देह प्रारब्धा शिरीं । असोन करी उद्वेग ॥1॥
धांव घालीं नारायणा । माझ्या मना जागवीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसी चुकोनियां वर्मे। पीडा भ्रमें पावलों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कैंचा भोग । नव्हे रोग अंगींचा॥3॥
अनंताच्या ऐकों कीर्ती । ज्याच्या चित्तीं हरिनाम ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The body rests upon destiny's head, yet still one creates needless agitation. Rush to me, O Narayana; awaken my mind.

Having missed the vital secret, I have suffered under the torment of delusion. Says Tuka, what suffering is this? It is no true disease of the body. Let us hear the glory of Ananta, in whose heart dwells the name of Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My body rests on the head of destiny, yet still I stir up needless worry. Run to me, Narayana; wake up my mind. Having missed the vital secret, I have suffered under the torment of delusion. Tuka says: what suffering is this? It is no real disease of the body. Let us hear the glory of Ananta, in whose heart lives the name of Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points out a strange thing about human anxiety: the body's portion is already settled by destiny, so the churning of the mind adds nothing but its own torment. He calls on Narayana to come quickly and wake the mind from this restlessness. Then he diagnoses the trouble precisely: it is not a sickness of the body at all, but the suffering of delusion, of having missed the one secret. The cure he points to is to turn the ear toward the praise of the Endless One, whose name dwells in the devotee's heart.

GATHA 3533 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the boat is free, arise and go

मराठी मूळ

उलंघूनि गेले सिंधु । हा भवबंधु तोडोनियां ॥1॥
आतां हळुहळु ते चि वाहीं । चालों कांही अधिकारें ॥ध्रु.॥
खुंटूनियां गेले नावा । नाहीं हेवा खोळंबला ।
न लगे मोल द्यावा रुका । भावें एका कारणें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहतों वाट । उभा नीट पाउलीं ।
भीमातिरीं थडवा केला । उठा चला लवलाहें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who crossed the ocean of existence did so by severing the bonds of worldly life. Now let me follow slowly in their wake, moving step by step as my ability allows.

Their boats have been moored and no envy remains to delay anyone. No coin need be paid; only sincere devotion is required.

Says Tuka, I stand watching the path, steady on my feet. The embankment is set upon the Bhima's shore; arise, let us go swiftly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who crossed the ocean did so by cutting the bonds of worldly life. Now let me follow slowly in their wake, walking by what strength I have. Their boats lie moored, and no envy holds anyone back. No coin must be paid; only sincere love is needed. Tuka says: I stand watching the path, steady on my feet. The landing has been made on the Bhima's bank. Arise, come, let us go quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one calling fellow travelers to the crossing. The saints who went before broke their ties to worldly life and reached the far shore, and he asks only to follow in their wake, step by step, at whatever pace his ability allows. The way is wide open: the boat is moored and waiting, no one is held back by rivalry, and the fare is not money but only honest devotion. Standing on the embankment at Pandharpur by the river Bhima, he urges everyone to stop hesitating and set out at once.

GATHA 3534 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the mind held in hand

मराठी मूळ

तरीं च म्यां देवा । साटी करूनियां जीवा ॥1॥
आवरिल्या वृत्त । मन घेउनियां हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरा । बाहेर येऊं नेदीं घरा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Only then, O Lord, did I wager my very life and rein in all the movements of the mind, taking it firmly in hand. Says Tuka, I will not let it venture even a step outside the house.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Only then, O God, did I stake my very life. I reined in all the movements of the mind and took it firmly in hand. Tuka says: I will not let it step outside the house.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the cost and the discipline of surrender. He gambled his whole life, holding nothing back, and only then could he gather in the scattered movements of the mind and grip it firmly. The closing image is plain and exact: the mind is like something that wants to wander out of doors, and he simply refuses to let it leave the house. Surrender here is not a feeling but a steady, daily holding of the mind in place.

GATHA 3535 The Saints

The saints, service is the highest gain

मराठी मूळ

हें तों एक संतांठायीं । लाभ पायीं उत्तम ॥1॥
ह्मणवितां त्याचे दास । पुढें आस उरेना ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपादान केलें संतीं। कल्पांतीं ही सरेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतसेवा । हा चि हेवा उत्तम॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is the one supreme gain found at the feet of the saints. By being called their servant, no further desire remains.

The gift of grace bestowed by the saints will never be exhausted even at the end of creation. Says Tuka, service to the saints is the highest aspiration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is the one supreme gain, found at the feet of the saints. When you are called their servant, no further longing remains. The grace the saints gave will not run out even at the end of the world. Tuka says: service to the saints, this alone is the best thing to want.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the company of the saints above every other prize. To win a place at their feet, to be counted simply as their servant, is enough to empty the heart of any other craving. The gift of grace they pour out is not a small or perishable thing; he says it will not be exhausted even when creation itself dissolves. So the one worthy ambition, the only desire worth keeping, is to serve them.

GATHA 3536 The Power of the Name

The Name, the cure that ends all affliction

मराठी मूळ

नारायणा ऐसा । सेवूं नेणतील रसा ॥1॥
जेणें भवव्याध तुटे । दुःख मागुतें न भेटे ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगे कांहीं आटी । बाधा राहों न सके पोटीं ॥2॥
कैवल्य तें जोडे । पालट लवकरी घडे ॥3॥
जन्ममरणदुःख अटे । जाळें अवघेंचि तुटे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला । याचा गुण बहुतांला ॥5॥
अनेक दोषांचे काट । जे जे गादले निघोंट ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who do not know how to taste the essence of Narayana miss the cure that ends all worldly affliction, so that suffering never returns. No great struggle is needed, for no harm can remain inside.

Liberation itself is won, and the transformation happens swiftly. The sorrow of birth and death ceases, and every snare is torn apart.

Says Tuka, this remedy has blessed many. All the thorns of countless faults are swept clean away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who do not know how to taste the essence of Narayana miss it. By it the disease of worldly life is cut, and suffering does not come back. No great struggle is needed; no harm can stay inside. Liberation itself is won, and the change comes quickly. The sorrow of birth and death wears away, and the whole net is torn apart. Tuka says: this has helped many. All the thorns of countless faults are swept clean away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the Name of Narayana as a remedy and naming exactly what it does. He calls worldly existence a disease, and the Name the medicine that cuts it so that suffering never returns. What he stresses is how little effort it asks: no harsh austerity, no long struggle, yet the change comes swiftly, liberation is won, and the whole snare of birth and death falls apart. The radical claim is that no fault is too great for it; countless sins, like thorns, are swept away, and many have already proved this.

GATHA 3537 The Power of the Name

The Name, Hari saves the most fallen

मराठी मूळ

होती हरिनामें चोखट । क्षण एक न लगतां ॥1॥
तुह्मी हरि ह्मणा हरि ह्मणा । महादोषांचे छेदना ॥ध्रु.॥
अतिप्रीतीचा बांधला । नष्ट चांडाळीं रतला ।
क्षण न लगतां नेला । वैकुंठासी हरि ह्मणतां॥2॥
अमित्य दोषाचें मूळ । जालें वाल्मीकास सबळ ।
जाला हरिनामें निर्मळ । गंगाजळ पैं जैसा ॥3॥
हरि ह्मणतां तरले । महादोषी गणिके नेलें ।
कुंटणी मिली उद्धरिलें । वैकुंठासी हरि म्हणतां ॥4॥
हरिविण जन्म नको वांयां । जैसी दर्पणींची छाया ।
ह्मणोनि तुका लागे पायां । शरण तया हरीसी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the name of Hari, they were purified in less than a moment. Say Hari, say Hari, for it severs the greatest sins.

One deeply steeped in sin, attached to a fallen woman, was carried to Vaikuntha in an instant by uttering Hari's name. The immense burden of Valmiki's sins was formidable, yet by the name of Hari he became pure as the waters of the Ganga.

By saying Hari, the courtesan was delivered, and the hunter woman Bhilli was saved and taken to Vaikuntha. Without Hari, birth is wasted, like a mere reflection in a mirror.

Says Tuka, therefore I fall at the feet of Hari and surrender to Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the name of Hari they were made spotless in less than a moment. You, say Hari, say Hari; it cuts down the greatest sins. One bound by his cravings, sunk in a fallen woman, was taken to Vaikuntha in an instant by saying Hari's name. The root of Valmiki's sins was vast and strong, yet by the name of Hari he became clean as the water of the Ganga. By saying Hari the great sinners crossed over; the courtesan was carried away, the hunter woman Bhilli was lifted up and taken to Vaikuntha by saying Hari. Without Hari, birth is wasted, like a shadow in a mirror. Tuka says: so I fall at His feet and take refuge in that Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the same point through example after example: there is no sin so great that Hari's name cannot cut it. He recalls the man drowned in his cravings, Valmiki the robber, the courtesan, the hunter woman Bhilli, and says each was lifted to Vaikuntha simply by the Name, in less than a moment. The thrust is not to excuse their sins but to show that the Name reaches even those the world counts as lost. He ends by drawing the conclusion for himself: a life without Hari is as empty as a reflection in a mirror, so he falls at Hari's feet and surrenders.

GATHA 3538 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion ruined by hypocrisy

मराठी मूळ

भजन या नासिलें हेडि । दंभा लंडा आवडी ॥1॥
जेवीत ना आइता पाक । नासी ताक घुसळूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
एकाएकीं इच्छी पाठ । नेणे चाट कां जेवूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मुलाम्याचें । बंधन साचें सेवटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Devotion has been ruined by contempt and neglect, while love of hypocrisy flourishes. One refuses to eat the meal that is ready and spoils the buttermilk by churning it to nothing.

One craves rewards without effort and does not know why one should even partake. Says Tuka, the bond of pretense will tighten in the end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Devotion has been ruined by scorn and neglect, while love of show flourishes. A man will not eat the meal already cooked, and spoils the buttermilk by churning it to nothing. He suddenly wants the reward, the dish set before him, but does not even know why he should eat. Tuka says: in the end the bond of pretense holds him fast.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the way real devotion gets pushed aside while empty display is prized. His images are homely and sharp: a man who refuses the food that is already prepared, who churns good buttermilk until nothing is left, who wants the reward without knowing the first thing about why one eats at all. The aim is at the pattern of religious pretending, the craving for the fruit without the substance. He warns that pretense is not free; it becomes a binding, a knot that tightens around the one who chose it.

GATHA 3539 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the meal of Brahman

मराठी मूळ

जैसा निर्मळ गंगाओघ । तैसा भाग वोगरीं ॥1॥
प्रेम वाढे ग्रासोग्रासीं । ब्रह्मरसीं भोजन ॥ध्रु.॥
तृप्तीवरि आवडी उरे। ऐसे बरे प्रकार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाख मन । नारायण तें भोगी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As pure as the clear current of the Ganga, so is the fare I serve. Love grows with every morsel, for this meal is seasoned with the essence of Brahman.

Even after fullness, the relish remains; such are these wondrous ways. Says Tuka, let the mind become a fit vessel, for it is Narayana who savors it all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pure as the clear stream of the Ganga, such is the fare I serve. Love grows with every mouthful, for this meal is steeped in the essence of Brahman. Even after I am full, the relish stays. Such are these good ways. Tuka says: let the mind become a fit vessel, for it is Narayana who eats it all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns inner joy into the picture of a feast. What is served is as clean as the Ganga's current, and unlike ordinary food it deepens the appetite instead of dulling it: love grows with every morsel, and even when one is full the taste does not fade, because the dish is the essence of Brahman itself. The closing turn dissolves the eater: he asks that the mind simply become the vessel, since the one who truly tastes and enjoys this meal is Narayana, not the small self.

GATHA 3540 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the vessel overflows

मराठी मूळ

सुख सुखा विरजण जालें । तें मथलें नवनीत ॥1॥
हाले डोले हरुषे काया । निवती बाहएा नयन ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रबल तो नारायण । गुणें गुण वाढला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भरली सीग । वरी मग वोसंडे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Joy has become the starter for more joy; that is the butter that has been churned. The body sways and trembles with delight; the arms and eyes are soothed.

The mighty Narayana has grown from virtue upon virtue. Says Tuka, the vessel has filled to the brim, and now it overflows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Joy has become the starter for more joy; that is the butter churned out of it. The body sways and trembles with gladness; the arms and the eyes grow cool and still. Mighty is that Narayana; quality has grown upon quality. Tuka says: the vessel has filled to the very brim, and now it spills over.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes bliss that feeds on itself. As curd needs a starter, here joy becomes the starter for still more joy, and out of the churning comes the butter, the pure essence. The body shows it openly, swaying and trembling, the eyes and limbs soothed and cooled. He traces the cause to Narayana, in whom good upon good keeps increasing, until the cup of the heart is filled past the brim and simply overflows.

GATHA 3541 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the rod of Yama awaits

मराठी मूळ

कां रे न भजसी हरी । तुज कोण अंगीकारी ॥1॥
होइल यमपुरी । यमदंड यातना ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण जाली लगबग । काय करिसि तेथें मग ॥2॥
कां रे भरला ताठा । करिती वोज नेतां वाटा॥3॥
तोंडा पडिली खिळणी । जिव्हा पिटिती वोढूनि ॥4॥
कां रे पडिली जनलाज । कोण सोडवील तुज ॥5॥
लाज धरीं ह्मणे तुका । नको वांयां जाऊं फुका ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you not worship Hari? Who else will accept you? You will face the torments of Yama's city and the rod of his punishment. What is this urgent rushing about? What will you do when you arrive there? Why are you stiff with pride? They will drag you along the road.

Your mouth will be clamped with nails, and your tongue will be pulled out. Why do you care about what people think? Who will come to save you then? Says Tuka, have some shame, and do not let this life go to waste.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you not worship Hari? Who else will take you in? You will reach the city of Yama, his rod and his torments. What is all this hurried bustling about? What will you do once you arrive there? Why are you stiff with pride? They will drag you down the road. Your mouth will be clamped with iron, your tongue pulled out. Why do you worry over what people think? Who will rescue you then? Tuka says: have some shame, and do not let this life go to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shakes the listener awake with a hard warning. He asks who will stand by you if you will not worship Hari, and answers with the city of Yama, the lord of death, where pride is met with the rod, the dragging, the clamped mouth and the torn tongue. The point is not cruelty for its own sake but to break the false priorities: all the worldly rushing about and the worry over other people's opinion will be worth nothing at that gate. He ends by urging plain self-examination, have shame, and do not throw this human life away.

GATHA 3542 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the sea playing with itself

मराठी मूळ

क्षरला सागर गंगा ओघीं मिळे । आपण चि खेळे आपणाशीं ॥1 ॥
मधील ते वाव अवघी उपाधि । तुह्मां आह्मांमधीं ते चि परी ॥ध्रु.॥
घट मठ जाले आकाशाचे पोटीं । वचनें चि तुटी तेथें चि तें ॥2 ॥
तुका ह्मणे बीजें बीज दाखविलें । फल पुष्प आलें गेलें वांयां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The ocean churns within itself as the Ganga merges into it; it plays with itself alone. All the space between is mere illusion; between You and us it is the very same.

Pots and chambers arise within the belly of the sky, and by words alone the separation is created and dissolved. Says Tuka, the seed has revealed the seed; flower and fruit have come and gone in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The ocean pours out, the Ganga merges into it; it plays with itself alone. All that lies between is only added name and limit. Between You and us it is just the same. Pots and chambers form within the belly of the sky, and by words alone the dividing is made, and there itself it is undone. Tuka says: the seed has shown only the seed. Flower and fruit came and went in vain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to the oneness beneath all apparent difference. The river flowing into the sea is only the sea returning to itself; the whole appearance of separateness in between is mere name and limit laid over a single reality. The same holds between God and the soul. His image of pots and rooms shaped within open sky shows that the walls dividing one space from another are made by words alone, and dissolve there too. The closing line says the seed only ever revealed itself as seed; the show of flower and fruit, of growth and difference, was passing and finally empty.

GATHA 3543 Prayers

Surrender, one last plea

मराठी मूळ

एक आतां तुह्मी करा । मज दातारा सत्तेनें ॥1॥
विश्वास तो पायांवरी । ठेवुनि हरी राहिलों ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणत चि दुजें नाहीं । आणिक कांहीं प्रकार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शरण आलों । काय बोलों विनवितों॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now do this one thing for me, O generous Lord, by Your own authority. I have placed my trust upon Your feet and remain there, O Hari.

I know nothing else; there is no other way. Says Tuka, I have come in surrender; what more can I say in supplication?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now do this one thing for me, O giving Lord, by your own power. I have set my trust on your feet, and there I stay, O Hari. I know nothing else; there is no other way. Tuka says: I have come to surrender. What more can I say in my pleading?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has reached the point where asking itself has worn thin, and he hands the whole matter to the Lord. He names God the giver and asks for one thing, but leaves the doing to God's own authority rather than to his own effort. His trust is fixed on Hari's feet, and he claims to know no other refuge or method. The closing line is not the start of a longer speech but its end: surrender means there is nothing left to argue, only to wait at the feet where he already stands.

GATHA 3544 Ecstasy and Joy

Longing, awaiting the sign

मराठी मूळ

काय विनवावें कोणें तो निवाड । केलें माझ्या कोड वचनाचें ॥1॥
आहो कृपनिधी गुणांच्या निधाना । माझ्या अनुमाना नये चि हें ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुत करुणा केलेंसे भासेन । एक ही वचन नाहीं आलें ॥2॥
माझी कांहीं सेवा होईल पावली । निंश्चती मानिली होती ऐसी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी उरली ते आटी । अभय कर कटी न देखें चि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How shall I plead, and who will decide? You have fulfilled my chitta's desire through Your word. O treasury of mercy, O storehouse of virtues, this is beyond my power to comprehend.

Though I have pleaded at great length, not a single word of Yours has come in return. Perhaps some service of mine has reached You, and the certainty I held has been acknowledged.

Says Tuka, my only anguish remains: I have not yet seen the hand of assurance at Your waist.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I plead, and who will judge between us? You have already granted what my heart wished for, through your word. O treasury of mercy, O storehouse of every virtue, this is beyond my reckoning. I have pleaded long, yet not one word has come back to me. Perhaps some small service of mine has reached you, and the assurance I held has been honored. Tuka says: this one ache stays with me. I have not yet seen the hand of safety resting at your waist.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is caught between a faith already answered and a sign still withheld. He believes the Lord has granted his heart's desire by promise, yet no spoken reply has come, so he is left reading the silence for meaning. He guesses that some service of his has been accepted, and that the certainty he carried is being honored. But the longing is not satisfied until he sees the gesture itself: the deity of Pandhari stands with hand on hip, and that hand at the waist is the very posture of fearlessness he waits to behold. The poem names how surrender can hold both trust and an unhealed ache at once.

GATHA 3545 Longing and Separation

Longing, the weakling's service

मराठी मूळ

लाजोनियां काळें राहिलें लिखित । नेदितां ही चित्त समाधान ॥1॥
कैसें सुख वाटे वचनाचे तुटी । प्रीतिविण भेटी रुचि नेदी ॥ध्रु.॥
एकाचिये भेटी एकाचा कोंपर । मावेचा पदर कळों येतो ॥2॥
होत्या आपल्या त्या वेचूनियां शक्ती । पुढें जालों युक्तिकळाहीन ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी समर्थ जी देवा । दुर्बळाची सेवा कोठें पावे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Out of shame, Fate has held back its writing; yet even without granting anything, the mind finds its peace. How can one feel joy when words are cut short? Without true love, a meeting gives no satisfaction.

In one meeting, one encounters affection, and in another, a cold shoulder; the edge of pretense becomes apparent. Having spent all my available powers, I stand now devoid of skill and strategy.

Says Tuka, You are almighty, O Lord; how can a weakling's service ever reach You?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Out of shame, Fate has held back what it would write; yet even with nothing given, my mind finds its rest. How can there be joy when the words are cut off? Without love, a meeting brings no delight. In one meeting there is warmth, in another a cold shoulder; the edge of pretense shows itself. I have spent all the strength I had, and now I stand without skill or scheme. Tuka says: you are the mighty one, O God. How can a weakling's poor service ever reach you?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures the distance between his small effort and God's greatness, and finds his own resources exhausted. He notices that a meeting without love is empty, and that warmth in one moment and coldness in the next expose the pretense in ordinary affection. Having poured out every power and strategy he had, he is left with nothing of his own to offer. The final question is not despair but its turning point: if the Lord is almighty and the seeker is only a weakling, then the meeting can never be earned by service. What is left is to depend on the strong one, since the weak one's work cannot reach that high.

GATHA 3546 Faith and Trust

Faith, the shameless patience of hope

मराठी मूळ

आशाबद्ध बहु असे निलाजिरें । होय ह्मणें धीरें फळ टोंकें ॥1॥
कारणापें चित्त न पाहें अपमान । चित्त समाधान लाभासाटीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हातें लोटिलें न कळे । झांकितसें डोळे पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Bound by hope, utterly shameless, one endures, saying 'Patience, the fruit will come at last.' The mind, fixed on its goal, does not notice any insult, for contentment lies in the promise of gain. Says Tuka, I have been pushed away without realizing it; I keep closing my eyes, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bound by hope, I am utterly shameless; I keep saying, with patience the fruit will come at last. The mind, fixed on its aim, takes no notice of any insult; its contentment lies in the gain it waits for. Tuka says: I have been pushed away without my knowing it, and still I keep my eyes closed, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the stubborn, unembarrassed patience of one who refuses to give up on God. Hope makes him shameless: he endures slights and delays because his mind is fixed only on the fruit it expects. He admits he may already have been pushed away without realizing it, yet he chooses to keep his eyes shut to that possibility. The poem honors a faith that will not read rejection into the silence, holding instead to the trust that Panduranga will not finally turn him away.

GATHA 3547 Longing and Separation

Longing, the unbroken silence

मराठी मूळ

सांता पांचां तरीं वचनां सेवटीं । निरोप कां भेटी एक तरी ॥1॥
कां नेणें निष्ठ केलें नारायणा । न देखें हें मना येतां कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा न देखें निवाड । कडू किंवा गोड फळ पोटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

After all these five or ten exchanges of words, give at least a farewell or a meeting, one or the other. Why, O Narayana, do I not see anything coming to mind? You seem to have rendered a complete silence.

Says Tuka, I have never seen such a verdict; whether the fruit within is bitter or sweet, I cannot tell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

After all these five or ten exchanges of words, give me at least one thing: a farewell or a meeting, one or the other. Why, O Narayana, have you gone so completely silent? Nothing comes to my mind to explain it. Tuka says: I have never seen such a verdict. Whether the fruit inside is bitter or sweet, I cannot tell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God for any answer at all, even a refusal, rather than this total silence. After several appeals he wants only clarity: meet me, or send me away, but say something. The silence baffles him, and he cannot find a reason for it in his own mind. The image of the fruit names his suspense: he does not know whether what is ripening inside this waiting is bitter or sweet, judgment or grace, and the not knowing is its own affliction.

GATHA 3548 Longing and Separation

Longing, a life going to waste

मराठी मूळ

वांयां ऐसा जन्म गेला । हें विठ्ठला दुःख वाटे ॥1॥
नाहीं सरता जालों पायीं । तुह्मी जई न पुसा ॥ध्रु.॥
कां मी जीतों संवसारीं । अद्यापवरी भूमिभार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पंढरिनाथा । सबळ व्यथा भवरोग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It pains me, O Vitthal, that this life is going to waste. I have not become worthy at Your feet, and You do not even ask after me.

Why do I go on living in this world, an empty burden upon the earth? Says Tuka, O Lord of Pandhari, the disease of worldly existence is a mighty affliction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It pains me, O Vitthal, that a life like this is going to waste. I have not become worthy at your feet, and you do not even ask after me. Why do I go on living in this world, a mere weight upon the earth? Tuka says: O Lord of Pandhari, the disease of worldly life is a heavy affliction.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram grieves that his life is passing without his ever becoming fit for God's feet. He feels both unworthy and unattended, since the Lord does not so much as inquire after him. His own existence seems pointless, only a burden on the earth, as long as it falls short of the one thing he wants. The closing line names the real sickness: not poverty or pain, but worldly existence itself, the bhava-roga, which only the Lord of Pandhari can cure.

GATHA 3549 Longing and Separation

Longing, decide my case

मराठी मूळ

कासया हो माझा राखिला लौकिक । निवाड कां एक केला नाहीं ॥1॥
मग तळमळ न करितें मन । जालें तें कारण कळों येतें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केला पाहिजे निवाड । वइदासी भीड मरणें रोग्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have You preserved my worldly reputation? Why have You not given a clear verdict? Then the mind would not be in such turmoil, and the reason for all this would become plain. Says Tuka, a decision must be rendered; a patient dies when the doctor hesitates out of decorum.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have you preserved my standing in the world? Why have you not given one clear verdict? Then my mind would not be in such turmoil, and I would see the reason for all of this. Tuka says: a decision must be made. A patient dies when the doctor holds back out of politeness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs God to stop sparing his feelings and simply rule on his case. He would rather have a hard, clear judgment than this kindness that leaves him in suspense, because clarity would still the churning of his mind. He suspects that his worldly reputation has been protected when what he needs is the plain truth. The closing image is sharp: a doctor who withholds the cure out of decorum lets the patient die, so the Lord's gentle silence may be the very thing that is killing him.

GATHA 3550 Longing and Separation

Longing, naming the obstacle

मराठी मूळ

ऐसें कोण पाप बळी । जें जवळी येऊं नेदी ॥1॥
तुह्मां तंव होइल ठावें । नेदावें कां कळों हें ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण जाला अंतराय । कां ते पाय अंतरले ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निमित्याचा । आला सुच अनुभव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What sin is so powerful that it will not let me come near You? Surely You must know the reason; why will You not let me understand it? What obstacle has arisen? Why have Your feet grown distant? Says Tuka, the hint of the cause has come to me through experience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What sin is so strong that it will not let me come near you? Surely you know the reason; why will you not let me understand it? What obstacle has come between us? Why have your feet grown so distant? Tuka says: through what I have lived, the hint of the cause has come to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram searches for the hidden thing keeping him from God and assumes some powerful sin is the barrier. He presses the Lord, who must already know the cause, to disclose it so he can see what stands between them. The distance he feels is real to him: the feet he longs for seem to have withdrawn. Yet he ends not in pure confusion but with a clue, saying that his own experience has begun to show him where the obstacle lies, turning the complaint into the start of self-examination.

GATHA 3551 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow preacher

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मज्ञानाची भरोवरी । पुढिला सांगे आपण न करी॥1॥
थू थू त्याच्या तोंडावरी । व्यर्थ सिणवी वैखरी ॥ध्रु.॥
कथा करी वरिवरी । प्रेम नसे चि अंतरीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कवित्व करी । मान वस्तु हे आदरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who forces the knowledge of Brahman upon others yet does not practice it himself deserves contempt. He tires his own tongue in vain.

He narrates sacred stories only on the surface, but no love resides within. Says Tuka, he composes clever verses, but what he truly covets is honor and material gain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He pushes the knowledge of Brahman onto others but does not practice it himself. Shame on his face; he wears out his tongue for nothing. He tells the sacred stories on the surface, but there is no love inside him. Tuka says: he composes clever verses, yet what he really wants is honor and gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the pattern of preaching one does not live. The man teaches the highest truth to others while doing none of it himself, so his eloquence is empty effort. He recites holy stories with his mouth but carries no love in his heart, and his fine verses are aimed at applause and profit, not at God. The point is not to despise the person but to expose the gap between the spoken teaching and the unlived life, a gap each listener can check in himself.

GATHA 3552 Longing and Separation

Longing, hungry for the face

मराठी मूळ

कधीं कृपा करिसी नेणें । मज दीनाचें धांवणें ॥1॥
भेटी लागीं पंढरीनाथा । जीवीं लागली तळमळ व्यथा ॥ध्रु.॥
सिणलें माझें मन । वाट पाहतां लोचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लागली भूक । तुझें पहावया श्रीमुख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know when You will show mercy; this is the cry of a lowly jiva. For the sake of meeting You, O Lord of Pandhari, my chitta burns with aching and restless longing.

My weary mind and my watching eyes grow tired of waiting. Says Tuka, I am hungry to behold Your blessed face.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know when you will show mercy; this is the cry of a lowly one running to you. For the sake of meeting you, O Lord of Pandhari, my heart burns with restless, aching longing. My mind is worn out, and my eyes are tired from watching the road. Tuka says: a hunger has seized me, to behold your blessed face.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pours out the plain ache of waiting for God. He does not know when mercy will come, and calls himself a lowly creature running toward the Lord. His longing is bodily: the heart burns, the mind tires, the eyes grow weary from watching the road for his arrival. The closing word names it as hunger, an appetite that nothing but the sight of Panduranga's face can satisfy.

GATHA 3553 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name brings the Mother running

मराठी मूळ

उच्चारूं यासाटीं । आह्मी नाम तुझें कंठीं ॥1॥
येसी धांवत धांवत । माउलिये कृपावंते ॥ध्रु.॥
पाय चित्तीं धरूं । क्रिडा भलते ठायीं करूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे गंगे । प्रेमभरित पांडुरंगे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is for this reason that I utter Your name on my lips: so that You come running, O gracious Mother. I hold Your feet in my chitta and play freely wherever I may be.

Says Tuka, O my Ganga, O Panduranga, You are full of love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is for this that I keep your name in my throat: so that you come running, O merciful Mother. I hold your feet in my heart, and I play freely wherever I am. Tuka says: O my Ganga, O Panduranga, you are full of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells why he repeats the Name: it is the cry that makes God rush to him like a mother to a child. With the feet held in his heart, he feels free to play anywhere, since the Lord is always near. He addresses Panduranga as both Mother and Ganga, the holy river, names of tenderness and purifying love. The poem shows the Name not as a duty but as the small word that calls a love already overflowing toward him.

GATHA 3554 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the misplaced devotion

मराठी मूळ

दगडाच्या देवा बगाड नवस । बाईल कथेस जाऊं नेदी ॥1॥
वेची धनरासी बांधलें स्मशान । दारीं वृंदावन द्वाड मानी॥ध्रु.॥
चोरें नागविला न करी त्याची खंती । परी द्विजा हातीं नेदी रुका ॥2॥
करी पाहुणेर विव्हाया जावयासी । आल्या अतीतासी पाठमोरा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जळो धिग त्याचें जिणें । भार वाही सीण वर्म नेणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For a god of stone, one offers a yoke of oxen in vow, yet prevents a wife from attending sacred discourse. One spends a fortune on building a cemetery, yet considers a tulasi shrine at the door to be bad luck.

When robbed by a thief, one feels no remorse, but will not give a single coin to a Brahmin. One feasts the son-in-law with great hospitality but turns away from the wandering pilgrim who arrives at the door.

Says Tuka, let such a life be cursed and condemned. He carries the burden and bears the pain, yet knows nothing of the truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For a god of stone he offers a vow of oxen, yet he will not let his wife go to hear the sacred story. He spends a fortune building a tomb, but treats a tulasi shrine at his door as bad luck. When a thief robs him he feels no grief, yet he will not give a single coin into a Brahmin's hand. He lays out a feast for his son-in-law, but turns his back on the wandering pilgrim who comes to his door. Tuka says: let such a life be cursed. He carries the load and bears the strain, yet knows nothing of the heart of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up a man's choices to show devotion pointed in every wrong direction. He pours wealth and vows into stone idols and tombs while blocking his wife from the living teaching and shunning the tulasi at his own door. He shrugs off being robbed but grudges a coin to a holy man, and feasts his son-in-law while turning away the pilgrim God sends to him. The pattern is the target: a religion of show and self-interest that spends on the dead and the flattering and starves the living truth. Tukaram calls such a life wasted because the man bears all the effort of piety and never touches its point.

GATHA 3555 Prayers

Surrender, plea at the feet

मराठी मूळ

करूनि विनवणी । माथा ठेवितों चरणीं ॥1॥
होतें तें चि असों द्यावें । रूप सौम्य चि बरवें ॥ध्रु.॥
भया भेणें तुमचा ठाव । तुमच्या कोपें कोठें जावें ॥2॥
तुका पायां लागे । दान समुदाय मागे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having made my plea, I place my head at Your feet. Let things remain as they are; may Your countenance ever be gentle.

Out of fear I came to Your refuge; if You should be angry, where else shall I go? Says Tuka, I fall at Your feet and beg this boon for the entire assembly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I make my plea and lay my head at your feet. Let what is stay as it is; only keep your face gentle and kind. I came to your refuge out of fear. If you turn angry, where else can I go? Tuka says: I fall at your feet, and I beg this gift for all of us together.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes empty, asking for almost nothing: not a change in his circumstances, only that the Lord's face stay gentle toward him. He admits the bare truth of why he came, out of fear, and names the trap that follows from it: a refuge is no refuge if the one you fled to can himself grow angry, for then there is nowhere left to run. So he does not bargain; he simply lays his head down and trusts. And he widens the prayer at the end, asking the boon not for himself alone but for the whole assembly of devotees.

GATHA 3556 The Necessity of Experience

Inner experience, beyond telling

मराठी मूळ

प्रेम नये सांगतां बोलतां दावितां । अनुभव चित्ता चित्त जाणे ॥1॥
कासवीचें बाळ वाढे कृपादृष्टी । दुधा नाहीं भेटी अंगसंगें ॥ध्रु.॥
पोटामध्यें कोण सांगितलें सर्पा । उपजत लपा ह्मणऊनि ॥2॥
बोलों नेणें परी जाणे गोड क्षार । अंतरीं विचार त्यासी ठावा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बरें विचारावें मनीं । आणिक भल्यांनी पुसों नये ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Love cannot be conveyed by telling, speaking, or showing; only the chitta knows the chitta through direct experience. A turtle's offspring grows by the mother's gaze alone, without the touch of milk.

Who taught the serpent inside the egg? It hides by its very nature from birth. A child cannot speak yet knows sweet from sour; the power of discernment dwells within.

Says Tuka, reflect upon this carefully in your own mind and do not ask others for confirmation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Love cannot be passed on by telling, by speaking, by showing. Only one heart knows another heart, through experience itself. The turtle's young grow by the mother's gaze alone; they never touch her milk. Who taught the serpent inside the egg to hide from the moment it is born? A child cannot yet speak, yet it knows sweet from sour; the power to tell them apart sits within. Tuka says: weigh this well in your own mind, and do not go asking good people to confirm it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that the love of God, and the knowing that comes with it, cannot be handed over from outside; it is recognized only from within. His images all point one way: the baby turtle nourished by the mother's look without ever feeding, the serpent that hides by instinct at birth, the infant who tastes sweet and sour before it can name them. None of these were taught; the knowing was already inside them. So with the heart turned toward God: the proof is direct experience, not instruction. His closing instruction is sharp. Settle it in your own awareness; do not outsource the verdict to others, however good, for borrowed certainty is not the same as the thing known firsthand.

GATHA 3557 Confession and Sin

Confession, settle it now

मराठी मूळ

आतां मी पतित ऐसा साच भावें । कळों अनुभवें आलें देवा ॥1॥
काय करावें तें रोकडें चि करीं । राहिली हे उरी नाहीं दोघां ॥ध्रु.॥
येर येरा समदृष्टी द्यावें या उत्तरा । यासी काय करा गोही आतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मेलों सांगतसांगतां । तें चि आलें आतां कळों तुह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I have come to know through experience that I am truly fallen, O Lord. Whatever You would do, do it now and openly; let nothing remain unsettled between us.

To give each side an equal hearing requires no further witness. Says Tuka, I am dying in the telling; now at last let that much be clear to You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I know it truly, by experience: I am fallen, O Lord. Whatever you mean to do, do it now, and do it openly; let nothing be left unsettled between the two of us. To give each side a fair hearing needs no other witness. Tuka says: I am dying in the very telling of this; now at last let that much become clear to you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings his case to God and asks for it to be closed, not softened. He no longer pleads innocence; he has come to know firsthand that he is fallen, and he wants the matter settled openly rather than left hanging between them. He says no third party need testify, because the two of them already see the whole of it. The urgency is real: he says he is dying even as he speaks, worn out by the long telling. The prayer is for resolution itself, for God to act at last and let the truth between them stand plain.

GATHA 3558 Longing and Separation

Complaint, where were you

मराठी मूळ

काय तुज मागें नाहीं जाणवलें । माझें नाहीं केलें हित कांहीं ॥1॥
डोळे झांकुनियां होसी अबोलणा । तेव्हां नारायणा आतां कैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
न कळे उचित न संगतां स्पष्ट । ऐसा क्रियानष्ट काय जाणे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा घात तुह्मां ठावा । तरि कां आधीं देवा वारूं नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Did You not know this about me before? You have done nothing for my welfare. You close Your eyes and remain silent; how then, O Narayana, shall I find You now? One who is not told plainly what is proper does not know how to act.

Says Tuka, my ruin was known to You; then why, O Lord, did You not prevent it beforehand?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Did you not know all this about me already? You have done nothing for my good. You shut your eyes and stay silent; then, O Narayana, how am I to reach you now? One who is never told plainly what is right cannot know how to act. Tuka says: my ruin was known to you. Then why, O Lord, did you not stop it beforehand?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making a daring complaint, the kind only deep trust permits. He turns the failure back on God: if the Lord knew his weakness all along, then the silence and closed eyes feel like abandonment, and a soul never taught plainly cannot be blamed for stumbling. The pointed question at the end, why did you not prevent my downfall when you saw it coming, is not real accusation so much as the cry of one who wants to be held responsible for and rescued by the very God he leans on. The pattern worth catching in oneself is the way we blame our undoing on never having been shown, while the truth was in front of us the whole time.

GATHA 3559 Confession and Sin

Confession, the child's liberties

मराठी मूळ

नये ऐसें बोलों कठिण उत्तरें । सलगी लेंकुरें केली पुढें ॥1॥
अपराध कीजे घडला तो क्षमा । सिकवा उत्तमा आमुचिया॥ध्रु.॥
धरूं धावें आगी पोळलें तें नेणे । ओढिलिया होणें माते बाळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे फार ज्याचा जार त्यासी । प्रवीण येविशीं असा तुह्मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I should not speak such harsh words, for the child has taken liberties before its parent. Forgive whatever offenses have been committed and teach me the right way.

A child grabs at fire without knowing it burns; when scolded, the child returns to its mother. Says Tuka, the greater the intimacy, the greater the allowance; in such matters, You are the most skilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I should not speak such harsh words. The child has taken liberties before its parent. Forgive whatever wrong I have done, and teach me, kindly, the right way. A child runs to grab the fire, not knowing it burns; and when it is scolded, the child only runs back to its mother. Tuka says: the deeper the closeness, the more is allowed. In this you are the most skilled of all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Having just spoken sharply to God, Tukaram catches himself and asks pardon, recasting his boldness as a child's overstepping before a loving parent. The fire image holds the whole confession: the child reaches for what will hurt it out of ignorance, and even after being corrected has nowhere to flee but back into the mother's arms. He turns this into an argument for mercy rather than distance: intimacy is exactly what makes the liberties forgivable. The point to take inward is that drawing near to God is not earned by perfect behavior; the nearness itself is what makes our blunders bearable, and the running-back is the whole relationship.

GATHA 3560 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, soothe me with sweet words

मराठी मूळ

लडिवाळ ह्मणोनी निष्ठ न बोला । परी सांभिाळला लागे घात ॥1॥
बहु वागवीत आणिलें दुरूनि । दासांची पोसनी बहु आहे ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं लागों दिला आघाताचा वारा । निष्ठ उत्तरा कोमेजतों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी कृपावंत हरि । शांतवा उत्तरीं अमृताच्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Calling me a beloved child, You do not speak harshly, yet the threat must be guarded against. You have carried me a long way with great tenderness, for You nurture many servants.

You have not let the wind of harm touch me, though I wilt at even a stern word. Says Tuka, O merciful Hari, soothe me with the nectar of Your words.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because you call me your darling child, you never speak to me harshly. Still, the danger has to be guarded against. You have carried me a long way with great tenderness, for you raise and feed many servants. You have not let even the wind of harm touch me, and yet I wilt at a single stern word. Tuka says: you are merciful, O Hari; soothe me with words of nectar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how gently God has handled him and admits his own fragility. He has been carried far, sheltered so completely that not even the breeze of harm has reached him, like one child among the many the Lord raises. Yet he confesses how tender he is: a single hard word would make him wilt. The prayer is small and honest, asking only for sweetness of speech, for nectar instead of sternness. It is the request of a soul that knows it is safe and still pleads to be spoken to softly, trusting the Lord's mercy to meet its weakness.

GATHA 3561 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, service over liberation

मराठी मूळ

आत्मिस्थति मज नको हा विचार । देई निरंतर चरणसेवा ॥1॥
जन्मोजन्मीं तुझा दास पुरुषोत्तमा । हे चि गोडी माझ्या देई जीवा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय सायुज्यता मुक्ति हे चि गोड । देव भक्त कोड तेथें नाहीं ॥2॥
काय तें निर्गुण पाहों कैशा परी । वर्णूप तुझी हरी कीर्ती कैसी ॥3॥
गोड चरणसेवा देवभक्तपण । मज देवा झणें दुराविसी ॥4॥
जाणिवेपासूनि सोडवीं माझ्या जीवा । देई चरणसेवा निरंतर ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे गोडा गोड न लगे प्रीतिकर । प्रीति ते ही सार सेवा हे रे ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not want the state of self-realization; give me instead perpetual service at Your feet. Birth after birth, let me be Your servant, O Purushottama; grant my jiva this very sweetness.

What joy is there in the liberation of merging, where neither God nor devotee remains? How shall I behold the formless, and how shall I describe Your glory, O Hari? Sweet is the service of Your feet and the bond between God and devotee; do not, O Lord, deprive me of this. Free my jiva from the burden of knowledge and grant me ceaseless service at Your feet.

Says Tuka, what is sweeter than sweetness itself? That sweetness is the essence of devoted service.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not want the state of knowing the Self; that is not for me. Give me instead unbroken service at your feet. Birth after birth let me be your servant, O Purushottama; grant my soul this one sweetness. What is the joy in merging, in liberation, where neither God nor devotee is left? How would I gaze on the formless, and how could I sing your glory then, O Hari? Sweet is the service of your feet, sweet the bond of God and devotee; do not, O Lord, take it from me. Free my soul from the weight of mere knowing, and give me ceaseless service at your feet. Tuka says: nothing is sweeter than sweetness itself, and that sweetness is the heart of devoted service.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the highest prize that scripture offers, liberation as merging into the formless, and asks for something the philosophers rank lower: endless servanthood at God's feet, life after life. His reason is plain. In sayujya, where the soul dissolves into God, both God and devotee disappear, and with them go the very things he loves: the face to behold, the glory to sing, the relationship of lover and Beloved. He even calls knowledge a burden to be freed from, because it would cost him the two-ness that makes love possible. The claim he lands is bold: service is not the lower path but the sweetest essence, and he would rather keep loving God than become God.

GATHA 3562 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, bow without doubting

मराठी मूळ

चालें दंडवत घालीं नारायणा । आपुल्या कल्याणा लागूनियां ॥1॥
बैसविला पदीं पुत्र राज्य करी । पिता वाहे शिरीं आज्ञा त्याची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आहे ठायींचा चि मान । आतां अनुमान कायसा तो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Go forth and prostrate before Narayana for the sake of your own welfare. A son is seated upon the throne to rule, and the father carries his command upon his head.

Says Tuka, the honor was always inherent; what room is there now for doubt?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Go, then, and bow down full-length before Narayana, for your own good. The son is set on the throne to rule, and the father carries the son's command on his own head. Tuka says: the honor was yours from the start. So what room is left now for doubting?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the listener to stop hesitating and simply prostrate before God, framing it as plain self-interest. His image inverts ordinary rank: God is like a father who seats his own child on the throne and then bears that child's orders on his head, gladly serving the one he loves. The point is that surrender does not lower you. The honor was always already yours in the relationship, given freely. So the doubt that holds a person back from bowing is groundless; there is nothing to fear and nothing to lose, only a dignity to step into.

GATHA 3563 Prayers

Surrender, for your name's sake

मराठी मूळ

समर्थाचें बाळ पांघरे वाकळ । हसती सकळ लोक कोणा ॥1॥
समर्थासी लाज आपुल्या नांवाची । शरण आल्याची लागे चिंता ॥2॥
जरी तुज कांहीं होईल उचित । तरी हा पतित तारीं तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the child of a mighty lord wears a coarse blanket, the whole world laughs. But the mighty lord feels shame for his own name's sake and takes upon himself the worry for the one who has surrendered.

If it is at all fitting for You, O Lord, then save this fallen Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the child of a great lord goes about in a coarse, ragged blanket, everyone laughs. At whom? The mighty lord feels the shame, for his own name's sake; he takes on the worry for the one who has come to him for refuge. Tuka says: if it is at all fitting for you, O Lord, then save this fallen Tuka.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his rescue God's concern rather than his own deserving. The image is keen: a rich father's child seen in rags brings ridicule not on the child but on the father, whose name is at stake. So, he argues, the one who has surrendered becomes the Lord's own responsibility; my poverty reflects on you. He does not claim he has earned saving. He leaves it as a gentle condition, if it is fitting for you, and asks plainly to be saved as the fallen man he is. The whole appeal rests on God's honor and on the bond of refuge, not on Tuka's merit.

GATHA 3564 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, rest at Vithoba's feet

मराठी मूळ

न करीं रे मना कांहीं च कल्पना । चिंतीं या चरणां विठोबाच्या ॥1॥
येथें सुखाचिया रासी । पुढें ठाव नाहीं कल्पनेसी॥ध्रु.॥
सुखाचें ओतिलें साजिरें श्रीमुख । शोक मोह दुःख पाहाता नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें होईल विसांवा । तुटतील हांवा पुढिलिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not, O mind, entertain any idle fancy; contemplate only the feet of Vithoba. Here lie heaps of joy, and beyond this, there is no room for imagination.

His blessed face is cast in the mold of pure bliss; sorrow, delusion, and suffering vanish at the sight of it. Says Tuka, here you shall find true rest, and all future cravings shall be cut away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not, O my mind, spin any idle fancy. Think only of these feet, the feet of Vithoba. Here are heaps of joy; beyond this there is no place left for imagining. His lovely face is poured from pure bliss itself; look on it, and sorrow, delusion, and pain are not even there. Tuka says: here you will find your rest, and every craving still ahead of you will be cut away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to his own restless mind, telling it to stop wandering into imagined futures and settle on one thing: the feet of Vithoba. He describes that resting place as already heaped with joy, so full that imagination has nowhere further to go. The face of God is bliss made visible, and in its sight the three torments of the mind, grief, delusion, and suffering, simply do not appear. The promise is rest now and freedom from craving ahead: the longings that would otherwise pull the mind forward are cut off at the source once it stops here. It is an instruction to the wandering attention to come home.

GATHA 3565 Confession and Sin

Confession, stripped by sloth

मराठी मूळ

काय करूं मज नागविलें आळसें । बहुत या सोसें पीडा केली ॥1॥
हिरोनियां नेला मुखींचा उच्चार । पडिलें अंतर जवळी च ॥ध्रु.॥
द्वैताचिया कैसा सांपडलों हातीं । बहुत करती ओढाओढी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां आपुलिया सवें । न्यावें मज देवें सोडवूनि ॥3॥
। त्याचे तोंडी पडे माती । हीन शूकराची जाती ॥ध्रु.॥
घोकुनी अक्षर। वाद छळणा करीत फिरे ॥2॥
ह्मणे देवासी पाषाण । तुका ह्मणे भावहीन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can I do? Laziness has stripped me bare, and this indolence has caused me great torment. It has snatched the very utterance from my lips, creating distance even when God is near.

How have I fallen into the hands of duality, which drags me this way and that? Says Tuka, now, O Lord, take me along with You and set me free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can I do? Laziness has stripped me bare. This sloth has tormented me terribly. It has snatched the holy word right off my lips, and set a distance between us even though you stand near. How did I fall into the hands of duality, which drags me this way and that? Tuka says: now, O Lord, take me along with you, and set me free. Dust falls into his mouth; his is the low pig's nature. He memorizes the letters and roams about picking quarrels and mocking. He calls God a mere stone. Tuka says: he is empty of faith.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses the quiet thief that is spiritual laziness: it has left him destitute, even taking the Name from his lips, so that God stands close while he feels far. He sees himself caught in duality, the sense of two-ness that yanks the mind back and forth, and he asks not to fix himself but to be carried off and freed by the Lord. The second fragment turns to a different figure, the man who has learned the scriptures by rote yet uses them only to argue and ridicule, even calling the deity a lifeless stone. Tukaram's verdict, empty of faith, points at the pattern rather than the man: learning without devotion curdles into mockery, and a mouth that should chant the Name fills instead with dust.

GATHA 3566 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one needed path

मराठी मूळ

हें चि सर्वसुख जपावा विठ्ठल । न दवडावा पळ क्षण वांयां ॥1॥
हें चि एक सर्वसाधनांचें मूळ । आतुडे गोपाळ येणें पंथें ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगती कांहीं तपांचिया रासी । करणें वाराणसी नाना तीर्थॉ ॥2॥
कल्पना हे तिळ देहीं अभिमान । नये नारायण जवळी त्यांच्या ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नामें देव नेदी भेटी । ह्मणे त्याचे होंटीं कुष्ट होय ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is the supreme joy: to chant the name of Vitthal and not let a single moment go to waste. This alone is the root of all spiritual practice; Gopala is reached by this very path.

No heaps of austerities are needed, no pilgrimages to Varanasi or other sacred sites. Where there is even a grain of selfish desire or bodily pride, Narayana does not come near.

Says Tuka, if one does not receive God through the Name, then know that leprosy will touch the lips that refuse to utter it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This itself is the whole of joy: to repeat the name of Vitthal, and not let a single moment slip by wasted. This alone is the root of every spiritual practice; by this very path Gopala is reached. You do not need heaps of austerities, nor journeys to Varanasi and the other holy places. Where even a grain of selfish wanting or pride of the body remains, Narayana will not come near. Tuka says: leprosy will eat the lips that refuse to utter the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes one practice carry everything: the simple, constant repetition of God's name. He calls it both the supreme happiness and the root of all other disciplines, the single path by which Gopala is actually reached. Against this he sets aside the costly machinery of religion, piled-up austerities and pilgrimages to Varanasi, as not the point. The one obstacle he names is inward: any trace of selfish craving or bodily pride keeps Narayana away, so the Name must be uttered from an emptied heart. The closing line is deliberately harsh, almost a curse, on the mouth that will not say the Name. Read inwardly, it is the warning that refusing the one easy gift left to us lets us rot; the severity is aimed at the refusal, not at any person.

GATHA 3567 Longing and Separation

Longing, claiming the bond

मराठी मूळ

माझे विषयीं तुज पडतां विसर । नको धरुं दूर पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
तुझा ह्मणवितों हे चि लाज तुला । आतां झणी मला विसरेसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझी माझी नाहीं उरी । आतां केली खरी देवराया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You should forget me, O Panduranga, do not keep me at a distance. I call myself Yours; let that be a matter of honor for You.

Do not ever forget me now. Says Tuka, between You and me, let there be no remaining separation; let this bond be made certain, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If You should forget me, Panduranga, do not keep me far from You. I call myself Yours; let that be Your honor to keep. Do not ever forget me now. Tuka says: between You and me there is nothing left to separate us. Now it is settled for certain, O Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has staked his whole identity on belonging to Vitthal, and here he holds God to that claim. He admits God might forget him, and still asks only that the distance never grow. His argument is bold: since he openly calls himself God's own, God's reputation is now bound up with how he is treated. He declares the bond closed and final, with no gap left between them, and dares the Lord to honor it.

GATHA 3568 The Saints

Social criticism, holiness out of place

मराठी मूळ

अभक्ताचे गांवीं साधु म्हणजे काय । व्याघ्रें वाडां गाय सांपडली ॥1॥
कसाबाचे आळी मांडिलें प्रमाण । बस्वणाची आण तया काई ॥ध्रु.॥
केळी आणि बोरी वसती सेजारी । संवाद कोणे परी घडे येथें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खीर केली का†हेळ्याची । शुद्ध गोडी कैची वसे तेथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is a saint in a village of the faithless? It is like a cow trapped in a tiger's pen. In the lane of butchers, what weight does a vegetarian's oath carry? A banana tree and a thorny bush may live side by side, but what dialogue can take place between them? Says Tuka, if you make kheer from bitter gourd, what genuine sweetness can possibly be found there?

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is a saint in a town of faithless people? A cow caught in a tiger's pen. In a butchers' lane, what weight does a vegetarian's vow carry? A banana tree and a thornbush may grow side by side, but what talk can pass between them? Tuka says: if you cook kheer from bitter gourd, where will real sweetness come from?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming what happens when a holy life is dropped into surroundings that despise it. Each image is a mismatch with no possible meeting: prey among predators, a vow of restraint among the indifferent, a sweet tree beside a barbed one. The point is not contempt for the people, but a clear-eyed warning about company; a nature stays true to itself, and you cannot draw sweetness from a bitter source. He asks the listener to weigh honestly where they place themselves and what they expect to grow there.

GATHA 3569 Prayers

Prayer, refuge of the weary

मराठी मूळ

भागल्यांचा तूं विसांवा । करीं नांवा निंबलोण ॥1॥
परमानंदा पुरुषोत्तमा । हरीं या श्रमापासूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
अनाथांचा अंगीकार। करितां भार न मनिसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे इच्छा पुरे । ऐसें धुरेगे विठ्ठल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the resting place of the weary. Ward off the evil eye from Your own name, O generous Lord.

O Purushottama, O supreme bliss, remove this weariness from me. You take up the cause of the helpless without considering it a burden.

Says Tuka, Vitthal fulfills every wish at the very source.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the rest of all who are worn out. Ward off the evil eye from Your own name, generous Lord. O supreme bliss, O Purushottama, take this weariness from me. You take up the cause of the helpless and never count it a burden. Tuka says: Vitthal fulfills every wish at its very source.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God not with a list of wants but as one who is simply tired, and he names God as the place where the weary lie down. He even asks God to guard His own good name, since that name is what the exhausted lean on. The plea rests on a settled trust: God takes up the cause of the helpless and never treats it as a chore. He ends by affirming that Vitthal grants what is needed at the root, before the asking is even finished.

GATHA 3570 Prayers

Surrender, the bold beggar

मराठी मूळ

घालूनियां कास । बळें आलों मागायास ॥1॥
प्रेमें देई पाठवूनि । पांडुरंगा सेवाऋणी ॥ध्रु.॥
होई रे शाहाणा । कळों नेदावें या जना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पायीं । जडलों मग उरलें काई॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Girding my loins, I have come with force to beg. O Panduranga, grant me Your service and discharge my debt.

Be wise about it, and do not let the world know. Says Tuka, once I am rooted at Your feet, what else remains?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Girding my loins, I have come by force to beg from You. Send me out filled with love, Panduranga; pay off the debt of my service. Be clever about it, and do not let the world find out. Tuka says: once I am fixed at Your feet, what is left to do?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God like a determined beggar who will not be turned away, asking to be sent back full of love rather than empty. He even claims a debt: he has served, so God owes him. There is a wink in the prayer, asking God to settle it quietly, away from the crowd, as if the two of them share a private arrangement. The whole transaction collapses into one thing: once he is rooted at the Lord's feet, nothing further remains to be sought.

GATHA 3571 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting for the face

मराठी मूळ

भेटीलागीं पंढरिनाथा । जीवीं लागली तळमळ व्यथा॥1॥
कैं कृपा करिसी नेणें । मज दीनाचें धांवणें ॥ध्रु.॥
सीणलें माझें मन । वाट पाहातां लोचन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भूक । तुझें पाहावया मुख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Lord of Pandhari, my chitta burns with restless aching for Your meeting. I do not know when You will show mercy and come running to this poor jiva.

My weary mind and watching eyes are exhausted from waiting. Says Tuka, I am hungry to see Your face.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the sight of You, Lord of Pandhari, my heart burns with restless aching. I do not know when You will show mercy and come running to this poor one. My mind is worn out, my eyes tired from watching the road. Tuka says: I am hungry to see Your face.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the ache of separation, told as plain bodily wear. Tukaram's heart burns, his mind tires, his eyes are spent from watching the road for a God who has not yet come. He does not pretend to know when mercy will arrive; he only keeps watch. The longing is reduced to its barest form at the end: not for gifts or rescue, but simple hunger to see the Lord's face.

GATHA 3572 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the body laid down

मराठी मूळ

सांडियेली काया । वरी ओंवाळूनी पायां ॥1॥
शरण शरण नारायणा । मज अंगीकारा दीना ॥ध्रु.॥
आलों लोटांगणीं। रुळें तुमचे चरणीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कई । डोई ठेवीन हे पायीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have cast aside this body and waved it as an offering over Your feet. I surrender, I surrender, O Narayana; accept this lowly one.

I have come rolling to Your feet in full prostration. Says Tuka, when shall I place my head upon those feet?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have cast off this body and waved it as an offering over Your feet. I surrender, I surrender, Narayana; take in this lowly one. I have come falling flat to the ground, rolling at Your feet. Tuka says: when will I lay my head upon those feet?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers the one thing fully his to give, his own body, and lays it down like a lamp waved before God's feet. He repeats the word of surrender twice, with nothing held in reserve, and asks only to be accepted as he is, low and unworthy. The picture is of total prostration, rolling on the ground at the feet. Even after offering everything, he is still longing for the final touch: to rest his head on those feet.

GATHA 3573 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the dog at the door

मराठी मूळ

तुझे दारींचा कुतरा । नको मोकलूं दातारा ॥1॥
धरणें घेतलें घरांत । नको धरून उठवूं हात ॥ध्रु.॥
घेतली मुरकुंडी। थोर जालों मी लंडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जगजीवना । ि◌ब्रदें पाहें नारायणा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let me be the dog at Your doorstep; do not drive me away, O generous Lord. I have taken shelter inside Your home; do not seize me by the hand and throw me out.

I have curled up in submission, for I have become utterly meek. Says Tuka, O life of the world, look to Your own honor, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me be the dog at Your door; do not drive me off, generous Lord. I have taken shelter inside Your house; do not seize my hand and throw me out. I have curled up small in submission, for I have become utterly lowly. Tuka says: O life of the world, look to Your own honor, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the humblest place he can name, a dog at the threshold, and asks only not to be chased away. He has crept inside God's house and refuses to be evicted, having shrunk himself to nothing in surrender. There is no merit offered, only need and a claim on shelter. His last move is the same as elsewhere: he turns the burden onto God, reminding the Lord that His own reputation as protector is at stake in whether this wretch is kept.

