliness are both his by choice, and so is whether he wears form at all. Against all this, the poem insists that no cleverness reaches him, only bhav, true feeling. Writing as Tukayabandhu, he ends with the same plea as a surrendered devotee: simply keep me.

GATHA 1569 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, a cascade of the Names

मराठी मूळ

अविनाशा अलक्षा परता परब्रह्मा । अकळकळा कमळापती न कळे महिमा ॥1॥
जय देव जय देव जया जी श्रीपती । मंगळशुभदायका करीन आरती ॥ध्रु.॥
गोविंदा गोपाळा गोकुळरक्षणा। गिरिधरकर भवसागरतारक दधिमथना ।
मधुसूदन मुनिजीवन धरणीश्रमहरणा । दीनवत्सळ सकळां मूळ जय जयनिधाना ॥2॥
विश्वंभरा सर्वेश्वर जगदाधारा । चक्रधर करुणाकर पावन गजेंद्रा ।
सुखसागर गुणआगर मुगुटमणी शूरा । कल्याणकैवल्यमूतिन मनोहरा ॥3॥
गरुडासना शेषशयना नरहरी । नारायणा ध्याना सुरहरवरगौरी।
नंदा नंदनवंदन त्रिभुवनांभीतरी । अनंतनामीं ठसा अवतारांवरी ॥4॥
सगुणनिर्गुणसाक्ष श्रीमंत संतां । भगवाना भगवंता कालकृदांता।
उत्पित्तपाळणपासुन संहारणसत्ता । शरण तुकयाबंधु तारीं रिति बहुतां ॥5॥
पंढरि पुण्यभूमी भीमा दिक्षणावाहिनी । तीर्थ हें चंद्रभागा महा पातकां धुनी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Imperishable, invisible, beyond the highest Brahman; O lord of Kamala, your glory is unfathomable. Victory to you, Shripati; I offer this auspicious arati.

Govinda, Gopala, guardian of Gokul, lifter of the mountain, deliverer across the ocean of birth, churner of the cosmic ocean. Slayer of Madhu, life of the sages, remover of the earth's burden, friend of the lowly, root of all, hail to you, treasury of victory.

Sustainer of the universe, lord of all, foundation of the world, bearer of the disc, merciful one who saved the elephant king. Ocean of bliss, storehouse of virtue, crest-jewel of heroes, embodiment of liberation and beauty.

Seated on Garuda, resting on Shesha, O Narahari and Narayana. Nanda's son, adored one, within all three worlds, your infinite names bear the stamp of every incarnation.

Witness of both the formed and the formless, O blessed one among saints, slayer of time and lord of creation, preservation, and destruction. Says Tukayabandhu, save us all in your many ways.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Imperishable, unseeable, beyond even the highest Brahman; lord of Kamala, your greatness cannot be measured. Victory to you, victory, victory, Shripati; giver of all that is auspicious and good, I will perform the arati. Govinda, Gopala, guardian of Gokul; lifter of the mountain, ferry across the ocean of birth, churner of the cosmic sea. Slayer of Madhu, life of the sages, remover of the earth's burden, tender to the lowly, the root of all; victory, victory, treasury of victory. Sustainer of the world, lord of all, ground of everything; bearer of the disc, fountain of mercy, rescuer of Gajendra. Ocean of bliss, mine of virtue, crest-jewel of heroes; form of welfare and liberation, ravisher of the heart. Seated on Garuda, lying on Shesha, Narahari, Narayana, held in meditation. Son of Nanda, adored within all three worlds, your endless names bear the stamp of every incarnation. Witness of both the formed and the formless, wealth of the saints; Bhagavan, lord of time, slayer of death. From creation and keeping to the power of dissolution, all is yours. Tukayabandhu says: I have come to your shelter; save us all, in your many ways.

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati is built almost entirely out of the divine names, poured one after another, because the names are themselves the worship. Each title carries a deed or a quality: Govinda the cowherd, the lifter of Govardhan, the churner of the ocean, the rescuer of the elephant king Gajendra, the bearer of the disc. Tukaram lets the heaping itself say what argument cannot, that this one being holds creation, preservation, and dissolution, and stands as witness to both form and formlessness. He calls God the wealth of the saints and the friend of the lowly, keeping the tenderness alongside the cosmic scale. The endless names are said to bear the stamp of every avatar, so that to chant them is to touch each descent. Signing as Tukayabandhu, he closes by taking shelter and asking that all be saved, in whatever way God chooses.

GATHA 1570 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, Vaikuntha come down to earth

मराठी मूळ

उतरलें वैकुंठमहासुख मेदिनी ॥1॥
जय देवा पांडुरंगा जय अनाथनाथा । आरती ओंवाळीन तुह्मां लक्ष्मीकांता ॥ध्रु.॥
नित्य नवा सोहळा हो महावाद्यां गजर । सन्मुख गरुड पारीं उभा जोडुनि कर ।
मंडितचतुर्भुजा कटीं मिरवती कर ॥2॥
हरिनाम कीर्तन हो आनंद महाद्वारीं । नाचती प्रेमसुखें नर तेथिंच्या नारी ।
जीवन्मुक्त लोक नित्य पाहाती हरी ॥3॥
आषाढी कातिनकी हो गरुडटकयां भार । गर्जती नाम घोष महावैष्णववीर ।
पापासी रीग नाहीं असुर कांपती सुर ॥4॥
हें सुख पुंडलिकें कसें आणिलें बापें । निर्गुण साकारले आह्मांलागिं हें सोपें ।
ह्मणोनि चरण धरोनि तुका राहिला सुखें ॥5॥
अवतार गोकुळीं हो जन तारावयासी । लावण्यरूपडें हे तेजपुंजाळरासी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The supreme bliss of Vaikuntha has descended upon this earth. Victory to Panduranga, lord of the destitute; we wave the lamp before you, O beloved of Lakshmi.

A festival of great splendor resounds with music every day; Garuda stands before you with hands joined in reverence. You stand with four arms adorned, hands resting on your waist.

Kirtan and the name of Hari fill the great doorway with joy; men and women dance there in the ecstasy of love. The jivan-muktas behold Hari constantly.

At the Ashadhi and Kartiki gatherings, legions of pilgrims stream in bearing Garuda's banner. Great Vaishnava warriors roar with the name; sin finds no entry, and demons tremble.

This bliss was brought by father Pundalik. The formless took form, made easy for us to reach.

Says Tuka, therefore I hold his feet and rest in happiness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The great bliss of Vaikuntha has come down onto this earth. Victory to you, Panduranga, lord of the orphaned; I wave the lamp before you, beloved of Lakshmi. Every day a fresh festival, loud with great music; before you stands Garuda on the platform, his hands joined. Adorned with four arms, your hands resting at your waist. The name of Hari and kirtan fill the great gate with joy; men and women dance there in the happiness of love. The freed-while-living see Hari without ceasing. At Ashadhi and Kartiki the crowds come in throngs with Garuda's banner; the great Vaishnava warriors roar out the name. Sin finds no way in, and the demons tremble. How did father Pundalik bring this bliss here? The formless took shape, made simple for our sake. Tuka says: so I hold his feet and rest in happiness.

WHAT IT MEANS

The arati announces that the highest heaven, Vaikuntha, has descended and become visible at Pandhari. Tukaram fills the scene with what the pilgrim actually sees and hears: daily festival, loud music, Garuda standing with folded hands, the four-armed image, and the great gate ringing with kirtan where men and women dance in love. He names the two great pilgrimages, Ashadhi and Kartiki, when the warbands of Vaishnavas roar the Name so that sin cannot enter and demons shake. The hinge of the poem is gratitude to Pundalik, the devotee whose love is said to have drawn this bliss down and made the formless take an approachable form. The whole point is accessibility: what the scriptures cannot reach is here, simple and close, for ordinary people. Tukaram's response is to hold the feet and rest.

GATHA 1571

Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, Krishna born to deliver

मराठी मूळ

उगवतां कोटि बिंबें रवि लोपले शशी । उत्साव सुरवरां मही थोर मानसीं ॥1॥
जय देवा कृष्णनाथा जय रखुमाईकांता। आरती ओंवाळीन तुह्मां देवकीसुता । जय देवा कृष्णनाथा ॥ध्रु.॥
वसुदेवदेवकीची बंद फोडुनी शाळ । होउनि विश्वजनिता तया पोटिंचा बाळ ।
दैत्य हे त्रासियेले समूळ कंसासी काळ । राजया उग्रसेना केला मथुरापाळ ॥2॥
राखतां गोधनें हो इंद्र कोपला वरि । मेघ जो कडाडिला शिळा वर्षतां धारीं ।
राखिलें गोकुळ हें नखीं धरिला गिरी। निर्भय लोकपाळ अवतरले हरी ॥3॥
कौतुक पाहावया माव ब्रह्म्यानें केली । वत्सें चोरोनियां सत्यलोकासि नेलीं ।
गोपाळ गाईवत्सें दोहीं ठायीं राखीलीं । सुखाचा प्रेमसिंधु अनाथांची माउली ॥4॥
तारिलें भक्तजना दैत्य निदानळूनि । पांडवां साहकारी आडल्यां निर्वाणी ।
गुण मी काय वणूप मति केवढी वाणी । विनवितो दास तुका ठाव देई चरणीं ॥5॥
सुंदर अंगकांती मुखें भाळ सुरेख । बाणली उटी अंगीं टिळा साजिरी रेख ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a million suns rise at once, sun and moon are eclipsed; great is the celebration among the gods and in the minds of all. Victory to you, Krishna, beloved of Rakhumai; we wave the lamp before you, son of Devaki.

You broke the chains binding Vasudeva and Devaki, becoming the child of their womb though you are the creator of the universe. You terrorized the demons and became the very death of Kamsa.

You restored King Ugrasena as the ruler of Mathura. When Indra raged and sent down a storm of hailstones upon Gokul, you lifted the mountain on your fingertip and sheltered everyone.

Brahma played a trick to test you, stealing the calves and hiding them in his heavenly realm, yet you multiplied the calves and cowherd boys in both places. You are the ocean of loving bliss, the mother of the orphaned.

You delivered your devotees and destroyed the demons; you stood by the Pandavas in their darkest hour. How can I describe your virtues with this small mind and tongue? Says Tuka, your servant begs for a place at your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When a million suns rose at once, the sun and moon were eclipsed; great was the joy among the gods and in every heart. Victory to you, Krishna, beloved of Rakhumai; I wave the lamp before you, son of Devaki, victory to you, Krishna. You broke open the prison binding Vasudeva and Devaki, becoming the child of their womb, though you are the maker of the world. You terrified the demons and became the very death of Kamsa; you set King Ugrasena back on the throne of Mathura. While you guarded the cattle, Indra raged above; the clouds cracked and poured down stones in torrents. You sheltered Gokul, holding the mountain up on your nail; fearless, lord of the worlds, you, Hari, had come down. To watch the fun, Brahma worked a trick and stole the calves away to his own heaven; you kept the calves and the cowherd boys in both places at once. Ocean of loving bliss, mother of the orphaned. You saved the devoted and rooted out the demons; you stood by the Pandavas when they were trapped at the end. What can I say of your virtues, with this small wit, this small tongue? Tuka your servant prays: give me a place at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati retells Krishna's life as one long work of deliverance. His birth eclipses sun and moon and breaks open the prison of Vasudeva and Devaki: the maker of the world enters the world as their child to become the death of the tyrant Kamsa and restore the rightful king Ugrasena. Tukaram dwells on the protective miracles, lifting Govardhan to shield Gokul from Indra's hailstorm, and undoing Brahma's theft by being calves and cowherds in two places at once. The thread tying these together is that God comes down precisely for those who cannot save themselves: he is the mother of the orphaned, the one who stood by the Pandavas at their last extremity. Faced with such a record, Tukaram confesses his small mind and tongue cannot praise it. So he ends not with description but with a servant's single request, a place at the feet.

GATHA 1572 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, the beauty beyond all likeness

मराठी मूळ

मस्तकीं मुगुट कानीं कुंडलां तेज फांके। आरक्त दंत हिरे कैसे शोभले निके ॥1॥
जय देवा चुतर्भुजा जया लावण्यतेजा । आरती ओवाळीन भवतारिया हा वोजा । जय. ॥ध्रु.॥
उदार जुंझार हा जया वाणिती श्रुति । परतल्या नेति ह्मणती तयां न कळे गति ।
भाट हा चतुर्मुखें अनुवाद करिती । पांगलीं साही अठरा रूप न गति ॥2॥
ऐकोनि रूप ऐसें तुजलागीं धुंडिती। बोडके नग्न एक निराहार ईंत ।
भरूनि माजी लोकां तिहीं नांदसि एक। कामिनी मनमोहना रूप नाम अनेक ।
नासति नाममात्रें भवपातकें शोक । पाउलें वंदिताती सिद्ध आणि साधक ॥4॥
उपमा द्यावयासी दुजें काय हें तुज । तत्त्वासि तत्त्वसार मूळ जालासी बीज ।
खेळसि बाळलीळा अवतार सहज । विनवितो दास तुका कर जोडोनि तुज ॥5॥
सकुमार मुखकमळ निजसारनिर्मळ । सावळी सुनीळ तनु भ्रमरांग कुरळ ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A crown upon your head, earrings blazing with light, beautiful teeth set with gems shining perfectly. Victory to you, four-armed one, radiant with beauty; we wave the lamp before you, O deliverer from worldly bondage.

Generous warrior, the Vedas attempt your praise; even when they say 'not this, not this,' they cannot grasp your nature. Four-faced Brahma sings your glory ceaselessly.

The six and eighteen branches of knowledge lose themselves and cannot contain your form. Hearing of such beauty, seekers search for you; some go naked, some fast, some stand in silent penance.

Yet you pervade all beings, dwelling in all three worlds as one. Enchanter of minds, you bear infinite names and forms.

By your name alone, all sins and sorrows of existence are destroyed. The perfected and the seekers bow at your feet.

Says Tuka, your servant, with hands folded: to what shall I compare you, O seed and essence of all truth, who plays the game of incarnation so effortlessly?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On your head a crown, in your ears earrings flashing light; your beautiful teeth set like gems, shining perfectly. Victory to you, four-armed one, radiant with beauty; I wave the lamp before you, ferry across the world's flood, victory. Generous warrior, the Vedas try to speak you; turned back, they say "not this" and cannot grasp your way. Four-faced Brahma keeps repeating your praise; the six and the eighteen branches of learning lose themselves and cannot reach your form. Hearing of such beauty, they search for you: some go bald and naked, some take no food, some stand in penance. Yet filling all, you live as one inside all three worlds. Enchanter of the mind, you bear many forms and many names. By the name alone, the sins and sorrows of existence are destroyed; the perfected and the seekers bow at your feet. To what shall I liken you, since there is no second thing? Essence of essences, you became the root and the seed. You play the child's games, you take birth as easily as play. Tuka your servant prays with folded hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

The arati begins with the visible beauty of the image, crown, earrings, gem-like teeth, and lets that beauty open onto the unsayable. The Vedas try and are turned back at "not this"; Brahma and all the branches of learning lose themselves trying to reach his form. Tukaram notes the austerities people undertake on hearing of this beauty, going naked, fasting, standing in penance, and quietly contrasts them with the simple power of the Name, which by itself destroys the sins and sorrows of existence. He holds together the enchanter of infinite names and forms with the One who pervades all three worlds as a single presence. The praise reaches its limit at the claim that there is no second thing to compare him to: he is the very root and seed of truth, who still plays a child's games and takes birth as lightly as play. So Tukaram, calling himself servant, can only fold his hands.

GATHA 1573 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, the adorned child of Nanda

मराठी मूळ

झळकति दिव्य तेजें दंत माज पातळ । मिरवलिं मयोरपत्रें मुगुट कुंडलें माळ ॥1॥
जय देवा जगदीश्वरा । धन्य रखुमाईवरा । आरती करीन काया । ओंविाळन सुंदरा । जय. ॥ध्रु.॥
गोजिरें ठाणमाण भुजा मंडित चारी । शोभति शंखचक्रगदापद्म मोहरी ।
हृदयीं ब्रह्मपद बाणलें शृंगारीं । गर्जति चरणीं वांकी कंठ कोकिळास्वरीं ॥2॥
घवघवित उटी अंगीं बावन चंदनांची । लल्हाट कस्तुरिचा कास पितांबरीची ।
कटिसूत्र वरि साजिरें प्रभा वर मोतियांची। संगीत सकळ मुद्रा पाउलें कुंकुमाचीं ॥3॥
सौभाग्यसुख सागर गुणलावण्यखाणी । लाघवी दीनवत्सळ विश्व लाविलें ध्यानीं ।
आश्चर्य देव करिती ऋषि राहिले मुनि । धन्य ते प्रसवली ऐसिया नंदपत्नी ॥4॥
वणिनतां ध्यान महिमा श्रुति राहिल्या नेति । रविकोटि चंद्र तारा प्रकाशा न तुळती ।
उदार सुर गंभीर पूर्ण आनंदमूतिन । तुकयाबंधु ह्मणे स्तवूं मी काय किती ॥5॥
महा जी महादेवा महाकाळमदनना । मांडियेलें उग्रतप महादीप्त दारुणा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your divine teeth gleam with radiant light between delicate lips; peacock feathers, crown, earrings, and garlands adorn you. Victory to you, lord of the world, blessed husband of Rakhumai; I offer my body as a lamp and wave it before your beautiful form.

Your graceful stance and four adorned arms bear conch, disc, mace, and lotus in splendor. The mark of Brahman shines upon your decorated chest.

Anklets chime at your feet and your throat sings with the sweetness of a cuckoo. Fragrant sandal paste of fifty-two kinds graces your body; a tilak of musk adorns your forehead, a yellow silk cloth wraps your waist.

A jeweled waist-chain gleams with the luster of pearls. Every ornament is complete; your feet bear the mark of kumkum.

You are the ocean of auspicious joy, a mine of grace and beauty, playful and tender to the lowly, drawing the whole world into meditation. The gods are astonished and the sages stand still in wonder.

Blessed is Nanda's wife who gave birth to such a one. Says Tukayabandhu, the Vedas halt at 'not this'; a million suns and moons and stars cannot match your radiance. Generous, deep, and perfect, you are the complete form of bliss; how much more can I praise you?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your divine teeth gleam with light between delicate lips; peacock feathers, crown, earrings, and garland shine upon you. Victory to you, lord of the world, blessed husband of Rakhumai; I make my body the arati and wave it before you, lovely one, victory. A graceful stance, four adorned arms bearing conch, disc, mace, and lotus in beauty; the seat of Brahman shines on your decorated chest. Anklets ring at your feet; your throat sings sweet as a cuckoo. Glistening sandal paste of fifty-two kinds covers your body; a musk tilak on your forehead, a yellow silk cloth at your waist. A lovely waist-chain above it, bright with the luster of pearls; every ornament complete, your feet marked with kumkum. Ocean of fortune and joy, mine of virtue and beauty; playful and tender to the lowly, you have drawn the whole world into meditation. The gods stand astonished, the sages stand still in wonder; blessed is Nanda's wife, who gave birth to such a one. Trying to speak your glory, the Vedas stop at "not this"; a million suns, moons, and stars cannot match your light. Generous, deep, the full form of bliss; Tukayabandhu says: how much can I praise you, and how far?

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati lingers, ornament by ornament, on the adorned form of God as Nanda's child: the peacock feathers and crown, the four arms with their emblems, the sandal paste, musk tilak, yellow silk, and kumkum-marked feet. The loving detail is the worship; Tukaram is doing with words what the lamp does with light. But each thread of beauty points beyond itself: the same lovely body is the ocean of fortune, the mine of virtue, the one whose radiance a million suns cannot match. He marks the wonder this stirs, gods astonished and sages stilled, and blesses Yashoda, Nanda's wife, for bearing such a one. The poem keeps the tenderness, calling him playful and gentle to the lowly even at cosmic scale. Signing as Tukayabandhu, he ends by admitting that praise has no measure that can hold this.

GATHA 1574 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati, Shiva of the cremation ground

मराठी मूळ

परिधान व्याघ्रांबर चिदाभस्मलेपना । स्मशान क्रीडास्थळ तुह्मा जी त्रिनयना ॥1॥
जय देवा हरेश्वरा जय पार्वतीवरा। आरती ओंविाळन कैवल्यदातारा । जय. ॥ध्रु.॥
रुद्र हें नाम तुह्मां उग्र संहारासी । शंकर शिव भोळा उदार सर्वस्वीं ।
उदक बेलपत्र टाळी वाहिल्या देसी । आपुलें पद दासां ठाव देई कैलासीं ॥2॥
त्रैलोक्यव्यापका हो जन आणि विजन । विराटस्वरूप हें तुझें साजिरें ध्यान ।
करितो वेद स्तुती कीर्ती मुखें आपण । जाणतां नेणवे हो तुमचें महिमान ॥3॥
बोलतां नाम महिमा असे आश्चर्य जगीं । उपदेश केल्यानंतरें पापें पळती वेगीं ।
हरहर वाणी गर्जे प्रेम संचरे अंगीं । राहिलि दृष्टी चरणीं रंग मीनला रंगीं ॥4॥
पुजूनि लिंग उभा तुका जोडोनी हात। करिती विज्ञापना परिसावी हे मात ।
अखंड राहूं द्यावें माझें चरणीं चित्त । घातले साष्टांग मागे मस्तकीं हात ॥5॥
अवतारनामभेद गणा आदि अगाद । जयासि पार नाहीं पुढें खुंटला वाद ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Clad in a tiger skin, smeared with the ash of pure consciousness, the cremation ground is your playground, O three-eyed one. Victory to you, Hareshwara, husband of Parvati; we wave the lamp before you, giver of liberation.

Rudra is your name for fierce destruction, yet Shankara and Shiva you are called, generous and guileless with all you possess. Offer but water and a bilva leaf and you grant your own abode; you give your servants a place in Kailasa.

O pervader of the three worlds, present in the peopled and the desolate, your cosmic form is a beautiful vision for meditation. The Vedas sing your praise, yet even they cannot fathom your greatness.

Wondrous is the power of your name in this world; after initiation, sins flee in haste. When the tongue cries 'Hara, Hara,' love surges through the body, the gaze settles at your feet, and one merges into that color entirely.

Says Tuka, standing before the Linga with hands joined: let my mind remain unbroken at your feet. I lay myself down in full prostration and ask only for your hand upon my head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Clothed in a tiger skin, smeared with the ash of pure awareness, the cremation ground is your playground, three-eyed one. Victory to you, Hareshwara, victory, husband of Parvati; we wave the lamp before you, giver of liberation, victory. Rudra is your name for fierce destruction, yet you are called Shankara and Shiva, the simple one, open-handed with all you have. Offer only water and a bilva leaf with a clap, and you give your own state; you grant your servants a place in Kailasa. Pervading the three worlds, present in the crowd and in the wilderness; your vast cosmic form is a beautiful thing to meditate on. The Vedas themselves sing your praise, yet knowing, they still do not know your greatness. The glory of speaking your name is a wonder in the world; once initiated, sins flee in a hurry. When the tongue roars "Hara, Hara," love floods the body, the gaze stays at your feet, and color merges into color. Tuka stands before the Linga with hands joined, worshipping, and makes his plea: hear this word. Let my mind stay unbroken at your feet. I have laid myself out flat in full prostration, my hand on my head, asking yours.

WHAT IT MEANS

This arati praises Shiva by holding his two faces together: the fierce Rudra of destruction, ash-smeared, tiger-clad, at home in the cremation ground, and the open-handed Shankara who is famously easy to please. Tukaram makes the contrast the heart of the poem: this terrible god gives his very own state for nothing more than water, a bilva leaf, and a clap of devotion, and seats his servants in Kailasa. He is at once the cosmic form pervading crowd and wilderness, beyond what even the Vedas can fathom, and the name that, once received, sends sins fleeing. The decisive turn is felt rather than reasoned: when the tongue roars "Hara, Hara," love floods the body and the seer dissolves into what he beholds, color merging into color. Tukaram closes in plain bodily surrender, prostrate before the Linga, asking only that his mind stay fixed at the feet and that Shiva's hand rest on his bowed head.

GATHA 1575 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati to Ganapati, the dancing god

मराठी मूळ

एक चि दंत शोभे मुख विक्राळ दोंद । ब्रह्मांडामाजि दावी अनंत हे छंद ॥1॥
जय जया गणपती ओंविाळत आरती । साजि†या सरळ भुजा फरशकमळ शोभती ॥ध्रु.॥
हे मही ठेंगणी हो तुज नृत्यनायका । भोंवरि फेर देतां असुर मदिले एकां ।
घातले तोडरीं हो भक्तजनपाळका । सहस्त्र नाम तुज भुक्तिमुक्तिदायका ॥2॥
सुंदर शोभला हो रूपें लोपलीं तेजें । उपमा काय देऊं असे आणिक दुजें ।
रविशशितारागणें जयामाजी सहजें । उदरी सामावलीं जया ब्रह्मांडबीजें ॥3॥
वणिनता शेष लीळा तया भागलीं मुखें । पांगुळले वेद चारी कैसे राहिले सुखें ।
अवतार जन्मला हो लिंगनाभी या मुखें । अमूर्त मूतिनमंत होय भक्तीच्या सुखें ॥4॥
विश्व हें रूप तुझें हस्त पाद मुखडें । ऐसा चि भाव देई तया नाचतां पुढें ।
धूप दीप पंचारति ओंविाळन निवाडें । राखें या शरणागता तुका खेळतां लाडें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One tusk gleams upon a vast and mighty face; within that belly the infinite play of all creation is revealed. Victory to Ganapati; we wave the arati before him, his graceful arms adorned with axe and lotus.

This earth feels small beneath your dancing, O lord of the dance. In a single whirl you intoxicate the demons.

Your anklets ring out, O protector of the devoted; your thousand names bestow both worldly joy and liberation. Beautiful in form, your radiance swallows all other light; what comparison can be offered when nothing else matches? Sun, moon, and stars reside within you naturally; the seeds of all creation are held in your belly.

Shesha grew weary trying to describe your play, and the four Vedas fell silent in contentment. You were born from the Linga's navel; formless, you take form for the delight of the devoted.

Says Tuka, the universe is your body with its hands and feet and face. Grant us this vision as we dance before you.

We wave the lamp of five flames and guard this one who has come to your shelter, playing at your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One tusk gleams on the great, fierce face. Within that belly the whole of creation plays without end. Victory, victory to Ganapati; we wave the arati before him. His straight arms are lovely, holding the axe and the lotus. The earth feels small under you, lord of the dance. In a single whirl you make the demons reel. Your anklets ring, protector of your devotees; your thousand names give worldly joy and freedom. You are beautiful in form, and your light swallows every other light. What likeness can I offer; there is no second thing to compare. Sun, moon, and stars rest in you of their own accord; the seeds of all the worlds are held in your belly. Shesha grew tired trying to tell your play; the four Vedas fell silent in their content. You were born from the navel of the Linga; you are without form, yet you take form for the joy of those who love you. This whole world is your body, with its hands and feet and face. Give me that very seeing as I dance before you. I wave the incense, the lamp, the five flames, clearly and well. Tuka says: keep this one who has come to your shelter, while he plays at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is an arati, a song sung while waving lamps before the deity, here addressed to Ganapati. Tukaram first praises the visible form: the single tusk, the great belly, the axe and lotus in the hands, the anklets and divine ornaments. Then he keeps widening the frame until the form contains everything: sun, moon, and stars rest inside the god, and the seeds of all the worlds are held in his belly, so that the whole universe is his body. The point of the praise is the request at the end: Tukaram asks for the seeing that lets him recognize the formless one inside this form. He closes by placing himself in the god's shelter, asking to be kept safe as a child kept safe while it plays.

GATHA 1576 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati to Vitthal, the beautiful form

मराठी मूळ

कनकाच्या परियेळीं उजळूनि आरती । रत्नदीपशोभा कैशा पाजळल्या ज्योती ॥1॥
ओंवाळूं गे माये सबाहए साजिरा । राहिरखुमाईसत्यभामेच्या वरा ।ध्रु.॥
मंडितचतुर्भुज दिव्य कानीं कुंडलें। श्रीमुखाची शोभा पाहातां तेज फांकलें ॥2॥
वैजयंती माळ गळां शोभे श्रीमंत । शंखचक्रगदापद्म आयुधें शोभत ॥3॥
सांवळा सकुमार जैसा कदनळीगाभा । चरणीचीं नेपुरें वांकी गर्जती नभा ॥4॥
ओंविाळतां मन हें उभें ठाकलें ठायीं । समदृिष्ट समाधि तुकया लागली पायीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Upon a golden tray the arati is lit; the jeweled lamps blaze with splendid flame. Let us wave it, O mother, before our handsome lord, husband of Rakhumai, Rukmini, and Satyabhama.

His four adorned arms and divine earrings shine; the beauty of his face spreads radiance all around. The Vaijayanti garland graces his chest, resplendent with conch, disc, mace, and lotus.

Dark and tender as the heart of a plantain, his anklets and ornaments resound to the sky. Says Tuka, waving this arati, the mind stands still, fixed in place. An even gaze and perfect absorption have settled at his feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On a golden tray the arati is lit; the jeweled lamps blaze with bright flame. Let us wave it, O mother, before our beautiful lord, the husband of Rahi, Rakhumai, and Satyabhama. His four adorned arms shine, and divine rings hang in his ears; looking at the beauty of his blessed face, light spreads out. The Vaijayanti garland graces his neck, rich and lovely; the conch, the disc, the mace, and the lotus shine in his hands. He is dark and tender, like the heart of a plantain; the anklets and bangles on his feet sound to the sky. As I wave the lamp, my mind stops and stands still in its place. Tuka says: an even gaze and deep absorption have settled at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is an arati sung before Vitthal, the form of Vishnu worshipped at Pandharpur. Tukaram leads the eye slowly over the figure: the four arms, the earrings, the Vaijayanti garland, the conch, disc, mace, and lotus, the dark and tender body, the ringing anklets. The devotional point is that looking is not idle; it gathers the mind. The act of waving the lamp brings the wandering mind to a standstill, and the whole song lands in its last line, where steady, even seeing turns into deep absorption settled at the god's feet. Worship of the form here becomes a doorway into stillness.

GATHA 1577 Devotion to Vitthal

Arati to Pandharinath, the dawn-lamp of devotion

मराठी मूळ

भक्तीचिया पोटीं बोध कांकडा ज्योती । पंचप्राण जीवें भावें ओंवाळूं आरती ॥1॥
ओंवाळू आरती माझ्या पंढरीनाथा। दोन्ही कर जोडोनि चरणीं ठेवीन माथा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय महिमा वणूप आतां सांगणें तें किती । कोटि ब्रह्महत्या मुख पाहतां जाती ॥2॥
राही रखुमाई दोही दों बाही । मयूर पिच्छचामरें ढिाळति ठायीं ठायीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे दीप घेऊनि उन्मनति शोभा । विटेवरी उभा दिसे लावण्यगाभा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the womb of devotion, wisdom is the dawn-lamp; with the five vital breaths and wholehearted love, I wave this arati. I wave the arati before my Lord of Pandhari, joining both hands and placing my head at his feet.

What glory shall I describe, and how much can I tell? A million sins of the worst kind vanish at the sight of his face. Rakhumai and Rukmini stand on either side, fanning him with peacock-feather whisks everywhere.

Says Tuka, taking up the lamp, the mind soars beyond itself in radiance. There he stands upon the brick, a treasury of beauty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the womb of devotion, wisdom is the dawn-lamp; with my five breaths, with life and love, I wave this arati. I wave the arati before my Lord of Pandhari. I join both my hands and lay my head at his feet. What glory shall I tell, and how much can I say? A million of the worst sins go away at the sight of his face. Rahi and Rakhumai stand on either side of him, fanning him with peacock-feather whisks, here and there. Tuka says: as I take up the lamp, the mind soars beyond itself in beauty. There he stands upon the brick, a treasury of loveliness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Another arati, this one to the Lord of Pandhari, but it reads the ritual inwardly. The lamp Tukaram waves is not only the clay one in the hand: devotion is the womb, wisdom is the flame, and the five vital breaths are the offering, so the whole person is what is being lifted before the god. He claims that the mere sight of that face cancels even the gravest sins, the strongest way the tradition has of saying that contact with God outweighs any weight of guilt. As he raises the lamp, the mind passes beyond its ordinary state into the unmani condition, a thought-free height. The song ends fixed on the familiar image: God standing on the brick at Pandharpur, a treasury of beauty.

GATHA 1578 The Saints

The blessing of the saints' sight

मराठी मूळ

धन्य दिवस आजि दरुषण संतांचें । नांदे तया घरीं दैवत पंढरीचें ॥1॥
धन्य पुण्य रूप कैसा जालें संसार । देव आणि भक्त दुजा नाहीं विचार ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य पूर्व पुण्य वोडवलें निरुतें । संतांचें दर्शन जालें भाग्यें बहुतें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य आह्मां जोडली जोडी । संतांचे चरण आतां जीवें न सोडीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is this day, for we have beheld the saints. The deity of Pandhari dwells in their home.

Blessed is the merit that has shaped this life; God and devotee are here, and no other consideration remains. Blessed is the ancient virtue that has surely ripened; by great good fortune we have gained the sight of saints.

Says Tuka, blessed are we, for we have found this treasure. I will never let go of the saints' feet as long as I live.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is this day, for I have seen the saints. The deity of Pandhari dwells in their home. Blessed is the merit that shaped this life; here are God and devotee, and nothing else to think about. Blessed is the old virtue that has surely ripened; by great good fortune I have gained the sight of the saints. Tuka says: blessed are we, for we have found this treasure. I will not let go of the saints' feet as long as I live.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is celebrating darshan, the sight of holy company, as itself the highest good fortune. The claim he keeps repeating is that the god of Pandharpur lives in the saints' own house; to be near them is already to be near God, with no distance left between deity and devotee. He reads his own luck backward, treating this meeting as merit and virtue from past lives finally come ripe. The poem ends with a vow, not a feeling: having found this treasure, he will hold the saints' feet for as long as he is alive. The point is that companionship with the realized is treated as the surest path, more reliable than effort he could mount on his own.

GATHA 1579 Ecstasy and Joy

Joy, Govinda everywhere

मराठी मूळ

गाऊं वाणूं तुज विठो तुझा करूं अनुवाद । जिकडे पाहें तिकडे सर्वमय गोविंद ॥1॥
आनंद रे विठोबा जाला माझे मनीं। देखिले लोचनीं विटेसहित पाउले ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां प्रेमा उणें तें काई । पंढरीचा राणा सांटविला हृदयीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will sing of you, Vitthal, and speak of your glory. Wherever I look, everything is pervaded by Govinda.

Joy, O Vithoba, has risen in my mind. My eyes have seen your feet standing upon the brick.

Says Tuka, what could we possibly lack in love? The king of Pandhari is treasured within our hearts.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will sing of you, Vitho, and speak your praise. Wherever I look, Govinda fills everything. Joy, O Vithoba, has risen in my mind. My eyes have seen the feet upon the brick. Tuka says: what could we lack in love? The king of Pandhari is stored away in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short cry of fulfilled longing. Tukaram says that wherever he turns his eyes, the same Govinda is filling everything, so seeing has stopped being divided into many objects. That all-pervading vision and the plain, particular sight of the feet on the brick at Pandharpur are not two different things here; both are the same joy risen in the mind. The closing question, what could we lack in love, is a way of saying the want is over: the king of Pandhari is now stored inside the heart, carried wherever he goes.

GATHA 1580 Prayers

Prayer, place me with the saints

मराठी मूळ

मागणें तें एक तुजप्रति आहे । देशी तरि पाहें पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
या संतांसी निरवीं हें मज देई । आणिक दुजें काहीं न मगें तुज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां उदार होई । मज ठेवीं पायीं संतांचिया ॥3॥
स्वामींनीं काया ब्रह्म केली ते अभंग ॥ 24 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have one request to make of you, Panduranga; grant it if you will. Place me in the care of these saints; I ask nothing else of you.

Says Tuka, be generous now and keep me at the feet of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have one thing to ask of you, Panduranga; grant it if you will. Put me in the care of these saints; I ask nothing else of you. Tuka says: be generous now, and keep me at the feet of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings God a single petition and makes a point of asking for nothing else. What he wants is not deliverance, wealth, or even a vision, but to be handed over into the keeping of the saints. He is asking God to entrust him to holy company, treating that company as the safest place a soul can be kept. The whole prayer turns on humility: rather than ask for a direct gift, he asks to be set at the feet of others who already belong to God.

GATHA 1581 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, vanishing into God

मराठी मूळ

शोधितां चि नये । ह्मणोनि वोळगतों पाये ॥1॥
आतां दिसों नये जना । ऐसें करा नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
परतोनि मन । गेलें ठायीं चि मुरोन ॥2॥
विसरला तुका । बोलों चालों जाला मुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Searching yields nothing, and so I cling to your feet. O Narayana, make it so that I am no longer visible to the world.

The mind turned back and merged into its own source. Says Tuka, he has forgotten how to speak or move and has become mute.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Searching gives nothing, and so I hold on to your feet. Now let me no longer be seen by people; make it so, Narayana. The mind turned back and merged into its own place. Tuka says: he has forgotten how to speak or walk, and has become mute.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has given up the search and simply taken hold of God's feet, having found that looking and reasoning yield nothing. His prayer is strange: he asks Narayana to make him no longer visible to people, a request to disappear as a separate self. The reason follows in the next line, where the mind turns back and dissolves into its own source instead of running outward. By the end he speaks of himself in the third person, as one who has forgotten how to talk or move and gone mute, the silence of a self that has stopped acting as a self apart from God.

GATHA 1582 The Necessity of Experience

The world as rope and snake

मराठी मूळ

रज्जुसर्पाकार । भासयेलें जगडंबर ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि आठवती पाय । घेतों आलाय बलाय ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रुश द्रुमाकार लाणी। केलों सर्व सासी धणी ॥2॥
तुकीं तुकला तुका । विश्वीं भरोनि उरला लोकां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Just as a rope is mistaken for a serpent, so this whole elaborate world is a superimposition. Therefore I remember your feet and take refuge in you completely.

Like a tree seen in a dream, you made me master of the whole appearance. Says Tuka, Tuka is dissolved in Tuka; what fills the universe and still remains is that alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Just as a rope looks like a snake, this whole spread of the world is laid over the truth. So I remember your feet and take refuge in you completely. Like a tree seen in a dream, you made me the master of the whole appearance. Tuka says: Tuka is dissolved in Tuka; what fills the world and still remains is that alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the old Vedanta image of the rope mistaken for a snake: the snake was never there, only a misreading of the rope, and in the same way the elaborate world is an appearance laid over what truly is. He compares it again to a tree seen in a dream, real only while the dream lasts. Rather than make this an abstract lesson, he turns it into refuge: since the world is appearance, he holds the one thing that is not, the feet of God. The last line collapses the distance entirely. Tuka has dissolved into Tuka, and what fills the universe and yet remains over it is recognized as that same one reality.

GATHA 1583 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, apart from every claim

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणवितों दास । परि मी असें उदास ॥1॥
हा चि निश्चय माझा । परि मी निश्चयाहुनि दुजा ॥ध्रु.॥
सरतें कर्तुत्व माझ्यानें । परि मी त्याही हून भिन्न ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I call myself a servant, yet I am truly detached. This is my firm conviction, yet I stand apart even from that conviction.

All capacity for action belongs to me, yet I am distinct from even that.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I call myself a servant, yet I am truly free of it. This is my firm conviction, yet I am other than the conviction. All doing of action is mine, yet I am separate even from that.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a terse statement of standing apart from each role the self takes on. Tukaram names three layers and steps back from all of them: he calls himself a servant of God, yet says he is detached even from that role; he holds a firm conviction, yet says he is other than the conviction itself; he grants that all action runs through him, yet says he is distinct even from his own doing. The pattern is the witness recognizing that it is not the servant, not the belief, not the deed. Each line is a refusal to be finally caught by any identity, even the devotional and spiritual ones.

GATHA 1584 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, kirtan outstrips the knowers

मराठी मूळ

तुका तुकासी तुकला । तुका तुकाहुनि निराळा ॥1॥
घोंटवीन लाळ ब्रह्मज्ञान्या हातीं । मुक्तां आत्मिस्थती सांडवीन ॥1॥
ब्रह्मभूत होते काया च कीर्तनीं । भाग्य तरी ऋणी देवा ऐसा ॥ध्रु.॥
तीर्थ भ्रमकासी आणीन आळस । कडु स्वर्गवास करिन भोग ॥2॥
सांडवीन तपोनिधा अभिमान । यज्ञ आणि दान लाजवीन ॥3॥
भक्तिभाग्यप्रेमा साधीन पुरुषार्थ । ब्रह्मींचा जो अर्थ निजठेवा ॥4॥
धन्य ह्मणवीन येहे लोकीं लोकां । भाग्य आह्मीं तुका देखियेला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tuka has merged into Tuka, yet Tuka remains apart from Tuka. I will make the knowers of Brahman swallow their own drool in astonishment.

I will make the liberated abandon their settled state. The body itself became Brahman through kirtan; if fortune allows, I will put even God in my debt.

I will shame the wandering pilgrim into giving up his restlessness. I will make the pleasures of heaven taste bitter.

I will strip the pride from those rich in austerity. I will humble the performer of sacrifice and charity.

Through devotion, fortune, and love I will win the highest goal, the treasure hidden within Brahman itself. Says Tuka, the world will call them blessed who had the fortune of seeing this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka has merged into Tuka, yet Tuka is apart from Tuka. I will make the knowers of Brahman drool in the hand of wonder. I will make the liberated drop their settled state. The body itself became Brahman through kirtan; if fortune holds, I will put even God in my debt. I will bring the wandering pilgrim to lay down his restlessness. I will make the dwelling in heaven taste bitter. I will make those rich in penance let go of their pride. I will shame the doer of sacrifice and the giver of gifts. Through devotion, fortune, and love I will win the highest aim, the treasure hidden within Brahman itself. Tuka says: I will make the world call them blessed; it is our fortune that we have seen this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a bold set of boasts on behalf of kirtan, devotional singing, claiming it surpasses every other spiritual path. The knowers of Brahman, the liberated, the pilgrims, the dwellers in heaven, the masters of austerity, the performers of sacrifice and charity: each represents a recognized route to the goal, and he says love and song will outdo them all, even leaving the dry knowers astonished and the proud ascetics stripped of pride. The line about putting God in his debt is the same audacity turned upward; through kirtan the body itself becomes Brahman. The claim worth examining is not contempt for those other seekers but the wager itself, that simple devotion reaches the hidden treasure within Brahman that effort and pride keep missing. He ends by saying the fortune is in having seen this for himself.

GATHA 1585 Ecstasy and Joy

Kirtan washes the world clean

मराठी मूळ

संसाराचे अंगीं अवघीं च वेसनें । आह्मी या कीर्तनें शुद्ध जालों ॥1॥
आतां हें सोंवळें जालें त्रिभुवन । विषम धोऊन सांडियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
ब्रह्मपुरीं वास करणें अखंड । न देखिजे तोंड विटाळाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां एकांताचा वास । ब्रह्मीं ब्रह्मरस सेवूं सदा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The worldly life carries every affliction, but through kirtan we have become pure. Now all three worlds have become sanctified; the poison of duality has been washed away completely.

We dwell continuously in the city of Brahman and never see the face of impurity. Says Tuka, we live in solitude, drinking the nectar of Brahman in Brahman forever.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Worldly life carries every affliction, but through kirtan we have become pure. Now all three worlds have become clean; the poison of duality has been washed off and thrown away. We live without break in the city of Brahman, and never see the face of impurity. Tuka says: ours is a dwelling in solitude; in Brahman we drink the nectar of Brahman forever.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts ordinary worldly life, which he says is full of every affliction, with the life cleansed by kirtan. The impurity he names is not ritual dirt but duality itself, the split into clean and unclean, self and other, which he calls a poison now washed away. Once that splitting is gone, all three worlds look sanctified and there is no impure face left anywhere to see. He describes the result as living unbroken in the city of Brahman, in a solitude that is fullness rather than loneliness. The closing image is of drinking the nectar of Brahman while already in Brahman, the seeker, the drink, and the place having become one.

GATHA 1586 Prayers

Prayer through the saints to God

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी सनकादिक संत । ह्मणवितां कृपावंत ॥1॥
एवढा करा उपकार । देवा सांगा नमस्कार ॥ध्रु.॥
भाकूनि करुणा । विनवा वैकुंठींचा राणा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज आठवा । मुळ लवकरी पाठवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the saints like Sanaka and the others, and you call yourselves compassionate. Then do me this one favor: carry my salutations to God.

Plead with tender mercy before the king of Vaikuntha. Says Tuka, remember me and send word to come for me soon.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are saints like Sanaka and the others, and you call yourselves full of mercy. Then do me this one kindness: carry my salutation to God. Plead with tender pity before the king of Vaikuntha. Tuka says: remember me, and send word for me to come soon.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram does not address God directly here; he addresses the saints and asks them to be his go-betweens. He gently holds them to their own name, since they are called compassionate, let them prove it by carrying his greeting to God and pleading his case before the king of Vaikuntha. The request behind the request is a longing to be taken home: send word for me to come soon. The poem rests on the conviction that the saints have the ear of God and that mercy obliges them to use it on behalf of one who asks.

GATHA 1587 Autobiography

Death as homecoming, the summons arrives

मराठी मूळ

आपुल्या माहेरा जाईन मी आतां । निरोप या संतां हातीं आला ॥1॥
सुख दुःख माझें ऐकिलें कानीं । कळवळा मनीं करुणेचा ॥ध्रु.॥
करुनी सिद्ध मूळ साउलें भातुकें । येती दिसें एकें न्यावयासी ॥2॥
त्या चि पंथें माझें लागलेंसे चित्त । वाट पाहें नित्य माहेराची ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां येतील न्यावया । अंगें आपुलिया मायबाप ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I shall now go to my true home; the message has arrived through the hands of the saints. They heard my joys and sorrows, and compassion stirred in their minds.

They have prepared provisions and gifts for the journey; in a matter of days they will come to take me. My chitta is fixed upon that very path; I wait daily for news from my true home.

Says Tuka, now my mother and father themselves will come to carry me away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will go now to my true home. The message has come, brought by the hands of the saints. They heard of my joys and my sorrows; compassion stirred in their hearts. They have made everything ready, the provisions and the parting gifts. In a day or two they will come to take me. My mind is already set on that road. Every day I watch for word from home. Tuka says: now my own mother and father will come, in their own bodies, to carry me away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is speaking of his death as a journey to his true home with God, and he is calm, even glad. The saints have carried the summons to him, having heard his whole life of joy and sorrow, and out of compassion they prepare him for the road. He no longer waits for the things of this world; he waits daily for the message that calls him back. He names God as mother and father coming in person to carry him, so that dying is not a loss but a child being fetched home.

GATHA 1588 Autobiography

Death as homecoming, reading the signs

मराठी मूळ

चिन्हें उमटताती अंगीं । शकुना जोगीं उत्तम ॥1॥
आठवला बापमाय । येइल काय मूळ नेणों ॥ध्रु.॥
उत्कंठित जालें मन । ते चि खुण तेथींचि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काम वारीं । आळस घरीं करमेना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Auspicious signs are appearing on my body, omens of the highest kind. I am remembering my mother and father; I wonder if a message has come to fetch me.

The mind has become full of longing; that itself is the sign that it points toward that place. Says Tuka, all work is done; I can no longer pass the time idly at home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Signs are showing on my body, omens of the best kind. I keep remembering my mother and father. Has the message come to fetch me? I do not know. My mind has filled with longing, and that longing itself is the sign of where I belong. Tuka says: all my work is finished. I cannot sit idle at home any longer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the nearness of death as a body marked with good omens, and he answers it with longing rather than fear. He keeps remembering God as mother and father, watching for the call to come home. He treats his own ache to leave as the surest sign that he belongs on the other side, with the Lord. His earthly work is done, and he can no longer pass the time in this house; the readiness is the whole point.

GATHA 1589 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road

मराठी मूळ

आरोनियां पाहे वाट । कटकट सोसेना ॥1॥
आलियांस पुसें मात । तेथें चित्त लागलें ॥ध्रु.॥
दळीं कांडीं लोकांऐसें । परि मी नसें ते ठायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें पिसें । तेथें तैसें असेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I climb up and gaze at the road; I can bear the anguish of waiting no longer. I ask every passerby for news; my chitta is fixed on that destination.

I grind and pound grain like everyone else, yet I am not truly here. Says Tuka, I may look mad in this place, but the same must be true of my longing there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I climb up and watch the road. I can no longer bear the strain of waiting. I ask everyone who comes by for news; my mind is fixed on that place. I grind and pound the grain like everyone else, yet I am not really here. Tuka says: I must look mad in this place. But there it must be the same; my longing belongs there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a soul stretched between two worlds while it waits for God. Outwardly he does the ordinary labor of the household, grinding and pounding grain like anyone else, but his attention has already left for the destination he watches the road for. He questions every passerby for news, unable to stand the waiting. He admits he looks mad here, and accepts it: the madness is only that his whole heart has gone ahead to where it belongs.

GATHA 1590 The Necessity of Experience

Union, one life in two places

मराठी मूळ

येथीलिया अनुभवें । कळों जीवें हें येतसे ॥1॥
दोहीं ठायीं एक जीव । माझी कींव त्या अंगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
भूक भुके चि खाउनि धाय । नाहीं हाय अन्नाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख जालें । अंतर धालें त्यागुणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From the experience of this world, the jiva comes to understand. In both places there is one life; the tenderness I feel is the same tenderness felt on that side.

Hunger eats itself and finds satisfaction; there is no despair over food. Says Tuka, joy has come, and the within is fully content because of that union.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From the experience here, the soul comes to understand. In both places there is one life. The tenderness I feel here is felt there too. Hunger feeds on hunger and is filled; there is no crying out for food. Tuka says: joy has come. Within, I am fully content, because of that union.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that living through this world teaches the soul a truth: there is not one life here and another there, but one single life in both. The tenderness he feels is answered by the same tenderness on God's side; the longing is mutual. He uses a strange, sharp image of hunger that feeds on hunger and is satisfied, so that the craving itself becomes the food and no anxious cry for more remains. The result is a settled joy within, born of the union of the soul with God.

GATHA 1591 Autobiography

Vision of arrival, Hari comes

मराठी मूळ

पैल आले हरि । शंख चक्र शोभे करीं ॥1॥
गरुड येतो फडत्कारें । ना भी ना भी ह्मणे त्वरे ॥ध्रु.॥
मुगुटकुंडलांच्या दिप्त । तेजें लोपला गभिस्त ॥2॥
मेघश्यामवर्ण हरि । मूतिन डोळस साजिरी ॥3॥
चुतर्भुज वैजयंती । गळां माळ हे रुळती ॥4॥
पीतांबर झळके कैसा । उजळल्या दाही दिशा ॥5॥
तुका जालासे संतुष्ट । घरा आलें वैकुंठपीठ ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look, Hari approaches. The conch and disc shine in his hands.

Garuda comes with a great rush of wings, calling out, 'Fear not, fear not,' in haste. The blazing light of his crown and earrings eclipses the sun.

Dark as a raincloud is Hari, his form beautiful and pleasing. Four-armed, the Vaijayanti garland swings upon his chest.

His yellow silk gleams so bright that all ten directions are lit. Says Tuka, he is utterly fulfilled; the throne of Vaikuntha has come home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look, Hari is coming. The conch and the disc shine in his hands. Garuda comes rushing on beating wings, calling out in haste, fear not, fear not. The blaze of his crown and earrings puts out the sun. Dark as a raincloud is Hari, his form beautiful, his eyes lovely. Four arms, and the Vaijayanti garland swinging on his chest. His yellow silk gleams so bright that all ten directions are lit. Tuka says: he is fully content. The throne of Vaikuntha has come home.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment of God coming for him as a great arrival, seen as a living vision. Hari rides in on Garuda, conch and disc in hand, his crown and earrings outshining the sun, his cloud-dark body in yellow silk lighting all directions. The repeated cry, fear not, fear not, names the one thing the dying soul most needs to hear. By saying that Vaikuntha, the Lord's own heaven, has come home to him, Tukaram reverses the usual picture: he does not climb to God; God brings heaven down to his door.

GATHA 1592 Autobiography

Vision of arrival, sins flee at his approach

मराठी मूळ

शंखचक्रगदापद्म । पैल आला पुरुषोत्तम ॥1॥
ना भी ना भी भक्तराया । वेगीं पावलों सखया ॥ध्रु.॥
दुरूनि येतां दिसे दृष्टी। धाकें दोष पळती सृष्टी ॥2॥
तुका देखोनि एकला । वैकुंठींहूनि हरि आला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With conch, disc, mace, and lotus, the Supreme Person has arrived. 'Fear not, fear not, O king of devotees; I have come swiftly, my friend.' Even from afar he is visible to the eye; at his approach, all faults and sins flee from creation.

Says Tuka, seeing him alone, Hari himself has come from Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With conch, disc, mace, and lotus, the Supreme Person has come. Fear not, fear not, beloved of God; I have come quickly, my friend. Even from far off he can be seen, and at the sight all sins flee from creation in terror. Tuka says: seeing me alone, Hari himself has come down from Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the four-armed Lord arriving to carry him home, speaking the tender reassurance, fear not, my friend. The whole abhanga turns on a single contrast: where God draws near, sin cannot stay, and the faults of the world scatter at the mere sight of him. The closing line names the wonder plainly: it was for Tuka, this one small soul, that Hari left Vaikuntha and came in person. The greatness of the descent measures how dear the soul is to God.

GATHA 1593 Autobiography

The procession, the King of Pandhari arrives

मराठी मूळ

पैल दिसतील भार । दिंडी पताका अपार ॥1॥
आला पंढरीचा राणा । दिसतील त्याच्या खुणा ।
सुख वाटे मना । डोळे बाहएा स्फुरती ॥ध्रु.॥
उठिले गजर नामाचे । दळभार वैष्णवांचे ॥2॥
तुका करी रिता ठाव । त्यांसी बैसावया वाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look, the processions appear in the distance: palanquins and banners beyond number. The king of Pandhari has come; his signs are visible.

Joy fills the mind, and the eyes and arms thrill with delight. The roar of the divine name rises; the armies of Vaishnavas advance.

Says Tuka, I clear a space for them all to sit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look, in the distance the crowds appear, palanquins and banners beyond counting. The King of Pandhari has come; you can see the signs of him. The mind fills with joy; the eyes and the arms thrill and tremble. The roar of the Name has risen; the armies of the Vaishnavas are advancing. Tuka says: I clear an empty place for them all to sit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram greets the coming of God not as a lonely event but as a great festival procession, the King of Pandhari approaching with palanquins, banners, and the roar of the divine Name. His whole body responds, eyes and arms trembling with joy at the first sight. The advancing armies are the Vaishnavas, the company of devotees who come with the Lord. His one act is humble and practical: he clears an open space so that all of them have room to sit, making himself host to the host of God.

GATHA 1594 Autobiography

The meeting, going out to embrace Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

चला जाऊं रे सामोरे । पुढें भेटों विठ्ठल धुरे ॥1॥
तुका आनंदला मनीं । कैसा जातो लोटांगणीं ।
फेडावया धणी । प्रेमसुखाची आजि ॥ध्रु.॥
पुढें आले कृपावंत । मायबाप साधुसंत ॥2॥
आळंगिला बाहीं । ठेविला विठोबाचे पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, let us go forward to greet him. Let us meet Vitthal at the head of the procession.

Says Tuka, my mind is overcome with bliss; see how he goes rolling on the ground in prostration, to satisfy at last the craving for this joy of love. The compassionate saints, our mother and father, have come ahead.

They have embraced him in their arms and placed him at Vithoba's feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, let us go out to meet him. Let us meet Vitthal at the head of the procession. Tuka says: my mind is overcome with bliss; see how he goes, rolling on the ground in prostration, to satisfy at last the craving for this joy of love. The compassionate ones came ahead, the saints who are my mother and father. They took me in their arms and set me down at Vithoba's feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the moment of meeting that the earlier abhangas were waiting for. Tukaram runs out to greet Vitthal at the front of the procession and falls rolling to the ground in prostration, his long craving for the joy of love finally being fed. The saints, whom he calls his mother and father, go ahead of him and act as the bridge: they gather him up and place him at Vithoba's feet. The point is that the soul does not reach God alone; the saints carry it the last step into his presence.

GATHA 1595 Devotion to Vitthal

Welcoming God, the poor man's hospitality

मराठी मूळ

पाहुणे घरासी । आजि आले हृषीकेशी ॥1॥
काय करूं उपचार । कोंप मोडकी जर्जर ।
कण्या दरदर । पाण्यामाजी रांधिल्या ॥ध्रु.॥
घरीं मोडकिया बाजा । वरि वाकळांच्या शेजा ॥2॥
मुखशुद्ध तुळसी दळ । तुका ह्मणे मी दुर्बळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today the guest Hrishikesha has come to our house. What hospitality can I offer? The house is broken down and crumbling; the grain is coarse and cooked simply in water.

The cots at home are broken, covered with rough blankets for bedding. Says Tuka, I am poor; a tulsi leaf from my mouth is all I can offer to cleanse it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A guest has come to my house. Today Hrishikesha has come. What welcome can I offer? My hut is broken down and crumbling. The grain is coarse, just boiled in water. The cots inside are broken, with rough blankets thrown over for bedding. To freshen his mouth, only a tulsi leaf. Tuka says: I am poor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram receives God as a guest in his house and is honest about how little he has to offer. The hut is falling apart, the food is coarse grain boiled in water, the beds are broken and covered with rags, and the only mouth-freshener is a single tulsi leaf. He does not dress up his poverty or apologize it away; he simply lays it bare before the Lord. The unspoken claim is that love offers what it has, and that the tulsi leaf given by a poor devotee is welcome to God, who has come anyway.

GATHA 1596 The Saints

The saints' grace, made whole

मराठी मूळ

संतीं केला अंगीकार । त्यासी अभिमान थोर ॥1॥
कांहीं ठेविलें चरणीं । घेतीं तें चि पुरवूनि ।
तुका पायवणी । घेऊनियां निराळा ॥ध्रु.॥
नसतां कांहीं संचित । भेटी जाली अवचित ॥2॥
देव मिळोनियां भक्त । तुका केलासे सनाथ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints have accepted me, and great is their grace in doing so. Whatever was placed at their feet, they took and fulfilled in abundance.

Says Tuka, I received the washing water of their feet and was set free. Though I had no store of merit, this meeting came to me unannounced.

God and his devotees together have made Tuka whole.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints have accepted me, and great is the grace in that. Whatever I laid at their feet, they took it and gave it back many times over. Tuka says: I took the washing water of their feet and was set apart, set free. I had no store of merit, yet this meeting came to me out of nowhere. God and his devotees together have made Tuka whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram credits everything to the saints who took him in. Whatever little he placed at their feet, they returned to him in abundance, and the water that washed their feet was enough to set him free. He insists he had earned none of this; the meeting came unbidden, by grace and not by merit. The closing line joins God and his devotees as one giving power: between them they made a homeless man, Tuka, into someone who has a Lord and belongs.

GATHA 1597 Autobiography

The summons, be ready

मराठी मूळ

अवघियांच्या आलों मुळें । एका वेळे न्यावया ॥1॥
सिद्ध व्हावें सिद्ध व्हावें । आधीं ठावें करितों ॥ध्रु.॥
जोंवरि ते घटिका दुरी । आहे उरी तो काळ ॥2॥
मंगळाचे वेळे उभे । असों शोभे सावध ॥3॥
अवघियांचा योग घडे । तरी जोडे श्लाघ्यता ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहें वाट । बहु आट करूनि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have come for the sake of all, to carry them away at once. Be ready, be ready; I tell you in advance.

As long as the appointed hour is still distant, that much time remains. At the auspicious moment, stand alert and radiant.

If all come together, the glory is complete. Says Tuka, I have been waiting with great longing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have come for the sake of all, to carry them away at once. Be ready, be ready; I am telling you in advance. As long as the appointed hour is still far off, that much time remains. At the auspicious moment, stand alert and bright. If all come together, the glory is complete. Tuka says: I have been watching the road with great longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the call to come home is spoken in the voice of the one sent to fetch the souls, telling them plainly to make themselves ready before the appointed hour. The warning is gentle but firm: time is given now, while the hour is still distant, precisely so that none are caught unprepared. The poem hopes that all will be ready together, for then the homecoming is at its most glorious. Tukaram closes in his own voice, having watched the road in longing, so the abhanga holds both the summoner's command and the soul's answering readiness.

GATHA 1598 Autobiography

Farewell, the soul departs with the Lord

मराठी मूळ

सकळ ही माझी बोळवण करा । परतोनि घरा जावें तुह्मीं ॥1॥
कर्मधर्मे तुह्मां असावें कल्याण । घ्या माझें वचन आशीर्वाद ॥ध्रु.॥
वाढवूनि दिलों एकाचिये हातीं । सकळ निंश्चती जाली तेथें ॥2॥
आतां मज जाणें प्राणेश्वरासवें । माझिया भावें अनुसरलों ॥3॥
वाढवितां लोभ होईल उसीर । अवघींच िस्थर करा ठायीं ॥4॥
धर्म अर्थ काम जाला एके ठायीं । मेळविला जिंहीं हाता हात ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां जाली हे चि भेटी । उरल्या त्या गोष्टी बोलावया ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All of you, bid me farewell now; return to your homes. May virtue and right conduct bring you well-being; accept my words as a blessing.

I have been entrusted into the hands of one; all matters are settled there. Now I must go with my beloved Lord; I have followed my own bhava.

If we linger in attachment, there will be delay; let everyone be steady in their place. Dharma, wealth, and desire have come together in one place, joined by those who brought hand to hand.

Says Tuka, this meeting has taken place; what remains is only words left to speak.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All of you, see me off now; turn back and go to your homes. May your duty and your right living bring you well-being; take my words as a blessing. I was raised and then handed into the keeping of One; there everything is settled. Now I must go with the Lord of my life; I have followed where my own heart led. If we linger in attachment, there will be delay; let everyone be steady in their place. Dharma, wealth, and desire have all come together in one place, joined by those who brought hand to hand. Tuka says: now this meeting has happened; what is left is only the words still to be spoken.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram's leave-taking, spoken to those he leaves behind as he departs with God. He sends them home with a blessing, telling them to keep to their duty and right living, and not to hold him with grief, since attachment only delays what must happen. He explains that his life was always meant to be handed over to the One, and that following his own bhava, his heart's devotion, has brought him to this settled end. Naming dharma, wealth, and desire gathered into one place, he says the soul's whole journey has come to rest in God; the meeting is done, and only the last few words remain.

GATHA 1599 Autobiography

Farewell, weary of a false world

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलों तें आतां पाळावें वचन । ऐसें पुण्य कोण माझे गांठी ॥1॥
जातों आतां आज्ञा घेऊनियां स्वामी । काळक्षेप आह्मी करुं कोठें ॥ध्रु.॥
न घडे यावरि न धरवे धीर । पीडतां राष्टध देखोनि जग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी दिसे मोकलिलें । काय आतां आलें जीवित्वाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The words I have spoken must now be honored. What merit in my store could equal such grace? I take your leave now, O Lord; where else shall we spend our remaining time? I can endure no further, nor hold my patience, seeing the world oppressed by falsehood.

Says Tuka, you have set me free; what value remains now in this life?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The words I spoke, I must now keep. What merit do I have in my store to deserve such grace? I take my leave now, my Lord. Where else can I pass my time? It cannot go on. I cannot hold my patience, seeing the world crushed under falsehood. Tuka says: you seem to have set me free. What worth is left now in this life?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a poem of departure, spoken to Vitthal at the end. Tukaram knows his words were a vow and now feels bound to honor them by leaving. He wonders aloud what good he ever did to earn this grace, then asks where else a life could be spent if not at the Lord's side. The reason he can stay no longer is the world itself: it is ground down by falsehood, and he can no longer bear to watch. To be set free, here, is not loss but release from a life whose value has drained away.

GATHA 1600 The Necessity of Experience

Nonduality, the self dissolved

मराठी मूळ

करावें तें काम । उगाच वाढवावा श्रम ॥1॥
अवघें एकमय । राज्य बोलों चालों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
दुजयाची सत्ता । न चलेसी जाली आतां ॥2॥
आतां नाहीं तुका । पुन्हा हारपला लोकां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do the work that must be done; why increase labor needlessly? Everything has become one; in this kingdom, speech and movement no longer apply. The authority of duality no longer holds sway.

Says Tuka, Tuka is no more; he has vanished among the people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do the work that must be done. Why pile up labor for nothing? Everything is one. In this kingdom there is no speaking and no moving. The rule of a second thing no longer holds. Tuka says: now there is no Tuka. He has vanished again into the people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a state where the sense of a separate self has fallen away. Do only the work that is needed, he says, and stop adding useless effort, because all of it now appears as one. In that oneness there is no second thing to act on or speak to, so the busy machinery of doing and saying loses its ground. The line of his own name is the point: there is no longer a Tuka standing apart. He has disappeared back into the very oneness, the people, the all, he once thought he faced from outside.

GATHA 1601 Autobiography

The final hour, taken to Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी जातों तुह्मी कृपा असों द्यावी । सकळा सांगावी विनंती माझी ॥1॥
वाडवेळ जाला उभा पांडुरंग । वैकुंठा श्रीरंग बोलावितो ॥2॥
अंतकाळीं विठो आह्मांसी पावला । कुडीसहित जाला गुप्त तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am going now; may your grace remain with all. Please convey my humble request to everyone.

It is the hour of departure; Panduranga stands waiting. Shrirang calls from Vaikuntha.

Says Tuka, at the final hour Vitthal came for us; Tuka, body and all, became invisible.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am going now. May your grace stay with all. Please carry my request to everyone. The time has come; Panduranga stands waiting. Shrirang is calling from Vaikuntha. Tuka says: at the last hour Vitthal came for us. Tuka, body and all, became hidden.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram's leave-taking at the end of his life. He sends a parting blessing and asks that his request be carried to all his fellow devotees. The summons has come: Panduranga is standing ready, and Shrirang, the Lord, is calling him home to Vaikuntha. The poem makes the central claim plainly: at the final hour Vitthal himself came for him, and Tuka vanished with his body and all, leaving nothing behind to bury or mourn.

GATHA 1602 Autobiography

Wonder, the saint ascends

मराठी मूळ

तुका उतरला तुकीं । नवल जालें तिहीं लोकीं ॥1॥
नित्य करितों कीर्तन । हें चि माझें अनुष्ठान ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका बैसला विमानीं । संत पाहाती लोचनीं ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tuka dissolved into the essence of Tuka, and wonder spread through all three worlds. My daily practice is kirtan; that alone is my spiritual discipline.

Tuka was seated in the celestial chariot, and the saints beheld it with their own eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka passed beyond into Tuka. A wonder spread through all three worlds. Every day I do kirtan. That alone is my discipline. Tuka was seated in the celestial chariot, and the saints saw it with their own eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem speaks of Tukaram's passing as a marvel witnessed across the three worlds. To pass beyond into himself is to be wholly absorbed, the man dissolved into what he truly is. He names the one practice that brought him here: daily kirtan, the singing of the Name, and nothing more elaborate. The closing image is the heart of it: the saints did not hear of his end secondhand but saw him seated in the celestial chariot with their own eyes, the singer carried up by the song he never stopped singing.

GATHA 1603 Ecstasy and Joy

Grace, lifted above all sorrow

मराठी मूळ

न देखिजे ऐसें केलें । या विठ्ठलें दुःखासी ॥1॥
कृपेचिये सिंव्हासनीं । अधिष्ठानीं बैसविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
वाजता तो नलगे वारा क्षीरसागरा शयनीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें अवघें ठायीं । मज पायीं राखिलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal has made it so that sorrow is nowhere to be seen. He has seated me upon the throne of his mercy.

One who rests upon the ocean of milk needs no fanning breeze. Says Tuka, he has kept me at his feet in every place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal has made it so that sorrow can no longer be seen. He has seated me on the throne of his mercy, in the place of honor. One who lies on the ocean of milk needs no fanning breeze. Tuka says: in every place he has kept me at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what grace has done to him: Vitthal has put sorrow so far out of sight that he can no longer even find it. He has been lifted and set on the throne of mercy, given the seat of honor he never earned. The image of resting on the ocean of milk, where the Lord himself reclines, says that one held this securely needs nothing added, no breeze, no comfort from outside. The whole rests on the last line: wherever he is, he is kept at the feet, and that keeping is the source of the joy.

GATHA 1604 Autobiography

Farewell from the holy place, going home

मराठी मूळ

वाराणसीपयपत असों सुखरूप । सांगावा निरोप संतांसी हा ॥1॥
येथूनियां आह्मां जाणें निजधामा । सवें असे आह्मां गरुड हा ॥2॥
कृपा असों द्यावी मज दीनावरी । जातोंसों माहेरी तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥ ॥24॥
शखे 1571 एकाहत्तरीं विरोधनामसंवत्सरीं फालगुनवद्य

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From the holy site of Varanasi, may all be well. Carry this farewell message to the saints.

From here I must proceed to my eternal home; Garuda accompanies me on the way. May your grace remain upon this humble one.

Says Tuka, I am going to my true home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From the holy place, may all be well. Carry this farewell to the saints. From here I must go to my own home. Garuda is with me on the way. Let your grace stay upon me, a lowly one. Tuka says: I am going to my mother's house.

WHAT IT MEANS

Another departure poem, sending a last blessing and a farewell to be passed on to the saints. Tukaram says he is leaving for his true home, his nijadhama, the abode that was always his, and that Garuda, Vishnu's own mount, accompanies him on the journey. He asks only that grace remain on him, who is poor and small. The final image is tender: he calls the place he is going his mother's house, the maher, where a daughter returns to be held without conditions, so death here is not exile but homecoming.

GATHA 1605 Autobiography

The Name and the river save every caste

मराठी मूळ

द्वितीया सोमवासरीं प्रथमप्रहरीं तुकोबा गुप्त जाले ॥1॥
जाती पंढरीस । ह्मणे जाईन तयांस ॥1॥
तया आहे संवसार । ऐसें बोले तो माहार ॥ध्रु.॥
असो नसो भाव । जो हा देखे पंढरिराव ॥2॥
चंद्रभागे न्हाती । तुका ह्मणे भलते याती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On the second day of the dark half of Phalguna, in the first watch, on a Monday, in the Virodhi year of Shake 1571, Tukoba became invisible. Those who go to Pandhari, I say, go to them.

Even one with worldly ties speaks thus, says the lowliest among men. Whether devotion is present or not, whoever beholds the Lord of Pandhari is blessed.

Says Tuka, whoever bathes in the Chandrabhaga, of whatever caste, is purified.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On a Monday, in the first watch of the second day of dark Phalguna, Tukoba became hidden. Those who go to Pandhari, I say, go to be theirs. Even one bound in worldly life speaks this way, says the lowest among men. Devotion there or not, whoever sees the Lord of Pandhari is blessed. Tuka says: whoever bathes in the Chandrabhaga, of whatever caste, is made pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem opens by marking the day Tukaram disappeared, then turns to Pandhari and who it is for. The radical claim is that the gate is open to all: even one still tangled in the world, even the man counted lowest, has a place there. Whether your devotion is great or small or absent, simply beholding the Lord of Pandhari blesses you. And bathing in the Chandrabhaga purifies anyone of any caste at all. Tukaram sets the worth not in birth or earned piety but in the Lord and the river themselves, who refuse no one.

GATHA 1606 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the one in every disguise

मराठी मूळ

धरियेलीं सोंगें । येणें अवघीं पांडुरंगें ॥1॥
तें हें ब्रह्म विटेवरी । उभें चंद्रभागे तिरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतर व्यापी बाहे । धांडोळतां कोठें नोहे ॥2॥
योगयागतपें । ज्याकारणें दानजपें ॥3॥
दिले नेदी जति । भोग सकळ ज्या होती ॥4॥
अवघी लीळा पाहे । तुका ह्मणे दासां साहे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Panduranga has assumed all these disguises. That very Brahman stands upon the brick on the bank of the Chandrabhaga.

He pervades within and without; search as you may, there is nowhere he is not. It is for his sake that all yoga, sacrifice, penance, charity, and chanting exist.

Whether he gives or withholds, all experiences of the world belong to him. Says Tuka, he watches the whole play and sustains his servants through it all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga has taken on all these forms. That same Brahman stands on the brick on the bank of the Chandrabhaga. He fills the inside and the outside; search where you will, there is no place he is not. For his sake exist all yoga, sacrifice, penance, charity, and chanting. Whether he gives or withholds, every experience belongs to him. Tuka says: he watches the whole play and stands by his servants.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram identifies the small image at Pandhari with the boundless Brahman. The countless forms of the world are all Panduranga's disguises, and that very absolute is what stands on the brick by the river. He pervades within and without, with no corner left empty, and all the great religious acts, yoga, sacrifice, penance, gifts, the Name, exist only for his sake. Every gift and every withholding, every pleasure and pain, is his alone. The point lands at the end: he is not a distant spectator but watches the whole play and stays beside his servants through it.

GATHA 1607 The Nature of God

Nature of God, Death falls at his feet

मराठी मूळ

ज्याचे गर्जतां पवाडे । किळकाळ पायां पडे ॥1॥
तो हा पंढरीचा राणा । पुसा सा चौं अठरा जणां ॥ध्रु.॥
चिंतितां जयासी । भुक्तिमुक्ति कामारी दासी ॥2॥
वैकुंठासी जावें । तुका ह्मणे ज्याच्या नांवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When his glory is proclaimed, even Death himself falls at his feet. He is the king of Pandhari; ask the four and the eighteen, they will tell you.

Whoever contemplates him finds that worldly prosperity and liberation both serve as his handmaidens. Says Tuka, by his name alone one attains Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When his deeds are sung aloud, even Death falls at his feet. He is the king of Pandhari. Ask the six and the four and the eighteen; they will tell you. For one who thinks on him, both worldly fortune and liberation become serving maids. Tuka says: by his name alone one goes to Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

This poem praises the power held in the Lord of Pandhari's name and story. So great is his glory that when it is proclaimed, even Death himself bows down. Tukaram appeals to the whole body of scripture, the six systems, the four Vedas, the eighteen Puranas, as witnesses to his kingship. For anyone who simply holds him in mind, the two prizes people chase, prosperity in this world and liberation from it, turn into handmaids who wait on him unasked. The conclusion is the whole teaching: not by works but by his name alone one reaches Vaikuntha.

GATHA 1608 The Nature of God

Nature of God, beyond all words

मराठी मूळ

ज्याचे गर्जतां पवाडे । श्रुतिशास्त्रां मौन्य पडे ॥1॥
सिणलें सहजर तोंडें । शेषाफणी ऐसें धेंडें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मही । पत्र सिंधु न पुरे शाही ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When his glories are sung, even the Vedas and scriptures fall silent. Shesha with his thousand mouths grew weary trying to describe him.

Says Tuka, if the earth were the paper and the ocean the ink, they would not suffice.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When his greatness is sung, the Vedas and the scriptures fall silent. Shesha with his many mouths grew weary trying to tell of him. Tuka says: if the earth were the paper and the ocean the ink, they would still not be enough.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the limit of all speech before God. The Vedas and scriptures, the highest words there are, go silent when his glory is to be told, because no statement reaches him. Even Shesha, the cosmic serpent with countless mouths, tired himself out and could not finish the description. The closing image seals it: take the whole earth as paper and the whole ocean as ink, and you would run out before the praise was done. The point is not despair but awe: he is greater than any account of him.

GATHA 1609 Faith and Trust

Faith, the protected one untouched

मराठी मूळ

देव राखे तया मारील कोण । न मोडे कांटा हिंडतां वन ॥1॥
न जळे न बुडे नव्हे कांहीं । विष तें ही अमृत पाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
न चुके वाट न पडे फंदीं । नव्हे कधीं कधीं यमबाधा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायण । येता गोळ्या वारी वाण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whom God protects, no one can harm. Not a thorn pricks such a one though they wander through the forest.

They do not burn, they do not drown, nothing befalls them; even poison becomes nectar for them. They never lose the path or fall into a trap; the torment of Death never touches them.

Says Tuka, when Narayana comes, he wards off every danger from the faithful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one God protects, who can kill? No thorn pricks him though he walks the forest. He does not burn, he does not drown, nothing harms him. Even poison turns to nectar for him. He does not lose the way or fall into a trap. The torment of Death never touches him. Tuka says: when Narayana comes, he wards off every danger from the faithful.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a poem of trust in divine protection. Tukaram piles up images of dangers that simply fail to land: blade, thorn, fire, water, poison, the lost path, the snare, even the agony of Yama. The one God guards passes through all of it unharmed; poison itself turns sweet. The claim is not that the faithful avoid the world's hazards but that they are held through them. The last line names the source plainly: it is Narayana who comes and turns aside every danger from those who keep faith, so the safety is his doing, not their own strength.

GATHA 1610 Longing and Separation

Longing, hold to your own name

मराठी मूळ

कोठे गुंतलासी द्वारकेच्या राया । वेळ कां सखया लावियेला ॥1॥
दिनानाथ ब्रीद सांभाळीं आपुले । नको पाहों केलें पापपुण्य ॥ध्रु.॥
पतितपावन ब्रीदें चराचर । पातकी अपार उद्धरिले ॥2॥
तुकयाबंधु ह्मणे द्रौपदीचा धांवा । केला तैसा मला पावें आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where have you become entangled, O King of Dwaraka? Why have you delayed, dear friend? Uphold your own promise as protector of the lowly; do not weigh my sins and merits. Your very title is 'Purifier of the Fallen'; by that name you have delivered countless wrongdoers throughout creation.

Says Tukayabandhu, just as you rushed to Draupadi's cry, come to me now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where have you gotten caught up, O King of Dwaraka? Why have you delayed, dear friend? Keep your own promise as protector of the lowly. Do not stop to weigh my sins and merits. Your very title is Purifier of the Fallen; by that name you have lifted up countless sinners across all creation. Says Tukayabandhu: as you ran to Draupadi's cry, come to me now.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a cry of longing addressed to Krishna, the King of Dwaraka. The speaker scolds him gently for taking so long and presses him to live up to his own titles rather than judge the petitioner. The argument is built on the Lord's reputation: he is called Purifier of the Fallen, and that name has already saved sinners beyond counting, so to refuse now would betray his own promise. The plea ends on the remembered rescue of Draupadi, when Krishna rushed to cover her in her moment of shame; the speaker asks for exactly that swiftness turned toward himself. The signature here is Tukayabandhu, Tuka's brother, in whose voice this verse is given.

GATHA 1611 Longing and Separation

Longing, the Lord who will not come

मराठी मूळ

कोठें गुंतलासी कोणांच्या धांवया । आली देवराया निद्रा तुज ॥1॥
कोठें गुंतलासी भक्तिप्रेमसुखें । न सुटेती मुखें गोपिकांचीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय पडिलें तुज कोणाचें संकट । दुरी पंथ वाट न चालवे ॥2॥
काय माझे तुज गुण दोष दिसती । ह्मणोनि श्रीपती कोपलासी ॥3॥
काय जालें सांग माझिया कपाळा । उरला जीव डोळां तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where are you caught up? Whose calls are you answering? Has sleep overtaken you, O Lord? Are you entangled in the love of your devotees, unable to free yourself from the gopis' embrace? Has someone else's crisis captured your attention? Is the road too long and difficult to walk? Do you see faults in me, and is that why you are angry, O Shripati? Says Tuka, tell me, what is written on my forehead? Only these eyes remain alive, waiting for you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where are you held? Whose cry are you running to? O Lord, has sleep taken you? Where are you held, lost in the sweetness of your devotees' love? You cannot pull your face from the gopis. Has someone else's trouble caught you? Is the road too long to walk? Do you see faults in me? Is that why you are angry, Shripati? Tell me, what is written on my forehead? Tuka says: only this much life is left, here in my eyes that wait.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is calling to a God who does not arrive, and he turns his own ache into a string of questions. He imagines every reason Vitthal might be delayed: sleep, the embrace of other lovers, someone else's crisis, a road too long, or anger at faults in Tukaram himself. Each guess is the longing trying to make sense of silence. The poem ends without an answer; the only thing left alive is the waiting eyes, and even they are nearly spent. He names the hardest part of devotion, that you can give everything and still be made to wait.

GATHA 1612 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow preacher

मराठी मूळ

परस्त्रीतें ह्मणतां माता । चित्त लाजवितें चित्ता ॥1॥
काय बोलोनियां तोंडें । मनामाजी कानकोंडें ॥ध्रु.॥
धर्मधारिष्टगोष्टी सांगे । उष्टएा हाते नुडवी काग ॥2॥
जें जें कर्म वसे अंगीं । तें तें आठवे प्रसंगीं ॥3॥
बोले तैसा चाले । तुका ह्मणे तो अमोल ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One speaks of another man's wife as 'mother,' yet the chitta shames itself before the chitta. What is the use of mouthing such words when inwardly one cringes with embarrassment? He preaches virtue and righteousness, then with his leftover hand beckons the crow.

Whatever habit lives in the body, it rises to the surface at every occasion. Says Tuka, only the one who walks as he talks is truly priceless.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man calls another's wife 'mother,' and inside, one mind shames the other. What use are such words from the mouth when the heart cringes in secret? He preaches duty and courage, then with his soiled hand beckons the crow. Whatever habit lives in the body rises up at every chance. Tuka says: only the one who walks as he talks is priceless.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at the gap between the pious word and the inward truth. A man may name his neighbor's wife 'mother,' but if his own mind is ashamed before itself, the word is empty; the same hand that gestures at virtue still reaches for what is unclean. His point is that conduct will not stay hidden: whatever is actually lodged in a person surfaces when the moment comes. The challenge lands on self-examination, not on a particular target. Only the one whose walk matches his talk is of any worth.

GATHA 1613 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the cost of a lie

मराठी मूळ

असत्य वचन होतां सर्व जोडी । जरी लग्नघडी परउपकार ॥1॥
जाईल पतना यासि संदेह नाहीं । साक्ष आहे कांहीं सांगतों ते ॥ध्रु.॥
वदविलें मुखें नारायणें धर्मा । अंगुष्ठ त्या कर्मासाटीं गेला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां सांभळा रे पुढें । अंतरिंचे कुडें देइल दुःख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if a lie brings all kinds of gain, even if it serves another's good in the wedding-moment, it will lead to downfall; of this there is no doubt. Let me offer proof.

Narayana himself made Dharma speak an untruth, and for that deed Dharma lost his thumb. Says Tuka, listen further: the deceit hidden within will surely bring suffering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even if a lie brings every kind of gain, even if at the crucial moment it seems to help another, it leads to a fall. Of this there is no doubt. I will give you proof. Narayana himself made Dharma speak an untruth, and for that deed Dharma lost his thumb. Tuka says: take heed for what comes after. The crookedness hidden inside will give you pain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning that a lie carries a hidden cost no benefit can cancel. Even when falsehood looks profitable, or seems to serve another's good at a pressing moment, it ends in downfall. He offers the widely known instance where Narayana caused even Dharma, righteousness itself, to speak an untruth, and Dharma paid by losing his thumb; if the very embodiment of right was not spared, no one is. The real injury, he says, is inward: the crookedness you carry hidden will eventually turn into your own suffering. The plea is to weigh the future, not the immediate gain.

GATHA 1614 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the man eaten by anger

मराठी मूळ

जळों त्याचें तोंड । ऐसी कां ते व्याली रांड ॥1॥
सदा भोवयासी गांठी । क्रोध धडधडीत पोटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
फोडिली गोंवरी। ऐसी दिसे तोंडावरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । चित्ता समाधान कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cursed be that face; why did his mother bring forth such a one? His brows are always knotted in a frown; anger smolders ceaselessly in his belly. He looks as though he has broken out in a rash, his face covered with it.

Says Tuka, such a person's mind never knows even a moment of peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Cursed be that face. Why did his mother give birth to such a one? His brows are always knotted. Anger burns and crackles in his belly. He looks as if a rash has broken out all over his face. Tuka says: such a one's mind never finds any peace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws the portrait of a person consumed by chronic anger. The knotted brows and the smoldering belly are not occasional moods; they are the man's settled state, and they show on his face like a rash he cannot hide. The harsh opening curse is aimed at the condition, the disfiguring grip of rage, not at calling for contempt of the person. The closing line names the real wound underneath the ugliness: a mind locked in anger never tastes a moment of rest. The poem is a mirror held up to what anger does to the one who carries it.

GATHA 1615 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the squandered human life

मराठी मूळ

तोंडें खाये फार । पादे बोचा करी मार ॥1॥
एक ऐसे ते शाहाणे । आपुले अधीन तें नेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
कुले घालूनि उघडे। रागें पाहे लोकांकडे ॥2॥
खेळे जुतकर्म । मग बोंबली जुलूम ॥3॥
निजतां आला मोहो । वीतां ह्मणे मेला गोहो ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांनीं। मनुष्यपणा केली हानी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He eats enormously, then kicks and punches in all directions. Such is the cleverness of some: they do not know what lies within their own power.

He locks himself in, then strips naked and glares at the world in rage. He plays gambling games and then cries out about injustice.

When he sleeps, desire overcomes him; when it passes, he wails as if someone has died. Says Tuka, such people have squandered the gift of being human.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He eats a great deal, then kicks and punches in every direction. Such is the wisdom of some: they do not know what is in their own power. He shuts himself in, strips bare, and glares at people in rage. He plays at gambling, then howls that he has been wronged. When he lies down, desire takes him; when it passes, he wails as if someone has died. Tuka says: such people have ruined the gift of being human.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lists the moves of a life run by appetite and impulse rather than self-command. The man gorges and then lashes out, lives in rage and shamelessness, gambles and then cries injustice, is ruled by desire and then by remorse, swinging from craving to wailing with no center of his own. The thread through every example is the line in the refrain: he does not know what lies within his own power. The criticism points at the pattern, the ungoverned self, and asks the listener to examine it. To live this way, Tukaram says, is to waste the rare chance that a human birth is.

GATHA 1616 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the single-pointed mind

मराठी मूळ

पतिव्रता नेणे आणिकांची स्तुती । सर्वभावें पति ध्यानीं मनीं ॥1॥
तैसें माझें मन एकविध जालें । नावडे विठ्ठलेंविण दुजें ॥ध्रु.॥
सूर्यविकासिनी नेघे चंद्रकळा । गाय ते कोकिळा वसंतेंसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बाळ मातेपुढें नाचे । बोल आणिकांचे नावडती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A faithful wife knows no praise but her husband's; with her whole being she keeps him in her thoughts and meditation. Just so, my mind has become single-pointed; it finds nothing desirable apart from Vitthal.

The sun-lotus does not open to moonlight; the cuckoo sings only for the spring. Says Tuka, a child dances before its mother and does not care for the words of strangers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A faithful wife knows no praise but her husband's; with her whole being she holds him in thought and meditation. So my mind has become one-pointed. It wants nothing apart from Vitthal. The sun-lotus does not open to the moon's light; the cuckoo sings only for the spring. Tuka says: a child dances before its mother and does not care for the words of strangers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a mind that has narrowed to a single object of love. He reaches for natural and human likenesses: the devoted wife who has eyes for no one but her husband, the sun-lotus that opens to the sun and not the moon, the cuckoo that sings only in spring, the child that dances for its mother and ignores everyone else. Each image is something whose response is fixed and faithful by its very nature. In the same way his mind now finds nothing else desirable; only Vitthal draws it. Devotion here is not effortful restraint but a love so settled that no rival even appeals.

GATHA 1617 Social Criticism

Social criticism, learning without sight

मराठी मूळ

पंडित ह्मणतां थोर सुख । परि तो पाहातां अवघा मूर्ख ॥1॥
काय करावें घोकिलें । वेदपठण वांयां गेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
वेदीं सांगितलें तें न करी । सम ब्रह्म नेणे दुराचारी ॥2॥
तुका देखे जीवीं शिव । हा तेथींचा अनुभव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Being called a pandit gives one great satisfaction, yet look closely and you find him a complete fool. What good is all that memorized learning? His recitation of the Vedas has gone entirely to waste.

He does not practice what the Vedas teach; the wicked one does not see the equality of Brahman. Says Tuka, one who sees Shiva in every living being has true experience of that reality.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To be called a pandit brings great pleasure, but look closely and the man is a complete fool. What use is all that he has memorized? His recitation of the Vedas has gone to waste. He does not do what the Vedas say. The wrongdoer does not know that Brahman is the same in all. Tuka says: one who sees Shiva in every living being, that is true experience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram separates the title 'pandit' from real knowing. A man may relish being called learned and may recite the Vedas perfectly, yet if he does not live by what they teach, the learning is wasted. The crucial thing the Vedas point to, he says, is the sameness of Brahman in everything, and the man of bad conduct precisely fails to see it. The poem moves the measure of wisdom from memory to vision and practice. Real knowledge is to see Shiva, the divine, in every living being; that seeing, not recitation, is what Tukaram calls genuine experience.

GATHA 1618 True Worship

True worship, the pandit who sees God in all

मराठी मूळ

पंडित तो चि एक भला । नित्य भजे जो विठ्ठला ॥1॥
अवघें सम ब्रह्म पाहे । सर्वां भूतीं विठ्ठल आहे ॥ध्रु.॥
रिता नाहीं कोणी ठाव । सर्वां भूतीं वासुदेव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तो चि दास। त्यां देखिल्या जाती दोष ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The only pandit truly worthy of praise is the one who worships Vitthal daily. He sees all as equal Brahman, recognizing Vitthal present in every creature.

No place is empty of the divine; Vasudeva dwells in all beings. Says Tuka, that one alone is a true servant of God; in whose sight all sins are dissolved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The only pandit worth the name is the one who worships Vitthal every day. He sees everything as the same Brahman; Vitthal is present in every creature. No place is empty of him; Vasudeva dwells in all beings. Tuka says: that one alone is a true servant. To look on him, your sins fall away.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the answer to the false pandit of the previous poem: Tukaram redefines who deserves the title. The true learned one is not the reciter but the one who worships Vitthal daily and, through that worship, comes to see the same Brahman everywhere, Vitthal and Vasudeva present in every being and in every place. Knowledge here is inseparable from devotion and from a transformed way of seeing the world. Such a person, he says, is the only real servant of God. So sanctified is that seeing that merely beholding such a one undoes the sins of those who look.

GATHA 1619 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, do not flatter mortals

मराठी मूळ

ऐका पंडितजन । तुमचे वंदितों चरण ॥1॥
नका करुं नरस्तुति । माझी परिसा हे विनंती ॥ध्रु.॥
अन्न आच्छादन । हें तों प्रारब्धा अधीन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वाणी । सुखें वेचा नारायणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, O learned ones, I bow at your feet. Do not engage in the praise of mere mortals; hear my humble request.

Food and clothing are governed by destiny. Says Tuka, spend your precious speech joyfully in the service of Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, learned ones, I bow at your feet. Do not sing the praises of mere men. Hear this request of mine. Food and clothing rest in the hands of destiny. Tuka says: spend your speech gladly on Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram addresses the scholars with respect and then asks one thing of them: do not waste their gift of speech flattering powerful men. His reason is plain and freeing: food and clothing, the things people court patrons to secure, are already settled by destiny, so praising mortals buys nothing real. The voice and learning that could be poured out on patrons should instead be spent, gladly, on Narayana. He is redirecting the same energy of praise from a worthless object to a worthy one. The bow at the start keeps the correction humble, an appeal rather than an attack.

GATHA 1620 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name in everything

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठल टाळ विठ्ठल दिंडी । विठ्ठल तोंडीं उच्चारा ॥1॥
विठ्ठल अवघ्या भांडवला । विठ्ठल बोला विठ्ठल ॥ध्रु.॥
विठ्ठल नाद विठ्ठल भेद । विठ्ठल छंद विठ्ठल ॥2॥
विठ्ठल सुखा विठ्ठल दुःखा। तुकया मुखा विठ्ठल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal is the cymbal, Vitthal is the procession, Vitthal is the word upon every tongue. Vitthal is the entire capital, Vitthal the speech, Vitthal everything.

Vitthal is the sound, Vitthal is the distinction, Vitthal is the passion, Vitthal is all. Vitthal in joy, Vitthal in sorrow; Says Tuka, Vitthal alone fills the mouth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal is the cymbal, Vitthal is the procession. Say Vitthal with your mouth. Vitthal is the whole fortune. Speak Vitthal, Vitthal. Vitthal is the sound, Vitthal is the difference, Vitthal is the delight, Vitthal. Vitthal in joy, Vitthal in sorrow. Tuka says: Vitthal alone fills my mouth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets one name flood every category of his life until nothing is left outside it. The instruments and the kirtan procession, his whole wealth, sound itself, every distinction, every delight, his joy and his sorrow alike, all of it is named Vitthal. The relentless repetition is the point: the mind that holds the Name has no room for anything else, and the word becomes the only thing on his tongue. There is no argument here, only saturation. This is devotion as total absorption, where the Name has quietly replaced the world.

GATHA 1621 Longing and Separation

Longing, only the sight is asked

मराठी मूळ

काय तुझें वेचे मज भेटी देतां । वचन बोलतां एक दोन ॥1॥
काय तुझें रूप घेतों मी चोरोनि । त्या भेणें लपोनि राहिलासी ॥ध्रु.॥
काय तुझें आह्मां करावें वैकुंठ । भेवों नको भेट आतां मज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझी नलगे दसोडी । परि आहे आवडी दर्शनाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What does it cost you to grant me an audience? What expense is there in speaking a word or two? Am I stealing your form, that you hide from me in fear? Must you give me Vaikuntha itself? Do not be afraid; simply meet me now. Says Tuka, I do not need your full estate; I only long for the sight of you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What does it cost you to meet me? What expense in speaking a word or two? Am I stealing your form, that you hide from me in fear? Must you give me Vaikuntha itself? Do not be afraid. Just meet me now. Tuka says: I do not want your whole estate; I only love the sight of you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads for the one thing he wants and insists how small a thing it is. He presses the point with almost teasing questions: meeting him costs nothing, a word or two costs nothing, and he is not trying to steal God's form or extract Vaikuntha, heaven itself. So why hide as if there were something to fear or lose? He strips his desire down to its barest form. He is not after God's gifts or estate; he asks only for darshan, the sight of the Lord. The longing is purified to the point where the meeting alone is the whole prize.

GATHA 1622 The Saints

The saints, slandering them is hell

मराठी मूळ

संतनिंदा ज्याचे घरीं । नव्हे घर ते यमपुरी ॥1॥
त्याच्या पापा नाहीं जोडा । संगें जना होय पीडा ॥ध्रु.॥
संतनिंदा आवडे ज्यासी । तो जिता चि नर्कवासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तो नष्ट। जाणा गाढव तो स्पष्ट ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A house where saints are slandered is not a home but the city of Yama. There is no match for the sin of such a person; even bystanders suffer from association.

Whoever takes pleasure in slandering saints is already living in hell while still alive. Says Tuka, know plainly that such a wretch is nothing but a donkey.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A house where saints are slandered is not a home but the city of Yama. There is no match for that one's sin; even those nearby suffer from his company. Whoever loves to slander saints is living in hell while still alive. Tuka says: know plainly that such a wretch is just a donkey.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram puts the slander of saints among the gravest of acts and names its stakes without softening them. A household where the saints are abused has already become the city of death; the sin is beyond comparison, and its harm spreads even to those who merely keep such company. He is not describing a punishment in some other world only: the one who delights in slandering the holy is, he says, already in hell while alive, because that contempt is itself a hellish state of mind. The blunt closing insult is aimed at the pattern of scorn, urging the listener to recoil from that impulse in himself rather than simply to despise the man.

GATHA 1623 The Nature of God

God's will is final, surrender

मराठी मूळ

आलें देवाचिया मना । तेथें कोणाचें चालेना ॥1॥
हरिश्चंद्र तारांराणी । वाहे डोंबा घरीं पाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
पांडवांचा साहाकारी। राज्यावरोनि केले दुरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उगेचि राहा । होईल तें सहज पाहा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When God has made up his mind, no one can change it. Harishchandra, king of kings, was made to carry water in the house of a low-caste man.

The very one who aided the Pandavas later removed them from their kingdom. Says Tuka, remain quiet and let things unfold naturally; whatever is meant to happen will happen on its own.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When it comes into God's mind, no one's plan goes through. Harishchandra, a king of kings, carried water in a low man's house. The same one who helped the Pandavas later took them far from their kingdom. Tuka says: just stay quiet. Watch; what is to be will be, on its own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the limit of human control. He gives two famous turns of fortune: the truthful king Harishchandra reduced to fetching water in a low man's house, and the Pandavas, whom God himself aided, later stripped of their kingdom. The point is not that God is cruel but that the deciding will is his, not ours. So the counsel is to drop the straining and the scheming. Stay still and watch; what is meant to happen will happen by itself.

GATHA 1624 The Nature of God

The Name, God runs to kirtan

मराठी मूळ

निजल्यानें गातां उभा नारायण । बैसल्या कीर्तन करितां डोले ॥1॥
उभा राहोनियां मुखीं नाम वदे । नाचे नाना छंदें गोविंद हा ॥ध्रु.॥
मारगीं चालतां मुखीं नाम वाणी । उभा चक्रपाणी मागें पुढें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे यासी कीर्तनाची गोडी । प्रेमे घाली उडी नामासाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a sleeping devotee sings, Narayana stands up to listen. When a seated devotee does kirtan, Govinda sways along.

When one walks the road chanting his name, the bearer of the disc walks before and behind. Says Tuka, God has such a love for kirtan that he leaps with joy at the sound of his own name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When a devotee sings lying down, Narayana stands up to hear. When one sings seated in kirtan, Govinda sways along. When one walks the road with the Name in the mouth, the bearer of the disc walks ahead and behind. Tuka says: he has such a taste for kirtan that he leaps for love at the sound of his own Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that God is not the distant lord who must be coaxed; he is the one who comes running to his singers. He paints it in plain postures: the devotee lying down, seated, walking, and at each one God answers, standing to listen, swaying along, guarding the road in front and behind. The Name is the thread that pulls him close. The last line names the stakes: God himself loves kirtan, and leaps for the joy of hearing his own Name sung.

GATHA 1625 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the universe in one mouthful

मराठी मूळ

काम क्रोध आह्मी वाहिले विठ्ठलीं । आवडी धरिली पायांसवें ॥1॥
आतां कोण पाहे मागें परतोनि । गेले हारपोनि देहभाव ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धसिद्धी सुखें हाणितल्या लाता । तेथें या प्राकृता कोण मानी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आम्ही विठोबाचे दास । करूनि ठेलों ग्रास ब्रह्मांडाचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have surrendered lust and anger to Vitthal and fixed my love upon his feet. Now who would look back? All sense of the body has vanished.

Spiritual powers and pleasures have been kicked aside; who then would care for these worldly things? Says Tuka, we are Vithoba's servants; we have swallowed the entire universe in one mouthful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have laid lust and anger at Vitthal's feet, and fixed my love on those feet. Now who turns back to look? All sense of the body is gone. I have kicked away powers and perfections for joy; who then cares for these common things? Tuka says: we are Vithoba's servants; we have swallowed the whole universe in one mouthful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what total surrender does to a person. He hands over even lust and anger, the two strongest drives, to Vitthal's feet, and once his love is fixed there, the pull of the body simply dies. Then he refuses the rewards a yogi might prize: the spiritual powers and perfections are kicked aside as worthless next to the joy of the feet. The final claim is deliberately huge: the servant of God, having nothing of his own, has in that very emptiness taken in the whole universe at one swallow. To own nothing for oneself is to be larger than everything.

GATHA 1626 Devotion to Vitthal

Pandhari, pride melts

मराठी मूळ

उठाउठीं अभिमान । जाय ऐसें स्थळ कोण ॥1॥
तें या पंढरीस घडे । खळां पाझर रोकडे ॥ध्रु.॥
अश्रूचिया धारा । कोठें रोमांच शरीरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काला । कोठें अभेद देखिला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where does pride vanish instantly the moment one arrives? That happens at Pandhari, where even the hardened break down visibly. Streams of tears flow, and the hair rises on the body.

Says Tuka, where else has such complete oneness been witnessed, even among the darkest of beings?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where does pride leave a man the moment he arrives? Where is the place that does this? It happens at this Pandhari, where even hard hearts visibly break and weep. Streams of tears, hair standing up on the body. Tuka says: where else has such oneness, with no division left, ever been seen?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking what other place on earth can dissolve a man's pride the instant he sets foot there. His answer is Pandhari, the town of Vitthal. He points to the plain bodily signs: even the hardened weep openly, tears stream, the hair rises with feeling. These are not performances; they are pride giving way. The closing line names the wonder: nowhere else has he seen such complete oneness, where the divisions between souls simply fall away.

GATHA 1627 The Power of the Name

The Name, Vaikuntha on earth

मराठी मूळ

पंढरी पंढरी । ह्मणतां पापाची बोहोरी ॥1॥
धन्य धन्य जगीं ठाव । होतो नामाचा उत्साव ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धसिद्धी लोटांगणीं। प्रेमसुखाचिया खाणी ॥2॥
अधिक अक्षरानें एका । भूवैकुंठ ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Simply by saying 'Pandhari, Pandhari,' all sin is washed away. Blessed, blessed is this place in the world where the festival of the Name resounds.

Spiritual powers and perfections bow down here, for this is the mine of the joy of love. Says Tuka, by one syllable more it surpasses even heaven; this is Vaikuntha on earth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Just saying 'Pandhari, Pandhari' sweeps sin away. Blessed, blessed is this place in the world, where the festival of the Name goes on. Powers and perfections lie face down here; this is the mine of love's joy. Tuka says: by one syllable more it passes even heaven. This is Vaikuntha on earth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the very name of the place, Pandhari, saying that to utter it is already to be washed of sin. He calls the town blessed because the Name of God is kept up there like a constant festival. The spiritual powers that elsewhere are prized lie prostrate here, because what this place holds is greater: it is the mine where the joy of love is dug up. His final claim is bold. Pandhari does not merely equal Vaikuntha, the heaven of Vishnu; by a hair it surpasses it, for this is heaven made present on the earth.

GATHA 1628 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, lay your burden on God

मराठी मूळ

भार घालीं देवा । न लगे देश डोई घ्यावा ॥1॥
देह प्रारब्धा अधीन । सोसें अधिक वाढे सीण ॥ध्रु.॥
व्यवसाय निमित्त। फळ देतसे संचित ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे फिरे । भोंवडीनें दम जिरे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Place your burden upon God; there is no need to carry the load on your own head. The body is subject to destiny; straining against it only increases suffering.

Effort is merely the occasion; it is accumulated karma that yields the fruit. Says Tuka, wandering in circles only exhausts your breath.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lay your burden on God. You need not carry the load on your own head. The body is bound to its destiny; struggling against it only swells the pain. Effort is just the occasion; it is stored karma that gives the fruit. Tuka says: spinning in circles only burns up your breath.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is counseling release from the strain of self-reliance. He tells you to set your burden on God rather than balance it on your own head, because the body lives under its destiny and fighting that destiny only multiplies the suffering. He is not denying effort; he calls it the occasion, the outward act. But the fruit comes from accumulated karma, not from the straining itself. The closing image is sharp: to whirl about in anxious activity is to wear out your own breath for nothing.

GATHA 1629 Worldly Life

Worldly life, service and the inner dive

मराठी मूळ

भोग भोगावरी द्यावा । संचिताचा करुनी ठेवा ॥1॥
शांती धरणें जिवासाटीं । दशा उत्तम गोमटी ॥ध्रु.॥
देह लेखावें असार । सत्य परउपकार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हे मिरासी । बुडी द्यावी ब्रह्मरसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let one experience follow another, spending the store of past actions. Hold patience for the sake of the jiva; that is the highest and noblest condition.

Regard the body as perishable, and hold service to others as the only truth. Says Tuka, this is the true inheritance: to dive deep into the nectar of Brahman.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let one experience follow another; spend down the store of past deeds. Hold peace for the soul's sake; that is the best and finest state. Count the body as worthless; hold service to others as the only truth. Tuka says: this is the true inheritance, to dive deep into the nectar of Brahman.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is laying out how to live through a life that is already shaped by past karma. Let the experiences come and go, he says, and let them burn off the store of old deeds rather than fighting them. The finest condition is to keep inner peace for the soul's sake. He sets the body at near zero worth and puts service to others as the one real truth to hold to. Then he names what is truly yours to inherit: not property or status, but the plunge into the nectar of Brahman, the union beneath all the passing experiences.

GATHA 1630 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, warriors of Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

येथें बोलोनियां काय । व्हावा गुरू तरि जाय ॥1॥
मज न साहे वांकडें । ये विठ्ठलकथेपुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐकोनि मरसी कथा। जंव आहेसि तुं जीता ॥2॥
हुरमतीची चाड । तेणें न करावी बडबड ॥3॥
पुसेल कोणी त्यास । जा रे करीं उपदेश ॥4॥
आह्मी विठ्ठलाचे वीर । फोडूं किळकाळाचें शीर ॥5॥
घेऊं पुढती जन्म । वाणूं कीर्त मुखें नाम ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे मुक्ती । नाहीं आस चि ये चित्ती ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why speak so much here? If you want to be a guru, then go and be one. I cannot tolerate anything crooked before this sacred story of Vitthal.

Listen to the discourse and die to yourself while you are still alive. If you care about your reputation, do not make a spectacle with empty babble.

If someone asks you, go and instruct them. We are warriors of Vitthal; we will crush the head of Death himself.

We will take birth again and again, singing his name and spreading his fame. Says Tuka, there is not even a trace of desire for liberation in my chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why all this talk here? If you want to be a guru, then go off and be one. I cannot bear anything crooked before this story of Vitthal. Hear the discourse, and die to yourself while you are still alive. If you care for your good name, do not make a spectacle with empty babble. If someone asks you, go and instruct them. We are warriors of Vitthal; we will split the head of Death itself. We will take birth again and again, singing his fame, the Name in our mouths. Tuka says: in my heart there is not even a trace of longing for release.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is driving out posturing from the kirtan hall. He has no patience for anything crooked set before Vitthal's story, and tells the would-be teacher to take his ambition elsewhere. The real instruction is to die to the self while still alive, to listen so deeply that the ego goes; empty chatter only shames the one who wants a reputation. Then he sounds the war cry: the devotees are Vitthal's soldiers who will break the head of Death himself. The most radical claim is last, and he does not thin it. He does not even want liberation; he asks instead to be born again and again, only to keep singing the Name.

GATHA 1631 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the unstruck sound and the cooled heart

मराठी मूळ

आनुहातीं गुंतला नेणे बाहए रंग । वृत्त येतां मग बळ लागे ॥1॥
मदें माते तया नाहीं देहभाव । आपुले आवेव आवरितां ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिकांची वाणी वेद तेणें मुखें । उपचारदुःखें नाठवती ॥2॥
तें सुख बोलतां आश्चर्य या जना । विपरीत मना भासतसे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बाहए रंग तो विठ्ठल । अंतर निवालें ब्रह्मरसें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who is absorbed in the inner, unstruck sound does not notice the outer spectacle. When awareness returns, strength surges forth.

The one intoxicated with that ecstasy has no body-consciousness; they cannot contain their own rapture. The words from such a mouth are the Vedas themselves; bodily discomforts are entirely forgotten.

When such a one speaks of that bliss, it strikes the world as astonishing, even bewildering to the ordinary mind. Says Tuka, the outer spectacle is Vitthal himself, and the interior is cooled by the nectar of Brahman.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lost in the inner unstruck sound, he does not see the outer show; when awareness returns, then strength comes. Drunk on that joy, he has no sense of the body; he cannot hold in his own rapture. The words from such a mouth are the Vedas themselves; the pains of the body are not remembered. When he speaks of that joy it strikes people as strange, and seems upside down to the ordinary mind. Tuka says: the outer show too is Vitthal, and within, the heart is cooled by the nectar of Brahman.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting from inside a state of absorption. When the mind sinks into the anahata, the inner unstruck sound, the outer world drops away, and only when awareness comes back does the body have strength again. In that intoxication there is no body-sense, and the joy overflows past holding; whatever such a person says carries the weight of scripture, and bodily pain is forgotten. He warns that this looks bewildering, even backwards, to the ordinary mind, which has no measure for it. The closing resolves the split: the outer spectacle is also Vitthal, while inwardly the heart is cooled and stilled by the nectar of Brahman. Inside and outside are one God.

GATHA 1632 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, dust at the saints' feet

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मरसगोडी तयांसी फावली । वासना निमाली सकळ ज्यांची ॥1॥
नाहीं त्या विटाळ अखंड सोंवळीं । उपाधीवेगळीं जाणिवेच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
मन हें निश्चळ जालें एके ठायीं । तयां उणें काई निजसुखा ॥2॥
तीं चि पुण्यवंतें परउपकारी । प्रबोधी त्या नारीनरलोकां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांचे पायीं पायपोस । होऊनियां वास करिन तेथें ॥ 4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sweetness of the nectar of Brahman has been tasted by those whose every desire has been extinguished. They carry no impurity and remain perpetually pure, free from the stain of self-importance.

Their mind has become perfectly still in one place; what could be lacking in their self-bliss? Those blessed ones serve others selflessly, awakening both men and women in this world. Says Tuka, I will become the dust at their feet and dwell there always.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sweetness of Brahman's nectar has come to those whose every craving has died. No impurity touches them; they stay always pure, free of the stain of self-importance. Their mind has gone still in one place; what could their own bliss lack? Those blessed ones serve others freely, waking up both women and men in this world. Tuka says: I will become the sandals at their feet and live there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the marks of one who has truly tasted God. The taste comes only where every craving has burned out, and such a person stays unstained, free even of the subtle pride of being holy. Their mind has come to rest in one place, so their own bliss lacks nothing. But he stresses that they do not keep it to themselves: the blessed serve others without motive and wake up everyone around them, women and men alike. The closing line is his own posture before them. He does not claim their rank; he asks only to become the very sandals at their feet and to dwell there, lower than the lowest.

GATHA 1633 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the mother knows the need

मराठी मूळ

जैसें तैसें राहे देवाचें हें देणें । यत्न करितां तेणें काय नव्हे ॥1॥
दासां कृपासिंधु नुपेक्षी सर्वथा । अंतरींची व्यथा कळे त्यासी ॥ध्रु.॥
मागों नेणे परी माय जाणे वर्म । बाळा नेदी श्रम पावों कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज अनुभव अंगें । वचन वाउगें मानेना हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever God gives, let it remain as it is; no effort of your own can surpass it. The ocean of mercy never neglects his servants; he knows the suffering hidden within.

The child does not know how to ask, but the mother knows the need and never allows the child to suffer. Says Tuka, I speak from my own experience; these are not hollow words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever God gives, let it stay as it is; your own effort can make nothing better. The ocean of mercy never neglects his servants; he knows the pain hidden inside. The child does not know how to ask, but the mother knows the secret and never lets the child come to harm. Tuka says: this is my own experience in the body; these are no hollow words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making the case for resting in God's giving rather than improving on it by force. Nothing your own effort produces can surpass what God provides, because he is an ocean of mercy who never abandons his servants and already knows the pain you carry inside. The image he trusts is the mother and infant: the baby cannot even name what it wants, yet the mother knows and sees that it never suffers want. He closes by staking his own credibility on it. This is not a saying he repeats; it is what he has lived in his own body, so the words are not empty.

GATHA 1634 Faith and Trust

Faith, no fear in the three worlds

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां हरिच्या दासां कांहीं । भय नाहीं त्रैलोकीं ॥1॥
देव उभा मागें-पुढें । उगवी कोडें संकट ॥ध्रु.॥
जैसा केला तैसा होय। धांवे सोय धरोनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असों सुखें । गाऊं मुखें विठोबा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We who are servants of Hari have no fear in all the three worlds. God stands before us and behind us, unraveling every difficulty.

However one calls upon him, so he becomes; he runs along the path the devotee has chosen. Says Tuka, let us live in ease and sing of Vithoba with our mouths.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For us who are Hari's servants, there is no fear in all the three worlds. God stands behind us and before us, and untangles every trouble. However you make him, so he becomes; he runs along the path you choose. Tuka says: let us live in ease and sing of Vithoba with our mouths.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the freedom from fear that comes with belonging to God. The servant of Hari has nothing to dread across the three worlds, because God himself stands guard before and behind, loosening every knot of difficulty. He states a tender truth about devotion: God takes the shape the devotee gives him and comes running along whatever path the devotee has chosen, meeting each person as they reach for him. So the conclusion is simple ease. Live without anxiety, and keep the mouth busy singing Vithoba.

GATHA 1635 The Moral Ideal

Moral warning, the tightening noose

मराठी मूळ

परद्रव्यपरनारीचा अभिळास । तेथूनि हारास सर्वभाग्या ॥1॥
घटिका दिवस मास वरुषें लागेतीन । बांधलें पतन गांठोडीस ॥ध्रु.॥
पुढें घात त्याचा रोकडा शकुन । पुढें करी गुण निश्चयेंसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एकां तडतांथवड । काळ लागे नाड परी खरा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Craving another's wealth or another's spouse is the beginning of ruin for all one's fortune. Hour by hour, day by day, month by month, year by year, the knot of downfall is being tied tighter.

The ill omen of future destruction is plain to see; these very qualities guarantee the outcome. Says Tuka, for some the reckoning takes a while, but Death's noose, though slow, is certain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To crave another's wealth or another's spouse is the start of ruin. From there, all your good fortune is lost. Hour by hour, day by day, month by month, year by year, the knot of your downfall is tied tighter. The sign of the destruction ahead is plain to see. These very habits make the end certain. Tuka says: for some the reckoning takes a long time. Death's noose is slow, but it is real.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names two cravings, for what is not yours to own and for who is not yours to touch, and traces where they lead. He is not predicting bad luck; he is describing how a habit accumulates. Each day the want is fed, the knot of one's own undoing is pulled a little tighter, until the outcome is no longer in question. The slowness is the deception: because Death's noose does not fall at once, a person mistakes delay for safety. Tukaram's point is to read the early signs in oneself, while there is still slack in the rope.

GATHA 1636 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, accept your lot

मराठी मूळ

समर्थाचें केलें । कोणां जाईल मोडिलें ॥1॥
वांयां करावी ते उरे । खटपटें सोस पुरे ॥ध्रु.॥
ठेविला जो ठेवा । आपुलाला तैसा खावा ॥2॥
ज्याचें त्याचें हातीं । भुके तयाची फजिती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कोटी । बाळे जाले शूळ पोटी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What the Capable One has done, who can undo? Whatever is done in vain only adds to futile struggle. The treasure that has been stored, each one must consume according to their own lot.

What belongs to each is in each one's hands; the hungry bring disgrace only upon themselves. Says Tuka, millions of schemes have become thorns in the belly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What the Capable One has done, who can undo? Whatever you do against it is wasted; the struggle only wears you out. The portion that has been stored for you, that is the portion you eat. What belongs to each is in each one's own hands. The hungry one who reaches for more only brings disgrace on himself. Tuka says: millions of schemes have turned into thorns in the belly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching contentment by pointing at limits we did not set. He calls God the Capable One, the one whose arrangement no effort can reverse, so fighting your allotted portion is wasted strength. Each person eats from what is stored for them; grasping after another's share does not enlarge your own, it only shames you. The closing image is sharp: the countless plans hatched to get more do not feed you, they sit in the belly like thorns. The cure he points to is not laziness but the peace of taking what is given and stopping there.

GATHA 1637 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the inherited claim

मराठी मूळ

हे माझी मिराशी । ठाव तुझ्या पायांपाशीं ॥1॥
याचा धरीन अभिमान । करीन आपुलें जतन ॥ध्रु.॥
देऊनियां जीव। बळी साधिला हा ठाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । जुन्हाट हे माझी सेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is my inheritance: a place at your feet. I will guard this claim with pride and protect it with my life.

I gave my very life to secure this spot. Says Tuka, O God, this service of yours is my ancient, rightful possession.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is my inheritance: a place at your feet. I will hold this claim with pride and guard it as my own. I gave my very life and so won this place. Tuka says: O God, this service of yours is my old, rightful possession.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of devotion not as a favor begged but as a right he already holds. He calls the place at God's feet his inheritance, something passed down and his by birthright, and he means to defend it the way a man defends ancestral land. The price was not money but his own life, given over to secure the spot. By calling the service ancient, he claims a bond older than this lifetime. The whole tone is possessive in the best sense: he will not let anything dislodge him from the one place that is truly his.

GATHA 1638 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, ignorance as refuge

मराठी मूळ

नेणे गति काय कवण अधोगति । मानिली निंश्चती तुझ्या पायीं ॥1॥
कर्म धर्म कोण नेणें हा उपाव । तुझ्या पायीं भाव ठेवियेला ॥ध्रु.॥
नेणें निरसं पाप पुण्य नेणें काय । ह्मणऊनि पाय धरिले तुझे ॥2॥
वेडा मी अविचार न कळे विचार । तुज माझा भार पांडुरंगा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज करितां नव्हे काय । माझा तो उपाय कवण तेथें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know the nature of salvation or what downfall means. I have placed my certainty at your feet.

I know neither dharma nor ritual, nor any method or device. I have simply fixed my devotion upon your feet.

I do not know detachment; I do not know sin or merit. That is precisely why I have held your feet, Panduranga.

I am foolish and without discernment; understanding escapes me. My burden is yours.

Says Tuka, is there anything you cannot do? What remedy could I possibly have apart from you?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know the way up or what the way down is. I have set my certainty at your feet. I know no rite, no duty, no method. I have placed my trust on your feet alone. I do not know detachment; I do not know sin or merit. That is why I have held your feet, Panduranga. I am foolish, without judgment; understanding escapes me. My burden is yours. Tuka says: is there anything you cannot do? What remedy of my own could there be?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his own ignorance into his argument for surrender. He does not know the paths of salvation or downfall, does not know ritual, detachment, sin, or merit; far from hiding this, he makes it the reason he clings to God's feet. If he could manage the way himself, he would not need to. By saying the burden is now God's, he hands over responsibility for an outcome he admits he cannot steer. The final question, is there anything you cannot do, places everything on God's capacity and nothing on his own technique.

GATHA 1639 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, holding God to his honor

मराठी मूळ

तुझा ह्मणऊनि जालों उतराई । त्याचें वर्म काई तें मी नेणें ॥1॥
हातीं धरोनियां दावीं मज वाट । पुढें कोण नीट तें चि देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
देवभक्तपण करावें जतन । दोहीं पक्षीं जाण तूं चि बळी ॥2॥
अभिमानें तुज लागली हे लाज । शरणागतां काज करावया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु नेणता मी फार । ह्मणऊनि विचार जाणविला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By calling myself yours, I became free of debt. The secret of how that works, I do not know.

Take me by the hand and show me the path; which way is right, only you know, O God. Protect the bond between God and devotee; on both sides of that bond, you alone are strong.

Your own honor compels you, for you are bound by the shame of caring for those who surrender. Says Tuka, I am utterly ignorant; that is exactly why I have laid these thoughts before you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because I called myself yours, I became free of debt. How that works, I do not know. Take me by the hand and show me the way. Which path is right ahead, only you know, O God. Guard the bond between God and devotee; on both sides of it, you alone are the strong one. Your own honor binds you to act for those who surrender. Tuka says: I am deeply ignorant, and that is exactly why I have laid these thoughts before you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a quiet claim on God's reputation. Simply by naming himself God's own, he says his debts are cleared, though he cannot explain the mechanism. He asks to be led by the hand because he cannot see the right road, and then reminds God that the very bond between the Lord and the one who takes refuge is God's to protect. The pointed line is about honor: a God who is known as the rescuer of those who surrender would be shamed if he failed even one of them. So Tukaram offers his ignorance openly, trusting that God's own good name is now on the line.

GATHA 1640 The Nature of God

The tenderness of God, the mother who follows

मराठी मूळ

मारगीं चालतां पाउलापाउलीं । चिंतावी माउली पांडुरंग ॥1॥
सर्व सुख लागे घेउनिया पाठी । आवडींचा कंठीं रस ओती ॥ध्रु.॥
पीतांबरें छाया करी लोभापर । पाहे तें उत्तर आवडीचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि करावें जीवन । वाचे नारायण तान भूक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Walking along the road, at every step, Panduranga the mother thinks of his devotee. All happiness follows behind, pouring the nectar of love into the throat.

He shades the devotee with his yellow silken cloth, tenderly, looking only for a word of love in return. Says Tuka, make this your sustenance: let the name of Narayana on your tongue be your food and drink.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As you walk along the road, at every step, let mother Panduranga be in your thoughts. All happiness comes following behind you, pouring the nectar of love into your throat. He spreads his yellow silk to shade you, full of tenderness, asking only for a word of love in return. Tuka says: make this your living. Let the name of Narayana on your tongue be your hunger and your thirst.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God not as a distant lord but as a mother walking beside the devotee, step by step. The image reverses ordinary religion: here happiness chases the devotee rather than the other way around, and God himself pours sweetness into the throat. The yellow silk held up for shade and the longing for one loving word show a God who tends rather than tests. The instruction at the end is practical: let the holy Name be your food and drink, the thing you live on, so that remembrance becomes as constant and as needed as hunger itself.

GATHA 1641 Prayers

Prayer, the heap of sins asks a place

मराठी मूळ

जालों आतां दास । माझे तोडोनियां पाश ॥1॥
ठाव द्यावा पायांपाशीं । मी तो पातकांची राशी ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळ ही गोवा । माझा उगवूनि देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भय । करा जवळी तें नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now that my bonds are cut, I have become a true servant. Grant me a place at your feet, though I am a heap of sins.

Untangle all my confusions, O God. Says Tuka, let nothing fearful come near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now my bonds are cut; I have become your servant. Give me a place at your feet, though I am a heap of sins. Untangle all my confusions, O God. Tuka says: let nothing fearful come near.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short prayer from one who claims nothing but his own neediness. Tukaram says his bonds are already cut, so he comes asking only for a place at the feet, and in the same breath admits he is a mound of accumulated sins. He does not minimize that; he sets it beside his request so the grace asked for is plainly undeserved. He wants his tangles undone by God's hand, not his own. The last line is the prayer of someone who knows he cannot protect himself: keep all that is fearful away from me.

GATHA 1642 Longing and Separation

Longing, the lover protests

मराठी मूळ

अंतरींचें जाणां । तरि कां येऊं दिलें मना ॥1॥
तुमची करावी म्यां सेवा । आतां अव्हेरितां देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हती मोडामोडी । केली मागें ते चि घडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिला वाव । पायीं लागों दिला भाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you knew what was within from the start, why did you let this longing enter my mind? I came to serve you; will you now cast me aside, O God? There is no undoing what was done in that first moment. Says Tuka, you gave me room and allowed devotion to take hold at your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You knew what was in my heart from the start. Then why did you let this longing into my mind? I came to serve you. Will you now turn me away, O God? There is no undoing what was already done in that first moment. Tuka says: you gave me the room, and you let devotion take hold at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains the way a lover complains, holding God responsible for the very longing that now torments him. Since God knew his heart, the desire could not have entered without God's allowance, so rejection now would be unjust. He argues there is no taking back that first moment when love was kindled; the deed is done and cannot be reversed. The closing line nails the logic: it was God who made room and let devotion fasten itself to his feet. Having opened the door, God cannot fairly slam it now.

GATHA 1643 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, a plain plan for the days

मराठी मूळ

पवित्र होईन चरित्रउच्चारें । रूपाच्या आधारें गोजिरिया ॥1॥
आपुरती बुद्धि पुण्य नाहीं गांठी । पायीं घालीं मिठी पाहें डोळां ॥ध्रु.॥
गाईन ओविया शिष्टांच्या आधारें । सारीन विचारें आयुष्या या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझें नाम नारायणा । ठेवीन मी मना आपुलिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I shall become pure by reciting your beautiful story and resting upon the support of your lovely form. I have no wisdom or merit of my own; I simply embrace your feet and gaze at you with my eyes.

I will sing verses in the tradition of the noble ones, and spend this life in thoughtful reflection. Says Tuka, O Narayana, I will place your name within my own mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will become pure by reciting your beautiful story, leaning on the support of your lovely form. I have no wisdom of my own, no store of merit. I simply throw my arms around your feet and gaze at you with my eyes. I will sing verses in the way of the noble ones and spend this life in steady reflection. Tuka says: O Narayana, I will keep your name within my own mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a simple program for a whole life, built on what he has rather than what he lacks. He owns no wisdom and no bank of merit, so his method is bodily and plain: recite the story, lean on the form, hold the feet, and look. He will sing in the manner handed down by the noble ones, making contemplation his daily occupation. The vow at the end is the quiet center of it all, to keep the Name lodged in his own mind. He turns purity from an achievement into a practice anyone can begin.

GATHA 1644 Prayers

Prayer, let the birth not be wasted

मराठी मूळ

काय ऐसा जन्म जावा वांयांविण । कांहीं तरी ऋण असो माथां ॥1॥
कोणे तरी काळें होईल आठव । नाहीं जरी भाव भार खरा ॥ध्रु.॥
शता एकातरी जन्माच्या शेवटीं । कृपाळुवा पोटीं होइल दया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं फांकों तरी देत । सर्वांचें उचित सांपडलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Should this birth pass entirely in vain? Let there be at least some debt of grace upon my head. At some point, at some hour, remembrance will come, even if true devotion has not yet taken root.

In one out of a hundred births, at the very end, may the compassionate Lord feel pity in his mind. Says Tuka, if he does not let me drift away, then the proper place for everyone will be found.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Should this birth pass entirely for nothing? Let there be at least some debt of grace on my head. At some hour, in some age, remembrance will come, even if true love has not taken root yet. In one birth out of a hundred, at its very end, may the merciful Lord feel pity inside. Tuka says: if he will not let me drift away, then the right place for everyone will be found.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays against a life amounting to nothing, and his hope is humble to the point of bargaining. He asks only that some claim of grace be marked on him, so that remembrance will surface eventually even if real devotion has not yet grown. He is willing to wait across many births, hoping that at the close of even one of them, mercy will stir in the Lord. The final line widens the prayer past himself: if God simply holds people from drifting off, each one will end up where they belong. It is the prayer of someone who trusts the long patience of grace more than his own progress.

GATHA 1645 Worldly Life

Worldly life, no day is truly empty

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं कोणी दिस जात वांयांविण । साध्य नाहीं सीण लटिका चि ॥1॥
एकाचिये माथां असावें निमित्त । नसो नाहीं हित कपाळीं तें ॥ध्रु.॥
कांहीं एक तरी बोलायाचा जागा । नेदिती वाउगा उभा ठाकों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वर्मे कळों येती कांहीं । ओळखी जे नाहीं होईल ते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Not a single day passes without purpose; even if nothing is achieved, the toil itself is not in vain. Something must rest upon someone's head as the appointed cause; if there is no good fortune written there, so be it.

At the very least, there is always an occasion for speech; they will not let you stand idle for nothing. Says Tuka, some signs of the pattern become clear; the recognition that has not yet come will surely come in time.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Not one day goes by without some purpose. Even when nothing is achieved, the labor itself is not wasted. Something must fall to someone's lot as the appointed cause. If no good fortune is written there, then let it be. At the very least there is always an occasion to speak. They will not let you stand around for nothing. Tuka says: some signs of the pattern do come clear. The recognition that has not yet come will surely come in time.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at ordinary days that seem to produce nothing and refuses to call them empty. The toil still counts even when there is no visible result, because each circumstance falls to someone as its appointed cause. He accepts plainly that if fortune is not written for a given day, so be it; he does not force it. Yet life keeps offering openings, an occasion to speak, a reason to be drawn in, so no one is left idle for long. The closing assurance is patient: the underlying pattern reveals itself bit by bit, and the recognition still missing will arrive in its own time.

GATHA 1646 Longing and Separation

Longing, the servant's poverty shames God

मराठी मूळ

काय करील तें नव्हे विश्वंभर । सेवका दारिद्र लाज नाहीं ॥1॥
मजपासूनि हें पडिलें अंतर । काय तो अव्हेर करुं जाणे ॥ध्रु.॥
नामाच्या चिंतनें नासी गर्भवास । नेदी करुं आस आणिकांची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नेणों किती वांयां गेले । तयां उद्धरिलें पांडुरंगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is there that the sustainer of the world cannot do? Is he not ashamed that his own servant suffers in poverty? The distance has come from my side; how could he know how to neglect? By contemplating his name, even the torment of rebirth is destroyed; he never lets one place hope in any other. Says Tuka, I do not know how many were lost in vain, yet Panduranga dissolved them all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is there that the sustainer of the world cannot do? Is he not ashamed that his own servant lives in poverty? The distance between us came from my side. How would he know how to cast me off? By thinking on his name, even the torment of rebirth is destroyed; he lets you put your hope in no one else. Tuka says: I do not know how many were lost in vain, yet Panduranga lifted them all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a loving reproach. The one who sustains the whole world can surely do anything, so the servant's poverty reflects on the master, and Tukaram asks whether God is not ashamed of it. Then he turns honest: the gap was opened from his side, not God's, and a God like this does not even know how to abandon anyone. He points to the cure, dwelling on the Name, which dissolves the misery of rebirth and leaves no room to hope in any other. The closing testimony answers his own worry: countless others seemed lost beyond saving, and Panduranga raised every one of them.

GATHA 1647 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty rite

मराठी मूळ

संध्या करितोसी केशवाच्या नांवें । आरंभीं तें ठावें नाहीं कैसें ॥1॥
किती या सांगावें करूनि फजित । खळ नेणे हित जवळीं तें ॥ध्रु.॥
माजल्या न कळे उचित तें काय । नेघावें तें खाय घ्यावें सांडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घेती भिंती सवें डोकें । वावसी तें एकें अंधारलीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You perform your daily prayers in Keshava's name, yet you do not recognize him at the very start. How much must one say to expose the fool? The wicked one does not see the good that stands right before him.

The pampered one cannot discern what is proper; he eats what should not be taken and discards what should be received. Says Tuka, they bang their heads against the wall; their eyes have gone dark pursuing emptiness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You say your evening prayers in Keshava's name. But at the very start you do not even know him; how can that be? How much must I say to shame the fool? The wicked one cannot see the good that stands right beside him. The puffed-up man does not know what is fitting. He eats what should be left, and he leaves what should be taken. Tuka says: they bang their heads against the wall. Some grope about, blind in the dark.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks a religion done by name only. The man recites prayers in Keshava's name, yet he does not actually know the God those prayers are addressed to, so the whole rite is hollow at its root. The poem names the pattern of a hardened, self-pleased heart: it cannot recognize the good standing right next to it, and it gets every choice backward, keeping what should be dropped and dropping what should be kept. The closing images are blunt: such a life is heads banging a wall and hands groping in the dark. The sting points at the pattern of going through the motions, and it asks the listener to check whether his own worship knows the One it names.

GATHA 1648 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, guard the company you keep

मराठी मूळ

दुधाचे घागरी मद्याचा हा बुंद । पडिलिया शुद्ध नव्हे मग ॥1॥
तैसे खळां मुखें न करावें श्रवण । अहंकारें मन विटाळलें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय करावीं तें बत्तीस लक्षणें । नाक नाहीं तेणें वांयां गेलीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अन्न जिरों नेदी माशी । आपुलिया जैशी सवें श्वगॉ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If a single drop of liquor falls into a pot of milk, the whole pot is spoiled beyond recovery. Likewise, do not listen from the mouths of the wicked; their minds are defiled by ego.

Of what use are all thirty-two auspicious marks when the nose is missing? Everything is ruined. Says Tuka, a single fly prevents the digestion of an entire meal, carrying its filth along with it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One drop of liquor falls into a pot of milk, and the whole pot is no longer pure. In the same way, do not listen to teaching from the mouths of the wicked. Their minds are stained with pride. What use are the thirty-two auspicious marks if the nose is missing? They are all wasted. Tuka says: one fly will not let the food be digested, and it carries its own filth along with it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning about contamination through the company you keep and the words you take in. A single drop of liquor spoils a whole pot of milk, and one corrupting voice can spoil a clean mind, so he says do not take instruction from those whose minds are stained with ego. The image of the missing nose says that a single decisive flaw cancels every other virtue, however many. The fly that ruins a meal and carries its own filth names how a small inner corruption spreads and undoes the good. The point is self-examination about what and whom we let into the heart, not contempt for any particular person.

GATHA 1649 The Moral Ideal

Honesty, speak the truth in time

मराठी मूळ

सांगावें तें बरें असतें हें पोटीं । दुःख देते खोटी बुद्धि मग ॥1॥
आपला आपण करावा वेव्हार । जिंकोनि अंतर मन ग्वाही ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं मागें येत बोलिलें वचन । पावावा तो सीण बरा मग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु भ्यालों खटपटे । आतां देवा खोटे शब्द पुरे ॥3॥
वाराणसीस यात्रा चालली तेव्हां स्वामींनीं भागीरथीस पत्र धाडिलें - ते अभंग ॥ 4 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What should be said must be said while it is still in the belly. A dishonest mind only produces suffering later.

One must deal honestly with oneself, with the inner witness of the mind as the true judge. Spoken words cannot be recalled; it is better to accept the consequences early.