GATHA 3574 Renunciation

Renunciation, the churning that cannot be undone

मराठी मूळ

पडिलों बाहेरि आपल्या कर्तव्यें । संसाराचा जीवें वीट आला ॥1॥
एकामध्यें एक नाहीं मिळों येत । ताक नवनीत निडिळया ॥ध्रु.॥
दोनी जालीं नांवें एकाच्या मथनें । भुस सार गुणें वेगळालीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोठें वसे मुक्ताफळ । सिंपल्याचें स्थळ खंडलिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have fallen outside my own doing, and worldly life has become utterly distasteful to my jiva. Buttermilk and butter, once one, cannot be mixed again after churning.

The churning has produced two names from one, separating chaff from essence by their inherent qualities. Says Tuka, where does the fruit of liberation dwell? In the very place where the shell has been broken.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have fallen outside my own duties; my heart is sick of worldly life. Once butter and buttermilk are churned apart, they cannot be mixed back together. The churning made two names from one, separating chaff from essence by their own nature. Tuka says: where does the fruit of freedom live? In the place where the shell has been broken open.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a turning that cannot be reversed. Worldly life has become so distasteful that he has slipped out of his ordinary round of duties, and there is no going back, just as churned butter can never return to milk. The work of churning has sorted what he is: essence parted from chaff, each settling by its true nature. He closes with the law of the harvest: the fruit of liberation is found only where the outer shell is cracked, where the false covering is broken and the kernel laid bare.

GATHA 3575 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, all of it was for the best

मराठी मूळ

पाहातां हें बरवें जालें । कळों आलें यावरी ॥1॥
मागिलांचा जाला झाडा । त्या निवाडास्तव ॥ध्रु.॥
विसांवलें अंग दिसे । सरिसे अनुभव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरें जालें । देवें नेलें गवसूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Looking back, all that happened was for the best. After this, understanding has dawned.

The accounts of the past have been cleared; that is the purpose of this reckoning. The body appears rested, and the experience is consistent throughout.

Says Tuka, it is good that God found me and caught me up in His embrace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Looking back, all that happened turned out well; I see it clearly now. The old accounts have been settled, and that was the whole point of the reckoning. My body feels rested, and the experience holds steady throughout. Tuka says: it is good. God found me and gathered me into His hold.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the calm that comes after the struggle is over. Tukaram looks back over his life and sees that every hard turn was working toward good. The debts of the past, his old karma, have been cleared like a settled account, which is what the whole ordeal was for. Body and experience are at rest now, and he traces it all to one cause: God reached out, found him, and took hold of him.

GATHA 3576 The Necessity of Experience

Liberation, the pot shatters

मराठी मूळ

चक्रफेरीं गळीं गळा । होता गोवियेला माळा ॥1॥
फुटोनियां गेला कुंभ । जालों निष्काम स्वयंभ ॥ध्रु.॥
धरित चि नाहीं थारा । वेठी भ्रमण खोंकरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कौतुक कोडें । आगी काय जाणे मढें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On the spinning wheel of existence, neck was entangled with neck in a garland of chains. Then the pot shattered, and I became desireless, self-born and free.

I had never found a resting place, always wandering and exhausted. Says Tuka, what does a corpse know of wonder? What does fire mean to the dead?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On the spinning wheel, neck was looped to neck in a chain of garlands. Then the pot broke, and I became free of desire, self-born and whole. I had never found a place to rest, dragged round and round and worn out. Tuka says: it is a strange wonder. What does a corpse know of fire?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures bound existence as a turning wheel where every neck is yoked to the next, all bodies chained together in endless circling. The breakthrough comes when the pot shatters: the false vessel of the separate self breaks, and what is left is desireless and self-existent. Before that he found no resting place anywhere, only ceaseless, exhausting motion. The closing image is sharp: once the self has died to its old craving, the old fires of the world cannot touch it, for fire means nothing to a corpse.

GATHA 3577 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the will laid down

मराठी मूळ

श्रमपरिहारा । मूळ हें जालें दातारा ॥1॥
देह निवेदूनि पायीं । जालों रिकामा उतराई ॥ध्रु.॥
आपली ते सत्ता । येथें असों नेदीं आतां ॥2॥
राहिला निराळा । तुका कटकटे वेगळा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This has become the root of the removal of all weariness, O generous Lord. By offering this body at Your feet, I have become free and unburdened.

I no longer allow my own will to operate here. Says Tuka, he stands apart now, free from all entanglement.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This became the root of all my weariness ending, generous Lord. By offering this body at Your feet, I am emptied and my debt is paid. I no longer let my own will work here. Tuka says: he stands apart now, free of all the wrangling.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces the end of his exhaustion to a single act: laying his body down at God's feet. In that offering he is emptied of self and his debt is cleared, leaving nothing to carry. The decisive surrender is of the will; he no longer permits his own self-will to operate. Having handed that over, he speaks of himself in the third person, set apart and free, released from the constant friction and quarreling that self-will breeds.

GATHA 3578 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the herald of the Name

मराठी मूळ

पाठवाल तेथें गर्जेन पवाडे । कायाअ देहाकडे नावलोकीं॥1॥
ह्मणउनि मागें कंठींचा सौरस । पावतील नास विघ्नें पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपेच्या कटाक्षें निभें किळकाळा । येतां येत बळाशक्तीपुढें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गुढी आणीन पायांपें । जगा होइल सोपें नाम तुझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever You send me, I shall proclaim Your glorious deeds, without a backward glance at this body. That is why the melody in my throat rises ever higher, and all obstacles ahead shall be destroyed.

By one glance of Your mercy, even death is overcome; who can stand before such power? Says Tuka, I will bring my victory flag to Your feet, and Your name shall become easy for the whole world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever You send me, I will sing Your great deeds aloud, never glancing back at this body. So the sweetness in my throat keeps rising, and the obstacles ahead will be destroyed. With one merciful glance even death is held off; who can stand before such strength? Tuka says: I will plant Your victory flag at Your feet, and Your name will become easy for the whole world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers himself as God's herald, ready to go anywhere and proclaim God's deeds without a thought for his own safety. His confidence is not in himself but in God's mercy: one glance from the Lord overcomes death and clears every obstacle on the road. The image of the song rising in his throat shows the devotion that fuels the mission. His aim is not personal glory but a public one: to raise God's banner and make the divine name so accessible that anyone, anywhere, can take it up.

GATHA 3579 Longing and Separation

Longing, holding God to His word

मराठी मूळ

उपजल्या काळें शुभ कां शकुन । आतां आवरोन राहिलेती ॥1॥
नाहीं मागितली वचनाची जोडी । निष्काम कोरडी वरिवरि ॥ध्रु.॥
सत्याविण काय उगी च लांबणी । कारियाची वाणी येर भूस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसी कोणा चाळवणी । न विचारा मनीं पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At birth there were auspicious signs and omens; now You have drawn them back. I have not asked for the riches of sweet promises, only empty and superficial gestures.

Without truth, what use is mere prolongation? Words without substance are just chaff. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, do You not think in Your mind of how long this evasion will last?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I was born there were good omens and signs. Now you have drawn them all back. I did not ask for a pile of sweet promises. Empty words, dry on the surface, are nothing to me. Without truth, what is this dragging out for? Words with no substance are only chaff. Tuka says: O Panduranga, what trick is this? Do you not think about it in your own mind?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one who was once given signs of God's favor and now feels them withdrawn. He refuses to be put off with kind-sounding promises that have no fulfillment behind them; he calls such words dry chaff. The thing he wants is truth, the real meeting, not a delay dressed up as comfort. So he presses Vitthal directly: this stalling is a kind of trick, and he asks God to look honestly at what He is doing. The poem names the ache of a devotee who will not let God substitute language for presence.

GATHA 3580 Prayers

Prayer, the burning that cannot wait

मराठी मूळ

नव्हें मी आहाच आशेचें बांधलें । जें हें टोंकविलें नारायणा ॥1॥
अंतर तों तुम्हां बरें कळों येतें । वेव्हार उचितें चाळवीजे ॥ध्रु.॥
मनें कल्पीलें आवरितां पाप । संकल्पीं विकल्प याचि नांवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां न सोसे जळजळ । सिजल्यावरी जाळ कढ खोटा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am not one who merely clings to hope; what You have hinted at, O Narayana, is something deeper. You know the inner truth well enough; carry out the dealings in a manner befitting the occasion.

The mind imagines it is restraining sin, but this very act of resolve and counter-resolve is itself the problem. Says Tuka, I cannot bear this burning; once the cooking is done, the flame and its heat are pointless.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am not someone who just clings to hope. What you have hinted at, Narayana, is deeper than that. You can see my inner heart well enough. Carry out your dealings as the moment deserves. The mind thinks it is holding back sin. But this very resolve and counter-resolve is itself the trouble. Tuka says: I cannot bear this burning. Once the food is cooked, keeping the flame on is false heat.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells God that his longing is not shallow hope but a response to what God Himself has hinted. He asks God, who already sees his heart, to act now and fittingly. Then he turns the lamp inward: the mind that congratulates itself for restraining sin is caught in its own endless resolving and second-guessing, and that churning is the very problem. He ends with a sharp image: he is already cooked through by this longing, so to keep the fire burning is pointless cruelty. The plea is for God to finish what is already done in him.

GATHA 3581 Prayers

Prayer, the stingy host

मराठी मूळ

ताकें कृपण तो जेवूं काय घाली । आहाच ते चालीवरुनि कळे ॥1॥
काय तुह्मां वेचे घातलें सांकडें । माहें आलें कोडें आजिवरि ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवेंविण आह्मी न लिंपों काया । जाला देवराया निर्धार हा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझीं राखावया ब्रीदें । येणें अनुवादें कारियासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A miser with buttermilk, how will he serve a proper meal? His very demeanor reveals his greediness. What cost does it impose on You to fulfill my wish? Until now, my simple request has remained unanswered.

Without Your service, I will not so much as anoint this body; this, O Lord, is my firm resolve. Says Tuka, it is to uphold Your own titles and honor that I make this appeal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A miser who is tight even with buttermilk, how will he serve a full meal? His whole manner gives away his greed. What does it cost you to grant my small request? It has stayed unmet to this very day. Without your service I will not even anoint this body. This, my Lord, is my firm resolve. Tuka says: it is to guard your own good name that I keep making this appeal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a homely image: a man too mean to share even buttermilk can never lay out a proper feast, and his stinginess shows in everything he does. He asks what it could possibly cost the Lord to grant one small thing that has gone unanswered so long. He stakes his own life on it: he will not so much as care for his body apart from God's service. And he reminds God that the honor at risk is God's, not Tukaram's; God is known as the generous one, and ignoring a devotee would shame that name.

GATHA 3582 Prayers

Prayer, why come down to worldly cares

मराठी मूळ

वृत्तीवरि आह्मां येणें काशासाटीं । एवढी हे आटी सोसावया ॥1॥
जाणतसां परी नेणते जी देवा । भ्रम चि बरवा राखावा तो ॥ध्रु.॥
मोडूनि क्षरलों अभेदाची मूस । तुह्मां कां अळस वोडवला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे होई लवकरि उदार । लांबणीचें फार काम नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should I come down to the level of worldly concerns and endure such great strain? You know the truth, O Lord, yet You play the role of the unknowing; it is better to preserve that blessed ignorance. I have broken and poured out the mold of non-duality; why has this reluctance come upon You? Says Tuka, be generous quickly; prolonged delay serves no purpose.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why should I come down to the level of worldly concerns and bear such great strain? You know the truth, Lord, yet you act as one who does not know; it is convenient to keep up that pretense. I have broken and poured out the very mold of non-duality. Why has this laziness come over you? Tuka says: be generous quickly. There is no use in dragging it out so long.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram protests at being dragged back into the strain of ordinary worldly preoccupations when his heart is set elsewhere. He accuses God of playing dumb: God knows everything yet keeps up a convenient pretense of not knowing what His devotee needs. He says he has already melted down and poured out the very form of his separate self in seeking non-dual union, so the delay is on God's side, not his. The closing plea is blunt and affectionate: stop being slow, be generous now, this stalling helps no one.

GATHA 3583 Prayers

Prayer, hold God to His promise

मराठी मूळ

सुलभ कीर्तनें दिलें ठसावूनि । करितां धरणी उरी कोण ॥1॥
आतां न टळावें केलिया नेमासी । उदाराचा होसी हीन काय ॥ध्रु.॥
एका नेमें कोठें दुसरा पालट । पादिर तो धीट ह्मणती त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती बोलसी उणें । एकाच वचनें खंड करीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through kirtan, You have imprinted Yourself deeply. Who can hold back when the earth itself is not enough? Now do not break the promise that was made; are You, the generous one, to become small? Whoever changes course midway is called a renegade.

Says Tuka, how much more will You say in shortfall? Settle it all with a single word.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Through easy kirtan you have stamped yourself deep in me. When that begins, who can hold back, even if the whole earth is not enough? Now do not slip out of the promise you made. Will you, the generous one, make yourself small? Whoever changes course halfway is called a turncoat to his face. Tuka says: how much more will you say in excuses? Settle the whole thing with a single word.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says God has pressed His own form into him through the simple practice of kirtan, and once that praise rises no one can hold it back. On that footing he holds God to a promise already given and warns that to back out now would make the generous Lord small, like a man who turns coat midway and is named a traitor. He has no patience for further excuses. The whole abhanga drives toward one demand: God need only say one word to make good on everything.

GATHA 3584 Longing and Separation

Longing, the cure rests with God alone

मराठी मूळ

जेथें माझी दृष्ट राहिली बैसोन । तेथें चि हें मन गुंडाळातें ॥1॥
टाळावी ते पीडा आपुल्यापासून । दिठावेलें अन्न ओकवितें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुम्हांसी कां कोडें कोणे ही विशीचें । नवलाव याचें वाटतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वेगीं उभारा जी कर । कीर्त मुखें थोर गर्जईन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where my gaze has settled and sat down, there my mind wraps itself around. The remedy for this ache lies with You alone; food that has been stared at makes one queasy.

Why should any spectacle surprise You or strike You as novel? Says Tuka, quickly raise Your hand on high, and I will proclaim Your glory with a thundering voice.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever my gaze has settled and sat down, there my mind wraps itself tight. Take away this ache, it can only be removed by you. Food that has been stared at makes me sick. Why should any spectacle surprise you or seem new? Tuka says: quickly raise your hand on high, and I will proclaim your glory with a thundering voice.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a mind that fastens onto wherever the eye lands and clings there, an ache he says only God can lift. His image is vivid: food stared at by hungry eyes turns the stomach, so a longing left unanswered becomes sickening rather than nourishing. He reminds God that nothing about his condition can be a surprise to the Lord who sees all. Then he offers his side of the bargain: let God only lift His hand in blessing, and Tukaram will repay it by singing God's glory loud enough to ring out.

GATHA 3585 Prayers

Prayer, the bond of master and servant

मराठी मूळ

इच्छेपाशीं आलों फिरोनि मागुता । स्वामीसेवकता आवडीचे ॥1॥
द्यावें लवकरी मागितलें दान । मुळींचें जतन करूनि असें ॥ध्रु.॥
उपाय हे करीं एका चि वचना । दावूनियां खुणा ठाया येतों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गांठी किती तुजपाशीं । जगाच्या तोडिसी चिंतनानें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have returned once more to the threshold of my desire: the loving bond of master and servant. Grant me quickly the gift I ask for; I have kept careful guard over the original trust.

With a single word, I offer these remedies, showing You the signs as I arrive at the destination. Says Tuka, how much treasure do You hold? You sever the world's burdens through mere remembrance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come back once more to the door of my desire: the loving bond of master and servant. Give me quickly the gift I ask for. I have kept careful guard over the trust that was there from the start. With one word I offer these means; I come to the place, showing you the signs. Tuka says: how much treasure do you hold, you who cut away the whole world's burdens by mere remembrance?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram returns again to the one desire he keeps circling back to: the loving relation of master and servant between God and himself. He asks for the gift to be given quickly and says he has faithfully guarded the original bond entrusted to him. He presents himself as one who has done his part, arriving at the appointed place and showing the agreed signs. The close marvels at God's wealth: the One who can dissolve the burdens of the whole world by simple remembrance surely has more than enough to grant this one servant his prayer.

GATHA 3586 Longing and Separation

Longing, no one ties the knot with truth

मराठी मूळ

कोठें आतां आह्मी वेचावी हे वाणी । कोण मना आणी जाणोनियां ॥1॥
न करावी सांडी आतां टाळाटाळी । देइन ये कळी होइल माजी ॥ध्रु.॥
घरोघरीं जाल्या ज्ञानाचिया गोष्टी । सत्यासवें गांठी न पडवी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां भाकितां करुणा। भलता चि शाहाणा शोध काढी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where now shall I spend this voice? Who will bring it to mind with true understanding? Do not dismiss me or put me off any longer; if I must, I will raise a commotion. In every household they talk of spiritual knowledge, yet no one ties the knot with truth.

Says Tuka, when I cry for mercy, every kind of clever person jumps in to investigate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where now am I to spend this voice? Who will take it to heart and truly understand? Do not cast me off or put me off any longer. If it comes to it, I will raise a commotion. In house after house they talk of spiritual knowledge, yet no one ties the knot with truth. Tuka says: when I cry out for mercy, every kind of clever person jumps in to investigate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks where he can pour out his cry and who will actually understand it rather than just hear words. He warns God not to keep dismissing him; if pushed, he will make a loud disturbance. His complaint widens to the world around him: everyone talks of spiritual knowledge in every household, but no one truly binds himself to the truth they discuss. And when he cries for mercy, the clever ones rush not to help but to examine and analyze him, which is no comfort at all. The poem voices the loneliness of a real cry surrounded by mere talk.

GATHA 3587 Prayers

Prayer, steady the wavering mind

मराठी मूळ

डगमगी मन निराशेच्या गुणें । हें तों नारायणें सांतवीजे ॥1॥
धीरें तूं गंभीर जीवनें जगाचें । जळो विभागाचें आत्रीतत्या ॥ध्रु.॥
भेईल जीव हें देखोनि कठिण । केला जातो सीण तो तो वांयां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आवश्यक हें वचन । पाळावें चि वान समयो आहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mind wavers under the weight of despair. This must be soothed by Narayana alone.

You are patient, profound, the sustainer of all life; let the petty divisions burn away. The jiva is frightened, seeing only harshness; all effort made seems to go to waste.

Says Tuka, these words must be heeded, for the promise must be kept; the appointed time is here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mind sways under the weight of despair. Only Narayana can soothe this. You are patient, deep, the one who sustains the world. Let these petty divisions burn away. The jiva is frightened, seeing only harshness, and all the strain it takes goes to waste. Tuka says: these words must be heeded, for the promise must be kept. The appointed time is here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits his mind is unsteady, tipping toward despair, and says only God can calm it. He appeals to God's nature as patient, deep, and the sustainer of all life, asking that the small divisions and quarrels in him be burned off. The frightened soul sees only sternness in God and wears itself out for nothing. So Tukaram urges that his plea be heard now: the promise God made still stands, and the moment to keep it has come.

GATHA 3588 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, guarding one single longing

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी पाहा कैसीं एकतत्त्व जालों । राखणे लागलों वासनेसी ॥1॥
तुह्मांविण कांहीं नावडावें जीवा । केला तो चि देवा केला पण ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्म नेणों परि वृत्ती भंगों नेदुं । वंदिलें चि वंदूं आवडीनें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळे नामाचें जीवन । वारता ही भिन्न नेणों आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

See how I have become one in essence, standing guard over my longing. My jiva will not love anything apart from You; this is the vow I have made, O Lord.

I may not know the secret, but I will not let my devotion break; what I have worshipped, I will continue to worship with love. Says Tuka, I know that the Name is the very water of life; I will entertain no thought separate from it now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

See how I have become one in essence. I have set myself to guard this one longing. My soul will love nothing apart from you. That is the vow I have made, Lord. I may not know the secret, but I will not let my devotion break. What I have worshipped, I will go on worshipping with love. Tuka says: I know the Name is the very water of life. I will hold no thought apart from it now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a self that has gathered into a single point: he stands watch over one longing and lets nothing scatter it. He has vowed that his soul will love nothing but God. He does not claim to grasp the hidden secret of things, but he refuses to let his steady devotion crack, and he will keep worshipping what he has worshipped. The Name, he says, is the water that keeps life alive, and he will entertain no thought separate from it. The abhanga is a quiet declaration of one-pointed loyalty rather than a demand.

GATHA 3589 Prayers

Prayer, just say so be it

मराठी मूळ

आपण तों असा । समर्थ जी हृषीकेशा ॥1॥
करा करा बुझावणी । काय विलंब वचनीं ॥ध्रु.॥
हेंगे ऐसें ह्मणा । उठूनि लागेन चरणा ॥2॥
घेऊनियां सुखें । नाचेल तुका कवतुकें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are almighty, O Hrishikesha. Console me, console me; why this delay in Your words? Just say 'So be it,' and I will rise and fall at Your feet.

Says Tuka, receiving that with joy, I will dance in delight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You yourself are almighty, Hrishikesha. Console me, console me. Why this delay in your words? Just say, So be it. I will rise and fall at your feet. Tuka says: taking that in joy, I will dance in delight.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram appeals to God as Hrishikesha, the all-powerful Lord, and begs simply to be reassured. He cannot understand why God holds back even a word of comfort. All he asks is for God to say So be it, and at that he will rise up and bow at the feet. The poem ends in pure anticipation: with that one word granted, Tukaram will dance for joy. It is a small, intimate plea that turns on the smallest possible gift, a single yes.

GATHA 3590 Faith and Trust

Faith, watching the Lord's face for a sign

मराठी मूळ

द्याल ऐसें दिसे । तुमचें साचपण इच्छे ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि न भंगे निर्धार । केलें लोचनें सादर ॥ध्रु.॥
मुखाची च वास । पुरला पाहे अवकाश ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळे । काय लाभ कोण वेळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It appears You will give; Your sincerity gives me hope. Therefore my resolve does not break, and my eyes remain fixed before You.

I watch for a sign from Your face, waiting for the right moment to arrive. Says Tuka, I watch for what gain will come and at what hour.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It looks as though you will give. Your truthfulness gives my longing hope. So my resolve does not break. I keep my eyes fixed before you. I watch only your face, waiting for the chance to come. Tuka says: who knows what gain will come, and at what hour.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rests on a quiet confidence: it seems God will give, and God's own truthfulness is what feeds his hope. Because of that trust his resolve holds firm, and he keeps his eyes steadily on the Lord. He watches God's face alone, waiting for the right opening to arrive. The closing line keeps the patience honest: he does not know what the gift will be or when it will come, only that he keeps watching. The mood is steady, expectant faith rather than complaint.

GATHA 3591 Prayers

Prayer, freed by direct experience

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी तों सदैव । आधरपणें माझी हांव ॥1॥
जळो आशेचें तें जिणें । टोंकतसावें दीनपणें ॥ध्रु.॥
येथूनि सोडवा । आतां अनुभवेंसी देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जालें । एक मग हें निमालें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are ever fortunate; it is I whose greed keeps me grasping. Let the life of hope be burned away, this existence of begging in lowliness.

Free me from this place now through direct experience, O Lord. Says Tuka, when oneness is achieved, all this shall pass away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are always fortunate. It is I, with my grasping, who keep clinging. Let this life of hope burn away, this begging in lowliness. Free me from this place now, by direct experience, O Lord. Tuka says: once oneness comes, all of this will pass away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets his own poverty against God's fullness: God lacks nothing, and only Tukaram's own greed keeps him holding on. He wants the life of mere hoping burned away, the cringing posture of a beggar gone. So he asks for one thing, to be released from this condition not by argument but by direct experience of God. He names the stakes plainly: when oneness is realized, this whole grasping existence simply ends.

GATHA 3592 Longing and Separation

Longing, no delay on God's side

मराठी मूळ

कैसें भलें देवा अनुभवा कां नये । उसीर तो काय तुह्मांपाशीं ॥1॥
आहे तें मागों तों दिसातें जवळी । केल्यामध्यें किळ कोण साध्य ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं सांडीत मी सेवेची मर्यादा । लाविला तो धंदा नित्य करीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हात आवरिला गुंती । माझे तंव चित्तीं नाहीं दुजें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why, O Lord, does this fine truth not come into experience? What delay is there on Your side? What I ask for seems close at hand; what difficulty could possibly stand in the way? I have not abandoned the discipline of service; I perform the appointed task daily. Says Tuka, my hands are occupied with this labor, and truly my heart holds nothing else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why, O Lord, does this good truth not come into experience? What delay is there on your side? What I ask for seems close at hand. What difficulty could block it? I have not let go of the discipline of service. I do the appointed task every day. Tuka says: my hands are busy with this work, and truly my heart holds nothing else.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing God with a complaint that is also a defense of himself. The truth he longs for feels near, so he cannot understand the delay, and he insists the holdup is not on his end. He has kept the discipline of devoted service, doing the daily task without abandoning it. His point is that he has met his side of the bargain: his hands stay occupied with God's work and his heart has no second object, so what remains is for God to grant the experience.

GATHA 3593 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the pious slanderer

मराठी मूळ

हुंदकी पिसवी हलवी दाढी । मणी वोढी निंदेचे॥1॥
त्याचें फळ पाकीं यमाचे दंड । घर केलें कुंड कुंभपाक ॥ध्रु.॥
क्रोध पोटीं मांग आणिला अंतरा । भुंकोनि कुतरा जप करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्नान केलें मळमूत्रें । जेवविलीं पितरें अमंगळें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He sobs and shakes, strokes his beard, and counts the beads of slander. The fruit of that ripens into the punishments of Yama, making his home a pit of torment.

With anger in his belly and impurity in his chitta, he barks like a dog while going through the motions of prayer. Says Tuka, he has bathed in filth and fed his ancestors with abominations.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He sobs and shakes, he strokes his beard, he tells his beads of slander. The fruit of that ripens into Yama's punishments; he has made his home a pit of torment. With anger in his belly and filth in his heart, he barks like a dog while going through his prayers. Tuka says: he has bathed in filth and fed his ancestors with foul things.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the mask off a show of piety that is really cruelty. The man weeps and fingers his rosary, but each bead he counts is an act of slander, so his devotions earn the punishments of death, not release. Inside he carries anger and impurity, and his prayer is only barking. The closing image is deliberately revolting: his ritual bath and his offering to the ancestors are defiled at the root, because no outward rite cleans a heart full of contempt. The warning is to examine whether our own devotion hides the same rot.

GATHA 3594 Social Criticism

Social criticism, rigid pride

मराठी मूळ

अंगा भरला ताठा । नये वळणी जैसा खुंटा ॥1॥
कैसें न कळे त्या डेंगा । हित आदळलें अंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
जीव जाते वेळे । भरे लकडा ताठी डोळे ॥2॥
मुसळाचें धनु । तुका ह्मणे नव्हे अनु ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His body is rigid with pride, unbending like a post. The fool cannot see even when goodness strikes him in the face.

Even at the moment of death, the stubborn one fills his eyes with arrogance. Says Tuka, a pestle cannot become a bow; it is simply not in its nature.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His body is stiff with pride, unbending like a fixed post. The fool cannot see, even when his own good strikes him in the face. Even at the hour of death, the stubborn one fills his eyes with arrogance. Tuka says: a pestle cannot be made into a bow; it is just not in its nature.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the man so hardened by pride that he cannot be bent toward his own welfare. Good comes and hits him head on, yet he does not recognize it; arrogance blinds him even as he is dying, when there is nothing left to be proud about. The closing image lands the verdict: a heavy straight pestle can never be curved into a bow, and such a man's rigidity has become his fixed nature. The mirror it holds up is the danger of letting pride set so hard that even the moment of death cannot soften it.

GATHA 3595 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the tested soul endures

मराठी मूळ

करूनि कडविड । जमा घडिली लगड ॥1॥
आतां होतें तें चि जालें । नाम ठायींचें चांगलें ॥ध्रु.॥
उतरलें डाई । उत्तम ते सुलाख ताई ॥2॥
हिंडवितां देश । तुका ह्मणे नाहीं नाश ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through hard refining and patient effort, the raw lump has been shaped into an ingot. Now what was always meant to be has come to pass; the original good name stands revealed.

The assay has been completed, and the stamp of purity is set. Says Tuka, carry it through every land; it will never perish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Through hard refining and patient work, the raw lump has been shaped into an ingot. Now what was always meant to be has come to pass; the original good name stands clear. The assay is done, and the stamp of purity is set. Tuka says: carry it through every land; it will never perish.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the goldsmith's craft to describe what suffering and discipline do to a soul. The crude lump is melted and refined until it becomes a finished ingot, and only then does its true worth, its good name, show itself. The metal is assayed and stamped pure, the way a tested life is proved genuine. The closing claim is the point:

once the gold is real, you can take it anywhere and it holds its value, just as a soul truly purified can pass through any place and never be lost or destroyed.

GATHA 3601 Prayers

Prayer, leave everything to Panduranga

मराठी मूळ

पढीयंतें मागा पांडुरंगापाशीं । मज दुर्बळासी काय पीडा ॥1॥
या चि साटीं दुराविला संवसार । वाढे हे अपार माया तृष्णा ॥ध्रु.॥
कांहीं करितां कोठें नव्हें समाधान । विचारितां पुण्य तें चि पाप ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां निश्चळ चि भलें । तुज आठविलें पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ask everything of Panduranga; why should a weakling like me suffer? For this very reason I turned away from worldly life, where greed and attachment only grow. No matter what one does, there is no peace anywhere; examine it closely, and merit itself turns into sin.

Says Tuka, now it is best to remain steadfast, O Panduranga; I have remembered You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ask everything of Panduranga. Why should a weakling like me suffer for it? It was for just this that I turned away from worldly life, where this endless illusion and craving only grow. Whatever one does, there is no peace anywhere. Look closely, and even merit turns into sin. Tuka says: now it is best simply to stay still. I have remembered you, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands the whole burden over to Panduranga, refusing to carry the strain of seeking himself. He recalls why he left worldly life in the first place: it only feeds illusion and craving without end. He has concluded that no action brings peace, and that even good deeds, looked at closely, breed fresh attachment and so turn into sin. So his settled resolution is to stop striving and stay still, resting in one thing only, the remembrance of God.

GATHA 3602 The Power of the Name

The Name, just speak it

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे मी शाहाणा । तरी ह्मणा नारायणा ॥1॥
तुह्मां बोलवाया कांहीं । ये च भरलोंसे वाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आणावेति रूपा । कोपलेती तरी कोपा ॥2॥
कळोनि आवडी । तुका ह्मणे जाते घडी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I may not be wise, yet I will speak the name of Narayana. I have come rushing with this one purpose: to call upon You.

Bring Yourself into form, or if You are angered, then be angry. Says Tuka, knowing this love, do not let this fleeting moment pass.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am not wise. Even so, say it: Narayana. I have come rushing here for one thing only, to call on you. Come into form for me; or if you are angry, then be angry. Tuka says: knowing this love, do not let the moment slip away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he has no cleverness to offer, so he falls back on the one thing he can do, speak the name Narayana. That single purpose, to call on God, is what has brought him hurrying. He dares God either to appear in visible form or, if displeased, to show that anger openly, anything rather than silence. The urgency is the point: this present moment of love must not be wasted, because the time to call is now and it is passing.

GATHA 3603 Prayers

Prayer, the strain of waiting

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी भाविकें हे काय जाणों खोडी । आइकोनि प्रौढी विनविलें ॥1॥
नाहीं ऐसें येथें जालेती असतां । वाढविली चिंता अधिक सोसें ॥ध्रु.॥
न कळे चि आधीं करितां विचार । न धरितां धीर आहाचता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां वचनें वचन । वाढले तिक्षीण बुद्धि जाली ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are simple devotees; what do we know of faults? Hearing of Your greatness, we offered our prayer. Nothing of what we hoped has come to pass, and the prolonged waiting has only deepened our anxiety.

Even careful reasoning did not reveal the way beforehand; impatience could not hold itself in check. Says Tuka, word upon word has piled up, and the mind has grown sharp with frustration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are simple devotees. What do we know of faults? Hearing of your greatness, we made our prayer. Nothing we hoped for has come, and the long waiting has only deepened our worry. Even careful thought did not show us the way beforehand. Impatience could not hold itself back. Tuka says: word has piled on word, and the mind has grown sharp with frustration.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks for the plain devotees who trusted God's reputation and prayed in good faith. Their hope has gone unanswered, and the drawn-out wait has bred anxiety instead of peace. He confesses that reasoning gave them no foresight and that they could not keep their impatience in check. By the end the complaint has compounded itself, words heaping on words until the mind has turned sharp and irritable. He is honestly naming what unanswered waiting does to even a sincere heart, and laying that pressure before God.

GATHA 3604 Autobiography

Autobiography, the beggar undone

मराठी मूळ

कोठें देवा बोलों । तुह्मां भीड घालूं गेलों ॥1॥
करावाया सत्त्वहाणी । भांडवलाची टांचणी ॥ध्रु.॥
दुर्बळा मागतां । त्याच्या प्रवर्तला घाता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । मज कळलें ऐसें कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where, O Lord, shall I even begin to speak? I went to press You for a favor, hoping to scrape together some capital for the trade. But when a poor man begs, the world moves to destroy him.

Says Tuka, I never realized things could turn out like this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where, O Lord, shall I even begin to speak? I went to press you for a favor, hoping to scrape together a little capital for the trade. But when a poor man asks, the world moves to destroy him. Tuka says: I never realized things could turn out like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes coming to God almost like a small trader trying to raise a little capital, asking for help to get by. What he found is the cruel rule of the world: when a poor man begs, people turn against him rather than help. The blow leaves him at a loss for where to even begin his complaint. The closing line is plain bewilderment, that he never imagined his approach would meet with this, and he brings that wounded surprise to God instead of to the world that wronged him.

GATHA 3605 Longing and Separation

Longing, hold me to the promise

मराठी मूळ

काय त्या दिवस उचिताचा आला । मागील जो केला श्रम होता ॥1॥
ठेवियेला पूर्ण करूनि संकेत । तयापाशीं चित्त लागलें से ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणसी गे माते लेंकराचें लाड । नये पडों आड निष्ठता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मीं करावें वचन । तुह्मांसी जतन करणें तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Has the day of fulfillment finally arrived, making worthwhile all the labor that was done before? You set the appointed time and made Your promise; my chitta is now fixed upon that. You know, O Mother, the tender ways of a child; do not let stubbornness come between us.

Says Tuka, it is our part to keep our word, and Yours to safeguard it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Has the day of fulfillment finally come, making all the earlier labor worthwhile? You set the time and made your promise; my heart is now fixed on that. You know, O Mother, the tender ways of a child; do not let stubbornness come between us. Tuka says: it is our part to keep our word, and yours to safeguard it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks whether the long-awaited day has arrived, the one that would redeem all his earlier toil. He reminds God of an appointed time and a promise made, and says his whole attention is now pinned on it. Addressing God as Mother, he appeals to a parent's softness toward a child and pleads that no hardness be allowed to stand between them. He frames it as a mutual bond: the devotee's duty is to keep his word faithfully, and God's duty is to honor and protect the promise given.

GATHA 3606 Longing and Separation

Longing, wounded by God's gaze

मराठी मूळ

पडिला प्रसंग कां मी ऐसा नेणें । संकल्प ते मनें जिरवले ॥1॥
चेष्टाविलें तरी सांगावें कारणे । भक्ती ते उजेवन करावया ॥ध्रु.॥
लावूनियां दृष्ट घेतली सामोरी । बैसलें जिव्हारीं डसोन तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवा लाविला तो चाळा । करावें गोपाळा शीघ्र दान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know how this occasion came to pass, for I had swallowed all my resolves in my mind. If it was done in jest, then tell me the reason, so that devotion may be made to shine.

Having fixed Your gaze upon me and drawn me close, You have bitten deep into my very core. Says Tuka, the longing has been awakened in this jiva; O Gopala, grant Your gift swiftly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know how this came upon me, for I had already swallowed all my resolves. If you did it in jest, then tell me why, so that devotion can be made to shine. You fixed your gaze on me and drew me close; it has bitten deep into my very core. Tuka says: this longing has been awakened in the soul; O Gopala, give your gift quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is bewildered by a longing he did not choose; he had already quieted his own desires, and then this seized him. He asks God to explain it, even if it was only play, so that the devotion it stirred can be brought to full light. He says God's own look caught and drew him near, and that glance has lodged in his heart like a wound that will not let go. Since it was God who awakened this ache, he presses Gopala to complete it without delay and grant the gift the longing is reaching for.

GATHA 3607 Prayers

Prayer, settle me at your feet

मराठी मूळ

मागील विसर होईल सकळ । केली तळमळ दु:खाची ते ॥1॥
दोहींचें अहिक्य घालीं गडसंदीं । ि◌स्थरावेल बुद्धि पायांपाशीं॥ध्रु.॥
अहाच या केलों देहपरिचारें । तुमचें तें खरें वाटों नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे व्हावें लवकरी उदार । मी आहें सादर प्रतिग्रहासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let all the past sorrows and turmoil be forgotten. Merge both sides together and let the mind settle at Your feet.

Until now I was engaged in serving the body as though that were the truth; do not accept that as genuine. Says Tuka, be generous quickly; I stand ready to receive.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let all the past be forgotten, all the burning sorrow it caused. Join the two of us together and let the mind settle still at your feet. Until now I served the body as if that were the truth; do not count that as real. Tuka says: be generous quickly. I am standing ready to receive.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God to wipe away the past with all the anguish it stirred up, so that nothing old keeps coming back. What he wants instead is union, the two sides merged, with his restless mind finally fixed and steady at God's feet. He disowns his former life, in which he tended the body as though it were the real thing, and begs that this not be held against him as genuine. The poem ends as open-handed petition: God should be generous at once, because Tukaram is already standing there with his hands out, ready to receive.

GATHA 3608 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, service made ever-new

मराठी मूळ

वाढवावा पुढें आणीक प्रकार । एक चि तें फार रुचि नेदी ॥1॥
निंच नवें लेणें देह हा पवाडा । पालट रोकडा वरावरी ॥ध्रु.॥
दिसे शोभिवंत सेवेनें सेवक । स्वामीची ते लोकत्रयीं कीतिन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आजी पाववा संतोष । करुनि कीतिनघोष नाचईन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the ways of service grow ever richer; a single mode becomes stale and loses its flavor. Let this body be adorned with ever-new ornaments, transforming it from the surface inward.

The servant shines with beauty through service, and the master's fame resounds through all three worlds. Says Tuka, grant me satisfaction today, and I will dance proclaiming Your glory.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the ways of service keep growing. One single way grows stale; it loses its taste. Let this body wear new ornaments each time, like a fresh tale told again. Change it on the surface, change it through and through. The servant looks beautiful through his service. And the master's fame rings out through all three worlds. Tuka says: give me joy today. I will dance and shout your glory aloud.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking that devotion never settle into routine. He wants the modes of service to multiply, because a single fixed form goes flat and loses its savor; the body itself should keep putting on new ornaments of praise. The point he lands is that the servant and the master rise together: a servant grows beautiful in serving, and the master's fame spreads through all three worlds. So this is not restlessness for its own sake; it is the prayer that loving God stay alive and grow, ending in the only fitting response, to dance and cry out his glory.

GATHA 3609 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the mother's discipline

मराठी मूळ

क्षोभ आणि कृपा मातेची समान । विभाग जतन करुनि ठेवी ॥1॥
क्षणभंगुर ते उपजली चिंता । खरी अखंडता आवडीची ॥ध्रु.॥
सिकवूं जाणे तें गोमाटियासाटीं । लोभें नाहीं तुटी निश्चयेंसी ॥2॥
अघवें चि मिथ्या समया आरतें । देता तो उचितें काळ जाणे ॥3॥
न करी वेव्हार नेदी गांजूं कोणा । भेडसावी तान्हें हाऊ आला ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे करी जिवाची जतन। दचकूनि मन जवळी आणी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother's anger and her grace are equally part of her love; she apportions each with care and keeps a balance. The anxiety she feels is momentary, but her abiding love is unbroken.

She teaches and corrects for the sake of the child's good, and her resolve never falters out of affection. All superficial moods vanish in their season; the giver knows the right time for each gift.

She does not deal in transactions or let anyone bully her child; she frightens the infant only with a pretend threat. Says Tuka, she guards the life of her child, and a sudden start draws the wandering mind back close.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother's anger and her grace are the same thing. Both come from her love. She measures out each one with care and keeps them in balance. The worry she feels passes in a moment. Her love does not break; it stays whole. She teaches and corrects only for the child's good. Her resolve never weakens out of fondness. All the surface moods are false and pass in their time. The one who gives knows the right hour for each gift. She drives no bargains. She lets no one bully her child. She frightens the little one only with a pretend threat. Tuka says: she guards the child's very life. A sudden start, and she draws the wandering mind back close.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads God's dealings with the soul through the figure of a mother. Her scolding and her kindness are not opposites but two motions of one love, parceled out with care; the anger flares and fades, but the love underneath never breaks. So when correction comes, it is for the child's good, never a withdrawal of affection, and the scary moments are pretend threats, not real abandonment. The frame this hands you is how to take God's hard treatment: the surface moods are momentary and false, the giver knows the right time for each gift, and the apparent fright is only the means by which the mother startles the straying mind back to her side.

GATHA 3610 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion to the world

मराठी मूळ

संसाराचें धांवे वेठी । आवडी पोटीं केवढी ॥1॥
हागों जातां दगड सांची । अंतरीं ही संकल्प ॥ध्रु.॥
लाज तेवढी नारायणीं। वांकडी वाणी पोरांपें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बेशरमा । श्रमावरी पडिभरू॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look how eagerly one runs on worldly errands, with such great devotion to the mundane. Even while attending to nature's call, one hoards stones and harbors worldly schemes.

Shame is felt only before Narayana, while harsh words come easily before the children. Says Tuka, O shameless one, you pile toil upon toil.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look how a man runs about on worldly errands. How much eagerness fills his belly for them. Even while squatting to relieve himself, he hoards stones and schemes in his heart. He keeps his shame only for Narayana. To his own children he speaks crooked, harsh words. Tuka says: O shameless one, you pile labor upon labor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches the everyday self pouring its whole heart into the wrong thing. The man chases worldly errands with a hunger that never quits; even at the latrine his mind is busy gathering and scheming. Then he names the reversal that should sting: the one being he feels shame before is God, while toward his own children he is harsh and twisted. The pattern to examine in oneself is this misplaced devotion, the energy and reverence spent on the world and on appearances while only piling toil on toil, the very thing we are blind to in ourselves.

GATHA 3611 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, devotion mirrors itself

मराठी मूळ

मी त्यांसी अनन्य तीं कोणा असती । ऐसें तंव चित्तीं विचारावें ॥1॥
आहे तो विचार आपणयापाशीं । कळा बिंबाऐसी प्रतिबिंबीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शुभ शकून तो शुभ लाभें फळे । पुढील तें कळे अनुभवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा असेल आठव । तैसा माझा भाव तुझ्या पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am wholly devoted to them, but to whom do they belong? One should reflect upon this in one's chitta. The answer lies within oneself; like an image reflected in a mirror, it shows exactly what is there.

An auspicious omen bears auspicious fruit; what lies ahead is known through experience. Says Tuka, as You remember me, so is my devotion placed at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I belong wholly to them. But whose are they? This is what one should turn over in the mind. The answer rests within yourself. Like an image in a mirror, it shows just what is there. A good omen ripens into good gain. What lies ahead is known by experience. Tuka says: as you hold me in memory, so is my love laid at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing to how devotion works as a kind of mirror. He gives himself wholly to the devotees, then asks who they in turn belong to, and says the answer is found by looking inward: a reflection returns exactly what stands before it. The stakes are quiet but real, that the relationship between God and the soul is reciprocal, the omen of love bearing fruit in love, and proof of it comes only through lived experience, not argument. He lands it in the last line: God's remembrance of him and his own devotion at God's feet are the two faces of one mirroring.

GATHA 3612 Autobiography

Autobiography, the soul's willful distance

मराठी मूळ

बहु कृपावंते माझीं मायबापें । मी माझ्या संकल्पें अंतरलों ॥1॥
संचितानें नाहीं चुकों दिली वाट । लाविलें अदट मजसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां मी रुसतों न कळतां वर्म । परी ठावे धर्म सर्व देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उभा राहिला न बैसे । आमची माय असे उद्वेग त्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My parents are exceedingly gracious, but I have become distant through my own willfulness. Destiny did not let me miss the path; it pressed itself hard upon me.

Now I grow resentful, not knowing the vital secret, yet God knows all the ways of dharma. Says Tuka, He stands and does not sit; such is the restless concern of our Mother for us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mother and father are full of kindness. It is by my own willfulness that I have drifted away. My past deeds did not let me lose the path. They pressed themselves hard upon me. Now I sulk, not knowing the inner secret. Yet God knows every way of dharma. Tuka says: he stands and will not sit down. Such is our Mother's restless worry for us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays the blame for his distance from God squarely on himself. His divine parents are wholly gracious; the gap came from his own willful turning away, even as his past karma kept driving him back toward the path. He admits he sulks without grasping the hidden point, while granting that God alone understands the whole law of how things work. The image he ends on is tender and reversing: the God he has wandered from stands anxious and will not even sit, fretting over the straying child the way a mother cannot rest, which makes his sulking look small against that watching love.

GATHA 3613 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no service for show

मराठी मूळ

कैसीं दिसों बरीं । आम्ही आळवितां हरि ॥1॥
नाहीं सोंग अळंकार । दास जाला संवसार ॥ध्रु.॥
दुःख आह्मां नाहीं चिंता । हरिचे दास ह्मणवितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । ऐसीं जळो करितां सेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How beautiful we look when calling upon Hari. There is no pretense or ornament; the whole world has become a servant.

When one is called a servant of Hari, there is no sorrow, no worry. Says Tuka, O Lord, let the fire consume any notion of performing service for show.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How beautiful we look when we call out to Hari. We wear no costume, no ornament. The whole world has become a servant. We have no sorrow, no worry, when we are called the servants of Hari. Tuka says: O God, let such service burn to ash if it is done for show.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts true devotion with performed devotion. The beauty of the devotee is in plainly calling on Hari, without costume or ornament, with the whole world turned into one body of servants; in that name there is no grief and no anxiety. Then he turns the knife on himself and on every devotee: any service done as display deserves to be burned away. The frame the plain words leave unspoken is that the worth of service lies entirely in its sincerity, and showy religion is worse than worthless, fit only for the fire.

GATHA 3614 Autobiography

Autobiography, nowhere left to turn

मराठी मूळ

आतां सांडूं तरी हातीं ना पदरीं । सखीं सहोदरीं मोकिळलों ॥1॥
जनाचारामध्यें उडाला पातेरा । जालों निलाजिरा ह्मणऊनि ॥ध्रु.॥
कोणाचिया दारा जावेनासें जालें । म्यां च विटंबिलें आपणासी ॥2॥
कां न जाला माझे बुद्धीसी संचार । नाहीं कोठें थार ऐसें जालें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज भक्त जाले फार । ह्मणोनियां थार नाहीं येथें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now if I abandon this path, I have nothing in hand or in my lap. I have let go of friends and kinfolk and become shameless in the eyes of society.

I can no longer go to anyone's door; I have brought this dishonor upon myself. Why did right understanding not enter my mind? I have found no place anywhere.

Says Tuka, You have so many devotees, O Lord, and that is why there is no room for me here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now if I let go of this, I have nothing in hand or in my lap. I have given up friends and brothers. In the eyes of the world I have become shameless. I can no longer go to anyone's door. I have brought this disgrace on myself. Why did good sense never enter my mind? Now there is no shelter for me anywhere. Tuka says: you already have so many devotees. That is why there is no room for me here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stands at a point of no return and counts the cost out loud. He has dropped his hold on family and worldly respect and looks shameless to society, yet to abandon the path now would leave him with nothing in either hand. He owns the disgrace as his own doing and confesses there is no worldly shelter left for him. The ache he lands on is the deeper fear that even God may have no room for him, crowded as he is by countless other devotees, a complaint that is really a plea to be claimed.

GATHA 3615 Autobiography

Autobiography, the cry of the unaccepted

मराठी मूळ

जेथें जातों तेथें पडतो मतोळा । न देखिजे डोळां लाभ कांहीं ॥1॥
कपाळीची रेखा असती उत्तम । तरि कां हा श्रम पावतों मी ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे चि तुह्मांस माझा अंगीकार । थीता संवसार अंतरला ॥2॥
भोग तंव जाला खरा भोगावया तो । भांडवल नेतो आयुष्य काळ ॥3॥
कोठें तुझी कीर्ती आइकिली देवा । मुकतों कां जीवा तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever I go, I encounter only loss; no gain is visible to my eyes. If the lines on my forehead were favorable, why would I be suffering like this? You have clearly not accepted me as Your own, and the settled life I knew has slipped away.

The suffering I was destined to endure has proven real enough, while time carries away the very capital of my lifespan. Where had I heard of Your fame, O Lord? Says Tuka, why then am I losing my life?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever I go, I run into loss. My eyes see no gain anywhere. If the lines on my forehead were good, why would I be suffering like this? You have plainly not taken me as your own. The settled life I had has slipped away from me. The suffering I was fated to bear has turned out real enough. And time keeps carrying off the capital of my years. Where was it I heard of your fame, O God? Tuka says: why then am I losing my very life?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pours out the despair of one who feels unclaimed by God. Everywhere he turns brings loss, his fortune seems written against him, and the ordinary settled life he once had has slipped through his fingers. The stakes are stark: his destined suffering has proved real while time spends down the capital of his remaining years. The sting in the final lines is reproach turned into appeal, asking where he ever heard of God's saving fame if his life is simply draining away unanswered, a complaint addressed to the very Lord he refuses to stop calling on.

GATHA 3616 Prayers

Prayer, claim your servant's authority

मराठी मूळ

कां जी आह्मां होतें दोषाचें दर्शन । तुज समर्पून देहभाव ॥1॥
पांडुरंगा कृपाळुवा दयावंता । धरसील सत्ता सकळ ही ॥ध्रु.॥
कां जी आह्मांवरि आणिकांची सत्ता । तुह्मांसी असता जविळकें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पायीं केलें निवेदन । उचित तें दान करीं सत्ता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why, O Lord, was sin allowed to appear before my eyes, when I had offered You my body and soul? O compassionate and merciful Panduranga, will You not take charge of everything? Why should others have authority over me when You are so near? Says Tuka, I have placed everything at Your feet; now grant me the gift that is rightfully mine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why, O Lord, was sin allowed to appear before my eyes, when I had handed my body and self over to you? O Panduranga, kind one, full of mercy, you hold authority over all of this. Why should others have power over me, when you are so near? Tuka says: I have laid everything at your feet. Now give me the gift that is rightly mine, by your own authority.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a claim on God like a servant who has paid his side of the bargain. He has already surrendered body and self, so he asks why sin and other masters should still get any hold over his eyes and his life. The frame he insists on is divine sovereignty: Panduranga rules everything and stands near, so no rival authority has any business over a soul already given to him. The poem lands as a demand made in trust, that God exercise his power, honor the surrender already made, and grant the rightful gift of belonging wholly to him.

GATHA 3617 Autobiography

Autobiography, scorned by the world

मराठी मूळ

निंदावें हें जग । ऐसा भागा आला भाग ॥1॥
होतें तैसें आलें फळ । गेलें निवडूनि सकळ ॥ध्रु.॥
दुस†याच्या मता । मिळेनासें जालें चित्ता ॥2॥
तुका जाला सांडा । विटंबिती पोरें रांडा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The world is bound to criticize; such is the share that fate has allotted. The fruit has come exactly as it was sown, and everything has been sifted out.

My mind can no longer agree with the opinions of others. Says Tuka, I have been discarded; even women and children mock me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The world is bound to blame me. Such is the share that fell to my lot. The fruit came exactly as it was sown. Everything has been sifted and sorted out. My mind can no longer fall in line with other people's opinions. Tuka says: Tuka has been thrown away like refuse. Even children and lewd women mock him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram accepts the world's contempt as the natural yield of the path he has taken. To be reviled is simply his allotted portion, the fruit matching the seed, and the sifting has run its course. The hard turn is that his mind can no longer bend to public opinion, which is exactly what makes him an outcast. The plain stakes are named without self-pity: he has been discarded like rubbish and openly jeered at, even by children and the lowest, and the poem invites us to weigh whether such mockery is the price of refusing to live by the crowd's verdict.

GATHA 3618 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the knot of grace and service

मराठी मूळ

माझे माथां तुझा हात । तुझे पायीं माझें चित्त ॥1॥
ऐसी पडियेली गांठी । शरीरसंबंधाची मिठी ॥ध्रु.॥
येरयेरांपाशीं । सांपडोन गेलों ऐसीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सेवा । माझी कृपा तुझी देवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your hand rests upon my head, and my chitta rests at Your feet. Such is the knot that has been tied, an embrace born of this bodily bond.

We have been caught up in each other in just this way. Says Tuka, mine is the service and Yours is the grace, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your hand rests on my head. My mind rests at your feet. Such is the knot that has been tied. It is an embrace of this bodily bond. We have been caught up in each other just so. Tuka says: mine is the service, yours is the grace, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the bond with God as a knot tied from both ends. God's blessing hand rests on his head while his own attention rests at God's feet, so that the two are clasped together and caught up in one another. The frame is mutuality made physical, an embrace rather than a one-way reaching. He lands it cleanly in the closing line: the relationship divides into two gifts that meet, the devotee's part is to serve and God's part is to give grace, and the knot holds because each side keeps to its own.

GATHA 3619 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, truth equals renunciation

मराठी मूळ

सत्य त्यागा चि समान । नलगे वेचावें वचन ॥1॥
नारायणा ऐसे दास । येरयेरांची च आस ॥ध्रु.॥
मळ नाहीं चित्ता । तेथें देवाची च सत्ता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाण । तें च भल्याचें वचन॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Truth is the equal of renunciation itself; no further expenditure of words is needed. Such are the servants of Narayana: they seek only one another.

Where no impurity taints the mind, there God's authority alone prevails. Says Tuka, know this: such is the word of the good.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Truth is equal to renunciation itself. No more words need be spent on it. Such are the servants of Narayana: they long only for one another. Where no impurity stains the mind, there God's authority alone rules. Tuka says: know this. That is the word of the good.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets truthfulness on the same level as full renunciation and says the matter needs no further argument. He then describes God's true servants by a single mark: their only desire is for each other's company, the fellowship of the devoted. The claim he lands is that where the mind carries no impurity, God alone holds sway there, with no rival power. He seals it as the settled teaching of the holy, that truth and a clean mind are themselves the place where God reigns, and that this, not elaborate words, is the word of the good.

GATHA 3620 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the spent mind

मराठी मूळ

माझिये बुद्धीचा खुंटला उपाव । करिसील काय पाहेन तें ॥1॥
सूत्रधारी तूं हें सकळचिाळता । कासया अनंता भार वाहों ॥ध्रु.॥
वाहिले संकल्प न पवती सिद्धी । येऊं देहबुद्धीवरि नयों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुःखी करिती तरंग । चिंतूं पांडुरंग आवरून॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind's resources are exhausted. I will watch and see what You choose to do.

You are the stage director, the mover of all things; why should I carry this burden, O Ananta? The plans I have made never come to fruition; I cannot bring body-consciousness to bear any longer. Says Tuka, waves of sorrow batter me; I meditate on Panduranga, gathering Him close.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind has run out of ways. I will just watch and see what you choose to do. You are the one who works the strings; you move everything. So why should I carry this load, O Ananta? The plans I make never come to anything. I cannot lean on body-thinking any longer. Tuka says: waves of sorrow keep beating on me. So I gather Panduranga close and hold him in my thoughts.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has reached the end of his own cleverness and stops scheming. He hands the whole burden back to God, naming him the stage-director who moves all things, and asks why he should keep carrying what is not his to carry. He admits that his own plans fail and that he can no longer trust the mind that says 'I am the body.' When grief comes at him in waves, his one move is not to fight it himself but to draw Panduranga close and rest his attention there.

GATHA 3621 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, devotion as my only store

मराठी मूळ

देखिलें तें धरिन मनें । समाधानें राहेन ॥1॥
भाव माझी सांटवण । जगजीवन कळावया ॥ध्रु.॥
बोळवीन एकसरें । उत्तरें या करुणेच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नयों रूपा । काय बापा करीसी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever I have been shown, I will hold in my chitta and remain content. My devotion is my storehouse, the means by which the life of the world may be understood.

I will send off all the cries of anguish in one single dispatch. Says Tuka, I do not take form beyond this; what more, O Father, will You do?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever you have shown me, I will hold in my mind. I will stay content with that. My devotion is my whole storehouse. By it the life of the world is made known. I will send off all my cries of pain in one single bundle. Tuka says: I will not take any form beyond this. What more, O Father, will you do to me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram settles for whatever God has already given him to see, and decides that this is enough to rest content. He owns nothing else; his devotion is his only wealth, and through it the life of all things becomes clear to him. Rather than send God a stream of separate complaints, he gathers every cry of anguish into one final dispatch and lets it go. Then, calling God 'Father,' he lays himself bare: I will not become anything more than this, so do with me whatever you will.

GATHA 3622 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, handing back the burden

मराठी मूळ

वांयां जाय ऐसा । आतां उगवावा फांसा ॥1॥
माझें परिसावें गा†हाणें । सुखदुःखाचीं वचनें ॥ध्रु.॥
हा चि आह्मां ठाव। पायीं निरोपाया भाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जार । तुझा तुज देवा भार॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The noose that was tightening in vain must now be loosened. Hear my plea, these words of joy and sorrow.

This alone is my dwelling place: to lay my devotion at Your feet and depart. Says Tuka, Your burden, O Lord, is Your own affair.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The noose that was tightening for nothing must now be loosened. Hear my plea: these words of joy and of sorrow. This alone is the place I dwell: to lay my devotion at your feet and walk away. Tuka says: your burden, O God, is your own affair.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sees that he has been strangling himself with a self-made noose, and asks for it to be loosened. He lays his whole inner record before God, the joy and the sorrow alike, and finds his only true home in one act: setting his devotion at God's feet and then leaving the matter there. The closing line is the heart of it: whatever weight there is to carry is God's responsibility, not the devotee's. Surrender here is not collapse but the deliberate handing back of a load that was never ours to hold.

GATHA 3623 Longing and Separation

Longing, the hunger that grows

मराठी मूळ

खादलें च खावें वाटे । भेटलें भेटे आवडी ॥1॥
वीट नाहीं पांडुरंगीं । वाढे अंगीं आर्त तें ॥ध्रु.॥
इंि्द्रयांची हांव पुरे। परि हें उरे चिंतन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पोट भरे । परि ते उरे भूक पुढें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What has been eaten, one wants to eat again; what has been met, one longs to meet once more. There is no weariness of Panduranga; the yearning only grows in the body.

The cravings of the senses eventually subside, but this contemplation endures. Says Tuka, the belly may be filled, yet the hunger remains ahead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What I have eaten, I want to eat again. Whom I have met, I long to meet once more. There is no growing tired of Panduranga. The ache for him only swells in me. The cravings of the senses wear out in the end, but this remembering does not. Tuka says: the belly gets filled, yet the hunger still waits up ahead.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a hunger that runs opposite to every ordinary appetite. With food and with people, having more eventually brings weariness; the senses tire of what they crave. But the longing for Panduranga only deepens the more it is fed, and contemplation of him never goes stale. He sets the two side by side to make the point sharp: bodily hunger is satisfied and ends, while this love is satisfied and grows. The unfilled hunger 'up ahead' is not a lack but the sign of a desire worth keeping.

GATHA 3624 Faith and Trust

Faith, the Name that scatters fear

मराठी मूळ

सत्य आठवितां देव । जातो भेंव पळोनि ॥1॥
न लगे कांहीं करणे चिंता । धरी सत्ता सर्व तो ॥ध्रु.॥
ध्रु.॥ भावें भाव राहे पायीं । देव तैं संनिध ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृष्णनामें । शीतळ प्रेम सर्वांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When one remembers God in truth, all fear flees. There is no need for any worry, for He takes charge of everything.

When devotion abides at His feet, God is right there, close at hand. Says Tuka, by the name of Krishna, cooling love spreads to all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you truly remember God, fear turns and runs away. There is no need to carry any worry; he holds all power in his hands. When your love rests at his feet, God is right there, close by. Tuka says: by the name of Krishna, cool, calm love spreads to everyone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a plain promise about remembrance done in earnest: fear simply flees, because the One remembered governs everything. Worry becomes pointless once you grant that all power is in God's hands and not your own. The condition he names is sincerity of love at God's feet; where that love stays, God is already near. He ends by widening the gift: the name of Krishna does not soothe one person alone but spreads a cooling love to all who take it up.

GATHA 3625 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the giver who comes running

मराठी मूळ

ब्रीद याचें जगदानी । तो चि मनीं स्मरावा ॥1॥
सम पाय कर कटी । उभा तटीं भींवरेच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहिलिया वेध लावी । बैसे जीवीं जडोनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तिकाजा । धांवें लाजा लवलाहें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His title is the benefactor of the world; He alone should be remembered in the mind. He stands with hands upon His hips on the banks of the Bhima.

One look at Him plants a longing that lodges deep within the jiva. Says Tuka, for the sake of His devotees, He runs swiftly, guarding His own honor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His title is the giver to all the world. He alone is the one to remember in the mind. His feet are level, his hands on his hips, and he stands on the bank of the Bhima. One look at him plants a longing that lodges deep in the soul. Tuka says: for the sake of his devotees he comes running, fast, to keep his good name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram fixes the mind on Vitthal at Pandhari, standing in the well-known pose on the bank of the Bhima river, and names his very title: the one who gives to the whole world. A single sight of that form is enough to set a longing that sinks deep into the soul and stays. The closing image is the heart of his faith: God is not distant or slow but comes running to his devotees, swift to help. He does so to guard his own honor, because his name as protector is at stake.

GATHA 3626 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the self undone by the Name

मराठी मूळ

माझिया मनाची बैसली आवडी । अवसान घडी एकी नेघे ॥1॥
पाय चित्तीं रूप डोळांच राहिलें । चिंतने गोविलें मुख सदा ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघियांचा जाला विसर हा मागें । वेध हा श्रीरंगें लावियेला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कानीं आइकली मात । तो चि जाला घात जीवपणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My chitta's desire has settled so firmly that it will not yield even a single moment's pause. His feet remain in my mind, His form stays in my eyes, and my mouth is always occupied with thoughts of Him.

All memory of everything else has fallen away; this spell has been cast by Shrirang Himself. Says Tuka, the moment the ear heard the word, the sense of a separate self was slain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind has settled into one desire. It will not take even a moment's pause. His feet are in my mind, his form stays in my eyes, my mouth is always busy with thoughts of him. Every memory of everything else has dropped away behind me. This spell was cast by Shrirang himself. Tuka says: the moment my ear heard the word, that was the end of my sense of a separate self.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a mind that has fixed on one love so completely that it will not rest for an instant. Feet, form, and speech are all taken up with God, until everything else simply falls away behind him. He credits this not to his own effort but to God, Shrirang, who cast the spell. The last line lands the radical claim: the instant the ear caught the holy word, the sense of being a separate, private self was slain. The Name does not merely comfort the ego; it ends it.

GATHA 3627 Autobiography

Autobiography, the God-mad man

मराठी मूळ

याची कोठें लागली चट । बहु तट जालेंसे ॥1॥
देवपिसीं देवपिसीं । मजऐसीं जग ह्मणे ॥ध्रु.॥
एकांताचें बाहेर आलें । लपविलें झांकेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे याचे भेटी । जाली तुटी आपल्यांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where has this madness gripped me? A great stubbornness has taken hold. The world calls me 'God-mad, God-mad.' What was kept secret in solitude has now come out into the open and cannot be concealed.

Says Tuka, through meeting with Him, I have broken ties with my own people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where did this madness take hold of me? A great stubbornness has gripped me. The world calls me God-mad, God-mad, that is how it speaks of one like me. What I kept secret in solitude has come out into the open, and now it cannot be hidden. Tuka says: through meeting him, I have broken ties with my own people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks plainly about how his devotion looks from the outside: a madness, a stubborn obsession, and the village has a name for it, God-mad. What he once kept private has spilled into public view and can no longer be concealed. He does not defend himself or soften the cost. He simply states it: finding God has cut him off from his own people. The verse owns the social price of a love that cannot be kept respectable or quiet.

GATHA 3628 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the boat for high and low

मराठी मूळ

दीन आणि दुर्बळांसी । सुखरासी हरिकथा ॥1॥
तारूं भवसागरींचें । उंचनीच अधिकार ॥ध्रु.॥
चरित्र तें उच्चारावें । केलें देवें गोकुळीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आवडी धरीं । कृपा करी ह्मणऊनी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the lowly and the destitute, the story of Hari is a treasure of joy. It is a vessel to cross the ocean of existence, open to all, high and low alike.

One should recount the deeds the Lord performed in Gokul. Says Tuka, hold this love close, for it is by this that His grace is won.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the lowly and the weak, the story of Hari is a heap of joy. It is a boat to cross the ocean of this world, open to all, high and low alike. Tell out the deeds the Lord did in Gokul. Tuka says: hold this love close, for by it his grace is won.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to Hari's story as a treasure made especially for the poor and the powerless, a joy that costs nothing. He calls it a boat across the ocean of worldly existence, and insists the boat is open to everyone, no rank required, high and low welcomed together. The way aboard is simple: recount the deeds God did in Gokul, keep that telling alive. He closes by naming the means and the end in one breath: hold this love close, because it is love, not status, that wins God's grace.

GATHA 3629 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the patient mother

मराठी मूळ

संतोषे माउली आरुषा वचनी । वोरसोनि स्तनीं लावी बाळा ॥1॥
तैसे परिमळाचें अवघें चि गोड । पुरवितो कोड पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवा करी साहे निष्ठ उत्तरें । त्याचें वाहे मनीं तेंच बरें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे इच्छावसे खेळ खेळें । चिंता ते सकळ कांहीं नेणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother is pleased even by her child's angry words; she draws it to her breast and lets it nurse. Just so, Panduranga finds everything sweet in devotion and fulfills every whim.

He serves and endures even harsh words; whatever the devotee does, He considers good. Says Tuka, let the child play as it wishes; God knows no worry at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother is glad even at her child's angry words. Her love wells up and she draws it to her breast to nurse. Just so, Panduranga finds everything in devotion sweet, and grants every wish. He serves and bears even harsh words; whatever the devotee does, he counts it good. Tuka says: let the child play as it likes; God carries no worry at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains God's tenderness through the image of a mother who is not offended even by her child's cross words but only loves the more and feeds it. In the same way Panduranga takes everything offered in devotion as sweet and meets every wish. The startling reversal is that God himself serves the devotee, enduring even harsh speech and reckoning whatever the devotee does as good. The closing line completes the picture: like a watchful, untroubled parent, God lets the child play freely and carries no worry, which frees the devotee to be unguarded before him.

GATHA 3630 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, nothing left to ask

मराठी मूळ

विनवीजे ऐसें कांहीं । उरलें नाहीं यावरि ॥1॥
आतां असो पंढरीनाथा । पायीं माथा तुमचिये ॥ध्रु.॥
मागें सारियेली युक्ती । कांहीं होती जवळी ते ॥2॥
निराशेची न करी आस । तुका दास माघारी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is nothing more left to say in supplication. Now, O Lord of Pandhari, my head rests at Your feet.

Whatever resources I had, I have already spent. Says Tuka, even in despair, this servant does not nurture false hope and will not turn back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is nothing left to put into a prayer; I have nothing more. Now, O Lord of Pandhari, my head rests at your feet. Whatever schemes I had, I have already used them up. Tuka says: even in hopelessness this servant will not nurse a false hope, and he will not turn back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has emptied his bag of requests and admits there is nothing more to petition for. With that, he simply lays his head at the feet of the Lord of Pandhari. He confesses that every plan and resource he once had is spent. The final stance is firm rather than despairing: he will not feed himself false hope to soften the emptiness, and he will not retreat from the feet he has chosen. Surrender here is staying put with nothing in hand, refusing both illusion and escape.

GATHA 3631 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the birth fulfilled

मराठी मूळ

आतां येथें जाली जीवासवेंसाटी । होतें तैसें पोटीं फळ आलें ॥1॥
आतां धरिले ते नो सोडीं चरण । सांपडलें धन निजठेवा ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां हा अळस असो परता दुरी । नेदावी तें उरी उरों कांहीं ॥2॥
आतां याचा मज न व्हावा विसर । भरोनि अंतर राहों रूप ॥3॥
आतां लोकलाज नयो येथें आड । बहु जालें गोड ब्रह्मरस ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां जन्म हा सफळ । अंतरीं गोपाळ िस्थरावला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now the bond with the jiva has been forged, and what was within has borne its fruit. I shall not release these feet that I have seized; the treasure of the true Self has been found.

Now let all laziness stay far away; let nothing remain held back. Now let me never forget Him; let His form fill every corner of my being.

Now let social shame not come in the way, for the nectar of Brahman has become exceedingly sweet. Says Tuka, this birth is now fulfilled, for Gopala has settled firmly within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now a bond has been forged with my whole life, and what was within me has borne its fruit. Now I will not let go of these feet I have seized; the treasure of my own true Self is found. Now let all laziness stay far off; let nothing be held back. Now let me never forget him; let his form fill every corner of me. Now let the shame of what people say not get in the way, for the nectar of Brahman has grown so sweet. Tuka says: now this birth is fulfilled, for Gopala has settled firm within.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from arrival, not from longing: the bond is made and the inner work has borne fruit. He grips God's feet and will not release them, naming what he has found the treasure of his own true Self. Then he sets the terms of how he will live it out: no laziness, nothing held back, never a moment of forgetting, and his whole being filled with God's form. He brushes aside the fear of public shame, because the taste of Brahman has become too sweet to trade for respectability. The verse ends in completion: with Gopala settled firmly inside, this human birth has reached its whole purpose.

GATHA 3632 Prayers

Prayer, peace that cannot be undone

मराठी मूळ

अनंतां जीवांचीं तोडिलीं बंधनें । मज हि येणें काळें कृपा कीजे ॥1॥
अनंत पवाडे तुझे विश्वंभरा । भक्तकरुणाकरा नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतरींचें कळों देई गुहए गुज । अंतरीं तें बीज राखईन ॥2॥
समदृष्टी तुझे पाहेन पाउलें । धरीन संचले हृदयांत॥3॥
तेणें या चित्ताची राहेल तळमळ । होतील शीतळ सकळ गात्रें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे शांति करील प्रवेश । मग नव्हे नाश अखंड तो ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have broken the bonds of countless jivas; in this same age, show mercy to me as well. Endless are Your glorious deeds, O Sustainer of the world, O compassionate Narayana.

Reveal the secret that lies within; I will guard that seed in my chitta. With equal vision I shall behold Your footprints and hold them firmly in my breast.

Then this restless chitta shall grow calm, and every limb shall be cooled. Says Tuka, peace shall enter in, and that peace, once come, shall never be destroyed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have cut the bonds of countless living souls. In this same age, show your mercy to me too. Your glorious deeds are endless, Vishvambhara, holder of the world. Compassionate one, Narayana. Reveal to me the secret hidden within; I will guard that seed in my heart. With equal vision I will gaze at your footprints, and hold them, gathered, in my breast. Then this mind will stop its trembling, and every limb will grow cool. Tuka says: peace will enter in. And once it comes, it will never be destroyed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks Narayana to do for him what he has already done for endless others: break the bonds. He is not asking for a private favor but for a turn at the same mercy that has freed countless souls. The middle of the poem names what he wants kept inside him, a hidden seed of the secret, and what he will keep his gaze fixed on, the footprints held in the breast. The promised result is bodily as well as inward: the trembling mind quiets and every limb cools. The last line raises the stake to permanence; this is not a passing calm but a peace that, once it arrives, cannot be lost.

GATHA 3633 Longing and Separation

Complaint, the generous one withholds

मराठी मूळ

पराधीन माझें करूनियां जीणें । सांडीं काय गुणें केली देवा ॥1॥
उदार हे कीतिन असे जगामाजी । कां तें ऐसें आजि पालटिलें ॥ध्रु.॥
आळवितों परी न पुरे चि रीग । उचित तो त्याग नाहीं तुह्मां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कां बा मुळीं च व्यालासी । ऐसें कां नेणसी पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have made my life dependent on others, O Lord; why have You cast me aside? Your fame as the generous one resounds throughout the world; why has it changed today? Though I plead, the door does not open; the fitting generosity is not found in You. Says Tuka, why did You bring me into being at all, O Panduranga, if this is what You intended?

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have made my life depend on others, Lord. What good did casting me aside do you? The world rings with your fame as the generous one. Why has that changed today? I keep calling, but I cannot get in; the door does not open. Giving what is fitting is not in you. Tuka says: why did you give birth to me at all, Panduranga, if you would not know me like this?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a lover's accusation flung straight at God. Tukaram says his life has been made dependent on other people, and asks what Vitthal gained by abandoning him. He turns God's own reputation against him: the whole world calls Panduranga generous, so why is that generosity not reaching the one man crying at his door. The sharpest line is the last, where he asks why God bothered to bring him into being at all if this neglect was the plan. The harshness is the harshness of intimacy, not contempt: only someone who fully expects God's care complains this bitterly when it seems withheld.

GATHA 3634 Longing and Separation

Longing, watching the road for Hari

मराठी मूळ

नेणपणें नाहीं केला हा बोभाट । आतां आली वाट कळों खरी ॥1॥
आतां बहुं शीघ्र यावें लवकरी । वाट पाहें हरी भेटी देई ॥ध्रु.॥
समर्थाच्या बाळा करुणेचें भाषण । तरी त्याची कोण नांदणूक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु बोलिले बडिवार । पडिलें अंतर लौकिकीं तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It was not out of ignorance that I raised this outcry; now the true path has become visible. Come swiftly now, come without delay; I am watching for You, O Hari, grant me Your meeting.

When a mighty lord's child must speak in piteous tones, what kind of household is that? Says Tuka, many grand claims were made, but worldly propriety created the distance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I did not raise this outcry out of ignorance. Now the true road has become clear to me. Now come, very quickly, come without delay. I am watching the road, Hari; give me your meeting. When a mighty lord's child has to speak in pitiful tones, what kind of house is that? Tuka says: many grand boasts were made, but in plain sight a gap was left.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defends his crying out: it was not the noise of a confused man, but the call of someone who now sees the path plainly. He begs Hari to come fast, and pictures himself standing at the road, waiting for the meeting. Then he shames God with a household image: if a powerful lord's own child is reduced to begging in a pitiful voice, that reflects badly on the lord's house, not the child. The closing line points at the gap between God's great reputation and the visible fact of a devotee left wanting. The poem leans on God's honor to move God to act.

GATHA 3635 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the body cast as offering

मराठी मूळ

जें जें केलें तें तें साहे । कैसें पाहें भाविक ॥1॥
ओंवाळूनि माझी काया । सांडिली यावरूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
काय होय नव्हें करूं । नेणें धरूं सत्ता ते ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कटीं कर । उभें धीर धरूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever has been done, He endures it all. How wonderfully faithful He is.

Having waved my body as an offering over His feet, I have cast it aside. Whether something can or cannot be done, I do not know how to hold that authority.

Says Tuka, with hands upon His hips, He stands there, having taken up His patient resolve.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever has been done, he bears it all. See how full of faith he is. I waved my body over him like a lamp in offering, and then I threw it away. Whether a thing can be done or cannot, I do not know how to hold that power. Tuka says: with his hands on his hips, he stands there, holding firm.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a complete handing over. He has performed the gesture of waving his own body over the Lord, the way a lamp is waved in arati, and then discarded it; the self is no longer his to manage. He confesses he no longer holds any authority to decide what can or cannot happen, having given that up. The faith he praises is God's own steadiness: God bears whatever is done. The final image is striking and tender, of Vitthal standing on the brick with hands on hips, patient and unmoving, while the devotee surrenders everything into that stillness.

GATHA 3636 Autobiography

Self-examination, the poor servant of Vishnu

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं मज कृपा केली पांडुरंगें । संताचिया संगें पोट भरीं ॥1॥
चतुराचे सभे पंडित कुशळ । मी काय दुर्बळ विष्णुदास॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नेणें करूं समाधान । धरिले चरण विठोबाचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Panduranga has not shown me His grace; I fill my belly in the company of saints. In the assembly of the clever, among scholars and learned ones, am I not also a servant of Vishnu, however poor? Says Tuka, I do not know how to find contentment; I have simply held fast to the feet of Vithoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga has not shown me his grace. I fill my belly in the company of the saints. In the assembly of the clever, among skilled scholars, what am I but a poor servant of Vishnu? Tuka says: I do not know how to make myself content. I have only held the feet of Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures himself honestly and finds himself small. He admits he has not received the grace he longs for, and that he lives on the company of the saints, fed in their fellowship. Set beside clever scholars in their learned assemblies, he claims no learning, only the plain title of a poor servant of Vishnu. The poem refuses to dress up his condition. The single thing he has done, and the thing the whole poem rests on, is to take hold of Vithoba's feet and not let go, even while contentment stays out of reach.

GATHA 3637 Longing and Separation

Self-examination, faults given a home

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी माझा देवा करिजे अंगीकार । हा नाहीं विचार मजपाशीं ॥1॥
आतां दोहीं पक्षीं लागलें लक्षणें । देवभक्तपण लाजविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
एकांतीं एकलें न राहे निश्चळ । न राहे च पळ मन ठायीं ॥2॥
पायीं महत्वाची पडिली शंकळा । बांधविला गळा स्नेहा हातीं ॥3॥
शरीर सोकलें देखिलिया सुखा । कदान्न हें मुखा मान्य नाहीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला अवगुणांचा थारा । वाढली हे निद्रा अळस बहु ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That You should accept me, O Lord, is not something I can reason out. Now both sides stand embarrassed; the honor of both God and devotee is at stake.

Alone in solitude, the mind will not stay still; it does not rest even for a moment. A chain of attachment binds my feet, and affection has tied a noose around my neck.

The body has withered from the sight of joy, and coarse food no longer satisfies the mouth. Says Tuka, a haven of faults has been established; sloth and drowsiness have grown beyond measure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That you should take me up, my Lord, is not something I can work out by reasoning. Now signs have appeared on both sides; the honor of both God and devotee has been shamed. Alone in solitude my mind will not stay still; it does not rest in one place even for a moment. A chain of importance has fallen onto my feet, and affection has tied a noose around my neck. The body has grown soft, used to comfort; coarse food no longer pleases the mouth. Tuka says: my faults have been given a home; sleep and laziness have grown beyond measure.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a frank inventory of the devotee's own failings, offered as confession. Tukaram says he cannot reason his way to deserving God's acceptance, and that the present state shames both of them, since a failed devotee reflects on God too. He then lists the patterns he is caught in: a restless mind that will not sit still, the craving for importance and the bonds of attachment, a body grown used to comfort that now rejects plain food, and sloth that keeps growing. The poem turns the gaze inward, naming the very ruts a seeker falls into, so that the failings can be seen plainly rather than excused.

GATHA 3638 Prayers

Prayer, devotion laid at the feet

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलिया गुणीं नाहीं पाविजेत । देवा नाहीं होत हित तेथें ॥1॥
कवतुक तुझें नवल यावरि । घेसील तें शिरीं काय नव्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं मिळों येत संचिताच्या मता । पुराणीं पाहतां अघटित ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पायीं निरोपिला भाव । न्याल तैसा जाव सिद्धी देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the virtues spoken of, nothing is truly attained; mere words do not bring welfare, O Lord. Yet what a marvel it is: will You not take upon Your head whatever is offered? Destiny's ways do not conform to any plan; the scriptures describe events that defy all expectation.

Says Tuka, I have placed my devotion at Your feet; carry it to fruition as You see fit, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the merits people speak of, nothing is truly reached; mere talk brings no good there, Lord. Here is the wonder of your play: whatever is offered, will you not take it onto your head? It does not fit the reckoning of past deeds; in the old books too, such things are unheard of. Tuka says: I have laid my devotion at your feet. Carry it through to its fulfillment however you will, Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two ways of approaching God. The first, talked-up virtues and reckonings of merit, reaches nothing. The second is God's own surprising habit of accepting whatever a devotee simply offers, taking it onto his head as a gift to be honored. He marvels that this does not follow the logic of past karma and is not even found described in the scriptures; it is sheer grace. So Tukaram lets go of bargaining. He places his devotion at the feet and asks God himself to bring it to fruition, in whatever way God chooses.

GATHA 3639 Longing and Separation

Longing, the hunger that is never filled

मराठी मूळ

हा तों नव्हता दीन । टाळायाच्या ऐसा क्षण ॥1॥
कां जी नेणों राखा हात । कैसें देखावें रडत ॥ध्रु.॥
दावूनियां आस । दूर पळविता कास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धांव । घेतां न पुरे चि हांव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This was no insignificant moment to be brushed aside. Why, O Lord, do You not stretch out Your hand? How can You bear to watch me weep? You showed me hope and then fled far away.

Says Tuka, no matter how far I run, the hunger is never satisfied.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This was no small moment, the kind you brush aside. Why, Lord, do you not hold out your hand? How can you stand to watch me weeping? You showed me hope, then ran far away and slipped from my grasp. Tuka says: however hard I run after you, the longing is never satisfied.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram protests against a God who shows himself and then withdraws. He insists this hour of need was not trivial, not something to wave away, and asks why God will not simply reach out a hand. The wounding image is of being shown hope and then watching God flee beyond reach, leaving the devotee weeping. The closing line names the heart of the ache: no matter how fast he chases, the hunger for God is never filled. The complaint is itself a form of pursuit, the longing refusing to give up even as it goes unmet.

GATHA 3640 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, true giving and a pure heart

मराठी मूळ

आर्तभूतां द्यावें दान । खरें पुण्य त्या नांवें ॥1॥
होणार तें सुखें घडो । लाभ जोडो महाबुद्धि ॥ध्रु.॥
सत्य संकल्प च साटीं । उजळा पोटीं रविबिंब ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मनीं वाव । शुद्ध भाव राखावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Give to those who are in distress; that alone is true merit. Let whatever is destined come to pass gladly; may the gain of great wisdom be won.

A true resolve shines within like the orb of the sun. Says Tuka, keep the mind free of emptiness, and guard pure devotion within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give to those in distress; that, by its right name, is true merit. Let whatever is to come happen gladly; may great wisdom be the gain. A true resolve shines within like the disc of the sun. Tuka says: keep emptiness out of the mind, and guard a pure heart inside.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states plainly what real merit is: giving to people who are suffering, not piling up showy acts of piety. He counsels acceptance of whatever fate brings, treating the true profit as wisdom rather than gain. The center of the poem is the inner condition: a sincere resolve that glows in the heart like the sun's bright disc. The instruction at the end is to keep the mind free of hollowness and to guard purity of intention within. The whole piece points the listener toward the heart behind the deed, not the deed's appearance.

GATHA 3641 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the child at the mother's side

मराठी मूळ

कवतुकवाणी बोलतसें लाडें । आरुष वांकडें करुनि मुख ॥1॥
दुजेपणीं भाव नाहीं हे आशंका । जननीबाळकामध्यें भेद ॥ध्रु.॥
सलगी दुरूनि जवळी पाचारुं । धांवोनियां करुं अंगसंग॥2॥
धरूनि पालव मागतों भातुकें । आवडीचें निकें प्रेमसुख ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज आमची च गोडी । ऐसी हे आवडी कळों आली ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I speak lovingly in playful tones, twisting my face into a pout. In this game there is no real duality, no separation between mother and child.

From a distance I call out with familiar ease; running close, I press against Your body. Tugging at Your garment, I beg for a trinket, for the sweetness of loving delight.

Says Tuka, it is our love that You find sweet; this I have come to know.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I speak in coaxing, playful words, twisting my face into a little pout. In this game there is no real two-ness, no division between mother and child. From far off I call you with easy familiarity; then I run close and press my body against yours. Holding your hem, I beg for a treat, for the good sweetness of loving delight. Tuka says: it is our love that you find sweet. This is the liking I have come to understand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the bond with God as that of a small child with its mother, all play and no distance. He acts out the child's tricks: a coaxing voice, a pretend pout, calling from across the room and then running to cling. There is no real separation here, no two-ness; the playfulness is possible only because the love is sure. He tugs at the hem and begs, not for an object, but for the sweetness of loving closeness itself. The last line turns it around: what God delights in is the devotee's love, and recognizing that mutual sweetness is the whole discovery of the poem.

GATHA 3642 Prayers

Prayer, guard me from pride

मराठी मूळ

ऐकें पांडुरंगा वचन माझें एक । जालों मी सेवक दास तुझा ॥1॥
कळे तैसा आतां करावा उद्धार । खुंटला विचार माझा पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
दंभ मान माझा करूं पाहे घात । जालिया ही थीत कारणाचा ॥2॥
हीन बुद्धि माझी अधम हे याती । अहंकार चित्तीं वसों पाहे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज विघडतां क्षण । न लगे जतन करीं देवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear me, O Panduranga, hear this one word of mine: I have become Your servant and slave. Deliver me now in whatever way You see fit, for my own thinking has come to its end.

Pride and vanity seek to ruin me, even though the ground has been won. My intellect is low and my lineage is humble, yet ego strives to take root in my chitta.

Says Tuka, I can be undone in an instant; therefore guard me, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hear, Panduranga, this one word of mine: I have become your servant, your slave. Now lift me up however you see fit, for my own thinking has come to its end. Pride and the wish for honor are trying to destroy me, even after the ground was won. My understanding is low, my birth is humble, yet ego keeps trying to take root in my heart. Tuka says: I can be undone in a single moment; so keep watch over me, Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares his surrender and then names the danger that survives it. He has become God's servant and has run out of his own resources, so he asks God to do the lifting. The threat he points to is inward: pride and the appetite for honor that try to wreck him even after he thought the battle was won. He calls his own intellect poor and his lineage humble, and admits that ego still keeps trying to plant itself in his heart. The plea is for vigilance: knowing he can fall in an instant, he asks God to stand guard. The poem turns the examination on the self, watching for pride rather than blaming anyone else.

GATHA 3643 Prayers

Prayer, love that asks for nothing else

मराठी मूळ

जेणें माझें चित्त राहे तुझ्या पायीं । अखंड तें देई प्रेमसुख ॥1॥
देहभाव राख दीन करूनियां । जनाचारी वायां जाय तैसा ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रव्य दारा नको मानाची आवडी । कवणेविशीं गोडी प्रपंचाची ॥2॥
तुझें नाम माझें धरूनियां चित्त । एकांत लोकांत सदा राहो ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे जडोनियां पायीं । जालों उतराई पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Grant me that love which keeps my mind anchored at Your feet, an unbroken stream of devotion. Keep this body humble and lowly, so that worldly convention passes over me without effect.

Let me have no desire for wealth, for women, or for honor; let no aspect of worldly life taste sweet. Let my chitta, grasping Your name, remain absorbed whether in solitude or in the crowd.

Says Tuka, rooted at Your feet, I am freed of all debt, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Grant me that by which my mind stays at your feet, and give me that loving joy unbroken. Keep this body humble and lowly, so that the ways of the world pass me by in vain. I want no wealth, no wife, no taste for honor; let nothing in worldly life taste sweet to me. Let my mind hold your name and stay always absorbed, alone or in the crowd. Tuka says: fixed at your feet, I have paid off my debt, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer that asks only for the means to keep loving God. Tukaram wants his mind anchored at Vitthal's feet and an unbroken stream of loving joy. He asks to be kept humble so that worldly custom slides past him without taking hold. Then he renounces the usual cravings by name: wealth, wife, honor, any sweetness in worldly life. What he wants instead is to carry God's name in his mind whether he is alone or in a crowd. The final line settles the account: rooted at the feet, he counts himself free of all debt, owing nothing more.

GATHA 3644 The Saints

Gratitude to the saints, the watching cow

मराठी मूळ

काय सांगों या संतांचे उपकार । मज निरंतर जागविती॥1॥
काय द्यावें त्यांचें व्हावें उतराई । ठेवितां हा पायीं जीव थोडा ॥ध्रु.॥
सहज बोलणें हितउपदेश । करूनि सायास शिकविती॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वत्स धेनुवेचा चित्तीं । तैसे मज येती सांभाळीत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can I describe the grace of these saints? They keep me awake without ceasing. What can I give to repay them? Even if I lay down my life at their feet, it would be too little.

Their ordinary conversation is itself the highest teaching; through patient effort they instruct me. Says Tuka, as a cow's chitta is ever with her calf, so do they come watching over me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can I tell the grace of these saints? They keep me awake without ceasing. What can I give to repay them? Even if I lay my life at their feet, it is too little. Their plain talk is itself the highest teaching; with patient effort they instruct me. Tuka says: as a cow keeps her calf in mind, so they come watching over me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tries to weigh a debt he cannot pay. The saints keep him awake, never letting him slip back into forgetfulness, and even his own life laid at their feet would not square the account. The point is that their gift is not grand gestures but ordinary speech: their casual words carry the whole teaching, and they take pains to drill it into him. He ends with the cow and her calf, naming the kind of love at work: not a teacher correcting a student, but a mother who never takes her attention off her young.

GATHA 3645 The Nature of God

Nature of God, knower set apart

मराठी मूळ

देव जाणता देव जाणता । आपली च सत्ता एकाएकीं॥1॥
देव चतुर देव चतुर । जाणोनि अंतर वर्ततसे॥2॥
देव निराळा देव निराळा । अलिप्त विटाळा तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God is the knower, God is the knower; His authority operates all by itself, alone. God is the clever one, God is the clever one; knowing the inner truth, He acts accordingly.

God stands apart, God stands apart; Says Tuka, He remains untouched by all impurity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God knows, God knows; his power works all by itself, alone. God is clever, God is clever; he knows the inner heart and acts by it. God stands apart, God stands apart; Tuka says: he is untouched by any defilement.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga names God by three things, each repeated so the claim lands. First, he is the knower whose authority needs nothing outside itself to act. Second, his cleverness is that he reads the inner truth of a person and responds to that, not to the surface. Third, he stands wholly apart, untouched by any impurity. Tukaram is saying you cannot fool such a God or stain him; he sees the heart and remains clean of everything he watches.

GATHA 3646 The Nature of God

Argument with God, who carries the burden

मराठी मूळ

आपण चाळक बुद्धीच्या संचारा । आह्मांसी वेव्हारा पात्र केलें ॥1॥
काय जालें तरी नेघा तुह्मीं भार । आणीक कोणां थोर ह्मणों सांगा ॥ध्रु.॥
पंच भूतें तंव कर्माच्या या मोटा । येथें खरा खोटा कोण भाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं बोलावया जागा । कां देवा वाउगा श्रम करूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are the one who directs the movements of the mind; You have made us instruments for worldly dealings. Yet whatever happens, You refuse to bear the burden.

Tell me, whom else should I call great? The five elements are but bundles of karma; who here is genuine and who is false? Says Tuka, there is no ground left for speaking; why, O Lord, should I labor in vain?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are the one who moves the mind from inside; you have made us instruments for worldly dealings. Yet whatever happens, you will not bear the load. Then tell me, whom else should I call great? The five elements are only bundles of karma; here who is true and who is false? Tuka says: there is no ground left to speak from; why, Lord, should I labor in vain?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a complaint that doubles as surrender. If God himself directs the mind and makes us his instruments for living in the world, then God cannot also refuse responsibility for what follows. He grants there is no one else worth calling great, so the buck stops nowhere but with God. The body is only the five elements, bundles of past karma, and at that level the labels true and false dissolve. So he lays down the argument: there is no firm place left to stand and protest from, and striving against this on his own is wasted effort.

GATHA 3647 Prayers

Prayer for nearness, the honest reckoning

मराठी मूळ

एका एक वर्मे लावूनियां अंगीं । ठेवितों प्रसंगीं सांभाळीन ॥1॥
नेघावा जीं तुह्मी वाव बहु फार । धरुनि अंतर ठायाठाव ॥ध्रु.॥
वेव्हारें आलें तें समानें चि होतें । बळ नाहीं येथें चालों येत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां निवाडा च साटीं । संवसारें तुटी करुनि ठेलों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having applied one truth closely to my being, I hold it ready for the right occasion. Do not take too much distance, O Lord; maintain the proper measure of closeness.

What comes through honest dealing is met in equal measure; brute force has no place here. Says Tuka, it is for the sake of this final reckoning that I have cut all ties with worldly life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have fixed one truth firmly on my being; I hold it ready for the right moment. Do not keep too great a distance, Lord; keep the proper measure of closeness. What comes by honest dealing is met in equal measure; force has no place here. Tuka says: now, for the sake of this final reckoning, I have cut my ties with worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has settled on one truth and pressed it into himself, keeping it ready for when it is needed. His prayer is for the right distance: not abandonment, but God staying near in proper measure. He insists the relationship runs on honest exchange, repaid in kind, never on coercion; you cannot strong-arm God. And he reports the stake he has put down: he has broken with ordinary worldly life precisely so that this final accounting between him and God can be settled cleanly.

GATHA 3648 Faith and Trust

Faith, no turning back

मराठी मूळ

आतां येथें खरें । नये फिरतां माघारें ॥1॥
होइल हो तैसी आबाळी । देहनिमित्य या बळी ॥ध्रु.॥
तुह्मांसवें गांठी । देवा जीवाचिये साटीं ॥2॥
तुका नव्हे लंड । करूं चौघांमध्यें खंड॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now there is no turning back from this truth. Whatever hardship comes, let it come; it is the body's lot to endure.

My bond with You, O Lord, is for the sake of my very jiva. Says Tuka, I am no coward; I will make the break from the crowd.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now there is no turning back from this truth. Whatever hardship comes, let it come; it is the body's lot to bear. My bond is with you, Lord, for the sake of my very life. Tuka says: I am no coward; I will make the break from the crowd.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a vow with the exit sealed off. Tukaram has reached a truth he will not retreat from, and he accepts that suffering may follow; pain is simply what a body endures, so it cannot be a reason to quit. The tie that matters is the one with God, and he stakes his very soul on it. He ends by refusing the charge of cowardice: he is willing to break away from the crowd, the safe company of ordinary people, rather than soften his stand.

GATHA 3649 Prayers

Argument with God, the settlement at hand

मराठी मूळ

कां हो वाडवितां देवा । मज घरी समजावा । केवडा हो गोवा । फार केलें थोडएाचें ॥1॥
ठेविन पायांवरी डोई । यासी तुमचें वेचे काई । जालों उतराई । जाणा एकएकांचे ॥ध्रु.॥
निवाड आपणियांपाशीं । असोन कां व्हावें अपेसी । होती गांठी तैसी । सोडूनियां ठेविली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गोड । होतें जालिया निवाड । दर्शनें ही चाड । आवडी च वाढेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do You exaggerate things, O Lord? Come home and settle the matter. How big a fuss You have made out of something small! Let me place my head upon Your feet; what does it cost You? We shall be quits, each paying the other's due.

The settlement lay in our own hands all along, yet we chose to suffer needlessly. The knot was there, and I have simply untied it.

Says Tuka, how sweet everything becomes once the verdict is clear. Even the longing for a glimpse will only deepen into love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you blow it up so, Lord? Come home and settle it. What a fuss you have made of something small. Let me lay my head on your feet; what does it cost you? We are quits, each paying the other's due. The settlement was in our own hands all along, yet we chose needless suffering. The knot was there, and I have simply untied it. Tuka says: how sweet it is once the verdict is clear; even the longing for a glimpse will only deepen into love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram scolds God gently for making a great affair out of a small matter and asks him to come and close the account. The whole transaction costs nothing: he lays his head on God's feet, and the debt is squared on both sides. The sharp turn is that the power to settle was always in their own hands, and the suffering came only from leaving the knot tied; he has now untied it himself. He closes on the sweetness of a cleared verdict, where even the ache for a single glimpse of God no longer torments but ripens into deeper love.

GATHA 3650 Longing and Separation

Longing, the surrendered last word

मराठी मूळ

नव्हों सभाधीट । समोर बोलाया नीट । एकलीं एकट । दुजें नाहीं देखिलें ॥1॥
आतां अवघें तुम्हीं जाणां । तुमचें माझें नारायणा । येईल करुणा । ते चि पहा तुह्मांसी ॥ध्रु.॥
ताळ नाहीं माझे बुद्धी । धरली न धरवे शुद्धी । आतां बळें कधीं । कोण्या जन्में निवाड ॥2॥
आतां शेवटीचें । उत्तर तें हें चि साचें । शरण आलें त्याचें । तुका ह्मणे सांभाळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am not bold enough to speak properly in the assembly. Alone and solitary, I have seen no companion.

Now You know everything, O Narayana; whatever passes between You and me, let that compassion come as it may. My mind has no steadiness; I try to hold onto clarity, but I cannot.

When, in what lifetime, will the final reckoning come by force of will? Now this is my last and truest word. Says Tuka, protect the one who has come in surrender.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am not bold enough to speak well in the assembly. Alone and by myself, I have seen no other. Now you know everything, Narayana; whatever passes between you and me, let that compassion come as it will. My mind has no steadiness; I try to hold onto clarity and cannot. When, in which birth, will the reckoning come by force of will? Now this is my last and truest word. Tuka says: protect the one who has come to you in surrender.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he is no skilled speaker in a public gathering; he stands alone, with no one but God in view. So he hands the whole matter over to Narayana, who already knows it, and waits on whatever compassion comes. He confesses his own mind is unsteady, unable to keep hold of clarity, so he cannot earn the final reckoning by effort or willpower across lifetimes. Stripped of that hope, he speaks his last and truest word, the only ground left: he has surrendered, and asks God to protect the one who has come.

GATHA 3651 Faith and Trust

Faith, God does not put off the beggar

मराठी मूळ

ऐसा तंव मोळा । तुमचा नसेल गोपाळा ॥1॥
मागत्याची टाळाटाळी । झिंज्या ओढोनि कपाळीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नसेल ना नवें । ऐसें धरियेलें देवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला । उशीर नाहीं तो विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Surely, O Gopala, You do not have such a temperament as to keep putting off the petitioner, scratching his forehead in frustration. If this is nothing new, then it is God's way that has been established.

Says Tuka, there has been no delay, O Vitthal; it is just that the time was not yet ripe.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Surely, Gopala, you do not have such a nature as to keep putting off the one who asks, scratching his forehead in frustration. If this is nothing new, then it is God's settled way. Tuka says: there has been no delay, Vitthal; only the time was not yet ripe.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram talks himself out of resentment. He refuses to believe Gopala has the kind of character that fobs off a petitioner and leaves him scratching his head; that would make stinginess God's standing habit, which he will not accept. So when the answer seems slow, he reinterprets the silence: with Vitthal there is no real delay. What looks like being made to wait is only the matter not yet being ripe, and the fault is never in God's willingness to give.

GATHA 3652 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting at the door

मराठी मूळ

माझ्या कपाळाच्या गुणें । किंवा सरलेंसे नेणें ॥1॥
नये वचन बाहेरी । उभें तिष्ठतसें दारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काय सांगायास वेचे। रींद आरंभीं ठायींचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती । भीड धरावी पुढती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whether it is the fault of my own fate, or whether the reserves have simply run dry, I cannot tell. The answer does not come forth, and I stand waiting at the door.

What is there to say? The reluctance seems to have been there from the very start. Says Tuka, how long must I keep pressing with this entreaty?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whether it is the fault of my own fate, or whether the store has simply run dry, I cannot tell. No word comes out to me, and I stand waiting at the door. What is there to say? The reluctance seems to have been there from the very start. Tuka says: how long must I keep pressing my plea?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the ache of a prayer that gets no answer. Tukaram cannot tell whether the silence is the working of his own bad fortune or whether God's store of grace has run out for him. No reply comes, so he simply stands and waits at the door, with nothing left to say. The hardest thought is that the reluctance may have been there from the very beginning, not something he caused. Yet even saying this, he keeps asking, naming the strain of having to press a petition that has gone on so long.

GATHA 3653 Longing and Separation

Longing, the servant and the absent Master

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं एक तरी असावा आधार । कासयानें धीर उपजावा ॥1॥
ह्मणविल्यासाटीं कैसें पडे रुजु । धणी नाहीं उजू सन्मुख तो ॥ध्रु.॥
वेचल्या दिसांचा कोणावरी लेखा । घालावा हा सुखासुखा आह्मीं ॥2॥
नाहीं मनोगत तोंवरि हे देवा । तुका ह्मणे सेवा नेघीजे तों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There should be at least some support to hold onto, some means by which courage may arise. When one calls oneself a servant, how can things proceed when the Master does not come forward and face him? Upon whom should I account for the days that have been spent? We bear this cheerfully upon ourselves.

Says Tuka, O Lord, until You accept the offering of service and grant Your chitta's consent, there is no fulfillment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There should be at least some support to hold, some means by which courage can rise. When I call myself your servant, how can it hold true if the Master will not come and face me? On whom shall I charge the days that have been spent? We bear this cheerfully on ourselves. Tuka says: Lord, until you accept the service and give your heart's consent, there is no fulfillment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points out that a servant needs something to lean on for his courage to hold. The relationship of servant and Master only stands if the Master shows his face; a one-sided bond cannot be made good. He raises the question of the wasted days and then waves it off, saying he carries that cost gladly rather than blame anyone. But the real condition is plain in the close: service offered is not enough by itself. Nothing is fulfilled until God actually accepts the service and gives his inner consent.

GATHA 3654 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, stripped bare before the world

मराठी मूळ

मनाचिये साक्षी जाली सांगों मात । सकळ वृत्तांत आपला तो ॥1॥
तुह्मां परामृश घेणें सत्ताबळें । धरितां निराळें कैसीं वांचों ॥ध्रु.॥
मी माझें सांडून यावया पसारा । आणीक दाताराकाय काज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी तुजविण एका । निढळें लौकिका माजी असों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With the mind as my witness, let me tell the whole story, the complete account of my condition. You have the authority to examine it all; if You hold Yourself apart, how shall I survive? Having abandoned 'I' and 'mine' and all this expanse of illusion, what else remains, O generous Lord? Says Tuka, without You alone, I stand exposed and bare before the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With my mind as witness, let me tell the whole story, the full account of my state. You have the power to examine it all; if you hold yourself apart, how shall I survive? Having dropped I and mine and all this spread of illusion, what else is there to do, generous Lord? Tuka says: without you alone, I stand exposed and bare before the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a full confession with his own mind as the only witness, holding nothing back. He acknowledges God has every right to scrutinize him, and warns that if God stays aloof he cannot survive the examination. He has already let go of I and mine and the whole expanse of illusion, so there is nothing further he can renounce on his own. That is exactly why he is helpless: with everything dropped, he stands naked before the world, and only God's presence can clothe and shelter him now.

GATHA 3655 Longing and Separation

Longing, fallen in the courtyard

मराठी मूळ

घालूनि लोळणी पडिलों अंगणीं । सिंचा सिंचवणी तीर्थ वरि ॥1॥
वोल्हावेल तनु होईल शीतळ । जाली हळहळ बहुतापें ॥ध्रु.॥
पावेन या ठाया कई जालें होतें । आलों अवचितें उष्टएावरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोणी जाणवा राउळी । येइल जवळी पांडुरंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have rolled upon the ground and fallen in Your courtyard. Sprinkle the holy water upon me.

Let this body cool and become soothed, for it has been scalded by great heat. How long have I waited to reach this place? I have arrived unexpectedly upon Your sacred leavings.

Says Tuka, let someone inform the Lord in the temple; may Panduranga come near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have rolled on the ground and fallen in your courtyard. Sprinkle the holy water over me. Let this body cool and grow calm, for it has been scalded by great heat. How long have I waited to reach this place? I have come unexpectedly upon your sacred leavings. Tuka says: let someone tell the Lord in the temple; may Panduranga come near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws himself down in God's courtyard and begs for the sprinkled holy water, the prasad, to be poured over him. His body is scalded by a great heat, the burning of separation and worldly torment, and he asks for it to be cooled and soothed. He marks how long he has waited to reach this threshold, and how he has stumbled onto God's sacred leavings almost by accident. Lying there, he calls out for someone to carry word into the temple, hoping that Panduranga himself will come near to the one fallen at his door.

GATHA 3656 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the burden is Yours

मराठी मूळ

तरीं भलें वांयां गेलों । जन्मा आलों मागुता । ह्मणऊनि ठेलों दास । सावकास निर्भयें ॥1॥
उणें पुरें काय माझें। त्याचें ओझें तुह्मांसी ॥ध्रु.॥
सांभाळावें तें म्या काई । अवो आई विठ्ठले । मागें जया जाई नें स्थळा । तुज गोपाळा विसरेंना ॥2॥
आपलें म्यां एकसरें । करुनि बरें घेतलें । तुका ह्मणे नारायणा । आतां जाणां आपुलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if my life had gone to waste, I was born again, and so I have settled as a servant, at ease and without fear. What is my lack or excess? That burden rests upon You.

What is there for me to guard, O Mother Vitthala? Wherever I may go, O Gopala, I will never forget You. I have settled my own affairs once and for all.

Says Tuka, O Narayana, now attend to what is Yours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even if my life had gone to waste, I was born again. So I have settled down as a servant, at ease and unafraid. What is my lack, what is my excess? That weight rests on You. What is there for me to guard, O Mother Vitthal? Wherever I go, O Gopala, I will not forget You. I have settled my own affairs once and for all. Tuka says: O Narayana, now look after what is Yours.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands over the whole account of himself. He treats a wasted past as already cancelled by a fresh birth, and from that footing he simply becomes a servant who can rest without fear. The pivot is the refrain: my shortfalls and surpluses are no longer my problem to balance, because the burden has passed to God. He keeps only one thing for himself, not forgetting the Lord wherever he goes; everything else he declares closed. The closing line is almost cheeky in its trust: I am now Yours, so the keeping of me is Your job, not mine.

GATHA 3657 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child's loving claim

मराठी मूळ

उरलें तें भक्तिसुख । डोळां मुख पाहावें । अंतरींचें कां हों नेणां । नारायणा माझिये ॥1॥
पुरवां तैसी केली आळी । बळी जगदानियां ॥ध्रु.॥
हातीं घेउनि चोरां भातें । दावां रितें बाळका। साजतें हें थोरपण । नाहीं विण वत्सळा ॥2॥
शाहणें तरीं लाड दावी । बाळ जेवीं मातेसी । तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । ऐसें पैं गा आहे हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What remains is the joy of devotion: to behold Your face with these eyes. Do You not know what lies within my chitta, O Narayana? Fulfill the plea that has been made, O mighty benefactor of the world.

You take the food from the hands of thieves and show the child an empty dish; such lordliness suits You, O compassionate one. The clever child displays its affections to the mother in playful ways.

Says Tuka, O Panduranga, that is exactly how it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What remains is the joy of devotion: to see Your face with these eyes. Do You not know what is inside my heart, O Narayana? Fulfill the demand I have made, O mighty giver to the world. You take the food from a thief's hand and show the child an empty dish; such lordliness suits You, O compassionate one. The clever child shows off its love to its mother in playful ways. Tuka says: O Panduranga, that is just how it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his one surviving desire, to behold God's face, and dares to call it a claim God owes him. He insists the Lord already knows what is in his heart, so there is no excuse for delay. The middle image is wry: God plays games, snatching away and showing an empty plate, and Tukaram says this teasing is fitting for one who is also tender. Then he names his own posture exactly, a clever child performing its affection before its mother, half play and half real need. The point is the bond itself, where demand, play, and trust are all permitted because the relationship is that close.

GATHA 3658 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, one resolve only

मराठी मूळ

धरूनि हें आलों जीवीं । भेटी व्हावी विठोबासी॥1॥
संकल्प तो नाहीं दुजा । महाराजा विनवितों ॥ध्रु.॥
पायांवरि ठेविन भाळ । येणें सकळ पावलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे डोळेभरी । पाहिन हरी श्रीमुख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have come holding this one resolve in my chitta: to meet Vithoba. I have no other wish, O great King; this is my humble prayer.

Let me place my forehead upon Your feet; by that, everything is attained. Says Tuka, let me gaze upon Hari's blessed face to my full satisfaction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have come holding this one resolve in my heart: to meet Vithoba. I have no other wish, O great King; this is my prayer. Let me lay my forehead on Your feet; by that, everything is gained. Tuka says: let me gaze at Hari's blessed face until my eyes are full.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short, single-pointed petition stripped of everything but the one thing wanted. Tukaram names his entire purpose in coming: to meet Vithoba, and he swears there is no second wish behind it. He measures fulfillment by the smallest act, his forehead touching the feet, and says that alone is total attainment. The closing wish is for sight to satiety, to look at the face until the eyes are full. The poem's force is its narrowness: one God, one gesture, one gaze, and nothing else asked for.

GATHA 3659 Prayers

Prayer, fairness at the table

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मां उद्धरणें फार । मज दुसरी नाहीं थार ॥1॥
आतां जैसें तैसें सोसा । काय करणें हृषीकेशा ॥ध्रु.॥
बरें न दिसेल ओळी । एका अन्न एका गाळी ॥2॥
लाविंतो आभार । तुका विखरलेती फार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have delivered many; I have no other refuge. Now bear with me as I am, O Hrishikesha; what else can be done? It will not look well if You give bread to one and curses to another in the same row.

Says Tuka, I am making You work hard; You have scattered Yourself widely for our sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have delivered many; I have no other refuge. Now bear with me as I am, O Hrishikesha; what else can be done? It will not look right to give one person food and another curses in the same row. Tuka says: I keep loading You with the obligation; You have scattered Yourself widely for our sake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram leans on God's record of rescuing others to claim a turn for himself, since he has nowhere else to go. He asks God to put up with him as he is, framing it almost as a problem God must solve. The sharp argument is one of fairness: if everyone is seated in the same row to be fed, it would be unseemly to serve one and scold the next. He admits he is making God work, and ends by noting that God has spread himself thin across countless devotees. The plea is for inclusion, not special treatment: only do not single me out to go without.

GATHA 3660 Confession and Sin

Confession, the unskilled servant

मराठी मूळ

न कळे जी भक्ती काय करूं सेवा । संकोचोनि देवा राहिलोंसे ॥1॥
जोडोनियां कर राहिलों निवांत । पायांपाशीं चित्त ठेवूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
दिशाभुली करीं स्थळीं प्रदक्षणा । भ्रमें नारायणा कष्टविलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों आज्ञेचा पाळक । जीवनासी एक ठाव केला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not know what devotion is or how to serve You, O Lord, and so I have withdrawn in hesitation. With folded hands I remain quiet, keeping my mind fixed at Your feet.

In my confusion I circumambulate the wrong places; in my error, O Narayana, I have wearied You. Says Tuka, I have become a keeper of Your command, making Your service the one abode of my life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not know, my Lord, what devotion is or how to serve. So I have held back, shrinking from it. With folded hands I stay quiet, keeping my mind at Your feet. Lost about directions, I circle the wrong places; in my confusion, O Narayana, I have wearied You. Tuka says: I have become the keeper of Your command, and made Your service the one place where my life rests.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses incompetence at the very thing he is famous for. Not knowing the right method of worship, he withdraws and simply stands silent with folded hands, his mind fixed at the feet rather than at any technique. He admits his efforts have often gone astray, circling the wrong spots and tiring God out with his blundering. The resolution is to stop trusting his own skill and instead just obey, becoming a keeper of the command. The wisdom here is that helpless obedience, with the mind held at the feet, becomes the real service once cleverness is surrendered.

GATHA 3661 Confession and Sin

Confession, the scattered mind

मराठी मूळ

एकविध वृत्त न राहे अंतरीं । स्मरणीं च हरी विस्मृति ॥1॥
कैसा हा नवलाव वाटतो अनुभवें । मज माझ्या जीवें साक्षत्वेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
न राहे निश्चळ जागवितां मन । किती क्षीणेंक्षीणें सावरावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु केले वेवसाव । तेणें रंगें जीव रंगलासे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A single-pointed state does not remain within; even while remembering Hari, forgetfulness sets in. What a strange experience this seems, witnessed by my own self within myself.

The mind will not stay still even when roused; again and again it must be painstakingly gathered back. Says Tuka, I have spent my life in so many engagements that the soul has taken on their very color.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A one-pointed state will not stay inside me; even while remembering Hari, forgetting comes. How strange this is, I feel it in my own experience, witnessed by my own life within me. The mind will not hold still even when I rouse it; weak and weaker, how often must I gather it back. Tuka says: I have spent my life in so many pursuits that the soul has taken on their color.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the ordinary defeat of the inner life with painful honesty. He wants a single, steady attention, but even in the act of remembering God, forgetfulness slips back in. He treats this not as theory but as something he watches in himself, his own life the witness of his own failure. The mind will not stay quiet however hard he wakes it, and he must keep dragging it back, growing weaker each time. He diagnoses the cause without flinching: a life poured into countless engagements has dyed the soul their color, so it cannot easily take the one color it now wants.

GATHA 3662 Prayers

Prayer, fear of death's grip

मराठी मूळ

आतां सोडवणें न या नारायणा । तरि मी न वंचे जाणा काळा हातीं ॥1॥
ऐसें सांगोनिया जालों उतराई । आणीक तें काई माझे हातीं ॥ध्रु.॥
केलियाचें माप नये सेवटासी । करितील नासि अंतराय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भय वाटतसे जीवा । धांवणिया धांवा लवकरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If Narayana does not come to rescue me now, know that I shall fall into the hands of death. Having said this much, I have discharged my part; there is nothing more that lies within my power.

The measure of what has been done does not reach its fullness, and obstacles work to destroy it. Says Tuka, fear grips my jiva; O Rescuer, come running quickly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If You do not come to free me now, O Narayana, then know it: I will not escape the hand of death. Having told You this much, I have done my part; what more is in my power? The measure of what I have done is not full, and obstacles work to ruin it. Tuka says: fear grips my soul; O Rescuer, come running quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a plea spoken under real dread, with death named as the threat. Tukaram puts the responsibility squarely on God: rescue must come now, or he is lost to death's hand. He marks the limit of his own effort, saying he has done all he can and discharged his side, so the rest is not in his power. He confesses his account of practice is not complete and that obstacles keep eroding even that. The poem ends in open fear and an urgent cry to the Rescuer to come running, the plain admission of someone who cannot save himself.

GATHA 3663 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, truth stands the test

मराठी मूळ

सत्या माप वाढे । गबाळाची चाली खोडे ॥1॥
उतरे तें कळें कसी । विखरोणें सर्वदेशीं ॥ध्रु.॥
घरामध्ये राजा । नव्हे हो वा पाटपूजा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे साचें । रूप तें दर्पणाचें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The measure of truth keeps growing, while the counterfeit walks crookedly. What survives the test is known on every shore and throughout every land.

A king within his own house needs no ceremony to prove his throne. Says Tuka, the mirror gives back the true face.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The measure of truth keeps growing; the counterfeit walks crooked. What comes through the test is known on every shore, in every land. A king inside his own house needs no ceremony to prove his throne. Tuka says: the mirror gives back the true face.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts the trajectories of the true and the false. Truth, weighed out, only increases and stands straight, while the fake moves crookedly and trips on its own gait. What survives testing needs no local endorsement; it is recognized everywhere. His image of the king at home makes the point: real authority does not stage ceremonies to prove itself, it simply is. The closing line seals it: a mirror returns whatever is actually there, so a person's true nature shows itself without disguise, and only the genuine endures examination.

GATHA 3664 Faith and Trust

Faith, the unbroken bond

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं खंड जाला । माझा तुमचा विठ्ठला ॥1॥
कैसें कैसें हो दुश्चत । आहे चौघांपाशीं नीत ॥ध्रु.॥
मुळींचे लिहिलें । मज आतां सांपडलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज । न लगे बोलणें सहज॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No rift has occurred between You and me, O Vitthal. However anxious I may feel, the account stands fair before all.

What was written from the beginning has now come into my hands. Says Tuka, there is no need for me to speak; the matter settles itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No break has come between me and You, O Vitthal. However anxious I may feel, the account stands fair before all. What was written from the start has now come into my hands. Tuka says: I need not speak; the matter settles itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares his tie to Vitthal intact, no rupture, whatever his moods suggest. He admits to spells of anxiety, but insists the reckoning between them is clean and open for any witness to see. He reads his present condition as the fulfillment of something fixed long ago, a destiny now placed in his hand. Because of that, he feels no need to plead or argue his case. The note is quiet confidence: the relationship is settled at the root, so it resolves on its own without his speaking.

GATHA 3665 Prayers

Prayer, the patient advocate

मराठी मूळ

हेचि वादकाची कळा । नाहीं येऊं येत बळा ॥1॥
धीर करावा करावा । तरी तो आहे आह्मां देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
रिघावें पोटांत। पायां पडोन घ्यावा अंत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वरि । गोडा आणावा उत्तरीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is the art of the advocate: one cannot win by force alone. One must have patience, and yet that patience is already with us, O Lord.

One must enter into the very heart of the matter, fall at the feet, and discover the final outcome. Says Tuka, bring the sweet one forth in Your answer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is the advocate's art: you cannot win by force alone. One must hold patience; and that patience is already ours, O Lord. Get inside the very heart of it, fall at the feet, and see it through to the end. Tuka says: bring the sweet one out in Your answer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram likens prayer to a skilled advocate's craft, where pushing by sheer force fails. The winning quality is patience, and he claims devotees already possess it as their grounding. His method is intimate, not aggressive: get inside the matter and fall at the feet, then stay until the case is resolved. The closing turn is addressed to God, asking that the answer come wrapped in sweetness rather than severity. The teaching is that the right way to press God is steady, lowly persistence, trusting that this draws out tenderness rather than rebuff.