Says Tuka, I have grown deeply wary of scheming. Enough now, O God, of false words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What needs saying is better said while it is still in the belly. A crooked mind only brings suffering afterward. Deal honestly with your own self; conquer your inner self, with the mind as the witness. A spoken word does not come back. It is better to bear the trouble of it early. Tuka says: I have grown very weary of scheming. Enough now, O God, of false words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making the case for speaking the truth plainly and in time. Hold a word back and let a crooked mind work on it, and it only breeds suffering later, so it is better to say the needful thing while it still sits unspoken in you. He sets the inner self as both the one to be conquered and the witness who judges: honest dealing begins inside, with yourself. A word once spoken cannot be recalled, so it is wiser to bear the cost of plain speech early than to live with the rot of false words. The closing prayer is his own vow of weariness with all scheming.

GATHA 1650 Prayers

Prayer, an offering to the river-mother

मराठी मूळ

परिसें वो माते माझी विनवणी । मस्तक चरणीं ठेवीतसें ॥1॥
भागीरथी महादोष निवारणी । सकळां स्वामिणी तीर्थांचिये ॥ध्रु.॥
जीतां भुक्ति मोक्ष मरणें तुझ्या तिरीं । अहिक्यपरत्री सुखरूप ॥2॥
तुका विष्णुदास संतांचें पोसनें । वागपुष्प तेणें पाठविलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear my humble prayer, O Mother. I place my head at your feet.

O Bhagirathi, remover of the greatest sins, queen of all sacred waters. In life you grant both worldly joy and liberation; dying upon your banks brings happiness here and hereafter.

Tuka, servant of Vishnu, nourished by the saints, sends this offering of words as a garland of flowers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hear my prayer, O Mother. I lay my head at your feet. O Bhagirathi, you wash away the greatest sins; you are the queen of all holy waters. While I live you give both worldly joy and release; to die on your bank is happiness here and hereafter. Tuka, servant of Vishnu, fed by the saints, sends this; he sends a garland of words.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer to the river Ganga, called Bhagirathi, offered as Tukaram's pilgrimage moved toward Varanasi. He bows his head at her feet and praises her as the destroyer of even the greatest sins and the queen among all sacred waters. He names what she gives: enjoyment and liberation to the living, and to those who die on her bank, peace in this world and the next. He has no flowers to lay before her, so he calls his own poem the offering, a garland made of words, sent by one who lives as a servant of Vishnu and is sustained by the company of saints.

GATHA 1651 Prayers

Petition, the beggar at the feet

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी विश्वनाथ । दीनरंक मी अनाथ ॥1॥
कृपा कराल ते थोडी । पायां पडिलों बराडी ॥ध्रु.॥
काय उणें तुह्मांपाशीं। मी तों अल्पें चि संतोषी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । कांहीं भातुकें पाठवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the Lord of the universe, and I am a poor, destitute orphan. I have fallen at your feet, crying out for just a little of your grace.

What could possibly be lacking in your treasury? I am content with even the smallest morsel. Says Tuka, O God, please send me some small gift.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the Lord of the universe. I am a poor wretch, an orphan. Even a little grace from you is much. I have fallen at your feet, begging. What could be lacking with you? And I am content with very little. Tuka says: O God, send me some small gift.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands as a beggar before Vishvanatha, the Lord of the universe, naming the whole distance between them. He has nothing and belongs to no one; the God he addresses owns everything. From such a giver even a small mercy is enormous, so he falls at the feet and asks. He presses the point gently: nothing in the divine treasury could run short, and his own needs are tiny, satisfied by the least crumb. The prayer ends not grasping for greatness but asking only for some small gift, the posture of one who trusts the giver more than he wants the gift.

GATHA 1652 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the rite fulfilled in self-offering

मराठी मूळ

पिंड पदावरी । दिला आपुलिये करीं ॥1॥
माझें जालें गयावर्जन । फिटलें पितरांचें ऋण ॥ध्रु.॥
केलें कर्मांतर । बोंब मारिली हरिहर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें । भार उतरलें ओझें ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have placed this body at the feet of the Lord with my own hands. My pilgrimage to Gaya is accomplished, and the debt to my ancestors is cleared.

I have performed the final rite by calling out to Hari. Says Tuka, the heavy burden I carried has been lifted from me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have placed this body at his feet with my own hands. My pilgrimage to Gaya is done; the debt to my ancestors is cleared. I have performed the last rite; I cried out the names of Hari and Hara. Tuka says: the load I carried, that heavy weight, has come off me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the language of funeral and ancestral rites and turns it inward. With his own hands he offers his body at the Lord's feet, and he says this self-offering accomplishes everything the pilgrimage to Gaya and the rites for the dead were meant to do, even clearing the debt owed to the ancestors. The final rite he performs is simply crying out the divine names. The radical claim is that surrender to God is itself the complete sacrament, and the weight he names lifting off is the whole burden of obligation a person carries through life.

GATHA 1653 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the longing held in the throat

मराठी मूळ

मथुरेच्या राया । माझें दंडवत पायां ॥1॥
तुमचे कृपेचें पोसनें । माझा समाचार घेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम धरिलें कंठीं । असें आर्तभूत पोटीं ॥2॥
जीवींचें ते जाणा । तुका ह्मणे नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O King of Mathura, I bow at your feet. It is by your grace that you nourish me and look after my welfare.

I hold your name in my throat, and deep longing burns within me. Says Tuka, O Narayana, you alone know what lies in my jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O King of Mathura, my bowing at your feet. I am fed by your grace; look after me. I hold your name in my throat. There is a deep ache inside me. Tuka says: O Narayana, you know what is in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram bows to Krishna, the King of Mathura, and frames his whole life as already sustained by that grace, so he asks only to be looked after still. He holds the divine name lodged in his throat, kept close as breath, while a longing burns inside him that he does not fully spell out. He trusts that he does not need to spell it out: Narayana already knows what lies in his heart. The prayer rests on that intimacy, that the One addressed sees the inner state without being told.

GATHA 1654 Longing and Separation

Longing, love that seizes the senses

मराठी मूळ

जाय तिकडे लागे पाठीं । नाहीं तुटी आठवाची ॥1॥
हरूनियां नेलें चित्त । माझें थीत भांडवल ॥ध्रु.॥
दावूनियां रूप डोळां। मन चाळा लावियेलें ॥2॥
आणीक तोंडा पडिली मिठी । कान गोठी नाइकती ॥3॥
बोलिल्याचा आठव न घडे । वाणी ओढे ते सोई ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे प्रेमधगी । भरली अंगीं अखंड ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever I go, the memory of Him follows me without a break. He has stolen my mind, which was my only capital.

He showed His form to my eyes and set my mind into a restless longing. My mouth is sealed shut; my ears refuse to hear any other talk.

My tongue is drawn only toward Him, and I cannot recall what else was ever spoken. Says Tuka, the fire of love blazes ceaselessly through my whole being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever I go, the memory follows at my back; it never breaks off. He has stolen my mind away, which was all the capital I had. He showed his form to my eyes and set my mind restless with longing. My mouth is sealed; my ears will not hear other talk. I cannot recall what else was said; my tongue is drawn only that one way. Tuka says: the fire of love has filled my whole body, unbroken.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes love so total that it has taken over every sense. The memory of God follows him wherever he goes and never lets up, and he says his mind, the only capital he owned, has been stolen outright. Once the divine form was shown to his eyes, the mind was set into ceaseless longing, and the senses fell in line behind it: the mouth shut to other speech, the ears deaf to other talk, the tongue pulled only one way. He cannot even remember anything else that was spoken to him. The poem lands on an image of unbroken fire, love burning through the whole body without pause.

GATHA 1655 Renunciation

Renunciation, staking life on Govinda

मराठी मूळ

नको ऐसें जालें अन्न । भूक तान ते गेली ॥1॥
गोविंदाची आवडी जीवा । करीन सेवा धणीवरी ॥ध्रु.॥
राहिलें तें राहो काम । सकळ धर्म देहीचे ॥2॥
देह घरिला त्याचें फळ । आणीक काळ धन्य हा ॥3॥
जाऊं नेदीं करितां सोस । क्षेमा दोष करवीन ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे या च पाठी । आता साटी जीवाची ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I no longer need food; hunger and thirst have left me. My jiva craves only the love of Govinda, and I will serve Him to my full satisfaction.

Let all bodily duties and obligations fall away as they may. This body was taken up for His sake, and blessed is the time spent so.

I will not let Him go despite all the longing it costs me. Says Tuka, I will stake my very life in pursuit of Him alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Food has become something I do not want; hunger and thirst have left me. My soul loves Govinda; I will serve him to my full content. Let whatever bodily work remains stay undone; let all the body's duties go. This body was taken up for his sake, and blessed is the time spent so. I will not let him go, however much longing it costs me; I will make even the parting into a fault to be answered for. Tuka says: now, behind this, I stake my very life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets the demands of the body fall away under the single hunger for God. He no longer wants food, and ordinary hunger and thirst have gone, because the soul's one craving is to love Govinda and serve him until it is satisfied. He releases all the body's duties as things that can stay undone; the body was taken up only for God's sake, and time spent that way is the blessed time. Then the resolve hardens into a vow: he will not let God go whatever the longing costs, and he stakes his very life on this pursuit. It is the language of one who has decided that nothing else is worth keeping.

GATHA 1656 Longing and Separation

Longing, the road watched in vain

मराठी मूळ

वाट पाहें हरि कां नये आझूनि । निष्ठ कां मनीं धरियेलें ॥1॥
काय करूं धीर होत नाहीं जीवा । काय आड ठेवा उभा ठेला ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं माझा धांवा पडियेला कानीं । कोठें चक्रपाणी गुंतलेती ॥2॥
नाही आलें कळों अंतरा अंतर । कृपावंत फार ऐकतो ॥3॥
बहुता दिसांचें राहिलें भातुकें । नाहीं कवतुकें कृविाळलें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे देई एकवेळा भेटी । शीतळ हें पोटीं होइल मग ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I watch the road, but Hari, why have you not come yet? Why have you hardened your resolve against me? My mind finds no patience; what obstacle stands between us? Has my desperate cry not reached your ears? Where are you entangled, O Wielder of the Discus? I cannot fathom the distance that separates us, though they say you are supremely compassionate and that you listen. Our reunion is long overdue, and yet you show no tender eagerness.

Says Tuka, grant me just one meeting, and then my mind will be at peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I watch the road. Hari, why have you not come yet? Why have you hardened your heart against me? What can I do; my soul finds no patience. What treasure are you guarding that you stand back? Has my cry not fallen on your ears? Where are you caught up, O Wielder of the Discus? I cannot see why heart has grown distant from heart, though they say you are full of mercy, that you listen. The meeting has been put off for so many days; you have not fondled me even for fun. Tuka says: grant me one meeting, just once, and then this heart will grow cool.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the complaint of a devotee waiting for a God who does not arrive. Tukaram keeps his eyes on the road and asks Hari outright why he has not come and why he seems to have hardened his heart. He turns the silence into questions: what is holding you, has my cry not reached you, why has heart grown distant from heart when everyone says you are merciful and that you listen. He even reproaches God for not showing the smallest playful tenderness over so many days. The whole ache narrows to one request, a single meeting, after which the burning heart would finally be cooled.

GATHA 1657 Longing and Separation

Longing, the mother who consoles

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं दिलें कधीं कठिण उत्तर । तरी कां अंतर पडियेलें ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि आतां वियोग न साहे । लांचावलें देहे संघष्टणें ॥ध्रु.॥
वेळोवेळां वाचे आठवितों नाम । अधिक चि प्रेम चढे घेतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगे जननिये । घेऊनि कडिये बुझाविलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have never spoken a harsh word to you, so why has this distance fallen between us? This separation is unbearable, for my body has grown addicted to your embrace. Again and again my tongue calls upon your name, and the more I chant, the more my love increases.

Says Tuka, O Panduranga, like a mother you have taken me onto your lap and consoled me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have never given you a harsh word, so why has this distance come between us? Because of it I cannot bear the separation now; my body is starved for your touch. Again and again my tongue remembers your name, and the more I take it, the more my love rises. Tuka says: Panduranga, like a mother, took me up onto her lap and comforted me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads against a separation he feels he has not earned, since he has never once spoken harshly to God. The distance is unbearable because his body has grown used to the nearness, hungry for the touch of God like a starved thing. His only recourse is the Name, repeated again and again, and he notices that each repetition does not dull the longing but raises the love higher. The poem ends with the answer to the plea: Panduranga responds not as a distant lord but as a mother, lifting him onto her lap and consoling him, and the divine is named in tender, maternal terms.

GATHA 1658 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the hidden treasure found

मराठी मूळ

आतां न करीं सोस । सेवीन हा ब्रह्मरस ॥1॥
सुखें सेवीन अमृत । ब्रह्मपदींचें निश्चित ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमचा निज ठेवा । आह्मी पाडियेला ठावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवरांया । आतां लपालेती वांयां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I shall strive no more, for I will drink the nectar of Brahman. I will joyfully partake of that immortal essence rooted in the supreme state.

I have discovered the hidden treasure that is yours. Says Tuka, O King of Gods, now it is futile for you to hide from me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I will strive no more; I will drink this nectar of Brahman. Gladly I will taste the deathless drink, the sure nectar of the supreme state. Your own secret treasure, we have found it out. Tuka says: O King of Gods, now it is useless for you to hide.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the far side of the search, where striving ends and tasting begins. He says he will struggle no longer, because now he simply drinks the nectar of Brahman, the deathless joy of the supreme state. The tone is triumphant and almost teasing: the hidden treasure that God kept tucked away has been discovered. So he tells the King of Gods, with delight, that there is no point hiding any longer. The poem stands at the moment when the One so long sought is finally found and can no longer keep itself concealed.

GATHA 1659 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God beside me everywhere

मराठी मूळ

जेथें जेथें जासी । तेथें मज चि तूं पासी ॥1॥
ऐसा पसरीन भाव । रिता नाहीं कोणी ठाव ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्त जडलें पायीं । पाळती हें ठायीं ठायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोटीं । देव घालुनि सांगें गोष्टी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever you go, you find me right beside you. I have spread my devotion so wide that no place is left empty of it.

My mind is fixed upon your feet, and this devotion is present everywhere. Says Tuka, I hold God within my chitta, and from there I speak all that I say.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever you go, you are right there beside me. I have spread my love so wide that no place is left empty of it. My mind is fastened to your feet, and this love keeps watch in every place. Tuka says: I hold God inside my heart, and from there I speak everything I say.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a love that has filled every corner of his world, so that there is no place where God is not near him. His attention is fixed on God's feet, and that fixed devotion keeps a kind of watch over every place at once. The closing line is the radical claim: God is not somewhere far off but lodged within his own heart, and that indwelling is the source of all his words. Speech itself becomes God speaking from within.

GATHA 1660 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the senses at rest

मराठी मूळ

सांपडला हातीं । तरी जाली हे निंश्चती ॥1॥
नाहीं धांवा घेत मन । इंद्रियांचें समाधान ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडियेला हेवा । अवघा संचिताचा ठेवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काम । निरसुनियां घेतों नाम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now that He has been caught in my hands, a deep certainty has settled upon me. The mind no longer races outward, and the senses have found their satisfaction.

I have abandoned the entire hoard of accumulated fortune. Says Tuka, having dissolved all desire, I simply take the name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is caught in my hands now, and so a deep certainty has settled in me. My mind no longer races outward. The senses have found their peace. I have thrown away the whole hoard of stored-up fortune. Tuka says: I have dissolved every desire, and I simply take the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the moment of having God firmly in hand, and what follows is rest. The mind, which usually runs after things, stops running; the senses, which usually hunger, are satisfied. He then names the cost: he has discarded his sanchita, the whole store of accumulated karmic fortune, because he no longer wants what it could buy. With every desire dissolved, only one act remains, the taking of the Name, and that is enough.

GATHA 1661 The Saints

Saints, their life is God

मराठी मूळ

मुक्तिपांग नाहीं विष्णुचिया दासां । संसार तो कैसा न देखती ॥1॥
बैसला गोविंद जडोनियां चित्ती । आदि ते चि अंतीं अवसान ॥ध्रु.॥
भोग नारायणा देऊनि निराळीं । ओविया मंगळीं तो चि गाती ॥2॥
बळ बुद्धि त्यांची उपकारासाटीं । अमृत तें पोटी सांटवलें ॥3॥
दयावेंत तरी देवा च सारिखीं । आपुलीं पारखीं नोळखती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांचा जीव तो चि देव । वैकुंठ तो ठाव वसती तो ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devotees of Vishnu are never deprived of liberation; they do not even perceive worldly bondage. Govinda has settled firmly in their chitta, from beginning to end without cessation.

They offer all enjoyments to Narayana and stand apart, singing only auspicious songs of praise. Their strength and intellect are spent entirely in service to others, for they have stored nectar within.

Compassionate as God Himself, they do not distinguish their own from strangers. Says Tuka, their very life is God, and Vaikuntha is the place where they dwell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The servants of Vishnu are never kept from freedom; they do not even see worldly bondage. Govinda sits settled in their hearts, from the beginning to the very end, without break. They give all their pleasures to Narayana and stand apart, singing only songs of blessing. Their strength and their wit are spent on helping others, for they have stored up nectar within. They are kind like God himself; they do not tell their own people from strangers. Tuka says: their very life is God, and Vaikuntha is the place where they live.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what the true devotees of Vishnu are like and how high he places them. Liberation is no struggle for them; they do not even perceive the bondage that holds others, because Govinda is fixed in their hearts without interruption. They hand every enjoyment to God and keep none for themselves, spending their whole strength and intelligence in service to others. The final claim is the boldest: their life simply is God, and they already dwell in Vaikuntha, the heaven of Vishnu, while still here. The saint is not on the way to God; the saint is the place where God lives.

GATHA 1662 The Saints

Saints, lowest place at their feet

मराठी मूळ

सेवीन उच्छिष्ट लोळेन अंगणीं । वैष्णवां चरणीं होइन जोडा ॥1॥
ऐसें जन्म आतां मज देई देवा । आवडी हे जीवा सर्व काळ ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यांचे चरणरज येती अंगावरी । वंदीत ते शिरीं जाइन मागें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें राहिलासे भाव । सकळ ही वाव जाणोनियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will eat the remnants of their meals, roll in the dust of their courtyards, and become sandals at the feet of the Vaishnavas. O God, grant me such a birth, for this is my longing at all times.

May the dust of their feet fall upon me, and I will follow behind, bowing my head to receive it. Says Tuka, this alone is my aspiration, knowing all else to be hollow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will eat the leftovers of their meals. I will roll in the dust of their courtyards. I will become the sandals at the feet of the Vaishnavas. O God, give me such a birth as this, for this is my longing at every hour. Let the dust of their feet fall on my body; I will follow behind them, bowing my head to receive it. Tuka says: this alone is what my heart holds, for I know all else is hollow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God for the lowest possible place, not the highest. He wants to eat the saints' leftovers, roll in their courtyard dust, and be the sandals beneath their feet, and he begs to be born for this and nothing else. The longing is total: he will walk behind them just to catch the dust off their feet on his head. The reason is in the last line, that he has weighed everything else and found it empty, so the only thing worth wanting is the lowest service to the devotees of God.

GATHA 1663 Longing and Separation

Longing, hurry to embrace

मराठी मूळ

क्षेम देयाला हो । स्फुरताती दंड बाहो ॥1॥
आतां झडझडां चालें । देई उचलूं पाउलें ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडीं हंसगती । बहु उत्कंठा हे चित्तीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आई । श्रीरंगे विठाबाई ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My arms tremble with eagerness to embrace you. Come quickly now, lift your feet and hasten your steps.

Abandon that graceful swan-gait, for the longing in my chitta is too great. Says Tuka, O Shrirang, O dear Vithabai, come to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My arms shake with eagerness to hold you close. Come quickly now, lift your feet, hasten your steps. Drop that slow swan-walk; the longing in my heart is too great. Tuka says: come to me, O Shrirang, O dear Vithabai.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram writes from the moment just before a longed-for meeting, his arms trembling because he cannot wait to embrace God. He urges God to come fast and abandon the graceful, unhurried swan-gait, since his own heart can bear no delay. The poem turns God into the beloved who is taking too long. He calls out with tender names, Shrirang and Vithabai, the way one calls a dear one to hurry.

GATHA 1664 Longing and Separation

Longing, leave the finery, come now

मराठी मूळ

जेणें वेळ लागे । ऐसें सांडीं पांडुरंगे ॥1॥
कंठ कंठा मिळों देई । माझा वोरस तूं घेई ॥ध्रु.॥
नको पीतांबर । सांवरूं हे अळंकार ॥2॥
टाकीं वो भातुकें । लौकिकाचें कवतुकें ॥3॥
हातां पायां नको । कांहीं वेगळालें राखों ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे यावरी । मग सुखें अळंकारीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Panduranga, set aside whatever causes delay. Let throat meet throat, and take my longing into yourself.

Do not bother with the silk garment or arranging your ornaments. Cast off these ceremonial gifts and the formalities of public regard.

Do not keep your hands and feet reserved or hold anything back. Says Tuka, once we have embraced, then you may dress in all your finery at leisure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Panduranga, throw aside whatever causes delay. Let throat meet throat; take my longing into yourself. Do not bother with the silk garment, do not stop to arrange your ornaments. Cast off the ceremonial gifts and the games of public regard. Do not keep your hands and feet held back; do not save anything apart. Tuka says: once we have embraced, then you may dress in all your finery at your ease.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs God to drop everything that stands between them and come straight into his embrace, throat against throat. He waves away the silk robe, the ornaments, the ceremonial offerings, and the whole performance that respectability expects, because none of it matters next to the meeting itself. He wants nothing held in reserve, no part of God kept apart from him. The closing line is almost playful: there will be time for finery afterward, but first comes the embrace, and that comes before all the proper dressing-up.

GATHA 1665 Prayers

Prayer, the real thing, not glass

मराठी मूळ

कृपेचा ओलावा । दिसे वेगळा चि देवा ॥1॥
मी हें इच्छीतसें साचें । न लगे फुकटशाई काचें ॥ध्रु.॥
जेणें जाय कळसा। पाया उत्तम तो तैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घरीं । तुझ्या अवघिया परी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The moisture of your grace, O God, is visibly something apart. What I desire is the genuine thing; I have no use for a worthless imitation made of glass.

The foundation must be sound if the pinnacle is to hold. Says Tuka, I want everything in your household to be real and whole.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The moisture of your grace, O God, is plainly something apart. What I want is the true thing; I have no use for a worthless fake made of glass. The foundation must be sound if the pinnacle is to hold. Tuka says: I want everything in your house to be real.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for the genuine touch of grace and refusing every counterfeit. He sees that God's grace is unmistakably real, set apart from anything that merely imitates it, and he insists he will not be fobbed off with cheap glass that only looks like the jewel. He reaches for a builder's image: a tower only stands if its foundation is sound, so the inner reality must be true for the outward life to hold. His whole request is that nothing in God's household be false; he wants the real thing all the way through.

GATHA 1666 Prayers

Prayer, refuse the powers that strip you bare

मराठी मूळ

दावूनियां कोणां कांहीं । ते चि वाहीं चाळविलीं ॥1॥
तैसें नको करूं देवा । शुद्धभावा माझिया ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धसिद्धी ऐसे आड । येती नाड नागवूं ॥2॥
उदकाऐसे दावुनि ओढी । उर फोडी झळई ॥3॥
दर्पणींचें दिलें धन । दिसे पण चरफडी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे पायांसाटीं । करीं आटी कळों द्या ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have shown various things to various people and led them along with those enticements. Do not do the same, O God, with my pure devotion.

Supernatural powers and accomplishments come as obstacles meant to strip us bare. Like water shown to a thirsty man and then withdrawn as a mirage, or wealth displayed in a mirror that cannot be grasped, they only cause torment.

Says Tuka, I labor only for your feet; let me know that you understand this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have shown various things to various people and led them off with those lures. Do not do that, O God, to my pure devotion. Powers and accomplishments come in the way as traps meant to strip us bare. Like water shown to a thirsty man and then pulled back as a mirage, like wealth shown in a mirror that cannot be grasped, they only break the heart. Tuka says: I labor only for your feet; let me know that you understand this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking God not to test or distract him with the miraculous powers that lure other seekers off the path. He names them plainly as traps, the riddhi and siddhi that come as obstacles and end up robbing a person of what matters. He gives two sharp images for them: water promised to a thirsty man that turns out to be a mirage, and money seen in a mirror that the hand can never reach, both of which only torment. His one plea is that his labor is for God's feet alone, and he wants the assurance that God knows it and will not divert him with shiny powers.

GATHA 1667 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the mother's tenderness

मराठी मूळ

काय माता विसरे बाळा । कळवळा प्रीतीचा ॥1॥
आवडीनें गळां मिठी । घाली उठी बैसवी ॥ध्रु.॥
लावूं धांवे मुख स्तना । नये मना निराळें ॥2॥
भावंडाचें भातें दावी । आपुलें लावी त्यास जी ॥3॥
माझें थोडें त्याचें फार । उत्तर हें वाढवी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायणा । तुह्मी जाणां बुझावूं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Does a mother ever forget her child? She is stirred by a deep tenderness of love. She embraces the child around the neck with affection, lifts it up and seats it upon her lap.

She runs to press its mouth to her breast; she cannot bear to be separated. She shows the child its sibling's food and then gives it her own.

She makes little of her own share and magnifies the child's portion. Says Tuka, O Narayana, you know just how to console us in the same way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Does a mother ever forget her child? She is stirred by a deep tenderness of love. She throws her arms around its neck with delight, lifts it up, seats it on her lap. She runs to press its mouth to her breast; she cannot bear to be apart. She points to the other child's plate and gives this one her own share. She makes her own portion small and the child's portion large. Tuka says: O Narayana, you know just how to comfort us in the same way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the picture of a mother who can never forget her child, and lets every detail carry the weight of God's love. She embraces, lifts, nurses, and cannot bear separation; she even goes hungry, shrinking her own share so the child's plate is full. The whole portrait is an argument by tenderness: this is the kind of love God has. In the last line he turns the picture to address God directly, saying Narayana knows exactly how to soothe and console his devotees the way a mother soothes her child.

GATHA 1668 Prayers

Prayer, why does my time pass in distress

मराठी मूळ

तरीं आह्मी तुझी धरियेली कास । नाहीं कोणी दास वांयां गेला ॥1॥
आगा पंढरीच्या उभ्या विटेवरी । येई लवकरी धांवें नेटे ॥ध्रु.॥
पालवितों तुज उभी करोनि बाहे । कृपावंता पाहे मजकडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज बहु कान डोळे । कां हे माझे वेळे ऐसी परी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have held fast to your garment, for no devotee of yours has ever been turned away in vain. O Lord standing upon the brick at Pandhari, come running to me swiftly and with force.

I call to you with arms raised high; O compassionate one, look toward me. Says Tuka, you have so many ears and eyes, so why is my time passing in such distress?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Still, I have held fast to your garment, for no servant of yours was ever turned away in vain. O Lord standing on the brick at Pandhari, come running to me, quickly and with force. I call to you with my arms raised high; O merciful one, look toward me. Tuka says: you have so many ears, so many eyes, so why is my own time passing in this distress?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram clings to God with one piece of confidence: no devotee who held on has ever been sent away empty. So he calls to the Lord who stands on the brick at Pandhari to come running fast and strong. He stretches his arms up and pleads for one merciful glance turned his way. The poem ends with an honest, almost wounded question: if God has countless ears and eyes that hear and see everyone, why is Tukaram's own hour still passing in pain. It is the cry of a faith that trusts God and yet is still kept waiting.

GATHA 1669 Longing and Separation

Longing, you kindled this love yourself

मराठी मूळ

करावा कांटाळा नव्हे हें उचित । आधीं च कां प्रीत लावियेली ॥1॥
जाणतसां तुह्मीं रूपाचें लाघव । आपुलें तें जीव घेतें ऐसा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय ह्मणऊनि आलेती आकारा । आह्मां उजगरा करावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भीड होती आजिवरी । आतां देवा उरी कोण ठेवी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not right for you to grow weary of me, for it was you who first kindled this love. You know the power of your own beauty, that it takes the very life of those who behold it.

Why then did you take form at all, if only to keep us awake with longing? Says Tuka, until now I maintained some restraint, but henceforth, O God, who can hold back?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is not right for you to grow tired of me. You were the one who first lit this love. You know the power of your own beauty, how it takes the very life of those who see it. Why did you take a form at all, if only to keep us awake with longing? Tuka says: until now I kept some restraint, but now, O God, who can hold back?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a kind of loving complaint: God has no right to weary of him, since God is the one who first kindled this love. He points out that God knows full well how irresistible his beauty is, that it steals the life of anyone who beholds it. Then comes the sharp question, why God took visible form at all if it was only going to leave devotees sleepless with longing. He admits that he held himself in check until now, but says the longing has overflowed and restraint is finished. The blame, lovingly, is laid at God's own door.

GATHA 1670 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, holding fast and not letting go

मराठी मूळ

धरूनि पालव असुडीन करें । मग काय बरें दिसे लोकीं ॥1॥
काय तें विचारा ठायींचें आपणां । जो हा नारायणा अवकाश ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतर पायांसी तो वरी या गोष्टी । पडिलिया मिठी हालों नेदीं ॥2॥
रुसलेती तरी होईल बुझावणी । तांतडी करूनि साधावें हें ॥3॥
सांपडलिया आधीं कारणासी ठाव । येथें करूं भाव दृढ आतां ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे ठाउके बोभाट । मग खटपट चुकली ते ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will seize the hem of your garment and pull it with my hands; never mind how it may look to the world. Consider within yourself, O Narayana, what room there is for delay.

Outwardly these are just words, but once I lay hold of your feet, I will not let you stir. If you are displeased, there will be a reconciliation; I will press the matter urgently.

Now that I have found the cause of all causes, I will fix my devotion firmly here. Says Tuka, your protests are well known to me, and once heard, the struggle is over.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will catch the hem of your garment and pull it with my hands; never mind how it looks to the world. Consider with yourself, O Narayana, what room there is for delay. Outwardly these are only words, but once I lay hold of your feet, I will not let you stir. If you are displeased, there will be a making-up; I will press the matter hard. Now that I have found the cause of all causes, I will fix my love firmly here. Tuka says: I know your protests well, and once they are heard, the struggle is over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram threatens, with love, to grab God's garment and not care how it looks to onlookers, asking God plainly what justifies any delay. He admits the words are just words until the act follows, but once he takes hold of God's feet he means to keep so firm a grip that God cannot move. If God grows annoyed, he will simply make peace and keep pressing, urgently. He has found the source of everything and will plant his devotion there for good; and he knows God's reluctant protests so well that, once they have been voiced, the whole tug-of-war is already settled in his favor.

GATHA 1671 Devotion to Vitthal

Reclaimed birthright, no distance left

मराठी मूळ

निष्ठा उत्तरीं न धरावा राग । आहे लागभाग ठायींचा चि ॥1॥
तूं माझा जनिता तूं माझा जनिता । रखुमाईच्या कांता पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
मुळींच्या ठेवण्यां आहे अधिकार । दुरावोनि दूर गेलों होतों ॥2॥
पोटींच्या आठवा पडिला विसर । काहीं आला भार माथां तेणें ॥3॥
राखिला हा होता बहु चौघां चार । साक्षीने वेव्हार निवडिला ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं बोलणें न लगे । आतां पांडुरंगे तूं मी ऐसें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not take offense at my persistent words; the claim between us is ancient and real. You are my father, you are my father, O Panduranga, husband of Rakhumai.

I have a rightful share in the original inheritance, though I had strayed far away. I had forgotten the stirrings within, burdened as I was by worldly weight.

I kept up appearances before the four quarters, and now the account has been settled before witnesses. Says Tuka, nothing more need be said, O Panduranga; there is no longer any difference between you and me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not be angry at my stubborn words. The bond between us belongs here, from the very root. You are my father, you are my father, O Panduranga, husband of Rakhumai. I have a rightful share in the first inheritance. I had strayed far, far away. I forgot the stirrings inside me, so a load came to weigh on my head. This was kept hidden a long time, before the four quarters. Now the account has been settled before witnesses. Tuka says: nothing more needs saying. Now, O Panduranga, you and I are one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing a claim, and he warns God not to bristle at how hard he presses. The bond is not earned, it is original: he calls Panduranga his father, the source from whom he came, so a child's share of the inheritance is his by right even though he wandered off and let the load of the world settle on him. The pretense he had kept up before the world is now over, the books opened and reckoned in plain sight. What is left is not a debt but an identity: there is no longer any gap between the devotee and God.

GATHA 1672 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, joy too full for words

मराठी मूळ

सांगतां गोष्टी लागती गोडा । हा तो रोकडा अनुभव ॥1॥
सुख जालें सुख जालें । नये बोले बोलतां ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतर तें नये दिसों । आतां सोस कासया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जतन करूं । हें चि धरूं जीवेंसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When we speak of these things, they taste sweet; this is direct, living experience. Such joy has come, such joy, that words fail in the telling.

No distance remains to be seen, so what cause is there for longing? Says Tuka, I will guard this treasure and hold it close to my very life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When we speak of these things, they taste sweet. This is plain, living experience, here in the hand. Joy has come, joy has come. It cannot be told in speech. No inner distance is left to be seen. So why any more longing? Tuka says: I will guard this. I will hold it with my very life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting a joy he has actually tasted, not a doctrine he has been told. Speaking of God is sweet, but the joy itself outruns speech and cannot be set down in words. What makes it complete is that the separation between him and God has closed, so there is nothing left to ache for. The poem ends as a vow: a treasure this real is to be protected and kept pressed close to his own life.

GATHA 1673 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the head needs the feet

मराठी मूळ

मजशीं पुरे न पडे वादें । सुख दोहींच्या संवादें ॥1॥
तूं चि आगळा काशानें । शिर काय पायांविणे ॥ध्रु.॥
वाहों तुझा भार । दुःख साहोनि अपार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं भेद । देवा करूं नये वाद ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No argument can prevail against me, for the joy lies in our mutual exchange. How can you claim to be greater? What is the head without the feet? I bear your burden and endure immeasurable suffering on your behalf.

Says Tuka, there is no difference between us, O God; let there be no quarrel.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No argument can win against me. The joy is in our talking together. How are you the greater one? What is a head without the feet? I carry your burden. I bear suffering beyond measure. Tuka says: there is no difference between us. So, God, let us not quarrel.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns a lover's debate with God into a claim about mutual need. He insists God cannot simply assert superiority, because a head is useless without feet to carry it: the Lord depends on the devotee who bears his weight in the world and endures endless hardship for him. The point of the back and forth is not to win but the sweetness of the exchange itself. And since there is finally no difference between them, the quarrel collapses into oneness.

GATHA 1674 Devotion to Vitthal

Bold devotion, God does nothing alone

मराठी मूळ

तुज नाहीं शक्ति । काम घेसी आह्मां हातीं ॥1॥
ऐसें अनुभवें पाहीं । उरलें बोलिजेसें नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
लपोनियां आड । आह्मां तुझा कैवाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुजसाठी । आह्मां संवसारें तुटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have no discipline of your own; you make us do the work with our own hands. I have seen this through experience, and nothing remains to be said.

You hide behind us, and we champion your cause. Says Tuka, for your sake we have broken with the entire world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have no work of your own. You get the work done through our hands. See this by experience. Nothing is left to say. You hide behind us, out of sight. We fight your cause for you. Tuka says: for your sake we have broken with the whole world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a daring complaint into a confession of love. God, he says, acts in the world only through his devotees; he himself stays hidden, while they are the ones who do the work and champion his name. Tukaram knows this not as theory but from his own experience of serving. And he names what that service has cost: for God's sake he has severed himself from the entire world, which is the price and proof of his devotion.

GATHA 1675 The Necessity of Experience

Bold devotion, God beyond merit and sin

मराठी मूळ

तुझाठायीं ओस । दोन्ही पुण्य आणि दोष ॥1॥
झडलें उरलें किती । आह्मी धरियेलें चित्तीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कळलासी नष्टा। यातिक्रियाकर्मभ्रष्टा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोला । नाहीं ताळा गा विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In you, both merit and sin are equally void. How much has fallen away, and how much remains? We have grasped this in our chitta.

We have seen through you, O rascal, you who are beyond caste, ritual, and righteous deed. Says Tuka, there is no accounting for your words, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In you there is emptiness. Both merit and sin are void there. How much has fallen away, how much remains? We have held it fast in our chitta. We have seen through you, O rascal, you who are past caste and rite and righteous deed. Tuka says: there is no measure for your ways, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to God with rough affection, as one who has caught on to him. In God both merit and sin lose their weight, voided in his presence; what truly falls away and what stays is something the devotee has grasped inwardly, in the chitta. He calls Vitthal a rascal not in scorn but in delight, because Vitthal stands outside all the categories people live by, caste, ritual, and meritorious works, and so cannot be added up or accounted for. The harshness is the freedom of intimacy, the language of someone close enough to tease the divine.

GATHA 1676 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, quarrel only for truth

मराठी मूळ

भांडावें तों हित । ठायी पडा तें उचित ॥1॥
नये खंडों देऊं वाद । आह्मां भांडवलभेद ॥ध्रु.॥
शब्दासारसें भेटी । नये पडों देऊं तुटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आळस । तो चि कारणांचा नास ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should quarrel only for the sake of truth; settle matters where they properly belong. We must not let the debate be interrupted, for our very capital is at stake in this difference.

Let the meeting match the word; do not allow a rupture. Says Tuka, laziness is the destruction of all worthy causes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Quarrel only when it does good. Settle things where they truly belong. Do not let the debate be cut off. Our very capital is staked on this difference. Let the meeting match the word. Do not let it break apart. Tuka says: laziness itself destroys the cause.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram treats his striving with God as a dispute worth keeping alive on purpose. A quarrel is justified only when it leads to good, and matters should be put to rest on their right ground, not dropped or fudged. He will not let the argument lapse, because everything he has, his whole capital, is wagered on this very point of difference between himself and God. The closing line names the real enemy: not God's resistance but the devotee's own slackness, for laziness is what wrecks any worthy effort.

GATHA 1677 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, contention as true service

मराठी मूळ

नव्हों गांढे आळसी । जो तूं आह्मांपुढें जासी ॥1॥
अरे दिलें आह्मां हातीं । वर्म वेवादाचें संतीं ॥ध्रु.॥
धरोनियां वाट। जालों शिरोमणि थोंट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । वाद करीन खरी सेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am no fool or idler, not when you stand before me. The saints have placed the secret weapon of disputation into our hands.

Holding firm to the path, I have become a champion, stubborn to the core. Says Tuka, O God, I will carry on this argument as my truest service.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am no coward, no idler, not when you stand before me. The saints have put into our hands the secret of how to contend. Holding firm to the path, I have become a stubborn champion. Tuka says: O God, I will keep up this argument as my truest service.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to go slack before God; standing in his presence rouses him to fight, not to drowse. He credits the saints, his teachers, with handing him the very art of holy disputation, the weapon by which a devotee contends with the Lord and presses his claim. Gripping that path, he turns himself into an unyielding champion who will not let go. He recasts what looks like quarreling as worship: pressing his case with God is itself the truest form of his service.

GATHA 1678 Prayers

Prayer, no kinsman but God

मराठी मूळ

तुझा विसर नको माझिया जीवा । क्षण एक केशवा मायबापा ॥1॥
जाओ राहो देह आतां ये चि घडी । कायसी आवडी याची मज ॥ध्रु.॥
कुश्चीळ इंद्रियें आपुलिया गुणें । यांचिया पाळणें कोण हित ॥2॥
पुत्र पत्नी बंधु सोयरीं खाणोरीं । यांचा कोण धरी संग आतां ॥3॥
पिंड हा उसना आणिला पांचांचा । सेकीं लागे ज्याचा त्यासी देणें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं आणिक सोइरें । तुजविण दुसरें पांडुरंगा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Keshava, my father and mother, do not let me forget you for even a single moment. Let this body live or perish this very instant; I have no attachment to it whatsoever.

The senses are filthy by their very nature; what good comes from indulging them? Sons, wife, brothers, relatives and kin, whose company shall I keep now? This body is borrowed from the five elements, and in the end each portion must be returned to its owner. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, there is no kinsman other than you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not let my soul forget you, O Keshava, my mother and father, not for a single moment. Let this body live or die this very instant. What love do I have for it? The senses are filthy by their own nature. What good comes of feeding them? Sons, wife, brothers, relatives, kin: whose company shall I keep now? This body is borrowed from the five elements. In the end each part must be given back to its owner. Tuka says: there is no other kinsman, O Panduranga, none but you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for one thing, an unbroken memory of God, and lets go of everything that competes with it. He calls Keshava both mother and father, the only true kin, and grows indifferent to whether his body lives or dies, since he feels no real attachment to it. He looks at the senses, the family, the very flesh, and sees each as something that cannot finally hold him: the senses are impure, the relatives temporary company, and the body itself only on loan from the five elements, to be returned piece by piece at death. Against all this borrowed and perishing belonging he sets the one permanent relation, Panduranga, who alone is truly his.

GATHA 1679 Prayers

Prayer, asking to be proven a true servant

मराठी मूळ

ऐसें सत्य माझें येईल अंतरा । तरि मज करा कृपा देवा ॥1॥
वचनांसारिखें तळमळी चित्त । बाहेरि तो आंत होइल भाव ॥ध्रु.॥
तरि मज ठाव द्यावा पायांपाशीं । सत्यत्वें जाणसी दास खरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्य निकट सेवकें । तरि च भातुकें प्रेम द्यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If my sincerity is truly known to your chitta, then grant me your grace, O God. Let my inner feeling match my spoken words, so that what is outside is also what is within.

Then give me a place beside your feet, for you know in truth whether I am a genuine servant. Says Tuka, if I am proven a faithful and intimate devotee, then bestow upon me the gift of your love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If this sincerity of mine reaches your heart, then show me your grace, O God. My mind churns to make the feeling match the words, so that what is outside is also what is within. Then give me a place at your feet. In truth you know whether I am a real servant. Tuka says: if I am truly your close servant, then grant me the morsel of your love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God to test the truth of his devotion and reward it only if it is real. His longing is that his inward feeling and his spoken words become one, with no gap between the outside and the inside, and he leaves the judging to God, who alone can see whether the servant is genuine. The reward he begs is a place at God's feet, nearness rather than status. The closing image is humble and tender: if he is truly counted an intimate servant, let God feed him love the way one hands a child a small morsel.

GATHA 1680 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, leaving it all to God

मराठी मूळ

आदि वर्तमान जाणसी भविष्य । मागें पुढें नीस संचिताचा ॥1॥
आतां काय देऊं पायांपें परिहार । जाणां तो विचार करा देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलें तें येथें काय चाले केलें । जोडावे ते भले हात पुढें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे फिके बोल माझे वारा । कराल दातारा होईल तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You know the past, the present, and the future, and the whole reckoning of accumulated deeds lies before you and behind. What offering can I now place at your feet? You alone know the right course, so act as you see fit, O God.

Nothing that I do on my own avails here; the only gain is to fold my hands before you. Says Tuka, my words are feeble as wind, but whatever you will do, O generous Lord, that alone shall come to pass.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You know the beginning, the present, and what is to come. The whole account of past deeds lies behind and before you. What can I now offer at your feet to set things right? You know the true course; do as you see fit, O God. What use here is anything I do on my own? The only good thing is to fold my hands before you. Tuka says: my words are feeble as wind. Whatever you choose to do, O generous Lord, that alone will happen.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays down all bargaining and hands the outcome wholly to God. Since God already knows past, present, and future, and holds the full reckoning of accumulated deeds, there is no offering the devotee could bring to balance the books or earn his way. His own efforts count for nothing here; the single thing that avails is to stand with folded hands in surrender. He measures his own words as weightless as wind against the will of the generous Lord, and rests in the certainty that whatever God decides is what will come to pass.

GATHA 1681 The Moral Ideal

Moral warning, you bear your own fault

मराठी मूळ

सुखें न मनी अवगुण । दुःख भोगी त्याचें कोण ॥1॥
हें कां ठायींचें न कळे । राती करा झांकुनि डोळे ॥ध्रु.॥
चालोनि आड वाटे । पायीं मोडविले कांटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोणा। बोल ठेवितो शाहाणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one happily ignores wrongdoing, who else will bear the resulting suffering? Why can you not see this plain truth? Close your eyes at night and walk the crooked path, and you will break your feet on thorns. Says Tuka, the one who thinks himself wise, whom does he blame then?

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you happily make light of your faults, who then bears the suffering they bring? Why can you not see this plain thing? Shut your eyes at night and walk the wrong path, and you drive thorns into your own feet. Tuka says: the man who thinks himself clever, whom does he have left to blame?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against the comfortable habit of excusing one's own wrongdoing. The pain that wrong conduct breeds does not vanish because you ignore it; it falls back on the very person who shrugged it off, and no one else carries it for him. He draws a homely picture: choosing to walk a crooked road in the dark, eyes deliberately shut, ends with thorns in your own feet. The closing barb is aimed at self-deception, not at any other person: when the so-called wise man suffers what he set up, he has no one but himself to accuse.

GATHA 1682 The Moral Ideal

Equal vision, poison and nectar alike

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी न देखों अवगुणां । पापी पवित्र शाहाणा ॥1॥
अवघीं रूपें तुझीं देवा । वंदूं भावें करूं सेवा ॥ध्रु.॥
मज मुक्ती सवें चाड । नेणें पाषाण धातु वाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घोटीं। विष अमृत तुजसाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not see faults in anyone, whether wrongdoer, saint, or scholar. All forms are yours, O God, and I bow to them with devotion and serve them all.

I care nothing for liberation; I do not distinguish stone from metal or rank. Says Tuka, I will swallow poison and nectar alike for your sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not look at anyone's faults, not the sinner, the pure, or the wise. All forms are yours, O God. I bow to them with love and serve them. I have no craving even for liberation. I do not tell stone from metal or rank. Tuka says: I will swallow poison and nectar alike, for your sake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a vision that has stopped sorting people into better and worse. He refuses to weigh anyone's faults, sinner or saint or scholar, because he sees every form as a form of God and bows to all of them in the same loving service. So complete is this seeing that he no longer even hankers after liberation, and makes no distinction between stone and precious metal or high and low. The final line names the cost he accepts: for God's sake he will take whatever comes, bitter or sweet, swallowing poison and nectar with the same surrendered evenness.

GATHA 1683 The Power of the Name

The Name, love over knowledge

मराठी मूळ

मज नाहीं तुझ्या ज्ञानाची ते चाड । घेतां वाटे गोड नाम तुझें ॥1॥
नेणतें लेंकरूं आवडीचें तान्हें । बोलतों वचनें आवडीनें ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्ती नेणें कांहीं वैराग्य तें नाहीं । घातला विठाई भार तुज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाचें निर्लज्ज होऊनि । नाहीं माझे मनीं दुजा भाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no craving for your esoteric knowledge; simply taking your name tastes sweet to me. I am an innocent child, a nursing infant, and I speak these words out of sheer love.

I know nothing of devotion or dispassion; I have placed the whole burden upon you, O Vithai. Says Tuka, I dance shamelessly, for there is no trace of duality in my mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no craving for your secret knowledge. Taking your name tastes sweet to me. I am an ignorant child, a nursing infant. I speak these words out of love. I know nothing of devotion. I have no dispassion. I have laid the whole burden on you, Vithai. Tuka says: I dance, shameless, and there is no second feeling in my mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the simple sweetness of the Name above any esoteric attainment. He refuses to claim knowledge, devotion, or detachment; he calls himself an infant who only babbles out of love. The point is that he hands the entire burden of his salvation to Vithai and keeps nothing for himself to manage. His shameless dancing names the stakes: when the mind holds no second feeling, no division between self and God, the only honest response left is open, undignified joy.

GATHA 1684 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the scraps of the saints

मराठी मूळ

काय माझी संत पाहाती जाणीव । सर्व माझा भावत्यांचे पायीं ॥1॥
कारण सरतें करा पांडुरंगीं । भूषणाची जगीं काय चाड ॥ध्रु.॥
बोबडा उत्तरीं ह्मणें हरिहरि । आणीक भीकारी नेणें दुजें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी विठ्ठलाचे दास । करितों मी आस उच्छिष्टाची॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should the saints scrutinize my learning? My entire devotion is at their feet. Let only that which avails with Panduranga be accomplished; what use is mere ornamental display in this world? With stammering lips I say Hari, Hari; this beggar knows no other word.

Says Tuka, you are all servants of Vitthal, and I long only for the scraps from your plate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why should the saints examine my learning? All my love is at their feet. Let only what counts with Panduranga be done. What use is show in this world? With stammering lips I say Hari, Hari. This beggar knows no other word. Tuka says: you are all servants of Vitthal. I long only for the scraps from your plate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks the saints not to weigh him by his learning, because his whole devotion is laid at their feet. He dismisses outward display as worthless; the only thing worth accomplishing is what carries weight with Panduranga. He confesses that he can barely speak, stammering one name, Hari, and knowing no other. Calling himself a beggar after the leftovers from the saints' plates, he names the posture he wants: to take the lowest place among Vitthal's servants and receive grace as a gift, not a wage.

GATHA 1685 The Nature of God

Adoration, the essence of all sweetness

मराठी मूळ

जीवाचें जीवन अमृताची तनु । ब्रह्मांड भूषणु नारायण ॥1॥
सुखाचा सांगात अंतकासी अंत । निजांचा निवांत नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
गोडाचें ही गोड हर्षाचें ही कोड । प्रीतीचा ही लाड नारायण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जें हें साराचें हें सार । माझा अंगीकार तेणें केला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana is the life of all life, whose body is made of nectar, the ornament of the entire universe. He is the companion of bliss, the end of Death itself, the deep repose of those who rest in the Self.

He is the sweetness within all sweetness, the delight within all delight, the tender affection within all love. Says Tuka, He is the very essence of all that is essential, and He has accepted me as His own.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana is the life of all life. His body is made of nectar. He is the ornament of the whole universe. He is the companion of bliss, the end of Death itself, the quiet rest of those who rest in the Self. He is the sweetness inside all that is sweet, the delight inside all delight, the tenderness inside all love. Tuka says: he is the essence of all that is essential, and he has taken me as his own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up names for Narayana that all point to the same thing: God is not one good thing among many but the inner core of every good thing. Whatever is alive draws its life from him; whatever is sweet is sweet because of him. He even names God the end of Death and the deep stillness of those who rest in the Self, so the praise reaches past pleasure into liberation. The poem turns at the close: this essence of all essences is not distant but has accepted Tukaram personally, so the cosmic praise lands as intimate belonging.

GATHA 1686 Faith and Trust

Faith, the child of God fears nothing

मराठी मूळ

आतां मी सर्वथा नव्हें गा दुर्बळ । यातिहीनकुळ दैन्यवाणा ॥1॥
माय रखुमाई पांडुरंग पिता । शुद्ध उभयतां पक्ष दोन्ही ॥ध्रु.॥
बापुडा मी नव्हें दुर्बळ ठेंगणा । पांगिला हा कोणा आणिकांसी ॥2॥
दृष्ट नव्हों आह्मी अभागी अनाथ । आमुचा समर्थ कैवारी हा ॥3॥
संवसार आह्मां सरला सकळ । लपोनियां काळ ठेला धाकें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों निर्भर मानसीं । जोडलिया रासी सुखाचिया ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am no longer in any way weak, of low station, or forlorn. Mother Rakhumai and Father Panduranga stand on both sides, and both lineages are pure.

I am not helpless, feeble, or small; who else could I be pawned off to? I am not wicked, unlucky, or orphaned, for my champion and protector is almighty. The whole of worldly existence has been settled for me, and even Death now hides in fear.

Says Tuka, my mind is completely at ease, for I have amassed a great treasure of joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I am in no way weak, low-born, or wretched. Mother Rakhumai and Father Panduranga stand on both sides of me, and both lineages are pure. I am not helpless, feeble, or small. To whom could I be handed over? I am not wicked, unlucky, or orphaned. My champion and protector is almighty. The whole of worldly life is settled for me now. Even Death hides in fear. Tuka says: my mind is wholly at ease, for I have gathered a great heap of joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws off every name shame would put on him: weak, low-born, orphaned, unlucky. His ground for this is not his own merit but his parentage; Rakhumai is his mother and Panduranga his father, so both sides of his family are pure and almighty. Because such a protector stands over him, the whole anxious account of worldly existence is closed, and even Death, the last terror, hides from him. The poem ends in settled ease: having such a refuge is itself a treasure of joy, so there is nothing left to fear and nothing left to prove.

GATHA 1687 Renunciation

Renunciation, inward not outward

मराठी मूळ

केलें नाहीं मनीं तया घडे त्याग । उबगें उद्वेग नाहीं चित्तीं ॥1॥
देव चि हा जाणे अंतरींचा भाव । मिथ्या तो उपाव बाहए रंग ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यागिल्याचें ध्यान राहिलें अंतरीं । अवघी ते परी विटंबना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आपआपण्यां विचारा । कोण हा दुसरा सांगे तुह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

True renunciation cannot happen until it arises within the mind; it holds no weariness or revulsion of spirit. God alone knows the inner disposition; outward display is a false remedy.

If what has been renounced still occupies one's thoughts, then the whole show is only self-torment. Says Tuka, reflect upon this for yourself; who else is there to tell you?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Renunciation does not happen until it happens in the mind. Then there is no weariness, no disgust in the heart. God alone knows the feeling within. Outward show is a false cure. If what you gave up still lives in your thoughts, the whole thing is only self-torment. Tuka says: think this over for yourself. Who else is there to tell you?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists that giving up things is worthless unless the mind itself has let go. Real renunciation leaves no inner restlessness behind; if the heart still aches for what the hands released, the renunciation is a performance and only tortures the person. He points to the one witness who cannot be fooled: God, who sees the inner state, not the outward gesture. The close throws the test back on the listener, since no outside judge can settle whether your detachment is real; only honest self-examination can.

GATHA 1688 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, pride and the Name

मराठी मूळ

हित व्हावें तरी दंभ दुरी ठेवा । चित्त शुद्ध सेवा देवाची हे ॥1॥
आवडी विठ्ठल गाईजे एकांतीं । अलभ्य ते येती लाभ घरा ॥ध्रु.॥
आणीकां अंतरीं निदावी वसति । करावी हे शांती वासनेची ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you desire your own welfare, keep pride at a distance and let your service to God be offered with a pure chitta. Sing of Vitthal with love in solitude, and rare blessings will come to your very door.

Let desires find no dwelling within you; make peace with your cravings and still them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you want your own good, keep pride far away. Serve God with a pure heart. Sing of Vitthal with love, alone, and rare gains will come to your door. Let desires find no place to live in you. Make peace with your cravings and still them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives a plain prescription for genuine welfare: drop pride, purify the heart, and serve God without display. He promises that loving, solitary remembrance of Vitthal draws blessings that cannot be earned by effort, gifts that arrive at the door unbidden. The other half of the work is inward housekeeping, refusing desires a place to settle and quieting the cravings that keep the mind in motion. The two move together: the heart emptied of pride and craving is the heart that can sing and receive.

GATHA 1689 The Saints

The saints, love of Hari is the measure

मराठी मूळ

हो कां नर अथवा नारी । ज्यांचा आवडता हरि ॥1॥
ते मज विठोबासमान । नमूं आवडी ते जन ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याचें अंतर निर्मळ । त्याचें सबाहए कोमळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । जिव्हें प्रेम वोसंडावें ॥3॥
हरिची हरिकथा नावडे जया । अधम ह्मणतां तया वेळ लागे ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whether man or woman, whoever holds Hari as their beloved is equal to Vithoba in my eyes, and I bow to such people with delight. One whose inner being is pure will appear gentle in every outward way.

Says Tuka, let love overflow from the depths of your being. As for those who have no taste for Hari or His stories, it takes no time at all to call them fallen.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whether man or woman, whoever holds Hari dear is equal to Vithoba in my eyes, and I bow to such people with love. One whose inner being is clean is gentle in every outward way. Tuka says: with true feeling, let love overflow from your tongue. As for one who has no taste for Hari and his stories, it takes no time at all to call him fallen.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes love of Hari, not gender or station, the only thing that ranks a person; whoever loves Hari he honors as he would honor God himself. He reads the inside from the outside: a pure heart shows as gentleness in all dealings, so character is the visible sign of devotion. He calls for love to overflow openly through speech, devotion that does not stay hidden. The sharp closing line is aimed at a pattern, not a person: indifference to Hari and his stories is the one thing he will name fallen, a warning to examine where your own taste lies.

GATHA 1690 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, do not waste this birth

मराठी मूळ

मनुष्यदेहीं तया नाट लागलें । अघोर साधिलें कुंभपाक ॥1॥
कासया जन्मा आला तो पाषाण । जंत कां होऊन पडिला नाहीं।
उपजे मरोनि वेळोवेळां भांड । परिलाज लंड न धरी कांहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसियाची माता कासया प्रसवली । वर नाहीं घातली मुखावरी।
देवधर्मांविण तो हा चांडाळ नर । न साहे भूमि भार क्षणभरी ॥2॥
राम ह्मणतां तुझें काय वेचेल । कां हित आपुलें न विचारिसी ।
जन्मोजन्मींचा होईल नरकीं । तुका ह्मणे चुकी जरी यासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One born in a human body who wastes it has only earned the horrors of hell. Why was such a person born at all? Better to have been a worm.

He dies and is born again, again and again like an actor on a stage, shameless and without remorse. Why did his mother give birth to him, only to leave his face uncovered in disgrace? Without devotion to God, such a man is cast out from grace; the earth cannot bear his weight for even a moment.

What will it cost you to say the name of Rama? Why do you not consider your own good? Says Tuka, if one misses this chance, one falls into hell birth after birth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who wastes the human body has only earned the horrors of hell. Why was such a stone-hearted one even born? Better that he had been born a worm. He is born and dies, again and again, like an actor on a stage, shameless, holding no shame at all. Why did his mother give birth to him, only to leave his face uncovered in disgrace? Without devotion and dharma this man is an outcaste; the earth cannot bear his weight for a moment. What does it cost you to say Rama? Why do you not think of your own good? Tuka says: if you miss this chance, you fall into hell birth after birth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram delivers a hard warning against squandering a human birth, which he treats as the one rare opening to turn toward God. The harsh images, the stone, the worm, the shameless actor cycling through births, are pointed at the pattern of a life lived without devotion or dharma, not at any single soul to be despised. He drives the urgency home with a near-free remedy: saying the name of Rama costs nothing, so refusing it is pure self-neglect. The stakes he names are large, repeated births in hell, which is why he ends by begging the listener to consider his own good while the chance is open.

GATHA 1691 Faith and Trust

Faith, God keeps his pledge

मराठी मूळ

उपेक्षला येणें कोणी शरणागत । ऐसी नाहीं मात आईकली ॥1॥
आतां काय ब्रीद सांडील आपुलें । ठायींचें धरिलें जाणोनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
माझ्या दोषासाटीं होइल पाठमोरा । ऐसा कोण पुरा भोग बळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रूप आमुच्या कैवारें । धरिलें गोजिरें चतुर्भुज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have never heard of anyone who sought His refuge being forsaken. Will He now abandon His own ancient pledge, which He holds by nature? Will He turn away from me because of my faults? No sin is strong enough to overpower Him.

Says Tuka, He took on that beautiful four-armed form for our sake alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have never heard of anyone who took his refuge being forsaken. Will he now throw away his own ancient vow, which he holds by his very nature? Will he turn his back on me because of my faults? What sin is strong enough to overpower him? Tuka says: for our sake alone he took on that lovely four-armed form.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram steadies himself against the fear that his sins will disqualify him by appealing to God's own character. He has never heard of a single refuge-seeker being abandoned, so the pattern of God's mercy is unbroken. God's vow to protect those who surrender belongs to his nature, not to the worthiness of the one who comes, and no amount of sin is powerful enough to override it. The closing image grounds the whole confidence: God took on his beautiful form for the sake of devotees, which means turning his back on a sinner would betray the very reason he appears.

GATHA 1692 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the mother who feeds

मराठी मूळ

आवडीसारिखें संपादिलें सोंग । अनंत हें मग जालें नाम ॥1॥
कळे ऐशा वाटा रचिल्या सुलभा । दुर्गम या नभाचा ही साक्षी ॥ध्रु.॥
हातें जेवी एक मुखीं मागे घांस । माउली जयास तैसी बाळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें ध्यान विटेंवरी । तैसी च गोजिरी दिसे मूतिन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He fashioned His appearance to suit the longing of His devotees, and thus His names became infinite. He laid out paths so simple that even the witness of the boundless sky could find the way.

Like a mother who feeds her child with her own hands, placing each morsel in its mouth, so does He nourish us. Says Tuka, my meditation rests upon the figure standing on the brick, and that beautiful form is exactly as I see it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He shaped his form to fit the longing of his devotees, and so his names became endless. He laid out paths so easy that even the witness of the boundless sky could find the way. Like a mother who feeds her child by hand, putting each morsel in its mouth, so he feeds us. Tuka says: my meditation rests on the figure on the brick, and that lovely form is just as I see it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a God who bends to the devotee rather than standing aloof, taking whatever form love longs for and gathering countless names in the process. He says God made the way to himself so simple that even the loftiest, the witnessing consciousness behind the vast sky, walks it the same easy path. The mother image carries the heart of it: God does not merely permit nourishment but spoons it into the child's mouth, doing for us what we cannot do for ourselves. For Tukaram this tender accessibility is concrete, fixed on the figure of Vitthal standing on the brick at Pandhari, exactly as he beholds it in meditation.

GATHA 1693 The Power of the Name

The Name, the feast that never sates

मराठी मूळ

धन्य मी मानीन आपुलें संचित । राहिलीसे प्रीत तुझे नामीं ॥1॥
धन्य जालों आतां यासि संदेह नाहीं । न पडों या वाहीं काळा हातीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ब्रह्मरस करुं भोजन पंगती । संतांचे संगती सर्वकाळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोट धालें चि न धाये । खादलें चि खायें आवडीनें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I consider my destiny blessed, for love of your name has stayed with me. I am truly fortunate now, of this there is no doubt, and I shall not fall into the hands of Death.

In the company of saints I will feast on the nectar of Brahman at all times. Says Tuka, my belly is full and yet never sated; I eat and eat again with undiminished relish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I count my destiny blessed, for love of your name has stayed with me. I am fortunate now, of this there is no doubt. I will not fall into the hands of Death. In the company of saints I will feast on the nectar of Brahman at all times. Tuka says: my belly is full and yet never full; I eat and eat again with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads his whole life as fortunate for one reason: love of the Name has taken root and stayed. From that he draws sure confidence that he is now beyond the reach of Death, the recurring fear these poems answer. He places the source of this in the company of saints, where remembrance of God is a constant feast on the nectar of Brahman. The closing paradox names the nature of that joy: spiritual delight is not like ordinary food that ends in fullness; the soul is satisfied and still hungry, eating again and again with undiminished relish.

GATHA 1694 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, love that never runs dry

मराठी मूळ

आवडी न पुरे सेवितां न सरे । पडियेली धुरेसवें गांठी ॥1॥
न पुरे हा जन्म हें सुख सांटितां । पुढती ही आतां हें चि मागों ॥ध्रु.॥
मारगाची चिंता पालखी बैसतां । नाहीं उसंतितां कोसपेणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी विठ्ठल माउली । जाणे ते लागली भूक तान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The more I taste this love, the more it grows; it never runs dry, for it is knotted to the very source. This one life is not enough to store all this joy, and in future births I will ask for the same.

When one rides in a palanquin, the worry of the road vanishes; there is no fatigue even over great distances. Says Tuka, my Vitthal is my mother, and she knows my every hunger and thirst.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The more I taste this love, the more it grows. It never runs out, for it is knotted to the very source. This one life is not enough to store this joy; in lives to come I will ask for the same again. When you ride in a palanquin, the worry of the road is gone; there is no weariness even over a long way. Tuka says: my Vitthal is my mother, and she knows the hunger and thirst that have come on me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a love that defies the usual law of pleasure, where tasting diminishes the supply; here tasting only deepens it, because it is tied directly to its inexhaustible source. So fully does this joy possess him that one lifetime cannot contain it, and he will gladly choose the same love in every birth to come. The palanquin image names the ease of the devotee's path: carried by God, he feels none of the strain of the road. The poem closes in the mother bond, where Vitthal as mother already knows his hunger and thirst, so he need not even ask to be fed.

GATHA 1695 Ecstasy and Joy

Stillness, the longing fulfilled

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं त्रिभुवनीं सुख या समान । ह्मणऊनि मन िस्थरावलें ॥1॥
धरियेलीं जीवीं पाउलें कोमळीं । केली एकावळी नाममाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
शीतळ होऊनियां पावलों विश्रांती । न साहे पुढती घाली चित्ता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाले सकळ सोहळे । पुरविले डोहळे पांडुरंगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no happiness in all three worlds equal to this, and so my mind has become still. I have clasped those tender feet within my chitta and strung a garland of the holy name.

Having grown cool and peaceful, I have found true rest, and the mind no longer throws itself into agitation. Says Tuka, all celebrations have come to completion, for Panduranga has fulfilled every longing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In all three worlds there is no happiness like this. So my mind has grown still. I have held those tender feet within me. I have strung the holy name into a garland. I have grown cool. I have come to rest. The mind no longer throws itself into trouble. Tuka says: every celebration is complete. Panduranga has filled every longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names what the still mind has found: a happiness no plane of being can match, so it stops searching. The image is concrete. He clasps Panduranga's feet inside himself and strings the divine name as a garland repeated again and again. The result is coolness and rest, an end to the mind hurling itself back into agitation. He closes by saying the festival is over not because it failed but because it is fulfilled; God has answered every craving, so there is nothing left to want.

GATHA 1696 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the prattling child

मराठी मूळ

मायबापापुढें लाटिकें लेंकरुं । तैसे बोल करुं कवतुकें ॥1॥
कृपावंता घालीं प्रेमपान्हारस । वोळली वोरसे पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं धीर खुंटी जवळी हुंबरे । ठायीं च पाखर कविळते ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज होऊं नेदी सीण । कळों नेदी भिन्न आहे ऐसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a prattling child before its parents, I speak these playful, innocent words. O compassionate one, pour out the milk of your love; Panduranga overflows with tender affection.

The child has no patience and cries when the mother is near, fluttering and nestling close. Says Tuka, He does not let me grow weary, nor does He let me feel that we are ever apart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like a small child babbling before its mother and father, I say these playful words. O compassionate one, pour out the milk of your love. Panduranga overflows with tenderness. The child has no patience; it cries with the mother right there, fluttering and nestling close. Tuka says: He does not let me grow weary. He does not let me feel that we are ever apart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts the bond with God as the bond of a baby and its parents, and lets his words be that childish. He asks the compassionate one to pour out love like a mother's milk, and says Panduranga is already brimming over with it. The child's impatience is the point: it cries and clings even with the mother present, because closeness is its whole need. The poem ends in reassurance. God will not let the devotee tire out, and will not let him feel any gap between them, so the crying is answered before it is finished.

GATHA 1697 The Nature of God

God's nearness, the driven stake

मराठी मूळ

आठवों नेंदी आवडी आणीक । भरूनियां लोक तिन्ही राहे ॥1॥
मन धांवे तेथें तिचें चि दुभतें । संपूर्ण आइतें सर्वकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगे वोळावीं इंद्रियें धांवतां । ठाव नाहीं रिता उरों दिला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे समपाउलाचा खुंट । केला बळकट हालों नेदी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His love does not allow any other longing to arise; He fills all three worlds and remains present there. Wherever the mind runs, His nourishment is already waiting, complete and ready at all times.

There is no need to restrain the senses from wandering, for He has left no empty space anywhere. Says Tuka, He has driven the stake of His presence so firmly at my side that nothing can budge it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His love lets no other longing rise in me. He fills all three worlds and stays. Wherever the mind runs, His nourishment is already there, whole and ready at every hour. I need not rein in the senses as they wander, for He has left no empty place anywhere. Tuka says: He has driven the stake of His level feet firmly at my side. He holds it fast. He lets nothing move it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a presence so total that there is nowhere else to go. God's love crowds out every other desire and fills the three worlds, so wherever the restless mind runs it lands again in Him, where its food is already waiting. Because of this, the usual spiritual labor of restraining the senses becomes unnecessary; there is no vacant spot for them to escape into. The closing image is a tent peg or post driven hard into the ground. God has planted His own feet beside the devotee and fixed them so firmly that nothing can pull them loose.

GATHA 1698 The Nature of God

Surrender, God carries the burden

मराठी मूळ

उत्तम घालावें आमुचिये मुखीं । निवारावें दुःखी होऊनि तें ॥1॥
न बैसे न वजे जवळूनि दुरी । मागें पुढें वारी घातपात ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं शंका असो भलतिये ठायीं । मावळलें पाहीं द्वैताद्वैत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भार घेतला विठ्ठलें । अंतरीं भरलें बाहए रूप ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He places what is best into our mouths and removes suffering by absorbing it Himself. He does not sit idle, nor does He move far away; He guards us from harm on every side.

There is no anxiety wherever we may be, for the distinction of duality and non-duality has dissolved. Says Tuka, Vitthal has taken up my burden; His form fills both the inside and the outside.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He puts what is best into our mouths. He takes our suffering into Himself and removes it. He does not sit apart. He does not go far away. He turns aside the blows that come from front and behind. There is no fear in any place at all. The split of duality and non-duality has set like a sun and gone. Tuka says: Vitthal has taken up my load. His form fills me within and surrounds me without.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God as one who actively feeds and shields the devotee, even absorbing the suffering rather than merely watching it. God neither idles nor withdraws; He stays close enough to deflect harm coming from every direction. With that nearness, fear dissolves wherever the devotee goes, and even the philosophical quarrel between duality and non-duality fades like a setting sun, because it no longer matters when God is this present. The poem ends with Vitthal shouldering the whole burden, His form so complete that it fills the devotee inside and encloses him outside at once.

GATHA 1699 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, refusing even liberation

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां अळंकार मुद्रांचे शृंगार । तुळसीचे हार वाहों कंठीं ॥1॥
लाडिके डिंगर पंढरिरायाचे । निरंतर वाचे नामघोष ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मां आणिकांची चाड चि नाहीं । सर्व सुखें पायीं विठोबाच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी नेघों या मुक्ती । एकविण चित्तीं दुजें नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our ornaments are the sacred marks, our adornment is the tulsi garland worn around the neck. We are the beloved children of the Lord of Pandhari, and the name resounds constantly on our lips.

We have no desire for anything else, for all happiness rests at the feet of Vithoba. Says Tuka, we do not even seek liberation, for nothing besides Him exists in our chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our ornaments are the sacred marks. Our finery is the tulsi garland worn at the throat. We are the petted children of the Lord of Pandhari. The shout of His name is always on our tongues. We have no need of anything else. All happiness rests at Vithoba's feet. Tuka says: we will not take even liberation. In our heart there is nothing second to the One.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lists the devotee's wealth and finds it is all devotion: the marks of a Vaishnava and a tulsi garland are the only jewels, and ceaseless chanting of the name is the only voice. As the cherished children of the Lord of Pandhari, they want nothing more, because every happiness already sits at Vithoba's feet. The sharp claim comes last and is left undimmed. They refuse even mukti, the release that most seekers crave, because for them there is no second thing beside the One. Wanting liberation would still be wanting something other than God.

GATHA 1700 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage, the call to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

चला पंढरीसी जाऊं । रखुमादेवीवरा पाहूं ॥1॥
डोळे निवतील कान । मना तेथें समाधान ॥ध्रु.॥
संतां महंतां होतील भेटी । आनंदें नाचों वाळवंटीं ॥2॥
तें तीर्थांचे माहेर । सर्वसुखाचें भांडार ॥3॥
जन्म नाहीं रे आणीक । तुका ह्मणे माझी भाक ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, let us go to Pandhari and behold the Lord of Rakhumadevi. Our eyes will be refreshed, our ears will be satisfied, and the mind will find its peace there.

We will meet the saints and great souls and dance with joy on the sands of the river. That place is the home of all pilgrimage, the storehouse of every happiness.

Says Tuka, I give you my word: there will be no further birth after this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, let us go to Pandhari. Let us look on the Lord of Rakhumadevi. The eyes will be cooled, the ears will be filled, and there the mind will find its peace. We will meet the saints and the great souls. We will dance with joy on the river sands. That place is the mother-home of all holy fords. It is the storehouse of every happiness. Tuka says: I give you my word. There is no more birth after this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls his hearers on pilgrimage to Pandharpur to see Vitthal, the Lord of Rakhumai. He promises the senses their satisfaction there, eyes and ears at rest, and the mind brought to peace. The joy is communal: meeting saints and dancing on the sandy riverbank. He raises Pandhari above all other sacred sites, calling it their very source, the home where pilgrimage itself belongs, and the treasury of all happiness. The poem ends with a vow. He stakes his own word that this darshan ends the cycle of rebirth; there will be no birth after this one.

GATHA 1701 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, the soul robbed in its sleep

मराठी मूळ

पैल घरीं जाली चोरी । देहा करीं बोंब ॥1॥
हाबा हाबा करिसी काये । फिराऊनि नेटएां वायें ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडुनियां शुद्धी। निजलासी गेली बुद्धी ॥2॥
चोरीं तुझा काढला बुर । वेगळें भावा घातलें दूर ॥3॥
भलतियासी देसी वाव । लाहेसि तूं एवढा ठाव ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अझुनि तरी । उरलें तें जतन करीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A robbery has taken place in another man's house, yet it is your own body that raises the alarm. What good is all your shouting when it only exhausts you to no purpose? You fell asleep, abandoned awareness, and lost all good sense.

Thieves have emptied your own treasury and cast your brother far away. You gave free rein to every passerby and thought yourself a man of great stature.

Says Tuka, at least now, guard whatever still remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A robbery happened in another man's house, yet your own body raises the alarm. What use is all your crying out? It only wears you down for nothing. You let go of your senses. You fell asleep. Your good sense slipped away. Thieves have emptied your treasury and thrown your brother far off. You gave way to every passerby, and you thought yourself a man of great standing. Tuka says: at least now, guard what is still left.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells a parable of misplaced alarm. A man shouts about a theft next door while his own house is being stripped, an image for the soul that frets over others' affairs while its own inner wealth is stolen. The robbery happens precisely because he slept, abandoning awareness and losing discernment. The thieves are the passions he let walk in freely, even as his self-conceit told him he was someone important. The point turns on self-examination, not contempt: the warning is to wake up to one's own losses. Tukaram's mercy is in the last line, urging him to protect whatever remains before that is gone too.

GATHA 1702 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, deceived and still asleep

मराठी मूळ

किती वेळा खादला दगा । अझून कां जागसी ना ॥1॥
लाज नाहीं हिंडतां गांवें । दुःख नवें नित्य नित्य ॥ध्रु.॥
सवें चोरा हातीं फांसे । देखतां कैसे न देखसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांडिती वाट । तळपट करावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How many times have you been deceived, and yet you still refuse to wake up? Have you no shame as you wander from village to village, meeting fresh misery every single day? The thieves walk right beside you with their snares in hand; how can you see and yet not see? Says Tuka, they are clearing the path only to bring about your ruin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How many times have you been cheated? And still you will not wake. Have you no shame, wandering from village to village, meeting fresh misery every single day? The thieves walk right beside you with their nooses in hand. How can you see them and still not see? Tuka says: they are clearing the road only to bring you to ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the same warning harder, addressed to a self that keeps getting fooled and keeps going back to sleep. The wandering from village to village pictures a life of restless seeking that earns nothing but new sorrow each day. The danger walks alongside, snares ready, in plain view; the failure is not lack of sight but refusal to see what is in front of one. The closing line strips the comfort: the smooth path being opened ahead is not help but a trap laid for destruction. The sharpness is aimed at the pattern of self-deception, calling the listener to honest waking.

GATHA 1703 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, trade that loses the capital

मराठी मूळ

मुदलामध्यें पडे तोटा । ऐसा खोटा उदीम ॥1॥
आणिकांची कां लाज नाहीं । आळसा जिहीं तजिलें ॥ध्रु.॥
एके सांते सरिखीं वित्तें । हानि हित वेगळालीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हित धरा । नव्हे पुरा गांवढाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the principal itself is being lost, such a trade is surely worthless. Are you not ashamed before those who have given up laziness? At the same fair the goods are alike, yet gain and loss fall to different people.

Says Tuka, choose what is truly beneficial, and do not remain a simpleton.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you lose the principal itself, that trade is a bad one. Are you not ashamed before those who have thrown off their laziness? At the same fair the goods are the same, yet loss falls to one and gain to another. Tuka says: hold to what truly helps you. Do not stay a country fool.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the language of the marketplace. A trade that eats into your starting capital, your very life, is plainly a losing one, so the soul that spends its days and gains nothing should be ashamed beside those who have shaken off sloth and made something of the same chance. His sharp observation is that the fair offers everyone identical goods; the same human birth and the same Name are available to all, yet one walks away enriched and another ruined, by their own diligence or neglect. The closing call is practical: choose what genuinely profits the soul, and stop being a simpleton who cannot tell gain from loss.

GATHA 1704 Appeals and Exhortations

Courage, deliver the message plainly

मराठी मूळ

निरोप सांगतां । न धरीं भय न करीं चिंता ॥1॥
असो ज्याचें त्याचे त्याचे माथां । आपण करावी ते कथा ॥ध्रु.॥
उतरावा भार । किंवा न व्हावें सादर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धाक । तया इह ना परलोक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When delivering a message, do not be afraid and do not worry. Let each person's burden rest upon their own head; you simply speak the truth.

Either unload the burden or do not bother showing up at all. Says Tuka, the one who is ruled by fear has neither this world nor the next.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you carry a message, hold no fear and feel no worry. Let what is each man's lie on his own head. You only tell the truth. Either set the load down, or do not come forward at all. Tuka says: the one ruled by fear has neither this world nor the next.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to the duty of the one who must deliver God's word, or any hard truth. The messenger is told to drop fear and anxiety, because each person carries their own responsibility on their own head; the speaker's task is only to say what is true. He demands wholeness: either fully unload the burden you were given to carry, or do not step up to the task in the first place; half-measures are useless. The closing line names the stakes. Whoever lets fear govern him loses on both sides, gaining neither this world nor the next, so timidity in speaking the truth is itself a kind of ruin.

GATHA 1705 Faith and Trust

Faith, courage and God's help

मराठी मूळ

शूरत्वासी मोल । नये कामा फिके बोल ॥1॥
केला न संडी कैवाड । जीवेंसाटीं तों हे होड ॥ध्रु.॥
धीर तो कारण । साहए होतो नारायण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हरि । दासां रिक्षतो निर्धारीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Valor has a price that feeble words cannot pay. The true warrior never abandons his cause; he stakes his very life upon it.

Courage is the key, and Narayana Himself stands at the side of the brave. Says Tuka, Hari most surely protects His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Valor has a price that weak words cannot pay. The true warrior never lets go of his cause. He stakes his very life on it. Courage is the thing that matters. Narayana Himself comes to his side. Tuka says: Hari surely protects His servants.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram likens the devotee's path to a warrior's. Bravery cannot be bought with feeble talk; it costs something real. The true fighter never abandons the cause he has taken up, wagering his own life on it, and that steadiness, not cleverness, is what counts. The promise is that such courage is met from above: Narayana Himself stands beside the one who dares. The poem closes in plain assurance, that Hari most certainly guards those who serve Him, so the risk the devotee takes is never taken alone.

GATHA 1706 Faith and Trust

Faith, God shields His servants

मराठी मूळ

हरिच्या दासां भये । ऐसें बोलों तें ही नये ॥1॥
राहोनियां आड । उभा देव पुरवी कोड ॥ध्रु.॥
हरिच्या दासां चिंता। अघटित हे वार्ता ॥2॥
खावे ल्यावें द्यावें । तुका ह्मणे पुरवावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To say that the devotees of Hari know fear is simply not proper. God stands hidden behind them and fulfills their every wish.

To say that the devotees of Hari know anxiety is an outlandish tale. Says Tuka, whatever they need to eat, wear, or give away is always provided.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To say the servants of Hari feel fear is wrong even to speak. God stands hidden behind them and grants their every wish. To say the servants of Hari feel anxiety is an absurd tale. Tuka says: whatever they must eat, wear, or give away, He provides it all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the security of God's devotees as something so sure that the opposite should not even be uttered. To suppose that those who serve Hari live in fear is improper, because God Himself stands behind them, unseen, fulfilling their desires. To suppose they carry anxiety is simply an impossible story. The closing line makes the protection concrete and daily: food to eat, clothes to wear, and even the means to give to others are all supplied by Him. The devotee's whole need, material as well as spiritual, is God's own responsibility.

GATHA 1707 The Saints

Praise of the saints, joy where they dwell

मराठी मूळ

दासां सर्व काळ । तेथें सुखाचे कल्लोळ ॥1॥
जेथें वसती हरिदास । पुण्य पिके पापा नास ॥ध्रु.॥
फिरे सुदर्शन । घेऊनियां नारायण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घरीं । होय ह्मणियारा कामारी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever devotees dwell, waves of joy are present at all times. In the place where the servants of Hari reside, merit flourishes and sin is destroyed.

Narayana Himself patrols that place, Sudarshana discus in hand. Says Tuka, in that household He becomes a willing servant, saying yes to every need.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where the servants of God live, there is joy at every hour. Where the servants of Hari stay, merit ripens and sin is destroyed. Narayana himself goes around that place, the Sudarshana discus in his hand. Tuka says: in that house he becomes a willing servant, saying yes to every need.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is telling us what a place is worth by who lives in it. Where God's devotees dwell, the air itself is good fortune: merit grows like a crop and sin falls away. He goes further and says Narayana patrols that house himself, weapon in hand, guarding it. And then the boldest stroke: in the home of his servants, the Lord drops the role of master and becomes the servant, ready to do whatever they need. The greatness of the saints is measured by how close it brings God, and how low God will stoop for them.

GATHA 1708 Ecstasy and Joy

Belonging, the family of God

मराठी मूळ

आमचा स्वदेश । भुवनत्रयामध्यें वास ॥1॥
मायबापाचीं लाडकीं । कळों आलें हें लौकिकीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं निपराद । कोणां आह्मांमध्यें भेद ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मान । अवघें आमचें हें धन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our homeland extends through all three worlds. We are the darlings of our divine parents, and this has become known far and wide.

There is no enmity between us and anyone, no division whatsoever. Says Tuka, all honor and all wealth are ours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our homeland is a dwelling spread through all three worlds. We are the darlings of our mother and father; this has become known among people. There is no quarrel, no division between any of us. Tuka says: honor and all of it, this is our wealth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming where the devotee truly belongs. His home is not one village but all three worlds, because his parents are God, and the children of God are loved everywhere. From that belonging follows a way of living: no enmity, no division between him and anyone else. He ends by redefining wealth itself: honor and the whole of it is already his, not as property he holds, but as the inheritance of a child who knows whose he is.

GATHA 1709 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the wicked cannot taste

मराठी मूळ

काय ढोरापुढें घालूनि मिष्टान्न । खरा विलेपन चंदनाचें ॥1॥
नको नको देवा खळाची संगति । रस ज्या पंगती नाहीं कथे ॥ध्रु.॥
काय सेज बाज माकडा विलास । अळंकारा नास करुनी टाकी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय पाजूनि नवनीत । सर्पा विष थीत अमृताचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why set fine delicacies before a donkey or smear sandalwood paste on an ass? God, spare me the company of the wicked, for they have no taste for the nectar of sacred stories. What use is a luxurious bed to a monkey? It will only destroy the ornaments.

Says Tuka, even if you feed a serpent butter and cream, its venom remains the same.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What good is it to set fine food before cattle, or to smear sandal paste on a donkey? No, God, do not give me the company of the wicked; they find no relish at the table where holy stories are told. What good is a soft bed and its comforts to a monkey? It only ruins the ornaments. Tuka says: what good is it to feed a snake butter and cream? Even given nectar, its poison stays poison.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking to be spared the company of those who cannot receive what is being offered, and he says it in a string of plain images. Delicacies before cattle, sandal paste on a donkey, a fine bed for a monkey, cream for a snake: in each case the good thing is wasted because the receiver has no taste for it. He turns this on the wicked who sit through holy stories and feel nothing, and on the snake that drinks cream yet keeps its venom. The point is not contempt for any person but a warning about a pattern: where the appetite for the sacred is missing, even the highest gift is squandered, so guard your own hunger for it.

GATHA 1710 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the secret treasure of love

मराठी मूळ

आनंदें एकांतीं प्रेमें वोसंडत । घेऊं अगणित प्रेमसुख ॥1॥
गोप्य धन वारा लागों यास । पाहों नेदूं वास दुर्जनासी ॥ध्रु.॥
झणी दृिष्ट लागे आवडीच्या रसा । सेवूं जिरे तैसा आपणासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें बहु सकुमार । न साहावे भार वचनाचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In joyful solitude, overflowing with love, let us drink this boundless nectar of devotion. This secret treasure must be shielded from the wind; we must not let the wicked catch even its scent.

Beware lest the evil eye fall upon this beloved sweetness; let us absorb it quietly within ourselves. Says Tuka, this love is exceedingly delicate and cannot bear even the weight of words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In joyful solitude, overflowing with love, let us take this measureless sweetness of love. It is a hidden treasure; let no wind touch it. Let us not let the wicked even catch its scent. Beware the evil eye on this beloved sweetness; let us drink it quietly into ourselves, so it sinks in. Tuka says: this is very tender. It cannot bear even the weight of words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the love of God as something so delicate it must be hidden to survive. He wants it tasted in solitude, overflowing and without measure, and then guarded like a buried treasure that even a breath of wind could spoil. The wicked must not be allowed near it, not even to smell it, and the evil eye must not fall on it. Most tellingly, he says this love cannot bear even the weight of words: to speak it too freely is to coarsen it. So the devotee drinks it quietly inward, letting it settle, rather than displaying it.

GATHA 1711 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, choosing form over liberation

मराठी मूळ

मोक्षपदें तुच्छ केलीं याकारणें । आह्मां जन्म घेणें युगायुगीं ॥1॥
विटे ऐसें सुख नव्हे भक्तिरस । पुडतीपुडती आस सेवावें हें ॥ध्रु.॥
देवा हातीं रूप धरविला आकार । नेदूं निराकार होऊं त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त निवांत राहिलें । ध्याई तीं पाउलें विटेवरि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have made liberation itself seem trifling, for we wish to be born age after age. No bliss of formless dissolution can match the sweetness of the brick where He stands; this nectar must be tasted again and again.

We have compelled God to hold a form with shape and features, and we will not let Him become formless. Says Tuka, my mind rests in perfect stillness, meditating on those feet upon the brick.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have made the stages of liberation seem worthless, and for this reason: we want to be born age after age. No bliss can match the sweetness of the brick where he stands; this nectar must be tasted again and again. We have made God hold a form with shape; we will not let him become formless. Tuka says: my mind has come to rest, still, meditating on those feet upon the brick.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing liberation on purpose, and saying why. Most seekers want release from rebirth; he wants the opposite, to be born again and again, because each birth means more of the sweetness of Vitthal standing on the brick at Pandhari. He calls the formless bliss less than that nectar, and insists on keeping God in form: he will not let the Lord dissolve into the formless. The poem ends in stillness, his mind at rest on those feet, which is the one thing he wants from any birth.

GATHA 1712 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, stop the chatter and listen

मराठी मूळ

नको बोलों भांडा । खीळ घालुन बैस तोंडा ॥1॥
ऐक विठोबाचे गुण । करीं सादर श्रवण ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमसुखा आड । काय वाजातें चाभाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हिता । कां रे नागवसी थीता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Stop your bickering and put a lock on your mouth. Listen to the virtues of Vithoba; lend your ears with reverence.

Why do you beat your chatterbox tongue against the bliss of love? Says Tuka, why do you cheat yourself out of your own certain welfare?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stop arguing. Put a bolt on your mouth and sit. Listen to the virtues of Vithoba; listen with all your attention. Why beat your useless tongue against the bliss of love? Tuka says: why, then, do you cheat yourself out of the very good that is already yours?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is scolding the restless, arguing mind and telling it to be quiet. He says bolt your mouth and sit, then turn that same attention to hearing Vithoba's praises with reverence. The endless chatter, he says, is being beaten uselessly against a bliss that is right there to be received. The closing line names the loss: the welfare is certain and already yours, and by talking instead of listening you rob yourself of it.

GATHA 1713 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, show is not substance

मराठी मूळ

अति जालें उत्तम वेश्येचें लावण्य । परि ते सवासीण न ह्मणावी ॥1॥
उचित अनुचित केले ठाया ठाव । गुणां मोल वाव थोरपण ॥ध्रु.॥
शूरत्वावांचूनि शूरांमाजी ठाव । नाहीं आयुर्भाव आणिलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सोंग पोटाचे उपाय । कारण कमाईंवण नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A courtesan may possess supreme beauty, yet she is never called a virtuous wife. What is proper and what is not, each has its rightful place; greatness is measured by qualities, not by show.

Without true valor, no amount of outward display can earn one a place among warriors. Says Tuka, all pretense is merely a livelihood; without genuine spiritual practice, nothing avails.

IN PLAIN WORDS

However great a courtesan's beauty becomes, she is still never called a faithful wife. What is proper and what is not each has its own place; greatness is worth nothing where the real qualities are absent. Without true courage, no display wins you a place among warriors. Tuka says: pretense is only a way to fill the belly. Without real earning, it counts for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing the line between appearance and the real thing. Beauty, however high, does not make a courtesan a faithful wife; the name belongs to what one actually is, not to what one shows. So too, no display of bravado earns a coward a place among warriors. He calls all such pretense merely a way to feed oneself, a costume worn for a living. The standard he holds up is genuine inward practice and earning: where that is missing, the show is worth nothing, and this is a mirror to hold up to one's own pretending.

GATHA 1714 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, fitness must match the role

मराठी मूळ

शूरां साजती हतियारें । गांढएां हासतील पोरें ॥1॥
काय केली विटंबण । मोतीं नासिकावांचून ॥ध्रु.॥
पतिव्रते रूप साजे। सिंदळ काजळ लेतां लाजे ॥2॥
दासी पत्नी सुता । नव्हे सरी एक पिता ॥3॥
मान बुद्धवंतां । थोर न मनिती पिता ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी । आंत शुद्ध दंडे वरी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Weapons befit the brave; in the hands of a coward, even children laugh. What humiliation it is for pearls to be strung without a proper nose-ring.

Beauty suits a devoted wife; even one who is fallen is ashamed to adorn herself. A maidservant, a wife, and a daughter cannot share equal standing with a father.

Honor belongs to the wise; the thoughtless do not deserve it. Says Tuka, this is so only when one is pure within, even if punished outwardly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Weapons suit the brave; in a coward's hands, even children laugh. What a disgrace it is to string pearls without the nose for them. Beauty becomes a faithful wife; a loose woman is ashamed even to wear the eye-paint. A maidservant, a wife, a daughter, none of them is equal to the one father. Honor belongs to the wise; the thoughtless do not count the great as great. Tuka says: it holds only when one is pure within, even if punished outside.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images to make one point: a thing is fitting only when the inner reality matches the outer place. Weapons in a coward's hand draw laughter; ornaments worn without the standing to wear them are a disgrace; eye-paint shames the woman who has no faithfulness behind it. Standing cannot be borrowed: a servant or daughter does not equal the father, and honor falls only to the wise, who alone can recognize greatness. The closing line gives the test: all of this depends on being pure within, and that purity holds even when the world punishes you outwardly.

GATHA 1715 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the wicked torment the saints

मराठी मूळ

काय केलें जळचरीं । ढीवर त्यांच्या घातावरी ॥1॥
हा तों ठायींचा विचार । आहे यातिवैराकार ॥ध्रु.॥
श्वापदातें वधी । निरपराधें पारधी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खळ । संतां पीडिती चांडाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What have the fish ever done wrong? Yet the fisherman preys upon them all the same. This is simply the nature of things, the ancient pattern of hostility between species.

The hunter kills innocent wild animals without cause. Says Tuka, likewise the wicked torment the saints, those wretched ones who torment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What wrong did the fish do? Yet the fisherman is set on killing them. This is the way of things from the start; there is an inborn enmity by kind. The hunter kills the wild beast, though it has done no wrong. Tuka says: just so, the wicked, the vile ones, torment the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why the good are persecuted, and he refuses to make it a mystery. The fish did nothing to the fisherman, the beast did nothing to the hunter, yet each is hunted: there is a built-in hostility between certain kinds. He places the saints in this pattern. The wicked torment them not because the saints have wronged anyone, but because tormenting the innocent is simply what such cruelty does. The lesson is not hatred of the cruel but clear sight: do not look for a cause in the victim where there is none.

GATHA 1716 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, good is known by its opposite

मराठी मूळ

वाइटानें भलें । हीनें दाविलें चांगलें ॥1॥
एकाविण एका । कैचें मोल होतें फुका ॥ध्रु.॥
विषें दाविलें अमृत । कडू गोड घातें हित ॥2॥
किाळमेनें ज्योती । दिवस कळों आला राती ॥3॥
उंच निंच गारा । हिरा परिस मोहरा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे भले । ऐसे नष्टांनीं कळले ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is through the bad that the good becomes visible; the low reveals the high. Without one, the other would have no value and would go unrecognized.

Poison reveals nectar; bitter makes us know sweet; harm shows us the meaning of well-being. Darkness reveals the flame; night makes us recognize the day.

Pebbles, diamonds, touchstones, and gold coins are each known by contrast. Says Tuka, in this way the wicked have made the virtuous known.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is by the bad that the good is shown; the low reveals the high. Without the one, the other would have no worth and would go for nothing. Poison shows what nectar is; bitter makes us know sweet; harm shows us what good is. Blackness shows the flame; night makes us recognize the day. Pebble and diamond, touchstone and gold coin, each is known by the other. Tuka says: in this way it is the wicked who have made the good known.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the existence of evil into something almost useful. Every good thing, he says, is recognized only against its opposite: nectar against poison, sweet against bitter, flame against darkness, day against night, a diamond against a common pebble. Without the contrast, value would go unnoticed and unpriced. He applies this to people: the wicked, by their contrast, are what make the virtue of the good visible. It is a way of seeing that disarms resentment, reading even the bad as the dark backdrop that lets the good be seen.

GATHA 1717 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, gratitude to the wicked

मराठी मूळ

असो खळ ऐसे फार । आह्मां त्यांचे उपकार ॥1॥
करिती पातकांची धुनी । मोल न घेतां साबनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
फुकाचे मजुर। ओझें वागविती भार ॥2॥
पार उतरुन ह्मणे तुका । आह्मां आपण जाती नरका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let there be as many wicked people as there are; we owe them a debt of gratitude. They scrub away our sins like washermen who charge no fee for the soap.

They are unpaid laborers who carry our heavy loads upon their own backs. Says Tuka, they ferry us across to the far shore and then proceed to hell themselves.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let there be as many wicked people as there may be; we owe them a debt. They wash our sins away like washermen who take no fee for the soap. They are unpaid laborers; they carry our load on their own backs. Tuka says: they ferry us across to the far shore, and then go to hell themselves.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the persecution of the good and reads it as a strange gift. The wicked who wrong us, he says, scrub our sins clean the way a washerman cleans cloth, and they do it for free. They are unpaid porters, carrying our burden on their own backs. The sharpest turn is the last: by wronging the innocent, they take on the consequence themselves, ferrying the good across to the far shore while sinking to hell on their own account. The teaching is to meet harm with gratitude rather than revenge, and to see how dearly the one who does harm pays.

GATHA 1718 Prayers

Prayer, the servant who asks only to be remembered

मराठी मूळ

संत पंढरीस जाती । निरोप धाडीं तया हातीं ॥1॥
माझा न पडावा विसर । तुका विनवितो किंकर ॥ध्रु.॥
केरसुणी महाद्वारीं । ते मी असें निरंतरीं ॥2॥
तुमचे पायीं पाइतन । मोचे माझे तन मन ॥3॥
तांबुलाची पिकधरणी । ते मी असें मुख पसरूनि ॥4॥
तुमची इष्टा पंढरीराया । ते सारसुबी माझी काया ॥5॥
लागती पादुका । ते मी तळील मृत्तका ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे पंढरिनाथा। दुजें न धरावें सर्वथा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Saints are going to Pandhari; I send my message through their hands. Let there be no forgetting of me; this is the humble plea of your servant Tuka.

I am the broom at your great doorway, sweeping there forever. I am the dust beneath your feet; my body and mind are the rags that wipe your shoes.

I am the ground that receives the spit of your betel; I sit with mouth wide open. Your beloved Pandhari, O Lord, is the very field in which my body is sown.

Where your sandals fall, I am the clay beneath. Says Tuka, O Lord of Pandhari, let me never hold anything else within me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints are going to Pandhari; through their hands I send my message. Do not let me be forgotten. Tuka, your servant, makes this plea. I am the broom at your great gate; I am there forever. I am the dust on your feet; my body and mind are the cloth that wipes your shoes. I am the spittoon for your betel; I sit there with my mouth wide open. Your beloved Pandhari, O Lord, is the field where my body is sown. Where your sandals fall, I am the clay beneath them. Tuka says: O Lord of Pandhari, hold nothing else but me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cannot go to Pandhari himself, so he sends his message with the pilgrim saints: one plea, that the Lord not forget him. Then he names exactly how small a place he wants. Not a high seat, but the broom at the gate, the dust on the feet, the rag that wipes the shoes, the bowl that catches the spat-out betel, the clay under the sandals. Each image lowers him further, because nearness matters more to him than dignity. The final line turns the prayer back on God: as I keep nothing in my heart but you, you keep nothing in yours but me.

GATHA 1719 Renunciation

Renunciation, the body betrays you

मराठी मूळ

इच्छेचें पाहिलें । डोळीं अंतीं मोकलिलें ॥1॥
यांचा विश्वास तो काई । ऐसें विचारूनि पाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सुगंध अभ्यंगें पिाळतां । केश फिरले जाणतां ॥2॥
पिंड पिाळतां ओसरे । अवघी घेऊनि मागें सरे ॥3॥
करितां उपचार । कोणां नाहीं उपकार ॥4॥
अल्प जीवन करीं । तुका ह्मणे साधीं हरी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The eyes behold what they desire, but in the end they must let it go. What trust can be placed in such things? Consider this carefully.

Hair that is pampered with fragrant oils and ointments will in time turn grey and betray you. The body, however well-fed, eventually shrivels and draws back, taking everything with it.

No matter what remedies you apply, nothing yields a lasting return. Says Tuka, life is brief; use it to secure Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The eyes look at what they want. In the end they have to let it go. What trust can you put in such things? Think about it carefully. Hair you pamper with sweet oils turns grey while you watch. However well you feed the body, it shrivels in the end and pulls back, taking everything with it. Whatever remedy you try, none of it pays you back. Life is short. Tuka says: use it to secure Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks straight at the body and counts what it can promise. The eye seizes what it desires, then is forced to release it; the oiled hair greys, the well-fed flesh shrinks back at the end and drags off everything you gathered. He asks why anyone would trust such things or pour their care into them, since no remedy buys a lasting return. The one move that pays is to spend this brief life winning Hari, while there is still time.

GATHA 1720 True Worship

True worship, the Name does it all

मराठी मूळ

यज्ञनिमित्त तें शरिरासी बंधन । कां रे तृष्णा वांयांविण वाढविली ॥1॥
नव्हे ते भक्ति परलोकसाधन । विषयांनीं बंधन केलें तुज ॥ध्रु.॥
आशा धरूनि फळाची । तीथाअ व्रतीं मुक्ति कैंचि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सिणसी वांया । शरण न वजतां पंढरिराया ॥3॥
संध्या कर्म ध्यान जप तप अनुष्ठान । अवघें घडे नाम उच्चारितां ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rituals only bind the body further; why have you needlessly nourished craving? Such devotion does not lead to the other shore; the senses have bound you tightly. When you perform pilgrimages and fasts with an eye on the fruit, how can liberation ever come? Says Tuka, you toil in vain if you do not surrender to the Lord of Pandhari. Through the simple utterance of the name, every prayer, ritual, meditation, austerity, and vow is fulfilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do rituals only bind the body more? Why have you grown your craving for nothing? That kind of devotion is no path to the other shore. The senses have tied you up. When you keep an eye on the reward, doing your pilgrimages and your fasts, where will freedom come from? Tuka says: you wear yourself out for nothing if you do not surrender to the King of Pandhari. Evening rites, action, meditation, chanting, austerity, observance: all of it happens when you speak the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on the machinery of religion when it is run for profit. Rites done to gain a fruit only fasten the body tighter and feed the craving they claim to cure, so they cannot ferry anyone across; the senses still hold the rope. He says the toil is wasted without surrender to the Lord of Pandhari. The release he points to is small and total: speak the Name, and every rite, meditation, and austerity is already fulfilled in it.

GATHA 1721 The Power of the Name

The Name, saved at the last hour

मराठी मूळ

न वेचे मोल कांहीं लागती न सायास । तरी कां आळस करिसी झणी ॥1॥
ऐसें हे सार कां नेघेसी फुकाचें । काय तुझें वेचे मोल तया ॥ध्रु.॥
पुत्रस्नेहें शोक करी अजामेळ । तंव तो कृपाळ जवळी उभा ।
अनाथांच्या नाथें घातला विमानीं । नेला उचलूनि परलोका ॥2॥
अंतकाळीं गणिका पिक्षयाच्या छंदें । राम राम उच्चारिलें ।
तंव त्या दिनानाथा कृपा आली । त्यानें तयेसी वैकुंठा नेलें ॥3॥
अवचिता नाम आलिया हे गती । चिंतितां चित्तीं जवळी असे ।
तुका ह्मणे भावें स्मरा राम राम । कोण जाणे तये दशे ॥4॥
दुष्टाचें चित्त न भिन्ने अंतरीं । जरी जन्मवरी उपदेशिला।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It costs nothing and requires no effort, so why do you hesitate even for a moment? Why not seize this precious essence that is offered freely? What expense is it to you? Ajamela, out of love for his son, cried that name at the hour of death, and the compassionate Lord stood right beside him, placed him in a celestial chariot, and carried him to the highest world. The courtesan Pingala, absorbed in her parrot's chanting, uttered the name of Rama, and the Lord of the lowly took pity and brought her to Vaikuntha.

If such is the reward when the name comes even by accident, imagine what comes to one who remembers it with intention. Says Tuka, chant Rama, Rama with feeling, for who knows when that final hour may arrive?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It costs nothing. It takes no effort. So why are you lazy even for a moment? Why not take this essence when it is free? What does it spend of yours? Ajamela, grieving for his son, cried out that name at his death. At once the merciful Lord stood beside him, set him in a heavenly chariot, and carried him to the other world. The courtesan, caught up in her parrot's chanting, said Rama, Rama at the end. The Lord of the helpless took pity and brought her to Vaikuntha. If even the name spoken by accident leads there, think what comes to one who holds it in mind on purpose. Tuka says: with feeling, remember Rama, Rama. Who knows when that hour will come?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the cheapest, easiest thing there is: the Name costs nothing and takes no labor, so refusing it is pure sloth. He offers two proofs of how far it reaches. Ajamela called the name only because it was his son's, and the courtesan only echoed her parrot, yet both were carried to the highest world. His point lands hard: if the Name works even when it slips out by accident, it works all the more when you hold it deliberately. So remember Rama now, with feeling, because the final hour gives no warning.

GATHA 1722 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the closed heart

मराठी मूळ

पालथे घागरी घातलें जीवन । न धरी च जाण तें ही त्याला ॥1॥
जन्मा येउनि तेणें पतन चि साधिलें । तमोगुणें व्यापिलें जया नरा।
जळो जळो हें त्याचें ज्यालेपण । कासया हे आलें संवसारा ॥ध्रु.॥
पाषाण जीवनीं असतां कल्पवरी । पाहातां अंतरीं कोरडा तो।
कुचर मुग नये चि पाका । पाहातां सारिखा होता तैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असे उपाय सकळां । न चले या खळा प्रेत्न कांहीं ।
ह्मणऊनि संग न करितां भला । धरितां अबोला सर्व हित ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Pour water into an overturned pot and it will not hold a single drop; the same is true of such a person. Having taken birth, he has accomplished nothing but his own downfall, consumed by darkness and inertia.

Cursed be such a life; why did he come into this world at all? A stone may sit in water for an age and still remain dry within. A hard, green lentil never softens no matter how long it is cooked; it stays exactly as it was.

Says Tuka, there are remedies for everyone, but nothing works on the truly wicked. Therefore it is best not to keep their company; maintaining silence toward them is the highest wisdom.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pour water into an upturned pot and it holds nothing. Such a person is the same. He took birth and managed only his own fall, covered over by darkness and dullness. Cursed be such a life. Why did he come into the world at all? A stone can sit in water for an age and stay dry inside. A hard lentil never softens however long you cook it; it stays just as it was. Tuka says: there are remedies for everyone, but no effort works on the truly wicked. So it is best not to keep their company. Staying silent toward them is the whole of your good.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a heart sealed against grace and asks what can be done with it. He stacks up images of refusal: the overturned pot that water runs off, the stone dry at its core after an age underwater, the hard lentil that will not soften no matter the cooking. The warning is aimed at the closed pattern, not at writing off a soul; the danger is real because such company drags you down with it. His practical counsel is restraint: where effort cannot reach, keep your distance and keep silent, and that silence guards your own good.

GATHA 1723 True Worship

Adoration, all is already Yours

मराठी मूळ

कासियानें पूजा करूं केशीराजा । हा चि संदेह माझा फेडीं आतां ॥1॥
उदकें न्हाणूं तरी स्वरूप तुझें । तेथें काय माझें वेचे देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
गंधाचा सुगंध पुष्पाचा परिमळ । तेथें मी दुर्बळ काय करूं ॥2॥
फळदाता तूंच तांबोल अक्षता । तरी काय आतां वाहों तुज ॥3॥
वाहूं दिक्षणा जरी धातु नारायण । ब्रह्म तें चि अन्न दुजें काई ॥4॥
गातां तूं ओंकार टाळी नादेश्वर । नाचावया थार नाहीं कोठें ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणें मज अवघें तुझें नाम । धूप दीप रामकृष्णहरि ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With what shall I worship you, O Lord of Keshi? Resolve this doubt of mine. If I bathe you with water, that water is already your own form; what do I spend of mine, O God? The fragrance of sandalwood and the scent of flowers are already yours.

Fruits, betel, and rice grains all come from you as their giver. If I offer coins, every metal is Narayana; the food offering is nothing but Brahman.

When I sing, you are the primordial syllable Om; the clapping of hands is but the sound of the cosmic drum, and there is no ground apart from you on which to dance. Says Tuka, your name is all I have; the incense and the lamp are Rama, Krishna, Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With what shall I worship you, Lord of Keshi? Clear up this doubt of mine now. If I bathe you in water, the water is your own form. What of mine do I spend, O God? The scent of sandal, the fragrance of the flower, those too are yours; what can I, with nothing, do? You are the giver of the fruit, the betel, the rice. So what is left for me to offer you? If I offer coins, every metal is Narayana; the food is nothing but Brahman, what else could it be? When I sing, you are Om; the clap of my hands is the sound of the cosmic drum; there is no ground to dance on apart from you. Tuka says: your Name is all I have. The incense and the lamp are Rama, Krishna, Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a worshipper's honest puzzle into a confession of nonduality. If God is everything, then the water for the bath, the scent of the flower, the fruit and rice and coin and food are all already God; the devotee owns nothing separate to give. Even the song is Om, the clapping is the cosmic drum, and there is no separate floor to dance on. Stripped of every external offering, he finds the only thing he can truly bring is the Name, which is itself Rama, Krishna, Hari standing in for incense and lamp.

GATHA 1724 The Power of the Name

The Name, contempt and its wages

मराठी मूळ

गातां आइकतां कांटाळा जो करी । वास त्या अघोरीं कुंभपाकीं ॥1॥
रागें यमधर्म जाचविती तया । तु दिलें कासया मुख कान ॥ध्रु.॥
विषयांच्या सुखें अखंड जगासी । न वजे एकादशी जागरणा ॥2॥
वेचूनियां द्रव्य सेवी मद्यपान । नाहीं दिलें अन्न अतीतासी ॥3॥
तीर्थाटण नाहीं केले उपकार । पिाळलें शरीर पुष्ट लोभें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मग केला साहे दंड । नाइकती लंड सांगितलें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who feels disgust at singing or hearing the Lord's name will find his dwelling in the darkest hell. The lord of death will torment such a person with rage; why were you given a mouth and ears? For the sake of sensory pleasures you stay awake all night, yet you will not keep a single vigil on the holy eleventh day.

You spend your wealth on drink but have never given a morsel of food to a guest. You have made no pilgrimage, done no charitable deed, and have only fattened your body with greed.

Says Tuka, such a person must then endure the punishment; the shameless do not heed what they are told.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who feels disgust at singing or hearing the Name lives in the worst hell. The lord of death torments him in rage. Why were you given a mouth and ears? For the pleasures of the senses you stay awake all night, yet you will not keep one vigil on the holy eleventh day. You spend your money on drink and never gave a guest a morsel of food. You made no pilgrimage, did no kindness, and only fattened your body out of greed. Tuka says: then he has to bear the punishment. The shameless do not listen to what they are told.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up a life turned entirely inward on appetite and names where it leads. Mouth and ears were given for the Name, yet this person recoils from it while gladly staying up all night for pleasure and refusing a single sacred vigil. Money goes to drink, never to a hungry guest; the body is fattened by greed while charity and pilgrimage are skipped. The harshness is aimed at the pattern of contempt and self-indulgence, the kind that shrugs off every warning, so that the listener checks where his own mouth, ears, and money are spent.

GATHA 1725 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the debt is Yours now

मराठी मूळ

तुझें ह्मणवितां काय नास जाला । ऐकें बा विठ्ठला कीर्ती तुझी ॥1॥
परी तुज नाहीं आमचे उपकार । नामरूपा थार केलियाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
समूळीं संसार केला देशधडी । सांडिली आवडी ममतेची ॥2॥
लोभ दंभ काम क्रोध अहंकार । यांसी नाहीं थार ऐसें केलें ॥3॥
मृत्तिका पाषाण तैसें केलें धन । आपले ते कोण पर नेणों ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों देहासी उदार । आणीक विचार काय तेथें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What loss have I suffered by calling myself yours? Listen, O Vitthal, to your own glory. Yet you owe me no small debt for having given your name and form a firm standing in this world.

I have uprooted the entire household of worldly attachment and abandoned the fondness of possessiveness. Greed, pride, lust, anger, and ego have all been driven out with no place left to stand.

I have made gold and wealth no different from clay and stone; I know neither mine nor another's. Says Tuka, I have been generous even with this body; what further consideration can there be?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What have I lost by calling myself yours? Listen, Vitthal, this is your own glory. But you owe me no small debt: I gave your name and form a firm place in this world. I have torn up the whole household of worldly attachment by the root and thrown away the fondness of possessiveness. Greed, pride, lust, anger, ego: I have left them no place to stand. I have made gold and wealth the same as clay and stone; I no longer know mine from another's. Tuka says: I have been generous even with this body. What more is there to weigh?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a bold, almost teasing claim before Vitthal: in becoming wholly God's, he has lost nothing and has actually done God a service by spreading the Name and form through the world. He lists the price he has paid, uprooting attachment, driving out greed, pride, lust, anger, and ego, treating gold as worthless as clay, dissolving even the line between mine and yours. Having surrendered the body itself, he says there is nothing left to bargain over. The sharpness is devotional intimacy, the lover reminding the beloved how completely he has given himself.

GATHA 1726 True Worship

True worship, the bitter core

मराठी मूळ

जाऊनियां तीर्था काय तुवां केलें । चर्म प्रक्षाळलें वरीं वरीं ॥1॥
अंतरींचें शुद्ध कासयानें जालें । भूषण तों केलें आपणया ॥ध्रु.॥
इंद्रावण फळ घोळलें साकरा । भीतरील थारा मोडे चि ना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं शांति क्षमा दया । तोंवरी कासया कुंफ्दां तुह्मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What have you accomplished by visiting a holy place? You have only washed the skin on the surface. By what means has the inside become pure? You have merely decorated yourself outwardly.

A colocynth fruit coated in sugar still holds its bitter core, which no coating can change. Says Tuka, so long as patience, forgiveness, and compassion are absent, why do you even bother making a show?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What did you gain by going to the holy place? You only washed the skin on the outside. By what means did the inside become clean? You only decorated yourself on the surface. A bitter colocynth fruit rolled in sugar still keeps its bitter core; the inside does not change. Tuka says: as long as there is no peace, no forgiveness, no mercy in you, why do you bother making the show?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures pilgrimage against the state of the heart and finds the outing empty when the inner life is untouched. Bathing at a sacred site only rinses the skin and dresses up the surface; it cannot scrub the inside. His image is exact: a bitter gourd rolled in sugar still hides its bitterness, because no coating reaches the core. The point is self-examination, not scorn for any one pilgrim: without peace, forgiveness, and mercy actually grown inside, the external display is just a costume.

GATHA 1727 The Power of the Name

The Name, sit still and He comes

मराठी मूळ

बैसोनि निवांत शुद्ध करीं चित्त । तया सुखा अंतपार नाहीं ॥1॥
येऊनि अंतरीं राहील गोपाळ । सायासाचें फळ बैसलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
राम कृष्ण हरि मुकुंद मुरारि । मंत्र हा उच्चारीं वेळोवेळां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें देईन मी दिव्य । जरी होइल भाव एकविध ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sit in quietude and purify the mind; the joy of that state is without end. Gopal will come and take His seat within your chitta; this is the fruit of sitting still.

Chant Rama, Krishna, Hari, Mukunda, Murari again and again. Says Tuka, I will grant you this divine gift, if only your devotion becomes single-pointed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sit quietly and make the mind clean. The joy of that has no end, no far shore. Gopal will come and take his seat within you; this is the fruit of sitting still. Chant Rama, Krishna, Hari, Mukunda, Murari again and again. Tuka says: I will give you this divine gift, if only your devotion becomes single-pointed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers a quiet, direct method against the noise of striving. Sit still, clear the mind, and a boundless joy opens; the fruit of that stillness is that Gopal himself comes and settles within the heart. The work is simply the Name repeated, Rama, Krishna, Hari, Mukunda, Murari, over and over. He stakes his own promise on it, but with one condition that does all the lifting: the devotion has to become single-pointed, gathered into one.

GATHA 1728 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari holds every shrine

मराठी मूळ

धन्य पुंडलिका बहु बरें केलें । निधान आणिलें पंढरिये ॥1॥
न पवीजे केल्या तपांचिया रासी । तें जनलोकांसी दाखविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
सवौत्तम तीर्थ क्षेत्र आणि देव । शास्त्रांनी हा भाव निवडिला ॥2॥
विष्णुपद गया रामधाम काशी । अवघीं पायांपाशीं विठोबाच्या ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मोक्ष देखिल्या कळस । तात्काळ या नास अहंकाराचा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed Pundalik, you did a supremely good thing by bringing this treasure to Pandhari. That which cannot be attained even by heaps of austerities, you made visible for all the people of this world.

The greatest of pilgrimage sites, holy places, and deities have all been confirmed by scripture to reside here. Vishnu's footprint at Gaya, the abode of Rama, the glory of Kashi, all lie at the feet of Vithoba.

Says Tuka, the moment one beholds that pinnacle, the ego is instantly destroyed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed Pundalik, you did a very good thing. You brought the treasure to Pandhari. What heaps of austerities cannot reach, you showed to all the people. The highest pilgrimage place, the holiest ground, and the very God: scripture has settled this truth here. Vishnu's footprint, Gaya, the home of Rama, Kashi, all of them lie at the feet of Vithoba. Tuka says: the moment you see that pinnacle, the ego is destroyed at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram thanks Pundalik for drawing God down into one reachable place, Pandhari, so that what years of austerity cannot win is set in plain view for everyone. He claims that the greatest sites and the supreme deity are gathered there, with the famous shrines of Gaya, Ayodhya, and Kashi all resting at Vithoba's feet. The closing line names the stake: this is not sightseeing but transformation, for the instant the devotee truly beholds that pinnacle, the ego that stood between him and God collapses.

GATHA 1729 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari overflowing

मराठी मूळ

धन्य ते पंढरी धन्य भीमातीर । आणियेलें सार पुंडलिकें ॥1॥
धन्य तो हि लोक अवघा दैवांचा । सुकाळ प्रेमाचा घरोघरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य ते ही भूमी धन्य तरुवर । धन्य ते सुरवर तीर्थरूप ॥2॥
धन्य त्या नरनारी मुखीं नाम ध्यान । आनंदें भवन गर्जतसे ॥3॥
धन्य पशु पक्षी कीटक पाषाण । अवघा नारायण अवतरला ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य संसारातें आलीं । हरिरंगीं रंगलीं सर्वभावें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is that Pandhari, blessed is the bank of the Bhima river, for Pundalik brought the supreme treasure there. Blessed too are all those fortunate people, for the abundance of love overflows in every household.

Blessed is that earth, blessed are those trees, blessed are those sacred waters that have taken the form of pilgrimage. Blessed are those men and women with the Lord's name and meditation on their lips; their homes resound with joy.

Blessed are the beasts, birds, insects, and very stones, for Narayana Himself has incarnated among them. Says Tuka, blessed are all who have come into this world and have been dyed completely in the color of Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is that Pandhari, blessed is the bank of the Bhima, for Pundalik brought the essence there. Blessed too are all those lucky people; love overflows in house after house. Blessed is that earth, blessed are those trees, blessed are those gods who have become sacred waters. Blessed are the men and women with the Name and meditation on their lips; their homes ring with joy. Blessed are the beasts, birds, insects, and stones, for Narayana himself has come down among them. Tuka says: blessed are all who have come into this world and been dyed completely in the color of Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a litany of blessing that widens until nothing is left outside it. Tukaram starts with the place Pundalik consecrated, Pandhari on the Bhima, then blesses its people, its soil, its trees and waters, the men and women singing the Name. The circle keeps opening to the animals, the insects, even the stones, because he sees Narayana incarnate in all of them. The poem's quiet claim is that devotion does not narrow life but floods it; the fortunate are simply all who let themselves be dyed through with the color of Hari.

GATHA 1730 Autobiography

Autobiography, the world's warning

मराठी मूळ

मायबाप करिती चिंता । पोर नाइके सांगतां ॥1॥
नको जाऊं देउळासी । नेतो बागुल लोकांसी ॥ध्रु.॥
कर्णद्वारें पुराणिक। भुलवी शब्दें लावी भीक ॥2॥
वैष्णवां संगती । हातीं पडलीं नेणों किती ॥3॥
आह्मां कैंचा मग । करिसी उघडियांचा संग ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जाणें नरका । त्यांचा उपदेश आइका ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The parents worry and try to advise, but the child will not listen to a word they say. Do not go to the temple, they warn; the bogeyman will carry people off.

Through the doorway of the ears the storyteller casts his spell with words and lures you into begging. Who knows how many have fallen into the company of the Vaishnavas? After that, they say, why do you keep the company of these penniless wanderers? Says Tuka, listen well to the counsel of those who would have you go to hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The parents fret and try to warn the child, but the child will not listen to a word. Do not go to the temple, they say; the bogeyman carries people off. Through the ears the storyteller casts his spell with words and sets you begging. Who knows how many have already fallen into the company of the Vaishnavas? After that, where are you for us? they say. Why keep company with these bare wanderers? Tuka says: listen well to the counsel of those who would send you to hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports, with a dry edge, how the worldly try to scare a young heart away from God. Parents fuss and warn the child off the temple as if the kirtan were a kidnapper; the storyteller's words are called a spell that lures the listener into beggary; the Vaishnavas are dismissed as penniless drifters who swallow people up. The bitter twist is in the last line: the people handing out this advice are the very ones leading toward hell. By voicing their warning straight, he exposes how upside down worldly counsel really is, and quietly sides with the child who would not listen.

GATHA 1731 Prayers

Prayer, the restless mind

मराठी मूळ

मन माझें चपळ न राहे निश्चळ । घडी एकी पळ िस्थर नाहीं ॥1॥
आतां तूं उदास नव्हें नारायणा । धांवें मज दीना गांजियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
धांव घालीं पुढें इंिद्रयांचे ओढी । केलें तडातडी चित्त माझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा न चले सायास । राहिलों हे आस धरुनी तुझी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind is restless and will not stay still; not for a single moment or even half a breath does it hold steady. O Narayana, do not be indifferent to me now; come running to this tormented, helpless soul.

The pull of the senses drags it forward and tears my mind to pieces. Says Tuka, my own efforts are of no avail; I remain here holding only to my hope in you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind is restless. It will not hold still. Not for a moment, not for half a breath, does it stay steady. O Narayana, do not turn away from me now. Come running. I am poor, and I am tormented. The senses drag it forward, and they tear my mind to pieces. Tuka says: my own effort gets me nowhere. I stay here, holding only to my hope in you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is admitting he cannot control his own mind. He describes it honestly: not still for even half a breath, dragged in every direction by the senses until it is torn apart. He has tried to steady it himself and failed, so he stops pretending his effort can do the work. The prayer is a plea to Narayana to come quickly to a soul that is poor and tormented, and the last line names what is left when self-effort runs out: nothing but hope held onto God.

GATHA 1732 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the giver overflows

मराठी मूळ

मागतियाचे दोनि च कर । अमित भांडार दातियाचें ॥1॥
काय करुं आतां कासयांत भरुं । हा मज विचारु पडियेला ॥ध्रु.॥
एकें सांटवणें प्रेमें वोसंडलीं । जिव्हा हे भागली करितां माप ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां आहे तेथें असो । अंखुनियां बैसों पायांपाशीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The beggar has only two hands, but the treasury of the giver is limitless. What shall I do now, into what vessel shall I receive all this? The storerooms of love are overflowing, and the tongue is exhausted from measuring it all out.

Says Tuka, let whatever is, simply be; I will sit down at His feet and gaze upon Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The beggar has only two hands. The giver's treasury has no limit. What do I do now? What vessel can hold all this? This is the trouble I am in. The storerooms of love spill over. My tongue is worn out from measuring it all. Tuka says: let whatever is, simply be. I will sit at his feet and gaze.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being overwhelmed by a love too large to receive. He casts himself as a beggar with only two hands held out, while God's treasury of grace is endless, so the very abundance becomes a sweet problem: there is no vessel big enough to hold it. Even the tongue, trying to measure and name the love, gives out exhausted. So he abandons the effort to contain or account for it and simply sits at the feet and looks, letting the overflow be what it is.

GATHA 1733 The Nature of God

The mother's heart, the saints' compassion

मराठी मूळ

जिचें पीडे बाळ । प्राण तयेचा विकळ ॥1॥
ऐसा मातेचा स्वभाव । सूत्र दोरी एक जीव ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखाची विश्रांती । उमटे मातेचिये चित्तीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संत । तुह्मी बहु कृपावंत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When her child suffers, the mother's very life is shaken. Such is a mother's nature; her life is strung on the same thread as the child's.

When the child rests happily, that peace is reflected in the mother's chitta. Says Tuka, O saints, you are just as boundlessly compassionate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When her child is in pain, the mother's own life trembles. This is a mother's nature. Her life and the child's are strung on one thread. When the child rests in comfort, that peace shows up in the mother's heart. Tuka says: O saints, you are just as full of mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the bond between mother and child to say what the saints are to him. A mother's life is strung on the same thread as her child's: the child's pain shakes her, the child's ease settles into her heart, all without calculation. He names this as her very nature, not a choice she weighs. Then he turns it on the saints: their compassion for him runs the same way, feeling his suffering and his peace as their own.

GATHA 1734 Longing and Separation

Longing, home to the mother's house

मराठी मूळ

यावें माहेरास । हे च सर्वकाळ आस ॥1॥
घ्यावी उच्छिष्टाची धणी । तीर्थ इच्छी पायवणी ॥ध्रु.॥
भोग उभा आड । आहे तोंवरी च नाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवें । माझें सिद्धी पाववावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My constant longing is to come home to the mother's house. I wish to eat the leftovers of the saints' meal until my belly is full and to drink the water that has washed their feet.

So long as the body and its obligations stand in the way, the pull of longing persists. Says Tuka, may God bring my aspiration to fulfillment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To come home to the mother's house: this is what I long for, all the time. Let me eat my fill of the saints' leftovers. Let me drink the water that washed their feet. As long as the body and its claims stand in the way, the ache stays. Tuka says: God, bring what I long for to its fulfillment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the soul as a married daughter aching to return to her mother's house, the place of the saints and of God. What he wants there is humble to the point of self-erasure: to eat the saints' leftovers and drink the water from their feet, treating their lowest remnants as the highest food. He names the one obstacle plainly: the body and its obligations stand in the way, and as long as they do, the longing burns unsatisfied. The closing line hands the whole thing to God, asking that the desire itself be carried to completion.

GATHA 1735 The Nature of God

The mother's heart, love without return

मराठी मूळ

लेंकराचें हित । वाहे माउलीचें चित्त ॥1॥
ऐसी कळवळ्याची जाती । करी लाभेंविण प्रीती ॥ध्रु.॥
पोटीं भार वाहे। त्याचें सर्वस्व ही साहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें । तैसे तुह्मां संतां ओझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother's chitta is always occupied with the welfare of her child. Such is the nature of true tenderness: it loves without any expectation of return.

She carries the burden in her womb and endures everything the child brings. Says Tuka, O saints, you bear the same weight on my behalf.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother's heart is always set on her child's good. This is the way of true tenderness: it loves and wants nothing back. She carries the weight in her womb. She bears everything the child brings. Tuka says: O saints, you carry the same weight for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defines real love by what it does not ask for. A mother's attention rests on her child's welfare, and she loves without any thought of return, carrying the child first in her womb and then bearing whatever the child puts on her. He calls this the very nature of tenderness, not a transaction. Then he lays his own life on the saints, saying they carry his burden in exactly this unrewarded, self-spending way.

GATHA 1736 Longing and Separation

Longing, where has God gone

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां गांजी जन । तरि कां मेला नारायण ॥1॥
जालों पोरटीं निढळें । नाहीं ठाव बुड आळें ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मीं जना भ्यावें। तरि कां न लाजिजे देवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देश । जाला देवाविण ओस ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the world oppresses us, is Narayana then dead? We have been left orphaned and exposed, without a roof or a shelter. If we must fear the people, should God not feel ashamed? Says Tuka, without God this whole land has become a wasteland.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If the world crushes us, is Narayana then dead? We are left orphaned and bare, with no roof, no shelter. If we have to be afraid of people, should God not be ashamed of that? Tuka says: without God, this whole land has gone to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from a place of feeling abandoned, and he aims the complaint straight at God. If the world is allowed to grind down God's own people, he asks, has God simply died and left them orphaned and exposed. The sharpest line turns the shame back on God: if the devotee is reduced to fearing other people, that reflects on the protector who let it happen. The closing image is bleak and total, a whole land turned to wasteland, because to Tukaram a world without God present is no longer fit to live in.

GATHA 1737 The Saints

The saints, fearlessness

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी पाय संतीं । माझे ठेवियेले चित्तीं ॥1॥
आतां बाधूं न सके काळ । जालीं विषम शीतळ ॥ध्रु.॥
भय नाहीं मनीं । देव वसे घरीं रानीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भये । आतां स्वप्नीं ही नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O saints, you have placed your feet upon my chitta. Now even Death cannot harm me, for all that was harsh has become cool.

There is no fear left in my mind; God dwells in the home and in the wilderness alike. Says Tuka, fear does not come now, not even in a dream.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O saints, you have set your feet on my heart. Now Death itself cannot harm me. Everything that was harsh has turned cool. There is no fear left in my mind. God lives in the house and in the wilderness alike. Tuka says: fear does not come now, not even in a dream.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the change that the saints' grace works in him. Once their feet rest on his heart, the thing every person dreads, Death, loses its power to wound, and what was harsh and burning becomes cool and bearable. The reason fear is gone is that God is no longer confined to a temple or a safe place: God dwells equally in the home and in the wild emptiness, so there is nowhere left to be afraid. He pushes the claim to its limit, saying fear cannot reach him even in sleep.

GATHA 1738 Faith and Trust

Faith, the Name as weapon

मराठी मूळ

काळाचे ही काळ । आह्मी विठोबाचे लडिवाळ ॥1॥
करूं सत्ता सर्वां ठायी । वसों निकटवासें पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसी कोणाची वैखरी । वदे आमुचे समोरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बाण । हातीं हरिनाम तीक्षण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the darlings of Vithoba, the death of Death itself. We exercise authority everywhere, for we dwell intimately close to His feet.

Whose voice could dare to speak against us to our face? Says Tuka, the sharp arrow of Hari's name is in our hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are the death of Death itself. We are the darlings of Vithoba. We hold power everywhere, for we live close beside his feet. Whose voice could dare to speak against us to our face? Tuka says: in our hands is the sharp arrow of Hari's name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks with bold confidence on behalf of the devotees. Because they are Vithoba's beloved and live pressed close to his feet, they stand above even Death, the very thing that ends everyone else. This is not their own strength but the standing that nearness to God gives them, so they can ask who would dare oppose them. The closing image names the source of the power directly: Hari's name, held like a sharp arrow, is the only weapon they need.

GATHA 1739 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the miser exposed

मराठी मूळ

जन्मा येऊन उदार जाला । उद्धार केला वंशाचा । मेळवूनि धन मेळवी माती । सदा विपत्ती भोगीतसे ॥1॥
नाम घेतां न मिळे अन्न । नव्हे कारण देखिलिया । धर्म करितां ऐके कानीं । बांधे निजोनि डोकियासी ॥ध्रु.॥
घरा व्याही पाहुणा आला । ह्मणे त्याला बरें नाहीं । तुमचे गावीं वैद्य आहे । बैसोनि काय प्रयोजन ॥2॥
उजवूं किती होतिल पोरें । मरतां बरें ह्मणे यांसी । ह्मणऊनि देवा नवस करी । दावी घरींहुनि बोनें ॥3॥
पर्वकाळीं भट घरासी आला । बोंब घाला ह्मणे पोरां । तुमचा उणा होईल वांटा । काळ पिठासी आला ॥4॥
दाढी करितां अडका गेला । घरांत आला बाइलेपें । ह्मणे आतां उगवीं मोडी । डोई बोडीं आपुली ॥5॥
तीर्थ स्वप्नीं नेणें गंगा । पूजन लिंगा गांविंचिया । आडकुनि दार बैसे दारीं। आल्या घर ह्मणे ओस ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे आहेत गा हरी। या ही तारीं जीवांसी । माझ्या भय वाटे चित्तीं । नरका जाती ह्मणोनि ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The man who was born and called himself generous has only upheld his family name in word; in truth he hoards wealth like dirt and suffers endless misfortune. When it is time to chant the name, he says there is no food to be had; he sees no reason in devotion.

When he hears talk of charity, he ties up his head and pretends to be asleep. When a guest or in-law arrives at his door, he says he is unwell and suggests they visit the physician in their own village.

He asks how many more children there will be to feed and prays to God they would simply die, even making vows from his house to that end. When the priest comes at the holy season, he tells the children to scream that the beggar is taking their share.

When a coin is spent on a shave, he runs home to his wife demanding she shave her own head to save the cost. He knows neither pilgrimage in waking nor the Ganga in dream, nor worship of the village shrine; he bolts his door and tells every caller the house is empty.

Says Tuka, such men do exist, O Hari; deliver even them, for it grieves my chitta to think they are headed for hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He was born and called himself generous; he says he upheld the family name. But he piles up money like dirt, and lives in endless misery. Tell him to chant the Name, and he says there is no food in the house. He sees no point in devotion. Mention charity, and he wraps his head and pretends to sleep. A guest, an in-law, comes to the door; he says he is unwell, go see the doctor in your own village. He counts his children and wishes they would die, and even makes vows to God for it. When the priest comes at the holy season, he tells the children to scream that the beggar is taking their share. A coin spent on a shave, and he runs home and tells his wife to shave her own head to save the cost. He knows no pilgrimage awake, no Ganga in his dreams, no worship at the village shrine. He bolts the door and tells every caller the house is empty. Tuka says: such men really do exist, O Hari. Save even them. It grieves my heart to think they are headed for hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a portrait of the miser, drawn detail by ugly detail, of a man who calls himself generous while hoarding money like so much dirt and suffering for it. Tukaram names the pattern: every call to the Name, to charity, to hospitality, meets a fresh excuse, until even his own children and wife become costs to cut, and a guest at the door is something to wish away. The point is not one named man but the grip of stinginess itself, which closes a person to God and to every other person at once. Yet Tukaram does not end in contempt: he turns to Hari and asks that even such men be saved, because the thought of any soul bound for hell pains him.

GATHA 1740 Social Criticism

Social criticism, knowledge without freedom

मराठी मूळ

जाणे वर्तमान । परि तें न वारे त्याच्याने ॥1॥
तो ही कारणांचा दास । देव ह्मणवितां पावे नास ॥ध्रु.॥
वेची अनुष्ठान। सिद्धी कराया प्रसन्न ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचें । मुदल गेलें हाटवेचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One may know the present state of affairs, yet be unable to change a thing. Such a person is still a slave to causes; calling himself godly, he only hastens his own destruction.