GATHA 3666 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, deaf better than dead to spirit

मराठी मूळ

एक परि बहिर बरें । परि तीं ढोरें ग्यानगडें ॥1॥
कपाळास लागली अगी । अभागी कां जीतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
एक परि बरें वेडें । ताकिनक कुडें जळो तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खातडवासी । अमृतासी नोळखे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Better to be deaf than to be a beast who knows nothing of the spirit. If fire has struck the forehead, why does the wretch still cling to life? Better to be mad than to live in dry, crooked logic; let that burn away.

Says Tuka, one who dwells in the skin of a beast does not recognize nectar even when it is before him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Better to be deaf than a beast who knows nothing of the spirit. If fire has struck his forehead, why does the wretched one still cling to life? Better to be mad than to live in dry, crooked logic; let that burn away. Tuka says: one who lives inside a beast's hide does not recognize nectar even when it is set before him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws hard comparisons to shock the spiritually deadened awake. A deaf person is better off than a so-called knowledgeable beast who is empty of the spirit, because lacking a sense is less than lacking soul. He pictures the cursed forehead struck by fire and asks why such a life clings on, naming the waste of a life with no inner fire. Even madness, he says, is preferable to brittle, crooked reasoning, which deserves to burn away. The closing image points the warning at a recognizable pattern in any of us: wrapped in the hide of mere animal living, a person can have nectar set before him and still not know it, and the call is to examine whether we are that numb.

GATHA 3667 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the mind at rest in Govinda

मराठी मूळ

खेळों मनासवें जीवाच्या संवादें । कौतुक विनोदें निरांजनी ॥1॥
पचीं पडिलें तें रुचे वेळोवेळां । होतसे डोहळा आवडीस ॥ध्रु.॥
एकांताचें सुख जडलें जिव्हारीं । वीट परिचारीं बरा आला ॥2॥
जगाऐसी बुद्ध नव्हे आतां कदा । लंपट गोविंदा जालों पायीं ॥3॥
आणीक ते चिंता न लगे करावी । नित्य नित्य नवी आवडी हे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे धडा राहिला पडोन । पांडुरंगीं मन विसांवलें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I play with my own mind in joyful dialogue with the jiva, reveling in the formless One. What has seeped in deep delights me again and again; the cravings grow in sweet anticipation.

The bliss of solitude has lodged in my very core; the weariness of outward ritual has served its purpose well. The mind will never again be like the common worldly mind, for I have become absorbed at the feet of Govinda.

No other concern remains to trouble me; this love renews itself daily. Says Tuka, the struggle has fallen away, and my mind has found its rest in Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I play with my own mind in conversation with the soul, delighting and joking in the flameless light. What has soaked in deep pleases me again and again; my longing grows like a craving. The joy of solitude has lodged in my very core; the weariness of outward ritual has done its good work. My mind will never again be like the common worldly mind, for I have become absorbed at the feet of Govinda. No other worry is left to carry; this love renews itself fresh, day after day. Tuka says: the struggle has fallen away, and my mind has come to rest in Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram describing arrival, the settled joy after long effort. He plays in inward dialogue, mind and soul conversing in a quiet, lampless light, and what has steeped into him keeps tasting sweet, so that his longing itself becomes a happy craving. He honors the outer rituals not by despising them but by noting they served their purpose and led here, to the bliss of solitude lodged at his core. He marks a clear break: his mind can no longer run like the ordinary worldly mind, because it is now stuck fast at Govinda's feet. The close names the gift, no remaining anxiety and a love that renews daily, as the old struggle dissolves and the restless mind finally rests in Panduranga.

GATHA 3668 Worldly Life

Discernment, seize the right moment

मराठी मूळ

उचिताचा काळ । साधावया युक्तिबळ । आपलें सकळ । ते प्रसंगीं पाहिजे ॥1॥
नेम नाहीं लाभ हानि । अवचित घडती दोनी । विचारूनि मनीं । पाहिजे तें प्रयोजावें ॥ध्रु.॥
जाळ जाळा काळें । करपों नेदावें आगळें । जेवितां वेगळें । ज्याचें त्याचें तेथें तें शोभे ॥2॥
पाळी नांगर पाभारीं । तन निवडूनि सोंकरी । तुका ह्मणे धरी । सेज जमा सेवटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One must seize the right moment with all one's strength and bring everything to bear at that occasion. There is no certainty of gain or loss, for both arise unexpectedly.

One should reflect carefully in the mind and then act accordingly. Says Tuka, just as one weeds the field at the right time and separates the grain at harvest, so should one gather the final yield with care.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the right moment comes, seize it. Put all your strength into the chance. Bring everything you have to bear, right then. There is no fixed rule for gain or loss; both come without warning. So weigh it in your mind, then act as the moment asks. Burn out the weeds at the right time; do not let the good crop scorch. At the meal, each thing looks fitting in its own place. Tend the plough and the seed-drill. Pull out the weeds and clear the ground. Tuka says: gather in the final yield at the end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in the language of the farmer to teach timing and care. Every gain and loss comes unscheduled, so there is no formula; you have to read the moment, throw your whole strength into it, and act with judgment, not habit. The field is the image: weed at the right time, do not let the crop scorch, keep the plough and the drill working, clear out what does not belong. The point is that the harvest you finally gather depends on attentive labor moment by moment, not on luck or on waiting for certainty.

GATHA 3669 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the reckoning is settled

मराठी मूळ

पडिलिया ताळा । मग अवघा चि निर्वाळा । तेथें कोणी बळा । नाहीं येत कोणासी ॥1॥
जोडिलें तें लागें हातीं । आपआपली निंश्चती । हर्ष आणि खंती । तेथें दोनी नासलीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सहज सरलिया कारणें । मग एकला आपण । दिसे तरी भिन्न । वचनाचा प्रसंग ॥2॥
करूनि झाडा पाडा । तुका वेगळा लिगाडा। निंश्चतीच्या गोडा । गोष्टी ह्मुण लागती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the balance is struck, everything becomes clear, and no one can overpower another there. Whatever was earned comes to hand, and each finds their own certainty.

Both joy and sorrow are destroyed in that place. When the task is naturally completed, one stands alone.

Says Tuka, having cleared all entanglements, he rests apart, and the sweet words of certainty begin to flow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the account is balanced, everything becomes clear. There no one can overpower anyone. What was earned comes to your hand. Each one finds his own certainty. There both joy and sorrow are undone. When the work is naturally finished, you stand alone. You may look separate, but that is only how speech happens to put it. Clear the ledger; settle the score. Tuka says: he stands apart from the tangle, and the sweet words of certainty begin to flow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment the inner account is finally settled, using the picture of a balance struck and a ledger cleared. When the reckoning is done, everything is plain and no one can press a claim on anyone; each person comes into his own settled certainty. In that place both joy and sorrow dissolve, because there is nothing left to win or lose. He stands alone and apparently separate, though he notes that the separateness is only a turn of speech; freed from all entanglement, the calm words of certainty begin to flow on their own.

GATHA 3670 The Nature of God

Nature of God, water the root

मराठी मूळ

जीविता तो माझा पिता । उखता तो उखत्यांचा॥1॥
जनादननीं सरती कर्में । वाते भ्रमे अनेत्र । अपसव्य सव्यामधीं । ऐसी शुद्धी न धरितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खांद्या पानें । सिंचतां भिन्न कोरडी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who gives life is my father, and he who uproots belongs to the uprooted. In Janardana, all actions find their resolution.

Without discerning the right from the wrong path, one wanders in delusion. Says Tuka, even when you water the leaves on the shoulder, the roots on the other side remain dry.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who gives life is my father. He who uproots belongs to the uprooted. In Janardana all actions come to rest. Without telling the right path from the wrong, a person wanders in delusion, mixing the crooked with the straight, holding no clear understanding. Tuka says: if you water the leaves out on the branch, the far side stays dry.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts the one source of life with scattered, mistaken effort. God, Janardana, is the father who gives life and the place where all action finally comes to rest; the one who destroys belongs only to destruction. The danger is wandering without discernment, mixing crooked with straight and never settling on the true path. His closing image makes it plain: pour water on the leaves and the rest of the plant stays parched. You must reach the root, that is, God, or all your watering is wasted.

GATHA 3671 Prayers

Prayer, a mother's pull toward the child

मराठी मूळ

माउलीची चाली लेंकराचे ओढी । तयालागीं काढी प्राणें प्रीती ॥1॥
ऐसी बिळवंत आवडी जी देवा । संतमहानुभावा विनवितों ॥ध्रु.॥
मोहें मोहियेलें सर्वकाळ चित्त । विसरु तो घेत नाहीं क्षणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिला प्रेमाचा वोरस । सांभिाळलें दास आपुलें तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother's nature is to be drawn toward her child, and she would give her very life out of love for it. I pray to the saints and great souls for such powerful devotion toward God.

The mind is enchanted with love at all times and does not forget even for a moment. Says Tuka, the Lord has given the gift of love and has protected His own servant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother is drawn after her child by its own pull. For its sake she would give up her life out of love. Such strong love I ask for, O God. I beg it of the saints and the great souls. Let my mind be caught in that love at every moment. Let it not forget you even for an instant. Tuka says: he has given the flood of love, and he has guarded his own servant.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for one thing: a love for God as helplessly strong as a mother's pull toward her child, a love that would give up its own life. He does not assume he has it; he begs it of God and asks the saints and great souls to intercede. What he wants is an enchanted mind, held fast at every moment, never forgetting God even for an instant. The closing line answers the prayer as already granted: God has poured out that flood of love and has kept his servant safe.

GATHA 3672 Confession and Sin

Confession, take away my pride

मराठी मूळ

केवढा तो अहंकार । माझा तुह्मां नव्हे दूर ॥1॥
आतां कोण पडे पायां । तुमच्या अहो पंढरिराया ॥ध्रु.॥
कां जी कृपेनें कृपण । वेचत असे ऐसें धन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवें । दुजियाचें पोतें न्यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How great is this ego of mine, which keeps me far from You. Now who will fall at Your feet, O Pandhariraya? Why are You so miserly with Your grace, when You possess such inexhaustible wealth? Says Tuka, God should take away another's bundle of pride.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How great my ego is. It is not far from you. Now who will fall at your feet, O Pandhariraya? Why are you so stingy with your grace, when you hold such wealth? Tuka says: God should carry off another's whole bundle of pride.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that his ego is huge and admits it is no secret from God, who sees it close at hand. He worries that the very pride blocking him is keeping him from bowing at God's feet, and he half-accuses God of being miserly with grace despite owning endless wealth. The closing line turns the accusation into a request: let God simply take away the bundle of pride a person is carrying. The honesty is the prayer, naming the ego so that God may lift it.

GATHA 3673 Prayers

Prayer, the hired servant's surrender

मराठी मूळ

अपराधी ह्मणोनि येतों काकुलती । नाहीं तरी होती काय चाड ॥1॥
येइल तारुं तरी तारा जी देवा । नाहीं तरी सेवा घ्या वो भार ॥ध्रु.॥
कासया मी आतां वंचूं हे शरीर । आहें बारगीर जाई जनें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मन करूनि मोकळें । आहें साळेंढाळें उदार मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I come pleading because I am a wrongdoer. Otherwise, what need would there be? If it pleases You, save me, O God.

If not, then at least accept the burden of my service. Why should I now deceive this body, when I am but a hired servant destined to depart? Says Tuka, I have made my mind free and am generous with wholehearted surrender.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I come pleading because I am a wrongdoer. Otherwise, what need would there be? If a boat comes, then ferry me across, O God. If not, then at least take on the burden of my service. Why should I cheat this body now? I am only a hired hand who will leave with the crowd. Tuka says: I have set my mind free; I am open-handed and generous.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God precisely as a wrongdoer; he says that if he had no fault he would have no reason to plead, so his failing is what brings him. He asks either to be ferried across or, failing that, simply taken into God's service. He sees no point in sparing or protecting his body, since he is only a hired laborer who will depart when the work ends. So he gives himself away freely, with a mind made loose of its holdings, open-handed in surrender.

GATHA 3674 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, worship that costs nothing held back

मराठी मूळ

माझे तों फुकाचे कायेचे चि कष्ट । नव्हे क्रियानष्ट तुह्मांऐसा ॥1॥
कांहीं च न वंचीं आजिचा प्रसंगीं । सकळा ही अंगीं करीन पूजा ॥ध्रु.॥
द्यावें काहीं तुह्मीं हें तों नाहीं आस । असों या उदास देहभावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी मावळली खंती । समाधान चित्तीं सर्वकाळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My efforts cost nothing, for they are merely the toils of this body. I am not a hypocrite like others who shirk their duty.

I will not withhold anything on this occasion and will worship You with my whole being. I have no expectation that You should give me anything.

Let me remain indifferent to this body. Says Tuka, my anxiety has subsided, and my mind is content at all times.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My efforts cost nothing; they are only the labors of this body. I am no fraud like those who shirk their duty. I will hold nothing back on this occasion; I will worship you with my whole being. I have no hope that you should give me anything in return. Let me stay indifferent to this body. Tuka says: my anxiety has melted away, and my mind is content at all times.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers worship without holding anything back and without asking for anything in return. He insists his service is genuine, not the empty show of those who shirk; whatever the body can give, he gives it whole, here and now. Crucially, he expects no reward, and he stays indifferent to the body's claims. Because he wants nothing back, his anxiety has dissolved and his mind rests in steady contentment. The freedom comes from the giving, not from any payment.

GATHA 3675 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, mind merged with God

मराठी मूळ

स्वामीचिया सत्ता । आधीं वर्म येतें हाता । पुढती विशेषता । लाभें लाभ आगळा ॥1॥
करीं कवतुकाचे बोल । परि जिव्हाळ्याची ओल । आवडे रसाळ । मायबापा लाडाचें ॥ध्रु.॥
मनें मेळविलें मना । नाहीं अभावी शाहणा । अंतरींच्या खुणा । वरि दिल्या उमटोनि ॥2॥
नाहीं पराश्रमें काळा । अवघ्या जागविल्या वेळा । देवासी निराळा । तुका क्षण न सोडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the master's authority, the secret first comes to hand, and then special gain grows ever greater. The Lord speaks words of endearment, but within them lies the moisture of deep affection, as a beloved child delights its parents.

Mind has merged with mind, and the wise one harbors no disbelief. The inner signs have surfaced outwardly.

Says Tuka, without depending on another's labor, all moments have been awakened, and he does not leave God's side for even an instant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the master's authority the secret first comes to hand, and then the gain grows greater and greater. He speaks playful words of fondness, but within them is the moisture of love, sweet, the dear words of a mother and father to a beloved child. Mind has merged with mind. The wise one holds no disbelief. The inner signs have risen and shown on the surface. Without leaning on anyone else's labor, every moment is awake. Tuka says: he never lets God leave his side for an instant.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes intimacy with God ripening from a first secret given by grace into a gain that keeps growing. God's words come like a parent's loving teasing of a beloved child, light on the surface but soaked in tenderness underneath. The bond deepens until mind has merged with mind, doubt is gone, and the inner signs surface visibly. None of it leans on borrowed effort; he keeps every moment awake and refuses to let God out of his presence for even an instant. This is the experience of love made constant.

GATHA 3676 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God remembered with every morsel

मराठी मूळ

एके ठायीं अन्नपाणी । ग्रासोग्रासीं चिंतनीं ॥1॥
वेळोवेळां जागवितों । दुजें येइल ह्मुण भीतों ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं हीं गुंतत उपचारीं । मानदंभाचे वेव्हारीं ॥2॥
तुका जालासे शाहाणा । आड लपे नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In one place I take my food and water, contemplating God with every morsel. I keep myself awake at every moment, fearing that something else may enter.

I do not get entangled in rituals or the dealings of pride and pretense. Says Tuka, having grown wise, he hides behind Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In one place I take my food and water. With every mouthful I think of God. Again and again I keep myself awake, afraid that something else will slip in. I do not get tangled in rituals, in the dealings of pride and pretense. Tuka says: having grown wise, he hides himself behind Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a life narrowed to one constant: remembrance of God woven into the plainest act of eating, with every morsel a thought of God. He keeps vigilant on purpose, afraid that anything else could creep in and take that place. He deliberately stays clear of ritual show and the transactions of pride and pretense, which only feed the ego. The wisdom he claims is to disappear: instead of standing forward as a doer, he hides himself behind Narayana, letting God be the cover.

GATHA 3677 The Saints

Saints, take your fill from the mine of jewels

मराठी मूळ

वैरागरापाशीं रत्नाचिया खाणी । हे चि घ्यावी धणी फावेल तों ॥1॥
येथें नाहीं तर्कवितकानची चाड । होतसे निवाड ख†या खोटएां ॥ध्रु.॥
उगा च सारावा वाढिला तो ठाव । वाढितिया भाव कळतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे टांचणीचें पाणी । येथें झरवणी जैशातैसें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Near the ocean of jewels lie mines of gems. One should take one's fill while the opportunity lasts.

Here there is no need for arguments and speculations, for the true is sifted from the false. One should quietly accept whatever portion is served, for the one who serves reveals the worth.

Says Tuka, the water drawn from a well is poured here just as it is, without alteration.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Beside the diamond-mine lie veins of gems. Take your fill of them while the chance lasts. Here there is no need for arguments and guesses; the true is sifted from the false. Quietly accept whatever portion is served; the worth shows in the one who serves it. Tuka says: water drawn from the well is poured out here just as it is, with nothing altered.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to the company of the saints as a mine of jewels and urges you to take your fill while the opportunity is open. In their presence there is no place for debate and clever speculation, because the true is plainly separated from the false. The right posture is to receive quietly whatever is given, since the giver's own worth shows in what is served. His closing image seals it: like well-water poured out unchanged, what the saints give is pure and unaltered, and yours simply to drink.

GATHA 3678 Prayers

Prayer, the ocean of mercy

मराठी मूळ

समर्थ या नांवें दिनांचा कृपाळ । हें तंव सकळ स्वामीअंगीं ॥1॥
मज काय लागे करणें विनवणी । विदित चरणीं सकळ आहे ॥ध्रु.॥
दयासिंधु तुह्मां भांडवल दया । सिंचावें आतां या कृपापीयूषें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवो पंढरिनिवासे । बहु जीव आसे लागलासे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The powerful one is by nature compassionate to the lowly. This quality belongs entirely to the Lord.

Why should I need to make any plea? Everything is already known at His feet. You are an ocean of mercy, and compassion is Your very capital.

Sprinkle me now with the nectar of Your grace. Says Tuka, O dweller of Pandhari, my life yearns intensely for You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your very name, the Almighty, means kind to the lowly. That quality belongs wholly to you, my Lord. What plea do I even need to make? Everything is already known at your feet. You are an ocean of mercy; compassion is your one capital. Sprinkle me now with the nectar of your grace. Tuka says: O dweller of Pandhari, this life longs for you with all its heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rests his prayer on God's own nature rather than on his own words. To be Almighty, he says, is by definition to be kind to the lowly, so mercy is not a favor God grants but the very stock God trades in, an ocean of it. Because God already knows everything at his feet, no elaborate plea is needed; he only asks to be sprinkled with the nectar of grace. The poem ends in pure longing: his whole life yearns for the dweller of Pandhari, trusting that mercy must answer because mercy is who God is.

GATHA 3679 Longing and Separation

Longing, the silence of God

मराठी मूळ

लेखिलें कवित्व माझे सहज बोल । न लगे चि ओल जिव्हाळ्याची ॥1॥
नये चि उत्तर कांहीं परतोनि । जालों नारायणीं न सरतें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे फळ नव्हे चि सायासा । पंढरीनिवासा काय जालें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My poetry has been dismissed as mere words, without the moisture of genuine experience. No answer comes back to me.

I have become insufficient before Narayana. Says Tuka, my efforts bear no fruit. O dweller of Pandhari, what has happened?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My poetry has been written off as mere words, with no moisture of real experience on the tongue. No answer comes back to me at all. I have become worthless before Narayana. Tuka says: my striving bears no fruit. O dweller of Pandhari, what has happened?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from the dryness of God's silence. He fears his own poems are only words, lacking the living moisture of genuine experience, and that he counts for nothing before Narayana. Worst of all, no answer comes back; his calling goes unmet and his effort seems to bear no fruit. The poem ends not in resolution but in a bewildered question to the dweller of Pandhari: what has happened? It is the honest lament of love that feels unanswered and refuses to pretend otherwise.

GATHA 3680 Ecstasy and Joy

Surrender, the account is cleared

मराठी मूळ

येणें जाला तुमचे पोतडीचा झाडा । केलासी उघडा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
भरुनियां घरीं राहिलों वाखती । आपुली निंश्चती आपल्यापें ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां काय उरी उरली ते सांगा । आणिलेति जगाचिये साक्षी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोठें पाहोंजासी आतां । माझी जाली सत्ता तुह्मांवरि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By this You have cleared the account of Your own bundle, O Panduranga, and laid everything open. Having filled the house, I rest in contentment, with my own certainty restored to me.

Now tell me what remains, for You have brought the whole world as witness. Says Tuka, where will You look now? My authority has extended over You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By this You have emptied out Your bundle, Panduranga. You have laid it all open. I have filled my house and I sit content. My own certainty is back in my hands. Now tell me, what is left? You have brought the whole world to witness it. Tuka says: where will You look now? My claim has come to hold over You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the language of debt and accounting into a lover's playful triumph. He says God has been opened up like a bag turned inside out, holding nothing back, and so the devotee's house is full and his old peace of mind restored. The poem's bold claim is in the last line: having given himself wholly, Tuka now says his authority extends over God, with the whole world as witness. This is the logic of total surrender turning into total intimacy: the one who keeps nothing back gains a claim on the one he gave himself to.

GATHA 3681 Longing and Separation

Longing, the debt of love

मराठी मूळ

तुमच्या पाळणा ओढतसे मन । गेलों विसरोन आपणासी ॥1॥
लागेल पालटें फेडावें उसणें । येणें चि प्रमाणें पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमचे आवडी संबंधाचा त्याग । घेतला ये लाग जगनिंदेचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जैसा माझा जीव ओढे । तैसें च तिकडे पाहिजेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind is drawn to Your cradle, and I have forgotten myself entirely. The debt must be repaid in return, O Panduranga, in this very manner.

Out of love for You, I have renounced all worldly ties and have embraced the censure of the world. Says Tuka, just as my jiva yearns for You, so must the same longing come from Your side.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind is drawn to Your cradle. I have forgotten myself completely. The debt must be paid back in kind, Panduranga, in this very way. For love of You I have let go of every worldly tie. I have taken on the blame of the whole world. Tuka says: just as my soul is pulled toward You, the same pull must come from Your side too.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes love as a debt that must be matched. He has lost himself in his longing for God and has paid the full price: he has cut his worldly bonds and accepted the world's scorn for it. So he presses his claim. Love cannot run one way only; if his soul is dragged toward God, then God owes him the same pull in return. The poem names the stake of devotion bluntly: having given up everything for this love, he asks God to be drawn to him as helplessly as he is drawn to God.

GATHA 3682 Faith and Trust

Faith, under God's keeping

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं मज कोणी उरला दुर्जन । मायबापाविण ब्रह्मांडांत॥1॥
कासया जी माझी करणें येविसीं । भयाची मानसीं चिंता संतीं ॥ध्रु.॥
विश्वंभराचिये लागलों सांभाळीं । सत्तेनें तो चाळी आपुलिये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें पाळणपोषण । करितां आपण पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no enemy left in the entire universe except my own parents of ignorance. Why, O saints, should you harbor any fear or anxiety on my behalf? I have come under the care of Vishvambhara, and He moves me by His own authority.

Says Tuka, Panduranga Himself sees to my nurture and protection.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no enemy left in all the universe. There is no one but my mother and father. Why then, saints, should you carry fear or worry on my account? I have come under the care of Vishvambhara, and He moves me by His own power. Tuka says: Panduranga Himself sees to my keeping and my feeding.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the worried saints around him to stop fretting over his welfare. He has placed himself entirely under God, whom he calls Vishvambhara, the all-sustaining one, and so the whole world has stopped being a field of enemies. The point is the completeness of his trust: a man held by God needs no defenses and gives others nothing to fear for. God Himself moves him, feeds him, and keeps him, so anxiety on his behalf is misplaced.

GATHA 3683 The Nature of God

Trust, accept what comes

मराठी मूळ

मज कांहीं सीण न व्हावा यासाटीं । कृपा तुह्मां पोटीं उपजलीं ॥1॥
होतें तैसें केलें आपलें उचित । शिकविलें हित बहु बरें ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी न मनावी कोणाची आशंका । तुह्मां भय लोकां आहे मनीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां संचिताचा ठेवा । वोडवला घ्यावा जैसा तैसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

So that I may not suffer any hardship, compassion has arisen in Your mind. You have done what was fitting and taught me well for my own good.

I need not heed anyone's doubts, for it is You who hold concern for the world in Your mind. Says Tuka, now the treasure of destiny has arrived; accept it as it comes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

So that I should suffer no strain, mercy has risen in Your heart. You have done what was fitting and taught me well, for my own good. I need not heed anyone's doubt; it is You who hold the world's concern in mind. Tuka says: now the store of what was destined has come to me. Take it as it comes, whatever it is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads his whole life as already arranged by God's mercy. Whatever has happened was fitting and was teaching for his good, so he need not weigh the doubts and opinions of others. The closing turn is an act of acceptance: the fruit of past actions, the store of destiny, has now arrived, and the right response is simply to receive it as it is, without complaint or bargaining. The poem teaches a settled trust that hands the sorting of good and bad back to God.

GATHA 3684 Longing and Separation

Longing, the soul in exile

मराठी मूळ

कोणाचें चिंतन करूं ऐशा काळें । पायांचिया बळें कंठीतसें ॥1॥
पाहातसें वाट येई गा विठ्ठला । मज कां हा केला परदेश ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतांचे सत्ते जालों कासावीस । जाय रात्री दिस वैरियांचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बैसें मनाचिये मुळीं । तरीं च ही जाळीं उगवतीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whom shall I contemplate in such times? I endure only by the strength of Your feet. I watch the road, waiting for You, O Vitthal.

Why have You sent me into this exile? I am tormented at the hands of many. Days and nights pass under the sway of enemies.

Says Tuka, come and sit at the root of my mind, and only then will these tangles unravel.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whose name shall I hold in mind in times like these? I get through only by the strength of Your feet. I watch the road. Come, Vitthal. Why have You sent me into this exile? Many have power over me and I am tormented. My nights and days pass under enemies. Tuka says: come and sit at the root of my mind; only then will these tangles come undone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from a sense of abandonment, calling his life a foreign land, an exile away from God. He has no other refuge to turn to and holds on by clinging to Vitthal's feet while he watches the road for him to come. The enemies who rule his days and nights are the cravings and fears of the mind, the forces that hold power over a soul cut off from God. The remedy he asks for is exact: let God take His seat at the very root of the mind, and the knots that bind him will loosen by themselves.

GATHA 3685 Prayers

Prayer, break the neck of ego

मराठी मूळ

कां जी तुह्मीं ऐसे नव्हा कृपावंत । निवे माझें चित्त ठायिंच्या ठायीं ॥1॥
कांही शम नये विषम अंतरा । शांतीचा तो बरा ऐसा योग ॥ध्रु.॥
दुःखी होतों पंचभूतांच्या विकारें । जडत्वें दातारें राखावीं तीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मोडा अहंकाराची मान । धरितों चरण ह्मणऊनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why are You not more gracious, so that my mind may find peace right where it stands? No calm comes to this troubled chitta. How blessed would be the union of true peace.

I suffer from the disturbances of the five elements, and You, O generous Lord, must keep them in check. Says Tuka, break the neck of ego. That is why I hold onto Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why are You not more kind, so my mind could be cooled right where it stands? No calm comes to this restless heart. How good it would be to be joined to peace. I suffer from the workings of the five elements; You, generous Lord, must hold them in check. Tuka says: break the neck of pride. That is why I hold on to Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for an inner peace he cannot reach on his own. His mind stays troubled, stirred by the body and the five elements, the material nature he is made of, and only God can restrain these. The sharp request comes last: break the neck of ego. He sees pride as the thing standing between him and peace, so he asks God to kill it, and he names that as the whole reason he clings to God's feet. The poem makes clear that the calm he wants is not soothing but the destruction of self-importance.

GATHA 3686 Faith and Trust

Faith, the beggar never refused

मराठी मूळ

मागत्याची कोठें घडते निरास । लेंकरा उदास नाहीं होतें ॥1॥
कासया मी होऊं उतावीळ जीवीं । जाणता गोसावी सर्व आहे ॥ध्रु.॥
जाला तरी वेळ कवतुकासाटीं । निदनया तों पोटीं उपजेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यासी ठाउकें उचित । होईल संकेत नेमियेला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where has a beggar ever been refused? A child is never left disappointed. Why then should I be anxious within? The all-knowing Lord is aware of everything.

Even if there is a delay, it is only for the sake of His playful sport. Cruelty never arises in His chitta.

Says Tuka, He knows what is proper, and the appointed moment will surely come.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where has a beggar ever been turned away? A child is never left in despair. Why then should I grow restless inside? The all-knowing Lord knows everything. Even if it takes time, that is only for the sake of His play. Cruelty never rises in His heart. Tuka says: He knows what is right, and the appointed sign will surely come.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram steadies his own impatience with two homely truths: a beggar at the door is always given something, and a parent never abandons a crying child. So his anxiety is groundless; the all-knowing Lord already knows his need. Any delay is not neglect but God's playful timing, since cruelty cannot arise in him. The poem teaches that waiting on God is not waiting on indifference. The right moment is appointed and will come, and the devotee's only task is to trust the one who knows what is fitting.

GATHA 3687 The Nature of God

Tenderness, the mother who hides

मराठी मूळ

आरुषा वचनीं मातेची आवडी । ह्मणऊनि तांतडी घेती नाहीं ॥1॥
काय होइल माझें मांडिलें कवतुक । आदराची भूक रडारोवी ॥ध्रु.॥
लपोनियां करी चुकुर माऊली । नाहीं होती केली निष्ठासांडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करी पारखीं वचनें । भेवउनि तान्हें आळवावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother's love persists even when a child speaks harshly, and so she does not rush to punish. What will become of my playful petition? The hunger for affection expresses itself through crying and wailing.

The mother hides and plays peek-a-boo, but never truly abandons her child. Says Tuka, she speaks testing words and frightens the little one only to draw it closer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother loves the child even when its words are rough; that is why she does not rush to punish. What will come of this game I have set up? The hunger for love shows itself in crying and wailing. The mother hides and slips out of sight, but she has not truly cast the child off. Tuka says: she speaks testing words and frightens the little one, only to call it close.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains God's apparent absence through the image of a mother playing with her infant. When God seems to withdraw, it is like a mother hiding from her child or scolding it with sharp words. It looks like rejection, but it is not abandonment; it is a way of drawing the child nearer. The devotee's crying and complaining is itself the hunger for love finding its voice. The poem reframes the pain of God's silence as a tender game whose whole purpose is closeness, not punishment.

GATHA 3688 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the quarrel of love

मराठी मूळ

प्रीतीच्या भांडणा नाहीं शिरपाव । वचनाचे चि भाव निष्टता ॥1॥
जीणें तरी एका जीवें उभयता । पुत्राचिया पिता दुखवे दुःखें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय जाणे तुटों मायेचें लिगाड । विषम तें आड उरों नेणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज करुणा उत्तरें । करितां विश्वंभरे पाविजैल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In a quarrel born of love, there is no real conquest or defeat. The words themselves are expressions of devotion.

Both parent and child live as one life, and a father feels pained by his son's sorrow. Who can understand when the bond of affection might seem to break? What appears as discord cannot truly stand between them.

Says Tuka, if Vishvambhara speaks to me with compassionate words, I shall be fulfilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In a quarrel born of love there is no prize for winning. The words themselves are just signs of devotion. The two live as one life; a father is pained by his son's pain. Who can say the bond of love would ever break? What looks like discord cannot really stand between them. Tuka says: if Vishvambhara speaks to me with words of pity, I will be made whole.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers his own boldness toward God. The sharp things he has said are not a fight to be won or lost; in a quarrel between lovers the harsh words are themselves a form of devotion. Parent and child, devotee and God, share one life, so the seeming discord cannot truly divide them. The poem lands on what he actually wants: not victory in the argument but a single compassionate word from Vishvambhara, the all-sustaining Lord, which would be enough to fulfill him completely.

GATHA 3689 Renunciation

Renunciation, drop the schemes, be still

मराठी मूळ

नको घालूं झांसां । मना उपाधिवोळसा ॥1॥
जे जे वाहावे संकल्प । पुण्य तरी ते चि पाप ॥ध्रु.॥
उपजतो भेव । होतो कासावीस जीव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहों । होइल तें निवांत राहों॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not entangle the mind in the net of worldly pursuits. Whatever intentions you carry, be they merit or sin, are ultimately the same.

Fear arises and the jiva becomes distressed. Says Tuka, let us simply watch what happens and remain still.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not throw the mind into deceit. Do not tangle it in worldly burdens. Whatever plans you carry, merit as much as sin, they come to the same thing. Fear is born, and the soul is thrown into distress. Tuka says: let us watch. Whatever is to be, let us stay still in it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against the restless scheming of the mind. He puts merit and sin in the same basket: both are intentions, plans of the ego, and either way they breed fear and torment the soul. The radical claim is that even good works, when they are the mind's projects, belong to the same trap as bad ones. The release he offers is stillness: stop plotting outcomes, simply watch what unfolds, and rest quiet in whatever comes. The poem points past doing toward a settled, unanxious witnessing.

GATHA 3690 Worldly Life

Worldly life, walking backward

मराठी मूळ

बीजीं फळाचा भरवसा । जतन सिंचनासरिसा । चाविलिया आसा । काकुलती ते नाड ॥1॥
हा तों गडसंदीचा ठाव। पिके पिकविला भाव । संकोचोनि जीव । दशा केली जतन ॥ध्रु.॥
माती घाली धनावरी । रांडा रोटा वरीवरी । सुखाचे सेजारीं। दुःख भ्रमें भोगीतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिशाभुली । जाल्या उफराटी चाली । निवाडाची बोली । अनुभवें साक्षीसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The seed holds the promise of fruit, and one tends it carefully with watering. When hope is chewed away, one is left pleading in despair.

This is a treacherous, narrow place where devotion must be cultivated and the jiva must be guarded with restraint. People pile dirt over their wealth and engage in empty outward shows, experiencing sorrow in delusion even while lying on a bed of comfort.

Says Tuka, people have lost their way and walk in reverse. The verdict of truth comes only through direct experience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The seed holds the promise of fruit if you tend it and water it; when hope is eaten away, you are left pleading in misery. This is a narrow, treacherous place where devotion has to be grown and the soul guarded with restraint. People pile dirt over their wealth and put on hollow shows; lying on a bed of comfort they still taste sorrow through their delusion. Tuka says: people have lost their direction and walk in reverse. The verdict of truth is known only through living experience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at ordinary worldly life and sees people going the wrong way. A seed bears fruit only with patient tending, and the same care is needed to grow devotion in this dangerous, cramped human birth. Instead, people bury themselves in wealth and empty display, and even amid comfort they suffer, because they are deluded about what matters. He says plainly that they have lost their bearings and are walking backward, mistaking the path for its opposite. The closing line refuses mere argument: only direct experience, not talk, can deliver the true verdict on how to live.

GATHA 3691 Longing and Separation

Longing, the bow of the rejected

मराठी मूळ

काय उरली ते करूं विनवणी । वेचलों वचनीं पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
अव्हेरलों आतां कैचें नामरूप । आदर निरोप तरि तो नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
माझा मायबाप ये गेलों सलगी । तों हें तुह्मां जगीं सोयइरिका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां जोडोनियां हात । करी दंडवत ठायिंचाठायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What more can I say in petition? I have spent myself in words, O Panduranga. Having been rejected, where now is name or form? There is no welcome or farewell.

You are my mother and father, and I came to You with familiarity, but You seem to treat me as a mere acquaintance. Says Tuka, now with folded hands I bow down right where I stand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What plea is left for me to make? I have spent myself in words, Panduranga. Now that I am cast aside, what name or form is there? There is no welcome and no farewell. You are my mother and father, and I came to You as one of Your own; yet to the world You treat me as a mere acquaintance. Tuka says: now, with folded hands, I bow down right where I stand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has run out of petitions; he has poured out all his words to God and feels rejected. The wound is that God, whom he calls his mother and father, seems to hold him at the distance of a stranger before the whole world, with neither a warm welcome nor a clean dismissal. The poem ends not in protest but in the lowest gesture available: he folds his hands and bows down where he stands. The point is the posture of one who has nothing left to say and surrenders even his disappointment, laying it at the feet he cannot leave.

GATHA 3692 Longing and Separation

Longing, the ache that will not fill

मराठी मूळ

आवडी धरूनि करूं गेलों लाड । भक्तिप्रेमकोड न पुरे चि ॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि जीव ठेला असावोनि । खेद होतो मनीं बहु साल ॥ध्रु.॥
वेठीऐसें वाटे निर्फळ कारण । शीतळ होऊन खोडावलों॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सरतें नव्हें चि पायांपें । बळ केलें पापें नव्हें चि भेटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I went to express my love and devotion, but the longing of love is never satisfied. Therefore, the jiva has remained in a state of longing, and great sorrow stings the heart.

This fruitless effort feels like forced labor, and I have grown cold and weary. Says Tuka, I cannot find acceptance at Your feet. My sins have prevented our meeting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I came with love to be petted and held. But the longing of love is never filled. So my life stays stretched out, waiting, and a great sorrow stings my heart. This effort feels like forced labor, fruitless; I have gone cold and weary. Tuka says: I am not accepted at your feet. My sins have made themselves strong, and so there is no meeting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying out of love and finding that the love itself will not let him rest. He came close to Vitthal wanting to be held, and the wanting only grew; the more he loves, the wider the gap feels. He names the dryness honestly: the devotion starts to feel like drudgery, and he has gone numb. He does not blame God; he reads his own unworthiness, his sins, as the wall between them. The poem leaves the longing open, unrelieved, naming the pain of love that has no answer yet.

GATHA 3693 The Nature of God

The mother's heart, God who cannot stay aloof

मराठी मूळ

प्रीतीचा तो कळवळा । जिव्हाळाचि वेगळा ॥1॥
बहु नेदी रडों माता । दुश्चत होतां धीर नव्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
वरी वरी तोंडापुरतें । मोहोरी तें कळतसे ॥2॥
जाणोनियां नेणता तुका । नव्हे लोकांसारिखा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The stirring of love has its own distinct warmth. A mother does not let her child cry for long.

When the child is distressed, she cannot maintain her composure. On the surface things may seem one way, but the true feeling beneath is recognizable.

Says Tuka, though he knows, he acts as one who does not know, for he is not like ordinary people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The tenderness of love has a warmth all its own; it is something apart. A mother will not let her child cry for long. When the child is in distress, she cannot keep her calm. On the surface things may look one way, but the feeling underneath is plain to see. Tuka says: knowing, he acts as if he does not know, for he is not like ordinary people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that God's love works the way a mother's does. The warmth of real love is its own kind of thing, not learned and not faked, and a mother simply cannot bear to hear her child cry; she breaks. So whatever face God shows on the surface, the heart beneath is moved and cannot stay distant. The last line turns to Tuka himself, or to God: he knows, yet plays at not knowing, because he does not run on the cold calculation of ordinary people. The point is to trust the hidden tenderness over the outward appearance.

GATHA 3694 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only this is my gain

मराठी मूळ

हा गे हा चि आतां लाहो । माझा अहो विठ्ठला॥1॥
दंडवत दंडवत । वेगळी मात न बोलें ॥ध्रु.॥
वेगळाल्या कोठें भागें। लाग लागें लावावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केल्या जमा । वृत्ततमा भाजूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This, this alone is now my gain, O my Vitthal. I offer prostrations, prostrations.

I speak no other word. Where else shall I turn for my share? The connection must be forged.

Says Tuka, having burned away the restlessness of the mind, the accounts are settled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This, this alone is now my gain, O my Vitthal. I bow down, I bow down. I speak no other word. Where else would I go for my share? The bond must be tied fast. Tuka says: the account is settled, the darkness of the restless mind burned away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram fixes on one thing and refuses to look elsewhere. He calls Vitthal his only gain, and reduces all his speech to prostration: he will say nothing else, ask for nothing else. There is no other door where he could collect what is his, so he insists the bond with God be made firm. The closing image is of a reckoning closed out: the restless, clouded mind has been burned off like dross, and the account stands settled. The poem stakes everything on this single attachment and lets the rest fall away.

GATHA 3695 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, leaving it all to God

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मांसी न कळे सांगा काय एक । असया संकल्प वागवूं मी ॥1॥
आहे तेथें सत्ता ठेविलें स्थापूनि । प्रमाणें चि वाणी वदे आज्ञा ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपा जाली मग न लगे अंगसंग । निजध्यासें रंग चढता राहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मागें बोलिलों तें वाव । आतां हा चि भाव दृढ झाला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is it that You do not already know? Tell me, what intention should I carry? Authority is established where it already resides, and my speech utters only what is ordained. Once grace descends, no physical contact is needed, for the color of constant contemplation deepens on its own.

Says Tuka, what I spoke before was empty. Now this faith alone has become firm.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is there that you do not already know? Tell me, what plan should I carry? Power rests where it already lives; my speech says only what is ordained. Once your grace comes, no bodily nearness is needed; the color of steady remembrance deepens on its own. Tuka says: what I said before was empty. Now this faith alone has grown firm.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays down his own planning before a God who already knows everything. If God knows all, there is nothing for him to scheme or intend; the power lies with God, and even his words only repeat what is already decreed. He learns that grace does not depend on physical proximity: once it descends, the steady inward remembrance deepens by itself, like a dye taking color. He admits his earlier talk was hollow, and what remains is one settled faith. The poem is the moment self-effort gives way and trust becomes solid.

GATHA 3696 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the secret confided

मराठी मूळ

आवडी न पुरे मायबापापासीं । घडों का येविसीं सकईल ॥1॥
होईल नेमलें आपुलिया काळें । आलीयाचा बळें आघ्रो उरे ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणविलें तेथे थोडें एकवेळा । सकळ ही कळा सवौत्तमीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निवेदिलें गुहए गुज । आतां तुझी तुज सकळ चिंता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The love for my divine parents can never be fully expressed. Can it ever be truly conveyed? What is destined will come at its appointed time, and the longing of past encounters remains.

Once a little is revealed at that place, all arts find their perfection. Says Tuka, I have confided the innermost secret. Now all concern is Yours alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The love for my mother and father, God, can never be fully spoken. Can it ever truly be conveyed? What is fixed will come in its own time, and the longing of past meetings stays. Once a little is shown there, all the arts find their fullness in the highest. Tuka says: I have told the innermost secret. Now all the worry is yours alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram addresses God as mother and father and admits that love this deep outruns any words. He resigns himself to time: whatever is destined will come when it is meant to, while the ache left by earlier nearness keeps burning. He says that once even a little is revealed in that place, every skill and faculty reaches its perfection in the highest. The turn is in the last line: having confided his deepest secret, he hands the whole burden over to God, making God responsible for him. The poem moves from inexpressible love to total handing-over.

GATHA 3697 Renunciation

Renunciation, done with the body

मराठी मूळ

वोखटा तरी मी विटलों देहासी । पुरे आतां जैसी जोडी पुन्हां ॥1॥
किती मरमर सोसावी पुढती । राहिलों संगती विठोबाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां कोण याचा करील आदर । जावो किळवर विटंबोनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां सांडि तें चि सांडि । कोण फिरे लंडी यासी मागें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have grown disgusted with this wretched body. Enough of forging such bonds again and again.

How many more deaths must I endure? I have remained in the company of Vithoba. Now who will honor this body? Let it go, discarded and disgraced.

Says Tuka, cast it off, just cast it off. Who would follow this worthless thing?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bad as it is, I am sick of this body. Enough now of forging this bond again. How much dying must I keep enduring? I have stayed in Vithoba's company. Now who will give this body any honor? Let it go, mocked and cast off. Tuka says: throw it away, just throw it away. Who would chase after this worthless thing?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on the body with disgust, weary of being bound to it birth after birth. He counts the deaths he has had to suffer and says enough; he has found his footing in Vithoba's company instead. With that, the body loses all its claim to honor in his eyes, and he is content to let it be discarded and disgraced. The repeated command to cast it off is not self-hatred so much as a refusal to keep serving the body as if it were the self. The poem points the disgust at the attachment to the perishable, not at life itself; what is worthless is the clinging.

GATHA 3698 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the quarrel of pride

मराठी मूळ

हें ही ऐसें तें ही ऐसें । उभय पिसें अविचार ॥1॥
अभिमानाचे ठेलाठेलीं । मधीं जाली हिंपुष्टी ॥ध्रु.॥
धीरा शांती ठाव नुरे । हा चि उरे आबाळ्या ॥2॥
कौतुक हें पाहे तुका । कढतां लोकां अधनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is like that and that is like this. Both sides are mad with senselessness.

In the pushing and shoving of pride, distress has arisen in the middle. Neither patience nor peace finds any place.

Only commotion remains. Says Tuka, he watches this spectacle as the people churn in their misery.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This one is like this, that one is like that; both are mad and senseless. In the pushing and shoving of pride, distress springs up in the middle. Patience finds no place, peace finds no place; only uproar is left. Tuka says: he watches this show, while the people churn in their own ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a fight in which both sides are equally foolish. Each is sure it is right, and the collision of their prides produces only suffering for everyone caught between them. Where ego runs the contest, patience and peace have nowhere to stand, and all that remains is noise and turmoil. Tuka watches it as a sad spectacle: the people grind themselves down in their own misery. The poem is pointed at the pattern of prideful quarreling itself, the impulse in any of us to win, not at one party over the other; both are warned.

GATHA 3699 The Moral Ideal

The moral ideal, what is tested by fire

मराठी मूळ

हित जाणे चित्त । कळों येतसे उचित ॥1॥
वरदळ तें नुतरे कसीं । आगीमध्यें तें रसीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करुनी खरें । ठेवितां तें पुढें बरें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The chitta knows what is beneficial, and what is proper becomes apparent. Surface material does not survive the test.

In the fire, the true essence is revealed. Says Tuka, what is made genuine stands well when placed before the future.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The heart knows what is good for it, and what is right becomes clear. Surface stuff does not survive the test. In the fire, the true essence is what shows. Tuka says: what you make genuine stands you in good stead later on.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the inner heart already knows what is truly good, and the right course becomes plain when you listen to it. Anything that is only surface, only show, will not last when it is tried. He uses the image of fire: heat burns off whatever is fake and leaves only the real essence behind. So make your life and devotion genuine now; what is real is what will hold up and serve you in time to come. The poem sets inner truth against outward appearance and tells you to invest in the first.

GATHA 3700 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the body wasted on pride

मराठी मूळ

देवें दिला देह भजना गोमटा । तों या जाला भांटा बाधिकेच्या ॥1॥
ताठोनियां मान राहिली वरती । अहंकारा हातीं लवों नल्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
दास ह्मणावया न वळे रसना । सइरवचना बासे गळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोठें ठेवावा विटाळ । स्नानें नीर्मळ व्हावयासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God gave this body for beautiful worship, but it has become a vessel for vice. The neck has stiffened with pride and will not bow to the grip of ego.

The tongue will not call itself a servant but instead sings the praises of flattery. Says Tuka, where should this impurity be placed? One must bathe to become pure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God gave this body, handsome, for worship; instead it has become a vessel for vice. The neck has stiffened upward with pride and will not bend in the grip of ego. The tongue will not call itself a servant; it sits in the throat singing flattery. Tuka says: where is this defilement to be put down? One must bathe to come clean.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram laments that a body meant for worshipping God has been turned to bad use. The neck has gone rigid: pride holds the head up so high it cannot bow, and ego keeps its grip. The tongue, which should name itself God's servant, instead flatters and praises the wrong things. He asks where such defilement could even be set down, and answers that it takes a washing to be made clean. The poem points the rebuke at the patterns of pride and flattery, and at the need to cleanse them in oneself, not at scorn for any particular person.

GATHA 3701 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the family's complaint against the lover of God

मराठी मूळ

काय करूं पोरा लागली चट । धरी वाट देउळाची॥1॥
सांगितलें नेघे कानीं । दुजें मनीं विठ्ठल ॥ध्रु.॥
काम घरीं न करी धंदा । येथें सदा दुश्चत ॥2॥
आमचे कुळीं नव्हतें ऐसें । हें च पिसें निवडलें ॥3॥
लौकिकाची नाहीं लाज । माझें मज पारिखें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नरका जाणें । त्या वचनें दुष्टांचीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can I do? The child has caught the craze and heads straight for the temple. He will not listen to anything told to him.

In his mind there is nothing but Vitthal. He does no work at home and is always restless here.

There was never anything like this in our family. This particular madness has taken hold.

He has no shame before society and has become a stranger even to himself. Says Tuka, those are the words of the wicked, and they lead to hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can I do? The boy has caught the craze and heads straight for the temple. Whatever you tell him he will not take into his ears; in his mind there is nothing but Vitthal. He does no work at home, no business; here he is always restless. There was never anyone like this in our family; this particular madness has singled him out. He has no shame before respectable people; he has become a stranger even to his own. Tuka says: such are the words of the wicked, and they lead to hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram voices the family's complaint about one of their own who has fallen for God. The relatives are exasperated: the boy runs only to the temple, hears nothing they say, thinks only of Vitthal, neglects work and household, and shames the family before respectable society by becoming a stranger even to his own people. To them this is a disgraceful madness. The sting is in the last line: Tuka turns it around and says that these scolding, worldly words are the speech of the wicked, and it is that mocking voice, not the God-mad lover, that leads to hell. The poem flips the worldly verdict on its head.

GATHA 3702 Faith and Trust

Faith, the warrior with the goal in sight

मराठी मूळ

कारणापें असतां दृष्टी । शंका पोटीं उपजेना ॥1॥
शूर मिरवे रणांगणीं । मरणीं च संतोष ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहिजे तो कळवळा। मग बळा काय उणे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उदारपणें । काय उणें मनाचें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the goal is before one's eyes, no doubt arises in the chitta. A warrior shines on the battlefield and finds contentment even in death.

What is needed is true earnestness of chitta, and then nothing is lacking in strength. Says Tuka, with a generous spirit, the mind lacks nothing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the goal is right before your eyes, no doubt is born in the heart. A warrior shines on the battlefield and finds joy even in dying. What is needed is true earnestness of heart; then how can strength fall short? Tuka says: with a generous spirit, the mind lacks nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that once you can see what you are after, doubt has no room to grow. He compares it to a soldier who, with his aim clear, is glad even to die for it. The one thing required is real earnestness, a heart truly aflame; where that is present, strength never runs out. And with a large, open spirit, the mind finds it lacks for nothing. The poem treats wholehearted longing for God as the source of fearlessness and sufficiency.

GATHA 3703 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, not borrowed words

मराठी मूळ

नव्हती हे उसणे बोल । आहाच फोल रंजवण॥1॥
अनुभव तो वरावरी । नाहीं दुरी वेगळा ॥ध्रु.॥
पाहिजे तें आलें रुची।काचाकुची काशाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाजे आड । त्याची चाड कोणासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

These are not borrowed words, for empty entertainment has no substance. Experience is not far or separate; it is right here on the surface.

What is needed has come to taste. What use is pretense and struggle? Says Tuka, the one who hides behind shame, who cares for him?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These are not borrowed words; mere hollow talk has no substance. The experience is right here, close at hand, not far off and not separate. What was needed has come, and the taste of it is here; what use is pretense and struggle? Tuka says: as for the one who hangs back behind his shame, who cares for him?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists that what he speaks is not secondhand or repeated from others; empty words carry nothing. He is testifying from experience, and that experience is not somewhere far away but right here, near and not separate from him. Whatever he needed has arrived and he is tasting it, so there is no point in faking it or struggling to manufacture it. The closing jab is at the person who holds back out of false shame or self-consciousness: such hesitation, Tuka says, deserves no concern. The poem stakes its authority on lived experience over borrowed talk and hesitation.

GATHA 3704 The Moral Ideal

Self-effort exhausted, surrender

मराठी मूळ

जों जों घ्यावा सोस । माझे वारीं गर्भवास । लटिक्याचा दोष । अधिक जडे अंगेसीं ॥1॥
आतां आहे तैसें असो । अनुताप अंगीं वसो । येवढें चि नसो । माझें आणि परावें ॥ध्रु.॥
जागाजालेपणें। काय नासावें स्वप्न । शब्दाचिया शिणें । कष्ट मिथ्या मानावे ॥2॥
छाये माकड विटे । धांवे कुपीं काय भेटे । तुका ह्मणे फुटे । डोई गुडघे कोंपर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The more one tries to take up this struggle, the more the faults of falsehood cling to the body and entangle one in the cycle of birth. Let things be as they are now.

Let repentance dwell within. Let there be no distinction of mine and another's.

Once one is awake, why destroy what was merely a dream? The toil of words should be recognized as futile suffering. Says Tuka, a monkey is vexed by its own shadow, and when it dives into a well to catch it, only its head, knees, and elbows are broken.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The harder I push at this struggle, the more the cycle of birth holds me. The faults of falsehood cling to my body and bind me tighter. Let things stay as they are now. Let only repentance live in me. Let there be no more of this: mine and another's. Once you are awake, why kill what was only a dream? The toil of words is futile suffering; know it as false. Tuka says: a monkey is vexed by its own shadow. It dives into a well to catch it, and only breaks its head, its knees, its elbows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is confessing that effort itself can deepen the trap. The more he strives at the spiritual struggle by his own force, the more the lie of separateness clings to him and the more the round of birth tightens. So he asks to stop straining and to let only repentance and the end of mine-and-yours remain. The dream image carries the point: once you wake, you do not labor to destroy what was never real, so the toil of clever words is wasted suffering. The closing picture lands it: chasing the self you imagine is like a monkey diving into a well after its own reflection and breaking its bones on nothing.

GATHA 3705 The Saints

Fellowship of saints, true gain

मराठी मूळ

गुणांचा चि सांटा । करूं न वजों आणिका वाटा॥1॥
करिती छंद नानापरी । भरोन सिणती आडभरी ॥ध्रु.॥
नेमली पंगती। आह्मां संतांची संगती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लीळा । येर कवतुक पाहों डोळां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let us gather only virtues and not wander onto other paths. Others pursue various whims, filling themselves and then tiring from the strain.

Our appointed company is the fellowship of saints. Says Tuka, this is our divine play. All else we simply watch as a spectacle.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us gather only virtues. Let us not wander off onto other paths. Others chase one whim after another; they fill themselves up and then tire from the strain. Our appointed seat is fixed: the company of saints. Tuka says: this is our play. Everything else we just watch, a passing show before the eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets one pursuit against all the others. He wants to collect only good qualities and stay on the single road, rather than scatter onto the many paths people try. He sees others driven by changing fancies, gorging on them and then worn out by the effort, getting nowhere. Against that he names his own assigned place: a seat at the table of the saints' fellowship. That company is his delight and his real life; the rest of the world's striving he treats as a spectacle he merely watches go by.

GATHA 3706 Confession and Sin

Confession, borrowed knowledge

मराठी मूळ

शिकल्या शब्दाचें उत्पादितों ज्ञान । दरपणींचें धन उपर वाया ॥1॥
अनुभउ कइं होईन भोगिता । सांकडें तें आतां हें चि आलें ॥ध्रु.॥
गायें नाचें करीं शरीराचे धर्म । बीजकळावर्म तुमचें दान ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केला उशीर न साहे । घाल तरी आहे सर्व सिद्ध ॥3॥
सिकविला तैसा पढों जाणे पुसा । कैंची साच दशा तैसी अंगीं ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I produce knowledge from learned words, but it is like wealth seen in a mirror, useless in reality. When will experience come through actual practice? This is the difficulty that has now arrived.

I sing and dance and perform the rituals of the body, but the seed and essence of true knowledge is Your gift alone. Says Tuka, the delay is unbearable. If You grant it, everything is already prepared.

One who is taught can only recite what was memorized. How can such rote learning bring the true state into one's being?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I make knowledge out of words I have learned. It is like wealth seen in a mirror, of no use at all. When will real experience come, the kind you live through? That is the hard thing that now stands before me. I sing, I dance, I do the body's rituals. But the seed and the heart of true knowing are your gift alone. Tuka says: the delay is more than I can bear. If you grant it, all is already ready. One who is only taught can recite what he memorized. How can rote learning bring the true state into a man's own being?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits that what he has is secondhand: knowledge built from learned words, dazzling like coins glimpsed in a mirror but worthless because you cannot hold them. He marks the gap between this borrowed talk and lived experience, and the gap pains him. His singing, dancing and rites are real, but he insists the actual seed of realization is not something he can manufacture; it can only be given by God. So he turns it into a plea: the waiting is unbearable, yet everything is prepared the moment grace is granted. The last line drives the confession home: memorized recitation, however fluent, cannot put the true state into a person's own life.

GATHA 3707 Confession and Sin

Confession, words without realization

मराठी मूळ

स्वप्नींच्या सुखें नाहीं होत राजा । तैसा दिसे माझा अनुभव ॥1॥
कासया हा केला जिहुवे अळंकार । पायांसी अंतर दिसतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
दर्पणींचें धन हातीं ना पदरीं । डोळां दिसें परी सत्याचिये ।
आस केली तरी लाळ चि घोंटावी । ठकाठकी तेवीं दिसतसे ॥2॥
कवित्वें रसाळ वदविली वाणी । साक्ष ही पुराणीं घडे ऐसी ।
तुका ह्मणे गुरें राखोनि गोंवारी । माझीं ह्मणे परि लाभ नाहीं ॥3॥
अनुभव तो नाहीं अमुचिया दरषणें । अइकिलें कानें वदे वाणी ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The happiness of dreams does not make one a king, and so it is with my experience. Why adorn the tongue with ornaments when the distance from Your feet is still visible? Wealth in a mirror is neither in the hand nor in the pocket.

It appears before the eyes but lacks all truth. If one desires, one must swallow mere saliva, and the whole thing seems like a grand deception.

Says Tuka, poetry has made the tongue eloquent, and even the scriptures bear witness to such things, yet a cowherd who tends the cattle may call them his own without gaining any real profit. Experience is not found in our vision; we merely speak what our ears have heard.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dream happiness does not make you a king. That is what my experience looks like. Why decorate the tongue, when the distance from your feet is still plain to see? Wealth in a mirror is not in my hand, not in my pocket. The eyes see it, but it has no truth in it. If you long for it, all you swallow is your own saliva. The whole thing looks like one deception piled on another. Poetry has made my speech sweet and flowing, and even the scriptures bear witness to such things. Tuka says: a cowherd tending the cattle may call them his own, yet he gains nothing by it. Real experience is not in our seeing. We only speak what our ears have heard.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures fluent speech against the thing it claims and finds it empty. Eloquent words are like joy felt in a dream or treasure seen in a mirror: vivid to the eye, but not in your hand, leaving you swallowing your own spit when you reach for them. He will not let his own gift fool him; poetry has made his tongue sweet and the scriptures seem to back such talk, but talk is not attainment. The cowherd who calls the herd his own while owning none of it is the exact image of a reciter who handles holy words without possessing the reality. He ends in honest confession: true experience is not yet his, and he is only repeating what his ears took in.

GATHA 3708 Longing and Separation

Longing, the absent Lord

मराठी मूळ

जेविल्याचा कैसा अनुभव अंतरीं । ह्मणतां मांडे पुरी काय होतें ॥1॥
नाहींनाहीं गेली तळमळ दातारा । कां जी हरिहरा चाळविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
पत्रीं कुशळता भेटी अनादर । काय तें उत्तर येइल मानूं ।
अंतरीं सबाहएीं कां नाहीं सारिखें । धरूनि पारिखें वर्त्ततसां॥2॥
आलों आलों ऐसी दाऊनियां आस । वाहों बुडतयास काय द्यावें ।
तुका ह्मणे अहो चतुरा शिरोमणि । किती माझी वाणी तुह्मी कोठें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is the inner experience of one who has truly feasted? Does merely saying the names of sweets and breads satisfy hunger? No, no, the anguish has not departed, O generous Lord. Why, O Hari, have You led me astray? Letters may convey skill, but meeting brings only indifference.

What answer should I expect then? Why is there no consistency between the inner and the outer? You act as a stranger. You show hope by saying you are coming, but what should be offered to one who is drowning? Says Tuka, O crown jewel of the wise, how far can my words reach, and where do You stand?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can the feast live as an experience inside you? Does saying the names of breads and sweets ever fill the belly? No, no, the anguish has not left me, O giver. Why, O Hari, O Hara, have you led me on? A letter can carry kind words, but the meeting itself is cold. What answer am I supposed to take from that? Why is there no match between your inside and your outside? You hold yourself off like a stranger. You raise my hope, saying, I am coming, I am coming. What is that worth to a man who is drowning? Tuka says: O crown jewel of the wise, how far can my poor words reach, and where are you standing?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is crying out at a God who seems near in word but absent in fact. Naming the dishes does not feed you; reciting the divine names has not stilled his torment, and he feels he has been strung along. He presses the complaint as if reading a letter that sounds affectionate while the actual meeting stays cold, and asks why the Lord's inner promise and outer conduct do not agree. The drowning man is the stakes: a vague I am coming is useless to someone going under now. He ends not in despair but in appeal, calling God the crown of the wise and asking where He is hiding while a devotee's words fall short.

GATHA 3709 Prayers

Prayer, claim on God's fame

मराठी मूळ

केलें तरी आता साच चि करावें । विचारिलें द्यावें कृपादान ॥1॥
संकल्पासी नाहीं बोलिला विकल्प । तुह्मां पुण्यपाप कळे देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
उदार शक्ति तंव तुमची भूमंडळीं । ऐसी ि◌ब्रदावळी गर्जतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अहो रकुमादेवीवरा । उपरोध कां धरा माझा आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If You are to act, then act truly. Give the gift of grace that You have already considered.

You have never spoken against Your own resolve. You know what is merit and what is sin, O God.

Your generous fame resounds throughout the world. Such is the banner of Your glory.

Says Tuka, O husband of Rukmini, why do You now hold back from my plea?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you mean to act, then act for real now. Give the gift of grace you have already decided to give. You have never broken your own resolve. You know what is merit and what is sin, O God. Your generous fame fills the whole earth. That is the banner of glory that thunders about you. Tuka says: O husband of Rukmini, why do you hold back from my plea now?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God to make good on what He has already resolved to do. He asks that the promised grace actually arrive, not stay a half-finished intention, and reminds the Lord that He has never gone back on His own purpose and alone knows true merit from sin. Then he leans on God's reputation as a kind of leverage: the whole world proclaims His generosity, so withholding now would betray that banner. Addressing Him as the husband of Rukmini, Tukaram simply asks why such a famously generous Lord is resisting one man's request.

GATHA 3710 The Nature of God

Praise, grace alone purifies

मराठी मूळ

अहो पुरुषोत्तमा । तुह्मां काशाची उपमा ॥1॥
सतंत तो नाहीं बुद्धी । नाळवितां नाहीं शुद्ध ॥ध्रु.॥
जागविलें तरी । तुह्मां वेक्तियेणें हरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । तुम्हा नित्य दिस नवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Purushottama, to what can You be compared? No metaphor is truly adequate. When one tries to cleanse the intellect, it still does not become pure.

But if You awaken it, O Hari, it happens through Your power alone. Says Tuka, O God, every day is ever new for You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Purushottama, what could you be compared to? No likeness is enough for you. The mind by itself does not stay steady. Try to scrub it, and it still does not come clean. But if you wake it, O Hari, it happens by your power alone. Tuka says: O God, for you every day is new.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises the supreme Person as beyond all comparison, then turns to his own helplessness. Left to itself the intellect cannot hold steady, and no amount of self-scouring makes it pure. Purity comes only one way: God awakening the mind by His own power, not by the seeker's effort. The closing line praises God's endless freshness, that for Him every day is new, hinting that His grace is never stale or exhausted and can renew even a mind that cannot cleanse itself.

GATHA 3711 The Saints

Effort and its fruit, saints' table

मराठी मूळ

मथनें भोगे सार । ताकें घडे उपकार ॥1॥
बरवी सायासाची जोडी । अनुभविया ठावी गोडी ॥ध्रु.॥
पाक आणि रुचि। जेथें तेथें ते कइंची ॥2॥
वाढितो पंगती । तुका आवडी संगती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By churning, one obtains the essence, and even the buttermilk serves its purpose. The fruit of earnest effort is a fine gain, and only one who has tasted it knows its sweetness.

The cooking and the flavor each have their proper place. Says Tuka, I serve at the feast of the saints' company with love and devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Churn, and you get the essence; even the buttermilk left over does its good work. Earnest effort is a fine gain. Only the one who has tasted it knows the sweetness. The cooking and the flavor each have their own place. Tuka says: I serve at the feast of the saints' company, with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the everyday work of churning milk to speak about spiritual effort. Churn faithfully and you draw out the butter, the essence, while even the leftover buttermilk still nourishes; nothing earnest is wasted. The reward of such labor is real, but it cannot be described, only tasted, and only the one who has done the work knows its sweetness. Just as cooking and flavor each have their proper place, effort and its fruit belong together. He ends by placing himself happily among the saints, serving at their table out of love.

GATHA 3712 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the guarded mind

मराठी मूळ

चिंतनाची जोडी । हा चि लाभ घडोघडी ॥1॥
तुह्मी वसूनि अंतरीं । मज जागवा निर्धारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जाय जेथें मन । आड घाला सुदर्शन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भोजें । नाचें हो ऐसें न लजें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wealth of contemplation is this: profit at every moment. Dwell within my chitta and keep me awake with certainty.

Wherever the mind wanders, place the Sudarshana disc as a barrier. Says Tuka, let me dance with abandon and feel no shame.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wealth of remembering you is this: profit at every single moment. Live inside me, and keep me awake for certain. Wherever my mind runs off, set the Sudarshana there to block it. Tuka says: let me feast, let me dance like this, and feel no shame.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the steady gain of contemplation: constant remembrance of God pays out in every moment. He asks God to dwell within him and keep him spiritually awake, and where the wandering mind tries to escape, to throw the Sudarshana disc across its path like a guard. The image makes devotion active, with God himself fencing the mind back toward Him. He ends in open joy, asking to feast and dance in love without any embarrassment before others.

GATHA 3713 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, love ever new

मराठी मूळ

आवडीची न पुरे धणी । प्रीत मनीं बैसली ॥1॥
नित्य नवा कळवळा । मायबाळामध्यें तों ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख सुखा भेटों आलें । होय वाल्हें पोटींचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ब्रह्मानंदें । संतवृंदें चरणापें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fulfillment of love's longing is never complete, for affection has settled deep in the mind. Between mother and child there is ever-new tenderness.

Joy has come to meet joy, and the beloved of the mind grows dear. Says Tuka, in the bliss of Brahman, at the feet of the assembly of saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Love's longing is never filled to the brim; the love has settled deep in my mind. The tenderness is new every day, like the bond between mother and child. Joy has come to meet joy, and the one my heart loves grows dear. Tuka says: in the bliss of Brahman, at the feet of the gathered saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a love that grows rather than fades. The longing is never finally satisfied, because affection has taken root deep in his mind and renews itself daily, as fresh as a mother's tenderness for her child. He pictures joy meeting joy, the beloved growing ever dearer in the meeting. The poem closes by locating all this bliss where he wants to be: in the joy of Brahman, at the feet of the assembled saints, naming their company as the very place this ecstasy lives.

GATHA 3714 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, sheltered at the feet

मराठी मूळ

जडलों तों आतां पायीं । होऊं काई वेगळा ॥1॥
तुम्हीं संतीं कृपा केली । गंगे चाली ओघाची ॥ध्रु.॥
सांभिाळलों मायबापा । केलों तापावेगळा ॥2॥
वोरसें या जीव धाला । तुका ठेला मौन्य चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become fixed at Your feet now. How could I ever be separate? You saints have shown me grace, and it flows like the current of the Ganga.

I have been sheltered, O mother and father, and made free from all suffering. Says Tuka, my jiva is satisfied by this inheritance, and I remain in silence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I am fixed at your feet. How could I ever be separate again? You saints have shown me grace, and it flows like the current of the Ganga. You sheltered me, O mother and father. You set me free of all my burning. My soul is filled by this inheritance. Tuka says: and I am left in silence.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the far side of his longing, now held fast at God's feet and unable to imagine separation. He credits the saints, whose grace has come to him with the unstoppable flow of the Ganga, and addresses God as his mother and father, the shelter that freed him from all his inner burning. The grace feels like an inheritance that fully satisfies the soul. The poem ends in the truest sign of fulfillment: words run out, and Tuka is left in silence.

GATHA 3715 Confession and Sin

Confession, the inflated servant

मराठी मूळ

काळावरी सत्ता । ऐशा करितो वारता ॥1॥
तो मी हीणाहूनि सांडें । देवे दु÷हें काळतोंडें ॥ध्रु.॥
मानूनी भर्वसा । होतों दासा मी ऐसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मान । गेलों वाढवूं थोरपण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He speaks of having authority over even death itself. Yet I should be cast aside as lower than the lowest.

I was trusting, thinking myself to be a servant. Says Tuka, I went about inflating my own importance and honor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He speaks as if he has power even over death. But I should be thrown aside as lower than the lowest. I took it on trust and thought, this is what I am, his servant. Tuka says: I went around puffing up my own importance, swelling my own greatness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches himself in self-deception. He hears talk of having authority even over death, then turns the verdict on himself: he deserves to be cast out as the lowest of all. The trouble was that he believed his own status, taking it on trust that he was already a true servant of God. In the end he names the real fault plainly, that he went about inflating his own honor and greatness, mistaking borrowed pride for devotion.

GATHA 3716 Prayers

Trust, asking God not to delay

मराठी मूळ

समर्थाचे सेवे कोठें नाहीं घात । पाहों नये अंत पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
आहे तैसी नीत विचारावी बरी । येऊनी भीतरी वास करा ॥ध्रु.॥
निढळ राखिलें तरी भयाभीत । हर्षामर्ष चित्त पावतसे॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरी कळेल निवाड । दर्शनाची चाड शुभकीर्तिन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the service of the powerful one, there is never any ruin. One should not test the patience of Panduranga.

Consider Your own nature carefully and come to dwell within. If You leave me exposed, my mind swings between fear, elation, and resentment.

Says Tuka, only then will the verdict become clear, when the longing for Your sight yields auspicious fame.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the service of the mighty one there is never any ruin. Do not test my patience to the end, Panduranga. Look at my state as it truly is, and judge it well. Come inside me; make your home there. If you leave me out in the open, my mind shakes with fear. It swings between joy and resentment. Tuka says: only then will the verdict be clear, when the longing for your sight bears its good and shining name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing Panduranga not to keep him waiting any longer. He starts from confidence: whoever serves the strong one is never undone, so it is safe to ask boldly. He wants God to look honestly at his condition and come to dwell within him, because being left exposed and on his own throws his mind back and forth between fear, elation, and resentment. The point is that a settled inner life requires God's presence, not the devotee's effort alone. Tuka adds that the matter is only decided well when his hunger to see God comes to good name and fruit.

GATHA 3717 Longing and Separation

Longing, the devotee turns demanding

मराठी मूळ

बहु धीर केला । जाण न होसी विठ्ठला ॥1॥
आतां धरीन पदरीं । करीन तुज मज सरी ॥ध्रु.॥
जालों जीवासी उदार । उभा राहिलों समोर ॥2॥
तुका विनवी संतां । ऐसें सांगा पंढरिनाथा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have waited with great patience, but You do not respond, O Vitthal. Now I shall seize hold of Your garment and make You equal to me.

I have become generous with my very life and stand here before You. Says Tuka, appealing to the saints: please convey this to the Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have waited with great patience. You still do not heed me, Vitthal. Now I will catch hold of your garment. I will make you equal to me. I have grown reckless with my own life. I stand here right in front of you. Tuka pleads with the saints: say this for me to the Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Patience has run out, and Tukaram turns from waiting to demanding. He has held on long, but Vitthal still gives no answer, so he says he will seize the hem of God's garment and refuse to be put off. The line about making God equal to himself is the bold heart of it: love has made him careless of his own life, so he will stand face to face and not back down. Unable to reach Vitthal directly, he asks the saints to carry his message in. The verse shows devotion that has become insistent, even confrontational, without losing its trust.

GATHA 3718 The Moral Ideal

Counsel, keep the wicked at a distance

मराठी मूळ

नेदावी सलगी न करावा संग । करी चित्ता भंग वेळोवेळा ॥1॥
सर्प शांतिरूप न ह्मणावा भला । झोंबे खवळीला तात्काळ तो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुरी राखावा दुर्जन । करावें वचन न घडे तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not allow familiarity with the wicked, and do not keep their company, for it disrupts the mind at every turn. A serpent may appear calm, but when provoked it strikes at once.

Says Tuka, keep the wicked at a distance, for they are incapable of keeping their word.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not grow familiar with the wicked. Do not keep their company. Again and again it breaks the mind. A serpent may look calm; do not call it harmless. Provoke it and it strikes at once. Tuka says: keep the wicked one far off. Whatever they promise, they will not do.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against letting harmful people in close. Familiarity and company with the wicked unsettle the mind over and over, so the safe course is distance. His image is a snake that lies still and looks gentle: stillness is no proof of safety, because once roused it strikes instantly. The closing line names the practical stakes: such people do not keep their word, so no agreement with them holds. The warning is aimed at the pattern of harm and our own carelessness in courting it, not at writing off any person as beyond reach.

GATHA 3719 Prayers

Surrender, the Name as my whole practice

मराठी मूळ

मज अभयदान देई दातारा । कृपेच्या सागरा मायबापा॥1॥
देहभाव तुझ्या ठेवियेला पायीं । आणीक मी कांहीं दुजें नेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवाभक्तिहीन नेणता पतित । आतां माझे हित तुझ्या पायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें सर्व ही साधन । नाम संकीर्तन विठोबाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Grant me the gift of fearlessness, O generous Lord, O ocean of grace, O my mother and father. I have placed my entire sense of self at Your feet.

I know nothing else. I am devoid of service and devotion, ignorant and fallen.

Now my welfare lies only at Your feet. Says Tuka, my entire spiritual practice is the singing of Vithoba's name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Grant me the gift of fearlessness, generous one. Ocean of grace, my mother and father. I have laid my whole sense of self at your feet. I know nothing else, nothing apart from you. I have no service, no devotion; I am ignorant and fallen. Now my good lies only at your feet. Tuka says: my whole practice is this: singing the name of Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for one gift, fearlessness, from the God he calls ocean of grace and both mother and father. He has nothing of his own to bring, so he places his entire sense of self at God's feet and admits he knows no other refuge. Rather than hide his poverty, he names it plainly: no record of service or devotion, ignorant and fallen. That confession is the ground of his trust, because it leaves his welfare resting only on God. The whole of his spiritual practice, he says, is reduced to one thing, singing Vithoba's name.

GATHA 3720 Longing and Separation

Longing, thirst waiting for grace

मराठी मूळ

करावा वर्षाव । तृषाक्रांत जाला जीव ॥1॥
पाहें आकाशाची वास । जाणता तूं जगनिवास ॥ध्रु.॥
संयोगें विस्तार । वाढी लागे तो अंकूर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे फळें । चरणांबुजें तीं सकळें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Send down Your rain, for my jiva is parched with thirst. I gaze at the sky in longing, and You, the all-knowing one, are the abode of the world.

When the union takes place, the sprout grows and expands. Says Tuka, the fruits are all at the lotus of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Send down your rain. My soul is cracked with thirst. I watch the sky, waiting. You know all; you are the dwelling of the world. When the joining comes, the sprout grows and spreads. Tuka says: all the fruit hangs at your lotus feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram likens himself to parched ground waiting for rain, with his soul cracked by thirst and his eyes fixed on the sky. The rain he begs for is God's grace, and he reminds the Lord, who is the abode of the whole world, that nothing is hidden from him. The farming image carries the promise: once the rain meets the seed, the sprout grows and spreads, so union is what makes any growth possible. The poem ends by placing every fruit of that growth at God's lotus feet, not in the devotee's own hands. It is the prayer of one who can do nothing but wait and look up.

GATHA 3721 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, run to his feet

मराठी मूळ

करीं ऐसी धांवाधांवी । चित्त लावीं चरणापें ॥1॥
मग तो माझा मायबाप । घेइल ताप हरूनी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतांच्या मतें गोवा । होऊं जीवा नेदावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करुणाबोलें । धीर विठ्ठलें निघेना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make this effort and rush to fix the mind upon His feet. Then He, my mother and father, will remove all suffering.

Do not allow the jiva to be confused by the many opinions of others. Says Tuka, when compassionate words are spoken, even Vitthal cannot hold back His patience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Make this kind of hurry. Fix your mind on his feet. Then he, my mother and father, will take your suffering away. Do not let your soul be tangled in the many opinions of others. Tuka says: when you speak words full of sorrow, even Vitthal cannot hold his patience back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the listener to run, not stroll, and to fasten the mind on God's feet. The promise is direct: God, who is mother and father, will then lift away the burning of suffering. He warns against a real danger to that single focus, the crowd of conflicting opinions that can entangle a soul and pull it off course. The closing turn is tender: heartfelt, sorrowful words move God himself, so that even Vitthal cannot keep his composure and stay aloof. The verse pushes the hearer toward urgent, plain-spoken prayer rather than clever debate.

GATHA 3722 Appeals and Exhortations

Nondual counsel, sweep all into solitude

मराठी मूळ

एकविध नारायण । तेथें विषमाचा सीण । पालटों चि भिन्न । नये अणुप्रमाण ॥1॥
अवघें सारावें गाबाळ । चुकवूनियां कोल्हाळ । आनंदाचें स्थळ । एकाएकीं एकांत ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे आळस निद्रा । येथें देउनियां चिरा । देउनियां धीरा । मिठी जाणा जागृतीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When Narayana is realized as one without a second, the pain of duality ceases. Not even the slightest trace of difference can remain.

Sweep away all the confusion and commotion. The place of bliss is in solitude, alone with the One.

Says Tuka, cast aside laziness and sleep. Giving yourself to patience, embrace wakefulness with a firm hold.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana is one, without a second. There the strain of duality has no place. There is no changing it into something separate, not by a hair's breadth. Sweep away all the rubbish. Get clear of the din. The place of bliss is solitude, alone with the One. Tuka says: lay down laziness and sleep here like a stone slab. Give yourself to patience, and know the embrace in full wakefulness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the nondual ground plainly: Narayana is one without a second, and where that is seen the strain of duality simply cannot stand, not even a hair's worth of difference. The middle verse turns this into practice, telling the seeker to sweep away clutter and step out of the noise, because the place of bliss is solitude, alone with the One. The closing image is sharp: lay laziness and sleep down flat like a slab of stone and hold firm with patience. What is embraced is not found in dullness or in drowsy ease but in full wakefulness. The poem joins a clear metaphysical claim to a demand for alert, undistracted attention.

GATHA 3723 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, no night, no separation

मराठी मूळ

हारपोनि गेली निशी । निद्रा कैसी न देखों ॥1॥
नारायणीं वसलें घर । निरंतर आनंद ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघा रुधविला ठाव। नेला वाव मी माझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एके ठावीं । असूं नाहीं सीनाभिन्न ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The night has vanished and disappeared. Sleep is nowhere to be seen.

Narayana has made His home within, and there is unbroken joy. Every space has been filled by Him, and the sense of I and mine has been taken away.

Says Tuka, in that one place we remain, never apart or separate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The night has dissolved and gone. Where is sleep? I do not see it. My house is settled in Narayana. There is unbroken joy. Every space is filled by him. The I and the mine have been carried off. Tuka says: in that one place we stay. There is no being apart, no separation.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a state where the ordinary marks of unawareness have fallen away: the night has dissolved and sleep cannot be found, signs that he is fully awake within. His whole dwelling now rests in Narayana, and the joy of it is unbroken. As God fills every space, the sense of I and mine is carried off, which is the quiet center of the poem. What remains is one shared place with no distance in it. The closing line states the nondual fruit directly: there is no being apart, no separation between the devotee and God.

GATHA 3724 The Nature of God

God's grace, the unlikely are saved

मराठी मूळ

पाहा कैसेकैसे । देवें उद्धरिले आनयासें ॥1॥
ऐका नवल्याची ठेव । नेणतां भक्तिभाव ॥ध्रु.॥
कैलासासी नेला । भिल्ल पानेडी बैसला ॥2॥
पांखांच्या फडत्कारीं । उद्धरुनी नेली घारी ॥3॥
खेचरें पिंडी दिला पाव । त्या पूजनें धाये देव ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे भोळा । स्वामी माझा हो कोंवळा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

See how God has effortlessly delivered so many. Hear this treasure of wonder: even without knowing devotion, they were saved.

A tribal hunter who simply sat offering leaves was taken to Kailasa. A hawk was delivered by the flapping of its wings.

A bird offered a morsel from its body, and God was pleased by that worship. Says Tuka, my Lord is tender and innocent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look how, how easily, God has lifted so many up. Hear this store of wonders: even those who did not know devotion were saved. A tribal hunter who only sat offering leaves was carried to Kailasa. A hawk was delivered by the beating of its wings. A small creature gave a morsel from its own body, and God was filled by that worship. Tuka says: my Lord is simple. He is tender.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marvels at how easily God rescues even those with no claim to it. His point is that grace does not wait for skilled or learned devotion: people who did not even know devotion were still saved. He names wonders to prove it, a forest hunter who did nothing but sit and offer leaves yet was taken to Kailasa, a hawk lifted by the mere flapping of its wings, a small creature whose tiny offering of itself satisfied God. The thread through all of them is that the offering was poor and the giver unqualified, yet God received it fully. He ends by naming what makes this possible: his Lord is simple-hearted and tender, easily won by the smallest sincere gift.

GATHA 3725 Autobiography

Lament, suffering that will not leave

मराठी मूळ

अनुभव ऐसा । मज लागला सरिसा ॥1॥
पाठी बैसली सेजारीं । नव्हे शांत कोणे परी ॥ध्रु.॥
कोठें न लगे जावें । कांहीं घालावया ठावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोटि । दुःखाच्या च तये पोटीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Such is my experience, which has attached itself to me relentlessly. Suffering sits beside me like a companion and will not be quieted by any means.

There is no need to go anywhere or to find a place to put it down. Says Tuka, in the very womb of that suffering lie ten million more.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is my experience. It has fastened itself to me without a gap. It has sat down at my back, right beside me. By no means will it grow quiet. There is nowhere I need to go to set it down. There is nowhere to lay it. Tuka says: in the very belly of this sorrow lie ten million more.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from inside unrelieved suffering. He says it has attached itself to him without any gap and sits at his very side like a companion that will not be calmed by anything he tries. The bitterness deepens when he admits there is no place to carry it off to and set it down. The final line is the darkest: within the belly of this one sorrow wait ten million more. The verse does not resolve into comfort; it lets the weight of affliction stand, the honest cry of a devotee who finds no exit on his own.

GATHA 3726 The Saints

Surrender to the saints, like a beast of burden

मराठी मूळ

पाठीवरी भार । जातो वाहूनियां खर ॥1॥
संत नेतील त्या ठाया । माझी आधीन त्यां काया ॥ध्रु.॥
मोटचौफळ । अंतीं उिच्छष्टाचें बळ ॥2॥
न संडीं मारग । येथें न चोरूनि अंग॥3॥
आपुलिया सत्ता । चालविती नाहीं चिंता ॥4॥
कळविळला तुका । घराचार येथें नका ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A donkey carries the burden on its back without question. The saints will lead me to whatever destination they choose, for my body is under their authority.

In the end, all strength comes from partaking of their leftovers. I will not leave this path or hide my presence here.

They guide me by their own power, and I have no worry. Says Tuka, do not bring the ways of the household into this place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A donkey carries the load on its back and goes. The saints will lead me wherever they choose; my body is in their keeping. In the end all my strength comes from their leftovers. I will not leave this road. I will not hide myself here. By their own power they drive me on, and I have no worry. Tuka is overcome: do not bring the ways of the household in here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers himself to the saints with the humility of a pack animal that simply carries its load and walks where it is led. He says his body belongs to them and they may take him wherever they wish. His whole strength, he adds, comes from their leftovers, the prasad of their company, and on this road he will neither turn back nor hide himself. Because they guide him by their own power, he is free of worry. The closing plea, that the habits of household life not be dragged into this place, asks for an undivided surrender, with no part held back for ordinary self-concern.

GATHA 3727 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, carried off by the powerful one

मराठी मूळ

मागें पुढें जालों लाटा । अवघा मोटा सरळ ॥1॥
नाहीं कोठें रितें अंग । नित्य रंग नवा चि ॥ध्रु.॥
पोसिंद्याचे पडिलों हातीं । वोझें माती चुकली ॥2॥
जोगावलों पोटीं खर । पाठी भार वरि नाहीं ॥3॥
अवघिया मोकळ्या दिशा । नाहीं वोळसा कामाचा॥4॥
संताचिये लोळें द्वारीं । पळती दुरी गोमाशा ॥5॥
कांहीं न साहेसा जाला । तुका नेला समर्थ ॥6॥
पातोगें महाद्वारीं। वरि झुली वाकळा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The waves that tossed me back and forth have all settled into a great, smooth stream. No part of me is left untouched, and the delight is ever new.

I have fallen into the hands of a true patron, and the burden of earthly toil is removed. I have been nourished within, and no weight remains on my back.

All directions are open and free, with no binding obligation of work. By rolling at the doorstep of the saints, the officers of worldly life flee far away.

Says Tuka, when it became unbearable, the powerful one carried me away and spread a coarse blanket before the great door.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The waves that threw me back and forth have all gone smooth, one great even stream. No part of me is left empty. The color is new every day. I have fallen into the hands of a true keeper, and the burden of earthly toil is gone. I have been fed within; no load is left on my back. Every direction is open and free; no task binds me. By rolling at the saints' doorway the gnats of worldly life flee far off. Tuka says: when it grew unbearable, the powerful one carried me away, set me down at the great door, and threw a coarse blanket over me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes deliverance from a tossing, restless life into rest. The waves that flung him about have settled into one smooth stream, no part of him is left empty, and the joy is new each day. He credits this to falling into the hands of a true keeper, who lifts off the burden of worldly toil and feeds him within so no weight remains on his back. Now every direction is open and no task binds him, and by humbly rolling at the saints' threshold the petty cares that swarmed like gnats are driven far away. The closing image is the warmest: when his life had become unbearable, the powerful one simply carried him off, laid him at the great door, and covered him with a rough blanket, sheltering him like one who could no longer help himself.

GATHA 3728 The Saints

The saints' road, sure meeting

मराठी मूळ

करणें न करणें वारलें जेथें । जातों तेणें पंथें संतसंगें॥1॥
संतीं हें पहिलें लाविलें निशाण । ते खुणा पाहोन गर्जें नाम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मीं चला या चि वाटे । भरवशानें भेटे पांडुरंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where the distinction between doing and not doing has ceased, I walk that path in the company of saints. The saints first raised this banner, and seeing its mark, I cry out the Name with fervor.

Says Tuka, come along this very road, for with confidence you shall meet Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where doing and not doing have both fallen away, I walk that path in the company of the saints. The saints first raised this banner. I see its mark, and I cry out the Name. Tuka says: come along this very road. With confidence you will meet Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to a road that the saints have already marked and walked, and tells you to take it. The road begins where the anxious accounting of duties, doing this and avoiding that, has dropped away. The saints planted the banner of the Name; seeing their sign, he simply calls the Name aloud and follows. His promise is plain: walk this road in their company and you are not gambling, you will surely meet Panduranga at Pandhari.

GATHA 3729 Renunciation

Renunciation, refusing hollow show

मराठी मूळ

कइंचें कारण । तृष्णा वाढविते सीण ॥1॥
काय करूनि ऐसा संग । सोसें चि तूं पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
रूपीं नाहीं गोडी । हांवे हांवे उर फोडी ॥2॥
तुका न पडे भरी । ऐशा वरदळाचे थोरी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What business has desire here? Craving only increases suffering. Why do You, O Panduranga, endure such company? There is no sweetness in outward form.

In greed, one only beats one's own chest. Says Tuka, I will not be deceived by the glory of such superficiality.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What use is desire here? Craving only grows and wears me out. Why endure such company, Panduranga? There is no sweetness in outward show. In greed a person only beats his own chest. Tuka says: I will not be taken in by the grandeur of such surface things.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on desire itself and asks what it accomplishes, since craving only swells and exhausts. He even asks Panduranga why God puts up with such company in the heart. The outward, showy forms of religion and ambition have no real sweetness; the greedy person, grasping, ends up only striking his own chest in grief. The closing claim is firm: he refuses to be impressed or fooled by impressive surfaces, however grand they look.

GATHA 3730 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the blessed village

मराठी मूळ

धन्य तो ग्राम जेथें हरिदास । धन्य तो चि वास भाग्य तया ॥1॥
ब्रह्मज्ञान तेथें असे घरोघरीं । धन्य त्या नरनारी चतुर्भुज ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं पापा रिघ काळाचें जीवन । हरिनामकीर्त्तन घरोघरीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तिहीं तारिलें सकळां । आपल्या कोटिकुळासहित जीव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is the village where Hari's devotees dwell. Blessed is that place, and blessed is the fortune of those who live there.

The knowledge of Brahman is in every home. Blessed are those men and women, for they are all four-armed like Vishnu.

Sin finds no entry there, and death's power is broken, for the chanting of Hari's name fills every household. Says Tuka, they have saved everyone, including millions of souls along with their entire lineage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is the village where Hari's devotees live. Blessed is that place, and blessed is the fortune of those who dwell there. The knowledge of Brahman is in every house there. Blessed are those men and women; they are four-armed, like Vishnu. Sin finds no way in, and death's hold is broken, for the singing of Hari's name fills every home. Tuka says: they have saved everyone, with their whole lineage, millions of souls.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises a place by the company it keeps: where Hari's devotees live, the village and everyone in it is blessed. He says the knowledge of Brahman is not locked in a few but is in every house, and the ordinary men and women there are as good as four-armed Vishnu himself. Where the Name is sung in every home, sin cannot enter and death loses its grip. The poem lands on the reach of this: such people do not save themselves alone but carry their whole lineage and countless souls along with them.

GATHA 3731 The Saints

Saints, oneness feels all pain

मराठी मूळ

मारूं नये सर्प संतांचिये दृष्टी । होतील ते कष्टी व्यापकपणें ॥1॥
एक सूत्र जीवशिवीं आइक्यता । रोम उपडितां अंग कांपे ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं साहों येत दुखाची ते जाती । परपीडा भूतीं साम्य जालें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दिला नीतीचा संकेत । पुजा नांवें चित्त सुखी तेणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should not kill a serpent in the sight of saints, for it would cause them great distress, seeing God in all beings. There is one thread of unity between the individual soul and the Supreme.

When a hair is pulled, the whole body trembles. They cannot bear the suffering of others, for they have become one with all creatures in their pain.

Says Tuka, the saints have given us this moral teaching: true worship is that which makes the chitta content.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not kill a serpent in a saint's sight. It would distress him, for he sees God spread through all. There is one single thread joining the soul and Shiva. When one hair is pulled, the whole body trembles. The saints cannot bear another's suffering; the pain of every creature has become their own. Tuka says: the saints have given this rule of right conduct. True worship is what leaves the heart content.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram grounds non-violence in a felt oneness, not a mere rule. A saint cannot watch even a snake be killed, because he sees the one God spread through every being and feels the creature's pain as his own. He uses the body's own evidence: pull a single hair and the whole body flinches, so a being who is joined to all flinches at any creature's suffering. From this he draws the saints' teaching for conduct: do not inflict pain, and measure worship not by ritual but by whether it leaves the heart at peace.

GATHA 3732 The Power of the Name

The Name, fear cast off

मराठी मूळ

भय होतें आह्मीपणें । पाठी येणें घातलें ॥1॥
अवघा आपुला चि देश । काळा लेश उरे चि ना ॥ध्रु.॥
समर्थाचें नाम घेतां । मग चिंता काशाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें नारायणें । जालें जिणें सुखाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fear that came from the sense of I and mine has been cast behind. The whole land is now our own, and not a trace of death remains.

When one takes the name of the Capable One, what worry can there be? Says Tuka, through Narayana, life has become blissful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fear that came from I and mine has been thrown behind me. The whole land is now my own; not a trace of death remains. When I take the name of the Capable One, what is there left to worry about? Tuka says: through Narayana, living has become full of joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces fear back to its root, the sense of I and mine, and says that root has been cast off. Once it is gone, there is no foreign ground left to fear; the whole land is his own, and even death leaves no trace. He gives the reason: when you take the name of the One who is able to do anything, worry has nothing to stand on. Resting in Narayana, life itself turns from dread into joy.

GATHA 3733 Faith and Trust

Faith, the path proves easy

मराठी मूळ

विषम वाटे दुरवरी । चालूनि परती घरी । मागील ते उरी । नाहीं उरली भयाची ॥1॥
मुख्य न व्हावा तो नाड । सेवटाचे हातीं गोड । सरलिया चाड । मग कैचे उद्वेग ॥ध्रु.॥
होता पहिला अभ्यास । समयीं घालावया कास । तेव्हां लटिके दोष । योगें अनुतापाच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आहे । बुद्धी केलियानें साहे । जवळी च पाहें । देव वाट स्मरणाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The path seems difficult and long from afar, but after walking it and returning home, no trace of the former fear remains. The essential thing is to avoid ruin.

When the end brings sweetness, and all longing is fulfilled, then where is the question of sorrow? The earlier practice was meant for girding oneself in the hour of need. At that time, faults appear illusory through the force of repentance.

Says Tuka, the intellect endures through whatever is done. Look, God is near, and the path is simply remembrance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From far off the path looks hard and long. But once you have walked it and come home, none of the old fear is left. The main thing is not to be ruined. When the end turns out sweet, and all longing is satisfied, where is there room for sorrow? The early practice was meant to gird you for the hour of need. Then the faults look unreal, burned by repentance. Tuka says: the mind holds up under whatever it does. Look, God is near, and the path is simply remembrance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks to the beginner's dread, naming it and then dissolving it. Seen from a distance the spiritual path looks long and treacherous, but those who have walked it home report that the fear was unfounded. The one thing that matters is not to throw your life away; when the journey ends in sweetness and longing is filled, sorrow has no place left. He reframes the discipline you practice now as armor stored up for the hard hour, and says past faults, met with real repentance, lose their power. The reassurance is plain: God is not far, and the whole road is nothing more than remembering Him.

GATHA 3734 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the mind comes to rest

मराठी मूळ

आतां कोठें धांवे मन । तुझे चरण देखिलिया ॥1॥
भाग गेला सीण गेला । अवघा जाला आनंदु ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेमरसें बैसली मिठी । आवडी लाठी मुखासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां जोगें । विठ्ठल घोगें खरें माप ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now where can the mind run, having seen Your feet? Weariness is gone, suffering is gone, and everything has become pure joy. A tight embrace of love has taken hold, and the mouth is fixed in longing devotion.

Says Tuka, what suits us is Vitthal, the generous and true measure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now where can the mind run, once it has seen Your feet? Weariness is gone, suffering is gone; all of it has turned to joy. A tight embrace of love has taken hold, and the mouth is fixed in longing. Tuka says: what suits us is Vitthal, the generous and the true measure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment the restless mind finally stops. Having seen Vitthal's feet, the mind has nowhere left to run; the tiredness and pain it carried simply dissolve into joy. Love grips him like a close embrace, and his mouth stays fixed in longing for the Lord. He ends by naming what fits him: not the wide world's offers, but Vitthal himself, generous and a true measure that does not cheat.

GATHA 3735 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the all-pervader

मराठी मूळ

विश्वीं विश्वंभर । बोले वेदांतींचा सार ॥1॥
जगीं जगदीश । शास्त्रें वदती सावकास ॥ध्रु.॥
व्यापिलें हें नारायणें । ऐसीं गर्जती पुराणें ॥2॥
जनीं जनादनन । संत बोलती वचनें ॥3॥
सूर्याचिया परी । तुका लोकीं क्रीडा करी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vishvambhara pervades the universe. This is the essence spoken in Vedanta.

Jagadisha dwells in the world. The scriptures declare this patiently.

Narayana has pervaded all of this, so proclaim the Puranas. Janardana is in all people, so the saints speak in their utterances.

Says Tuka, like the sun, he plays among the worlds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vishvambhara fills the whole universe. This is the heart of what Vedanta says. Jagadisha dwells in the world; the scriptures say so plainly. Narayana has spread through all of this; so the Puranas declare. Janardana is in every person; so the saints speak. Tuka says: like the sun, he plays among the worlds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stacks witness on witness to one claim: God is everywhere. Under each of His names, Vishvambhara, Jagadisha, Narayana, Janardana, he cites a different authority, the Vedanta, the scriptures, the Puranas, and the saints, all saying the same thing. The God who fills the universe is also the God in every single person. The closing image is light at play: like the sun, He pervades and shines through all the worlds without being bound by any of them.

GATHA 3736 Prayers

Prayer, the senses will not hold

मराठी मूळ

निरोधती परि न मोडे विकार । बहु हीं दुस्तर विषयद्वारें ॥1॥
राहातेति तुह्मी भरोनि अंतरीं । होतों तदाकारी निविनषचि ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपेचिया साक्षी असती जवळी । वचनें मोकळीं सरत नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ताळा मेळवणीपाशीं । विनंती पायापाशीं हे चि करीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I try to restrain them, but the passions will not break. The gates of sense pleasures are very formidable.

If You would dwell fully within my chitta, I would become absorbed in You and free of all desires. The witnesses of grace stand near, yet loose words do not avail.

Says Tuka, at the moment of reckoning, this alone is my prayer at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I try to hold them back, but the passions will not break. The gates of the senses are very hard to cross. If only You would fill my heart and stay, I would become absorbed in You and free of every desire. The witnesses of Your grace stand near, yet loose words get me nowhere. Tuka says: at the hour of reckoning, this alone is my prayer at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits a failure he cannot fix by effort. He restrains the passions, yet they will not break, and the doorways of the senses prove too strong to pass through on his own. So he turns the problem over to God: if You will only fill and stay in my heart, I will be absorbed in You and the desires will fall away by themselves. He knows grace is close at hand, and that mere talk will not earn it. So he reduces everything to one plea laid at God's feet for the moment of final reckoning.

GATHA 3737 The Nature of God

Nature of God, one without division

मराठी मूळ

अद्वय चि द्वय जालें चि कारण । धरिलें नारायणें भक्तिसुख ॥1॥
अपरोक्ष आकार जाला चतुर्भुज । एकतत्त्व बीज भिन्न नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शून्य निरशुन्यी राहिलें निर्मळ । तें दिसे केवळ इटेवरी ॥2॥
सुखें घ्यावें नाम वदना ही चाड । सरिता वापी आड एक पाणी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मी च आहें तेणें सुखें । भेद नाहीं मुखें नाम गातों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The non-dual has become dual for the sake of creation. Narayana has embraced the joy of devotion.

The formless has taken the visible four-armed form. The one essence, the one seed, admits no division.

The pure and spotless void rests upon the brick at Pandhari. Joyfully take His name on your tongue.

Rivers, wells, and tanks all hold the same water. Says Tuka, I myself exist by that very bliss. There is no difference.

I sing the Name with my lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The non-dual became two for the sake of creation. Narayana took on the joy of being loved. The formless took the visible four-armed form, yet the one seed, the one essence, has no division in it. The pure, spotless void rests there upon the brick. Take His name gladly on your tongue. Rivers, wells, and tanks all hold one water. Tuka says: I myself exist by that very bliss. There is no difference; I sing the Name with my lips.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds together two things that seem to clash: God is one without a second, yet here He stands as a visible form. The One appeared as two for the sake of creation, and the formless Narayana took a four-armed shape so that love could be exchanged, but the seed and essence stay undivided. That spotless absolute is what rests on the brick at Pandhari, so taking His name is touching the One. His image makes it plain: rivers, wells, and tanks look separate but hold a single water; he himself lives by that one bliss, and seeing no real division, he simply sings the Name.

GATHA 3738 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the generous king on the brick

मराठी मूळ

उदार चक्रवर्ती । वैकुंठीचा भूपति । पुंडलिकाचिया प्रीती । विटेवरी राहिला ॥1॥
सर्वसिद्धीचा दातार । सवें आणिला परिवार । भक्त अभयंकर । घ्याघ्या ऐसें ह्मणतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
जेणें हें विश्व निमिनलें । महर्षीदेवा संस्थापिलें । एकवीस स्वर्गांतें धरिलें । सत्तामात्रें आपुलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृपावंत । इच्छले पुरवी अर्थ। रिद्धिसिद्धमुक्ती देतसे । शेखीं संग आपुला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The generous sovereign of Vaikuntha, out of love for Pundalik, stands upon the brick. He is the giver of all attainments and has brought His entire retinue with Him.

He who grants fearlessness to His devotees calls out, saying take, take. He who created this universe and established the great sages and gods, who upholds the twenty-one heavens by His mere will alone.

Says Tuka, the compassionate one fulfills every desire and grants prosperity, powers, liberation, and ultimately His own company.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The generous emperor, the king of Vaikuntha, out of love for Pundalik, stands upon the brick. He is the giver of every attainment, and He has brought His whole retinue with Him. He who grants His devotees freedom from fear keeps calling out, take, take. He who made this universe, who set up the great sages and gods, who holds up the twenty-one heavens by His will alone. Tuka says: the compassionate one fulfills every wish, and grants prosperity, powers, and liberation; and in the end, His own company.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marvels that the sovereign of Vaikuntha, who could stay enthroned in heaven, came and stands on a humble brick at Pandhari out of love for his devotee Pundalik. This is the same God who made the universe, established the sages and gods, and upholds all the heavens by his mere will. Yet here he stands open-handed, calling out take, take, and giving away every gift, riches, powers, even liberation. The poem saves the greatest gift for last: beyond all these prizes, the compassionate Lord finally gives his own company, which is the thing worth having.

GATHA 3739 The Nature of God

Nature of God, complete in all virtues

मराठी मूळ

सकलगुणें संपन्न । एक देवाचें लक्षण ॥1॥
वरकड कोठें कांहीं । एक आहे एक नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
षड्गुण ऐश्वर्य संपन्न । एक भगवंतीं जाण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जेंजें बोला । तेंतें साजे या विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To be endowed with all virtues, that is the singular mark of God. In all others, something is present and something is lacking.

The six divine glories in their fullness belong to the Lord alone. Says Tuka, whatever you say, it all befits this Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To be full of every virtue: that is the one mark of God. In all others, one thing is there and another is missing. The six divine glories in their fullness belong to the Lord alone. Tuka says: whatever you say of Him, it all fits this Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers a simple test for what God is: the one who is complete in every virtue. Everything else falls short, having some qualities and lacking others, so it cannot be God. The six lordly glories that scripture names belong in their fullness to the Lord alone, never partially. He ends by pinning this to a name and face: whatever lofty thing you can rightly say of God, all of it fits this Vitthal standing before him.

GATHA 3740 Devotion to Vitthal

Urgent invitation, come to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

वैकुंठींचें सुख पंढरिये आलें । अवघें पुंडलिकें सांटविलें ॥1॥
घ्या रे घ्या रे माझे बाप । जिव्हा घेउनि खरें माप। करा एक खेप । मग करणें न लगे ॥ध्रु.॥
विषय गुंडोनी ठेवीं पसारा । मग धांव घ्या पंढरपुरा ॥2॥
जंव आहे आयुष्याचा लेश। तंव करीं पंढरीचा वास ॥3॥
अळस न करीं लाभाचा । तुका विनवी कुणबियाचा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The bliss of Vaikuntha has come to Pandhari. Pundalik has gathered it all and stored it there.

Take it, take it, O my fathers. Take the true measure with your tongues.

Make this one journey, and then nothing more needs to be done. Fold up the wares of sense pleasures and run to Pandharpur.

While there is still a breath of life left, dwell in Pandhari. Says Tuka, this farmer's son implores you: do not be lazy when profit is at hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The bliss of Vaikuntha has come down to Pandhari. Pundalik has gathered it all and stored it here. Take it, take it, O my fathers. Take the true measure with your tongues. Make this one journey, and then nothing more is left to do. Fold up the spread of sense pleasures and run to Pandharpur. While there is still a breath of life left, dwell in Pandhari. Tuka says: do not be lazy when the profit is right here. This farmer's son begs you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is calling the people he loves to a place and a profit he says is sitting right in front of them. The bliss of Vaikuntha, he says, is no longer far off in heaven; Pundalik has drawn it down to Pandhari and stored it there for the taking. So measure it out with your own tongues, by chanting the Name. He sets the price plainly: pack up the whole spread of sense pleasures and run. Make this one journey while you still breathe, and after it nothing else needs doing. The farmer's son ends by scolding the only real danger, laziness in the face of certain gain.

GATHA 3741 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the kirtan-shy gossip

मराठी मूळ

देवाचें चरित्र नाठवे सर्वथा । विनोदार्थ कथा गोड वाटे ॥1॥
हातावरि हात हासोनि आफळी । वाजवितां टाळी लाज वाटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे थुंका त्याच्या तोंडावरि । जातो यमपुरी भोगावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who never remembers the deeds of God yet finds pleasure in gossip and idle tales, one who claps hands with laughter but feels ashamed to clap in kirtan. Says Tuka, spit upon the face of such a one. He is headed for the city of Yama to suffer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here is one who never once remembers the deeds of God, yet finds gossip and idle tales sweet. He claps his hands and laughs along with them, but feels ashamed to clap his hands in kirtan. Tuka says: spit on the face of such a one. He is going to the city of Yama to suffer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a split that a person carries in his own two hands. The same hands clap freely for gossip and laughter but go shy and ashamed when it is time to clap in kirtan, and the mouth that loves idle tales never once recalls what God has done. The harsh line, spit on that face, is aimed at the pattern, not at scorn for a soul: it asks you to feel the shame in the right place. Tukaram lands the stake by following the habit to its end. A life spent shameless about gossip and ashamed of the Name walks itself toward Yama's city and its suffering.

GATHA 3742 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion over non-dual merger

मराठी मूळ

अद्वैतीं तों माझें नाहीं समाधान । गोड हे चरण सेवा तुझी ॥1॥
करूनी उचित देई हें चि दान । आवडे कीर्तन नाम तुझें॥ध्रु.॥
देवभक्तपण सुखाचा सोहळा । ठेवुनी निराळा दावी मज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आहे तुझें हें सकळ । कोणी एके काळें देई मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I find no satisfaction in Advaita alone. Sweet to me is the service of Your feet.

Grant me this as my rightful gift: let me love Your kirtan and Your name. The celebration of the bond between God and devotee is the true joy.

Keep it distinct and show it to me. Says Tuka, all of this is Yours. Grant it to me at some time.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In Advaita alone I find no peace. Sweet to me are these feet, and the service of You. Do this fitting thing: give me only this gift, that I love Your kirtan and Your name. The joy of being God and devotee, the sweet festival of the two, set it apart and show it to me. Tuka says: all of this is already Yours. Give it to me at some time.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the highest prize of the non-dual path because it would dissolve the very thing he wants. Advaita, the merging where worshipper and worshipped become one, leaves him no satisfaction; what is sweet to him is to stay at the feet and keep serving. So he names the one gift he is asking for: love for the Name and the kirtan, and the festival that can only happen while God and devotee remain two. He even asks God to keep that distinctness deliberately, to set it apart and show it to him. The closing line is quietly bold: since all of it is God's to give anyway, let him be given the lasting two-ness rather than the merger.

GATHA 3743 The Power of the Name

The Name as the whole of practice

मराठी मूळ

हें चि माझें तप हें चि माझें दान । हें चि अनुष्ठान नाम तुझें ॥1॥
हें चि माझें तीर्थ हें चि माझें व्रत । सत्य हें सुकृत नाम तुझें ॥ध्रु.॥
हा चि माझा धर्म हें चि माझें कर्म । हा चि नित्यनेम नाम तुझें ॥2॥
हा चि माझा योग हा चि माझा यज्ञ । हें चि जपध्यान नाम तुझें ॥3॥
हें चि माझें ज्ञान श्रवण मनन । हें चि निजध्यासन नाम तुझे ॥4॥
हा चि कुळाचार हा चि कुळधर्म । हा चि नित्यनेम नाम तुझें ॥5॥
हा माझा आचार हा माझा विचार । हा माझा निर्धार नाम तुझें ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे दुजें सांगायासि नाहीं । नामेंविण कांहीं धनवित्त ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your name is my austerity, Your name is my charity, Your name is my spiritual discipline. Your name is my pilgrimage, Your name is my vow, Your name is my true merit.

Your name is my dharma, Your name is my work, Your name is my daily practice. Your name is my yoga, Your name is my sacrifice, Your name is my prayer and meditation.

Your name is my knowledge, my listening, and my reflection. Your name is my constant contemplation.

Your name is my family tradition, my family dharma, and my daily observance. Your name is my conduct, my thought, and my firm resolve.

Says Tuka, there is nothing else to declare. Without the Name, I have no wealth at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This alone is my austerity, this alone is my charity, this alone is my discipline: Your name. This alone is my pilgrimage, this alone is my vow; my one true merit is Your name. This is my dharma, this is my work, this is my daily rule: Your name. This is my yoga, this is my sacrifice, this is my muttered prayer and meditation: Your name. This is my knowledge, my listening, my reflection, my constant dwelling within: Your name. This is my family custom, my family dharma, my daily observance: Your name. This is my conduct, my thinking, my firm resolve: Your name. Tuka says: there is nothing else to tell of. Without the Name I have no wealth at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is collapsing the whole range of religion into one practice and saying it has fully replaced the rest. Item by item he takes the recognized works, austerity, charity, pilgrimage, vows, ritual duty, yoga, sacrifice, scriptural study, family custom, and assigns every one of them the same single content: Your name. This is not adding the Name to the list; it is the Name standing in for the entire list. The repetition is the argument, each line shutting another door until only chanting is left. He ends by stripping himself bare on purpose: there is nothing else to report, and apart from the Name he owns no wealth at all.

GATHA 3744 The Nature of God

Confident plea, the record of mercy

मराठी मूळ

कोण साक्षीविण । केलें उद्धारा भजन ॥1॥
ऐसें सांगा जी दातारा । माझी भक्ति परंपरा ॥ध्रु.॥
कोणें नाहीं केली आळी । ब्रह्मज्ञानाहुनि वेगळी ॥2॥
कोणाचें तों कोड । नाहीं पुरविला लाड ॥3॥
कोणाच्या उद्धारा । केला विलंब माघारा॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे भिन्न । कांहो बोले साक्षीविण ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, O generous Lord, who has ever been delivered through devotion without a witness? What is the lineage of my devotion? Who has ever been refused a prayer that was distinct from the knowledge of Brahman? Whose desire have You left unfulfilled? Whose salvation have You ever delayed or turned back? Says Tuka, why would anyone speak of separation without evidence?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who was ever lifted up by devotion without a witness to it? Tell me this, O giver: what is the lineage of my devotion? Who ever made a plea, set apart from the knowledge of Brahman, and was refused? Whose longing did You leave unsatisfied? Whose rescue did You ever delay or turn back? Tuka says: why would anyone, without proof, speak of being kept separate from You?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing God with God's own track record, almost like a case argued before the giver. He asks for the witnesses and the lineage of devotion, the long line of those lifted up before him, and then runs through the evidence as questions that answer themselves. Has any devotee's plea, made simply in love and apart from the dry knowledge of Brahman, ever been refused? Has any longing gone unmet, any rescue been delayed? The final line turns the doubt back on the doubter: with this whole record standing, no one has grounds to claim God keeps them at a distance.

GATHA 3745 Devotion to Vitthal

Steady service, God walks alongside

मराठी मूळ

सुखरूप चाली । हळूहळू उसंतिली ॥1॥
बाळगोपाळाची वाट । सेवे सेवकता नीट ॥ध्रु.॥
जरी झाला श्रम । तरी पडों नये भ्रम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दासां । देव सरिसासरिसा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The joyful path unfolds slowly and steadily. This is the way of the young and old together, walking in devoted service.

Even if weariness comes, one should not fall into delusion. Says Tuka, God walks step by step alongside His servants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The happy path opens slowly, gently, with room to breathe. This is the way of young and old together, walking straight in willing service. Even if weariness comes, do not fall into confusion. Tuka says: with His servants, God walks step for step beside them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the pace of the devotional path and the company you keep on it. It is a happy road that opens slowly and gently, not a sprint, and it is walked in plain service where young and old move along together. He warns about the one real hazard along the way: tiredness, which can tip into confusion and make you doubt the road. Against that he sets the steadying fact he wants remembered. God does not watch the servant from ahead or behind but walks step for step at his side, so the weariness need never become despair.

GATHA 3746 Faith and Trust

Faith, the strayed path set right

मराठी मूळ

चुकली ते वाट । पुढें सांपडवी नीट ॥1॥
ह्मणउनी गर्भवास । नेणती ते हरिचे दास ॥ध्रु.॥
संचिताचा संग । काय जाणों पावें भंग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दृष्टी उघडितों नव्हे कष्टी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one has strayed from the path, God sets it right again further along. Therefore, the servants of Hari never know the womb of rebirth.

What of past karma? Who knows when it might lose its hold? Says Tuka, when one's eyes are opened, there is no more suffering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I have lost the path, He sets it straight again further on. So the servants of Hari do not know the womb of rebirth. As for the karma stored up from before, who knows when it loses its hold? Tuka says: once the eyes are opened, there is no more suffering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is answering the fear that one stumble dooms a devotee. If you wander off the road, he says, God simply sets it straight again up ahead, so Hari's servants are spared the womb of rebirth that wandering would otherwise earn. He raises the obvious objection himself, the weight of karma stored up from the past, and leaves it as an open question, suggesting it can lose its grip in a way no one can predict. The closing line names the real turning point. The end of suffering comes not from a clean record but from opened eyes, the seeing that changes everything.

GATHA 3747 Longing and Separation

Longing, the deathbed meeting

मराठी मूळ

कइं तो दिवस देखेन डोळां । कल्याण मंगळामंगळाचें॥1॥
आयुष्याच्या शेवटीं पायांसवे भेटी । किळवरें तुटी जाल्या त्वरे ॥ध्रु.॥
सरो हें संचित पदरींचा गोवा । उताविळें देवा मन जालें ॥2॥
पाउलापाउलीं करितां विचार । अनंतविकार चित्ता अंगीं ॥3॥
ह्मणउनि भयाभीत होतो जीव । भाकितसें कींव अटाहासें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे होइल आइकिलें कानीं । तरि चक्रपाणी धांव घाला ॥5॥
दुःखाच्या उत्तरीं आळविले पाय । पाहणें तों काय अजून अंत ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When will I see that day of supreme blessing and auspiciousness? At the end of this life, may there be a meeting at Your feet, and may all attachment to this wretched body be swiftly severed. Let this accumulated karma and entanglement come to an end, for the mind has become eager, O God.

At every step, when I reflect, countless agitations arise in the mind. Therefore, the jiva is gripped by fear, and I cry out desperately for mercy.

Says Tuka, if what I have said reaches Your ears, then rush to me, O wielder of the disc. In the depths of sorrow I call upon Your feet.

How much longer will You test me?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When will I see that day with my eyes, the day of every blessing and grace? At the end of my life, let there be a meeting at Your feet, and let this wretched body's ties be cut quickly. Let this stored-up karma and the knot in my lap be finished; my mind has grown impatient, O God. At every step, when I think it over, endless agitations rise in my mind and body. So the jiva is gripped with fear, and I cry out for pity with all my voice. Tuka says: if what I have said has reached Your ears, then come running, O wielder of the disc. In my sorrow I have called and called on Your feet. How much longer will You keep me waiting for the end?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for one thing, a meeting at God's feet at the very end of life, with the body's ties cut quickly so nothing holds him back. He wants the stored-up karma and the tangle in his lap done with, and admits his mind has grown impatient for it. The reason for the urgency is honest fear: every time he examines himself, countless agitations rise, and the jiva trembles, so he cries out for mercy at full voice. The poem turns into a direct appeal, if his words have reached God's ears, then come running, O wielder of the disc. It ends not in calm but in the ache of waiting, asking how much longer the end will be withheld.

GATHA 3748 Longing and Separation

Longing, waiting on the path

मराठी मूळ

कळों येतें वर्म । तरी न पवतों श्रम ॥1॥
तुह्मां शिरीं होता भार । आह्मां कैचा संचार ॥ध्रु.॥
होतें अभयदान । तरी स्थिर होतें मन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहें । ऐसी वाट उभा आहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I knew the secret, I would not suffer this toil. When the burden was on Your head, how could I have any interference? If You had given the assurance of fearlessness, then my mind would have been steady.