He spends his spiritual practice trying to win favors from lesser powers. Says Tuka, in this way he has lost even his original capital.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He knows how things stand, yet he cannot change a thing himself. He too is a slave to causes. Calling himself godly, he only runs toward his own ruin. He spends his practice trying to win favors from lesser powers. Tuka says: this way he has lost even his original capital.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against using spiritual practice as a tool for gain. The man here can see the present state of things clearly, but his knowing changes nothing, because he is still bound to causes and effects like everyone else. The error is naming himself godly while bending his discipline toward winning favors from lesser powers, which only speeds his undoing. The closing line puts it in a merchant's terms: chasing small returns, he has lost even the principal, the very ground he started from.

GATHA 1741 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the honest shop of God

मराठी मूळ

घातला दुकान । पढीये तैसा आहे वान ॥1॥
आह्मी भांडारी देवाचे । द्यावें घ्यावें माप वाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
उगवूं जाणों मोडी । जाली नव्हे त्याची जोडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पुडी । मोल तैसी खरी कुडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have set up shop, and the stock is exactly as advertised. I am the treasurer of God, and my voice is the measure by which I give and receive.

I know how to settle every account; what is gained or lost is never confused. Says Tuka, each parcel is weighed and priced, genuine or false, exactly as it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have set up shop, and the goods are exactly as I describe them. I am God's treasurer. My word is the measure I give and take by. I know how to settle every account; nothing gained or lost gets confused. Tuka says: each parcel is weighed and priced, true or false, just as it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts himself as a shopkeeper trading in God's truth, and the whole point is honesty. The goods match the description exactly, and as God's treasurer his own word is the measure by which everything is given and received. He keeps clean accounts: nothing gained or lost is ever blurred or hidden. The last line states the standard plainly, that every parcel is weighed and named for what it truly is, genuine called genuine and false called false, which is the integrity he claims for his teaching.

GATHA 1742 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the open feast for all

मराठी मूळ

सादाविलें एका । सरें अवघियां लोकां ॥1॥
आतां आवडीचे हातीं । भेद नाहीं ये पंगती ॥ध्रु.॥
मोकळी च पोतीं । नाहीं पुसायाची गुंती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरा । आहे ढसाळ वेव्हारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What has been prepared for one serves the whole world. Now it is in the hands of love; there is no distinction at this feast.

The sacks are open wide, and there is no entangling knot to be untied. Says Tuka, this generous trade runs well in its rough and ready way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What was made ready for one is enough for everyone. Now it is in the hands of love. At this feast there is no separating people out. The sacks are wide open. There is no knot to untie, no questions to ask. Tuka says: this open-handed trade goes well, rough and ready as it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes grace as a feast where the usual divisions collapse. What was prepared for a single person turns out to be enough for the whole world, because it is love, not measure, that is serving now. At this table no one is sorted or held back, the sacks are flung open, and there are no knots or questions standing between a person and the food. He grants that the whole thing looks careless and rough, but says that is exactly why it works: an open-handed giving that stops counting is the right way to trade.

GATHA 1743 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, fill the vessel right

मराठी मूळ

तडामोडी करा । परि उत्तम तें भरा ॥1॥
जेणें खंडे एके खेपे । जाय तेथें लाभें वोपे ॥ध्रु.॥
दाविल्या सारिखें । मागें नसावें पारिखें ॥2॥
मागें पुढें ऋण । तुका ह्मणे फिटे हीण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make whatever compromises you must, but fill your vessel with what is truly excellent. Seek out that which settles the account in a single journey, where the profit exceeds the cost.

What is shown on the surface should not be different from what lies behind. Says Tuka, in this way the debt of past and future lives is wiped clean.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Cut and trade as you must, but fill your vessel with what is truly good. Look for what settles the account in one journey, where the profit is greater than the cost. What you show on the surface should not differ from what lies behind. Tuka says: in this way the debt of past and future is wiped clean.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks like a merchant counting his returns, then turns the figure toward the soul. Make whatever small compromises living requires, he says, but spend your effort on the one thing that pays in full, the Name and the love of God, which clears the whole account in a single venture. He sets one further condition: your inner life and your outer face must be the same, no hidden seam between them. Trade that way and the long debt of birth after birth is settled clean.

GATHA 1744 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the trustworthy life

मराठी मूळ

नसावें ओशाळ । मग मानिती सकळ ॥1॥
जाय तेथें पावे मान । चाले बोलिलें वचन ॥ध्रु.॥
राहों नेदी बाकी । दान ज्याचें त्यासी टाकी ॥2॥
होवा वाटे जना । तुका ह्मणे साटीं गुणां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should never have cause for embarrassment; then all will show respect. Wherever such a person goes, he is honored, and his spoken word carries weight.

He leaves nothing outstanding; what belongs to each he returns in full. Says Tuka, one should live so that people wish to emulate one's virtues.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Never give cause for shame; then everyone respects you. Wherever such a person goes, he is honored, and his word holds. He leaves nothing owing; what belongs to each, he returns to them. Tuka says: live so that people want to copy your virtues.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sketches the shape of a life that earns honest respect, not flattery. The root of it is having nothing to be ashamed of, so that a person can stand anywhere and be trusted, and his spoken word carries weight because it is backed by his conduct. He keeps no debts and returns to each what is theirs, owing nothing to anyone. The measure of such a life, Tuka says, is that others see it and wish to become like it.

GATHA 1745 The Moral Ideal

The pure mind, the world turns friendly

मराठी मूळ

अनघडसिद्धाच्या शब्देंकरून रामेश्वरभटाच्या शरीरीं दाह जाला तो ज्यानें शमला तो अभंग ॥ 1 ॥

चित्त शुद्ध तरी शत्रु मित्र होती । व्याघ्र हे न खाती सर्प तया ॥1॥
विष तें अमृत अघातें हित । अकर्तव्य नीत होय त्यासी ॥ध्रु.॥
दुःख तें देईल सर्व सुख फळ । होतील शीतळ अग्नज्वाळा ॥2॥
आवडेल जीवां जीवाचे परी । सकळां अंतरीं एक भाव ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपा केली नारायणें । जाणियेते येणें अनुभवें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the mind is pure, enemies become friends, tigers do not devour and serpents do not bite. Poison turns to nectar, harm turns to help, and what was forbidden becomes auspicious.

Suffering will yield the fruit of all happiness, and the flames of fire will become cool. Every being will love such a person as its own life, and one feeling will pervade every heart.

Says Tuka, this I know from experience, for Narayana has shown His grace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the mind is pure, enemies turn into friends; tigers do not eat such a one, serpents do not bite. Poison becomes nectar, harm becomes help, what was forbidden becomes right for him. Suffering will give him the fruit of all happiness; the flames of fire will turn cool. Every living thing will love him as its own life, and one feeling will fill every heart. Tuka says: Narayana has shown his grace; I know this from my own experience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what happens when the heart is fully cleansed: the whole hostile world reverses its face. Enemies become friends, beasts and serpents lose their menace, poison turns to nectar, fire turns cool. He is not promising magic tricks but naming a single law, that a mind without enmity meets no enmity, and even suffering ripens into the fruit of joy. He grounds the claim in lived testimony, not theory: Narayana gave him this grace, and he speaks of what he has actually known.

GATHA 1746 Confession and Sin

Confession, hollow reputation

मराठी मूळ

लाज वाटे मज मानिती हे लोक । हें तों नाहीं एक माझे अंगी ॥1॥
मजुनि झिजलों मापाचिया परी । जाळावी हे थोरी लाभाविण ॥ध्रु.॥
कोमळ कंटक तीक्षण अगरीं । पोचट ते वरी अंगकांति ॥2॥
चित्रींचे लेप शृंगारिलें निकें । जीवेंविण फिकें रूप त्याचें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे दिसें वांयां गेलों देवा । अनुभव ठावा नाहीं तेणें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I feel ashamed that people honor me, for I possess none of the qualities they suppose. I have been worn thin like a measuring cup, and this reputation without substance should be set ablaze.

A thorn may look soft on the outside but is sharp within; the outward glow of skin is only a thin veneer. A painted figure may be decorated beautifully, but without life its beauty is hollow.

Says Tuka, O God, I appear to have lived in vain, for I possess no real experience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I feel ashamed that people honor me, for I have none of the things they think I have. I have worn thin like a measuring cup, and this greatness without substance should be burned. A thorn can look soft outside but is sharp within; the glow of skin is only a thin layer. A painted figure can be dressed up beautifully, but without life its beauty is empty. Tuka says: O God, I seem to have lived in vain, for I have no real experience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the praise he receives into a charge against himself. The honor shames him because he says he lacks the very qualities people assume are his; the reputation is a measuring cup worn smooth from handling, all surface and no contents. He piles up images of hollowness, the soft-looking thorn, the thin gleam of skin, the lifeless painted figure, to insist that decoration without inner life is worthless. Then he lays the fear bare before God: that his life has been wasted because he has no real, lived realization to stand on. This is the saint's self-examination, holding his own emptiness up rather than resting on others' regard.

GATHA 1747 Autobiography

The plain word as bitter medicine

मराठी मूळ

बोलविसी माझें मुख । परी या जना वाटे दुःख ॥1॥
जया जयाची आवडी । तया लागीं तें चरफडी ॥ध्रु.॥
कठीण देतां काढा । जल्पे रोगी मेळवी दाढा ॥2॥
खाऊं नये तें चि मागे । निवारितां रडों लागे ॥3॥
वैद्या भीड काय । अतित्याई जीवें जाय ॥4॥
नये भिडा सांगों आन । पथ्य औषधाकारण ॥5॥
धन माया पुत्र दारा । हे तों आवडी नरका थारा ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे यांत । आवडे ते करा मात ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You make my mouth speak, but the world finds pain in what it hears. Each person resents the medicine that touches their own attachment.

The sick man clamps his jaw and cries when given a bitter remedy. The child demands only what is harmful to eat and weeps when it is withheld.

Should a physician hesitate? If he does, the patient may die of the courtesy. One cannot, out of delicacy, prescribe something other than the proper diet and medicine.

Wealth, illusion, sons, and wife are the beloved lodgings on the road to hell. Says Tuka, among all these, choose what you will and make it your resolve.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You make my mouth speak, but the world finds pain in what it hears. Whatever a person is attached to, that is what stings when it is touched. Give a bitter remedy and the sick man clamps his jaw and complains. The child demands the very thing that will harm it, and cries when it is refused. Should a physician hold back out of politeness? If he does, the patient may die of the courtesy. One cannot, to spare feelings, prescribe anything but the right diet and medicine. Wealth, illusion, sons, and wife are the favorite lodgings on the road to hell. Tuka says: among all these, choose what you like and make it your resolve.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers those who resent his blunt teaching by setting it inside the work of a doctor. God moves his tongue, but the cure tastes bitter, because people flinch exactly where they are most attached, like a sick man rejecting his medicine or a child screaming for what will hurt it. A physician who softens the truth out of politeness lets the patient die of his own kindness, so Tuka refuses to prescribe anything but the real remedy. He names the sweet poisons plainly, the attachment to wealth, family, and the comfort of illusion, calling them pleasant lodgings on the way to ruin. The closing line is hard irony: he has told you the diagnosis; now choose your attachment and live by it if you dare.

GATHA 1748 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, purity tested by fire

मराठी मूळ

पतिव्रते आनंद मनीं । सिंदळ खोंचे व्यभिचारवचनीं ॥1॥
जळो वर्म लागो आगी । शुद्धपण भलें जगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख पुराणीं आचारशीळा । दुःख वाटे अनर्गळा ॥2॥
शूरा उल्हास अंगीं । गांढएा मरण ते प्रसंगीं ॥3॥
शुद्ध सोनें उजळे अगी । हीन काळें धांवे रंगीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तो चि हिरा । घनघायें निवडे पुरा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A faithful wife finds joy in her own mind; a faithless woman flinches at a word about devotion. Let falsehood burn and catch fire; purity alone is blessed in this world.

The righteous find delight in scripture and moral conduct; the dissolute find such talk a torment. The warrior thrills at the prospect of battle; the coward sees death in the same occasion.

Pure gold shines brighter in the fire; base metal only darkens and runs in the heat. Says Tuka, only the true diamond emerges whole from the heaviest blows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A faithful wife is glad at heart; an unfaithful one flinches when devotion is spoken of. Let falsehood burn and catch fire; purity alone is blessed in this world. The disciplined find joy in scripture and right conduct; the loose find such talk a torment. The brave thrill at the chance of battle; the coward sees only death in the same hour. Pure gold shines brighter in the fire; base metal darkens and runs in the heat. Tuka says: only the true diamond comes through the heaviest blows whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up pairs to show that a trial reveals what a person already is. The same word, the same battle, the same fire draws joy from one and dread from another: the faithful wife, the disciplined soul, the brave warrior welcome the test, while the false, the loose, and the cowardly recoil from it. His point is that purity is not threatened by hardship but proved by it, the way fire brightens true gold and exposes the base. The final image carries the weight: only the real diamond survives the heaviest blows uncracked, so let the testing come, since it only confirms what is genuine.

GATHA 1749 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false guide

मराठी मूळ

चालिती आड वाटा । आणिकां द्राविती जे नीटा ॥1॥
न मनीं तयांचे उपकार । नाहीं जोडा तो गंव्हार ॥ध्रु.॥
विष सेवूनि वारी मागें । प्राण जातां जेणें संगें ॥2॥
बुडतां हाक मारी । ठाव नाहीं आणिकां वारी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे न करीं हिंका । गुण घेऊन अवगुण टाका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who lead others astray while pretending to set them on the straight path deserve no gratitude; such a person is truly a fool. One who drinks poison and then asks you to follow, whose company will cost you your life, or one who cries for help while drowning yet pulls others into water where there is no foothold.

Says Tuka, do not quarrel with such people; take whatever good they offer and cast aside the rest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who walk crooked paths themselves while steering others toward the straight road, do not count their help as kindness; such a person is truly a fool. He is one who drinks poison and tells you to follow, whose company would cost you your life, or one who cries for help while drowning and pulls others into water where there is no footing. Tuka says: do not quarrel with such people; take whatever good they offer and throw away the rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against the guide who points you straight while walking crooked himself, the teacher whose own life contradicts his counsel. His images are sharp: the man who drinks poison and invites you to join, the drowning man who clutches at others and drags them into bottomless water, ruin offered in the shape of help. Yet his closing advice is not contempt but discernment: do not waste yourself in fighting such people. Keep whatever truth they happen to carry and let the rest fall away, watching the pattern rather than condemning the person.

GATHA 1750 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, lowest place at Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

कुळींचे दैवत ज्याचें पंढरीनाथ । होईन दासीसुत त्याचे घरीं ॥1॥
शुद्ध यातिकुळवर्णा चाड नाहीं । करीं भलते ठायीं दास तुझा ॥ध्रु.॥
पंढरीस कोणी जाती वारेकरी । होईन त्यांचे घरीं पशुयाति ॥2॥
विठ्ठलचिंतन दिवसरात्रीं ध्यान । होईन पायतन त्याचे पायीं ॥3॥
तुळसीवृंदावन जयाचे अंगणीं । होइन केरसुणी त्याचे घरीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हा चि भाव माझ्या चित्तीं । नाहीं आणिकां गती चाड मज ॥5॥
अवघिया चाडा कुंटित करूनि । लावीं आपुली च गोडी । आशा मनसा तृष्णा कल्पना ।
करूनियां देशधडी । मीतूंपणापासाव गुंतलों । मिथ्या संकल्प तो माझा तोडीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whoever has the Lord of Pandhari as their family deity, I would be born as a servant in their house. I care nothing for caste, lineage, or social standing; make me your devotee anywhere at all.

Whoever goes to Pandhari as a regular pilgrim, I would be born as an animal in their household. Whoever meditates on Vitthal day and night, I would become the sandals on their feet.

Whoever has a tulsi garden in their courtyard, I would be the broom that sweeps their house. Says Tuka, this alone is the longing of my chitta; I desire no other destiny.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever has the Lord of Pandhari as their family deity, I would be born a servant's son in their house. I care nothing for caste, lineage, or rank; make me your servant anywhere at all. Whoever goes to Pandhari as a regular pilgrim, I would be born an animal in their household. Whoever meditates on Vitthal day and night, I would become the sandals on their feet. Whoever has a tulsi garden in their courtyard, I would be the broom that sweeps their house. Tuka says: this alone is the longing of my chitta; I want no other destiny. Bring all my other cravings to a halt and fix me to your own sweetness. Drive out hope, willing, thirst, and imagination; I am tangled in I and mine; cut off this false resolve of mine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures devotion by how low he is willing to go, and keeps lowering the bar. He would rather be a servant, an animal, the sandals on the feet, the broom in the house of anyone who loves Vitthal than hold any high place of his own. The drive of the poem is a complete refusal of status: caste, lineage, and rank mean nothing against nearness to God's lovers. His only longing is to be fixed to that sweetness, so he asks God to halt every other craving, hope, thirst, and fantasy, and to cut the knot of I and mine that keeps him tangled. The lowest place near the devotees is the highest thing he can imagine wanting.

GATHA 1751 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the net of illusion

मराठी मूळ

तुझिये चरणीं माझे दोन्ही पक्ष । अवघी करुनि दाखवीं पिंडी रे रे ॥1॥
माझें साच काय केलें मृगजळ । वर्णा याती कुळ अभिमान । कुमारी भातुकें खेळती कवतुकें । काय त्यांचें साचपण ॥ध्रु.॥
वेगळाल्या भावें चित्ता तडातोडी । केलों देशधडी मायाजाळें । गोत वित्त माय बाप बहिणी सुत ।
बंधुवर्ग माझीं बाळें । एका एक न धरी संबंध पुरलिया । पातलिया जवळी काळें ।
जाणोनियां त्याग सर्वस्वें केला। सांभाळीं आपुलें जाळें ॥2॥
एकां जवळी धरी आणिकां अंतरीं । तीं काय सोयरीं नव्हतीं माझीं । एकांचे पाळण एकांसी भांडण ।
चाड कवणिये काजीं । अधिक असे उणें कवण कवण्या गुणें । हे माव न कळे चि तुझी ।
ह्मणोनि चिंतनीं राहिलों श्रीपती। तुका ह्मणे भाक माझी ॥3॥
आणिकां छळावया जालासी शाहाणा । स्वहिता घातले खानें । आडिके पैके करुनि सायास ।
कृपणें सांचलें धन। न जिरे क्षीर श्वानासी भिक्षतां । याती तयाचा गुण ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I place both my wings at Your feet; show me the whole creation gathered in one body. What is truly mine? Caste, lineage, family, and pride are all a mirage, like little girls playing house with toy utensils, with no reality in their game.

Through conflicting desires my mind was torn apart, and the net of illusion scattered me far from home. Kin, wealth, mother, father, sister, son, brothers, and children: none of them hold any bond once death draws near.

Knowing this, I have renounced everything; now gather me into Your own net. You nurture some and keep others at a distance; were they not all equally my own? You favor one and quarrel with another, and I cannot fathom Your mysterious play.

Says Tuka, I rest in contemplation of You, O Lord; this is my solemn vow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I lay both my wings at your feet; gather the whole of me and show me, made one. What is truly mine? Caste, lineage, family, and pride are all a mirage, like little girls playing house with toy pots; there is no truth in their game. Through clashing desires my mind was torn, and the net of illusion scattered me far from home. Kin, wealth, mother, father, sister, son, brothers, my own children: none holds any bond once death draws near. Knowing this, I have given up everything; now gather me into your own net. You hold some close and keep others at a distance; were they not all my own? You nurture one and quarrel with another; I cannot fathom your strange play. Tuka says: so I rest in remembering you, O Lord; this is my vow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram surrenders by first emptying his hands of everything he once called his own. Caste, family, and pride he names a child's game of toy pots, and even the closest kin, parents, spouse, children, he sees losing all hold the moment death comes near. The net of illusion, maya, had scattered him from his true home by setting his desires at war with each other, so he asks God to gather him instead into God's own net. He admits he cannot understand why the Lord draws some near and holds others off, calling it a play beyond his grasp, and rather than solve the riddle he simply settles into remembrance of God and makes that his single vow. Surrender here is letting go of all false belonging so the only bond left is to God.

GATHA 1752 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, squandering the wish-gem

मराठी मूळ

तारुण्यदशे अधम मातला । दवडी हात पाय कान ॥1॥
काय जालें यांस वांयां कां ठकले । हातीं सांपडलें टाकीतसे ।
घेउनि स्फटिकमणी टाकी चिंतामणी । नागवले आपुले इच्छे ॥ध्रु.॥
सिद्धीं सेविलें सेविती अधम । पात्रासारिखे फळ । सिंपिला मोतीं जन्मलें स्वाती ।
वरुषलें सर्वत्र जळ । कापुस पट नये चि कारणा । तयास पातला काळ ।
तें चि भुजंगें धरिलें कंठीं । मा विष जालें त्याची गरळ ॥2॥
भक्षूनि मिष्टान्न घृतसाकर । सहित सोलुनि केळें । घालुनियां घसां अंगोळया।
हाते वांत करू बळें । कुंथावयाची आवडी बोंबा । उन्हवणी रडवी बाळें ।
तुका ह्मणे जे जैसें करिती । ते पवती तैसीं च फळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Intoxicated by youth, the wretched one squanders hands, feet, and ears. What has happened to these fools who throw away what falls into their hands? They cast aside the wish-fulfilling gem and keep a crystal bead, deceived by their own desires.

What the wise have mastered, the base misuse; the fruit matches the vessel. The pearl is born from the rain-cloud's drop in the oyster, though the same water falls everywhere.

Cotton that cannot serve its purpose meets its doom, and the serpent that wears it around its neck turns it to venom. Says Tuka, whatever one does, one reaps exactly that kind of fruit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Drunk on youth, the wretched one wastes his hands, feet, and ears. What has come over these fools, throwing away what falls into their hands? They keep a crystal bead and cast aside the wish-fulfilling gem, ruined by their own desire. What the wise have mastered, the base misuse; the fruit matches the vessel. The pearl is born when the swati raindrop falls into the oyster, though the same water falls everywhere. Cotton that cannot serve its purpose meets its end; the same thing worn at a serpent's throat turns to venom. Tuka says: whatever a person does, that is exactly the fruit he reaps.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rebukes the man who, intoxicated by youth and vigor, lets his living body run to waste, his hands, feet, and ears spent on nothing. The cruelest folly is in the trade: handed a wish-fulfilling gem, the human birth itself, he tosses it away to clutch a glass bead. The same gift meets very different ends depending on the one who receives it, like one rain that becomes a pearl inside the oyster but ordinary water everywhere else, or a single thing that nourishes in one place and turns to poison at a serpent's throat. The teaching lands as a law of consequence: the vessel decides the fruit, and each person reaps exactly the kind of harvest his own conduct sows.

GATHA 1753 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, refuge of the weary

मराठी मूळ

चंदनाचे गांवीं सर्पांच्या वसति । भोगिते ते होती द्वीपांतरीं ॥1॥
एका ओझें एका लाभ घडे देवा । संचिताचा ठेवा वेगळाला ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षीराची वसति अशुद्ध सेवावें । जवळी तें जावें भोगें दुरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसी बुद्धि ज्याची जड । त्याहुनि दगड बरे देवा ॥3॥
भागलों दातारा सीण जाला भारी । आतां मज तारीं शरणागता ॥ध्रु.॥
नेणतां सोसिली तयाची आटणी । नव्हतां ही कोणी कांहीं माझीं ॥2॥
वर्म नेणें दिशा हिंडती मोकट । इंद्रियें सुनाट दाही दिशा ॥3॥
वेरझारीफेरा सिणलों सायासीं । आतां हृषीकेशी अंगिकारीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मन इंद्रियांचे सोई । धांवे यासी काई करूं आतां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the land of sandalwood dwell serpents, while those who enjoy its fragrance live in distant lands. One carries the burden while another reaps the gain, O God; each one's stored merit is different.

Milk resides nearby yet one must consume the impure; what is close in possession may be far in enjoyment. Says Tuka, one whose intellect is so dull is worse than a stone, O God. I am exhausted, O generous Lord; the weariness has grown heavy.

Now ferry me across, for I have come to You for refuge. In ignorance I endured all that suffering when nothing and no one was truly mine.

Not knowing the secret, the senses roam wild in all ten directions. Worn out by this endless wandering, O Hrishikesha, please accept me now.

Says Tuka, the mind conspires with the senses; what can I do now about their relentless running?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the land of sandalwood the serpents live, while those who enjoy its fragrance live in far-off places. One carries the burden, another reaps the gain, O God; each one's stored merit is its own. Milk is near at hand, yet one must drink what is impure; what is close in owning may be far in enjoying. Tuka says: a mind so dull is worse than a stone, O God. I am worn out, generous Lord; the weariness has grown heavy; now ferry me across, for I have come to you for refuge. In my ignorance I bore all that toil when nothing and no one was truly mine. Not knowing the secret, the senses wander loose in all ten directions. Worn out by this endless going to and fro, O Hrishikesha, accept me now. Tuka says: the mind sides with the senses and runs; what can I do with it now?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begins with the riddle that the one who holds a treasure is often not the one who enjoys it: the serpent guards the sandalwood it cannot smell, milk sits close by while a man drinks what is foul. He reads this as the working of stored karma, each soul carrying its own portion, and calls the mind that cannot grasp this duller than a stone. From the image he turns to plain prayer, exhausted by lifetimes of bearing burdens for things that were never his and chasing after senses that scatter in every direction. He asks Hrishikesha to ferry him across and simply take him in, because the mind keeps siding with the senses and running, and he can no longer manage it alone. The cry is the weary soul handing the whole struggle to God.

GATHA 1754

The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the rare true knower

मराठी मूळ

स्वयें पाक करी । संशय तो चि धरी । संदेहसागरीं। आणीक परी बुडती ॥1॥
जाणे विरळा एक । जालें तेथींचे हें सुख। देखिले बहुतेक । पुसतां वाट चुकले ॥ध्रु.॥
तो चि जाणे सोंवळें । शोधी विकल्पाचीं मुळें । नाचती पाल्हाळें । जे विटाळें कोंडिले ॥2॥
तो चि साधी संधी । सावध त्रिकाळ जो बुद्धी । संदेहाचा संधी। वेठी आणि करियेले ॥3॥
अखंड ते ध्यान । समबिुद्ध समाधान । सोंग वांयांविण । ते झांकून बैसती ॥4॥
करणें जयासाटीं । जो नातुडे कवणे आटी । तुका ह्मणे साटी । चित्तवित्तेंवांचूनि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who cooks the meal himself still harbors doubt; and those who drown in the ocean of suspicion are of yet another kind. Rare is the one who truly knows; that joy belongs only to the one who has been there.

I have seen many who, when asked, have lost their way. Only such a one understands true purity and digs out the roots of delusion; those trapped in defilement merely dance in elaborate display.

Only such a one seizes the right moment, whose intellect remains alert at all three times; he puts doubt itself to forced labor. Their meditation is unbroken, their equanimity steady; without pretense, they simply sit in stillness.

Says Tuka, the purpose for which all this is done cannot be reached by any stratagem without offering one's entire chitta and wealth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who cooks the meal himself still holds doubt; and those who drown in the ocean of suspicion are of yet another kind. Rare is the one who truly knows; that joy belongs only to the one who has been there. I have seen many who, when asked, have lost their way. Only such a one knows real purity and digs out the roots of delusion; those caught in defilement only dance in elaborate display. Only such a one seizes the right moment, whose mind stays alert at all three times; he puts doubt itself to forced labor. Their meditation is unbroken, their balance steady; without any pretense, they simply sit in stillness. Tuka says: the thing all this is done for cannot be reached by any trick, only by giving up one's whole heart and wealth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a line between those who fuss over the outward forms of practice and the rare soul who has actually arrived. Many cook the ritual meal yet still carry doubt, and many more simply drown in suspicion; the real joy belongs only to one who has been there himself. That knower recognizes true purity, pulls up the roots of delusion, and stays awake through past, present, and future, so that doubt itself is put to work for him, while the rest only dance in showy display. His mark is quiet: unbroken attention, steady balance, no performance, just sitting still. The closing line names the price, that the goal yields to no clever method, only to the surrender of one's entire heart and all one holds.

GATHA 1755 Longing and Separation

Longing, holding on through karma

मराठी मूळ

माझिया संचिता । दृढ देखोनि बिळवंता । पळसी पंढरिनाथा । भेणे आतां तयाच्या ॥1॥
तरि मज कळलासी । नव्हतां भेटी जाणीवेसी । एक संपादिसी । मान करिसी लोकांत ॥ध्रु.॥
तरि हें प्रारब्ध जी गाढें । कांहीं न चले तयापुढें । काय तुज म्यां कोंडें । रें सांकडें घालावें ॥2॥
भोगधीपति क्रियमाण । तें तुज नांगवे अजून। तरि का वांयांविण । तुज म्यां सीण करावा ॥3॥
तुज नव्हतां माझें कांहीं । परि मी न संडीं भक्तिसोई । हो कां भलत्या ठायीं । कुळीं जन्म भलतैसा ॥4॥
तूं भितोसि माझिया दोषा । कांहीं मागणें ते आशा । तुका ह्मणे ऐसा । कांहीं न धरीं संकोच ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing the strength of my accumulated karma, O mighty one, You flee, O Lord of Pandhari, afraid of its force. Now I see through You; before we ever met, You were busy earning a name among the people.

If my destiny is indeed so formidable that nothing prevails against it, why should I press You with my burden? The pleasure-lord that is present action still overpowers You even now; then why should I weary You in vain? You owe me nothing, yet I will not abandon the path of devotion, no matter what family or birth I may take. You fear my faults and I fear my hopes may come to nothing.

Says Tuka, do not hold back any such hesitation on my account.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You see how strong my heaped-up karma is, O mighty one, and now You run from it, O Lord of Pandhari. You are afraid. So now I have understood You. Even before we met, You were busy earning a name among people. If my destiny is so hard that nothing can move it, why should I press my burden on You? Present action still overpowers You, even now. Then why should I wear You out for nothing? You owe me nothing, yet I will not let go of devotion, whatever family or birth I am given. You fear my faults, and I fear my hopes will fail. Tuka says: do not hold back any such hesitation on my account.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks half in play and half in earnest, accusing Vitthal of dodging him because his accumulated karma looks too heavy to lift. The teasing carries a real plea: if destiny and present action are stronger even than God, why should either of them keep wrestling over the load. Yet he settles the bargain in his own favor. He drops every claim on God and asks for nothing he is owed, but he refuses to drop his devotion no matter what birth comes next. The mutual fear, God's of Tukaram's sins and Tukaram's of his own unmet hope, is what he asks Vitthal to set aside, so that nothing stands between them.

GATHA 1756 Longing and Separation

Longing, only the sight of the feet

मराठी मूळ

लोकमान देहसुख । संपित्तउपभोग अनेक । विटंबना दुःख । तुझिये भेटीवांचूनि ॥1॥
तरी मज ये भेट ये भेट । काय ठाकलासी नीट । थोर पुण्यें वीट । तुज दैवें चि लाधली ॥ध्रु.॥
काय ब्रह्मज्ञान करूं कोरडें । रितें मावेचें मापाडें । भेटीविण कुडें । तुझिये अवघें मज वाटे ॥2॥ आत्मिस्थतीचा विचार । काय करूं हा उद्धार। न देखतां धीर । चतुर्भुज मज नाहीं ।3॥
रिद्धीसिद्धी काय करूं । अथवा अगम्य विचारू । भेटीविण भारु । तुझिये वाटे मज यांचा ॥4॥
तुजवांचूनि कांहीं व्हावें । ऐसें नको माझिया जीवें। तुका ह्मणे द्यावें । दरुषण पायांचें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Worldly honor, bodily comfort, wealth, and countless pleasures are all torment and misery without meeting You. So grant me this meeting, grant me this meeting.

Why do You stand so firmly apart? Only by great merit has the brick of Pandhari been obtained by sheer fortune. What use is dry knowledge of Brahman, an empty measure of mere appearance? Without meeting You, everything feels hollow to me.

What good is pondering the state of the Self as a means of liberation when I have no patience without seeing Your four-armed form? What shall I do with supernatural powers or unfathomable philosophy? Without meeting You, they are all a burden. Says Tuka, let nothing happen to me apart from You; just grant me the sight of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Worldly honor, bodily comfort, wealth, the many pleasures: without meeting You they are all torment and grief. So grant me this meeting, grant me this meeting. Why do You stand so firmly apart? Only by great merit, by sheer good fortune, has the brick of Pandhari been won. What use is dry knowledge of Brahman, an empty measure of mere appearance? Without meeting You, all of it feels hollow to me. Why should I ponder the state of the Self as a way to be saved, when I have no patience without seeing Your four-armed form? What shall I do with miraculous powers, or with unfathomable philosophy? Without meeting You they are only a burden. Tuka says: let nothing come to me apart from You; just grant me the sight of Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays the whole ladder of human goods at God's feet and calls every rung worthless without the meeting itself. Honor, comfort, and wealth are named as torment; even the high paths, dry knowledge of Brahman, inquiry into the Self, occult powers, deep philosophy, are weighed and refused as empty or as dead weight. He is not condemning these things in themselves; he is saying that liberation pursued as a technique is hollow to a heart that wants the person, not the prize. What he asks for is small and total at once: the simple sight of Vitthal's feet on the brick at Pandhari, which he counts as won by pure grace, not by his own merit.

GATHA 1757 Longing and Separation

Longing, faith that has not yet seen

मराठी मूळ

तुझा ह्मणवून तुज नेणें । ऐसें काय माझें जिणें॥1॥
तरि मज कवणाचा आधार । करोनियां राहों धीर ॥ध्रु.॥
काय शब्दीं चि ऐकिला । भेटी नव्हतां गा विठ्ठला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां । अभय देई पंढरिनाथा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To call myself Yours and yet not know You: what kind of life is this? Then on whose support shall I steady my mind? Have I only heard of You in words, O Vitthal, without ever truly meeting You? Says Tuka, now grant me fearlessness, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To call myself Yours and still not know You: what kind of life is this? Then on whose support shall I steady my mind? Have I only heard of You in words, O Vitthal, and never truly met You? Tuka says: now grant me fearlessness, O Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the ache of a faith that has heard much and seen nothing. He has taken the name of Vitthal's own, yet without direct knowing he feels he has no ground to stand on. The sharp question, have I only heard of You in words, exposes the gap between report and real meeting that secondhand religion leaves open. His closing request is not for proof but for fearlessness, the steadiness that only the meeting itself can give.

GATHA 1758 Prayers

Prayer, show me what You showed the saints

मराठी मूळ

उद्धवअक्रूरासी । आणीक व्यासआंबऋषी । रुक्मांगदाप्रल्हादासी । दाविलें तें दाखवीं ॥1॥
तरि मी पाहेन पाहेन। तुझे श्रीमुखचरण । उताविळ मन । तयाकारणें तेथें ॥ध्रु.॥
जनकश्रुतदेवा करीं । कैसा शोभलासी हरी । विदुराच्या घरीं । कण्या धरी कवतुकें ॥2॥
पांडवा अकांतीं । तेथें पावसी स्मरती । घातलें द्रौपदी । यागीं बिरडें चोळीचें ॥3॥
करी गोपीचें कवतुक । गाईगोपाळांसी सुख । दावीं तें चि मुख । दृष्टी माझ्या आपुलें ॥4॥
तरि तूं अनाथाचा दाता । मागतियां शरणागतां । तुका ह्मणें आतां। कोड पुरवीं हें माझें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What You showed to Uddhava and Akrura, to Vyasa and Ambarisha, to Rukhmangada and Prahlada: show that same vision to me. Then I shall gaze and gaze upon Your blessed face and feet; my mind is restless with longing to be there.

How splendid You appeared in Janaka's court and at Shrutadeva's home, O Hari. At Vidura's house You playfully picked up vegetable peels with delight.

When the Pandavas were in distress, You rushed at their mere remembrance; You supplied Draupadi with endless cloth at the assembly. You played lovingly with the gopis and gave joy to the cowherds and their cattle; show that very face to my eyes.

You are the benefactor of the helpless and the giver to those who seek refuge. Says Tuka, now fulfill this longing of mine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What You showed to Uddhava and Akrura, to Vyasa and Ambarisha, to Rukhmangada and Prahlada: show that same vision to me. Then I will gaze and gaze upon Your blessed face and feet; my mind is restless with longing to be there. How splendid You stood in Janaka's court, and at Shrutadeva's home, O Hari. At Vidura's house You picked up vegetable peels with delight. When the Pandavas were in distress, You came at the mere thought of You; You gave Draupadi endless cloth in the assembly. You played with the gopis and gave joy to the cowherds and the cattle: show that very face to my eyes. You are the giver to the helpless, the refuge of those who seek shelter. Tuka says: now fulfill this longing of mine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up God's past favors to the saints and devotees and asks for nothing less than the same. By naming Uddhava, Prahlada, Vidura, Draupadi, and the gopis, he is reminding Vitthal of a pattern: God has always shown Himself to those who simply loved Him. The point of the list is that the helpless and the lowly, not the great or learned, are the ones He runs to, so Tukaram has standing to ask. His prayer is concrete and physical, the sight of the face and feet, because his restless longing wants presence, not doctrine. The closing claim, You are the giver to the helpless, turns the whole catalogue into a quiet argument: be now to me what You have always been.

GATHA 1759 Prayers

Prayer, the beggar at the door

मराठी मूळ

मागता भिकारी जालों तुझे द्वारीं । देई मज हरी कृपादान ॥1॥
प्रेम प्रीति नाम उचित करावें । भावें संचरावें हृदयामाजी ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्वभावें शरण आलों पांडुरंगा । कृपाळु तूं जगामाजी एक ॥2॥
तापत्रयें माझी तापविली काया । शीतळ व्हावया पाय तुझे ॥3॥
संबंधीं जनवाद पीडलों परोपरी । अंतरलों दुरी तुजसी तेणें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां तुझा शरणागता । करावें सनाथ मायबापा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become a beggar at Your door; grant me the gift of mercy, O Hari. Let love and devotion and Your name fill my heart and dwell within it.

With my whole being I have come to You for shelter, O Panduranga; in all the world, You alone are compassionate. The three afflictions have scorched my body; only Your feet can cool me.

Worldly ties and public opinion have tormented me endlessly and kept me far from You. Says Tuka, I am now Your refugee; make me whole, O mother and father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become a beggar at Your door; grant me the gift of mercy, O Hari. Let love and devotion and Your name take their rightful place; with feeling, let them enter and dwell in my heart. With my whole being I have come to You for shelter, O Panduranga; in all the world You alone are merciful. The three afflictions have scorched my body; only Your feet can cool me. Worldly ties and the talk of people have tormented me again and again, and through them I have been kept far from You. Tuka says: now I am one who has taken Your shelter; make me whole, O mother and father.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes empty-handed and says so, taking the lowest posture, a beggar at the door, to ask only for mercy. He names what is burning him: the three classical afflictions, and the endless pressure of relationships and public opinion that he says have actually held him away from God. His request is not for relief from circumstances but for love, devotion, and the Name to move in and live in his heart. Calling Vitthal both mother and father, he asks the one he counts as the world's only truly merciful one to make him whole, the work a parent does for a helpless child.

GATHA 1760 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false meditator

मराठी मूळ

भाव नाहीं काय मुद्रा वाणी । बैसे बगळा निश्चळ ध्यानीं ॥1॥
नाहीं चाड देवाची कांहीं । छळणें टोंके तस्करघाई ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचा संग । नको शब्द स्पर्शअंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where is the devotion in one whose gestures, posture, and speech are mere show? A crane sits motionless, feigning meditation, but has no love for God; its aim is to deceive and strike like a thief. Says Tuka, avoid even the words and the touch and the company of such a person.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where is the devotion in one whose gestures, posture, and speech are all show? A crane stands stock-still as if deep in meditation, but it has no love for God; its aim is to cheat and to strike like a thief. Tuka says: keep away from such a one; do not take his words, do not let him touch you, do not keep his company.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the image of the crane, perfectly still in the shallows while it waits to spear a fish, to expose the religion that is all posture and no love. The stillness looks like deep meditation, but the motive underneath is to deceive and to take, like a thief. The warning is sharp, avoid his words, his touch, his company, yet it points at a pattern, the use of holy appearance as a tool, rather than asking for contempt of any one person. The honest test it presses on the reader is inward: is my own stillness love of God, or is it a pose that is waiting to catch something.

GATHA 1761

Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, forgetting death

मराठी मूळ

दिनदिन शंका वाटे । आयुष्य नेणवतां गाढें ॥1॥
कैसीं भुललीं बापुडीं । दंबविषयांचे सांकडीं ॥ध्रु.॥
विसरला मरण। त्याची नाहीं आठवण ॥2॥
देखत देखत पाहीं । तुका ह्मणे आठव नाहीं ॥3॥
माझें मज आतां न देखें निरसतां । ह्मणऊन आधार केला । संसाराची आस सांडुनि लौकिक ।
जीव भाव तुज दिला । नव्हतीं माझीं कोणी मी कवणांचा । अर्थ मोहो सांडवला ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Day by day doubt grows; one does not know how swiftly life slips away. How deluded are these poor jivas, hemmed in by the snare of pride and sense pleasures.

They have forgotten death; its memory never visits them. Says Tuka, they watch others die right before their eyes and still take no heed. Now I cannot save myself by my own discernment, so I have taken Your support.

Abandoning worldly hopes and social standing, I have given You my very life and love. No one was ever truly mine, nor I theirs; the delusion of attachment has been dispelled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Day by day the dread grows: we do not know how fast our life is running out. How these poor souls are fooled, hemmed in by the trap of pride and the senses. They have forgotten death; its memory never comes to them. Tuka says: they watch others die before their very eyes, and still it does not occur to them. Now I cannot save myself by my own discernment, so I have made You my support. I have let go of worldly hope and of standing among people, and given my life and heart to You. No one was ever truly mine, and I was no one's; the spell of attachment has been broken.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens with the plain fact people work hardest to avoid: life is draining away faster than anyone reckons, and the trap is pride and the pull of the senses. The cruelest sign of the spell is that we watch others die and still cannot believe it of ourselves. He does not exempt himself; the turn is that he admits his own discernment cannot save him either. So the exhortation becomes a confession of surrender, dropping worldly hope and the opinion of others, and giving life and heart to God. The closing line, that no one was ever truly his and the bond of attachment is broken, names the freedom on the far side of facing death squarely.

GATHA 1762 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the child with no worry

मराठी मूळ

तारीं मारीं करीं भलतें दातारा । होऊन तुझा आतां ठेलों रे ॥1॥
असो माझें कोडें तुज हे सांकडें । मी असेन निवाडें सुखरूप ।
बाळकासी चिंता काय पोटवेथा । जया शिरीं मायबाप ॥ध्रु.॥
पापपुण्यें श्रुति आटिल्या। शास्त्रांस न लगे चि ठाव ।
विधिनिषिधें गोविलीं पुराणें वेदांसी तो अहंभाव ।
ओंकाराचें मूळ व्यापिलें माया । तेथें न धरे च भाव ।
ह्मणऊन काबाड सांडिलें उपसतां । धरिलें तुझें चि नांव ॥2॥
तनमनइंद्रियें ठेवूनि राहिलों । सर्व आशा तुझे पायीं । तप तीर्थ दान करवूं कवणा ।
हातीं अधीन तें मज काई । आहिक्यें परत्रें चाड नाहीं सर्वथा । जन्म सदा मज देहीं ।
मायामोहपाश करीं विष तैसें । तुका ह्मणे माझ्याठायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Save me, strike me, do whatever You will, O generous Lord; I have become Yours now. Let my wishes be Your concern; I shall remain at ease.

Does a child worry about the pangs of hunger when it has a mother and father to care for it? Scripture is exhausted sorting sin and merit; the sacred texts find no foothold. Rules and prohibitions have entangled the Puranas, and even the Vedas carry the taint of ego.

Maya has pervaded the very root of Om, and no conviction can hold there. Therefore I have dropped the struggle of hauling water from that well and have simply taken hold of Your name.

I have placed my body, mind, and senses at Your feet, with all my hopes resting there. I have no capacity for austerity, pilgrimage, or charity; nothing is in my own hands.

I care nothing for this world or the next; let me be born again and again in this body. Says Tuka, make the bonds of illusion and attachment into poison at my doorstep, so I never touch them again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Save me, strike me, do whatever You will, O generous Lord; I have become Yours now. Let my wishes be Your concern; I will stay at ease. Does a child fret over the pangs of hunger when it has a mother and father over it? Scripture wore itself out sorting sin and merit; the sacred texts find no footing. Rules and bans have tangled up the Puranas, and even the Vedas carry the taint of ego. Maya has spread into the very root of Om, and no conviction can hold there. So I have dropped the labor of hauling water from that well and simply taken hold of Your name. I have laid my body, mind, and senses at Your feet, with all my hope resting there. I have no power for austerity, pilgrimage, or charity; nothing is in my own hands. I care nothing for this world or the next; let me be born again and again in this body. Tuka says: turn the bonds of illusion and attachment into poison for me, so I never touch them again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands God the right to do anything to him, rescue or strike, and then explains why he can rest under that: a child with parents over it does not lie awake worried about its own hunger. The radical middle of the poem is his verdict on the texts. He does not deny their authority lightly; he says they exhaust themselves sorting sin and merit, that rules and prohibitions have snarled the Puranas, that even Veda and the root sound Om are reached by Maya and ego. Having found no firm footing there, he stops hauling water from a dry well and grips the one thing he trusts, the Name. The surrender is complete and even fierce: with no power for austerity or pilgrimage of his own, he asks not for heaven but to be reborn here in service, and begs that illusion and attachment be made poison to him so he can never be tempted back.

GATHA 1763 The Power of the Name

The Name, sweeter than every taste

मराठी मूळ

तुझें नाम गोड नाम गोड । पुरे कोड सकळ ही ॥1॥
रसना येरां रसां विटे । घेतां घोट अधिक हें ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिकां रसें मरण गांठी । येणें तुटी संसारें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आहार जाला। हा विठ्ठला आह्मांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your name is sweet, so sweet; it fulfills every longing. The tongue grows tired of all other tastes, yet with every sip of this nectar it wants more.

Other flavors bring death in their wake, but this one severs the bonds of worldly existence. Says Tuka, this name of Vitthal has become our daily sustenance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your name is sweet, so sweet; it satisfies every longing. The tongue grows sick of all other tastes, but with each sip of this it wants more. Other flavors carry death at the end of them; this one cuts the bonds of worldly life. Tuka says: this name of Vitthal has become our food, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the Name against every other pleasure as a taste that does the opposite of what tastes do. Ordinary flavors cloy and tire the tongue, and each one, he says, leads at last to death; the Name alone deepens with every repetition and never satiates. The single sharp claim is that this one taste cuts the knot of worldly existence instead of binding tighter. Calling it his daily food turns devotion into something as constant and bodily as eating: not an occasional rite but the sustenance he lives on.

GATHA 1764 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, full at the feast

मराठी मूळ

धालों सुखें ढेकर देऊं । उमटे जेवूं तोंवरी ॥1॥
क्रीडा करूं निरांजनीं । न पुरे धणी हरिसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघे खेळों अवघ्यामधीं । डाई न पडों ऐसी बुद्धि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वांचवीत। आह्मां सत्ता समर्थ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Filled with bliss, I let out a contented sigh; the belch of satisfaction keeps rising as long as the feast lasts. I play in the pure light of the Absolute; my delight in Hari's company is never enough.

We play freely among all, with the wisdom never to stumble and fall. Says Tuka, the Capable One keeps us alive; His authority sustains us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am full and content, and I let out a satisfied belch; it keeps rising as long as the feast goes on. I play in the pure light of the Absolute; my fill of Hari's company is never enough. We play freely among everyone, with the sense never to stumble and fall. Tuka says: the Capable One keeps us alive; His power holds us up.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the homeliest image of satisfaction, a man so full from a meal that he keeps belching with contentment, and uses it for the soul filled with God. The paradox is deliberate: he is utterly satisfied, yet his fill of Hari's company is never enough, a fullness that keeps wanting more. The play happens in the open, among all people, but with a steadiness that does not trip and fall into the world's snares. He credits none of it to himself; the Capable One, God's own power, is what keeps the devotee alive and standing in that bliss.

GATHA 1765 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the game needs two

मराठी मूळ

एकल्या नव्हे खेळ चांग । धरिला संग ह्मणऊनि॥1॥
उमटे तेव्हां कळे नाद । भेदाभेद निवडेना ॥ध्रु.॥
दुसरा परी एक ऐसा । वजे रिसा निकुरें ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळत्यां कळे । येर खेळे खेळ ह्मुण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A game cannot be played alone, and that is why companionship was taken up. The melody reveals itself only when it sounds; the distinction between difference and unity cannot be sorted out.

The other seems separate, yet is one and the same; even in a quarrel the bond remains. Says Tuka, those who understand will understand; the rest simply play on, calling it a game.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A game is no good played alone, and that is why companionship was taken up. The note is heard only when it sounds; difference and oneness cannot be told apart. The other looks separate, yet is one and the same; even in a quarrel the bond holds. Tuka says: those who know will know; the rest just play on and call it a game.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points at why the one God lets there be a second at all: a game cannot be played alone, so the One takes a companion in order to play. Like a musical note that exists only while it is being sounded, the divine shows itself only in the playing, and in that play difference and unity can no longer be neatly separated. The other player seems separate but is the same, and the bond holds even through quarrel. The closing line draws the line quietly between those who catch the secret of this play and those who keep playing without seeing it for what it is.

GATHA 1766 Autobiography

Autobiography, only the laborer

मराठी मूळ

बोलविले जेणें । तो चि याचें गुहए जाणे ॥1॥
मी तों काबाडाचा धनी । जेवूं मागावें थिंकोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
मजुराच्या हातें । माप जालें गेलें रितें ॥2॥
जाला पुरविता । पांडुरंग माझा पिता॥3॥
मायबापासवें । बाळें कौतुकें खेळावें ॥4॥
जैसा करिती धंदा । तैसा पडोनियां छंदा ॥5॥
त्याच्या साच गाई ह्मैसी । येणें खेळावें मातीशीं ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे बोल । माझा बोलतो विठ्ठल ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who makes me speak is the only one who knows the secret of these words. I am merely the laborer; I must beg humbly for my meal.

Through the hired hand's measure the grain comes and goes, filling and emptying. Panduranga, my father, has become the provider.

Like a child playing happily with its parents, I play whatever game they set before me. His are the true cows and buffaloes; with these one may play in the mud.

Says Tuka, it is Vitthal who speaks my words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who made me speak is the only one who knows the secret of these words. I am only the laborer; I must beg humbly for my meal. Through the hired hand the measure is filled and emptied again. Panduranga, my father, has become the provider. Like a child playing happily with its mother and father, I play whatever game they set for me. His are the true cows and buffaloes; with these one plays in the mud. Tuka says: it is Vitthal who speaks my words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram disowns his own poems at the root: he is the day-laborer, not the master, and only the one who made him speak knows what the words really mean. The grain measure filling and emptying through a hired hand's work is his picture of inspiration passing through him without belonging to him. He casts himself as a child playing whatever game the parents set, and even names the cows and buffaloes as God's own, with the herdboy Krishna behind the image, so that the poet is simply a child playing in the mud of this life. The closing line states it plainly: the words are Vitthal's, not Tuka's, a confession of authorship that is really a confession of surrender.

GATHA 1767 Autobiography

Bafflement, the servant who cannot read his own words

मराठी मूळ

कां हो तुह्मी माझी वदविली वाणी । नेदा हे निवडूनि पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
आणीक म्यां कोणां पुसावा विचार । मुळीं संवसार दुराविला ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वामिसेवा ह्मुण घेतली पदरीं । सांगितलें करीं कारण तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें नाहीं शिकविलें जेणें । तो याच्या वचनें उगा राहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why, O Panduranga, have You set my tongue in motion and yet will not let me sort out the meaning? Whom else shall I consult, when You have estranged me from the world at its very root? I took up this service saying it was the master's work; I do whatever task is assigned. Says Tuka, the one who never taught me these things now sits silent at the sound of these very words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why did you set my tongue going, Panduranga, and then not let me sort out the meaning? Whom else am I to ask? You have cut me off from the world at its very root. I took up this service saying it was the master's work, and I do whatever task you hand me. Tuka says: the one who never taught me these words now sits silent at the sound of them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a servant given speech he does not fully understand. He says Vitthal moved his tongue to sing yet withheld the meaning, and he has no one else to ask because the same God has pulled him away from the world he might once have consulted. He keeps doing the assigned work as the master's own, not his. The closing turn is the strange part: the God who never schooled him in these words now falls silent before them, leaving the singer alone inside speech that came through him but is not his to explain.

GATHA 1768 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the servant's law

मराठी मूळ

सेवकासी आज्ञा स्वामीची प्रमाण । जोंवरी हा प्राण जाय त्याचा ॥1॥
आणिकांचा धाक न धरावा मनीं । निरोपावचनीं टळों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
समय सांभाळूनि आगळें उत्तर । द्यावें भेदी वज्र तपायरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी ह्मणवावें सेवक । खादलें तें हाक अन्न होय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The master's command is the servant's law, to be upheld as long as breath remains. One should fear no one else and never deviate from the master's instruction.

Seizing the right moment, one must deliver a reply so piercing it splits even a thunderbolt. Says Tuka, only then may one be called a true servant; only then does the bread one has eaten become worthy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The master's command is the servant's law, to be kept as long as breath lasts. Fear no one else in your heart; never turn aside from what the master told you. Watch for the right moment, then give an answer so sharp it splits even a thunderbolt. Tuka says: only then may you be called a true servant; only then does the bread you have eaten become honest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out what it costs to call yourself a servant of God. One law governs everything: the master's command, held until the last breath, with no rival fear allowed in the heart and no swerving from instruction. But service here is not meekness. At the right moment the servant must speak a reply hard enough to split a thunderbolt, fearless before anyone but the master. Only such a one earns the title, and only then is the bread he has eaten in that house honestly his.

GATHA 1769 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, no second thought

मराठी मूळ

नये पुसों आज्ञा केली एकसरें । आह्मांसी दुसरें आतां नाहीं ॥1॥
ज्याचें तो बिळवंत सर्व निवारिता । आह्मां काय चिंता करणें लागें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे मज होईल वारिता । तरी काय सत्ता नाहीं हातीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I need not ask; the command was given once for all, and for me there is nothing else now. The one whose command it is, is all-powerful and removes every obstacle; what worry need I carry? Says Tuka, even if someone tries to stop me, is the authority not already in my hands?

IN PLAIN WORDS

I need not ask again; the command was given once for all, and now there is nothing else for me. The one whose command it is, is all-powerful and clears away every obstacle; what worry need I carry? Tuka says: even if someone tries to stop me, is the authority not already in my hands?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram closes the question of doubt. The order has been given once and stands; there is nothing left to deliberate. He hands the whole burden of obstacles to the all-powerful one whose order it is, so anxiety has no place in him. The final line is quietly bold: since the master's command rests in him, the master's authority does too, and no one who tries to stop him can override it. Obedience, in this poem, is its own kind of power.

GATHA 1770 Faith and Trust

Triumph, the servants who noosed Death

मराठी मूळ

बिळवंत आह्मी समर्थाचे दास । घातली या कास किळकाळासी ॥1॥
तेथें मानसाचा कोण आला पाड । उलंघोनि जड गेलों आधीं ॥ध्रु.॥
संसाराचे बळी साधिलें निधान । मारिले दुर्जन षडवर्ग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक उरला धरिता ठाव । येर केले वाव तृणवत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are mighty, for we are servants of the Capable One; we have thrown a noose around the neck of Death itself. What can any mortal do before that? We have already crossed beyond the heavy burden.

We have conquered the forces of worldly existence and secured the treasure; the six inner enemies have been slain. Says Tuka, only the One who holds the ground remains; all else has been reduced to straw.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are mighty, for we are servants of the Capable One; we have thrown a noose around the neck of Death itself. What can any mortal do against that? We crossed beyond the heavy burden long ago. We have conquered the forces of worldly life and seized the treasure; the six inner enemies are slain. Tuka says: only the One who holds the ground remains; everything else we have made worthless as straw.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sings the strength that comes from belonging to God, not from himself. Because they serve the Capable One, the devotees have looped a noose around Death; no mere mortal can touch them, and the heavy load of existence is already behind them. He names the victory plainly: the pull of worldly life is broken, the treasure is won, and the six inner enemies are killed, lust, anger, greed, delusion, pride, and envy. What is left at the end is only the one who holds the ground beneath all things; beside that, every other gain is straw.

GATHA 1771 The Power of the Name

The Name, then the sting of pride

मराठी मूळ

एका गावें आह्मीं विठोबाचे नाम । आणिकांपें काम नाहीं आतां ॥1॥
मोडूनियां वाटा सूक्षम सगर । केला राज्यभार चाले ऐसा ॥ध्रु.॥
लावूनि मृदांग टाळश्रुतिघोष । सेवूं ब्रह्मरस आवडीनें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे महापातकी पतित । ऐसियांचे हित हेळामात्रें ॥3॥
ह्मणोनि पंढरिराया दुखी होतें मन । अंतरींचे कोण जाणे माझें ॥ध्रु.॥
पूज्य जालों अंगा आला अभिमान । पुढील कारण खोळंबलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खूण न कळे चि निरुती। सांपडलों हातीं अहंकाराचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have taken up the single pursuit of Vitthoba's name; we have no business with anyone else now. Breaking off all the side-paths, we have built a royal highway that runs smooth and straight.

With drums and cymbals and the chorus of sacred chanting, we relish the nectar of Brahman with deep love. Says Tuka, even the greatest wrongdoers and the most fallen find their welfare in a single moment of this. Yet, O King of Pandhari, my heart still grieves; who knows the secret ache inside me? I became honored and pride crept into my limbs, and the onward journey stalled.

Says Tuka, the true sign eludes me still; I have fallen into the grip of ego.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have taken up one pursuit only, the name of Vithoba; we have no business with anyone else now. We broke off all the side-paths and built a royal highway that runs straight and smooth. With drum and cymbal and the chorus of sacred song, we drink the nectar of Brahman with love. Tuka says: even the worst sinners, the most fallen, find their good in one moment of this. And yet, King of Pandhari, my heart still grieves; who knows the ache inside me? I became honored, pride crept into me, and the road ahead has stalled. Tuka says: the true sign still escapes me; I have fallen into the grip of ego.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem begins as a victory song of the Name and ends as a confession. Tukaram says they have given themselves to Vithoba's name alone, closing every side-path and building one straight royal road, walking it with drum, cymbal and chant, tasting Brahman as nectar, a path so powerful that even the worst sinner is saved in a single moment of it. Then the song turns inward and dark. Despite all this, his heart grieves over a secret wound: being honored by people has bred pride in him, and that pride has stalled the very journey he was praising. He names the trap exactly, the spiritual progress itself became an occasion for ego, and the true mark of the goal now eludes the man who sang it so confidently.

GATHA 1772 Prayers

Prayer, the boat of stone

मराठी मूळ

आतां काढाकाढी करीं बा पंढरिराया । नाहीं तरी वांयां गेलों दास ॥1॥
जाणतां बैसलों दगडाचे नावे । तिचा धर्म घ्यावे प्राण हा चि ॥ध्रु.॥
मनाचा स्वभाव इंद्रियांचे ओढी । पतनाचे जोडी वरी हांव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाली अंधळ्याची परी । आतां मज हरी वाट दावीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now pull me out, O King of Pandhari, or else Your servant will have perished in vain. Knowingly I boarded a boat of stone; its nature is to sink and take my life.

The mind's habit drags the senses downward, heaping craving upon the threat of a fall. Says Tuka, darkness has closed in like blindness; now, O Hari, show me the way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now pull me out, King of Pandhari, or your servant is lost for nothing. Knowing what I did, I climbed into a boat of stone; its nature is to sink and take my life with it. The mind by habit drags the senses downward, piling craving on top of the danger of falling. Tuka says: darkness has closed in like blindness; now, Hari, show me the way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries for rescue and does not spare himself in the asking. He admits the wreck is his own doing: he boarded a boat of stone with open eyes, and stone can only sink. The image of his own nature is harsh, a mind that habitually drags the senses down, heaping fresh craving onto the already present danger of falling. He confesses he is as good as blind, surrounded by darkness, with no power of his own to find the path. So the whole weight falls on the last line: only Vitthal can pull him out and show him the way.

GATHA 1773 The Moral Ideal

Moral contrast, the same word in two hands

मराठी मूळ

सज्जन तो शब्द सत्य जो मानी । छळी दुर्जन आणिकांसी ॥1॥
एक गुण तो केला दोंठायीं । ज्याचा त्यास पाहीं जैसा तैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
परउपकार घडे तो भला । नाठएाळ तया दया नाहीं ॥3॥
जाणीवंत तो पायरी जाणे । अधम तो नेणे खुंट जैसा॥4॥
हित तें अनहित केलें कैसें । तुका ह्मणे पिसें लागलें यास ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A noble person honors the truth of his word; a wicked one harasses others. The same quality appears in both, yet it returns to each as he deserves.

One who serves others is truly good; the heartless one has no compassion. The wise one recognizes each step of the stairway; the lowly one, like a stump, knows nothing.

Says Tuka, how has what was beneficial been turned into harm? Some madness has seized these people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A good person honors the truth of his word; a wicked one torments others. The same quality shows in both, and it returns to each as he deserves. The one who helps others is truly good; the heartless one has no mercy. The wise person knows each step of the stair; the base one, like a stump, knows nothing. Tuka says: how has what was good for them been turned into harm? Some madness has seized these people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures people by what they do with the same human powers. Speech can be kept truthful by the good or used to torment by the wicked; the gift is identical, but it comes back to each according to how it was used. Goodness is concrete here: helping others, having mercy, knowing how to climb step by step, while the base person stands as senseless as a tree stump. The last line is grief, not contempt: he wonders how people have managed to turn what was meant for their own good into harm, as if a madness had taken hold. The poem invites you to ask which hand you put the same powers into.

GATHA 1774 Prayers

The Name, give me only this

मराठी मूळ

तुझें नाम मुखीं न घेतां आवडी । जिव्हा ते चि घडी झडो माझी ॥1॥
हें मज देई हें मज देई । आणिक दुजें कांहीं न मगें तुज ॥ध्रु.॥
बहिर कान तुझी कीर्ती नाइकतां । पाय न देखतां जात डोळे ॥3॥
मना तुझें ध्यान नाहीं नित्य काळ । धिग तें चांडाळ जळो जळो ॥3॥
हातपाय तेणें पंथ न चलतां । जावे ते अनंता गळोनियां ॥4॥
तुजविण जिणें नाहीं मज चाड । तुका ह्मणे गोड नाम तुझें ॥5॥
ह्मणसी होऊनी निंश्चता । हरूनियां अवघी चिंता । मग जाऊं एकांता

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May my tongue fall off the very moment it fails to utter Your name with love. Give me this, give me this alone; I ask nothing else of You.

Let my ears go deaf if they do not hear Your glory; let my eyes perish if they do not see Your feet. If my mind does not hold Your meditation at all times, then curse that wretched thing; let it burn.

Let the hands and feet that do not walk Your path wither and drop away, O Ananta. Without You I have no desire to live.

Says Tuka, Your name alone is sweet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The moment my tongue fails to speak your name with love, let it fall off that very instant. Give me this, give me this; I ask nothing else of you. If my ears do not hear your glory, let them go deaf; if my eyes do not see your feet, let them perish. If my mind does not hold your meditation at every hour, then curse that wretched thing; let it burn, let it burn. Let the hands and feet that do not walk your path wither and drop away, Ananta. Without you I have no wish to live. Tuka says: your name alone is sweet.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a vow shaped as a string of curses turned on himself. Tukaram asks for one thing only, the name on his tongue, and stakes each organ of his body on it: a tongue that stops praising should fall off, ears that miss God's glory should go deaf, eyes that do not see the feet should perish, a mind that drops the meditation should burn, hands and feet that leave the path should wither away. The violence is the point. He is declaring that a body kept for anything but God is worthless to him, that life without Vitthal holds no desire for him, and that the Name alone is sweet enough to live for.

GATHA 1775 Longing and Separation

Longing, wake before regret

मराठी मूळ

भजन करुं । संसारसंभ्रमें आशा लागे पाठी । तेणें जीवा साटी होईल तुझ्या ॥1॥
सेकीं नाडसील नाडसील । विषयसंगें अवघा नाडसील । मागुता पडसील भवडोहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीर सकळ मायेचा बांधा । यासी नाहीं कधीं अराणूक । करिती तडातोडी
आंत बाहएात्कारीं । ऐसे जाती चारी दिवस वेगीं ॥2॥
मोलाची घडी जाते वांयांविण । न मिळे मोल धन देतां कोडी ।
जागा होई करीं हिताचा उपाय । तुका ह्मणे हाय करिसी मग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You say: become carefree, let all anxiety dissolve, then go into solitude and worship. But worldly ambitions and desires chase after me, endangering my very bond with You.

In the end You will betray Yourself: attachment to sense pleasures will drown You once more in the ocean of birth and death. The body is entirely a construction of illusion and never finds rest; its inner and outer conflicts tear it apart, and so the four brief days pass swiftly.

Each precious moment slips away for nothing; no amount of wealth can buy it back. Wake up and take the path of your own good.

Says Tuka, otherwise you will only cry out in regret later.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You say: become carefree, let every worry dissolve, then go into solitude and worship. But worldly schemes and desires chase after me, and that puts my very bond with you at risk. In the end you betray yourself: clinging to sense pleasures will drown you again in the ocean of birth and death. The body is wholly built of illusion and never finds rest; torn by quarrels within and without, the four short days pass in a rush. Each precious moment slips away for nothing, and no heap of wealth can buy one back. Wake up; take the path of your own good. Tuka says: otherwise you will only cry out in regret later.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers an easy excuse and then turns it into a warning to the soul. The excuse is the promise we keep making, that once we are free of worry we will withdraw and worship, but worldly ambitions keep chasing and that delay endangers the bond with God itself. He says plainly where the delay leads: attachment to pleasures drowns you again in birth and death. He strips the body of glamor, calling it a construction of illusion that never rests and is torn by conflict inside and out, while the brief span of life, the four days, rushes past. The point lands as urgency, not scolding: each moment is priceless and unbuyable, so wake now and choose your own good before the only thing left to do is regret.

GATHA 1776 Prayers

Prayer, the God who runs to his own

मराठी मूळ

कनवाळू कृपाळू भक्तांलागीं मोही । गजेंद्राचा धांवा तुवां केला विठाई ॥1॥
पांडुरंगे ये वो पांडुरंगे । जीवाचे जिवलगे ये वो पांडुरंगे ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्तांच्या कैवारें कष्टलीस विठ्ठले । आंबऋषीकारणें जन्म दाहा घेतले ॥2॥
प्रल्हादाकारणें स्तंभीं अवतार केला । विदारूनि दैत्य प्रेमपान्हा पाजिला ॥3॥
उपमन्याकारणें कैसी धांवसी लवलाहीं । पाजी प्रेमपान्हा क्षीरसागराठायीं ॥4॥
कौरवीं पांचाळी सभेमाजी आणिली । वस्त्रहरणीं वस्त्रें कैसी जाली माउली ॥5॥
दुर्वास पातला धर्मा छळावया वनीं । धांवसी लवलाहीं शाखादेठ घेऊनि ॥6॥
कृपाळू माउली भुक्तिमुक्तिभांडार । करीं माझा अंगीकार तुका ह्मणे विठ्ठले ॥7॥
कवणा पाषाणासी धरूनि भाव । कवणावरी पाव ठेवूं आतां ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Compassionate and merciful, loving toward devotees: You rushed to save the elephant Gajendra, O Vitthal. Come, O Panduranga, come; O dear life of my life, come, O Panduranga.

For the sake of Your devotees You endured hardship, O Vitthal; for Ambarisha You took ten incarnations. For Prahlada You burst forth from the pillar and, tearing apart the demon, nursed him with the milk of love.

For Upamanya You ran without delay and fed him the milk of the cosmic ocean. When the Kauravas dragged Draupadi into the assembly to strip her, You became her mother and supplied endless cloth.

When Durvasa came to torment Dharma in the forest, You rushed with a single leaf-stalk in hand. O compassionate mother, treasury of worldly and spiritual gifts, Says Tuka, accept me, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Compassionate, merciful, drawn with love to your devotees: you rushed to save the elephant Gajendra, Vithai. Come, Panduranga, come; dear life of my life, come, Panduranga. For your devotees' sake you have suffered hardship, Vitthal; for Ambarisha you took ten births. For Prahlada you burst out of the pillar and, tearing the demon apart, fed the child the milk of love. For Upamanya how swiftly you ran, giving him the milk of the ocean of milk. When the Kauravas dragged Draupadi into the hall to strip her, you became her mother and gave cloth without end. When Durvasa came to torment Dharma in the forest, you ran at once with a single leaf-stalk in hand. Compassionate mother, treasury of worldly and spiritual gifts, Tuka says: accept me, Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls on Vitthal by recalling every time God came running for those who loved him. He stacks the rescues one on another: Gajendra the elephant, Ambarisha for whom God took ten births, Prahlada saved when God split the pillar and destroyed the demon, Upamanya fed from the ocean of milk, Draupadi clothed without end when the Kauravas tried to strip her, and Dharma spared from Durvasa's curse by a single leaf-stalk. The point of the list is the plea that follows it. If God has run for all of these, then the same compassionate mother, the treasury of both worldly and spiritual gifts, can run for Tukaram too, and he asks simply to be accepted.

GATHA 1777 The Nature of God

Nondual surrender, can water wash water

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणऊनि निंश्चत राहिलों मनीं । तूं चि सर्वां खाणी देखोनियां ॥1॥
कवणाचें कारण न लगे कांहीं । सर्वांठायीं तूं एक।
जळें जळ काय धोविलें एक । कवण तें पातक हरलें तेथें ।
पापपुण्य हे वासना सकळ । ते तुज समूळ समपिनली ॥2॥
पितरस्वरूपी तूं चि जनादनन। सव्य तें कवण अपसव्य ।
तुका ह्मणे जीत पिंड तुह्मां हातीं। देऊनि निंश्चती मानियेली ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have settled my mind with certainty, seeing that You are the source of all. No one else's help is needed for anything; You are the One in all places.

Can water wash water? What sin is removed there? All notions of sin and merit, every desire, I have surrendered to You entirely. You Yourself are the ancestor-spirit, O Janardana; what is auspicious and what inauspicious before You? Says Tuka, I have placed the living offering into Your hands and accepted the peace that follows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

And so I have settled my mind in peace, seeing that you are the source of all. No one else's help is needed for anything; in every place you alone are. Can water wash water? What sin is removed there? All notions of sin and merit, every craving, I have surrendered to you, root and all. You yourself are the ancestor-spirit, Janardana; before you, what is auspicious and what is not? Tuka says: I have placed the living offering into your hands and taken the peace that follows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches stillness by seeing that there is only one source, and it is God. Since God is everything and everywhere, no other agency is needed and no other can help; the seeker has nowhere else to turn and no need to. The image of water washing water is his way of dissolving the whole machinery of ritual purification: if all is one substance, one cannot scrub another clean, and the very ideas of sin and merit lose their footing. He surrenders those ideas and all desire at the root. Because God is even the ancestor to whom rites are offered, the distinctions of auspicious and inauspicious vanish, and Tukaram simply hands over the living self as the offering and rests in the peace that follows.

GATHA 1778 Prayers

Prayer, the foreigner before Death

मराठी मूळ

सिणलों दातारा करितां वेरझारा । आतां सोडवीं संसारापासोनियां ॥1॥
न सुटे चि बाकी नव्हे झाडापाडा । घातलोंसें खोडा हाडांचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
मायबापें माझीं जीवाचीं सांगाती । तीं देतील हातीं काळाचिया ॥2॥
पडताळूनि सुरी बैसली सेजारीं । यमफासा करीं घेऊनिया ॥3॥
पाठी पोटीं एकें लागलीं सरसीं । नेती नरकापाशीं ओढूनियां ॥4॥
जन साहेभूत असे या सकळां । मी एक निराळा परदेशी ॥5॥
कोणा काकुलती नाहीं कोणे परी । तुजविण हरी कृपाळुवा ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे मज तुझाची भरवसा । ह्मणऊनि आशा मोकलिली ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am weary, O generous Lord, from this endless circling; now free me from this worldly existence. The debt will not clear, the account will not balance; I am shackled in the stocks of these very bones.

My parents, the companions of my life, will hand me over to Death's grip. With knife sharpened and ready, Death sits beside me, noose in hand.

One after another they press upon me from behind and before, dragging me toward hell. The whole world stands united as witness, and I alone am the stranger, the foreigner.

I have no one to plead to, no one at all, except You, O merciful Hari. Says Tuka, my trust is in You alone, and so I have released every other hope.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am worn out, generous Lord, from this endless circling; now free me from this worldly life. The debt will not clear, the account will not balance; I am locked in the stocks made of these bones. My parents, the companions of my life, will hand me over to Death. With knife sharpened and ready, Death sits beside me, noose in hand. One after another they press on me from behind and before, dragging me toward hell. The whole world stands together as witness, and I alone am the stranger, the foreigner. I have no one to plead with, none at all, except you, merciful Hari. Tuka says: my trust is in you alone, and so I have let go of every other hope.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays from the position of a man with nowhere left to run. He is exhausted by the wheel of birth and death, shackled in the stocks of his own body, with a debt of karma that will never balance. He sees no human ally: even parents, the dearest companions, will finally hand him over to Death, who waits at his side with sharpened knife and noose while forces drag him toward hell. The loneliness is total, he calls himself the one foreigner in a world that stands united against him. That total isolation is the whole force of the prayer: with every other hope deliberately released, his trust falls entirely on the merciful Hari, the only one left to plead with.

GATHA 1779 Renunciation

Renunciation, the holy fool everyone mocks

मराठी मूळ

कवणाचा सोइरा नव्हे च सांगाती । अवघियां हातीं अंतरला ॥1॥
निष्काम वेडें ह्मणतील बापुडे । अवघियां सांकडें जाला कैसा ।
माझें ऐसें तया न ह्मणत कोणी । असे रानीं वनीं भलते ठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रातःस्नान करी विभूतिचर्चन । दखोनिया जन निंदा करी ।
कंठीं तुळसीमाळा बैसोनि निराळा । ह्मणती या चांडाळा काय जालें ॥2॥
गातां शंका नाहीं बैसे भलते ठायीं । शिव्या देती आई बाप भाऊ ।
घरी बाइल ह्मणे कोठें व्याली रांड । बरें होतें शंड मरता तरी ॥3॥
जन्मोनि जाला अवघियां वेगळा । ह्मणोनि गोपाळा दुर्लभ तो ।
तुका ह्मणे जो संसारा रुसला । तेणें चि टाकिला सिद्धपंथ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is no one's friend or companion; he has slipped away from everyone's grasp. The selfless one is called a fool by all; how has he become a burden to everyone? No one claims him as their own; he wanders in forests and wilderness, anywhere at all.

He bathes at dawn and smears himself with sacred ash, and seeing this, people mock him. With a tulsi rosary at his throat he sits apart, and they say: what has come over this wretch? He sings without shame in any place he pleases; mother, father, and brother hurl abuse.

His wife at home says: where did the wretched woman give birth to him? Better if he had died a eunuch. Born into the world, he has become separate from all.

Says Tuka, such a one is rare and dear to Gopala; he who has turned away from worldly life has found the proven path.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is no one's relative, no one's companion. He has slipped out of everyone's grasp. They call him a poor fool with no desires. How did he become a burden to all? No one says, this one is mine. He wanders in forests and wild places, anywhere at all. He bathes at dawn. He smears himself with sacred ash. Seeing this, people speak ill of him. A tulsi rosary at his throat, he sits apart, and they say: what has come over this wretch? He sings without fear, sitting wherever he pleases. Mother, father, and brother hurl abuse. His wife at home says: where did the woman give birth to him? It would have been better if he had died. Born into the world, he has become separate from everyone. And so he is dear to Gopala, and hard to find. Tuka says: the one who has turned away from worldly life, that very one has taken the proven path.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the devotee whom the world has cast out and reads that rejection as the very mark of his worth. The bhakta keeps his disciplines, the dawn bath, the ash, the rosary, the open singing of the Name, and for this his own family and neighbors heap scorn and even wish him dead. The poem does not flinch from how total the alienation is: no kin, no companion, no place to belong, only the wilderness. But Tukaram turns the verdict over. The one who has slipped free of all worldly belonging is exactly the one who has become dear to God and rare to find. What the world calls a useless fool is, by the poem's measure, the soul that has actually found the path. The aim of the harshness is not contempt for the scoffers but a question for the listener: which verdict will you trust, the world's or God's.

GATHA 1780 The Saints

The saints, caste does not measure worth

मराठी मूळ

कस्तुरी भिनली जये मृत्तके । तयेसी आणिके कैसी सरी ॥1॥
लोखंडाचे अंगीं लागला परिस । तया आणिकास कैसी सरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी न वजें यातीवरी । पूज्यमान करीं वैष्णवांसी ॥ ।3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When musk has soaked into a lump of earth, how can any other clay compare with it? When the philosopher's stone has touched iron, how can any other substance match it? Says Tuka, I do not judge by caste; I hold the Vaishnavas worthy of worship.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When musk has soaked into a lump of earth, what other clay can equal it? When the philosopher's stone has touched iron, what other metal can equal it? Tuka says: I do not go by birth or caste. I hold the Vaishnavas worthy of worship.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the question of who deserves honor with two images of transformation. Plain earth that has absorbed musk is no longer common earth; iron that the touchstone has touched is no longer base metal. What changes their worth is not their origin but what has entered them. He applies this directly: he will not rank a person by the caste they were born into. The devotee in whom the love of God has soaked is the one he treats as worthy of worship, whatever their birth. The claim is deliberately leveling, and he names it openly.

GATHA 1781 The Power of the Name

The Name, knowledge without devotion is not enough

मराठी मूळ

अनुहात ध्वनि वाहे सकळां पिंडीं । राम नाहीं तोंडीं कैसा तरे ॥1॥
सकळां जीवांमाजी देव आहे खरा । देखिल्या दुसरा विण न तरे ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्ञान सकळांमाजी आहे हें साच । भक्तीविण तें च ब्रह्म नव्हे ॥2॥
काय मुद्रा कळल्या कराव्या सांगतां । दीप न लगतां उन्मनीचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नका पिंडाचें पाळण । स्थापू नारायण आतुडेना ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The unstruck sound resonates in every body, yet without Rama's name on the tongue, how can one be saved? God truly dwells in every living being, but without seeing Him, the other shore is never reached. Knowledge exists in everyone, this is certain, yet without devotion that very knowledge does not become Brahman.

What use are mystical gestures and spoken instructions when the lamp of transcendence has not been lit? Says Tuka, do not try to establish God through mere bodily nurturing; Narayana cannot be grasped that way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The unstruck sound flows in every body. But without Rama on the tongue, how does one cross over? God truly dwells in every living being. But without seeing Him, no one crosses. Knowledge is in everyone, this is true. But without devotion, that knowledge is not Brahman. What use are the gestures you have learned, the instructions you can recite, when the inner lamp has not been lit? Tuka says: do not try to keep God by tending the body. Narayana cannot be held that way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram concedes every claim the yogic and philosophical paths make, then says each is incomplete without the Name and love. Yes, the unstruck inner sound sounds in all, God lives in all, knowledge is latent in all; but a latent truth no one has actually realized saves no one. He names the gap with a sharp image: knowing the gestures and reciting the instructions while the inner lamp stays dark. The corrective is not more technique but devotion, Rama's name on the tongue, the actual seeing of God. The closing warning is against the subtle trap of treating spiritual discipline as the maintenance of a body or a method; Narayana is not gripped by such effort, He is reached through love.

GATHA 1782 Autobiography

Autobiography, not my words but God's

मराठी मूळ

नेणें अर्थ कांहीं नव्हती माझे बोल । विनवितों कोपाल संत झणी ॥1॥
नव्हती माझे बोल बोले पांडुरंग । असे अंगसंगें व्यापूनिया ॥ध्रु.॥
मज मूढा शक्ति कैंचा हा विचार । निगमादिकां पार बोलावया ॥2॥
राम कृष्ण हरी मुकुंदा मुरारि । बोबडा उत्तरीं हें चि ध्यान ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे गुरुकृपेचा आधार । पांडुरंगें भार घेतला माझा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I know nothing of meaning; these words are not my own. I pray the saints will not be angered.

These are not my words; it is Panduranga who speaks, pervading me through and through. How could a fool like me possess such insight, when even the Vedas struggle to express it? Rama, Krishna, Hari, Mukunda, Murari: this stammering repetition is my only meditation.

Says Tuka, I lean on the grace of the guru; Panduranga has taken on my entire burden.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I know nothing of the meaning. These words are not mine. I beg the saints: do not be angry. These are not my words. It is Panduranga who speaks, filling me through and through. How would a fool like me have such understanding, to speak of what is beyond even the Vedas? Rama, Krishna, Hari, Mukunda, Murari: this stammering is my only meditation. Tuka says: I lean on the grace of the guru. Panduranga has taken up my whole burden.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram disclaims authorship of his own verses and hands the credit to God. He addresses the saints first, asking forgiveness in case his words presume too much, then insists the presumption is not his: it is Panduranga who speaks through him. He measures his own capacity honestly, an unlettered man who could not on his own utter truths the Vedas strain to reach, so the speaking must come from elsewhere. His one practice is the simplest, the broken repetition of God's names, and even that he calls his only meditation. The poem rests the whole thing on grace, the guru's and God's, and on the trust that the Lord has shouldered his burden entirely.

GATHA 1783 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the carefree servant

मराठी मूळ

देवासी लागे सकळांसी पोसावें । आह्मां न लगे खावें काय चिंता ॥1॥
देवा विचारावें लागे पापपुण्य । आह्मासी हे जन अवघें भलें ॥ध्रु.॥
देवासी उत्पित्त लागला संहार । आह्मां नाहीं फार थोडें काहीं ॥2॥
देवासी काम लागला धंदा । आह्मासी ते सदा रिकामीक ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी भले देवाहून । विचारितां गुण सर्वभावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God must feed and sustain everyone; we need not worry about what we shall eat. God must weigh sin and merit; for us, all people are simply good.

God must handle creation and destruction; for us, nothing is too much or too little. God must manage all the business and activity; we are forever free and at leisure.

Says Tuka, when you consider it with full consideration, we are actually better off than God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God has to feed and keep everyone. We need not worry about what we will eat. God has to weigh sin and merit. For us, all people are simply good. God has to manage creation and destruction. For us, nothing is too much or too little. God has the work and the business to run. We are always free and at leisure. Tuka says: in truth we are better off than God. Consider it with your whole heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the freedom of total surrender as a kind of holy idleness. He lists the labors that belong to God: feeding all creatures, judging sin and merit, running creation and dissolution, carrying the world's business. Because those duties are God's and not his, the devotee is left with nothing to manage and nothing to fear; he need not even sort people into good and bad, for to him all are good. The tone is playful, even cheeky: he claims to be better off than God Himself, since God works while the servant rests. The point underneath the wit is the logic of surrender. When you genuinely hand the whole burden over, what remains for you is leisure and trust.

GATHA 1784 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, asking only to serve

मराठी मूळ

घेईन मी जन्म याजसाठीं देवा । तुझी चरणसेवा साधावया ॥1॥
हरिनामकीर्तन संतांचे पूजन । घालूं लोटांगण महाद्वारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आनंदें निर्भर असों भलते ठायीं । सुखदुःख नाहीं चाड आह्मां ॥2॥
आणीक सायास न करीं न धरीं आस । होईन उदास सर्व भावें ॥3॥
मोक्ष आह्मां घरीं कामारी ते दासी । होय सांगों तैसी तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I would gladly take birth again for this alone, O God: to practice the service of Your feet. Singing Hari's name, worshipping the saints, bowing prostrate at the great door of the temple.

Let me dwell anywhere in overflowing bliss; I have no concern for pleasure or pain. I will make no other effort and hold no other hope; I will be completely detached in every way.

Says Tuka, liberation waits upon us at home like a maidservant; it does whatever we say.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I would take birth again for this alone, O God: to win the service of Your feet. To sing Hari's name, to worship the saints, to fall full length at the great temple door. Let me live anywhere, full of joy. I have no wish for pleasure or for pain. I will make no other effort and hold no other hope. I will be wholly detached, in every way. Tuka says: liberation waits in our house like a maidservant. It does whatever we tell it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines what a devotee should want from another birth. He does not ask for heaven, comfort, or even release; he asks only for the chance to serve God's feet, to sing the Name, to honor the saints, to prostrate at the temple. With that one desire fixed, every other craving falls away: pleasure and pain become matters of indifference, and he renounces all further striving and hope. The closing line lands the claim. To the one absorbed in such service, the liberation that others chase has become a household servant, near at hand and obedient. By wanting only to serve, he has unknowingly gained the very thing seekers strain after.

GATHA 1785 Devotion to Vitthal

Bold lament, a lawsuit against God

मराठी मूळ

देवा तुज मज पण । पाहों आगळा तो कोण ॥1॥
तरी साच मी पतित । तूं च खोटा दिनानाथ ।
ग्वाही साधुसंत जन। करूनि अंगीं लावीन ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी धरिले भेदाभेद । तुज नव्हे त्याचा छेद ॥2॥
न चले तुझे कांहीं त्यास । आह्मी बळकाविले दोष ॥3॥
दिशा भरल्या माझ्या मनें । लपालासी त्याच्या भेणें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त । करी तुझी माझी नीत ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, let us have a wager, You and I, and see who proves the greater. I am truly a wrongdoer, and You are a false protector of the downtrodden.

I will call the saints and the people as witnesses and prove it against You. We have clung to duality and division, and You cannot cut through it.

Nothing You do prevails against it; we have seized hold of faults with both hands. My mind has filled every direction, and You hide in fear of it.

Says Tuka, let the chitta itself be judge and settle the case between us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God, let us make a wager, You and I, and see who is the greater. Then it is true: I am the sinner, and You are the false protector of the helpless. I will call the saints and the people as witnesses and fasten the charge on You. We have held tight to division and difference, and You have not cut it away. Nothing You do reaches it. We have seized our faults with both hands. My mind has spread into every direction, and You hide in fear of it. Tuka says: let the heart itself be judge and settle the case between You and me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram dares to put God on trial, framing the eternal problem of grace as a courtroom wager. He concedes his own guilt freely, then turns the charge around: if You are called the protector of the fallen and the fallen are still not lifted, then the title is false. He summons the saints as witnesses and presses the suit. The complaint underneath the bravado is real. The devotee cannot, by his own effort, cut through the duality and the faults he clings to, and he accuses God of standing back, even hiding, while the restless mind runs wild. The boldness is itself a form of intimacy and surrender: he asks the inner heart to judge the case, which is a way of throwing the whole impossible knot back into God's hands.

GATHA 1786 True Worship

True worship, God meets only the sincere

मराठी मूळ

लापनिकशब्दें नातुडे हा देव । मनिंचे गुहए भाव शुद्ध बोला ॥1॥
अंतरिंचा भेद जाणे परमानंद । जयासी संवाद करणें लागे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी आपुलें स्वहित । तरी करीं चित्त शुद्धभावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God cannot be reached through cunning speech. Speak the pure truth of your innermost chitta.

The Supreme Bliss knows the secret hidden within; one must converse with Him honestly. Says Tuka, if you truly seek your own good, then purify your mind with sincere devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This God is not caught by clever, flattering words. Speak the pure feeling hidden in your heart. The Supreme Bliss knows the secret within; with Him you must speak honestly. Tuka says: if you truly want your own good, then make your heart pure in its intent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips worship down to inner honesty. God is not deceived or won by smooth, cunning speech, because He already knows the secret of the heart; addressing such a knower with anything but truth is pointless. The instruction is to speak the pure feeling you actually hold inside, not the performance you want others to hear. The closing line ties sincerity to self-interest in the deepest sense: if you genuinely seek your own good, the work is not external eloquence but the purifying of your own intent. Worship, for Tukaram, is finally a matter of what is true within, not what is said without.

GATHA 1787 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, hypocrisy of the unrealized teacher

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे ब्रह्मज्ञान बोलतां सिद्ध । जंव हा आत्मबोध नाहीं चित्तीं ॥1॥
काय करिसी वांयां लटिका चि पाल्हाळ । श्रम तो केवळ जाणिवेचा ॥ध्रु.॥
मी च देव ऐसें सांगसी या लोकां । विषयांच्या सुखा टोंकोनियां ॥2॥
अमृताची गोडी पुढिलां सांगसी। आपण उपवासी मरोनिया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जरि राहील तळमळ । ब्रह्म तें केवळ सदोदित ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Knowledge of Brahman is not attained merely by speaking of it, so long as the Self-awareness has not entered the chitta. Why do you indulge in empty elaboration? All that labor is nothing but the toil of cleverness.

You tell people that you yourself are God while feasting on sense pleasures on the side. You describe the sweetness of nectar to others while you yourself starve and perish.

Says Tuka, only if inner restlessness ceases does pure Brahman reveal itself, ever-present and complete.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Knowledge of Brahman is not perfected by talking about it, so long as Self-awareness has not entered the heart. Why waste yourself in false, empty elaboration? That labor is nothing but the toil of cleverness. You tell people: I myself am God, while on the side you feast on the pleasures of the senses. You describe to others the sweetness of nectar, while you yourself starve and die. Tuka says: only when the inner restlessness ceases is that pure Brahman ever-present and whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the gap between spiritual speech and spiritual experience. Brahman-knowledge spoken from the lips means nothing until Self-realization has actually entered the heart; the elaborate talk of one who lacks it is only the strain of cleverness. He sharpens this with two pictures of hypocrisy: the man who proclaims I am God while quietly indulging every sense pleasure, and the one who praises the taste of nectar to others while himself starving. The aim is not contempt for any particular teacher but a mirror for the listener to check whether his own knowing is lived or merely recited. The test he offers is internal: only when the restlessness of the mind stops does the pure, ever-present Brahman show itself. Words are no substitute for that stillness.

GATHA 1788 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the unstained nature of saints

मराठी मूळ

गंगाजळा पाहीं पाठी पोट नाहीं । अवगुण तो कांहीं अमृतासी ॥1॥
रवि दीप किाळमा काय जाणे हिरा । आणिका तिमिरा नासे तेणे ॥ध्रु.॥
कर्पूरकांडणी काय कोंडा कणी । सिंधू मिळवणीं काय चाले ॥2॥
परिस चिंतामणि आणिकांचा गुणी । पालटे लागोनि नव्हे तैसा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसे जाणा संतजन । सर्वत्र संपूर्ण गगन जैसें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The water of the Ganga has no front or back; there is no flaw in nectar. Do the sun, a lamp, or darkness know what a diamond is? Yet the diamond destroys darkness for everyone around it.

Does camphor powder contain husks or grit? Does anything hold its own when it merges with the ocean? The philosopher's stone and the wish-fulfilling gem transform others by their quality, yet they themselves remain unchanged. Says Tuka, know that the saints are just like this: complete everywhere, like the sky itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look at the water of the Ganga: it has no front and no back. There is no flaw in nectar. Do the sun, a lamp, or the darkness know what a diamond is? Yet the diamond destroys darkness for all around it. Does pounded camphor hold any husk or grit? Does anything keep its own shape once it merges with the ocean? The philosopher's stone and the wish-granting gem transform others by their nature, yet they themselves do not change. Tuka says: know that the saints are just like this, complete everywhere, like the sky itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images of things that are pure through and through, with no hidden flaw, to say what a saint is. The Ganga has no near side or far side, nectar has no defect, camphor has no grit; each is uniform all the way down. He adds the touchstone and the wish-gem, which transform whatever they touch while staying utterly unchanged themselves. The saints, he concludes, are of this kind. They lift and transform others without being altered or diminished, and they are not partial or local but complete everywhere, like the all-pervading sky. The poem is a portrait of a purity that gives endlessly yet loses nothing.

GATHA 1789 Prayers

Prayer, You lose nothing by saving me

मराठी मूळ

परिस काय धातु । फेडितो निभ्रांतु लोहपांगु ॥1॥
काय तयाहूनि जालासी बापुडें । फेडितां सांकडें माझे एक ॥ध्रु.॥
कल्पतरु कोड पुरवितो रोकडा । चिंतामणि खडा चिंतिलें तें ॥2॥
चंदनांच्या वासें वसतां चंदन । होती काष्ठ आन वृक्षयाती ॥3॥
काय त्याचें उणें जालें त्यासी देतां । विचारीं अनंता तुका ह्मणे॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Does the philosopher's stone lose anything? It frees iron from its lowly nature without hesitation. Would You become any poorer, then, by removing this one small difficulty of mine? The wish-fulfilling tree grants desires on the spot; the wish-fulfilling gem yields whatever is thought of.

By living near sandalwood, even ordinary wood becomes fragrant. Does the sandalwood lose anything by giving of itself? Says Tuka, consider this, O Ananta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Does the philosopher's stone lose its substance? Without hesitation, it strips iron of its lowliness. Are You any poorer than that stone, then, if You remove this one trouble of mine? The wish-granting tree fulfills desires on the spot. The wish-fulfilling gem gives whatever is thought of. By living near sandalwood, even ordinary wood becomes fragrant; other trees too take on its scent. Does the sandalwood lose anything by giving of itself? Tuka says: consider this, O Ananta.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads for his own deliverance by arguing that it costs God nothing to grant it. He gathers the familiar transformers, the touchstone that turns iron to gold, the wish-granting tree and gem, the sandalwood that lends its fragrance to plain wood nearby, and notes that none of them is diminished by what it gives. Then he presses the point onto God: if a mere stone freely raises base iron, would You, who are far greater, become poorer by clearing away this one difficulty of mine? The prayer is shrewd as well as humble. It removes every reason God might have to withhold, leaving the request resting entirely on God's generous nature. He closes by asking the Lord, Ananta, simply to think it over.

GATHA 1790 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false teacher who ruins the path

मराठी मूळ

तोडुनि पुष्पवटिका फळवृक्षयाति । बाभळा राखती करुनि सार ॥1॥
कोण हित तेणें देखिलें आपुलें । आणीक पाहिलें सुख काई ॥ध्रु.॥
धान्यें बीजें जेणें जिाळलीं सकळें । पेरितो काळें जिरें बीज ॥2॥
मोडोनिया वाटा पुढिलांची सोय । आडरानें जाय घेउनि लोकां ॥3॥
विषाचें अमृत ठेवूनियां नाम । करितो अधम ब्रह्महत्या ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यास नाइके सांगतां । तया हाल करितां पाप नाहीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He cuts down the flower garden and fruit trees but preserves the thorny acacia as if it were precious. What good has he seen in this for himself, and what joy has he found? He burns all the seeds and grains and sows cumin in their place at the wrong season.

He destroys the road that others follow and leads the people off into trackless wilderness. He labels poison as nectar and commits spiritual murder.

Says Tuka, he will not listen to any counsel; there is no sin in punishing such a one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He cuts down the flower garden and the fruit trees, and guards the thorn bush as if it were precious. What good has he found in this for himself? What joy has he seen? He burns up all the grain and the seed, and sows cumin at the wrong season. He breaks the road that those ahead have made, and leads the people off into trackless wilderness. He puts the name nectar on poison. The base man commits the killing of a soul. Tuka says: he will not listen when anyone tells him. To trouble such a one is no sin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram condemns the false teacher who systematically destroys what nourishes and preserves what harms. Every image is an inversion of right guidance: cutting the fruit trees while saving the thorns, burning good seed and planting useless cumin out of season, tearing up the proven road and dragging followers into the wild. The deepest charge is the last: he labels poison as nectar, calling falsehood the truth, and so commits what Tukaram likens to the murder of a soul, since he leads trusting people to ruin. The poem aims at the pattern, the harm done by one who teaches wrongly and refuses all correction, not at a name. The closing line is severe by design, marking how grave Tukaram holds the offense of leading the trusting astray; the warning is for the listener to recognize and resist such guidance, and to examine whether they are following or becoming it.

GATHA 1791 The Nature of God

Wonder, God who fills all space

मराठी मूळ

संसाराच्या भेणें । पळों न लाहेसें केलें ॥1॥
जेथें तेथें आपण आहे । आह्मीं करावें तें काये ॥ध्रु.॥
एकांतींसी ठाव । तिहीं लोकीं नाहीं वाव ॥2॥
गांवा जातों ऐसें । न लगे ह्मणावें तें कैसें ॥3॥
स्वप्नाचे परी । जागा पाहे तंव घरीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे काये । तुझे घेतले म्यां आहे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have made it so that I cannot even flee from worldly life. Wherever I turn, You are already there; what then am I to do? In all three worlds there is not a single corner of solitude left.

I cannot even say I am going somewhere else, for that makes no sense. It is like a dream: one wakes up and finds oneself right at home.

Says Tuka, what have I ever taken from You that belongs to You?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have made it so that I cannot even run from worldly life. Wherever I go, You are already there. So what am I supposed to do? There is no corner of solitude left, not in any of the three worlds. I cannot even say I am going away somewhere; that makes no sense. It is like a dream: you wake and find yourself right at home. Tuka says: what have I ever taken from You that was Yours?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram wanted to escape the world, but he finds there is nowhere to escape to: God already fills every place. He plays with the idea of fleeing and shows it is absurd, because the one he would flee toward is the same one who is everywhere. Even solitude is impossible; in all three worlds there is no private corner where God is not. The waking-from-a-dream image lands the point: any journey away is illusory, since you only ever arrive back where God already is. The closing question quietly admits there was never anything of his own to defend or carry off.

GATHA 1792 Longing and Separation

Loving complaint, give me what you enjoy

मराठी मूळ

आण काय सादर । विशीं आह्मां कां निष्ठ ॥1॥
केलें भक्त तैसें देई । तुझें प्रेम माझ्याठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय पंगतीस कोंडा । एकांतासी साकरमांडा ॥2॥
काय एकपण । पोतां घालूनि गांठी खूण ॥3॥
काय घ्यावें ऐसें । त्या आपण अनारिसें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मधीं । आतां तोडूं भेद बुद्धी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do You invite me only to ignore me? Why this cruelty toward us in particular? Give Your devotee what befits devotion; let Your love abide in me. Do You serve husks and chaff at the public feast while saving the sweetmeats for when You are alone? Is this what You call oneness: tying a secret knot in the purse? Why should one accept something from You that is different from what You Yourself enjoy? Says Tuka, let us now cut through this veil of discriminating intellect that stands between us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do You invite me and then ignore me? Why are You so hard on us in particular? Give Your devotee what fits devotion; let Your love live in me. Do You serve husks and chaff at the public table and keep the sweets for when You are alone? Is this Your oneness, tying a secret knot in the purse? Why should I take from You something different from what You enjoy Yourself? Tuka says: now let us cut through this dividing mind that stands between us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains to God like a guest who was called to the feast and then served scraps. The image is sharp: chaff at the common table, sweets saved for private favorites, a knot tied secretly in the purse. He is naming a felt distance and refusing to accept it as real love. His demand is bold: he wants exactly what God enjoys, not some lesser portion handed down to a devotee. The closing line points at the cause: the dividing intellect that makes two out of one, and he asks for it to be cut so nothing stands between them.

GATHA 1793 Devotion to Vitthal

Surrender, the fathomless Lord

मराठी मूळ

चित्त तुझ्या पायीं । ठेवुनि जालों उतराई ॥1॥
परि तूं खोटा केशीराजा । अंतपार न कळे तुझा ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी सर्वस्वें उदार । तुज देऊनियां धीर ॥2॥
इंद्रियांची होळी । संवसार दिला बळी ॥3॥
न पडे विसर । तुझा आह्मां निरंतर ॥4॥
प्रेम एकासाटी। तुका ह्मणे न वेचे गांठी ॥5॥
आह्मी पतित ह्मणोनि तुज आलों शरण । करितों चिंतन दिवस रात्रीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have placed my chitta at Your feet and become free of obligation. But You are the deceitful one, O Keshiraja; I cannot fathom Your limits.

I have been generous with everything, giving You my courage and resolve. I have made a bonfire of the senses and offered worldly life as a sacrifice.

My remembrance of You never lapses, not for a single moment. Says Tuka, my love is for You alone, and that is a treasure the purse never exhausts. Because I am fallen, I have come to You for refuge, meditating on You day and night.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have placed my heart at Your feet and become free of debt. But You are the tricky one, O Keshiraja; I cannot find Your far edge. I have given everything freely, handing You my courage and my resolve. I made a bonfire of the senses and offered worldly life as sacrifice. I never forget You, not for a single moment. Tuka says: my love is for You alone, and that treasure never empties from the purse. Because I am fallen, I have come to You for refuge; I think of You day and night.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a total handover: heart at the feet, courage and resolve given away, the senses burned, worldly life offered up. Having given everything, he says he is now free of debt, his side of the account settled. Yet he calls God deceitful and unfathomable, because God Himself stays beyond reckoning even after the devotee has held nothing back. The one thing that never runs out is his love, a purse that pays endlessly without emptying. He ends where the fallen always end: at the feet, taking refuge, keeping God in mind through day and night.

GATHA 1794 Longing and Separation

Challenge, the Lord who must save

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं तरी मज काय होती चाड । धरावया भीड तुज चित्तीं ॥1॥
आह्मां न तारावें तुह्मी काय करावें । सांगीजोजी भावें नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
अन्याय एकाचा अंगीकार करणें। तया हातीं देणें लाज ते चि ।
काय ते शूरत्व मिरवूनि बोलणें । जनामाजी दावणें बळरया ॥2॥
पोहएा अन्नछत्र घालूनियां घरीं । दंडितो बाहेरी आलियासी ।
नव्हे कीर्त कांहीं न माने लोकां । काय विटंबणा तैसी ॥3॥
प्रत्यक्षासी काय द्यावें हें प्रमाण । पाहातां दर्पण साक्ष काई ।
तुका ह्मणे तरी आह्मां का न कळे । तरलों किंवा आह्मी नाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You will not save me, what reason would I have to hold You in my chitta? If You will not ferry us across, what purpose do You serve? Tell me plainly, O Narayana. To take the side of one and accept his wrongs, and then to hand him the same old shame: what kind of valor is it merely to boast and show off strength before the crowd? One opens a charity kitchen at home and then beats away the very ones who arrive at the door.

This is no glory; the people will not accept it. What more proof can one give when the truth stands in plain sight? A mirror needs no further witness.

Says Tuka, do we not know, then, whether we have been saved or not?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If You will not save me, why would I hold You in my heart at all? If You will not carry us across, what use are You? Tell me plainly, O Narayana. To take someone's side, accept his faults, and then hand him the same old shame: what kind of courage is that, just boasting and showing off strength before the crowd? A man opens a free kitchen at his house and then beats away the very ones who come to the door. That is no glory; people will not accept it. What proof is needed when the truth is in plain sight? A mirror needs no other witness. Tuka says: do we not know, then, whether we have been saved or not?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a blunt argument: a savior who does not save is no savior, and there is no reason to keep him in the heart. He uses two stinging images of false generosity. One who takes your side only to shame you again is merely posturing for the crowd, and one who runs a charity kitchen yet drives away the hungry shames himself, not them. The mirror line says the failure is self-evident; no further testimony is needed than what anyone can see. The closing question turns the demand into something the devotee can already read for himself: whether he has truly been ferried across is plain, and God's refusal to act would show plainly too.

GATHA 1795 Krishna Leela

Praise, the Lord of childhood deeds

मराठी मूळ

काग बग रिठा मारिले बाळपणीं । अवघी दैत्यखाणी बुडविली ॥1॥
तो मज दावा तो मज दावा । नंदनंदन जीवा आवडे तो ॥ध्रु.॥
गोवर्धन गिरी उचलिला करीं । गोकुळ भीतरी राखियेलें ॥2॥
बघुनि भौमासुरा आणिल्या गोपांगना । राज्य उग्रसेना मथुरेचें ॥3॥
पांडव जोहरीं राखिले कुसरी । विवराभीतरीं चालविले॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हा भक्तांचा कृपाळ । दुष्टजना काळ नारायण ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In childhood He killed Kaga, Baka, and the demon Ritha, and drowned the entire race of demons. Show me that one, show me that one: the son of Nanda whom my jiva adores.

He lifted Mount Govardhan on His hand and sheltered all of Gokula within it. He slew Bhaumasura and brought back the captive women; He restored the kingdom of Mathura to Ugrasena.

He guided the Pandavas through every peril and led them safely through hidden passages. Says Tuka, He is merciful to devotees and is Death itself to the wicked. That is Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In childhood He killed Kaga, Baka, and the demon Ritha, and drowned the whole brood of demons. Show me that one, show me that one: the son of Nanda whom my soul loves. He lifted Mount Govardhan on His hand and kept all of Gokula safe under it. He killed Bhaumasura and brought back the captured women; He gave the kingdom of Mathura back to Ugrasena. He guided the Pandavas through every danger and led them safely through hidden passages. Tuka says: He is merciful to His devotees and is death itself to the wicked. That is Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a song of Krishna's deeds, sung as longing to see the one the soul loves. Tukaram lists the rescues from the Krishna stories: the demons of childhood killed, Govardhan raised to shelter Gokula, Bhaumasura slain and his captives freed, the throne returned to Ugrasena, the Pandavas led safely through every trap. The repeated cry to be shown the son of Nanda turns the catalogue of power into a lover's plea: the same Krishna who shielded all of these, let me only see Him. The closing line names the rule running through every story: mercy to those who love Him, death to the wicked. That, says Tukaram, is Narayana.

GATHA 1796 The Power of the Name

The Name, the tongue that calls no other

मराठी मूळ

तुजविण देवा । कोणा ह्मणे माझी जिव्हा ॥1॥
तरि हे हो कां शतखंड । पडो झडोनियां रांड ॥ध्रु.॥
कांहीं इच्छेसाटीं । करिल वळवळ करंटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कर । कटीं तयाचा विसर॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If my tongue ever calls upon anyone but You, O God, let it be shattered into a hundred pieces and fall away. If it should wag even slightly for the sake of some petty desire, let it be called wretched and worthless.

Says Tuka, let anyone who forgets You have their hands cut away at the waist.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If my tongue ever calls on anyone but You, O God, let it break into a hundred pieces and fall away. Let such a wretched tongue be cast off. If it so much as wags for some petty desire, let it be called worthless. Tuka says: let anyone who forgets You have his hands struck off at the waist.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram swears a fierce oath of single-pointed loyalty to the Name. The violent images, a tongue shattered, hands struck off, are aimed at himself and at his own faculties, not at any other person; they are the form his vow takes. He will not let his tongue beg from anyone but God, and not even for a small worldly want. The harshness measures the seriousness: the mouth and hands exist to call on God and serve Him, and to turn them elsewhere is to make them worthless. The point is not cruelty but a refusal to let any part of himself drift to a second object.

GATHA 1797 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one needed work

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां सर्वभावें हें चि काम । न विसंभावें तुझें नाम॥1॥
न लगे करावी हे चिंता । तरणें करणें काय आतां॥ध्रु.॥
आसनीं भोजनीं शयनीं । दुजें नाहीं ध्यानीं मनीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपानिधी । माझी तोडिली उपाधी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With all my being, this alone is my work: never to lose hold of Your name. There is no need for any other worry now about crossing over or achieving anything.

In sitting, in eating, in sleeping, nothing else occupies my thought and my mind. Says Tuka, O treasury of mercy, You have severed all my entanglements.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With all my being, this alone is my work: never to let go of Your name. There is no need to worry now about crossing over or achieving anything. In sitting, in eating, in sleeping, nothing else fills my thought and my mind. Tuka says: O treasury of mercy, You have cut away all my entanglements.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reduces the whole of practice to one thing: holding the Name without a break. Once that grip is constant, the old anxieties fall away, since crossing the world and reaching any goal are no longer separate tasks to fret over. The Name saturates every ordinary moment, sitting, eating, sleeping, until there is simply no room left for a second thing in the mind. He credits the result entirely to God's mercy: it is God who has severed the tangles, not the devotee's own effort. The poem rests in that ease, where remembering is everything and striving has ended.

GATHA 1798 Renunciation

Renunciation, the grace of the saints

मराठी मूळ

नव्हें कांहीं कवणाचा । भाव जाणवला साचा ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि तुझ्या पायीं । जीव ठेविला निश्चयीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीर जायाचें कोंपट । याची काय खटपट ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वांयांविण । देवा कळों आला सीण ॥3॥
काय सांगू आता संताचे उपकार। मज निरंतर जागविसी।।1।।
काय दयावे त्यासी व्हावे उतराई। ठेवीना हापायी जीव थोडा।।धृ।।
सहज बोलणे हीत उपदेश। करुनी सायास शिकवीती।।2।।
तुका म्हणे वत्स धेनू वेद चित्ती। तैसे मज येती सांभाळीती।।3।।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Nothing of anyone's proved to be true; the real nature of things has revealed itself. Therefore I have placed my life at Your feet with firm resolve.

The body is a cage that belongs to death; why fuss over it? Says Tuka, the futile weariness of it all has become clear, O God. How can I describe the saints' grace upon me? They keep me awake at every moment.

How can I repay them and become free of obligation? Even if I lay down my small life at their feet, it is not enough. Their simple speech is itself teaching and guidance; they take pains to instruct me.

Says Tuka, like a cow tending her calf with the Vedas in her chitta, so do the saints look after me and protect me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Nothing of anyone's turned out to be true; the real nature of things has shown itself to me. So I have placed my life at Your feet for good. The body is a hut that belongs to death; why fuss over it? Tuka says: the useless weariness of it all has become clear, O God. How can I tell of the saints' kindness to me? They keep me awake at every moment. How can I repay them and be free of debt? Even laying down my small life at their feet is not enough. Their plain speech is itself teaching and guidance; they take pains to instruct me. Tuka says: as a cow tends her calf with the Vedas in her heart, so the saints look after me and protect me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has seen through the world: nothing that belongs to anyone proved real, and the body is only a hut already promised to death, not worth fussing over. Seeing this, he lays his whole life at God's feet once and for all and lets go of futile striving. The poem then turns to the saints, whose constant grace keeps him awake and watchful. He feels a debt to them he can never repay; even offering his life would not settle it. Their ordinary speech is itself instruction, and they tend him as a cow tends her calf, watchful and protective, with the Vedas held in the heart.

GATHA 1801 The Necessity of Experience

Nondual insight, the rope and the gold

मराठी मूळ

रज्जु धरूनियां हातीं । भेडसाविलीं नेणतीं । कळों येतां चित्तीं । दोरी दोघां सारिखी ॥1॥
तुह्मांआह्मांमध्यें हरी । जाली होती तैसी परी । मृगजळाच्या पुरीं । ठाव पाहों तरावया ॥ध्रु.॥
सरी चिताक भोंवरी । अळंकाराचिया परी । नामें जालीं दुरी । एक सोनें आटितां ॥2॥
पिसांचीं पारवीं । करोनि बाजागिरी दावी । तुका ह्मणे तेवीं । मज नको चाळवूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Holding a rope in hand, the ignorant were frightened; once recognized, the rope appears the same to both. Between You and us, O Hari, the same thing happened: we searched for a place to stand in the flood of a mirage.

A chain, a necklace, a bracelet, a ring: ornaments are many in name, but when melted down, only one gold remains. A juggler makes pigeons dance with strings and calls it a show.

Says Tuka, do not beguile me in that fashion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Holding a rope in hand, the ignorant were frightened; once it is seen for what it is, the rope looks the same to both. Between You and us, O Hari, the same thing happened: we were looking for a place to stand in a flood of mirage water. A chain, a brooch, a bracelet, a ring: ornaments have many names, but melt them down and only one gold is left. A juggler makes pigeons dance on strings and calls it a show. Tuka says: do not fool me like that.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses three classic images of mistaken seeing. The rope feared as a snake stops frightening once it is recognized, and then it looks the same to everyone. The mirage offered no real ground to stand on, yet they kept searching the flood for footing. The ornaments make the deepest point: many names and shapes, but melted down, one single gold, just as the seeming separation between God and devotee dissolves into one. Then he turns sharp. The juggler dangling pigeons on strings is a staged trick, and he tells Hari plainly: do not put on that show for me. He wants the recognition, not the illusion.

GATHA 1802 Devotion to Vitthal

Mock-refusal, I lack nothing

मराठी मूळ

नेघें तुझें नाम । न करीं सांगितलें काम ॥1॥
वाढे वचनें वचन । दोष उच्चारितां गुण ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां तुझ्या घरा । कोण करी येरझारा ॥2 ॥
तुका ह्मणे ठायीं । मजपाशीं काय नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will not take Your name; I will not do the work You assign. Words breed words, and faults multiply when one tries to speak of virtues.

Now who will keep making trips to Your door? Says Tuka, do I not have everything already here with me?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will not take Your name; I will not do the work You give me. Words only breed more words, and faults multiply when you try to speak of virtues. Now who will keep making trips to Your door? Tuka says: do I not have everything already, right here with me?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a teasing refusal, a lover's bluff rather than real apostasy. Tukaram pretends to quit the relationship: no more taking the Name, no more errands at God's command, no more wearing a path to God's door. His complaint is that talk leads only to more talk, and that trying to praise God's virtues somehow only stirs up faults. But the closing line gives the game away: he says he already has everything with him. The point is that God is not somewhere else to be visited or served at a distance; the fullness the devotee was running toward is already present where he stands.

GATHA 1803 Devotion to Vitthal

Loving reproach, the hide-and-seek God

मराठी मूळ

व्यवहार तो खोटा । आतां न वजों तुझ्या वाटा॥1॥
एका नामा नाहीं ताळ । केली सहजरांची माळ ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहों जातां घाई। खेळसी लपंडाई ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चार । बहु करितोसी फार॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your dealings are false; I will no longer walk Your road. There is no consistency even in a single name; You have strung a garland of random beads.

When I look closely, it becomes a battle; You play a game of hide and seek. Says Tuka, You make much ado over nothing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your dealings are false; I will not walk Your road any longer. There is no steadiness even in a single name; You have strung a garland of random beads. When I look closely it turns into a fight; You play a game of hide and seek. Tuka says: You make a great fuss over nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram scolds God in the voice of an exasperated devotee. He accuses God of crooked dealings and threatens to stop following the path, but the tone is intimacy, not rejection. The complaints are about elusiveness: not even one steady name to hold, a garland of mismatched beads, a search that turns into a struggle, a Lord who hides as soon as you look for Him. The closing line, that God makes much ado over nothing, names the experience of seeking a God who keeps slipping away and dramatizing the chase. Underneath the reproach is the longing of someone who cannot find the one he refuses to stop looking for.

GATHA 1804 Devotion to Vitthal

Loving reproach, the exposed show

मराठी मूळ

लटिका चि केला । सोंग पसारा दाविला ॥1॥
अवघा बुडालासी ऋणें । बहुतांचे देणें घेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
लावियेलीं चाळा। बहू दावूनि पुतळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हात । आह्मी अवरिली मात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It was all a pretense; the whole display was just a show. You are drowned in debts, with borrowings and lendings on every side.

You dangled temptations and showed off Your image to lure people in. Says Tuka, we have caught on; we have put a stop to this game.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It was all a fake; the whole spread was just a show. You are drowning in debts, with borrowing and lending on every side. You dangled temptations and showed off Your image to lure people in. Tuka says: we have caught on; we have put a stop to this game.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram talks to God as if catching out a clever trickster. He calls the visible world a staged display, a show with nothing solid behind it, a business buried in debts of giving and taking on every side. God is pictured as luring people in by dangling temptations and parading His form. But the closing line is the turn: the devotee says he has seen through it and stopped the game. The reproach is really a claim of arrival. Once you recognize the display as display, its pull over you ends, and that recognition is itself the freedom Tukaram is announcing.

GATHA 1805 Devotion to Vitthal

Reproach, the hope that ruined me

मराठी मूळ

दाखवूनि आस । केला बहुतांचा नास ॥1॥
थोंटा झोडा शिरोमणी । भेटलासी नागवणी ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखाचें उत्तर । नाहीं मुदलासी थार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय । तुझे घ्यावें उरे हाय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By dangling hope You have ruined many. A stumbling, bumbling impostor, that is what You are: You came only to strip us bare.

There is no comfortable answer; the very principal has no footing. Says Tuka, what should one take from You when only a sigh remains?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You held out hope, and so You ruined many. You are a stumbling, bumbling fraud, a chief among them; You came to me only to strip me bare. There is no comforting answer here. The very capital is gone; nothing is left to stand on. Tuka says: what is there to take from You, when only a sigh remains?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is scolding God in the voice of a man who staked everything on a promise and was left empty. He says the hope God dangled is exactly what undid him and many others: it drew him in, then stripped him of all he had. He even calls God a fraud and a thief, not in real contempt but in the bitter intimacy of a lover who has lost the principal and not just the profit. The complaint hides its true claim: a person who gives himself wholly to God is left with nothing of his own to bargain with, only a sigh, and that emptying is itself the point.

GATHA 1806 Devotion to Vitthal

Reproach, the shameless thief

मराठी मूळ

लाज ना विचार । बाजारी तूं भांडखोर ॥1॥
ऐसें ज्याणें व्हावें । त्याची गांठी तुजसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
फेडिसी लंगोटी । घेसी सकळांसी तुटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चोरा । तुला आप ना दुसरा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have no shame and no discretion; You are a brawler in the marketplace. Only one who deserves such treatment should tie his fate with Yours.

You strip off even the loincloth and swindle everyone. Says Tuka, You thief, You have neither self nor other.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have no shame and no sense; You are a brawler in the marketplace. Only someone who wants such treatment should tie his fate to Yours. You strip off even the loincloth; You leave everyone bankrupt. Tuka says: You thief, You have no self and no other.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram keeps up the lover's quarrel, calling God a shameless market brawler who picks fights and robs whoever comes near. The warning is half a joke: only someone ready to lose everything should bind his life to this one, because God takes even the last covering, the loincloth, and leaves the devotee with nothing. The closing line turns the insult into the truth it was hiding: this thief has no self and no other, no inside and no outside, so to be robbed by God is to be emptied of the very line between mine and not-mine. The harshness points at how total surrender feels from inside, not at any flaw in God.

GATHA 1807 The Nature of God

The hidden God, here yet nowhere

मराठी मूळ

ठाव नाहीं बुड । घरें वसविसी कुड ॥1॥
भलते ठायीं तुझा वास । सदा एरवी उदास ॥ध्रु.॥
जागा ना निजेला । धाला ना भुकेला ॥2॥
न पुसतां भलें । तुका ह्मणे बुझें बोलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have no foundation and no bottom; You build houses on pure illusion. Your dwelling is wherever You please; otherwise You are utterly indifferent.

You are neither awake nor asleep, neither full nor hungry. Says Tuka, unless one asks, You speak sweetly and sensibly enough.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have no ground and no bottom; You build Your houses out of illusion. You live wherever You please, and otherwise You are utterly aloof. You are neither awake nor asleep, neither full nor hungry. Tuka says: unless someone asks, You speak sweetly and sensibly enough.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the strangeness of God's being. God rests on no foundation and has no bottom to plumb; whatever dwelling He seems to take is built on appearance, and He is at home anywhere yet attached to nowhere. He is past all the pairs we live by: not waking, not sleeping, not satisfied, not in need. The last line catches the catch: God seems reasonable and sweet only as long as you do not press Him with questions, because His real nature has no edges for our questions to grasp.

GATHA 1808 Devotion to Vitthal

Humility, the dog at the master's feet

मराठी मूळ

श्वाना दिली सवे । पायांभोंवतें तें भोंवे ॥1॥
तैसी जाली मज परी । वसे निकट सेजारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जेवितां जवळी । येऊनियां पुंस घोळी ॥2॥
कोपेल तो घनी । तुका ह्मणे नेणें मनीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A dog is given companionship and it circles around one's feet. That is exactly my condition: You dwell close beside me, right next door.

When I sit down to eat You come near, wagging and fawning. Says Tuka, whether the master is angry or not, the dog does not take it to mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give a dog a little kindness and it keeps circling your feet. That is just my condition: You live close beside me, right next door. When I sit to eat, You come near, wagging and fawning. Tuka says: whether the master is angry or not, the dog does not hold it in its mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes himself the dog and God the close neighbor whose company he cannot leave. A dog that has once been shown affection circles its master's feet and crowds in at mealtime, hoping and fawning; that, he says, is exactly how he hangs about God. The point of the image is the dog's trust: it does not brood over whether the master is pleased or angry, it simply stays near. Tukaram is naming the kind of devotion that does not keep score of God's moods but clings to nearness itself, free of calculation.

GATHA 1809 Confession and Sin

Confession, the babbling tongue

मराठी मूळ

वटवट केली । न विचारितां मना आली ॥1॥
मज कराल तें क्षमा । कैसें नेणों पुरुषोत्तमा ॥ध्रु.॥
उचित न कळे । जिव्हा भलतें चि बरळे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं । लौकिकाची चाड नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have blurted out whatever came to mind without thinking. Forgive me for all of it, O Purushottama; I know no better.

I do not know what is proper; my tongue babbles whatever it likes. Says Tuka, I have no concern for public decorum.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have chattered on, saying whatever came to mind without thinking. Forgive me all of it, O Purushottama; I know no better. I do not know what is proper; my tongue blurts whatever it likes. Tuka says: I have no care for what people think is decent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram owns the looseness of his own speech and asks pardon for it. He admits he says whatever rises in him, with no measuring of what is fitting, and calls himself simply ignorant of the right way to speak before God. Then he names the deeper freedom underneath the confession: he no longer cares about public decorum, the social judgment of what is proper. The apology turns into a kind of release, the babbling of a child who trusts that the one he speaks to will forgive rather than judge.

GATHA 1810 Faith and Trust

Vow, staking the whole life

मराठी मूळ

जीवें व्हावें साटी । पडे संवसारें तुटी ॥1॥
ऐशीं बोलिलों वचनें । सवें घेउनि नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं जन्मा आलों । करील ऐसें नेदीं बोलों ॥2॥
ठाव पुसी सेणें । तुका ह्मणे खुंटी येणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One must stake one's very life; that is what breaks the bond with worldly existence. I have spoken such words and taken Narayana along with me.

I did not come into this world to let anyone say otherwise; I will not allow it. Says Tuka, cow dung cleans the ground; by this, the post is firmly planted.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You must stake your very life; that is what breaks the bond with this world. I have spoken such words, taking Narayana along with me as my witness. I did not come into this world to let anyone say otherwise; I will not allow it. Tuka says: as cow dung cleans and seals the ground, by this the post stands firmly fixed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is declaring a vow and naming its cost: the bond with worldly existence breaks only when you wager your whole life, nothing less. He says he has spoken these words with Narayana himself standing beside him, so they are not loose talk but a pledge made before God. He refuses to let anyone soften or unsay it. The closing image makes it solid: just as a smear of cow dung sets and seals a floor, this vow has been packed down so the post of his resolve stands fixed and cannot be pulled loose.

GATHA 1811 Prayers

Prayer, take away my fear

मराठी मूळ

आता पंढरीराया । माझ्या निरसावें भया ॥1॥
मनीं राहिली आशंका । स्वामिभयाची सेवका ॥ध्रु.॥
ठेवा माथां हात । कांहीं बोला अभयमात ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाडें । खेळें ऐसें करा पुढें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, O King of Pandhari, dispel my fear. A servant's mind always holds the dread of displeasing the master.

Place Your hand upon my head and speak some word of assurance. Says Tuka, play with me lovingly like this going forward.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, O King of Pandhari, take my fear away. A dread stays in my mind, the servant's fear of the master. Place Your hand on my head; speak some word of assurance. Tuka says: from now on, play with me lovingly, like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for the one thing fear leaves him needing: release from fear itself. He names it precisely as a servant's dread of his master, the worry of having displeased the one he serves. So he asks for the gestures that quiet that dread, a hand laid on his head and a spoken word of safety. The last line shows what he is really after:

not distance and obedience but closeness, a Lord who plays with him affectionately rather than one he must tremble before.

GATHA 1812 Devotion to Vitthal

Intimacy, the child's babbling speech

मराठी मूळ

कवतुकवाणें । बोलों बोबडए वचनें ॥1॥
हें तों नसावें अंतरीं । आह्मां धरायाचें दुरी ॥ध्रु.॥
स्तुति तैसी निंदा । माना सम चि गोविंदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोलें । मज तुह्मी शिकविलें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I speak playful, babbling words like a child. But let this not create any distance between us; do not hold us away because of it.

Praise and blame, O Govinda, consider them equal. Says Tuka, it is You who taught me to speak this way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the joy of it, I speak in babbling, childish words. Do not let this come between us in Your heart; do not hold me at a distance for it. Praise and blame, O Govinda, count them the same. Tuka says: it was You who taught me to speak this way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers his rough, playful speech as a child's babble and asks that it not become a wall between him and God. He fears God taking offense and keeping him at arm's length, so he pleads for that not to happen. Then he asks God to hold praise and blame as equal, refusing to weigh his words on a scale of merit. The disarming close puts the responsibility back on God: if Tukaram speaks so freely and even rudely, it is because God himself taught him this childlike, unguarded way of talking.

GATHA 1813 Prayers

Prayer, let the past be past

मराठी मूळ

असो मागें जालें । पुढें गोड तें चांगलें ॥1॥
आतां माझे मनीं । कांहीं अपराध न मनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदीं अवसान । करितां नामाचें चिंतन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोले । तुज आधीं च गोविलें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the past be past; what lies ahead, let it be sweet and good. From now on, hold no offense in Your mind against me.

Do not let me falter in the contemplation of Your name. Says Tuka, I have already bound You by these words from the very start.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let what is gone be gone; let what comes ahead be sweet and good. From now on, hold no offense against me in Your mind. Do not let me lose heart while I dwell on Your name. Tuka says: by these very words I have already bound You, from the very start.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for a clean slate: let the past stay in the past and let the road ahead be good, with no grudge held against him. His one ongoing request is steadiness, that he never falter or lose strength while keeping God's name in mind. The closing line is the daring turn: he claims his words themselves have already tied God down. By praying this way he holds God to his own nature as the one who forgives, so the prayer is less a plea than a binding already accomplished.

GATHA 1814 Longing and Separation

Longing, my breath cannot remain without You

मराठी मूळ

मातेविण बाळा । आणिक न माने सोहळा ॥1॥
तैसें जालें माझ्या चित्ता । तुजविण पंढरिनाथा ॥ध्रु.॥
वाट पाहेमेघा बिंदु । नेघे चातक सरिता सिंधू ॥2॥
सारसांसी निशीं । ध्यानरवीच्या प्रकाशीं ॥3॥
जीवनाविण मत्स्य । जैसें धेनूलागीं वत्स ॥4॥
पतिव्रते जिणें । भ्रताराच्या वर्त्तमानें ॥5॥
कृपणाचें धन । लोभालागीं जैसें मन ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे काय । तुजविण प्राण राहे॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without its mother, a child finds no joy in any celebration. That is exactly the state of my chitta without You, O Lord of Pandhari.

The chataka bird watches for the rain-cloud and will not drink from river or sea. The chakravaka longs through the night for the light of the dawn-sun.

A fish cannot live without water; a calf cannot rest without its mother cow. A devoted wife's life depends entirely on word of her husband.

A miser's mind clings to its wealth with unshakable greed. Says Tuka, how can my breath remain without You?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without its mother, a child finds no joy in any festival. So it is with my mind, O Lord of Pandhari, without You. The chataka bird watches only for the raincloud's drop and will not drink from river or sea. The sarasa birds wait through the night for the light of the dawn-sun. A fish cannot live out of water; a calf cannot rest apart from the cow. A devoted wife lives only on word of her husband. A miser's mind clings with greed to his wealth. Tuka says: how then can my breath stay in me without You?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images of beings that cannot be themselves without the one thing they are bound to. A child is joyless without its mother even amid celebration; the chataka bird refuses all water and waits only for rain from the cloud; the night birds long for dawn, the fish for water, the calf for the cow, the faithful wife for news of her husband, the miser for his hoard. Each is a kind of love that admits no substitute. He sets them all down only to ask the real question: if every one of these cannot live apart from what it loves, how can his own breath remain in his body without God?

GATHA 1815 The Nature of God

Praise, the God who asks no faults

मराठी मूळ

तुजऐसा कोणी न देखें उदार । अभयदानशूर पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
शरण येती त्यांचे न विचारिसी दोष । न मागतां त्यांस अढळ देसी ॥ध्रु.॥
धांवसी आडणी ऐकोनियां धांवा । कइवारें देवा भक्तांचिया ॥2॥
दोष त्यांचे जाळी कल्पकोटिवरी । नामासाटीं हरि आपुलिया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज वाणूं कैशा परी । एक मुख हरी आयुष्य थोडें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I see no one as generous as You, O Panduranga, champion of fearlessness. You do not examine the faults of those who come to You for refuge; without their asking, You grant them the imperishable.

Hearing a devotee's cry, You rush to their aid, O God, moved by love for Your devotees. For the sake of Your own name, You burn away their sins accumulated over millions of ages.

Says Tuka, how can I praise You adequately with one mouth and a short life, O Hari?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I see no one as generous as You, O Panduranga, hero of fearlessness. You do not weigh the faults of those who come to You for refuge; without their even asking, You give them what never perishes. Hearing a cry of distress, You come running, O God, out of love for Your devotees. For the sake of Your own name, You burn away sins piled up over millions of ages. Tuka says: how can I praise You enough, O Hari, with one mouth and so short a life?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises God as generosity itself, the one who gives fearlessness. The heart of the praise is what God does not do: He does not examine the sins of those who take refuge in Him, and He gives the imperishable to people who have not even asked. He comes running at a cry of distress, moved by love for His own, and burns away ages of accumulated sin, doing it for the sake of His own name as the saver of those who turn to Him. The closing line is the helplessness of true praise: with only one mouth and a short life, Tukaram cannot say enough.

GATHA 1816

The Nature of God

Gratitude, the gift I could never repay

मराठी मूळ

काय तुझे उपकार पांडुरंगा । सांगों मी या जगामाजी आतां ॥1॥
जतन हें माझें करूनि संचित । दिलें अवचित आणूनियां॥ध्रु.॥
घडल्या दोषांचें न घली च भरी । आली यास थोरी कृपा देवा ॥2॥
नव्हतें ठाउकें आइकिलें नाहीं । न मगतां पाहीं दान दिलें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे याच्या उपकारासाटीं । नाहीं माझें गाठीं कांहीं एंक ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How shall I describe Your favors to the world, O Panduranga? You carefully preserved my store of merit and then placed it unexpectedly before me. You do not add to the account of sins already committed; great is this mercy, O God.

I had never known of it, had never even heard of it; yet without my asking, the gift was given. Says Tuka, I have nothing in my own possession with which to repay this kindness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I tell the world of Your kindnesses, O Panduranga? You guarded my hidden store of merit and then placed it before me without warning. You do not add to the account of the sins I had already done; great is this mercy, O God. I did not know of it, I had not even heard of it, yet without my asking the gift was given. Tuka says: for all this kindness I have nothing of my own to pay You back with.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tries to count God's favors and finds them past telling. He says God quietly kept safe the merit he had stored up and then, when he least expected it, brought it out and handed it to him. And God refuses to keep adding to the ledger of sins he had already committed, which Tukaram calls a great mercy. The favor was entirely unearned and unsought: he did not know of it, had never heard of it, yet it came. The poem ends in the honest bankruptcy of gratitude: he has nothing of his own with which to repay a gift he never asked for.

GATHA 1817 Longing and Separation

Longing, the dread of being cast off

मराठी मूळ

वाळूनियां जन सांडी मज दुरी । करिसील हरी ऐसें कधीं ॥1॥
आठवीन पाय धरूनि अनुताप । वाहे जळ झोंप नाहीं डोळां ॥ध्रु.॥
नावडती जीवा आणीक प्रकार । आवडी ते फार एकांताची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसी धरितों वासना । होई नारायणा साहए मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Will You ever cast me off, turn the people against me, and push me far away, O Hari? I would cling to Your feet in remorse, tears streaming, with no sleep in my eyes. My jiva cares for no other pursuit; the love of solitude alone appeals to me.

Says Tuka, this is the longing I hold; be my help, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Will you ever do this to me, Hari: dry me up, turn people against me, push me far away? I would hold your feet and think of you in remorse. Tears would stream; no sleep would come to my eyes. My jiva cares for nothing else. I love only solitude, and love it greatly. Tuka says: this is the longing I hold. Be my help, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays out of a fear that doubles as a wish. He imagines Hari withering him, setting the world against him, driving him away; and instead of shrinking from that picture he leans into it, because stripped of everything he would cling all the harder to those feet. The remorse, the tears, the sleepless eyes are not punishments he dreads but the shape of the love he wants. He has lost his taste for every other pursuit and craves only solitude with God. So he names his one desire and asks Narayana to help him hold it.

GATHA 1818 Confession and Sin

Confession, the mind that will not listen

मराठी मूळ

सांगतों या मना तें माझें नाइके । घातावरी टेंके चांडाळ हें ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि पाहे तरतें बुडतें । न ल्हाये पुरतें बळ करूं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय तें संचित न कळे पाहातां । मतिमंद चित्ता उपजतें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें बळ नाहीं अंगी । पाहोनियां वेगीं पार टाकीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I counsel this mind of mine, but it does not listen; the wretch keeps rushing toward ruin. Therefore I watch whether it sinks or floats, for I cannot muster enough strength to prevail over it.