Says Tuka, look, I stand here waiting on the path.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I understood the secret of it, I would not be worn out like this. The burden was on Your head; what stirring could there be from my side? Had the gift of fearlessness been given, my mind would have grown steady. Tuka says: look, I am standing right here on the path.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is laying his exhaustion at God's feet and quietly handing back the responsibility. He admits he does not know the secret of the path, and says if he did he would not be wearing himself out trying. Then he presses the point that the burden was placed on God's head, not his, so his own effort could never be what carries it. What he is really asking for is the gift of fearlessness, the assurance that would let his restless mind settle at last. He ends by simply pointing to himself: look, I am standing right here on the path, waiting for You to act.

GATHA 3749 Prayers

Prayer, remembrance and life's moisture

मराठी मूळ

वारंवार हा चि न पडावा विसर । वसावें अंतर तुमच्या गुणीं ॥1॥
इच्छेचा ये दाता तूं एक समर्था । अगा कृपावंता मायबापा ॥ध्रु.॥
लाभाचिये वोढी उताविळें मन । त्यापरि चिंतन चरणाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवी जीवन ओलावा । पांडुरंगे दावा शीघ्र आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Again and again, let me not forget You. Let my chitta dwell in Your qualities.

You alone are the giver of all desires, O mighty one, O compassionate mother and father. As eagerly as the mind rushes toward gain, so let it contemplate Your feet.

Says Tuka, may my jiva find the moisture of life within. O Panduranga, reveal Yourself swiftly now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Again and again, let me never forget this. Let my heart live inside Your qualities. You alone are the giver of what is desired, O mighty one; O merciful mother and father. As eagerly as the mind rushes after gain, let it dwell that way on Your feet. Tuka says: let my soul find the moisture of life. O Panduranga, show Yourself quickly now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for the one thing he keeps losing, steady remembrance, asking that he never forget and that his heart take up residence inside God's qualities. He addresses Panduranga as the only giver of what is desired and as mother and father at once, leaning on both power and tenderness. Then he names the honest gap between how he is and how he wants to be: the mind chases worldly gain with real eagerness, and he begs that the same eagerness be turned toward God's feet. The closing image is dryness longing for water. Let the soul find the moisture of life, and let God reveal Himself quickly, now, not someday.

GATHA 3750 Devotion to Vitthal

Tender devotion, the babbling child

मराठी मूळ

आइका माझीं कवतुकउत्तरें । देउनी सादरें चित्त देवा॥1॥
वोरसें आवडी आलों पायापासीं । होय तें मनेसीं सुख कीजे ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमचें न भंगे सवौत्तमपण । करितां समाधान लेंकराचें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी बोलतों बोबडें । तरी वाडे कोडें कवतुक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear my playful words, O God, and give them Your attentive chitta. I have come to Your feet out of love and affection.

Whatever brings You joy, let that bring joy to my mind as well. Your supreme excellence is not diminished by satisfying the wish of a child.

Says Tuka, even if I speak in a babbling way, the delight of this playful devotion only grows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hear my playful words, O God, and give them Your full attention. I have come close to Your feet, brimming with love. Whatever brings You joy, let that be the joy of my mind too. Your supreme greatness is not lessened by granting a child its wish. Tuka says: even if I speak in baby-talk, the delight of this play only grows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is approaching God not as a petitioner but as a doted-on child, and asking only to be listened to with full attention. He has come to the feet brimming with love, and surrenders his own preference: whatever pleases God, let that please him too. Then he answers an unspoken worry, that asking favors might somehow diminish God. A parent's greatness is not lessened by granting a child's wish, he says, so God loses nothing by indulging him. He even turns his own clumsiness into charm: if his words come out as baby-talk, that only makes the loving play between child and parent sweeter.

GATHA 3751 Prayers

Prayer, the mother in the final hour

मराठी मूळ

जन्मा आलियाचा लाभ । पद्मनाभदरुषणें ॥1॥
पाठीलागा येतो काळ । तूं कृपाळु माउली ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण्या उपायें हें घडे । भव आंगडें सुटकेचें ॥2॥
बहु उसंतीत आलों । तया भ्यालों स्थळासी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं जननी । ये निर्वाणी विठ्ठले ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gain of this human birth lies in the vision of the Lord. Death pursues us from behind, and You are the compassionate mother.

By what means can this deliverance from the body happen? I have grown so weary, and I fear that place of return. Says Tuka, You are the mother. Come now in this final hour, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The gain of being born a human is the sight of the Lotus-navelled Lord. Death comes chasing at my back, and You are the merciful mother. By what means can this happen, this slipping free of the body's coat? I have grown so weary, and I am afraid of that place I must return to. Tuka says: You are my mother. Come now, in this last extremity, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the single point of a human life and then crying for help to reach it. The whole gain of this birth, he says, is the vision of the Lord; everything else is beside the point. But death is chasing him from behind, so the matter is urgent, and he turns to God as a frightened child turns to its mother. He asks plainly how the release can be managed, the slipping free of the body like shedding a coat, and confesses he is worn out and afraid of the rebirth that waits if he fails. The poem ends as a deathbed plea: You are my mother, so come now, in this final hour, O Vitthal.

GATHA 3752 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the God who comes running

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं गुणदोष लिंपों देत अंगीं । झाडितां प्रसंगीं वरावरी ॥1॥
निकटवासिया आळवितों धांवा । तेथूनियां देवा सोडवूनी ॥ध्रु.॥
उमटे अंतरीं तें करूं प्रगट । कळोनी बोभाट धांव घालीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरि वांचलों या काळें । समर्थाचे बळें सुखी असों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not let merit or fault cling to my being, brushing them off as they come on the surface. O God, who dwells close within, I call on You to rush in and deliver me from that place.

Whatever stirs within, I make it known openly, and recognizing the outcry, You come rushing. Says Tuka, I have survived this time by the strength of the Capable One, and in that strength I find my happiness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not let merit or fault stick to me. As they come on the surface, I brush them off. You live close within me, so I call out and run to You; from that place, You set me free. Whatever rises inside me, I make it known out loud. You hear the cry and come running. Tuka says: I have survived this time by the strength of the Capable One; in His strength I stay happy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to be defined by his own record, good or bad, brushing both merit and fault off the surface rather than hoarding either. What he keeps instead is a habit of crying out to the God he says dwells close within. He does not hide what stirs inside him; he speaks it openly, and trusts that the outcry itself brings God rushing to deliver him. The whole poem rests its weight on one claim: he is alive and at peace not by his own power but by the strength of the Capable One.

GATHA 3753 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, cling and never let go

मराठी मूळ

आतां येणें पडिपाडें । रस सेवूं हा निवाडें । मुंगी नेली गोडें । ठेविलिये अडचणी ॥1॥
तैसें होय माझ्या जीवा । चरण न सोडीं केशवा । विषयबुद्धि हेवा । वोस पडो सकळ ॥ध्रु.॥
भुकेलिया श्वाना । गांठ पडे सवें अन्ना । भुकों पाहे प्राणा । परि तोंडिंची न सोडी ॥2॥
काय जिंकियेलें मन । जीवित्व कामातुरा तृण । मागे विभिचारिण । भक्ती तुका ये जाती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, with firm resolve, let me drink this nectar of devotion. Just as an ant carries away the sweetness stored in the narrowest crevice, so may my jiva cling to Your feet, O Keshava, and never let go.

Let all desire for sense objects become desolate and barren. A hungry dog, once it finds food, may risk its very life, but it will not release what is in its mouth.

Says Tuka, as a lover consumed by passion counts life as a blade of grass, and as an unfaithful woman pursues her desire, so I pursue devotion of that very intensity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, with my mind made up, let me drink this nectar. An ant carries off the sweetness stored in the narrowest crack; let my jiva cling like that to Your feet, Keshava, and never let go. Let every hunger for sense objects fall barren and waste. A hungry dog will risk its life over its food, but it will not let go of what is in its mouth. What victory is there over the mind? To a man burning with desire, his own life is a blade of grass; an unfaithful woman chases what she wants. Tuka says: with that same hunger, I come for devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for a single-minded, gripping devotion and reaching for the bluntest images he can find to measure it. He wants to hold Krishna's feet the way an ant holds onto sweetness in a crevice, the way a hungry dog will not drop the food in its mouth even on pain of death. To make room for it he asks that every craving for sense objects go barren. Then he names the stakes without flinching: the lover who counts his life as worthless grass, the unfaithful woman who chases her desire past all shame. He turns even those reckless hungers into a yardstick, asking that his pursuit of God be at least that fierce.

GATHA 3754 Prayers

Prayer, the weak one pleading

मराठी मूळ

न पवीजे तया ठाया । आलों कायाक्लेशेसीं ॥1॥
आतां माझें आणीं मना । नारायणा ओजेचें ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु रिणें पिडिलों फार । परिहार करावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निर्बळशक्ति । काकुलती म्हुण येतों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have not reached that place, though I have come bearing the sufferings of this body. Now bring my mind back to its proper course, O Narayana.

I am burdened under many debts. Please grant me relief.

Says Tuka, I am weak in strength, and that is why I come to You pleading.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have not reached that place, though I came here carrying the sufferings of this body. Now bring my mind back to its proper course, Narayana. I am crushed under many debts; grant me relief. Tuka says: I have no strength of my own, and that is why I come pleading.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he has fallen short. He set out toward the goal and bore the body's pain along the way, but he has not arrived, and he asks Narayana to bring his straying mind back into line. The many debts he names are the weight of all that binds him, and he begs to be released from them. He makes no claim of merit or power; the one ground he stands on is his own weakness, which is exactly why he comes pleading rather than demanding.

GATHA 3755 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, contentment found at last

मराठी मूळ

बहु फिरलों ठायाठाव । कोठें भाव पुरे चि ना ॥1॥
समाधान तों पावलों । उरलों बोलों यावरि ॥ध्रु.॥
घे गा देवा आशीर्वाद । आमुच्या नांद भाग्यानें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जेवूं आधी । खवखव मधीं सारावी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have wandered far and wide, but nowhere has my longing been fulfilled. Now I have found contentment and remain just to speak of it.

Accept this blessing, O God, and abide in our good fortune. Says Tuka, let us eat first and take care of the itching in between.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have wandered far and wide, but nowhere was my longing filled. Now I have found peace, and I stay only to speak of it. Take this blessing, God, and abide in our good fortune. Tuka says: let us eat first, and settle the small itch in between.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back on a long search that left him empty everywhere he went, and reports the turn: he has finally come to rest. Now that he is content, he stays on with no other purpose than to tell of it. He even speaks to God as a close companion, offering a blessing and asking Him to dwell in this good fortune. The homely last line puts first things first: take the real nourishment now, and the lesser itches can be dealt with along the way.

GATHA 3756 Faith and Trust

Faith, no one leaves empty

मराठी मूळ

कोण येथें रिता गेला । जो जो आला या ठाया॥1॥
तातडी ते काय आतां । ज्याची चिंता तयासी ॥ध्रु.॥
नांवासाटीं नेघें भार । न लगे फार वित्पित्त ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे न लगे जावें । कोठें देवें सुचनें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who has ever gone from here empty-handed? Everyone who has come to this place has received. Then what is the hurry now? His concern is for each one.

I will not take on any burden for the sake of mere reputation. No great learning is needed.

Says Tuka, God need not be sought elsewhere. His presence is already revealed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who has ever left this place empty-handed? Everyone who came here received. So why the hurry now? He cares for each one. I take on no burden just for the sake of a name; no great learning is needed. Tuka says: there is no need to go anywhere. God need not be sought elsewhere; His presence is already here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram steadies the anxious seeker with a plain assurance: nobody who has come to God's door has ever gone away with nothing. Since God carries the concern for each person, there is no cause to rush or to grasp. He refuses to take on burdens merely to build a reputation and insists that no scholarship is required to be received. The closing claim is the boldest one: stop searching elsewhere, because the presence you are looking for is already disclosed right here.

GATHA 3757 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the half-hearted pilgrim

मराठी मूळ

इंद्रियाचें पुरे कोड । तें चि गोड पुढती ही ॥1॥
जावें म्हणती पंढरपुरा । हा चि बरा संसार ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसलें तें मनामुळीं । सुख डोळीं देखिलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देती कान । वाणावाण निवडूनी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The cravings of the senses are satisfied, yet the same pleasures seem sweet again. People say they will go to Pandharpur, but they find this worldly life more agreeable.

What has settled at the root of the mind is what the eyes see as happiness. Says Tuka, they lend their ears selectively, sorting between what they want and what they do not.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The senses get their fill, and the same pleasures look sweet all over again. People say they will go to Pandharpur, yet they find this worldly life more to their liking. What has settled deep in the mind is what the eyes call happiness. Tuka says: they lend their ears only where they please, picking and choosing what they want to hear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram watches the trap of repeated craving: the senses are satisfied, and at once the same pleasures look sweet again, so satisfaction never sticks. People talk piously about going to Pandharpur, but what they really prefer is the worldly life they already have. The point he lands is about the heart, not the lips: whatever has lodged at the root of the mind is what a person will count as happiness and chase with the eyes. Even their listening is selective, taking in only what flatters the desire already sitting inside, which is worth turning back on oneself rather than at the neighbor.

GATHA 3758 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the master's honor at stake

मराठी मूळ

आतां देवा मोकिळलें । तुह्मी भलें दिसेना ॥1॥
आतां नाहीं जीवभाव । उरला ठाव वेगळा ॥ध्रु.॥
सांभाळुन घ्यावें देवा । आपणासवा यावरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नग्न भाज । तरि ते लाज स्वामीसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, O God, I have set myself free, and things no longer appear as they did. Now the sense of separate selfhood is gone, and no separate place remains.

Take charge and keep me with You from now on, O God. Says Tuka, if Your servant goes naked, the shame is on the master.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, God, I have let myself go, and nothing looks the way it did. Now there is no separate sense of I; no separate place is left. Take charge of me, God, and keep me with You from here on. Tuka says: if Your servant goes about naked, the shame falls on the master.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the surrender as already done: he has released his grip on himself, and the old way of seeing has dissolved. With the sense of a separate self gone, there is no longer any place standing apart from God. From inside that emptiness he hands himself over completely and asks God to take charge and keep him close. The sharp closing line makes the surrender total: a servant who is left exposed shames his own master, so Tukaram puts the responsibility for his care squarely on the Lord he belongs to.

GATHA 3759 Longing and Separation

Longing, crying at the great gate

मराठी मूळ

आशाबद्ध आह्मी भाकितसों कींव । तत्पर हा जीव कार्यापाशीं ॥1॥
प्रतिउत्तराची पाहातसें वाट । करूनि बोभाट महाद्वारीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुल्या उचितें करूनियां ठेवीं । संबंध गोसावी तोडोनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक जालिया निवाड । कोण बडबड करी मग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Bound by hope, I cry out for mercy, with my whole life devoted to this cause. I wait for a reply, crying out at the great gate.

Do what is fitting according to Your nature, O Lord, even if it means cutting all ties. Says Tuka, once the final verdict is given, who would carry on with empty chatter?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bound by hope, I cry out for mercy, my whole life bent on this one thing. I stand at the great gate, calling out, waiting for an answer. Do what fits Your own nature, Lord, even if it means cutting every tie. Tuka says: once the final verdict is given, who keeps up the empty chatter then?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is held fast by hope and pours his whole life into a single plea for mercy, crying out at the great gate and waiting for any reply. He leaves the outcome to God, asking only that the Lord act according to His own nature, even if that means severing every attachment that binds him. He is not bargaining for a particular result; he wants the matter settled. The last line says why: once a final verdict is delivered, the restless arguing simply stops, and that settled silence is what he longs for.

GATHA 3760 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the puffed-up pretender

मराठी मूळ

खद्योतें फुलविलें रविपुढें ढुंग । साक्षी तंव जग उभयतां ॥1॥
आपल्या आपण नाहीं शोभों येत । चार करी स्फीत दाखवूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
खाणार ताकाचें आसातें माजीरें । आपणें चि अधीर कळों येतें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जळो मैंदाची मवाळी । दावूनियां नळी कापी सुखें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The firefly puffs itself up before the sun, but the whole world witnesses both. One who is not worthy of shining on his own tries to impress by showing off to four people.

A buttermilk drinker pretends to eat from a churning pot, but his own impatience gives him away. Says Tuka, cursed be the smooth ways of the deceiver, who shows his pipe and cuts at ease.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A firefly puffs itself up before the sun, but the whole world sees them both. One who cannot shine on his own tries to impress by showing off to a few onlookers. A man who only drinks buttermilk pretends he is eating from the churning pot, but his own impatience gives him away. Tuka says: cursed be the smooth manner of the cheat, who shows his pipe and slits the throat at ease.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram skewers the hollow boaster with three sharp pictures. The firefly that swells with pride before the sun fools no one, because everyone can see both at once; the show-off who has no real light of his own performs for a small audience instead. The buttermilk drinker who acts as if he were feasting betrays himself by his own restless impatience. The harshest image names the danger in false sweetness: the con man whose gentle manner is only a cover while he cuts at ease. Read against oneself, the poem warns against putting on a display that has nothing real behind it.

GATHA 3761 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, tested by fire

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं सरों येत कोरडएा उत्तरीं । जिव्हाळ्याची बरी ओल ठायीं ॥1॥
आपुलिया हिता मानिसी कारण । सत्या नारायण साहे असो ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्वाणीं निवाड होतो आगीमुखें । तप्त लोह सुखें धरितां हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नेम न टळतां बरें । ख†यासी चि खरें ऐसें नांव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dry words alone will not do. There must be the moisture of genuine genuine experience.

If you truly care about your own welfare, then let Narayana bear witness to the truth. In the final reckoning, the test comes through fire.

No one holds heated iron in their hands with pleasure. Says Tuka, it is well when a vow is kept unbroken. Only what is truly genuine earns the name of real.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dry words alone will not carry you; the tongue must be moist with real experience. If you truly care about your own good, let Narayana stand as witness to the truth. At the end the verdict comes through fire. No one holds red-hot iron in the hand for pleasure. Tuka says: it is well when a vow stays unbroken; only what is truly genuine earns the name of real.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists that talk is not enough; words go dry unless they are wet with lived experience. If a person genuinely wants their own welfare, they will let Narayana, the truth itself, be the witness of how they live. He names the cost with the image of an ordeal by fire: no one grips heated iron for fun, and the final reckoning tests a person that severely. What survives the test is a vow kept whole. Only that which is actually real, and not merely spoken, deserves to be called real.

GATHA 3762 Longing and Separation

Longing, this is my only refuge

मराठी मूळ

आलों उल्लंघुनि दुःखाचे पर्वत । पायांपाशीं हित तुमच्या तरी ॥1॥
न देखेल लासा दुःखी होतें मन । कठिणें कठिण वाटतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे सांडी परि वाटतें निरास । न ये माझा दिस संकल्पाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मीं सदैव जी देवा । माझ्या हा चि जीवा एक ठाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have crossed over mountains of sorrow and come to Your feet, yet even here I find my welfare uncertain. When the jiva cannot see Your presence, it becomes sorrowful, and everything seems impossibly hard.

I will not abandon hope, yet it feels like despair. The day of my chitta's fulfillment does not seem to arrive.

Says Tuka, You are ever gracious, O God. This alone is the one place for my jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have climbed over mountains of sorrow to reach Your feet, yet even here my good is not certain. When the jiva cannot see You, the mind grows sad and everything feels impossibly hard. I will not give up, but it feels like despair; the day my heart's wish is fulfilled does not come. Tuka says: You are gracious forever, God. This alone is the one place for my soul.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes arriving at God's feet after crossing whole mountains of grief, only to find that even there his welfare feels uncertain. The pain is the hidden face: when his soul cannot perceive God's presence, the mind sinks and everything turns unbearably hard. He refuses to abandon hope, yet the waiting feels like despair, because the day his longing is satisfied keeps not arriving. He holds on anyway, resting everything on God's enduring grace and on the conviction that this is the single refuge his soul has.

GATHA 3763 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the empty mouth and the blind eyes

मराठी मूळ

किती सोसिती करंटीं । नेणों संसाराची आटी । सर्वकाळ पोटीं । चिंतेची हळहळ ॥1॥
रिकामिया तोंडें राम । काय उच्चारितां श्रम । उफराटा भ्रम । गोवी विषय माजिरा ॥ध्रु.॥
कळतां न कळे । उघडे झाकियेले डोळे । भरलें त्याचे चाळे । अंगीं वारें मायेचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन । ऐसें नांवबुद्धहीन । बहुरंगें भिन्न । एकीं एक निमलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much do the wretched endure? They know not the torment of worldly life. Anxiety churns in the chitta at all times.

What effort is there in uttering the name of Rama with an empty mouth? Inverted delusion entangles them in the snare of sense pleasures. Even when they understand, they do not truly see.

Their eyes are open yet shut. The wind of illusion fills their being with its play.

Says Tuka, such people are devoid of name and wisdom. In countless guises, one after another, they perish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How much do the wretched suffer, not knowing the torment of worldly life, the worry burning in the heart all the while? What labor is it to say Rama with an empty mouth? An upside-down delusion ties them into the snare of the senses. Even when they understand, they do not truly see; their eyes are open and yet shut. The wind of Maya fills them and plays through them. Tuka says: such people are without true name and wisdom; in countless guises, one after another, they perish.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram grieves over how much people endure without recognizing the worldly life that grinds them, with anxiety smoldering in the heart day and night. He points out how little it would actually cost to say Rama, yet a backwards delusion keeps them tangled in the snare of the senses. The deepest charge is that even when they understand, they do not see: their eyes are open and blind at once, because the wind of Maya is blowing through them and moving them like a play. He ends on the stakes: lacking real name and real wisdom, such people slip through endless disguises and keep perishing, an exhortation meant to wake the listener rather than to despise anyone.

GATHA 3764 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the storehouse of blessing

मराठी मूळ

मंगळाचा मंगळ सांटा । विट तोटा नेणे तें ॥1॥
हें भरा सातें आलें । भलें भलें ह्मणवावें ॥ध्रु.॥
जनीं जनादनन वसे । येथें दिसे तें शुद्ध ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहुतां मुखें । खरें सुखें ठेवावें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A storehouse of blessings upon blessings, knowing neither weariness nor lack. This abundance has come in fullness, and one can only say it is good and good again.

Janardana dwells in all people. Whatever is seen here is pure.

Says Tuka, through many mouths, let the truth be preserved with joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Here is a storehouse of blessing upon blessing. It knows no weariness, no lack. This fullness has come, brimming over. One can only say it is good, and good again. Janardana lives in all people. Whatever is seen here is pure. Tuka says: through many mouths, keep the truth, keep it with joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming an abundance that does not run dry and does not tire, and his only response is praise repeated. The reason it overflows is the line in the middle: Janardana, God, dwells inside every person, so whatever the eye lands on here is already pure. Seen this way, the world is not a problem to be cleared away but a fullness to be received. His closing word turns it outward: let this truth be carried on many tongues and held with joy, not hoarded.

GATHA 3765 Longing and Separation

Longing, the Name that has not touched me

मराठी मूळ

नामाचा महिमा बोलिलों उत्कर्ष । अंगा कांहीं रस न ये चि तो ॥1॥
कैसें समाधान राहे पांडुरंगा । न लगे चि अंगा आणी कांहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
लाभाचिये अंगीं सोस कवतुकें । फिक्याचें तें फिकें वेवसाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करा आपुला महिमा । नका जाऊं धर्मावरि माझ्या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have extolled the greatness of the Name, but no trace of that essence has entered my own being. How can there be contentment, O Panduranga, when nothing touches me within? Where there is true gain, the seeking is a delight.

But a diluted effort yields only a diluted result. Says Tuka, display Your own greatness. Do not rest Your reputation upon my weak devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have praised the greatness of the Name out loud. But not a drop of that sweetness has entered me. How can I be at peace, Panduranga, when nothing inside me is even touched? Where the gain is real, the seeking itself is a delight. A half-hearted effort gives only a watered-down result. Tuka says: show Your own greatness. Do not rest Your name on my weak devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches the gap between his words and his condition: he has sung the glory of the Name, yet feels none of its sweetness reach him, and so he cannot rest. He diagnoses himself honestly, his effort has been thin, and thin effort yields a thin result. Rather than pretend, he hands the burden back to Panduranga: let God prove His own greatness instead of staking His reputation on a devotion as weak as Tuka's. It is a prayer that refuses to fake the experience it does not yet have.

GATHA 3766 Prayers

Prayer, weighed words at the feet

मराठी मूळ

हें चि वारंवार । पडताळुनी उत्तर ॥1॥
करितों पायांसी विनंती । नुपेक्षावें कमळापती ॥ध्रु.॥
गंगोदकें गंगे । अर्घ्य द्यावें पांडुरंगे ॥2॥
जोडोनियां हात । करी तुका प्रणिपात ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Again and again I test and weigh my words. I make this prayer at Your feet: do not neglect me, O Lord of Kamala.

With the water of the Ganga, I offer an oblation to the Ganga itself. Says Tuka, with folded hands I bow in reverence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Again and again I check it, weighing every word. I make this plea at Your feet: do not pass me by, Lord of Kamala. With Ganga water I offer Ganga her own oblation, Panduranga. Tuka, with folded hands, bows down.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says he keeps testing his own prayer, turning the words over to be sure of them, and the request is simple: do not overlook me. The striking image is the middle one. Offering Ganga water back to the Ganga, which means he has nothing of his own to give God except what God already is and gives. So the prayer is not a transaction but pure homage; all he can truly add is folded hands and a bowed head.

GATHA 3767 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the unexpected arrival

मराठी मूळ

अवचित या तुमच्या पायां । देवराया पावलों ॥1॥
बरवें जालें देशाउर । आल्या दुर सारिखें ॥ध्रु.॥
राहोनियां जातों ठाया । आलियाची निशानी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चरणसेवा । जोडी हेवा लाधली ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Unexpectedly, O King of gods, I have arrived at Your feet. It is well, for the long journey from a distant land has ended.

Remaining here, I depart, leaving a mark of my visit. Says Tuka, the service of Your feet is the prize my longing has won.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All at once, King of gods, I have reached Your feet. It is good. The long road from a far country is over. I stay here, and I go, leaving the mark of my coming. Tuka says: the service of Your feet is the prize my longing has won.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes arriving at God suddenly, as if the long pilgrimage from a distant land had ended without his planning it. He treats this not as his achievement but as grace landing unexpectedly. Even as he must move on, the visit leaves a trace on him, he is not the same for having come. The line he settles on is that to serve at these feet is itself the reward, the thing his longing was always reaching for, now received.

GATHA 3768 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no other power holds sway

मराठी मूळ

आतां पाविजेल घरा । या दातारा संगती ॥1॥
पायावरि ठेवूं माथा । सर्वथा हा नुपेक्षी ॥ध्रु.॥
येथून तेथवरि आतां। नाहीं सत्ता आणिकांची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चक्रपाणी । शिरोमणी बिळयांचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I shall reach home in Your company, O generous Lord. I will place my head upon Your feet, and surely You will not forsake me.

From here to there, no other power holds sway. Says Tuka, the wielder of the disc is the crown jewel of the strong.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I will reach home in this giver's company. I lay my head on His feet. He will never forsake me. From here all the way to there, no other power has any say. Tuka says: the wielder of the disc is the crown jewel of the strong.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks with the confidence of someone who is no longer walking alone: with God beside him, arriving home is certain. The surrender is bodily, his head set on God's feet, and the trust is total, He will not abandon. The claim sharpens in the third line: over the whole stretch of the journey, no rival power has authority. The closing title, the disc-bearer as crown jewel of the strong, names where that security comes from, the strongest one of all is the one carrying him.

GATHA 3769 The Power of the Name

The Name, kirtan is everything

मराठी मूळ

बरवें माझ्या केलें मनें । पंथें येणें निघालें ॥1॥
अभयें च जावें ठाया । देवराया प्रतापें ॥ध्रु.॥
साधनाचा न लगे पांग । अवघें सांग कीर्तन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्ता थोरी । कोण करी खोळंबा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind has done well in setting out on this path. By the might of the Lord, one may go fearlessly to that place.

No elaborate spiritual practice is required; kirtan is everything. Says Tuka, so great is His power. Who can cause any delay?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind did well to set out on this path. By the Lord's power one can go to that place without fear. No elaborate practice is needed. Kirtan is the whole of it. Tuka says: so great is His power, who could ever hold me back?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises his own mind for choosing this road and says the journey can be made without fear because the strength is the Lord's, not his. His central claim is deliberately plain and radical: the heavy apparatus of spiritual technique is not required, singing God's praises is the entire path. He grounds this in God's power rather than the seeker's skill. And if that power is carrying you, he ends, no obstacle has the strength to cause delay.

GATHA 3770 Faith and Trust

Faith, nothing remains but God

मराठी मूळ

मागें पुढें नाहीं । दुजें यावेगळें कांहीं ॥1॥
नाहीं उरलें आणीक । केला झाडा सकिळक ॥ध्रु.॥
विश्वासावांचून । नांवें दुजियाचे शून्य ॥2॥
देवाविण कांहीं । तुका ह्मणे उरी नाहीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is nothing before or after, nothing besides this. All else has been swept clean and cleared away.

Without faith, the names of everything else are empty. Says Tuka, without God, nothing at all remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is nothing behind, nothing ahead, nothing else besides this. Nothing is left over. The whole account has been settled and swept clean. Without faith, the names of all other things are empty. Tuka says: apart from God, nothing at all remains.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a stripping-away that is total: past and future, every other thing, all of it cleared like a settled account. What is left is the bare fact named in the last line, apart from God, nothing remains. The middle line gives the hinge: it is faith that empties the other names of their content; without it they sound full, but they hold nothing. This is the contemplative endpoint where everything that competed for the heart has simply ceased to count.

GATHA 3771 Renunciation

Renunciation, the painful pull of two loves

मराठी मूळ

वैराग्याचा अंगीं जालासे संचार । इच्छी वनांतर सेवावया ॥1॥
कां जी याचें करूं नये समाधान । वियोगानें मन सिणतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
नये चि यावया पंढरीचें मूळ । न देवे चि माळ कंठींची ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जालें अप्रीतीचें जिणें । लाजिर हें वाणें सेवा करी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A spirit of renunciation has entered his being, and he desires to retire to the forest. Why should his mind not be given peace? The soul suffers from separation.

He cannot shake the pull of Pandhari and will not give up the garland from around his neck. Says Tuka, life has become joyless and distasteful. A shameful existence it is to serve under such conditions.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A spirit of renunciation has entered him. He longs to go off and serve in the forest. Why should his mind not be given peace? Being apart wears the soul down. Yet he cannot escape the pull of Pandhari, and he will not give up the garland at his throat. Tuka says: life has turned joyless and bitter. It is a shameful thing to serve in such a state.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces a man torn between two genuine pulls: a rising urge to renounce the world and withdraw to the forest, and an attachment to Pandhari and the garland of his devotion that he cannot bring himself to drop. Neither love will release him, and the separation, from peace, from the Lord, grinds the soul down. He names the result without softening it: life has gone joyless, and to keep serving while inwardly so divided feels shameful to him. The poem holds the ache of devotion that has not yet been resolved into rest.

GATHA 3772 Prayers

Prayer, the child who cannot bear harshness

मराठी मूळ

आळकरा कोठें साहातें कठिण । आपुला तें प्राण देऊं पाहे ॥1॥
सांभाळावें मायबापें कृपादृष्टी । पीडितां तो दृष्टी देखों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
अंतरलों मागें संवसारा हातीं । पायांपें सरतीं जालों नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी विचारा जी देवा । ठेवाल तें ठेवा कोणे परी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can a beloved child bear harshness? It would sooner give up its very life. O mother and father, watch over me with eyes of grace.

I should not have to see suffering before my eyes. I fell behind, caught in the hands of worldly life, and could not reach Your feet.

Says Tuka, think it over, O God. However You choose to keep me, so shall it be.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can a loved child bear harsh treatment? It would sooner give up its life. Mother, father, watch over me with eyes of grace. Do not make me look on suffering. I fell behind, caught in the hands of worldly life, and never reached Your feet. Tuka says: think it over, God. However You decide to keep me, so let it be.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads as a child before parents, saying a beloved child cannot endure harshness and would rather die than face it. He asks God, addressed as mother and father, to look on him with grace and spare him the sight of suffering. He confesses honestly why he is in trouble: he lagged behind, gripped by worldly life, and never made it to God's feet. Yet the prayer ends in surrender, not demand, he asks God to weigh the matter and then leaves the verdict entirely to Him, accepting whatever keeping God chooses.

GATHA 3773 Longing and Separation

Longing, draw aside the curtain

मराठी मूळ

स्वप्नींचें हें धन हातीं ना पदरीं । प्रत्यक्ष कां हरि होऊं नये ॥1॥
बोलोनियां फेडा जीवींची काजळी । पाहेन कोमळीं चरणांबुजें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझ्या जीवींचिया जीवा । सारुनियां ठेवा पडदा आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wealth of a dream is neither in the hand nor in the pocket. Why can You not become directly present, O Hari? Speak and wipe away the darkness from my heart.

Let me behold Your tender lotus feet. Says Tuka, O life of my life, now draw aside the curtain and put away all that is stored.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wealth of a dream is not in the hand or in the lap. Why will You not become real before me, Hari? Speak, and wipe the soot from my heart. Let me see Your soft lotus feet. Tuka says: life of my life, push aside the curtain now. Set aside all that is hidden away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains that an unseen God is like dream-wealth, real-seeming but impossible to hold, and he wants the real thing in plain sight. He asks Hari to become present and to speak, because a word from God would scour away the grime darkening his heart. The longing is to behold the tender lotus feet directly, not in imagination. The final image makes the request intimate and urgent: God is the life of his life, and Tuka asks Him to draw back the curtain and stop withholding what is just on the other side.

GATHA 3774 Longing and Separation

Longing, brought to the edge

मराठी मूळ

येतील अंतरा शिष्टाचे अनुभव । तळमळी जीव तया सुखा ॥1॥
आतां माझा जीव घेउनियां बळी । बैसवावें वोळी संतांचिये ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे आलों निर्वाणा च वरी । राहों नेदीं उरी नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The experiences spoken of by the virtuous will come to pass within, and my jiva yearns for that bliss. Now take my life as an offering and seat me in the company of saints.

Says Tuka, I have come to the very edge of desperation. Do not let anything remain unsettled, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The experiences the wise ones speak of will come to pass within me. My soul aches for that bliss. Now take my life as an offering, and seat me in the row of the saints. Tuka says: I have come to the very edge of desperation. Do not let anything stay unsettled, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram trusts that the inner experiences the realized speak of are meant for him too, and his whole being burns for that joy. He offers up his very life as the price and asks only one thing, to be seated among the saints, in their company. The urgency is stark: he says he has reached the brink of desperation, the point where waiting longer is unbearable. So he presses Narayana to settle the matter now and leave nothing hanging, a prayer with no patience left in it.

GATHA 3775 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, true coin against the plating

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणउनि काय जीऊं भक्तपण । जायाचीं भूषणें अळंकार ॥1॥
आपुल्या कष्टाची करूनियां जोडी । मिरवीन उघडी इच्छावसें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुके तरि तुकीं ख॰याचे उत्तम । मुलाम्याच्या भ्रम कोठवरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पुढें आणि मागें फांस । पावें ऐसा नास न करीं देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should I live merely wearing the ornaments and decorations of devotion like borrowed finery? Let me earn my own spiritual wealth through genuine effort and display it openly as I wish. Genuine coin rings true when tested, but the illusion of plating lasts only so long.

Says Tuka, traps lie ahead and behind. Do not bring me to such ruin, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why should I live just wearing the ornaments and finery of devotion? Let me earn my own wealth by real labor, and wear it openly, as I wish. Tested on the scale, true metal proves best. How long can plated gold keep up its pretense? Tuka says: there are traps ahead and traps behind. Do not bring me to such ruin, God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses borrowed religion: he does not want to parade devotion he has not actually earned, like a man decked in finery that is not his. He wants the real thing, won by genuine effort, and worn without disguise. His test is the goldsmith's, true metal rings true when weighed, while gilt-over-base metal can only keep its act so long before it is exposed. Knowing the traps of pretense lie on every side, he asks God to keep him from that ruin, the ruin of a faith that is only plating.

GATHA 3776 Prayers

Prayer, testing the rescuer

मराठी मूळ

आपण चि व्हाल साहे । कसियाला हे धांवणी॥1॥
भाकिली ते उरली कींव । आहे जीव जीवपणें ॥ध्रु.॥
आहाच कैंचा बीजा मोड । प्रीति कोड वांचूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दंडिन काया । याल तया धांवणिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Will You Yourself become the touchstone? Why this running about for a test? The mercy I have pleaded for still remains. Life persists in its nature of being alive.

From where can the seed sprout without the nurture of love and longing? Says Tuka, I shall punish this body. Come then to rescue it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Will you yourself become the touchstone that tests me? Why all this running about for a test? The mercy I begged for is still owed to me. My life goes on, still alive in its own way. Without love and longing, how can any seed sprout? There is none. Tuka says: I will punish this body. Then come running to rescue it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his pleading into a kind of dare. He asks why God keeps testing him when the mercy he has already prayed for has never arrived, and his bare life simply persists. He insists that nothing grows without love and longing, so a heart left untended will not flower on its own. Then he names his stake bluntly: he will torment his own body until God is forced to come running to save it. It is the prayer of a devotee who will hold God to His promise by any means.

GATHA 3777 Prayers

Prayer, the mind stirred up

मराठी मूळ

निश्चतीनें होतों करुनियां सेवा । कां जी मन देवा उद्वेगिलें ॥1॥
अनंत उठती चित्ताचे तरंग । करावा हा त्याग वाटतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण तुह्मांविण मनाचा चाळक । दुजें सांगा एक नारायणा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा मांडिला विनोद । करऊं नेणें छंद कराल काइ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I was performing my service in quiet contentment. Why then, O God, have You agitated my mind? Countless waves rise in the chitta, and it seems as though everything should be renounced.

Who but You is the governor of the mind, O Narayana? Tell me if there is another. Says Tuka, this is my plea made in playful earnestness. I do not know how to play games.

Will You play them on my behalf?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I was doing my service, settled and content. Why then, O God, have you stirred up my mind? Countless waves keep rising in my heart, and it feels as if I should give everything up. Who but you governs the mind? Tell me, Narayana, is there any other? Tuka says: this is my plea, made half in play. I do not know how to play these games. Will you play them for me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains, half teasing, that God has disturbed a peace he had already found. He was serving quietly when suddenly the mind began to churn with endless waves, until renouncing everything seemed the only option. He then pins the responsibility where it belongs: God alone governs the mind, so this turmoil must be God's doing. Confessing that he does not know how to handle such inner games, he hands them straight back, asking God to play them on his behalf. The stake is simple: the disciple cannot quiet his own mind, so the one who stirred it must settle it.

GATHA 3778 Faith and Trust

Faith, the reassured servant

मराठी मूळ

आश्वासावें दास । तरी घडे तो विश्वास ॥1॥
नाहीं चुकत चाकरी । पुट लाडे शोचे थोरी ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वामीच्या उत्तरें । सुख वाटे अभयें करें ॥2॥
न मगें परि भातें । तुका ह्मणे निढिळ रितें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the master reassures his servant, then true faith takes root. The servant does not falter in his duty, for the master's appreciation nurtures great devotion.

By the master's words, comfort and fearlessness arise. Says Tuka, the servant does not ask for wages, yet his forehead should not be left bare.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the master reassures his servant, then true faith takes root. The servant does not fail in his duty, for the master's praise feeds great love. The master's words bring comfort and a fearless hand. Tuka says: the servant asks for no wages, yet his forehead should not be left bare.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how faith between servant and master actually grows. It is the master's reassurance, not the servant's effort, that lets trust take root and keeps the servant steady in his work. A word of appreciation does more than payment: it nourishes devotion and gives the servant a fearless heart. The closing line names what the servant truly wants. He does not ask for wages, but he asks that his forehead not be left bare, meaning the mark of belonging, the master's blessing and acknowledgment. So too the devotee serves God for recognition and grace, not reward.

GATHA 3779 Prayers

Prayer, leave my path to you

मराठी मूळ

जेणें होय हित । तें तूं जाणसी उचित ॥1॥
मज नको लावूं तैसें । वांयां जायें ऐसें पिसें ॥ध्रु.॥
धरितोसी सत्ता । होसी सकळ जाणता ॥2॥
चतुराच्या राया । अंगीकारावें तुकया॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You know what serves my welfare, and You know what is fitting. Do not set me upon a path of madness that leads nowhere.

You hold all authority, and You are the knower of all things. O King of the wise, please accept Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You know what is good for me, and you know what is fitting. Do not set me on a path of madness that leads nowhere. You hold all power; you are the knower of everything. O King of the wise, accept Tuka.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays his whole direction in God's hands. He admits that God, not he, knows what truly serves his welfare and what is fitting, so he begs not to be led down some futile, maddening road of his own choosing. He grounds the plea in what God is: the holder of all authority and the knower of all things. Calling God the King of the wise, he asks only to be accepted. The stake is surrender of judgment itself: the devotee stops trusting his own sense of the right path and asks the all-knowing one to choose it for him.

GATHA 3780 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the strength of humility

मराठी मूळ

राहे उभा वादावादीं । तरी फंदीं सांपडे ॥1॥
लव्हाळ्यासी कोठें बळ । करिल जळ आपुलें ॥ध्रु.॥
कठिणासी बळजोडा । नम्र पीडा देखेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्वरसीं । मिळे त्यासी गोत तें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who stands arguing will get caught in entanglements. A small stream cannot withstand a flood and will be washed away.

Hardness meets its match in equal force, but the humble one sees no harm at all. Says Tuka, the one who blends with all is kin to everyone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever stands and argues gets caught in tangles. A small stream has no force against a flood; it is washed away. Hardness meets its match in equal force, but the humble one comes to no harm. Tuka says: the one who blends with everything is kin to all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the way of arguing against the way of yielding. The one who stands his ground in dispute only gets snared, like a thin stream swept off by a flood it cannot resist. Hardness invites a matching hardness, force against force, while the humble person stays untouched by the collision. The closing line turns this into a quiet ideal: the one who blends with all, who does not set himself against others, becomes everyone's kin. Examine where you brace and argue, and see how the stiffness itself is what gets broken.

GATHA 3781 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the secret of non-separation

मराठी मूळ

म्हणउनि जाली तुटी । नाहीं भेटी अहंकारें ॥1॥
दाखविलें देवें वर्म । अवघा भ्रम नासला ॥ध्रु.॥
हातें मुरगिाळतां कान। नाहीं भिन्न वेदना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एकांतसुखें । अवघें गोतें गुंतलें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Because of ego, the connection was severed and the meeting could not take place. God revealed the secret, and all delusion was destroyed.

When you twist your own ear with your hand, the pain is not in something separate from you. Says Tuka, in the bliss of solitude, all kinfolk are entangled as one.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because of ego the bond was cut, and the meeting could not happen. God showed me the secret, and all my delusion broke. When you twist your own ear with your hand, the pain is not in something separate from you. Tuka says: in the joy of solitude, all my kin are gathered into one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells what it was that kept him apart from God and what dissolved it. The ego had severed the connection, so the meeting never came; then God revealed the inner secret and the whole delusion collapsed. His image makes it plain: when your own hand twists your own ear, the hurt is not in some other being, because it is all you. In the same way there is no real separation between the self and God. So in the bliss of solitude he finds not loneliness but everyone, all his kin folded into the one.

GATHA 3782 Prayers

Prayer, caught in the noose of desire

मराठी मूळ

न पडो आतां हाडीं घाव । मध्यें कींव नासक ॥1॥
करविली आत्महत्या । जीवा कां द्वंदाचा ॥ध्रु.॥
आशापाशीं गुंतला गळा । तेणें कळाहीन जालों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लावूं मुळी । जीवकुळी थोरेसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let no more blows fall upon these bones. The mercy shown in between only hastens the destruction.

Self-destruction has been brought about. Why impose the torment of duality upon the jiva? The noose of desire has caught the throat, and I have become senseless.

Says Tuka, let me trace this back to its root, to the very origin of the life-force.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let no more blows fall on these bones. The mercy shown in between only hastens my ruin. Self-destruction has been brought about. Why lay the torment of duality on the jiva? The noose of desire has caught my throat, and I have lost all my power. Tuka says: let me trace this back to its root, to the very source of the life-force.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from exhaustion and asks God to stop the blows, saying that even the mercy granted now and then only drags out his destruction. He sees that his ruin is self-made, and pleads against the torment of duality, the split that keeps the jiva suffering. He names the cause plainly: the noose of desire has tightened on his throat until he is left powerless. His resolve is to go to the root, to trace this bondage back to the very origin of the life-force, so that the cure reaches deeper than the symptom.

GATHA 3783 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the teaching not received

मराठी मूळ

सामावे कारण । नाहीं सोसत धरणें ॥1॥
लादी थींके लाजिरवाणी । हीनकमाईची घाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
पुष्प जवळी नाका। दुगपधीच्या नांवें थुंका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती । उपदेशहीन जाती॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The ground cannot hold what is poured upon it endlessly. A poorly built floor oozes and shames itself with the stench of low earning.

A flower held to the nose brings pleasure, yet one spits at the mention of foul milk. Says Tuka, how many generations pass without receiving any teaching?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The ground cannot hold what is poured on it without end. A badly built floor oozes and shames itself with the stench of cheap work. A flower held to the nose gives pleasure, but at the mention of spoiled milk one spits. Tuka says: how many generations pass with no teaching given to them?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at what becomes of people left without true teaching. Like overloaded ground that cannot absorb more, or a shoddy floor that seeps and stinks, an untaught life leaks out its own meanness and shames itself. He sets two responses side by side: a flower draws us close, foul milk makes us recoil, and so a life is met with either welcome or disgust depending on what it has become. The closing line names the real loss: whole generations pass without ever receiving real instruction. The grief is for the neglect, not contempt for those it failed.

GATHA 3784 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, clinging through merit and fault

मराठी मूळ

असाल ते तुझी असा । आह्मी सहसा निवडों ना॥1॥
अनुसरलों एका चित्तें । हातोंहातें गींवसित ॥ध्रु.॥
गुणदोष काशासाटीं । तुमचे पोटीं वागवूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दुजें आतां । कोठें चित्ता आतळों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Be as You are, I shall not part from You. I have followed You with a single mind, grasping You hand over hand.

Why should I carry the weight of Your merits and faults in my chitta? Says Tuka, where else could my mind now touch or attach itself?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Be whatever you are; I will not part from you. I have followed you with a single mind, holding you hand over hand. Why should I carry the weight of your merits and faults in my heart? Tuka says: where else could my mind now turn or attach itself?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares a love that no longer judges its object. Whatever God may be, he refuses to let go, having followed with an undivided mind, climbing toward God hand over hand. He sets aside the whole question of weighing God's virtues against any faults; that accounting is not his to carry. The closing line shows why this is not naive but settled: there is nowhere else his mind can go, no other refuge left to attach itself to. Devotion here means staying fast precisely because all alternatives have fallen away.

GATHA 3785 Confession and Sin

Confession, impurity and the snake-rope

मराठी मूळ

सोंवळा होऊं तों वोंवळें जडलें । सांडीमांडी बोलतोंडीं बीजीं ॥1॥
एकसरीं केलीं किळवरें साटी । आतां नका तुटी पायांसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
संकल्पीं विकल्प पापाचा सुकाळ । रज्जुसर्प मूळ मरणाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें तूं ब्रह्मांड चिाळता । मी कां करूं चिंता पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Before I could become pure, impurity clung to me. In every attempt to set things right, new seeds of confusion are sown.

I have traded everything away in one stroke for the wretched body. Now do not sever the bond with Your feet.

In every intention, doubt creeps in, and sin flourishes. The rope mistaken for a snake becomes the root of death.

Says Tuka, You who set this entire universe in motion, why should I worry, O Panduranga?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Before I could become pure, impurity clung to me. Every time I try to set things right, new seeds of confusion get sown. In one stroke I traded everything away for this wretched body. Now do not break the bond with your feet. In every intention doubt creeps in, and sin runs wild. The rope mistaken for a snake becomes the root of death. Tuka says: you who keep this whole universe turning, why should I worry, O Panduranga?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that he cannot purify himself: the moment he reaches for purity, old impurity clings, and each attempt to mend his life only sows fresh confusion. He admits the bad bargain he has made, selling everything off for the sake of this poor body, and begs that the bond with God's feet not be cut. He names the trap in two images: doubt sneaking into every good intention, and the rope mistaken for a snake, an unreal fear that nonetheless breeds the dread of death. Then he lays it down. If God keeps the entire universe turning, his own worry is needless, and the last word is trust rather than anxiety.

GATHA 3786 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, accepting one's place

मराठी मूळ

आहे तैसा आतां आहे ठायीं बरा । ठेविलों दातारा उचितें त्या ॥1॥
वचनाचा भार पडिलिया शिरीं । जालें मग भारी उतरेना ॥ध्रु.॥
अबोल्याची सवे लावुनियां मना । फाकों नेदीं गुणा ऐसें करूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां गोंवळ्याचा संग । राखतें तें अंग जाणतसों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As I am now, it is well to remain as I am, placed here by Your fitting design, O generous Lord. Once the burden of words has fallen upon the head, it grows heavy and cannot be lifted off.

Let the mind learn the habit of silence, and let me keep the qualities from scattering. Says Tuka, I know well how to guard the company of those who tether me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As I am now, it is good to stay just as I am, set here by your fitting design, O generous Lord. Once the burden of words has fallen on the head, it grows heavy and will not lift off. Let the mind learn the habit of silence; let me not scatter the good qualities. Tuka says: I know well how to keep the company of those who tether me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram accepts the exact condition God has placed him in, content to remain as he is because the arrangement is God's own fitting design. He warns about the weight of words: once a burden of speech settles on the head, it becomes heavy and cannot be set down, so loose talk binds. His remedy is to teach the mind silence and to keep his good qualities from scattering. The closing line is wry and grateful: he has learned to stay willingly in the company of whatever, or whoever, tethers him to God, treating the very thing that binds him as a help rather than a chain.

GATHA 3787 Autobiography

Autobiography, mocked by the worldly

मराठी मूळ

तूं माझा कोंवसा । परी न कळे या धसां ॥1॥
कूट खाती मागें पुढें । जाती नरयेगांवा पुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
माझी ह्मणती कवी। निषेधुनि पापी जीवीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । आतां कोण लेखी जगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are my shelter, but these people do not understand. They take blows before and behind and march onward to the city of Yama.

They call my poetry their own while inwardly condemning and sinning against it. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, now who pays any heed to the world?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are my shelter, but these people do not understand it. They take blows behind and ahead, and march on toward the city of Yama. They call my poetry their own while inwardly condemning it, sinning in their hearts. Tuka says: O Panduranga, now who pays any heed to the world?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts his own refuge with the blindness of those around him. God is his shelter, but the worldly cannot grasp this, and so they stumble through life taking blows on every side, marching toward Yama's city, the realm of death. He notes a sharper hypocrisy: they claim his poetry as their own while privately despising it, sinning against it in their hearts. The closing line is his release from caring about their judgment. Once Panduranga is his shelter, the verdict of such a world no longer holds any weight over him. The point is to stop seeking the approval of those who neither understand nor mean well.

GATHA 3788 Worldly Metaphors

Self-revelation, the inner flaw

मराठी मूळ

दर्पणासी बुजे । नखटें तोंड पळवी लाजे ॥1॥
गुण ज्याचे जो अंतरीं । तो चि त्यासी पीडा करी ॥ध्रु.॥
चोरा रुचे निशी। देखोनियां विटे शशी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन । देवा असे भाग्यहीन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

An ugly face is frightened by the mirror and turns away in shame. Whatever qualities one holds within, those very qualities torment oneself.

A thief loves the night and is repelled by the sight of the moon. Says Tuka, such people, O God, are devoid of good fortune.

IN PLAIN WORDS

An ugly face is afraid of the mirror; it turns away in shame. Whatever qualities a person holds inside, those very qualities are what torment him. A thief loves the night. When he sees the moon, he is repelled by it. Tuka says: such people, O God, are without good fortune.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that the trouble we suffer comes from inside us, not from outside. The mirror does not make the face ugly; it only shows what is already there, and that is why the ugly face flinches from it. In the same way, the qualities a person carries within are the very things that come back to torment him. The thief hates the moon not because the moon is cruel but because light exposes what he is doing in the dark. So the call is to examine yourself: what in me cannot bear to be seen is what is already harming me.

GATHA 3789 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the Infinite carries across

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणउनि शरण जावें । सर्वभावें देवासी ॥1॥
तो हा उतरील पार । भवदुस्तरनदीचा ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु आहे करुणावंत । अनंत हें नाम ज्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे साक्षी आलें । तरी केलें प्रगट॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Therefore, one should surrender to God with one's entire being. He will carry you across the impassable river of worldly existence.

He is supremely compassionate, and His name is Ananta, the Infinite. Says Tuka, when the witness has arrived, the truth is made manifest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

So surrender to God with your whole being. He will carry you across the river of worldly life that no one can cross alone. He is full of compassion; His very name is Ananta, the Infinite. Tuka says: now that the witness has come, the truth stands out in the open.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges total surrender, not a partial bargain but giving the whole self over. The reason is the size of the danger and the size of the helper: worldly existence is a river impossible to ford by your own strength, but God is endlessly compassionate, and His name itself, Ananta, means without limit. Such a one can carry you to the far shore. The closing line says that once you actually have this firsthand, the witness has arrived, you no longer have to argue it; the truth simply shows itself.

GATHA 3790 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, holding the feet, dropping the doctrines

मराठी मूळ

ऐसीं वर्मे आह्मां असोनियां हातीं । कां होऊं नेणतीं दिशाभुली ॥1॥
पोटाळुनी पाय कवळीन उभा । कृपे पद्मनाभा हालों नेदीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुले इच्छेसी घालीन संपुष्टीं । श्रीमुख तें दृष्टी न्याहाळीन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहु सांडियेलीं मतें । आपुल्या पुरतें धरुनी ठेलों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When such secrets are already in our hands, why should we become confused and lose our way? I shall clasp Your feet in an embrace and not let You move, O Padmanabha, O gracious one. I shall set aside my own desires and gaze steadily at Your blessed face.

Says Tuka, I have abandoned many doctrines and hold firmly only to what suffices for me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These secrets are already in our hands. Why then should we grow confused and lose our way? I will hug Your feet and hold You standing there; by Your grace, O Padmanabha, I will not let You move. I will fold my own wishes away into a box. I will gaze steadily at Your blessed face. Tuka says: I have thrown away many opinions and held on only to what is enough for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a deliberate narrowing of the whole self onto God. He says the heart of the matter is already in his grasp, so there is no excuse for wandering off into confusion. His chosen path is bodily and intimate: clasp Vitthal's feet, refuse to let Him slip away, put his own desires aside as if shutting them in a box, and keep his eyes only on the Lord's face. The last line names the cost and the freedom together: he has dropped the crowd of competing doctrines and kept just the one thing that suffices.

GATHA 3791 Social Criticism

Social criticism, gems mistaken for glass

मराठी मूळ

रत्नाच्या वोवणी कांचे ऐशा घरी । आव्हेरुनी दुरी अधिकारें ॥1॥
जातिस्वभाव आला डोळ्यां आड । तया घडे नाड न कळतां ॥ध्रु.॥
कामधेनु देखे जैशा गाईह्मैसी । आणिकांतें ऐसी करोनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय बोलोनियां फार । जयाचा वेव्हार तया साजे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who, blinded by his own nature, dismisses gems as though they were glass has brought ruin upon himself unknowingly. He looks upon the wish-fulfilling cow as though she were an ordinary buffalo, and treats everything else the same way.

Says Tuka, what more can be said? Each one's dealings suit himself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man strings gems in a house and then, with his pride of rank, pushes them away as if they were glass. His inborn nature comes between his eyes and what he sees, so he is ruined without knowing it. He looks at the wish-fulfilling cow as though she were just a cow or a buffalo, and he treats everything else the same way. Tuka says: what is the use of saying more? Each person's dealings suit what he is.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at the man who cannot tell value from worthlessness because his own conceit blinds him. He has real gems in hand yet throws them aside as glass, and out of pride of caste or rank he fails to recognize what stands before him. The image of the wish-fulfilling cow seen as an ordinary beast names what is at stake: he is in the presence of something priceless, even God or the true teacher, and treats it as common. The warning is not contempt for the man but a mirror; the way you handle what you meet reveals exactly what you are.

GATHA 3792 The Nature of God

God's sovereignty, the puppeteer behind the show

मराठी मूळ

तरी च हीं केलीं । दानें वाईट चांगलीं ॥1॥
येक येक शोभवावें । केलें कवतुक देवें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय त्याची सत्ता । सूत्र आणीक चिाळता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धुरें । डोळे भरिले परि खरें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All these different gifts, both bad and good, were made for a reason: so that one might adorn the other. God has created this spectacle.

What authority does any creature have? Another pulls the strings. Says Tuka, smoke may fill the eyes, but the truth remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All these gifts were given for a reason, both the bad ones and the good. One was made to set off the other. God arranged this whole spectacle. What power does any creature have? Another hand pulls the strings. Tuka says: smoke may fill the eyes, but the truth still holds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying the whole spread of good and bad in the world is not random; it is a single arrangement, made so that one thing shows up against the other. Behind it all is God, who set the spectacle going. From this he draws the hard conclusion: no creature has any independent power of its own, because someone else is working the strings, the way a puppeteer moves the puppets. The smoke that fills the eyes is the confusion of appearances that makes us think we act on our own; under it, the truth of that one governing hand stays firm.

GATHA 3793 The Necessity of Experience

Direct experience over hearsay

मराठी मूळ

अंधळें तें सांगे सांगितल्या खुणा । अनुभव देखणा प्रगट त्या ॥1॥
नांदणुक सांगे वडिलाचें बळ । कैसा तो दुर्बळ सुख पावे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नांदों आपल्या प्रतापें । तयासी लोकांपें स्तुती सांगों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A blind person can only repeat signs told to him, but one who sees speaks from direct experience. One who describes prosperity by invoking the power of ancestors shows how even a weak person finds comfort that way.

Says Tuka, we shall live by our own merit and speak of it to the people with praise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A blind man can only repeat the signs he was told. The one who sees speaks from what is plainly before him. A man who boasts of his standing by leaning on his ancestors' strength shows how even a weak person can find some comfort that way. Tuka says: we will live by our own strength, and we will speak its praise to the people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a line between borrowed words and firsthand sight. The blind man can recite the descriptions handed to him, but he has not seen; only the one with eyes speaks from what is actually before him. The boaster who props himself up on his ancestors' power is like that blind man, taking comfort from a strength that is not his own. Tukaram refuses both: he will stand on what he has realized for himself and let that realization, not inherited credit, be what he commends to others.