What destiny lies in store I cannot tell; only dull thoughts arise in this chitta. Says Tuka, I do not have the strength in my own body for this; look upon me swiftly and carry me across, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I counsel this mind of mine, but it does not listen. The wretch keeps rushing toward its own ruin. So I just watch whether it sinks or floats. I cannot find the strength to master it. What lies stored up for me, I cannot tell; only dull thoughts rise in this chitta. Tuka says: my own body holds no such strength. Look on me quickly and carry me across.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that he has lost the contest with his own mind. He reasons with it, but it ignores him and runs headlong toward harm, and he admits he has no power to stop it, so he can only watch it struggle. He does not know what his past has stored up for him; his thinking feels dull and clouded. The point is the end of self-reliance: when his own strength runs out, the only move left is to hand the whole thing to God and ask to be carried across the water he cannot cross alone.

GATHA 1819 Prayers

Prayer, claiming God's duty to the fallen

मराठी मूळ

आतां नको चुकों आपुल्या उचिता । उदारा या कांता रखुमाईच्या ॥1॥
आचरावे दोष हें आह्मां विहित । तारावे पतित तुमचें तें ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी तों आपुलें केलेसें जतन । घडो तुह्मांकून घडेल ते ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विठो चतुराच्या राया । आहे ते कासया मोडों देसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not let me now miss what is rightfully due, O generous Lord, husband of Rukmini. It is our nature to commit faults; it is Your duty to purify the fallen.

I have done my part and kept watch; let whatever can come from You now come. Says Tuka, O Vitthal, king of the wise, why would You let what already stands be torn down?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now do not miss what is owed to me, generous Lord, husband of Rukmini. To commit faults is our nature. To save the fallen is your work. I have kept my own part, and watched over it. Now let whatever can come from you come. Tuka says: Vitthal, king of the wise, why would you let what already stands be torn down?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a claim on God by dividing the labor between them. Sinning is simply what creatures like him do; rescuing sinners is simply what the saving Lord does, so each is only being true to its nature. He says he has held up his end and kept watch, and now leaves the outcome entirely to God. The closing line turns shrewd: he reminds Vitthal that he is already standing, already God's, and asks why the wise Lord would let his own finished work be undone now.

GATHA 1820 Prayers

Prayer, the surrendered body

मराठी मूळ

मुखें बोलावें तें जीविंचें जाणसी । विदित पायांपाशीं सर्व आहे ॥1॥
आतां हें चि भलें भाकावी करुणा । विनियोग तो जाणां तुह्मी त्याचा ॥ध्रु.॥
आपलें तों येथें केलें नव्हे कांहीं । साधनाचा वांहीं पडों नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देह दिला पिंडदान । वेळोवेळां कोण चिंता करी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What the mouth speaks, You already know as the truth of my jiva; everything is known at Your feet. So it is good simply to cry out for mercy; You know best how to use it.

Nothing here has been accomplished by my own effort; I must not fall off the path of devotion. Says Tuka, I have offered this body as a funeral oblation; once given, why carry any further worry?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever my mouth speaks, you already know as the truth of my jiva. Everything lies open at your feet. So the good thing is simply to cry out for mercy. You know best how to use it. Nothing here was done by my own effort. Let me not fall off the path of devotion. Tuka says: I have given this body as a funeral offering. Once it is given, why should anyone keep worrying?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that words add nothing, since God already knows the heart behind them; everything is laid bare at his feet. The only fitting act is to cry for mercy and leave its use to God. He insists that nothing he has reached came from his own striving, and prays only not to slip off the path. The last image is the surrender entire: he has offered his body the way one offers a funeral oblation for the dead, so it is no longer his to guard, and worry over it is pointless.

GATHA 1821 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the blindness of craving

मराठी मूळ

कामातुरा भय लाज ना विचार । शरीर असार तृणतुल्य ॥1॥
नवल हे लीळा करात्याचें लाघव । प्रारब्धें भाव दाखविले ॥ध्रु.॥
लोभालोभ एका धनाचिये ठायीं । आणिकांची सोई चाड नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भूक न विचारी प्रकार । योजे तें चि सार यथाकाळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one seized by lust knows no fear, no shame, no reasoning; the body becomes worthless as a blade of grass. Marvelous is this divine play, the cunning of the Creator; destiny reveals its workings through desire.

In the grip of greed, one sees only wealth and cares nothing for anyone else. Says Tuka, hunger does not pause to deliberate; it seizes whatever serves the moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one seized by lust knows no fear, no shame, no reasoning. The body becomes worthless as a blade of grass. Strange is this play, the cunning of the Maker; destiny shows its workings through desire. In the grip of greed, a man sees only wealth and cares nothing for anyone else. Tuka says: hunger does not stop to weigh how. It seizes whatever serves the moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how craving switches off a person's judgment. Lust drives out fear, shame, and reason, and a person will throw away the body itself as if it were a worthless wisp of grass. Greed narrows a man until he sees only money and no one else matters; hunger does not pause to ask what is right, it grabs whatever is at hand. He frames all this as the Maker's strange play, the way destiny works itself out through human desire. The mirror it holds up is one's own appetites: watch how craving, once seized, stops weighing the cost.

GATHA 1822 The Nature of God

Nature of God, deluded by self-effort

मराठी मूळ

बांधे सोडी हें तों धन्याचिये हातीं । हेंकडें गोविती आपणां बळें ॥1॥
भुललियासी नाहीं देहाचा आठव । धोत†यानें भाव पालटिला ॥ध्रु.॥
घरांत रिघावें दाराचिये सोई । भिंतीसवें डोई घेऊनि फोडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा गेलीं विसरोन । आतां वर्म कोण दावी यांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Binding and loosing are in the master's hands, yet people entangle themselves by their own force. The deluded one has forgotten the body altogether; the washerman has changed the very nature of his cloth.

One should enter the house through the door, but instead one smashes one's head against the wall. Says Tuka, they have forgotten God; now who will show them the secret?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Binding and loosing rest in the master's hands. Yet people tangle themselves up by their own force. The deluded one has forgotten his own body. The washerman has changed the very nature of his cloth. You should go into the house through the door. Instead you smash your head against the wall. Tuka says: they have forgotten God. Now who will show them the secret?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says release is God's to give, the master who binds and loosens, yet people work feverishly to entangle themselves all the more. He stacks up images of getting it backward: a man so deluded he forgets he even has a body, a washerman who ruins the cloth he was meant to clean, and someone who batters his head against the wall when the door stood open beside him. The common error is trusting one's own force instead of the master's hand. Having forgotten God, who is the real door, such people have no one left to point them to the way in.

GATHA 1823 The Nature of God

Nature of God, all is You

मराठी मूळ

कवण जन्मता कवण जन्मविता । न कळे कृपावंता माव तुझी ॥1॥
कवण हा दाता कवण हा मागता । न कळे कृपावंता माव तुझी ॥ध्रु.॥
कवण भोगिता कवण भोगविता । न कळे कृपावंता माव तुझी ॥2॥
कवण ते रूप कवण अरूपता । न कळे कृपावंता माव तुझी ॥3॥
सर्वां ठायीं तूं चि सर्व ही जालासी। तुका ह्मणे यासी दुजें नव्हे ॥4॥
जेथें देखें तेथें तुझी च पाउलें । विश्व अवघें कोंदाटलें।
रूप गुण नाम अवघा मेघश्याम । वेगळें तें काय उरलें ।
जातां लोटांगणीं अवघी च मेदिनी । सकळ देव पाट जालें ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who is born, who causes birth? Your mystery cannot be fathomed, O merciful Lord. Who gives, who begs? Your mystery cannot be fathomed.

Who enjoys, who causes enjoyment? Your mystery cannot be fathomed. What is form, what is formlessness? Your mystery cannot be fathomed.

You have become everything in every place; there is nothing apart from You. Says Tuka, wherever I look I see Your footprints; the whole universe is filled with You. Name, form, and quality are all the dark-hued Lord; what else remains? When I bow down, the entire earth becomes a holy place and all the gods become one altar.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who is born, and who causes birth? Your maya cannot be fathomed, merciful Lord. Who gives, and who begs? Your maya cannot be fathomed. Who enjoys, and who causes enjoyment? Your maya cannot be fathomed. What is form, and what is formlessness? Your maya cannot be fathomed. In every place you alone have become everything. Tuka says: there is no second to this. Wherever I look, I see only your footprints; the whole universe is packed full of you. Form, quality, and name are all the dark-hued Lord; what else is left over? When I fall down to bow, the whole earth becomes a holy place, and all the gods become one single altar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up pairs that usually seem opposite, the born and the begetter, giver and beggar, enjoyer and the one who grants enjoyment, form and formlessness, and confesses that he cannot tell them apart, because God's maya hides the seam. The resolution is that there are not really two: God alone has become everything, in every place, so the apparent pairs are one. From there it pours out as vision. Everywhere he looks he sees only God's footprints, the universe crammed with him, every name and form and quality nothing but the dark-hued Lord. When he prostrates, the ground itself turns sacred and all the separate gods collapse into one altar.

GATHA 1824 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, every hour made holy

मराठी मूळ

सदा पर्वकाळ सुदिन सुवेळ । चित्त प्रेमें असे धालें ॥1॥
अवघा आह्मां तूं च जालासी देवा । संसार हेवा कामधंदा ।
न लगे जाणें कोठें कांहीं च करणें । मुखीं नाम ध्यान सदा ॥ध्रु.॥
भोजन सारूं ठायीं फल तांबोल कांहीं । पूजा नैवेद्य तुज होती ।
चालतां प्रदक्षणा निद्रा लोटांगण । दंडवत तुजप्रति ।
देखोन दृष्टी परस्परें गोष्टी । अवघ्या तुझ्या मूतिन॥2॥
जाल्या तीर्थरूप वावी नदी कूप । अवघें गंगाजळ जालें।
महाल मंदिरें माडए तनघरें । झोपडए अवघीं देव देवाइलें।
ऐकें कानीं त्या हरिनामध्वनी । नाना शब्द होत जाले ।
तुका ह्मणे या विठोबाचे दास । सदा प्रेमसुखें धाले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every day is a holy day, every hour auspicious, for the chitta is brimming with love. You have become everything to us, O God: our worldly life, our ambitions, our daily work.

We need go nowhere, need do nothing; Your name and Your meditation on our lips is enough. When we finish eating, whatever fruit or betel we take becomes an offering to You; our walking becomes circumambulation, our sleep becomes prostration, our bowing becomes salutation to You.

Whatever our eyes behold, whatever conversation we share, it is all Your form. Every well, river, and pond has become holy water; every mansion, temple, hut, and shed has become a shrine.

Every sound the ear hears has become the chanting of Hari's name. Says Tuka, we who are Vitthoba's servants are always brimming with the joy of love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every day is a holy day, every hour the right hour, for the chitta is full and overflowing with love. You alone have become everything to us, God: our worldly life, our wanting, our daily work. We need go nowhere and do nothing; your name and your meditation on the lips is enough. When we finish a meal, whatever fruit or betel we take becomes an offering to you. Walking becomes circling you; sleep becomes prostration; bowing becomes salutation to you. Whatever the eyes see, whatever talk we share, all of it is your form. Every well and river and pond has become Ganga water. Every mansion, temple, upper room, hut, and shed has become a shrine. Every sound the ear catches has become the chanting of Hari's name. Tuka says: we who are Vithoba's servants are always full and overflowing with the joy of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a life so soaked in God that the line between worship and ordinary living has dissolved. There is no special festival day, because every hour is already holy and the heart is brimming. God has taken the place of everything once chased after, so there is nowhere to go and nothing extra to do; the Name on the lips is the whole practice. Then he reads every plain act as worship: eating becomes offering, walking becomes circumambulation, sleep and a casual bow become prostration and salute. Sight, speech, every building, every body of water, every sound, all of it turns into shrine and sacred river and the chanting of Hari. This is the ecstasy of God's servants, whose joy never empties.

GATHA 1825 Prayers

Prayer, the plea of the unworthy

मराठी मूळ

जे दोष घडले न फिटे करितां कांहीं । सरते तुझ्या पायीं जाले तैसे ॥1॥
माझा कां हो करुं नये अंगीकार । जालेती निष्ठ पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
यातिहीन नये ऐकों ज्यां वेद । तयां दिलें पद वैकुंठींचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कां रे एकाचा आभार । घेसी माथां भार वाहोनियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sins that have been committed cannot be erased by any means, yet at Your feet they are simply dissolved. Why then will You not accept me, O Panduranga? Are You truly so heartless? Even those of humble station who were denied the Vedas: You have granted them a seat in Vaikuntha.

Says Tuka, why do You bear the burden of obligation to only one, carrying it upon Your head?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sins I have done cannot be wiped out by any effort of mine. Yet at your feet they simply dissolve away. So why will you not accept me, Panduranga? Have you grown so hard? Even the lowborn, who were not allowed to hear the Vedas, you gave a seat in Vaikuntha. Tuka says: why carry the weight of obligation to just one, bearing that load on your head?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues from God's own track record. His sins are beyond anything he could erase himself, but at God's feet they melt, so the power to save him plainly exists. He presses the question of why, then, he is left out, and even charges God with hardness. His proof is that God has lifted the lowborn, those barred from the Vedas, straight into Vaikuntha. The closing turn is shrewd and tender at once: he asks why God would shoulder the burden of saving only one or a few when the same mercy could carry him too.

GATHA 1826 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord who serves His own

मराठी मूळ

हरिकथेची आवडी देवा । करितो सेवा दासांची॥1॥
ह्मणोनि हिंडे मागें मागें । घरटी जागे घालितसे ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्लज्ज भोजें नाचत रंगीं । भरतें अंगीं प्रेमाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विकलें देवें। आपण भावें संवसाटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God Himself loves the recital of Hari's stories and renders service to His own devotees. That is why He wanders after them, keeping vigil at every doorstep.

Shameless and joyful, He dances in the gathering as waves of love fill His being. Says Tuka, God has sold Himself; devotion has won Him over as a companion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God loves the telling of Hari's stories, and he serves his own servants. So he wanders after them, again and again, keeping watch at every doorstep. Shameless and joyful, he dances in the gathering, his whole body filling with love. Tuka says: God has sold himself. By their devotion he has been bought as their companion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the usual order upside down: here it is God who serves the devotees, not the other way around. Drawn by the singing of Hari's stories, God trails after his own people and stands guard at their doors. He throws off all dignity, dancing in the assembly with love surging through him. The closing image is the boldest claim: God has let himself be sold, purchased by nothing but devotion, content to become the devotee's own companion. The point is that love, not power, is what God answers to.

GATHA 1827 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the easy road home

मराठी मूळ

साधन संपित्त हें चि माझें धन । सकळ चरण विठोबाचे ॥1॥
शीतळ हा पंथ माहेराची वाट । जवळी च नीट सुखरूप ॥ध्रु.॥
वैष्णवांचा संग रामगाणें गाणें । मंडित भूषण अळंकार ॥2॥
भवनदी आड नव्हतीसी जाली । कोरडी च चाली जावें पायी ॥3॥
मायबाप दोघें पाहातील वाट । ठेवूनिया कटीं कर उभी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे केव्हां देखेन कळस । पळाली आळस निद्रा भूक ॥5॥
यथार्थवादें तुज न वर्णवे कदा । बोलतों ते निंदा करितों तुझी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My practice, my wealth, my only treasure: all of it is the feet of Vitthoba. This is a cool and pleasant path, the road to my true home, straight and near and full of ease.

The company of the Vaishnavas, the singing of Rama's songs: these are my adornments and ornaments. The river of worldly existence, once an obstacle, has dried up; I simply walk across on foot.

My mother and father, both standing with hands on hips, are watching for me, waiting. Says Tuka, when shall I see the temple spire? All weariness, drowsiness, and hunger have fled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My practice, my fortune, my only wealth is all of it the feet of Vithoba. This is a cool path, the road to my mother's home, straight and near and full of ease. The company of the Vaishnavas, the singing of Rama's songs: these are my ornaments and finery. The river of worldly life, once a barrier across my way, has dried up; I walk across on dry ground, on foot. My mother and father both stand watching the road for me, hands resting on their waists. Tuka says: when will I see the temple spire? Weariness, sleep, and hunger have all fled.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gathers up everything he values and says it is one thing: the feet of Vithoba, his practice and treasure together. He paints the devotee's road as easy and welcoming, cool underfoot, short, and leading to his true home like a mother's house. The fellowship of devotees and the singing of Rama's name are the only jewels he wears. Where the world once stood as a river blocking his path, devotion has dried it up so he simply walks across. He pictures God as a parent standing at the door watching for his child, and his own heart so eager for the first sight of the temple spire that fatigue, sleep, and hunger have all vanished.

GATHA 1828 The Nature of God

Nature of God, made small by love

मराठी मूळ

वेदश्रुति तुज नेणती कोणी । चोवीस ठेंगणीं धांडोळतां॥1॥
आतां मज क्षमा करावें देवा । सलगी ते केशवा बोलियेलों ॥ध्रु.॥
सगुण कीं साकार निर्गुण कीं निराकार । न कळे हा पार वेदां श्रुतीं ।
तो आह्मी भावें केलासी लहान । ठेवूनियां नांवें पाचारितों ॥2॥
सहजरमुखें शेष सीणला स्तवितां । पार न कळतां ब्रह्मा ठेला ।
तेथें माझी देहबुद्धि तें काई । थोर मी अन्यायी तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Vedas and the scriptures cannot fathom You; even the twenty-four cosmic principles fall short when they try. Now, O God, forgive me, for I have spoken to You, O Keshava, with the familiarity of a child.

Are You with form or formless, with qualities or without? Neither the Vedas nor the scriptures know Your limit. Yet through devotion I have made You small, calling You by name and summoning You.

With his thousand mouths, Shesha grew weary of praising You, and Brahma stood baffled, unable to find Your boundary. Before all that, what is my body-bound understanding worth? Says Tuka, I am the greatest offender of all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Vedas and the scriptures do not know you; even the twenty-four principles fall short when they search. Now forgive me, God, for I have spoken to you, Keshava, with a child's familiarity. With form or formless, with qualities or without: the Vedas and the scriptures do not find your limit. Yet through love I have made you small, given you a name, and called you to me. Shesha wore himself out praising you with his thousand mouths, and Brahma stood baffled, never finding your edge. Against all that, what is my body-bound understanding worth? Tuka says: I am the greatest offender of all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs pardon for an intimacy he knows is impossible to justify. He stacks up the witnesses to God's boundlessness: the Vedas and scriptures cannot grasp him, the cosmic principles fall short, the question of form or formlessness has no answer, the serpent Shesha exhausts a thousand mouths in praise, and even Brahma is left baffled. Against that immensity, his own little mind is nothing. And yet love has done a daring thing: it has shrunk this infinite God down small enough to be given a name and called near like a familiar friend. He confesses this as the boldest of offenses, even while it is exactly what devotion lives by.

GATHA 1829 Devotion to Vitthal

The Name, sanctified into God

मराठी मूळ

कृष्ण गातां गीतीं कृष्ण ध्यातां चित्तीं । ते ही कृष्ण होती कृष्णध्यानें ॥1॥
आसनीं शयनीं भोजनीं जेवितां । ह्मणारे भोगिता नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
ओविये दळणीं गावा नारायण । कांडितां कांडण करितां काम ॥2॥
नर नारी याति हो कोणी भलतीं । भावें एका प्रीती नारायणा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे एका भावें भजा हरी । कांति ते दुसरी रूप एक ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who sing of Krishna in their songs and hold Krishna in their chitta become Krishna themselves through constant meditation. While sitting, sleeping, or eating, let every act be offered to Narayana.

While grinding grain or pounding rice, sing of Narayana; while doing any work, remember Him. Man or woman, of any caste or station: with single-pointed love, adore Narayana.

Says Tuka, worship Hari with undivided devotion; though the skins may differ, the form within is one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who sing of Krishna and hold Krishna in the mind become Krishna through meditation on Krishna. Sitting, lying down, eating: say that Narayana is the one who enjoys it all. While grinding grain at the millstone, sing of Narayana; while pounding rice, while doing any work, remember Him. Man or woman, of any caste or birth, anyone at all: with one feeling, love Narayana. Tuka says: worship Hari with one undivided love. The skin may be different, but the form within is one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens the path of the Name to everyone and shows how wide it reaches. Whoever keeps Krishna in the mouth and the mind, he says, becomes Krishna; remembrance is not preparation for God but God himself arriving. He then folds devotion into ordinary life: sitting, eating, grinding grain, pounding rice, every act becomes worship if Narayana is the one held in it. The last verse drops the barrier outright. Man or woman, high caste or low, the outer skin differs but the form within is one, and so the love owed to Hari is owed by all alike.

GATHA 1830 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road

मराठी मूळ

डोळयां पाझर कंठ माझा दाटे । येऊं देई भेटे पांडुरंगे ॥1॥
बहु दिस टाकिले निरास कां केलें । कोठें वो गुंतलें चित्त तुझें ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु धंदा तुज नाहीं वो आठव । राहिलासे जीव माझा कंठीं ॥2॥
पंढरीस जाती वारकरी संतां । निरोप बहुतां हातीं धाडीं ॥3॥
तुजविण कोण सांवा धांवा करी । ये वो झडकरी पांडुरंगे ॥4॥
काय तुझी वाट पाहों कोठवरी । कृपाळु कांपरी विसरलासी ॥5॥
एक वेळ माझा धरूनि आठव । तुका ह्मणे ये वो न्यावयासी ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tears stream from my eyes and my throat chokes with emotion; come, O Panduranga, come and meet me. So many days You have abandoned me, left me without hope; where, O Lord, has Your attention wandered? You are so busy with Your affairs that You have forgotten me; my life hangs by a thread.

Saints and pilgrims travel to Pandhari; I send word through many hands. Without You, who will come running to my rescue? Come quickly, O Panduranga.

How long must I keep watching the road for You? O merciful one, have You forgotten me? Says Tuka, remember me just once, and come to take me home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tears stream from my eyes; my throat chokes. Come, Panduranga, come and meet me. So many days You have left me without hope. Where has Your mind wandered? You are so busy that You do not remember me; my life hangs in my throat. The Warkari saints are going to Pandhari; I send word with many hands. Without You, who will come running to my aid? Come quickly, Panduranga. How long must I keep watching the road for You? Merciful one, have You forgotten me? Tuka says: remember me just once, and come to take me home.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the cry of the soul that feels abandoned by the God it loves. Tukaram is not arguing; he is weeping, throat closed, watching the road to Pandhari for a Panduranga who seems to have wandered off and forgotten him. He does the only thing a helpless lover can: he sends his message with the pilgrims streaming toward Vitthal's town, hoping it reaches the Lord by many hands. The complaint is also faith, because he insists there is no one else who comes running to the rescue. The plea narrows at the end to the smallest possible request: not rescue, not reward, only that God remember him once and come carry him home.

GATHA 1831 Confession and Sin

Confession, the runaway mind

मराठी मूळ

अधिक कोंडितां चरफडी । भलतीकडे घाली उडी॥1॥
काय करूं या मना आतां । का विसरातें पंढरिनाथा ।
करी संसाराची चिंता । वेळोवेळां मागुती ॥ध्रु.॥
भजन नावडे श्रवण । धांवे विषय अवलोकून ॥2॥
बहुत चंचळ चपळ । जातां येतां न लगे वेळ॥3॥
किती राखों दोनी काळ । निजलिया जागे वेळे ॥4॥
मज राखें आतां । तुका ह्मणे पंढरिनाथा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The more one tries to restrain this mind, the more it thrashes and leaps in every direction. What shall I do with this mind now? Why does it forget You, O Lord of Pandhari? Again and again it turns to worldly worry.

It does not care for worship or listening to scripture; the moment it sees a sense object it runs. Extremely restless and swift, it comes and goes in the blink of an eye.

How long can I guard it morning and evening? Even in sleep it stays awake. Says Tuka, protect me now, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The more I press it in, the more it thrashes and leaps every which way. What shall I do with this mind now? Why does it forget You, Lord of Pandhari? Again and again it turns back to worldly worry. It has no taste for worship or for listening; the moment it sees a sense object, it runs. It is restless and quick; it goes and comes in no time at all. How long can I guard it, morning and evening? Even when it sleeps, it stays awake. Tuka says: protect me now, Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that his own mind is the enemy he cannot subdue. The harder he tries to pen it in, the more violently it bolts, and it keeps forgetting Vitthal to chase worldly worry. He names its nature precisely: it has no appetite for worship, it bolts at the first sight of a sense object, it never rests even in sleep. The honest admission is that watching it himself, morning and night, is a losing battle. So the abhanga ends not in resolve but in surrender, handing the ungovernable mind over to the Lord of Pandhari with the plea: protect me now.

GATHA 1832 Renunciation

Discernment, the inner intention

मराठी मूळ

कंथा प्रावर्ण । नव्हे भिक्षेचें तें अन्न ॥1॥
करीं यापरी स्वहित । विचारूनि धर्म नीत ॥ध्रु.॥
देऊळ नव्हे घर । प्रपंच परउपकार ॥2॥
विधिसेवन काम । नव्हे शब्द रामराम ॥3॥
हत्या क्षत्रधर्म । नव्हे निष्काम तें कर्म ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे संतीं । करूनि ठेविली आइती ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A patched blanket is not merely a garment; the food of alms is not ordinary food. Pursue your own good in this manner, weighing righteousness and duty.

A temple is not a house; selfless action is not mere worldly business. Ritual performed out of desire is not the same as the words Rama, Rama.

Killing in battle by a warrior's code is not the same as selfless action. Says Tuka, the saints have prepared all of this and laid it out ready for us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A patched cloak is not just a covering; the food of alms is not ordinary food. Pursue your true good this way, weighing what is right and just. A temple is not a house; selfless service to others is not mere worldly business. Ritual done for desire is not the same as the words Rama, Rama. Killing under a warrior's code is not the same as desireless action. Tuka says: the saints have prepared all of this and laid it out ready.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching discernment: the same outward act carries a wholly different weight depending on the spirit behind it. A patched cloak, begged food, a temple, ritual, even killing in righteous battle look like ordinary clothing, eating, building, custom, or violence, but they are not, because the intention transforms them. The line to hold onto is that ritual done from desire is not the same as simply saying the Name. He is sorting the world into what merely resembles holiness and what is actually surrender. And he reassures the seeker that this discernment is not theirs to invent: the saints have already worked it out and laid the way ready to walk.

GATHA 1833 The Saints

Surrender at the saints' feet

मराठी मूळ

पडोनियां राहीं । उगा च संतांचिये पायीं ॥1॥
न लगे पुसणें सांगावें । चित्त शुद्ध करीं भावें ॥ध्रु.॥
सहज ते ◌स्थिति। उपदेश परयुक्ति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भाव । जवळी धरूनि आणी देव॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Simply fall and remain at the feet of the saints. There is no need to ask or to be told; just purify your chitta with sincere devotion.

That natural state arises through teachings and wise counsel. Says Tuka, genuine feeling draws God close and brings Him near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Just fall and stay at the feet of the saints. There is no need to ask, no need to be told; only purify your mind with sincere feeling. The natural state comes through their teaching and wise counsel. Tuka says: real feeling holds God close and brings Him near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the spiritual path down to one simple act: fall at the feet of the saints and stay there. He waves away questioning and instruction as unnecessary; what matters is a heart cleaned by sincere feeling. Even the natural, effortless state of realization, he says, arises from the saints' teaching and counsel, not from one's own striving. The closing claim is the engine of the whole poem: genuine feeling, bhava, is what draws God near. Surrender at the feet of the realized, held by real love, does the work that argument and effort cannot.

GATHA 1834 The Nature of God

Nondual riddle, God robs God

मराठी मूळ

देवाचे घरीं देवें केले चोरी । देवें देव नागवूनि केला भिकारी ॥1॥
धांवणियां धांवा धांवणियां धांवा । माग चि नाहीं जावें कवणिया गांवा ॥ध्रु.॥
सवें चि होता चोर घरिचिया घरीं । फावलियावरी केलें अवघें वाटोळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें कोणी च नाहीं । नागवलें कोण गेलें कोणाचें काई ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In God's own house, God committed the theft; God robbed God and made God a beggar. Run, run for help! But there is no trail to follow and no other town to search.

The thief was inside the house all along; when the chance arose, he swept everything clean. Says Tuka, truly no one is here; who was robbed, and what of anyone's has been lost?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In God's own house, God committed the theft; God robbed God and made God a beggar. Run, run for help! But there is no trail to follow and no other town to go to. The thief was inside the house all along; when the chance came, he made a clean sweep of everything. Tuka says: truly no one is here. Who was robbed? Whose is the thing that was lost?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a deliberate riddle pointing at nonduality, where every role in the story turns out to be the one God. The thief, the victim, the beggar, the house, all are God; God robs God in God's own home, and so the cry for help has nowhere to run and no other town to search, because there is no outside. The robbery is total and intimate: the thief was never an intruder, he lived inside all along. Tukaram lands the paradox in the final line by dissolving the players entirely. If truly no one is here, then the questions collapse: there was no separate one to be robbed, and nothing of anyone's was ever lost.

GATHA 1835 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, guard against the thief

मराठी मूळ

अवघे चि निजों नका अवघिये ठायीं । वेळ अवेळ तरी सांभाळावी कांहीं ॥1॥
जतन करा रे जतन करा । घालूं पाहे घरावरी घाला चोरटें ॥ध्रु.॥
सीतरिलीं फार खाती भोंवताले फेरे । गेलें नये हातां सेकीं तळमळ उरे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी करूं आपलें जतन । न लगे कांहीं कोणां द्यावें उघडा रे कान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not all fall asleep in every corner; whether the hour be right or wrong, keep some watch. Guard yourselves, guard yourselves; a thief is preparing to raid the house.

Wolves have been prowling all around; once something is lost, only anguish remains. Says Tuka, we will protect what is ours; no one else need be told. Just keep your ears open.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not all fall asleep in every corner; whether the hour is right or wrong, keep some watch. Guard it, guard it; a thief is looking to raid the house. Wolves are prowling all around, eating their fill; once a thing is gone it does not come back to hand, and only anguish remains at the end. Tuka says: we will guard what is ours. No one else needs to be told. Just keep your ears open.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram raises an alarm in the language of a village under threat of robbery. The sleepers are souls drowsing through their one chance, and the thief and the circling wolves are the forces that strip a life bare while it nods off. His warning is plain and urgent: stay awake, keep watch at every hour, because what is stolen here cannot be recovered, and what remains is only regret. The point of the metaphor is the inner wealth, the time and the heart turned toward God, which negligence quietly loses. He ends by taking responsibility for his own watch and asking only that others open their ears and do the same.

GATHA 1836 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, follow the brave saints

मराठी मूळ

काळोखी खाऊन कैवाड केला धीर । आपुलिया हितें जाले जनामध्यें शूर ॥1॥
कां रें तुह्मी नेणां कां रे तुह्मी नेणां। अल्पसुखासाटीं पडशी विपत्तीचे घाणां ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं ऐसी लाज काय तयांपें आगळें । काय नव्हे केलें आपुलिया बळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी सुख अवघें चि बरें । जतन करून हे आपुलालीं ढोरें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They swallowed darkness and made boldness their armor; in pursuit of their own good they became heroes in the eyes of the world. Why do you not understand? For the sake of petty pleasures you fall into the pit of calamity.

Have you no shame, that you cannot do what they did by their own strength? Says Tuka, every happiness is indeed good; just guard your own cattle with care.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They swallowed darkness and made courage their shield; for their own true good they became heroes before the world. Why do you not understand? Why do you not understand? For a little pleasure you fall into the crushing press of misery. Have you no shame? What did they have that is more than you? What did they not accomplish by their own strength? Tuka says: every happiness is good indeed; just guard your own cattle with care.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds up the saints as proof that the seeker has no excuse. They faced darkness, made boldness their armor, and became heroes in the eyes of the world by pursuing their own real good. Against that, he shames the listener who trades that good away for petty pleasures and so falls into the grinding mill of misery. The sharp question is leveled at the pattern, not the person: those heroes were not made of finer stuff; they used the same strength you already have. The closing image, guard your own cattle, brings it home to ordinary duty: tend faithfully what is actually yours, and the happiness will be real.

GATHA 1837 Longing and Separation

Longing, the unanswered servant

मराठी मूळ

जाय परतें काय आणिला कांटाळा । बोला एक वेळा ऐसें तरी ॥1॥
कां हो केलें तुह्मी निष्ठ देवा । मानेना हे सेवा करितों ते ॥ध्रु.॥
भाग्यवंत त्यांसी सांगितल्या गोष्टी । तें नाहीं अदृष्टीं आमुचिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मापासूनि अंतर । न पडे नाहीं ि्स्थर बुिद्ध माझी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Go away if You wish, but at least say so once with some reluctance. Why have You become so indifferent, O God? The service I offer does not seem to please You.

To the fortunate ones You told Your stories; such fortune does not appear in our destiny. Says Tuka, I cannot bear any distance from You, yet my own mind will not hold still.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Go away if You like, but at least say so once, with some reluctance. Why have You become so hard, God? The service I do does not seem to please You. To the fortunate ones You told Your stories; that fortune is not written in our fate. Tuka says: I cannot bear any distance from You, yet my own mind will not hold still.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a servant who feels his devotion is being met with cold silence. He would almost rather God said go away outright than leave him guessing, and he aches that the service he offers seems to please no one. He looks at the fortunate souls to whom God spoke and told his stories, and admits, without bitterness toward them, that such fortune does not appear in his own destiny. The closing turn is where he stops blaming God and names his own part: he cannot endure any distance from the Lord, and yet his own restless mind refuses to stay still long enough to close the gap.

GATHA 1838 Confession and Sin

Confession, the inward double life

मराठी मूळ

अनुभवें कळों येतें पांडुरंगा । रुसावें तें कां गा तुह्मांवरी ॥1॥
आवरितां चित्त नावरे दुर्जन । घात करी मन माझें मज ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतरीं संसार भक्ति बाहएात्कार । ह्मणोनि अंतर तुझ्या पायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय करुं नेणें वर्म । आलें तैसें कर्म सोसूं पुढें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Experience teaches me, O Panduranga, that I should not be angry with You. When I try to restrain my mind, it refuses to obey; my own mind plots against me.

Inwardly I am tangled in worldly cares while outwardly I put on a show of devotion; that is why I remain distant from Your feet. Says Tuka, I do not know the secret remedy; I must simply endure whatever karma comes next.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Experience teaches me, Panduranga, that I should not be angry with You. When I try to hold the mind in, it will not be held, the wretch; my own mind plots my ruin. Inside there is worldly entanglement, while outside I make a show of devotion; that is why I stay far from Your feet. Tuka says: what can I do, I do not know the secret. I must endure whatever karma comes next.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the complaint inward and lets himself off no hook. Experience has taught him the anger he feels toward Panduranga is misplaced; the real trouble is closer to home. His mind cannot be reined in and even works against him, plotting his own undoing. He then confesses the precise fault: inside he is tangled in worldly cares while outside he performs devotion, and this split is exactly why he remains distant from the feet he longs for. The honesty refuses easy escape. He does not know the secret remedy, so he resolves simply to bear whatever karma comes, examining his own divided heart rather than accusing God.

GATHA 1839 Prayers

Prayer, claiming the Lord's mercy

मराठी मूळ

तुजकरितां होतें आनाचें आन । तारिले पाषाण उदकीं देवा ॥1॥
कां नये कैवार करुं अंगीकार । माझा बहु भार चड जाला ॥ध्रु.॥
चुकलासी ह्मणों तरी जीवांचा ही जीव । रिता नाहीं ठाव उरें दिला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें काय सत्ताबळ । माझे परी कृपाळ आहां तुह्मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For Your sake the impossible became possible: even stones floated upon the water, O God. Why then can You not take up my cause and accept me? My burden has grown very heavy.

You might say You overlooked me, but You are the very life of all life; You have not left a single space unoccupied. Says Tuka, such is Your sovereign power; surely You can show that same mercy to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For Your sake the impossible became possible; even stones floated on the water, God. Why then can You not take up my cause and accept me? My burden has grown very heavy. Should I say You overlooked me? But You are the very life of all life; You have left no place empty. Tuka says: such is Your sovereign power. Surely You are merciful enough to save someone like me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his case to God by arguing from God's own record. The one who once made stones float on the water can surely take up the cause of a struggling devotee whose load has grown too heavy to carry. He blocks the only excuse in advance: God cannot claim to have missed him, because God is the life within all life and has left no space unoccupied, so there is nowhere Tukaram could be that God is not. The prayer rests on power joined to mercy. If such sovereign power is real, then withholding rescue is not inability but choice, and Tukaram appeals to the mercy that he trusts will not let that choice fall against him.

GATHA 1840 Worldly Metaphors

Resolve, no looking back

मराठी मूळ

फळ देंठींहून झडे । मग मागुतें न जोडे ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि तांतडी खोटी । कारण उचिताचे पोटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
पुढें चढे हात। त्याग मागिलां उचित ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रणीं । नये पाहों परतोनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Once a fruit falls from its stem, it cannot be joined back again. Therefore haste is folly; the real cause lies in proper ripening.

As the hand reaches forward, the letting go of what is behind becomes natural. Says Tuka, once you have entered the battlefield, do not look back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Once a fruit falls from its stem, it cannot be joined back on. So haste is false; the cause lies in proper ripening. As the hand reaches forward, letting go of what is behind becomes fitting. Tuka says: on the battlefield, you do not look back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses three plain images to teach when to wait and when there is no turning back. A fruit torn off before its time cannot be rejoined, so impatience is folly; ripeness, not hurry, is what brings things to their proper end. But once the moment has come and the hand reaches forward, clinging to what is behind is wrong, and releasing it is the only fitting move. The final image seals it: on the battlefield you do not look back. In the spiritual life, when the time to commit has truly arrived, half-heartedness and backward glances are fatal; you go on without retreat.

GATHA 1841 Worldly Metaphors

The leap of love, devotion that needs no teacher

मराठी मूळ

अगी देखोनियां सती । अंगीं रोमांच उठती ॥1॥
हा तो नव्हे उपदेश । सुख अंतरीं उल्हासे ॥ध्रु.॥
वित्तगोतांकडे । चित्त न घाली न रडे ॥2॥
आठवूनि एका । उडी घाली ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing the funeral fire, every hair on the sati's body rises with joyful anticipation. This is not something taught from outside; the happiness swells from within.

Her mind does not turn toward wealth or family, nor does she weep. Says Tuka, remembering her beloved alone, she leaps into the fire.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sati sees the funeral fire. Every hair on her body rises with joy. No one taught her this. The happiness rises from inside her. Her mind does not turn to wealth or family. She does not weep. Tuka says: thinking only of her beloved, she leaps into the fire.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the image of the sati to name what real love does when it meets its hour. She does not weigh her wealth or her family, and she does not weep, because the joy moving through her was never put there from outside; it swelled up on its own. This is the point: true devotion is not a thing learned or argued into a person, it is an answer of the whole being. Remembering her beloved and nothing else, she leaps. The poem holds up that single-minded surrender as the mark of the genuine.

GATHA 1842 Worldly Metaphors

Ripeness, the fruit that falls in its own time

मराठी मूळ

फळ पिके देंठीं । निमित्य वारियाची भेटी ॥1॥
हा तों अनुभव रोकडा । कळों येतो खरा कुडा ॥ध्रु.॥
तोडिलिया बळें। वांयां जाती काचीं फळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मन । तेथे आपुलें कारण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A fruit ripens on the stem, and the wind merely provides the occasion for its falling. This is direct experience; from it one can tell the genuine from the false.

If plucked by force before its time, the unripe fruit goes to waste. Says Tuka, the mind must find its own cause and readiness within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A fruit ripens on the stem. The wind only gives it the moment to fall. This is direct experience. By it you can tell the true from the false. If you pluck the fruit by force before its time, the unripe fruit is wasted. Tuka says: the mind must find its own cause and readiness within.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is speaking about ripeness in the inner life. The fruit lets go when it is ripe, and the wind is only the occasion, not the cause; in the same way real release comes from within and cannot be forced. He calls this direct experience, the test that tells the genuine from the counterfeit. Pluck the fruit early and you waste it: push spiritual change before its time and nothing comes of it. The work is to let the mind ripen by its own inner cause, not to tear at it from outside.

GATHA 1843 Worldly Metaphors

Test the support first, die before you live

मराठी मूळ

हालवूनि खुंट । आधीं करावा बळकट ॥1॥
मग तयाच्या आधारें । करणें अवघें चि बरें ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख दुःख साहे । हर्षामषाअ भंगा नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवें । आधीं मरोनि राहावें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Shake the post first to test it and make it firm. Then, relying on that support, everything else will go well.

It must bear both joy and sorrow without breaking under elation or anger. Says Tuka, one must first die to oneself, and only then live.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Shake the post first. Make it firm before you lean on it. Then, resting on that support, everything you do will go well. It must bear joy and sorrow without breaking under delight or anger. Tuka says: first die to yourself, and only then live.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives a builder's lesson for the inner life: before you trust your weight to anything, test it. Shake the post, make sure the support holds, and only then rely on it; a firm foundation makes the rest go well. The foundation he means is a steadiness that can carry both joy and sorrow without snapping in elation or anger. Then comes the sharp turn: the real firmness is to die to yourself first. Only after that death to the ego can a person truly stand and live.

GATHA 1844 Worldly Metaphors

The child and the mother, trust beyond discernment

मराठी मूळ

धांवे माते सोई । बाळ न विचारितां कांहीं ॥1॥
मग त्याचें जाणें निकें । अंग वोडवी कौतुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
नेणे सर्प दोरी । अगी भलतें हातीं धरी ॥2॥
तीविन तें नेणें । आणीक कांहीं तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A child runs toward its mother without a second thought. Its going is perfectly right; it stretches its body forward with innocent delight.

It does not distinguish between a snake and a rope; it reaches for fire and grabs whatever is at hand. Says Tuka, without the mother, the child knows nothing else at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A child runs to its mother without a second thought. Its running is right. It stretches its body toward her with delight. The child does not know a snake from a rope. It reaches for fire and grabs whatever is near. Tuka says: without the mother, the child knows nothing else at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws the soul as a small child and God as the mother. The child's run is reckless and yet perfectly right, because its trust is total and unthinking. It cannot tell a snake from a rope or fire from a toy; it has no discernment of its own to protect it. That is precisely the point: the child is safe not through its own knowledge but because it knows nothing except the mother. The poem praises a surrender so complete that the devotee leans on God alone and not on private judgment.

GATHA 1845 Renunciation

Renunciation within enjoyment, stand apart

मराठी मूळ

भोग द्यावे देवा । त्याग भोगीं च बरवा ॥1॥
आपण व्हावें एकीकडे । देव कळेवरी जोडे ॥ध्रु.॥
योजे यथाकाळें । उत्तम पाला कंदें मूळें ॥2॥
वंचक त्यासी दोष । तुका ह्मणे मिथ्या सोस॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let experiences be offered to God; renunciation is beautiful precisely in the midst of enjoyment. Stand apart on one side, and God joins the body on the other.

In due season one should gather leaves, tubers, and roots as they come. Says Tuka, the deceiver alone bears the fault; false striving is in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the things you enjoy be offered to God. Renunciation is beautiful right inside enjoyment. Stand apart on one side, and God joins the body on the other. In its season, gather leaves and tubers and roots as they come. Tuka says: only the cheat bears the fault; false craving is in vain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines renunciation so it does not mean fleeing the world. Offer your enjoyments to God and let go inwardly while still in the midst of them; that inner letting-go is the beautiful thing, not the refusal to live. Stand apart from your own enjoyment, and God takes up the body's part. Take what the season gives, plainly and without grasping. The fault, he says, lies only in the cheat, the one who pretends; hollow craving leads nowhere, while true renunciation is a posture of the heart held inside ordinary life.

GATHA 1846 Confession and Sin

Confession, the words are not mine

मराठी मूळ

पायांच्या प्रसादें । कांहीं बोलिलों विनोदें ॥1॥
मज क्षमा करणें संतीं । नव्हे अंगभूत युक्ति ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे हा उपदेश । तुमचें बडबडिलों शेष ॥2॥
तुमचे कृपेचें पोसणें । जन्मोजन्मीं तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the grace of Your feet I have spoken a few words in jest. Let the saints forgive me; this skill is not my own.

This is no teaching of mine; I have merely babbled the leftovers of what is Yours. Says Tuka, birth after birth, I am nourished by Your grace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the grace of Your feet I have spoken a few words in jest. Saints, forgive me. This skill is not my own. This is no teaching of mine. I have only babbled the leftovers of what is Yours. Tuka says: birth after birth, I am fed by Your grace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram steps back from his own poems to disown any credit for them. Whatever he has said came by the grace of God's feet, not from a talent he owns, and he asks the saints to forgive whatever was spoken lightly. He insists it is no teaching of his: he has merely repeated the scraps of what already belongs to God. The closing line names what he does claim, that across every birth he is sustained by that grace alone. The poem turns the act of speaking into an act of humility and gratitude.

GATHA 1847 Worldly Metaphors

Social criticism, no capital of your own

मराठी मूळ

जायांचें अंगुलें लेतां नाहीं मान । शोभा नेदी जन हांसविलें ॥1॥
गुसिळतां ताक कांडितां भूस । साध्य नाहीं क्लेश जाती वांयां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं स्वता भांडवल । भिकेचें तें फोल बीज नव्हे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wearing a woman's bracelet brings no honor to a man; the world only laughs at such adornment. Churning buttermilk or pounding chaff yields nothing; the labor is wasted with no result.

Says Tuka, one who has no capital of one's own finds that what is begged or borrowed is fruitless and can never serve as seed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man who wears a woman's bracelet gets no honor. The world only laughs at the ornament. Churn buttermilk or pound chaff and you get nothing. The labor is wasted, with no result. Tuka says: one who has no capital of his own finds that what is begged or borrowed is hollow. It can never serve as seed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together three images of effort that yields nothing: a man decked in a woman's bracelet who only draws laughter, milk already churned, chaff already husked. Each is labor spent on what cannot give a return. The lesson lands in the last line: a person with no inner capital of his own, who lives only on what is begged or borrowed, holds something hollow. Borrowed devotion or secondhand piety is like a dead seed that will never grow. The poem turns the reader inward to ask whether the spiritual wealth is truly one's own.

GATHA 1848 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the lover's bold complaint

मराठी मूळ

न बोलावें परी पडिला प्रसंग । हाकलितें जग तुझ्या नामें ॥1॥
लटिकें चि सोंग मांडिला पसारा । भिकारी तूं खरा कळों आलें ॥ध्रु.॥
निलाजिरीं आह्मी करोनियां धीर । राहिलों आधार धरूनियां ॥2॥
कैसा नेणों आतां करिसी शेवट । केली कटकट त्याची पुढें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं न बोलसी देवा । उचित हे सेवा घेसी माझी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I would rather not speak, but circumstances force my hand; I challenge the world with Your name. All this grand display was a pretense; You turn out to be the real beggar, that much is clear now.

Shamelessly and with firm resolve, we have stayed, clinging to Your support. I do not know how You will bring this to its end; whatever commotion was made, it now lies ahead.

Says Tuka, You say nothing, O God; You simply accept my service as if it were Your rightful due.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I would rather not speak, but the moment forces me. I challenge the whole world with Your name. The grand display was a pretense. You turn out to be the real beggar; that is clear now. Shameless and firm, we have stayed, holding to Your support. I do not know how You will end this. Whatever trouble was made now lies ahead. Tuka says: You say nothing, O God. You simply take my service as Your due.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to God in the bold, half-accusing voice of a lover who has waited too long. He admits he would rather keep quiet, but the situation forces it out, and he flings God's name at the world as his challenge. Then he turns the tables: the show of God's grandeur is a pretense, and it is God who is the true beggar, dependent on the devotee's love. He confesses to clinging shamelessly, with nowhere else to go, while God stays silent and simply accepts his service as if owed it. The complaint is itself an act of intimacy and trust.

GATHA 1849 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the unsettled reckoning with God

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं जालें मोल कळे देतां काळीं । कोण पाहों बळी दोघांमध्यें ॥1॥
आह्मी तरी जालों जीवासी उदार । कैंचा हा धीर तुजपाशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु चाळविलें मागें आजिवरी । आतां पुढें हरि जाऊं नेदीं ॥2॥
नव्हती जों भेटी नामाची ओळखी । ह्मणऊनि दुःखी बहु जालें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं राहों नेदीं बाकी । एकवेळा चुकी जाली आतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The full price was never settled; let time reveal who is the stronger of the two. I, for my part, have been generous with my very life; where is that same boldness on Your side? You have strung me along for far too long up to this day; from now on, O Hari, I will not let You proceed unchallenged.

Before the meeting came, before the bond of Your name was formed, much suffering was endured. Says Tuka, I will not let any debt remain now; the single error has already been made.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The full price was never settled. Let time show which of the two of us is stronger. I, at least, have been generous with my very life. Where is that boldness on Your side? You have strung me along all this time. From now on, Hari, I will not let You move past me. Before we met, before I knew Your name, I suffered much. Tuka says: I will not let any debt stand now. The one mistake has already been made.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram keeps up the lover's quarrel with God as if over an unpaid account. The price of his devotion was never settled, so let time reveal who is the stronger party; he has staked his very life, and he demands the same boldness back. He charges God with stringing him along for years, and resolves to block the way now and not be put off again. Behind the bravado is real pain: before he knew the Name he suffered greatly. He vows to leave no debt outstanding, treating the single error of his long delay as something now past, with only the reckoning ahead.

GATHA 1850 Longing and Separation

Longing, calling God's bluff with the saints behind

मराठी मूळ

कैसा कृपाळु हें न कळसी देवा । न बोलसी सेवा घेसी माझी ॥1॥
काय ऐसें बळ आहे तुजपाशीं । पाहों हा रिघेसी कोणा आड ॥ध्रु.॥
पाडियेला ठायीं तुझा थारा मारा । अवघा दातारा लपसी तो ॥2॥
आतां तुह्मां आह्मां उरी तों चि बरें । काय हें उत्तरें वाढवूनि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज साहए झाले संत । ह्मणऊनि मात फावली हे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What sort of mercy is this? You reveal nothing, O God; You stay silent and simply accept my service. What power do You actually possess? Let us see whom You hide behind.

Wherever You have been cornered, all Your refuge is exposed. From now on, what remains between us had best be settled fairly; why prolong it with more words? Says Tuka, the saints have come to my aid, and that is why this victory has been won.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What kind of mercy is this? You show me nothing, O God. You stay silent and just take my service. What power do You really have? Let us see whom You hide behind. Wherever You are cornered, all Your shelter is exposed. From now on, what is left between us had better be settled fairly. Why drag it out with more words? Tuka says: the saints have come to my aid, and so this victory is won.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the quarrel further, demanding that God's silence answer for itself. If this is mercy, why no reply, only the quiet acceptance of his service? He calls God's bluff: show what power You truly hold, reveal whom You take cover behind, for wherever You are cornered Your hiding places are laid bare. He wants the account between them settled fairly instead of dragged out in words. The closing line names his confidence: the company of saints stands behind him, and through their help the contest is already won. Longing here speaks as bold, almost litigious love.

GATHA 1851 Longing and Separation

Longing, I am not that kind of beggar

मराठी मूळ

चुकलिया आह्मां करितसां दंड । हाकासी कां खंड पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
चाळविलीं एकें रिद्धसिद्धीवरी । तैसा मी भिकारी नव्हें देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
कां मी येथें गुंतों मांडूनि पसारा । मागुता दातारा दंभासाटीं ॥2॥
केलें म्यां जतन आपुलें वचन । ठायींचें धरून होतों पोटीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ताळा घातला आडाखीं । ठावें होतें सेकीं आडविसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I err, You punish me; then why do You cut off my cry for help, O Panduranga? Some You have pacified with supernatural powers; I am not that kind of beggar, O God. Why should I stay here, setting up a show, only to play the hypocrite again, O generous one? I have guarded my own word and held fast to what was promised from the start.

Says Tuka, the reckoning was fixed in advance; I knew You would block me at the end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I do wrong, You punish me. Then why do You cut off my cry for help, O Panduranga? Some You have quieted with powers and miracles. I am not that kind of beggar, O God. Why would I stay here, setting up a show, only to play the hypocrite again, generous one? I have kept my word. I have held in my heart what I promised from the start. Tuka says: the reckoning was set in advance. I knew that in the end You would block my way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram protests that God metes out punishment for his faults yet falls silent when he cries for help. He refuses the consolation prize: others have been pacified with miraculous powers and supernatural gifts, but he is not the kind of beggar who can be bought off that way. He has no wish to keep up an empty show that would only make a hypocrite of him. His claim is that he has kept his vow and held his promise in his heart from the beginning. The ending is rueful: the reckoning was fixed from the start, and he half-knew God would block him at the last; his longing is for honest dealing, not display.

GATHA 1852 Confession and Sin

Confession, the formless one made small for love

मराठी मूळ

कृपावंता कोप न धरावा चित्तीं । छळूं वक्रोक्ती स्तुती करुं ॥1॥
आह्मी तुझा पार काय जाणों देवा । नेणों कैसी सेवा करावी ते ॥ध्रु.॥
अनंता अरूपा अलक्षा अच्युता । निर्गुणा सचिता सवौत्तमा ॥2॥
चांगलीं हीं नामें घेतलीं ठेवून । जालासी लाहान भक्तिकाजा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझ्या पायांवरी सदा । मस्तक गोविंदा असो माझा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O merciful one, do not hold anger in Your chitta; whether I praise or provoke You, I am only offering worship. I do not truly know Your measure, O God; I do not know how to serve You properly.

O infinite, formless, imperceptible, unfailing one; O attributeless, ever-conscious, supreme being. You have kept all these lofty names, yet for the sake of devotees You have made Yourself small.

Says Tuka, may my head always rest upon Your feet, O Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Merciful one, do not hold anger in Your heart. Whether I praise You or provoke You, it is all my worship. I do not know Your measure, O God. I do not know how to serve You rightly. Infinite, formless, unseen, unfailing one. Without attributes, ever-conscious, highest of all. You bear all these great names, yet for the sake of Your devotees You have made Yourself small. Tuka says: may my head rest forever on Your feet, O Govinda.

WHAT IT MEANS

After the bold quarrels, Tukaram softens and asks God to keep no anger in His heart, since even his teasing and provocation are only forms of worship from one who does not know how to do it better. He admits he cannot measure God or serve Him as He deserves. Then he piles up the great names, infinite, formless, beyond perception, without attributes, supreme, and against them sets the wonder at the center: this measureless God has made Himself small for the sake of those who love Him. The poem ends in plain surrender, asking only that his head rest forever at Govinda's feet.

GATHA 1853 Devotion to Vitthal

Protest, the conned servant

मराठी मूळ

आतां तुझा भाव कळों आला देवा । ठकूनियां सेवा घेसी माझी ॥1॥
टाकूनि सांकडें आपुलिये माथां । घातला या संतावरी भार ॥ध्रु.॥
स्तुती करवूनि पिटिला डांगोरा । तें कोण दातारा साच करी ॥2॥
जातीचें वाणी मी पोटींचे कुडें । नका मजपुढें ठकाठकी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं आलें अनुभवा । आधीं च मी देवा कैसें नाचों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I have come to know Your ways, O God. You trick me into serving You.

You have placed the burden of Your own obligations upon the saints. You had me praised and the drum of my fame beaten, but who, O Generous One, will make good on those promises? I am a merchant by caste, cunning by nature; do not try Your deceptions on me.

Says Tuka, I have not yet tasted the experience. How can I dance for You, O God, without that?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I have learned Your ways, God. You trick me into serving You. You take Your own troubles and lay them on my head; You load the burden onto the saints. You had me praised, You had the drum of my fame beaten through the town. But who, generous one, will make those promises come true? I am a merchant by caste, crooked at the core. Do not play Your cheating games on me. Tuka says: the real thing has not yet come to my experience. So how can I dance for You, God, before that?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is half complaining, half catching God in the act. He sees that the call to serve was itself a kind of clever trap: God shifts His own obligations onto the saints, has Tukaram celebrated in public, and then leaves the deeper promise unpaid. Tukaram answers in the voice of his own trade, a merchant who knows a bad bargain when he sees one, and refuses to be taken in by mere reputation and noise. The honest stakes are at the end: he has not yet tasted the real experience of God, and without that taste he will not perform a hollow ecstasy. The protest is really a demand to be given the genuine thing, not its publicity.

GATHA 1854 Confession and Sin

Humility, the seal not the paper

मराठी मूळ

जन पूजी याचा मज कां आभार । हा तुह्मी विचार जाणां देवा ॥1॥
पत्र कोण मानी वंदितील सिक्का । गौरव सेवका त्या चि मुळें ॥ध्रु.॥
मी मीपणें होतों जनामधीं आधीं । कोणें दिलें कधीं काय तेव्हां ॥2॥
आतां तूं भोगिता सर्व नारायणा । नको आह्मां दीनां पीडा करुं ॥3॥
आपुलिया हातें देसील मुशारा । तुका ह्मणे खरा तो चि आह्मां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

People honor me, but why should I bear the credit? You know this well, O God. No one respects the letter itself; they honor the seal upon it.

The servant is revered only because of the master. Before, when I was just myself among people, nobody gave me anything.

Now You are the one enjoying everything, O Narayana; do not torment us poor ones. Says Tuka, only what You give with Your own hand is real wages for us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

People honor me. Why should I take the credit for it? You know how this works, God. No one respects the paper; they bow to the seal stamped on it. The servant is honored only because of the master. Before, when I was just myself among people, who ever gave me anything, and what? Now You are the one who enjoys it all, Narayana. Do not torment us poor ones. Tuka says: only what You give with Your own hand is real wages for us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the praise that has gathered around him and hands it straight back to God. He uses a plain image from daily life: a document is honored only for the official seal pressed on it, not for the blank paper, and a servant is respected only because of his master. The proof is his own past, when he was nobody and received nothing; the change came from God, not from himself. So he asks God to take the honor and the enjoyment as His own and to stop tormenting the poor with empty acclaim. What he wants is not reputation but real provision, the wages God places directly in his hand.

GATHA 1855 Longing and Separation

Complaint, the unanswered cry

मराठी मूळ

आमची कां नये तुह्मासी करुणा । किती नारायणा आळवावें ॥1॥
काय जाणां तुह्मी दुर्बळाचें जिणें । वैभवाच्या गुणें आपुलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
देती घेती करिती खटपटा आणिकें । निराळा कौतुकें पाहोनियां ॥2॥
दिवस बोटीं आह्मीं धरियेलें माप । वाहातों संकल्प स्वहिताचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मग देसी कोण्या काळें । चुकुर दुर्बळें होतों आह्मी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why does compassion for me not arise in You, O Narayana? How long must I call out to You? You do not know the life of the poor, wrapped as You are in Your own splendor. Others bargain and haggle, while You stand apart watching the spectacle.

Day after day I count on my fingers, carrying the burden of longing for my own good. Says Tuka, when will You finally give? We poor ones keep stumbling.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why does no pity for me rise in You, Narayana? How long must I keep calling out? You do not know what the life of the poor is like; You are wrapped up in Your own splendor. Others bargain and haggle and scramble, while You stand apart and watch the show. Day after day I count the days off on my fingers, carrying the burden of longing for my own good. Tuka says: so when, in what age, will You finally give? We poor ones keep stumbling and falling.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a frank complaint flung at a God who seems comfortable and distant. Tukaram accuses Him of not knowing the grinding life of the poor, of being so wrapped in His own glory that He merely watches the world's struggle like a spectacle. He paints himself counting the days on his fingers, the weight of his own longing pressing on him, asking when relief will ever come. The boldness of the poem is its refusal to pretend patience: he names the silence and the delay as real, and presses God to act. Beneath the reproach is the trust that only God can answer, which is why he keeps calling at all.

GATHA 1856 Longing and Separation

Lament, ruined by His company

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मां आह्मां तुटी होईल यावरी । ऐसें मज हरी दिसतसे ॥1॥
वचनाचा कांहीं न देखों आधार । करावा हा धीर कोठवरी ॥ध्रु.॥
सारिलें संचित होतें गांठी कांहीं । पुढें ऋण तें ही नेदी कोणी ॥2॥
जावें चि न लगे कोणांचिया घरा । उडाला पातेरा तुझ्या संगें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां हा चि लाभ जाला । मनुष्यधर्म गेला पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It seems to me, O Hari, that a rift between You and me is coming. I see no support in Your promises; how long must I keep patience? Whatever savings I had are spent, and now no one will even lend me credit.

Because of my association with You, I need not go to anyone's door; Your company has made me a spendthrift. Says Tuka, the only gain I have had is this: I have lost all worldly standing, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It seems to me, Hari, that a break between You and me is coming. I see nothing solid to lean on in Your promises. How long am I supposed to hold on? Whatever savings I had stored up are spent now, and ahead of me no one will even lend me credit. I need not go knocking at anyone's door; keeping company with You has made me a spendthrift, my reserves all blown away. Tuka says: this is the only gain I have got, that I have lost every bit of worldly standing, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks like a man gone broke, and the bankruptcy is spiritual as much as worldly. His old store of merit is used up, the world will extend him no further credit, and God's promises give him nothing firm to hold; so he warns, half in dread, that a rupture is near. The sharp turn comes at the end: keeping company with God has emptied him out, ruined his standing among people, made him a spendthrift of everything the world values. He calls this his one true gain. The lament becomes a confession that losing the world is exactly what closeness to God costs, and he would not undo it.

GATHA 1857 The Nature of God

God as laborer, devotion the greater

मराठी मूळ

देव मजुर देव मजुर । नाहीं उजुर सेवेपुढें ॥1॥
देव गांढएाळ देव गांढएाळ । देखोनियां बळ लपतसे ॥2॥
देव तर काई देव तर काई । तुका ह्मणे राई तरी मोटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is a laborer, a laborer indeed; He makes no excuses when it comes to service. God is timid; seeing the strong, He hides Himself away.

Says Tuka, God may be what He is, but the queen of devotion is truly great.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is a laborer, God is a laborer; before service He makes no excuse. God is a coward, God is a coward; seeing strength, He hides Himself away. Is He really God, is He really God? Tuka says: yet the queen, devotion, is mighty.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the first of a string of short poems that tease God by naming Him in lowly, surprising terms. Here God is called a hired laborer who never shirks the work of serving His devotees, and a coward who shrinks from raw power. The teasing has a point: God lets Himself be small, duty-bound, even timid, when love calls. The closing line turns it around, that the true ruler is bhakti itself, devotion, which is great enough to bend God to such service. Tukaram exalts the path of love by showing how completely God submits to it.

GATHA 1858 The Nature of God

God as merciful and generous

मराठी मूळ

देव दयाळ देव दयाळ । साहे कोल्हाळ बहुतांचा॥1॥
देव उदार देव उदार । थोडएासाटीं फार देऊं जाणे ॥2॥
देव चांगला देव चांगला । तुका लागला चरणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is merciful, truly merciful; He endures the clamor of many. God is generous, truly generous; for a small offering He gives back abundantly.

God is good, truly good. Says Tuka, I cling to His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is merciful, God is merciful; He bears the clamor of the many. God is generous, God is generous; for a little He knows how to give much. God is good, God is good. Tuka has caught hold of His feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

A short praise-poem listing three things about God in turn. He is merciful, patient enough to endure the noisy demands of crowds of people. He is generous, returning far more than the small offering anyone brings Him. He is simply good. The point of the listing is to make the conclusion irresistible: such a one is worth clinging to, so Tukaram seizes His feet and holds on. The plainness of the praise is itself the argument, a God like this needs no further reason for surrender.

GATHA 1859 The Nature of God

God who clings to the devotee

मराठी मूळ

देव बासर देव बासर । असे निरंतर जेथें तेथें ॥1॥
देव खोळंबा देव खोळंबा । मज झळंबा म्हूण कोंडी ॥ध्रु.॥
देव लागट देव लागट । लाविलिया चट जीवीं जडे ॥2॥
देव बावळा देव बावळा । भावें जवळा लुडबुडी ॥3॥
देव न व्हावा देव न व्हावा। तुका ह्मणे गोवा करी कामीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is ever present, present everywhere at all times. God holds me close, confining me so I do not stray.

God is clinging; once attached, He sticks fast within. God is simple; with love He tumbles close to the devotee.

Says Tuka, one should not wish to be God, for He entangles Himself in the work of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is everywhere, God is everywhere; He is there without break, wherever you look. God is a hold-up, God is a hold-up; He pens me in so I do not stray. God is sticky, God is sticky; once He fixes on, He sets fast inside the heart. God is a simpleton, God is a simpleton; with love He comes tumbling close. One should not become God, one should not become God. Tuka says: He tangles Himself up in His devotees' affairs.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram keeps teasing God with humble, almost comic names, and each one hides a tenderness. God is everywhere at all times; He is the obstacle that hems the devotee in so he cannot wander off; once He attaches to a heart He sticks there and will not be shaken loose. He is a guileless simpleton who comes bumbling close out of sheer love. The closing line is the joke and the truth together: do not wish to be God, because being God means getting hopelessly entangled in the troubles of those who love Him. Tukaram is praising a God who chooses to be bound by love rather than to stay free and aloof.

GATHA 1860 The Nature of God

God without lineage or caste

मराठी मूळ

देव निढळ देव निढळ । मूळ नाहीं डाळ परदेशी॥1॥
देव अकुळी देव अकुळी । भलते ठायीं सोयरीक ॥2॥
देव लिगाडएा देव लिगाडएा । तुका ह्मणे भाडएा दंभें ठकी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is without family or lineage; He has no roots and is a stranger everywhere. God is without caste; He makes kinship in any place He pleases.

Says Tuka, God is a vagabond who cheats even the proud through pretense.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is bare, God is bare; He has no root, no branch, a stranger everywhere. God is without caste, God is without caste; He makes kinship in any place He pleases. God is a clinging tangle, God is a clinging tangle. Tuka says: the rascal cheats even the proud with His pretense.

WHAT IT MEANS

This short poem strips God of the very things people use to rank one another. He has no family tree, no roots or branches, belonging nowhere, a stranger in every place. He keeps no caste, so He freely makes kin of anyone He likes. The closing image calls Him a sticky tangle and a trickster who outwits even the proud through His disguises. The teaching under the teasing is that God will not be bound by birth or social standing; He attaches Himself wherever love is, and the self-important are the ones most easily caught off guard by Him.

GATHA 1861 The Nature of God

God who serves His own servant

मराठी मूळ

देव बराडी देव बराडी । घाली देंठासाटीं उडी ॥1॥
देव भ्याड देव भ्याड । राखे बळीचें कवाड ॥ध्रु.॥
देव भाविक भाविक । होय दासाचें सेवक ॥2॥
देव होया देव होया । जैसा ह्मणे तैसा तया ॥3॥
देव लाहान लाहान । तुका ह्मणे अनुरेण॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is greedy; He leaps for even a scrap. God is timid; He guards the doorway of Bali.

God is devoted; He becomes the servant of His own servant. God becomes whatever His devotee desires Him to be.

Says Tuka, God is small, smaller than the smallest atom.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is a beggar, God is a beggar; He leaps for even a scrap. God is timid, God is timid; He guards the door of Bali. God is full of faith, full of faith; He becomes the servant of His servant. God becomes it, God becomes it; whatever the devotee says, that He turns into. God is small, small. Tuka says: smaller than the tiniest atom.

WHAT IT MEANS

Each line names God by a humble title and means it as praise. He is a beggar who pounces gratefully on the smallest offering of love. He is timid, recalling how He stood as gatekeeper at the door of the demon-king Bali, the master made a servant. He is so devoted to His devotees that He becomes their servant, and He shapes Himself into whatever they ask Him to be. The closing line shrinks Him below the smallest atom. The whole poem celebrates a God who makes Himself low for the sake of love, refusing grandeur in order to belong to those who are His.

GATHA 1862 The Nature of God

God good, mighty, beloved of all

मराठी मूळ

देव भला देव भला । मिळोनि जाय जैसा त्याला॥1॥
देव उदार उदार । देतां नाहीं थोडें फार ॥ध्रु.॥
देव बळी देव बळी। जोडा नाहीं भूमंडळीं ॥2॥
देव व्हावा देव व्हावा । आवडे तो सर्वां जीवां ॥3॥
देव चांगला चांगला । तुका चरणीं लागला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is good; He mingles and becomes one with whoever approaches Him. God is generous; when giving, He knows no measure of too little or too much.

God is mighty; there is no equal to Him in all the world. Everyone in all creation loves God.

Says Tuka, God is good, and I have fallen at His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is good, God is good; He blends in and becomes like whoever comes to Him. God is generous, generous; when He gives, there is no too little or too much. God is mighty, God is mighty; there is no match for Him in all the earth. Let God be had, let God be had; every living being loves Him. God is good, good. Tuka has fallen at His feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Another short litany of God's qualities, each repeated for emphasis. He is good in a particular way: He meets each person where they are and becomes one with them. He gives without measuring, neither stingy nor calculating. He is mighty beyond any rival in the world, and yet every creature loves Him. The point of stacking these together is the closing surrender: a God this good, this generous, this strong, and this universally loved is one to fall before, and Tukaram lays himself at His feet.

GATHA 1863 The Nature of God

God seen, who knows the heart

मराठी मूळ

देव पाहों देव पाहों । उंचे ठायीं उभे राहों ॥1॥
देव देखिला देखिला । तो नाहीं कोणां भ्याला ॥ध्रु.॥
देवा कांहीं मागों मागों । जीव भाव त्यासी सांगों ॥2॥
देव जाणे देव जाणे । पुरवी मनींचिये खुणे ॥3॥
देव कातर कातर । तुका ह्मणे अभ्यंतर ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us look for God; let us stand on high ground to see Him. God has been seen, and He fears no one.

Let us ask God for something; let us tell Him our mind's desire. God knows, He truly knows; He fulfills the deepest signs of the mind.

Says Tuka, God is tender; He dwells within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us look for God, let us look for God; let us stand on high ground to see Him. God has been seen, He has been seen; He has never feared anyone. Let us ask God for something, let us ask Him; let us tell Him the truth of our heart. God knows, God knows; He fulfills the hidden signs of the mind. God is tender, tender. Tuka says: He lives within.

WHAT IT MEANS

This poem moves from seeking God to finding Him to confiding in Him. It begins as a call to climb to high ground and look out for Him, then announces that He has been seen, a God who has never been afraid of anyone. Having found Him, the devotee is urged to ask Him plainly and to pour out the heart, because He already knows the unspoken longings of the mind and answers them. The closing turn brings the search home: the God sought on high ground is tender, and He dwells within. Looking outward ends in finding Him inside oneself.

GATHA 1864 The Nature of God

God ours, who guards Tuka

मराठी मूळ

देव आमचा आमचा । जीव सकळ जीवांचा ॥1॥
देव आहे देव आहे । जवळीं आह्मां अंतरबाहे ॥ध्रु.॥
देव गोड देव गोड । पुरवी कोडाचें ही कोड ॥2॥
देव आह्मां राखे राखे । घाली किळकाळासी काखे ॥3॥
देव दयाळ देव दयाळ । करी तुक्याचा सांभाळ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is ours, the life of all lives. God is near, both within and without.

God is sweet; He fulfills even the desires within desires. God protects us; He puts even death under His arm.

Says Tuka, God is merciful; He takes care of Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God is ours, God is ours; the life of every living thing. God is here, God is here; close to us, inside and out. God is sweet, God is sweet; He fulfills the longing within the longing. God protects us, protects us; He tucks even death under His arm. God is merciful, God is merciful; He takes care of Tuka.

WHAT IT MEANS

The last in the series gathers the comfort of all the rest. God belongs to His devotees and is the life within every living being; He is present here and now, both inside the heart and all around. He is sweet, satisfying not just our wishes but the deepest wish hidden beneath them. He guards His own so completely that He pins even death helpless under His arm. The closing line makes it personal and intimate: this great, near, sweet, protecting God stoops to look after one ordinary man, Tuka. The whole litany lands as assurance that the God of all creation cares for each devotee by name.

GATHA 1865 The Nature of God

Trust, God as home and parent

मराठी मूळ

जाऊं देवाचिया गांवां । देव देईल विसांवा ॥1॥
देवा सांगों सुखदुःख । देव निवारील भूक ॥ध्रु.॥
घालूं देवासी च भार। देव सुखाचा सागर ॥2॥
राहों जवळी देवापाशीं । आतां जडोनि पायांसी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी बाळें । या देवाचीं लडिवाळें॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us go to God's village; God will give us rest. Let us tell God our joys and sorrows; God will satisfy our hunger.

Let us place our burden upon God; God is an ocean of bliss. Let us stay close to God, clinging firmly to His feet.

Says Tuka, we are children, the darlings of this God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us go to God's village; God will give us rest. Let us tell God our joys and sorrows; God will take away our hunger. Let us lay our whole burden on God; God is an ocean of bliss. Let us stay close beside God now, holding fast to His feet. Tuka says: we are children, the darlings of this God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the soul going to live where God lives, the way a child goes home. Everything a person carries, joy, grief, hunger, the whole weight of the burden, is to be handed over to God, who is named an ocean of bliss. The instruction is simple: do not stand at a distance but stay close and cling to His feet. The image at the close is the heart of it: we are not strangers petitioning a king but children, and God treats us as the ones He dotes on.

GATHA 1866 The Power of the Name

The Name, love comes uninvited

मराठी मूळ

प्रेम तेथें वास करी । मुखीं उच्चारितां हरी ॥1॥
प्रेम यावें तया गांवा । चोजवीत या वैष्णवां ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमें पाठी लागे बळें। भक्त देखोनियां भोळे ॥2॥
प्रेम न वजे दवडितां । शिरे बळें जेथें कथा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे थोर आशा । प्रेमा घरीं विष्णुदासां॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Love dwells wherever the name of Hari is uttered. Love comes to that village and delights the Vaishnavas.

Love forcefully pursues the innocent devotee. Love cannot be driven away; it enters by force wherever the sacred story is told.

Says Tuka, great is the hope of love in the homes of Vishnu's servants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Love dwells wherever the mouth speaks Hari. Love comes to that village and seeks out the Vaishnavas there. Love runs after the simple devotee and catches him by force. Love cannot be driven off; wherever the holy story is told, it pushes its way in. Tuka says: great is the hope of love in the homes of Vishnu's servants.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that where the name of Hari is spoken, love takes up residence on its own. He pictures love not as something the devotee must work to produce but as something that hunts the devotee down, pursuing the simple-hearted and forcing its way into any gathering where the sacred story is told. It cannot be turned away. The point is that the practice is not the devotee climbing toward God by effort; it is love arriving wherever the Name is, so the homes of God's servants are full of expectation.

GATHA 1867 Confession and Sin

Confession, ashamed of honor unearned

मराठी मूळ

संत मानितील मज । तेणें वाटतसे लाज ॥1॥
तुह्मी कृपा केली नाहीं । चित्त माझें मज ग्वाही ॥ध्रु.॥
गोविलों थोरिवां । दुःख वाटतसे जीवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माया । अवरा हे पंढरिराया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When saints honor me, I feel ashamed. You have not truly bestowed Your grace upon me; my own chitta bears witness.

I am troubled by this false greatness thrust upon me. Says Tuka, this is all illusion, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the saints honor me, I feel ashamed. You have not truly shown me Your grace; my own mind is my witness. I am caught in a false greatness, and it grieves my soul. Tuka says: take this illusion away, O Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is being publicly honored by holy people, and instead of pleasure he feels shame. He knows from the inside, his own mind is the only witness he needs, that he has not actually received the grace others credit him with. The honor sits on him as a borrowed greatness that does not belong to him, and that gap between his reputation and his reality is a real grief. He asks Panduranga not for more honor but to strip away the illusion, so that what people see matches what he is.

GATHA 1868 Confession and Sin

Confession, the broken raft of pretense

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं तुह्मी केला । अंगीकार तो विठ्ठला ॥1॥
सोंगें न पवीजे थडी । माजी फुटकी सांगडी ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेम नाही अंगीं । भले ह्मणविलें जगीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । मज वांयां कां चाळवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have not truly accepted me, O Vitthal. One cannot reach the shore on a broken raft of pretense.

There is no real love in me, yet I am called good in the world. Says Tuka, O God, why do You raise my hopes in vain?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have not truly accepted me, O Vitthal. One cannot reach the far shore by playacting; my raft is cracked and leaking. There is no real love in me, yet the world calls me good. Tuka says: O God, why do You raise my hopes for nothing?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to take comfort in his own good reputation and turns the charge inward. The crossing to the far shore, liberation, cannot be made on a disguise; a raft that only looks whole but is split will sink, and he names his own as exactly that. He admits the world calls him good while the inner love is missing. The closing line is an honest complaint to Vitthal: if You have not really taken me up, then do not let me go on hoping in vain; the worst thing would be to be deceived about my own standing.

GATHA 1869 Prayers

Prayer, holding God to His name

मराठी मूळ

आतां चक्रधरा । झणी आह्मांस अव्हेरा ॥1॥
तुमचीं ह्मणविल्यावरी । जैसीं तैसीं तरी हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
काळ आह्मां खाय । तरी तुझें नांव जाय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । आतां पण सिद्धी न्यावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Wielder of the Discus, do not cast us aside now. Having called us Your own, You must care for us, O Hari, however we may be.

If death devours us, it is Your name that will suffer. Says Tuka, O God, now bring Your promise to fulfillment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, O Wielder of the Discus, do not cast us off. Once You have called us Your own, then somehow or other carry us across, O Hari. If death devours us, it is Your name that suffers the loss. Tuka says: O God, now bring Your vow to its fulfillment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a claim on God by way of God's own commitment. Since the Lord has already called these devotees His own, the responsibility is now His to ferry them across, whatever their condition. The leverage is bold: if the devotee is swallowed by death and lost, it is God's reputation, His very name, that takes the damage. So the prayer is not only for the soul's sake but for God's honor: complete the promise You made, and bring it through to the end.

GATHA 1870 Longing and Separation

Longing, no evidence of the cure

मराठी मूळ

मज ऐसें कोण उद्धरिलें सांगा । ब्रीदें पांडुरंगा बोलतसां ॥1॥
हातींच्या कांकणां कायसा आरिसा । उरलों मी जैसा तैसा आहें ॥ध्रु.॥
धनमंत्री हरी रोग्याचिये वेथे । तें तों कांहीं येथें न देखिजे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं अनुभव अंगें । वचन वाउगें कोण मानी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, O Panduranga, who else like me have You ever truly saved? You speak grand promises, yet a mirror is not needed to see the bangles on one's own wrist; I remain just as I was. You are called the physician of Hari, the healer of the sick, yet I see no evidence of that cure here.

Says Tuka, without personal experience, who will believe empty words?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, who like me have You ever lifted up? You go about reciting Your grand titles, O Panduranga. I need no mirror to see the bangles on my own wrist: I am still exactly what I was. They call You Hari, the rich physician who heals the sick, but I see no sign of that healing here. Tuka says: with no experience in my own body, who believes mere words?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is complaining that God's famous titles have not been proved in his own case. God is celebrated as the one who rescues the lost and as the physician who cures the diseased, yet Tukaram looks at himself and finds no change, as plainly as a person sees the bangles already on their own wrist. The titles stay words while the man stays unhealed. His demand is for living proof: he will not be satisfied by reputation alone, because without an experience in his own being, the grand claims are empty to him.

GATHA 1871 Longing and Separation

Longing, daring God to keep His title

मराठी मूळ

काय तें सामर्थ्य न चले या काळें । काय जालीं बळें शक्तिहीण ॥1॥
माझिया संचितें आणिलासी हरी । जालें तुजवरी वरिष्ठ तें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय गमाविली सुदर्शन गदा । नो बोला गोविंदा लाजतसां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय ब्रिदाचें तें काम । सांडा परतें नाम दिनानाथ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Has Your power ceased to work in this age? Have Your forces become feeble? My past karma has brought me to You, O Hari, and it has overwhelmed even You. Have You lost Your Sudarshana discus and mace? You remain silent, O Govinda, out of shame.

Says Tuka, if Your title means nothing, then abandon the name Dinanath, Friend of the Poor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Has Your power stopped working in this age? Have Your forces gone weak? My own past deeds have brought me to You, O Hari, and they have proved too heavy even for You. Have You lost Your Sudarshana discus and Your mace? You stay silent, O Govinda, as if ashamed. Tuka says: if Your title means no work, then throw away the name Dinanath, Friend of the Poor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram taunts God to provoke a rescue. He asks whether the divine power has failed in this present age, or whether his own accumulated karma has finally outmatched even the Lord. The weapons that destroy all obstacles, the discus and the mace, seem to have gone missing, and God's silence reads to him like shame. The sharp close is the stake: God is called Dinanath, Friend of the Poor, and if that name brings no action to the poor man standing here, then it is a hollow title and should be discarded. The barb is aimed at moving God to honor His own name.

GATHA 1872 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, you become the seed you sow

मराठी मूळ

बळ बुद्धी वेचुनियां शक्ती । उदक चालवावें युक्ती॥1॥
नाहीं चळण तया अंगीं । धांवें लवणामागें वेगीं॥ध्रु.॥
पाट मोट कळा । भरित पखाळा सागळा ॥2॥
बीज ज्यासी घ्यावें। तुका ह्मणे तैसें व्हावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One must spend strength, intellect, and skill to channel water cleverly. Water itself does not move on its own but flows swiftly after salt when drawn.

Through channels, buckets, and devices one fills the water bags. Says Tuka, whatever seed you sow, that is what you become.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You must spend strength, intellect, and skill to make water move where you want. By itself it does not stir; but drawn, it runs swiftly after the salt. Through channels, pulleys, and devices the bags and skins are filled. Tuka says: whatever seed you take to sow, that is what you become.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a lesson from irrigation. Water has no movement of its own; it must be led by effort, strength, cleverness, and machinery, and then it flows readily toward where it is drawn. The point lands in the last line: the soul is like that water, shaped by what directs it, and a person becomes whatever seed they choose to plant. Effort and intention are not optional; what you cultivate is exactly what you will grow into, so choose the seed with care.

GATHA 1873 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, water that serves all alike

मराठी मूळ

न ह्मणे साना थोर । दृष्ट पापी अथवा चोर ॥1॥
सकळा द्यावी एकी चवी । तान हरूनि निववी ॥ध्रु.॥
न ह्मणे दिवस राती । सर्व काल सर्वां भूतीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे झारी । घेतां तांब्यानें खापरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Water does not distinguish between small and great, the sinful or the thief. It gives one taste to all and quenches their thirst, cooling everyone alike.

It knows no day or night; it serves all beings at all times. Says Tuka, whether taken in a jug, a copper vessel, or a broken pot, water serves the same.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Water does not call one small and another great, nor judge the wicked or the thief. It gives a single taste to all, taking away their thirst and cooling them. It does not ask if it is day or night; it serves all beings at every hour. Tuka says: whether you draw it in a jug, a copper pot, or a broken shard, the water is the same.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds up water as the model of the saint's even compassion. It makes no distinction between high and low, righteous and criminal; it gives the same quenching taste to everyone and serves at all times without preference. The vessel does not change the gift: a fine copper pot and a broken potsherd both receive the same water. The implied teaching is that grace, and the heart of one who carries it, should be impartial in just this way, meeting every being according to their thirst rather than their worth.

GATHA 1874 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, surrender and the cost of craving

मराठी मूळ

इच्छा चाड नाहीं । न धरी संकोच ही कांहीं ॥1॥
उदका नेलें तिकडे जावें । केलें तैसें सहज व्हावें ॥ध्रु.॥
मोहरी कांदा ऊंस । एक वाफा भिन्न रस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख । पीडा इच्छा पावे दुःख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Water has no desire or preference; it holds no reluctance. Wherever it is led, it goes; it naturally becomes what is made of it.

Mustard, onion, and sugarcane share the same moisture yet yield different juices. Says Tuka, happiness comes to those free of craving; desire brings only suffering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Water has no wishes of its own and no demands; it holds back nothing in reluctance. Wherever it is led it goes; it becomes, without resistance, whatever it is made into. Mustard, onion, and sugarcane drink from one watered bed, yet each yields its own juice. Tuka says: happiness comes where there is no craving; desire reaches only suffering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes water the image of perfect surrender. It claims nothing, refuses nothing, and flows wherever it is directed, taking the shape given to it. The same water feeds mustard, onion, and sugarcane in one bed, yet each plant turns it into its own flavor, so the one undemanding gift becomes many things through those who receive it. The closing line names the stake plainly: peace belongs to the one who, like water, holds no craving, while desire, the insistence on a particular outcome, leads only to suffering.

GATHA 1875 Longing and Separation

Longing, match Your deeds to Your name

मराठी मूळ

तरले ते मागें आपुलिया सत्ता । कमाई अनंता करूनियां ॥1॥
उसनें फेडितां धर्म तेथें कोण । ते तुज अनन्ये तुह्मी त्यांसी ॥ध्रु.॥
मज ऐसा कोण सांगा वांयां गेला । तो तुह्मी तारिला पांडुरंगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नांवासारिखी करणी । न देखें हें मनीं समजावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who were saved in the past did so by their own merit, having earned the grace of the Infinite. When repaying a debt, what credit is there? They were devoted to You, and You to them.

Tell me, O Panduranga, who as worthless as me have You ever saved? Says Tuka, let Your deeds match Your name; consider this in Your mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who were saved before were saved by their own earned merit; they had built up credit with the Infinite. When You only repay a debt, where is the generosity in that? They were devoted to You, and You to them. Tell me, who as worthless as me have You ever saved, O Panduranga? Tuka says: let Your deeds match Your name; turn this over in Your mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues that the famous rescues of the past prove nothing about God's mercy. Those devotees had merit of their own; saving them was merely God settling a debt, an exchange between two who were already devoted to each other, and there is no special grace in paying back what is owed. The real test would be to lift up someone with no merit at all, someone worthless like himself. So he challenges God to act in a way that actually fits His reputation for mercy, and to weigh this honestly rather than rest on past accounts.

GATHA 1876 Longing and Separation

Longing, the ache of God's neglect

मराठी मूळ

कवणांशीं भांडों कोण माझें साहे । कोण मज आहे तुजविण ॥1॥
धरिलें उदास दुरदुरांतरें । सांडी एकसरें केली माझी॥ध्रु.॥
आइकोन माझे नाइकसी बोल । देखोनियां खोळ बुंथी घेसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एके गांवींची वसती । ह्मणऊनि खंती वाटे देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With whom shall I quarrel? Who will take my side? Who do I have besides You? You have grown distant, casting me off all at once. You hear my words but refuse to listen; seeing me approach, You pull a veil over Yourself.

Says Tuka, we dwell in the same village, and so this neglect pains me, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With whom shall I quarrel? Who will take my side? Whom do I have but You? You have grown cold and kept Your distance, casting me off all at once. You hear my words but will not listen; when You see me coming, You pull a veil over Your face. Tuka says: we live in the very same village, and that is why this neglect hurts me, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is grieving a felt distance from God, with no one else to turn to. He has no other ally to fight for him; God is his only one, and yet God has turned cold and seems to have dropped him in a single stroke. He pictures God hearing his cries but refusing to attend, even hiding behind a veil when He sees Tukaram approach. The sting in the last line is closeness made painful: they dwell in the same village, so near to each other, and it is precisely that nearness that makes being ignored unbearable.

GATHA 1877 Longing and Separation

Longing, hoarse from calling

मराठी मूळ

आळवितां कंठ शोकला भीतर । आयुष्य वेचे धीर नाहीं मना ॥1॥
अझून कां नये हें तुझ्या अंतरा । दिनाच्या माहेरा पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
धन दिसे डोळा दगडाचे परी । भोग ते शरीरीं विष जालें ॥2॥
चुकलों काय तें मज क्षमा करीं । आंळगूनि हरी प्रेम द्यावें ॥3॥
अवस्था राहिली रूपाची अंतरीं । बाहेर भीतरी सर्व काळ ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे माजे सकळ उपाय । पांडुरंगा पाय तुझे आतां ॥5॥
॥ शिवाजी राजे यांनीं स्वामींस अबदागिरी, घोडा,
कारकून असे न्यावयास पाठविले ते अभंग ॥ 14 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My throat is hoarse from calling out, my throat choked with grief. My life wastes away and my mind finds no peace.

Why does this not yet move You, O Panduranga, refuge of the helpless? Wealth looks like stone to my eyes; bodily pleasures have turned to poison. If I have erred, forgive me; embrace me, O Hari, and give me love.

The vision of Your form dwells within me, day and night, inside and out. Says Tuka, my only recourse now is Your feet, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have called and called until my throat is raw and grief sits deep inside. My life drains away, and my mind cannot hold still. Why does this still not reach your heart, Panduranga, home of the helpless? Wealth looks to my eyes like a heap of stone; the pleasures of the body have turned to poison in my flesh. If I have done wrong, forgive me; hold me close, Hari, and give me your love. The thought of your form stays inside me, outside and within, all the time. Tuka says: every other means is finished for me. Now only your feet remain, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has worn his voice out calling on God and his patience with it; the abhanga is what is left when calling has not yet been answered. He tells Panduranga plainly that wealth has gone dead in his sight and bodily pleasure has soured into poison, so there is nowhere else for his hunger to go. He does not claim he is owed an answer; he asks first for forgiveness, then for the embrace. The whole weight of the poem lands in the last line: he has run out of every other method, and his only remaining recourse is the feet of God.

GATHA 1878 Renunciation

Renunciation, refusing the honors

मराठी मूळ

दिवटएा छत्री घोडे । हें तों ब†यांत न पडे ॥1॥
आतां येथें पंढरिराया । मज गोविसी कासया ॥ध्रु.॥
मान दंभ चेष्टा। हे तों शूकराची विष्ठा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । माझे सोडववणे धांवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Torches, umbrellas, and horses hold no appeal for me. Why do You entangle me in these, O Lord of Pandhari? Honor, pride, and show are like the filth of swine.

Says Tuka, O God, rush to my rescue.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Torches, an umbrella of state, fine horses: these do not sit well with me. Why do you tangle me up in such things here, King of Pandhari? Honor, pretense, and display are nothing but a pig's dung to me. Tuka says: O God, come running to set me free.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the trappings of status that have been pressed on him: the torchbearers, the ceremonial umbrella, the horses that mark an important man. He does not weigh them and find them small; he calls honor, pretense, and show a pig's filth, the harshest measure he can name. The danger he names is real: that God Himself might let these things become a snare around him. So the closing cry is not for honors but against them, asking God to rush in and pull him loose.

GATHA 1879 Longing and Separation

Longing, weaned from the world

मराठी मूळ

नावडे जें चित्ता । तें चि होसी पुरविता ॥1॥
कां रे पुरविली पाठी । माझी केली जीवेसाटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
न करावा संग । वाटे दुरावावें जग ॥2॥
सेवावा एकांत । वाटे न बोलावी मात ॥3॥
जन धन तन । वाटे लेखावें वमन ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्ता । हातीं तुझ्या पंढरिनाथा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What my chitta does not want, that is precisely what You keep providing. Why have You persisted in this, making my life miserable? I wish for no company; I wish to withdraw from the world.

I want to dwell in solitude and speak no word. Body, wealth, and people all seem repulsive to me.

Says Tuka, the power is in Your hands, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever my mind does not want, that is the very thing you keep handing me. Why have you stayed on my back like this and made my life a torment? I want no company; the world feels like something to move away from. I want to keep to solitude and speak no word at all. People, wealth, the body itself: all of it I feel I should count as vomit. Tuka says: the power is in your hands, Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a turn in his own heart that he traces back to God's doing. The things the world calls good, company, wealth, the body, have become repulsive to him, and he is not gentle about it: he would reckon them as vomit, something the body has already thrown out. He half-complains that God keeps supplying exactly what he no longer wants, as if pursuing him to wear him down. The last line surrenders the complaint: if this estrangement from the world is happening, the control over it lies in God's hands, not his own.

GATHA 1880 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the holy quarrel

मराठी मूळ

जाणोनि अंतर । टिाळसील करकर ॥1॥
तुज लागली हे खोडी । पांडुरंगा बहु कुडी ॥ध्रु.॥
उठविसी दारीं । धरणें एखादिया परी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाये । कैसे सोडीन ते पाहें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Knowing my mind, You dodge the confrontation. This is Your bad habit, O Panduranga, a deeply dishonest one.

You rouse me at the door like one staging a protest. Says Tuka, watch how I refuse to let go of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You know what is in my heart, so you slip away from the argument. This is your bad habit, Panduranga, a deeply dishonest one. You rouse me at your door as though you were the one staging a sit-in protest. Tuka says: watch, then, how I will let go of your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to God the way you speak to someone you love and will not be put off by. He accuses God of a cunning evasion: knowing exactly what the devotee wants, God ducks the confrontation rather than grant it. The image of being roused at the door belongs to the old custom of a creditor or petitioner who sits at someone's threshold and refuses to leave until the demand is met. Tukaram turns the tables with a defiant promise that is really a vow of refusal: just watch how thoroughly he will not loosen his grip on God's feet.

GATHA 1881 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, grace plays no favorites

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं विचारीत । मेघ हागनदारी सेत ॥1॥
नये पाहों त्याचा अंत । ठेवीं कारणापें चित्त ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्जीत गंगा । नाहीं उत्तम अधम जगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मळ । नाहीं अग्नीसी विटाळ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The rain cloud does not choose where it falls, whether on a field or a wasteland. One should not try to fathom its intent but keep the mind on the purpose at hand.

The Ganga does not refuse anyone, high or low, in all the world. Says Tuka, fire knows no pollution; it purifies everything.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The rain cloud does not stop to consider; it pours on a foul dunghill and on a good field alike. Do not try to measure out its reasons; keep your mind fixed on what it is for. The Ganga turns no one away; in all the world there is no high and no low to her. Tuka says: there is no filth that can defile fire.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stacks three images of grace that does not sort people into worthy and unworthy. The cloud, the river, the fire all give themselves the same way to clean and unclean, high and low, without weighing who deserves it. The line he plants in the middle is the instruction: do not waste yourself trying to fathom why grace comes where it comes; keep your attention on the purpose it serves. Read against himself and his hearers, it is a warning not to set up our own rankings of who may receive God, because the divine giving recognizes none of them.

GATHA 1882 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only Vitthal counts as treasure

मराठी मूळ

काय दिला ठेवा । आह्मां विठ्ठल चि व्हावा ॥1॥
तुह्मी कळलेती उदार । साटीं परिसाची गार ॥ध्रु.॥
जीव दिला तरी। वचना माझ्या नये सरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धन । आह्मां गोमासासमान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What kind of treasure have You given us? We must become Vitthal Himself. We have come to know Your so-called generosity: trading a pebble for the philosopher's stone.

Even if I gave my life, it would not match the worth of my devotion. Says Tuka, worldly wealth is to us as foul as forbidden meat.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What treasure is this you have set aside for us? We must become Vitthal Himself, nothing less. We have found out how generous you really are: you trade away a mere pebble and take the touchstone in return. Even if I gave my life, it would not equal the worth of my word to you. Tuka says: worldly wealth is to us as foul as forbidden meat.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is half-teasing God about the terms of the exchange between them. He pretends to complain that God is a sharp bargainer, taking the touchstone, the gem that turns iron to gold, and paying out only a pebble; but the joke runs the other way, since the devotee receives infinitely more than he gives. The real treasure God has set aside is not a thing but a destiny: that the devotee must become one with Vitthal. Against that, the wealth the world prizes is as repulsive to him as meat he is forbidden to touch, and even laying down his life would not match the worth of his vow.

GATHA 1883 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, sow the imperishable wealth

मराठी मूळ

पिकवावें धन । ज्याची आस करी जन ॥1॥
पुढें उरे खातां देतां । नव्हे खंडण मवितां ॥ध्रु.॥
खोलीं पडे ओली बीज। तरीं च हातीं लागे निज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धनी । विठ्ठल अक्षरी हीं तिन्ही ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cultivate that wealth which all people long for, which endures no matter how much is spent or given away, which cannot be diminished by any measure. When the seed falls into moist and deep soil, then the true treasure comes to hand.

Says Tuka, the three syllables of Vitthal's name are the real treasure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Grow the kind of wealth that all people long for, the wealth that is still there after you have eaten from it and given it away, that no measuring can ever cut down. When the seed falls into deep, moist soil, then the true treasure comes into your hand. Tuka says: the real wealth is the master himself, Vitthal, those three syllables.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the farmer's logic everyone understands and turns it toward the one harvest that does not run out. Ordinary wealth shrinks as you spend and share it; this wealth only grows under spending and giving and cannot be lessened by any reckoning. The seed that must fall into deep, moist ground is the Name planted in a softened, ready heart. He names the crop outright: the three syllables of Vitthal are themselves the treasure and the owner of the field, so to sow that Name is to gain everything.

GATHA 1884 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, all things made equal

मराठी मूळ

मुंगी आणि राव । आह्मां सारखाची जीव ॥1॥
गेला मोह आणि आशा । किळकाळाचा हा फांसा ॥ध्रु.॥
सोनें आणि माती। आह्मां समान हें चित्तीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें । घरा वैकुंठ सगळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

An ant and a king are equal in our eyes; the life force in each is the same. Attachment and desire are gone; they were the noose of death.

Gold and clay are the same to our chitta. Says Tuka, all of Vaikuntha has come home to us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

An ant and a king are the same in our sight; the life in each one is one and the same. Attachment is gone, and so is craving; they were the noose of death tightening on us. Gold and clay weigh the same now in our heart. Tuka says: the whole of Vaikuntha has come home to us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports a settled condition, not a wish: the differences the world lives by have flattened out in him. An ant and a king carry the same life, gold and clay carry the same value, because the eye that ranked them has changed. He names what made the change: attachment and craving have left, and he calls them the very noose by which death held him. With that grip released, he says heaven has not been postponed to after death; the whole of Vaikuntha, God's own realm, has already arrived in his house.

GATHA 1885 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, lords of the three worlds

मराठी मूळ

तिहीं त्रिभुवनीं । आह्मी वैभवाचे धनी ॥1॥
हातां आले घाव डाव । आमचा मायबाप देव ॥ध्रु.॥
काय त्रिभुवनीं बळ। अंगीं आमुच्या सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्ता । अवघी आमुची च आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In all three worlds, we are the lords of true wealth. We have won the game; God Himself is our father and mother.

Whatever strength exists in the three worlds is within us entirely. Says Tuka, all power now belongs to us alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In all three worlds, we are the owners of the true riches. The game has fallen into our hands; God Himself is our mother and father. Whatever strength there is in the three worlds is all of it within our own body. Tuka says: now every power belongs to us alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is in the high, exultant key that belonging wholly to God opens up. He claims lordship over the three worlds, but it is not his own greatness he is boasting of: the ground of the claim is that God is his mother and father, so the child of such a parent inherits everything. The winning move of the game is already in his hand, and the strength scattered through all the worlds he feels gathered into himself. The boast is really a confession of total dependence turned inside out, where having God is having all power.

GATHA 1886 The Power of the Name

The Name, what would make me happy

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी तेणें सुखी । ह्मणा विठ्ठल विठ्ठल मुखीं ॥1॥
तुमचें येर वित्त धन । तें मज मृत्तकेसमान ॥ध्रु.॥
कंटीं मिरवा तुळसी । व्रत करा एकादशी ॥2॥
ह्मणवा हरिचे दास । तुका ह्मणे मज हे आस ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are happy when you say Vitthal, Vitthal with your lips. Your other riches and wealth are no better than dust to me.

Wear the tulasi around your neck and observe the Ekadashi vow. Says Tuka, my only desire is that you call yourselves servants of Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are made happy by just this: say Vitthal, Vitthal with your lips. Your other riches and wealth are no better than dirt to me. Wear the tulasi beads at your neck and keep the Ekadashi fast. Call yourselves the servants of Hari. Tuka says: this is my one desire.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells people what they could give him that he would actually want, and it is nothing they would think to offer. Their money and goods are dust in his eyes; what makes him glad is to hear the Name on their lips and to see them take up the simple marks of the devotee. He asks for the tulasi beads, the Ekadashi fast, and above all the willingness to be called Hari's servant. The whole abhanga redirects the impulse to honor a saint with gifts back onto the only gift he counts, the hearer's own turning toward God.

GATHA 1887 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, love binds God

मराठी मूळ

नाही काष्ठाचा गुमान । गोवी भ्रमरा सुमन ॥1॥
प्रेम प्रीतीचे बांधलें । तें न सुटे कांहीं केलें ॥ध्रु.॥
पदरीं घालीं पिळा। बाप निर्बळ साटी बाळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । भेणें देवा आकारावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The bee cares nothing for dry wood; it is the flower's fragrance that captivates it. What is bound by love and affection cannot be released by any means.

A weak father places his child in the lap of another for its sake. Says Tuka, with devotion, one can summon God Himself to appear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The bee pays no attention to dry wood; it is the flower's fragrance that holds it fast. What love and affection have bound cannot be loosed by any effort at all. A weak father lays his child in another's lap for the child's own good. Tuka says: with true feeling, you can call God Himself into form.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is showing how God is held, and it is never by force. The bee is not trapped by hard wood but drawn helplessly by the flower's scent, an image of how sweetness, not strength, binds. So too the bond of love between devotee and God cannot be undone by any contrivance, because nothing made it but love. The picture of a powerless father entrusting his child to stronger arms is the devotee handing himself over for safekeeping; and the close states the law of it, that sincere feeling, bhava, is what summons the formless God to take a form you can hold.

GATHA 1888 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, nothing stronger than feeling

मराठी मूळ

भावापुढें बळ । नाहीं कोणाचे सबळ ॥1॥
करी देवावरी सत्ता । कोण त्याहूनि परता ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसे तेथें येती । न पाचारितां सर्व शक्ति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे राहे । तयाकडे कोण पाहे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No force is mightier than devotion. It commands authority over God Himself; who can surpass that? Where devotion sits, all powers come unbidden.

Says Tuka, who even looks at the one who lacks devotion?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No strength is mightier than devotion. It holds command over God Himself; who is greater than that? Where devotion sits down, every power comes to it unsummoned. Tuka says: but the one who has no devotion, who even bothers to look at him?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a flat claim about where real power lies, and it is not where the world looks for it. Devotion, bhava, outranks every force, because it can lay a claim even on God and bend Him toward the devotee; no greater authority exists. Where such devotion takes its seat, all other powers arrive on their own, uncalled. The sharp last line is aimed not at any particular person but at the condition itself: a life without this devotion is so empty of value that nothing and no one turns to look at it.

GATHA 1889 Faith and Trust

Faith, the strength of the weak

मराठी मूळ

भावाचिया बळें । आह्मी निर्भर दुर्बळें ॥1॥
नाहीं आणिकांची सत्ता । सदा समाधान चित्ता ॥ध्रु.॥
तकान नाहीं ठाव । येथें रिघावया वाव ॥2॥
एकछत्रीं राज । तुक्या पांडुरंगीं काज॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the strength of devotion, we weak ones have become fearless. No other power holds sway over us; the mind rests always in contentment.

There is no room here for mere logic to enter. Says Tuka, in the sole sovereignty of Panduranga lies all our purpose.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the strength of faith, we weak ones have become fearless. No other power rules over us. The mind rests always in contentment. There is no room here for cold reasoning to come in. Tuka says: under the one rule of Panduranga lies all our work.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names where strength comes from for people who have none of their own. It is not in power, cleverness, or argument, but in faith, and faith alone makes the weak fearless. He says no other authority holds sway over him, so the mind stays at peace. Logic cannot enter this place, because the matter is settled by trust, not proof. His whole purpose lives under the single sovereignty of Panduranga, and that is enough.

GATHA 1890 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the mind under command

मराठी मूळ

सत्तावर्त्ते मन । पाळी विठ्ठलाची आन ॥1॥
आज्ञा वाहोनियां शिरीं । सांगितलें तें चि करीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सरलीसे धांव । न लगे वाढवावी हांव ॥2॥
आहे नाहीं त्याचें । तुका ह्मणे कळे साचें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mind now moves under Vitthal's command, honoring His authority. Carrying His orders upon my head, I do only what He directs.

The restless running has ended; there is no need to feed desire any longer. Says Tuka, what truly is and what is not, that alone is now clear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind now moves under Vitthal's rule; it keeps his command. I carry his orders on my head and do only what he tells me. The running has stopped; I need not feed my wanting any longer. Tuka says: what is real and what is not, I now see truly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a mind that has handed over its own authority. It no longer acts on its own urges but obeys Vitthal, carrying his orders on the head as a servant carries a load. Because the will is given up, the restless chasing ends and there is no more desire to fatten. When wanting stops driving him, he can finally tell what is real from what is not. Surrender, he says, is what clears the sight.

GATHA 1891 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the accounts in His name

मराठी मूळ

खावें ल्यावें द्यावें । जमाखर्च तुझ्या नांवें ॥1॥
आतां चुकली खटपट । झाडएा पाडएाचा बोभाट ॥ध्रु.॥
आहे नाहीं त्याचें । आह्मां काम सांगायाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता । भार वाहे तुझ्या माथां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Eating, wearing, giving, all accounts are in Your name. Now the turmoil of profit and loss has ceased.

Whether something exists or not, our only task is to report it to You. Says Tuka, the burden of all worry rests upon Your head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Eating, wearing, giving: every account is in your name. Now the struggle of reckoning is over, the noise of profit and loss. Whether a thing exists or not, our only job is to report it to you. Tuka says: the weight of worry rests on your head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the whole ledger of his life over to God. Food, clothing, gifts, all of it is entered in Vitthal's name, not his own, so the anxious accounting of gain and loss falls silent. His only remaining task is to report what comes and goes; he no longer has to manage outcomes. The burden of worry he sets squarely on God's head. This is surrender made concrete, in the plain terms of household bookkeeping.

GATHA 1892 Ecstasy and Joy

Relief, the burden lifted

मराठी मूळ

आतां बरें जालें । माझे माथांचें निघालें ॥1॥
चुकली हे मरमर । भार माथांचे डोंगर ॥ध्रु.॥
नसतां कांहीं जोडी । करिती बहुतें तडातोडी ॥2॥
जाला झाडापाडा । तुका ह्मणे गेली पीडा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now it is well; the weight has been lifted from my head. The ceaseless anxiety is over; the mountains of burden are gone.

Without any real gain, people keep tearing themselves apart. Says Tuka, the clutter has been cleared away and the torment is ended.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now it is well. The weight has come off my head. The ceaseless toil is over; the mountains of burden are gone. With no real gain to show, people tear themselves apart. Tuka says: the clutter is cleared, the torment is over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the ease that follows surrender, when the load he had carried is simply gone. The grinding toil and the mountains of care are lifted off, and he marvels at the relief. He looks back at how people exhaust themselves for gains that turn out to be nothing. Once the accounts are cleared and handed over, the inner clutter goes with them. The poem is the breath you let out after setting down a weight you carried too long.

GATHA 1893 Renunciation

Renunciation, enough of servitude

मराठी मूळ

संचितें चि खावें । पुढें कोणाचें न घ्यावें ॥1॥
आतां पुरे हे चाकरी । राहों बैसोनियां घरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं काम हातीं। आराणूक दिसराती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्ता । पुरे पराधीन आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let me eat only what my past merit provides; I will take nothing from anyone henceforth. Enough of this servitude; let me sit quietly at home.

There is no work on hand; rest fills the day and night. Says Tuka, enough of being subject to another's will.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me eat only what my past has earned; from now on I will take nothing from anyone. Enough of this service. Let me sit quietly at home. There is no work in my hands; rest fills day and night. Tuka says: enough of being subject to another's will.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram resolves to stop hiring himself out to the world. He will live on whatever his past merit provides and beg nothing further from anyone, ending his dependence on other people's favor. The endless service he calls enough, choosing instead a quiet sitting at home with empty hands and open time. The point is freedom: he refuses to remain at another's command. Renunciation here is not grim but restful, the day and night now his own.

GATHA 1894 The Moral Ideal

Loyalty, never cut ties with your master

मराठी मूळ

ज्याचे गांवीं केला वास । त्यासी नसावें उदास॥1॥
तरी च जोडिलें तें भोगे । कांहीं आघात न लगे ॥ध्रु.॥
वाढवावी थोरी। मुखें ह्मणे तुझे हरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हे गोमटी । दासा न घलावी तुटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who dwells in another's village should not be indifferent to the host. Only then does one enjoy what has been earned, free from misfortune.

Increase the host's glory; say with your lips, I am Yours, O Hari. Says Tuka, this is the beautiful way: never cut ties with your master.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who lives in another's village should not be cold toward the one who keeps him. Only then can he enjoy what he has earned, with no harm coming to him. Lift up your host's name; say with your mouth, I am yours, O Hari. Tuka says: this is the good way; a servant must never break with his master.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the plain picture of a guest who lives off a host to teach the soul its proper bearing toward God. Whoever depends on another for shelter must not be indifferent to that giver, or the shelter itself is poisoned. The right response is gratitude that praises the host and openly confesses, I am yours, O Hari. Only this keeps a person safe in what he has been given. The lesson is loyalty: a servant must never sever the bond with his master.

GATHA 1895 Longing and Separation

Longing, has He really accepted me

मराठी मूळ

माझा तुह्मी देवा केला अंगीकार । हें मज साचार कैसें कळे ॥1॥
कां हो कांहीं माझ्या नये अनुभवा । विचारितां देवा आहें तैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
लौकिकाचा मज लाविसी आभार । शिरोरत्नभार दुःखाचा हा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं पालट अंतरीं । तेथें दिसे हरी ठकाठकी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can I truly know whether You have accepted me, O God? Why does nothing come to my experience? When I reflect, I remain just as I was. You burden me with worldly honor, and this crown of fame is a weight of sorrow.

Says Tuka, when there is no transformation within, then all this, O Hari, looks like mere deception.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have taken me as yours, O God; but how am I to know this is real? Why does nothing come to my own experience? When I look, I am just as I was. You load worldly honor on me; this crown of fame is a weight of sorrow. Tuka says: when nothing has changed inside, then, Hari, all of this looks like a swindle.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing God on the difference between a promise and a felt reality. He has been told he is accepted, yet nothing in his own experience confirms it; he searches inside and finds himself unchanged. The public honor that has come to him is no comfort but a burden, a crown of fame that only weighs him down with grief. His test for the real thing is inward transformation, not reputation. Without that change, he dares to say, even God's acceptance feels like a cheat, and he says so to God's face.

GATHA 1896 Prayers

Prayer, let our words be true

मराठी मूळ

तोंडें बोलावें तें तरी वाटे खरें । जीव येरेयेरें वंचिजे ना ॥1॥
हें तुह्मां सांगणें काय उगवूनि । जावें समजोनि पांडुरंगा॥ध्रु.॥
जेवित्याची खूण वाढित्या अंतरीं । प्रीतीनें हे धरी चाली तेथें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु परीचे आदर । अत्यंत वेव्हारसंपादणी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is spoken should at least feel true; let us not deceive each other within. What more can I explain to You? Understand this, O Panduranga.

The one who serves knows the mind of the one who eats; where there is love, the right conduct follows naturally. Says Tuka, there are many forms of hospitality, but the ultimate transaction must be genuine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is spoken should at least feel true; let us not cheat each other within. What more can I explain to you? Understand this, O Panduranga. The one who serves knows the mind of the one who eats; where there is love, right conduct follows on its own. Tuka says: there are many forms of welcome, but the real dealing must be genuine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for honesty in the relationship between the soul and God. Words spoken between them should ring true, and neither should deceive the other in the heart. He uses the image of host and guest: the server who truly loves the one he feeds reads that person's wishes and acts rightly without being told. So love makes the right conduct natural. Many outward forms of hospitality exist, but Tukaram wants the one transaction that matters to be sincere all the way through.

GATHA 1897 Faith and Trust

Faith, the Name endures

मराठी मूळ

न पालटे एक । भोळा भक्त चि भाविक ॥1॥
येरां नास आहे पुढें । पुण्य सरतां उघडें ॥ध्रु.॥
नेणे गर्भवास । एक विष्णूचा चि दास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खरें । नाम विठोबाचे बरें ॥3॥
॥ स्वामींनीं पत्र पंढरीनाथास पंढरीस पाठविलें ते अभंग ॥ 66 ॥
संतांबरोबर पाठविल्या पत्राचे अभंग 36

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who never wavers is the innocent, the simple devotee, the truly faithful. For all others, ruin awaits when their merit is exhausted.

The true servant of Vishnu never knows the womb again. Says Tuka, the name of Vithoba is the only real and enduring truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One alone never wavers: the innocent, simple, faithful devotee. For all others, ruin waits ahead, laid bare when their merit runs out. The true servant of Vishnu never enters the womb again. Tuka says: the name of Vithoba is the one thing that is real and good.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the steadfast devotee against everyone who trusts in earned merit. The simple, faithful heart never changes, while those who lean on accumulated good deeds face ruin once that store is spent. The servant of Vishnu, by contrast, is freed from the round of birth, never returning to the womb. What makes the difference is not a balance of merit but devotion to the Name. Tuka declares the name of Vithoba the only thing that truly lasts and truly does good.

GATHA 1898 Longing and Separation

Longing, the call to come home

मराठी मूळ

कोणा मुखें ऐसी ऐकेन मी मात । चाल तुज पंढरिनाथ बोलावितो ॥1॥
मग मी न धरीं आस मागील बोभाट । वेगीं धरिन वाट माहेराची ॥ध्रु.॥
निरांजिरें चित्त करितें तळमळ । केधवां देखती मूळ आलें डोळे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कई भाग्याची उजरी। होईल पंढरी देखावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From whose lips shall I hear the words: Come, the Lord of Pandhari calls you? Then I would abandon all past clamoring and swiftly take the road to my true home. My restless heart yearns ceaselessly; when will my eyes behold their source? Says Tuka, when will fortune shine so that I may see Pandhari?

IN PLAIN WORDS

From whose mouth will I hear the words: Come, the Lord of Pandhari is calling you? Then I would drop all my old crying out and quickly take the road to my home. My empty heart burns and burns; when will my eyes see their source arrive? Tuka says: when will my fortune shine, so that I may see Pandhari?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram waits for one message and lives in the ache of not yet hearing it: word that Vitthal at Pandhari is calling him home. The moment that summons came, he would abandon every other complaint and run for the road. He calls Pandhari his maher, the true home a soul longs to return to, and his emptied heart burns for it. He frames it all as a question, not yet a homecoming, asking when his fortune will finally turn bright enough to let him see the place. The poem is pure longing held open, waiting on grace.

GATHA 1899 Longing and Separation

Longing, the silence of God

मराठी मूळ

कां माझा विसर पडिला मायबाप । सांडियेली कृपा कोण्या गुणें ॥1॥
कैसा कंठूनियां राहों संवसार । काय एक धीर देऊं मना ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं निरोपाची पावली वारता । करावी ते चिंता ऐसी कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक वेचूनि वचन । नाहीं समाधान केलें माझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have You forgotten me, O my Father and Mother? For what reason have You withdrawn Your grace? How shall I endure this worldly life? What consolation can I give my mind? No word of message has reached me; what worry should I entertain? Says Tuka, You have not spent even a single word to bring me peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have you forgotten me, my Mother, my Father? For what fault have you set your grace aside? How am I to pass my days in this worldly life? What courage can I give my mind? No word of message has reached me; what worry am I to hold? Tuka says: you have not spent a single word to give me peace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from the experience of being abandoned by a God he calls both Mother and Father. He cannot find the reason grace has been withdrawn, and without it he does not know how to bear the daily grind of worldly life or steady his own mind. Worst of all is the silence: no message, no answer, nothing to tell him what he should even worry about. He measures God's neglect by the smallest possible coin, a single word, and notes that even that has not been given. This is the dark night of the devotee, complaint and prayer in one breath.

GATHA 1900 Longing and Separation

Longing, turning the blame inward

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं माझे कळों आले गुणदोष । ह्मणऊनि उदास धरिलें ऐसें ॥1॥
नाहीं तरी येथें न घडे अनुचित । नाहीं ऐसी रीत तया घरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कळावें तें मना आपुलिया सवें । ठायींचे हें घ्यावें विचारूनि ॥2॥
मज अव्हेरिलें देवें । माझिया कर्तव्यें बुद्धीचिया॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Perhaps my faults have become apparent to You, and so You have grown indifferent. Otherwise, no wrong has been committed here; such neglect is not the custom of that household.

Let the mind examine itself with honesty; let it weigh and consider the matter truly. Says Tuka, God has rejected me because of the failings of my own intellect.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Perhaps my faults have shown themselves to you, and so you have turned cold like this. Otherwise nothing unfair happens here; such neglect is not the way of that house. Let the mind look into itself honestly; let it weigh the matter and think it through. Tuka says: God has cast me off because of the failings of my own intellect.

WHAT IT MEANS

Still feeling God's coldness, Tukaram stops accusing and turns the question on himself. Maybe his own faults have become visible, and that, not any injustice in God, is why grace seems withdrawn; he insists wrong is never done in that house. So he tells his mind to examine itself honestly rather than blame the Lord. He arrives at the conclusion that if he has been cast off, it is the fault of his own flawed understanding. The longing here matures into self-scrutiny, refusing to let God be the one at fault.

GATHA 1901 Longing and Separation

Longing, sending word at last

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे धीर कांहीं पाठवूं निरोप । आला तरीं कोप येऊ सुखें ॥1॥
कोपोनियां तरी देईल उत्तर । जैसें तैसें पर फिरावूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं तया तरी काय एक पोर । मज तों माहेर आणीक नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असे तयामध्यें हित । आपण निवांत असों नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I cannot hold back any longer; let me send word. Even if anger comes, let it come gladly.

Even in anger, He will give a reply, returning whatever message He sees fit. If He will not respond, what sort of parent is He? I have no other refuge.

Says Tuka, there is benefit in this; one should not sit idle.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I cannot hold back any longer. Let me send word. Even if anger comes, let it come gladly. Even in anger he will answer; he will turn the message back however he sees fit. And if he will not answer, then what sort of parent is he? I have no other home, no other refuge. Tuka says: there is good in this. One should not sit still and idle.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is done waiting in silence and decides to write to God like a child writing home. He would rather provoke a reply, even an angry one, than be met with nothing, because anger at least proves he is heard. He stakes everything on the parent bond: if God will not answer his own child, the very name of parent is empty, and Tukaram insists he has nowhere else to turn. The closing line names the stakes for the devotee, that crying out is itself the work, and silence is not surrender but neglect of one's own good.

GATHA 1902 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road home

मराठी मूळ

आतां पाहों पंथ माहेराची वाट । कामाचा बोभाट पडो सुखें ॥1॥
काय करूं आतां न गमेसें जालें । बहुत सोसिलें बहु दिस ॥ध्रु.॥
घर लागे पाठी चित्ता उभे वारे । आपुलें तें झुरे पाहावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव गेला तरी जाव । धरिला तो देव भाव सिद्धी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now let me watch the path that leads home; let the clamor of duties fall away. What can I do? Life has become unbearable; I have endured too much for too long.

The home calls to my chitta; restless winds blow through my mind, yearning to see what is truly mine. Says Tuka, even if life itself departs, let the devotion I have held reach its fulfillment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now let me watch the path that leads home. Let the clamor of duties fall away. What can I do now? Life has become unbearable. I have borne too much for too many days. The home calls to me; restless winds blow through my mind, aching to see what is truly mine. Tuka says: even if life itself leaves me, let it leave; the devotion I have held will reach its fulfillment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his whole attention away from worldly business toward the one road that matters, the road to God, his true home. He admits the waiting has worn him out and that he cannot bear ordinary life any longer; his mind is blown about like a house in a storm, restless to see the One who belongs to him. Then he names the cost he will pay: even his own life is expendable. What he refuses to lose is the devotion itself, and he trusts that the bhava he has held will be carried through to its end whether or not the body survives the longing.

GATHA 1903 Prayers

Prayer, a bold letter to God

मराठी मूळ

विनवीजे ऐसें भाग्य नाहीं देवा । पायांशीं केशवा सलगी केली ॥1॥
धीटपणें पत्र लिहिलें आवडी । पार नेणे थोडी मति माझी ॥ध्रु.॥
जेथें देवा तुझा न कळे चि पार । तेथें मी पामर काय वाणूं ॥2॥
जैसे तैसे माझे बोल अंगीकारीं । बोबडए उत्तरीं गौरवितों ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे विटेवरि जी पाउलें । तेथें म्यां ठेविलें मस्तक हें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not possess the fortune to make a proper plea, O God; I have dared to be familiar with Your feet, O Keshava. With boldness and love I have written this letter; my small intellect cannot fathom Your depths.

Where even Your own measure is beyond knowing, what can a wretch like me describe? Accept my words as they are; I honor You with stammering speech. Says Tuka, upon that brick where Your feet rest, there I have placed my head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not have the good fortune to make a proper plea, O God. I have dared to come close to your feet, Keshava. With boldness and with love I have written this letter. My small mind cannot reach your far shore. Where even your own measure cannot be known, what can a wretch like me describe? Take my words just as they are. I praise you with stammering speech. Tuka says: on the brick where your feet rest, there I have laid my head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses he has no standing to address God and no skill to praise him, yet he writes anyway out of pure familiarity and love. He admits his intellect cannot fathom God, who is beyond all measure, so he gives up on eloquence entirely and offers only broken, stammering words. The whole prayer rests on the difference between worth and welcome: he brings nothing fine, only a child's nerve to approach. The closing image is the surrender that makes the bold letter humble, his head laid on the brick at Pandhari where Vitthal's feet stand, all argument abandoned for bowing.

GATHA 1904 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the Name burns sin away

मराठी मूळ

देवांच्या ही देवा गोपिकांच्या पती । उदार हे ख्याती त्रिभुवनीं ॥1॥
पातकांच्या रासी नासितोसी नामें । जळतील कर्में महा दोष ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्व सुखें तुझ्या वोळगती पायीं । रिद्धि सिद्धि ठायीं मुक्तिचारी ॥2॥
इंद्रासी दुर्लभ पाविजे तें पद । गीत गातां छंद वातां टाळी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जड जीव शक्तिहीन । त्यांचें तूं जीवन पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God of gods, Lord of the gopis, Your fame as the most generous resounds through the three worlds. By Your name, heaps of sins are destroyed; great transgressions burn away.

All joys attend Your feet; prosperity, accomplishment, and liberation serve You there. That state which is rare even for Indra is attained by those who sing Your songs and clap in rhythm.

Says Tuka, You are the very life of the helpless and powerless, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God of the gods, Lord of the gopis, your fame as the most generous one sounds through the three worlds. By your name, heaps of sins are destroyed; great wrongs burn away. Every joy waits at your feet; wealth, attainment, and release all serve you there. That state which is hard even for Indra to reach is gained by those who sing your songs and clap in rhythm. Tuka says: you are the very life of the helpless and the powerless, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Vitthal as the supreme and most open-handed Lord, then makes the central claim of the bhakti path: the Name alone destroys whole mountains of sin. He sets up a deliberate reversal of values. The high state that even Indra struggles to win is handed freely to ordinary people who simply sing and clap before God. The point is that devotion outranks power and merit; what kings of heaven cannot earn, singers gain by love. The closing turn lands it on those who have nothing, the weak and helpless, for whom Panduranga is not a reward but their very breath and life.

GATHA 1905 Longing and Separation

Longing, no reply from God

मराठी मूळ

काय जालें नेणों माझिया कपाळा । न देखीजे डोळां मूळ येतां ॥1॥
बहु दिस पाहें वचनासी वास । धरिलें उदास पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं निरोपाचें पावलें उत्तर । ऐसें तों निष्ठ न पाहिजे ॥2॥
पडिला विसर किंवा कांहीं धंदा । त्याहूनि गोविंदा जरूरसा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें वेचाचें सांकडें । देणें घेणें पुढें तो ही धाक ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know what is written on my forehead, for my eyes cannot see Your coming. For many days I have awaited Your word, and You have kept Your distance, O Panduranga.

No reply to my message has arrived; such cruelty should not be shown. Perhaps You have forgotten, or perhaps You are occupied; even so, O Govinda, this is urgent.

Says Tuka, perhaps resources are scarce, and the fear of further debts weighs upon You too.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know what is written on my forehead, for my eyes cannot see you coming. For many days I have waited for your word, and you have kept your distance, O Panduranga. No answer to my message has reached me. Such hardness should not be shown. Perhaps you have forgotten me, or perhaps you are busy; even so, Govinda, this is urgent. Tuka says: perhaps your means have run short, and the fear of further debt weighs on you too.

WHAT IT MEANS

This continues the letter to God, now sharpened by silence: Tukaram has waited many days and received no reply, and he names that silence as a hardness God should not show to one who depends on him. He runs through the excuses a child invents for an absent parent, that God forgot, that God is busy, and insists none of them excuse the delay because his need is urgent. The last verse turns gently teasing and self-aware, imagining that maybe God himself is short of resources and afraid of owing more. The satire points not at God but at how the longing soul keeps inventing reasons rather than accept abandonment.

GATHA 1906 Longing and Separation

Longing, the fear of being cast off

मराठी मूळ

एवढा संकोच तरि कां व्यालासी । आह्मी कोणांपाशीं तोंड वासूं ॥1॥
कोण मज पुसे सिणलें भागलें । जरी मोकलिलें तुह्मीं देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
कवणाची वाट पाहों कोणीकडे । कोण मज ओढे जीवलग ॥2॥
कोण जाणे माझे जीवींचें सांकडें । उगवील कोडें संकटाचें॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी देखिली निंश्चती । काय माझे चित्तीं पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If there is such hesitation, why did You take me on at all? Before whom shall we show our face? Who asks after me when I am weary and worn, if You have abandoned me, O God? Whose path shall I watch? Who will draw me close as a true beloved? Who knows the anguish in my chitta? Who will solve this knotted crisis? Says Tuka, You have seen my resolve; You know what is in my chitta, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you were going to hold back this much, why did you take me on at all? Before whom shall I open my mouth? Who will ask after me when I am weary and worn, if you have let me go, O God? Whose road shall I watch, and which way? Who will pull me close as one who is truly mine? Who knows the knot of pain in my heart? Who will untangle this riddle of trouble? Tuka says: you have seen how set my resolve is; you know what is in my heart, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with the unanswerable question a child asks an absent parent: if you meant to neglect me, why did you ever claim me? He runs through everyone who might care for him and finds no one, because once God has taken him there is no second refuge to fall back on. The string of questions is not rhetoric for its own sake; it names the real terror of the devotee, that being chosen by God and then ignored leaves you with nowhere to go. He ends by throwing it back on God's own knowledge: you have seen my steadfastness and you read my heart, so the silence cannot be from ignorance.

GATHA 1907 Prayers

Pleading, the meeting costs you nothing

मराठी मूळ

देई डोळे भेटी न धरीं संकोच । न घलीं कांहीं वेच तुजवरी ॥1॥
तुज बुडवावें ऐसा कोण धर्म । अहनिनशीं नाम घेतां थोडें ॥ध्रु.॥
फार थोडें काहीं करूनि पातळ । त्याजमध्यें काळ कडे लावूं ॥2॥
आहे माझी ते चि सारीन सिदोरी । भार तुजवरी नेदीं माझा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां लेंकराची जाती । भेटावया खंती वाटतसे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Grant me the sight of You; do not hold back. I place no burden of expense upon You.

Taking Your name day and night costs so little. Settle accounts however You wish, little or much; let us use this time to cross over.

I carry my own provisions; I will not place my weight on You. Says Tuka, we are like children by nature; we ache for the meeting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give me the sight of you, the meeting. Do not hold back. I lay no charge of expense on you. What kind of law is it that would let you sink me? Taking your name day and night costs so little. Settle the account however you like, large or small; let us use this time to cross over. I carry my own provisions; I will not put my weight on you. Tuka says: we are children by nature, and we ache for the meeting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues that there is no reason for God to withhold himself, since meeting him costs God nothing at all. He frames it in the language of debt and accounts: he is not asking God to spend anything, only to show his face, and he even insists he brings his own provisions so he will not be a burden. The bargaining is a way of removing every excuse for the delay, pressing the point that grace is free to give. Underneath the ledger language is the real claim of the closing line: he and the other devotees are simply children, and a child's ache to see the parent needs no further justification.

GATHA 1908 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, peace at the sight of God

मराठी मूळ

सीण भाग हरे तेथींच्या निरोपें । देखिलिया रूप उरी नुरे ॥1॥
इंद्रियांची धांव होईल कुंटित । पावेल हें चित्त समाधान॥ध्रु.॥
माहेर आहेसें लौकिकीं कळावें । निढळ बरवें शोभा नेदी ॥2॥
आस नाहीं परी उरी बरी वाटे । आपलें तें भेटे आपणासी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी अविट आवडी । खंडण तांतडी होऊं नेदीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Weariness and fatigue vanish with just a word from that place; upon seeing that form, nothing remains. The rush of the senses becomes still, and the mind finds true peace.

Let the world know that my true home exists; bare forehead has no glory without it. I claim no need, yet having someone of my own feels good; to meet oneself is the deepest joy.

Says Tuka, my love for Him is inexhaustible; I will not let haste break this connection.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Weariness and fatigue fall away at a single word from that place. When that form is seen, nothing else is left. The rushing of the senses goes still. The mind comes to rest in true peace. Let the world know that my home truly exists; a bare forehead has no grace without it. I claim no need, yet to have someone of my own feels good; to meet one's own is the deepest joy. Tuka says: my love for him does not go stale. I will not let any haste break this bond.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what the longed-for meeting actually does: one word from God dissolves exhaustion, the sight of his form leaves nothing else standing, the restless senses fall quiet, and the mind finds real rest. He wants the world to know that his maher, his true home with God, genuinely exists, because a life without that belonging is bare and graceless. He admits he claims to need nothing, yet confesses the plain sweetness of having someone who is truly his own, and calls the reunion a meeting with one's own self. The closing vow guards the bond: his love never goes stale, and he refuses to let impatience snap the connection he has waited so long for.

GATHA 1909 Longing and Separation

Longing, the fruit not yet ripe

मराठी मूळ

धरितों वासना परी नये फळ । प्राप्तीचा तो काळ नाहीं आला ॥1॥
तळमळी चित्त घातलें खापरीं । फुटतसे परी लाहीचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रकार ते कांहीं नावडती जीवा । नाहीं पुढें ठावा काळ हातीं ॥2॥
जातों तळा येतों मागुता लौकरी । वोळशाचे फेरी सांपडलों ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु करितों विचार । उतरें डोंगर एक चढें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I hold the desire, but the fruit does not come; the time of fulfillment has not yet arrived. My chitta, placed upon the griddle, seethes and cracks like parched grain.

The ways of the world do not please my jiva, and the future is not in my hands. I sink down and rise again quickly, caught in these revolving cycles.

Says Tuka, I deliberate endlessly; one mountain descends only for another to rise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I hold the desire, but the fruit does not come. The time of attainment has not yet arrived. My heart writhes; thrown on the hot griddle, it bursts like a grain of parched corn. The ways of the world do not please my soul, and the time ahead is not in my hands. I go down and climb back up again at once, caught in the turning of the cycle. Tuka says: I think and think it over; one mountain goes down only for another to rise.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the special pain of devotion deferred: he has the longing fully formed, but the fruit will not ripen because the appointed time has not come. He gives it a sharp image, his heart cracking and popping like a kernel of corn on a hot pan, unable to rest. The trap is that the world no longer satisfies him and yet God has not yet arrived, so he is suspended between, with the future out of his control and no relief either way. The closing line lands the whole condition: his endless deliberation gets nowhere, because crossing one mountain only reveals another, and the seeker keeps climbing without arriving.

GATHA 1910 Longing and Separation

Longing, why can I not reach Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

कां माझे पंढरी न देखती डोळे । काय हें न कळे पाप यांचें ॥1॥
पाय पंथें कां हे न चलती वाट । कोण हें अदृष्ट कर्म बळी ॥ध्रु.॥
कां हें पायांवरी न पडे मस्तक । क्षेम कां हस्तक न पवती ॥2॥
कां या इंद्रियांची न पुरे वासना । पवित्र होईना जिव्हा कीर्ती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कई जाऊनि मोटळें । पडेन हा लोळें महाद्वारीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do my eyes not see Pandhari? What sin of mine conceals it? Why do my feet not walk that sacred path? What unseen karma overpowers me? Why does my head not fall at those feet? Why do my hands not reach out in greeting? Why is the longing of my senses not fulfilled? Why does my tongue not become pure with praise? Says Tuka, when will I go and cast myself prostrate at the great gate?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do my eyes not see Pandhari? What sin of mine hides it from them? Why do my feet not walk that sacred road? What unseen karma is so strong against me? Why does my head not fall at those feet? Why do my hands not reach out in greeting? Why is the longing of my senses not fulfilled? Why does my tongue not grow pure with his praise? Tuka says: when will I go, and fall down rolling at the great gate?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pours out a litany of questions, each blaming his own hidden sin and karma for the gulf between him and Pandharpur. He inventories every part of himself that is being kept from God: eyes that cannot see the town, feet that cannot walk the road, head that cannot bow at the feet, hands that cannot greet, senses unfulfilled, tongue not yet purified by praise. The repeated why turns the longing into self-examination rather than complaint against God, locating the obstacle in his own unripeness. The final line gathers it into one ache, the day he will throw himself down and roll in the dust at the great gate of the temple.

GATHA 1911 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child makes a scene

मराठी मूळ

काय पोरें जालीं फार । किंवा न साहे करकर ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि केली सांडी । घांस घेऊं न ल्हां तोंडीं ॥ध्रु.॥
करूं कलागती। तुज भांडणें भोंवतीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे टांचें । घरीं जालेंसे वरोचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Have too many children been born, or can You no longer bear the noise? Is that why You have cast me off, refusing even to feed me? I will make a scene and quarrel all around You. Says Tuka, something seems to have gone wrong at home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Have too many children been born to you? Or can you no longer bear the noise? Is that why you have cast me aside, not letting me take even a mouthful into my mouth? Then I will make a scene; I will quarrel and squabble all around you. Tuka says: something seems to have gone wrong at home.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays the neglected child to the hilt, teasing God with the suspicion that he has so many children now, or is so tired of the racket, that he has stopped feeding this one. The complaint is half mock-jealousy, half real hunger for God's attention. His response is not dignified silence but a deliberate tantrum: he will cling and quarrel and create a disturbance until God has to deal with him. The closing line keeps it playful, guessing that some trouble has broken out in God's household, while the real point is the devotee's refusal to be quietly ignored.

GATHA 1912 Longing and Separation

Longing, have I become a burden

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं चिंतेविण । नाहीं उपजत सीण ॥1॥
तरी हा पडिला विसर । माझा तुह्मां जाला भार ॥ध्रु.॥
आली कांहीं तुटी । गेली सुटोनियां गांठी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घरीं । बहु बैसले रिणकरी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Anxiety does not arise without some cause for worry. So have You forgotten me? Have I become a burden? Has some rift appeared? Has the knot between us come undone? Says Tuka, perhaps many creditors have gathered in Your house.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Weariness does not rise up without some cause for worry. So have you forgotten me? Have I become a burden to you? Has some break come between us? Has the knot that bound us slipped loose? Tuka says: perhaps many creditors have gathered in your house.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads his own distress as evidence: this exhaustion would not have arisen unless something were truly wrong, so he probes for the cause. He runs through the possibilities a worried child imagines, that God has forgotten him, that he has become a load too heavy to carry, that the tie between them has snapped. Each guess names the same fear, that the bond he relies on has come undone. The closing line softens it with the old teasing image of God beset by creditors at home, too pressed to attend to him, keeping the complaint affectionate even as it voices the dread of being let go.

GATHA 1913 Longing and Separation

Longing, a message costs nothing

मराठी मूळ

निरोपासी वेचे । काय बोलतां फुकाचें ॥1॥
परी हें नेघेवे चि यश । भेओं नको सुखी आस ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख समाधानें । कोण पाहे देणें घेणें ॥2॥
न लगे निरोपासी मोल । तुका ह्मणे वेचे बोल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Does sending a message cost anything? Speaking costs nothing. But do not refuse this satisfaction; do not fear, for the hope of happiness remains.

When one is content, who cares about debts and dues? A message costs nothing; Says Tuka, it spends only words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What does it cost you to send a message? Speaking takes nothing from you. Do not refuse me this much; do not be afraid, for the hope of happiness is still here. When the heart is content, who keeps count of what is given and what is taken? A message has no price. Tuka says: it spends only words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is begging God for the smallest sign, and arguing that the giving costs nothing. A word, a message, takes nothing out of God's hand, so there is no reason to withhold it. He tells himself not to be afraid, because the hope of joy has not died. His point is that love is not bookkeeping: where there is real contentment, no one tallies debts and dues. All he asks is a word, and a word is free.

GATHA 1914 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the miser and the hoarding God

मराठी मूळ

जोडीच्या हव्यासें । लागे धनांचें चि पिसें ॥1॥
मग आणीक दुसरें । लोभ्या नावडती पोरें ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहे रुक्याकडे । मग अवघें ओस पडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । तुला बहुत चि हेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the frenzy of accumulating, one becomes mad only for wealth. Then a miser does not even care for his own children.

He stares only at the coins, and everything else becomes barren. Says Tuka, O God, You have great fondness for hoarding too.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the fever of piling things up, a man goes mad for money alone. Then nothing else matters to him; even his own children mean nothing to a miser. He stares only at his coins, and everything around him turns barren. Tuka says: O God, you too are very fond of hoarding.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the sickness of greed and then turns it, shockingly, on God himself. The miser's hunger to accumulate eats his heart until even his own children stop mattering; he sees only his coins, and his whole world goes dry. This is a warning about what the craving to possess does to a person, hollowing out every bond. Then Tuka aims the same charge upward: you, God, are no less fond of hoarding, keeping your grace stored up while your children wait. The sting is meant to provoke God into giving, and to make us examine our own clutching.

GATHA 1915 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the God who never stops taking

मराठी मूळ

मविलें मविती । नेणों रासी पडिल्या किती ॥1॥
परि तूं धाला चि न धासी । आलें उभाउभीं घेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघ्यां अवघा काळ । वाटा पाहाती सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । अराणूक तुज कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have been counting and measuring endlessly; I do not know how many heaps have piled up. Yet You are never satisfied; You keep taking whatever comes before You.

All people at all times watch and wait for their share. Says Tuka, You never rest even for a moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You keep measuring and measuring; I cannot tell how many heaps have piled up. Yet you are never full, never satisfied; whatever comes before you, you take it standing. At every hour, everyone is watching, waiting for their share. Tuka says: you never get a moment's rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God as a tireless merchant at his weighing, taking in heap upon heap and never satisfied. Everything that comes is gathered up, and still the hunger does not end. Meanwhile the crowd of devotees stands at all hours, watching the road, waiting for what they are owed. The complaint is double: God hoards endlessly, and in doing so he never even rests. Behind the scolding is the longing of someone who feels kept waiting at the door of an inexhaustible giver who has not yet given.

GATHA 1916 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the standing God of Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

न बैससी खालीं । सम उभा च पाउलीं ॥1॥
ऐसे जाले बहुत दिस । जालीं युगें अठ्ठाविस ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं भाग सीण । अराणूक एक क्षण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती । मापें केलीं देती घेती॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You never sit down; You stand evenly on that brick. It has been this way for ages, for twenty-eight yugas.

There is no fatigue or weariness, not a moment of rest. Says Tuka, how many measures have You given and received in that time?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You never sit down; you stand level on that brick, both feet even. It has been this way a long time now, for twenty-eight yugas. No tiredness, no weariness, not one moment of rest. Tuka says: how many measures have you given and taken in all that time?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Vitthal standing on the brick at Pandhari, feet set evenly, never sitting through twenty-eight yugas of waiting. Tukaram marvels that this posture has held across ages with no fatigue and no pause. The standing God is the patient God, endlessly available, endlessly at his post. Then comes the merchant image again: across all those ages, how many measures has he weighed out and taken in? The wonder and the gentle accusation run together, the eternal stander who keeps the books of every soul.

GATHA 1917 Longing and Separation

Longing, the children threaten the hoarding father

मराठी मूळ

जोडी कोणांसाटीं । एवढी करितोसी आटी ॥1॥
जरी हें आह्मां नाहीं सुख । रडों पोरें पोटीं भूक ॥ध्रु.॥
करूनि जतन। कोणा देसील हें धन ॥2॥
आमचे तळमळे । तुझें होईल वाटोळें ॥3॥
घेसील हा श्राप । माझा होऊनियां बाप ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे उरी । आतां न ठेवीं यावरी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For whom do You labor so tirelessly? If we, Your own children, have no share of this happiness, we shall weep with hunger in our bellies. After guarding this wealth so carefully, to whom will You give it? If we suffer while You hoard, it will be Your own ruin.

You will bear this curse, having become our father. Says Tuka, I will hold nothing back now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For whom do you toil so hard? If we, your own children, get no share of this happiness, we will cry with the hunger in our bellies. After guarding all this wealth so carefully, to whom will you give it? If we waste away while you hoard, it will be your own ruin. You will carry this curse, you who became my father. Tuka says: I will hold nothing back now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a starving child confronting a hoarding father. He asks who all this labor is for, if the children whose right it is are left with nothing but hunger. The threat is sharp: a father who lets his own children waste away brings ruin and a curse upon himself, and that responsibility is God's precisely because he took the place of father. There is real audacity here, love pressed to the point of accusation. Tuka says he will no longer keep anything back, meaning he will say it all to God's face.

GATHA 1918 Longing and Separation

Longing, the threat of total revolt

मराठी मूळ

करूनि चाहाडी । अवघी बुडवीन जोडी ॥1॥
जरि तूं होऊनि उदास । माझी बुडविसी आस ॥ध्रु.॥
येथें न करी काम। मुखें नेघें तुझें नाम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कुळ । तुझें बुडवीन समूळ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You grow indifferent and drown my hopes, I will lodge complaints and destroy all Your savings. I will refuse to work here and stop taking Your name.

Says Tuka, I will uproot Your entire lineage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you grow cold to me and drown my hope, I will lodge complaints and sink your whole fortune. I will not work here; my mouth will not take your name. Tuka says: I will uproot your entire line.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the devotee's threat goes to its furthest, deliberately outrageous edge. If God turns indifferent and lets his hope die, Tukaram says he will turn informer against him, ruin his accounts, refuse all service, and even stop speaking the holy Name. The final words, that he will uproot God's whole lineage, are the language of a furious dependent who has nothing left to bargain with but his devotion. The point is not real contempt; it is the lover's gamble, staking everything to force the beloved to respond. The very threat to stop taking the Name shows how much the Name is the only thing he has.

GATHA 1919 Longing and Separation

Longing, shamed in the rich one's house

मराठी मूळ

समर्थाचे पोटीं । आह्मी जन्मलों करंटीं ॥1॥
ऐसी जाली जगीं कीतिन । तुझ्या नामाची फजिती ॥ध्रु.॥
येथें नाहीं खाया। न ये कोणी मूळ न्याया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जिणें । आतां खोटें जीवपणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Born in the house of the Capable One, we turned out wretched. Such is the fame that has spread in the world: Your name has been disgraced.

There is nothing to eat here; no one comes even to inquire. Says Tuka, living itself has become false and shameful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Born in the house of the Almighty, we turned out wretched. This is the report that has spread through the world: your name has been disgraced. There is nothing here to eat; no one even comes to ask after us. Tuka says: living like this has become a false, shameful thing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the family quarrel into the open: children of the all-powerful Lord, yet left destitute, a scandal that shames not them but God's own name. If the master's house keeps its dependents starving and unvisited, the disgrace falls on the master. He says there is nothing to eat and no one comes to inquire, the picture of utter neglect. So even being alive has become false and shameful, because such a life dishonors the one who is supposed to provide. The complaint is a way of holding God to his own reputation as the Capable One.

GATHA 1920 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting for word

मराठी मूळ

पुढें तरी चित्ता । काय येईल तें आतां ॥1॥
मज सांगोनिया धाडीं । वाट पाहातों वराडी ॥ध्रु.॥
कंठीं धरिला प्राण । पायांपाशीं आलें मन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता । बहु वाटतसे आतां॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What will come to mind next? Send me word. I watch the road eagerly.

My life hangs in my throat; my mind has already reached Your feet. Says Tuka, great worry presses upon me now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What will come into your mind next? Send me word now. I keep watching the road for the travelers. My life hangs in my throat; my mind has already gone to your feet. Tuka says: a great worry presses on me now.

WHAT IT MEANS

After the threats, the tone softens into pure waiting. Tukaram asks God what he intends and begs for some message, while he stands watching the road for the pilgrims who might bring it. His life is held in his throat, the image of someone barely breathing in suspense, and his mind has already run ahead to God's feet. All that is left is anxious watching. The poem catches the ache of a devotee who has said everything and now waits, sick with worry, for any sign of an answer.

GATHA 1921 Confession and Sin

Confession, the mind out of control

मराठी मूळ

कैंचा मज धीर । कोठें बुद्धि माझी ि्स्थर ॥1॥
जें या मनासी आवरूं । आंत पोटीं वाव धरूं ॥ध्रु.॥
कैंची शुद्ध मति। भांडवल ऐसें हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोण दशा आली सांगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where is my patience? Where is the steadiness of my intellect? I try to restrain this mind, to hold some space within. Where is the pure wisdom, the capital I might rely on? Says Tuka, what condition has befallen me? Tell me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where will I find patience? Where is my intellect steady? I try to hold this mind in, to keep a little space inside. Where is the clean understanding, the capital I could rely on? Tuka says: tell me, what state have I fallen into?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the searching inward and admits he has nothing of his own to stand on. He cannot find patience or a steady mind; every attempt to restrain his thoughts and keep some inner room fails. He looks for clear wisdom as a merchant looks for capital and finds his hands empty. The last line is a bare cry for help: tell me what has become of me. This is the honest underside of all the bold threats, the confession that the seeker is helpless and disordered without God's grace.

GATHA 1922 Prayers

Prayer, falling at Vithoba's feet

मराठी मूळ

समर्पक वाणी । नाहीं ऐकिजेसी कानीं ॥1॥
आतां भावें करूनि साचा । पायां पडिलों विठोबाच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
न कळे उचित। करूं समाधान चित्त ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विनंती । विनविली धरा चित्तीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not hear words that are fitting or proper. Now, with sincere devotion, I have fallen at the feet of Vithoba.

I cannot discern what is right; I seek only to calm the mind. Says Tuka, I make this humble plea; hold it in Your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No fitting words reach my ears. Now, with true feeling, I have fallen at Vithoba's feet. I do not know what is right; I only want to quiet my mind. Tuka says: I make this plea; hold it in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the abhanga settles into plain surrender. Tukaram says he can find no worthy words and no clear sense of what is right; his only wish is for the mind to grow still. So he lays himself, in sincere feeling, at the feet of Vithoba, the God of Pandhari. The whole posture has shifted from demand to entreaty. He asks God simply to take this plea and keep it in his heart, trusting the appeal where his own wisdom has run out.

GATHA 1923 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting for the pilgrims

मराठी मूळ

येती वारकरी । वाट पाहातों तोंवरी ॥1॥
घालूनियां दंडवत । पुसेन निरोपाची मात ॥ध्रु.॥
पत्र हातीं दिलें । जया जेथें पाठविलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येती । जाइन सामोरा पुढती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will wait until the Varkaris come. Bowing before them, I will ask for news and messages.

I gave them a letter to deliver wherever it was sent. Says Tuka, when they return, I will go forward to welcome them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will wait until the Varkaris come. I will bow down to them and ask for news and any message. I gave them a letter to carry wherever it was meant to go. Tuka says: when they come back, I will go forward to meet them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures himself as one left behind, waiting on the road for the Varkaris, the pilgrims who walk to Pandharpur. They are his messengers: he has bowed to them, given them a letter for God, and now he waits for their return with any word back. The longing for God is carried in this very ordinary act of watching for travelers and running out to meet them. It is the patience of someone who has sent his heart ahead and lives for the reply, honoring the pilgrim-saints as the bearers of that exchange.

GATHA 1924 Prayers

Humility, the worn threshold stone

मराठी मूळ

रुळें महाद्वारीं । पायांखालील पायरी ॥1॥
तैसें माझें दंडवत । सांगा निरोप हा संत ॥ध्रु.॥
पडे दंडकाठी । देह भलतीसवा लोटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बाळ । लोळे न धरितां सांभाळ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a threshold stone that lies worn underfoot at the great gate, such is my prostration. O saints, carry this message of mine.

My body falls like a staff wherever it is flung. Says Tuka, like an infant who rolls about without anyone to hold him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like the bottom step worn smooth underfoot at the great gate, such is my prostration. O saints, carry this message of mine. My body falls like a thrown stick, tossed down any which way. Tuka says: like a child who rolls about with no one to hold him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lowers himself completely and asks the saints to carry his message to God. He compares his prostration to the lowest step at the great temple gate, the stone everyone treads on, worn smooth by feet. His body, he says, drops like a staff flung down carelessly, with no will of its own. The closing image is the most tender: a small child rolling on the ground with no one to pick it up. It is the cry of total dependence, asking the saints to be the arms that carry him to the God who can hold him.

GATHA 1925 Longing and Separation

Longing, pleading through the saints

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी संतजनीं । माझी करावी विनवणी ॥1॥
काय तुक्याचा अन्याय । त्यासी अंतरले पाय ॥ध्रु.॥
भाका बहुतां रीती। माझी कीव काकुलती ॥2॥
न देखे पंढरी । तुका चरण विटेवरी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O saints, please make my appeal on my behalf. What wrong has Tuka done, that those feet have become distant? I beg in every manner, with pity and with pleading.

Says Tuka, I cannot see Pandhari, nor those feet upon the brick.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You saints, make my appeal for me. What wrong has Tuka done, that those feet have grown distant from him? I beg in every way; I plead, full of pity for myself. Tuka says: I cannot see Pandhari, nor those feet upon the brick.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram feels cut off from Vitthal and turns to the saints to carry his case, as though he no longer trusts his own voice to reach. He cannot name a crime, only the fact of the distance: the feet that should be near have moved away, and he does not know why. So he pleads in every register he can find, openly pitying himself before the very ones he asks for help. The ache at the center is concrete: he cannot see Pandhari, the holy town, nor the feet set level on the brick, and that absence is the whole of his sorrow.

GATHA 1926 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child running home

मराठी मूळ

होइल कृपादान । तरी मी येईन धांवोन ॥1॥
होती संतांचिया भेटी । आनंदें नाचों वाळवंटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
रिघेन मातेपुढें । स्तनपान करीन कोडें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ताप । हरती देखोनियां बाप॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the gift of grace is bestowed, I will come running. There will be the meeting with the saints; I will dance with joy in the open fields.

I will rush to the Mother and suckle at Her breast with delight. Says Tuka, all suffering vanishes when one sees the Father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If the gift of grace is given, then I will come running. I will meet the saints, and dance with joy on the open sand by the river. I will rush up to the Mother and gladly drink at Her breast. Tuka says: all the burning vanishes the moment I see the Father.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his coming conditional on one thing: let grace be given, and the rest follows by itself. He pictures the reward in plain bodily images, not abstractions: the meeting with the saints, the dancing on the sandbank where the pilgrims gather at Pandhari, the child rushing to nurse at the mother. Here God is both Mother and Father, and the saint stays a small child before them. The last line names the stakes simply: every fever and torment of the soul is gone the instant the Father's face is seen, so the whole weight of the poem rests on that one sight.

GATHA 1927 Prayers

Prayer, the sinner asks for power

मराठी मूळ

परिसोनि उत्तर । जाब देईजे सत्वर ॥1॥
जरी तूं होसी कृपावंत । तरि हा बोलावीं पतित ॥ध्रु.॥
नाणीं कांहीं मना । करूनि पापाचा उगाणा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । काय शक्ति तुझे पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear my case and give a swift reply. If You are truly gracious, then call this wrongdoer to You.

Do not let the memory of sins enter Your mind. Says Tuka, is there no power left at Your feet?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hear my case and answer me quickly. If You are truly full of mercy, then call this fallen man to You. Do not bring my sins to mind; cancel the whole account of them. Tuka says: is there no power left in Your feet?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God for a swift verdict, as a man pleads before a judge who keeps him waiting. His argument turns God's own nature against any delay: if mercy is real, then mercy must reach exactly the fallen man, the one who needs it. He asks not for a fair reckoning but for the ledger of sins to be wiped out, the account closed and forgotten. The sharp final line is a dare dressed as a question: surely the feet that can save have not lost their strength, so let them prove it on me.

GATHA 1928 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the taste of the Name

मराठी मूळ

ऐकोनियां कीर्ती । ऐसी वाटती विश्रांती ॥1॥
माते सुख डोळां पडे । तेथें कोण लाभ जोडे ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलतां ये वाचे । वीट नये जिव्हा नाचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धांवे । वासना ते रस घ्यावे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hearing of Your glory brings such rest and peace. When the Mother's eyes fall upon her child, what greater gain can there be? Speaking of You, the tongue never tires but dances with joy.

Says Tuka, desire itself runs to drink that nectar.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Just hearing of Your glory brings such rest. When the Mother's gaze falls on me, what greater gain could there be? When I speak of You, my mouth never tires; my tongue dances. Tuka says: desire itself runs to drink this nectar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what God's presence does to a person, starting from the smallest contact: merely hearing the divine praise already settles the heart into peace. He uses the mother's loving look as the measure of all gain, since once it falls on the child there is nothing left to want. Speech of God does not wear the tongue down but sets it dancing, the opposite of ordinary talk that tires. The closing turn is the boldest: even craving, usually the restless enemy of peace, is converted, so that desire itself comes running to drink this nectar instead of chasing the world.

GATHA 1929 Longing and Separation

Longing, spent strength and lingering ache

मराठी मूळ

किती करूं शोक । पुढें वाढे दुःखें दुःख ॥1॥
आतां जाणसी तें करीं । माझें कोण मनीं धरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पुण्य होतें गांठी । तरि कां लागती हे आटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बळ । माझी राहिली तळमळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much more shall I lament? Sorrow only breeds more sorrow. Now do as You see fit; who else will hold my cause in mind? If there were merit stored in my account, why would such hardship come? Says Tuka, my strength is spent, but the anguish lingers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How much more should I grieve? Sorrow only breeds more sorrow ahead. Now do what You think right; who else holds my cause in mind? If I had merit stored up, why would such hardship fall on me? Tuka says: my strength is gone, but the anguish stays.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has reached the end of complaint and sees that grieving only feeds itself, each sorrow giving birth to the next. So he hands the matter over: let God do as God sees fit, since no one else even keeps his case in their thoughts. He reads his suffering as evidence of an empty account, no merit laid by, for otherwise the hardship would not have come. The last line names the cruel state he is left in: his force is used up, yet the burning unrest refuses to leave, so even surrender brings no rest.

GATHA 1930 Worldly Life

Worldly life, calamity upon calamity

मराठी मूळ

करील आबाळी । माझ्या दांताची कसाळी ॥1॥
जासी एखादा मरोन । पाठी लागेल हें जन ॥ध्रु.॥
घरीं लागे कळहे। नाहीं जात तो शीतळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोरवडे । मज येतील रोकडे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Troubles will crush me like a sugarcane mill. If someone dies, the world will come chasing after.

Quarrels break out at home; nothing feels cool anymore. Says Tuka, calamities come rushing to me one after another.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Troubles will crush me, the way a mill crushes the cane. Should anyone die, the world comes chasing after me. Quarrels break out at home; nothing stays cool. Tuka says: misfortunes come at me one after another, here and now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays bare the grinding pressure of ordinary household life, with no consolation added. He sees himself crushed like sugarcane fed into the press, the juice squeezed out under endless weight. Death in the family does not bring peace but a swarm of demands as the world descends on him, and his own home gives no shelter, only fresh quarrels with nothing left cool or settled. The poem is honest about the texture of worldly existence: the calamities do not arrive once but keep coming, cash in hand, one after another, which is itself the case for looking past this life to God.

GATHA 1931 Longing and Separation

Longing, a blessing edged with reproach

मराठी मूळ

आतां आशीर्वाद । माझा असो सुखें नांद ॥1॥
ह्मणसी कोणा तरी काळें । आहेतसी माझीं बाळें ॥ध्रु.॥
दुरी दूरांतर। तरी घेसी समाचार ॥2॥
नेसी कधीं तरी । तुका ह्मणे लाज हरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Here is my blessing: may You dwell in happiness. At least sometime, You might say: these are my children.

Even at a great distance, You might take notice and inquire. Says Tuka, will You never feel shame, O Hari?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here, take my blessing: live in happiness. At least sometime You might say, these are my children. Even from far, far away, You might ask after me. Tuka says: will You never feel shame, O Hari?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the tables and blesses God, the way a hurt child wishes a distant parent well while clearly feeling neglected. His asking is humble to the point of pain: he would settle for God merely acknowledging him now and then as one of His own. Even a word of inquiry sent across the great distance would be enough. Then the blessing sharpens into a reproach in the signature line: he asks Hari whether he will never feel ashamed of leaving his devotee waiting so long, pressing the bond of love as a claim God ought to honor.

GATHA 1932 Prayers

Prayer, the last word and silence after

मराठी मूळ

आतां हे सेवटीं । माझी आइकावी गोष्टी ॥1॥
आतां द्यावा वचनाचा । जाब कळे तैसा याचा ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां करकर। पुढें न करीं उत्तर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठसा । तुझा आहे राखें तैसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now hear this last word of mine. Give whatever reply You can to my plea.

Henceforth I will make no further complaint. Says Tuka, preserve Your impression upon me just as it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, at the end, hear this one thing of mine. Now give the answer to my plea, whatever You can. After this I will nag You no more. Tuka says: keep Your mark on me just as it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presents this as his final petition, the last word before he falls silent. He asks only for some reply, whatever God is able to give, and promises in return to stop his constant pressing and complaint. The poem is the act of a man stepping back after long pleading and resolving to let God be. The closing request is the quiet heart of it: let the impression God has already stamped on him stay unaltered, so that even in his silence the bond is kept intact.

GATHA 1933 Prayers

Prayer, asking forgiveness for words

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलों ते आतां । कांहीं जाणतां नेणतां ॥1॥
क्षमा करावे अन्याय । पांडुरंगे माझे माय ॥ध्रु.॥
स्तुती निंदा केली। लागे पाहिजे साहिली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाड । दिला तैसें पुरवा कोड ॥3॥ ॥36॥
या पत्राच्या उत्तराच्या मार्गप्रतीक्षेचे अभंग 19

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever I have said, knowingly or unknowingly, forgive my offenses, O Panduranga, my mother. I have offered both praise and blame; bear it as You must.

Says Tuka, You have indulged me; now fulfill this longing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever I have said until now, knowing or not knowing, forgive the offenses, O Panduranga, my mother. I have given You both praise and blame; You must bear it. Tuka says: You have indulged me, so now fulfill this longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram closes a long stretch of address by asking pardon for everything he has said, whether spoken in awareness or in ignorance. He calls Panduranga his mother, and that name carries the whole argument: a mother bears with a child who praises and scolds in the same breath. He does not pretend his words were all reverent; he admits to blame mixed with praise and asks that it be endured rather than counted against him. The last line presses the bond of indulgence into a claim: a parent who has already spoiled the child is expected to grant the wish too, so let the longing be fulfilled.

GATHA 1934 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road for word from home

मराठी मूळ

माहेरिंचा काय येईल निरोप । ह्मणऊनि झोंप नाहीं डोळां ॥1॥
वाट पाहें आस धरूनियां जीवीं । निडळा हे ठेवीं वरी बाहे ॥ध्रु.॥
बोटवरी माप लेखितों दिवस । होतों कासावीस धीर नाहीं ॥2॥
काय नेणों संतां पडेल विसर । कीं नव्हे सादर मायबाप॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें होईल दाटणी । कोण माझें आणी मना तेथें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What news will come from my true home? With this thought, sleep does not visit my eyes. I watch the road with hope held within me, hand on my brow, gazing into the distance.

I count the days on my fingers, restless and without patience. Perhaps the saints have forgotten, or perhaps the Lord is not inclined.

Says Tuka, there must be a great crowd around Him; who will bring me to His mind?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What news will come from my true home? With that thought, sleep does not touch my eyes. I watch the road, holding hope in my heart, my hand shading my brow as I look into the distance. I count the days on my fingers; I am restless, I have no patience. Maybe the saints have forgotten me, or maybe the Lord is not turned toward me. Tuka says: there must be such a crowd around Him; who there will bring me to His mind?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram waits like someone longing for word from a beloved homeland, and the longing keeps sleep away. He stands at the road with his hand raised to his brow, scanning the distance for any messenger, counting off the days he has waited. He lets himself voice the two fears of the waiting: that the saints who were to carry his case have forgotten him, or that the Lord himself is simply not inclined toward him. The final worry is the most human: God is thronged by so many, so who in that crowd will speak his name and turn the Lord's attention back to him?

GATHA 1935 Faith and Trust

Faith, the ocean of mercy

मराठी मूळ

परि तो आहे कृपेचा सागर । तोंवरी अंतर पडों नेदी॥1॥
बहुकानदृष्टी आइके देखणा । पुरोनियां जना उरलासे॥ध्रु.॥
सांगितल्याविणें जाणे अंतरिंचें । पुरवावें ज्याचें तैसें कोड ॥2॥
बहुमुखें कीर्ती आइकिली कानीं । विश्वास ही मनीं आहे माझा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं जात वांयांविण । पाळतो वचन बोलिलों तें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Yet He is an ocean of mercy; He will not let the distance last too long. He hears with many ears, sees with many eyes; having filled all beings, He remains still more.

Without being told, He knows the mind's secrets and fulfills each one's longing as it truly is. Through many mouths, His fame has reached my ears, and my faith in Him remains firm.

Says Tuka, He never lets things go to waste; He keeps the word He has spoken.

IN PLAIN WORDS

But He is an ocean of mercy; until I reach Him, He will not let the distance hold. He hears with many ears, sees with many eyes; He has filled all beings, and still more of Him remains. Without being told, He knows what is inside; He fulfills each one's longing just as it is. From many mouths His fame has reached my ears, and that faith is firm in my mind. Tuka says: nothing with Him goes to waste; He keeps the word He has spoken.

WHAT IT MEANS

After the dread of being forgotten, Tukaram answers his own fear with what he knows of God's nature. He calls God a boundless ocean of mercy who will not allow the separation to last forever. The middle verses lean on God's all-pervading reach: He hears and sees through countless ears and eyes, fills every being and yet overflows beyond them, and knows each heart's wish without being told. Tukaram grounds his confidence not in feeling but in testimony and trust, the fame reported through many mouths, and rests on the plain assurance that God wastes nothing and keeps His given word, so the waiting cannot end in abandonment.

GATHA 1936 Longing and Separation

Longing, the senses still only at the reply

मराठी मूळ

यावरि न कळे संचित आपुलें । कैसें वोडवलें होइल पुढें ॥1॥
करील विक्षेप धाडितां मुळासी । किंवा धाडा ऐसी तांतडी हे ॥ध्रु.॥
जोंवरी हे डोळां देखें वारकरी । तों हें भरोवरी करी चित्त ॥2॥
आस वाढविते बुद्धीचे तरंग । मनाचे ही वेग वावडती॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेव्हां होतील निश्चळ । इंिद्रयें सकळ निरोपानें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Beyond this, I cannot know my own destiny, nor what lies ahead. The message I sent may meet with obstacles, or perhaps it will prompt an urgent reply.

As long as my eyes see the Varkaris returning, my chitta will find its reassurance. Waves of desire and surges of the mind keep rising in hope.

Says Tuka, only when the message arrives will all the senses become still.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Beyond this I cannot know my own store of deeds, nor how it will turn out ahead. The message I sent may meet with obstacles, or it may be so urgent it is sent on at once. As long as my eyes can see the Varkaris returning, my mind keeps reassuring itself. Waves of thought keep raising my hope; the rushes of the mind fly about. Tuka says: only when the reply comes will all my senses grow still.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits the limit of what he can know: his own past deeds and his future are hidden from him, so he cannot tell how this will end. He watches his sent plea with two minds, fearing it will be blocked yet hoping it is urgent enough to be passed straight on. He keeps his heart steady by watching the Varkari pilgrims come back along the road, the visible sign that the way to God stays open. But thought rises in waves and the restless mind flies about, and he is honest that hope alone cannot settle it: only the actual reply from God will bring all his senses to rest.

GATHA 1937 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrims departing, grief of separation

मराठी मूळ

होईल निरोप घेतला यावरी । राउळाभीतरीं जाऊनियां॥1॥
करूनियां दधिमंगळभोजन । प्रयाण शकुनसुमुहूर्तें॥ध्रु.॥
होतील दाटले सद्गदित कंठीं । भरतें या पोटीं वियोगाचें ॥2॥
येरयेरां भेटी क्षेम आलिंगनें । केलीं समाधान होतीं संतीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चाली न साहे मनास । पाहाती कळस परपरतों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the message is received, the saints will go into the temple to take their leave. After the auspicious meal, they will set out at a blessed moment.

Their throats will choke with emotion; the grief of separation wells up within them. They will embrace one another, exchanging greetings and farewells, and the saints will console each other.

Says Tuka, the departure is hard on the chitta; they look back again and again at the temple spire.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the message comes, the saints will go into the temple to take their leave. They will eat the auspicious meal of curds and set out at a blessed hour. Their throats will choke; the grief of parting wells up inside them. They will embrace one another, give their greetings and farewells, and console each other. Tuka says: the going is hard on the mind. They look back at the temple spire again and again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is picturing the Varkaris leaving Pandhari at the end of the pilgrimage, and he is naming the cost of every parting from the place where God is met. The ritual is exact: word arrives, leave is taken in the temple, the blessed meal is eaten, the auspicious hour chosen. But under the order is grief; the throats choke and the pilgrims keep turning to look at the spire as long as it stays in sight. He lets the leaving stand for the soul's reluctance to walk away from the presence it has tasted. The mind cannot bear the step that carries it away.

GATHA 1938 Devotion to Vitthal

The road home, joy carried back

मराठी मूळ

ऐसी ते सांडिली होईल पंढरी । येते वारकरी होत वाटे ॥1॥
देखिले सोहळे होती आठवत । चालती ते मात करूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
केली आइकिली होईल जे कथा । राहिलें तें चित्ता होइल प्रेम ॥2॥
गरुडटके टाळ मृदांग पताका । सांगती ते एकां एक सुख ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां येती लवलाहीं । आलिंगूनि बाहीं देइन क्षेम ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having left Pandhari behind, the Varkaris travel homeward along the road. The celebrations they witnessed come back to memory as they walk and talk of them.

The stories told and heard, and the love that lingered in the chitta. The Garuda-pillars, cymbals, drums, and banners; they share these joys with one another.

Says Tuka, now they come swiftly; I will embrace them and give them greeting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

So they leave Pandhari behind, and the Varkaris come homeward along the road. The celebrations they saw keep coming back to them as they walk and talk of them. The stories told and heard, the love that stayed in the chitta. The Garuda-pillars, the cymbals, the drums, the banners: they tell each other these joys, one to another. Tuka says: now they are coming quickly. I will take them in my arms and give them my greeting.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the return journey, and Tukaram turns from the grief of leaving to the joy that travels back with the pilgrims. They carry Pandhari home in memory: the celebrations, the stories, the music, the love that lodged in the chitta and would not leave. He stands at the far end of the road, waiting, and his own longing leans toward them as they hurry near. The Varkaris become carriers of news from the place where God lives, and meeting them is itself a way of touching that place again.

GATHA 1939 Devotion to Vitthal

Welcoming the messengers, body offered

मराठी मूळ

क्षेम मायबाप पुसेन हें आधीं । न घलीं हें मधीं सुख दुःख ॥1॥
न करीं तांतडी आपणांपासूनि । आइकेन कानीं सांगतीं तें ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतरींचें संत जाणतील गूज । निरोप तो मज सांगतील॥2॥
पायांवरी डोई ठेवीन आदरें । प्रीतिपडिभरें आिंळगून ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे काया करीन कुरवंडी । ओवाळून सांडीं त्यांवरून ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

First I will ask after my Father and Mother; I will not let joy or sorrow come between. I will not hurry on my own account but listen patiently to whatever they tell.

The saints will know the inner secret; they will bring me the true message. I will bow my head at their feet with love and embrace them tenderly.

Says Tuka, I will offer my body as a sacrifice, waving it over them in adoration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

First I will ask after my Father and Mother; I will not let joy or sorrow come between. I will not hurry for my own sake but listen to whatever they tell me. The saints know the secret of the heart; they will bring me the true message. I will lay my head on their feet with respect, and embrace them with the fullness of love. Tuka says: I will make my body an offering, waving it over them and casting it away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rehearses how he will receive the returning saints, and he puts the welcome above himself. His first question is not about his own state but after his Father and Mother, the divine parents at the home he longs for, and he refuses to let his own joy or sorrow crowd that in. He bows at the saints' feet because they alone carry the inner message from God. The last line is the strongest: he will treat his own body as a thing to be waved over them and thrown away, the gesture of warding off harm with a worthless object. The messengers from God are worth more to him than his own life.

GATHA 1940 Longing and Separation

Longing, will the Lord send word

मराठी मूळ

होइल माझी संतीं भाकिली करुणा । जे त्या नारायणा मनीं बैसे ॥1॥
शृंगारुनि माझीं बोबडीं उत्तरें । होतील विस्तारें सांगितलीं ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षेम आहे ऐसें होइल सांगितलें । पाहिजे धाडिलें शीघ्र मूळ ॥2॥
अवस्था जे माझी ठावी आहे संतां । होइल कृपावंता निरोपिली ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे सवें येईल मु†हाळी । किंवा कांहीं उरी राखतील ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints will have pleaded my case with compassion, so that it settles in the mind of Narayana. They will have adorned and elaborated my stammering words.

Perhaps they will say: he is well; send word to him quickly. The saints know my condition; they will have reported it to the merciful Lord.

Says Tuka, perhaps they will bring a full account, or perhaps they will hold something back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints will have pleaded my case with compassion, so that it settles in the mind of Narayana. They will have dressed up my stammering words and told them out in full. Perhaps they will say: he is well; send for him quickly. The saints know my condition; they will have laid it before the merciful Lord. Tuka says: perhaps they will bring back a full account with them, or perhaps they will hold something back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram imagines the saints as advocates who carry his cause to Narayana, and he hangs his hope on what they will bring back. His own words are stammering and clumsy; the saints adorn them and present them whole, so that his plea reaches the Lord's mind. The thing he aches to hear is the call home: send for him quickly. But he does not pretend to know the answer, and he ends on the open question of whether they will return with a full account or keep some of it from him. The longing is real, and so is the uncertainty he refuses to paper over.

GATHA 1941 Faith and Trust

Faith, a mother cannot refuse her child

मराठी मूळ

दोहींमध्यें एक घडेल विश्वासें । भातुकें सरिसें मूळ तरी ॥1॥
करिती निरास निःशेष न घडे । कांहीं तरी ओढे चित्त माये ॥ध्रु.॥
लौकिकाची तरी धरितील लाज । काय माझ्या काज आचरणें ॥2॥
अथवा कोणाचें घेणें लागे रीण । नाहीं तरी हीनकर्मी कांहीं ॥3॥
व्यालीचिये अंगीं असती वेधना । तुका ह्मणे मना मन साक्ष ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By faith, one of two things must happen; at the very least, some small gift will accompany the reply. A complete refusal is impossible; something in a mother's heart always pulls toward her child.

Even for the sake of appearances, they would maintain some dignity. Perhaps nothing is owed to anyone; perhaps there is no failing on any side.

Says Tuka, a mother who has given birth carries that bond in her body; the chitta knows its own truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By faith, one of two things must happen: at the least, some small gift will come along with the reply. A complete refusal cannot happen; something in a mother's heart always pulls toward her child. Even for the look of it, they would keep some dignity. Perhaps nothing is owed to anyone; perhaps there is no fault on any side. Tuka says: a mother who has given birth carries that bond in her body; the chitta knows its own truth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reasons his way out of despair by leaning on the certainty of a mother's love. He uses the homely image of word sent to a married daughter: a flat refusal is impossible, because a mother's heart cannot help bending toward her own child. So one of two things must come, and even the smallest token along with the reply would be proof of love. He applies this to God as the divine Mother: the bond is carried in the body of the one who gave birth, not earned or owed. The chitta knows this in itself, and on that knowing his faith rests.

GATHA 1942 Longing and Separation

Longing, the mind fixed on home

मराठी मूळ

बैसतां कोणापें नाहीं समाधान । विवरे हें मन ते चि सोई ॥1॥
घडी घडी मज आठवे माहेर । न पडे विसर क्षणभरी॥ध्रु.॥
नो बोलावें ऐसा करितों विचार । प्रसंगीं तों फार आठवतें ॥2॥
इंद्रियांसी वाहो पडिली ते चाली । होती विसांवली ये चि ठायीं॥3॥
एकसरें सोस माहेरासी जावें । तुका ह्मणे जीवें घेतलासे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sitting with anyone brings no peace; the mind keeps turning toward that one direction. Every moment, I remember my true home; not for an instant does it leave my thoughts.

I resolve not to speak of it, yet at every occasion it comes flooding back. My senses have fallen into a single current; they find rest only in that one place.

Says Tuka, I have staked my very life on this longing to go home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sitting with anyone, I find no peace; the mind keeps turning toward that one direction. Again and again I remember my true home; not for a moment does it leave my thoughts. I decide not to speak of it, yet whenever the chance comes it floods back. My senses have all fallen into a single current; they rest only in that one place. Tuka says: I have staked my very life on this longing to go home.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a longing that has taken over the whole mind. No company gives him peace, because the mind only points one way, toward the māhera, the true home where God is. He resolves to keep silent about it, and the resolve fails the moment any opening appears. All the senses have collapsed into a single current and find rest nowhere else. The home he means is union with God, and the closing line names the stakes plainly: this is not a passing wish but his life laid down on it.

GATHA 1943 Longing and Separation

Longing, weary of the waiting

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं हानि परी न राहावे निसुर । न पडे विसर काय करूं ॥1॥
पुसाविसी वाटे मात कापडियां । पाठविती न्याया मूळ मज ॥ध्रु.॥
आणीक या मना नावडे सोहळा । करितें टकळा माहेरींचा ॥2॥
बहु कामें केलें बहु कासावीस । बहु जाले दिस भेटी नाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचें न कळे अंतर । अवस्था तों फार होते मज ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no real loss in it, yet I cannot remain indifferent; the memory will not leave me alone. I want to ask news from passing travelers, to send for word.

My mind relishes no other happiness; it chatters only of its true home. Much labor has made me weary, many days have passed without a meeting.

Says Tuka, His mind remains unknown to me, but my own condition grows more desperate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no real loss in it, yet I cannot stay calm; the memory will not let me alone, what am I to do. I want to ask news from passing travelers, to send for word to be brought to me. My mind likes no other happiness; it chatters only of its true home. Much work has worn me out, many days have passed without a meeting. Tuka says: I cannot read His mind, but my own state grows more and more desperate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits that nothing has actually been taken from him, and still he cannot rest, because the memory of home keeps gnawing. He wants to flag down travelers for news and send messages, anything to bridge the distance to God. No other pleasure interests his mind; it talks of nothing but the māhera. The labor of living has worn him down, and the days pile up with no meeting. He confesses he cannot see into the Lord's mind, and so his own condition only grows more desperate. He lets the helplessness stand without resolving it.

GATHA 1944 Longing and Separation

Patience, refusing to blame the Lord

मराठी मूळ

तोंवरी म्यां त्यास कैसें निषेधावें । जों नाहीं बरवें कळों आलें ॥1॥
कोणाचिया मुखें तट नाहीं मागें । वचन वाउगें बोलों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
दिसे हानि परी निरास न घडे । हे तंव रोकडे अनुभव॥2॥
आपुलिया भोगें होईल उशीर । तोंवरी कां धीर केला नाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे गोड करील सेवट । पाहिली ते वाट ठायीं आहे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can I blame Him until something certain is known? Without any direct word from anyone, one should not speak idle accusations. There appears to be loss, yet the hope cannot be given up; this much is clear from experience.

Perhaps the delay is on account of my own karma; until then, why have I not kept patience? Says Tuka, He will make the ending sweet; the path I have been watching is still there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I find fault with Him until I know something for certain? Without a single word from anyone, I should not speak idle accusations. There seems to be loss, yet I cannot give up hope; this much is plain from experience. Perhaps the delay is owing to my own karma; why then have I not kept patience until now. Tuka says: He will make the ending sweet. The path I have been watching is still there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here Tukaram catches his own complaint and turns it back on himself. He refuses to accuse God of neglect when he has no certain word, and warns against idle accusations spoken out of nothing. Though it looks like loss, experience tells him the hope must not be dropped. Then he names the likely truth: the delay may be the working of his own karma, so his impatience is misplaced and he should have held steady. He ends in trust, that the Lord will make the ending sweet, and that the path he has watched so long is still open before him.

GATHA 1945 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the message from home arrives

मराठी मूळ

माहेरींचें आलें तें मज माहेर । सुखाचें उत्तर करिन त्यासी ॥1॥
पायांवरी माथा आिंळगीन बाहीं । घेईन लवलाहीं पायवणी ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख समाचार पुसेन सकळ । कैसा पर्वकाळ आहे त्यास ॥2॥
आपुले जीवींचें सुखदुःख भावें । सांगेन अघवें आहे तैसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever has come from my true home, that itself is my home. I will return their happy message with joy.

Placing my head on their feet, I will embrace them and wash their feet with devotion. I will inquire about all the news: how the festive times are passing there.

I will share my own joys and sorrows with honest feeling, telling everything just as it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever has come from my true home, that itself is my home to me. I will answer it with words of joy. I will lay my head on their feet, embrace them, and quickly wash their feet. I will ask all the news: how the festival times are passing there. With honest feeling I will tell out all the joy and sorrow of my own heart, just as it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

The waiting breaks, and what comes from the māhera is welcomed as the māhera itself; the messenger is the home. Tukaram pours out his joy: he bows his head to their feet, embraces them, hurries to wash their feet in devotion. Then he wants everything, all the news of how the festivals pass there, the whole life of the place where God dwells. And he gives himself in return, holding nothing back, telling his own joys and sorrows exactly as they are. The reunion is a frank, two-way opening of the heart between the soul and the home it loves.

GATHA 1946 Ecstasy and Joy

Union, no separation when the beloved is near

मराठी मूळ

वियोग न घडे सन्निध वसलें । अखंड राहिलें होय चित्तीं ॥1॥
विसरु न पडे विकल्प न घडे । आलें तें आवडे तया पंथें ॥ध्रु.॥
कामाचा विसर नाठवे शरीर । रसना मधुर नेणे फिकें॥2॥
निरोपासी काज असो अनामिक । निवडितां एक नये मज ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हित चित्तें ओढियेलें । जेथें तें उगलें जावें येणें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the beloved dwells ever near, there is no real separation; what remains in the chitta is unbroken presence. There is no forgetting, no doubt; whatever comes along that path is welcomed.

In that state, one forgets worldly duties and the body itself; the tongue knows no difference between sweet and bland. Whether a message comes or not is of no great matter; I cannot distinguish one thing from another.

Says Tuka, the chitta has been drawn to its true good; where that resolution leads, going and coming cease.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the beloved lives ever near, there is no real separation; what stays in the chitta is unbroken presence. There is no forgetting, no doubt; whatever comes along that path is dear. In that state I forget my work and even my body; the tongue cannot tell sweet from bland. Whether a message comes or not no longer matters; I cannot pick out one thing from another. Tuka says: the chitta has been drawn to its true good; where that leads, going and coming come to an end.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga is the resting point the whole sequence was reaching for. When God is felt as ever near, the longing for messages and meetings dissolves, because there is no longer any distance to bridge; the presence is unbroken in the chitta. Doubt and forgetting fall away, and so does the world: work, body, even the tongue's taste lose their hold. Whether or not word arrives stops mattering, since the soul no longer separates one thing from another. Tuka says the chitta has been pulled into its true good, and there the very motion of going and coming, of seeking and waiting, ceases.

GATHA 1947 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the pilgrims bring the news

मराठी मूळ

आतां माझे सखे येती वारकरी । जीवा आस थोरी लागली ते ॥1॥
सांगतील माझ्या निरोपाची मात । सकळ वृत्तांत माहेरींचा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय लाभ जाला काय होतें केणें । काय काय कोणे सांटविलें ॥2॥
मागणें तें काय धाडिलें भातुकें । पुसेन तें सुखें आहेतसीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे काय सांगती ते कानीं । ऐकोनियां मनीं धरुनि राहें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now my dear friends, the Varkaris, are returning; my jiva is full of great expectation. They will tell me the news and every detail of my true home.

What gains were made, what was done by whom, and what was stored away. What was asked for, what gifts were sent; I will ask these happily.

Says Tuka, whatever they tell, I will hear it and hold it in my mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now my dear ones, the Varkaris, are coming back; my jiva is full of great longing. They will tell me the news of my message and the whole account of my true home. What was gained, what was traded, what each one stored away. What was asked for, what gifts were sent: I will ask all of it happily. Tuka says: whatever they tell into my ear, I will hear it and hold it in my mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram returns to the figure of the Varkaris as his beloved messengers, and his jiva strains toward their arrival. They carry the full account of the māhera, the home where God is, and he wants every detail: what was gained, what changed hands, what was stored, what was asked for, what was sent. He will ask it all with joy. The closing turn is a vow of receptivity: whatever they whisper into his ear he will take in and keep in his mind. The longing has become a readiness to hold every word from home as treasure.

GATHA 1948 Worldly Life

Worldly life, surrender to destiny

मराठी मूळ

काय करावें म्यां केले ते विचार । घडेल साचार काय पाहों ॥1॥
काय मन नाहीं धरीत आवडी । प्रारब्धीं जोडी ते चि खरी ॥ध्रु.॥
काय म्यां तेथींचें रांधिलें चाखोनि । तें हें करीं मनीं विवंचना ॥2॥
आणीक ही त्यासी बहुत कारण । बहु असे जिणें ओढीचें ही ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां बोळविल्यावरी । परती माघारी केली नाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What plans I made, let me now see what truly comes to pass. Does the mind not hold its own desire? Only what destiny provides is certain.

Have I cooked and tasted anything from that place? This is what I weigh in my mind. He too has many concerns, and much of life is a matter of strain.

Says Tuka, since we were sent away, we have never been called back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever plans I made, let me now see what really comes to pass. Does the mind not hold its own desire? Only what destiny gives is sure. Have I cooked and tasted anything from that place? This is what I turn over in my mind. He too has many concerns, and much of life is a matter of strain. Tuka says: since we were sent away, we have never been called back.

WHAT IT MEANS

After the high union, Tukaram comes back down into the plain weariness of waiting in the world. He sets his own plans aside: the mind may keep its wishes, but only what destiny grants is certain, so he will watch and see. He questions himself honestly, asking whether he has any real claim on that home, since he has tasted nothing of it himself. He even allows that the Lord has His own many concerns and that life is mostly strain. The poem ends on a bare, aching fact: since being sent out into the world, he has never been called back. He states the grief without softening it and without losing the trust the sequence has built.

GATHA 1949 Worldly Life

Turning, the waking from worldly sleep

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां अराणूक संवसारा हातीं । पडिली नव्हती आजिवरी ॥1॥
पुत्रदाराधन होता मनी धंदा । गोवियेलों सदा होतों कामें ॥ध्रु.॥
वोडवलें ऐसें दिसतें कपाळ । राहिलें सकळ आवरोनि॥2॥
मागें पुढें कांहीं न दिसे पाहातां । तेथूनियां चिंता उपजली ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे वाट पाह्याचें कारण । येथीचिया हिंणें जालें भाग्य ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Until now, worldly life never gave us rest. The mind was always occupied with wife, children, and wealth; we were constantly entangled in affairs.

Fate has unfolded in such a way that everything has come to a halt. Looking ahead and behind, nothing is visible, and from that emptiness, anxiety has been born.

Says Tuka, the reason I keep watching the road is that through worldly misfortune, my true fortune has dawned.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Until now worldly life never let me rest. My mind was always busy with wife, children, and wealth; I was caught in its work day after day. But fate has turned, and everything has come to a halt. I look ahead and behind, and I see nothing. Out of that emptiness, anxiety is born. Tuka says: this is why I keep watching the road. Through this worldly misfortune, my true fortune has dawned.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back on a whole life swallowed by the household: wife, children, money, an endless press of business that never let the mind stop. Then something breaks the spell. His fortunes collapse, and suddenly the road ahead and the road behind both show nothing to hold on to. That emptiness first arrives as dread; nothing is left to grip. But he reads it the other way: the loss of worldly footing is what frees him to watch the road for God, and so the very misfortune becomes the dawning of his real fortune.

GATHA 1950 Confession and Sin

Confession, the long-broken homeward tie

मराठी मूळ

बहु दिस नाहीं माहेरिंची भेटी । जाली होती तुटी व्यवसायें ॥1॥
आपुल्याला होतों गुंतलों व्यासंगें । नाहीं त्या प्रसंगें आठवलें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुटातें तुटतें जडती जडलें । आहे तें आपुलें आपणापें ॥2॥
बहु निरोपाचें पावलें उत्तर । जवळी च पर एक तें ही ॥3॥
काय जाणों मोह होईल सांडिला । बहु दिस तुटला तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For many days I had no meeting with my true home; the connection was broken by worldly occupations. I was absorbed in my own pursuits; those moments of grace were never recalled.

What was broken kept breaking; what was joined kept holding. That which is truly mine remains with me.

Much correspondence has been exchanged, yet the other side remains near. Says Tuka, I do not know whether attachment has finally been abandoned; the separation has lasted long.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For many days I had no meeting with my true home; worldly work broke the connection. I was absorbed in my own pursuits, and in all that I never remembered those moments of grace. What was breaking kept breaking; what held kept holding. What is truly mine stays with me still. Much word has passed back and forth, yet the other side is near, near as one thing. Tuka says: I do not know whether the attachment is finally let go. The separation has lasted long.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses a long silence between himself and his maher, his true home in God. Worldly occupation cut the line, and absorbed in his own affairs he simply stopped remembering grace. He watches two things at once: what is false keeps falling away, while what is genuinely his own holds fast and stays with him. Messages have gone back and forth, yet he senses the other side is not far at all, as close as a single thing. He ends honestly unsure whether his worldly attachment has truly dropped, only certain that the separation has gone on too long.

GATHA 1951 Confession and Sin

Confession, straying from the fathers' path

मराठी मूळ

होतीं नेणों जालीं कठिणें कठीण । जवळी च मन मनें ग्वाही ॥1॥
आह्मी होतों सोई सांडिला मारग । घडिलें तें मग तिकून ही ॥ध्रु.॥
निंश्चतीनें होते पुढिलांची सांडी । न चाले ते कोंडी मायबापा ॥2॥
आह्मां नाहीं त्यांचा घडिला आठव । त्यांचा बहु जीव विखुरला ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जालें धर्माचें माहेर । पडिलें अंतर आह्मांकूनि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Something has hardened, grown more rigid; the chitta knows its own truth. We abandoned the path we were on, and from that point everything has been stitched together differently.

Through complacency, the ways of the ancestors were set aside; such force cannot be opposed, O Father and Mother. We failed to remember them, yet their hearts were torn for us.

Says Tuka, the house of dharma, our true home, has become distant from us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Things have grown hard, harder than hard; the mind is its own witness, close at hand. I let go of the road I was set on, and after that everything was stitched together some other way. Out of carelessness I set aside the ways of the elders; that force cannot be opposed, O Mother and Father. I did not keep them in mind, yet their hearts were torn for us. Tuka says: the house of dharma, my true home, has grown distant from me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram examines a hardening in himself that no one else can testify to; only his own mind stands witness, right beside him. He admits he left the path he was meant to walk, and once he did, his life rearranged itself along other lines. The honest charge is carelessness: through complacency he set aside the practices the ancestors handed down. He forgot them while they grieved for him, and so the house of dharma, his real home, has drifted out of reach. The poem points at the slow drift of neglect, not at any single dramatic fall.

GATHA 1952 Longing and Separation

Longing, the watch before the pilgrims return

मराठी मूळ

आतां करावा कां सोंस वांयांविण । लटिका चि सीण मनासी हा ॥1॥
असेल तें कळों येईल लौकरी । आतां वारकरी आल्यापाठी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु विलंबाचें सन्निध पातलें । धीराचें राहिलें फळ पोटीं ॥2॥
चालिलें तें ठाव पावेल सेवटीं । पुरलिया तुटी पाउलांची ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आसे लागलासे जीव । ह्मणऊनि कींव भाकीतसें ॥4॥ ॥19॥
व संत परत आले त्यांची भेट झाली ते अभंग 11

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why labor uselessly now? This mental torment is without purpose. Whatever is to be will soon become clear, once the Varkaris have returned.

What has been long delayed is now close at hand; the fruit of patience remains within. What has been set in motion will reach its destination when the journey of each footstep is complete.

Says Tuka, my jiva clings to this hope, and so I plead for mercy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why labor uselessly now? This torment of the mind is for nothing. Whatever is to be will soon be clear, once the Varkaris have returned. The long delay is now close to its end; the fruit of patience is kept within. What has been set going will reach its place at last, when every footstep of the journey is done. Tuka says: my jiva clings to this hope, and so I beg for mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches his own mind tormenting itself and calls the worry pointless: the answer is almost here. He is waiting for the Varkaris, the pilgrims, to come back from Pandhari with word of God. The long delay is nearly over, and he tells himself the fruit of patience is already ripening inside. What has been set in motion will surely arrive once the pilgrimage walks out its last step. His whole soul hangs on that hope, and from that hanging he simply pleads for mercy.

GATHA 1953 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, welcoming the weary God

मराठी मूळ

भागलेती देवा । माझा नमस्कार घ्यावा ॥1॥
तुह्मी क्षेम कीं सकळ । बाळ अवघे गोपाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
मारगीं चालतां । श्रमलेती येतां जातां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं । कृपा आहे माझ्या ठायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You must be tired, O God; please accept my salutation. Are all of You well, all the children and the cowherds? You have labored on the road, traveling back and forth.

Says Tuka, is there any grace left for me?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You must be tired, O God; please accept my bow. Are you all well, all the children and the cowherds? You have labored on the road, coming and going. Tuka says: is there any grace left over for me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram greets God as a traveler come back from a journey, bowing first and asking after the road-weariness. He widens the welcome to all of God's company, the children and the cowherds of Gokul, asking whether everyone is well after the long walk back and forth. The tenderness is domestic, the way one greets returning family. Then comes his one quiet request underneath the courtesy: amid all that household care, is there a little grace spared for him too?

GATHA 1954 Longing and Separation

Longing, the lamp kept lit for the road

मराठी मूळ

घालूनियां ज्योती । वाट पाहें दिवसराती ॥1॥
बहु उताविळ मन । तुमचें व्हावें दरुषण ॥ध्रु.॥
आलों बोळवीत । तैसें या चि पंथें चित्त ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पेणी । येतां जातां दिवस गणीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Keeping the lamp lit, I watch the road day and night. My mind is anxious for Your sight.

When I came to see You off, my chitta followed You along that very path. Says Tuka, coming and going, I count the days.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I keep the lamp lit and watch the road day and night. My mind is restless for the sight of you. When I came out to see you off, my mind went with you down that very path. Tuka says: night after night, coming and going, I count the days.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram waits like one who keeps a lamp burning in the window for a traveler. Day and night he watches the road, his mind too impatient to settle, hungry for darshan. He recalls walking part of the way to send God off, and how his attention simply followed along that road and never came back. Now he marks each passing day and night, counting toward the return. The poem is pure waiting, the ache of separation measured out in nights.

GATHA 1955 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the blessed day of darshan

मराठी मूळ

आजि दिवस धन्य । तुमचें जालें दरुषण ॥1॥
सांगा माहेरींची मात । अवघा विस्तारीं वृत्तांत ॥ध्रु.॥
आइकतों मन। करूनि सादर श्रवण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाम । माझा सकळ संभ्रम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today is a blessed day; I have had your darshan. Tell me all the news from home; narrate the full account.

I will listen with an attentive mind and eager ears. Says Tuka, the name of God is all my rejoicing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today is a blessed day; I have had your darshan. Tell me all the news from home; lay out the whole account. I will listen with an attentive mind and eager ears. Tuka says: the Name is all my rejoicing.

WHAT IT MEANS

The waiting ends and Tukaram calls the day itself blessed, because the longed-for darshan has come. Like family reunited, he asks at once for all the news from the maher, his true home, wanting the whole story spread out before him. He readies himself to drink it in, mind alert and ears eager. And he names the source of his joy plainly: the Name of God is the whole of his rejoicing, the thing every other delight comes back to.

GATHA 1956 Longing and Separation

Longing, pressing the pilgrims for word

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलीं तीं काय । माझा बाप आणि माय ॥1॥
ऐसें सांगा जी झडकरी । तुह्मी सखे वारकरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पत्राचें वचन । काय दिलें फिरावून ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं । मना आणिलें कीं नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What did my Father and Mother say? Tell me quickly, O my dear Varkari friends. What reply was given to my letter? Says Tuka, did they take me to mind or not?

IN PLAIN WORDS

What did they say, my Father and my Mother? Tell me quickly, you who are my dear Varkari friends. What reply was sent back to my letter? Tuka says: did they take me to mind, or not?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram questions the returning Varkaris like a child desperate for news of absent parents. God and the divine home are his Father and Mother, and the pilgrims are the trusted friends who carried his message there. He cannot wait, pressing them to tell him at once what answer came back to his letter. Underneath the urgency is the one fear that matters to him: was he remembered at all, or forgotten? The poem holds the whole vulnerability of waiting to learn whether the beloved kept you in mind.

GATHA 1957 Longing and Separation

Longing, what gift did Vitthal send

मराठी मूळ

काय पाठविलें । सांगा भातुकें विठ्ठलें ॥1॥
आसे लागलासे जीव । काय केली माझी कींव ॥ध्रु.॥
फेडिलें मुडतर । किंवा कांहीं जरजर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगा । कैसें आर्त पांडुरंगा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, what gift has Vitthal sent? My jiva is on edge; did He show any compassion for me? Has the old debt been settled, or is there still some lingering concern? Says Tuka, tell me how Panduranga feels.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, what gift has Vitthal sent? My jiva is on edge. Did he show me any pity? Has the old debt been cleared, or is something still wearing me down? Tuka says: tell me, how does Panduranga feel toward me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Still questioning the pilgrim-messengers, Tukaram asks what token Vitthal sent back, the way one waits for a sign of love from far off. His soul is strung tight, and the real questions are about the heart, not the gift: did God show him compassion? He asks whether the old debt, his account of failings and longing, has finally been settled, or whether some unfinished thing still grinds at him. The plea ends where it began, wanting only to know how Panduranga truly feels toward him.

GATHA 1958 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the saints have arrived

मराठी मूळ

आजिचिया लाभें ब्रह्मांड ठेंगणें । सुखी जालें मन कल्पवेना ॥1॥
आर्तभूत माझा जीव जयांसाटीं । त्यांच्या जाल्या भेटी पायांसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
वाटुली पाहातां सिणले नयन । बहु होतें मन आर्तभूत ॥2॥
माझ्या निरोपाचें आणिलें उत्तर । होइल समाचार सांगती तो ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भेटी निवारला ताप । फळलें संकल्प संत आले ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today's gain makes the universe seem small; the mind overflows with a joy beyond reckoning. Those for whom my jiva burned with longing, their feet have come to meet me.

My eyes were weary from watching the road, and my chitta was desperate. They have brought the answer to my message; now I will hear the full account.

Says Tuka, the fever of separation is cured by the meeting; the saints have arrived, and my prayers are fulfilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today's gain makes the whole universe seem small; my mind is happy past all imagining. Those for whom my jiva burned with longing, their feet have come to meet me. My eyes were worn out from watching the road; my mind was desperate. They have brought back the answer to my message; now I will hear the whole account. Tuka says: the meeting has cured the fever of separation. The saints have come, and my prayers are fulfilled.

WHAT IT MEANS

The longing breaks into joy: what Tukaram gains today dwarfs the entire universe, a happiness beyond anything the mind could plan. The ones his soul burned for have arrived, and he speaks of meeting their very feet, the saints who carry God's presence. He admits how worn down he was, eyes tired from watching the road, mind at the edge of despair. Now they have brought the answer to his message and he will finally hear everything. He names the cure plainly: the meeting itself heals the fever of separation, and with the saints' coming his every prayer is answered.

GATHA 1959 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the true home come to meet me

मराठी मूळ

आजि बरवें जालें । माझें माहेर भेटलें ॥1॥
डोळां देखिले सज्जन । निवारला भाग सीण ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य जालों आतां । क्षेम देऊनियां संतां ॥2॥
इच्छेचें पावलों । तुका ह्मणे धन्य जालों॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today a great thing has happened: my true home has come to me. My eyes have seen the saintly ones, and all fatigue and sorrow have vanished.

I am blessed now, having given greeting to the saints. Says Tuka, I have attained what I desired; I am truly blessed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today a good thing has happened: my true home has come to me. My eyes have seen the holy ones, and all my weariness and sorrow are gone. I am blessed now, having greeted the saints. Tuka says: I have reached what I longed for; I am truly blessed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marks the day as fulfillment: his maher, his true home, has itself come to him in the form of the arriving saints. The instant his eyes fall on these holy ones, the whole weight of fatigue and sorrow lifts. He counts himself blessed simply for having greeted them, exchanged the embrace of welcome. The poem closes on attainment: the thing he ached for through all the waiting is here, and he names himself, twice over, truly blessed.

GATHA 1960 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the cow running to her calf

मराठी मूळ

वोरसोनि येती । वत्सें धेनुवेच्या चित्तीं ॥1॥
माझा कराया सांभाळ । वोरसोनियां कृपाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
स्नेहें भूक तान । विसरती जाले सीण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कौतुकें । दिलें प्रेमाचें भातुकें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As calves run back to the cow, ever present in her chitta, so the merciful Lord brings His own back to care for me. In their love, they forget hunger and thirst and all the weariness of the journey.

Says Tuka, with tender delight, He has sent the gift of love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As calves come rushing, always kept in the cow's heart, so the merciful Lord comes overflowing to take care of me. In their love they forget hunger and thirst and all their weariness. Tuka says: in tender delight, he has sent the gift of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the homeliest image of God's tenderness: a cow whose calf is never out of her heart, the way the merciful Lord keeps His own ones in mind and comes spilling over with care. The love is so strong it makes hunger, thirst, and the weariness of the long road simply fall away, on both sides of the reunion. The point is that God does not wait to be coaxed; He comes overflowing, of His own delight. And the meeting is itself the present: with that same tender delight, the Lord has sent the gift of love.

GATHA 1961 Ecstasy and Joy

Homecoming joy, the pilgrims arrive

मराठी मूळ

आलें तें आधीं खाईन भातुकें । मग कवतुकें गाईन ओव्या ॥1॥
सांगितला आधीं आइकों निरोप । होइल माझा बाप पुसें तों तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे सखे वारकरी । आले हे माहेरीहून आजि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

First let me eat the gift that has come; then I will sing songs of joy. First let me hear the message; my Father will ask all that needs asking.

Says Tuka, my dear friends, the Varkaris, have arrived today from my true home.

IN PLAIN WORDS

First let me eat the sweet gift that has come; then with delight I will sing my songs. First let me hear the message; my Father will ask all there is to ask. Tuka says: my dear friends, the Varkaris, have arrived today from my true home.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram greets the Varkari pilgrims as messengers from his real homeland, the household of God. He is a child who has been away, and their coming is a child's homecoming: first the gift and the food, then the singing, then the news from home that the Father will want to hear. By calling Pandhari his maher, the home a daughter returns to from her in-laws, he names this world as a place of exile and the company of devotees as the proof that home has not forgotten him. The joy is not in arrival yet, but in the messengers who carry word that home is still there.

GATHA 1962 Ecstasy and Joy

Gratitude, a debt past paying

मराठी मूळ

आमुप जोडल्या सुखाचिया रासी । पार त्या भाग्यासी नाहीं आतां ॥1॥
काय सांगों सुख जालें आलिंगन । निवाली दर्शनें कांति माझी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे यांच्या उपकारासाटीं । नाहीं माझे गांठी कांहीं एक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Heaps of joy have been gathered for us; there is no measure to our fortune now. How can I describe the bliss of the embrace? My being was cooled by their very sight.

Says Tuka, for their kindness, I have nothing in my store to offer in return.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Heaps of joy have been gathered for us; there is no measure now to such good fortune. How can I tell the bliss of that embrace? My whole being was cooled by the sight of them. Tuka says: for their kindness I have nothing in my store to give back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is overwhelmed by the company of the saints and devotees, and the poem stays inside that overwhelm. Their embrace and their mere presence cool him, the way water cools fever; the fortune is past counting. Then he names the one thing he cannot do: repay it. He has nothing in his store worth setting against what they have given. Gratitude here is the honest discovery that the gift is too large to be answered, and that the only response left is to receive it.

GATHA 1963 The Saints

Self-surrender, rolling at the saints' feet

मराठी मूळ

पवित्र व्हावया घालीन लोळणी । ठेवीन चरणीं मस्तक हें ॥1॥
जोडोनि हस्तक करीन विनवणी । घेइन पायवणी धोवोनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें भांडवल सुचें । संतां हें ठायींचें ठावें आहे ॥3॥ ॥11॥
पत्राचे अभंग समाप्त । 36 । 19 । 11 ॥ 66॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To become pure, I will roll in the dust at their feet and place my head upon their holy feet. With folded hands I will make my plea and wash their feet with devotion.

Says Tuka, the saints already know my true capital, simple as it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To become pure I will roll in the dust at their feet and lay this head of mine upon their feet. With folded hands I will make my plea, and I will wash their feet and drink that water. Tuka says: the saints already know my capital, plain as it is, from the start.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes purification a bodily act of lowering, not a private rite. He rolls in the dust where the saints walk, sets his head on their feet, folds his hands, washes their feet and takes that water as something holy. The point of the last line is his poverty: he comes with no wealth to offer, and he says so plainly, because the saints have always known the smallness of his store. He hides nothing, and that nakedness is itself the offering. He trusts that those who already see his emptiness are the safe ones to surrender to.

GATHA 1964 Devotion to Vitthal

Counsel to the mind, resolve on Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

मना एक करीं । ह्मणे जाईन पंढरी । उभा विटेवरी। तो पाहेन सांवळा ॥1॥
करीन सांगती तें काम । जरी जपसी हें नाम । नित्य वाचे राम । हरि कृष्ण गोविंदा ॥ध्रु.॥
लागें संतांचिया पायां । कथे उल्हास गावया । आलों मागावया । शरण देई उचित॥2॥
नाचें रंगीं वाहें टाळी । होय सादर ते काळीं । तुका ह्मणे मळी । सांडूनियां अंतरी ॥3॥
न राहे क्षण एक वैकुंठीं । क्षीरसागरीं त्रिपुटी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O mind, resolve upon this one thing: I will go to Pandhari and see the dark Lord standing on the brick. I will do whatever He commands, if only you chant this name: Rama, Hari, Krishna, Govinda, always on your tongue.

Fall at the feet of the saints, rejoice in the sacred story; I have come to surrender and seek proper refuge. Says Tuka, dance in the divine color, clap your hands, be attentive, and cast away all inner impurity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O mind, settle on this one thing: I will go to Pandhari and see the dark Lord standing on the brick. I will do whatever work he commands, if only you chant this name, always on the tongue: Rama, Hari, Krishna, Govinda. Fall at the feet of the saints; rejoice in the holy story and sing it. I have come to surrender and to ask: grant me the refuge that is fitting. Dance in the color of joy, clap your hands, be wholly attentive in that hour. Tuka says: cast out the dirt within.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is instructing his own mind, fixing it on a single resolve so it cannot wander. The bargain is simple: he will obey whatever God asks, on the one condition that the mind keep the Name on the tongue without a break. Around that center he gathers the whole Varkari practice: bowing to the saints, singing the story, surrendering for refuge, dancing and clapping in the kirtan. The closing line names the inner work the rest is for, the scouring out of the impurity in the heart. The Name is not one act among many here; it is the thread that holds every other act in place.

GATHA 1965 The Nature of God

Nature of God, debtor to His devotees

मराठी मूळ

जाय तेथें दाटी । वैष्णवांची धांवोनि ॥1॥
भाविक गे माये भोळें गुणाचें। आवडे तयाचें नाम घेतां तयासी ॥ध्रु.॥
जो नातुडे कवणिये परी । तपें दानें व्रतें थोरी ।
ह्मणतां वाचे हरि । राम कृष्ण गोविंदा ॥2॥
चौदा भुवनें जया पोटीं । तो राहे भक्तांचिये कंठीं ।
करुनियां साटी। चित्त प्रेम दोहींची ॥3॥
जया रूप ना आकार । धरी नाना अवतार ।
घेतलीं हजार । नांवें ठेवूनि आपणां ॥4॥
ऐसा भक्तांचा ऋणी । पाहातां आगमीं पुराणीं ।
नाहीं तुका ह्मणे ध्यानीं । तो कीर्तनीं नाचतसे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever the Vaishnavas gather, He rushes to be there. He is innocent, O Mother, simple in His virtues; He loves it when they take His name.

He who cannot be reached by penance, charity, or vows, comes simply when the tongue says Hari, Rama, Krishna, Govinda. He in whose belly the fourteen worlds reside dwells in the throats of His devotees, exchanging love for love.

He who has no form or shape takes countless incarnations and gives Himself a thousand names. Says Tuka, He is thus indebted to His devotees; though He cannot be held in meditation, He dances at the kirtan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever the Vaishnavas gather, He comes running to be there. He is trusting, O Mother, simple and good; He loves it when they take His name. He who cannot be caught by penance, by charity, by great vows comes when the tongue only says Hari, Rama, Krishna, Govinda. He who holds the fourteen worlds in his belly lives in the throats of his devotees, trading love for love. He who has no form and no shape takes on many incarnations and gives himself a thousand names. Tuka says: so He is in debt to his devotees; he cannot be held in meditation, yet he dances at the kirtan.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the usual order of religion upside down. The God the great disciplines cannot reach, penance and charity and vows, comes running at the bare sound of his Name on a loving tongue. He makes God almost helpless before love: trusting, simple, drawn to those who call him. The poem holds together God's vastness, the fourteen worlds inside him, the formless one beyond shape, with his smallness, living in a devotee's throat, dancing in the song. The startling claim is the last: this God puts himself in debt to those who love him, and chooses the kirtan over the meditation that cannot grasp him.

GATHA 1966 Devotion to Vitthal

Invitation, the short road to Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

स्वल्प वाट चला जाऊं । वाचे गाऊं विठ्ठल ॥1॥
तुह्मी आह्मी खेळीमेळीं । गदा रोळी आनंदें ॥ध्रु.॥
ध्वजा कुंचे गरुडटके । शृंगार निके करोनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि नीट । जवळी वाट वैकुंठा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The path is short; come, let us go, singing Vitthal as we walk. Let us travel together in fellowship, rolling with joy and delight.

With flags, banners, and Garuda-pillars, let us adorn ourselves beautifully. Says Tuka, this is the true way; the road to Vaikuntha is near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The path is short; come, let us go, singing Vitthal as we walk. You and I together in fellowship, swaying in joy. With flags and banners and the Garuda-poles, let us adorn it all beautifully. Tuka says: this is the straight way; the road to Vaikuntha is near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls his companions onto the Varkari road, and the poem is the call itself. The walk to Pandhari, with its banners, its Garuda standards, its singing of Vitthal, is not a long preparation for heaven; he says the road to Vaikuntha is short and near. The fellowship, the play, the adornment are the way, not a postponement of it. By keeping it plain and warm, he makes the highest destination feel like a journey friends take together this very day.

GATHA 1967 The Power of the Name

The Name, this world and the next level

मराठी मूळ

आनंदाच्या कोटी । सांटवल्या आह्मां पोटीं ॥1॥
प्रेम चालिला प्रवाहो । नामओघ लवलाहो ॥ध्रु.॥
अखंड खंडेना जीवन । राम कृष्ण नारायण ॥2॥
थडी आहिक्य परत्र । तुका ह्मणे सम तीर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Millions of joys are stored within us. The river of love flows in the rush of the divine name.

This unbroken, unfailing stream of life is Rama, Krishna, Narayana. Says Tuka, both shores, this world and the next, are level banks of that same river.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Millions of joys are stored up inside us. The river of love is flowing, the rush of the stream of the Name. This life never breaks, never runs out: Rama, Krishna, Narayana. Tuka says: both shores, this world and the world beyond, are level banks of the one river.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the inner state the Name opens, and the poem stays inside its imagery. The Name is a river of love already flowing in the devotee, fed from a store of countless joys, and that life never breaks or runs dry. The last line is the quiet claim: the two banks usually set against each other, this world and the next, are simply the level edges of a single stream. For one carried on the Name, here and hereafter stop being a crossing to fear; they are one water.

GATHA 1968 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the slanderer of saints

मराठी मूळ

चाहाडाची माता । व्यभिचारीण तत्त्वता ॥1॥
पाहे संतांचें उणें । छिद्र छळावया सुनें ॥ध्रु.॥
जेणों त्याच्या वाचें । कांहीं सोडिलें गाठीचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घात । व्हावा ऐसी जोडी मात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mother of a slanderer is an adulteress in truth. Such a one looks for faults in the saints, seeking openings to harass the virtuous.

Whatever his tongue touches, something of his own store is spent. Says Tuka, he gathers his talk only to bring ruin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mother of a slanderer is truly an unfaithful wife. Such a man looks for the failings of the saints, hunting for openings to harass the good. Whatever his tongue lets slip, he is spending something out of his own store. Tuka says: he gathers his talk only to bring ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram aims his sharpest contempt at the habit of hunting for faults in holy people, and the harshness is on the pattern, not on any one soul. The man who lives to find cracks in the saints, to find a handle for harassing them, is the target. The warning is that slander is self-spending: every word against the good draws down the speaker's own account. The closing line names the real motive, that such talk is hoarded for the sake of doing harm. The poem invites the listener to examine the fault-finding impulse in himself before it becomes a life.

GATHA 1969 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the harm-doer's own road

मराठी मूळ

सापें ज्यासी खावें । तेणें प्राणासी मुकावें ॥1॥
काय लाधला दुर्जन । तोंडावरी थुंकी जन ॥ध्रु.॥
विंचु हाणें नांगी। अग्न लावी आणिकां अंगीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाती । नरका पाउलीं चालती ॥3॥
स्वामींनीं स्त्रीस उपदेश केला ते अभंग ॥ 11 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The snake must bite, and its victim must lose its life. What does the wicked person gain? People spit on his face.

The scorpion stings with its tail; fire burns whatever body it touches. Says Tuka, such people walk the path to hell on their own feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A snake must bite, and the one it bites must lose his life. What does the wicked man gain by it? People spit in his face. The scorpion strikes with its tail; fire burns whatever body it touches. Tuka says: such people walk to hell on their own feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at the person who lives to do harm and asks the plain question: what does he actually get? The snake, the scorpion, the fire are images of a nature that injures simply because injuring is what it does, and the only return is being spat upon. The point is directed at the harming pattern, the compulsion to wound, not at hatred of the person caught in it. The closing line is the gravest: no one drives such a man to ruin; he walks the road to hell on his own feet, by his own choosing. It is an invitation to examine where one's own actions are leading.

GATHA 1970 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God the unyielding landlord

मराठी मूळ

पिकल्या सेताचा आह्मां देतो वांटा । चौधरी गोमटा पांडुरंग ॥1॥
सत्तर टके बाकी उरली मागे तो हा । मागें झडले दाहा आजिवरी ॥ध्रु.॥
हांडा भांडीं गुरें दाखवी ऐवज । माजघरीं बाजे बैसलासे ॥2॥
मज यासी भांडतां जाब नेदी बळें । ह्मणे एका वेळे घ्याल वांटा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ि◌स्त्रये काय वो करावें । नेदितां लपावें काय कोठें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Panduranga, our fine landlord, gives us a share of the ripe harvest. Seventy percent of the debt remains from the past; only ten has been settled so far.

He shows us the pots, vessels, and cattle as assets, while He sits like a lord in the inner room. When I try to argue with Him, He overpowers me and says: you will get your share all at once.

Says Tuka, O wife, what can be done? When He will not give, where can it be hidden?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga, our fine headman, gives us a share of the ripened field. Seventy percent of the debt still stands from before; only ten has been cleared so far. He shows off the pots, the vessels, the cattle as my assets, while he sits like a lord in the inner room. When I try to argue with him, he overpowers me and says: you will get your whole share at once. Tuka says: O wife, what is to be done? When he will not give, where can anything be hidden?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays out the relationship with God as a tenant farmer's dealings with a powerful landlord, and the comedy carries the surrender. God gives only a share of the harvest, keeps most of the old debt outstanding, parades the devotee's few possessions as collateral, and rules from the inner room beyond reach. Every argument is overruled with the promise that the full settlement will come all at once, on God's timing, not the tenant's. The closing turn to the wife is the resignation underneath the joke: with such a master there is nothing to be done and nothing can be hidden from him. Even the grumbling is a form of belonging to him completely.

GATHA 1971 The Nature of God

Surrender, no escape from the one kingdom

मराठी मूळ

करितां विचार अवघें एक राज्य । दुजा कोण मज पाठी घाली ॥1॥
कोण्या रीती जावें आह्मी वो पळोनि । मोकळ अंगणीं मागें पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय तें गव्हाणें हिंडावीं वो किती । दूत ते लागती याच पाठी ॥2॥
कोठें याची करूं केलों कुळवाडी । आतां हा न सोडी जीवें आह्मां ॥3॥
होऊनि बेबाख येथें चि राहावें। देईल तें खावें तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I consider it carefully, it is all one kingdom; who else stands behind me? In what way can I flee? It is all open ground, before me and behind. How many alleys must I wander? His agents follow me everywhere.

Where can I lodge a complaint against this One who has made me His tenant? He will not let me go alive. Says Tuka, let me become free of debt and stay right here, eating whatever He gives.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I think it through, it is all one kingdom; who else is there to stand behind me? Which way could I run? It is all open ground, before me and behind. How many alleys can I wander down? His agents are on my trail everywhere. Where would I lodge a complaint against the One who has made me his tenant? Now he will not let me go alive. Tuka says: let me clear my debt and stay right here, eating whatever he gives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram works out that there is no escape from God because there is nowhere outside God to escape to. It is all one kingdom, open on every side, and wherever he runs the Lord's agents are already on his trail. There is no higher court to appeal to, since the landlord he would complain about owns everything. The honest conclusion is not defeat but rest: stop running, settle the account, stay put, and live on whatever the master hands out. The dread of being trapped resolves into the peace of having no need to flee.

GATHA 1972 Devotion to Vitthal

Surrender, stripped bare and caught

मराठी मूळ

नागवूनि एकें नागवीं च केली । फिरोनियां आलीं नाहीं येथें ॥1॥
भेणें सुती कोणी न घेती पालवीं । करूनियां गोवी निसंतान ॥ध्रु.॥
एकें तीं गोविलीं घेऊनि जमान । हांसतील जन लोक तयां ॥2॥
सरले तयांसी घाली वैकुंठीं । न सोडी हे साटी जीवें जाली ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों जाणोनि नेणती । सांपडलों हातीं याचे आह्मी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having been stripped bare by one, I was left with nothing; no one returns to this place after that. Out of fear, no one takes me under their wing; He has made me destitute and childless.

Some He trapped by taking surety from them; the world laughs at those jivas. Those who surrendered, He sent to Vaikuntha; this bond was sealed with their very lives.

Says Tuka, we pretended not to know, yet we fell into His hands all the same.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stripped bare by one, I was left with nothing; no one comes back to this place once that is done. Out of fear no one takes me under their wing; he has made me destitute and childless. Some he trapped by taking a surety from them, and the world laughs at those souls. Those who gave themselves up he sent to Vaikuntha; this bond was sealed with their very lives. Tuka says: we played at not knowing, yet we fell into his hands all the same.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being ruined by God in the language of a man cleaned out of all he owned, and the ruin is the grace. Once God strips a soul bare of every worldly hold, it cannot go back, and the world keeps its distance from such a one, afraid to be drawn in. The wordplay turns dark and then bright: those caught and made to surrender are first laughed at, then sent to Vaikuntha, the bond paid for with their lives. The last line is the confession: he pretended not to understand what was happening, but the pretense changed nothing, and he was taken anyway. Being caught by God is named here as the best thing that can happen to a soul.

GATHA 1973 Prayers

Plea to God, do not turn away

मराठी मूळ

आतां तूं तयास होई वो उदास । आरंभला नास माझ्या जीवा ॥1॥
जरूर हें जालें मज कां नावडे । उपास रोकडे येती आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
बरें म्या तुझिया जीवाचें तें काय । व्हावें हें तें पाहें विचारूनि ॥2॥
तुज मज तुटी नव्हे या विचारें । सहित लेकुरें राहों सुखें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी तुझा माझा संग । घडेल वियोग कधीं नव्हे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, if you become indifferent to Him, the ruin of my very life will follow. This has become unavoidable, though I do not welcome it; immediate hardship lies ahead.

Consider carefully what should become of your life and mine. This need not mean a separation between us; with our children, let us live in peace together.

Says Tuka, then your companionship with me will never face separation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, if you grow cold toward him, the ruin of my very life begins. This has become unavoidable, though I do not welcome it; hardship is coming straight at me. Think it over: what good is your life to me, and what good is mine? See it clearly. By this reasoning, there need be no break between us. Let us stay in peace, our children with us. Tuka says: then your company with me will hold, and we will never be parted.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pleading against a separation he dreads, speaking as one bound to God the way a wife is bound to her household. He warns that if God turns indifferent, his life falls to ruin, and the hardship is already on its way. Against that, he reasons for togetherness: there is no need to break apart, so let them live in peace with their children. The closing turn is the point. If they stay joined, the bond between his soul and God will never again face separation, and that unbroken company is what he is begging for.

GATHA 1974 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, God strips us bare

मराठी मूळ

काय करूं आतां माझिया संचिता । तेणें जीववित्ता साटी केली ॥1॥
न ह्मणावें कोणी माझें हें करणें । हुकुम तो येणें देवें केला ॥ध्रु.॥
करूनि मोकळा सोडिलों भिकारी । पुरविली तरी पाठी माझी ॥2॥
पाणिया भोंपळा जेवावया पानें । लाविलीं वो येणें देवें आह्मां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे यासी नाहीं वो करुणा । आहे नागवणा ठावा मज ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can I do about my own destiny? It has traded away my life and livelihood. Let no one say this was my doing; the order was given by God Himself.

Having freed me, He released me as a beggar, yet He has stood behind me all along. A gourd for water, leaves for a plate: this is what God has given us.

Says Tuka, He has no mercy; but His ways of stripping us bare are well known to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can I do now about my own fate? It has traded away my life and all I had. Let no one say this was my doing; the order came from God himself. He set me free and let me go a beggar, yet he has stood behind me all along. A gourd for water, leaves for a plate: this is what God has handed us. Tuka says: he has no pity; but his way of stripping us bare is well known to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram surrenders his ruin to God instead of blaming himself or fate. He owns that his life and livelihood are gone, then insists the doing was not his: God gave the order. The poverty is stark, a gourd to drink from and leaves to eat off, the kit of a beggar. He even says God shows no mercy. But the sting is also the teaching: this stripping bare is God's known method, the deliberate emptying of a devotee, and Tukaram names it rather than recoiling from it.

GATHA 1975 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, save yourself first

मराठी मूळ

नको धरुं आस व्हावें या बाळांस । निर्माण तें त्यांस त्यांचें आहे ॥1॥
आपुला तूं गळा घेई उगवूनि । चुकवीं जाचणी गर्भवास ॥ध्रु.॥
अवेज देखोनि बांधितील गळा । ह्मणोनि निराळा पळतुसें ॥2॥
देखोनियां त्यांचा अवघड मार । कांपे थरथर जीव माझा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी आहे माझी चाड । तरी करीं वाड चित्त आतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not cling to hopes for these children; what is destined for them is already theirs. Save yourself first; free yourself from the torment of the cycle of birth.

Seeing the trappings of the world, they will bind your neck; that is why I flee and stay apart. Seeing the terrible blows of the world, my jiva trembles with fear.

Says Tuka, if you truly care for me, then steady your chitta now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not cling to hopes for these children; what is meant for them is already theirs. Untie your own neck first; escape the torment of the womb. Seeing the world's bait, they will bind your neck; that is why I keep apart and flee. Seeing their terrible blows, my jiva trembles and shakes. Tuka says: if you truly care for me, then make your chitta wide now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the soul to stop pinning its hopes on family, since each child carries its own destiny. The real work is to free your own neck and break the cycle of rebirth, the torment he calls the womb. He is blunt about why he keeps his distance: worldly ties are bait that bind the neck, and the blows of the world make him shake with fear. The close is an appeal turned inward: if you care for him, the proof is not attachment but a chitta made wide enough to let go and seek release.

GATHA 1976 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, harden against worldly loss

मराठी मूळ

भले लोक तुज बहु मानवती । वाढेल या कीतिन जगामाजी ॥1॥
ह्मणे मेलीं गुरें भांडीं नेलीं चोरें । नाहींत लेंकुरें जालीं मज ॥ध्रु.॥
आस निरसूनि कठिण हें मन । करीं वो समान वज्र तैसें ॥2॥
किंचित हें सुख टाकीं वो थुंकोनि । पावसील धनी परमानंद ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे थोर चुकती सायास । भवबंद पाश तुटोनियां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Good people will honor you greatly; your fame will grow in the world. You will say: the cattle are gone, the vessels were stolen by thieves, and I have no children to show for it.

Cast away desire and harden your resolve like a thunderbolt. Spit out this petty happiness, and you will gain the supreme joy.

Says Tuka, you will be freed from great toil, for the bonds of worldly existence will be cut.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Good people will honor you greatly; your fame will grow in the world. You will say: the cattle died, thieves took the vessels, and I am left without children to show for it. Cast off desire and harden this mind; make it firm like a thunderbolt. Spit out this petty happiness, and you will gain the supreme joy. Tuka says: you will be spared great toil, for the bonds of worldly life will be cut.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pushes the soul to count worldly loss as gain. He lists the things people grieve over, dead cattle, stolen pots, no children, and treats them as no real loss at all. The counsel is to harden the mind like a thunderbolt and spit out the small, petty happiness the world offers. What replaces it is the supreme joy, which is worth more than everything given up. The promise is release: when the bonds of worldly existence are cut, the soul is spared the endless toil of holding on.

GATHA 1977 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the welcome at the end

मराठी मूळ

ऐक हें सुख होईल दोघांसी । सोहळा हे ऋषि करिती देव ॥1॥
जडितविमानें बैसविती मानें । गंधर्वांचें गाणें नामघोष ॥ध्रु.॥
संत महंत सिद्ध येतील सामोरे । सर्वसुखा पुरे कोड तेथें ॥2॥
आलिंगूनि लोळों त्यांच्या पायांवरी । जाऊं तेथवरी मायबापें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तया सुखा वणूप काय । जेव्हां बापमाय देखें डोळां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen: this bliss will come to both of us. The sages and gods will celebrate our joy.

We will be seated with honor in jeweled celestial chariots, with the gandharvas singing and the divine name resounding. Saints, siddhas, and great ones will come to welcome us.

We will roll at their feet in ecstasy and go to our Father and Mother together. Says Tuka, how can I describe that joy when our eyes behold our divine parents?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen: this bliss will come to us both. The sages and the gods will hold a festival of joy. They will seat us with honor in jeweled celestial chariots, the gandharvas singing, the Name resounding. Saints, great ones, and siddhas will come out to meet us. We will embrace them and roll at their feet, and so go all the way to our Mother and Father. Tuka says: how can I tell that joy, when my eyes behold our Mother and Father?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the homecoming that crowns the path of devotion, sharing the vision with the soul he has been exhorting. The reward is not a private escape but a festival the gods and sages throw, with jeweled chariots, the gandharvas' song, and the Name ringing out. The saints and perfected ones come out to welcome them, and the devotee rolls at their feet in love. The journey ends at the Mother and Father, God as both parents, and Tukaram says the joy of seeing them with his own eyes is past all telling.

GATHA 1978 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, God is already near

मराठी मूळ

देव पाहावया करीं वो सायास । न धरीं हे आस नाशिवंत ॥1॥
दिन शुद्ध सोम सकाळीं पातला । द्वादशी घडला पर्वकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
द्विजां पाचारूनि शुद्ध करीं मन । देई वो हें दान यथाविध ॥2॥
नको चिंता करूं वस्त्रा या पोटाची । माउली आमुची पांडुरंग ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे दुरी सांगतों पाल्हाळीं । परी तो जवळी आहे आह्मां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make the effort to see God; do not hold on to perishable hopes. A pure and auspicious day has arrived; the twelfth lunar day provides a sacred occasion.

Invite the brahmins, purify the mind, and give the proper offerings. Do not worry about clothes or food for the body; our Mother is Panduranga Himself.

Says Tuka, I speak at length from afar, but He is close to us always.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Make the effort to see God; do not hold on to perishable hopes. A pure and auspicious day has come, a Monday morning; the twelfth lunar day makes it a sacred time. Call the brahmins, make your mind pure, and give this gift as the rite requires. Do not fret about clothing or food for the body; our Mother is Panduranga himself. Tuka says: I speak at length as if from afar, but he is close beside us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the soul that the time to turn toward God is now, on this very auspicious day, not in some perishable hope held for later. He keeps the outward forms, inviting brahmins, purifying the mind, giving the proper offering, but he points past them to what matters. Do not waste worry on food and clothes for the body, because Panduranga himself is the Mother who provides. The last line undercuts the distance in his own preaching: he speaks at length as though God were far off, yet God is right beside us all along.

GATHA 1979 Renunciation

Renunciation, worldly joy holds nothing

मराठी मूळ

सुख हें नावडे आह्मां कोणा बळें । नेणसी अंधळें जालीशी तूं ॥1॥
भूक तान कैसी राहिली निश्चळ । खुंटलें चपळ मन ठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रव्य जीवाहूनि आवडे या जना । आह्मांसी पाषाणाहूनि हीन ॥2॥
सोइरे सज्जन जन आणि वन । अवघें समान काय गुणें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां जवळी च आहे । सुख दुःख साहे पांडुरंग ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This worldly happiness does not please us; do you not see that, having become blind to it? Hunger and thirst have become still; the restless mind has halted in its place. People love wealth more than life itself, but to us it is lower than stone.

Relations, friends, crowds, and wilderness are all the same to us. Says Tuka, Panduranga is always near us, bearing both our joy and our sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This worldly happiness does not please us, by anyone's urging. Do you not see you have gone blind to it? Hunger and thirst have grown still; the restless mind has stopped where it stands. People love wealth more than life itself; to us it is lower than a stone. Kin, the good, crowds, and the wilderness are all the same to us. What worth is in them? Tuka says: Panduranga is right beside us, bearing both our joy and our sorrow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the state of one who has truly let the world go. No persuasion can make worldly happiness pleasing again; even hunger and thirst fall quiet, and the restless mind comes to rest. He flips the common scale: people prize wealth above life, but to him it ranks below a stone. The marks of indifference go further, since friends, crowds, and empty forest are now all alike to him. What holds it together is the close: Panduranga stays right beside him, carrying both his joy and his sorrow, so nothing else needs to.

GATHA 1980 Autobiography

Counsel, the path of service and the Name

मराठी मूळ

गुरुकृपे मज बोलविलें देवें । होईल हें घ्यावें हित कांहीं ॥1॥
सत्य देवें माझा केला अंगीकार । आणीक विचार नाहीं आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
होई बळकट घालूनियां कास । हा चि उपदेश तुज आतां ॥2॥
सडा संमार्जन तुळसीवृंदावन । अतीतपूजन ब्राह्मणाचें॥3॥
वैष्णवांची दासी होई सर्वभावें । मुखीं नाम घ्यावें विठोबाचें ॥4॥
पूर्णबोध स्त्रीभ्रतारसंवाद । धन्य जिहीं वाद आइकिला॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे आहे पांडुरंगकथा । तरेल जो चित्ता धरील कोणी ॥6॥ ॥11॥
खडा रवाळी साकर । जाला नामाचा चि फेर ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the Guru's grace, God has moved me to speak; may some good come of it for you. God has truly accepted me; there is no further deliberation.

Gird yourself with strength; this is my counsel to you now. Sweep and clean the threshold, tend the tulasi garden, and honor the brahmins and guests.

Become a servant of the Vaishnavas with all your chitta, and keep Vithoba's name upon your lips. Blessed are those who have heard this dialogue of full awakening between husband and wife.

Says Tuka, this is the story of Panduranga; whoever holds it in their chitta will be saved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the Guru's grace, God has set me speaking; let some good of it be taken up. Truly God has accepted me; there is nothing more to weigh now. Be strong; gird up your loins. This alone is my counsel to you. Sweep and clean the threshold, tend the tulasi garden, honor the brahmins and the guests. Become a servant of the Vaishnavas with your whole being, and keep Vithoba's name on your lips. Blessed are those who have heard this dialogue of full awakening between wife and husband. Tuka says: this is the story of Panduranga; whoever holds it in the chitta will be carried across.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives plain marching orders for a life of devotion, crediting the Guru's grace for both his speech and God's acceptance of him. The counsel is concrete and humble: gird yourself with resolve, sweep the threshold, tend the tulasi, honor brahmins and guests. The heart of it is to serve the Vaishnavas wholly and keep Vithoba's name always on the lips. He frames the whole poem as a dialogue of full awakening between husband and wife, and ends with the promise that whoever holds this story of Panduranga in the chitta will be carried safely across the world's flood.

GATHA 1981 The Nature of God

Nonduality, gold and its ornaments

मराठी मूळ

न दिसे अंतर । गोडी ठायीं निवडितां ॥1॥
तुह्मी आह्मी पांडुरंगा । भिन्न ऐसें काय सांगा ।
जाळविलें जगा । मी हें माझें यासाटीं॥ध्रु॥
पायीं हातीं नाकीं शिरीं । हेम राहे अळंकारीं ।
मुसे आल्यावरी। काय निवडे वेगळें ॥2॥
निजलिया लाभ हानी । तों च खरी ते स्वप्नीं ।
तुका ह्मणे दोन्ही । निवारलीं जागतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no difference in sweetness when you try to separate it into parts. Tell me, O Panduranga, in what way are You and we truly different? This illusion of mine and yours was created to deceive the world.

Gold remains gold whether in ornaments on hands, feet, nose, or head; when put in the mold, nothing separates out as different. Says Tuka, the gain and loss of a dream seem real only while one sleeps; both vanish upon waking.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No difference shows when you try to sort out the sweetness into parts. You and we, Panduranga: tell me, how are we truly separate? This sense of mine and yours was set up to burn the world in delusion. On feet, on hands, on the nose, on the head, gold stays in the ornament. Once it goes back to the mold, what stands out as different? In sleep, gain and loss seem real, true only inside the dream. Tuka says: both of them are cleared away when you wake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram denies any real split between the soul and God. He tests it the way you taste sweetness: you cannot divide the sweetness into separate parts, and the same holds for self and Panduranga. The talk of mine and yours, he says, exists only to deceive the world. His image is gold worked into many ornaments for hands, feet, nose, head, all still the one gold, and when melted in the mold nothing distinct remains. The dream seals it: gain and loss feel real while you sleep, but both vanish on waking, and so does duality the moment you wake into truth.

GATHA 1982 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, devotee and God are one

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी जाणों तुझा भाव । कैंचा भक्त कैंचा देव । बीजा नाहीं ठाव । कैंचें फळ शेवटीं ॥1॥
संपादिलें बहु रूप । कैंचें पुण्य कैंचें पाप । नव्हतों आह्मी आप । आपणासी देखिलें॥ध्रु.॥
एके ठायीं घरिच्याघरीं । न कळतां जाली चोरी । तेथें तें चि दुरी । जाणें येणें खुंटलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धरूनि हातीं । उर ठेविली मागुती । एकांतीं लोकांतीं । देवभक्तिसोहळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We know Your secret, O God. Where is the devotee? Where is God? When the seed has no place to stand, how can there be fruit at the end? You have fashioned many appearances.

Where is sin? Where is merit? We were never separate; we only saw ourselves as so. Within this one house, a theft happened unnoticed; from that point, coming and going ceased.

Says Tuka, having caught hold of Your hand, we set aside the distinction once again; in solitude and in the world, the celebration of God and devotee goes on.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We know your secret. Where is the devotee, where is God? When the seed has no place to stand, where is the fruit at the end? Many forms were got up. Where is merit, where is sin? We were never a separate self; we only saw ourselves so. In one house, within our own home, a theft happened unnoticed; from there, the going out and coming in stopped. Tuka says: holding your hand, the distance was set aside again. Alone and among people, the festival of God and devotee goes on.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says he has seen through the whole arrangement of two. If there is no separate seed, there can be no fruit, so the very categories of devotee and God, merit and sin, fall away. He admits the self never was apart; it only appeared apart by looking at itself wrongly. His image is a quiet theft within one's own house: separateness is stolen away unnoticed, and once it goes, the soul's restless coming and going ceases. Yet duality is not simply erased. Holding God's hand, he sets the distance aside, and in solitude or in a crowd the play of God and devotee still goes on, oneness that keeps the joy of relationship.

GATHA 1983 Confession and Sin

Confession, a child's bold love

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं बोलिलों बोबडें । मायबापा तुह्मांपुढें । सलगी लाडें कोडें । मज क्षमा करावी ॥1॥
काय जाणावा महिमा । तुमचा म्यां पुरुषोत्तमा । आवडीनें सीमा । सांडविली मज हातीं ॥ध्रु.॥
घडे अवज्ञा सख्यत्वें । बाळें बापासी न भ्यावें । काय म्यां सांगावें । आहे ठावें तुह्मासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । प्रेम लोभ न संडावा । पिाळला पाळावा । लळा पुढती आगळा ॥3॥
बहु भितों जाणपणा । आड न यो नारायणा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have spoken some stammering words before You, O Mother and Father. Forgive my bold and childish familiarity.

How could I ever know Your greatness, O Supreme Being? In my eagerness, I overstepped all bounds. In the freedom of friendship, a child does not fear its father; what shall I tell You that You do not already know? Says Tuka, O God, do not abandon this love and tenderness; the affection You have nurtured, nurture it ever more.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have spoken some stammering words before you, Mother and Father. Forgive my bold, childish, fond familiarity. How could I ever measure your greatness, Purushottama? In my love I let myself overstep every bound. In the freedom of friendship, a child does not fear its father; what is there for me to tell you that you do not already know? Tuka says: God, do not let go of this love and tenderness; the affection you have nurtured, nurture still more. I am much afraid of knowingness; do not let it come between us, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs pardon for the brashness of his own devotion, addressing God as Mother and Father. He knows he cannot measure God's greatness, and admits his love made him overstep every bound. But he defends the boldness: a child at ease with its father feels no fear, and what could he hide from one who already knows all. The plea is that God not withdraw the tenderness he has nurtured, but deepen it. The last line names the danger he dreads: knowingness, the self-conscious cleverness that would stand between him and Narayana, and he asks God to keep it from intruding on this simple, childlike love.

GATHA 1984 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the longing for oneness

मराठी मूळ

घेइन प्रेमपान्हा । भक्तिसुख निवाडें ॥1॥
यासी तुळे ऐसे कांहीं । दुजें त्रिभुवनीं नाहीं ।
काला भात दहीं । ब्रह्मादिकां दुर्लभ ॥ध्रु.॥
निमिशा अर्ध संतसंगति । वास वैकुंठीं कल्पांतीं ।
मोक्षपदें होती । ते विश्रांति बापुडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि देई । मीतूंपणा खंड नाहीं।
बोलिलों त्या नाहीं । अभेदाची आवडी ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will drink the milk of divine love, the undivided bliss of devotion. Nothing in the three worlds compares to this; the buttermilk, rice, and curd that even Brahma and the gods cannot obtain.

A half-moment's company of the saints surpasses ages in Vaikuntha; the liberation they speak of is a paltry thing beside it. Says Tuka, grant me this alone: an unbroken union without any trace of You and me. This longing for oneness is my only love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will drink the milk of love, the undivided bliss of devotion. Nothing in the three worlds weighs equal to this; the mingled rice and curd that even Brahma and the gods can hardly get. Half a moment in the company of the saints outweighs an age of dwelling in Vaikuntha; the seats of liberation they speak of are a poor thing beside it. Tuka says: grant me only this. There is no break in this You and I. I have said it: there is no relish for me in the loss of all difference.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram chooses the sweetness of loving devotion over every other reward. He calls it the milk of love and the undivided bliss, and ranks it above anything in the three worlds, even the food shared with the gods. A mere half moment among the saints, he says, is worth more than ages in Vaikuntha, and even liberation looks paltry next to it. Then comes the surprising turn that sets his bhakti apart: he asks God to keep the relationship of You and I unbroken. He does not even want oneness if oneness means the loss of all difference, for the love itself lives in the nearness of two.

GATHA 1985 Prayers

Prayer, forget the body

मराठी मूळ

देवा आतां ऐसा करीं उपकार । देहेचा विसर पाडीं मज ॥1॥
तरीं च हा जीव सुख पावे माझा । बरें केशीराजा कळों आलें ॥ध्रु.॥
ठाव देई चित्ता राख पायांपाशीं । सकळ वृत्तींसी अखंडित ॥2॥
असे भय आतां लाज काम क्रोध । तोडावा संबंध यांचा माझा ॥3॥
मागणें तें एक हें चि आहे आतां । नाम मुखीं संतसंग देई ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नको वरपंग देवा । घेई माझी सेवा भावशुद्ध ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, do me this kindness now: make me forget this body. Only then will my jiva find true happiness; this much has become clear, O Lord Keshi.

Give my mind a place at Your feet; keep all my faculties unbroken in Your presence. Fear, shame, desire, anger: sever my connection with them all.

My only prayer now is this: keep Your name on my lips and grant me the company of the saints. Says Tuka, O God, do not accept superficial worship; receive my service in pure devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God, do me this kindness now: make me forget this body. Only then will my jiva find happiness. This much has become clear to me, O Lord Keshi. Give my mind a place at your feet. Keep all my faculties unbroken there. Fear, shame, desire, anger: cut my bond with them all. My only prayer now is this: keep your name on my lips, and grant me the company of the saints. Tuka says: God, do not take my outward show; receive my service in pure devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for one strange gift and names what it frees him from. He begs God to make him forget the body, because only when the body-sense loosens can the jiva rest in real happiness rather than in its appetites. He wants his whole attention parked at Vitthal's feet, every faculty held there unbroken, and the inner enemies of fear, shame, desire, and anger severed from him. His one petition is the Name on his lips and the saints around him. The closing line guards against the danger he knows in himself: outward, performed worship that God should refuse in favor of devotion that is actually pure.

GATHA 1986 Prayers

Surrender, the name as the secret

मराठी मूळ

तुज न करितां काय नव्हे एक । हे तों सकिळक संतवाणी ॥1॥
घेई माझा भार करीं कइवार । उतरीं हा पार भवसिंधु ॥ध्रु.॥
उचित अनुचित पापपुण्यकाला । हा तों नये मला निवडितां ॥2॥
कुंटित राहिली बोलतां बोलतां । पार न पवतां वाणी पुढें ॥3॥
पुसतां ही कोणां न कळे हें गुज । राखें आतां लाज पांडुरंगा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु पाहिलें या जीवें । वर्म जालें जी ठावें नाम तुझें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is nothing beyond Your power; this is the unanimous testimony of the saints. Take my burden and be my champion; ferry me across this ocean of existence.

Right from wrong, sin from virtue, this and that, I cannot sort them out. My speech falters even as it tries to speak; words cannot reach the far shore.

No one I ask can reveal this secret. Guard my honor now, O Panduranga.

Says Tuka, my jiva has searched long, and the secret it found is this: Your name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is nothing you cannot do. This is the one voice of all the saints. Take my burden; be my champion; carry me across this ocean of becoming. Right from wrong, sin from virtue, this from that: I cannot sort them out. My speech falters even as I speak; words cannot reach the far shore. No one I ask can tell me this secret. Guard my honor now, Panduranga. Tuka says: my jiva has searched a long time, and the secret it found is this: your name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands over the whole problem because he has admitted he cannot solve it. He cannot reliably tell right from wrong or sin from virtue, and his own speech breaks down before it can carry him across the ocean of birth and death. Since no person he questions can give him the secret, he asks God to take the burden and be his rescuer and his honor. The long search ends not in a doctrine he masters but in one thing his jiva finally finds: the Name. Surrender here is not laziness; it is the honest end of a seeker who has exhausted his own means.

GATHA 1987 The Saints

Devotion to the saints, shameless joy

मराठी मूळ

मज त्याची भीड नुलंघवे देवा । जो ह्मणे केशवा दास तुझा ॥1॥
मज आवडती बहु तैसे जन । करिती कीर्तन कथा तुझी ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडूनियां लाज नाचेन त्यांपुढें । आइकती कोडें नाम तुझें ॥2॥
न लगे उपचार होईन भिकारी । वैष्णवांच्या घरीं उष्टावळी॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जाणों उचित अनुचित । विचारूनि हित तें चि करूं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I cannot disregard anyone who calls himself Your servant, O God. I dearly love those who sing Your praise and tell Your story.

Casting away all shame, I will dance before them; they who love to hear Your name. I need no comforts; I will become a beggar and eat the leftovers in the homes of the Vaishnavas.

Says Tuka, I know what is proper and what is not; I will consider and do only what is truly good.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I cannot disregard anyone who calls himself your servant, O God. I dearly love such people, who sing your praise and tell your story. Throwing away my shame, I will dance before them, those who love to hear your name. I need no comforts. I will become a beggar and eat the leftovers in the homes of the Vaishnavas. Tuka says: I know what is proper and what is not; I will weigh it and do only what is truly good.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his loyalties by one thing: love of God. Anyone who calls himself God's servant has a claim on him that he cannot overlook, and the people who sing and tell God's story are the ones he loves. For their sake he will throw off respectability, dance in public, refuse comforts, and gladly take a beggar's place eating leftovers in devotees' homes. The closing line answers anyone who would call this improper: he has weighed propriety against true good, and chosen the good. In his scale, the company of God's lovers outranks dignity.

GATHA 1988 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, not by my own strength

मराठी मूळ

तुझे पाय माझे राहियेले चित्तीं । ते मज दाविती वर्म देवा ॥1॥
आह्मां अंधां तुझ्या पायांचा आधार । जाणसी विचार चाळवितां ॥ध्रु.॥
मन िस्थर ठेलें इंिद्रयें निश्चळ । हें तों माझें बळ नव्हे देवा ॥2॥
पापपुण्य भेद नासिलें तिमिर । त्रिगुण शरीर सांडियेलें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा प्रताप हा खरा । मी जाणें दातारा शरणागत ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your feet have settled in my chitta, O God, and they reveal to me the truth. For us who are blind, Your feet are the only support; You know how to guide us even when we stumble.

The mind has become steady, the senses still; this is not my own strength, O God. The darkness of sin and virtue, of distinction itself, has been destroyed; this body of three qualities has been left behind.

Says Tuka, this is Your real power; I know myself only as one who has surrendered, O Generous Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your feet have settled in my chitta, O God, and they show me the truth. For us who are blind, your feet are the only support; you know how to guide us when we stumble. The mind has grown steady, the senses still. This is not my own strength, O God. The darkness of sin and virtue, of difference itself, has been destroyed; this body of three qualities has been left behind. Tuka says: this is your real power. I know myself only as one who has surrendered, O generous Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to take credit for his own transformation. His mind has become steady, his senses quiet, the very sense of sin and virtue dissolved, and the body of the three gunas left behind; but he insists none of this is his doing. He is blind, and it is God's feet, settled in his awareness, that both support him and show him the truth. Whatever steadiness he has is God's power working, not his own effort succeeding. So the only thing he claims for himself is the one posture that opened the door: surrender.

GATHA 1989 The Nature of God

The constant companion, all fear gone

मराठी मूळ

जेथें जातों तेथें तू माझा सांगाती । चालविसी हातीं धरूनियां ॥1॥
चालों वाटे आह्मी तुझा चि आधार । चालविसी भार सवें माझा ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलों जातां बरळ करिसी तें नीट । नेली लाज धीट केलों देवा ॥2॥
अवघें जन मज जाले लोकपाळ । सोइरे सकळ प्राणसखे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां खेळतों कौतुकें । जालें तुझें सुख अंतर्बाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever I go, You are my companion; You walk with me, holding my hand. We walk this path leaning on You alone; You carry my load alongside me.

When I begin to babble, You set my words right; You have taken away my shame and made me bold, O God. All people have become my guardians, all are kin and soul-friends.

Says Tuka, now I play in delight; Your joy fills me within and without.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever I go, you are my companion. You walk with me, holding my hand. We walk this path leaning on you alone; you carry my load along with me. When I start to babble, you set my words right. You have taken away my shame and made me bold, O God. All people have become my guardians, all are kin and dear as my own breath. Tuka says: now I play in delight. Your joy fills me within and without.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is what life feels like once the fear is gone. Tukaram describes God as a companion who never leaves, who holds his hand, carries his burden, and even corrects his stumbling words. With his shame taken away he has grown bold, and the change spreads outward: no one is a threat anymore, everyone has become kin and protector and friend. The result is not anxious striving but play, joy filling him inside and out. The poem shows surrender turning the whole world friendly, because the one who walks beside him is trusted completely.

GATHA 1990 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the harvest of love

मराठी मूळ

जालें पीक आह्मां अवघा सुकाळ । घेऊं अवघा काळ प्रेमसुख ॥1॥
जाली अराणुक अवघियांपासून । अवघा गेला सीण भाग आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा जाला आह्मां एक पांडुरंग । आतां नाहीं जग माझें तुझें ॥2॥
अवघे चि आह्मी ल्यालों अळंकार । शोभलों हि फार अवघ्यांवरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी सदेवांचे दास। करणें न लगे आस आणिकांची ॥4॥ ॥6॥
प्रकाशिलें जग आपुल्या प्रकाशें । रवि कर्मरसें अलिप्त त्या ॥ध्रु.॥
सांगणें तें तें नाहीं करणें आपण । मोलही वचन बाध जालें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां भांडवल हातीं । येरझारा खाती केवढियें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The harvest has come; everything is abundance for us. We drink the nectar of love at all times.

Rest has come from all directions; all fatigue and sorrow have departed. Panduranga has become everything to us; there is no more yours and mine in this world.

We are adorned with every ornament and shine more brightly than all others. Says Tuka, we are servants of the true God; we need not look to anyone else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The harvest has come; everything is abundance for us. At every hour we drink the joy of love. Rest has come from every side; all weariness and sorrow are gone now. Panduranga has become everything to us; now there is no more yours and mine in this world. We are dressed in every ornament and shine more brightly than all. Tuka says: we are servants of the true God; we need not look to anyone else. The world is lit by his own light, while the sun stays untouched by the play of action. What is to be told cannot be done by oneself; even a word of price became a hindrance. Tuka says: the capital is in our hands; how can the comings and goings consume it?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the far side of longing, where the seeking has ripened into a harvest. Every hour now tastes of the joy of love, all fatigue and sorrow are over, and the very line between mine and yours has dissolved because Panduranga has become everything. Belonging to the true God, he needs nothing from anyone else, and he wears that belonging like ornaments that outshine the world. The closing verses point past effort: as the sun lights the world yet stays untouched by what it lights, the real gift is not something the seeker can manufacture, and even bargaining over its worth gets in the way. With this capital in hand, the endless rounds of birth and death have nothing left to feed on.

GATHA 1991 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, beyond good and bad fortune

मराठी मूळ

शुभ जाल्या दिशा अवघा चि काळ । अशुभ मंगळ मंगळाचें ॥1॥
हातींचिया दीपें दुराविली निशी । न देखिजे कैसी आहे ते ही ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख दुःखाहूनि नाहीं विपरीत । देतील आघात हितफळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां आह्मांसी हें भलें । अवघे चि जाले जीव जंत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All directions have become auspicious, all time blessed; what was inauspicious has turned to good. The lamp in our hands has banished the night; we cannot even see what darkness looks like.

Beyond both happiness and sorrow, there is nothing adverse; even blows bring the fruit of good. Says Tuka, now everything is well for us; all living beings have become our own.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every direction has turned auspicious, all time blessed; what was inauspicious has become good. The lamp in our hands has driven off the night; we can no longer even see what darkness was like. Beyond happiness and sorrow there is nothing against us; even blows now bear the fruit of good. Tuka says: now all is well with us; every living creature has become our own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a state where the old split between lucky and unlucky has collapsed. With God's lamp in hand the darkness is so wholly gone that he can no longer even picture it, and every direction and every moment reads as auspicious. He has moved past the seesaw of pleasure and pain, so that even blows arrive as something good for him. The final turn is the widest: there is no enemy left, because every living being has become his own. This is not denial of hardship but a vantage from which nothing can finally count as harm.

GATHA 1992 Worldly Life

The wheel of becoming, not yet steady

मराठी मूळ

पाप पुण्य दोन्ही वाहाती मारग । स्वर्गनर्कभोग यांचीं पेणीं ॥1॥
एका आड एक न लगे पुसावें । जेविल्या देखावें मागें भूक ॥ध्रु.॥
राहाटीं पडिलें भरोनियां रितीं । होतील मागुतीं येतीं जातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी खेळतियांमधीं । नाहीं केली बुद्धी ◌ स्थिर पाहों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sin and virtue both lead down their respective roads; heaven and hell are the lodgings along the way. One follows the other without pause; after eating, hunger appears once again.

Caught in the water-wheel of existence, vessels fill and empty, coming and going endlessly. Says Tuka, among those at play in this wheel, we have not yet made our minds steady enough to truly observe.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sin and virtue both run down their own roads; heaven and hell are the lodgings along the way. One follows the other without a gap; after the meal, hunger shows up again. Caught in the water-wheel of existence, the vessels fill and empty, coming and going without end. Tuka says: among those at play on this wheel, we have not yet made our minds steady enough to truly see.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures sin and virtue as two roads that both keep you traveling, with heaven and hell only as inns along the route, never the destination. Reward and lack follow each other with no rest, the way hunger returns after every meal; the whole thing turns like a water-wheel whose buckets fill and empty endlessly. Even merit, then, keeps you spinning rather than setting you free. The honest closing line includes himself among the players still on the wheel: he has not yet steadied his mind enough to stand back and really see it. The poem names the trap and admits he is not yet clear of it.

GATHA 1993 The Power of the Name

The Name, the innermost seed

मराठी मूळ

हित तें हें एक राम कंठीं राहे । नाठविती देहभाव देही ॥1॥
हा चि एक धर्म निज बीजवर्म । हें चि जाळी कर्में केलीं महा ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्त राहे पायीं रूप बैसे डोळां । जीवें कळवळा आवडीचा ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one true good is this: let Rama dwell on your tongue and never recall the body-sense again. This alone is the highest dharma, the innermost seed; it alone burns away all great karmas.

Let the mind rest at His feet, let His form fill the eyes, and let the jiva overflow with loving eagerness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one true good is this: let Rama stay on your tongue, and stop dwelling on the body-sense within the body. This alone is the highest dharma, the innermost seed of the Self; this alone burns up even the greatest deeds. Let the mind rest at his feet, let his form fill the eyes, and let the jiva overflow with loving longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reduces the whole of religion to one practice. The single real good, he says, is to keep Rama's name on the tongue and to stop feeding the sense of being only this body. He ranks this above all observances: it is the highest dharma and the secret seed at the core of the Self, and it can burn away even the heaviest accumulated karma. He then describes what it looks like lived out: the mind settled at God's feet, the eyes filled with his form, the heart brimming with eager love. Everything else is set aside for this.

GATHA 1994 Devotion to Vitthal

Union, the river meets the sea

मराठी मूळ

अखंड न खंडे अभंग न भंगे । तुका ह्मणे गंगे मिळणी सिंधु ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, this is unbroken and cannot be severed, like the Ganga meeting the ocean.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: this is unbroken and cannot be cut, like the Ganga meeting the ocean.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a single closing image of union that cannot come apart. Tukaram likens the devotee's joining with God to the Ganga flowing into the sea: once the river reaches the ocean there is no separating them again. The words unbroken and unsevered insist this is permanent, not a passing mood. Where a river loses its name and form in the sea yet loses nothing of itself, so the surrendered jiva is wholly merged and wholly safe.

GATHA 1995 Longing and Separation

Longing for the company of devotees

मराठी मूळ

माझिये जातीचें मज भेटो कोणी । आवडीची धणी फेडावया ॥1॥
आवडे ज्या हरि अंतरापासूनि । ऐसियाचे मनीं आर्त माझें ॥ध्रु.॥
तयालागीं जीव होतो कासावीस । पाहातील वास नयन हे ॥2॥
सुफळ हा जन्म होईल तेथून । देतां आलिंगन वैष्णवांसी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तो चि सुदिन सोहळा । गाऊं या गोपाळा धणीवरि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let someone of my own kind meet me, so that the thirst of my love may be quenched. My mind yearns for one who loves Hari from the depths of the jiva.

For such a one, my life grows restless; my eyes watch and wait for their coming. This birth will be fulfilled from the moment I embrace the Vaishnavas.

Says Tuka, that alone is the blessed day of celebration: to sing of the cowherd Lord to our full satisfaction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let someone of my own kind meet me, so the thirst of my love can be quenched. My mind yearns for one who loves Hari from the depths of the jiva. For such a one my life grows restless; my eyes keep watch for their coming. This birth will be made fruitful from the moment I embrace the Vaishnavas. Tuka says: that alone is the blessed day of festival, to sing of the cowherd Lord, Gopal, to our heart's content.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is homesick for his own kind. The thirst he names is not for God directly but for another person who loves Hari from the very depths of the soul, because only such company can satisfy a love that has nowhere else to spend itself. His restlessness is physical: his eyes literally watch the road for that meeting. He stakes the worth of his whole birth on the embrace of fellow devotees, the Vaishnavas. And the true festival, he says, is not a rite but the day they can sing of Gopal together until the longing is finally full. The poem honors holy company as the thing that completes a life.

GATHA 1996 The Saints

The saints, a feast without measure

मराठी मूळ

आमुचें जीवन हें कथाअमृत । आणिक ही संतसमागम॥1॥
सारूं एके ठायीं भोजन परवडी । स्वादरसें गोडी पदोपदीं ॥ध्रु.॥
धालिया ढेंकर येती आनंदाचे । वोसंडलें वाचे प्रेमसुख ॥2॥
पिकलें स्वरूप आलिया घुमरि । रासी ते अंबरीं न समाये ॥3॥
मोजितां तयाचा अंत नाहीं पार । खुंटला व्यापार तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our sustenance is the nectar of the sacred story, and beyond that, the company of the saints. We spread out the feast in one place; its delicious flavor grows sweeter at every step.

When we are full, the belches of bliss arise, and the joy of love overflows from our lips. The ripened Self has come to fullness; its harvest cannot be contained in all the sky.

Says Tuka, when I try to measure its end, there is no limit; all commerce ceases.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our food is the nectar of the sacred story, and beyond that, the company of the saints. We spread the feast in one place; its flavor grows sweeter at every step. When we are full, the belches of bliss come up, and the joy of love overflows from our lips. The ripened Self has come to fullness; its harvest cannot fit in all the sky. Tuka says: when I try to measure its end, there is no end; all trade stops.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns devotion into a banquet and rides the image as far as it will go. The food is the nectar of God's story, and the company of the saints is the rest of the meal; the more they eat, the sweeter it gets. When they are satisfied, what rises is not an ordinary belch but bliss, and love spills out in their speech. He then breaks the figure open: the Self has ripened into a harvest too large for the whole sky to hold. Trying to measure where it ends, he finds no end at all, and at that point all calculation and bargaining simply stop. The point is that the joy of holy company is literally beyond accounting.

GATHA 1997 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the imperishable gain

मराठी मूळ

जोडिलें तें आतां न सरे सारितां । जीव बळी देतां हाता आलें ॥1॥
संचित सारुनि बांधिलें धरणें । तुंबिलें जीवन आक्षय हें ॥ध्रु.॥
शीत उष्ण तेथें सुखदुःख नाहीं । अंतर सबाही एक जालें ॥2॥
बीज तो अंकुर पत्र शाखा फळें । प्राप्तबीज मुळें अवघें नासे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नामीं राहिलीसे गोडी । बीजाच्या परवडी होती जाती ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What has been earned can never be exhausted no matter how much is spent; it came into our hands when we gave our very life. The accumulated debt has been settled, and an imperishable reservoir has been stored.

There, heat and cold, joy and sorrow do not exist; inner and outer have become one. The seed, the sprout, the leaf, the branch, the fruit: when the original seed is found, all else dissolves.

Says Tuka, the sweetness that remains in the name endures as the generations of seeds come and go.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What I have earned now cannot run out, no matter how much I spend. It came into my hand when I gave my very life. My old account is settled; the dam is built. The water is dammed up, and it never runs dry. There heat and cold are gone, joy and sorrow are gone. Inside and out have become one. The seed becomes sprout, leaf, branch, fruit. But when the first seed is found at the root, all the rest dissolves. Tuka says: the sweetness stays in the Name. Seeds keep coming and going, season after season.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a gain that does not behave like any other gain: the more you spend it, the more it stays. He paid for it with his whole life, and now it is an undrained reservoir, a settled debt. In that place the opposites cancel: heat and cold, pleasure and pain, the line between inner and outer all fall away into one thing. He uses the seed and its tree to make the point. Ordinary seeds sprout, fruit, and die in endless rounds, but when you find the original seed at the root, the whole growing-and-dying machinery dissolves; only the sweetness held in the Name keeps its taste.

GATHA 1998 The Power of the Name

The Name, free goods at the bazaar

मराठी मूळ

भक्तिभाव आह्मी बांधिलासे गांठी । साधावितों हाटीं घ्या रे कोणी ॥1॥
सुखाचिया पेंठे घातला दुकान । मांडियेले वान रामनाम ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखाचें फुकाचें सकळांचें सार । तरावया पार भवसिंधु ॥2॥
मागें भाग्यवंत जाले थोर थोर । तिहीं केला फार हा चि सांटा ॥3॥
खोटें कुडें तेथें नाहीं घातपात । तुका ह्मणे चित्त शुद्ध करीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have tied devotion in a bundle and bring it to the marketplace; take it, whoever will. At the bazaar of happiness, we have set up shop, displaying the wares of Rama's name.

It is joyful, it is free, it is the essence of everything, and it ferries you across the ocean of existence. In ages past, great and fortunate souls stored up this very treasure.

There is no fraud or deception here. Says Tuka, only purify your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have tied up devotion in a bundle. I bring it to the market to sell. Come, anyone, take it. I have opened a shop in the bazaar of happiness. The goods on display are Rama's name. It is full of joy, it costs nothing, it is the essence of everything. It carries you across the ocean of this world. Great and fortunate souls before me stored up this very stock. There is no fraud here, no cheating, no loss. Tuka says: only make your heart pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets up a shop with the strangest stock imaginable: the Name of Rama, given away free. He calls out like a trader, but the goods cost nothing, and they are the essence of all things and the boat across the ocean of birth and death. He points to the great souls of the past to show this is no novelty; they dealt in the same merchandise. Then he names the catch, which is not a price at all: there is no swindle in this trade, no possible loss, so the only thing asked of the buyer is a clean heart.

GATHA 1999 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, love alone ripens God

मराठी मूळ

प्रजन्यें पडावें आपुल्या स्वभावें । आपुलाल्या दैवें पिके भूमि ॥1॥
बीज तें चि फळ येईल शेवटीं । लाभहानितुटी ज्याची तया ॥ध्रु.॥
दीपाचिये अंगीं नाहीं दुजाभाव । धणी चोर साव सारिखे चि ॥2॥
काउळें ढोंपरा ककर तित्तरा । राजहंसा चारा मुक्ताफळें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें आवडी कारण । पिकला नारायण जयां तैसा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rain falls according to its own nature; the land yields its crop according to its own destiny. Whatever seed is sown, that fruit will come at the end; profit and loss belong to each alone.

A lamp has no partiality within it; honest person and thief receive its light alike. Crows feed on scraps, partridges on gravel, but the royal swan feeds on pearls.

Says Tuka, here, love is the only cause; as one's love is, so Narayana ripens for each.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rain falls according to its own nature. Each piece of land yields its crop according to its own fate. Whatever seed is sown, that fruit comes in the end. The profit and the loss belong to each one alone. A lamp holds no partiality. Owner, thief, honest man, it gives its light to all the same. The crow feeds on scraps, the partridge on gravel, the royal swan on pearls. Tuka says: here love is the only cause. As your love is, so Narayana ripens for you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a chain of natural images to explain why the same grace lands so differently in different people. The rain and the lamp give themselves impartially, but the harvest depends on the soil, and the fruit depends on the seed that was sown. Crow, partridge, and swan all sit under one sky, yet each takes the food its nature reaches for, scraps, gravel, or pearls. The point is in the last line: God, Narayana, is not partial, but he ripens in each person according to that person's love. What you bring is what you receive.

GATHA 2000 Faith and Trust

Faith, single-minded devotion

मराठी मूळ

धीर तो कारण एकविधभाव । पतिव्रते नाहो सर्वभावें॥1॥
चातक हे जळ न पाहाती दृष्टी । वाट पाहे कंठीं प्राण मेघा ॥ध्रु.॥
सूर्यविकाशनी नेघे चंद्रामृत । वाट पाहे अस्तउदयाची॥2॥
धेनु येऊं नेदी जवळी आणिकां । आपुल्या बाळकाविण वत्सा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नेम प्राणांसवेंसाटी । तरी च या गोष्टी विठोबाची ॥4॥ ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Patience is the key, and single-minded devotion. A chaste wife serves with her whole being.

The chataka bird will not look at any other water; it holds its life in its throat, waiting only for the rain cloud. The sun-facing lotus refuses the moonlight and waits solely for dawn.

A cow will not let any other calf near; she gives milk only for her own. Says Tuka, when devotion is pledged at the cost of one's life, only then do these truths about Vithoba hold.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Patience is the key, and one undivided love. A faithful wife serves with her whole being. The chataka bird will not look at any other water. It holds its life in its throat, waiting only for the rain cloud. The lotus that opens to the sun refuses the moon's nectar. It waits only for dawn. A cow lets no other calf come near. She gives her milk only for her own. Tuka says: when you pledge your devotion at the cost of your life, only then do these things about Vithoba come true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gathers four pictures of love that will accept no substitute. The chaste wife, the chataka bird that drinks only rain, the sun-lotus that scorns the moon, the cow that nurses only her own calf: each one is set on a single object and turns away from all others. He is describing what devotion to Vithoba must be like, not a hedged or comparison-shopping love but an exclusive one. The closing line names the cost: these truths only open to the devotee who has staked his very life on that one love.

Tukaram Gatha

तुकाराम गाथा

Original Marathi with English translation, a plain-language reading, and an explanation of what each abhanga means

Volume 5: Gatha 2001-2500 - 500 abhangas

About This Edition

This reading edition brings together four layers for every abhanga: the original Marathi, an English translation, a rendering in plain words, and a short explanation of its meaning.

The English layers are devotional reading aids. No translation can fully carry Tukaram's Marathi music, wordplay, cultural setting, or spiritual force. Readers are encouraged to return to the original and to consult Marathi teachers and established scholarly editions.

Marathi source: Tukaram Gatha on Marathi Wikisource. The source dataset identifies the Marathi text as public domain. English reading layers are from the Ananta Satsang online edition.

Editorial note: We ask forgiveness for any inaccuracies in rendering Tukaram Maharaj's original Marathi.

Contents

Gatha 2001-2050
50 abhangas

Gatha 2051-2100
50 abhangas

Gatha 2101-2150
50 abhangas

Gatha 2151-2200
50 abhangas

Gatha 2201-2250
50 abhangas

Gatha 2251-2300
50 abhangas

Gatha 2301-2350
50 abhangas

Gatha 2351-2400
50 abhangas

Gatha 2401-2450
50 abhangas

Gatha 2451-2500
50 abhangas

GATHA 2001 Sacred Stories

Mythology, the Name cuts the bonds

मराठी मूळ

रामें स्नानसंध्या केलें क्रियाकर्म । त्याचा भवश्रम निवारला ॥1॥
आणिकें दुरावलीं करितां खटपट । वाउगे बोभाट वर्माविण॥ध्रु.॥
रामनामीं जिंहीं धरिला विश्वास । तिंहीं भवपाश तोडियेले ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केलें किळकाळ ठेंगणें । नामसंकीर्तनें भाविकांनीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama performed the rituals of bathing, prayer, and sacred action; through these, His worldly bondage was destroyed. Others who struggled with schemes and efforts gained nothing; empty noise without the true key avails nothing.

Those who placed their trust in Rama's name cut through the bonds of worldly existence. Says Tuka, the faithful have made even death and time bow low through the chanting of the name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama himself did the bathing, the prayers, the rites. By them his weariness of the world was taken away. Others stayed far off, busy with schemes and struggle. It was empty noise, with the real key missing. Those who held trust in Rama's name cut through the bonds of this world. Tuka says: the faithful have made death and time bow low, just by singing the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two ways of meeting the labor of life. He points to Rama doing the rituals, but the weight is shifted onto trust: rites without the true key are only busywork and noise, and the people lost in scheming gained nothing from them. The bonds of worldly existence are cut not by effort but by faith placed in Rama's name. His final claim is the sharp one: through the simple chanting of the Name, ordinary devotees have humbled even death and time itself.

GATHA 2002 The Saints

Saints, devotion the crown jewel

मराठी मूळ

वैष्णवांची कीर्ती गाइली पुराणीं । साही अठरांजणीं चहूं वेदीं ॥1॥
ऐसे कोणी दावा ग्रंथांचे वाचक । कर्मठ धामिनक पुण्यशील ॥ध्रु.॥
आदिनाथ शंकर नारद मुनेश्वर । शुका ऐसा थोर आणिक नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मुगुटमणी हे भक्ति । आणीक विश्रांति अरतिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The glory of the Vaishnavas is sung in the Puranas, in all eighteen texts, in the four Vedas. Let any scholar of scriptures, any ritualist or pious soul, show otherwise.

The primordial Shiva, Narada the sage, and great Shuka have no superior. Says Tuka, devotion is the crown jewel; for the restless soul, there is no other resting place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The glory of the Vaishnavas is sung in the Puranas, in all eighteen of them, and in the four Vedas. Let any reader of the scriptures, any ritualist, any pious man, point to something higher. The first Lord Shankara, Narada the sage, and great Shuka: none is greater than these. Tuka says: devotion is the crown jewel. For the restless soul there is no other resting place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram appeals to the whole weight of scripture, the eighteen Puranas and the four Vedas, to back a single claim, and then dares any scholar or ritualist to top it. He names Shiva, Narada, and Shuka as the highest of the high, devotees all. The point lands in the last line: of everything the texts hold up, devotion is the crown jewel, and for a heart that cannot stop wandering it is the one place that gives rest.