GATHA 3794 Social Criticism

Social criticism, gifts that ruin both

मराठी मूळ

करी आणिकांचा अपमान । खळ छळवादी ब्राह्मण। तया देतां दान । नरका जाती उभयतां ॥1॥
तैसें जालें दोघांजणां। मागतिया यजमाना । जिाळयेलें वनां । आपणासहित कांचणी॥ध्रु.॥
घडितां दगडाची नाव । मोल क्लेश गेले वाव । तरता नाहीं ठाव। बुडवी तारुं तरतीया ॥2॥
चोरा दिधला सांटा । तेणें मारियेल्या वाटा । तुका ह्मणे ताठा । हें तंव दोघे नाडती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A wicked and contentious Brahmin who insults others brings both giver and receiver to hell when gifts are offered to him. Both the beggar and the patron are ruined, like a goldsmith who burns down the forest along with himself.

Building a boat of stone costs great effort and expense, yet it has no place to float and sinks the vessel of those who would cross. Says Tuka, giving one's store to a thief who robs the roads brings ruin to both sides through their stubbornness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A wicked, quarrelsome Brahmin who insults others: give a gift to him, and both the giver and the taker go to hell. So it goes for the two of them, the patron who asks and the man he begs from; it is like a goldsmith who burns down a whole forest, and himself along with it. Build a boat out of stone, and the cost and the toil go to waste; it has no place to float and drowns the very ones who would cross. Give your store to a thief who robs the roads, Tuka says, and through their stubbornness both sides come to ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning that misplaced giving destroys giver and receiver alike. A gift handed to an arrogant, contentious priest who lives by insulting people does not earn merit; it drags both of them down, the way a goldsmith chasing a little gain can set fire to a forest and burn himself in it. He piles on images of effort spent on the worthless: a stone boat that cannot float and sinks its passengers, a gift handed to a highway robber. The point is discernment in religious giving; pouring devotion or charity into a corrupt vessel ruins everyone, and the stubbornness that keeps the practice going is itself the trap.

GATHA 3795 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, let it all burn for Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

जळो ते जाणींव जळो ते शाहाणींव । राहो माझा भाव विठ्ठलपायीं ॥1॥
जळो तो आचार जळो तो विचार । राहो मन स्थीर विठ्ठलपायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जळो हा लौकिक जळो दंभमान । लागो जीव ध्यान विठ्ठलाचें ॥2॥
जळो हें शरीर जळो हा संबंध । राहो परमानंद माझा कंठीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे येथे अवघें चि होय । धरीं मना सोय विठोबाची ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let worldly knowledge burn. Let cleverness burn.

May my devotion remain fixed at Vitthal's feet. Let ritual burn.

Let deliberation burn. May my mind stay steady at Vitthal's feet.

Let social standing burn. Let pride and pretense burn.

May my life be absorbed in the meditation of Vitthal. Let this body burn.

Let all attachments burn. May supreme bliss remain in my chitta.

Says Tuka, everything is found here. O mind, take hold of the path to Vithoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let that knowing burn. Let that cleverness burn. Let my devotion stay at Vitthal's feet. Let that ritual burn. Let that reasoning burn. Let my mind stand still at Vitthal's feet. Let reputation burn. Let pride and pretense burn. Let my life fix itself on the meditation of Vitthal. Let this body burn. Let this whole web of relations burn. Let supreme bliss stay in my throat. Tuka says: everything is found right here. O mind, take hold of the road to Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws every prized thing onto the fire to keep one thing alone. He calls for knowledge, cleverness, ritual, reasoning, reputation, pride, even the body and all its relationships to burn, refusing to let any of them rank above his goal. What survives the fire is devotion fixed at Vitthal's feet, the mind held steady, the life absorbed in remembering Him, and bliss kept close in the throat. The closing line is the whole teaching: do not look elsewhere, everything you seek is here, so the mind should simply take the road to Vithoba.

GATHA 3796 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, asking what to do

मराठी मूळ

विश्वास धरूनि राहिलों निवांत । ठेवूनियां चित्त तुझे पायीं ॥1॥
तरावें बुडावें तुझिया वचनें । निर्धार हा मनें केला माझा॥ध्रु.॥
न कळे हें मज साच चाळविलें । देसी तें उगलें घेइन देवा ॥2॥
मागणें तें सरे ऐसें करीं देवा । नाहीं तरी सेवा सांगा पुढें॥3॥
करावें कांहीं कीं पाहावें उगलें । तुका ह्मणे बोलें पांडुरंगा॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I rest in quiet faith, having placed my mind at Your feet. Whether I am saved or drowned, it is by Your word.

This is the firm resolve I have made in my chitta. I cannot tell whether You are guiding me truly or leading me astray.

Whatever You give, I shall accept it silently, O God. Grant me what I ask so that asking itself may end.

If not, then tell me what service lies ahead. Says Tuka, should I do something, or should I simply watch in silence? Speak, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I rest quietly in trust, having laid my mind at Your feet. To be carried across or to drown is by Your word; this is the firm resolve I have made in my heart. I cannot tell whether You are truly guiding me or leading me astray. Whatever You give, I will take it without a word, O God. Bring my asking to an end. If not, then tell me what service comes next. Should I do something, or just watch in silence? Speak, O Panduranga. So says Tuka.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has handed over the outcome and is waiting on God for instruction. He sets his mind at the Lord's feet and accepts in advance that whether he is saved or sunk depends entirely on God's word, not his own effort. He admits he cannot even tell guidance from being led astray, and he agrees to take whatever comes without complaint. The honesty of the prayer is its end: he presses God to either finish his wanting altogether or else tell him plainly what to do next, to act or to stay still, because a surrendered person still needs to know which way to face.

GATHA 3797 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, plunge the mind into the feet

मराठी मूळ

देवाचिये पायीं देई मना बुडी । नको धांवों वोढी इंद्रियांचे ॥1॥
सर्व सुखें तेथें होती एकवेळे । न सरती काळें कल्पांतीं ही ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणें येणें खुंटे धांवे वेरजार । न लगे डोंगर उसंतावे ॥2॥
सांगन तें तुज इतुलें चि आतां । मानी धन कांता विषतुल्य ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे होती उपकार । उतरों हा पार भवसिंधु ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Immerse the mind at the feet of God. Do not let it chase after the pull of the senses.

All joys are found there at once, and they never run out even at the end of an age. Coming and going ceases, and the weary wandering stops.

No mountain of effort need be climbed for rest. I tell you just this much now: regard wealth and family as poison.

Says Tuka, great will be the benefit, for you shall cross this ocean of worldly life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Plunge your mind into the feet of God. Do not let it run after the pull of the senses. Every joy is found there all at once, and it does not run out even at the end of an age. Going and coming stops; the weary back and forth ends. No mountain of effort has to be climbed for rest. I tell you only this much now: count wealth and family as poison. Tuka says: the gain will be yours, for you will cross over this ocean of worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing the listener to drop the chase of the senses and sink the whole mind into God's feet. He promises that all joy is gathered there at once, a joy that does not wear out even when an age ends, and that the exhausting cycle of coming and going simply stops. He insists this is not a steep climb of effort but a resting place. The blunt instruction is to treat wealth and family as poison, not because they are evil in themselves but because clinging to them keeps the mind chasing; let them go and you cross the ocean of birth and death.

GATHA 3798 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, death conquered, the mind at rest

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी विठ्ठलाचे दास जालों आतां । न चले हे सत्ता आणिकांची ॥1॥
नावरे तयासी ऐसें नाहीं दुजें । करितां पंढरिराजें काय नव्हे ॥ध्रु.॥
कोठें तुज ठाव घ्यावयासी धांवा । मना तूं विसावा घेई आतां ॥2॥
इंद्रियांची वोढी मोडिला व्यापार । ज्या अंगें संचार चाळी तुज ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी जिंकोनियां काळ । बैसलों निश्चळ होऊनियां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become a servant of Vitthal now, and no other power holds sway over me. There is nothing that can overpower the one whom the Lord of Pandhari protects.

Where will you run to take refuge, O mind? Rest now and take your ease. The pull of the senses has been broken and their activity has ceased.

The very force that once drove you now obeys a different master. Says Tuka, we have conquered death itself and sit immovable and still.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become Vitthal's servant now. No other power rules me anymore. Nothing can overpower the one whom the King of Pandhari protects; what cannot the King of Pandhari do? Where will you run to find refuge, O mind? Rest now and take your ease. The pull of the senses is broken, their trade shut down. The very force that once drove you now obeys another master. Tuka says: we have conquered death itself and sit down, unmoving and still.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram announces a change of ownership: he belongs to Vitthal now, so no other power has any claim on him. Under the protection of the King of Pandhari nothing can overpower him, for there is nothing that Lord cannot do. He turns to his own restless mind and tells it to stop running and rest, because the grip of the senses has been broken and the energy that once dragged him outward now serves God instead. The triumph is complete in the last line: with the senses stilled and the mind at peace, he says death itself is conquered, and he sits down immovable.

GATHA 3799 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, one pure intention suffices

मराठी मूळ

सांगतों तरि तुह्मी भजा रे विठ्ठला । नाहीं तरि गेला जन्म वांयां ॥1॥
करितां भरोवरी दुरावसी दुरी । भवाचिये पुरीं वाहावसी ॥2॥
कांहीं न लगे एक भाव चि कारण । तुका ह्मणे आण विठ्ठलाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I tell you, worship Vitthal. Otherwise, this birth has gone to waste.

If you go on arguing, you will drift farther away and be swept along in the flood of worldly existence. Nothing elaborate is needed; pure intention alone is the key.

Says Tuka, I swear by Vitthal Himself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am telling you: worship Vitthal. Otherwise this birth has gone to waste. If you keep arguing, you only move farther away and get swept along in the flood of worldly life. Nothing elaborate is needed; one pure feeling alone is the whole cause. Tuka says: I swear by Vitthal Himself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives a plain, urgent instruction: worship Vitthal, or this human birth is thrown away. He warns that endless debating does not bring you nearer; it pushes you farther off and lets the current of worldly life carry you downstream. Against that, he says nothing complicated is required, no elaborate apparatus, because a single sincere feeling is the one thing that matters. He closes by staking his own word on it, swearing by Vitthal that this is true.

GATHA 3800 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the bookish quarreler

मराठी मूळ

शब्दज्ञानी येऊं नेदीं दृष्टीपुढें । छळवादी कुडे अभक्त ते ॥1॥
जळो ते जाणींव जळो त्याचे दंभ । जळो त्याचें तोंड दुर्जनाचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येती दाटूनि छळाया । त्यांच्या बोडूं डोया न धरुं भीड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will not allow those who deal in mere book-knowledge to come before me. Those contentious deceivers are no devotees.

Let their cleverness burn. Let their pretense burn.

Let the face of such wicked ones be scorched. Says Tuka, when they come pressing to harass, I will shave their heads and show them no courtesy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will not let the men of mere book-words stand before my eyes. These quarrelsome cheats are no devotees. Let their cleverness burn. Let their show of piety burn. Let the wicked one's face be scorched. Tuka says: when they crowd in to harass me, I will shave their heads and show them no respect.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing a hard line against people who turn scripture into a weapon for argument. He refuses to even look at those who deal in book-learning while picking fights, because contentiousness and devotion cannot live in the same person. The fire he calls down is not on the man but on the pattern: the cleverness, the pretense, the wicked use of knowledge to bully. When such people press in to harass him, he promises he will not soften with courtesy but will publicly disgrace the bullying itself. The warning turns back on the reader: am I using what I know to fight, or to love?

GATHA 3801 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the duty to confront wrong

मराठी मूळ

अन्यायासी राजा जरि न करितां दंड । बहुचक ते लंड पीडिती जना ॥1॥
ने करी निगा कुणबी न काढितां तण । कैंचे येती कण हातासी ते ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतां करूं नये अनुचित। पाप नाहीं नीत विचारिता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the king does not punish wrongdoers, the wicked grow bold and oppress the people. If the farmer does not weed his field, how will grain come into his hands? Says Tuka, one should never act unjustly toward the saints. Where there is sin, there is no righteousness in sight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If the king does not punish the wrongdoer, the wicked grow bold and crush the people. If the farmer does not pull out the weeds, how will any grain reach his hands? Tuka says: one must never do wrong to the saints. Where there is sin, no rightness can be found.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is defending the duty to confront evil rather than let it pass. He gives two plain pictures: a king who will not punish lets cruelty spread, and a farmer who will not weed will harvest nothing. Tolerating wrong is not gentleness; it is how the wicked gain the upper hand and the innocent suffer. The sharp turn comes at the end, that one must never wrong the saints, because where sin is allowed, righteousness simply cannot stand. The call is to weed your own field too: name the wrong, do not feed it.

GATHA 3802 Worldly Life

Worldly life, accepting one's lot

मराठी मूळ

भले लोक नाहीं सांडीत ओळखी । हे तों झाली देखी दुस†याची ॥1॥
असो आतां यासी काय चाले बळ । आपुलें कपाळ वोडवलें ॥ध्रु.॥
समर्थासी काय कोणें हें ह्मणावें । आपुलिया जावें भोगावरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मां बोल नाहीं देवा । नाहीं केली सेवा मनोभावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Good people never abandon a relationship. But this has become a spectacle for strangers.

Let it be. What force can prevail against this? One must accept what one's own forehead has written.

Who can tell the powerful one what to do? One must go and face one's own destiny. Says Tuka, there is no blame on You, O God. I have not served You with a wholehearted mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Good people never drop a friendship. But now this has become a show for strangers to watch. Let it be. What strength can stand against this? My own forehead has brought this on me. Who can tell the powerful one what to do? One must go and live out one's own fate. Tuka says: there is no blame on you, O God. I did not serve you with my whole heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is wrestling with the pain of being abandoned and watched by outsiders, and he refuses to lay the blame outside himself. He notes that the good keep faith, yet his own situation has become a spectacle for strangers. Instead of protesting, he submits to what fate has written on his forehead and accepts that no one bargains with the all-powerful one. The final turn is the heart of it: he clears God of all blame and points the finger at himself, that he never served wholeheartedly. The lesson is to stop accusing and to examine the half-heartedness in one's own devotion.

GATHA 3803 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, drop the ego and sit with God

मराठी मूळ

मुकें होतां तुझ्या पदरीचें जातें । मूर्ख तें भोगितें मीमीपण ॥1॥
आपुलिये घरीं मैंद होऊनी बसे । कवण कवणासी बोलों नका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मां सांगतों मी खुण । देवासी तें ध्यान लावुनि बसा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who was mute would have been carried in Your lap, but the foolish one suffers the consequences of his own ego. He sits in his own home like a fraud.

Do not blame anyone else. Says Tuka, I tell you the secret: fix your attention on God and sit in contemplation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you stay silent, what was given into your lap is lost; the fool eats the fruit of his I-and-me. He sits in his own house playing the cheat. Do not go blaming this one and that one. Tuka says: I will tell you the secret. Fix your mind on God and sit there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is urging the listener to give up self-importance and turn the mind to God. The picture is of a person who lets the gift slip away and then suffers the consequences of his own ego, sitting at home behaving like a fraud. The remedy is not to keep accusing other people of this and that, since that is just more of the same self-deception. Tukaram then hands over the plain secret he keeps repeating: set your attention on God and sit in steady contemplation. The work is inward, not in finding fault outside.

GATHA 3804 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the only marketplace worth attending

मराठी मूळ

आषाढी निकट । आणी कातिनकीचा हाट ॥1॥
पुरे दोन्ही च बाजार । न लगे आणीक व्यापार ॥ध्रु.॥
तें चि घ्यावें तें चि घ्यावें । कैवल्याच्या रासी भावें ॥2॥
कांहीं कोणा नेणे । विठो वांचूनि तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Ashadhi pilgrimage is near, and then comes the fair of Kartiki. These two gatherings alone are enough.

No other trade is needed. Take, take again and again the heaps of liberation at a bargain.

Says Tuka, I know nothing and no one besides Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Ashadhi pilgrimage is near, and the fair of Kartiki comes after. These two markets are enough. No other trade is needed. Take it, take it, the heaps of liberation, with love and for almost nothing. Tuka says: I know nothing and no one except Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the great Pandharpur pilgrimages of Ashadh and Kartik into a marketplace where the only goods are the company of God. He says these two fairs are the whole of his commerce; he needs no other dealing in the world. What is sold there is liberation itself, piled in heaps and had cheaply, the price being only love. The closing line is total surrender: outside of Vitthal he knows nothing and no one. The point is that devotion is the one trade that pays in the thing every other trade cannot give.

GATHA 3805 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the lover's sweet complaint

मराठी मूळ

देऊनियां प्रेम मागितलें चित्त । जाली फिटाफिट तुह्मां आह्मां ॥1॥
काशानें उदार तुह्मांसी ह्मणावें । एक नेसी भावें एक देसी ॥ध्रु.॥
देऊनियां थोडें नेसील हें फार । कुंटिसी विचार अवघियांचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां भांडवल चित्त । देउनी दुश्चत पाडियेलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You gave me love and asked for my mind in return. This has been a fair exchange between us.

How can You be called generous when You take one thing in affection and give another? You give a little but take much in return, encompassing everyone in Your reckoning. Says Tuka, our capital was the mind, and by giving it away we have been left in distress.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You gave me love and asked for my mind in return. So you and I have settled the account. How can you be called generous? You wear one thing with affection and hand over another. You give a little and take a great deal; you fold everyone into your reckoning. Tuka says: our only capital was the mind, and by giving it away we have been left undone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays at accusing God of striking a one-sided bargain, the way a lover scolds the beloved. God gave love but took the whole mind in exchange, so the books are squared, yet Tukaram pretends to question whether this counts as generosity at all. The complaint is that God gives a little and takes much, drawing every devotee into the same shrewd account. The mock-grievance hides the real gladness: he has handed over his one piece of capital, the mind, and is left helpless, which is exactly what surrender means. The sweetness is that being undone by God is the gain disguised as loss.

GATHA 3806 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, steadiness over hasty zeal

मराठी मूळ

तातडीची धांव अंगा आणि भाव । खोळंबा तो मग निश्चयाचा ॥1॥
ह्मणउनि बरी विचारावी चाली । उरीचि ते बोली कामा येते ॥ध्रु.॥
कोरडें वैराग्य माजिरा बडिवार । उतरे तो शूर अंगींचें तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरी झ†याची ते चाली । सांचवण्या खोली कैसीयांची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hasty passion brings intensity to the body but then stalls in the grip of indecision. Therefore, it is better to walk thoughtfully, for words spoken with care are the ones that prove useful.

Dry renunciation and empty boasting fade away. Only the warrior who draws on his inner strength endures.

Says Tuka, the steady gait is the good one, for it preserves one's reserves in all conditions.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A sudden burst of feeling rushes through the body, then stalls in indecision. So it is better to walk with thought, for words held back and weighed are the ones that do the work. Dry renunciation and empty boasting wear off. Only the warrior who draws on real inner strength holds out. Tuka says: the steady pace is the good one. How else are reserves kept for the deep stretch?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning against passion that flares up and then dies in confusion. The body can be carried away by a sudden surge of zeal, but it soon stalls, so a thoughtful, measured pace is wiser, and words spoken with care are the ones that actually accomplish something. He contrasts two kinds of seeker: the one whose renunciation is dry and whose vows are mere boasting, who fades, and the true warrior who endures by drawing on genuine inner strength. The steady gait is praised because it conserves one's reserves for the long, deep road. The lesson is to distrust your own flashes of fervor and to build a strength that lasts.

GATHA 3807 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, content without heaven

मराठी मूळ

मी तों बहु सुखी आनंदभरिता । आहें साधुसंतां मेळीं सदा ॥1॥
देवा कांहीं व्हावें ऐसें नाहीं माझ्या जीवा । आणीक केशवा तुजविण ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगे वैकुंठ मोक्ष सायुज्यता । सुख वाटे घेतां जन्म ऐसें ॥2॥
मृत्युलोकीं कोण धरिलें वासना । पावावया जनासवें दुःख ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा दास ऐसें लोकां । कांहीं सकिळकां कळों यावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am truly content, filled with bliss, always in the company of saints and holy ones. O Keshava, I have no desire for anything in my jiva other than You.

I need neither Vaikuntha, nor liberation, nor union. It feels blissful to be born like this.

Who has chosen to dwell in this mortal world? Only one who wishes to share in the suffering of all people. Says Tuka, let the world know that I am Your servant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am full of joy, brimming with bliss, always in the company of saints and holy ones. O Keshava, my life wants nothing to happen to it, nothing at all except you. I do not need Vaikuntha, nor release, nor merging into you. It feels sweet to take birth like this. Who in this mortal world would still hold a desire? Only one who wishes to share the people's sorrow. Tuka says: let everyone come to know I am your servant.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares a happiness so complete that he refuses even the highest rewards of religion. Living among saints and turned wholly toward Keshava, he wants nothing more to befall him except God himself. He waves away Vaikuntha, liberation, and even merging into God, finding it sweet instead to keep being born. The one desire he allows is striking: to remain in the mortal world in order to share in the suffering of ordinary people. His only ambition is that everyone should know him simply as God's servant, which he treasures above every heaven.

GATHA 3808 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, plunder the free treasure

मराठी मूळ

घ्या रे लुटी प्रेम सुख । फेडा आजि धणी । चुकला तो मुकला । जाली वेरझार हाणी ॥1॥
घाला घातला वैकुंठीं । करूनियां जीवें साटी । पुरविली पाठी । वैष्णवीं काळाची ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघें आणिलें अंबर । विठोसहित तेथें धुर । भेदूनि जिव्हार । नामबाणीं धरियेला ॥2॥
संचित प्रारब्ध क्रियमाण । अवघीं जालीं गहन । केलीं पापपुण्यें । देशधडी बापुडीं ॥3॥
आनंदें गर्जती निर्भर । घोष करिती निरंतर । कांपती असुर । वीर कवणा नांगवती॥4॥
जें दुर्लभ ब्रह्मादिकां । आजि सांपडलें फुका । घ्या रे ह्मणे तुका । सावचित्त होउनी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, plunder the treasure of love and bliss. Satisfy your longing today.

Whoever misses this chance has lost it, and the opportunity will not return. A leap has been taken straight into Vaikuntha, staking one's very life.

The Vaishnavas have chased away death. The entire sky has been brought down, with Vitthal at its center.

He has been captured by the arrows of the Name piercing His very core. Past karma, destiny, and present actions have all been dissolved.

Merit and sin have been scattered like refugees. The devoted ones roar with boundless joy, their clamor unceasing.

The demons tremble, for these warriors are unconquerable. What is unattainable even for Brahma and the gods has today been found for free.

Says Tuka, take it now with full awareness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, plunder the joy of love. Fill your longing today. Whoever misses it has lost it; the round of coming and going is sheer loss. A raid has been made on Vaikuntha, staking life itself. The Vaishnavas have chased death from behind. The whole sky has been brought down, with Vitthal at its heart, pierced to the core and held fast by the arrows of the Name. Stored karma, ripened fate, and present deeds have all grown faint. Sin and merit have been scattered like driven refugees. The devotees roar, brimming over, their shout never stopping. The demons tremble; who can subdue these warriors? What is hard for even Brahma and the gods is found today for free. Tuka says: take it, take it, with all your wits about you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out like a herald at a sacking, telling everyone to seize the treasure of divine love before the moment passes. The whole poem is a war-image: the Vaishnavas have staked their lives and stormed Vaikuntha, driven off death, and pulled heaven and Vitthal himself down to earth, capturing God with the arrows of his own Name. In that storm the threefold weight of karma, the stored, the ripened, and the present, dissolves, and sin and merit are scattered like refugees. The point is that what even Brahma and the gods can barely reach is here being given away for nothing to anyone who sings the Name. So he urges the listener not to drift through the cycle of birth and death missing it, but to grab this free grace wide awake.

GATHA 3809 Longing and Separation

Longing, the servant of servants

मराठी मूळ

तुझिया दासांचा हीन जालों दास । न धरीं उदास मायबापा ॥1॥
तुजविण प्राण कैसा राहों पाहे । वियोग न साहे क्षणभरि ॥ध्रु.॥
आणिक माझ्या जीवें मोकलिली आस । पाहे तुझी वास पांडुरंगा ॥2॥
सर्वभावें तुज आणिला उचित । राहिलों निंश्चत तुझे पायीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज असो माझा भार । बोलतों मी फार काय जाणें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become the lowliest servant of Your servants. Do not hold me in contempt, O mother and father.

How can life go on without You? I cannot bear separation even for a moment. My jiva has given up all other hopes and waits only for You, O Panduranga.

With my whole being I have brought what is fitting and now rest assured at Your feet. Says Tuka, let my burden remain on You. I may speak too much, but what do I know?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become the lowest servant of your servants. Do not turn away from me in coldness, mother and father. Without you, how can my life go on? I cannot bear the parting even for a moment. My life has let go of every other hope and watches only for you, Panduranga. With my whole heart I have brought you what is fitting, and now I rest unworried at your feet. Tuka says: let my burden be yours. I talk too much; what do I really know?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the humblest place he can find, calling himself the servant of God's servants, and begs God, his mother and father, not to look on him coldly. He cannot bear even a moment's separation, and his life has dropped every other hope to keep watch for Panduranga alone. Having offered his whole heart, he sets down his anxiety and rests at God's feet. The closing line lays the entire weight of his life on God and admits his own ignorance, that he chatters and truly knows nothing. This is surrender as relief: handing the burden over and trusting the One who holds it.

GATHA 3810 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fault-finder's blind eye

मराठी मूळ

ते चि करीं मात । जेणें होइल तुझें हित ॥1॥
काय बडबड अमित । सुख जिव्हारीं सिणविसी ॥ध्रु.॥
जो मुळव्याधी पीडिला । त्यासी देखोन हांसे खरजुला ॥2॥
आराथकरी सोसी । त्यासि हांसे तो आळसी ॥3॥
क्षयरोगी ह्मणे परता । सर रोगिया तूं आतां ॥4॥
वडस दोहीं डोळां वाढले । आणिकां कानें कोंचें ह्मणे ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे लागों पायां । शुद्ध करा आपणियां ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Speak only of that which will serve your true welfare. Why do you exhaust yourself with endless chatter, tormenting your own chitta? A man afflicted with piles is laughed at by one who merely has an itch.

The diligent worker is mocked by the lazy one. The one with consumption tells another patient to step aside.

A man with growths on both eyes tells another that his ears stick out. Says Tuka, fall at the feet of the truth and purify yourselves.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Speak only of what will do you real good. Why wear yourself out with endless chatter, galling your own heart? The man sick with piles is laughed at by one who only has an itch. The hard worker is mocked by the lazy one. The man dying of consumption tells the other patient, step aside, you sick one. A man with growths over both eyes tells another his ears stick out. Tuka says: fall at the feet of truth and make yourselves clean.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram skewers the habit of pointing at everyone else's faults while ignoring one's own far worse condition. He first asks why a person tires himself out with idle talk that only torments his own heart. Then he stacks up sharp little portraits: the diseased mocking the slightly afflicted, the lazy mocking the diligent, the dying ordering another patient out of the way, the man blind with growths sneering at another's ears. Each shows a blindness to the larger flaw in oneself. The closing turn aims the whole thing inward: stop the mockery, bow at the feet of truth, and clean up your own life first.

GATHA 3811 Confession and Sin

Confession, lost on both sides

मराठी मूळ

कळों आला भाव माझा मज देवा । वांयांविण जीवा आठविलें ॥1॥
जोडूनि अक्षरें केलीं तोंडपिटी । न लगे सेवटीं हातीं कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे गेले दोन्ही ठाय । सवसार ना पाय तुझे मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My true state has become clear to me, O God. I have been calling upon You in vain.

Stringing words together, I have beaten my own mouth, yet in the end nothing has come to hand. Says Tuka, I have lost both worlds. Neither worldly life nor Your feet are mine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My true state has become clear to me, O God. I have remembered you to no purpose. I strung words together and beat my own mouth, but in the end nothing came into my hands. Tuka says: I have lost both my places. Neither worldly life nor your feet are mine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a bare confession of failure, saying he finally sees what he really is. He admits that his remembrance of God has been empty, his many crafted verses just so much mouth-beating that left his hands empty at the end. The painful conclusion is that he has fallen between two stools: he gave up worldly life, yet has not reached God's feet either, so he holds neither. This is the honest low point of the devotional path, where self-satisfaction collapses. Naming the emptiness without excuse is itself the turn, the place from which real surrender can begin.

GATHA 3812 Prayers

Plea for grace, worn out by karma

मराठी मूळ

आतां तरी मज सांगा साच भाव । काय म्यां करावें ऐसें देवा ॥1॥
चुकावया कर्म नव्हतें कारण । केला होय सीण अवघा चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नको पाहूं निरवाण । देई कृपादान याचकासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now at least tell me the truth, O God. What should I do? There was never any way to escape karma.

All effort has turned to mere exhaustion. Says Tuka, do not wait for my last extremity. Grant the gift of grace to this beggar.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now at least tell me the truth, O God. What should I do? There was never any way to escape karma. All my effort has turned to nothing but exhaustion. Tuka says: do not wait for my last extremity. Grant the gift of grace to this beggar.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God empty, asking only to be told the truth of his situation. He admits there was never any path by which he could outrun his own karma; striving against it has only left him spent. So he stops bargaining and asks for the one thing he cannot earn: grace. He calls himself a beggar and begs God not to hold back the gift until he is at the very end, but to give it now.

GATHA 3813 Confession and Sin

Confession, the pretender's helplessness

मराठी मूळ

बोल नाहीं तुझ्या दातृत्वपणासी । आह्मी अविश्वासी सर्वभावें ॥1॥
दंभें करी भक्ती सोंग दावी जना । अंतरीं भावना वेगिळया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा तूं काय करिसी । कर्मा दुस्तरासी आमुचिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no fault in Your generosity. It is I who lack faith in every way.

My devotion is a pretense performed for show before people, while my inner intentions are altogether different. Says Tuka, O God, what can You do against the insurmountable force of our own karma?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no fault in Your generosity. It is I who lack faith, in every way. My devotion is a pretense, a show put on before people, while inside my heart wants something else entirely. Tuka says: O God, what can even You do against the hard, uncrossable force of our karma?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram clears God of all blame and lays it squarely on himself. God's generosity is whole; the failure is the poet's own faithlessness. He names the precise shape of that failure: outward devotion performed for an audience while the inner heart is turned elsewhere, which is hypocrisy seen from inside. The closing line is honest despair, not theology: when a person's own karma is this stubborn, the question is what even God can do, and Tukaram leaves it as a question pointed at his own divided heart, not at God.

GATHA 3814 The Power of the Name

The Name dissolves caste

मराठी मूळ

नामधारकासी नाहीं वर्णावर्ण । लोखंड प्रमाण नाना जात ॥1॥
शस्त्र अथवा गोळे भलता प्रकार । परिसीं संस्कार सकळ ही हेम ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रजन्य वर्षतां जीवना वाहावट । तें समसकट गंगे मिळे ॥2॥
सर्व तें हें जाय गंगा चि होऊन । तैसा वर्णावर्ण नाहीं नामीं ॥3॥
महांपुरीं जैसें जातसे उदक । मध्यें तें तारक नाव जैसी ॥4॥
तये नावेसंगें ब्राह्मण तरती । केवीं ते बुडती अनामिक॥5॥
नाना काष्ठजात पडतां हुताशनीं । ते जात होउनी एकरूप ॥6॥
तेथें निवडेना घुरे कीं चंदन । तैसा वर्णावर्ण नामीं नाहीं ॥7॥
पूर्वानुवोळख तें चि पैं मरण । जरि पावे जीवन नामामृत ॥8॥
नामामृतें जालें मुळीचें स्मरण । सहज साधन तुका ह्मणे ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the one who bears the Name, there is no high or low station. Iron comes in many forms, but when touched by the philosopher's stone, all of it becomes gold.

When the rains fall and water flows into streams, it all mixes and merges into the Ganga. Everything becomes the Ganga itself.

Likewise, in the Name there is no distinction of caste. As a boat in a great flood carries all who board it, so Brahmins cross over.

How then can the unnamed ones drown? When various kinds of wood are cast into the fire, they all become one form. There one cannot distinguish firewood from sandalwood.

So too, in the Name there is no caste. The old identity is itself a kind of death.

When the nectar of the Name is received, the original remembrance is restored. Says Tuka, the Name is the natural and effortless means.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the one who bears the Name, there is no high or low birth. Iron comes in many kinds, but touched by the philosopher's stone, all of it becomes gold. When the rains fall and the waters run down, they all mix together and meet the Ganga; all of it goes and becomes the Ganga itself. So too, in the Name there is no distinction of caste. In a great flood the boat carries all who climb aboard; Brahmins cross over on it, so how could the nameless ones drown? When many kinds of wood are thrown into the fire, they all become one form; there you cannot tell common wood from sandalwood. So too, in the Name there is no caste. The old identity is itself a kind of death, when the soul receives the nectar of the Name. By the nectar of the Name the first remembrance returns. Tuka says: the Name is the natural, effortless means.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a radical claim and proves it with four images: the Name erases the high and low of birth. Iron of every kind turns to gold at the touch of the stone; all the scattered waters become the one Ganga; a flood-boat carries everyone across without asking their rank; fire makes common wood and sandalwood into one indistinguishable form. In each case the lower thing is not ranked, it is transformed into the higher and the difference simply vanishes. He then names the stake plainly: the old caste-identity is a death the soul gladly dies, and what rises in its place is the original remembrance of God, restored by the Name. The Name, he says, is the natural and effortless means open to all, which is why no one who takes it can be left to drown.

GATHA 3815 Longing and Separation

Longing, life is worthless without Him

मराठी मूळ

काय वांचोनियां जालों भूमिभार । तुझ्या पायीं थार नाहीं तरि ॥1॥
जातां भलें काय डोळयांचें काम । जरि पुरुषोत्तम न देखती ॥ध्रु.॥
काय मुख बिळ श्वापदाचे धांव । नित्य तुझें नांव नुच्चारितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पैं या पांडुरंगाविण । न वचे चि क्षण जीव भला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What good is living if I have merely become a burden on the earth, without any place at Your feet? What use are eyes that do not behold Purushottama? What is this mouth but a cave for beasts if it does not daily utter Your name? Says Tuka, without Panduranga, the soul cannot endure even a single moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is the good of living, if I have only become a weight on the earth, with no place at Your feet? What is the use of eyes, if they do not behold Purushottama? What is this mouth but a den for beasts, if it does not daily speak Your name? Tuka says: without Panduranga, the soul cannot last even a single moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures the worth of his own existence by one thing alone: whether it is turned toward God. A life with no place at the feet of Vitthal is mere dead weight on the earth, eyes that never see Purushottama are useless, and a mouth that does not speak the Name is no better than an animal's hole. The escalating images strip away every reason a person might give for valuing their own life apart from God. The closing line lands the stakes: separated from Panduranga, the soul cannot survive even one moment, so to live is to keep Him before the eyes and the Name on the tongue.

GATHA 3816 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the inverted heart

मराठी मूळ

सोइ†यासी करी पाहुणेर बरा । कांडितो ठोंबरा संता साटीं ॥1॥
गाईसी देखोनी बदबदा मारी । घोडएाची चाकरी गोड वाटे ॥ध्रु.॥
पान फुल नेतो वेश्येसी उदंड । ब्राह्मणासी खांड देऊं नेदी ॥2॥
पर्वकाळीं धर्म न करी नासरी । वेची राजद्वारीं उदंड चि॥3॥
कीर्त्तना जावया होतसे हींपुष्टी । खेळतो सोंकटीं रात्रंदिवस॥4॥
बाइलेच्या गोता आवडीनें पोसी । मातापितियासाी दवडितो ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याच्या थुंका तोंडावरी । जातो यमपुरी भोगावया ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He feasts his friends lavishly but pounds bitter herbs for the saints. He scolds and beats the cow on sight but delights in grooming horses.

He brings garlands and flowers in abundance to the courtesan but will not give a bit of sugar to a Brahmin. He makes no charitable gifts on holy days but spends freely at the royal court.

He is too lazy to attend kirtan but gambles day and night. He lovingly supports his wife's relatives but drives away his own mother and father.

Says Tuka, spit upon his face. He is headed for the realm of Yama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He feasts his friends well but pounds bitter herbs for the saints. He beats the cow the moment he sees it, yet grooming horses feels sweet to him. He carries garlands and flowers in plenty to the courtesan, but will not give a sliver of sugar to a Brahmin. On holy days he does no charity, but at the king's door he spends freely. He is too lazy to go to kirtan, yet he gambles night and day. He gladly feeds his wife's relatives but drives his own mother and father away. Tuka says: spit on his face. He is going to the city of Yama to suffer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a man whose every choice is exactly backward, and the pattern is the point. In each pair he lavishes care where it flatters his appetites, friends, fine horses, the courtesan, the royal court, gambling, his wife's people, and withholds it where it would cost him without reward, the saints, the cow, the Brahmin, holy-day charity, kirtan, his own parents. The harsh closing line, spit on his face, is aimed at this inverted ordering of love, not at contempt for a soul: each of us can ask where our own generosity actually flows. The warning that he is bound for Yama's city names the stake, that a heart spent entirely on self-interest reaps its own suffering.

GATHA 3817 Prayers

Urgent plea, come running

मराठी मूळ

कां हो पांडुरंगा न करा धांवणें । तरि मज कोणें सोडवावें ॥1॥
तुझा ह्मणऊनि आणिकापें उभा । राहों हें तों शोभा नेदी आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
काळें पुरविली पाठी दुरवरी । पुढें पायां धीरी राहों नेदी ॥2॥
नको आणूं माझें संचित मनासी । पावन आहेसी पतितां तूं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चाले आणिकांची सत्ता । तुज आळवितां नवल हें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why, O Panduranga, do You not come running? If not You, then who will deliver me? Having called myself Yours, I cannot stand before anyone else for help. That would bring no honor now.

Time has pursued me from afar, and ahead, fear will not let me stand firm at Your feet. Do not bring my past karma to mind.

You are the purifier of the fallen. Says Tuka, when the power of others prevails, is it any wonder that my calling out to You goes unanswered?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why, O Panduranga, do You not come running? If not You, then who will set me free? Having called myself Yours, I cannot now go and stand before anyone else for help; that would bring You no honor now. Time has chased me from far off, and ahead, fear will not let me stand firm at Your feet. Do not bring my past karma to mind. You are the purifier of the fallen. Tuka says: when the power of others holds sway over me, is it strange that my calling out to You goes unheard?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out at God for delaying, and presses Him with the logic of belonging: having publicly called himself God's own, he cannot go begging anyone else, and to be left stranded would shame God's name, not just his own. He describes being squeezed from both sides, the past pursuing him like time itself and fear ahead keeping him from a firm footing at the feet. So he asks God to forget his accumulated karma and act as what He is called, the purifier of the fallen. The final line is half complaint, half plea: while other powers, his karma and his fear, still rule him, no wonder his prayer seems to go unanswered, which is exactly why he needs God to break in.

GATHA 3818 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, no use teaching the closed heart

मराठी मूळ

कावळ्याच्या गळां मुक्ताफळमाळा । तरी काय त्याला भूषण शोभे ॥1॥
गजालागीं केला कस्तुरीचा लेप । तिचें तो स्वरूप काय जाणे ॥ध्रु.॥
बकापुढें सांगे भावार्थे वचन । वाउगा चि सीण होय त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसे अभाविक जन । त्यांसी वांयां सीण करूं नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A garland of pearls around a crow's neck does not make it beautiful. Smearing musk on an elephant does not make it understand the fragrance.

Preaching scripture before a heron is wasted effort. Says Tuka, likewise, one should not waste one's energy on faithless people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A garland of pearls around a crow's neck does not make the crow beautiful. Smear musk on an elephant, and it still does not know the fragrance. Speak words full of meaning before a heron, and it is only wasted effort for you. Tuka says: faithless people are like this; one should not wear oneself out on them in vain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses three mismatched images to make a single practical point about teaching. Pearls cannot beautify a crow, musk cannot teach an elephant what fragrance is, and earnest scripture spoken to a heron is breath thrown away. In each case the precious thing is real, but the receiver has no capacity to receive it. The lesson is not contempt but discernment: with a heart closed to faith, even true teaching only exhausts the teacher, so it is wiser to spend that effort where it can take root than to wear yourself out where it cannot.

GATHA 3819 Prayers

Bold love, seizing His garment

मराठी मूळ

आतां धरितों पदरीं । तुज मज करीन सरी ॥1॥
जालों जीवासी उदार । उभा ठाकलों समोर ॥2॥
तुका विनवीतसे संतां । ऐसें सांगा पंढरिनाथा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I seize hold of Your garment and shall make You equal to me. I have become generous with my very life and stand right before You.

Says Tuka, appealing to the saints: please tell the Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I take hold of the hem of Your garment, and I will make You equal with me. I have grown generous with my own life; I stand right here, facing You. Tuka says, appealing to the saints: please tell this to the Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a daring, almost playful claim of intimacy. He grips God's garment like a child who will not be shaken off and announces he will make God his equal, the closeness of love rather than the distance of worship. He says he has become reckless, generous even with his own life, and so he plants himself directly before God with nothing held back. Then, in the signature line, he turns to the saints as go-betweens and asks them to carry his bold case to the Lord of Pandhari, trusting their word to reach where his own boldness aims.

GATHA 3820 The Nature of God

The unknowable God

मराठी मूळ

न कळसी ज्ञाना न कळसी ध्याना । न कळेसी दर्शना धुंडाळतां ॥1॥
न कळेसी आगमा न कळेसी निगमा । न बोलवे सीमा वेदां पार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा नाहीं अंतपार । ह्मणोनि विचार पडिला मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You cannot be known through knowledge, nor through meditation, nor by seeking Your vision through searching. You cannot be known through scripture or sacred texts.

The Vedas themselves cannot express Your boundary. Says Tuka, there is no end or limit to You, and therefore I am lost in thought.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You cannot be known by knowledge, nor by meditation, nor found by searching for Your sight. You cannot be known through the Agamas, nor through the Nigamas. The Vedas cannot speak Your limit, cannot reach Your far shore. Tuka says: there is no end or bound to You, and so I am left lost in thought.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up every recognized means of reaching God, knowledge, meditation, the longing for vision, the Agama and Nigama scriptures, even the Vedas, and reports that each one falls short. The point is not that these paths are worthless but that God exceeds them all; the Vedas themselves cannot state His limit or reach His farther shore. He names the stake in the last line: because there is simply no end or boundary to God to grasp, the seeker is left standing in wonder. That bafflement is not failure but the honest condition of a mind before the infinite.

GATHA 3821 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the warning of bondage

मराठी मूळ

पायां लावुनियां दोरी । भृंग बांधिला लेंकुरीं ॥1॥
तैसा पावसी बंधन । मग सोडवील कोण ॥ध्रु.॥
गळां बांधोनियां दोरी । वांनर हिंडवी घरोघरीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहें । रीस धांपा देत आहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A child ties a string to a beetle's leg and keeps it captive. In the same way, you too will fall into bondage, and then who will set you free? With a rope around its neck, a monkey is led from house to house.

Says Tuka, look, the bear dances for morsels thrown its way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A child ties a string to a beetle's leg and keeps it captive. In just this way you too will fall into bondage; and then who will set you free? With a rope tied around its neck, a monkey is led from house to house. Tuka says: look, the bear dances for the morsels thrown to it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns through three pictures of creatures held on a string: a beetle tethered by a child at play, a monkey led door to door by its rope, a bear made to dance for scraps. Each animal moves and performs, yet none is free; the leash is held by another. The point turned on the listener is the question in the middle, once you are bound like this, who will release you? He is warning that a life run by appetite and small rewards is exactly such a leash, and the time to see it is now, while the question of freedom is still open.

GATHA 3822 The Nature of God

Nature of God, love beyond a parent's

मराठी मूळ

मायबापें सांभिाळती । लोभाकारणें पिाळती ॥1॥
तैसा नव्हे देवराव । याचा कृपाळु स्वभाव ॥ध्रु.॥
मनासारिखें न होतां । बाळकासी मारी माता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगूं किती । बाप लेंकासी मारिती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Worldly parents care for and protect their children out of self-interest and attachment. But God the King is not like that.

His nature is pure compassion. When a child does not obey, the mother strikes it.

Says Tuka, how much can I explain? Fathers too beat their sons. But God is different from all of this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Worldly parents look after their children and raise them out of self-interest and attachment. God the King is not like that; His nature is pure compassion. When the child does not do as she wishes, the mother strikes it. Tuka says, how much can I tell you, fathers too beat their sons. But God is not like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts human love with God's by being honest about the human side. Even parents, the usual image of selfless care, love their children partly out of attachment and self-interest, and when crossed they strike, mothers and fathers alike. He does not romanticize them; he names the limit in their love. Against this he sets God the King, whose very nature is compassion that is not mixed with self-interest and does not turn to anger when disobeyed. The point is that the love we most trust on earth is still conditional, and only God's love is wholly and freely kind.

GATHA 3823 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, nothing goes with you

मराठी मूळ

धन मेळवूनि कोटी । सवें नये रे लंगोटी ॥1॥
पानें खाशील उदंड । अंतीं जासी सुकल्या तोंडें ॥ध्रु.॥
पलंग न्याहाल्या सुपती । शेवटीं गोव†या सांगाती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे राम । एक विसरतां श्रम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You may amass millions in wealth, but not even a loincloth will accompany you in the end. You may chew betel lavishly, but you will depart with a dry mouth.

You may sleep on luxurious beds, but in the end, a coarse shroud will be your companion. Says Tuka, forgetting Rama alone brings all suffering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You may gather wealth by the crore, but not even a loincloth goes with you. You may chew betel without limit, but in the end you leave with a dry mouth. You may sleep on luxurious beds, but at the last a coarse shroud is your companion. Tuka says: forgetting Rama alone is the whole of suffering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away the things people spend a life chasing by following each to its end. Crores of wealth cannot send even a scrap of cloth along at death; the endless betel leaves only a parched mouth; the soft bed is traded for the rough cloth of the corpse. The pattern shows that comfort and possession reach exactly to the edge of death and no further. Against that emptiness he sets the one thing that matters: the real loss, the source of all suffering, is forgetting Rama. Remember the Name, and the things that abandon you at the grave lose their power to deceive you now.

GATHA 3824 Prayers

Plea of the fallen, shelter taken

मराठी मूळ

विनवितों चतुरा तुज विश्वंभरा । परियेसी दातारा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
तुझे दास ऐसें जगीं वाखाणिलें । आतां नव्हे भलें मोकलितां ॥ध्रु.॥
माझे गुणदोष कोण जाणे मात । पावनपतित नाम तुझें ॥2॥
लोभ मोह माया आह्मां बांधवितां । तरि हा अनंता बोल कोणा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मी तों पतित चि खरा । परि आलों दातारा शरण तुज ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I pray to You, O wise Vishvambhara. Hear me, O generous Panduranga.

The world has proclaimed me as Your servant. It would not look good for You to abandon me now.

Who knows the account of my merits and faults? Your name is the Purifier of the Fallen. If greed, desire, and illusion continue to bind me, then the blame, O Ananta, falls on You.

Says Tuka, I am truly a fallen one, but I have come to Your shelter, O generous Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I pray to you, wise Vishvambhara. Hear me, generous Panduranga. The world has called me your servant. It would not look good now to let me go. Who can reckon up my merits and faults? Your name is the Purifier of the Fallen. If greed and desire and Maya keep binding me, then, Ananta, whose fault is that? Tuka says: I am a fallen one, truly. But I have come to your shelter, generous Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes empty-handed and turns his own emptiness into a claim on God. He leans on God's reputation: the world already names him a servant, so abandoning him now would shame the master, not the servant. He refuses to itemize his sins, because Vitthal's own name, Purifier of the Fallen, makes the sins beside the point. Then comes the bold turn: if greed and illusion still bind him, the blame rests on the Lord who has not yet cut them. He ends not by defending himself but by simply standing at the shelter, fallen and unashamed of it.

GATHA 3825 Prayers

Petition for one gift, the taste of God

मराठी मूळ

त्राहे त्राहे सोडवीं अनंता । लागों दे ममता तुझे पायीं॥1॥
एक चि मागणें देई तुझी गोडी । न लगे आवडी आणिकाची ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझें नाम गुण वर्णीन पवाडे । आवडीच्या कोडें नाचों रंगीं ॥2॥
बापा विठ्ठलराया हें चि देई दान । जोडती चरण जेणें तुझे ॥3॥
आवडीसारखें मागितलें जरी । तुका ह्मणे करीं समाधान ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Save me, save me, deliver me, O Ananta. Let my attachment cling only to Your feet.

I ask but one thing: give me the sweetness of You alone. I need no love for anything else.

I shall sing the praises of Your name and Your virtues in great ballads, and I shall dance with joy in the arena of devotion. O Father Vitthal, grant me this one gift by which I may reach Your feet.

Says Tuka, if I have asked according to my chitta's true desire, then grant me satisfaction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Save me, save me, deliver me, Ananta. Let my love cling only to your feet. I ask one thing only: give me the taste of you. I want no love for anything else. I will sing your name and your deeds in long songs. I will dance with joy in the place of devotion. Father Vitthalraya, give me this one gift, by which I reach your feet. Tuka says: if I have asked from my heart's true longing, then grant it, and let me rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries for rescue, but names exactly what rescue means to him: not safety, but a single fixed love. He asks for only one gift, the sweetness or taste of God, and refuses any appetite for anything besides. That one taste is not idle; it overflows into singing the Name and dancing in the company of devotion, and it is the very means by which he reaches Vitthal's feet. He closes by staking the prayer on its sincerity: if this is truly his heart's longing and not a passing whim, then let God satisfy it and still his restlessness.

GATHA 3826 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the wrong thing in the wrong place

मराठी मूळ

सुगरणीबाई थिता नास केला । गुळ तो घातला भाजीमध्यें ॥1॥
क्षीरीमध्यें हिंग दुधामध्यें बोळ । थितें चि वोंगळ कैसें केलें ॥ध्रु.॥
दळण दळोनी भरूं गेली पाळी । भरडोनि वोंगळी नास केला ॥2॥
कापुराचे सांते आणिला लसण । वागवितां सीण दुःख होय ॥3॥
रत्नाचा जोहारी रत्न चि पारखी । येर देखोदेखीं हातीं घेती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी योग घडे निका । न घडतां थुंका तोंडावरी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A good cook has ruined everything by putting jaggery into the vegetable dish, adding asafoetida to the rice pudding, and dropping resin into the milk. What was perfectly fine has been made revolting.

After grinding the flour, she went to fill the mortar and instead made coarse mash, ruining the whole thing. She brought garlic to a market that trades in camphor.

Carrying such a thing around brings only distress. Only a true jeweler can appraise a gem; others merely handle stones by imitation.

Says Tuka, if the match is right, it is well. If not, spit upon the whole affair.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A good cook ruined what was fine. She put jaggery in the vegetables. She put asafoetida in the rice pudding, and resin in the milk. What was perfectly good she made disgusting. She ground the flour, went to fill the mortar, and made coarse mash instead, spoiling the lot. She brought garlic to a market that trades in camphor. To carry such a thing about brings only trouble and pain. Only a true jeweler can judge a gem. Others just handle stones because they see others do it. Tuka says: if the match is right, it is well. If it is not, spit on the whole affair.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images of competent people putting the right thing in exactly the wrong place: sweetness fouling a savory dish, garlic hawked where only camphor is prized. The point is fitness, not effort; skill aimed wrongly produces something revolting, and grinding well still yields mash if you mishandle the next step. Behind the kitchen joke is discernment in spiritual life: only the true jeweler can tell a gem, while others merely imitate, handling stones they cannot value. He ends bluntly, that a thing is worth keeping only if it truly fits, and worth nothing if it does not. The mirror he holds up asks whether our own devotion is well-matched or just imitation handled out of place.

GATHA 3827 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, God waiting on the riverbank

मराठी मूळ

बाप माझा दिनानाथ । वाट भक्तांची पाहात ॥1॥
कर ठेवुनियां करीं । उभा चंद्रभागे तिरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
गळां वैजयंतीमाळा। रूपें डोळस सांवळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भेटावया । सदा उभारिल्या बाहएा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My father, the Lord of the humble, stands watching for His devotees to come. He stands with hands on His hips on the bank of the Chandrabhaga.

Around His neck hangs the Vaijayanti garland, and His form is radiant and dark-complexioned. Says Tuka, His arms are always raised, ready to embrace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My father, Lord of the lowly, stands watching for his devotees to come. He stands with his hands on his hips, there on the bank of the Chandrabhaga. A Vaijayanti garland hangs at his neck. His form is dark and beautiful, with seeing eyes. Tuka says: to embrace us, his arms are always open.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints Vitthal not as a remote deity but as a father who waits and watches for his children. The whole posture of the temple image is read as longing: hands on hips on the Chandrabhaga's bank, eyes that truly see, arms held ready. The dark, garlanded form is gazing back at the devotee even as the devotee gazes at him. The point lands in the last line: the seeking is mutual, and God's arms are not crossed but perpetually open to embrace whoever comes.

GATHA 3828 Prayers

Surrender, the child to its mother

मराठी मूळ

माझें जीवन तुझे पाय । कृपाळु तूं माझी माय ॥1॥
नेदीं दिसों किविलवाणें । पांडुरंगा तुझें तान्हें ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्ममरण तुजसाटीं । आणीक नेणें दुजी गोष्टी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुजविण । कोण हरिल माझा सीण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your feet are my very life. You are the compassionate one, my mother.

Do not let me appear pitiable, O Panduranga, for I am Your little child. Birth and death I endure for Your sake alone.

I know no other concern. Says Tuka, without You, who will remove my suffering?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your feet are my life. You are kind; you are my mother. Do not let me look wretched, Panduranga. I am your little child. I bear birth and death for your sake. I know no other matter. Tuka says: without you, who will take away my weariness?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a small child to its mother, making his whole life depend on God's feet. He turns even birth and death, the great burden, into something endured only for God's sake, leaving room for no other concern in his mind. The plea is tender and a little protective of God's honor: do not let your own child be seen looking pitiable. The closing question states the stakes plainly, that there is no one else who can lift his exhaustion, so the helplessness itself is offered as the bond.

GATHA 3829 Devotion to Vitthal

Wonder, the devotee who made God wait

मराठी मूळ

कां रे पुंडए मातलासी । उभें केलें विठ्ठलासी ॥1॥
ऐसा कैसा रे तूं धीट । मागें भिरकाविली वीट ॥ध्रु.॥
युगें जालीं अठ्ठावीस । अजुनी न ह्मणसी बैस ॥2॥
भाव देखोनि निकट । देवें सोडिलें वैकुंठ ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे पुंडलिका । तूं चि बिळया एक निका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Pundalik, what boldness! You have kept Vitthal standing upright. How daring you are, having tossed the brick behind you.

Twenty-eight ages have passed, and still you have not told Him to sit. Seeing your devotion up close, God left Vaikuntha behind.

Says Tuka, O Pundalik, you alone are the one truly powerful devotee.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pundalik, what nerve! You have made Vitthal stand there upright. How bold you are, having thrown the brick behind you. Twenty-eight ages have passed, and still you do not say, sit. Seeing your love so close, God left Vaikuntha behind. Tuka says: Pundalik, you alone are the one truly mighty devotee.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells the founding story of Pandharpur with delighted mock-scolding: Pundalik, tending his parents, tossed a brick for the Lord to stand on and never told him to sit, so Vitthal has stood waiting for twenty-eight ages. The teasing is praise in disguise. Such audacity is only possible because Pundalik's love drew God out of Vaikuntha to the riverbank in the first place. The poem celebrates a devotion so intimate it can keep God standing, and names Pundalik the truly powerful one, since love, not force, is what binds the Lord.

GATHA 3830 Devotion to Vitthal

Absorption, the mind dissolved like salt

मराठी मूळ

तुज पाहातां समोरी । दृष्ट न फिरे माघारी ॥1॥
माझें चित्त तुझ्या पायां । मिठी पडिली पंढरिराया ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे सारितां निराळें । लवण मेळवितां जळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बळी । जीव दिला पायांतळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When I look at You standing before me, my gaze will not turn away. My mind has clung to Your feet in a tight embrace, O Lord of Pandhari.

It cannot be separated, just as salt, once dissolved in water, cannot be drawn apart. Says Tuka, with all his strength, he has offered his life beneath Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When I look at you before me, my gaze will not turn back. My mind has caught hold of your feet, Pandhariraya, and clings tight. It cannot be pulled away, as salt cannot be drawn back once it dissolves in water. Tuka says: with all his strength, he has given his life beneath your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a seeing that has become irreversible: once his eyes meet Vitthal, they refuse to turn away, and his mind grips the feet and will not let go. The image of salt in water names the kind of union he means, not a clinging that could be loosened but a dissolving that cannot be undone. Subject and object no longer come apart. The final line completes it as total self-offering, his whole life laid beneath those feet with everything he has.

GATHA 3831 Social Criticism

Social criticism, counsel wasted on the closed

मराठी मूळ

उपदेश किती करावा खळासी । नावडे तयासी बरें कांहीं ॥1॥
शुद्ध कां वासना नव्हे चांडाळाची । होळी संचिताची केली तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं भाव मनीं नाइके वचन । आपला आपण उणें घेतों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यासी काय व्याली रांड । करी बडबड रिती दिसे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much should one try to counsel the wicked? Nothing good appeals to them. The impure mind of such a person will not become clean, for he has made a bonfire of his own destiny.

There is no devotion in his mind, and he will not heed good counsel. He only brings ruin upon himself.

Says Tuka, what kind of mother bore such a one? He babbles endlessly yet remains empty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long should one counsel the wicked? Nothing good appeals to them. Why would such an impure mind ever turn clean? He has made a bonfire of his own store of good. There is no faith in his mind; he will not hear good words. He only takes the loss upon himself. Tuka says: what mother bore such a one? He babbles on, and is seen to be empty.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks a hard question about the limits of counsel: when a heart is shut, advice slides off, and good words find no purchase. The harsh figures are aimed at the pattern, not at a soul to be despised, that a closed mind burns up its own accumulated good and ends the loser by its own refusal. The empty babbling names a real trap: speaking endlessly while taking nothing in. Read inward, it is a warning to examine our own deafness to good counsel before we waste it on others, and to notice when our talk has gone hollow.

GATHA 3832 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord bound by his own name

मराठी मूळ

समर्थासी लाज आपुल्या नामाची । शरण आल्याची लागे चिंता ॥1॥
न पाहे तयाचे गुण दोष अन्याय । सुख देउनि साहे दुःख त्याचें ॥ध्रु.॥
मान भलेपण नाहीं फुकासाटीं । जयावरि गांठी झीज साहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें तूं सर्व जाणसी । मज अधिरासी धीर नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A powerful lord is bound by the honor of his own name. He is ever concerned about those who have taken his shelter.