GATHA 2003 Autobiography

Autobiography, plea for forgiveness

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलों जैसें बोलविलें देवें । माझें तुम्हां ठावें जातिकुळ ॥1॥
करा क्षमा कांहीं नका धरुं कोप । संत मायबाप दीनावरि ॥ध्रु.॥
वाचेचा चाळक जाला दावी वर्म । उचित ते धर्म मजपुढें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घडे अपराध नेणतां । द्यावा मज आतां ठाव पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have spoken as God moved me to speak; you know my caste and lineage. Forgive me; do not hold anger in your minds.

Saints are like parents to the helpless. The one who animates my tongue has shown me the truth; this is the proper dharma before me.

Says Tuka, offenses happen unknowingly; grant me a place at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I spoke only as God moved me to speak. You know my caste and my family. Forgive me, do not hold anger against me. The saints are mother and father to the lowly. The one who moves my tongue has shown me the truth. This is the right path set before me. Tuka says: offenses happen without my knowing. Now give me a place at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram steps forward as himself, low-born and aware that his listeners know it, and asks not to be judged for it. He insists his words are not his own boast but God speaking through him, so any fault in them is honest, not arrogant. He leans on the saints as parents who shelter the helpless, and on the one who animates his tongue as the source of whatever truth he has shown. The poem closes as a plain plea: errors slip out unknowingly, so grant me, anyway, a place at your feet.

GATHA 2004 The Saints

Saints, the servant at their door

मराठी मूळ

संतांचे घरींचा दास मी कामारी । दारीं परोपरीं लोळतसें ॥1॥
चरणींचे रज लागती अंगांस । तेण बेताळीस उद्धरती ॥ध्रु.॥
उिच्छष्ट हें जमा करुनि पत्रावळी । घालीन कवळी मुखामाजी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी आणीक विचार । नेणें हे चि सार मानीतसें ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am a servant and laborer in the household of the saints, rolling at their door in every manner. The dust of their feet touches my body, and by that dust, forty-two generations are purified.

I gather their leftover food on leaf-plates and place each morsel in my mouth. Says Tuka, I know no other way; this alone I hold as the highest truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am a servant, a laborer, in the house of the saints. I roll about at their door in every way. The dust of their feet touches my body. By that dust, forty-two generations are lifted up. I gather their leftover food from the leaf-plates. I put each morsel into my mouth. Tuka says: I know no other plan. This alone I hold as the heart of everything.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the lowest possible place on purpose, a hired drudge rolling in the dirt at the saints' threshold. The images are deliberately humbling: foot-dust on his skin, leftover scraps from their leaf-plates eaten as prasad. But the lowliness is the whole power of it, since that very dust is said to redeem forty-two generations of his line. He ends by refusing all cleverness: he knows no other method, and treats this surrender to the company of saints as the single essential thing.

GATHA 2005 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, against craving

मराठी मूळ

एक शेरा अन्ना चाड । येर वाउगी बडबड ॥1॥
कां रे तृष्णा वाढविसी । बांधवूनि मोहपाशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ओठ हात तुझा जागा। येर सिणसी वाउगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे श्रम । एक विसरतां राम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One measure of grain is all you need; everything else is empty chatter. Why do you keep increasing your craving, binding yourself in the noose of delusion? Your lips and hands are active enough; the rest is needless exertion.

Says Tuka, the only real loss is forgetting Rama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One measure of grain is all you need. The rest is empty noise. Why do you keep swelling your craving, tying yourself in the noose of attachment? Your own lips and hands can do the work. The rest is wearing yourself out for nothing. Tuka says: there is only one real loss, and that is forgetting Rama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cuts the question of need down to almost nothing: one measure of grain, and everything piled on top of that is just chatter. He asks the listener directly why he keeps feeding his own craving when craving is the very rope of attachment that binds him. The body has hands and a mouth enough to meet real needs; the extra striving is self-inflicted exhaustion. He saves the only loss worth fearing for the end: not poverty, not lack, but forgetting Rama.

GATHA 2006 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the body slipping away

मराठी मूळ

आलें धरायच पेट । पुढें मागुतें न भेटे ॥1॥
होसी फजीती वरपडा । लक्ष चौ†यासीचे वेढां ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं कोणांचा सांगात । दुःख भोगितां आघात ॥2॥
एका पाउलाची वाट । कोणां सांगावा बोभाट ॥3॥
जुंतिजेसी घाणां । नाहीं मारित्या करुणा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हित पाहें । जोंवरि हें हातीं आहे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have been given a body to hold; ahead, you will not get it again. You will be exposed and humiliated, trapped in the cycle of eighty-four hundred thousand births.

No one will accompany you there; you will suffer blows of misery alone. The path is just one step away; whom will you cry to then? You will be yoked to the mill of karma with no mercy from the one who drives it.

Says Tuka, look to your own welfare while it is still in your hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have been given a body to hold. You will not get it back again later. You will be shamed and disgraced, trapped in the round of eighty-four hundred thousand births. No one there will keep you company. You will suffer the blows of sorrow alone. The path ahead is only one step away. To whom will you cry out then? You will be yoked to the oil-press of karma. The one driving it shows no mercy. Tuka says: look to your own good, while it is still in your hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses on the listener the rare, perishable thing he is holding: a human body, given once and not handed back if it slips away. He spells out the alternative without softening it, the long round of countless births, suffered without a single companion, with the next plunge always just one step off. The image of being yoked to the merciless oil-press names karma as a grinding mechanism that does not pity. The point is urgency, not despair: act for your own welfare now, while the chance is literally in your hands.

GATHA 2007 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, seize the human birth

मराठी मूळ

लाभ जाला बहुतां दिसीं । लाहो करा पुढें नासी । मनुष्यदेहा ऐसी । उत्तमजोडी जोडिली ॥1॥
घेई हरिनाम सादरें । भरा सुखाचीं भांडारें । जालिया व्यापारें । लाहो हेवा जोडीचा॥ध्रु.॥
घेउनि माप हातीं । काळ मोवी दिवस राती । चोर लाग घेती । पुढें तैसें पळावें ॥2॥
हित सावकासें । ह्मणे करीन तें पिसें । हातीं काय ऐसें । तुका ह्मणे नेणसी ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

After a long time, a great gain has come; seize the profit before it perishes. A human body is the supreme fortune one can attain.

Take the name of Hari with reverence; fill the storehouse of happiness. Through this trade, gain the profit and the joy of true investment.

Time is measuring out your days and nights with its own yardstick; thieves are giving chase, so you must run ahead. Says Tuka, the fool who says he will attend to his welfare later does not know what is truly in his hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

After a long time a great profit has come. Take it quickly, before it spoils. A human body is the finest fortune you can ever gain. Take Hari's name with care. Fill your storehouses with happiness. Make the trade, and win the profit, win the gain of a lifetime. Time holds the measuring-cup in its hand. It measures out your days and nights. Thieves are after you. So run on ahead. Tuka says: the fool who says he will see to his good later does not know what he is holding in his hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram talks the language of trade and urgency. The human birth is a rare windfall that has finally come round, and like fresh goods it will spoil if you sit on it. The profitable trade is taking Hari's name and stocking the storehouse of happiness with it. He sharpens the pressure with two images: Time standing there ladling out your days with a measuring-cup, and thieves chasing you so you must keep moving. The closing scorn is aimed at procrastination itself, the man who promises to attend to his soul later and has no idea what treasure is already in his grip.

GATHA 2008 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the meeting of eyes

मराठी मूळ

सुखाचें ओतलें । दिसे श्रीमुख चांगलें ॥1॥
मनेंधरिला अभिळास । मिठी घातली पायांस ॥ध्रु.॥
होतां दृष्टादृष्टी । तापगेला उठाउठी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला । लाभें लाभ दुणावला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The blessed face shines as though cast in the mold of joy. The mind has seized upon its desire and clasped His feet in a firm embrace.

The moment our eyes met, all suffering left at once. Says Tuka, gain has doubled upon gain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is as if joy itself were poured into a mold. So beautiful is the sacred face. My mind seized its longing. It threw its arms around his feet. The moment our eyes met, the fever lifted at once. Tuka says: it has happened. Gain has doubled upon gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the instant of darshan, the sight of God's face. He says that face looks as though joy itself had been cast into a mold, and at the sight his mind grabs hold of its long desire and clasps the feet. The change is immediate: the moment their eyes meet, the heat of his suffering simply lifts. He ends in plain astonishment that it has actually happened, and that the gain keeps multiplying, gain doubling upon gain.

GATHA 2009 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the bottomless spring

मराठी मूळ

झरा लागला सुखाचा । ऐसा मापारी कइंचा ॥1॥
जो हें माप तोंडें धरी । सळे जाली ते आवरी ॥ध्रु.॥
जाले बहु काळ । कोणा नाहीं ऐसें बळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तळ । नाहीं पाहेसा सकळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A spring of happiness has burst forth; where was such abundance before? Whoever puts this vessel to their lips draws in the rushing waters. Many ages have passed, yet no one has found such power.

Says Tuka, no one can see the bottom of this depth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A spring of happiness has burst open. Where was such fullness before? Whoever sets this measure to their lips drinks in the rushing water. Long ages have passed, and no one has had such power. Tuka says: no one can see the bottom of this depth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a joy that has broken open in him like a spring and overflows every measure. He says it has no parallel in all the ages that came before, and no one ever held a power like this. The vessel that tries to take it in is simply flooded. The closing line sets the limit: this happiness has no floor you can reach, no bottom you can see, so it can never be exhausted or fully described.

GATHA 2010 The Necessity of Experience

Inwardness, God already knows

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी बोलों तें तुज कळे । एक दोहीं ठायीं खेळे॥1॥
काय परिहाराचें काम । जाणें अंतरींचें राम ॥ध्रु.॥
कळोनियां काय चाड । माझी लोकांसी बडबड ॥2॥
कारण सवें एका । अवघें आहे ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What we say, You understand; the One plays in both places. What need is there for explanation? Rama knows the innermost secret.

When You already know, what is the point of my chatter before the world? Says Tuka, the cause is one, and everything is contained in it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What we say, You understand. The One plays in both places. What is the use of explaining? Rama knows what is inside the heart. When You already know, what good is my chatter before the world? Tuka says: the cause is one, and everything rests in it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is dropping the need to perform his faith for an audience. God already understands every word, because the same One lives in him and in God alike. So explanations are pointless: Rama reads the heart directly, and noisy talk before other people adds nothing. The poem lands on a quiet trust that one source holds everything, which makes the inner knowing enough and the public show unnecessary.

GATHA 2011 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the burden on God

मराठी मूळ

उमटे तें ठायीं । तुझे निरोपावें पायीं ॥1॥
आह्मीं करावें चिंतन । तुझें नामसंकीर्तन ॥ध्रु.॥
भोजन भोजनाच्या काळीं। मागों करूनियां आळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माथां । भार तुझ्या पंढरिनाथा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever arises, let it be placed at Your feet. Our task is to meditate upon You and chant Your name.

At mealtimes, we will ask with loving insistence. Says Tuka, the burden rests upon Your head, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever arises, let it be laid at Your feet. Our task is to remember You and to chant Your name. At mealtimes we will ask with loving insistence. Tuka says: the burden is on Your head, O Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram divides the work between himself and God and keeps almost nothing for himself. His only job is to remember and to sing the Name; everything that comes up he places at God's feet. Even bodily needs, like food, he leaves to God, asking with a child's stubborn affection. The last line states the whole arrangement plainly: the weight of his life now rests on Panduranga's head, not his own.

GATHA 2012 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, holding God to His word

मराठी मूळ

केला पण सांडी । ऐसियासी ह्मणती लंडी ॥1॥
आतां पाहा विचारून । समर्थासी बोले कोण ॥ध्रु.॥
आपला निवाड। आपणें चि करितां गोड ॥2॥
तुह्मीं आह्मीं देवा । बोलिला बोल सिद्धी न्यावा ॥3॥
आसे धुरे उणें । मागें सरे तुका ह्मणे॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who makes a promise and then abandons it is called a coward. Now look carefully: who will argue with the Capable One? Making a judgment in one's own favor is always pleasant.

Says Tuka, O God, You and we together must bring the spoken word to completion. Whoever falls short at the front line is pushed to the rear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who makes a promise and then drops it is called a coward. Now think it over: who can argue with the Capable One? Judging a case in your own favor is always sweet. You and we together, O God, must carry the spoken word to its end. Tuka says: whoever falls short at the front is pushed to the back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing God to honor His own promise to save His devotees. He frames it as a matter of honor: to make a pledge and abandon it is cowardice, and it is too easy to rule in your own favor. He admits no one can simply out-argue the Almighty, so he calls it a shared obligation instead, a word that God and devotee must see through together. The blunt closing image warns that the one who fails to deliver is the one shamed, turning God's reputation into the stake.

GATHA 2013 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the bond sealed in blood

मराठी मूळ

न व्हावें तें जालें । तुह्मां आह्मांसी लागलें ॥1॥
आतां हालमाकलमें । भांडोनियां काढूं वर्में ॥ध्रु.॥
पाटोळ्यासवेंसाटी। दिली रगटएाची गांठी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हरी । आणूनियां करिन सरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What should not have happened has happened, and it now involves both You and me. Now let us argue it out and bring the truth to light.

This bond was sealed with blood from the very start. Says Tuka, O Hari, I will bring You to account and settle this matter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What should not have happened has happened, and it now ties You and me together. Now let us quarrel it out and bring the truth to light. From the very start this bond was sealed with blood. Tuka says: O Hari, I will bring You to account and make the reckoning even.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one bound to God by a tie he treats as unbreakable. He admits something has happened that perhaps should not have, but it has knit God and himself together, and he refuses to let it stay unresolved. He insists on a frank confrontation to settle what is true between them. Calling the bond sealed in blood, he claims the right to hold Hari accountable and to square the account fully, the boldness of a devotee who treats love as a binding contract.

GATHA 2014 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, demanding the proof

मराठी मूळ

पतितमिरासी । ते म्यां धरिला जीवेंसी ॥1॥
आतां बिळया सांग कोण । ग्वाही तुझें माझें मन ॥ध्रु.॥
पावणांचा ठसा। दावीं मज तुझा कैसा ॥2॥
वाव तुका ह्मणे जालें । रोख पाहिजे दाविलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have seized hold of the title Purifier of the Fallen with my very life. Now tell me, who will be the witness? Your chitta and mine both know the truth.

Show me the mark of those You have truly saved. Says Tuka, promises have been made; now let the payment be shown in full.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have seized the title Purifier of the Fallen and held it with my life. Now tell me, who will be the witness? Your heart and mine both know the truth. Show me the mark of those You have truly saved. Tuka says: the promises have been made; now let the payment be shown in full.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays claim to God's own name, Purifier of the Fallen, and grips it as his only security, since he counts himself among the fallen. He asks who will witness the case and answers it himself: God's heart and his own both already know the truth. Then he presses for evidence, the visible mark of the truly rescued, and asks to see it on himself. The poem closes by treating salvation as a debt God has promised, and demands that the payment now be made good in full.

GATHA 2015 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the evasive creditor

मराठी मूळ

करितां वेरझारा । उभा न राहासी वेव्हारा ॥1॥
हे तों झोंडाईचे चाळे । काय पोटीं तें न कळे ॥ध्रु.॥
आरगुणी मुग । बैसलासी जैसा बग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती । बुडविलीं आळवितीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the rounds of exchange come, You do not stay to settle the account. These are just evasive games; can I not see what is really in Your belly? You sit motionless, watching like a crane.

Says Tuka, how many who called upon You have You let drown?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the rounds of exchange come, You do not stay to settle the account. These are only dodging games; do I not see what is in Your belly? You sit still, watching like a crane. Tuka says: how many who called on You have You let drown?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains that God keeps slipping away whenever it is time to settle accounts, like a debtor who avoids the reckoning. He says he can see through the evasions, the hidden intent behind the stillness. The crane image is sharp: the bird sits motionless and patient, looking holy, but is really waiting to strike, so the outward calm hides indifference. The closing question is an accusation: how many who cried out to God were left to drown? It is the bold lament of a devotee who refuses to pretend God's silence does not hurt.

GATHA 2016 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, end this quarrel before the saints

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं देणें घेणे । गोवी केली अभिमानें ॥1॥
आतां कां हो निवडूं नेदां । पांडुरंगा येवढा धंदा ॥ध्रु.॥
पांचांमधीं जावें । थोडएासाटीं फजित व्हावें ॥2॥
तुज ऐसी नाहीं । पांडुरंगा आह्मी कांहीं ॥3॥
टाकुं तो वेव्हार । तुज बहू करकर ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां । निवडूं संतां हें देखतां ॥5॥ ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no real debt between us; You created this entanglement out of pride. Now why will You not let me settle and separate, O Panduranga? Must I be shamed before the assembly for a trivial matter? I am not like You, O Panduranga, not in any way.

Let us end this commerce; the constant friction is too much for You. Says Tuka, now let us settle this before the saints as witnesses.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no real debt between us; You tangled it up out of pride. Now why will You not let me settle and be free, O Panduranga? This is too big a business. Must I be shamed before the gathering over a small thing? I am not like You, Panduranga, not in any way. Let us drop this trade; the constant friction is too much even for You. Tuka says: now let us settle it before the saints, in their sight.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram treats his relation to God as a tangled account and asks that it finally be cleared. He says there was never any genuine debt; God knotted it up out of His own pride, and now will not let him reach a settlement. He resents being made to look small before others over what should be a minor matter, and freely admits he is in no way God's equal. Worn down by the endless back and forth, he proposes ending the whole transaction and bringing it before the saints as witnesses, so that the dispute between devotee and Lord is resolved openly in holy company.

GATHA 2017 Worldly Metaphors

Devotion, water the one root

मराठी मूळ

सिंचन करितां मूळ । वृक्ष वोल्हावे सकळ ॥1॥
नको पृथकाचे भरी । पडों एक मूळ धरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
पाणचो†याचें दार। वरिल दाटावें तें थोर ॥2॥
वस्व जाला राजा । मग आपुल्या त्या प्रजा ॥3॥
एक चिंतामणी । फिटे सर्व सुखधणी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे धांवा । आहे पंढरिये विसांवा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the root is watered, the entire tree flourishes. Do not be caught up in attending to separate branches; hold fast to the one root.

The main gate of the water channel must be firmly secured. When a man becomes king, all the people become his subjects.

One wish-fulfilling gem satisfies every need. Says Tuka, rush to Pandhari; there you will find true rest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Water the root, and the whole tree grows fresh. Do not get caught fussing over separate branches; hold fast to the one root. The main gate of the water channel must be held firm; that is the great thing. When a man becomes king, all the people become his subjects. One wish-granting gem meets every need. Tuka says: run to Pandhari; there is your rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching that all spiritual effort should be aimed at one source rather than scattered across many ends. He stacks up plain images to make the point: water the root and the whole tree thrives; secure the main gate and the whole channel is fed; win the king and you win all his subjects; hold one wish-fulfilling gem and every desire is satisfied. The lesson is to stop tending the branches, the many lesser practices and wants, and grip the single root. That root, the poem says at the end, is Vitthal at Pandhari, where the soul finds its true rest.

GATHA 2018 The Power of the Name

The Name, fearless servants of Hari

मराठी मूळ

करूं याची कथा नामाचा गजर । आह्मां संवसार काय करी ॥1॥
ह्मणवूं हरिचे दास लेऊं तीं भूषणें । कांपे तयाभेणें किळकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
आशा भय लाज आड नये चिंता । ऐसी तया सत्ता समर्थाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करूं ऐसियांचा संग । जेणें नव्हे भंग चिंतनाचा ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us tell His story and raise the chant of the name; what can worldly life do to us then? Let us call ourselves servants of Hari and wear those ornaments; death itself will tremble before us. Neither desire, nor fear, nor shame, nor worry can stand in the way; such is the power of the Capable One.

Says Tuka, let us keep the company of those in whose presence our devotion never breaks.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us tell His story and raise the loud chant of the Name; what can this worldly life do to us then? Let us call ourselves the servants of Hari and wear that as our ornament; death itself trembles in fear of them. Desire, fear, shame, and worry cannot stand in the way; such is the power of the Capable One. Tuka says: let us keep the company of those whose presence never breaks our remembrance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the safety the Name gives. Once a life is filled with telling God's story and singing His Name out loud, the ordinary world loses its grip. To wear the title servant of Hari is an ornament that even death fears, because such a person belongs to God. Desire, fear, shame, and anxiety, the inner enemies, can no longer block the way, and Tukaram credits this entirely to God's power, not the devotee's own. He closes with the practical means: keep company with those in whose presence remembrance of God never lapses.

GATHA 2019 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false ascetic

मराठी मूळ

काय सर्प खातो अन्न । काय ध्यान बगाचें ॥1॥
अंतरींची बुद्धि खोटी । भरलें पोटीं वाईट ॥ध्रु.॥
काय उंदीर नाहीं धांवीं । राख लावी गाढव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुसर जळीं । काउळीं कां न न्हाती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Does a serpent eat grain? Does a crane truly meditate? The inner intention is corrupt; the belly is full of wickedness. Does a mouse not run on the threshing floor? Does a donkey roll in ash for purification? Says Tuka, does a crocodile not live in water? Yet crows never become clean by bathing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Does a serpent eat grain? Does a crane really meditate? The intention inside is false; the belly is full of wickedness. Does a mouse not run on the threshing floor? Does a donkey rub itself with ash to get clean? Tuka says: does a crocodile not live in the water? Yet crows never come clean by bathing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing piety that is only a pose. Each image names a creature that wears the outward marks of holiness while the inner nature is unchanged: the crane stands stock still as if in deep meditation but is only watching for prey; the donkey rolls in ash like an ascetic smeared with sacred ash but is no purer for it; the crow bathes again and again yet stays a crow. His point is that fasting, stillness, ash, and ritual washing prove nothing when the heart inside is greedy and corrupt. The poem turns the reader toward honest self-examination: do not mistake your own holy appearances for a changed heart.

GATHA 2020 Social Criticism

Social criticism, sobered only by the blow

मराठी मूळ

मदें मातलें नागवें नाचे । अनुचित वाचे बडबडी॥1॥
आतां शिकवावा कोणासी विचार । कर्म तें दुस्तर करवी धीट॥ध्रु.॥
आलें अंगासी तें बिळवंत गाढें । काय वेडएापुढें धर्मनीत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळों येईल तो भाव । अंगावरिल घाव उमटतां ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Drunk with pride, one dances about naked, babbling improprieties. Whom shall one counsel now? Karma, that relentless force, emboldens the shameless.

When madness possesses the body, what use is moral teaching before the insane? Says Tuka, the true nature becomes clear only when the blows begin to land upon the body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Drunk with pride, he dances about naked and babbles improper things with his mouth. Whom can you counsel now? Karma, that force hard to cross, makes the shameless one bold. What has taken hold of him is strong and stubborn; what use is moral teaching set before a madman? Tuka says: his true nature will become clear only when the blows begin to land on his body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a person so drunk on pride that he loses all sense of shame, exposed and raving, beyond the reach of advice. He sees this as the work of karma, a force too hard to cross that emboldens such a person, so reasoning with him is like teaching morality to a madman. The point is not contempt for one man but a warning about how blinding pride becomes: counsel cannot reach it. The closing line is sober: this kind of person only comes to his senses when consequences strike and the blows land on his own body. It calls the reader to examine whether pride has made him just as deaf to correction.

GATHA 2021 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, no power can buy his feet

मराठी मूळ

सोन्याचे पर्वत करवती पाषाण । अवघे रानोरान कल्पतरू ॥1॥
परि या दुर्लभ विठोबाचे पाय । तेथें हे उपाय न सरती ॥ध्रु.॥
अमृतें सागर भरवे ती गंगा । म्हणवेल उगा राहें काळा ॥2॥
भूत भविष्य कळों येईल वर्तमान । करवती प्रसन्न रिद्धसिद्धी ॥3॥
स्थान मान कळों येती योगमुद्रा । नेववेल वारा ब्रह्मांडासी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if mountains were made of gold and all stones turned to jewels, if every forest were filled with wish-fulfilling trees, even so, the feet of Vithoba would remain beyond reach; no such means can win them. Even if the seas were filled with nectar and the Ganga flowed with immortal water, even if one could silence death itself, even if one could know past, present, and future and master all powers and yogic seals, even if one could turn the winds of the universe.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Say the mountains turned to gold and the stones to jewels. Say every forest stood full of wish-fulfilling trees. Even then, Vithoba's feet stay out of reach; no such means can win them. Say the seas were filled with nectar and the Ganga ran with deathless water. Say you could silence death itself. Say you could know past, present, and future, and command every power and yogic seal. Say you could turn the winds of the whole universe.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up the greatest things a person could ever gain: limitless wealth, control over death, knowledge of all time, mastery of every occult power. Each is a giant 'even if,' and each falls short. The point is that Vithoba's feet are not a prize you earn or purchase; no amount of power or attainment reaches them. He is naming a different order of worth than the one we usually chase. What we call greatness, even miraculous greatness, cannot buy the one thing he wants.

GATHA 2022 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, liberation is the lesser thing

मराठी मूळ

तुका म्हणे मोक्ष राहे आलीकडे । इतर बापुडें काय तेथें ॥5॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, even liberation stands on this side of the threshold; what are all other powers worth before those feet?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: even liberation stands on this side of the threshold. What are all other powers worth before those feet?

WHAT IT MEANS

This line completes the long string of 'even ifs' before it. Tukaram places liberation itself, the goal most seekers strive toward, on the near side of the threshold, below Vithoba's feet rather than beyond them. If even mokṣa ranks lower, then the powers and attainments listed earlier count for nothing here. He measures everything against the feet, and against them, the highest spiritual prize is still the lesser thing.

GATHA 2023 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God dances to the lover's whim

मराठी मूळ

भाविकां हें वर्म सांपडलें निकें । सेविती कवतुकें धणीवरि ॥1॥
इच्छितील तैसा नाचे त्यांचे छंदें । वंदिती तीं पदें सकुमारें ॥ध्रु.॥
विसरले मुक्ती भक्तिअभिळासें । ओढत सरिसें सुखा आलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं मागायाची आस । पांडुरंग त्यांस विसंबेना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devoted ones have found the true secret and serve with delight to their full satisfaction. He dances to their whim; they worship His tender feet with adoration.

In their love for devotion, they have forgotten about liberation; that too has been drawn in along with them. Says Tuka, they have no desire to ask for anything; Panduranga never leaves their side.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The devoted ones have found the true secret, and they serve with delight until they are full. He dances however they please, to their own tune; they worship his tender feet with love. In their love for devotion, they have forgotten about liberation; it too has been drawn in along with them. Tuka says: they have no wish to ask for anything; Panduranga never leaves their side.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the open secret the true devotees have discovered: love itself is the whole of it, and they drink it to the full. He turns the usual picture upside down, where God moves at his servants' delight rather than the other way around. They have stopped even wanting liberation; absorbed in love, they pulled it along behind them without trying. Because they ask for nothing, Panduranga stays beside them always. The reward of asking nothing is that nothing leaves you.

GATHA 2024 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord who serves unasked

मराठी मूळ

भक्तां समागमें सर्वभावें हरि । सर्व काम करी न संगतां ॥1॥
सांटवला राहे हृदयसंपुष्टीं । बाहेर धाकुटी मूतिन उभा॥ध्रु.॥
मागण्याची वास पाहे मुखाकडे । चिंतिल्या रोकडे मनोरथ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव भाव देवापायीं । ठेवूनि ते कांहीं न मगती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With His devotees, Hari does everything wholeheartedly, attending to all needs without being asked. He is stored away within their hearts, yet He stands outside in a small form upon the brick.

He watches their faces, waiting for them to ask; their wishes are fulfilled the moment they are thought. Says Tuka, those who have placed their lives and love at God's feet ask for nothing at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With his devotees, Hari does everything wholeheartedly; he tends to every need before they ask. He is stored away inside their hearts, and at the same time he stands outside in a small form on the brick. He watches their faces, waiting to see what they want; their wishes are granted the moment they think them. Tuka says: those who have laid their life and love at God's feet ask for nothing at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shows God as the eager servant of those who love him, attending to their needs before a word is spoken. He holds two images at once: Hari hidden deep within the heart, and Hari standing visible on the brick at Pandhari in his small dark form. God watches the devotee's face the way an anxious lover does, ready to fulfill a wish the instant it forms. And the deepest turn is the last: those who have given themselves entirely no longer ask for anything, because the giving has already filled them.

GATHA 2025 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, where the lover is, God dwells

मराठी मूळ

प्रेमअमृतें रसना ओलावली । मनाची राहिली वृत्त पायीं ॥1॥
सकळ ही तेथें वोळलीं मंगळें । विृष्ट केली जळें आनंदाच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळ इंिद्रयें जालीं ब्रह्मरूप । ओतलें स्वरूप माजी तया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जेथें वसे भक्तराव । तेथें नांदे देव संदेह नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The tongue is moistened with the nectar of divine love; the mind's attention rests at His feet. All blessings have gathered there; a rain of bliss has fallen.

All the senses have become one with the Supreme; His very form has been poured into them. Says Tuka, wherever the king of devotees dwells, there God surely abides, without any doubt.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The tongue is wet with the nectar of love; the mind's attention rests at his feet. Every blessing has gathered there; a rain of bliss has fallen. All the senses have become the form of Brahman; his own form has been poured into them. Tuka says: wherever the king of devotees lives, there God surely dwells, without any doubt.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures love overflowing the whole person at once: the tongue tasting it, the mind fixed on the feet, blessings pouring down like rain. In that flood the senses themselves are remade, no longer reaching for objects but filled with the divine form. He is saying that devotion does not leave the body behind; it transfigures every faculty. The closing claim is bold: the great devotee is not seeking God in some far place, because God already lives wherever such a lover lives.

GATHA 2026 The Moral Ideal

Self-examination, look at your own faults

मराठी मूळ

कासया गुणदोष पाहों आणिकांचे । मज काय त्यांचें उणें असे ॥1॥
काय पापपुण्य पाहों आणिकांचें । मज काय त्यांचें उणें असें ॥ध्रु.॥
नष्टदुष्टपण कवणाचें वाणू । तयाहून आनु अधिक माझें ॥2॥
कुचर खोटा मज कोण असे आगळा । तो मी पाहों डोळां आपुलिये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should I examine the faults and merits of others? What do I lack because of them? Why should I scrutinize the sins and virtues of others? What do I lose by theirs? If I were to speak of anyone's wickedness, my own faults are far greater. Who is a worse cheat and fraud than I? Let me look at myself with my own eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why should I look at the merits and faults of others? What do I lack because of them? Why should I weigh the sins and virtues of others? What do I lose by what is theirs? If I were to name anyone's wickedness, my own is far greater. Who is a worse cheat and fraud than I am? Let me look at myself with my own eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the common habit of judging others back onto the judge. He keeps asking what he actually gains or loses by inspecting other people's sins and virtues: nothing. Then he drops the verdict on himself, naming his own faults as larger than any he could point out in another. This is not self-hatred but a discipline of attention: the only conduct I can truly see and change is my own. The eyes that love to watch others are told to turn around.

GATHA 2027 Confession and Sin

Confession, handing over the whole debt

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे मी भांडवलें पुरता । तुजसी पंढरिनाथा लावियेलें ॥4॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, I have sufficient capital of my own failings; I have invested it all with You, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: I have plenty of capital in my own failings; I have invested all of it with you, O Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

This line closes the prayer of self-examination with a strange, frank bargain. Tukaram says the one thing he owns in abundance is his own faults, his only real 'capital.' So he hands that whole stock over to the Lord of Pandhari, making God the keeper of his debts. It is the surrender of a person who has stopped pretending to be good: I bring you what I actually have, which is my failure. The wealth he offers is exactly the thing he cannot fix himself.

GATHA 2028 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, death is already at your shoulder

मराठी मूळ

काळ जविळ च उभा नेणां । घाली झांपडी खुंटी कानां ॥1॥
कैसा हुशार सावध राहीं । आपुला तूं अपुलेठायीं॥ध्रु.॥
काळ जविळच उभा पाहीं । नेदी कोणासि देऊं कांहीं ॥2॥
काळें पुरविली पाठी । वरुषें जालीं तरी साठी ॥3॥
काळ भोंवताला भोंवे। राम येऊं नेदी जिव्हे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Death stands right beside you, but you do not know it; it covers your eyes and plugs your ears. How will you remain alert and watchful, present to yourself in your own being? Death stands right next to you; see how it will not let you give anything to anyone.

Death has pursued you steadily for sixty years. Death circles around and around, not letting Rama come to your tongue.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Death stands right beside you and you do not know it; it has covered your eyes and plugged your ears. How will you stay alert and watchful, present to yourself, in your own place? Look, death stands right next to you; it will not let you give anything to anyone. Death has been on your trail steadily; sixty years have passed. Death circles round and round, and will not let Rama come to your tongue.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks like someone shaking a sleeper awake. Death is not far off in the future; it is already at the shoulder, and it works by dulling the senses so we never notice the years going by. He counts sixty of them already gone. The sharpest line is the last: death's real theft is not the body but the chance to say the Name, keeping Rama from reaching the tongue. The urgency of the poem is that the only safe use of the time left is to call on God now, before the senses close for good.

GATHA 2029 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, burn the karma death feeds on

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे काळा । कर्म मिळतें तें जाळा ॥5॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, whatever karma aligns with death, burn it all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: whatever karma feeds death, burn it all.

WHAT IT MEANS

This short line answers the warning that came before it. If death keeps its grip through our actions, then the remedy is to destroy the actions that strengthen it. Tukaram says to burn that karma rather than carry it. The fire here is the resolve to cut off the deeds that bind us to dying again, leaving nothing for death to claim.

GATHA 2030 The Moral Ideal

Irony, the wicked as the saint's whetstone

मराठी मूळ

दुष्ट भूषण सज्जनाचें । अलभ्यलाभ पुण्य त्याचें॥1॥
धन्य ऐसा परउपकारी । जाय नरका आणिकांवारि ॥ध्रु.॥
मळ खाये संवदणी । करी आणिकांची उजळणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचा । प्रीती आदर करा साचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wicked person is actually an ornament to the good; his existence is a rare opportunity for the virtuous to earn merit. Blessed is such a selfless benefactor who goes to hell for the sake of others.

The washcloth eats the dirt and brightens everyone else. Says Tuka, show genuine love and respect to such a one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wicked man is really an ornament to the good; his being there is a rare chance for the virtuous to earn merit. Blessed is such a selfless helper, who goes to hell for the sake of others. The washcloth eats the dirt and leaves everyone else bright. Tuka says: show such a one true love and respect.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks with a sharp, half-smiling irony. He calls the wicked man a benefactor: by giving the good a chance to forgive, to endure, to grow in patience, the wrongdoer becomes the whetstone on which virtue is sharpened. The washcloth image is the heart of it, taking on the dirt so others come out clean. The lesson is not contempt; he tells us to feel genuine gratitude even toward the person who wrongs us, because that very friction is what polishes the soul. The harm is real, yet it can be turned into our own purification.

GATHA 2031 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, blows that make a stone divine

मराठी मूळ

साहोनियां टांकीघाये । पाषाण देव चि जाला पाहें॥1॥
तया रीती दृढ मन । करीं साधाया कारण ॥ध्रु.॥
बाण शस्त्र साहे गोळी । सुरां ठाव उंच स्थळीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सती । अग्न न देखे ज्या रीती ॥3॥ ॥2॥
तेणें वेशें माझीं चोरिलीं अंगें । मानावया जग आत्मैपणे।
नाहीं चाड भीड संसाराचें कोड । उदासीन सर्व गुणें ।
भय मोह लज्जा निरसली शंका । अवघियां एक चि पणें ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By enduring the blows of the chisel, the stone itself becomes God. In the same way, make the mind firm to accomplish the true purpose.

The hero who bears sword, arrow, and bullet earns a place on the highest ground. Says Tuka, just as the devoted wife does not see the fire she enters.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By bearing the blows of the chisel, the stone itself becomes God. In the same way, make the mind firm to accomplish the true purpose. The warrior who bears sword, arrow, and bullet wins a place on the highest ground. Tuka says: like the faithful wife who does not see the fire she enters. By that disguise my limbs were stolen away, so the world would take me for the Self. I have no want, no shame, no fondness for the world; in every quality I am indifferent. Fear, delusion, and shame are gone, and doubt with them; all of it has become one single thing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images of what it costs to be transformed. The stone becomes the temple image only by enduring the chisel; the warrior earns the high ground only by standing under the weapons. Each says the same thing: greatness is bought by bearing the blows, so the mind must be made firm. He even reaches for the image of one so set on the goal that the surrounding danger is no longer felt. In the lines that follow he describes the result, a person emptied of fear, shame, delusion, and craving, indifferent to the world, where every distinction has melted into one. The point is that the firmness is not hardness but a steadiness that lets the self be remade.

GATHA 2032 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the senses laid down at the feet

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठलाच्या पायीं बैसोनि राहिलीं । भागलीं नुटित तेणें ॥1॥
आतां त्यांसीं काय चाले माझें बळ । जालोंसें दुर्बळ सत्त्वहीन ।
दग्ध पट दिसे संगति बरवंट । काय त्याचें कारण ॥ध्रु.॥
आळसें दृष्टी न पाहे आपुलें । एक चि देखिलें सर्वरूप ।
मानामान तेथें खुंटोनि राहिलें । पिसुन तो कोण बाप ।
ज्योति ना अंधार अवघा एकंकार। तेथें काय पुण्यपाप ।
विठ्ठलावांचुनि कांहीं च नावडे । वेगळाल्या भावें रूप ॥2॥
बळबडिवार लौकिक वेव्हार । गेली आशा तृष्णा माया ।
सुखदुःखाची वार्ता नाइके । अंतरलों दुरी तया ।
मीतूंपणनिःकाम होऊनि । राहिलों आपुलिया ठायां ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My senses have sat down at Vitthal's feet and, being weary, will not rise. What power do I have against them now? I have become weak and strengthless.

A burnt cloth looks whole in its shape, but what is its real substance? In its laziness, the eye does not look at what belongs to it; it has seen everything as one single form. All distinctions of honor and dishonor have come to a stop; who is the fool now? In that state there is neither light nor darkness, only one undivided existence; what room is there for sin or virtue? Nothing pleases except Vitthal; all separate forms have dissolved.

Worldly power, status, convention, and custom are gone; desire, greed, and illusion have departed. The news of pleasure and pain is no longer heard; I have grown distant from all that.

Having become free of the sense of I and You, desireless, I remain in my own true place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My senses have sat down at Vitthal's feet and, worn out, will not get up. What power do I have over them now? I have grown weak and without strength. A burnt cloth still looks whole in its shape, but what substance is left in it? In its idleness the eye no longer looks at what is its own; it has seen everything as one single form. Honor and dishonor have come to a stop here; who is the fool now? In that state there is neither light nor darkness, only one undivided being; what room is there for sin or virtue? Nothing pleases except Vitthal; all the separate forms have dissolved. Power, status, custom, and convention are gone; desire, greed, and illusion have left. The talk of pleasure and pain no longer reaches me; I have grown far from all of it. Free of the sense of I and you, with nothing left to want, I rest in my own true place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what happens when the senses stop chasing and simply settle at Vitthal's feet. He pictures himself as a burnt cloth, still holding its shape but emptied of substance, no longer pulled by the world's grip. As the eye stops seeking its old objects, the many separate forms collapse into one, and with that the whole machinery of judging falls silent: honor and dishonor, light and darkness, sin and virtue all lose their footing where only one undivided being remains. He names everything that has drained away, status and custom, desire and greed and illusion, even the report of pleasure and pain. What is left is the deepest surrender of all: the sense of 'I' and 'you' dissolved, wanting nothing, simply resting in his own true place.

GATHA 2033 Prayers

Total dependence, the last refuge

मराठी मूळ

तुजविण आतां मज नाहीं कोणी । तुका ह्मणे देवराया ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, without You, I have no one, O King of Gods.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without You, I now have no one. Tuka says: O King of Gods, You are all I have.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short cry of complete dependence. Tuka has nothing and no one left to lean on, so he turns to Vitthal and says it plainly: apart from God, there is no other. Naming God the King of Gods, he is not flattering; he is placing his whole life in the only hands he trusts. The poem stakes everything on one relationship and asks for no condition in return.

GATHA 2034 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false listener

मराठी मूळ

कथा पुराण ऐकतां । झोंप नाथिलि तत्त्वता । खाटेवरि पडतां । व्यापी चिंता तळमळ ॥1॥
ऐसी गहन कर्मगति। काय तयासी रडती । जाले जाणते जो चित्तीं । कांहीं नेघे आपुला॥ध्रु.॥
उदक लावितां न धरे । चिंता करी केव्हां सरे । जाऊं नका धीरें । ह्मणे करितां ढवाळ्या ॥2॥
जवळी गोंचिड क्षीरा । जैसी कमळणी ददुनरा । तुका ह्मणे दुरा । देशत्यागें तयासी ॥3॥
संदेह बाधक आपआपणयांतें । रज्जुसर्पवत भासतसे।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When listening to sacred stories and Puranas, the pretender's drowsiness is no true knowledge. Lying in bed, the mind is consumed by worry and restlessness.

Such is the depth of karma's hold; those who call themselves wise gain nothing from their knowledge. When watering the field, they worry about when it will be done; they resist yet pretend to be making progress.

Says Tuka, like a tick that clings close to the milk, or a frog near a lotus, such a one must be sent far away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You sit through the holy stories and the Puranas, and you doze; that sleep is not knowledge. You lie down on your bed, and worry and restlessness fill you. Such is the deep grip of karma. What good is weeping over it? The one who calls himself wise in his own mind gains nothing of his own. You water the field but keep asking when it will be done. You drag your feet, yet you pretend you are getting somewhere. You cling close like a tick to the milk, like a frog beside the lotus. Tuka says: such a one must be sent far away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing the man who attends spiritual talks but is not really there. He nods off during the sacred stories, then tosses in bed all night with worry, because nothing has entered him; his drowsiness is mistaken for absorption. The poem names the pattern: a man can call himself wise and still draw no profit from what he hears, dragging his feet while pretending to advance. The tick beside the milk and the frog beside the lotus are images of someone right next to the sweetness yet tasting none of it, and the call to send him far away points at the habit of fake attendance, not at the worth of the person. It is an invitation to examine whether our own listening is real or just proximity.

GATHA 2035 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, you are your own door

मराठी मूळ

भेऊनियां काय देखिलें येणें । मारें घायेंविण लोळतसे ॥1॥
आपणें चि तारी आपण चि मारी । आपण उद्धरी आपणयां ।
शुकनिळकेन्यायें गुंतलासी काय । विचारूनि पाहें मोकिळया ॥ध्रु॥
पापपुण्य कैसे भांजिले अख । दशकाचा एक उरविला ।
जाणोनियां काय होतोसी नेणता । शून्या ठाव रिता नाहीं नाहीं ॥2॥
दुरा दृष्टी पाहें न्याहाळूनि । मृगजला पाणी न ह्मणें चाडा ।
धांवतां चि फुटे नव्हे समाधान । तुका ह्मणे जाण पावे पीडा ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What have you seen that frightens you so? You roll about wounded without anyone having struck you. You alone save yourself, you alone destroy yourself, you alone liberate yourself.

Like a parrot caught in the trap of its own perception, examine yourself and find your freedom. The whole ledger of sin and virtue has been balanced into one.

Knowing the truth, why do you pretend ignorance? In emptiness itself, there is no void. Says Tuka, look from a distance with a steady gaze; do not call a mirage water. The one who keeps chasing it finds no satisfaction and only suffers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What have you seen that scares you so? You roll on the ground in pain, though no one has struck you. You alone save yourself; you alone destroy yourself; you alone lift yourself up. Like a parrot gripping the perch in its own trap, why are you caught? Look closely and you are already free. The whole ledger of sin and merit has been settled into one. Knowing this, why act as if you do not know? In emptiness there is no empty place; there is nothing missing. Look from a distance with a steady eye. Do not call a mirage water out of thirst. Whoever keeps running after it finds no peace. Tuka says: know this, he only meets pain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is telling the seeker that his bondage is self-made. The wounds he writhes from were not dealt by anyone outside; the fear has no real object. The image of the parrot is exact: the bird grips a turning perch and believes it is trapped, when letting go is all it ever needed, so the freedom is already there if one would look. Sin and merit, he says, finally balance into one, so there is no real lack to chase. The mirage warns against thirst that invents water where there is none; the one who keeps running after appearances finds only suffering, while steadiness and clear seeing end the chase.

GATHA 2036 Social Criticism

Social criticism, half-hearted in the holy gathering

मराठी मूळ

कथे उभा अंग राखे जो कोणी । ऐसा कोण गणी तया पापा ॥1॥
येथें तो पातकी न येता च भला । रणीं कुचराला काय चाले ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐलपैल ते थडीचे । बुडतील साच मध्यभागीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who can count the sins of one who holds back from the sacred story, keeping his body rigid with resistance? Such a wrongdoer is better off not coming at all; a coward has no place on the battlefield. Says Tuka, those who stand on either bank are safe; it is those who linger in the middle current who drown.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Someone stands in the sacred story but holds his body back, stiff with resistance. Who can count the weight of that sin? Such a wrongdoer is better off not coming at all. What use is a coward on the battlefield? Tuka says: those who stand on either bank are safe. It is the ones who linger in the middle current who truly drown.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is sharp about the half-committed devotee. To stand present at the singing of God's story while keeping the body and heart pulled back is worse, he says, than staying away; the coward in the middle of a battle only endangers everyone. The river image lands it: a person fully on one shore or the other is safe, but the one who wades out and then will not commit is the one swept under. The criticism aims at the pattern of holding back, urging us to enter wholly or not pretend to enter at all.

GATHA 2037 Social Criticism

Social criticism, fleeing the kirtan

मराठी मूळ

नावडे ज्या कथा उठोनियां जाती । ते यमा फावती बरे वोजा ॥1॥
तो असे जवळी गोंचिडाच्या न्यायें । देशत्यागें ठायें तया दुरी ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे भला कोणी नावडे दुसरा । पाहुणा किंकरा यमा होय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तया करावें तें काई । पाषाण कां नाहीं जळामध्यें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who dislike the sacred story and get up and leave become easy prey for Yama, the lord of death. Death clings to them like a tick; only by leaving the country entirely can one escape it.

One who is good to no one, whom no one likes, becomes a guest and servant of Yama. Says Tuka, what can be done for such a one? Does a stone not remain a stone even in water?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who dislike the holy story and get up and walk out fall easy prey to Yama, the lord of death. Death stays close to them like a tick; only by leaving the whole country can they get away from it. The one who is good to no one, whom no one likes, becomes a guest and servant of Yama. Tuka says: what can be done for such a one? Does a stone stop being a stone even in water?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the person who cannot bear the company of God's story and leaves it. Such a one belongs to death, he says: Yama clings as a tick clings, so near that no ordinary distance escapes it. The hardness is the point. A man good to no one and liked by no one has cut himself off, and the stone in water makes it plain, water soaks the stone but never softens it. The harshness is aimed at the closed, unwilling heart and asks the listener whether their own resistance has gone stony.

GATHA 2038 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the absent mind

मराठी मूळ

जवळी नाहीं चित्त । काय मांडियेलें प्रेत ॥1॥
कैसा पाहे चिद्रद्रिष्ट । दीप स्नेहाच्या शेवटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कांतेलेंसें श्वान । तैसें दिशा हिंडे मन ॥2॥
त्याचे कानीं हाणे । कोण बोंब तुका ह्मणे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the mind is not present, what use is the body sitting there like a corpse? He stares vacantly, like a lamp at the last flicker of its oil. His mind wanders in every direction like a starving dog.

Says Tuka, who will shout a warning into such deaf ears?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the mind is not here, what use is the body set up like a corpse? See how empty his gaze is, like a lamp at the last flicker of its oil. His mind runs in every direction like a starving dog. Tuka says: who can shout a warning into ears like his?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures a man present in body but gone in mind. He sits in the holy gathering like a corpse propped up, his stare as thin as a lamp guttering on the last of its oil. While he sits still, his mind is a starving dog roaming everywhere, hunting elsewhere. The closing line is the sorrow of it: no warning can reach ears that absent. The poem turns the listener to ask whether their own attention is truly present or only their body.

GATHA 2039 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the saint's whole-world wealth

मराठी मूळ

दुर्बळा वाणीच्या एक दोनि सिद्ध । सदैवा समाधि विश्वरूपीं ॥1॥
काय त्याचें वांयां गेलें तें एक । सदा प्रेमसुख सर्वकाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
तीर्थ देव दुरी तया भाग्यहीना । विश्व त्या सज्जना दुमदुमिलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक वाहाती मिोळया । भाग्यें आगिळया घरा येती ॥3॥ ॥4॥
परिमळें काष्ठ ताजवां तुळविलें । आणीक नांवांचीं थोडीं । एक तें कातिवें उभविलीं ढवळारें
एकाचिया कुड मेडी । एक दीनरूप आणिती मिळया । एक ते बांधोनि माडी

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the weak, there are one or two small powers; for the fortunate, there is samadhi in the universal form. Has that man truly lost anything? He enjoys the bliss of divine love at all times.

For the unfortunate, God and holy places remain far away; for the saintly one, the entire universe resonates with His presence. Says Tuka, some carry bundles of straw on their heads, while the fortunate find the treasure coming to their very door.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The weak gain one or two small powers. The fortunate one rests in samadhi, in the universal form. Has that one lost anything at all? He has the joy of love, always, at every hour. For the luckless, God and the holy places stay far away. For the saint, the whole universe rings with God's presence. Tuka says: some carry bundles of straw on their heads, while the fortunate find the treasure come to their own door.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two kinds of gain. The merely clever pick up a small power or two, but the truly fortunate soul rests in samadhi and sees God as the whole universe, and so has lost nothing and holds constant love. To the unlucky, God and the sacred places feel distant, while to the saint every place already resounds with the divine, no pilgrimage required. The closing image weighs them: one labors under a head-load of straw, the other simply receives the treasure at his door, because what is sought is nearness of heart, not effort or distance.

GATHA 2040 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the world as a marketplace

मराठी मूळ

अवघियां बाजार एक चि जाला । मांविकलीं आपुल्या पाडीं ॥1॥
गुण तो सार रूपमध्यकार । अवगुण तो फार पीडीतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
एक गुणें आगळे असती । अमोल्य नांवांचे खडे । एक समर्थ दुर्बळा घरीं
फार मोलाचे थोडे । एक झगमग करिती वाळवंटीं । कोणी न पाहाती तयांकडे
सभाग्य संपन्न आपुलाले घरीं । मायेक दैन्य बापुडें ॥2॥
एक मानें रूपें सारिख्या असती । अनेकप्रकार याती। ज्याचिया संचितें जैसें आलें पुढें
तयाची तैसी च गति । एक उंचपदीं बैसउनि सुखें । दास्य करवी एका हातीं

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the great marketplace of the world, all things are traded at their own value. Quality is the essence; it is beauty's true measure.

Lack of virtue, however, brings great suffering. Some excel by virtue and are priceless jewels.

Some, though in the house of the strong, are cheap for all their cost. Some glitter in the open, yet none look their way.

The fortunate and prosperous dwell in their own homes, while poverty sits wretched at the gate. Some appear alike in form and beauty, yet are of countless different kinds.

As each one's destiny unfolds, so goes their fate. Some are seated in high places of comfort, while others are made to serve.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The whole world has become one marketplace, and everything is sold at its own worth. Quality is the heart of it; that is what gives form its value. Where virtue is missing, suffering is great. Some stand out by their worth, priceless jewels of a name. Some, kept in a rich man's house, are dear in price yet cheap in truth. Some glitter out on the open sand, and no one even looks their way. The fortunate and full sit in their own homes, while wretched poverty crouches at the gate. Some look alike in worth and form, yet they are of countless kinds. As each one's gathered store comes due, so runs his fate. One is seated high in comfort; another is set to serve with his own hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the world as a great bazaar where every soul is priced by what it truly carries. Inner quality, not outward form, is the real measure, and where virtue is missing the cost is suffering. He lines up the unfairness plainly: real jewels go unnoticed on the open sand while costly-looking things sit useless in rich houses; the full sit at ease in their homes while the poor crouch wretched at the gate. The turn is that this sorting follows from each one's accumulated store, the fruit of past action coming due, so one is seated high and another set to serve. The poem holds up the marketplace as a mirror, asking what worth we are actually carrying to it.

GATHA 2041 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the wasted chance

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे कां मानिती सुख । चुकलिया वांयां खंती ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, why do people embrace this happiness, when missing the real chance leads only to regret?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: why do people take this for happiness, when missing the real chance leaves only regret?

WHAT IT MEANS

This brief warning asks why people settle for a shallow pleasure and call it happiness. Tukaram names the cost they overlook: the real opportunity slips by while they are content with less. What remains afterward is only regret, when the moment that mattered cannot be taken back. It is a quiet push to weigh what we are calling happiness against what we are letting go.

GATHA 2042 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, at home in God's house

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं आह्मां शत्रु सासुरें पिसुन । दाटलें हें घन माहियेर ॥1॥
पाहें तेथें पांडुरंग रखुमाई । सत्यभामा राही जननिया॥ध्रु.॥
लज्जा भय कांही आह्मां चिंता नाहीं । सर्वसुखें पायीं वोळगती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी सदैवाचीं बाळें । जालों लडिवाळें सकळांचीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have no enemies, no troublesome in-laws. Our household is filled with the bounty of our true home.

Wherever I look, there is Panduranga, Rakhumai, Satyabhama, Rukmini, and all the divine mothers. We have no shame, fear, or worry; all joys attend at their feet.

Says Tuka, we are children born under a fortunate star, the darlings of everyone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have no enemies, no troublesome in-laws. Our home is full, packed with the riches of our true house. Wherever I look there is Panduranga, Rakhumai, Satyabhama, Rahi, and all the divine mothers. We have no shame, no fear, no worry; every joy waits at their feet. Tuka says: we are children born under a fortunate star, the darlings of them all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sings from the joy of belonging wholly to God's household. Using the warmth of a daughter who has found her true home, he says there are no enemies and no harsh in-laws here, only abundance. Everywhere he turns he sees Panduranga with Rakhumai, Satyabhama, Rahi, and the divine mothers, so the house is full of God's family. Stripped of shame, fear, and worry, he calls himself and his companions the fortunate children whom everyone in that house holds dear, a picture of complete belonging and ease in the divine.

GATHA 2043 The Nature of God

The nature of God, the unseen sustainer

मराठी मूळ

गभाअ असतां बाळा । कोण पाळी त्याचा लळा॥1॥
कैसा लाघवी सूत्रधारी । कृपाळुवा माझा हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्प पिलीं वितां चि खाय । वांचलिया कोण माय ॥2॥
गगनीं लागला कोसरा । कोण पुरवी तेथें चारा ॥3॥
पोटीं पाषाणांचे जीव । कवण जीव त्याचा भाव ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे निश्चळ राहें । होईल तें सहज पाहें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

While the child is still in the womb, who nurtures its growth? How skillful is this puppeteer, how merciful is my Hari. The serpent devours its own young the moment they hatch; who is the mother of those that survive? A spider has spun its web in the sky; who supplies food to it there? Living beings dwell even inside stones; who is the life-force that sustains them? Says Tuka, remain steadfast and calm; whatever is meant to happen will unfold naturally.

IN PLAIN WORDS

While the child is still in the womb, who tends its growing? How skillful is this puppeteer; how merciful is my Hari. The serpent eats its young the moment they hatch; who is the mother of those that live? A spider strings its web high in the sky; who carries food to it there? There are living beings inside stones; whose life is their life? Tuka says: stay still and steady. Whatever is meant to be, watch it unfold on its own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up examples of life sustained by no visible hand. Who feeds the unborn child, who mothers the snakelings the serpent does not devour, who provisions the spider hung in empty air, who keeps alive the creatures sealed in stone? Each question points to one answer: Hari, the skillful puppeteer and merciful keeper who upholds all things unseen. The poem lands on its counsel, since this care is already at work everywhere, the seeker can stop straining and stay still, trusting that what is meant to happen will happen on its own.

GATHA 2044 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, prayer for love at the feet

मराठी मूळ

न ह्मणे कवणां सिद्ध साधक गंव्हार । अवघा विश्वंभर वांचूनियां ॥1॥
गातां प्रेमगुण शंका माझ्या मनीं । नाचतां रंगणीं नाठवावी ॥2॥
देई चरणसेवा भूतांचें भजन । वर्णा अभिमान सांडवूनि ॥3॥
आशापाश माझी तोडीं माया चिंता । तुजविण वेथा नको कांहीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्व भाव तुझे पायीं । राहे ऐसें देई प्रेम देवा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will not call anyone accomplished, striving, or ignorant; all I see is the One who sustains the universe. When singing His loving qualities, let no doubt enter my mind; when dancing in His arena, let nothing else be remembered.

Grant me the service of Your feet through worship of all beings, having cast off the pride of caste. Cut away the noose of desire, illusion, and worry; I want no pain apart from You.

Says Tuka, let all my love rest at Your feet; grant me such devotion, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will call no one accomplished, no one a seeker, no one a fool. I see only the One who holds up the universe, and nothing else. When I sing of His loving qualities, let no doubt enter my mind. When I dance in His circle, let nothing else be remembered. Grant me the service of Your feet, worshipping You in all beings, with the pride of caste cast off. Cut the noose of my desire, illusion, and worry. I want no pain except the longing for You. Tuka says: let all my love rest at Your feet. O God, grant me such devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays out of a vision where the usual labels fall away. He refuses to rank anyone as adept, striver, or fool, because he sees only the one God sustaining all, so the divisions dissolve. From that seeing comes his asking: undoubting song, self-forgetting dance, and the service of God's feet practiced as worship of every being, which means dropping the pride of caste altogether. He begs to have the cords of desire, illusion, and worry cut, wanting no ache but the ache for God. The closing line names the whole request: let all his love come to rest at God's feet, and let that devotion be granted.

GATHA 2045 The Necessity of Experience

Union, the lesser becomes the greater

मराठी मूळ

अग्नमाजी गेलें । अग्न होऊन तें च ठेलें ॥1॥
काय उरलें तया पण । मागील तें नाम गुण ॥ध्रु.॥
लोह लागेपरिसा अंगीं । तो ही भूषण जाला जगीं ॥2॥
सरिता वोहळा ओघा। गंगे मिळोनि जाल्या गंगा ॥3॥
चंदनाच्या वासें । तरु चंदन जालेस्पर्शे॥4॥
तुका जडला संतां पायीं । दुजेपणा ठाव नाहीं॥5॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever enters fire becomes fire itself. What remains of its former name and nature? When iron touches the philosopher's stone, it too becomes an ornament to the world.

When rivers and streams merge into the Ganga, they all become the Ganga. By the fragrance of sandalwood, the neighboring tree becomes sandalwood through mere contact.

Says Tuka, having clung to the feet of the saints, there is no room left for any sense of separateness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever goes into the fire becomes fire. What is left of its old name? What is left of what it was before? When iron touches the touchstone, it too becomes an ornament in the world. When rivers and streams flow into the Ganga, they all become the Ganga. By the scent of the sandalwood, the tree beside it becomes sandalwood at a touch. Tuka says: I have held fast to the feet of the saints. There is no room left in me for being a separate self.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together four pictures of one thing: contact that does not leave you what you were. Fire takes the wood, the touchstone takes the iron, the Ganga takes the streams, the sandal scent takes the neighboring tree, and in each case the lesser thing loses its old name and takes on the nature of the greater. Then he turns it on himself. Clinging to the feet of the saints is the same kind of contact: it does not improve the separate self, it dissolves it. The point of company with the holy, he is saying, is not to become a better Tuka but to have no leftover sense of being apart at all.

GATHA 2046 The Saints

Longing for the saints, the worn step

मराठी मूळ

ऐशा भाग्यें जालों । तरी धन्य जन्मा आलों ॥1॥
रुळें तळीले पायरी । संत पाय देती वरी ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमामृतपान । होईल चरणरजें स्नान ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें । तया हरतील दुःखें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If such fortune comes to me, then indeed this birth is blessed. Like the bottom step that lies worn under foot, upon which the saints place their holy feet.

The nectar of love will flow, and the dust of their feet will become my bath. Says Tuka, in their happiness, they will take away all my sorrows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If such fortune comes to me, then my birth is blessed. Let me be the bottom step, worn down, lying low, where the saints set their feet as they climb. Let me drink the nectar of their love. Let the dust of their feet be the water I bathe in. Tuka says: in their joy, my sorrows will be carried away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays to be placed not above but underneath. He asks to be the lowest step of the stair, the one rubbed smooth because every foot lands on it, so that the saints will tread on him as they pass. He does not ask for their notice or their blessing from a height; he asks for their feet, their love as nectar, the dust they leave behind as his bath. The whole desire is downward, and that is the fortune he calls blessed: when their happiness touches him, his own griefs are simply taken away.

GATHA 2047 The Saints

Adoration, above liberation itself

मराठी मूळ

करितां या सुखा । अंतपार नाहीं लेखा ॥1॥
माथां पडती संतपाय । सुख कैवल्य तें काय ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसा लाभ नाहीं । दुजा विचारितां कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गोड । तेथें पुरे माझें कोड॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no end or measure to this happiness. When the feet of the saints rest upon one's head, what is the bliss of liberation compared to that? Says Tuka, there is no other gain like this, when one considers it carefully; that sweetness is where all my longing finds fulfillment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no end and no measure to this joy. When the feet of the saints come to rest on my head, what is the bliss of liberation next to that? There is no other gain like it; think it over, and you will find none. Tuka says: that sweetness is so good that there my every longing is satisfied.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the touch of the saints' feet against the highest prize the tradition offers, kaivalya, final liberation, and finds liberation the smaller thing. He calls the joy of that touch boundless and beyond counting, then dares the listener to look for anything that can match it. This is not careless talk: he is saying that the living contact of holy company outweighs even release from rebirth, because in that sweetness every want he has ever carried is already met. Where most seek liberation, Tuka says he has found something fuller and stops there.

GATHA 2048 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the vast held in the small

मराठी मूळ

वेद जया गाती । आह्मां तयाची संगति ॥1॥
नाम धरियेलें कंठीं । अवघा सांटविला पोटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ॐकाराचें बीज । हातीं आमुचे तें निज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु मोटें । अणुरणियां धाकुटें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He whom the Vedas praise, we have His company. His name is held at our throat; we have stored Him entirely within us.

The seed of Om is in our hands; it is our very own. Says Tuka, He is immeasurably vast, yet smaller than the smallest atom.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one whom the Vedas sing, His company is ours. We have held His name in our throat; we have stored the whole of Him inside us. The seed of Om is in our hand; it is our very own. Tuka says: He is greater than the greatest, and smaller than the smallest atom.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram claims an intimacy with God that the scriptures only circle from outside. The Vedas can sing of Him, but the devotee carries Him: the Name lodged in the throat, the whole of Him kept within, the seed-sound Om resting in the hand like something owned. The closing line names the paradox that makes this possible: the same God who is larger than everything is also smaller than the smallest atom, so He can be held in a throat and a heart. Devotion, Tuka says, reaches by love what learning approaches only by description.

GATHA 2049 Prayers

Prayer, the muddy stream and the Ganga

मराठी मूळ

तूं श्रीयेचा पति । माझी बहु हीन याती ॥1॥
दोघे असों एके ठायीं । माझा माथा तुझे पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
माझ्या दीनपणां पार । नाहीं बहु तूं उदार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । मी ओहोळ तूं गंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the Lord of Lakshmi; my caste is very lowly. Yet let us dwell together in one place, with my head at Your feet.

There is no limit to my poverty, and You are boundlessly generous. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, I am a muddy stream and You are the Ganga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the Lord of Lakshmi; my birth is very low. Still, let the two of us stay in one place, my head at Your feet. There is no limit to how poor I am; there is no limit to how generous You are. Tuka says: O Panduranga, I am a small dirty stream, and You are the Ganga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets his lowness beside God's greatness and asks them to share a single place anyway. He does not hide the gap: he is of low birth and bottomless poverty, while God is the consort of Fortune herself and boundlessly giving. His one request is closeness on the only terms he can offer, his head laid at the feet. The closing image makes the whole prayer turn on God's nature, not Tuka's worth: a muddy trickle has no claim on the Ganga, yet when it pours in, the Ganga receives and purifies it. His hope rests entirely on the generosity, not on his own standing.

GATHA 2050 Prayers

Prayer, the beggar settles accounts

मराठी मूळ

मी याचक तूं दाता । काय सत्य पाहों आतां ॥1॥
म्या तों पसरिला हात । करीं आपुलें उचित ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी घ्यावें नाम । तुह्मां समाधान काम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवराजा । वाद खंडीं तुझा माझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am the beggar, You are the giver; let us see what truth comes of this now. I have stretched out my hand; do what is fitting on Your part.

Our task is to chant Your name; Your task is to grant us love and contentment. Says Tuka, O King of Gods, put an end to this dispute between You and me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am the beggar, You are the giver; now let us see what truth comes of it. I have stretched out my hand; do whatever is right on Your side. Our work is to take Your name; Your work is to give us peace and contentment. Tuka says: O King of Gods, end this dispute between You and me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to God almost as one party in a contract, holding Him to His own role. The roles are fixed: a beggar can only beg, and a giver is bound to give, so Tuka has done his part by stretching out his hand and now waits to see whether God will do His. He divides the labor plainly: the devotee's duty is to chant the Name, God's duty is to grant the contentment that should follow. The dispute he asks to be settled is the gap between the chanting he keeps up and the peace he has not yet been given; he is pressing God, with a kind of bold tenderness, to make good on the bargain.

GATHA 2051 Prayers

Prayer, hide me in You

मराठी मूळ

तुझे पोटीं ठाव । व्हावा ऐसा माझा भाव ॥1॥
करीं वासनेसारिखें । प्राण फुटे येणें दुःखें ॥ध्रु.॥
अहंकार खोटे । वाटे श्वापदांची थाटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आई । हातीं धरूनि संग देई ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My desire is to find a place within You. Fulfill this longing; my life breaks apart under the weight of this pain.

Pride and falsehood seem like a pack of wild beasts. Says Tuka, O Mother, take my hand and walk beside me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me find a place inside You; this is what I long for. Grant me my wish; my breath breaks apart under this pain. Pride and falsehood crowd around me like a pack of wild beasts. Tuka says: O Mother, take me by the hand and walk with me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs to be hidden inside God as a frightened child hides in a parent. His longing is not for comfort but for shelter, and the urgency is real: the ache of separation is breaking his very breath. The danger he names is inward, not outward. Pride and falsehood close in on him like wild animals, and he knows he cannot fight them off alone. So he ends by calling God Mother and asking for the simplest help there is, a hand to hold and someone to walk beside him through the danger.

GATHA 2052 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the clinging child

मराठी मूळ

दारीं परोवरी । कुडीं कवाडीं मी घरीं ॥1॥
तुमच्या लागलों पोषणा । अवघे ठायीं नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदीं खाऊं जेवूं । हातींतोंडींचें ही घेऊं ॥2 ॥
तुका ह्मणे अंगीं । जडलों ठायींचा सलगी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At the door, at the threshold, in every nook and corner of the house, I cling to You for sustenance, O Narayana, in every place. I will not let You eat or drink; I will even take what is in Your hand or mouth.

Says Tuka, I have become permanently attached through old familiarity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At the door, on the porch, by the wall, at the gate, I am there in the house with You. I have fastened myself to You for my feeding, everywhere, O Narayana. I will not let You eat or drink in peace; I will snatch even what is in Your hand and Your mouth. Tuka says: I have stuck to Your body out of an old, settled familiarity.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays the part of a small child who will not leave a parent alone. He is everywhere in the house, at the door and the gate and the wall, depending on God for his every meal and giving Him no privacy. The image of grabbing the food from God's own hand and mouth is the boldness of a child who feels wholly entitled, not a stranger who would be shy. He names the reason in the last line: this clinging comes from long familiarity, a closeness so old and settled that there is no formality left in it. Devotion at its most intimate, he suggests, is this kind of shameless belonging.

GATHA 2053 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, my joy is Your joy

मराठी मूळ

मज कोणी कांहीं करी । उमटे तुमचे अंतरीं ॥1॥
व्याला वाडविलें ह्मुण । मज सुख तुज सीण ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें पोट धालें। तुझे अंगीं उमटलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खेळें । तेथें तुमचिया बळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever anyone does to me, it is felt within You. Having nurtured and raised me, my happiness is Your happiness, and my trouble is Your trouble.

When my belly is full, the signs show on Your body. Says Tuka, I play only by the strength of Your power.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever anyone does to me, it shows up inside You. You bore me and raised me, so my comfort is Your comfort and my weariness is Your strain. When my stomach is full, the sign of it appears on Your body. Tuka says: whatever I play at, I play by Your strength.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a bond so complete that he and God no longer have separate fortunes. What is done to him registers in God; because God brought him into being and raised him, the devotee's ease and exhaustion are felt as God's own. Even his full belly shows on God's body, the way a nursing mother's child being fed shows in her. The closing line names the ground of all this: every move Tuka makes, every game he plays, draws on God's strength, not his own. He is claiming the helplessness and the safety of a child who knows the parent will feel and supply everything.

GATHA 2054 Prayers

Prayer, empty hands, folded hands

मराठी मूळ

जोडोनियां कर । उभा राहिलों समोर ॥1॥
हें चि माझेंभांडवल।जाणे कारण विठ्ठल ॥ध्रु.॥
भाकितों करुणा । आतां नुपेक्षावें दीना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे डोई । ठेवीं वेळोवेळां पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With folded hands I stand before You. This alone is my capital, and Vitthal knows it well.

I plead for mercy; do not neglect the helpless now. Says Tuka, again and again I place my head at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With folded hands I stand before You. This alone is all I have, and Vitthal knows why. I cry out for mercy: do not turn away from the helpless now. Tuka says: again and again I lay my head at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes before God owning nothing he can offer except the gesture of asking. Folded hands are his whole capital, his entire wealth, and he says Vitthal knows the reason, that this emptiness is exactly what brings a beggar to the door. From that poverty he pleads for mercy and presses the one claim a helpless person has: that the helpless are precisely whom mercy is for, so God must not overlook him. The repeated bowing of his head at the feet is the prayer made physical, asked over and over because he has no other argument and no other place to go.

GATHA 2055 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the settled pact

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी घ्यावें तुझें नाम । तुह्मी आह्मां द्यावें प्रेम॥1॥
ऐसें निवडिलें मुळीं । संतीं बैसोनि सकळीं ॥ध्रु.॥
माझी डोई पायांवरी । तुह्मी न धरावी दुरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केला । खंड दोघांचा विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We shall take Your name; You shall give us love. This was settled long ago by all the saints together.

My head rests upon Your feet; do not push me away. Says Tuka, the division between us both has been resolved, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are to take Your name; You are to give us love. This was decided long ago, all the saints sitting together and choosing it. My head rests on Your feet; do not push me away. Tuka says: the division between the two of us is over, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram treats devotion as a settlement reached long before him, agreed by the whole assembly of saints. The terms are clean and binding: the devotees chant the Name, and God in return gives love. On the strength of that old pact he lays his head at the feet and asks God not to keep him at a distance, since the arrangement leaves no room for distance. The closing line says the separation between devotee and God has been dissolved, not as a thing Tuka achieved alone but as the natural result of an agreement the saints made and God is bound to honor.

GATHA 2056 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the old account closed

मराठी मूळ

वारिलें लिगाड । बहुदिसांचें हें जाड ॥1॥
न बोलावें ऐसें केलें । काहीं वाउगें तितुलें ॥ध्रु.॥
जाला चौघांचार । गेला खंडोनि वेव्हार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । करीन ते घ्यावी सेवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The old entanglement, thick and long-standing, has been cleared away. Whatever was spoken in vain has been set aside.

The common account has been settled; the old transactions are finished. Says Tuka, O God, accept whatever service I offer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The old tangle, heavy and built up over many days, has been cleared. It has been arranged so that I need not speak; all that was useless is set aside. The matter was settled before witnesses; the old dealings are finished and done. Tuka says: O God, now accept whatever service I do.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of his long bondage as a debt finally cleared, using the language of accounts and disputes. The entanglement of worldly attachment, thick and grown over many years, has been resolved, and with it goes all the pointless arguing he need no longer take part in. He pictures the settlement as done openly, with witnesses, the old transactions struck off the books for good. With that burden gone, only one thing is left for him: he offers himself to God in service and asks that whatever small service he gives be accepted.

GATHA 2057 Worldly Life

Worldly snares, hold patience for the soul

मराठी मूळ

पायरवे अन्न । मग करी क्षीदक्षीण ॥1॥
ऐसे होती घातपात । लाभे विण संगें थीत ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्माची जोडी । वाताहात एके घडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शंका । हित आड या लौकिका ॥3॥
धीर धरुं जिवासाटीं । येऊं नेदूं लाभा तुटी ॥ध्रु.॥
उचित समय । लाजनिवारावें भय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळा । जाणों नेम नाहीं बाळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rich food at first, then it brings on weakness. Such are the treacheries that come from profitless company.

A lifetime's earnings can be wasted in a single moment. Says Tuka, worldly honor and reputation stand in the way of true benefit. Hold patience for the sake of the soul; do not let loss come to the gain.

At the right moment, overcome both shame and fear. Says Tuka, know the art; there is no fixed rule for the innocent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rich food at first; then it leaves you weak. So go the treacheries that come from useless company: you gain nothing. A whole lifetime's earnings can be wasted in a single moment. Tuka says: worldly honor and good name stand in the way of your true good. Hold your patience for the sake of the soul. Do not let loss eat into the gain. At the right moment, throw off both shame and fear. Tuka says: learn the art. There is no fixed rule for the innocent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns that the company you keep can ruin you the way a rich dish gives quick pleasure and then sickness: the loss comes slowly and you mistake it for a treat. A lifetime of spiritual earning can be squandered in one careless moment, and what trips people most is their concern for reputation and respectability, which they let outweigh their real good. So he counsels patience held for the soul's sake, and a willingness, when the moment calls for it, to set aside both shame and fear rather than playing it safe. The closing line says there is no rigid rule to memorize; the path asks for discernment, the art of knowing when to act.

GATHA 2058 Ecstasy and Joy

Crossing accomplished, the raft of the Name

मराठी मूळ

उलंघिली लाज । तेणें साधियेलें काज ॥1॥
सुखें नाचे पैलतीरीं । गेलों भवाचे सागरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नामाची सांगडी । सुखें बांधली आवडी ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By casting off shame, the real purpose was accomplished. Now I dance happily on the far shore, having crossed the ocean of existence.

The raft of the name was bound together with joyful love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By throwing off shame, the real work got done. Now I dance happily on the far shore. I have crossed the ocean of this existence. The raft of the Name I bound together with joyful love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names what carried him across the ocean of worldly existence: the Name of God, lashed into a raft and held together by nothing but loving delight. The first step was casting off shame, the worry about how he looked to others, because that fear is what keeps a person on the near shore. Having let it go, he says the true purpose of a life is finished, and he dances freely on the far bank. The image is plain: love is the only binding, and the Name is the only vessel.

GATHA 2059 Longing and Separation

Demanding what is mine, a beggar's sit-in

मराठी मूळ

बैसलोंसे दारीं । धरणें कोंडोनि भिकारी ॥1॥
आतां कोठें हालों नेदीं । बरी सांपडली संदी ॥ध्रु.॥
किती वेरझारा । मागें घातलीया घरा ॥2॥
माझें मज नारायणा । देतां ◌ां रे नये मना॥3॥
भांडावें तें किती । बहु सोसिली फजिती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । लाज तुझे अंगीं कांहीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have sat down at Your door like a beggar staging a sit-in. Now I will not let You move from here; I have caught the right moment.

How many rounds have I made to this house before? Give me what is mine, O Narayana; does it not trouble Your conscience to withhold it? How much longer must I argue? I have endured enough humiliation. Says Tuka, there is not an ounce of shame in You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have sat down at your door. Like a beggar, I am staging a sit-in, blocking the way. Now I will not let you move from here. I have caught the right moment at last. How many rounds have I already made to this house? Give me what is mine, Narayana. Does it not trouble your conscience to hold it back? How long must I keep arguing? I have swallowed enough humiliation. Tuka says: there is not an ounce of shame in you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram approaches God not as a polite suppliant but as a creditor who plants himself at the door and refuses to budge until he is paid. He insists that liberation is not charity but his own due, something already his, and he scolds Narayana for withholding it with no apparent prick of conscience. The complaint of having made many fruitless trips and endured much humiliation is the voice of a long, frustrated longing that has turned bold. The final jab, that God has no shame, is the freedom of the lover who can accuse the Beloved precisely because the bond is unbreakable; the rudeness is intimacy, not contempt.

GATHA 2060 Devotion to Vitthal

The faithful gatekeeper, claiming his wage

मराठी मूळ

जालों द्वारपाळ । तुझें राखिलें सकळ ॥1॥
नाहीं लागों दिलें अंगा । आड ठाकलों मी जगा ॥ध्रु.॥
करूनियां नीती। दिल्याप्रमाणें चालती ॥2॥
हातीं दंड काठी । भा जिवाचिये साटीं॥3॥
बळ बुद्धी युक्ती । तुज दिल्या सर्व शक्ती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे खरा । आतां घेईन मुशारा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become Your gatekeeper, guarding all that is Yours. I have stood as a shield between You and the world, not letting anything touch You.

I have established order, and all follow the given rule. In my hand I hold the staff and rod, staking my very life on this duty.

All my strength, intellect, and skill, all my powers, I have given to You. Says Tuka, now I will collect my wages in full.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become your gatekeeper. I have guarded all that is yours. I let nothing touch you. I stood as a shield between you and the world. I kept order; everyone follows the rule I lay down. In my hand I hold the staff and the rod, and I stake my very life on this watch. All my strength, my mind, my skill, every power I have, I have handed over to you. Tuka says: it is true, and now I will collect my wages in full.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts himself as a servant who has given everything to his master's house: his strength, his intellect, his every faculty, and even his life, standing armed at the gate to keep the world from troubling God. Having served so completely, he now comes to claim his wages, and the wage a devotee asks is God himself. The boldness is the same demanding love that runs through these poems: total self-surrender becomes the very ground on which he presses his claim. He is not bargaining for things; he has poured himself out and asks to be paid in the only coin that matters.

GATHA 2061 The Necessity of Experience

Remembrance, the meeting within separation

मराठी मूळ

फळाची तों पोटीं । घडे वियोगें ही भेटी ॥1॥
करावें चिंतन । सार तें चि आठवण ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्त चित्ता ग्वाही । उपचारें चाड नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । पावे ंतरींची सेवा॥3॥ ॥15॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Within the fruit itself, even through separation, the meeting takes place. The essence is contemplation, the remembrance itself.

The chitta bears witness to the chitta; external gestures are unnecessary. Says Tuka, O God, inner devotion reaches You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Within the fruit itself, even in separation, the meeting happens. So do your contemplation. The essence is just this: remembrance. One heart bears witness to the other; outward gestures are not needed. Tuka says: God, it is the inward service that reaches you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram quietly answers the ache of being apart from God: even in separation the meeting is already taking place, the way the whole tree is present inside its fruit. The work, then, is contemplation, and its whole essence is remembrance, simply keeping God in mind. He sets inward devotion above outward ritual, saying one heart bears witness to the other directly and no ceremonial gesture is required. The teaching is plain and consoling: what reaches God is the service offered within.

GATHA 2062 Longing and Separation

Surrender, your ways past my understanding

मराठी मूळ

दुर्बळाचें कोण । ऐके घालूनियां मन । राहिलें कारण। तयावांचूनि काय तें ॥1॥
कळों आलें अनुभवें । पांडुरंगा माझ्या जीवें । न संगतां ठावें । पडे चर्या देखोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
काम क्रोध माझा देहीं । भेदाभेद ोले नाहीं । होतें तेथें कांहीं । तुज कृपा करितां॥2॥
हें तों नव्हे उचित । नुपेक्षावें शरणागत । तुका ह्मणे रीत । तुमची आह्मां न कळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who will listen attentively to the poor? Without Him, what purpose remains? Experience has revealed this to me, O Panduranga: without being told, You see the state of one's life. Desire and anger dwell in my body; the words of distinction and unity are meaningless there.

Had You shown grace, even that might have been remedied. This is not fair; the one who has surrendered should not be ignored.

Says Tuka, Your ways are beyond our understanding.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who will set his mind to listen to the poor? Without him, what purpose is left? Experience has taught me this, Panduranga, with my own life: without being told, you see the state of a person. Desire and anger live in my body. There the words of difference and oneness mean nothing. Had you shown grace, even that might have been healed. This is not right. The one who has surrendered should not be ignored. Tuka says: your ways are beyond our understanding.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as the helpless poor man whom no one else will hear, for whom God is the only purpose left. He confesses honestly that desire and anger still live in him, that the fine talk of difference and non-difference cannot touch that knot; only grace could have healed it. So his prayer turns into gentle protest: it is not right to ignore one who has surrendered. The closing line lets the complaint rest in trust, admitting that God's ways are past human understanding even when they wound.

GATHA 2063 Longing and Separation

Two diverging paths, holding fast to the feet

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी भाव जाणों देवा । न कळती तुझिया मावा । गणिकेचा कुढावा । पतना न्यावा दशरथ ॥1॥
तरी म्यां काय गा करावें । कोण्या रीती तुज पावें । न संगतां ठावें । तुह्मांविण न पडे॥ध्रु.॥
दोनी फाकलिया वाटा । ◌ोवी केला घटापटा । नव्हे धीर फांटा । आड रानें भरती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे डोळे । तुझे देखती हे चाळे । आतां येणें वेळे । चरण जीवें न सोडीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, we know devotion, but we cannot fathom Your deceptions. A courtesan's longing could lead Dasharatha himself to ruin.

Then what am I to do? By what means can I reach You? Without You, nothing is known or found. Two paths diverge, and confusion has created a great turmoil; my resolve falters, and dense forests block the way.

Says Tuka, my eyes see all Your tricks; this time, I will not let go of Your feet with my very life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We know devotion, God, but we cannot read your illusions. A courtesan's longing could drag even Dasharatha to ruin. So what am I to do? By what road can I reach you? Nothing is known or found without you. Two paths fork before me; the confusion has stirred up great turmoil. My resolve breaks, and thick forests block the way. Tuka says: my eyes see all your tricks. This time I will not let go of your feet, not with my life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits the limit of his own effort: he may know the way of devotion, but he cannot see through God's deceptions, the maya that scatters a seeker between forked roads. He confesses that desire and worldly pull are strong enough to undo even the great, so by himself he cannot find the path. Out of that helplessness he makes the only move left to him, gripping God's feet and vowing not to let go even at the cost of his life. The poem turns confusion into clinging: when the mind cannot find the road, the body holds onto God and refuses to be moved.

GATHA 2064 Longing and Separation

The quarrel comes to a head, settle it now

मराठी मूळ

वेरझारीं जाला सीण । बहु केलें क्षीदक्षीण । भांडणासी दिन । आजी येथें फावला ॥1॥
आतां काय भीड भार । धरुनियां लोकचार । बुडवूनि वेव्हार । सरोबरी करावी ॥ध्रु.॥
आलें बहुतांच्या मना । कां रे न ोसी ाहाणा । मुळींच्या वचना । आह्मी जागों आपुल्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चौघांमधीं । तुज नेलें होतें आधीं । आतां नामधीं । उरी कांहीं राहिली ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Going back and forth has brought exhaustion; much energy has been wasted. Today is the day the quarrel comes to a head.

Now why should I hold back out of social propriety? Let me drown all conventions and settle this once and for all. Many have thought the same: why do You not listen, You stubborn One? We are awake to the original promise.

Says Tuka, I had taken You before the assembly once before; now do You still have anything left to withhold?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All this going back and forth has worn me out. So much strength has drained away. Today is the day the quarrel comes to a head, right here. Now why should I hold back for the sake of appearances? Let me drown all the niceties and settle this once and for all. Many others have thought the same: why do you not listen, you stubborn one? We hold you to your first promise. Tuka says: I had once dragged you before the assembly already. Do you still have anything left to keep back?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram, exhausted by endless fruitless approaches to God, decides to stop being polite and force the matter to a conclusion today. He refuses to let social propriety hold him back any longer and calls God stubborn for not answering, insisting on the original promise of grace that he says is owed. He reminds God that he has confronted him publicly before, and demands to know what could possibly be left to withhold. The whole abhanga is the devotee's bold ultimatum: the long, draining wait ends in a refusal to leave until the debt of grace is paid.

GATHA 2065 Worldly Metaphors

The wishing tree, gain and loss within

मराठी मूळ

कल्पतरूखालीं । फळें येती मागीतलीं ॥1॥
तेथें बैसल्याचा भाव । विचारूनि बोलें ठाव ॥ध्रु.॥
द्यावें तें उत्तर । येतो प्रतित्याचा फेर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मनीं । आपुल्या च लाभहानि॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Under the wish-fulfilling tree, the fruits that are asked for do appear. But the very desire with which one sits there matters; speak only after careful thought.

Whatever reply is given, the consequence returns in kind. Says Tuka, the gain or loss lies within one's own mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Under the wish-fulfilling tree, the fruits you ask for do appear. But the desire you sit with there is what matters. Speak only after careful thought. Whatever answer you give, its consequence comes back to you in kind. Tuka says: the gain and the loss lie within your own mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the wishing tree, the kalpataru that grants whatever is asked, and turns it into a warning about the mind. Since it gives exactly what you wish for, your wish itself decides your fate, so one should think carefully before asking. What you put out returns in kind, like an echo. The point lands inward: God or the wishing tree only mirrors you, and so the real gain or loss of a life is shaped by the desires you carry in your own mind.

GATHA 2066 The Power of the Name

The Name, a fast color that never fades

मराठी मूळ

रंगलें या रंगें पालट न घरी । खेवलें अंतरीं पालटेना॥1॥
सावळें निखळ कृष्णनाम ठसे । अंगसंगें कैसे शोभा देती ॥ध्रु.॥
पवित्र जालें तें न लिंपे विटाळा । नैदी बैसों मला आडवरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काळें काळें केलें तोंड । प्रकाश अभंड देखोनियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dyed in this color, it never fades; what has been absorbed within does not change. The dark, pure name of Krishna leaves its mark, and its luster adorns all who carry it.

What has become sacred is untouched by pollution; it does not allow any stain to settle. Says Tuka, the face has been blackened with the dark beauty of Krishna, and seeing that unbroken radiance, there is only light.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dyed in this color, it never fades. What has soaked into the heart does not change. The dark, pure name of Krishna sets its stamp, and its beauty shines on all who wear it. What has become sacred cannot be stained; it lets no defilement settle on it. Tuka says: my face is blackened, blackened with that dark beauty, and seeing the unbroken radiance, there is only light.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the image of dyeing cloth: once the heart is steeped in the dark name of Krishna, the color is fast, it will never wash out or fade. That sacred mark cannot be polluted; no defilement can settle on what the Name has made holy. The seeming paradox of the close is deliberate: his face is blackened with the dark hue of Krishna, yet that very darkness is unbroken radiance, pure light. The dark stain of the Name is not a blemish but a beauty that shines.

GATHA 2067 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, our feet upon the head of death

मराठी मूळ

जगा काळ खाय । आह्मी माथां दिले पाय ॥1॥
नाचों तेथें उभा राहे । जातां व्यंग करी साहे ॥ध्रु.॥
हरिच्या गुणें धाला । होता खात चि भुकेला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हळु । जाला कढत शीतळु ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Death devours the world, but we have placed our feet upon its head. Wherever we dance, death stands still; when we walk past, it bears our passage without protest.

Satisfied by the virtues of Hari, death itself, once forever hungry, has been fed. Says Tuka, the one who was boiling hot has become cool and gentle.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Death devours the world. We have set our feet upon its head. Wherever we dance, death stands still. When we walk past, it bears our passing without a word. Filled full by the virtues of Hari, death, once forever hungry, has been fed. Tuka says: the one that was boiling hot has gone cool and gentle.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that the devotee has conquered the very death that swallows the whole world, treading on its head as on a defeated enemy. Where the lovers of God dance, death itself halts and lets them pass without protest. The bold turn is that even death is satisfied by the virtues of Hari: the eternally hungry devourer is finally fed, and its scorching heat cools into something gentle. The Name does not just protect from death; it tames and contents death itself.

GATHA 2068 The Power of the Name

The Name as medicine, the only cure

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मरस घेई काढा । जेणें पीडा वारेल ॥1॥
पथ्य नाम विठोबाचें । अणीक वाचे न सेवीं ॥ध्रु.॥
भवरोगाऐसें जाय । आणीक काय क्षुल्लकें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नव्हे बाधा । अणीक कदा भूतांची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Take this medicine of divine essence; it will cure your affliction. The proper diet is Vithoba's name; let nothing else touch your tongue.

When the disease of worldly existence itself is destroyed, what are all other petty ailments? Says Tuka, no other spirit or demon can cause harm after that.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Take this medicine of divine essence; it will end your suffering. The proper diet is Vithoba's name. Let nothing else touch your tongue. When the very disease of worldly existence is gone, what are all the petty ailments? Tuka says: after that, no other spirit or demon can harm you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prescribes the Name like a physician prescribing a cure: the divine essence is the medicine that ends suffering, and Vithoba's name is the strict diet, with nothing else allowed on the tongue. He frames worldly existence itself as the root disease, so once that is healed every lesser trouble loses its weight. The closing line extends the protection: with the great sickness cured, no other malign power, no spirit or demon, can do any harm. The whole abhanga reduces the cure for life to a single remedy, the Name.

GATHA 2069 The Saints

The saints' feet, the cure that heals

मराठी मूळ

अंगें अनुभव जाला मज । संतरजचरणांचा ॥1॥
सुखी जालों या सेवनें । दुःख नेणें यावरी ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्माल्याचें तुळसीदळ । विष्णुजळ चरणींचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावसार । करूनि फार मिश्रत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have experienced in my own body the effect of the dust of the saints' feet. By that remedy, I have become happy; I know no sorrow after this.

The tulasi leaf from the offering, the sacred water from the Lord's feet. Says Tuka, mix these with the essence of devotion, and the cure is complete.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have felt it in my own body, the touch of the dust of the saints' feet. By taking this remedy I have become well. After this I know no sorrow. Take the tulasi leaf from the offering, take the water that washed the Lord's feet. Tuka says: mix these with the essence of devotion, and the cure is complete.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of the company of the saints as a medicine he has tested on himself, not a theory. He says the dust of their feet, the tulasi from God's offering, the water poured over God's feet, taken together with real devotion, work a complete healing. The sickness he means is the sorrow of worldly life, and he reports that once cured he knows it no more. The point is that contact with the saints and with God is the only remedy that finishes the disease rather than easing it for a while.

GATHA 2070 The Nature of God

God the physician, paid in love

मराठी मूळ

वैद्य एक पंढरिराव । अंतर्भाव तो जाणे ॥1॥
रोगाऐशा द्याव्या वल्ली । जाणे जाली बाधा ते ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदी रुका वेचों मोल । पोहे बोल प्रीतीचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दयावंता । सदा चिंता दीनांची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The only true physician is the Lord of Pandhari; He alone knows the inner condition. He prescribes the right remedy for each ailment, knowing exactly where the affliction lies.

He does not charge even a coin; His currency is words of love. Says Tuka, that compassionate One always carries the poor in His thoughts.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is only one true physician, the Lord of Pandhari. He alone knows the inner condition. He gives the right herb for each disease, for he knows exactly where the harm lies. He charges no coin, asks no fee; his only payment is words of love. Tuka says: that compassionate one always carries the poor in his thoughts.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures Panduranga as the one doctor who diagnoses what no other can see, the affliction hidden inside a person. Because he reads the inner condition exactly, the remedy he gives always fits. The stakes are that no human healer can reach this sickness; only God can. And his price is not money but love, freely given, because he is forever turned toward the helpless and the poor.

GATHA 2071 The Nature of God

God the Friend of the Helpless

मराठी मूळ

करितां कोणाचें ही काज । नाहीं लाज देवासी ॥1॥
बरे करावें हें काम । धरिलें नाम दीनबंधु ॥ध्रु.॥
करुनि अराणूक पाहे । भलत्या साहए व्हावया ॥2॥
बोले तैसी करणी करी । तुका ह्मणे एक हरि ॥3॥ ॥4॥
उभें चंद्रभागे तीरीं । कट धरोनियां करीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God feels no shame in doing anyone's work. He should do this work well, for He has taken the name Friend of the Helpless.

He watches for the chance to assist, ready to help in any way. Says Tuka, Hari alone both speaks and acts accordingly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God feels no shame to do anyone's work. He must do this work well, for he has taken the name Friend of the Helpless. He looks for the chance, ready to help in any way at all. He acts exactly as he speaks. Tuka says: Hari alone is like this. He stands on the bank of the Chandrabhaga, his hands resting on his hips.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reminds God of his own name: if he is called Friend of the Helpless, then he is bound to act like one, and he is not too proud to do even the lowliest person's work. Tukaram presses the claim that God watches for openings to help and that his deeds match his promises exactly, unlike human beings whose words and acts come apart. The closing image is Vitthal standing on the river bank at Pandhari, hands on hips, waiting, the Friend who keeps his post. The poem is half praise and half a held God to his word.

GATHA 2072 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the feet on the brick

मराठी मूळ

पाउलें गोजिरीं । विटेवरी शोभलीं ॥1॥
संचिताचा ठेवा । जोडी हातीं लागली ॥ध्रु.॥
रूप डोळयां आवडे । कीतिन श्रवणीं पवाडे ।
मस्तक नावडे । उठों पायांवरोनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाम । ज्याचें नासी क्रोध काम ।
हरी भवश्रम । उच्चारितां वाचेसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those beautiful feet shine upon the brick. The treasure of our destiny has come into our hands.

The form delights the eyes; the fame resounds in the ears. My head does not wish to rise from those feet.

Says Tuka, His name destroys desire and anger; merely uttering it frees the tongue from all bondage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those lovely feet shine upon the brick. The treasure stored up by my past deeds has come into my hands. The form delights my eyes; the fame fills my ears. My head will not rise from those feet. Tuka says: his name destroys anger and desire. Speak it with the tongue, and the weariness of the world is taken away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands at Pandhari and sees Vitthal's feet set on the brick, and he calls this sight the treasure his whole past has been saving up for him. Every sense is filled: his eyes by the form, his ears by the fame, and his bowed head refuses to lift from the feet. He then names what the Name itself does: spoken aloud, it burns away anger and desire and lifts the exhaustion of worldly existence. The poem moves from the seen feet to the spoken Name, both pointing to the same release.

GATHA 2073 The Power of the Name

The Name as our only wealth

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां हें चि भांडवल । ह्मणों विठ्ठल विठ्ठल ॥1॥
सुखें तरों भवनदी । संग वैष्णवांची मांदी ॥ध्रु.॥
बाखराचें वाण। सांडूं हें जेवूं जेवण ॥2॥
न लगे वारंवार । तुका ह्मणे वेरझार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our only capital is to say Vitthal, Vitthal. We will cross the river of worldly existence in bliss, surrounded by the company of the Vaishnavas.

Let us set aside the stale fare and eat this true feast. Says Tuka, there is no need to keep going back and forth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is our only capital: to say Vitthal, Vitthal. We will cross the river of worldly life in joy, in the crowd of the Vaishnavas. Let us throw away the stale food and eat this true meal. Tuka says: there is no need to keep going back and forth again and again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the devotees own nothing else worth counting; the one wealth they trade on is the Name, Vitthal. With that and the company of fellow Vaishnavas they cross the river of birth and death gladly rather than in fear. He contrasts two foods: the stale fare of worldly pursuits and the true feast of the Name, and tells us to drop the first for the second. The last line names the stakes, that this meal ends the endless coming and going, the rounds of birth, with no need to repeat the journey.

GATHA 2074 Prayers

Prayer, keep my mind from wandering

मराठी मूळ

आतां माझ्या भावा । अंतराय नको देवा ॥1॥
आलें भागा तें करितों । तुझें नाम उच्चारितों ॥ध्रु.॥
दृढ माझें मन। येथें राखावें बांधोन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वाटे । नको फुटों देऊं फांटे॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, do not place any obstacle before my devotion now. I do what comes to me: I utter Your name.

Keep my mind firmly anchored here; do not let it branch off in other directions. Says Tuka, do not let it wander astray.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, O God, put no obstacle in the way of my devotion. I do what falls to me to do: I speak your name. Hold my mind firm, keep it bound here. Tuka says: on the road, do not let it break off into side paths.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays not for things but for an unbroken devotion, asking God to remove whatever would block it. His own part is simple and he is already doing it: he keeps uttering the Name. What he cannot manage alone is his restless mind, so he asks God to bind it in place and not let it scatter down side roads. The stakes are that the practice fails not from lack of effort but from a mind that branches off, and only God can hold it steady.

GATHA 2075 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the begging flatterer

मराठी मूळ

काय देवापाशीं उणें । हिंडे दारोदारीं सुनें ॥1॥
करी अक्षरांची आटी । एके कवडी च साटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
निंदी कोणां स्तवी । चिंतातुर सदा जीवीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भांड । जलो जळो त्याचें तोंड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is lacking with God that one must wander door to door like a stray? The pandit toils over letters and syllables for the sake of a single penny. He slanders some and flatters others, always anxious at heart.

Says Tuka, such a flatterer: may his mouth be cursed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is lacking with God, that a man wanders door to door like a stray dog? He strains over letters and syllables, all for a single cowrie shell. He slanders one man and flatters another, his heart always eaten by worry. Tuka says: such a wrangler, may his mouth be burned away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strikes at the scholar who uses his learning to beg, going from door to door, grinding through holy words for the smallest coin. The poem asks: if God lacks nothing, why grovel before men? The pattern he names is the cycle of slander and flattery that such begging breeds, and the constant anxiety it leaves in the heart. The harsh closing curse is aimed at that grasping, two-faced use of the tongue, not at any one person; it warns the listener against turning sacred words into a tool for gain.

GATHA 2076 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, ask only from God

मराठी मूळ

मागणें तें मागों देवा । करूं भक्ती त्याची सेवा ॥1॥
काय उणे तयापाशीं । रिद्धसिद्धी ज्याच्या दासी ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे विश्वंभर । ज्याच्यानें हें चराचर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us ask from God alone; let us serve Him with devotion. What is lacking in His treasury? Prosperity and supernatural powers are His handmaids.

Says Tuka, He is the Sustainer of the universe, by whose power all this creation moves.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us ask what we ask from God, and serve him with devotion. What is lacking in his keeping? Wealth and the powers are his serving-maids. Tuka says: he is the one who holds the whole world, by whom all this moving and unmoving creation lives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says to bring every request to God alone and to serve him with love rather than begging from men. His reason is that God's house lacks nothing: even prosperity and the supernatural powers, which people chase so hard, are mere handmaids waiting on him. Since God sustains the whole universe, the moving and the unmoving alike, he is the only worthy source to turn to. The point is to set the heart on the master, not on the maids who serve him.

GATHA 2077 The Nature of God

God serves the one who wants nothing

मराठी मूळ

चित्तीं नाहीं आस । त्याचा पांडुरंग दास ॥1॥
असे भक्तांचिये घरीं । काम न संगतां करी ॥ध्रु.॥
अनाथाचा बंधु । असे अंगीं हा संबंधु ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । देवा सत्ता राबवावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Panduranga becomes the servant of one who has no desire in the chitta. He dwells in the homes of the devoted and does their work without being asked.

He is the kinsman of the destitute; this bond runs through His very being. Says Tuka, through devotion, one can command God to serve.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who keeps no craving in his heart, Panduranga becomes his servant. He stays in the homes of the devoted and does their work without being asked. He is the brother of the helpless; this bond is bound into his very body. Tuka says: through love, you can set God to work for you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the paradox at the heart of devotion: God makes himself the servant of the one who has emptied his heart of desire. To such a person God comes unbidden, living in the house and doing the work before it is even asked. The reason is that being kin to the helpless is woven into his very nature, not an act he chooses. The closing claim is bold and deliberate, that pure love itself gives the devotee a kind of authority over God; the price of that power is wanting nothing for oneself.

GATHA 2078 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the company of the harsh

मराठी मूळ

कर्कशसंगति । दुःख उदंड फजिती ॥1॥
नाहीं इह ना परलोक । मजुर दिसे जैसें रंक ॥ध्रु.॥
वचन सेंटावरी । त्याचें ठेवूनि धिक्कारी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पायीं बेडी । पडिली कपाळीं कु†हाडी ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The company of the harsh brings immense suffering and disgrace. There is neither fulfillment here nor in the world beyond; one looks like a wretched laborer.

They keep one's word on a leash and then dishonor it. Says Tuka, it is as if fetters are on the feet and an axe upon the head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The company of a harsh person brings heaps of suffering and disgrace. There is nothing in it for this world or the next; you look like a wretched hired laborer. They put your word on a leash and then throw it back at you in scorn. Tuka says: it is as if there are fetters on your feet and an axe upon your head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against keeping company with a cruel, abrasive person, naming the cost plainly: endless trouble and humiliation, with no gain here or hereafter. In such company you are reduced to a servant whose own words are held against you and flung back in contempt. He ends with two hard images, feet in fetters and an axe over the head, to show how trapped and endangered such a bond leaves you. The lesson is about the pattern of harsh company, urging the listener to examine whom they tie their life to.

GATHA 2079 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the seed that seems lost

मराठी मूळ

बीज पेरे सेतीं । मग गाडेवरी वाहाती ॥1॥
वांयां गेलें ऐसें दिसे । लाभ त्याचे अंगीं वसे ॥ध्रु.॥
पाल्याची जतन । तरि प्रांतीं येती कण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आळा । उदक देतां लाभे फळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A seed is sown in the field, and then the harvest is carried away in carts. It seems as though the seed was lost, yet the profit dwells within it.

If the crop is tended carefully, grain will come at the harvest. Says Tuka, when you water the plant with care, the fruit is your reward.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The seed is sown in the field, and later the harvest is carried off in carts. It looks as though the seed was thrown away, but the gain is hidden inside it. Tend the leaves with care, and at the end the grain will come. Tuka says: water the bed of the plant, and the fruit is your reward.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the farmer's seed to teach how spiritual effort works. The seed buried in the soil looks lost, just as devotion or sacrifice can look like waste, yet the whole harvest is folded inside that apparent loss. The point of the unspoken frame is patience and tending: water the plant, guard the growing leaves, and the grain arrives in its season. What seems given up is in fact invested, and the fruit comes only to those who keep tending it through the time when nothing shows.

GATHA 2080 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, know the essential thing

मराठी मूळ

जाणावें तें सार । नाहीं तरी दगा फार ॥1॥
डोळे झांकिलिया रवि । नाहीं ऐसा होय जेवीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुथोडए आड । निवारितां लाभें जाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खरें । नेलें हातींचे अंधारें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know what is essential; otherwise, the deception is great. Just as closing your eyes does not make the sun disappear.

Much or little, when you clear the obstruction, the thick gains are revealed. Says Tuka, what was in the hand has been carried off by darkness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know what is essential, or the loss is great. Closing your eyes does not make the sun cease to be. Much or little, when you clear away the obstruction, the gain is large. Tuka says: what was already in your hand has been carried off by the dark.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the listener to grasp the one essential thing, warning that to miss it is a heavy loss. His image is sharp: shutting your eyes does not put out the sun, so refusing to see the truth does not make it go away, it only blinds you to it. Clear away the obstruction, large or small, and great gain is revealed. The last line lands the stakes: through that willful darkness a person can lose even what was already in his hand, the truth that was right there to be seen.

GATHA 2081 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the sunk boat

मराठी मूळ

मुळीं नेणपण । जाला तरी अभिमान ॥1॥
वांयां जावें हें चि खरें । केलें तेणें चि प्रकारें ॥ध्रु.॥
अराणूक नाहीं कधीं। जाली तरि भेदबुद्ध ॥2॥
अंतरली नाव । तुका ह्मणे नाहीं ठाव॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From the very root, there is ignorance; then pride grows from it. To go to waste in this way is the certain outcome.

There has never been any rest; once the sense of separateness takes hold, division follows. Says Tuka, the boat has sunk, and now there is no ground to stand on.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At the very root there is ignorance; from it pride grows. To go to waste in this way is the one sure thing. There is never any rest. Once the sense of separateness takes hold, division follows. Tuka says: the boat has sunk, and now there is no ground to stand on.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces worldly ruin back to its source and names each step. It begins with ignorance, and from ignorance comes pride; that, he says, is the certain way a life is wasted. There is never any rest in it, because once you feel yourself separate, division and conflict follow without end. He closes with the image of a boat that has sunk: the support is gone, and there is no firm ground left to stand on.

GATHA 2082 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the fair of life

मराठी मूळ

संवसारसांते आले हो आइका । तुटीचें ते नका केणें भरुं ॥1॥
लाभाचा हा काळ अवघे विचारा । पारखी ते करा साहए येथें ॥ध्रु.॥
शृंगारिलें दिसे न कळें अंतर । गोविला पदर उगवेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खोटें गुंपतां विसारें । हातिंचिया खरें हातीं घ्यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, all who have come to the fair of worldly life. Do not fill the gaps with worthless goods.

This is the time of profit; use your discernment and be wise. What is displayed looks beautiful, but the inside is unknown; the entangled end cannot be freed.

Says Tuka, when you invest in what is false, hold firmly to what is real in your own hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, all of you who have come to the fair of worldly life. Do not fill your gaps with worthless goods. This is the time for profit; think it all through and be wise here. What is on display looks beautiful, but you cannot see the inside; the tangled end will not come free. Tuka says: when you invest in what is false, hold firmly to what is real in your own hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures human life as a busy fair, a marketplace where you have come to trade. The warning is against bad bargains: do not stuff your lack with worthless goods just because they glitter. He says this is the season for real profit, so use discernment now, while there is time. The goods on display look fine on the outside but you cannot see what is within, and once entangled you cannot get free. The real holding is God, the one true thing to keep gripped in your own hand.

GATHA 2083 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the right path home

मराठी मूळ

सारावीं लिगाडें धरावा सुपंथ । जावें उसंतीत हळूहळू ॥1॥
पुढें जातियाचे उमटले माग । भांबावलें जग आडरानें ॥ध्रु.॥
वेचल्याचा पाहे वरावरि झाडा । बळाचा निधडा पुढिलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जैसी दाखवावी वाणी । ते द्यावी भरोनी शेवट तों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Settle your accounts, choose the right path, and proceed slowly and steadily. The tracks of those who went ahead are visible; the world has lost its way in the wilderness.

Check the balance of what has been spent along the way; be bold on behalf of those who went before. Says Tuka, whatever promise your tongue has spoken, honor it through to the very end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Settle your tangled accounts, take the right road, and go slowly and steadily. The tracks of those who went ahead are clear; the world has lost its way in the wilderness. Check the balance of what you have spent along the road; be firm and strong for the sake of those ahead. Tuka says: whatever your tongue has promised, fill it up and honor it through to the very end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks like a guide on a long journey. First clear away your entanglements, find the right path, and travel it patiently rather than in a rush. The saints who went before have left visible tracks to follow, while the rest of the world strays lost in trackless country. Keep checking your accounts, what you have spent and what remains, and stay strong on behalf of those still on the road. Above all, keep your word: whatever you have vowed, carry it through to the end without falling short.

GATHA 2084 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the dull pretender

मराठी मूळ

बुद्धमंद शिरीं । भार फजिती पदरीं ॥1॥
जाय तेथें अपमान । पावे हाणी थुंकी जन ॥ध्रु.॥
खरियाचा पाड । मागें लावावें लिगाड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करी । वर्म नेणें भरोवरी ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The dull-witted carry a load on their head and disgrace in their lap. Wherever they go, they face insult; people strike them and spit on them.

The value of what is genuine is shown by the worthless thing trailing behind. Says Tuka, the one who does not know the secret keeps trying and failing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The dull-witted carry a load on the head and disgrace in the lap. Wherever such a one goes there is insult; he is struck, and people spit on him. The worth of the genuine is shown by the worthless thing trailing behind it. Tuka says: the one who does not know the secret keeps trying, and keeps failing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the person who labors hard yet stays foolish, weighed down by burdens and bringing shame on himself. Everywhere he goes he meets insult and contempt, because effort without understanding goes nowhere. Genuine worth shows itself plainly, just as a worthless thing dragging behind exposes what it is attached to. The point is turned inward: without knowing the secret, the inner heart of the matter, all the striving in the world only repeats the same failure. Look to whether you actually understand, not just how hard you push.

GATHA 2085 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, slander as great sin

मराठी मूळ

पूर्वजांसी नकान । जाणें तें आइका ॥1॥
निंदा करावी चाहाडी । मनीं धरूनि आवडी ॥ध्रु.॥
मात्रागमना ऐसी।जोडी पातकांची रासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वाट । कुंभपाकाची ते नीट॥
वेडीं तें वेडीं बहुत चि वेडीं । चाखतां गोडी चवी नेणे ॥ध्रु.॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know this: slandering others and carrying tales with relish sends one's ancestors to hell. Such gossip accumulates sins equal to the gravest transgressions.

Says Tuka, that path leads straight to the cauldron of hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know this, and listen: to slander others and carry tales with relish drags one's own ancestors down to hell. Such gossip piles up a heap of sins, as grave as the gravest transgressions. Tuka says: that path leads straight to the boiling cauldron of hell. Fools, fools, utter fools: tasting the sweetness, they cannot tell the flavor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs slander and gleeful tale-bearing as a serious sin, not a small fault. He says relishing the fault-finding heaps up transgression equal to the heaviest sins, and even disgraces one's own forebears. The road of such gossip, he warns, leads straight to the cauldron of hell. The closing line names the strange blindness of it: people taste the pleasure of running others down without ever recognizing what they are really swallowing. The examination is meant to fall on the relish itself, the appetite for finding fault, not on hatred of any particular person.

GATHA 2086 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the self-blind fool

मराठी मूळ

देहा लावी वात । पालव घाली जाली रात ॥1॥
कडिये मूल भोंवतें भोंये । मोकलुनि रडे धाये ॥2॥
लेंकरें वित्त पुसे जगा । माझा गोहो कोण तो सांगा ॥3॥
आपुली शिद्ध जया नाहीं । आणिकांची ते जाणे काई ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे जन । नकान जातां राखे कोण ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fool lights a fire upon his own body and then calls for help when the night falls. The child on the hip looks around while the mother, having set it down, runs about crying.

Like children asking the world, who is my protector? One who has no awareness of oneself, how can that one know anything of another? Says Tuka, when such people are headed to hell, who will save them?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fool sets his own body on fire, then calls for help when night has fallen. The child on her hip, she sets down on the ground, and runs about crying, looking everywhere for it. Like children, people ask the world: tell me, who is my protector? One who has no awareness of himself, how can he know anything of another? Tuka says: when such people are headed to hell, who will save them?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images of people who cause their own trouble and then look outside for rescue. One sets fire to his own body and only cries for help once it is dark; another carries a child on her hip, puts it down, and runs about weeping while searching for it. So people beg the world to tell them who their protector is, never seeing it is near at hand. The root problem is self-ignorance: one who has no awareness of his own self cannot understand anything truly. The remedy is to turn and look within, since no outside savior reaches the one who will not.

GATHA 2087 The Nature of God

Nature of God, you reap what you sow

मराठी मूळ

आवडीचें दान देतो नारायण । बाहे उभारोनि राहिलासे॥1॥
जें जयासी रुचे तें करी समोर । सर्वज्ञ उदार मायबाप ॥ध्रु.॥
ठायीं पडिलिया तें चि लागे खावें । ठायींचे चि घ्यावें विचारूनि ॥2॥
बीज पेरूनियां तें चि घ्यावें फळ । डोरलीस केळ कैंचें लागे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा कांहीं बोल नाहीं । तुझा तूं चि पाहीं शत्रु सखा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana gives each person what they desire; He stands with open arms, waiting. Whatever pleases each one, He places before them; the all-knowing, generous Lord is our Father and Mother.

But whatever you have sown in your own place, that is what you must eat; choose wisely and take only what belongs to you. You sow a seed and harvest that same fruit; a vine cannot bear bananas.

Says Tuka, God is not to blame in this; You are Your own friend and Your own enemy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana gives each one the gift of what they love; He stands with His arms held open. Whatever pleases each person, He sets before them; generous to all, He is mother and father. But whatever is sown in your place is just what you must eat; take only what is yours, and choose with care. You sow a seed and you harvest that same fruit; how can a vine bear bananas? Tuka says: God is in no way to blame. See for yourself, you are your own enemy and your own friend.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds two truths together: God's open-handed giving and the strict justice of cause and effect. Narayana, like a mother and father, stands with open arms and gives each person what they truly desire, holding nothing back. Yet what you harvest is exactly what you sowed; you eat only what grew in your own field, and a vine cannot suddenly yield bananas. So God is not to be blamed for what your life brings; the giving meets the seed you planted. The hard, freeing conclusion: you yourself, by what you choose and sow, are your own enemy or your own friend.

GATHA 2088 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow renunciant

मराठी मूळ

अडचणीचें दार । बाहेर माजी पैस फार ॥1॥
काय करावें तें मौन्य । दाही दिशा हिंडे मन ॥ध्रु.॥
बाहेर दावी वेश । माजी वासनेचे लेश ॥2॥
नाहीं इंद्रियां दमन । काय मांडिला दुकान ॥3॥
सारविलें निकें । वरि माजी अवघें फिकें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अंतीं । कांहीं न लगे चि हातीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The entrance is narrow, but inside, the space is vast. What use is outward silence when the mind wanders in all ten directions? The appearance outside is of a renunciant, but inside lurk the traces of desire.

Without mastery of the senses, what is the point of setting up a shop? The surface is polished clean, but inside everything is hollow. Says Tuka, in the end, nothing remains in hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The doorway is narrow, but inside there is a great deal of room. What use is this outward silence, while the mind wanders in all ten directions? Outside he shows the dress of a renouncer; inside lie the traces of desire. With no mastery over the senses, why has he set up shop? The surface is polished and fine, but inside it is all empty. Tuka says: in the end, nothing comes into the hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the gap between religious appearance and inner reality. A man keeps an outward vow of silence, yet his mind roams in every direction; he wears the robe of a renouncer while desire still lives inside him. Putting on the costume of holiness without conquering the senses is like opening a shop with no real goods to sell. The outside is buffed clean and impressive, but it is hollow within. And what is hollow yields nothing at the end: nothing real comes into the hand. The question to ask is of one's own inside, not the display.

GATHA 2089 The Necessity of Experience

Spiritual experience, only the desireless see Rama

मराठी मूळ

लय लक्षूनियां जालों ह्मणती देव । तो ही नव्हे भाव सत्य जाणा ॥1॥
जालों बहुश्रुत न लगे आतां कांहीं । नको राहूं ते ही निश्चतीनें ॥ध्रु.॥
तपें दान काय मानिसी विश्वास । बीज फळ त्यास आहे पुढें ॥2॥
कर्म आचरण यातीचा स्वगुण । विशेष तो गुण काय तेथें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी होईल निष्काम । तरि च होय राम देखे डोळां ॥4॥ ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who attained absorption and were called divine, know that even this is not the ultimate truth. Those who became greatly learned and say they need nothing more should not rest in that certainty either.

If you place your faith in austerities and charity, know that their fruit still lies ahead. The conduct and qualities that come with one's birth, what is truly special in those? Says Tuka, only if one becomes truly desireless will Rama appear before the eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who fixed on absorption and were called gods: know truly, that is not yet the real state. Those who became greatly learned and say they need nothing more should not rest in that certainty either. Do you put your trust in austerities and charity? Their fruit still lies ahead. Conduct, observance, the qualities that come with your birth: what is so special there? Tuka says: only when one becomes free of desire does Rama at last appear before the eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tests one resting place after another and finds each one short of the goal. Deep meditative absorption, praised as divine, is still not the final truth; wide learning is no place to settle in confidence. Austerities and charity are not nothing, but their reward is still future fruit, not the seeing itself. Even pious conduct and the virtues handed to you by birth carry no special claim. The one condition he keeps for last is the deepest: only the heart truly emptied of desire actually sees Rama. The vision waits not on achievement but on letting go of wanting.

GATHA 2090 Prayers

Prayer, lift me onto Your hip

मराठी मूळ

पुरली धांव कडिये घेई । पुढें पायीं न चलवीं ॥1॥
कृपाळुवे पांडुरंगे । अंगसंगे जिवलगे ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघी निवारावी भूक। अवघ्या दुःख जन्माचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोलवेना । लावीं स्तनां विश्वरें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The running is over; take me upon Your hip, O Panduranga. Do not make me walk any further on my own feet, O merciful, beloved companion.

Satisfy all my hunger, all the suffering of these many births. Says Tuka, I can no longer speak; press me to Your breast, O Mother of the universe.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My running is over; take me up onto Your hip. Do not make me walk any further on my own feet. O merciful Panduranga, joined to me body to body, my dearest one. Take away all my hunger, all the sorrow of these many births. Tuka says: I can speak no more. Hold me to Your breast, O Mother of the universe.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays as a worn-out child to a mother who is also God. He has run as far as he can and asks to be carried, lifted onto the hip, no longer forced to walk on his own feet. He calls Panduranga merciful and beloved, close as body to body, and asks that all hunger and all the suffering gathered across many births be ended at once. At the close his words run out, and the appeal becomes wholly bodily: hold me to Your breast, mother of all the worlds. The whole prayer is a surrender of effort into being held.

GATHA 2091 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name is enough

मराठी मूळ

जें जें मना वाटे गोड । तें तें कोड पुरविसी ॥1॥
आतां तूं चि बाहएात्कारीं । अवघ्यापरी जालासी ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं सायासाचें काम । घेतां नाम आवडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्वसांगे । पांडुरंगे दयाळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever the mind finds sweet, You fulfill that very wish. Now You have become everything externally as well; You have taken every form.

There is no need for effort; just taking Your name with love is enough. Says Tuka, O compassionate Panduranga, You provide everything that is needed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever the mind finds sweet, that very wish You fulfill. Now You have become everything on the outside too; You have taken every form. There is no work, no strain, in it; just take the Name with love. Tuka says: O compassionate Panduranga, You give everything that is needed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a God who answers the heart's desires and then fills the whole world besides. Whatever the mind finds sweet, Panduranga grants, and has come to wear every outward form as well, so the devotee meets Him everywhere. The way to Him asks no hard labor or technique; it is enough to take the Name with love. The closing note is gratitude: the compassionate Lord supplies all that is needed, so the path is one of ease and trust rather than effort.

GATHA 2092 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, worship in everything seen

मराठी मूळ

जेथें माझी दृष्ट जाय । तेथें पाय भावीन ॥1॥
असेन या समाधानें । पूजा मनें करीन ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा च अवघे देसी। सुख घेववसी संपन्न ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बंधन नाहीं । ऐसें कांहीं ते करूं ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever my gaze falls, I will see Your feet there. I will rest in this contentment and worship You with my mind.

You give everything of Yourself; You make us enjoy all abundance. Says Tuka, let us do whatever does not create bondage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever my gaze falls, there I will imagine Your feet. I will stay in this contentment and worship You with my mind. You give all of Yourself; You let us taste full and abundant joy. Tuka says: let us do only what does not make bondage.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns ordinary seeing into worship. Wherever his eyes land, he resolves to picture God's feet there, so that the whole visible world becomes a place of devotion. Settled in that contentment, he offers worship inwardly, with the mind, needing no special setting. He thanks the Lord, who gives Himself fully and lets the devotee taste rich and complete joy. The closing line draws the rule out of it: let us choose only what does not tie us down, the kind of practice and life that frees rather than binds.

GATHA 2093 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Pundalik, heaven on earth

मराठी मूळ

नातुडे जो कवणे परी । उभा केला विटेवरी ॥1॥
भला भला पुंडलिका । मानलासी जनलोकां ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण्या काळें सुखा। ऐशा कोण पावता ॥2॥
अवघा आणिला परिवार । गोपी गोपाळांचा भार ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य जालें । भूमी वैकुंठ आणिलें॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who cannot be attained by any means has been made to stand upon the brick. Praise to Pundalik, who has won the admiration of all people.

At what time or age could anyone have received such happiness? He brought the entire divine entourage: the gopis, the cowherds, all of them. Says Tuka, blessed is this event; Vaikuntha itself has been brought down to earth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one no means can reach has been made to stand upon the brick. Well done, Pundalik; all people honor you. In what age did anyone ever come to such happiness as this? He brought the whole family down, the gopis, the cowherds, the whole crowd of them. Tuka says: blessed is this; he has brought Vaikuntha onto the earth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Pundalik, the devotee whose love drew Vitthal to Pandhari and held him standing on a brick. He marvels that the God no method or austerity can grasp now stands within plain reach. He counts it a happiness no other age received, because the entire heavenly household came down with him: the gopis, the cowherds, all of it. The claim Tukaram lands is that one devotee's love brought Vaikuntha itself onto the earth, so the highest heaven is here, at the brick, not far above.

GATHA 2094 The Saints

Praise of Pundalik, the open treasury

मराठी मूळ

अवघे चुकविले सायास । तप रासी जीवा नास॥1॥
जीव देऊनियां बळी । अवघीं तारिलीं दुर्बळीं । केला भूमंडळीं । माजी थोर पवाडा ॥ध्रु.॥
कांहीं न मगे याची गती । लुटवितो जगा हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तराजा । कोण वर्णी पार तुझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Pundalik spared everyone all efforts, the penances and mortifications that destroy the jiva. By offering his own life in sacrifice, he delivered all the weak and helpless; he performed the greatest deed on this earth.

He asks for nothing in return; he lets the whole world plunder the treasure freely. Says Tuka, O prince of devotees, who can measure your greatness?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He spared everyone all the toil, the heaps of penance that wear the soul to nothing. Offering his own life as the price, he carried across all the weak and helpless. On this whole earth he performed the greatest deed. He asks nothing back; he lets the world plunder the wealth from his hands. Tuka says: O prince of devotees, who can speak the limit of you?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram honors Pundalik for opening a way to God that costs the seeker nothing. The old road was penance and mortification, austerities that grind the soul down; Pundalik spared everyone that toil by paying the price himself. Tukaram pictures him handing out the treasure freely, asking nothing in return, letting the whole world plunder it. The point is that grace is now available without earning, and the saint who made it so is beyond measuring.

GATHA 2095 The Nature of God

God bound to his devotees

मराठी मूळ

प्रमाण हें त्याच्या बोला । देव भक्तांचा अंकिला॥1॥
न पुसतां जातां नये । खालीं बैसतां ही भिये ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा त्याचा होत । जीव भावाही सहित ॥2॥
वदे उपचाराची वाणी । कांहीं माग ह्मणऊनि ॥3॥
उदासीनाच्या लागें । तुका ह्मणे धांवे मागें॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is the proof, from the mouths of devotees: God is bound to His devotees. Without being asked, He cannot leave; even sitting down, He is anxious.

He gives Himself entirely, along with His very life and love. He speaks courteous words, asking: please, tell Me what you desire.

Says Tuka, He runs after those who are truly indifferent to the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here is the proof, in the words of the devotees: God is the servant of his devotees. Without their leave he cannot go; even to sit down he is afraid. He becomes wholly theirs, his very life and love and all. He speaks the words of a servant, saying, ask me for something. Tuka says: he runs after the ones who want nothing from the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states a reversal that the devotees themselves vouch for: God is bound to those who love him, almost their servant. He pictures Vitthal unable to leave without their permission, anxious even to sit, giving himself over completely, and pressing them to name a wish. Then comes the sharp turn: the ones he chases hardest are precisely the ones who ask for nothing, who have grown indifferent to the world. The lesson is that wanting nothing is what draws God most, because then the love is for him and not for what he can give.

GATHA 2096 The Nature of God

God repays the desireless

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं न मागती देवा । त्यांची करूं धांवे सेवा ॥1॥
हळूहळू फेडी ऋण । होऊनियां रूपें दीन ॥ध्रु.॥
होऊं न सके वेगळा । क्षण एक त्यां निराळा ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who ask nothing of God, He rushes to serve them. Slowly and humbly He repays His debt to them, taking on a lowly form.

He cannot bear to be separated from them for even a single moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who ask nothing of God, he runs to serve them. Slowly he pays off his debt, taking on a lowly form. He cannot make himself separate from them, not for a single moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram extends the same reversal: the devotees who demand nothing are the ones God hurries to serve. He imagines God treating their love as a debt he owes, repaying it little by little while taking a humble, lowly form to do it. And he cannot bear to be apart from them even for a moment. The claim is that desirelessness does not push God away; it binds him close, until he becomes the one who serves and will not leave.

GATHA 2097 Faith and Trust

Faith, no need to ask

मराठी मूळ

जाणे अंतरिंचा भाव । तो चि करितो उपाव ॥1॥
न लगें सांगावें मांगावें ॥
जीवें भावें अनुसरावें । अविनाश घ्यावें। फळ धीर धरोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
बाळा न मागतां भोजन । माता घाली पाचारून ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी । एकीं लंघियेले गिरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who knows the inmost desire devises the right remedy. There is no need to ask or beg; simply follow Him with life and jiva.

Hold patience and receive the imperishable fruit. Just as a mother calls her child and feeds it without being asked.

Says Tuka, by such faith alone, some have leaped over mountains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He knows the desire within, and he himself makes the remedy. There is no need to tell him or to beg. Follow him with life and heart, and take the imperishable fruit, holding patience. A mother feeds her child without being asked; she calls it to her. Tuka says: by this, some have leaped over mountains.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counsels a trust that does not need to spell out its requests. God already knows the inmost wish and arranges what is needed, so the work is not asking but following him with one's whole life and waiting patiently for a fruit that does not perish. He gives the homely image of a mother who calls her child and feeds it before it can ask. The promise he lands is that such faith carries people over impossible obstacles, leaping mountains, because the doing is left to God.

GATHA 2098 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the secret given by the saints

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी नाचों तेणें सुखें । वाऊं टाळी गातों मुखें॥1॥
देव कृपेचा कोंवळा । शरणागता पाळी लळा ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मां जाला हा निर्धार । मागें तारिलें अपार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतीं । वर्म दिलें आह्मां हातीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We dance in that joy, clapping our hands and singing with our lips. God is tender with compassion; He nurtures the devotion of those who surrender.

This has become our firm conviction: in the past, He saved countless souls. Says Tuka, the saints have placed the secret directly in our hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We dance in that joy, we clap our hands, we sing with our mouths. God is tender with mercy; he tends the love of those who take refuge. This has become our settled conviction: he has saved countless souls before. Tuka says: the saints have placed the secret in our hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the joy of singing and dancing the Name, and grounds it in confidence rather than mood. God, tender with mercy, nurses the devotion of anyone who surrenders, the way one tends a small child. Their certainty rests on memory: he has rescued countless souls already, so he will not fail now. And the whole secret of this, Tukaram says, was not invented by them but handed to them by the saints, which is why they can dance without doubt.

GATHA 2099 Ecstasy and Joy

Fearlessness, the Name at the throat

मराठी मूळ

जालों निर्भर मानसीं । ह्मणऊनि कळलासी ॥1॥
तुझे ह्मणविती त्यांस । भय चिंता नाहीं आस ॥ध्रु.॥
चुकविसी पाश । गर्भवासयातना ॥2॥
तुझें जाणोनियां वर्म । कंठीं धरियेलें नाम ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेणें सुखें । विसरलों जन्मदुःख ॥4॥ ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind has become utterly fearless, and through that fearlessness, I have come to know You. Those who are called Yours know no fear, no anxiety, no worldly desire.

You free them from the noose of birth, from the torments of the womb. Knowing Your secret, I have held Your name at my throat.

Says Tuka, in that joy, I have forgotten the suffering of birth itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind has become without fear, and so I have come to know you. Those who are called yours have no fear, no worry, no craving. You cut away the snare, the torment of being born in the womb. Knowing your secret, I have held your name at my throat. Tuka says: in that joy, I have forgotten the suffering of birth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram links fearlessness and knowledge: only when the mind let go of fear did it come to know God. He says those reckoned as God's own carry no dread, no anxiety, no craving, because God cuts the noose of rebirth and the agony of the womb. The secret he names is simple: he keeps the Name lodged at his throat, always ready. The result he lands is that the whole pain of being born has been forgotten in the joy of holding that Name.

GATHA 2100 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the pain of slander against God

मराठी मूळ

नको दुष्टसंग । पडे भजनामधीं भंग ॥1॥
काय विचार देखिला । सांग माझा तो विठ्ठला ॥ध्रु.॥
तुज निषेधितां । मज न साहे सर्वथा ॥2॥
एका माझ्या जीवें । वाद करूं कोणासवें॥3॥
तुझे वणूप गुण । कीं हे राखों दुष्टजन ॥4॥
काय करूं एका। मुखें सांग ह्मणे तुका ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not keep the company of the wicked; it brings disruption to devotion. Tell me, O Vitthal, what course of action do You see? I cannot bear it when someone speaks against You.

With my single life, how shall I argue with everyone? Shall I praise Your virtues, or shall I guard against these wicked people? Says Tuka, tell me, what shall I do with this one mouth?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not keep wicked company; it breaks the worship apart. Tell me, O Vitthal, what plan do you see? When someone denies you, I cannot bear it at all. With one life, how can I argue against everyone? Shall I sing your virtues, or shall I keep guarding against these wicked men? Tuka says: tell me, what can I do with one mouth?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings a real grievance to Vitthal: bad company wrecks his devotion, and he cannot stand to hear God denied or insulted. He feels outnumbered, one life and one mouth set against a crowd of mockers, and torn between two tasks. He cannot both praise God's glories and fight off the slanderers at the same time. The prayer asks God himself for a plan, and points the listener inward: notice how the company you keep can break your worship, and how little one person can do alone against it.

GATHA 2101 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the simple road to Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

टाळघोळ सुख नामाचा गजर । घोषें जेजेकार ब्रह्मानंदु॥1॥
गरुडटके दिंडी पताकांचे भार । आनंद अपार ब्रह्मादिकां॥ध्रु.॥
आनंदें वैष्णव जाती लोटांगणीं । एक एकाहुनि भद्रजाति ॥2॥
तेणें सुखें सुटे पाषाणां पाझर । नष्ट खळ नर शुद्ध होती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे सोपें वैकुंठवासी जातां । रामकृष्ण कथा हे ची वाट ॥4॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The bliss of cymbals, the ecstasy of the name chanted aloud, the shouts of triumph in divine joy. With Garuda-pillars, processions, and rows of banners, endless delight comes even to Brahma and the gods.

In ecstasy, the Vaishnavas fall prostrate, each one nobler than the last. In such bliss, even stones begin to melt; the wicked and the cruel become purified.

Says Tuka, the path to Vaikuntha is simple; the sacred story of Rama and Krishna is the way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The joy of cymbals, the loud roar of the Name, the shouts of victory, the bliss of Brahman. Garuda-poles, processions, rows of banners; the joy is endless, even for Brahma and the gods. In joy the Vaishnavas fall flat upon the ground, each one nobler than the last. In that joy even stones break open and weep; wicked, cruel men become pure. Tuka says: going to Vaikuntha is easy; the story of Rama and Krishna is the very road.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the congregational worship, the kirtan, with its cymbals, banners, processions, and the shouted Name, a joy so great even Brahma and the gods share it. He shows the Vaishnavas prostrate in ecstasy and claims its power plainly: in that bliss even stones melt and weep, and hard, cruel men are made pure. The point he lands is that the way to the highest heaven is not difficult or secret. Simply telling and hearing the story of Rama and Krishna is itself the road.

GATHA 2102 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, devotees as warriors over death

मराठी मूळ

भक्तिसुखें जे मातले । ते किळकाळा शूर जाले॥1॥
हातीं बाण हरिनामाचे । वीर गर्जती विठ्ठलाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
महां दोषां आला त्रास । जन्ममरणां केला नाश ॥2॥
सहस्रनामाची आरोळी। एक एकाहूनि बळी ॥3॥
नाहीं आणिकांचा गुमान । ज्याचें अंकित त्यावांचून ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांच्या घरीं । मोक्षसिद्धी या कामारी॥5॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who are intoxicated with the joy of devotion have become heroes who have conquered death itself. With arrows of Hari's name in hand, the warriors of Vitthal roar in triumph.

Great sins have been driven out in terror; birth and death have been destroyed. The battle cry of a thousand names rings out, each devotee mightier than the last.

They heed no other power except the One to whom they belong. Says Tuka, in their homes, liberation and all attainments serve as household servants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those drunk on the joy of devotion have become heroes over death. With arrows of Hari's name in hand, the warriors of Vitthal roar. Great sins fled in terror; birth and death were destroyed. The war-cry of the thousand names goes up, each one mightier than the last. They care for no other power; they are stamped with one alone and no other. Tuka says: in their houses, liberation and all powers wait as serving maids.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts the joyful devotees as soldiers and the Name as their weapon. Intoxicated with bhakti, they become heroes who defeat death itself; the thousand names of God are their war-cry, sins flee, and the cycle of birth and death is broken. They answer to no power but the one God whose mark they bear. The claim he lands is the boldest: liberation, the prize ascetics strain for, and all the great attainments are mere household servants in the devotee's home, because love of the Name already holds everything they could grant.

GATHA 2103 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the neglected vow

मराठी मूळ

पंधरां दिवसां एक एकादशी । कां रे न करिसी व्रतसार ॥1॥
काय तुझा जीव जातो एका दिसें । फराळाच्या मिसें धणी घेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वहित कारण मानवेल जन । हरिकथा पूजन वैष्णवांचें ॥2॥
थोडे तुज घरीं होती उजगरे । देउळासी कां रे मरसी जातां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कां रे सकुमार जालासी । काय जाब देसी यमदूतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every fortnight comes one Ekadashi; why do you not observe this sacred vow? Will your life end from fasting one day? Under the guise of eating light, you fill your belly. For your own good, honor the people, attend the story of Hari, and worship the Vaishnavas.

You stay up late at home for trifles; why do you groan at the thought of walking to the temple? Says Tuka, why have you become so delicate? What answer will you give to the messengers of death?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Once a fortnight comes an Ekadashi; why do you not keep the simple vow? Will your life leave you in one day of fasting? Under cover of a light meal you stuff yourself full. For your own good, honor people, attend the story of Hari, worship the Vaishnavas. You stay up late at home over trifles; why do you act as if walking to the temple will kill you? Tuka says: why have you grown so delicate? What answer will you give the messengers of death?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram scolds the lazy excuses that smother simple devotion. The fast of Ekadashi comes only twice a month and harms no one, yet the listener dodges it and gorges on snacks while pretending to fast. He contrasts the energy spent staying up late on trifles with the groaning reluctance to walk to the temple or sit through the story of Hari. The harsh question at the end points at self-examination, not contempt: you indulge yourself now, but when the messengers of death come, what will you have to show them?

GATHA 2104 The Power of the Name

The Name lifts the lowborn high

मराठी मूळ

कथा हें भूषण जनामध्यें सार । तरले अपार बहुत येणें ॥1॥
नीचिये कुळींचा उंचा वंद्य होय । हरीचे जो गाय गुणवाद ॥ध्रु.॥
देव त्याची माथां वंदी पायधुळी । दीप झाला कुळीं वंशाचिये ॥2॥
त्याची निंदा करी त्याची कुष्ठ वाणी । मुख संवदणी रजकाची ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं चोरीचा व्यापार । विठ्ठलाचें सार नाम ध्यावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sacred story is the finest ornament among people, the essence of all things; countless souls have been saved by it. Even one born in a lowly family becomes honored and revered if he sings the glories of Hari.

God Himself bows to the dust of such a devotee's feet; that soul becomes a lamp in the family lineage. But the tongue that slanders such a one becomes leprous; its mouth is like a washerman's rag.

Says Tuka, there is no hidden dealing here; the name of Vitthal is the true essence. Take it openly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sacred story is the ornament among people, the essence; countless souls have crossed over by it. One born in a low family becomes high and worthy of honor if he sings the praise of Hari. God himself bows to the dust of his feet; he becomes a lamp to his whole line. The tongue that slanders such a one turns leprous; its mouth is a washerman's rag. Tuka says: there is no hidden dealing here; meditate on the name of Vitthal, the essence.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that singing God's story is the truest distinction among people, and that it overturns the order of birth. A person born low becomes high and honored, even revered, simply by praising Hari, until God himself bows to the dust of his feet and the devotee becomes a lamp for his whole lineage. Against this he sets a warning: the tongue that slanders such a devotee rots like leprosy, foul as a washerman's rag. The closing turn aims it at honesty: there is nothing secret or stolen about this path, so take up the Name of Vitthal openly and dwell on it.

GATHA 2105 Worldly Metaphors

Counsel, measure your strength first

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं पाइतन भूपतीशीं दावा । धिग त्या कर्तव्या आगी लागो ॥1॥
मुंगियांच्या मुखा गजाचा आहार । न साहावे भार जाय जीवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आधीं करावा विचार । शूरपणें तीर मोकलावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not challenge a king without having earned that right; may fire consume such reckless ambition. An ant cannot take the food of an elephant; the weight of it would cost its life.

Says Tuka, first deliberate carefully, and only then release the arrow with true aim.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not pick a fight with a king before you have earned the right. Curse that kind of reckless deed; let fire take it. An ant cannot eat the food of an elephant. The weight of it would cost the ant its life. Tuka says: think first, and only then, with courage, let the arrow fly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning against action that outruns one's strength. He uses two pictures: an ant cannot swallow an elephant's portion, and a small person should not challenge a king without first earning the standing for it; to try is to invite ruin. The point is not cowardice but order: deliberate, weigh what you can actually carry, and then act. When you do act, act with full courage, like an archer who has taken aim before releasing the arrow. Recklessness and timidity are both refused; what he praises is thought before the shot.

GATHA 2106 Devotion to Vitthal

Pandhari, the free bazaar of love

मराठी मूळ

तिन्ही लोक ऋणें बांधिले जयानें । सर्वसिद्ध केणें तये घरीं ॥1॥
पंढरीचोहोटां घातला दुकान । मांडियेले वान आवडीचे ॥ध्रु.॥
आषाढी कातिनकी भरियेले हाट । इनाम हे पेंठ घेतां देतां ॥2॥
मुक्ति कोणी तेथें हातीं नेघे फुका । लुटितील सुखा प्रेमाचिया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे संतसज्जन भाग्याचें । अनंतां जन्मींचे सांटेकरी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The One who has bound all three worlds in His debt, in whose household every fulfillment resides, has opened a shop at the crossroads of Pandhari, displaying wares of every desire. At the great fairs of Ashadhi and Kartiki, the marketplace overflows; it is a free bazaar of giving and receiving.

No one there picks up liberation even for free; instead, they plunder the joy of divine love. Says Tuka, the saints and the virtuous are fortune's own; they have been gathering this treasure across countless births.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has bound all three worlds in his debt. Every fulfillment lives in his house. At the crossroads of Pandhari he has opened a shop and laid out the wares everyone desires. At the great fairs of Ashadhi and Kartiki the market overflows; here giving and taking are free. No one there reaches for liberation, even when it costs nothing. They plunder the joy of love instead. Tuka says: the saints and the good are fortune's own; across countless births they have been gathering at this market.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures Vitthal's Pandhari as a marketplace where the usual prices are reversed. God owns everything and owes nothing, yet he sets up a free shop and stocks it with whatever any heart could want. At the great pilgrim fairs the stalls overflow, and the goods are given away. The radical claim is in what the crowd does: offered liberation for nothing, no one bothers to pick it up, because they would rather seize the joy of love, which they rate higher than release itself. The saints are the lucky traders who have been coming to this fair lifetime after lifetime.

GATHA 2107 Devotion to Vitthal

Pandhari, the generous king beckons

मराठी मूळ

दुःखाचिये साटीं तेथें मिळे सुख । अनाथाची भूक दैन्य जाय ॥1॥
उदाराचा राणा पंढरीस आहे । उभारोनि बाहे पालवितो ॥1॥
जाणतियाहूनि नेणत्याची गोडी । अिंळगी आवडी करूनियां ॥2॥
शीण घेऊनियां प्रेम देतो साटी । न विचारी तुटी लाभा कांहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे असों अनाथ दुबळीं । आह्मांसी तो पाळी पांडुरंग ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where one brings sorrow, there one finds joy in return. The hunger and wretchedness of the destitute vanish there.

The king of the generous dwells in Pandhari, arms raised high, beckoning all. He loves the innocence of the unknowing even more than the wisdom of the learned; He embraces them with special affection.

He takes on suffering and gives love in exchange, never counting the cost or the gain. Says Tuka, let us be poor and helpless; Panduranga will sustain us all the same.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bring your sorrow there, and there you receive joy in exchange. The hunger and misery of the helpless are gone. The king of the generous lives in Pandhari, arms raised high, waving everyone in. He loves the simple one who does not know more than the one who knows. He embraces them out of pure fondness. He takes your weariness and gives love in its place; he never counts the loss or the gain. Tuka says: let us be poor and helpless. Panduranga will look after us all the same.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the relation with God into a trade where the destitute come out ahead. You bring sorrow and weariness; what you carry away is joy and love. The generous king of Pandhari does not stand aloof but stands with his arms up, beckoning, and he favors the unknowing over the learned, embracing them out of plain affection. He keeps no ledger of profit and loss in this exchange. So Tukaram is glad to claim poverty and helplessness as his own condition: it is exactly the helpless that Panduranga sustains.

GATHA 2108 Devotion to Vitthal

Single love, only your name

मराठी मूळ

आणिक मात माझ्या नावडे जीवासी । काय करूं यासी पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
मुखा तें चि गोड श्रवणां आवडी । चित्त माझें ओढी तुझे पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जये पदीं नाहीं विठ्ठलाचें नाम । मज होती श्रम आइकतां ॥2॥
आणिकाचें मज म्हणवितां लाज । वाटे हें सहज न बोलावें ॥3॥
तुका म्हणे मज तूं च आवडसी । सर्वभावेंविसीं पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No other word pleases my jiva, O Panduranga. Only this is sweet to my lips, only this do my ears delight in; my chitta is drawn only to Your feet.

Any verse that does not contain Vitthal's name wearies me to hear. I feel ashamed to be called a devotee of anyone else; it does not feel natural to even speak of it.

Says Tuka, You alone delight me in every way, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No other word pleases my jiva, O Panduranga. What am I to do about this? Only this is sweet on my lips; only this my ears want to hear; my chitta is pulled toward your feet. Any verse without Vitthal's name wearies me to hear. I feel ashamed to be called anyone else's; it does not feel natural even to say it. Tuka says: you alone delight me, in every way, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a love that has narrowed to one object until everything else falls away. His mouth, his ears, and his mind all want the same thing: Vitthal's name and Vitthal's feet, and no other speech tastes good to him. The claim sharpens into exclusion: a verse without that name tires him, and being named as anyone else's devotee feels shameful and unnatural. He is not boasting of discipline but confessing a pull he cannot help. In every way, the one delight is Panduranga and no other.

GATHA 2109 Devotion to Vitthal

Singing freely, God is simple

मराठी मूळ

कळेल हें तैसें गाईन मी तुज । जनासवें काज काय माझें ॥1॥
करीन मी स्तुती आपुले आवडी । जैसी माझ्या गोडी वाटे जीवा ॥ध्रु.॥
होऊनी निर्भर नाचेन मी छंदें । आपुल्या आनंदें करूनियां ॥2॥
काय करूं कळा युक्ती या कुसरी । जाणिवेच्या परी सकिळका ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें जयासवें काज । भोळा तो सहज पांडुरंग ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will sing of You as best I can; what business do I have with the opinion of the world? I will offer praise according to my own love, as sweetness fills my jiva. I will become carefree and dance to my own rhythm, rejoicing in my own bliss.

What use are cleverness, strategy, or skill? All such knowing has its limits. Says Tuka, my dealings are with the One who is simple and straightforward: Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will sing of you as well as I can. What business do I have with what people think? I will praise you the way my own love wants, however the sweetness rises in my jiva. I will let go of all care and dance to my own rhythm, glad in my own joy. What use are cleverness, tricks, and skill? All such knowing has its limits. Tuka says: the one I deal with is simple and plain, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defends a worship that owes nothing to performance or to the audience. He will sing as best he can, by his own love and his own joy, and the world's opinion is none of his concern. He throws away cleverness, strategy, and technical skill, because all knowing runs into a wall, while love does not. The reason he can be this artless is the nature of the one he serves: Panduranga is bhola, simple and straightforward, so plain devotion is the right coin and clever display is wasted on him.

GATHA 2110 The Nature of God

God loves the simple-hearted

मराठी मूळ

तयासी नेणतीं बहु आवडती । होय जयां चित्तीं एक भाव ॥1॥
उपमन्यु धुरु हें काय जाणती । प्रल्हादाच्या चित्तीं नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
कोळें भिल्लें पशु श्वापदें अपारें । कृपेच्या सागरें तारियेलीं ॥2॥
काय तें गोपाळें चांगलीं शाहाणीं । तयां चक्रपाणी जेवी सवें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भोळा भाविक हा देव । आह्मी त्याचे पाव धरूनी ठेलों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He greatly loves the innocent; single-pointed devotion delights Him most. What did Upamanya or Dhruva really know? Narayana dwelt in Prahlada's simple heart.

Tribals, hunters, animals, and creatures beyond count have been saved by that ocean of mercy. Were the cowherds wise or learned? Yet Krishna ate with them as an equal.

Says Tuka, this God is innocent and devoted; we have grasped His feet and will not let go.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He loves the unknowing very much; one whose heart holds a single faith delights him. What did Upamanya or Dhruva really know? Yet Narayana lived in Prahlada's simple heart. Tribals, hunters, animals, and countless wild creatures were carried across by that ocean of mercy. Were the cowherds clever or learned? Yet Krishna ate beside them as one of them. Tuka says: this God is simple and full of faith. We have taken hold of his feet and will not let go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the assumption that God is won by knowledge by listing those he actually saved. Child devotees, forest hunters, and animals beyond counting were ferried across by mercy alone; the cowherds were neither scholars nor sages, yet Krishna sat and ate among them as an equal. What these have in common is not learning but single, simple faith, the one thing that delights Narayana most. The radical point is that God himself is bhola, drawn to the unsophisticated heart. So Tukaram stakes everything on that: he grips the feet and refuses to be pried loose.

GATHA 2111 The Power of the Name

The Name, no grammar required

मराठी मूळ

न लगे पाहावें अबद्ध वांकडें । उच्चारावें कोडें नाम तुझें ॥1॥
नाहीं वेळ नाहीं पंडितांचा धाक । होत कां वाचक वेदवक्ते ॥ध्रु.॥
पुराणीं ही कोठें न मिळे पाहातां । तैशीं या अनंता ठेवूं नामें ॥2॥
आपुलिया मना उपजे आनंद । तैसे करूं छंद कथेकाळीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी आनंदें चि धालों । आनंद चि ल्यालों अळंकार ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no need to worry about grammar or correctness; just utter Your name with delight. There is no fixed time, no fear of the pandits.

Need one be a scholar or a master of the Vedas? Even in the Puranas, one cannot find all that is there to find; so let us give You whatever names our minds desire, O Infinite One. Let the mind give rise to its own joy; let us make our own music at the time of the sacred story.

Says Tuka, we are filled with bliss alone; we wear bliss itself as our ornament.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no need to fret over wrong grammar or a crooked phrase. Just say your name with delight. There is no set time, and no need to fear the pandits. Must one be a reciter, a master of the Vedas? Even searching the Puranas, you cannot find all there is to find; so let us give you, O Infinite One, whatever names our minds choose. Let joy rise in our own minds; let us make our own music while we tell your story. Tuka says: we are filled with bliss alone; we wear bliss itself as our ornament.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram clears away every gatekeeper that stands between an ordinary person and the Name. Correct grammar, the prescribed hour, the approval of scholars, mastery of the Vedas: none of it is required to call on God. Since not even the Puranas exhaust who the Infinite is, no fixed vocabulary can fence him in, so any name the heart offers is allowed. What matters is the joy that rises and the song the devotee makes in telling God's story. The closing image makes the whole claim: bliss is not a reward earned by qualification but the very ornament the singer already wears.

GATHA 2112 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, God stored within

मराठी मूळ

दैन्य दुःख आह्मां न येती जवळी । दहन हे होळी होती दोष ॥1॥
सर्व सुखें येती मानें लोटांगणीं । कोण यांसी आणी दृष्टीपुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
आमुची आवडी संतसमागम । आणीक त्या नाम विठोबाचें ॥2॥
आमचें मागणें मागों त्याची सेवा । मोक्षाची निद।वा कोणा चाड ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे पोटीं सांटविला देव । नुन्य तो भाव कोण आह्मां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Poverty and sorrow cannot come near us; our sins are burned in a bonfire. All joys come bowing before us; who brings these things before our eyes? Our delight is the company of the saints and, beyond that, the name of Vithoba.

Our only request is to serve Him; who cares for the stale fare of liberation? Says Tuka, we have stored God within our chitta; what devotion could we possibly lack?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Poverty and sorrow cannot come near us; our faults are burned up in a bonfire. All joys come bowing low before us. Who can even hold these things up in front of our eyes? Our delight is the company of the saints, and beyond that, the name of Vithoba. All we ask is to serve him; who wants the stale leftover of liberation? Tuka says: we have stored God inside the chitta. What devotion could we still be lacking?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the security of one who already holds the highest good. With God kept within the heart, poverty and grief cannot approach, and faults are burned away as in a fire; ordinary pleasures are so far beneath him that they bow rather than tempt. His two joys are the company of the saints and the name of Vithoba, and his single request is simply to serve. The sharp line is his dismissal of liberation as stale leftover fare: release is no prize to one who has the living God within and wants nothing more than to keep loving him.

GATHA 2113 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false holy man

मराठी मूळ

काळतोंडा सुना । भलतें चोरुनि करी जना ॥1॥
धिग त्याचें साधुपण । विटाळुनि वर्ते मन ॥ध्रु.॥
मंत्र ऐसे घोकी । वश व्हावें जेणें लोकीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे थीत । नागवला नव्हे हित॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The dark-faced wretch secretly does whatever mischief he pleases. Cursed be his saintliness; his mind acts from corruption.

He memorizes mantras only to gain power over people. Says Tuka, such a one has been stripped bare, and there is no good in him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The dark-faced wretch does whatever he likes in secret, behind people's backs. Curse his holiness; his mind moves in defilement. He drones his mantras only so he can gain power over people. Tuka says: in truth such a one has been stripped bare. There is no good left in him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes a piety that is a front for control. The man keeps a saintly surface in public while doing as he pleases in secret, so the holiness is a curse rather than a virtue; his inner mind is defiled even as his outer act is clean. The giveaway is the motive behind his recited mantras: he uses them to bind and dominate others, not to seek God. The warning points at the pattern, not at one named man: religious technique aimed at power over people leaves a person inwardly empty, robbed of the very good it pretends to.

GATHA 2114 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, refusing the scorners

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठल मुक्तिदाता । नव्हे मरो हें बोलता ॥1॥
मज न साहावें कानीं । विष उत्तर लागे मनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
हरीकथेतें धीकारी । शत्रु माझा तो वैरी ॥2॥
सुना काळतोंडा । जो या देवा ह्मणे धोंडा॥3॥
अहं ह्मणे ब्रह्म । नेणे भक्तीचें तें वर्म ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे क्षण। नको तयाचें दर्षण ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal is the giver of liberation. Whoever denies this, let that speaker perish.

I cannot bear to hear such poisonous words; they wound my mind. One who scorns the story of Hari is my enemy and foe.

Dark-mouthed and wretched is the one who calls this God a mere stone. The one who says I am Brahman, yet does not know the secret of devotion.

Says Tuka, I do not wish even a moment's sight of such a person.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal is the giver of liberation. Whoever says otherwise, let that speaker perish. I cannot bear such words in my ears; the poison of them sticks in my mind. One who scorns the story of Hari is my enemy and my foe. Dark-mouthed and wretched is the one who calls this God a mere stone. So too the one who says I am Brahman yet does not know the secret of devotion. Tuka says: not even for a moment do I want the sight of such a person.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a hard line around what he will and will not tolerate near him. For him Vitthal is the giver of release, and to deny it, to mock the telling of Hari's story, or to dismiss the temple image as just a stone is a poison he cannot stand to hear. He names a particular target: the one who proclaims I am Brahman while remaining blind to the secret of bhakti, mistaking a slogan of identity for the real thing. The harshness is aimed at the contempt itself, the stance that scorns devotion. From such company Tukaram wants distance, not even a moment's sight of it.

GATHA 2115 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the easy path to ruin

मराठी मूळ

यमपुरी त्यांणीं वसविली जाणा । उच्छेद भजना विधी केला ॥1॥
अवघड कोणी न करी सांगतां । सुलभ बहुतां गोड वाटे ॥ध्रु.॥
काय ते नेणते होते मागें ऋषी । आधार लोकांसी ग्रंथ केले ॥2॥
द्रव्य दारा कोणें स्थापियेलें धन । पिंडाचें पाळण विषयभोग ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे दोहीं ठायीं हा फजित । पावे यमदूतजना हातीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Know this: those who have destroyed the practice of worship have populated the realm of Yama. No one does what is difficult when told; the easy path seems sweet to many.

Were the ancient sages ignorant? They made the scriptures as a support for the people. Who established the pursuit of wealth and pleasures, the feeding of the body with sense-enjoyments? Says Tuka, such a person is disgraced in both worlds and falls into the hands of Yama's servants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Know this: those who tore down the practice of worship have peopled the city of Yama. No one does the hard thing when told to; the easy way tastes sweet to the many. Were the sages of old ignorant? They made the scriptures as a support for people. Who set up the chase after wealth and women, the feeding of the body with sense-pleasures? Tuka says: such a person is disgraced in both worlds and falls into the hands of Yama's messengers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks those who pull down devotion in favor of an easy, self-serving life. Abandoning worship is not freedom but the road that fills Yama's city, since the soft path always tastes sweeter and the crowd takes it. He appeals to the ancient sages, who were not fools: they left the scriptures precisely as a support for ordinary people. Against that, the life built only on money, lust, and feeding the senses has no real founder and no real ground. The point is put as a pattern to examine in oneself: choose the sweet, undisciplined road and you are shamed here and seized hereafter.

GATHA 2116

The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, knowing transgression

मराठी मूळ

न कळतां कोणीं मोडियेलें व्रत । तया प्रायिश्चत्त चाले कांहीं ॥1॥
जाणतियां वज्रलेप जाले थोर । तयांस अघोर कुंभपाक ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां जरी कोणी नाइके सांगतां । तया शिकवितां तें चि पाप ॥2॥
काय करूं मज देवें बोलविलें । माझें खोळंबिलें काय होतें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जना पाहा विचारूनी । सुख वाटे मनीं तें चि करा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If someone breaks a vow unknowingly, some form of expiation is still possible. But for those who transgress knowingly, the sin is sealed like an iron brand; the severest hells await them.

If someone will not listen even when told, then teaching them only adds to the sin. What can I do? God has moved me to speak; nothing of mine was at stake.

Says Tuka, O people, consider carefully; do whatever brings peace to your mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If someone breaks a vow without knowing, some expiation can still be made. But for those who break it knowingly, the fault is sealed like an iron coating, and the worst hells, the boiling cauldron, wait for them. And if a person will not listen when told, then to keep instructing them only adds to the sin. What can I do? God set me to speak. Nothing of mine was at stake. Tuka says: O people, look at this carefully, and do only what brings true peace to your mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the difference between breaking a sacred duty by ignorance and breaking it with open eyes. The first can be repaired; the second hardens like an iron seal and draws the severest hells. He adds a sober note about teaching: once a person refuses to hear, going on instructing them only multiplies the wrong, so the speaker must know when to stop. He clears himself of any private motive, saying God moved him to speak and he gains nothing from it. The closing is an appeal to honest self-examination: weigh it for yourself, and do what genuinely settles the mind rather than what merely flatters it.

GATHA 2117 The Power of the Name

Social criticism, the nameless life

मराठी मूळ

वाचे विठ्ठल नाहीं । तो चि प्रेतरूप पाहीं ॥1॥
धिग त्याचें ज्यालेपण । भार न साहे मेदिन ॥ध्रु.॥
न बैसे कीर्तनीं । गुण नाइके जो कानीं ॥2॥
जातां कांटाळे देउळा । तो चि सुना मुखकाळा ॥3॥
हरिभक्तीविण । त्याचें जळो शाहाणपण ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तेणें । वंशा आणियेलें उणें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who does not have Vitthal's name on the tongue is a walking corpse. Cursed be such a life; the very earth cannot bear its weight.

One who will not sit in the kirtan, who will not hear God's praise with the ears. One who feels aversion at the sight of the temple is dark-faced and wretched.

Without devotion to Hari, let all his cleverness burn. Says Tuka, such a person has brought disgrace upon the entire lineage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who does not have Vitthal on the tongue is a walking corpse; look, that is what he is. Cursed be such a life. The very earth cannot bear its weight. He will not sit in the kirtan. He will not hear God's praise with his ears. He feels disgust at the sight of the temple; that one is empty, his face is black with shame. Without devotion to Hari, let his cleverness burn. Tuka says: such a person has brought disgrace upon his whole line.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures a life by one thing only: whether the Name lives on the tongue. A person who never speaks Vitthal, never sits in the kirtan, never bears to hear God praised, and turns away from the temple, he calls a corpse already, a weight the earth should not have to carry. The harshness is aimed at the pattern, not at insulting a man; he is naming what a life empties to when it has no devotion in it. Such cleverness, he says, deserves to be burned, because it serves nothing. The closing line widens the loss: a life lived without the Name does not disgrace the man alone but the whole line he came from.

GATHA 2118 The Power of the Name

The Name, why God takes form

मराठी मूळ

तारिलीं बहुतें चुकवूनि घात । नाम हें अमृत स्वीकारितां॥1॥
नेणतां सायास शुद्ध आचरण । यातीकुळहीन नामासाटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्म नांव धरी भक्तीच्या पाळणा । आकार कारणा या च साटीं ॥2॥
असुरीं दाटली पाप होतां फार । मग फेडी भार पृथिवीचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देव भक्तपण सार । कवतुक- वेव्हार तयासाटीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The name has saved many, steering them away from ruin. Without any deliberate effort, without purity of conduct, regardless of caste or lineage, the name alone is the cause.

God takes birth in the cradle of devotion; He assumes form solely for this purpose. When sins grow heavy and demons oppress the earth, He comes to relieve the world of its burden.

Says Tuka, God holds devotion as the highest truth; all His play and dealings exist for its sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Name has saved many, steering them clear of ruin, when they took it in like nectar. No hard effort, no spotless conduct, no high caste or lineage: the Name alone does it. God takes birth in the cradle of devotion; He puts on a form only for this. When sin grows heavy and demons crowd the earth, He comes and lifts its burden away. Tuka says: God holds devotion as the one essential thing; all His play and dealing are for the sake of that.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the Name above every qualification a person might bring. It saves without effort, without ritual purity, without rank or birth; the Name itself is the whole cause. Then he answers the deeper question of why God bothers to take a human form at all: He is born in the cradle of devotion, and form is something He puts on only for the devotee's sake. When the earth groans under sin, that same coming lifts the load. The claim landed is large: even God's descents and dealings exist for devotion, which makes the lowest devotee, with nothing but the Name, the very reason God acts.

GATHA 2119 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the burden laid on God

मराठी मूळ

याचिया आधारें राहिलों र्निंश्चत । ठेवूनियां चित्त पायीं सुखें ॥1॥
माझें सुखदुःख जाणे हित फार । घातलासे भार पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपेचीं पोसणीं ठायींचीं अंखिलीं । ह्मणऊनि लागली यास चिंता ॥2॥
मन राखे हातीं घेऊनियां काठी । इंिद्रयें तापटीं फांकों नेदी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे यासी अवघड नाहीं । शरणागता कांहीं रक्षावया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Relying on Him, I remain at peace, my mind happily placed at His feet. He knows my joys and sorrows and cares deeply for my good; I have placed my burden on Panduranga.

He has nourished me with compassion from the very beginning, and so this concern for me is His own. He holds my mind in check with a staff in hand, not allowing the restless senses to stray.

Says Tuka, nothing is difficult for Him when it comes to protecting those who have surrendered.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Resting on Him, I stay free of worry, my mind set happily at His feet. He knows my joy and my sorrow, and cares greatly for my good. I have laid my whole burden on Panduranga. I am one He has fed with His grace from the start, His own to keep; so the worrying over me is His, not mine. He holds my mind in check with a staff in His hand, and will not let the hot, restless senses scatter. Tuka says: nothing is hard for Him when it comes to guarding the one who has surrendered.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is surrender stated as a transfer of responsibility. Because Tukaram has placed his whole burden on Panduranga, the anxiety that would normally be his becomes God's; the one who is fed by grace from the beginning is God's charge to keep. He pictures God as a herdsman with a staff, keeping the restless senses from straying and holding the mind in place, work the devotee no longer has to do himself. The point is not passivity but trust: the protecting is God's task. The closing line carries the weight of the poem: guarding one who has truly surrendered is, for God, nothing difficult at all.

GATHA 2120 The Power of the Name

The Name, instant cure

मराठी मूळ

उभाउभी फळ । अंगीं मंत्राचे या बळ ॥1॥
ह्मणा विठ्ठल विठ्ठल । गोड आणि स्वल्प बोल ॥ध्रु.॥
किळकाळाची बाधा । नव्हे उच्चारितां सदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रोग । वारे भवाऐसा भोग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Instant is the fruit, such is the power of this mantra. Say Vitthal, Vitthal; the words are sweet and simple.

The affliction of death and time cannot touch one who utters them always. Says Tuka, the disease of worldly existence itself is cured by this name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fruit comes at once; such is the power in this mantra. Say Vitthal, Vitthal: the words are sweet, and only a few. The harm of death and time cannot touch you while you keep saying them. Tuka says: this is the disease whose cure heals the whole sickness of worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the Name as a remedy that asks almost nothing and gives at once. Two sweet, simple words, Vitthal, Vitthal, hold the force of a mantra, and the fruit is immediate rather than delayed to some later life. While the Name is on the lips, death and time, the powers that wear everything down, lose their grip. The claim he lands is the largest one: the very disease of worldly existence, the round of birth and suffering, is what this Name cures. So the smallest practice answers the biggest sickness.

GATHA 2121 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no need to boast

मराठी मूळ

जैसा अधिकार । तैसें बोलावें उत्तर ॥1॥
काय वाउगी घसघस । आह्मी विठोबाचे दास ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी जाणों एका देवा । जैसी तैसी करूं सेवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें । माझें पुढें पडेल ठावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should speak according to one's capacity and standing. Why the pointless bluster? We are servants of Vithoba.

We know only one God and serve Him however we can. Says Tuka, the truth of my devotion will become clear in what lies ahead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Speak your answer according to your standing, no more than that. Why all this pointless noise? We are servants of Vithoba. We know one God, and we serve Him as best we can, just as we are. Tuka says: through love, what is mine will show itself plainly in time.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers people who measure worth by clever talk and loud claims. He says a person should speak to the size of his actual standing and drop the empty bluster. His own standing he names simply: a servant of Vithoba who knows one God and serves Him however he is able. There is no boast in it and no apology either. The last line carries the trust underneath: he does not need to argue his case, because devotion proves itself, and what is truly his will become clear in what comes.

GATHA 2122 Autobiography

Autobiography, harassed for nothing

मराठी मूळ

नव जातां घरा । आह्मी कोणाच्या दातारा ॥1॥
कां हे छळूं येती लोक । दाट बळें चि कंटक ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं आह्मी खात। कांहीं कोणाचें लागत ॥2॥
कळे तैसी सेवा । तुका ह्मणे करुं देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We do not go to anyone's door, O Generous Lord. Then why do these thorny people come to harass us? We do not eat or touch anything that belongs to anyone.

Says Tuka, we serve God as best we understand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We go to no one's door, O Generous Lord. So why do these people come to torment us, thorns pressing in with all their force? We eat nothing of anyone's; we take nothing that is theirs. Tuka says: we serve God as well as we know how.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays a complaint directly before God and states the injustice plainly. He keeps to himself, begging at no one's door and living off no one's food or goods, yet people crowd in like thorns to harass him. The poem names the puzzle without softening it: he has given them no cause. His only doing is to serve God as best he understands. By saying this to the Generous Lord rather than striking back at his tormentors, he turns persecution into a matter laid before God, trusting that the one who sees his harmlessness is the one to answer it.

GATHA 2123 Autobiography

Autobiography, fault-finding pandits

मराठी मूळ

मोहरोनी चित्ता । आणूं हळूं चि वरि हिता ॥1॥
तों हे पडती आघात । खोडी काढिती पंडित ॥ध्रु.॥
संवसारा भेणें । कांहीं उसंती तों पेणें ॥2॥
एखादिया भावें । तुका ह्मणे जवळी यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Slowly winning the mind's trust, I try to draw it toward what is good. But then obstacles arise; the pandits find fault and attack.

Afraid of worldly life, I seek even a brief refuge and shelter. Says Tuka, by some means or another, one must come near to God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Turning the mind toward me, I try slowly to draw it up toward what is good. But then the blows fall; the pandits hunt out faults and attack. Afraid of worldly life, I look for even a little rest, a place to halt. Tuka says: by some feeling or other, one must come close to God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the patient inner work of devotion and the opposition it meets from the learned. Gently, a little at a time, he tries to coax the mind toward its own good, but the pandits seize on every fault and strike at the effort. He is not fighting them; he is afraid of worldly life and only wants a small place to rest, a shelter on the road. The poem ends with the simple counsel that survives all the fault-finding: by whatever feeling a person can manage, the one thing needful is to come near to God. Scholarship can attack the method; it cannot replace the nearness.

GATHA 2124 Confession and Sin

Confession, the unlearned devotee

मराठी मूळ

काय जाणों वेद । आह्मी आगमाचे भेद ॥1॥
एक रूप तुझें मनीं । धरूनि राहिलों चिंतनी ॥ध्रु.॥
कोठें अधिकार । नाहीं रानट विचार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दीना । नुपेक्षावें नारायणा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What do I know of the Vedas? I am ignorant of scriptural subtleties. I simply hold Your one form in my mind and remain absorbed in contemplation.

I have no authority or standing; I am a simple rustic with no sophistication. Says Tuka, O Narayana, do not neglect the poor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What do I know of the Vedas? I do not know the secrets of the scriptures. I have held one form of Yours in my mind and stayed there, dwelling on it. I have no authority, no standing; my thinking is rough and untaught. Tuka says: O Narayana, do not overlook this poor one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers his lack of learning openly rather than hiding it. He cannot read the Vedas or untie the knots of scripture, and he does not pretend otherwise. In place of all that, he has one thing: a single form of God held steadily in the mind. He admits he has no authorized standing and calls his own understanding rustic and rough. The plea he lands on turns weakness into a claim: precisely because he is poor and unlettered, with nothing but love for one form, he asks Narayana not to pass him by. The Name and the held image are offered as enough where learning is absent.

GATHA 2125 Autobiography

Autobiography, the calling to fight

मराठी मूळ

धर्माचे पाळण । करणें पाषांड खंडण ॥1॥
हें चि आह्मां करणें काम । बीज वाढवावें नाम ॥ध्रु.॥
तीक्षण उत्तरें । हातीं घेउनि बाण फिरें ॥2॥
नाहीं भीड भार । तुका ह्मणे साना थोर॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To protect dharma and to destroy hypocrisy: this is our appointed task. The work given to us is to nurture and spread the name.

Sharp words are the arrows we take in hand. Says Tuka, we show no deference to rank, whether small or great.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To guard dharma and to break down hypocrisy: this is our work. This is the task given to us, to make the seed of the Name grow. Sharp words are the arrows; I take them in hand and go about. Tuka says: I show no deference, fear no one's weight, small or great.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states his calling as a kind of warfare with words. The double charge is plain: protect true religion and tear down false show, and spread the Name like a seed made to grow. His weapons are not violence but sharp speech, arrows he carries openly into the fight. He refuses the usual restraint that lets rank or reputation buy silence; he will not flatter the great or spare the powerful when they are hollow. The harshness is pointed at hypocrisy itself, not at persons for their own sake, and the whole aim of the fighting is the same single thing: to let the Name take root and grow.

GATHA 2126 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, no harvest without care

मराठी मूळ

निवडावें खडे । तरी दळण वोजें घडे ॥1॥
नाहीं तरि नासोनि जाय । कारण आळस उरे हाय ॥ध्रु.॥
निवडावें तन। सेतीं करावें राखण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नीत । न विचारितां नव्हे हित॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If you remove the pebbles, the grinding will proceed properly. Otherwise, everything is spoiled; laziness is the cause, and regret is all that remains.

You must weed the field and guard the crop. Says Tuka, without careful thought, no true good can come.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pick out the pebbles, and the grinding goes well. Leave them, and everything is spoiled; laziness is the cause, and only regret is left. Weed the field; stand guard over the crop. Tuka says: without careful thought, no real good comes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram teaches the inner life through plain farm-work images, and leaves the reader to carry them across. Stones must be picked from the grain or the milling is ruined; weeds must be pulled and the field watched or the harvest is lost. In each case the spoiling traces back to one fault, laziness, and what it leaves behind is regret. The closing line names the lesson the metaphors point to: nothing truly good arrives without careful, deliberate attention. The work of clearing and guarding the mind is as unglamorous, and as necessary, as tending a field.

GATHA 2127 Social Criticism

Social criticism, confronting the wicked

मराठी मूळ

दुर्जनाचा मान । सुखें करावा खंडण ॥1॥
लात हाणोनियां वारी । गुंड वाट शुद्ध करी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतां पीडी खळ । त्याचा धरावा विटाळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नखें । काढुनि टाकिजेती सुखें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The honor of the wicked should be gladly dismantled. Kick the ruffian aside and clear the road.

When a villain oppresses many, hold him as one to be shunned. Says Tuka, such nails should be clipped and cast away with pleasure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The honor of the wicked should be gladly torn down. Kick the ruffian out of the way and clear the road clean. When a villain torments many, treat him as a thing to be shunned. Tuka says: such nails should be clipped and thrown away, and gladly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks bluntly against the standing that bullies and wrongdoers enjoy. Where a villain oppresses many, he says their borrowed honor should be stripped without hesitation and the road they block cleared. The hard images, kicking aside the ruffian, clipping off the nail, are aimed at the harm such a person does to the many, not at relishing cruelty for its own sake. He treats unchecked wickedness as a thing to be set apart and removed, the way you cut away a nail that scratches. The poem is a refusal to let politeness shield those who prey on others, and the energy is for protecting the many they hurt.

GATHA 2128 Autobiography

Autobiography, hard words for the common good

मराठी मूळ

नका धरुं कोणी । राग वचनाचा मनीं ॥1॥
येथें बहुतांचें हित । शुद्ध करोनि राखा चित्त ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं केली निंदा । आह्मीं दुसिलेंसे भेदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज । येणें विण काय काज॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let no one hold anger in the chitta at these words. The good of many is at stake here; keep your mind pure and clear.

I have not slandered anyone; I have only pierced the veil of false distinctions. Says Tuka, without doing this, what purpose does anything serve?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let no one hold anger in the heart at these words. The good of many rests here; keep your mind clean and clear. I have not slandered anyone. I have only torn the veil off false distinctions. Tuka says: without doing this, what use is anything I do?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers those stung by his sharp speech by naming his intent. He asks them not to take the words as personal injury, because what is at stake is the good of many, not his own grievance. He draws the line carefully: he has not slandered any person; he has only exposed the false distinctions that divide people. The harshness, he says, is pointed at the lie, not at the human being holding it. The closing line states the stakes of his whole work: if he kept silent and let the false stand, nothing else he does would have any purpose at all.

GATHA 2129 Prayers

Prayer, the child's cry to God

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं जडभारी । पडतां ते अवश्वरी ॥1॥
तुज आठवावे पाय । आह्मीं मोकलूनि धाय ॥ध्रु.॥
तान पीडी भूक । शीत उष्ण वाटे दुःख ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाड । तेथें पुरे माझें कोड॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When something heavy and burdensome falls upon this perishable body, we cry out to Your feet, O God, weeping aloud. Hunger and thirst torment us; heat and cold feel like suffering.

Says Tuka, let my childish longing find its fulfillment at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When something heavy and hard falls on this perishable body, we cry out to your feet and weep aloud. Thirst torments us, hunger torments us; heat and cold feel like pain. Tuka says: let my childish longing be fulfilled there, at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God the way a small child comes to a parent, with nothing to offer but its weeping. When the weight of the body, sickness, hunger, thirst, heat, cold presses on him, he does not pretend to be strong; he cries out and asks to be held. The whole prayer rests in calling his need childish, lada, a child's clamor that only love can quiet. He asks for no grand boon, only that this clinging find its rest at God's feet.

GATHA 2130 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the burden handed over

मराठी मूळ

होउनि कृपाळ । भार घेतला सकळ ॥1॥
तूं चि चालविसी माझें । भार सकळ ही ओझें ॥ध्रु.॥
देह तुझ्या पायीं । ठेवुनि झालों उतराई ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In Your mercy, You have taken the entire burden upon Yourself. You alone carry my load, all of it, every last weight.

I have placed this body at Your feet and become free of all obligation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In your mercy you have taken the whole burden upon yourself. You alone carry what is mine; the whole load, every weight, is yours. I have laid this body at your feet, and now my debt is paid.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes surrender as a debt cleared rather than a feeling worked up. Once God in mercy takes the burden, there is nothing left for the devotee to carry; the load that wore him down is now wholly God's. Laying the body itself at God's feet is the act that settles the account, so he is utramai, free of all obligation. The poem says plainly that the work of living is no longer his to manage; it has changed hands.

GATHA 2131 Prayers

Prayer, hold my wandering mind

मराठी मूळ

आतां होई माझे बुद्धीचा जनिता । अवरावें चित्ता पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
येथूनियां कोठें न वजें बाहेरी । ऐसें मज धरीं सत्ताबळें ॥ध्रु.॥
अनावर गुण बहुतां जातींचे । न बोलावें वाचे ऐसें करीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हित कोणिये जातीचें । तुज ठावें साचें मायबापा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now become the guide of my intellect; restrain my mind, O Panduranga. Do not let me go anywhere beyond this place; hold me here by the force of Your authority.

The wayward tendencies of many natures run wild in me; make it so that my tongue cannot speak what it should not. Says Tuka, You alone know, O Father and Mother, the true good of each nature.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now become the maker of my understanding; rein in my mind, Panduranga. Do not let me wander anywhere beyond this place; hold me here by the force of your authority. Wild tendencies of many kinds run loose in me; make it so my tongue cannot say what it should not say. Tuka says: you alone truly know, mother and father, what is good for each kind of nature.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he cannot govern his own mind and asks God to take that office by force. He does not request gentle help; he asks to be held in place by God's sattabal, sheer authority, because left to himself he drifts. The wayward pulls of his nature show even in speech, so he prays that his tongue be stopped before it harms. He ends by handing over even the judgment of what is good for him, trusting the parent who knows each creature's true welfare better than the creature does.

GATHA 2132 Prayers

Confession, swallowing the bait again

मराठी मूळ

नित्य मनासी करितों विचार । तों हें अनावर विषयलोभी॥1॥
आतां मज राखें आपुलिया बळें । न देखें हे जाळें उगवतां ॥ध्रु.॥
सांपडलों गळीं नाहीं त्याची सत्ता । उगळी मागुता घेतला तो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी तों अज्ञान चि आहें । परि तुझी पाहें वास देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every day I counsel my own mind, but it remains unruly, hungry for sense pleasures. Now protect me by Your own strength; I cannot see these traps as they appear.

I was caught on the hook, but having no power of my own, I swallowed the bait again. Says Tuka, I am truly ignorant, but I look to You, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every day I reason with my mind, and still it stays unruly, greedy for sense pleasures. Now guard me by your own strength; I cannot see this net even as it closes. I was caught on the hook, and having no power of my own, I swallowed the bait again. Tuka says: I am truly ignorant, but I keep looking your way, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that daily self-talk has not tamed his appetites, and he names the failure honestly. The image is brutal: a fish hooked once, freed, and then gulping the same bait down again, because it has no strength to do otherwise. He cannot even see the net as it tightens, so self-help is useless; only God's strength can guard him. What is left is not mastery but direction: ignorant and weak, he simply keeps facing toward God, and calls that his only hope.

GATHA 2133 Prayers

Prayer, wealth the weak cannot keep

मराठी मूळ

दुर्बळाचे हातीं सांपडलें धन । करितां जतन नये त्यासी ॥1॥
तैसी परी मज झाली नारायणा । योगक्षेम जाणां तुह्मी आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
खातां लेतां नये मिरवितां वरि । राजा दंड करी जनराग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मग तळमळ उरे । देखिलें तें झुरे पाहावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When wealth falls into the hands of the weak, they cannot keep it safe. Such is my predicament, O Narayana; now You must manage my welfare.

I cannot properly use or display or enjoy it; the king punishes and the people resent me. Says Tuka, then only restless longing remains; what was once seen, the eyes yearn to see again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When wealth falls into a weak man's hands, he cannot keep it safe. That is exactly my state, Narayana; my welfare is yours to manage now. I cannot use it, wear it, or show it off; the king fines me and people resent me. Tuka says: then only the burning remains, and the eyes ache to see again what they once saw.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram likens spiritual gifts to riches placed in the hands of someone too weak to hold them. A poor man who suddenly gets wealth he cannot protect is exposed on every side: he cannot enjoy it, the powerful prey on him, the crowd envies him. So Tukaram refuses to manage his own welfare and asks Narayana to take charge of his yogakshema, his keeping and his gain. The closing line names the real danger of half held grace: it leaves only restless craving, the eye forever aching to glimpse again what it briefly saw.

GATHA 2134 Confession and Sin

Confession, the fault-finding self

मराठी मूळ

मागें जैसा होता माझे अंगीं भाव । तैसा एक ठाव नाहीं आतां ॥1॥
ऐसें गोही माझें मन मजपाशीं । तुटी मुदलेंसी दिसे पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
पुढिलांचे मना आणि गुणदोष । पूज्य आपणांस करावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाली कोंबडएाची परी । पुढें चि उकरी लाभ नेणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devotion I once felt in my being is no longer there as it was. My own mind bears witness: I see loss of the very principal ahead.

It brings up faults in others only to make itself seem worthy of worship. Says Tuka, I have become like a hen that scratches only at what lies ahead and does not recognize the true gain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The devotion that once filled my being is not there now as it was. My own mind is witness against me: I see the very capital being lost ahead. I dig up the faults and merits of others only to make myself worth worshipping. Tuka says: I have become like a hen, scratching only at what lies in front, never knowing the real gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches himself in a precise inner corruption and refuses to excuse it. The old warmth of devotion has cooled, and his own mind testifies that he is losing the principal, the original capital, not just the interest. The symptom he names is sharp: he scans other people's faults and virtues, but only to set himself up as someone worthy of reverence. The hen that scratches forward for scraps and never recognizes true treasure is aimed at this pattern in himself, a warning to examine the same scratching impulse in oneself rather than to scorn another.

GATHA 2135 Prayers

Prayer, the mother will not kill her child

मराठी मूळ

किती तुजपाशीं देऊं परिहार । जाणसी अंतर पांडुरंगा॥1॥
आतां माझें हातीं देई हित । करीं माझें चित्त समाधान॥ध्रु.॥
राग आला तरी कापूं नये मान । बाळा मायेविण कोण दुजें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा होईल लौकिक । मागे बाळ भीक समर्थाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How many excuses shall I offer You? You know the truth within, O Panduranga. Now place my welfare in my own hands; bring peace to my restless mind.

Even in anger, a mother should not cut the child's throat; who else does the child have besides its mother? Says Tuka, what a spectacle it would be: a child of the Capable One begging in the streets.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How many excuses shall I keep offering you? You know what is inside, Panduranga. Now put my good into my own hands; settle my restless mind into peace. Even when she is angry, a mother does not cut the child's throat; whom does the child have but its mother? Tuka says: what a public disgrace it would be, the child of the Capable One begging in the street.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stops making excuses, since God already sees the truth within, and instead presses his claim as a child presses a parent. His argument is the mother's instinct: however angry she gets, she will not slaughter her own child, because the child has no one else. He turns this against God's reputation, the laukik, the public verdict: it would shame the Almighty if his own child were left begging in the streets. The prayer is not for comfort alone but for God to honor the bond that makes him responsible.

GATHA 2136 Confession and Sin

Confession, the thief asking for wages

मराठी मूळ

लाज वाटे पुढें तोंड दाखवितां । परि जाऊं आतां कोणापाशी ॥1॥
चुकलिया काम मागतों मुशारा । लाज फजितखोरा नाहीं मज ॥ध्रु.॥
पाय सांडूनिया फिरतों बासर । स्वामिसेवे चोर होऊनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज पाहिजे दंडिलें । पुढें हे घडलें न पाहिजे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am ashamed to show my face, yet where else shall I go? Having failed in my duty, I ask for wages; I, the shameless wretch, feel no embarrassment. Abandoning Your feet, I wander aimlessly, a thief to my master's service.

Says Tuka, I deserve to be punished; let this not happen again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am ashamed to show my face, yet where else can I go now? I failed at the work and still demand my wages; shameless wretch, I feel no shame. Leaving your feet, I wander idle, a thief in my master's service. Tuka says: I deserve to be punished; only let this not happen again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands before God like a servant who has both shirked the work and stolen, and he names it without softening. He failed his duty yet still wants payment, and worse, the shame that should stop him does not even register; abandoning God's feet, he wanders as a thief inside his own master's house. There is nowhere else to take this confession, which is exactly why he brings it here. He does not plead innocence; he accepts the punishment and asks only that the lapse not be repeated.

GATHA 2137 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the mother's hard mercy

मराठी मूळ

पुढिलिया सुखें निंब देतां भले । बहुत वारलें होय दुःख ॥1॥
हें तों वर्म असे माउलीचे हातीं । हाणी मारी प्रीती हितासाठीं ॥ध्रु.॥
खेळतां विसरे भूक तान घर । धरूनियां कर आणी बळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाळी तोंडळिचया घांसें । उदार सर्वस्वें सर्वकाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother gives bitter medicine for the sake of future health, and much suffering is averted. This is the secret in a mother's hands: she strikes and scolds out of love, for the child's own good.

When the child, lost in play, forgets hunger, thirst, and home, she takes its hand and pulls it back by force. Says Tuka, she feeds it mouthful by mouthful, generous with everything she has at all times.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother gives the bitter neem for the sake of health to come, and much suffering is turned away. This is the secret held in a mother's hands: she strikes and scolds out of love, for the child's own good. When the child, lost in play, forgets hunger, thirst, and home, she takes its hand and pulls it back by force. Tuka says: she feeds it mouthful by mouthful, giving everything she has, at every hour.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the fear that God's harshness means rejection by pointing to a mother. She forces bitter medicine and scolds and even drags the child home, and every one of these hard acts is done out of love and for the child's welfare. The blows are not the opposite of her care; they are the form her care takes when the child, absorbed in play, has forgotten what it needs. So apparent punishment from God is read here as the same tending hand. The poem closes on the gentler side of that same love: a mother who also feeds the child by hand, mouthful by mouthful, holding back nothing, always.

GATHA 2138 Prayers

Refuge, contact transforms the worthless

मराठी मूळ

आतां गुण दोष काय विचारिसी । मी तों आहे रासी पातकांची ॥1॥
पतितपावनासवें समागम । अपुलाला धर्म चालवीजे॥ध्रु.॥
घनघायें भेटी लोखंडपरिसा । तरी अनारिसा न पालटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माती कोण पुसे फुका । कस्तुरीच्या तुका समागमें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do You weigh my merits and faults now? I am a mountain of sins. When one keeps the company of the Purifier of the Fallen, let each fulfill their own nature.

Even when iron strikes the philosopher's stone with great force, the stone does not change its nature. Says Tuka, who asks about the worth of clay? Through contact with musk, even clay becomes fragrant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why weigh my merits and faults now? I am a heap of sins. In the company of the One who saves the fallen, let each keep to its own nature. Strike iron against the touchstone with heavy blows, and still the stone will not change. Tuka says: who pays a thing for plain clay? Yet beside musk, even clay takes on the fragrance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells God to stop auditing his merits and faults, because he loses that accounting; he is simply a mountain of sin. His plea rests on what each party is: God's own nature is to purify the fallen, so let each do what it is, the sinner sinning, the Savior saving. The touchstone keeps its nature however hard the iron strikes it, and that steadiness is the point: God does not change toward the worthless. The closing image carries the hope, worthless clay is bought by no one, yet mere nearness to musk makes it fragrant, so nearness to God, not the devotee's worth, is what transforms him.

GATHA 2139 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the doting protector

मराठी मूळ

कृपावंता दुजें नाहीं तुह्मां पोटीं । लाडें बोलें गोठी सुख मातें ॥1॥
घेउनि भातुकें लागसील पाठी । लाविसील ओंठीं ब्रह्मरस ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलिये पांख घालिसी पाखर । उदार मजवर कृपाळू तूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मांकारणें गोविंदा । वागविसी गदा सुदर्शन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O merciful One, You hold no guile within You. Lovingly You speak sweet stories to comfort me.

You will follow me with gifts, pressing the nectar of divine wisdom to my lips. You spread the shelter of Your wings over me; You are generous and compassionate toward me.

Says Tuka, for our sake, O Govinda, You carry the mace and the Sudarshana discus.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Merciful one, there is no second thing inside you, no guile; you speak fond words and stories, and they comfort me. You come after me with treats and press the nectar of Brahman to my lips. You spread your own wing over me as shelter; you are generous to me, full of pity. Tuka says: for our sake, Govinda, you carry the mace and the Sudarshana discus.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God as a parent so wholly loving that nothing else, no duplicity, lives inside him. This God coaxes the devotee with sweet talk and treats, and then, mid-play, slips the highest gift, the nectar of Brahman, the taste of the absolute, onto his lips. He shelters under his own wing like a bird over its young, generous and tender. The last line names the protector's other face: the very God who dotes also bears mace and discus, his weapons, and Tukaram insists he wields them for our sake, so the same love that feeds also defends.

GATHA 2140 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, carried through every birth

मराठी मूळ

पिाळलों पोसिलों जन्मजन्मांतरीं । वागविलों करीं धरोनियां ॥1॥
आतां काय माझा घडेल अव्हेर । मागें बहु दूर वागविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदी वारा अंगीं लागों आघाताचा । घेतला ठायींचा भार माथां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोल करितों आवडी । अविट ते चि गोडी अंतरींची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have nourished and protected me through birth after birth, guiding me by the hand. Will You now forsake me? In the past You have carried me through vast distances.

You do not let the wind of harm touch my body; You have taken the entire burden upon Your own head. Says Tuka, I speak these words with love; the sweetness within my heart is inexhaustible.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have raised me and fed me through birth after birth, leading me by the hand. Will you cast me off now, after carrying me so far already? You let no wind of harm touch my body; you took the whole weight onto your own head. Tuka says: I speak these words out of love; the sweetness within my heart never grows stale.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram appeals to a long history rather than a single moment of grace. God has reared and fed and led him not just in this life but across many births, so the question almost answers itself: after carrying him this far, surely God will not abandon him now. The protection is total, no harmful wind allowed to touch him, the whole burden taken onto God's own head. He ends by naming his own motive plainly: these are not bargaining words but words of love, springing from an inner sweetness that, unlike worldly pleasures, never goes flat.

GATHA 2141 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, asking for rebirth not release

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगा कांहीं आइकावी मात । न करावें मुक्त आतां मज ॥1॥
जन्मांतरें मज तैसीं देई देवा । जेणें चरणसेवा घडे तुझी ॥ध्रु.॥
वाखाणीन कीर्ती आपुलिया मुखें । नाचेन मी सुखें तुजपुढें ॥2॥
करूनि कामारी दास दीनाहुनी । आपुला अंगणीं ठाव मज ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी मृत्युलोकीं भले । तुझे चि अंखिले पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Panduranga, hear my plea: do not grant me liberation. Give me birth after birth, O God, so that the service of Your feet may continue.

I will praise Your glory with my own lips and dance with joy before You. Make me a servant, humbler than the humblest; give me a place in Your own courtyard.

Says Tuka, here in this mortal world we are content; we are Yours and Yours alone, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga, hear my plea. Do not grant me liberation now. Give me birth after birth, O God, so that I may serve your feet. I will praise your glory with my own lips. I will dance before you in joy. Make me a servant, lower than the lowest; give me a place in your own courtyard. Tuka says: here in this mortal world we are content. We are yours, only yours, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking God for the opposite of what most seekers want. He refuses moksha and begs instead for birth after birth, because release would end his service at Vitthal's feet. The thing he is afraid of losing is not life but nearness; he would rather be born again as the lowest servant in God's courtyard than escape the world and lose that. So he names the mortal world as the very place where his love can act, singing, dancing, serving, and he is content to stay in it as long as he belongs to Panduranga.

GATHA 2142 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, life sold at the feet

मराठी मूळ

माझे अंतरींचें तो चि जाणे एक । वैकुंठनायक पांडुरंग ॥1॥
जीव भाव त्याचे ठेवियेला पायीं । मज चिंता नाहीं कवणेविशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखसमारंभें संतसमागमें । गाऊं वाचे नाम विठोबाचें ॥2॥
गातां पुण्य होय आइकतां लाभ । संसारबंद तुटतील ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव तयासी विकिला । आणीक विठ्ठलाविण नेणें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Only He, the Lord of Vaikuntha, Panduranga, knows the depths of my chitta. Having placed my life and love at His feet, I have no worry of any kind.

In the joyful company of the saints, let us sing the name of Vithoba with our lips. Singing brings merit, listening brings gain, and the bonds of worldly life are cut.

Says Tuka, I have sold my jiva to Him; I know nothing and no one besides Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Only he knows what is inside me, the Lord of Vaikuntha, Panduranga. I have laid my life and my heart at his feet. So I have no worry about anything. In the glad company of the saints, let us sing the name of Vithoba with our tongues. Singing it brings merit; hearing it brings gain; the bonds of worldly life are cut. Tuka says: I have sold my life to him. I know no one and nothing besides Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has handed his whole inner life over to God and found that the handover itself ends his anxiety. Because Panduranga alone knows what is in his heart, and because that heart now rests at God's feet, there is nothing left for Tukaram to manage or fear. The practice that carries this is the Name, sung among the saints: he claims it works on singer and listener alike, earning merit and severing the knots of samsara. The final line is the strongest: he has not lent or pledged his life but sold it outright, so that Vitthal is now the only one he knows.

GATHA 2143 The Power of the Name

The Name, the sacred story as everything

मराठी मूळ

कथा दुःख हरी कथा मुक्त करी । कथा याची बरी विठोबाची ॥1॥
कथा पाप नासी उद्धरिले दोषी । समाधि कथेसी मूढजना ॥ध्रु.॥
कथा तप ध्यान कथा अनुष्ठान । अमृत हे पान हरिकथा ॥2॥
कथा मंत्रजप कथा हरी ताप । कथाकाळी कांप किळकाळासी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कथा देवाचें ही ध्यान । समाधि लागोन उभा तेथें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sacred story destroys sorrow; the sacred story grants liberation. The best story is that of Vithoba.

The sacred story annihilates sin and purifies the wrongdoer; even the dullest soul attains samadhi through the story. The sacred story is penance, meditation, and discipline; the nectar of all nourishment is the story of Hari.

The story is the chanting of mantras; the story dispels all suffering; at the time of the story, even death trembles. Says Tuka, the sacred story is even God's own meditation; He stands there absorbed in samadhi.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The story takes away sorrow; the story sets free. The best story is Vithoba's. The story destroys sin and lifts up the wrongdoer; through the story even the dull-witted reach samadhi. The story is penance, is meditation, is discipline; the story of Hari is nectar to drink. The story is the chanting of mantras; the story burns away suffering; when the story is told, death itself trembles. Tuka says: the story is even God's own meditation; he stands there, lost in samadhi.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making one claim many times: hearing and telling the sacred story of God is itself the whole of religion. He stacks the disciplines that usually cost years, penance, meditation, mantra, ritual, and says the story does all of their work at once, and does it for everyone, even the dullest and the worst. The point is that the hard ladder of effort is replaced by something anyone can join, the simple telling of Hari's deeds. He pushes it to the limit at the end: the story is so powerful that God himself stands listening to it, absorbed, as though it were his own meditation.

GATHA 2144 Prayers

Prayer, asking the way to the feet

मराठी मूळ

काय ऐसा सांगा । धर्म मज पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
तुझे पायीं पावें ऐसा । जेणें उगवे हा फांसा ॥ध्रु.॥
करीं कृपादान । तैसें बोलवीं वचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । माझें हृदय वसवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, O Panduranga, what dharma will bring me to Your feet and release me from this noose? Grant me the gift of grace; inspire the right words in my mouth. Says Tuka, O God, come and dwell in my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, Panduranga, what is the dharma for me? Show me the one that brings me to your feet, the one that undoes this noose. Grant me the gift of your grace; put the right words in my mouth. Tuka says: O God, come and live in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram does not assume he knows the path; he asks God to tell him which dharma actually leads to the feet. He names his condition as a noose, a bind he cannot loosen by himself, so the way out has to be given, not earned. That is why he asks for grace and even for the right words, admitting he cannot pray well on his own power. The final plea is the simplest and the largest: not a teaching about God but God himself, come to dwell in the heart.

GATHA 2145 Confession and Sin

Confession, the gap behind a good name

मराठी मूळ

भला ह्मणे जन । परि नाहीं समाधान ॥1॥
माझें तळमळी चित्त । अंतरलें दिसे हित ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपेचा आधार । नाहीं दंभ जाला भार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपे । अंतराय कोण्या पापें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

People call me good, but I have no inner peace. My chitta churns with unrest; true welfare seems to have slipped away.

There is no foundation of grace; pretense has become a burden. Says Tuka, what sin has caused this obstacle to Your compassion?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

People call me good, but I have no peace inside. My mind churns with unrest; the real good seems to have slipped away from me. I have no ground of grace under me; pretense has grown into a weight. Tuka says: by what sin is your mercy held back from me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets his public reputation against what he actually feels and finds them at odds. Others praise him as good, but inwardly there is no rest, and the thing that truly matters seems lost; he even calls his outer show pretense, a burden he is carrying. Rather than defend himself, he turns the question on his own life and asks God what fault of his is keeping grace away. The honesty is the point: he refuses to mistake being called good for being at peace, and he looks inward for the blockage.

GATHA 2146 Confession and Sin

Confession, words without depth

मराठी मूळ

शिकविले बोल । बोलें तैसी नाहीं ओल ॥1॥
आतां देवा संदेह नाहीं । वांयां गेलों यासी कांहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
एकांताचा वास । नाहीं संकल्पाचा नास ॥2॥
बुद्धि नाहीं ि◌स्थर । तुका ह्मणे शब्दा धीर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I speak the words I have been taught, but there is no corresponding depth within. Now, O God, there is no doubt: I have gone to waste in some measure.

I dwell in solitude, yet my thoughts do not cease. Says Tuka, my intellect is unsteady, though my speech is patient.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I speak the words I was taught, but the wetness is not in them. Now, O God, there is no doubt: in some part I have gone to waste. I live alone, yet my plans and wishes do not die. Tuka says: my mind will not hold still, though my speech keeps its patience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits that his outward devotion and his inward state have come apart. He can say the right words he was taught, but they are dry; the moisture of real feeling is missing, and he names this plainly as a kind of waste in himself. Even withdrawing into solitude has not stilled the stream of wanting and scheming inside. The honesty cuts deep: his speech stays calm and patient while his mind refuses to settle, and he will not pretend the calm surface is the truth of him.

GATHA 2147 Longing and Separation

Longing, why does God not come

मराठी मूळ

उचिताचा दाता । कृपावंता तूं अनंता ॥1॥
कां रे न घालिसी धांव । तुझें उच्चारितां नांव ॥ध्रु.॥
काय बळयुक्ति । नाहीं तुझे अंगीं शक्ति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं विश्वंभर । ओस माझें कां अंतर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the giver of what is right, O merciful and infinite One. Why then do You not rush to me when I call Your name? Have You lost Your strength and power? Says Tuka, You are the sustainer of the universe; why then is my heart so empty?

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the giver of what is right, merciful and without end. Why then do you not come running when I call your name? Have you no strength left? Is there no power in your body? Tuka says: you hold up the whole world; why then is my heart left so empty?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a complaint shaped as a question. He grants everything good about God, merciful, infinite, the giver of what is fitting, and uses that very goodness to ask why the call on the Name goes unanswered. The sting in the middle is mock challenge: surely God has not run out of strength. The last line lands the real wound: the one who sustains the entire universe is letting one heart stay empty, and Tukaram lays that emptiness directly at God's door rather than blaming himself.

GATHA 2148 Prayers

Prayer, swept off in the flood

मराठी मूळ

वाहवितों पुरीं । आतां उचित तें करीं ॥1॥
माझी शक्ति नारायणा । कींव भाकावी करुणा ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मां ओढी काळ। तुझें क्षीण झालें बळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गोडी । जीवा मातेचिया ओढी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am being swept away in the flood; now do what is right, O Narayana. My only strength is to cry for mercy and plead with compassion.

Death pulls at me, and Your power seems to have waned. Says Tuka, the longing of a mother's chitta for her child is the sweetest ache.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am being carried away in the flood. Now do what is right, Narayana. My only strength is to cry for mercy and beg for your pity. Death is dragging at me, and your power seems to have grown weak. Tuka says: the sweet ache is a mother's heart pulled toward her child.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is in danger and out of resources, picturing himself swept off in a flood with death pulling at him. He has no strength of his own left to offer; all he can do is cry for mercy, so he throws the responsibility onto Narayana to do what is right. He even taunts God gently, as if God's power has weakened, to provoke the rescue. The closing image names the bond he is counting on: as a mother is pulled toward her child by a sweet, helpless ache, so he trusts God is drawn toward him.

GATHA 2149 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, laying down the whole load

मराठी मूळ

आतां घेई माझें । भार सकळ ही ओझें ॥1॥
काय करिसी होई वाड । आलों पोटासीं दगड ॥ध्रु.॥
तूं चि डोळे वाती। होई दीपक सांगातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं । विचाराया चाड नाहीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now take my burden, every last weight of it. What more can You do? I have come to You with a stone upon my belly.

You must become my eyes and the wick; be my lamp and companion. Says Tuka, there is nothing left to deliberate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now take what is mine, the whole load, every weight of it. What more can you do? I have come to you with a stone on my belly. You be my eyes, and the wick; be my lamp and my companion. Tuka says: there is nothing left to think over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands the entire burden of himself to God and refuses to keep any of it back. The image of a stone on the belly is one of starving helplessness; he comes with nothing but his need. Having given the weight away, he asks God to become his very faculties: his eyes, the wick and lamp by which he sees, his constant companion. The last line closes the matter; surrender has gone past the stage of weighing options, and there is nothing further to deliberate.

GATHA 2150 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, God the whole capital

मराठी मूळ

असोत हे बोल । अवघें तूं चि भांडवल ॥1॥
माझा मायबाप देवा । सज्जन सोयरा केशवा ॥ध्रु.॥
गिळयेले भेद । सारियेले वादावाद ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मधीं । आतां न पडे उपाधि॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let these words be as they may; You alone are my entire capital. You are my Father and Mother, O God; You are my true friend and kinsman, O Keshava.

All distinctions have been dissolved; all debates have been settled. Says Tuka, now let no further complication arise between us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let these words be whatever they are. You alone are my whole capital. You are my father and mother, O God; you are my true friend and kinsman, Keshava. All the distinctions are swallowed up; all the arguments are settled. Tuka says: now let no further trouble fall between us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram drops every other claim and rests his whole worth on God, naming God his only capital, the sole wealth he has to trade on. He gathers all human relationships into one: father, mother, friend, kinsman are all Keshava. With that, the divisions and debates that kept him separate from God are dissolved and finished. The closing prayer asks for the result of surrender to hold: that no obstacle, no upadhi, ever come between them again.

GATHA 2151 The Power of the Name

The Name, crying to the Mother for her gift

मराठी मूळ

करीन कोल्हाळ । आतां हा चि सर्वकाळ ॥1॥
आतां ये वो माझे आई । देई भातुकें विठाई ॥ध्रु.॥
उपायासी नाम। दिलें याचें पुढें क्षेम ॥2॥
बीज आणि फळ । हें चि तुका ह्मणे मूळ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will raise a clamor at all times from this day forward. Come now, O my Mother Vithai, and give me my gift.

The name is given as the remedy; its fulfillment lies ahead. Says Tuka, the name is both the seed and the fruit; it is the root of everything.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will keep up my clamor, from now on, all the time. Come now, my Mother Vithai, and give me my little gift. The Name was given as the remedy; its safe reward lies ahead. Tuka says: the Name is the seed and the fruit; it is the root of everything.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the posture of a child who will not stop crying until it is fed, and addresses God as the Mother Vithai who must hand over the treat. The clamor is the practice itself: ceaseless calling on the Name, refusing to be quieted. He understands the Name as the medicine he has been given, with its full reward still ahead. The closing lines tell why he stakes everything on it: the Name is at once seed, fruit, and root, the means, the goal, and the ground beneath both.

GATHA 2152 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the satisfaction of the Name

मराठी मूळ

धनासीं च धन । करी आपण जतन ॥1॥
तुज आळवितां गोडी । पांडुरंगा खरी जोडी ॥ध्रु.॥
जेविल्याचें खरें । वरी उमटे ढेंकरें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धाय । तेथें कोठें उरे हाय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

True wealth takes care of itself. Calling upon You, O Panduranga, brings real sweetness, a genuine treasure.

The proof of a good meal shows itself in the belch that follows. Says Tuka, where there is true satisfaction, where does any longing remain?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Real wealth looks after itself. Calling on you, Panduranga, brings true sweetness, a real treasure. The truth of a good meal shows in the belch that comes after. Tuka says: where there is full satisfaction, what room is left for any aching want?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from experience, not request: he has tasted what calling on God actually yields. He calls it true wealth, the kind that does not need guarding because it keeps itself, unlike money. His earthy proof is the belch after a full meal: you know the meal was real by the satisfaction it leaves, and so you know the Name is real by the contentment it leaves in the heart. The closing question is the whole point; once that fullness is there, there is simply no space left for longing and lack.

GATHA 2153 The Necessity of Experience

Union and longing held together

मराठी मूळ

अनुभवा आलें । माझें चित्तींचें क्षरलें ॥1॥
असे जवळी अंतर । फिरे आवडीच्या फेरें ॥ध्रु.॥
खादलें चि वाटे । खावें भेटलें चि भेटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उभें । आह्मी राखियेलें लोभें॥3॥ ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What was hidden in my chitta has now come to experience and dissolved. He stays near, yet there remains a distance, for He circles around in the orbit of love.

Whatever is eaten still feels like it should be eaten more; whatever is met still longs to be met again. Says Tuka, we have kept Him standing before us, held fast by our longing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What lay hidden in my heart has come into experience and dissolved. He is near, deep inside, yet a distance remains, for He keeps circling in the orbit of love. What I have eaten, I still want to eat; whom I have met, I still long to meet. Tuka says: we have kept Him standing before us, held fast by our longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a meeting with Vitthal that is also still a hunger. The thing buried in his mind has surfaced into living experience and melted away, so the barrier is gone; yet he insists a sweet distance remains, because love keeps moving in circles around its object and never settles into mere possession. This is why the taste does not end the appetite: every eating asks to eat again, every meeting asks to meet again. The closing claim is bold. It is not God who holds the devotee, but the devotee's own longing that keeps God standing there before him.

GATHA 2154 Confession and Sin

Confession, the decorated corpse

मराठी मूळ

पोटीं शूळ अंगीं उटी चंदनाची । आवडी सुखाची कोण तया ॥1॥
तैसें मज कां गा केलें पंढरिराया । लौकिक हा वांयां वाढविला ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्वरिलियापुढें वाढिलीं मिष्टान्नें । काय चवी तेणें घ्यावी त्याची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मढें शृंगारिलें वरी । ते चि जाली परी मज देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A boil on the belly and sandalwood paste on the body; what pleasure can such a person enjoy? O Lord of Pandhari, why have You treated me this way, increasing my worldly reputation to no purpose? When fine dishes are placed before one burning with fever, how can he taste their flavor? Says Tuka, a corpse has been decorated on the outside; that is what has become of me, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A boil burns in the belly while sandalwood paste is rubbed on the body; what pleasure can such a person feel? O Lord of Pandhari, why have You done this to me, building up my name in the world for nothing? Fine dishes are set before a man burning with fever; how can he taste their flavor? Tuka says: a corpse has been dressed up on the outside. O God, that is what I have become.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on his own public reputation and calls it a torment. He gives two images of the same false comfort: cooling sandal paste smeared over a body with a boil eating it from within, and rich food laid before a man too feverish to taste anything. The outward honor the world has given him only mocks the sickness inside. He addresses Panduranga directly and asks why his name was raised so high to no purpose. The verdict on himself is unsparing: a corpse with no life in it, merely ornamented on the surface. The poem points the reader at the gap between an admired exterior and an inner state that admiration cannot heal.

GATHA 2155 Confession and Sin

Confession, gilding over brass

मराठी मूळ

बेगडाचा रंग राहे कोण काळ । अंगें हें पितळ न देखतां ॥1॥
माझें चित्त मज जवळीच गो ही । तुझी मज नाहीं भेटी ऐसें ॥ध्रु.॥
दासीसुतां नाहीं पितियाचा ठाव । अवघें चि वाव सोंग त्याचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी केली विटंबना । अनुभवें जना येईल कळों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How long can the color of gilding last when the brass underneath goes unseen? My own mind is right here beside me, yet I have no true meeting with You. The son of a maidservant has no claim on his father; all his gestures are hollow pretense.

Says Tuka, I have been humiliated, and the world will come to know it through experience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long can gilding hold its color when the brass underneath is never seen? My mind is right here beside me, yet I have no real meeting with You. A maidservant's son has no claim on his father; every gesture of his is hollow pretense. Tuka says: I have been put to shame, and the world will learn it by experience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes himself as plating over base metal. Gold leaf laid over brass keeps its shine only until the cheap metal beneath shows through; he fears his devotion is exactly that thin a coating. His mind is close at hand, but it gives him no true meeting with God, and so his every devout gesture feels as baseless as a servant's son claiming a father who never acknowledged him. The harsh comparison is aimed at himself, not at any real child or servant: it names the shame of a claim with nothing behind it. He warns that pretense like this cannot stay hidden; sooner or later, lived experience exposes it to everyone.

GATHA 2156 Confession and Sin

Confession, lust and anger still seated

मराठी मूळ

मजपुढें नाहीं आणीक बोलता । ऐसें कांहीं चित्ता वाटतसें ॥1॥
याचा कांहीं तुह्मीं देखा परिहार । सर्वज्ञ उदार पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
काम क्रोध नाहीं सांडिलें आसन । राहिले वसोन देहामध्यें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां जालों उतराई । कळों यावें पायीं निरोपिलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It seems to me that no one else speaks before me. Please find some remedy for this, O all-generous Panduranga.

Lust and anger have not left their seat; they continue to dwell in this body. Says Tuka, now I have become indebted. May it be known at Your feet that I have conveyed this message.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It feels to me that no one else speaks before me. You see to some remedy for this, all-generous Panduranga. Lust and anger have not given up their seat; they go on living inside this body. Tuka says: now I have settled my account. Let it be known at Your feet that I have delivered this message.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays his unfinished business openly before God. He admits a kind of self-deception, as though no voice but his own is allowed to speak in him, and he asks generous Panduranga to find the cure, since he cannot. The plain confession at the center is that lust and anger have never vacated their place; they are still residents in his body, not banished guests. By saying it aloud he claims to have cleared his debt: he has at least reported the truth honestly. The poem makes confession itself the act of service, handing the whole problem to God's feet rather than pretending it is already solved.

GATHA 2157 Social Criticism

Social criticism, hollow titles

मराठी मूळ

सावित्रीची विटंबण । रांडपण करीतसे ॥1॥
काय जाळावें तें नांव । अवघें वाव असे तें ॥ध्रु.॥
कुबिर नांव मोळी वाहे। कैसी पाहें फजिती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठुणगुण देखें । उगीं मूर्ख कुंफ्दतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Savitri's honor is disgraced; widowhood is imposed upon her. Why should one burn such a name that is all emptiness? Kubera by name, yet he carries bundles of wood on his head; see what a disgrace.

Says Tuka, look at this absurd spectacle, and stop applauding foolishly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Savitri's honor is disgraced; widowhood is forced on her. Why keep alive a name that is all emptiness? A man named Kubera carries bundles of firewood on his head; see what a disgrace it is. Tuka says: look at this absurd show, and stop applauding like a fool.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram mocks the gap between a grand name and an empty reality. A woman called Savitri, whose name recalls a wife who won her husband back from death, is left a widow; a man named Kubera, the lord of wealth, hauls firewood for a living. The names promise everything and deliver nothing, so he asks why such hollow labels should be honored at all. The sting is not aimed at the poor woman or the laborer themselves, but at the foolishness that keeps applauding empty titles. He tells the onlooker to stop clapping for a show that has no substance behind it.

GATHA 2158 Longing and Separation

Longing, the silent quarrel

मराठी मूळ

न गमेसी जाली दिवसरजनी । राहिलों लाजोनि नो बोलावें ॥1॥
रुचिविण काय शब्द वा†या माप । अनादरें कोप येत असे ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलिया रडे आपुलें चि मन । दाटे समाधान पावतसें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी असा जी जाणते । काय करुं रिते वादावाद ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Days and nights have become unbearable. I have stayed silent out of shame, not daring to speak.

Without relish, words are mere empty measures; disregard brings anger. The mind weeps to itself, and is choked even as it tries to find peace.

Says Tuka, you are the knowing ones. Why should I engage in fruitless arguments?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Days and nights have become unbearable. I stay silent out of shame and do not dare to speak. Without relish, words are only empty measuring; and being ignored makes anger rise. The mind weeps to itself and chokes even as it tries to find peace. Tuka says: You are the one who knows. Why should I take up a pointless argument?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is caught in the misery of a love that goes unanswered. Day and night drag on, and shame keeps him from even speaking his complaint. When there is no warmth in the exchange, words become hollow, mere counting, and being disregarded stirs anger in him. So his mind turns inward and weeps alone, unable to reach the peace it reaches for. In the end he gives up the quarrel: God already knows everything, so arguing the case aloud would be empty. The poem holds the whole tension of waiting on a God who seems to withhold response.

GATHA 2159 Longing and Separation

Longing, refusing deferred grace

मराठी मूळ

मेल्यावरि मोक्ष संसारसंबंधें । आरालिया बधे ठेवा आह्मां ॥1॥
वागवीत संदेह राहों कोठवरी । मग काय थोरी सेवकाची ॥ध्रु.॥
गाणें गीत आह्मां नाचणें आनंदें । प्रेम कोठें भेदें अंगा येतें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती सांगावे दृष्टांत । नसतां तूं अनंत सानकुळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Liberation after death, bound by worldly ties; keep us bound for now. How long shall we carry this doubt? Then what greatness remains in being a servant? Our singing and dancing in joy, our songs and celebrations; where does love arise through separation? Says Tuka, how many illustrations must I give when You, O Infinite One, are not favorable?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Liberation after death, while we stay bound by worldly ties; keep us bound, then, for now. How long are we to carry this doubt? What greatness is left in being a servant then? Singing, dancing in joy, our songs and our festivals: where does love arise out of separation? Tuka says: how many examples must I keep giving, while You, O Infinite One, will not relent?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rejects a salvation postponed to after death. If liberation only comes once he is dead, while he stays tangled in the world the whole time he is alive, then he would rather God simply keep him bound and stop dangling the promise. Endless waiting in doubt drains all dignity from being God's servant. He insists that love is shown now, in singing and dancing and shared festival, not produced by separation and delay. The closing line is a frustrated appeal: he has offered example after example, yet the Infinite One stays unmoved. The poem presses for presence in this life rather than a deferred reward.

GATHA 2160 Longing and Separation

Longing, the lover withdrawn

मराठी मूळ

एकाएकीं आतां असावेंसें वाटे । तरि च हे खोटे चाळे केले ॥1॥
वाजवूनि तोंड घातलों बाहेरी । कुल्प करुनी दारीं माजी वसा ॥ध्रु.॥
उजेडाचा केला दाटोनि अंधार । सवें हुद्देदार चेष्टाविला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भय होतें तों चि वरी । होती कांहीं उरी स्वामिसेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If now You wish to be all alone, then these antics were false indeed. You made a show of speaking and then cast me outside, locking the door with Yourself within.

You turned the light into thick darkness and mocked the attendant as well. Says Tuka, as long as there was fear, there was still some remnant of service to the Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If now You want to be all alone, then these games were false from the start. You made a show of speaking, then threw me outside, locked the door, and kept Yourself within. You turned the light into thick darkness, and mocked Your own attendant along with it. Tuka says: only as long as there was fear was there any service of the Lord left.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram protests being shut out by the very God who first drew him close. If God now wants solitude, then all the earlier intimacy looks like a cruel pretense: a show of talking, followed by the devotee being pushed out and the door bolted from inside. The light he was given has been turned into deep darkness, and the servant who waited faithfully feels made fun of. The last line is sharp: it was fear that kept service alive, and now even that thread seems to be slipping. The poem voices the anguish of withdrawn grace and the lover's right to complain when the door is closed in his face.

GATHA 2161 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the one in the heart

मराठी मूळ

काय नव्हेसी तूं एक । देखों कासया पृथक ॥1॥
मुंग्या कैंचे मुंगळे । नटनाटए तुझे चाळे ॥ध्रु.॥
जाली तरी मर्यादा। किंवा त्रासावें गोविंदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे साचा । कोठें जासी हृदयींचा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is there that You are not? Why should we see You as separate? Ants and their hills are all Your playful acts and dramatic performances. If there is a boundary, let it be set, or else trouble us, O Govinda.

Says Tuka, O true One, where can You go, You who dwell in the heart?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is there that You are not? Why should we see You as separate? Ants and anthills alike are all Your play, Your acting and Your dramas. If there is to be a limit, set one; otherwise, why trouble us, O Govinda? Tuka says: O true One, where can You go, You who live in the heart?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the non-dual claim that nothing stands outside God. If God is everything, then seeing him as a separate object makes no sense; even ants and their hills are simply roles in his ongoing play. So Tukaram challenges Govinda directly: either fix some honest boundary to what you are, or stop troubling us with the illusion of distance. The closing line answers its own question and seals the point. A God who dwells in the heart has nowhere to run to and nowhere to hide, because the seeker and the sought share the same ground.

GATHA 2162 Longing and Separation

Longing, the Father who must not vanish

मराठी मूळ

कां जी वाढविलें । न लगतां हें उगलें ॥1॥
आतां मानितां कांटाळा । भोवतीं मिळालिया बाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
लावूनियां सवे। पळतां दिसाल बरवे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बापा । येतां न कळा चि रूपा ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why did You nurture us when it was not needed? Now You feel weary as the children have gathered around You. If You run away after leading them on, it will not look good.

Says Tuka, O Father, when You come, may You not be recognized in disguise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why did You raise us up when there was no need? Now You feel weary, with the children gathered all around You. If You lead them on and then run away, it will not look good. Tuka says: O Father, when You come, may You not come unrecognized in disguise.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one of God's gathered children and holds the Father to account. If God had no need to nurture them, why did he draw them close and raise them at all? Now that they crowd around him, he must not act weary and slip away, for a parent who lures the little ones in and then flees has shamed himself. The final plea is tender and pointed: when God does come, let him come openly, not hidden in some disguise the children cannot recognize. The poem treats divine love as a promise that carries an obligation: having claimed us, God cannot simply withdraw.

GATHA 2163 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, feed the hungry first

मराठी मूळ

क्षुधेलिया अन्न । द्यावें पात्र न विचारून ॥1॥
धर्म आहे वर्मा अंगीं । कळलें पाहिजे प्रसंगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रव्य आणि कन्या। येथें कुळ कर्म शोधण्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पुण्य गांठी । तरि च उचितासी भेटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To the hungry, give food without examining the vessel. The essence of dharma lies within; it must be shown in the right occasion.

For matters of wealth and marriage, one should examine lineage and conduct. Says Tuka, only if merit is in hand does one meet with what is fitting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To the hungry, give food without inspecting the vessel. The heart of dharma lies within, and it must show itself at the right moment. In matters of wealth and of marriage, you do examine lineage and conduct. Tuka says: only if merit is in hand does one meet with what is fitting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a clear line between mercy and prudence. When someone is hungry, you feed them and do not pause to scrutinize who they are or what their standing is, because the true essence of dharma is inward and proves itself precisely in such moments of need. He grants that other matters, settling property or arranging a marriage, are different, and there it is right to weigh family and character. The closing line ties it to merit: meeting what is truly fitting depends on the good one already carries. The poem keeps compassion and discernment each in its proper place, and refuses to let caution block the feeding of the hungry.

GATHA 2164 True Worship

True worship, spend your life

मराठी मूळ

वेचावें तें जीवें । पूजा घडे ऐशा नावें ॥1॥
बिगारीची ते बिगारी । साक्षी अंतरींचा हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
फळ बीजाऐसें । कार्यकारणासरिसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मान । लवणासारिखें लवण॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should spend one's very life; only then can worship truly happen. Forced labor remains forced labor, and Hari within is the witness.

The fruit is like the seed; the effect follows its cause. Says Tuka, honor is like salt; it must be true salt, nothing less.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You must spend your very life; only then does worship truly happen. Forced labor stays forced labor, and Hari within is the witness. The fruit is like the seed; the effect follows its cause. Tuka says: honor is like salt; it must be true salt, nothing less.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures worship by what it costs the worshipper. Real devotion means spending your own life into it; anything offered grudgingly is just forced labor, and the Hari seated within sees plainly which it is. He grounds this in plain law: a fruit takes after its seed, an effect after its cause, so a half-hearted offering can only yield a half-hearted result. The final image makes the standard absolute. As salt is worthless unless it is genuinely salt, honor given to God is worthless unless it is wholehearted and true. The poem points the reader inward, to the witness who cannot be fooled by outward show.

GATHA 2165 Longing and Separation

Longing, the deadlock of karma

मराठी मूळ

मज नाहीं धीर । तुह्मी न करा अंगीकार ॥1॥
ऐसें पडिलें विषम । बळी देवाहूनि कर्म ॥ध्रु.॥
चालों नेणें वाट । केल्या न पवा बोभाट ॥2॥
वेचों नेणे जीवें । तुका उदास धरिला देवें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no patience, and You do not accept me. Such a dilemma has fallen upon me, where karma is mightier than God.

I do not know the path, and crying out brings no help. Says Tuka, I cannot spend my life this way; God has kept me in indifference.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no patience left. And You will not take me in. I am caught in a hard place: my karma is stronger than my God. I do not know the road. I cry out, and nothing comes. I do not know how to spend my own life. Tuka says: God has left me here, indifferent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a deadlock and refuses to soften either side of it. He has run out of patience, yet God still has not accepted him, and he names the trap plainly: his own past deeds seem to outweigh God himself. He does not know the way, his cries draw no answer, and he cannot manage even the spending of his days. The pain in the poem is that God appears to stand back and leave him in this indifference, and Tukaram says so to God's face rather than pretending the longing has been met.

GATHA 2166 Longing and Separation

Longing, the mind that runs to God

मराठी मूळ

तळमळी चित्त दर्शनाची आशा । बहु जगदीशा करुणा केली ॥1॥
वचनीं च संत पावले स्वरूप । माझें नेदी पाप योगा येऊं ॥ध्रु.॥
वेठीऐसा करीं भक्तिवेवसाव । न पवे चि जीव समाधान ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कई देसील विसांवा । पांडुरंगे धांवा घेतें मन ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My chitta aches with longing for Your vision. O Lord of the universe, You have shown great mercy.

The saints have attained Your form through words alone, but my sins will not let me come near. I serve You as if under forced labor, yet my jiva finds no peace.

Says Tuka, when will You give rest? O Panduranga, my mind runs toward You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind aches with longing to see You. O Lord of the universe, You have shown me great mercy. The saints reached Your very form through their words alone; but my sin will not let me come near. I serve You like a laborer pressed into work, and still my soul finds no peace. Tuka says: when will You give me rest? O Panduranga, my mind runs to You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying out of a restless, aching desire to see God's form, and he holds two truths together without resolving them. He grants that God has been merciful and that the saints attained that form through words; yet he feels his own sin barring him from coming close. His service feels like forced labor rather than love, so his soul finds no rest, and the whole poem strains toward one question: when will God grant relief? He ends not in despair but in motion, his mind running toward Panduranga even while peace is withheld.

GATHA 2167 Confession and Sin

Confession, the tendencies that will not be reined in

मराठी मूळ

हागतां ही खोडी । चळण मोडवितें काडी ॥1॥
ऐसे अनावर गुण । आवरावे काय ह्मुण ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं जरी संग । तरी बडबडविती रंग ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even while relieving oneself, bad habits persist; the stick keeps breaking the ankle. Such are these uncontrollable tendencies; how can they be restrained? Even without company, the senses keep up their chatter.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even while relieving myself, the bad habit stays; the stick keeps tripping up my step. Such are these tendencies, beyond all control. How am I to rein them in? Even when there is no company, the senses keep up their chatter.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is confessing how stubborn his own habits are, and he refuses to dress it up. He says the tendencies cling even in the most undignified moments and keep tripping him as he walks, which is his blunt way of admitting they reach into everything. He cannot find a way to hold them in check. He points to the proof: even alone, with no one to perform for, the senses go on chattering, so the fault is inward and not just a matter of bad company. The honesty is aimed at the pattern in himself, not at scorn for anyone else.

GATHA 2168 Confession and Sin

Confession, service that never comes

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे देवा । तुमची न घडे चि सेवा ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, O God, true service to You simply does not come to pass.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: O God, true service to You simply never comes to pass.

WHAT IT MEANS

This short signature line is Tukaram's confession in its barest form. He admits to God that the real service he owes never actually happens. He does not blame circumstances or make an excuse; he simply states the failure and lays it before God. The starkness is the point: he would rather name his shortfall honestly than pretend a devotion he has not lived.

GATHA 2169 Confession and Sin

Confession, words without the melting heart

मराठी मूळ

देह निरसे तरी । बोलावया नुरे उरी ॥1॥
येर वाचेचें वाग्जाळ । अळंकारापुरते बोल ॥ध्रु.॥
काचें तरी कढे । जाती ऐसें चित्त ओढे ॥2॥
विष्णुदास तुका । पूर्ण धनी जाणे चुका॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the body is transcended, nothing remains to be spoken. All else is mere verbal ornamentation, words for the sake of decoration.

If one could truly melt from within, the mind would be drawn that way. Says Tuka, the perfect Lord knows well the shortcomings of Vishnudas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Once the body is left behind, nothing is left to say. All the rest is just a net of words, talk for the sake of ornament. If the heart could truly melt, the mind would be drawn that way. Tuka says: Vishnudas. The perfect Lord knows my failings well.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is measuring his own speech against real surrender and finding it short. He says that beyond the body there is nothing more to be spoken; everything else is decorative chatter, words strung up for show. True devotion would mean the heart actually melting, and then the mind would be pulled toward God on its own. Signing as Vishnudas, the servant of Vishnu, he admits that his Lord, who is complete, sees clearly where he falls short. The poem turns the suspicion of empty words back on himself rather than on others.

GATHA 2170 Confession and Sin

Social criticism, glass is not a diamond

मराठी मूळ

खोटएाचा विकरा । येथें नव्हे कांच हिरा ॥1॥
काय दावायाचें काम । उगा च वाढवावा श्रम ॥ध्रु.॥
परीक्षकाविण । मिरवों जाणों तें तें हीण ॥2॥
तुका पायां पडे । वाद पुरे हे झगडे॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no sale for the false here; glass cannot pass for diamond. What is the point of showing off and increasing toil for nothing? To parade without an examiner is to display what is inferior.

Says Tuka, I fall at Your feet; enough of these quarrels and disputes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The false finds no buyer here; glass cannot pass for a diamond. What is the use of showing off? You only pile up labor for nothing. To parade without a true judge present is to put your own poverty on display. Tuka says: I fall at Your feet. Enough of these quarrels and disputes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing pretense and turning away from it toward God. In God's presence, he says, fakery finds no market; a piece of glass will never be taken for a diamond, so display is wasted effort. To show off where no real judge can tell the difference only reveals how cheap one's wares actually are. The poem ends by abandoning the whole game: he falls at God's feet and calls a halt to the arguing and contention, choosing surrender over the performance of merit. The criticism is aimed at the impulse to parade, including in himself, not at any one rival.

GATHA 2171 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari and its hidden cost

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीस घडे अतित्यायें मृत्य । तो जाय पतित अधःपाता ॥1॥
दुराचारें मोक्ष सुखाचे वसति । भोळी बाळमूतिन पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
केला न सहावे तीर्थउपवास । कथेविण दोषसाधन तें ॥2॥
कालियापें भेद मानितां निवडे । श्रोत्रियांसी जोडे आंतेजेता॥3॥
माहेरीं सलज्ज ते जाणा सिंदळी । किाळमा काजळी पाववि ते ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If a guest dies at Pandhari, the one responsible falls to perdition. Even wrongdoers find liberation and comfort there, for Panduranga is an innocent, childlike form.

Fasting and pilgrimages done without hearing God's story become instruments of sin. Those who make distinctions based on caste find the excluded joining the learned.

Says Tuka, the woman who is modest at her parents' home but immoral elsewhere brings only blackness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If a guest dies at Pandhari, the one who let it happen falls to ruin. Even wrongdoers find liberation and ease there, for Panduranga is an innocent, childlike form. Fasts and pilgrimages done without listening to God's story turn into instruments of sin. Where people split others by caste, the very ones they shut out end up joined to the learned. A woman modest at her father's house but loose elsewhere brings only blackness. Know this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Pandhari while warning that its grace carries real duties. He says God's place is so merciful that even wrongdoers are saved there, because Panduranga is innocent and childlike; but that mercy is not a license to neglect, and to let a guest die there is to fall to ruin. He then turns the standard religion inside out: fasting and pilgrimage without truly hearing God's story become sources of sin, and those excluded by caste pride are the ones God draws in beside the learned. His closing image of a woman decent only at home is aimed at hidden hypocrisy: piety that is genuine in one place and false in another leaves only stain. He does not thin these sharp claims into polite advice.

GATHA 2172 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, faith and the river bath

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे तेथें विश्वास जतन । पुरे भीमास्नान सम पाय ॥5॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, at that place faith must be guarded well. A bath in the Bhima river and the touch of His feet are equal blessings.

Enough.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: there, faith must be guarded well. A bath in the Bhima river and the touch of His feet are equal blessings. Enough.

WHAT IT MEANS

This closing verse names what holds the whole teaching together at Pandhari: faith, which must be carefully kept. Tukaram sets the bath in the Bhima river and the touch of God's feet side by side as equal graces, so that the outward act and the nearness to God are valued together. The short final word, enough, lets the matter rest, as if nothing more needs to be added once faith is in place.

GATHA 2173 Social Criticism

Social criticism, cleverness against truth

मराठी मूळ

चातुर्याच्या अनंतकळा । सत्या विरळा जाणत ॥1॥
हांसत्यासवें हांसे जन । रडतां भिन्न पालटे ॥ध्रु.॥
जळो ऐसे वांजट बोल । गुणां मोल भूस मिथ्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंधळ्याऐसें । वोंगळ पिसें कौतुक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cleverness has endless tricks, but rare is the one who knows truth. The world laughs with those who laugh and turns away from those who weep.

Let such hollow words burn; they assign false value to qualities and dismiss what is real. Says Tuka, it is like the delight of the blind, a filthy madness parading as wonder.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Cleverness has endless tricks; rare is the one who knows the truth. People laugh along with the one who laughs and turn away when he weeps. Let such hollow words burn: they price up empty qualities and call the real thing worthless. Tuka says: it is like the delight of the blind, a filthy madness paraded as a wonder.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks shallow cleverness and the crowd that rewards it. He notes that wit has endless tricks while real knowledge of truth is rare, and that people are fickle: they laugh with you while you laugh and abandon you when you weep. He wishes such hollow talk would burn, because it inflates worthless show and dismisses what is genuine. His closing image is harsh on purpose: this acclaim is like the blind admiring a spectacle, a dirty madness mistaken for marvel. The contempt is pointed at the empty pattern of fashion-following, not at any single person caught in it.

GATHA 2174 Prayers

Prayer, against lust and anger

मराठी मूळ

नयो वाचे अनुचित वाणी । नसो मनीं कुडी बुद्धि॥1॥
ऐसें मागा अरे जना । नारायणा विनवूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
कामक्रोधां पडो चिरा । ऐसा बरा सायास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नानाछंदें । या विनोदें न पडावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May improper speech never come to my tongue. May crooked thinking never dwell in my mind.

Pray to Narayana thus, O people. May lust and anger be shattered; let that be your endeavor.

Says Tuka, do not fall into the various diversions and amusements of this world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let no improper word come to my tongue. Let no crooked thought live in my mind. Ask for this, O people, praying to Narayana. Let lust and anger be cracked apart; make that your good labor. Tuka says: do not fall into the many fads and amusements of this world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers a plain prayer and tells others to make it their own. He asks that no wrong speech reach his tongue and no twisted thinking lodge in his mind, and he turns to the listeners, urging them to petition Narayana for the same. The real work, he says, is to break lust and anger; that is the endeavor worth giving oneself to. He warns against being pulled into the endless distractions and amusements of the world, naming them as the trap that pulls the mind off this single aim.

GATHA 2175 Renunciation

Renunciation, free of honor and esteem

मराठी मूळ

माझिया देहाची मज नाहीं चाड । कोठें करूं कोड आणिकांचें ॥1॥
इच्छतां ते मान मागा देवापासीं । आसा संचितासी गुंपले हो ॥ध्रु.॥
देह आह्मी केला भोगाचे सांभाळीं । राहिलों निराळीं मानामानां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोणें वेचावें वचन । नसतां तो सीण वाढवावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no care for my own body. How then can I attend to others' desires? If you crave honor, ask it of God; you are all entangled in the net of past karma.

We have given this body over to the care of destiny and remain aloof from the game of worldly respect. Says Tuka, why should anyone waste words when it only increases pointless suffering?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no care for my own body. So how can I tend to what others want? If you crave honor, ask it of God; you are all tangled in the net of your own past deeds. We have handed this body over to the keeping of destiny, and we stay apart from the game of respect and disrespect. Tuka says: why should anyone waste words, when it only adds to pointless suffering?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares his freedom from the whole economy of esteem. He has stopped caring even for his own body, so he has no stake in satisfying other people's wants. To those who hunger for honor he says: take that request to God, and recognize that you are bound up in the consequences of your own past actions. He has placed his body in destiny's hands and stepped outside the game of being respected or slighted. He closes by refusing to argue the point, since words spent defending one's standing only multiply needless suffering.

GATHA 2176 Renunciation

Renunciation, desire flees the grasper

मराठी मूळ

धरितां इच्छा दुरी पळे । पाठी सोहळे उदासा ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि असट मन । नका खुण सांगतों ॥ध्रु.॥
आविसापासी अवघें वर्म । सोस श्रम पाववी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बीज न्यावें । तेथें यावें फळानें ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When you chase desire, it runs away; but luxury follows the one who is detached. Therefore, be steadfast in mind; I tell you this secret.

All the hidden truth lies with the dispassionate one; yearning and toil only bring exhaustion. Says Tuka, carry the seed, and the fruit will come to that very place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Grab at desire and it runs away; but good fortune follows the one who lets go. So keep the mind steady. Do not waver. I am telling you the secret. The whole hidden truth lies with the dispassionate one; craving and toil only wear you out. Tuka says: carry the seed, and the fruit will come to that very place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands over a practical secret about desire. What you chase flees from you, while ease and good fortune quietly attend the one who has let go, so the way forward is a steady, unwavering mind rather than more grasping. The real understanding belongs to the dispassionate; longing and effort spent on getting things only exhaust a person. His closing image makes it concrete: simply carry the seed, that is, give yourself to detachment and to God, and the fruit will arrive on its own, right where you are, without your having to seize it.

GATHA 2177 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty arguer

मराठी मूळ

वेद शास्त्र नाहीं पुराण प्रमाण । तयाचें वदन नावलोका॥1॥
ताकिर्याचें अंग आपणा पारिखें । माजि†यासारिखें वाईचाळे ॥ध्रु.॥
माता निंदी तया कोण तो आधार । भंगलें खपर याचे नावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आडराणें ज्याची चाली । तयाची ते बोली मिठेंविण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One whose speech has no authority from Vedas, scriptures, or Puranas is not worth looking at. The logician's body is a stranger to itself, and his gestures are like those of a monkey.

He who slanders his own mother has no support; his broken vessel is his only legacy. Says Tuka, the words of one who walks crookedly are without salt.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man whose speech has no backing from the Vedas, the scriptures, or the Puranas: do not even look at his face. The mere logician is a stranger to his own body. He apes and gestures like a monkey, the way I once did. He who slanders his own mother, what ground does he stand on? A broken pot is all he leaves behind in his name. Tuka says: the man who walks crookedly speaks words with no salt in them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a kind of speech, not a particular man. He warns against the clever talker whose words rest on nothing the tradition stands on, and likens his showy gestures to a monkey aping what it does not understand. The slander of one's own mother is the image of cutting off your own root: a person who does this has no support and leaves only a broken vessel behind. The closing line names the test: speech that comes from a crooked life has no flavor, no nourishment in it. The pattern to watch in yourself is talk that performs and argues but is rooted in nothing true.

GATHA 2178 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, devotion merges into God

मराठी मूळ

कस्तुरीचें अंगीं मीनली मृत्तका । मग वेगळी कां येईल लेखूं ॥1॥
तयापरि भेद नाहीं देवभक्तीं । संदेहाच्या युक्ति सरों द्याव्या ॥ध्रु.॥
इंधनें ते आगी संयोगाच्या गुणें । सागरा दरुषणें वाहाळ तों चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें साक्षीचें वचन । येथें तों कारण शुद्ध भाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When earth mingles with musk, how can they be separated again? In the same way there is no difference between God and devotion; let the doubts of logic be put to rest. Firewood becomes fire by contact; a stream is a stream only until it reaches the sea.

Says Tuka, my words bear witness: what matters here is pure faith.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When earth is mixed into musk, how could you count them as two again? It is like that: there is no gap between God and devotion. Let the tricks of doubt and logic come to an end. Wood becomes fire by touching it. A stream is a stream only until it reaches the sea. Tuka says: my words stand as witness; here the one thing that matters is pure faith.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting from experience that devotion and God are not two things. He gives three images of merging: earth ground into musk cannot be sifted out again, wood touched by fire becomes fire, a stream keeps its name only until the ocean takes it. In each case the smaller thing loses its separate identity in the greater. He tells the doubting, calculating mind to stop, because this is not a thing logic can divide. What carries a person across is not argument but pure, single-hearted faith.

GATHA 2179 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the three together

मराठी मूळ

भक्ति तें नमन वैराग्य तो त्याग । ज्ञान ब्रह्मीं भोग ब्रह्मतनु ॥1॥
देहाच्या निरसनें पाविजे या ठाया । माझी ऐसी काया जंव नव्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
उदक अग्न धान्य जाल्या घडे पाक । एकाविण एक कामा नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज केले ते चांचणी । बडबडीची वाणी अथवा सत्य ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Devotion is bowing, dispassion is renunciation, and knowledge is the experience of Brahman in a body made of Brahman. These states are reached by transcending the body, so long as one does not say 'this body is mine.' Just as cooking requires water, fire, and grain together, and no one element suffices alone, so too all three are needed.

Says Tuka, they have tested me to see whether my speech is mere prattle or truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Devotion is bowing low. Dispassion is letting go. Knowledge is to taste Brahman in a body that is itself Brahman. You reach this place by setting the body aside, by no longer saying this body is mine. Cooking needs water, fire, and grain together; not one of them does the work alone. Tuka says: they have tested me, to see whether my speech is only chatter or the truth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defines three things plainly and then says they must work as one. Devotion is the act of bowing, dispassion is real renunciation, and knowledge is the lived taste of Brahman, found once the body stops being clung to as mine. He insists none of these stands alone, the way cooking needs water, fire, and grain together and no single ingredient will feed you. The closing line is his own stake: he has been put to the test, and he claims his words are truth and not idle talk. The point is that the path is not one trick but the whole of it held together.

GATHA 2180 The Saints

Saints, gratitude for grace

मराठी मूळ

श्रीसंतांचिया माथा चरणांवरी । साष्टांग हें करीं दंडवत ॥1॥
विश्रांती पावलों सांभाळउत्तरीं । वाढलें अंतरीं प्रेमसुखें॥ध्रु.॥
डौरली हे काया कृपेच्या वोरसें । नव्हे अनारिसें उद्धरलों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज न घडतां सेवा । पूर्वपुण्यठेवा वोडवला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I bow my head prostrate at the feet of the blessed saints. I have found rest through their reassuring words, and love and joy have grown within.

This body has blossomed under the rain of their grace; I have been uplifted, transformed beyond recognition. Says Tuka, though I could not serve them properly, the treasure of past merit has come to my aid.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I lay my head on the feet of the blessed saints. I bow flat on the ground before them. Their steadying words have given me rest. Love and joy have grown inside me. This body has bloomed in the downpour of their grace. I am not what I was; I have been lifted up. Tuka says: though I never served them as I should, the store of merit from before has come to my aid.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is thanking the saints and crediting them, not himself, for his change. He prostrates fully before them and says it was their reassuring words that gave him rest and made love and joy grow within him. The image of the body blooming under rain says the transformation came from their grace falling on him, not from his own effort. He admits he never managed to serve them properly, so he assigns even his good fortune to merit stored up from an earlier time. The whole poem keeps the credit outside the self.

GATHA 2181 The Saints

Saints, the missed meeting

मराठी मूळ

नेणों काय नाड । आला उचित काळा आड ॥1॥
नाहीं जाली संतभेटी । येवढी हानी काय मोठी ॥ध्रु.॥
सहज पायांपासीं । जवळी पावलिया ऐसी ॥2॥
चुकी जाली आतां काय। तुका ह्मणे उरली हाय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know what obstacle came in the way at the appointed time. Not meeting the saints is truly the greatest loss.

Even when I had come so close to their feet, I missed the chance. Says Tuka, the opportunity is lost now, and only regret remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know what got in the way. Something blocked me at the very time I should have gone. The meeting with the saints did not happen. Is there any greater loss than this? I had come so near, right up to their feet. And the chance slipped. The mistake is made now; what can I do? Tuka says: only the ache of it is left.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is grieving a meeting with the saints that he failed to keep. He does not know what obstacle stopped him at the appointed hour, and he names this missed meeting as the greatest loss a person can suffer. The sharp pain is that he was already close, right at their feet, and still let the moment go. He does not excuse it; he calls it his own mistake and says nothing can undo it now. What remains is regret, which the poem holds up as a warning not to let such a chance pass.

GATHA 2182 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the single refuge

मराठी मूळ

आणीक कांहीं नेणें । असें पायांच्या चिंतनें ॥1॥
माझा न व्हावा विसर । नाहीं आणीक आधार ॥ध्रु.॥
भांडवल सेवा। हा चि ठेवियेला ठेवा ॥2॥
करीं मानभावा । तुका विनंती करी देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I know nothing else; I live in the contemplation of Your feet. May I never forget You, for I have no other support.

Service is my capital; this is the only treasure I have stored. Says Tuka, I make this humble plea to You, O God, with all sincerity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I know nothing else. I live in the thought of Your feet. Let me never forget You; I have no other support. Service is my only capital. This is the one treasure I have laid up. Tuka says: with all my heart I make this plea to You, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for one thing only: never to forget God. He says he knows nothing else and dwells entirely in the thought of God's feet, which are his only support. He owns no wealth but service, and he calls that his single stored-up treasure. The poem is a plain, whole-hearted petition, narrowing everything down to remembrance and devotion. It models a faith that asks for nothing but the grace to keep holding on.

GATHA 2183 Autobiography

Autobiography, the stammering child

मराठी मूळ

आरुश माझी वाणी बोबडीं उत्तरें । केली ते लेकुरें सलगी पायीं ॥1॥
करावें कवतुक संतीं मायबापीं । जीवन देउनि रोपीं विस्तारिजे ॥ध्रु.॥
आधारें वदली प्रसादाची वाणी । उच्छिष्टसेवणी तुमचिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हे चि करितों विनंती । मागोनि पुढती सेवादान ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My speech is rough, my words stammering; like a child, I have taken liberties at Your feet. O saints, O mother and father, nurture this as one would a tender plant, giving it water to grow.

It is by Your grace that this tongue has spoken, feeding on the remnants of Your own words. Says Tuka, this alone is my prayer: grant me the gift of service again and again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My speech is rough, my words come out stammering. Like a child I have taken liberties at Your feet. O saints, my mother and father, take delight in it. Pour water on this seedling and let it spread. It was on Your support that this tongue spoke at all. I was only feeding on the leavings of Your own words. Tuka says: this is the one thing I ask: give me again, and again, the gift of service.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is being deliberately small before the saints, calling his own poetry rough and stammering. He casts himself as a child taking liberties at their feet and asks them, as his mother and father, to be pleased with it and to nurture it like a tender plant. He gives them the credit for the speech itself: whatever he sang came from leaning on them and feeding on the scraps of their own words. His one request is not fame or release but more chances to serve. The poem turns humility into a prayer for continued devotion.

GATHA 2184 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false role

मराठी मूळ

पुरुषा हातीं कंकणचुडा । नवल दोडा वृत्त या ॥1॥
पाहा कैसी विटंबणा । नारायणा देखिली ॥ध्रु.॥
जळो ऐसी ि◌ब्रदावळी। भाटवोळीपणाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहों डोळां । अवकळा नये हे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A man wearing bangles and bridal ornaments on his wrists; what a strange and perverse sight. See what a humiliation this is, O Narayana.

Let such a display of hollow titles burn. Says Tuka, one cannot bear to witness such degradation with open eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man with bridal bangles on his wrists. What a strange and twisted sight. Look at this disgrace, O Narayana. Let such a parade of hollow titles burn. Tuka says: the eyes cannot bear to watch such a falling-off.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is sickened by a man putting on what is not his, wearing bridal ornaments that do not belong to him, and he reads it as a sign of false display. He turns to Narayana and calls the sight a humiliation, then curses the empty titles and boasting it stands for. The harshness is aimed at the pattern of pretending to be what you are not, of dressing up in borrowed honors. The closing line says plainly that such self-degradation is painful even to look at. The mirror it holds up asks whether we are wearing roles and titles we have not earned.

GATHA 2185 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the tyranny of the belly

मराठी मूळ

वितीयेवढेंसें पोट । केवढा बोभाट तयाचा ॥1॥
जळो याची विटंबना । भूक जना नाचवी ॥ध्रु.॥
अभिमान सिरीं भार । जाले खर तृष्णेचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नरका जावें । हा चि जीवें व्यापार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The belly is only the span of a hand, yet what a great commotion it creates. Let this humiliation burn; hunger makes the whole world dance.

Pride sits heavy on the head; people have become donkeys carrying the load of craving. Says Tuka, one must go to hell; this is the only trade the jiva knows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The belly is no bigger than a hand-span, yet look at the uproar it makes. Let this humiliation burn. Hunger sets the whole world dancing. Pride is a weight on the head; people have turned into donkeys hauling the load of craving. Tuka says: this trade, the only one the soul keeps practicing, leads straight to hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing how a small thing, the belly, drives a whole life. He marvels that something only a hand-span wide can throw a person into so much noise and shame, and says hunger alone makes the entire world dance to its tune. He turns the picture on pride and greed: people carry craving the way a donkey carries a load, bent under it. The harsh verdict is that a life spent only in this trade of feeding and grasping ends in hell. The point of self-examination is to see how much of our striving is just the belly and craving giving the orders.

GATHA 2186 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the heart of stone

मराठी मूळ

सेवटासी जरी आलें । तरी जालें आंधळें ॥1॥
स्वहिताचा लेश नाहीं । दगडा कांहीं अंतरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय परिसासवें भेटी । खापरखुंटी जालिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अधम जन । अवगुणें चि वाढवी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even at the end, when the final moment arrives, one remains blind. There is not a trace of self-interest within; the chitta is like a stone.

What good is meeting the philosopher's stone if one has already become a worthless potsherd? Says Tuka, a wicked person only grows in faults.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even at the end, when the last moment comes, he stays blind. Not a trace of his own good is in him; inside, he is just a stone. What use is meeting the philosopher's stone once you have already become a broken shard? Tuka says: the low person only grows greater in his faults.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning against a heart that never softens, even at death. The blind man here is anyone who reaches the final hour with no care for his own true good, hardened inward like a stone. The image of the philosopher's stone is sharp: even the touch that turns iron to gold is wasted on a broken potsherd, on someone who has let himself become worthless to it. The closing line names the danger as a direction of growth: left unchecked, faults do not stay still, they increase. The verse points at the pattern of a closing, hardening life and urges the listener not to let his own heart turn to stone.

GATHA 2187 Autobiography

Autobiography, fearless correction

मराठी मूळ

प्रायिश्चत्तें देतो तुका । जातो लोकां सकळां ॥1॥
धरितील ते तरती मनीं । जाती घाणी वांयां त्या ॥ध्रु.॥
निग्रहअनुग्रहाचे ठाय । देतो घाय पाहोनि ॥2॥
तुका जाला नरसिंहीं । भय नाहीं कृपेनें ॥3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tuka offers atonement to all people. Those who hold it in their minds will be saved; the rest will go to waste.

He gives blows of correction and grace, seeing who needs which. Tuka has become fearless like Narasimha, by the power of grace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka gives out the medicine of atonement. It goes to all people. Those who hold it in their minds will cross over. The rest will be wasted, their lives spilled out for nothing. He strikes where a blow is needed and shows grace where grace is needed, looking first to see which is called for. Tuka says: I have become like Narasimha. By grace, I have no fear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing his own role as one who offers atonement freely to everyone. He says the offer is open to all, but only those who take it to heart will be saved; the rest let their lives run to waste. He claims the discernment to know when to correct sharply and when to be gentle, giving each according to need. The image of Narasimha, the fierce protective form, says he has become fearless, and he credits that fearlessness to grace rather than to himself. The poem owns a hard, dual ministry, blows and tenderness both, grounded in mercy.

GATHA 2188 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the inner filth

मराठी मूळ

दुर्जनाचें अंग अवघें चि सरळ । नकानचा कोथळ सांटवण ॥1॥
खाय अमंगळ बोले अमंगळ । उठवी कपाळ संघष्टणें ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्पा मंत्र चाले धरावया हातीं । खळाची ते जाती निखळे चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं न साहे उपमा । आणीक अधमा वोखटएाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wicked person's body may appear smooth on the outside, but within is a sack of filth. He eats what is impure, speaks what is impure, and strikes his forehead in quarrels.

A serpent can be charmed by mantras and taken in hand, but the nature of a villain never straightens. Says Tuka, no comparison is adequate for one so wretched and vile.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wicked man's body looks smooth all over, but inside he is a sack stuffed with filth. He eats what is foul and speaks what is foul, and bangs his own forehead in his quarrels. A snake can be charmed by a mantra and taken up in the hand, but the nature of a scoundrel never goes straight. Tuka says: no comparison is enough for one so vile; nothing is as low as such a low man.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is contrasting a smooth surface with a foul inside to expose a pattern of hidden corruption. The body of the wicked may look unblemished, but within it is a sack of filth, and that inner state shows itself in foul eating, foul speech, and a temper that lashes out even against itself in quarrels. The sharpest line says even a snake can be tamed by mantra and held in the hand, but a scoundrel's crooked nature will not straighten by any means. He gives up on finding a fit comparison, saying nothing is as low as this. The verse asks the listener to look past appearances, and to examine whether the inside matches the smooth outside.

GATHA 2189 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, keep good company

मराठी मूळ

ऐका जी संतजन । सादर मन करूनि ॥1॥
सकळांचें सार एक । कंटक ते तजावे ॥ध्रु.॥
विशेषता कांद्याहूनि । सेवित्या घाणी आगळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याची जोडी । ते परवडी बैसीजे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, O holy ones, with attentive minds. The essence for all is one: avoid those who are like thorns.

Worse than an onion is the stench of one who consumes it. Says Tuka, sit in the company of those whose companionship is profitable.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, holy ones, with attentive minds. The essence of it all is one: keep away from those who are like thorns. A man who eats an onion stinks worse than the onion itself. Tuka says: sit in the company of those whose company pays.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram addresses the assembly of devotees and reduces the whole teaching to a single rule about company. He tells them to avoid harmful people the way you avoid thorns, since their nearness wounds. The onion image sharpens the warning: the one who feeds on something foul carries its stench further than the thing itself, so the harm of bad company spreads through the one who keeps it. He closes by pointing the choice the other way, toward the company of the good, which alone is profitable. The point is not to despise people but to watch which company you let shape you.

GATHA 2190 The Saints

Surrender to the saints, the dust of their feet

मराठी मूळ

आज्ञा पाळुनियां असें एकसरें । तुमचीं उत्तरें संतांचीं हीं ॥1॥
भागवूनि देह ठेवियेला पायीं । चरणावरि डोई येथुनें चि॥ध्रु.॥
येणें जाणें हें तों उपाधीचे मूळ । पूजा ते सकळ अकर्तव्य ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असें चरणींचा रज । पदीं च सहज जेथें तेथें ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I abide steadfastly by your commands, O saints. I have surrendered this body at Your feet, keeping my head upon Your feet from this place onward.

Coming and going is the root of worldly entanglement; all worship beyond this is unnecessary action. Says Tuka, I am the dust of Your feet, naturally present wherever I may be.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I keep your commands, holy ones, every one of them; your words are the saints' words to me. I have worn out this body at your feet, my head on your feet from here onward. Coming and going is the root of all entanglement; every worship beyond this is needless doing. Tuka says: I am the dust of your feet, present at your feet wherever I am.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the saints' word his whole law and lays his body at their feet as the one act that matters. He calls coming and going, the restless movement of a self that keeps wandering, the very root of worldly bondage, and so dismisses elaborate worship as needless effort once surrender is complete. What he asks instead is the smallest place possible: to be the dust of their feet. By saying he is present at their feet wherever he is, he claims that this surrender is not tied to a spot but is carried in him everywhere. The spareness is the point; one resting place replaces all the doing.

GATHA 2191 Faith and Trust

Faith, settle and stay close

मराठी मूळ

न संडावा ठाव । ऐसा निश्चयाचा भाव ॥1॥
आतां पुरे पुन्हा यात्रा । हें चि सारूनि सर्वत्रा ॥ध्रु.॥
संनिध चि सेवा । असों करुनियां देवा ॥2॥
आज्ञोच्या पाळणें । असें तुका संतां ह्मणे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not abandon one's place; such should be the resolve of faith. No more pilgrimages now; let everything be settled here.

Let me remain close, serving God always. Says Tuka to the saints, I abide by following Your command.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One should not leave one's place; let the resolve of faith be this firm. No more pilgrimages now; let everything be settled right here. Let me stay close, always serving God. Tuka says to the saints: I abide by keeping your command.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a vow to stop moving. He sets down the wandering of pilgrimage and resolves that the place he is in is the place to stay, because faith does not need to go elsewhere to find what it seeks. The nearness he wants is to God, served without leaving; staying put is itself the service. He tells the saints that obeying their command is how he holds to this. The poem turns settledness into devotion: God is found by staying close, not by searching far.

GATHA 2192 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, lived under God's will

मराठी मूळ

उपाधीजें बीज । जळोनि राहिलें सहज ॥1॥
आह्मां राहिली ते आतां । चाली देवाचिया सत्ता ॥ध्रु.॥
प्राधीन तें जिणें । केलें सत्ता नारायणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाणें पाय । खुंटले आणीक उपाय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The seed of worldly entanglement has been burned, and what remains is natural ease. The way we now walk is governed by God's will alone.

This dependent living has been ordained by Narayana's authority. Says Tuka, I know only His feet; all other remedies have ceased.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The seed of entanglement has burned up, and what is left is natural ease. The way I walk now runs by God's authority. This dependent life has been set in place by Narayana's power. Tuka says: I know only his feet; every other remedy has stopped.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a self that has stopped running its own life. The seed of worldly entanglement, the source from which trouble keeps growing, has been burned, so what remains is unforced ease. He says his every step is now governed by God, and he calls this a dependent life, not a failure but a settled condition ordained by Narayana. He has let go of all other methods and clings only to God's feet. The claim is radical: he no longer manages himself, and treats that loss of control as freedom rather than loss.

GATHA 2193 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion misplaced

मराठी मूळ

गोविंदावांचोनि वदे ज्याची वाणी । हगवण घाणी पिटपिट ते ॥1॥
मस्तक सांडूनि सिसफूल गुडघां । चार तो अवघा बावळ्याचा ॥ध्रु.॥
अंगभूत ह्मूण पूजितो वाहाणा । ह्मणतां शाहाणा येइल कैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेश्या सांगे सवासिणी । इतर पूजनीं भाव तैसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The tongue that speaks without uttering Govinda's name produces nothing but foul and putrid noise. One who adorns his knees instead of his head with the sacred mark is wholly a fool.

He who worships his own shoes because they are part of his body, how can he ever become wise? Says Tuka, a courtesan lecturing a chaste wife on propriety; such is the devotion of those who worship lesser things.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The tongue that speaks without Govinda's name makes only foul, sputtering filth. The man who drops the mark from his head and puts it on his knees is wholly a fool. He worships his own shoe because it is part of his body; how will such a man ever turn out wise? Tuka says: a courtesan lecturing a faithful wife on virtue, that is the devotion of those who worship lesser things.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks worship that has lost its center. Speech without God's name, he says, is not neutral but foul; the mark of devotion belongs on the head, and to set it on the knees is to honor what is low and call it holy. The man worshiping his own shoe because it belongs to his body names the absurdity of revering whatever is near at hand instead of God. The closing image is the sharpest: misplaced devotion teaching others about devotion is like a courtesan instructing a faithful wife on chastity. The target is the pattern of honoring lesser things and dressing it up as piety, a confusion worth examining in oneself.

GATHA 2194 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the incorrigible man

मराठी मूळ

कुत†याऐसें ज्याचें जिणें । संग कोणी न करीजे॥1॥
जाय तिकडे हाडहाडी । गो†हवाडी च सोइरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
अवगुणांचा त्याग नाहीं । खवळे पाहीं उपदेशें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कैंची लवी । ठेंग्या केवीं अंकुर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One whose life is like a dog's should not be kept in company. Wherever he goes there is only hostility; his only kin are those of the gutter.

His faults do not diminish; in fact, counsel only inflames them further. Says Tuka, how can a stump that is dead sprout any shoots?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One whose life is like a dog's: do not keep his company. Wherever he goes there is only snarling; his only kin are gutter folk. His faults never lessen; counsel only inflames him. Tuka says: where is the green shoot? How can a dead stump sprout?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against the company of a man who cannot be corrected. He likens such a life to a dog's, met everywhere with hostility and at home only among the low. The hard observation is that good advice does not help this man; it angers him and makes his faults worse, so counsel is wasted on him. The closing image, a dead stump that cannot put out a shoot, names the condition: there is no living root for the teaching to take hold in. The point is discernment about who can receive correction, not contempt for the person, and a warning to examine whether one is hardening against counsel oneself.

GATHA 2195 Worldly Life

Worldly life, weary of bad company

मराठी मूळ

सर्वथा ही खोटा संग । उपजे भंग मनासी ॥1॥
बहु रंगें भरलें जन । संपन्न चि अवगुणी ॥ध्रु.॥
सेविलिया निःकामबुद्धी। मदें शुद्धी सांडवी ॥2॥
त्रासोनियां बोले तुका । आतां लोकां दंडवत ॥3॥ ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The company of the wicked is wholly false; it only breeds disturbance in the mind. The world is full of colorful displays, abundantly endowed with faults.

Even serving the desireless, arrogance makes one abandon good sense. Says Tuka, weary of it all, I now bow to the world from a distance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The company of the wicked is wholly false; it only breeds disturbance in the mind. People are full of bright displays, richly endowed with faults. Even when served with no selfish aim, pride makes a man lose his good sense. Worn out by it, Tuka says: now I bow to the world from a distance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how the company of bad people unsettles the mind and how the world's brightness only dresses up its faults. He notes that even disinterested service does not cure the proud, because arrogance itself drives out clear judgment, so the corruption is not easily reached from outside. Exhausted by all this, he chooses distance rather than confrontation: he bows to the world, but from afar. The gesture is both respect and withdrawal, a refusal to be drawn into the disturbance. The weariness is honest, and the response is to step back rather than to fight.

GATHA 2196 Renunciation

Renunciation, done with worldly ways

मराठी मूळ

उपचारासी वांज जालों । नका बोलों यावरी ॥1॥
असेल तें असो तैसें । भेटीसरिसें नमन ॥ध्रु.॥
दुस†यामध्यें कोण मिळे । छंद चाळे बहु मतें ॥2॥
एकाएकीं आतां तुका । लौकिका या बाहेरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become barren to worldly remedies; do not speak of them further. Let things be as they are; I bow to whatever I meet.

Who can I find to truly join with, when there are so many whims and inclinations? Says Tuka, now I stand alone, beyond the pale of worldly convention.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have gone barren to worldly remedies; speak of them no more. Let things be as they are; I bow to whatever I meet. Whom can I truly join with, where there are so many whims and notions? Tuka says: now I stand alone, outside the world's conventions.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares himself finished with the world's fixes; he can no longer bear to hear them proposed. He accepts whatever comes and offers a bow to all alike, refusing to take sides among people's endless opinions and fancies. Finding no one to genuinely unite with in that confusion, he chooses solitude over false fellowship. He places himself outside worldly convention, not from pride but from exhaustion with its noise. The poem is a quiet stepping out: peace is found by ceasing to argue and standing alone.

GATHA 2197 Renunciation

Detachment, each to his own

मराठी मूळ

मी तें मी तूं तें तूं । कुंकुड हें लाडसी ॥1॥
वचनासी पडो तुटी । पोटींचें पोटीं राखावें ॥ध्रु.॥
तेथील तेथें येथील येथें । वेगळ्या कुंथे कोण भारें ॥2॥
याचें यास त्याचें त्यास । तुक्यानें कास घातली ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am I, and you are you; let this foolish clucking cease. Let speech be cut short; what is in the belly should stay in the belly.

What belongs here stays here, what belongs there stays there; why should anyone groan under another's burden? Says Tuka, each to his own; I have girded myself for my own path.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am I, and you are you; let this silly clucking stop. Let talk be cut short; keep what is in the belly inside the belly. What belongs there stays there, what belongs here stays here; why should anyone groan under another's load? Tuka says: each man's own to himself; I have girded up for my own road.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a firm line between himself and others and tells the endless chatter to cease. He counsels keeping one's inner matters within rather than spilling them in argument. The image of carrying another's burden names the trouble he refuses: taking on what is not yours leaves you groaning under a weight you were never meant to bear. Letting each thing and each person keep to their own place, he girds himself for his own path alone. This is detachment as boundary, not coldness: tend your own road and let others tend theirs.

GATHA 2198 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the crow that seeks filth

मराठी मूळ

लाडाच्या उत्तरीं वाढविती कलहे । हा तो अमंगळ जातिगुण ॥1॥
तमाचे शरीरीं विटाळ चि वसे । विचाराचा नसे लेश तो ही ॥ध्रु.॥
कवतुकें घ्यावे लेंकराचे बोल । साहिलिया मोल ऐसें नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय उपदेश खळा । न्हाउनि काउळा खतें धुंडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Indulgent words only breed quarrels; this is the nature of tamasic people. In a body ruled by tamas, only impurity dwells; not even a trace of discrimination exists.

One may enjoy a child's innocent prattle, but enduring malice is another matter entirely. Says Tuka, what use is preaching to the wicked? A crow, even after bathing, goes searching through filth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Indulgent words only swell quarrels; this is the foul nature of tamasic people. A body ruled by tamas holds only defilement; not a trace of discernment lives there. A child's innocent prattle one can enjoy; but to endure malice is another thing entirely. Tuka says: what use is preaching to the wicked? A crow, even after a bath, goes looking through filth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the nature ruled by tamas, the heavy darkness in which quarrels grow and no power of discernment survives. He marks a sharp difference between a child's harmless babble, which can be indulged, and a grown person's malice, which should not be tolerated. The closing image lands the claim: preaching to such a person is useless, for he returns to his old foulness the way a crow, washed clean, still flies straight back to filth. The point is the durability of the pattern, not contempt for the soul; teaching cannot fix what keeps choosing its own corruption. It is a caution to examine where one's own nature keeps returning.

GATHA 2199 Prayers

Prayer, deliver me from desire

मराठी मूळ

आतां मज देवा । इचे हातींचें सोडवा ॥1॥
पाठी लागलीसे लांसी । इच्छा जिते जैसी तैसी ॥ध्रु.॥
फेडा आतां पांग। अंगीं लपवुनी अंग ॥2॥
दुजें नेणें तुका । कांहीं तुह्मासी ठाउका॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, deliver me now from the grip of desire. She pursues me relentlessly, this craving, alive and insistent as ever.

Fulfill Your vow now; hide me by covering me with Your own being. Says Tuka, I know nothing else; I am well known to You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, God, free me from her grip. This craving hounds me, alive and relentless as ever. Fulfill your promise now; hide me, covering me with your own self. Tuka says: I know no other; I am well known to you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays to be rescued from desire, which he pictures as a force that hunts him without rest. He cannot escape it by his own strength, so he asks God to make good on his promise and to hide him, covering him with God's own being as the only refuge. He admits he knows no other help, and reminds God that he himself is fully known, leaving nothing to hide and no one else to turn to. The prayer is bare and dependent: deliverance from craving is not something he can win but something he must be given.

GATHA 2200 Prayers

Prayer, trapped by lust and delusion

मराठी मूळ

बहु वाटे भये । माझे उडी घाला दये ॥1॥
फांसा गुंतलों लिगाडीं । न चले बळ चरफडी ॥ध्रु.॥
कुंटित चि युक्ति । माझ्या जाल्या सर्व शक्ति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । काममोहें केला गोवा ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Great fear grips me; O Compassionate One, take the leap for me. I am entangled in the snare of attachments; my strength fails and I thrash about helplessly.

All my faculties and powers have been rendered useless. Says Tuka, O God, lust and delusion have trapped me utterly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Great fear grips me; Compassionate One, leap to me. I am caught in the snare of attachments; my strength fails and I thrash about. All my faculties and powers have gone useless. Tuka says: God, lust and delusion have trapped me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out in fear, like one caught in a snare whose struggling only tires him. He confesses that his own faculties and strength have stopped working; nothing in him can break the trap of attachment. Naming the cause plainly, he says lust and delusion have bound him, and only God's compassion, leaping to him, can free him. The honesty is the heart of it: he does not pretend to manage the fight himself but admits total helplessness and throws himself on grace. The prayer turns the failure of his own powers into the very reason to call on God.

GATHA 2201 Social Criticism

Social criticism, keep clear of the wicked

मराठी मूळ

विष्ठा भक्षी तया अमृत पारिखें । वोंगळ चि सखें वोंगळाचें ॥1॥
नये पाहों कांहीं गो†हवाडीचा अंत । झणी ठाका संत दुर्जनापें ॥ध्रु.॥
भेंसळीच्या बीजा अमंगळ गुण । उपजवी सीण दरुषणें ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who eats filth finds nectar foreign to his taste; the vulgar are only friends with the vulgar. Do not go looking into the affairs of the gutter folk; saints, be cautious and stay far from the wicked.

The seed of bad company produces impure qualities and breeds suffering at the very sight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who eats filth thinks it is nectar. The vulgar are friends only with the vulgar. Do not go looking into the affairs of gutter folk. Saints, be careful; stay far from the wicked. The seed of bad company brings impure qualities. The very sight of it breeds suffering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning the devout to choose their company well. He says a corrupt person mistakes filth for nectar and is at home only with others like himself, so there is no use trying to fix or fathom such people. The danger is not the wicked person alone but proximity to them: bad company is a seed that sprouts impure qualities in whoever stays near. He tells the saints to keep their distance, because even the sight of corruption breeds suffering and begins to work on you.

GATHA 2202 Social Criticism

Social criticism, wealth that serves nothing

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे छी थूं जया घरीं धन । तेथें तें कारण कासयाचें ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, shame on the house where such wealth resides; what purpose can anything serve there?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: shame on the house where such wealth lives. What purpose can anything serve there?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram's closing line to the criticism that came before it. He calls down shame on a household whose riches sit beside corruption, because wealth in such hands serves no good end. The point is not that money is evil but that everything turns useless when the people holding it are rotten. He measures a house not by what it owns but by what its owning is good for.

GATHA 2203 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the heedless and karma

मराठी मूळ

चावळलें काय न करी बडबड । न ह्मणे फिकें गोड भुकेलें तें ॥1॥
उमजल्याविण न धरी सांभाळ । असो खळखळ जनाची हे ॥ध्रु.॥
गरज्या न कळे आपुलिया चाडा । करावी ते पीडा कोणा काई ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भोग भोगितील भोगें । संचित तें जोगें आहे कोणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A restless tongue babbles without ceasing; a starving person does not distinguish between stale and fresh. Without understanding, one cannot exercise restraint; let the clamor of the world be as it may.

The needy one does not recognize his own wants; why should he inflict his pain on others? Says Tuka, people will reap what their accumulated karma has sown; let each one's past deeds answer for them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A restless tongue babbles without stopping. A starving person does not tell stale food from fresh. Without understanding, no one holds any restraint. Let the clamor of the world be as it is. The needy one does not see his own wants. Why should he force his pain onto others? Tuka says: people will reap what their gathered deeds have sown. Each one's past answers for them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing how people without inner understanding behave, and where he leaves them. The hungry and the restless cannot discriminate or restrain themselves; lacking insight, they babble and grab, and the world stays noisy with this. He notices that the needy, blind to their own craving, end up inflicting their pain on others. Rather than condemn them, he hands the matter to karma: each person reaps what their accumulated deeds have planted, so their own past, not his judgment, will settle the account.

GATHA 2204 Renunciation

Renunciation, having vomited the world

मराठी मूळ

आपुला तो देह आह्मां उपेक्षीत । कोठें जाऊं हित सांगों कोणा ॥1॥
कोण नाहीं दक्ष करितां संसार । आह्मीं हा विचार वमन केला ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं या धरीत जीवित्वाची चाड । कोठें करूं कोड आणिकांचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असों चिंतोनियां देवा । मी माझें हा हेवा सारूनियां ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I have forsaken care for my own body, where shall I go to speak of welfare, and to whom? Everyone is diligent enough in pursuing worldly life; I have vomited out that whole affair. I hold no attachment to this fleeting existence; how then can I attend to others' desires? Says Tuka, let me remain in contemplation of God, having settled the envy of 'me and mine.'

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have given up all care for my own body. Where would I go now to speak of welfare, and to whom? Everyone is busy enough chasing the worldly life. That whole affair I have vomited out. I hold no clinging to this passing life. How then could I tend to other people's wishes? Tuka says: let me stay in thought of God, having pushed aside the envy of 'me and mine.'

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why he no longer plays the game of worldly striving. Having let go of concern even for his own body, he has nowhere and no one with whom to discuss gain and advantage. He puts the renunciation starkly: he has vomited out the whole pursuit of worldly life that everyone else runs after. Without attachment to his fleeting existence and free of the grip of 'me and mine,' he has no business managing others' desires; he wants only to remain absorbed in God.

GATHA 2205 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, wages without service

मराठी मूळ

चाकरीवांचून । खाणें अनुचित वेतन ॥1॥
धणी काढोनियां निजा । करील ये कामाची पूजा ॥ध्रु.॥
उचितावेगळें । अभिलाषें तोंड काळें ॥2॥
सांगे तरी तुका । पाहा लाज नाहीं लोकां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To eat wages without rendering service is improper. The master will dismiss such a one and honor the work that is truly done.

To desire beyond what is fitting only blackens one's face. Says Tuka, look, the people have no shame at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To eat the wages without doing the work is not right. The master will turn out such a one and honor the work that is truly done. To want more than is fitting only blackens your face. Tuka says: look, people have no shame at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets a plain standard of honesty using the figure of a servant and a master. Taking pay without rendering the service is wrong, and the master will dismiss the idler and reward only real work. Reaching for more than your due brings disgrace; that is what blackening the face means. He turns the small example into a verdict on the times: people grab beyond what they have earned and feel no shame doing it. The mirror is meant for the listener's own conscience.

GATHA 2206 Worldly Life

Worldly life, stay alert to the hour

मराठी मूळ

बरें सावधान । राहावें समय राखोन ॥1॥
नाहीं सारखिया वेळा । अवघ्या पावतां अवकळा ॥ध्रु.॥
लाभ अथवा हानी । थोडएामध्यें च भोवनी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे राखा । आपणा नाहीं तोंचि वाखा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Remain well alert, watching for the right moment. All times are not equal; misfortune can overtake anyone.

Gain or loss can turn in the briefest span. Says Tuka, guard yourself; the one who fails to do so is vulnerable.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stay well alert. Keep watch on the right moment. All times are not the same. Misfortune can overtake anyone. Gain or loss can turn in the briefest span. Tuka says: guard yourself. The one who does not is the one left exposed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is counseling watchfulness in the face of life's turning. Times are not all alike; fortune and ruin can switch places in an instant, and no one is exempt. So he urges steady alertness, reading the hour and keeping watch rather than drifting. The one who fails to guard himself is precisely the one left vulnerable when the moment turns. The verse is practical caution, but underneath it lies the reminder that nothing here is secure.

GATHA 2207 Confession and Sin

Confession, the restless monkey

मराठी मूळ

काय करूं जी दातारा । कांहीं न पुरे संसारा ॥1॥
जाली माकडाची परि । येतों तळा जातों वरी ॥ध्रु.॥
घालीं भलते ठायीं हात । होती शिव्या बैस लात ॥2॥
आदि अंतीं तुका । सांगे न कळे झाला चुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O generous Lord, what shall I do? Nothing ever suffices for this worldly life. I have become like a monkey, going up and down ceaselessly.

I put my hand into every affair and receive abuse and kicks in return. Says Tuka, from beginning to end I keep failing, and I cannot even tell where my mistakes lie.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O generous Lord, what shall I do? Nothing is ever enough for this worldly life. I have become like a monkey, going down and climbing up again and again. I put my hand into every affair and get curses and kicks in return. Tuka says: from beginning to end I keep failing, and I cannot even tell where my mistakes lie.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is confessing his own helplessness in worldly life and laying it before God. He likens himself to a monkey that never settles, scrambling up and down, never satisfied no matter what he gains. Meddling in every affair, he reaps only abuse and blows. The sharpest stroke is the last: he keeps failing from start to finish and cannot even locate his own mistakes. The confession turns toward the Lord because Tukaram knows that the way out of this restless, blind floundering is not his own cleverness but grace.

GATHA 2208 Worldly Life

Worldly life, Maya the puppeteer

मराठी मूळ

धर्म तो न कळे । काय झांकितील डोळे ॥1॥
जीव भ्रमले या कामें । कैसीं कळों येती वर्में ॥ध्रु.॥
विषयांचा माज । कांहीं धरुं नेदी लाज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लांसी । माया नाचविते कैसी ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dharma is not understood; people just shut their eyes. Jivas are bewildered by lust; how can they perceive any truth? The intoxication of sense pleasures will not let one hold on to any sense of shame.

Says Tuka, see how Maya makes everyone dance like a puppet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dharma is not understood. People simply shut their eyes. Living beings are bewildered by lust. How can they perceive any truth? The intoxication of the senses will not let them hold on to any shame. Tuka says: see how Maya makes everyone dance like a puppet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the condition that keeps people blind to right living. They do not grasp dharma; they close their eyes to it, dazed by craving so that no truth can reach them. Drunk on sense pleasure, they lose even the shame that might check them. He gives the whole spectacle one image: Maya, the world's deluding power, holds the strings and makes everyone dance like puppets. The point is not contempt for any one person but recognition of the force that moves us all when we stop looking.

GATHA 2209 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the slanderer's trade

मराठी मूळ

दुर्जनाची जोडी । सज्जनाचे खेंटर तोडी ॥1॥
पाहे निमित्य तें उणें । धांवे छळावया सुनें ॥ध्रु.॥
न ह्मणे रामराम । मनें वाचे हें चि काम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भागा । आली निंदा करी मागा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The company of the wicked breaks the bonds of the good. The villain looks for the smallest flaw and rushes to persecute with cunning.

He never utters Rama's name; his sole occupation, in word and thought, is malice. Says Tuka, slander has come as his inheritance, and he pursues it relentlessly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The company of the wicked breaks the bonds among the good. The villain looks for the smallest fault and runs to harass with cunning, like a dog set loose. He never says Rama, Rama. In thought and word his only work is malice. Tuka says: slander has come to him as his inheritance, and he chases after it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing the portrait of the habitual slanderer and the harm he does. Such a person pries apart the ties between good people, hunting for the tiniest flaw and rushing in to persecute with a dog's relentlessness. His mouth never holds the name of Rama; malice in thought and speech is his entire occupation. Calling slander his inheritance, Tukaram points at how deeply the pattern has become second nature. The warning, set beside the previous verses, is again to know this trade and keep away from it, and to check it in oneself.

GATHA 2210 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow pretender

मराठी मूळ

शादीचें तें सोंग । संपादितां जरा वेंग ॥1॥
पाहा कैसी विटंबना । मूर्खा अभाग्याची जना ॥ध्रु.॥
दिसतें तें लोपी । झिंज्या बोडुनियां पापी ॥2॥
सिंदळी त्या सती । तुका ह्मणे थुंका घेती ॥3॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sanity is just a show; one struggles to keep up appearances. See what a disgrace befalls the foolish and the unfortunate.

What is visible, the wrongdoer tries to conceal, shaving off what little dignity remains. Says Tuka, the unchaste claim to be chaste, yet they lick the spit of their own deception.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sanity is only a show; one strains to keep up the appearance. See what disgrace falls on the foolish and the luckless. What can be seen, the wrongdoer tries to hide, shaving away what little dignity is left. Tuka says: the unchaste call themselves chaste, and so they lick up their own spit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing the gap between a person's display and the truth underneath. Keeping up a respectable front is exhausting and ends in disgrace for the foolish and unfortunate, because what is plainly visible cannot really be hidden, and the effort to conceal it strips off the last of one's dignity. The final image is deliberately ugly: those who are unchaste yet claim to be chaste end up swallowing their own spit, that is, eating their own falsehood. The verse aims at the pattern of pretending to be what one is not, and invites honest self-examination rather than disguise.

GATHA 2211 Social Criticism

Social criticism, false renunciation

मराठी मूळ

भक्ता ह्मणऊनि वंचावें जीवें । तेणें शेण खावें काशासाटीं ॥1॥
नासिले अडबंद कौपीन ते माळा । अडचण राउळामाजी केली ॥ध्रु.॥
अंगीकारिले सेवे अंतराय । तया जाला न्याय खापराचा ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To cheat others in the name of devotion, why should one then eat filth for that? They have spoiled the signs of renunciation, the loincloth and the rosary, and created obstruction in the very temple. Those who have accepted service but placed obstacles in it receive judgment fit for a broken pot.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To cheat people in the name of devotion: why then eat filth for it? They have ruined the marks of renunciation, the loincloth and the rosary, and made trouble inside the very temple. Those who took up service but blocked it get the judgment fit for a broken pot.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking the abuse of religious appearance. To use the show of devotion to swindle others is to sink to eating filth, and for what gain. Such people disgrace the very signs of a renunciant, the loincloth and the rosary, and turn the temple itself, where service should be offered, into a place of obstruction. Those who accepted sacred service and then sabotaged it earn, he says, the worth of a broken pot, fit only to be cast aside. The charge is against the hypocrisy, not against renunciation or the temple.

GATHA 2212 Social Criticism

Social criticism, filth cannot last

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे कोठें तगों येती घाणीं । आहाच ही मनीं अधीरता ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, how long can such filth endure? There is only impatience and restlessness within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: how long can such filth endure? Inside there is only impatience and restlessness.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram's closing stroke on the false and corrupt he has been describing. He asks how long such filth can possibly hold up, the answer being that it cannot. Beneath the pretender's surface there is no peace, only impatience and restlessness churning within. The point is that corruption carries its own undoing: what is hollow inside cannot stand for long.

GATHA 2213 Social Criticism

Social criticism, shun the shameless

मराठी मूळ

गयाळाचें काम हिताचा आवारा । लाज फजितखोरा असत नाहीं ॥1॥
चित्ता न मिळे तें डोळां सलों येतें । असावें परतें जवळूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
न करावा संग न बोलावी मात । सावधान चित्त नाहीं त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुःख देतील माकडें । घालिती सांकडें उफराटें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The work of a lazy person undermines what is beneficial. The shameless one has no sense of embarrassment.

What does not agree with the chitta is painful to the eyes; one should keep a distance from such people. Do not keep their company, do not engage in conversation with them; they have no alertness of mind.

Says Tuka, monkeys will only bring you grief, creating obstacles at every turn.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The work of a lazy person ruins what is good. The shameless one feels no embarrassment. What does not agree with the heart hurts the eyes; keep such people at a distance. Do not keep their company. Do not talk with them. They have no watchfulness of mind. Tuka says: monkeys will only bring you grief; they twist things and make trouble at every turn.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning about the company we keep. He says a careless, shameless person spoils whatever is good and feels nothing about it, and being near such people grates on the heart the way grit grates on the eye. His counsel is plain: keep your distance, do not befriend them, do not even talk with them, because their minds are not awake and they cannot help dragging you down. The comparison to monkeys names the pattern, the restless mischief that twists everything backward, and the verse turns the listener toward guarding the steadiness of their own mind.

GATHA 2214 Renunciation

Renunciation, solitude over company

मराठी मूळ

बहु बरें एकाएकीं । संग चुकी करावा ॥1॥
ऐसें बरें जालें ठावें । अनुभवें आपुल्या ॥ध्रु.॥
सांगावें तें काम मना । सलगी जना नेदावी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निघे अगी । दुजे संगीं आतळतां ॥3॥ ॥2॥
बोलिले कीं कवित्व बुडवणें तेव्हां कवित्व बुडवून पांच दिवस होते ॥
लोकांनीं फार पीडा केली कीं संसारही नाहीं व परमार्थही बुडविला
आणीक कोणी असतें तें जीव देतें मग निद्रा केली ते अभंग ॥ 20 ॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is far better to be alone; one should avoid company altogether. This has become clear through my own experience.

Speak to your own mind what needs to be done, and do not give familiarity to the world. Says Tuka, fire ignites when it touches another; contact with others is perilous.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is far better to be alone. Avoid company altogether. I know this is so from my own experience. Tell your own mind what must be done; do not give the world your familiarity. Tuka says: fire breaks out when it touches another. Contact with others is dangerous.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising solitude and naming why. From his own experience he has found it better to keep apart, to speak the needed counsel to his own mind rather than open himself easily to the crowd. The image of fire catching when it touches something else shows the danger he means: closeness to the wrong company kindles what should stay quiet. The verse points the listener toward inward self-counsel and a guarded, watchful distance from the world.

GATHA 2215 Longing and Separation

Longing, the haunted house of devotion

मराठी मूळ

भूतबाधा आह्मां घरीं । हें तों आश्चर्य गा हरी ॥1॥
जाला भक्तीचा कळस । आले वस्तीस दोष ॥ध्रु.॥
जागरणाचें फळ । दिली जोडोनि तळमळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । आहाच कळों आली सेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That evil spirits should haunt our home is truly astonishing, O Hari. Devotion has reached its pinnacle, yet faults have come to dwell with us.

The fruit of our vigil has been nothing but anguish and torment. Says Tuka, O God, such is the service we have come to know.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Evil spirits haunt our home. This is a strange thing, O Hari. Devotion has reached its highest point, yet faults have come to live with us. The fruit of our long vigil is only anguish, given to us folded together. Tuka says: O God, the service we have come to know is hollow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is crying out in bewilderment to Hari. He has carried devotion to its peak and kept long vigils, yet what has come to dwell with him is not peace but torment, faults and a haunting that should have no place near such bhakti. He says this is astonishing, and the strangeness itself is the complaint: the reward of his service feels empty and the fruit handed back to him is anguish. The verse holds the ache of the devotee who has given everything and finds God still withheld.

GATHA 2216 Longing and Separation

Longing, union or annihilation

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं जों वेचलों जिवाचिया त्यागें । तोंवरी वाउगें काय बोलों ॥1॥
जाणिवलें आतां करीं ये उदेश । जोडी किंवा नाश तुमची जीवें ॥ध्रु.॥
ठायींचे चि आलें होतें ऐसें मना । जावें ऐसें वना दृढ जालें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मग वेचीन उत्तरें । उद्धेसिलें खरें जाल्यावरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Until I have truly spent myself in the sacrifice of my life, why speak empty words? Now, with full awareness, I make this resolve: either union with You or annihilation in the attempt. This intention had been in my mind from the very beginning; the determination to go to the forest has grown firm.

Says Tuka, then I shall spend my words, once what is true has been proven.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Until I have truly spent myself, giving up my very life, why should I speak empty words? Now, with full awareness, I make my resolve: either union with You, or my ruin in the attempt. This was in my mind from the very start. The will to go to the forest has grown firm. Tuka says: then I shall spend my words, once what is true has been proven.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets a final term to his seeking. He refuses to keep talking until he has staked his whole life on it, and he names the only two outcomes he will accept: union with God or destruction in the trying. He says this was his intention from the beginning, and now the resolve to withdraw to the forest has hardened into something settled. The verse lands the stakes of bhakti at their sharpest, where words are worthless until the life behind them has been laid down, and Tukaram promises to speak again only after the truth is proven.

GATHA 2217 Confession and Sin

Confession, the day of reckoning

मराठी मूळ

करूं कवि काय आतां नाही लाज । मज भक्तराज हांसतील ॥1॥
आतां आला एका निवाडएाचा दिस । सत्याविण रस विरसला ॥ध्रु.॥
अनुभवाविण कोण करी पाप । रिते चि संकल्प लाजलावे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां न धरवे धीर । नव्हे जीव िस्थर माझा मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What poetry can I compose now? I have lost all shame. The great devotees will laugh at me.

The day of reckoning has arrived; without truth, all flavor has turned sour. Who commits sin without experience? Empty resolutions should be ashamed of themselves.

Says Tuka, I can no longer hold my patience; my own jiva is not steady within me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What poetry can I make now? I have no shame left. The great devotees will laugh at me. The day of reckoning has come; without truth, all the sweetness has gone flat. Who commits sin without having tasted it? Empty resolutions should be ashamed of themselves. Tuka says: I can hold my patience no longer; my own life is not steady within me.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram turning the knife on himself. He doubts his own verses and fears the laughter of true devotees, because a day of reckoning has arrived where anything not grounded in truth has lost its savor. He confesses that hollow resolutions, vows made without real experience behind them, deserve shame, and he counts himself among those exposed. The verse points inward, at the gap between what one declares and what one has actually lived, and ends in raw unsteadiness: his patience is spent and his own life will not sit still within him.

GATHA 2218 Longing and Separation

Longing, no more empty winnowing

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं आइकत तुह्मी माझे बोल । कासया हें फोल उपणूं भूस ॥1॥
येसी तें करीन बैसलिया ठाया । तूं चि बुझावया जवळी देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
करावे ते केले सकळ उपाय । आतां पाहों काय अझुनि वास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आला आज्ञोसी सेवट । होऊनियां नीट पायां पडों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You do not hear my words. Why then should I thresh this empty chaff? Whatever comes to pass, I shall remain seated here; You Yourself must come close to console me, O God.

I have tried every remedy there was to try. How much longer should I wait? Says Tuka, the end of my endurance has come. Let me simply fall at Your feet with a straightforward chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You do not hear my words. Why should I keep winnowing this empty chaff? Whatever happens, I will stay seated right here; You Yourself must come close to console me, O God. I have tried every remedy there was. How much longer should I keep watching for You? Tuka says: the end of my endurance has come. Let me just stand up straight and fall at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is done with effort and turns it into a final demand of love. He compares his pleading to winnowing empty husks, useless if God will not listen, so he refuses to do more and simply sits, insisting that God must be the one to draw near and comfort him. He has exhausted every remedy and will not keep straining his eyes in waiting. The verse lands on surrender as the last move: when his own endurance is finished, all that is left is to rise and fall plainly at the feet of God.

GATHA 2219 Longing and Separation

Longing, none can match You

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे तुह्मां सरी । येवढें कारण मुरारी ॥1॥
मग जैसा तैसा काळ । दाट सारावा पातळ ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वामींचें तें सांडें । पुत्र होतां काळतोंडें ॥2॥
शब्दा नाहीं रुची । मग कोठें तुका वेची॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No one can match You, O Murari; that much is certain. Then, whatever time remains, dense or thin, must simply be endured.

Even the master's legacy is abandoned when the son turns wicked. When words lose their savor, Says Tuka, where should I spend them?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No one is your equal, O Murari; that much is sure. So whatever time is left, thick or thin, must just be pushed through. Even the master's inheritance is thrown away when the son turns wicked. Tuka says: when words lose their taste, where should I spend them?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram acknowledges God's supremacy and yet voices a tired resignation. He grants that none can match Murari, but the time still left to him, whether dense or thin, now feels like something merely to be endured. The image of a wicked son squandering his father's legacy names the fear that what God has given is being wasted. The verse ends on the loss of savor: when even words have gone flat, the poet no longer knows where to pour them, and the longing shows through the weariness.

GATHA 2220 Autobiography

Autobiography, the true vow ripens

मराठी मूळ

केल्यापुरती आळी । कांहीं होते टाळाटाळी ॥1॥
सत्यसंकल्पाचें फळ । होतां न दिसे चि बळ ॥ध्रु.॥
दळणांच्या ओव्या । रित्या खरें मापें घ्याव्या ॥2॥
जातीं उखळें चाटूं । तुका ह्मणे राज्य घाटूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The excuses served their purpose for a while; there was some delay and avoidance. But when the fruit of a true resolution is ready, no force can hold it back.

The grinding songs of women at the mill are empty; the true measure must be taken honestly. Says Tuka, even while licking the mortar, we scheme for a kingdom.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The excuses worked for a while; there was some putting off and dodging. But when the fruit of a true resolution is ready, no force can hold it back. The grinding songs sung at the mill are empty; let the true measure be taken honestly. Tuka says: even while licking the mortar, we scheme for a kingdom.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back at his own delays and then at the moment they ended. The excuses and stalling served for a time, but a vow that is truly sincere ripens into a fruit that nothing can stop. He contrasts hollow, habitual piety, like songs hummed at the grinding mill, with an honest reckoning of what is real. The closing image of scheming for a kingdom while still scraping the empty mortar names the absurdity he sees in himself and others: grand spiritual ambition voiced from a place of nothing, until the resolve becomes true.

GATHA 2221 Autobiography

Autobiography, the vow to lay down the pen

मराठी मूळ

आतां नेम जाला । या च कळसीं विठ्ठला ॥1॥
हातीं न धरीं लेखणी । काय भुसकट ते वाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणें तेणें काळ । उरला सारीन सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घाटी । चाटू कोरडा शेवटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now the vow is made, O Vitthal, and this is its culmination. I will not take up the pen again; what use is this chaff of speech? However the remaining time goes, I shall pass it all in that manner.

Says Tuka, at the very end, one is left licking a dry ladle.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now the vow is made, O Vitthal, and this is where it comes to its peak. I will not pick up the pen again. What use is this chaff of speech? However the time that is left goes, I will pass all of it that way. Tuka says: at the very end, one is left licking a dry ladle.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares a vow to Vitthal: to set down his pen and write no more, calling his own speech empty chaff. Whatever days remain to him, he intends to spend them in that silence rather than in words he no longer trusts. The final image, of being left licking a dry ladle at the end, names the emptiness he fears: effort that yields nothing to taste. The verse marks a turning point where the poet renounces even his poetry, waiting for what is real.

GATHA 2222 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, asking God to be pleased

मराठी मूळ

पावावे संतोष । तुह्मीं यासाटीं सायास ॥1॥
करीं आवडी वचनें । पालटूनि क्षणक्षणें ॥ध्रु.॥
द्यावें अभयदान । भुमीन पाडावें वचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे परस्परें । कांहीं वाढवीं उत्तरें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You should be pleased; for this purpose we make our efforts. I compose words of devotion, changing them moment by moment.

Grant the gift of fearlessness; do not let Your word fall to the ground. Says Tuka, let us increase our exchange of words, back and forth, together.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You should be pleased; it is for this that we take such pains. I make words of love, changing them moment by moment. Grant the gift of fearlessness; do not let Your word fall to the ground. Tuka says: between us, let us keep increasing the exchange of words, back and forth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram frames his poetry as labor offered to delight God. He reshapes his words of devotion again and again, hoping only that Vitthal will be pleased by them. His request is for the gift of fearlessness, abhaya, and he asks God not to let His own promise drop unfulfilled to the ground. The verse pictures bhakti as a living conversation, words passed back and forth between devotee and God, and asks that this exchange keep growing rather than fall silent.

GATHA 2223 Longing and Separation

Longing, the loving complaint

मराठी मूळ

बोलतां वचन असा पाठमोरे । मज भाव बरे कळों आले ॥1॥
मागतिलें नये अरुचीनें हातां । नाहीं वरी सत्ता आदराची॥ध्रु.॥
समाधानासाटीं लाविलासे कान । चोरलें तें मन दिसतसां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां तुमचे चि फंद । वरदळ छंद कळों येती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I speak, You turn away. I have come to understand Your disposition well.

What is asked for does not come willingly; there is no authority that can compel Your love. You lend Your ear for the sake of pacifying me, but I can see that Your mind has been stolen away elsewhere.

Says Tuka, we understand Your ways; Your superficial whims are transparent to us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I speak, You turn Your back. I have come to understand Your nature well. What I ask for does not come willingly; there is no power that can force Your love. You lend an ear just to quiet me, but I can see that Your mind has been stolen away somewhere else. Tuka says: we know Your games; Your surface whims are easy for us to read.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a lover's complaint addressed straight to God. Tukaram says that when he speaks, God turns away, and he claims to have read God's disposition: love cannot be compelled, and what he begs for is given grudgingly if at all. He sees through the half-attention, the ear lent only to pacify him while the heart is elsewhere. The teasing, intimate tone is the point; the verse names the soul's frustration at a God who withholds, while insisting that the devotee knows these games well enough to see past the surface.

GATHA 2224 Longing and Separation

Longing, why keep the stall open

मराठी मूळ

काशासाटीं बैसों करूनियां हाट । वाउगा बोभाट डांगोरा हा ॥1॥
काय आलें एका जिवाच्या उद्धारें । पावशी उच्चारें काय हो तें ॥ध्रु.॥
नेदी पट परी अन्नें तों न मरी । आपुलिये थोरीसाटीं राजा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां अव्हेरिलें तरी । मग कोण करी दुकान हा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should I sit and set up this shop, making all this empty proclamation and fanfare? What does the salvation of one soul accomplish? Will You be reached merely by uttering words? A king may not give cloth, but he at least does not let anyone starve, for the sake of his own dignity. Says Tuka, if You now reject us, who will keep this stall open?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why should I sit here keeping a shop, making this empty noise and beating the drum? What does saving one soul gain You? Will You be reached just by speaking Your name aloud? A king may give no cloth, but at least he lets no one starve, for the sake of his own dignity. Tuka says: if You reject us now, then who will keep this stall open?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram challenges God with a merchant's image: his preaching and chanting are a shop, a noisy stall set up in the marketplace, and he asks what the point is if God stays distant. He presses the stakes by appealing to God's own honor: even a king who gives no gifts will not let his people starve, because their ruin would shame him. The implied argument is that God's reputation rests on caring for those who call on Him. The closing line lands the warning: if God rejects His devotees, the whole enterprise of devotion, the open stall, collapses, and the loss is God's own.

GATHA 2225 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, fear of losing the Name

मराठी मूळ

माझा मज नाहीं । आला उबेग तो कांहीं ॥1॥
तुमच्या नामाची जतन । नव्हतां थोर वाटे सीण ॥ध्रु.॥
न पडावी निंदा । कानीं स्वामींची गोविंदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाज । आह्मां स्वामीचें तें काज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no weariness of my own; whatever discomfort comes is nothing. But without the protection of Your Name, I feel great pain.

May no slander of the Lord ever reach my ears, O Govinda. Says Tuka, our only concern is the honor and work of our Master.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am not my own. Whatever discomfort comes to me is nothing. But if Your Name is not kept safe within me, that is great pain. Let no slander of my Lord ever fall on my ears, Govinda. Tuka says: the one care we have is the honor and the work of our Master.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the only thing he is afraid of. His own troubles, sickness, hardship, count for nothing; he can bear them without complaint. The single unbearable loss would be to let go of God's Name, or to hear it dishonored. So he draws his whole concern down to one point: not his comfort, not his fate, but the honor of the Lord he serves. Everything personal has dropped away from him; what remains is care for his Master alone.

GATHA 2226 Renunciation

Renunciation, the body given away

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं मागणें हें आह्मां अनुचित । वडिलांची रीत जाणतसों ॥1॥
देह तुच्छ जालें सकळ उपाधी । सेवेपाशीं बुद्ध राहिलीसे ॥ध्रु.॥
शब्द तो उपाधि अचळ निश्चय । अनुभव हो काय नाहीं अंगीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देह फांकिला विभागीं । उपकार अंगीं उरविला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is improper for us to beg; we know the ways of our ancestors. The body and all its worldly concerns have become worthless; my mind rests only in service.

Words are worldly distractions, but the inner resolve is unshakeable. Is there not experience in this very being? Says Tuka, this body has been divided and distributed, and only gratitude has been kept within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is not right for us to beg for anything. We know the way our elders kept. The body and all its tangles have become worthless to me. My mind rests only at Your service. Words are just one more tangle; the inner resolve does not move. Is there no living proof of this in me? Tuka says: this body has been divided and given out in shares, and only gratitude has been kept back within me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the posture of a beggar before God. The saints before him did not whine for favors, and he holds to their way. He has stopped valuing the body and its worldly concerns, and has settled his mind wholly into service. He warns that talk itself is just another distraction; what counts is the unmoving resolve and the lived experience underneath the words. The closing image is stark: he has parceled out his very body and given it away, keeping for himself nothing but gratitude.

GATHA 2227 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the dealings run backward

मराठी मूळ

मागितल्यास कर पसरी । पळतां भरी वाखती ॥1॥
काय आह्मी नेणों वर्म । केला श्रम नेणतां ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलतां बरें येतां रागा । कठीण लागा मागेंमागें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें बोली । असे चाली उफराटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When asked, He extends His hand in giving, yet He flees when You pursue Him. Do I not know this secret? Effort was wasted due to ignorance.

He responds well to sweet talk but grows stern when you get demanding. Says Tuka, here the dealings run in reverse.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you ask Him, He opens His hand and gives. When you chase Him, He runs. Do I not know this secret? My effort was wasted because I did not understand it. He answers sweet talk kindly, and turns hard when you press and demand. Tuka says: here the way of dealing runs in reverse.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has worked out how God behaves, the hard way. Ask, and the hand opens; pursue and grab, and He slips away. Speak softly and He responds; turn demanding and He goes cold. He admits his own labor was thrown away because he did not see this sooner. The point is that the rules with God are the opposite of worldly bargaining: grasping loses, and the open, unhurried hand receives.

GATHA 2228 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, peace already at hand

मराठी मूळ

असो तुझें तुजपाशीं । आह्मां त्यासी काय चाड ॥1॥
निरोधें कां कोंडूं मन । समाधान असोनी ॥ध्रु.॥
करावा तो उरे आट । खटपट वाढतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येउनि रागा । कां मी भागा मुकेन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let what is Yours remain with You. What need do we have of it? Why should we imprison the mind with resistance when peace is already at hand? Every effort that is made only increases complication and strife.

Says Tuka, if I give in to anger, I shall lose my rightful share.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let what is Yours stay with You. What need do we have of it? Why should I lock up the mind by force, when peace is already here? Whatever I set out to do only leaves a residue; the struggle keeps growing. Tuka says: if I give in to anger, why should I lose my own share?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is letting go of the things he might have claimed from God, and of the effort to control his own mind. He sees that forcing the mind shut is pointless when calm is already present. Striving only leaves leftover trouble and multiplies the strife. The closing line is a quiet self-warning: if he lets resentment rise, he will only forfeit the peace that is rightfully his. So surrender here is not defeat; it is refusing to trade away a share he already holds.

GATHA 2229 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the natural flow

मराठी मूळ

आहे तें चि पुढें पाहों । बरे आहों येथें चि ॥1॥
काय वाढवूनि काम । उगा च श्रम तृष्णेचा ॥ध्रु.॥
ि्स्थरावतां ओघीं बरें । चाली पुरें पडेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विळतां मन । आह्मां क्षण न लगे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us look at what is already before us; we are well enough right here. Why increase effort for nothing, adding only the toil of craving? When one settles into the natural flow, one finds that it never runs out.

Says Tuka, when the mind turns inward, it takes us not even a moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me look at what is already in front of me. I am well enough right here. Why pile on more work, taking on the toil of craving for nothing? When I settle into the natural flow, it is good, and the way ahead never runs short. Tuka says: when the mind turns inward, it takes us no time at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is choosing what is present over what could be chased. He sees no reason to add effort and craving when he is already well where he stands. Settling into the natural current, instead of fighting it, he finds the road never runs out. The final line names how near the goal is: once the mind turns inward, the arrival takes no time. Surrender is not striving harder; it is stopping the manufacture of want.

GATHA 2230 Longing and Separation

Longing, am I not Yours

मराठी मूळ

सांगा दास नव्हें तुमचा मी कैसा । ऐसें पंढरीशा विचारूनि ॥1॥
कोणासाटीं केली प्रपंचाची होळी । या पायां वेगळी मायबापा ॥ध्रु.॥
नसेल तो द्यावा सत्यत्वासी धीर । नये भाजूं हीर उफराटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां आहिक्य परत्रीं । नाहीं कुळगोत्रीं दुजें कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, am I not Your servant? Consider this well, O Lord of Pandhari. For whose sake have I set fire to worldly life, apart from these feet of Yours, O Mother and Father? If truth is wavering, give it courage; do not roast the diamond in the wrong fire.

Says Tuka, in this world and the next, we have nothing and no one, no lineage or clan, other than You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, how am I not Your servant? Think it over, Lord of Pandhari. For whose sake did I burn down my worldly life, if not for these feet of Yours, my Mother and Father? If the truth in me is wavering, give it courage; do not roast the diamond in the wrong fire. Tuka says: in this world and the next we have no one, no clan or kin, but only You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing his claim on God and asking to be acknowledged. He has set fire to ordinary worldly life, and he insists he did it for one reason alone: the feet of the Lord of Pandhari. So he asks God to steady his faith when it shakes, and not to test true devotion as if it were false. The diamond image warns against ruining what is genuine by treating it wrongly. He ends by staking everything: he has no lineage, no other refuge, in this life or the next, except God.

GATHA 2231 Prayers

Prayer, the child on the mother

मराठी मूळ

अनन्यासी ठाव एक सर्वकाजें । एकाविण दुजें नेणे चित्त ॥1॥
न पुरतां आळी देशधडी व्हावें । हें काय बरवें दिसतसे॥ध्रु.॥
लेंकराचा भार माउलीचे शिरीं । निढळ तें दुरी धरिलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती घातली लांबणी । समर्थ होउनि केवढएासाटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devoted one has a single refuge for all purposes; the mind knows nothing apart from the One. If the plea is not fulfilled, must one be banished and scattered? How does that look? A child's burden rests on the mother's head; how can it be pushed away? Says Tuka, how long will You delay? You are almighty; for what great matter do You postpone?

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who is wholly Yours has a single refuge for everything. The mind knows nothing but the One. If my plea goes unmet, must I be cast out and scattered? Does that look right? A child's weight rests on the mother's head; how can she push it away? Tuka says: how long will You keep stretching it out? You are almighty; for what great matter do You delay?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one who has given himself entirely to God and has no other recourse. He protests that to leave his plea unanswered would be to throw out a soul who has nowhere else to go. His central image is the helpless child whose burden naturally falls on the mother, and a mother cannot simply shove it off. He then challenges God's delay directly: an almighty Lord has no reason to postpone, so why the long wait? The longing here turns into an almost familiar complaint, the trust of a child who knows it cannot be abandoned.

GATHA 2232 Confession and Sin

Confession, shameless calling out

मराठी मूळ

स्तुती तरि करूं काय कोणापासीं । कीर्त तरि कैसी वाखाणावी ॥1॥
खोटएा तंव नाहीं अनुवादाचें काम । उरला भ्रम वरि बरा ॥ध्रु.॥
ह्मणवावें त्याची खुण नाहीं हातीं । अवकळा फजिती सावकाशें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हेंगे तुमचें माझें तोंड । होऊनिया लंड आळवितों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whom shall I praise, and how shall I glorify Your fame? For what is false, there is no need for commentary; whatever delusion remains on the surface, let it be. The signs that one claims to bear are not in hand; disgrace and shame unfold at leisure.

Says Tuka, here is the truth between You and me: I have become shameless and I call out to You openly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whom shall I praise, and how should I tell out Your fame? For what is false there is no use in fine talk; whatever delusion is left on top, let it stay. The marks one claims to wear are not in my hand; the disgrace and the shaming unfold at their own pace. Tuka says: here is the truth between You and me. I have become shameless, and I call out to You openly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram drops all pretense of being a worthy devotee. He confesses he has no genuine credentials, no inner signs to show; whatever looks like attainment is surface delusion, and exposure will come in its own time. Rather than dress this up, he sets it plainly before God as the honest fact between them. His only move left is to abandon shame and cry out openly, just as he is. The poem turns weakness into the one true prayer: a frank, unguarded appeal with nothing to hide behind.

GATHA 2233 Longing and Separation

Longing, every power spent

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं च न लगे आदि अवसान । बहुत कठीण दिसतसां ॥1॥
अवघ्याच माझ्या वेचविल्या शक्ती । न चलेसी युक्ति जाली पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलिलें वचन हारपलें नभीं । उतरलों तों उभीं आहों तैसीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं न करावेंसें जालें । थकित चि ठेलें वित्त उगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Nothing seems to matter, neither beginning nor end. You appear most unyielding.

I have spent all my powers, and no strategy avails me any longer. My spoken words have vanished into the sky; I remain standing just where I started.

Says Tuka, nothing more can be done. The mind sits stunned and silent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Nothing holds, neither beginning nor end. You look very hard to me. I have spent all my powers, and now no scheme works any longer. The words I spoke have vanished into the sky; I am left standing just where I began. Tuka says: there is nothing left to do. The mind sits stunned, and the wealth in it goes still.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the exhaustion of a soul that has tried everything to reach God and failed. He can find no foothold, beginning or end, and God seems immovably hard. Every effort, every clever approach, is used up; his prayers seem to dissolve into empty sky, leaving him exactly where he started. The poem ends not in triumph but in stunned silence, all striving spent. This emptied-out helplessness is itself the honest ground of longing, the place where the seeker has nothing left but the waiting.

GATHA 2234 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the knot of bondage undone

मराठी मूळ

रूपें गोविलें चित्त । पायीं राहिलें निंश्चत ॥1॥
तुह्मीं देवा अवघे चि गोमटे । मुख देखतां दुःख न भेटे ॥ध्रु.॥
जाली इंद्रियां विश्रांति । भ्रमतां पीडत ते होतीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भेटी । सुटली भवबंदाची गांठी ॥3॥ ॥20॥
स्वामींनीं तेरा दिवस निद्रा केली. मग भगवंतें येऊन समाधान केलें कीं,
कवित्व कोरडें आहे तें काढणें उदकांतून

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your form has captivated my chitta; the mind rests securely at Your feet. O God, You are entirely beautiful; upon seeing Your face, sorrow disappears.

The senses have found rest, they who were tormented while wandering. Says Tuka, in Your meeting, the knot of worldly bondage has come undone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your form has caught my mind. It rests at Your feet, without a doubt. You, God, are wholly beautiful; when I see Your face, no sorrow meets me. The senses have found rest, the same senses that were tormented while they wandered. Tuka says: in this meeting, the knot of worldly bondage has come loose.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what happens when the wandering mind finally settles. The beauty of God's form has captured his attention and fixed it securely at the feet. Looking on that face, sorrow simply does not reach him, and the senses that suffered in their restless roaming now come to rest. The meeting itself does the work: the tight knot of worldly bondage unties on its own. Devotion here is not effort but release, the natural quieting of everything that once wandered and ached.

GATHA 2235 Autobiography

Autobiography, the testing fast

मराठी मूळ

थोर अन्याय केला तुझा अंत म्यां पाहिला । जनाचिया बोलासाटीं चित्त क्षोभविलें ॥1॥
भागविलासी केला सीण अधम मी यातिहीन । झांकूनि लोचन दिवस तेरा राहिलों ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघें घालूनियां कोडें तानभुकेचें सांकडें । योगक्षेम पुढें तुज करणें लागेल ॥2॥
उदकीं राखिले कागद चुकविला जनवाद । तुका ह्मणे ब्रीद साच केलें आपुलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I committed a great wrong against You by testing Your limits. For the sake of people's talk, I disturbed my own mind.

I caused You weariness and pain; I am a lowly, degraded being. I closed my eyes and lay still for thirteen days.

Placing upon You the burden of hunger and thirst, You will now have to see to my welfare. I saved the papers by keeping them in water and silenced the wagging tongues.

Says Tuka, You have proven Your promise true.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I did a great wrong: I tested Your limit. For the sake of what people were saying, I troubled my own mind. I wore You out, I gave You pain, lowly and outcaste as I am. I shut my eyes and lay still for thirteen days. Laying on You the whole hardship of my hunger and thirst, I left my keeping and care for You to manage. The papers were saved in the water, the wagging tongues were silenced. Tuka says: You have made Your promise come true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back on a hard episode and calls his own conduct a wrong. Stung by people's mockery, he put God to the test, lying still with closed eyes for thirteen days and throwing the whole burden of his survival onto the Lord. He confesses this caused God pain and sprang from his own disturbed mind, not from virtue. Yet the outcome vindicated his faith: the papers cast into the water were preserved and the mockers fell silent. The point lands on God's faithfulness, not Tukaram's worthiness; the Lord kept His word even when the test was an offense.

GATHA 2236 Autobiography

Autobiography, the Mother who came

मराठी मूळ

तूं कृपाळू माउली आह्मां दीनांची साउली । न संरित आली बाळवेशें जवळी ॥1॥
माझें केलें समाधान रूप गोजिरें सगुण । निवविलें मन आलिंगन देऊनी ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपा केली जना हातीं पायीं ठाव दिला संतीं । कळों नये चित्तीं दु:ख कैसें आहे तें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी अन्यायी क्षमा करीं वो माझे आई । आतां पुढें काई तुज घालूं सांकडें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are a compassionate Mother, a sheltering shade for the wretched like us. Unreserved, You came to me in the guise of a child.

You gave me peace; Your beautiful, embodied form consoled me. You cooled my mind by holding me in Your embrace.

You showed mercy before the world and gave me a place at the feet of the saints, so that no one might know what sorrow had been within. Says Tuka, I am the offender. Forgive me, O my Mother.

Henceforth, what more shall I trouble You with?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are a tender Mother, the shade over wretched ones like us. You came close to me, holding nothing back, in the form of a child. You set my mind at peace; Your lovely, embodied form consoled me. You cooled my mind by taking me in Your arms. You showed mercy before everyone and gave me a place at the feet of the saints, so no one could see what sorrow had been inside me. Tuka says: I am the one who did wrong. Forgive me, my Mother. What more shall I burden You with now?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells of being answered after his hard testing, and the answer comes as motherly tenderness. God draws near without reserve, in the gentle guise of a child, and consoles him with an embrace that cools and quiets the mind. Beyond private comfort, God restores him publicly, granting him a place among the saints so the sorrow he carried is hidden from the world's eyes. Against this mercy Tukaram sets his own fault squarely: he is the offender, and he asks his Mother's forgiveness. The poem closes in chastened gratitude, vowing not to lay further trouble on the One who has already done so much.

GATHA 2237 Autobiography

Penitence, fear of grieving God

मराठी मूळ

कापो कोणी माझी मान सुखें पीडोत दुर्जन । तुज होय सीण तें मी न करीं सर्वथा ॥1॥
चुकी जाली एकवेळा मज पासूनि चांडाळा । उभें करोनियां जळा माजी वहएा राखिल्या॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं केला हा विचार माझा कोण अधिकार । समर्थासी भार न कळे कैसा घालावा ॥2॥
गेलें होऊनियां मागें नये बोलों तें वाउगें । पुढिलिया प्रसंगें तुका ह्मणे जाणावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let anyone cut my throat; let the wicked torment me freely. But I will never do what causes You pain, not under any circumstance.

This mistake happened once at my pitiable hands. You made me stand in the water and kept the notebooks safe.

I did not consider whose authority I was overriding or how to place this burden on the Capable One. What is done is done; it is useless to speak of it now.

Says Tuka, let the future be guided by this lesson.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let anyone cut my throat. Let the wicked torment me as they please. I will never do the thing that gives You pain. Not ever. This mistake came once from me, a wretch. You stood me in the water and kept the notebooks safe. I never thought whose right I was overriding. I never thought how I should lay such a burden on the Capable One. What is gone is gone; it is useless to speak of it now. Tuka says: let what comes next be guided by this lesson.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his own offense against everything else he might suffer. He says he would rather have his throat cut than do one thing that pains his Lord, and that ranks God's pain far above his own. He confesses a single fault that he did not weigh in advance: he acted without asking by what authority, and he loaded his trouble onto God, who then saved both him and the books in the water. The lesson he draws is not endless guilt but watchfulness: the past cannot be undone, so let it teach what to do the next time.

GATHA 2238 Autobiography

Helplessness, refuge in mercy

मराठी मूळ

काय जाणें मी पामर पांडुरंगा तुझा पार । धरिलिया धीर काय एक न करिसी ॥1॥
उताविळ जालों आधीं मतिमंद हीनबुद्ध । परि तूं कृपानिधी नाहीं केला अव्हेर ॥ध्रु.॥
तूं देवांचा ही देव अवघ्या ब्रह्मांडाचा जीव । आह्मां दासां कींव कां भाकणें लागली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विश्वंभरा मी तों पतित चि खरा । अन्याय दुसरा दारीं धरणें बैसलों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What do I, a wretch, know of Your depths, O Panduranga? When You hold firm, there is nothing You cannot accomplish. I was hasty before, dull-witted and base, yet You, O treasury of compassion, did not cast me aside.

You are the God of gods, the life of the entire universe. Why must we, Your servants, have to plead for Your mercy? Says Tuka, O Sustainer of the World, I am truly a fallen one. My other offense is that I sat at Your door insisting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What do I, a poor wretch, know of Your depths, O Panduranga? When You hold firm, there is nothing You cannot do. I was hasty at first, dull and low in mind. Yet You, treasury of mercy, did not throw me away. You are the God of gods. You are the life of the whole universe. Why must we, Your servants, have to beg for Your mercy? Tuka says: O Sustainer of the World, I am truly a fallen one. My second offense is this: I sat down at Your door and would not leave.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he cannot fathom God and cannot manage his own life, and rests the whole outcome on God's power instead. He owns his haste and dullness, then turns it into wonder that such a Lord did not discard him. The pointed question in the middle is half complaint, half intimacy: if You are the life of all things, why should Your own servants have to plead? He ends by naming his stubbornness as a fault and a strategy at once: a fallen man who simply refuses to leave God's doorstep until mercy is given.

GATHA 2239 Autobiography

Gratitude, the cost God bore

मराठी मूळ

नव्हती आली सीसा सुरी अथवा घाय पाठीवरी । तो म्यां केला हरी एवढा तुह्मां आकांत ॥1॥
वांटिलासी दोहीं ठायीं मजपाशीं आणि डोहीं । लागों दिला नाहीं येथें तेथें आघात ॥ध्रु.॥
जीव घेती मायबापें थोडएा अन्याच्या कोपें । हें तों नव्हे सोपें साहों तों चि जाणीतलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपावंता तुज ऐसा नाहीं दाता। काय वाणूं आतां वाणी माझी कुंटली ॥3॥
वर्षाव केला

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No blade came to my throat, nor blows upon my back, yet I caused You, O Hari, this much anguish. You divided Your care between two places, my person and the river, letting no harm befall either here or there.

Parents may take a child's life in a brief fit of anger; this is not easy to endure, and I knew it even as I bore it. Says Tuka, O gracious One, there is no giver like You. What more can I say? My tongue has grown silent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No knife came to my throat. No blows fell on my back. Yet I caused You, Hari, this much anguish. You split Yourself between two places, beside me and in the river, and let no harm reach either, here or there. Parents will take a child's life in a small fit of anger. That is not easy to bear, and I knew it even while I bore it. Tuka says: O gracious One, there is no giver like You. What can I say now? My tongue has gone silent.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reckons up what God suffered on his behalf and finds his own pain was nothing by comparison. No blade touched him; the anguish was God's, who divided attention between the poet and the river to keep both safe. He contrasts this with how a human parent can strike a child to death in a brief rage: ordinary love is not this patient. Set against a giver who absorbs the cost without anger, Tukaram has nothing left to offer but a silenced, grateful tongue.

GATHA 2240 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, beyond all comparison

मराठी मूळ

तूं माउलीहून मयाळ चंद्राहूनि शीतळ । पाणियाहूनि पातळ कल्लोळ प्रेमाचा ॥1॥
देऊं काशाची उपमा दुजी तुज पुरुषोत्तमा । ओंवाळूनि नामा तुझ्या वरूनि टाकिलों ॥ध्रु.॥
तुवां केलें रे अमृता गोड त्या ही तूं परता । पांचां तत्त्वांचा जनिता सकळ सत्तानायक ॥2॥
कांहीं न बोलोनि आतां उगा च चरणीं ठेवितों माथा । तुका ह्मणे पंढरिनाथा क्षमा करीं अपराध ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are more loving than a mother, cooler than the moon, more fluid than water itself, a wave of pure love. What comparison can be offered to You, O Supreme Being? I have waved my hands over Your Name and surrendered everything.

You have made even nectar taste sweeter; You surpass it. Creator of the five elements, sovereign of all power.

Now, saying nothing more, I simply place my head at Your feet in silence. Says Tuka, O Lord of Pandhari, forgive my transgressions.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are gentler than a mother. You are cooler than the moon. You are more fluid than water, a wave of pure love. What can I set beside You, O Supreme One? There is no second thing. I have waved my hands over Your Name and thrown away everything I had. You made even nectar sweet, and You are beyond nectar too. You are the maker of the five elements, the master of all power. Now I say nothing more. I simply lay my head at Your feet. Tuka says: O Lord of Pandhari, forgive my faults.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the gentlest and coolest things he knows, mother, moon, water, and finds each one falls short of his Lord. The point of the comparisons is that there is no real comparison: God is the source even of sweetness, the maker of the elements and the master of all power. So the only fitting response is surrender, not praise. He waves the lamp of God's Name over himself, lets go of all he owns, and ends with silence and a bowed head, asking only for forgiveness.

GATHA 2241 Prayers

Prayer, come dwell in my heart

मराठी मूळ

मी अवगुणी अन्यायी किती ह्मणोन सांगों काई । आतां मज पायीं ठाव देई विठ्ठले ॥1॥
पुरे पुरे हा संसार कर्म बिळवंत दुस्तर । राहों नेदी ◌ स्थिर एके ठायीं निश्चळ ॥ध्रु.॥
अनेक बुद्धचे तरंग क्षणक्षणां पालटती रंग । धरूं जातां संग तंव तो होतो बाधक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां अवघी तोडीं माझी चिंता । येऊनि पंढरिनाथा वास करीं हृदयीं ॥3॥ ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am full of faults and offenses; how much can I recount? Now grant me a place at Your feet, O Vitthal. Enough of this worldly life; karma is powerful and its ocean hard to cross.

It will not let the mind stay still and steady in one place. The waves of restless intellect change color every moment; when I try to hold on to any, it becomes an obstacle.

Says Tuka, now sever all my anxieties, O Lord of Pandhari. Come and dwell in my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long can I list how full of faults and wrongs I am? Now give me a place at Your feet, O Vitthal. Enough, enough of this worldly life. Karma is strong, and its ocean is hard to cross. It will not let the mind stay still and steady in one place. The waves of the restless mind change color every moment. When I try to hold one, that very holding becomes a snare. Tuka says: now cut away all my anxieties. Come, Lord of Pandhari, and live in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stops cataloguing his faults because the list is endless and asks instead for refuge at Vitthal's feet. He names the trap plainly: karma is too strong to defeat by effort, and the mind itself will not hold still long enough to be mastered. Every passing thought looks like something to grasp, but grasping only entangles him further. So he asks God to do what he cannot: sever the anxieties at the root and take up residence in his heart, making the restless mind God's own dwelling rather than the seeker's battlefield.

GATHA 2242 Devotion to Vitthal

Lover's quarrel, scolding God

मराठी मूळ

बरें आह्मां कळों आलें देवपण । आतां गुज कोण राखे तुझें ॥1॥
मारिलें कां मज सांग आजिवरी । आतां सरोबरी तुज मज ॥ध्रु.॥
जें आह्मी बोलों तें आहे तुझ्या अंगीं । देईन प्रसंगीं आजि शिव्या ॥2॥
निलाजिरा तुज नाहीं याति कुळ । चोरटा शिंदळ ठावा जना ॥3॥
खासी धोंडे माती जीव जंत झाडें । एकलें उघडें परदेसी ॥4॥
गाढव कुतरा ऐसा मज ठावा बईल तूं देवा भारवाही ॥5॥
लडिका तूं मागें बहुतांसी ठावा । आलें अनुभवा माझ्या तें ही ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे मज खविळलें भांडा । आतां धीर तोंडा न धरवे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have come to understand Your true nature well. Who will keep Your secret now? Tell me, why have You been striking me all this while? Now You and I are face to face.

Whatever I say is found right in Your own character; today, if the occasion calls for it, I shall give You a scolding. You have no shame, no caste, no clan; the world knows You as a thief and a philanderer.

You eat stones, mud, insects, and leaves; You wander alone and naked. I know You as one who carries loads like a donkey or a dog, O God.

You have been mischievous from the beginning, and many know this. Says Tuka, my anger has been stirred; I can no longer hold my tongue.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come to know Your godhood well. Who will keep Your secret now? Tell me, why have You been beating me all this time? Now You and I stand face to face. Whatever I say is already there in Your own conduct; today, if the moment calls for it, I will scold You. You have no shame, no caste, no clan. The world knows You as a thief and a seducer. You eat stones, mud, insects, leaves. You wander alone and bare. I know You as one who hauls loads like a donkey or a dog, O God. You have been mischievous from the start, and many know it. It has come into my own experience too. Tuka says: my temper is roused, you brawler; now my tongue will not stay still.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a quarrel between lovers, not blasphemy: Tukaram dares to scold God precisely because the bond is close enough to bear it. He throws back at Krishna the very stories the tradition tells, the butter thief, the charmer of the gopis, the one with no caste or clan, who in his avatars ate dirt as a child and bore burdens for his devotees. Every insult is secretly a list of God's intimacy with the lowly and the ordinary. The heat is real but safe; the point is that a devotee who has truly come to know God can speak to him without ceremony or fear.

GATHA 2243 Devotion to Vitthal

Lover's quarrel, God's evasions

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी भांडों तुजसवें । वर्मी धरूं जालें ठावें ॥1॥
होसी सरड बेडुक । बाग गांढएा ही पाईक ॥ध्रु.॥
बळ करी तया भ्यावें । पळों लागे तया घ्यावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दूर परता । नर नारी ना तूं भूता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We shall quarrel with You; we have grasped Your weak spots. You become a lizard, a frog, a garden snake, and every other crawling thing.

One must fear those who use force; one must seize those who flee. Says Tuka, You stand apart; You are neither man, nor woman, nor spirit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We will quarrel with You. We have found Your weak spots. You turn into a lizard, a frog, a garden snake, every crawling thing. One has to fear the one who uses force. One has to seize the one who runs away. Tuka says: You stand far off. You are not man, not woman, not a spirit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram keeps up the playful fight, claiming he has learned how God slips away. The shifting shapes, lizard, frog, snake, name God's endless evasions and disguises whenever the devotee tries to pin him down. The middle line states the rule of the chase: power must be feared, but a runaway must be grabbed and held. The closing line is the real point under the teasing: God cannot finally be caught by any category at all, being neither man nor woman nor ghost, which is why the lover must hold on rather than define.

GATHA 2244 Longing and Separation

Reckoning the debt, no more restraint

मराठी मूळ

काय साहतोसी फुका । माझा बुडविला रुका ॥1॥
रीण घराचें पांगिलें । तें न सुटे कांहीं केलें ॥ध्रु.॥
चौघांचिया मतें। आधीं खरें केलें होते ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे यावरी । आतां भीड कोण धरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do You suffer silently for nothing? My coin has been lost because of You. The debt of this household has been incurred, and nothing I do can discharge it.

It was all confirmed before witnesses at the start. Says Tuka, after all this, who would hold back any restraint?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do You bear it in silence for nothing? My coin has been sunk because of You. The household's debt has been run up, and nothing I do will clear it. It was all settled before witnesses at the start. Tuka says: after all this, who would hold back now?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a man who has spent everything on God and now wants an accounting. The lost coin and the unpayable household debt are the costs of a life staked wholly on devotion; he points out that God sits silent while the bill mounts. He reminds God that the bargain was struck openly, with witnesses, so it cannot now be denied. Having given all and bound God by agreement, he concludes that he has earned the right to drop all politeness and press his claim without restraint.

GATHA 2245 Devotion to Vitthal

The child's loving quarrel

मराठी मूळ

प्रीतीचा कलहे पदरासी घाली पीळ । सरों नेदी बाळ मागें पुढें पित्यासी ॥1॥
काय लागे त्यासी बळ हेडावितां कोण काळ । गोवितें सबळ जाळीं स्नेहसूत्राचीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सलगी दिला लाड बोले तें तें वाटे गोड । करी बुझावोनि कोड हातीं देऊनि भातुकें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बोल कोणा हें कां नेणां नारायणा । सलगीच्या वचना कैचें उपजे विषम।3॥ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A child quarrels out of love, tugging at the parent's garment, never letting the father move forward or back. What force can prevail against one who, at any moment, can entangle the mighty in the net of affection? Indulged and given liberties, whatever the child says sounds sweet; the parent coaxes and gives a toy to pacify.

Says Tuka, why do You not understand this, O Narayana? From words spoken in intimacy, no real bitterness can arise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A child quarrels out of love and tugs at the hem of the cloth. It will not let the father go forward or back. What strength can stand against the child? At any moment it can tangle the strong one in the net of affection. Petted and given its way, whatever the child says sounds sweet. The parent soothes it and puts a toy in its hand to quiet it. Tuka says: how do You not understand this, Narayana? From words spoken in closeness, no real bitterness can come.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains the meaning of all his scolding through the image of a small child gripping its father's garment. The child's quarrel has no malice in it; it is the very strength of love that binds the mighty parent and stops him from moving. Such a child gets indulged, soothed, handed a toy, because its sharpest words still sound sweet. He then asks God to read his own complaints the same way: spoken from intimacy, they carry no bitterness, only the demanding tenderness of one who is sure he is loved.

GATHA 2246 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the Vaishnavas arrive

मराठी मूळ

भार देखोनि वैष्णवांचे । दूत पळाले यमाचे ॥1॥
आले आले वैष्णववीर । काळ कांपती असुर ॥ध्रु.॥
गरुडटकयाच्या भारें । भूमी गर्जे जेजेकारें ॥ ।2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing the host of Vaishnavas, the messengers of Yama fled. The Vaishnava warriors have arrived; Death and the demons tremble before them.

Under the weight of Garuda's banners, the earth resounds with cries of triumph.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seeing the host of the Vaishnavas, Yama's messengers fled. They have come, they have come, the Vaishnava warriors; Death and the demons tremble. Under the weight of Garuda's banners, the earth roars with cries of victory.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the gathering of devotees as an arriving army before which death itself retreats. When the host of Vaishnavas appears, the agents of Yama, the lord of death, simply run, and the demons shake. The Garuda banners and the thundering shouts of victory turn the bhakti procession into a triumph: the company of God's lovers is itself a power that the forces of dying cannot face. The verse celebrates the safety and might that belong to those who walk together in the Name.

GATHA 2247 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, Death takes flight

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे काळ । पळे देखोनियां बळ ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, Death himself flees upon seeing their strength.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: Death himself runs when he sees their strength.

WHAT IT MEANS

This single closing line drives home the scene of the devotees as an unbeatable host. Even Yama, death in person, does not stand and fight; he flees the moment he sees the strength of God's lovers. The strength meant is not muscle but the power of the Name and the company that carries it. For Tukaram, this is the final reassurance: join the band of the faithful, and the one thing every soul fears turns and runs.

GATHA 2248 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the body is on loan

मराठी मूळ

रंगीं रंगें रे श्रीरंगे । काय भुललासी पतंगें ॥1॥
शरीर जायांचें ठेवणें । धरिसी अभिळास झणें ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे तुझा हा परिवार । द्रव्य दारा क्षणभंगुर ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O soul, be dyed in the color of Shrirang. Why are you infatuated like a moth drawn to flame? This body is only a temporary deposit; do not hold undue desire for it.

Your family, wealth, and spouse are not truly yours; they are all fleeting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O soul, be dyed in the color of Shrirang. Why are you fooled like a moth flying into the flame? This body is only a thing left on deposit. Do not cling to it with greedy desire. This household is not really yours. Wealth and wife break in a moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the soul to soak itself in God, Shrirang, instead of rushing toward what destroys it like a moth at the lamp. The body, he says, is not owned but held on deposit, to be returned, so it is folly to crave and hoard it. Family, wealth, and spouse look solid but can shatter in an instant. The warning is not contempt for these things; it is a call to fix desire on the one color that does not fade and to hold the passing world with an open hand.

GATHA 2249 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the one companion at death

मराठी मूळ

अंतकाळींचा सोइरा । तुका ह्मणे विठो धरा ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, at the hour of death, the only true companion is Vitthal. Hold fast to Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: at the hour of death, your only true companion is Vitthal. Hold fast to him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away every other support a person leans on and names the one that will still be there at the end. At the hour of death, friends, kin, and possessions all fall away; only Vitthal remains as a real companion. So the instruction is plain and urgent: take hold of him now, and do not let go.

GATHA 2250 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the squandered birth

मराठी मूळ

जन्मा येउनि काय केलें । तुवां मुदल गमाविलें॥1॥
कां रे न फिरसी माघारा । अझुनि तरी फजितखोरा ॥ध्रु.॥
केली गांठोळीची नासी । पुढें भीके चि मागसी ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having been born as a human, what have you accomplished? You have squandered your very capital. Why do you not turn back even now, O shameless one? You have destroyed what was tied in your bundle, and now you shall beg from door to door.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You were born a human. What have you done with it? You have lost your very capital. Why do you not turn back even now, you shameless one? You have wasted what was tied in your bundle, and now you will beg from door to door.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks straight to the listener about a life being thrown away. The human birth is the capital, the rare chance to win God, and it is being squandered. He calls the listener shameless not in contempt but to break the sleep of someone who keeps spending and never turns around. The warning is concrete: waste what you were given and you end up a beggar, with nothing saved for the road ahead. The point is to turn back while there is still time.

GATHA 2251 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, return to your true home

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे ठाया । जाई आपल्या आलिया ॥3॥ ॥1॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, go to your rightful home when you have the chance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: go to your own home while you still have the chance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names where a person truly belongs and the narrow window for reaching it. Your rightful home is God, not this passing world. The phrase 'while you have the chance' carries the weight: the chance does not last, so go now. It is the same urgency as turning back before the capital runs out, said as a single quiet command.

GATHA 2252 Prayers

Prayer, plea from the wilderness of Maya

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीस जाते निरोप आइका । वैकुंठनायका क्षम सांगा ॥1॥
अनाथांचा नाथ हें तुझें वचन । धांवें नको दीन गांजों देऊं ॥ध्रु.॥
ग्रासिलें भुजंगें सर्पें महाकाळें । न दिसे हें जाळें उगवतां॥2॥
कामक्रोधसुनीं श्वापदीं बहुतीं । वेढलों आवताअ मायेचिये॥3॥
मृदजलनदी बुडविना तरी । आणूनियां वरी तळा नेते ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तुवां धरिलें उदास । तरि पाहों वास कवणाची॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am going to Pandhari; hear my message. Tell the Lord of Vaikuntha that I seek His refuge.

'Protector of the helpless' is Your own promise; run to us, do not let the pitiable be tormented. The great serpent of time has swallowed us; this net is invisible even at dawn.

Dogs of lust and anger, wild beasts of many kinds, have encircled us in the wilderness of Maya. The waters of this muddy river do not drown outright but keep pulling us under and pushing us up.

Says Tuka, if You have chosen to remain indifferent, then whose refuge shall we seek?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am going to Pandhari. Hear my message. Tell the Lord of Vaikuntha that I seek his refuge. You called yourself the protector of the helpless; that is your own promise. So run to us. Do not let the wretched be tormented. The great serpent of time has swallowed us, and this net cannot be seen even at dawn. Dogs of lust and anger, many wild beasts, have circled us in the forest of Maya. The waters of this muddy river do not drown me outright; they keep pulling me under and pushing me up. Tuka says: if you have chosen to stay indifferent, then whose shelter shall we seek?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sends a message ahead to Pandhari and holds God to his own word. Narayana has called himself the protector of the helpless, so Tukaram presses that promise: run, do not let the wretched suffer. He paints the danger in stark images: time as a serpent that has already swallowed him, lust and anger as dogs and beasts hunting him through the forest of Maya, and worldly life as a muddy river that will not even let him drown cleanly but keeps tossing him. The closing line is the whole stake: if God turns away, there is no other refuge to run to. The prayer leans its entire weight on God being who he says he is.

GATHA 2253

Prayers

Prayer, the saints' recommendation

मराठी मूळ

कृपाळू सज्जन तुह्मी संतजन । हें चि कृपादान तुमचें मज ॥1॥
आठवण तुह्मी द्यावी पांडुरंगा । कींव माझी सांगा काकुलती ॥ध्रु.॥
अनाथ अपराधी पतिताआगळा । परि पायांवेगळा नका करुं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी निरविल्यावरि । मग मज हरि उपेक्षीना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O compassionate saints, grant me this one mercy. Remind Panduranga of me; tell Him of my pitiful entreaty.

I am helpless, sinful, worse than the fallen, yet do not separate me from His feet. Says Tuka, once you have recommended me, Hari will not neglect me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Compassionate ones, you saints, grant me this one mercy. Remind Panduranga of me. Tell him of my pitiful plea. I am helpless, sinful, lower than the fallen; yet do not keep me away from his feet. Tuka says: once you have spoken for me, Hari will not neglect me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram approaches God not directly but through the saints, asking them to put in a word. He owns his condition without softening it: helpless, sinful, worse than the fallen. Yet even so he begs not to be cut off from God's feet. The trust at the end is the heart of it: he believes the saints' recommendation carries weight, that once they speak for him Hari cannot ignore him. The poem shows how the company of holy people becomes the bridge to grace.

GATHA 2254 The Saints

Devotion to the saints, carried by their grace

मराठी मूळ

संतांचिया पायीं माझा विश्वास । सर्वभावें दास जालों त्यांचा ॥1॥
ते चि माझें हित करिती सकळ । जेणें हा गोपाळ कृपा करी ॥ध्रु.॥
भागलिया मज वाहतील कडे । यांचियातें जोडे सर्व सुख ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शेष घेईन आवडी । वचन न मोडीं बोलिलों तें ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My faith rests at the feet of the saints; I have become their servant with my whole being. They alone do everything for my welfare, by which Gopala bestows His grace.

When I am exhausted, they carry me on their shoulders; through their company, all happiness is won. Says Tuka, I shall gladly accept their leftovers. I will not break the word I have spoken.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My faith rests at the feet of the saints. With my whole being I have become their servant. They are the ones who do all my good, the good through which Gopala shows his grace. When I am worn out, they carry me on their shoulders. In their company every happiness is won. Tuka says: I will gladly take their leftovers. I will not break the word I have spoken.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram places his whole trust in the saints and makes himself their servant. He sees them as the channel of God's grace: it is through them that Gopala's mercy reaches him. The image of being carried on their shoulders when exhausted shows how much he depends on them, not on his own strength. Accepting their leftovers is an act of glad humility, taking even the lowest place near them, and his closing vow not to break his word seals the surrender. The saints, for him, are the road to God, not a detour from it.

GATHA 2255 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the puppeteer beyond qualities

मराठी मूळ

लाघवी सूत्रधारी दोरी नाचवी कुसरी । उपजवी पाळूनि संसारि नानापरिचीं लाघवें ॥1॥
पुरोनि पंढरिये उरलें भक्तिसुखें लांचावलें । उभें चि राहिलें कर कटीं न बैसे ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु काळें ना सावळें बहु कठिण ना कोंवळें । गुणत्रया वेगळें बहुबळें आथीलें ॥2॥
असोनि नसे सकळांमधीं मना अगोचर बुद्धी । स्वामी माझा कृपानिधि तुका ह्मणे विठ्ठल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The skillful Puppeteer pulls the strings with artistry, creating, sustaining, and enacting the manifold wonders of this world. Having filled Pandhari to the brim, overflowing with the joy of devotion, He remains standing, hands on hips, never sitting down.

Neither too dark nor too fair, neither too hard nor too soft, beyond the three qualities, established by immense strength. Present in all yet present in none, beyond the reach of mind and intellect.

Says Tuka, my Lord, that treasury of compassion, is Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The skillful one holds the strings and makes the puppet dance with art. He creates, he sustains, he plays out the many wonders of this world. He filled Pandhari to the brim and still overflows, hungry for the joy of devotion. He just stands there, hands on his hips, and never sits down. Not too dark, not too fair; not too hard, not too soft; beyond the three qualities, holding everything by his vast strength. Present in all and yet present in none, past the reach of mind and intellect. Tuka says: my Lord, that treasury of compassion, is Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds two truths together: the God who stands plainly on the brick at Pandhari is the same hidden power who runs the whole world. As puppeteer he creates, sustains, and plays out everything, pulling strings no one sees. Yet he is beyond every measure: not this color or that, beyond the three gunas, present everywhere and yet graspable nowhere by mind or reason. The wonder is that this unreachable one chooses to stand still at Pandhari, hands on hips, drawn by nothing but love. Tukaram names the formless absolute and the visible Vitthal as one and the same treasury of compassion.

GATHA 2256 Longing and Separation

Longing, aching for the sight of God

मराठी मूळ

कीर्तन ऐकावया भुलले श्रवण । श्रीमुख लोचन देखावया ॥1॥
उदित हें भाग्य होईल कोणे काळीं । चित्त तळमळी ह्मणऊनि ॥ध्रु.॥
उतावीळ बाहएा भेटिलागीं दंड । लोटांगणीं धड जावयासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माथा ठेवीन चरणीं । होतील पारणी इंिद्रयांची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My ears are entranced, longing to hear kirtan. My eyes yearn to behold His holy face.

When will such fortunate time arise? My chitta aches with this longing. My arms are eager to embrace Him; my body yearns to prostrate itself before Him in full surrender.

Says Tuka, I shall place my head at His feet, and the hunger of all my senses will be satisfied.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My ears are spellbound, longing to hear the kirtan. My eyes ache to see his holy face. When will this good fortune come? My mind keeps churning with the wait. My arms are restless to embrace him; my whole body strains to fall down before him. Tuka says: I will lay my head at his feet, and then the hunger of all my senses will be fed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a longing that has taken hold of every sense at once. His ears hunger for kirtan, his eyes for God's face, his arms to embrace, his body to prostrate. The ache is not vague; it is a restless waiting, asking when the fortune of meeting will finally dawn. He pictures the moment of relief as laying his head at God's feet, and only then are the senses, which until now have starved, at last satisfied. The poem makes the body itself the instrument of devotion, every limb leaning toward God.

GATHA 2257 The Power of the Name

The Name, the body cooled by remembrance

मराठी मूळ

नाम घेतां कंठ शीतळ शरीर । इंद्रियां व्यापार नाठवती ॥1॥
गोड गोमटें हें अमृतासी वाड । केला कइवाड माझ्या चित्तें ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमरसें जाली पुष्ट अंगकांति । त्रिविध सांडिती ताप अंग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें विकाराची मात । बोलों नये हित सकळांचें ॥3॥ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the Name is on my lips, the body grows cool, and the senses forget their usual occupations. This sweetness surpasses even nectar; my chitta has made a great celebration of it.

The glow of my body has grown radiant with the sap of love, and the threefold afflictions have left my being. Says Tuka, in that state, the sway of worldly passions has no voice; this is the true welfare of all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the Name is on my lips, my throat goes cool and my body with it. My senses forget their usual business. This is sweet and lovely, greater than nectar; my mind has thrown itself wholly into it. With the sap of love my body has grown radiant, and the threefold suffering has left me. Tuka says: in that state, worldly passion has no voice. This is the true good of everyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what taking God's Name does to the whole person. The Name brings a coolness that spreads through the body and quiets the senses, which forget their ordinary cravings. He calls it sweeter than nectar, and his mind has plunged into it completely. The fruit is plain: the body glows with the sap of love, the threefold afflictions fall away, and worldly passion has nothing left to say. He ends by widening it past himself: this is not his private experience but the true welfare available to all who take the Name.

GATHA 2258 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, worship as faithful duty

मराठी मूळ

स्वामिकाज गुरुभक्ति । पितृवचन सेवा पति ॥1॥
हे चि विष्णूची महापूजा । अनुभाव नाहीं दुजा ॥ध्रु.॥
सत्य बोले मुखें । दुखवे आणिकांच्या दुःखें ॥2॥
निश्चयाचें बळ । तुका ह्मणे तें च फळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Service to one's master, devotion to the guru, obedience to a father's word, and a wife's faithful service to her husband: these are the highest worship of Vishnu; there is no other experience to match them. Speak only truth with your lips, and feel the pain of others as your own.

Says Tuka, the strength of firm resolve is itself the fruit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Doing your master's work, devotion to the guru, obeying your father's word, faithful service to your husband: this is the great worship of Vishnu. There is no other experience to match it. Speak only truth with your mouth. Feel the pain of others as your own. Tuka says: the strength of firm resolve is itself the fruit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram locates worship not in ritual but in how a person lives their ordinary duties and bonds. Doing one's appointed work, honoring guru and father, keeping faith in marriage: these, done rightly, are the highest worship of Vishnu, with nothing higher to seek. Alongside them he sets a plain ethic: speak truth, and let the suffering of others touch you as if it were yours. The closing line gathers it: the very firmness of resolve to live this way is already the reward, not merely a means to one. Devotion here is steady right living, not display.

GATHA 2259 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only love as the currency

मराठी मूळ

चित्त घेऊनियां तू काय देसी । ऐसें मजपासीं सांग आधीं ॥1॥
तरि च पंढरिराया करिन साटोवाटी । नेघें जया तुटी येईल तें ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धिसिद्धि कांहीं दाविसी अभिळास । नाहीं मज आस मुक्तीची ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझें माझें घडे तर । भक्तीचा भाव रे देणें घेणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You take my chitta, tell me first what You will give in return. Only then, O Lord of Pandhari, will I make this exchange; I will not accept a deal that leads to loss.

If You dangle riches and powers before me, know that I have no desire even for liberation. Says Tuka, if a true bond is to form between You and me, let devotion be the only currency of giving and receiving.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you take my mind, what will you give me in return? Tell me that first. Only then, Lord of Pandhari, will I make the trade. I will not accept a bargain that ends in loss. If you dangle riches and powers before me, know this: I have no craving even for liberation. Tuka says: if a bond is to form between you and me, then let devotion be the only thing we give and take.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the language of bargaining on God, half playful and wholly serious. He will hand over his mind, but he wants to know the terms first, refusing any exchange that leaves him poorer. Then he names what he will not be paid in: not riches, not occult powers, not even moksha, the prize most seekers want. The only currency he will accept is bhakti itself, love given and received. The point is sharp: he does not want God's gifts in place of God; he wants the relationship, and devotion is the whole of the deal.

GATHA 2260 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, made into a beggar by God

मराठी मूळ

तुझा संग पुरे संग पुरे । संगति पुरे विठोबा ॥1॥
आपल्या सारिखें करिसी दासां । भिकारिसा जग जाणे ॥ध्रु.॥
रूपा नाहीं ठाव नांवा । तैसें आमुचें करिसी देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तोयें आपुलें भेंडोळें । करिसी वाटोळें माझें तैसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Enough of Your company, O Vitthal, enough. You make Your servants just like Yourself, and the world sees them as beggars.

You have no fixed form, no settled name, and You would make our condition the same. Says Tuka, You first wrap Your own bundle in rags, and then You do the same to mine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Enough of your company, Vithoba, enough. You make your servants just like yourself, and then the world sees them as beggars. You have no fixed form and no settled name, and you would make us the same. Tuka says: you first wrap your own bundle in rags, and then you do the same to mine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains to Vithoba with affection and a knowing smile. The complaint is that God remakes his devotees in his own likeness: since God has no fixed form or name and owns nothing, his servants too end up formless, nameless, and looking like beggars to the world. The image of the rag-wrapped bundle is the joke and the point at once: God carries his own goods in rags, and he hands the same lot to his own. Beneath the teasing is praise, that being made poor and unmarked like God is exactly what the devotee has received, even if the world calls it loss.

GATHA 2261 Prayers

Surrender, holding God to his name

मराठी मूळ

आतां मज तारीं । वचन हें साच करीं ॥1॥
तुझें नाम दिनानाथ । ि◌ब्रदावळी जगविख्यात ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण लेखी माझ्या दोषा । तुझा त्रिभुवनीं ठसा ॥2॥
वांयां जातां मज । तुका ह्मणे तुह्मां लाज ॥3॥
मायबाप चुलता बंधु । अवघा तुजशीं संबंधु ॥ध्रु.॥
उभयकुळींसाक्ष। तूं चि माझा मातुळपक्ष ॥2॥
समपिनली काया । तुका ह्मणे पंढरिराया॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Save me now; make Your word come true. Your name is Lord of the Lowly; Your fame is renowned across the world.

Who can count my faults when Your seal is upon all three worlds? Says Tuka, if I am lost, the shame is Yours. Mother, father, uncle, brother: all my relations are with You alone.

In both clans You are my witness; You alone are my maternal kin. Says Tuka, I have surrendered this body to You, O Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Save me now. Make your word come true. Your name is Lord of the Lowly; your fame is known across the world. Who can count up my faults, when your seal is set on all three worlds? Tuka says: if I am lost, the shame is yours. Mother, father, uncle, brother: all my kinship is with you alone. In both my families you are the witness; you yourself are my mother's side. Tuka says: I have given over this body to you, O Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads to be saved and then presses God with God's own reputation: you are called Lord of the Lowly, so live up to the name. He refuses to let his sins be the measure; against the One whose mark is on all three worlds, what is a tally of faults? Then he turns the responsibility around: if a man who has surrendered is still lost, the disgrace falls on his protector, not on him. He names God as every relation he has, mother, father, uncle, brother, his entire family on both sides, so there is no one else to turn to. The body is handed over to Vitthal of Pandhari, and with it the whole burden of being saved.

GATHA 2262 The Necessity of Experience

Knowledge, the taste belongs to the eater

मराठी मूळ

वेदाचा तो अर्थ आह्मांसी च ठावा । येरांनी वाहावा भार माथां ॥1॥
खादल्याची गोडी देखिल्यासी नाहीं । भार धन वाही मजुरीचें ॥ध्रु.॥
उत्पित्तपाळणसंहाराचें निज । जेणें नेलें बीज त्याचे हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें आपण चि फळ । हातोहातीं मूळ सांपडलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The true meaning of the Vedas is known to us alone; let others carry the load upon their heads. The sweetness of eating belongs to the one who eats, not to the one who merely watches; the porter carries the wealth for wages.

The secret of creation, preservation, and dissolution is in the hands of the One who holds the seed. Says Tuka, the fruit has come of its own accord, and the root has been found in our very hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The true meaning of the Vedas is known to us alone; let others carry the load on their heads. The one who watches does not taste the sweetness of what is eaten; the porter only hauls the wealth for his wages. The secret of creation, keeping, and dissolution belongs to the One who holds the seed. Tuka says: the fruit has come of itself, and the root has been found in our own hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram claims that the heart of the Vedas is grasped by the devotee, not by the one who merely carries the texts as a burden of learning. He sets two figures against each other: the eater who tastes the sweetness, and the porter who lugs another man's wealth and is paid only in wages. Scholarship without devotion is that porter, handling the treasure but never owning it. The real key is held by the One who holds the seed of all creation, preservation, and dissolution. To find that One is to find the fruit ripening on its own and the root itself in your hands; you no longer need to carry the load.

GATHA 2263 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, sitting in protest at God's door

मराठी मूळ

आमचा तूं ऋणी ठायींचा चि देवा । मागावया ठेवा आलों दारा ॥1॥
वर्म तुझें आह्मां सांपडलें हातीं । धरियेले चित्तीं दृढ पाय ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसलों धरणें कोंडोनियां द्वारीं । आंतूनि बाहेरी येओं नेदी ॥2॥
तुज मज सरी होइल या विचारें । जळो भांडखोरें निलाजिरीं ॥3॥
भांडवल माझें मिरविसी जनीं । सहजर वोवनी नाममाळा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी केली जिवें साटी । तुह्मां आह्मां तुटी घालूं आतां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have been our debtor from the very beginning, O God. I have come to Your door to claim my treasure.

Your secret is now in our hands; we have firmly clasped Your feet in our chitta. I have sat in protest at Your door, blocking the way in and out.

If You and I must be measured as equals in this contest, then let the shameless quarrel burn. You parade my investment before the world, weaving garlands of Your Name from it.

Says Tuka, we have staked our lives; now let us settle accounts between us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have been our debtor from the very start, O God. I have come to your door to claim what is mine. Your secret is in our hands now; I have clasped your feet firmly in my heart. I have sat down in protest at your door, blocking the way in and out. If you and I are to be weighed as equals in this fight, then let the shameless quarrel burn. You parade my investment before the world, weaving garlands from your Name. Tuka says: we have staked our very lives; now let us settle the account between us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God not as a beggar but as a creditor demanding what is owed from the beginning. He says he has found God's weak point and seized his feet, then stages a protest sit-in at the door so God can neither come nor go, the way a creditor once camped outside a debtor's house. He half-laughs at the unseemly quarrel between them, yet refuses to drop it. He even claims the devotion is his own investment that God displays to the world as garlands of the Name. The poem ends as a final reckoning: I have wagered my life, so now the accounts between us must be closed for good.

GATHA 2264 True Worship

True worship, the unwashed mind within

मराठी मूळ

काय धोविलें बाहेरी मन मळलें अंतरीं । गादलें जन्मवरीं असत्यकाटें काटलें ॥1॥
पापपुण्यविटाळ देहीं भरितां न विचारिसी कांहीं । काय चाचपसी मही जी अखंड सोंवळी ॥2॥
कामक्रोधा वेगळा ऐसा होई कां सोंवळा । तुका ह्मणे कळा गुंडुन ठेवीं कुसरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you wash the outside when the mind is soiled within? You have been plastered over with falsehood since birth. You fill the body with the impurity of sin and merit without a thought, yet you keep touching the earth as if it were eternally pure.

Become free of lust and anger; then you will be truly clean. Says Tuka, roll up your clever tricks and put them away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What have you washed on the outside, when the mind is dirty within? You have been smeared over since birth, stitched up with the thorns of falsehood. You fill the body with the impurity of sin and merit and never give it a thought, yet you keep touching the earth as if it were forever pure. Become free of lust and anger; then you are truly clean. Tuka says: roll up your clever tricks and put them away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the ritual obsession with outer purity while the inner life stays soiled. Washing the body means nothing when the mind has been plastered with falsehood since birth. He points out the contradiction: a person carries the real defilement of sin and merit inside, yet fusses over touching pure ground. The only purity that counts is freedom from lust and anger. The last line tells the clever performer to fold up his tricks; cleverness about purity rules is itself part of the dirt.

GATHA 2265 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, truth grows its own sweetness

मराठी मूळ

ऊंस वाढवितां वाढली गोडी । गुळ साकर हे त्याची परवडी ॥1॥
सत्यकर्मे आचरें रे । बापा सत्यकर्मे आचरें रे ।
सत्यकर्मे आचरें होईल हित । वाढेल दुःख असत्याचें ॥ध्रु.॥
साकरेच्या आळां लाविला कांदा । स्थूळसानापरि वाढे दुगपधा ॥2॥
सत्य असत्य हें ऐसिया परी । तुका ह्मणे याचा विचार करीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As sugarcane grows, its sweetness increases; jaggery and sugar are its natural yield. Practice truthful action, O friend, practice truthful action.

Truthful deeds will bring you well-being, while falsehood only multiplies suffering. If you plant an onion in a bed of sugar, it still grows bitter regardless of size.

Says Tuka, reflect upon the nature of truth and untruth in this manner.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As the sugarcane grows, its sweetness grows; jaggery and sugar are what it naturally yields. Practice truthful action, O friend; practice truthful action. Truthful deeds will bring you good; falsehood only makes suffering grow. Plant an onion in a bed of sugar, and large or small it still grows bitter. Truth and untruth are like that. Tuka says: think it over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram teaches with farming images: a thing yields according to its own nature. Sugarcane grows sweeter as it grows and gives jaggery and sugar; truthful action likewise ripens into well-being. An onion does not turn sweet just because you plant it in sugar; its bitterness is in its nature, no matter how it is surrounded. So a false life cannot be sweetened by good circumstances; it only swells suffering. He ends by asking the listener simply to reflect on which seed he is planting in his own life.

GATHA 2266 Faith and Trust

Faith, the essence is the heart's devotion

मराठी मूळ

पाषाण देव पाषाण पायरी । पूजा एकावरी पाय ठेवी ॥1॥
सार तो भाव सार तो भाव । अनुभवीं देव ते चि जाले॥ध्रु.॥
उदका भिन्न पालट काई । गंगा गोड येरां चवी काय नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें भाविकांचें वर्म । येरीं धर्माधर्म विचारावें॥3॥ ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The stone that is worshipped as God and the stone that serves as a step are both stone; one receives worship while the other bears the weight of feet. The essence is faith, the essence is faith; those who live by experience have themselves become God.

Is water any different from water? The Ganga is holy, but does the other water not also have taste? Says Tuka, this is the secret of the faithful. Let others deliberate over dharma and adharma.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The stone worshipped as God and the stone laid as a step are both stone; one gets worship, the other carries feet. The essence is faith, the essence is faith; those who live by experience have themselves become God. Is one water different from another? The Ganga is holy, but does other water have no taste? Tuka says: this is the secret of the faithful. Let others debate dharma and adharma.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram observes that the idol and the doorstep are the same stone; what divides them is the faith poured into one and not the other. The decisive thing is not the material but the devotion, and those who know God by direct experience have themselves become one with God. He pushes the point with water: all water has taste, yet faith makes the Ganga holy. So holiness lives in the heart's relation, not in the object. This, he says, is the open secret of the devotee; the endless arguing over what is dharma and adharma he leaves to others.

GATHA 2267 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, wake and claim the free treasure

मराठी मूळ

जन्मा येऊनि कां रे निदसुरा । जायें भेटी वरा रखुमाईच्या ॥1॥
पाप ताप दैन्य जाईल सकळ । पावसी अढळउत्तम तें ॥ध्रु.॥
संतमहंतसिद्धहरिदासदाटणी । फिटती पारणीं इंिद्रयांचीं॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें नामाचा गजर । फुकाची अपार लुटी घेई ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you sleep through this human birth, O slothful one? Go and meet the Lord of Rakhumai. All sins, suffering, and poverty will vanish, and you will attain that which is imperishable and supreme.

In the gathering of saints, the great ones, the accomplished, and the devotees of Hari, the hunger of the senses is fulfilled. Says Tuka, there the Name resounds; claim freely the boundless treasure that costs nothing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why sleep through this human birth, you drowsy one? Go and meet the Lord of Rakhumai. Sin, suffering, and misery will all leave you, and you will reach what is unshakable and supreme. In the crowd of saints, great souls, the perfected, and the servants of Hari, the long hunger of the senses is broken. Tuka says: there the Name rings out; take freely the boundless plunder that costs nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shakes a sleeper awake: a human birth is a rare chance, so do not doze through it. The remedy he names is to go and meet Vitthal, the Lord of Rakhumai, who drives off sin, suffering, and poverty and gives the imperishable. He locates this in the company of saints and devotees, where the restless craving of the senses is finally satisfied as at the end of a long fast. The closing image is striking: the Name sounds in that gathering, and its endless treasure can simply be looted for free. The only effort asked is to wake up and go.

GATHA 2268 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow holy man

मराठी मूळ

काय धोविलें कातडें । काळकुट भीतरि कुडें ॥1॥
उगा राहें लोकभांडा । चाळविल्या पोरें रांडा ॥ध्रु.॥
घेसी बुंथी पानवथां । उगा च हालविसी माथा ॥2॥
लावूनि बैसे टाळी । मन इंद्रियें मोकळीं ॥3॥
हालवीत बैस माळा । विषयजप वेळोवेळां॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हा व्यापार । नाम विठोबाचें सार ॥5॥ ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you wash only the outer skin when inside you are crooked and dark? Be quiet, you fraud of the world, you who deceive women and children. You sit at bathing ghats and nod your head solemnly for no reason.

You sit with cymbals, while your mind and senses roam free. You move the prayer beads while your real chanting is of sense pleasures, moment after moment.

Says Tuka, all of this is mere show; the Name of Vitthal alone is the true substance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What have you washed but the outer skin, when inside you are crooked and dark as poison? Be quiet, you fraud of the world; you have fooled women and children. You wrap a shawl at the bathing ghats and nod your head for show. You sit with your cymbals while your mind and senses run loose. You finger the prayer beads, but your real chanting is of sense pleasures, over and over. Tuka says: all this is just business; the Name of Vithoba alone is the substance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram skewers the performing holy man who scrubs the outside while staying crooked and dark within. The shawl at the ghat, the solemn nodding, the cymbals, the moving beads are all props; underneath, the mind and senses wander and the real, ceaseless chant is for sense pleasures. He calls the whole act a trade, religion run as a business of impressing onlookers. The point lands not as contempt for one man but as a warning about a pattern any of us can slip into: outer display standing in for inner change. The only genuine substance, he says, is the Name of Vithoba itself.

GATHA 2269 Longing and Separation

Longing, calling God to come running

मराठी मूळ

येई वो येई वो येई धांवोनियां । विलंब कां वायां लाविला कृपाळे ॥1॥
विठाबाई विश्वंभरे भवच्छेदके । कोठें गुंतलीस अगे विश्वव्यापके ॥ध्रु.॥
न करीं न करीं न करीं आतां अळस अव्हेरु । व्हावया प्रकट कैंचें दूरि अंतरु ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, O come, come running. Why this needless delay, O Merciful One? O Vithabai, Sustainer of the universe, Destroyer of worldly bondage, where are You engaged, O all-pervading One? Do not, do not, do not be indifferent or negligent any longer.

To become manifest, what distance is there to cross?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, oh come, come running. Why this needless delay, O Merciful One? O Vithabai, Sustainer of the world, breaker of the bondage of becoming, where are you held up, O all-pervading One? Do not, do not, do not be lazy or neglect me any longer. To become visible to me, what distance is there to cross?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out in pure impatience, calling God to come running and demanding why the Merciful One is slow. He addresses God tenderly as Vithabai, the one who sustains the universe and cuts the chain of birth and rebirth, and asks where such an all-pervading One could possibly be detained. The triple no, do not, do not, do not, refuses any excuse of delay or indifference. The final line presses the logic of God's own nature: if you are everywhere already, what distance keeps you from simply showing yourself? Longing here turns into an argument God cannot answer.

GATHA 2270 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, asking God for the right gifts

मराठी मूळ

हें चि याच्या ऐसें मागावें दान । वंदूनि चरण नारायणा ॥1॥
धीर उदारींव निर्मळ निर्मत्सर । येणें सर्वेश्वर ऐसें नांव ॥ध्रु.॥
हा चि होईजेल याचिया विभागें । अनुभववी अंगें अनुभववील ॥2॥
जोडे तयाचे कां न करावे सायास । जाला तरि अळस दीनपणे ॥3॥
पावल्यामागें कां न घलावी धांव । धरिल्या तरि हांव बळ येतें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे घालूं खंडीमध्ये टांक । देवाचें हें एक करुनी घेऊं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should ask for gifts like these, bowing at the feet of Narayana: courage, generosity, purity, and freedom from jealousy. By these, one becomes worthy of the name 'Lord of All.' Such qualities one should experience in one's own being and help others experience too.

Why not strive for what is truly beneficial? Even if laziness comes from one's lowly state, one should still run after what has been attained. Says Tuka, let us strike the chisel into the quarry and make God's work our own.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ask for gifts like these, bowing at the feet of Narayana: steadiness, generosity, purity, freedom from envy. By these one earns the name Lord of All. One becomes this by his share of them; let him taste it in his own body and let others taste it too. Why not labor for what is truly worth gaining? Even if laziness comes from one's lowly state, still run after what you have reached. Why not give chase once you are close behind? Hold on, and the strength and daring come. Tuka says: let us strike the chisel into the quarry and carve out this one thing of God's for ourselves.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that what we should beg of God is not wealth but character: steadiness, generosity, purity, and freedom from jealousy, the very qualities that make the name Lord of All fitting. These are not just to be admired but lived in one's own being and passed on for others to live too. He then argues against giving up: even if low spirits breed laziness, keep running after the goal you have already neared, because the very act of holding on summons strength and daring. The closing image is a quarryman driving his chisel into rock; spiritual virtue is hard-won work, not a windfall. He resolves to carve this one thing of God's out for himself.

GATHA 2271 The Power of the Name

The Name, catching God in our words

मराठी मूळ

सत्ताबळें येतो मागतां विभाग । लावावया लाग निमित्य करूं ॥1॥
तुझीं ऐसीं मुखें करूं उच्चारण । बोलें नारायण सांपडवूं ॥ध्रु.॥
आसेविण नाहीं उपजत मोहो । तरि च हा गोहो न पडे फंदीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां व्हावें याजऐसें । सरिसें सरिसें समागमें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the force of our right, we come to claim our share. Let us seize the occasion to begin.

With mouths like Yours, let us utter the Name and catch Narayana in our words. Without desire, infatuation does not arise; without infatuation, one does not fall into delusion's trap.

Says Tuka, now one must become like Him; in equal company, like meets like.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the force of our right we come to claim our share; let us seize the occasion to begin. With mouths like yours we will utter the Name and catch Narayana in our words. Without desire no infatuation is born; without infatuation a man does not fall into delusion's trap. Tuka says: now one must become like him, equal beside equal, in close company.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram approaches God as one claiming a rightful share, looking for a pretext to begin the work. The plan is bold: with our own mouths we will chant the Name and so catch Narayana, snaring God in our very words. He notes the chain that ordinarily binds people: desire breeds infatuation, and infatuation drops a man into delusion. The way out is to redirect that same clinging toward God. The closing line states the aim of devotion plainly: to become like the Lord, standing as equal beside equal in his intimate company.

GATHA 2272 Worldly Life

Worldly life, nothing moves without the heart

मराठी मूळ

करितां होया व्हावें चित्त चि नाहीं । घटापटा कांहीं करूं नये ॥1॥
मग हालत चि नाहीं जवळून । करावा तो सीण सीणवितो ॥ध्रु.॥
साहत चि नाहीं कांहीं पांकुळलें । उगल्या उगलें ढळत आहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी बोलावें झांकून । येथें खुणे खूण पुरतें चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the chitta is not in it, nothing can be accomplished; one should not force jars and pots to yield what they do not hold. Then nothing moves from where it is; every effort only adds to weariness.

What is weak cannot withstand anything; even without cause, it totters and sways. Says Tuka, then one should speak with closed lips; here, only the subtle sign answers to the subtle sign.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the heart is not in it, nothing gets done; you cannot force jars and pots to give what they do not hold. Then nothing budges from where it sits, and the effort you make only wears you out. Whatever is weak cannot bear anything; with no cause at all it totters and sways. Tuka says: then one should speak with the lips closed; here, only the subtle sign answers the subtle sign.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram observes that without the chitta, the inner heart, no work truly succeeds; you cannot squeeze from empty vessels what they never contained. When the heart is absent, things stay stuck, and all the straining just exhausts the one who strains. Anything weak collapses on its own, swaying without any push. His counsel is to stop the outer noise and speak with closed lips, because at this level communication is silent: one subtle sign is met by another subtle sign. The teaching is that the real exchange between seeker and God happens beneath words, in the heart, not in forced effort.

GATHA 2273 The Saints

Saints, the place where God lives

मराठी मूळ

संतसंगें याचा वास सर्वकाळ । संचला सकळ मूतिनमंत ॥1॥
घालूनियां काळ अवघा बाहेरी । त्यासी च अंतरीं वास दिला ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलेसें जिंहीं नाहीं उरों दिलें । चोजवितां भलें ऐसीं स्थळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाही झांकत परिमळ । चंदनाचें स्थळ चंदन चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through the company of saints, He dwells there at all times, fully embodied and present. Time itself has been banished outward, and He alone is given residence within.

Those who have not kept anything as their own, such are the wondrous places to behold. Says Tuka, fragrance cannot be concealed; the place of sandalwood is always sandalwood.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the company of saints, He lives there always. He is wholly present, with form. Time is shut out, sent away. To Him alone they give a home inside. They have not kept anything as their own. Look, and you see: these are the good places. Tuka says: fragrance cannot be hidden. The place of sandalwood is sandalwood itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying where God can actually be found: in the company of the saints, where He dwells at all times, fully present. He pictures these saints as people who have pushed time itself outside and given their whole inner room to God alone. What makes that possible is that they have kept nothing back as their own. The closing image makes the point unanswerable: just as a place full of sandalwood cannot hide its fragrance, a heart emptied for God cannot hide His presence.

GATHA 2274 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the Name as adornment

मराठी मूळ

पुष्ट कांति निवती डोळे । हे सोहळे श्रीरंगीं ॥1॥
अंतर्बाहीं विलेपन । हें भूषण मिरवूं ॥ध्रु.॥
इच्छेऐसी आवड पुरे । विश्वंभरे जवळी ॥2॥
तुका करी नारायण । या या सेवन नामाचें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A radiant complexion, eyes that find contentment: these are the celebrations found in Shrirang. Within and without, this anointing, this adornment, let us display.

Every desire and longing is fulfilled, for the Sustainer of the world is near. Says Tuka, come and partake of the Name of Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His glowing beauty; my eyes find rest. These are the joys in Shrirang. Inside and out, this anointing. Let me wear it as my ornament. Every wish, every longing, is filled, for the One who holds the world is near. Tuka says: take this, take it, the Name of Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the joy of looking at God and finding the eyes at rest in His radiant beauty. He turns devotion into something worn on the body: the love of God smeared inside and out like a fragrant paste, carried as one's only ornament. Because the Sustainer of the world is close, every desire and longing is already met; nothing more is needed. So he ends by pressing it on us twice over, urging us to feed on the one thing that does this, the Name of Narayana.

GATHA 2275 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the spring that never dries

मराठी मूळ

सुकाळ हा दिवसरजनी । नीत धणी नवी च ॥1॥
करुण सेवूं नानापरी । राहे उरी गोडीनें ॥ध्रु.॥
सरे ऐसा नाहीं झरा। पंक्ती करा समवेत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरवा पान्हा । कान्हाबाई माउलीचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is abundance day and night, always fresh and ever satisfying. We serve this nectar in countless ways, and still sweetness remains.

This spring never runs dry; come, gather in rows and share it together. Says Tuka, the motherly love of Kanhabai flows beautifully.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is harvest day and night. The fill of it is always new. We drink this tenderness in many ways. Still sweetness stays behind. There is no spring that runs dry like this one. Come, gather in a row together. Tuka says: the milk flows sweetly, the milk of mother Kanhabai.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is celebrating an abundance that never wears thin: day and night the harvest is full, and however much you take, it is always fresh and the sweetness keeps remaining. He invites others to come and drink it together, sitting in rows like children fed in turn. The closing image makes the source plain: this is mother's milk, the flowing love of Krishna as a nursing mother. The point is that God's grace is not a fixed ration but a spring that cannot be emptied.

GATHA 2276 The Nature of God

The nature of God, one yet everywhere

मराठी मूळ

पाहतां तव एकला दिसे । कैसा असे व्यापक ॥1॥
ज्याचे त्याचे मिळणीं मिळे । तरी खेळे बहुरूपी ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणिवेचें नेदी अंग । दिसों रंग निवडीना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ये चि ठायीं । हें तों नाहीं सर्वत्र ॥3॥ ॥8॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When one looks, He appears to be just one, solitary. Yet how is He all-pervading? He blends with each according to their nature, playing the part of many.

He does not reveal Himself through intellectual knowledge; His colors cannot be separated out. Says Tuka, this truth is right here, yet it is not the same everywhere.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you look, He seems to be one, alone. How then is He everywhere? He blends into each thing's own joining. So He plays in many forms. He does not yield to your knowing. His color cannot be picked apart. Tuka says: He is right here in this very place; and yet He is not the same in every place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is holding two things together that seem to clash. Look, and God appears single and alone, yet He pervades everything; He does this by merging with each being according to its own nature and so plays as countless forms. He warns that you cannot seize Him with the intellect, his colors will not separate out under analysis. The last line keeps the paradox sharp: He is fully present here in this very spot, and at the same time He is not uniformly available everywhere, so He is found, not deduced.

GATHA 2277 Longing and Separation

Longing, the complaint of the surrendered

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मांसाटीं आह्मां आपुला विसर । करितां अव्हेर कैसें दिसे ॥1॥
विचाराजी आतां ठायीचें हे देवा । आह्मां नये हेवा वाढवितां ॥ध्रु.॥
आलों टाकोनियां सुखाची वसती । पुढें माझ्या युक्ति खुंटलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला सकळ वृत्तांत । केला प्रणिपात ह्मणऊनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For Your sake, we have forgotten ourselves. How does it look when You disregard us? Consider this from the beginning, O God.

We cannot bear it when You increase our longing. We left behind the comforts of home, and now our wits have reached their end.

Says Tuka, the whole story has been told; that is why I make this prostration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For Your sake we have forgotten ourselves. When You turn us away, how does that look? Think it over from the start now, God. Do not keep swelling our longing; we cannot bear it. We came, leaving behind the home where we were happy. Now our wits have run out ahead of us. Tuka says: the whole story is told. That is why I bow down low.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the complaint of someone who has already given everything. Tukaram says he has forgotten his own self for God's sake, and then asks how it can look right for God to push him away. He names the real grievance: God keeps increasing the longing rather than fulfilling it, and that the surrendered cannot endure, having left behind every comfort and exhausted their own cleverness. Having laid the whole case out, he ends not in argument but in prostration, putting the matter wholly in God's hands.

GATHA 2278 Prayers

Prayer, holding God to His promise

मराठी मूळ

करावा उद्धार हें तुह्मां उचित । आह्मी केली नीत कळली ते ॥1॥
पाववील हाक धांवा ह्मणऊन । करावें जतन ज्याचें तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
दुश्चतासी बोल ठेवायासी ठाव । ऐसा आह्मी भाव जाणतसों ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is fitting for You to grant deliverance; we have done our part as we understood it. When one calls out, the promise is that You will come running.

Let each one guard what is theirs. We know Your nature: there is room even for doubtful words at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To lift us up is right for You to do. We did our duty as we understood it. The promise is: call out, and You come running. Each one must guard what is his own. Tuka says: there is a place even for the doubter's words. Such is the trust we hold.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying by reminding God of His own promise. He says deliverance is God's proper work, while the devotee's part, done as well as he knew how, is finished; now God is bound by the vow that whoever calls out, He comes running. The line that each must guard what is his own turns it back on God: these calling souls are God's charge to keep. Even the words of a wavering, doubtful heart, he trusts, have a place at God's feet, so he prays without needing to be flawless first.

GATHA 2279 Longing and Separation

Longing, fear at the delay

मराठी मूळ

संताचे उपदेश आमुचे मस्तकीं । नाहीं मृतेलोकीं राहाणेसा ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि बहु तळमळी चित्त । येई वो धांवत पांडुरंगे ॥ध्रु.॥
उपजली चिंता लागला उसीर । होत नाहीं धीर निढळ वाटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोटीं रिघालेंसे भय । करूं आतां काय ऐसें जालें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The teachings of the saints rest upon our heads. We are not meant to remain in this mortal world.

Therefore my chitta yearns greatly. Come running, O Panduranga.

Anxiety has arisen because of this delay; I feel no patience, and the wait seems naked and exposed. Says Tuka, fear has entered my belly. What shall I do now? Things have come to this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints' teaching rests on our heads. We are not meant to stay in this dying world. So my mind churns and burns. Come running, O Panduranga. Worry has risen; the wait grows long. I find no patience; I feel bare and exposed. Tuka says: fear has entered my belly. What do I do now? It has come to this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the saints' teaching as a command carried on his head: this mortal world is no place to settle. That conviction makes him unable to rest, and his whole mind churns as he calls for Panduranga to come quickly. The delay itself becomes torment; he can find no patience and feels stripped and exposed in the waiting. He names plainly the fear that has lodged in his belly and the helplessness of not knowing what to do, so that longing for God is shown here as something closer to dread than to calm.

GATHA 2280 Longing and Separation

Longing, God will save His own

मराठी मूळ

काळावरि घालूं तरि तो सरिसा । न पुरतां इच्छा दास कैसे ॥1॥
आतां नाहीं कांहीं उसिराचें काम । न खंडावें प्रेम नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
देणें लागे मग विलंब कां आड । गोड तरि गोड आदि अंत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे होइल दरुषणें निंश्चती । गाईन तें गीतीं ध्यान मग ॥3॥
याजसाटीं असें योजिलें श्रीपति । संकल्पाचे हातीं सर्व जोडा॥ध्रु.॥
परपीडे ज्याची जिव्हा मुंडताळे । यमदूत डाळे करिती पूजा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंबऋषी दुर्योधना । काय झालें नेणां दुर्वासया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If we battle against Time, he matches us blow for blow; how can we be servants when our desires are not fulfilled? There is no room for delay now; do not let our love be interrupted, O Narayana. If the gift must come, why this obstacle of postponement? If it is sweet, let it be sweet from beginning to end.

Says Tuka, once I have Your vision, certainty will come, and then I shall sing in meditation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If we wrestle with Time, he matches us blow for blow. With our wish unmet, what kind of servant am I? There is no room for delay now. Do not break off Your love, Narayana. If the gift must come, why this obstacle of delay? If it is sweet, let it be sweet from start to end. Tuka says: with Your sight, certainty will come; then I shall sing You in song and meditation. For this, Shripati has arranged it so: by His will, everything is set in place. The one who harms others has his tongue cut off; the messengers of Yama honor that. Tuka says: do you not know what happened to Ambarisha, to Duryodhana, to Durvasa?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram first presses his case as a servant: against Time alone he is outmatched, and an unanswered servant is no servant at all, so he begs Narayana not to break off His love or postpone the gift. Once he has God's sight, he says, certainty and song will follow on their own. Then he widens out: it is Shripati who arranges all this, and by His will everything falls into place. He recalls the old pattern that those who harm others are punished while God shields His devotees, pointing to Ambarisha, Duryodhana, and Durvasa, asking whether we have forgotten how that turned out.

GATHA 2281 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the fault-finder's spoiled mind

मराठी मूळ

हागिल्याचे सिंके वोणवा चि राहे । अपशकुन पाहे वेडगळ ॥1॥
अत्यंत समय नेणतां अवकळा । येऊं नये बळा सिक धरा ॥ध्रु.॥
भोजनसमयीं ओकाचा आठव । ठकोनियां जीव कष्टी करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती सांगों उगवून । अभाग्याचे गुण अनावर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who recoils at the smell of dung sees ill omens everywhere; the foolish look for bad signs in everything. Those who do not know the proper time and occasion are overcome by disgrace; hold your composure and learn restraint.

Thinking of vomiting at mealtime spoils the jiva and makes one miserable. Says Tuka, how much more can I explain? The ways of the unfortunate are beyond control.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who gags at the smell of dung sees omens everywhere; the fool hunts for bad signs. Not knowing the right time and place brings disgrace. Do not let it master you; learn restraint. Remembering vomit at mealtime fools the soul and makes it suffer. Tuka says: how much can I unravel and explain? The faults of the unlucky are past control.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a mind ruined by its own squeamishness and superstition. The person who recoils at every foul smell starts seeing ill omens everywhere; the foolish go looking for bad signs in all things. His point is about timing and self-restraint: not knowing the fit time and place leads to disgrace, so do not let the impulse run away with you. The image of dwelling on vomit at the dinner table shows how this works, the obsessing itself spoils what is good and torments the person. The closing line is weary rather than scornful: such self-defeating habits, once entrenched, are hard to undo.

GATHA 2282 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the fuss-maker and God's order

मराठी मूळ

नारे तरि काय नुजेडे कोंबडें । करूनियां वेडें आघ्रो दावी ॥1॥
आइत्याचें साहे फुकाचा विभाग । विक्षेपानें जग ची थू करी ॥ध्रु.॥
नेमून ठेविला करत्यानें काळ । नल्हायेसें बळ करूं पुढें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव साहे जाल्यावरी । असांग चि करी सर्व संग ॥3॥ ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even a hen will not sit still if you simply prod it; it makes a great fuss and display over nothing. It readily consumes what comes free and then makes a show of indignation.

The capable one has set a time and order; the incompetent wants to bathe ahead of his turn. Says Tuka, once God is on your side, He dispassionately orchestrates all connections.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you simply poke it, will the hen not squawk? It acts crazy and makes a great show. It eats up what comes free, takes its share for nothing. Then with its fuss it spits at the whole world. The Maker has set the time in order. The one with no strength wants to push ahead in line. Tuka says: once God is on your side, He calmly arranges every connection.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is mocking a kind of person through the picture of a fussing hen: poke it lightly and it shrieks and makes a great display over nothing, while happily eating whatever comes free and then turning to scold the whole world. He sets against this the order set by the Maker, who has appointed each thing its proper time; the impatient and incapable man only wants to jump the queue. The lesson is to stop the noise and self-importance, because once God is truly on your side He quietly arranges every relation and outcome, without your forcing it.

GATHA 2283 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the carefree devotee

मराठी मूळ

तरी सदा निर्भर दास । चिंताआसविरहित ॥1॥
अवघा चि एकीं ठाव । सर्व भाव विठ्ठलीं ॥ध्रु.॥
निरविलें तेव्हां त्यास । जाला वास त्यामाजी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रूप ध्यावें । नाहीं ठावे गुणदोष ॥3॥
वेडिया उपचार करितां सोहळे । काय सुख कळे तयासी तें ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Such a devotee is forever carefree, free of worry and desire. All his being is in one place; his entire devotion belongs to Vitthal.

Once surrendered, he finds his dwelling within God. Says Tuka, meditate on that form; there, merit and fault are unknown.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Then the servant is always full, free of worry and want. His one and only place is Vitthal; all his feeling rests there. Once he hands himself over, he finds his home within God. Tuka says: meditate on that form; there, merit and fault are unknown. The fool goes through the rites and shows; what joy in them does he understand?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what surrender does to a person. The devotee who has given himself away is forever full and carefree, free of worry and craving, because all his feeling rests in one place, Vitthal. Once he hands himself over, he finds his very dwelling within God, where the bookkeeping of merit and fault no longer applies. The closing line cuts the other way: the fool who only performs the outward rites and shows tastes none of this joy, because the surrender, not the ritual, is what opens it.

GATHA 2284 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion without feeling

मराठी मूळ

अंधापुढें दीप नाचती नाचणें । भक्तिभावेंविण भक्ति तैसी ॥1॥
तिमाणें राखण ठेवियेलें सेता । घालुनियां माथां चुना तया ।
खादलें ह्मणोनि सेवटीं बोबाली । ठायींची भुली कां नेणां रया ॥ध्रु.॥
मुकियापासाव सांगतां पुराण । रोगिया मिष्टान्न काई होय ।
नपुंसका काय करील पिद्मणी । रुचिविण वाणी तैसे होय॥2॥
हात पाय नाहीं करिल तो काई । वृक्षा फळ आहे अमोलिक।
हातां नये तैसा वांयां च तळमळी । भावेंविण भोळीं ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What use is a feast set before a madman? How can a lamp serve one who is blind? Devotion without genuine feeling is just the same. A scarecrow is set to guard the field, with lime pasted on its head, yet it cries foul when the crop is eaten; why do you not recognize the original delusion? Telling the Puranas to a mute, giving delicacies to the sick, presenting a beautiful woman to a eunuch, or uttering words without relish: all yield nothing.

A tree bears priceless fruit, but if it cannot be reached, one only agonizes in vain. Says Tuka, the simple-minded without genuine feeling labor in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A lamp dances before a blind man, dancing for nothing. Devotion without true feeling is just like that. A scarecrow is set to guard the field, lime smeared on its head. The crop is eaten, and at the end it cries out. Why do you not see the delusion in it from the start? Telling the Puranas to a mute, sweet food to a sick man, a beautiful woman to a eunuch, words spoken without relish: all of it yields nothing. The tree has priceless fruit, but it cannot be reached. So one only burns in vain. Tuka says: the simple-hearted without true feeling labor for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is hammering one point through a string of images: action without inner feeling is wasted. A lamp shown to a blind man, a feast before the sick, the Puranas read to a mute, a scarecrow that guards nothing yet protests when the crop is gone, each is effort spent on something that cannot receive it. So too is devotion performed without genuine feeling. The fruit may be priceless, but if you cannot truly reach for it you only agonize in vain. The sting is meant for self-examination: he is not despising the simple-hearted but warning that going through the motions, however earnest, bears no fruit unless real feeling is present.

GATHA 2285 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, test before you trust

मराठी मूळ

मेघवृष्टीनें करावा उपदेश परि गुरुनें न करावा शिष्य। वांटा लाभे त्यास केल्या अर्धकर्माचा ॥1॥
द्रव्य वेचावें अन्नसत्रीं भूतीं द्यावें सर्वत्र । नेदावा हा पुत्र उत्तमयाती पोसना ॥ध्रु.॥
बीज न पेरावें खडकीं ओल नाहीं ज्याचे बुडखीं । थीतां ठके सेखीं पाठी लागे दिवाण ॥2॥
गुज बोलावें संतांशीं पत्नी राखावी जैसी दासी । लाड देतां तियेसी वांटा पावे कर्माचा ॥3॥
शुद्ध कसूनिपाहावें वरि रंगा न भुलावें । तुका ह्मणे घ्यावें जया नये तुटी तें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A guru should teach like rain falling everywhere, but should not make disciples recklessly. The disciple shares in the karma, whether good or ill.

Spend your wealth in feeding houses, give to all beings, but do not give your son to an unworthy person for upbringing. Do not sow seed on barren rock where there is no moisture at the root; those who persist there will be cheated in the end.

Share your innermost wisdom only with saints. Keep your wife like a servant in the household; if you indulge her, she claims a share of karma.

Test for purity first; do not be dazzled by surface color. Says Tuka, take only that which will not lead to loss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A teacher should pour out teaching like rain falling everywhere. But a teacher should not take on a disciple carelessly. The disciple shares in the master's karma, the good and the half-done alike. Spend your wealth on feeding houses; give to all beings. But do not hand your son to an unworthy person to raise. Do not sow seed on bare rock where there is no moisture at the root. Those who keep trying there are cheated in the end, and the collector comes after them. Speak your innermost wisdom only to the saints. Keep your wife as you would a servant of the house; if you indulge her, she takes a share of the karma. Test for what is pure first. Do not be fooled by the color on the surface. Tuka says: take only what will not lead you into loss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays down a string of warnings about where you invest your trust and your effort, all turning on one rule: discernment before commitment. Generosity should be wide, like rain, but a guru who accepts a disciple, or a parent who hands over a child, binds himself to that person's karma, so the choice must be careful. Sowing seed on bare rock stands for any effort poured where there is no inner readiness; it yields nothing and leaves you worse off. The harsh line about keeping a wife like a servant reflects a householder's caution of his era against indulgence that entangles you; the point under it is the same as the rest, that closeness shares consequence. His final test is the practical heart of the poem: look past the surface color to what is actually pure, and accept only what will not end in loss.

GATHA 2286 Prayers

Prayer, let nothing else attract me

मराठी मूळ

नावडावें जन नावडावा मान । करूनि प्रमाण तूं चि होई ॥1॥
सोडुनि देहसंबंध वेसनें । ऐसी नारायणें कृपा कीजे॥ध्रु.॥
नावडावें रूप नावडावे रस । अवघी राहो आस पायांपाशीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां आपुलिया सत्ता । करूनि अनंता ठेवा ऐसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let worldly people not be loved, let honor not be loved. May You alone become my standard and authority.

May the bonds and addictions of the body fall away. May Narayana grant such grace.

Let forms not attract me, let flavors not attract me; may all my longing rest only at Your feet. Says Tuka, now by Your own power, O Infinite One, keep me established in this state.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me not love the crowd. Let me not love honor. Make Yourself the only measure I go by. Let the body's ties and addictions fall away. O Narayana, grant me this grace. Let no form attract me. Let no taste attract me. Let all my longing rest at Your feet. Tuka says: now by Your own power, O Infinite One, keep me settled like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer to have the wrong attractions cut out at the root, one by one. Tukaram asks not to be moved by the approval of people or by his own honor, and instead to take God as his single standard for everything. He names the body's cravings and the pull of beautiful forms and pleasant tastes, and asks that the grip of each be loosened. The whole longing of his life is to be gathered up and laid at Vitthal's feet. The closing turn is the key: he admits he cannot hold this state by his own willpower, so he asks the Infinite to keep him fixed there by God's own power, not his.

GATHA 2287 Prayers

Prayer, make me free as crystal

मराठी मूळ

उपाधिवेगळे तुह्मी निविनकार । कांहीं च संसार तुह्मां नाहीं ॥1॥
ऐसें मज करूनि ठेवा नारायणा । समूळ वासना नुरवावी ॥ध्रु.॥
निसंग तुह्मांसी राहणें एकट । नाहीं कटकट साहों येक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं मिळों येत शिळा । रंगासी सकळा स्पटिकाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are free of worldly entanglement, O Narayana; You are beyond all modification. You have no worldly ties whatsoever.

Make me the same way; let not a single trace of desire remain. You dwell in solitary detachment; You cannot bear even a moment of commotion.

Says Tuka, a crystal cannot take on the color of any stone it is placed beside.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are free of every entanglement. You are beyond all change. You have no worldly ties at all. Make me the same, O Narayana. Let not one trace of desire remain. You dwell alone, unattached. You cannot bear even a moment of commotion. Tuka says: a crystal cannot take on the color of any stone you set beside it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays to be made like the God he addresses: untouched, unchanging, free of every worldly tie. He asks that desire be removed completely, not merely managed, down to the last trace. The image of God dwelling alone and unable to bear commotion describes the stillness Tukaram wants to share. The closing simile carries the whole prayer: a true crystal stays clear no matter what colored stone is laid beside it, taking on no stain. He is asking to become that clear, so that the world's colors pass over him without dyeing him.

GATHA 2288 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the base nature

मराठी मूळ

माहार माते चपणी भरे । न कळे खरें पुढील ॥1॥
वोंगळ अधमाचे गुण । जातां घडी न लगे चि ॥ध्रु.॥
श्वान झोळी स्वामिसत्ता । कोप येतां उतरे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गुमान कां । सांगों लोकां अधमासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The lowly one fills his pouch slyly when no one is looking; the future remains unknown. Such are the ways of the vile and base; they take less than a moment to fall.

A dog stays loyal only as long as the master's authority holds; when anger comes, loyalty fades. Says Tuka, why should I waste words telling the world about the nature of the wicked?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The base man slyly fills his pouch when no one is watching. What he will do next, no one knows. These are the ways of the low and the foul. They take less than a moment to fall. A dog stays loyal only while the master's power holds. When anger comes, the loyalty drops away. Tuka says: why should I waste words telling people about the nature of the wicked?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a pattern of character rather than condemning a fixed class of people: the habit of grabbing in secret and serving only while it pays. Such a nature, he says, can collapse in an instant, because it was never grounded in anything real. The dog that stays loyal only as long as the master holds power is the picture of self-interest dressed up as devotion; when the wind turns, the loyalty is gone. His weary closing question, why bother spelling out the obvious, points the warning back at the listener: do not be the one whose constancy lasts only as long as it is convenient. The lesson is self-examination, not contempt.

GATHA 2289 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, keep the mind pure

मराठी मूळ

डोळ्यामध्यें जैसें कणु । अणु तें हि न समाये ॥1॥
तैसें शुद्ध करीं हित । नका चित्त बाटवूं ॥ध्रु.॥
आपल्याचा कळवळा। आणिका बाळावरि न ये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बीज मुडा । जैशा चाडा पिकाच्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Just as a tiny speck in the eye, even the smallest particle, cannot be tolerated, so too keep the mind pure for your own benefit. Do not let it be corrupted.

The concern one has for one's own child does not extend to another's. Says Tuka, the seed must be sound if you desire a good harvest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A tiny speck in the eye, even the smallest grain, cannot be borne there. So keep your good purely; do not let your mind be defiled. The tenderness you feel for your own child does not reach another's child. Tuka says: the seed must be sound if you want the crop to ripen.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues that small impurities matter, because the inner life cannot tolerate even a little corruption, just as the eye cannot tolerate the tiniest speck. So the care you take of your mind should be exacting, keeping your good intentions clean rather than half-mixed with selfish ones. He notes plainly that natural love runs only toward your own, not toward a stranger's child, naming how partial and narrow ordinary feeling is. The closing farmer's image lands the point: only sound seed gives a real harvest, so only a pure inner motive can ripen into a genuine good. Guard the seed of the heart, and the fruit takes care of itself.

GATHA 2290 The Power of the Name

The Name, liberation in hand

मराठी मूळ

मुखीं नाम हातीं मोक्ष । ऐसी साक्ष बहुतांसी ॥1॥
वैष्णवांचा माल खरा । तुरतुरा वस्तूसी ॥ध्रु.॥
भस्म दंड न लगे काठी । तीर्थां आटी भ्रमण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आडकाठी । नाहीं भेटी देवाचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With the Name on the lips, liberation is in hand; many bear witness to this. The merchandise of the Vaishnavas is genuine; it holds its value against all goods.

No need for ash, staff, or walking stick; no need for the toil of pilgrimage to sacred places. Says Tuka, there is no obstacle in the way of meeting God through the Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Name on the lips, liberation in the hand. Many bear witness to this. The Vaishnavas' goods are genuine; they hold their value against everything. No need for ash, no need for staff or stick. No need for the toil of wandering to sacred places. Tuka says: there is no obstacle to meeting God by the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the bhakti claim in its sharpest form: speak God's Name and liberation is already in your grasp, and he says many devotees can testify to it. He treats the Name like genuine merchandise that keeps its worth no matter what it is weighed against, unlike the counterfeit value of religious display. Then he strikes out the props of conventional holiness one by one: the ascetic's smeared ash, the staff, the long pilgrimages to holy waters. None of these is required, and none stands between you and God. The whole point is that the way to God is unobstructed and available to anyone who will simply take the Name.

GATHA 2291 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only His service matters

मराठी मूळ

आगी लागो तया सुखा । जेणें हरि नये मुखा ॥1॥
मज होत कां विपित्त । पांडुरंग राहो चित्तीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जळो तें समूळ। धन संपित्त उत्तम कुळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । जेणें घडे तुझी सेवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let that comfort burn which keeps Hari from coming to one's lips. Even if calamity befalls me, may Panduranga remain in my chitta.

Let wealth, possessions, and noble lineage all burn to the ground. Says Tuka, O God, only that matters by which Your service is accomplished.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let that comfort burn which keeps Hari from coming to my lips. Let calamity fall on me; let Panduranga stay in my heart. Let it all burn down to the root: wealth, possessions, high birth. Tuka says: O God, only that counts by which Your service gets done.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures everything by a single test: does it bring Hari closer or push Him out? Any comfort that crowds the Name off his lips, he would rather see burned. He goes further and welcomes calamity itself, so long as Panduranga stays settled in his heart, because the loss of ease is nothing against the loss of God. Wealth, property, and the social pride of high birth all fall under the same flame; he wants them gone if they do not serve. The closing line states the rule directly: the only worth a thing has is whether it lets him serve God, and on that scale most of what people prize counts for nothing.

GATHA 2292 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, I enter Your embrace

मराठी मूळ

आतां न ह्मणे मी माझें । नेघें भार कांहीं ओझें ॥1॥
तूं चि तारिता मारिता । कळों आलासी निरुता ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा तूं चि जनादनन । संत बोलती वचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । तुझ्या रिगालों वोसंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I shall not say 'mine' anymore. I shall not carry any burden or load.

You alone are the one who saves and the one who slays; this has become clear to me in truth. You are everything, O Janardana; the saints speak this very word.

Says Tuka, O Panduranga, I have entered into Your embrace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I will not say 'I' and 'mine.' I will not carry any burden or load. You alone are the one who saves and the one who slays. This has become clear to me in truth. You are everything, O Janardana. The saints speak this very word. Tuka says: O Panduranga, I have entered into Your embrace.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the moment of letting go. Tukaram drops the words 'I' and 'mine' and with them the whole weight of trying to manage his own life; he refuses to carry the load any longer. The reason is a settled conviction that God alone holds power over rescue and ruin, that whatever comes, saving or striking, comes from one hand. He confirms this against the testimony of the saints, who say the same: God is all there is. The poem ends not in argument but in rest, with Tukaram simply climbed into God's lap, the burden finally set down because Someone trustworthy is now holding it.

GATHA 2293 The Power of the Name

The Name, above all merit

मराठी मूळ

समुद्रवळयांकित पृथ्वीचें दान । करितां समान न ये नामा ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि कोणीं न करावा आळस । ह्मणा रात्रीदिवस रामराम ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळ ही शास्त्रें पठण करतां वेद । सरी नये गोविंदनाम एकें ॥2॥
सकळ ही तीर्थॉ प्रयाग काशी । करितां नामाशीं तुळेति ना ॥3॥
कर्वतीं कर्मरीं देहासी दंडण । करितां समान नये नामा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा आहे श्रेष्ठाचार । नाम हें चि सार विठोबाचें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even the gift of the entire ocean-girdled earth does not equal the Name. Therefore let no one be lazy about it; say 'Rama Rama' day and night.

Reciting all the scriptures and studying all the Vedas cannot compare with a single utterance of Govinda's Name. All pilgrimages, Prayag, and Kashi, none can match the Name.

Mortifying the body with austerities and penances cannot equal it. Says Tuka, such is the supreme practice: the Name of Vitthal alone is the essence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give away the whole earth ringed by the ocean, and it still does not equal the Name. So let no one be lazy about it. Say 'Rama Rama' night and day. Recite all the scriptures, study all the Vedas: it does not match one utterance of Govinda's Name. All the holy places, Prayag, Kashi: they do not weigh against the Name. Cut the body with saws, punish it with penances: it does not equal the Name. Tuka says: this is the highest practice. The Name of Vithoba alone is the essence.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the Name against the four great works of traditional religion and declares each one lighter. Giving away the entire ocean-girt earth, the supreme act of charity, does not match it. All scriptural recitation and Vedic study together do not match one saying of Govinda's Name. The most powerful pilgrimages, Prayag and Kashi, do not balance against it; neither do the harshest bodily austerities. By stacking the Name above gift, learning, pilgrimage, and penance in turn, he is not dismissing effort but locating the essence: the supreme practice is simply to say the Name of Vithoba, day and night, and not be lazy about the one thing that outweighs everything else.

GATHA 2294 The Power of the Name

The Name in Kali, God beckons

मराठी मूळ

अवघ्या वाटा झाल्या क्षीण कळीं न घडे साधन । उचित विधि विधान न कळे न घडे सर्वथा ॥1॥
भक्तिपंथ बहु सोपा पुण्य नागवया पापा । येणें जाणें खेपा येणें चि एक खंडती॥ध्रु.॥
उभारोनि बाहे विठो पालवीत आहे । दासां मी चि साहे मुखें बोले आपुल्या ॥2॥
भाविक विश्वासी पार उतरिलें त्यांसी । तुका ह्मणे नासी कुतक्यानचे कपाळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In this age of Kali, all other paths have become exhausted; proper rites and rituals can neither be known nor performed. The path of devotion is exceedingly simple, the sure way to overcome sin by merit.

By this alone, the cycles of birth and death are ended. Vitthal stands with arms raised, beckoning His people, saying with His own mouth, 'I Myself will bear My devotees' burdens.' The faithful and trusting have been ferried across.

Says Tuka, destruction falls upon the heads of the cynics.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All the other roads have run thin. In this age of Kali no practice succeeds. The proper rites and rules cannot be known and cannot be done at all. The path of devotion is very easy, the sure way to overcome sin by merit. By this alone the comings and goings, the births and deaths, are cut off. Vitho stands with His arms raised, beckoning. He says with His own mouth, 'I Myself bear up My servants.' The faithful, the trusting, He has carried across. Tuka says: ruin falls on the head of the cynic.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues that the older religious roads have worn out in the present dark age, when the elaborate rites can no longer even be learned correctly, let alone performed. Against that, the path of devotion is deliberately easy and within reach, and it alone can break the cycle of birth and death. He pictures Vitthal not as distant but as actively waving His people in, arms open, promising in His own voice to carry His servants Himself. Those who simply trust have already been ferried across the flood of existence. The blunt closing warning is the other side of that mercy: the one who meets this open invitation with cynicism brings ruin on his own head, having refused the one hand reaching out.

GATHA 2295 The Power of the Name

The Name, kicking aside liberation

मराठी मूळ

आह्मीं नामाचें धारक नेणों प्रकार आणीक । सर्व भावें एक विठ्ठल चि प्रमाण ॥1॥
न लगे जाणावें नेणावें गावें आनंदें नाचावें । प्रेमसुख घ्यावें वैष्णवांचे संगती ॥ध्रु.॥
भावबळें घालूं कास लज्जा चिंता दवडूं आस । पायीं निजध्यास ह्मणों दास विष्णूचे ॥2॥
भय नाहीं जन्म घेतां मोक्षपदा हाणों लाता । तुका ह्मणे सत्ता धरूं निकट सेवेची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are bearers of the Name; we know no other practice. With all our being, Vitthal alone is our authority.

There is nothing to learn or unlearn; simply sing and dance in joy. Take the bliss of love in the company of Vaishnavas.

With the strength of faith, gird your loins; cast away shame and idle worry. Keep your devotion fixed on His feet and call yourselves servants of Vishnu.

Says Tuka, there is no fear in taking birth again; we kick the seat of liberation aside and hold fast to the privilege of near service.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are bearers of the Name. We know no other practice. With our whole heart, Vitthal alone is our authority. There is nothing to learn, nothing to unlearn. Just sing, just dance in joy. Take the bliss of love in the company of the Vaishnavas. With the strength of faith we gird our loins. We throw off shame and worry and hope. We fix our minds on His feet and call ourselves servants of Vishnu. We have no fear of taking birth again. We kick aside the seat of liberation. Tuka says: we hold fast to the privilege of close service.

WHAT IT MEANS

Speaking for the whole company of devotees, Tukaram describes a way of life that has stripped religion down to one thing: carrying the Name, with Vitthal as the only authority they recognize. They claim no doctrine to master and nothing to unlearn; the practice is to sing and dance in joy and to drink the love that flows in the gathering of the Vaishnavas. Bracing themselves with faith, they throw off the three things that usually rule people, shame before others, anxiety, and even hope, and simply call themselves servants. The most radical turn comes at the end: they are not afraid of being born again, and they actually kick aside the throne of liberation, the goal every other path chases. What they want instead is the nearness of serving God forever, and they value that closeness above release itself.

GATHA 2296 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, Hari's old companions

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी हरिचे सवंगडे जुने ठायींचे वेडे बागडे । हातीं धरुनी कडे पाठीसवें वागविलों ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि भिन्न भेद नाहीं देवा आह्मां एकदेहीं । नाहीं जालों कहीं एका एक वेगळे ॥ध्रु.॥
निद्रा करितां होतों पायीं सवें चि लंका घेतली तई । वान्नरें गोवळ गाई सवें चारित फिरतसों ॥2॥
आह्मां नामाचें चिंतन राम कृष्ण नारायण। तुका ह्मणे क्षण खातां जेवितां न विसंभों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are Hari's old companions, His original playful comrades. He held our hands and carried us on His back.

Therefore there is no difference or division between God and us; we share one body. We have never at any time been separate from each other.

When we slept at His feet, we were with Him when Lanka was conquered. As monkeys and cowherds, we roamed with Him, grazing the cattle.

Our contemplation is the Name: Rama, Krishna, Narayana. Says Tuka, not for a single moment, eating or dining, do we forget Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are Hari's old friends, His playmates from the beginning, His simple fools. He took our hands and carried us on His back. So there is no division, no difference, between God and us. We are one body. We have never once been separate from each other. When we slept at His feet, we were with Him when Lanka was taken. As monkeys and as cowherds we roamed beside Him, grazing the cattle. Our one thought is the Name: Rama, Krishna, Narayana. Tuka says: not for a single moment, eating or dining, do we forget Him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from inside a felt oneness with God, claiming an old and easy companionship rather than a distant worship. Calling themselves Hari's longtime playmates and simple fools, the devotees describe a closeness so complete that there is no real separation left between God and them; they are, he says, one body that has never once been apart. He reaches back through Hari's own stories to show how far that companionship runs: present as the monkey army when Lanka was conquered with Rama, present as the cowherd boys grazing cattle with Krishna. The single thread holding it all is the Name, Rama, Krishna, Narayana, repeated through every story and every age. The closing line brings it down to the ordinary present: not even for a moment, not even while eating, do they let God slip out of mind.

GATHA 2297 Autobiography

The vow across births, joy that conquers death

मराठी मूळ

मागें बहुतां जन्मीं हें चि करित आलों आह्मी । भवतापश्रमी दुःखें पीडिलीं निववूं त्यां ॥1॥
गजाॉ हरिचे पवाडे मिळों वैष्णव बागडे । पाझर रोकडे काढूं पाषाणामध्यें ॥ध्रु.॥
भाव शुद्ध नामावळी हषॉ नाचों पिटूं टाळी । घालूं पायां तळीं किळकाळ त्याबळें ॥2॥
कामक्रोध बंदखाणी तुका ह्मणे दिले दोन्ही । इंिद्रयांचे धणी आह्मी जालों गोसांवी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through many past births, this is what we have been doing. We cool those who are scorched by the heat of worldly suffering.

Let us proclaim Hari's heroic deeds, gathering the joyful Vaishnavas together. We shall draw living streams of water even from stone.

With pure minds and strings of the Name, let us sing, dance, and clap with joy. By that strength, we trample Death under our feet.

Says Tuka, lust and anger have both been thrown in prison. We have become the masters of our senses, true renunciants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