He does not look at their merits, faults, or offenses. He bears their sorrow and grants them happiness.

Reputation and honor are not had for free. He who ties the knot bears the cost.

Says Tuka, You know all of this. I am restless, and I have no patience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A great lord is bound by the honor of his own name. He has to care about those who come for shelter. He does not look at their merits, faults, or wrongs. He gives them happiness and bears their sorrow himself. Honor and goodness do not come free. The one who ties the knot bears the cost. Tuka says: you know all this. I am anxious; I have no patience.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reasons from how a powerful, honorable lord behaves to how God must behave. A great one is bound by his own reputation, so once you take his shelter he cannot weigh your sins against you; he simply gives joy and absorbs your sorrow. The cost is real, and it falls on the protector, not the protected, for the one who ties the knot of refuge is the one who pays. Having argued the case, Tukaram drops the argument and confesses the truth underneath: he is restless and out of patience, and is really just pressing God to act on what God already knows.

GATHA 3833 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the joy of kirtan and holy company

मराठी मूळ

आनंदें कीर्तन कथा करीं घोष । आवडीचा रस प्रेमसुख ॥1॥
मज या आवडे वैष्णवांचा संग । तेथें नाहीं लाग किळकाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वल्प मात्र वाचे बैसलासे निका । राम कृष्ण सखा नारायण ॥2॥
विचारितां मज दुजें वाटे लाज । उपदेशें काज आणीक नाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त रंगलेंसे ठायीं । माझें तुझ्या पायीं पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In bliss I perform kirtan, telling the divine story with fervor. The essence of devotion is the sweetness of love.

I adore the company of Vaishnavas, for there the grip of time and death has no hold. With even a few words settled rightly on the tongue, Rama, Krishna, the friend Narayana, are present.

When I reflect, everything else seems shameful. No other teaching serves any purpose.

Says Tuka, my mind has become absorbed right there, at Your feet, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In bliss I sing kirtan and tell the story aloud. The juice of love is the sweetness I taste. I love the company of the Vaishnavas. There, time and death cannot reach. Just a few words sit rightly on the tongue: Rama, Krishna, the friend Narayana. When I think it over, everything else seems shameful. No other teaching is of any use to me. Tuka says: my mind has soaked into one place, into your feet, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes where his joy actually lives: in singing and telling God's story, where love itself is the sweetness on the tongue. The company of devotees is precious because in it the grip of time and death loses hold. Almost nothing is needed, only a few holy names settled rightly, Rama, Krishna, Narayana the friend, and that is enough. Set beside this, every other pursuit and teaching looks shameful and useless to him. The poem ends with the reason: his mind is dyed through and absorbed at Vitthal's feet, so it has no appetite left for anything else.

GATHA 3834 The Power of the Name

The Name, a world where chanting reigns

मराठी मूळ

ब्रह्मज्ञान जेथें आहे घरोघरीं । सर्व निरंतरी चतुर्भुज॥1॥
पापा नाहीं रीग काळाचें खंडण । हरिनामकीर्तन परोपरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हा चि भाव माझ्या चित्तीं । नाहीं आणिकां गती चाड मज॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where the knowledge of Brahman is in every home, all are like four-armed Vishnu at all times. Sin has no entry, and the power of death is broken, for the chanting of Hari's name resounds everywhere.

Says Tuka, this alone is the conviction of my chitta. I have no desire for any other path.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where the knowledge of Brahman is in every house, all of them, always, are like four-armed Vishnu. Sin has no way in, and the power of death is broken, for the kirtan of Hari's name sounds everywhere, in every way. Tuka says: this alone is the faith in my heart. I have no longing for any other way out.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram imagines a whole world soaked in the knowledge of Brahman, where every household holds it and every person stands as good as four-armed Vishnu. In such a place sin finds no doorway and even death's power is broken, simply because the Name of Hari is being sung everywhere without pause. The Name is treated not as one practice among many but as the force that remakes the world. He closes by claiming this conviction as the single faith of his heart, and refusing any desire for another path to liberation.

GATHA 3835 Faith and Trust

Faith, no enemy left but my own ignorance

मराठी मूळ

मज नाहीं कोठें उरला दुर्जन । मायबापाविण ब्रह्मांडीं हें ॥1॥
कासया जिकीर करणें येविसीं । भयाची मानसीं चिंता खंती ॥ध्रु.॥
विश्वंभराचिये लागलों सांभाळीं । संत नेती चाली आपुलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें पाळणें पोषणें । करी नारायण सर्वस्वेंसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no enemy left in this universe except for my own ignorance, which stands in place of a parent. Why should there be any worry or fear or anxiety in the heart? I have come under the care of Vishvambhara.

The saints guide me along their own path. Says Tuka, Narayana Himself sees to my nurture and sustenance with all that He has.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no enemy left anywhere. In this whole universe there is no one against me but my own ignorance, which stands where a parent should. Why should I fret about any of this? Why carry fear or worry or grief in my mind? I have come under Vishvambhara's care. The saints lead me along their own way. Tuka says: Narayana himself feeds me and raises me, with all that he has.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that his last enemy is gone, except the one inside, his own ignorance, which he names as the false parent still lodged in him. Once he has placed himself under Vishvambhara's care, fear and worry and grief lose their reason to exist. He is not navigating alone: the saints walk him along their tested path. The final line rests the whole thing on God's parenthood, that Narayana himself nurtures and sustains him with everything he has, so anxiety becomes pointless once that care is trusted.

GATHA 3836 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the blind passing on the blind

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं हित ठावें जननीजनका । दाविले लौकिकाचार तींहीं ॥1॥
अंधळ्याचे काठी अंधळें लागलें । घात एकवेळे मागेंपुढें ॥ध्रु.॥
न ठेवावी चाली करावा विचार । वरील आहार गळी लावी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केला निवाडा रोकडा । राऊत हा घोडा हातोहातीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Parents do not truly know what is good for their children. They merely teach the customs and conventions of society.

It is like the blind leading the blind with a stick; sooner or later, both will stumble. One should not follow old ways blindly but should reason carefully, for the bait on the hook above leads only to the throat.

Says Tuka, the verdict has been given on the spot. The horseman and the horse have been exchanged hand to hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Parents do not know what is truly good for their children. All they teach them is the customs of the world. It is the blind led with the blind man's stick; sooner or later, the one in front and the one behind, both fall. Do not just keep walking the old path. Stop and think. The bait set high on the hook drags you down by the throat. Tuka says: the verdict is settled here and now. The rider and the horse have changed hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns a hard eye on inherited religion. He says parents pass on only the conventions of society, not what actually saves a person, so child follows parent the way a blind man follows another blind man's stick, and both end in the ditch. The point is not contempt for parents; it is a warning against following any path without examining it for yourself. The worldly comforts dangled in front of you are bait on a hook: swallow them and they catch you by the throat. The closing image, rider and horse exchanged hand to hand, names how the trap is handed down from one generation to the next, with the verdict already passed.

GATHA 3837 Prayers

Prayer, the refugee at the feet

मराठी मूळ

आतां पहाशील काय माझा अंत । आलों शरणागत तुज देवा ॥1॥
करीं अंगीकार राखें पायांपाशीं । झणीं दिसों देसी कळिवलवाणें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं आइकिली मागें ऐसी मात । जे त्वां शरणागत उपेक्षले ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां धरीं अभिमान । आहेसी तूं दानशूर दाता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much longer will You test me? I have come to You as a refugee, O God. Accept me and keep me near Your feet.

Do not let me appear lowly and pitiable. Never has it been heard that You abandoned one who sought Your shelter.

Says Tuka, now uphold Your pride, for You are known as the most generous of givers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How long will you keep testing me? I have come to you for refuge, O God. Take me in; keep me near your feet. Do not let me be seen looking wretched and pitiable. It has never been heard, in all the past, that you cast off one who came to you for shelter. Tuka says: now guard your own honor, for you are known as the most open-handed of givers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays as one who has already thrown himself on God's mercy and is now waiting, asking how much longer the delay will last. His whole argument rests on God's reputation: no one has ever heard of the Lord abandoning a person who took refuge in him, so to abandon Tukaram now would stain that record. He even tells God to guard his own pride, since God is famed as the most generous of givers. The prayer makes the stakes God's, not just his own: the refugee's rescue is now a matter of the protector's honor.

GATHA 3838 Faith and Trust

Faith, only the Name is asked

मराठी मूळ

होईल तो भोग भोगीन आपुला । न घलीं विठ्ठला भार तुज ॥1॥
तुह्मांपासाव हें इच्छीतसें दान । अंतरींचें ध्यान मुखीं नाम ॥ध्रु.॥
नये काकुलती गर्भवासांसाटीं । न धरीं हें पोटीं भय कांहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज उदंड एवढें । न वांचावें पुढें मायबापा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever suffering is destined, I will endure it myself. I will not place that burden upon You, O Vitthal.

What I desire from You is this gift alone: constant remembrance within and Your name upon my lips. I will not beg and plead out of fear of rebirth, nor will I hold any terror in my chitta.

Says Tuka, this much is more than enough for me. Do not let me live on beyond this, O mother and father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever suffering is destined for me, I will bear it myself. I will not lay that burden on you, Vitthal. This is the only gift I want from you: your remembrance held within, your name on my lips. I will not whimper in fear of being born again. I will hold no such dread in my heart. Tuka says: this much is more than enough for me. Let me not live on past this, O mother and father.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to use God as an escape from his own karma. He accepts whatever pain is fated and will not hand that weight to Vitthal; the single thing he asks for is the Name, remembered inside and spoken aloud. He explicitly drops the common motive of bhakti as a way to dodge rebirth, saying he will not plead out of fear of another birth. Calling God mother and father, he asks not to outlive this one gift, because once you have the Name, nothing further is needed.

GATHA 3839 Longing and Separation

Longing, the complaint of the delayed soul

मराठी मूळ

काय तुझी ऐसी वेचते गांठोळी । मांहे टाळाटाळी करीतसां ॥1॥
चतुराच्या राया आहो पांडुरंगा । ऐसें तरि सांगा निवडूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण तुह्मां सुख असे या कवतुकें । भोगितां अनेकें दुःखें आह्मी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय जालासी निर्गुण । आह्मां येथें कोण सोडवील ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Is Your treasury truly being depleted? Is that why You keep delaying? O King of the wise, O Panduranga, if that is so, then say it plainly. What pleasure do You find in this game while I endure so many sorrows? Says Tuka, have You become formless and beyond reach? Who then will deliver us here?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Will your treasury run dry if you help me? Is that why you keep putting me off? O King of the wise, O Panduranga, if that is the reason, then say it plainly. What joy do you find in this game, while I go on suffering one sorrow after another? Tuka says: have you turned formless and gone beyond reach? Then who is left to set me free?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the bold, almost teasing complaint of a devotee kept waiting. Tukaram needles God: surely your store of grace is not so small that giving it would empty you, so why the delay? He demands a straight answer from the all-knowing Panduranga and asks what pleasure God can take in a game that is only pain for him. The last line carries the real fear: if God has dissolved into the formless and become unreachable, then there is no one left who can rescue him, which is exactly why he keeps clamoring for the personal Lord to answer.

GATHA 3840 True Worship

True worship, the life of all creatures

मराठी मूळ

देवाची पूजा हे भूताचें पाळण । मत्सर तो सीण बहुतांचा ॥1॥
रुसावें फुगावें आपुलियावरि । उरला तो हरि सकळ ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतपण यां चि नांवें । जरि होय जीव सकळांचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

True worship of God is the nurturing of all living beings. Envy is the source of suffering for many.

One should be angry only with oneself. What remains after that is all Hari.

Says Tuka, saintliness is defined by this alone: becoming the very life of all creatures.

IN PLAIN WORDS

True worship of God is the care of every living being. Envy is what wears so many people down. Be angry only with yourself. Whatever is left after that is all Hari. Tuka says: this alone is what sainthood means: to become the very life of all creatures.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram relocates worship from the shrine to the living world: to tend and protect all creatures is the real puja. He names envy as the disease that exhausts people, and gives a sharp instruction, sulk and rage at yourself alone, not at others. Once your resentment turns inward and burns out, what remains in front of you, every being, is simply Hari. The closing line defines holiness not by ritual or austerity but by one test: have you become the very life of all creatures.

GATHA 3841 Autobiography

Autobiography, contemplation alone as service

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं जप तप जीवाची आटणी । मनासी दाटणी नाहीं केली ॥1॥
निजलिया ठायीं पोकारिला धांवा । सांकडें तें देवा तुझें मज ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं आणूनियां समर्पिनलें जळ । सेवा ते केवळ चिंतनाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मीं वेचिलीं उत्तरें । घेतलीं उदारें साच भावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have not performed austerities or penances. I have not forced or disciplined the mind.

From the very place where I lay, I cried out to You. This difficulty, O God, is between You and me.

I have not fetched and offered water. My only service has been that of contemplation.

Says Tuka, I have spent my words, and the generous Lord has accepted them as genuine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have done no chanting, no austerity, no grinding down of the body. I have not crushed or disciplined the mind. From the very spot where I lay, I called out and ran to you. This trouble of mine, O God, is between you and me. I brought no water and poured it in offering. My only service has been remembrance. Tuka says: I spent only my words, and the open-handed Lord took them as true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out plainly what his path was not: no formal penance, no forced control of the mind, none of the standard rituals like offering water. He simply cried out from wherever he happened to be and made his need a private matter between himself and God. His entire worship was contemplation, the inner holding of God in mind. The point lands in the last line: he offered nothing but his words, and the generous Lord accepted them as genuine, which means heartfelt remembrance outweighs every elaborate rite.

GATHA 3842 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the body left to its fate

मराठी मूळ

देह तंव आहे प्रारब्धा अधीन । याचा मी कां सीण वाहूं भार ॥1॥
लाभ तो न दिसे याहूनि दुसरा । आणीक दातारा येणें जन्में ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलों सोसीत संकटें । मी माझें वोखटें आहे देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This body is subject to its destined fate. Why should I bear the burden of worrying about it? I see no greater gain than this in any other birth, O generous Lord.

Says Tuka, I have come enduring many hardships. I and my pitiable ways are before You, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The body is under the rule of its destined fate. Why should I carry the burden of worrying over it? I see no gain greater than this in any other birth, O generous Lord. Tuka says: I have come through, enduring many troubles. I and my poor faulty self are here before you, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets the body go. Since it is governed by prarabdha, the fate already set in motion, fretting over it is wasted effort he refuses to carry. He counts surrender itself as the highest gain any lifetime could offer, better than anything another birth could bring. Having come through much hardship, he simply sets himself down before God exactly as he is, faults and all. The whole abhanga is the act of handing over both the body's fate and one's own flawed self, and resting there.

GATHA 3843 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the settled conviction

मराठी मूळ

सकळ तुझे पायीं मानिला विश्वास । न करीं उदास आतां मज ॥1॥
जीवीं गातां गोड आइकतां कानीं । पाहातां लोचनीं मूर्ती तुझी ॥ध्रु.॥
मन ि◌स्थर माझें जालेंसे निश्चळ । वारिलीं सकळ आशापाश ॥2॥
जन्मजराव्याधि निवारिलें दुःख । वोसंडलें सुख प्रेम धरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज जाला हा निर्धार । आतां वांयां फार काय बोलों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have placed all my faith at Your feet. Do not disappoint me now.

Your name is sweet to sing and sweet to hear, and Your form is beautiful to behold. My mind has become steady and still.

All the snares of desire have been removed. The suffering of birth, old age, and disease has been dispelled, and the joy of love overflows.

Says Tuka, this conviction has become firm. Why should I waste more words?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have placed all my trust at your feet. Do not turn cold to me now. Your name is sweet to sing in my heart, sweet to hear in my ears, and your image is beautiful to see with my eyes. My mind has grown steady and still. Every snare of desire has been cut away. The pain of birth, old age, and disease is gone, and the joy of love overflows. Tuka says: this much is settled for me now. Why should I waste more words?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the report of a devotee who has arrived. Tukaram has staked everything on God's feet and asks only that God not now grow indifferent. He describes the senses turned fully to God, singing the Name, hearing it, gazing on the form, until the mind itself comes to rest. The fruit follows: the snares of craving are cut, the threefold suffering of birth, aging, and disease is dispelled, and love spills over. He ends by sealing it as firm conviction, with nothing left worth saying.

GATHA 3844 The Moral Ideal

Moral humility, asking for the leftovers

मराठी मूळ

होऊं शब्दस्पर्श नये माझा तुह्मां । विप्रवृंदा तुह्मां ब्राह्मणांसी॥1॥
ह्मणोनियां तुह्मां करितों विनंती । द्यावें शेष हातीं उरलें तें ॥ध्रु.॥
वेदीं कर्म जैसें बोलिलें विहित । करावी ते नीत विचारूनि ॥2॥
तुमचा स्वधर्म माझा अधिकार । भोजन उत्तर तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am not worthy of touching You, O Brahmins, O assembly of the learned. Therefore, I make this humble request: give me whatever remains, the sacred leftovers.

Whatever duty the Vedas prescribe, carry it out after due reflection. Your domain is your own dharma, and my portion is what is left over.

Says Tuka, my share is the remnant of the feast.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am not fit even to touch you with my words, O Brahmins, O gathering of the learned. So I make this one request to you: give me into my hands whatever is left over, the sacred remnant. The duty the Vedas lay down as proper, carry it out, but only after weighing it with thought. Your own dharma is yours; my portion is what remains. Tuka says: my share is the leftover of the feast.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from low social standing to the learned Brahmins, naming the distance of caste rather than denying it. He does not claim their rites or their place; he asks only for the consecrated leftovers, the prasad of the feast, which is enough for him. Even as he defers, he slips in a quiet correction: perform the Vedic duties, yes, but only after reflection, not blindly. He keeps each in its own place, their dharma is theirs, his portion is the remnant, and he is content with that humble share.

GATHA 3845 Prayers

Prayer, the mother of orphaned souls

मराठी मूळ

बहुत असती मागें सुखी केलीं । अनाथा माउली जिवांची तूं ॥1॥
माझिया संकटा न धरीं अळस । लावुनियां कास पार पावीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपावंता करा ज्याचा अंगीकार । तया संवसार नाहीं पुन्हां ॥ ।2॥
विचारितां नाहीं दुजा बिळवंत । ऐसा सर्वगत व्यापी कोणी ॥3॥
ह्मणउनि दिला मुळीं जीवभाव । देह केला वाव समाधिस्थ ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं जाणत आणीक । तुजविण एक पांडुरंगा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have comforted many before me, O mother of orphaned jivas. Do not be slow in my time of distress.

Gird Yourself and see me through to the other shore. O compassionate one, whoever You accept is freed from worldly life forever.

Upon reflection, there is no other power as great. No one else pervades all things so completely.

Therefore, I have surrendered my entire being from the very root. The body has been made empty, as if in deep samadhi.

Says Tuka, I know no one else besides You, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have made many before me happy. You are the mother of orphaned souls. Do not be slow in my time of trouble. Gird yourself up and carry me to the far shore. O compassionate one, whoever you take in is never thrown back into worldly life again. When I look, there is no other power so strong. No one else fills all things so completely. So I have surrendered my very life and being from the root. My body is made empty, set as if in deep samadhi. Tuka says: I know no one else, none but you alone, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls God the mother of the parentless, the one refuge for souls with no other shelter, and asks her not to be slow now that he is in distress. He reminds God of a track record, many have been made happy, and whoever God accepts is freed from samsara for good. He grounds his trust in God's uniqueness: no other power is as great, no other reality pervades everything. On that footing he gives up his entire self at the root, emptying the body as in deep samadhi, because for him there is simply no second refuge besides Panduranga.

GATHA 3846 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God will not let you stay separate

मराठी मूळ

वैभवाचे धनी सकळ शरणागत । सत्यभावें चित्त अपिनलें तें ॥1॥
नेदी उरों देव आपणांवेगळें । भावाचिया बळें ठायाठाव ॥ध्रु.॥
जाणोनि नेणती अंगा आली दशा । मग होय इच्छा आपणे चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बरे धाकटएाचें जिणें । माता स्तनपानें वाढविते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All who have surrendered to that Lord of glory have offered their chitta in true faith. God does not allow them to remain separate from Him.

By the power of devotion, He goes to every place. Those who, though knowing, become as if unknowing, find that state arising by God's own will.

Says Tuka, blessed is the life of the small and humble. A mother nourishes her child at the breast.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All who have surrendered to that Lord of glory have offered their heart in true faith. God does not let them stay apart from himself. By the strength of their devotion, he goes wherever they are. Those who, though they know, become as though they know nothing, find that this state comes about by God's own will. Tuka says: blessed is the life of the small and helpless. A mother feeds her child at the breast and makes it grow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what surrender draws from God. Those who hand over their heart in true faith are not left at a distance; God refuses to let them remain separate and, pulled by their devotion, comes to wherever they are. The devotees who let go of their own cleverness, knowing yet choosing to be as the unknowing, find that very helplessness granted to them by God's own will. The closing image makes the logic plain: it is good to be small, because a mother nurses and raises only the child too weak to feed itself, and so smallness before God is what draws his care.

GATHA 3847 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the feet of Vithoba and a tulsi bead

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां देणें धरा सांगतों तें कानीं । चिंता पाय मनीं विठोबाचे ॥1॥
तेणें माझें चित्त होय समाधान । विलास मिष्टान्न न लगे सोनें ॥ध्रु.॥
व्रत एकादशी दारीं वृंदावन । कंठीं ल्या रे लेणें तुळसीमाळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचे घरींची उष्टावळी । मज ते दिवाळी दसरा सण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen and keep what I say in your ears: fix your mind on the feet of Vithoba. By that alone my chitta finds contentment.

I need no delicacies, no luxuries, no gold. Observe the Ekadashi fast.

Plant a tulsi shrine at your door. Wear the garland of tulsi beads around your neck.

Says Tuka, the sacred leftovers from His house are my Diwali, my Dasara, my festival.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Take this gift I give you; keep it in your ears: hold the feet of Vithoba in your mind. By that alone my heart is at peace. I want no luxuries, no rich sweets, no gold. Keep the Ekadashi fast. Set a tulsi shrine at your door. Wear the garland of tulsi beads around your neck. Tuka says: the leftovers from his house are my Diwali, my Dasara, my festival.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands the listener a simple rule of life and tells them to keep it close. The whole of it is to fix the mind on Vithoba's feet, and that alone, he says, settles his own heart. He turns down wealth, fine food, and gold, and in their place names plain devotional practices: keep the Ekadashi fast, plant a tulsi at the door, wear the tulsi-bead garland. The closing line shows where his joy actually lies: the consecrated leftovers from God's house are, to him, the equal of every grand festival, Diwali and Dasara together.

GATHA 3848 Confession and Sin

Confession, helpless before the senses

मराठी मूळ

आतां मी अनन्य येथें अधिकारी । होइन कोणे परी नेणें देवा ॥1॥
पुराणींचा अर्थ ऐकतां मानस । होतो कासावीस जीव माझा ॥ध्रु.॥
इंद्रियांचे आह्मी पांगिलों अंकित । त्यांच्यासंगें चित्त रंगलें तें ॥2॥
एकाचें ही जेथें न घडे दमन । अवघीं नेमून कैसीं राखों ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी मोकिळसी आतां । तरी मी अनंता वांयां गेलों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, how shall I become a devoted one, worthy of this path? I do not know, O God. When I hear the meaning of the scriptures, my jiva is tormented with longing.

I am enslaved to the senses, and my mind is colored by their company. I cannot even subdue one of them, so how can I master them all? Says Tuka, if You let go of me now, O Ananta, then I am lost.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, how do I become one who belongs to You alone, fit for this path? I do not know, O God. When I hear the meaning of the scriptures, my soul is tormented with longing. I am the bonded slave of my senses; my mind is stained with their company. I cannot subdue even one of them. How then can I bind them all and keep them in order? Tuka says: if You let go of me now, O Ananta, then I am lost.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses that he wants to belong to God alone, yet finds himself owned by his own senses. Hearing the scriptures only sharpens the ache, because they show him a height he cannot reach by his own strength. He admits he cannot master even one craving, let alone rule them all, so self-effort is exposed as bankrupt. The prayer turns on that admission: he is not asking God to help him try harder, he is asking God simply not to release His grip. If grace lets go, there is nothing in Tukaram strong enough to hold.

GATHA 3849 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one essential dharma

मराठी मूळ

आवडी धरोनी आलेती आकारा । केला हा पसारा याजसाटीं ॥1॥
तें मी तुझें नाम गाईन आवडी । क्षण एक घडी विसंबेना ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्म धरावें हा मुख्यधर्मसार । अवघे प्रकार तयापासीं॥2॥
वेगळ्या विचारें वेगळाले भाव । धरायासी ठाव बहु नाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे घालूं इच्छेचिये पोटीं । कवळुनी धाकुटी मूर्ती जीवें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Out of love, You have taken form and created this entire expanse for this very purpose. Therefore, I shall sing Your name with devotion and not let go for even a moment.

This is the essential principle and the highest dharma. All other approaches are contained within it.

Why hold different opinions and seek separate places? There is no need for so many abodes. Says Tuka, let me embrace that small, dear form within the cave of my heart's longing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Out of love You took form; for this You spread out the whole world. So I will sing Your name with love, and not let go of it for a single moment. Hold to the secret, this is the heart of all dharma; every path is held within it. Why split into separate opinions and separate moods? There is no room for so many resting places. Tuka says: I will set the small, dear form down inside the longing of my heart, and hold it close with my whole life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the entire created world as God taking form out of love, and concludes that the fitting response is to return that love through the Name. He calls the Name the one secret that contains every path, so the many competing doctrines and disciplines need not be chased. Holding many separate teachings is just clutter; there is room for only one resting place. The poem ends by gathering the vast Lord into a small, intimate image cradled inside the heart, where the whole self embraces it.

GATHA 3850 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child asking to be held

मराठी मूळ

भागलों मी आतां आपुल्या स्वभावें । कृपा करोनि देवें आश्वासीजे ॥1॥
देउनि आलिंगन प्रीतीच्या पडिभरें । अंगें हीं दातारें निववावीं ॥ध्रु.॥
अमृताची दृष्टी घालूनियां वरी । शीतळ हा करीं जीव माझा ॥2॥
घेई उचलूनि पुसें तानभूक । पुसीं माझें मुख पीतांबरें ॥3॥
बुझावोनि माझी धरीं हनुवंटी । ओवाळुनि दिठी करुनी सांडीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे बापा आहो विश्वंभरा । आतां कृपा करा ऐसी कांहीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am weary now of my own nature, O God. Show me grace and give me reassurance.

Embrace me with the rush of love and cool this body of mine, O generous Lord. Cast Your nectar-like gaze upon me and soothe my jiva.

Lift me up and ask if I am hungry or thirsty. Wipe my face with Your yellow cloth.

Console me and hold my chin, and after warding off the evil eye, let go. Says Tuka, O Father Vishvambhara, now show me some such grace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am worn out now by my own nature, O God. Show grace and speak comfort to me. Embrace me with the full rush of Your love, and cool this body of mine, generous Lord. Cast Your nectar gaze upon me and make my soul cool and still. Lift me up and ask whether I am hungry or thirsty; wipe my face with Your yellow robe. Comfort me, hold my chin, and ward off the evil eye, then set me down. Tuka says: O Father Vishvambhara, show me now some grace like this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exhausted, not by the world but by his own nature, and he asks God to do for him what a parent does for a small child. Every request is bodily and tender: be embraced, cooled, looked upon, lifted, fed, wiped clean, soothed, protected from the evil eye. The longing is for closeness and care, not for doctrine or power. By calling God Father and Vishvambhara, the sustainer of all, he stakes a child's whole claim on being held. The poem makes devotion the helplessness of one who can no longer carry himself.

GATHA 3851 Devotion to Vitthal

The Name, an inexhaustible treasury

मराठी मूळ

न सरे लुटितां मागें बहुतां जनीं । जुनाट हे खाणी उघडिली ॥1॥
सिद्ध महामुनि साधक संपन्न । तिहीं हें जतन केलें होतें ॥ध्रु.॥
पायाळाच्या गुणें पडिलें ठाउकें । जगा पुंडलिकें दाखविलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें होतों मी दुबळें । आलें या कपाळें थोडें बहु ॥3॥
वाढवुनी चटा फिरे दाही दिशा । तरी जंबुवेषा सहज िस्थति ॥ध्रु.॥
कोरोनियां भूमी करिती मधीं वास । तरी उंदरास काय वाणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें कासया करावें । देहासी दंडावें वाउगें चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This treasure cannot be exhausted though many have plundered it in ages past. This ancient mine has been opened.

The great siddhas, sages, and accomplished seekers had guarded it carefully. Through Pundalik's merit, it was revealed, and through his grace, the world came to know it.

Says Tuka, I was poor when I came here, and whatever my humble destiny has brought, little or much, is mine.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is not used up though many people have plundered it in ages past; this ancient mine has been opened. The siddhas, the great sages, the accomplished seekers had kept it carefully hidden. By Pundalik's merit it was brought to light, and he showed it to the world. Tuka says: I came here poor; whatever this humble destiny of mine has brought, little or much, is mine.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the Name, or God at Pandhari, as an ancient mine that countless people have already drawn from and that still cannot be exhausted. What the sages once guarded in secret, Pundalik's devotion threw open for everyone. The point is that this wealth is not diminished by being shared; the more it is plundered, the more it remains. Against that endless treasure he names himself simply: a poor man who came with empty hands and takes whatever small share his lot allows, grateful that even that is truly his.

GATHA 3852 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the blessed day

मराठी मूळ

धन्य दिवस आजि डोळ्यां लाधला । आनंद देखिला धणीवरी ॥1॥
धन्य जालें मुख निवाली रसना । नाम नारायणा घोंष करुं ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य हें मस्तक सर्वांग शोभलें । संताचीं पाउलें लागताती ॥2॥
धन्य आजि पंथें चालती पाउलें । टाळया शोभले धन्य कर ॥3॥
धन्य तुका ह्मणे आह्मांसी फावलें । पावलों पाउलें विठोबाचीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed is this day that my eyes have attained. Joy is seen to overflowing.

Blessed is this mouth, and blessed is the tongue that chants the name of Narayana. Blessed is this head and this whole body, now graced by the touch of the saints' feet.

Blessed are the feet that walk this path, and blessed are the hands that clap in devotion. Says Tuka, blessed are we, for we have reached the feet of Vithoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed is this day my eyes have won; I have seen joy to the full. Blessed is this mouth, my tongue is cooled, as we raise the cry of the name of Narayana. Blessed is this head, my whole body shines, for the saints' feet touch it. Blessed today are the feet that walk this path; blessed are the hands that shine as they clap. Tuka says: blessed are we, it has come to us, we have reached the feet of Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a hymn of pure thanksgiving where Tukaram blesses each part of his body in turn for its share in the moment. Eyes see, tongue chants, head bows to the saints, feet walk the pilgrim road, hands clap in song; every limb is sanctified by being used for God. The repeated word blessed makes the whole body an instrument of worship rather than an obstacle. The arrival is concrete: he has reached the feet of Vithoba at Pandhari, and that contact is what makes the day, and the body, holy.

GATHA 3853 Ecstasy and Joy

Faith, the fortunate moment

मराठी मूळ

बरवी हे वेळ सांपडली संधि । साहए जाली बुद्ध संचितासी ॥1॥
येणें पंथें माझीं चालिलीं पाउलें । दरुषण जालें संतां पायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
त्रासिलें दरिद्रें दोषा जाला खंड । त्या चि काळें पिंड पुनीत जाला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला अवघा व्यापार । आली वेरझार फळासी हे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A fine moment and a fortunate chance have arrived. Wisdom has aligned with destiny.

My feet have walked this path, and I have had the vision of the saints' feet. Poverty and its afflictions have been severed, and in that very moment this body was purified.

Says Tuka, the entire transaction is complete, and this wandering has borne its fruit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A good moment has come, a fortunate chance; my stored-up destiny has turned to my aid. My feet have walked this path, and I have had the sight of the saints' feet. Poverty has been driven off, my sins are cut through, and in that very moment this body was made pure. Tuka says: the whole transaction is done, and this long going to and fro has borne its fruit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sees a single fortunate moment in which his accumulated past, his sanchita, finally works for him instead of against him. Walking the pilgrim path and gaining the sight of the saints does the work: poverty is dismissed, sin is severed, the body itself is purified at once. He uses the language of trade, transaction and fruit, to say the whole long account is now settled. The endless coming and going of births and journeys has at last paid off in this meeting.

GATHA 3854 Social Criticism

Social criticism, worth over birth

मराठी मूळ

आपणा लागे काम वाण्याघरीं गुळ । त्याचे याति कुळ काय कीजे ॥1॥
उकरडएावरी वाढली तुळसी । टाकावी ते कैसी ठायागुणें ॥ध्रु.॥
गाईचा जो भक्ष अमंगळ खाय । तीचें दूध काय सेवूं नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय सलपटासी काज । फणसांतील बीज काढुनि घ्यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When you need something, you go to the merchant's shop for jaggery. What does his caste or lineage matter then? If a tulsi plant grows on a refuse heap, should it be discarded because of where it grew? A cow may eat impure things, but should her milk not be consumed? Says Tuka, what use is the rough outer skin? Extract the seed from within the jackfruit and take it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you need it, you go to the merchant's shop for jaggery. What then does his caste or his family matter? A tulsi plant grows up on a rubbish heap; should it be thrown away because of where it grew? A cow eats foul and impure things; should her milk then not be drunk? Tuka says: what use is the rough outer rind? Take out the seed from inside the jackfruit and use it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the habit of judging worth by birth and origin with four plain examples from daily life. You take the jaggery and never ask the merchant's caste; you keep the sacred tulsi even from a refuse heap; you drink the cow's milk though she eats filth; you eat the jackfruit seed and discard the rough rind. Each case separates the value of a thing from where it came or what surrounds it. The teaching is to look for the real worth, the sweetness, the sacredness, the seed, and let the accident of origin fall away.

GATHA 3855 The Saints

Saints, the company you keep

मराठी मूळ

जयासी नावडे वैष्णवांचा संग । जाणावा तो मांग जन्मांतरीं ॥1॥
मंजुळवदनीं बचनागाची कांडी । शेवटीं विघडी जीवप्राणा॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याचा पिता नाहीं शुद्ध । तयासी गोविंद अंतरला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who does not love the company of Vaishnavas should be known as one cast out from past births. A sweet tongue may conceal poison, and in the end it destroys life itself.

Says Tuka, one whose spiritual lineage is not pure remains forever distant from Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who does not love the company of the Vaishnavas, know him to be an outcast from a former birth. A sweet face can hide a stick of poison; in the end it destroys life and breath. Tuka says: one whose own father was not pure stays cut off from Govinda.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes love of holy company the test of a person's inner condition. Whoever has no taste for the fellowship of devotees, he says, carries something unclean out of the past, and the sweetness on such a person's surface can hide a poison that finally kills. The harsh line about an impure father points not at contempt for anyone's parentage but at the truth that what we inherit and dwell in shapes us; an unpurified lineage of habit keeps a soul distant from God. The warning turns back on the listener: examine whether your own heart is drawn to the saints or repelled by them.

GATHA 3856 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty word-scholar

मराठी मूळ

वांझेनें दाविलें ग†हवार लक्षणें । चिरगुटें घालून वाथयाला ॥1॥
तेवीं शब्दज्ञानी करिती चावटी । ज्ञान पोटासाटीं विकूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलाचि च कढी बोलाचा चि भात । जेवुनियां तृप्त कोण जाला ॥2॥
कागदीं लिहितां नामाची साकर । चाटितां मधुर गोडी नेदी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जळो जळो ते महंती । नाहीं लाज चित्तीं आठवण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A barren woman puts on the show of a cradle ceremony, dressing up rags and rocking them. Just so, those who trade in mere word-knowledge make a show of spirituality and sell their learning for the sake of their belly.

A broth made only of words, a meal made only of speech: who has ever been satisfied by eating such a thing? Writing the name of sugar on paper does not give sweetness when you lick it. Says Tuka, cursed be such false holiness. They have no shame and no remembrance of God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A barren woman puts on the show of a cradle ceremony, dressing up rags and rocking them. Just so, those who deal in word-knowledge babble away, selling their learning to fill their bellies. Broth made of words alone, rice made of speech alone: who was ever filled by eating that? Sugar written as a word on paper gives no sweetness when you lick the paper. Tuka says: burn, burn such false greatness; they feel no shame, and they keep no remembrance of God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram ridicules learning that is all talk and no living realization. The barren woman rocking bundled rags shows the emptiness exactly: every motion of motherhood, none of its substance. Scholars who trade words sell spirituality for a living, but a meal made only of speech feeds no one, and the word sugar on paper has no taste. His curse is aimed at the pattern, the showy holiness with nothing behind it, not at any single person. The sting for the reader is the last line: real fault is not lack of words but lack of shame and lack of remembrance of God.

GATHA 3857 Longing and Separation

Longing, drawn to the cradle

मराठी मूळ

तुझिया पाळणा ओढे माझें मन । गेलों विसरोन देहभाव ॥1॥
लागला पालट फेडणें उसणें । येणें चि प्रमाणें पांडुरंगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा जीव जैसा ओढे । तैसा चि तिकडे पाहिजेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind is drawn toward Your cradle, and I have forgotten all sense of the body. The debt must be repaid in return, O Panduranga, in this very manner.

Says Tuka, just as my jiva yearns for You, so must the same longing come from Your side.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind is drawn toward Your cradle; I have forgotten the sense of having a body. The exchange has begun, the debt is to be repaid; by this same measure, O Panduranga. Tuka says: just as my soul is drawn to You, exactly so must the pull come from Your side too.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pulled toward the infant form of God in its cradle so strongly that body-consciousness simply drops away. He frames love as a mutual debt: he has given his longing, and now God must repay in the same coin. The bold turn is the last line, where he insists the attraction cannot be one-sided; if his soul is drawn to God, then God must be drawn to him by the very same measure. It is the confidence of love that dares to hold the Lord to an equal exchange.

GATHA 3858 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Lord who comes running

मराठी मूळ

मी दास तयांचा जयां चाड नाहीं । सुखदुःख दोहीं विरहित ॥1॥
राहिलासे उभा भीवरेच्या तीरीं । कट दोहीं करीं धरोनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
नवल काय तरी पाचारितां पावे । न स्मरत धांवे भक्तकाजा ॥2॥
सर्व भार माझा त्यासी आहे चिंता । तो चि माझा दाता स्वहिताचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यासी गाईन मी गीतीं । आणीक तें चित्तीं न धरीं कांहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am the servant of those who have no wants, who are free from both joy and sorrow. He stands on the bank of the Bhima river, hands resting on His hips.

Is it any wonder that He comes when called, that He rushes unbidden to serve His devotees? All my burden and all my concern rest with Him. He alone is the giver of my true welfare.

Says Tuka, I shall sing to Him in my songs and hold nothing else in my mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am the servant of those who want nothing, who are free of both joy and sorrow. He stands upright on the bank of the Bhima, both hands resting on His hips. Is it any wonder? Called, He comes; without even being remembered, He runs to do His devotee's work. All my weight, all my worry, rests with Him; He alone is the giver of my true good. Tuka says: I will sing to Him in my songs, and hold nothing else in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram first names whom he truly serves: the desireless ones who have risen above both pleasure and pain. Then he turns to the Lord himself, standing on the bank of the Bhima at Pandhari with hands on hips, ready and waiting. The wonder he points to is God's eagerness: He answers when called and even runs unasked to do His devotee's work. Having laid his whole burden and anxiety on such a God, Tukaram needs nothing else, and vows to keep his mind on Him alone, singing.

GATHA 3859 Faith and Trust

Faith, bread baked over thorns

मराठी मूळ

जुंझायाच्या गोष्टी ऐकतां चि सुख । करितां हें दुःख थोर आहे ॥1॥
तैसी हरिभक्ति सुळावरील पोळी । निवडे तो बळी विरळा शूर ॥ध्रु.॥
पिंड पोसिलियां विषयांचा पाइक । वैकुंठनायक कैंचा तेथें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे व्हावें देहासी उदार । रकुमादेवीवर जोडावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is pleasure in merely hearing tales of battle, but to actually fight brings great suffering. So it is with devotion to Hari: it is like a bread baked over thorns.

The one who can endure it is a rare and mighty warrior. If one feeds the body as a servant of sense pleasures, the Lord of Vaikuntha will not be found there.

Says Tuka, one must be generous with the body itself in order to win the husband of Rukmini.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is pleasant just to hear stories of the fight, but to fight it out is a great pain. So devotion to Hari is like bread baked on a bed of thorns; the one who can take it is a rare and mighty warrior. If you feed the body and stay a servant of the senses, how will the Lord of Vaikuntha be found there? Tuka says: you must be generous with the body itself if you would win the husband of Rukmini.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the comfortable idea that devotion is sweet and easy. Hearing tales of battle is pleasant, but fighting hurts; in the same way, true bhakti is like bread baked over thorns, and only a rare warrior can bear it. The cost is named plainly: you cannot pamper the body and serve its appetites and still expect to find God. To win the Lord of Vaikuntha, the husband of Rukmini, you must spend the body freely rather than coddle it. Devotion here is heroism, not consolation.

GATHA 3860 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, bow to your lot

मराठी मूळ

पाषाण प्रतिमा सोन्याच्या पादुका । हें हो हातीं एका समर्थाचे ॥1॥
अनामिका हातीं समर्थाचा सिक्का । न मानितां लोकां येइल कळों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें दुराग्रह खोटा । आपुल्या अदृष्टा शरण जावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A stone idol or golden sandals. These are placed in the hands of the one who has authority.

The seal of the powerful one, even in the hands of a nobody, must be honored. Those who refuse will learn the consequences.

Says Tuka, stubbornness here is futile. One should surrender to one's own destiny.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A stone idol, golden sandals. These are placed in the hands of the one who has the power. The seal of the powerful one, even held by a nobody, must be honored. Those who refuse it will come to learn. Tuka says: stubbornness here is no good. Surrender to your own destiny.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching acceptance of what your life has handed you. He compares the soul to a humble agent who carries the seal of a powerful master: whether the thing in your hands is a plain stone or golden sandals, its worth comes from the authority behind it, not from the object. To reject your assigned portion is to discover the hard way that the seal is binding. So he calls stubborn resistance against your circumstances futile, and tells you to bow to your own destiny rather than fight it.

GATHA 3861 Prayers

Refuge, exhausted by the world

मराठी मूळ

बहु या प्रपंचें भोगविल्या खाणी । टाकोनियां मनीं ठेविला सीण ॥1॥
आतां पायांपाशीं लपवावें देवा । नको पाहूं सेवा भक्ती माझी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु भय वाटे एकाच्या बोभाटें । आली घायवटे फिरोनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सिगे भरूं आलें माप । वियोग संताप जाला तुझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This worldly life has put me through every kind of suffering, leaving only exhaustion in my mind. Now hide me at Your feet, O God.

Do not look at my service or devotion. I am terrified even by the clamor of the world.

Wounded, I have come back around again. Says Tuka, the measure is about to overflow. The anguish of separation from You has become unbearable.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This worldly life has dragged me through every kind of suffering. It has left only weariness in my mind. Now hide me at your feet, O God. Do not weigh my service or my devotion. The clamor of the world fills me with fear. Wounded, I have come back around to you again. Tuka says: the measure is about to overflow. The pain of being apart from you has become too much.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to God worn out, asking only to be hidden at his feet. He knows his own service and devotion will not stand inspection, so he begs God not to look at them; let the welcome rest on God's mercy, not on his merit. The world's noise terrifies him, and he describes himself as wounded, circling back to the one refuge he has. He warns that he is at his limit, the cup is brimming over, and the agony of separation from God can hold no more.

GATHA 3862 Prayers

Prayer, holding God to his promise

मराठी मूळ

धरूनियां मनीं बोलिलों संकल्प । होसी तरि बाप सिद्धी पाव ॥1॥
उत्कंठा हे आजी जाली माझे पोटीं । मोकिळली गोष्टी टाळाटाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
माझा मज असे ठाउका निर्धार । उपाधि उत्तर न साहे पैं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरि दिली आठवण । तरि अभिमान धरीं याचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have held a resolve in my mind and spoken my intention. If You are truly the Father, bring it to fulfillment.

Today this longing has arisen in my mind, and the days of delay and evasion are over. I know my own determination, and I will not tolerate interference and argument.

Says Tuka, if I have reminded You, then take pride in that.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have held a resolve in my mind and spoken my intention. If you are truly the Father, bring it to fulfillment. Today this longing has risen up inside me. The days of putting it off are over. I know my own determination. I will not endure meddling or argument. Tuka says: if I have reminded you, then take this as your own honor to uphold.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God to act, almost like a child holding a parent to their word. He has made up his mind and spoken his desire aloud, and now he calls on God's name as Father to make it real, since a true father does not leave a child's longing unmet. The waiting and evasion are finished; he is firm and will not tolerate excuses or argument. Finally he turns it back on God: now that he has reminded him, God's own honor is at stake in answering.

GATHA 3863 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, take this lowly one

मराठी मूळ

आजिवरी होतों संसाराचे हातीं । आतां ऐसें चित्तीं उपजलें ॥1॥
तुला शरणागत व्हावें नारायणा । अंगीकारा दिना आपुलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
विसरलों काम याजसाठीं धंदा । सकळ गोविंदा माझें तुझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विज्ञापना परिसावी । आवडी हे जीवीं जाली तैसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Until now I was in the grip of worldly life. But now something has arisen in my chitta.

I want to surrender to You, O Narayana. Accept this lowly one as Your own.

I have forgotten all work and business for this alone. Everything of mine is Yours, O Govinda.

Says Tuka, hear this prayer. The longing that has arisen in my jiva is just as I have described.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Until now I was in the grip of worldly life. But now this has risen up in my heart. I want to surrender to you, O Narayana. Accept this lowly one as your own. For this alone I have forgotten all work and business. Everything of mine is yours, O Govinda. Tuka says: hear this prayer. The longing that has risen in me is exactly as I have spoken it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marks the turning point where worldly life loses its grip on him and surrender takes its place. He asks Narayana to receive him, a lowly and unworthy one, as God's own possession. Such surrender means dropping everything else: he has let go of work and affairs, and declares that whatever was his belongs to Govinda now. He closes by asking God to hear him and to trust that the longing he describes is real, not a performance.

GATHA 3864 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari as heaven

मराठी मूळ

धन्यधन्य ज्यास पंढरीसी वास । धन्य ते जन्मास प्राणी आले ॥1॥
बहु खाणीमध्यें होत कोणी एक । त्रिगुण कीटक पिक्षराज ॥ध्रु.॥
उत्तम चांडाळ नर नारी बाळ । अवघे चि सकळ चतुर्भुज ॥2॥
अवघा विठ्ठल तेथें दुजा नाहीं । भरला अंतर्बाहि सदोदीत ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें होउनी राहेन । सांडोवा पाषाण पंढरीचा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed, blessed are those who dwell in Pandhari. Blessed are the beings born there.

Among all the countless species, rarely does one emerge supreme. Whether high-born or low, man or woman, young or old, all there are four-armed like Vishnu.

Vitthal alone fills everything. There is no other.

He pervades inside and outside for all time. Says Tuka, I will remain here as a paving stone of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed, blessed are those who dwell in Pandhari. Blessed are the beings born there. Among countless kinds of creatures, rarely does one rise. But here, high-born or low, man or woman, child, all alike are four-armed like Vishnu. Vitthal alone fills everything; there is no other. He fills inside and outside, always. Tuka says: let me stay here, even as a paving stone of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Pandhari as the place where the ordinary order of things is overturned. In the wide world a soul rises to the highest birth only rarely, but in this town the distinctions that divide people, high and low, man and woman, young and old, fall away, and all wear Vishnu's form. The reason is that Vitthal alone pervades the place, within and without, with no second thing beside him. So Tukaram does not even ask to be a great soul there; he would be content to be a stone underfoot, as long as it is in Pandhari.

GATHA 3865 The Saints

Discernment, the wicked and the saint

मराठी मूळ

असंत लक्षण भूतांचा मत्सर । मनास निष्ठ अतिवादी॥1॥
अंतरीचा रंग उमटे बाहेरी । वोळखियापरी आपेंआप॥ध्रु.॥
संत ते समय वोळखती वेळ । चतुष्ट निर्मळ चित्त सदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हित उचित अनुचित । मज लागे नित आचरावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mark of the wicked is envy toward other beings, cruelty of mind, and excessive quarreling. The color within shows itself outwardly, and by its own signs one recognizes it.

Saints are those who discern the moment and the occasion. Their chittas are pure and spotless at all times.

Says Tuka, what is right, what is fitting, and what is improper are things I must practice continually.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mark of the wicked is envy of other beings, a cruel mind, endless quarreling. The color that is inside shows itself outside. By its own signs you know it. The saints are those who read the moment and the occasion. Their minds are pure and spotless at all times. Tuka says: what is good, what is fitting, what is wrong, these I must practice every day.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out how to tell an inner state by its outward signs, then turns it on himself. The wicked are known by envy, cruelty, and a love of strife, because what fills the heart cannot help leaking out into conduct. The saints, by contrast, sense the right time and act with a heart kept clean. Rather than condemning the wicked person, he ends by setting himself the daily task: to keep watch over what is good, fitting, or wrong, and to practice it continually.

GATHA 3866 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Vitthal alone is real

मराठी मूळ

विठ्ठलावांचोनि ब्रह्म जें बोलती । वचन तें संतीं मानूं नये ॥1॥
विठ्ठलावांचूनि जेजे उपासना । अवघा चि जाणा संभ्रमु तो ॥ध्रु.॥
विठ्ठलावांचूनि सांगतील गोष्टी । वांयां ते हिंपुटी होत जाणा ॥2॥
विठ्ठलांवाचूनि जें कांहीं जाणती । तितुल्या वित्पित्त वाउगीया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे एक विठ्ठल चि खरा । येर तो पसारा वाउगा चि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Any talk of Brahman that does not include Vitthal should not be accepted by the saints. Any worship that does not include Vitthal is nothing but confusion.

Any discourse that does not speak of Vitthal is only futile rambling. Any knowledge that does not know Vitthal is mere empty cleverness.

Says Tuka, Vitthal alone is real. Everything else is a vain display.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Any talk of Brahman that leaves out Vitthal, the saints should not accept. Any worship that leaves out Vitthal, know it for pure confusion. Any teaching that does not speak of Vitthal is only empty rambling. Any knowing that does not know Vitthal is mere hollow cleverness. Tuka says: Vitthal alone is real. All the rest is a vain display.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes Vitthal the single test of every spiritual word and act. Speech about the Absolute, worship, teaching, and knowledge are all weighed by one question: do they hold Vitthal at the center? Whatever leaves him out he calls confusion, idle talk, and empty cleverness, however learned it sounds. The claim is deliberately absolute: only Vitthal is finally real, and every path or doctrine that bypasses him is just show. He is naming the danger of religion that is impressive but God-less.

GATHA 3867 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, let the ego burn

मराठी मूळ

सर्व काळ डोळां बैसो नारायण । नयो अभिमान आड मध्यें ॥1॥
धाड पडो तुझ्या थोरपणावरि । वाचे नरहरि उच्चारीना ॥ध्रु.॥
जळो अंतरींचें सर्व जाणपण । विवादवचन अहंतेचें ॥2॥
सकळां चरणीं गिळत माझा जीव । तुका ह्मणे भाव एकविध ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May Narayana dwell in my eyes at all times. Let pride not come between us.

May ruin fall upon your false greatness if your tongue does not utter the name of Narahari. Let all the inner cunning of knowledge burn.

Let the quarrelsome words of ego burn. Says Tuka, my life bows at the feet of all. My devotion is single-minded.

IN PLAIN WORDS

May Narayana sit in my eyes at all times. Let pride never come between us. Let ruin fall on your puffed-up greatness if your tongue will not say Narahari. Let all the inner cleverness of knowledge burn. Let the quarreling words of ego burn. Tuka says: my life sinks down at the feet of all. My devotion is single-minded.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays to keep God constantly before him and asks that nothing, above all his own pride, ever stand between them. He turns sharp against learning that does not lead to God's name: better that such greatness be ruined, such cunning knowledge burned to ash, than that it feed the ego. The fire he calls down is aimed at the quarrelsome self-importance inside, not at any rival person. In its place he sets the opposite posture: bowing low at the feet of all beings, holding to one undivided devotion.

GATHA 3868 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the heart over the show

मराठी मूळ

मधुरा उत्तरासवें नाहीं चाड । अंतरंगीं वाड भाव असो ॥1॥
प्राणावेगळा न करी नारायण । मग नसो ज्ञान मूर्ख बरा॥ध्रु.॥
जननिंदा होय तो बरा विचार । थोरवीचा भार कामा नये॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं भाव निष्टावंत । दया क्षमा शांत सर्वां भूतीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let sweet words not be accompanied by empty affection. Let the inner devotion be truly great.

May Narayana never separate from the soul. Then even ignorance is better than knowledge.

Let worldly censure come; that is a good sign. The burden of reputation serves no purpose.

Says Tuka, let the chitta be steadfast in devotion, with compassion, forgiveness, and peace toward all beings.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let sweet words not be paired with empty affection. Let the inner devotion be truly great. May Narayana never be parted from my soul. Then even ignorance is better than knowledge. Let the world's scorn come; that is a good sign. The weight of reputation is of no use. Tuka says: let the heart be steadfast in devotion, with compassion, forgiveness, and peace toward all beings.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the inner heart against the outward show and chooses the heart every time. Sweet speech with no real love behind it is worthless; what matters is great devotion within. If God stays joined to the soul, then unlettered simplicity beats clever knowledge. He even welcomes the world's contempt as a good sign, since the burden of a fine reputation serves nothing on this path. What he asks for instead is a steady heart marked by compassion, forgiveness, and peace toward every living being.

GATHA 3869 Renunciation

Renunciation, the forest for Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

झाडा वरपोनि खाऊनियां पाला । आठवी विठ्ठला वेळोवेळां ॥1॥
वल्कलें नेसुनि ठुंगा गुंडाळुनी । सांडी देहभान जवळुनी ॥ध्रु.॥
लोकमान वमनासमान मानणें । एकांतीं राहणें विठोसाटीं ॥2॥
सहसा करुं नये प्रपंचीं सौजन्य । सेवावें अरण्य एकांतवास ॥3॥
ऐसा हा निर्धार करी जो मनाचा । तुका ह्मणे त्याचा पांग फिटे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Climbing trees, eating leaves, remember Vitthal at every moment. Wearing bark cloth and tying up the hair, abandon all body-consciousness.

Regard worldly honor as vomit, and dwell alone in solitude for the sake of Vitthal. One should never practice social courtesy in worldly life but should seek the forest for solitary dwelling.

Says Tuka, whoever makes such a firm resolve within the mind will have all spiritual debts cleared.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Strip the trees and eat their leaves. Remember Vitthal again and again. Wear bark for clothes, tie up your matted hair, and let go of all awareness of the body. Count the world's honor as vomit. Live alone, in solitude, for Vitthal's sake. Never bother with social courtesy in worldly life. Go to the forest and dwell apart. Tuka says: whoever makes such a firm resolve in his mind, his debt is wiped clean.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the extreme picture of the forest renunciant to make a point about wholehearted resolve. The hermit lives on leaves, wears bark, forgets the body, and constantly remembers Vitthal. The hardest renunciation he names is inward: to treat the world's praise as something disgusting, like vomit, and to refuse the social niceties that keep us bound. The outer flight to the forest stands for an inner turning away from honor and company. He promises that the one who fixes the mind on this with real firmness has his spiritual debt cleared.

GATHA 3870 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, wake up this lifetime

मराठी मूळ

भक्तिभावें करी बैसोनि निश्चत । नको गोवूं चित्त प्रपंचासी ॥1॥
एका दृढ करीं पंढरीचा राव । मग तुज उपाव पुढिल सुचे ॥ध्रु.॥
नको करुं कांहीं देवतापूजन । जप तप ध्यान तें ही नको ॥2॥
मानिसील झणी आपलिक कांहीं । येरझार पाहीं न चुके कदा ॥3॥
ऐसे जन्म किती पावलासी देहीं । अझूनि का नाहीं कळली सोय ॥4॥
सोय घरीं आतां होय पां सावध । अनुभव आनंद आहे कैसा ॥5॥
सहज कैसें आहे तेथीचें तें गुज । अनुभवें निज पाहे तुकीं ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां होई तूं सावध । तोडीं भवबंध एका जन्में ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sit in firm devotion and certainty. Do not entangle your mind in worldly affairs.

Fix upon one thing alone: the King of Pandhari. Then the way forward will reveal itself to you.

Do not perform any other deity-worship. Austerity, rituals, meditation, none of these are needed.

If you claim anything as your own, the cycle of wandering will never cease. How many births have you taken in this body? Have you still not found the way? Come to your senses now and be alert.

Experience for yourself the nature of that bliss. See the secret of that place through your own direct knowing.

Says Tuka, now become awake and sever the bonds of worldly existence in this single lifetime.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sit in firm devotion and certainty. Do not tangle your mind in worldly affairs. Hold to one thing alone: the King of Pandhari. Then the way forward will show itself. Do not worship any other deity. Austerity, ritual, meditation, you need none of these. If you claim anything as your own, the wandering will never stop. How many births have you taken in this body? Have you still not found the way? Come to your senses now. Be alert. Taste for yourself what that bliss is. See the secret of that place by your own knowing. Tuka says: now wake up, and break the bonds of this world in a single lifetime.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shakes a seeker awake and gives a stripped-down path. Settle the mind in steady faith, keep it out of worldly entanglement, and hold to one object only, the King of Pandhari; the road then opens of itself. He sets aside the whole apparatus of other gods, austerities, rituals, and meditation as unnecessary here, and names the real obstacle: clinging to anything as mine, which keeps the cycle of rebirth turning. Then he presses the urgent question, how many lives have you already wasted without finding the way? He urges direct experience over secondhand learning, and insists the bonds of the world can be severed in this one lifetime if you wake up now.

GATHA 3871 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the ingrate exposed

मराठी मूळ

दोराच्या आधारें पर्वत चढला । पाउलासाटीं केला अपघात ॥1॥
अष्टोत्तरदशें व्याधि ज्य वैद्यें दवडुनी । तो वैद्य मारूनि उत्तीर्ण जाला ॥ध्रु.॥
नव मास माया वाइलें उदरीं । ते माता चौबारीं नग्न केली ॥2॥
गायत्रीचें क्षीर पिळुनी घेऊनी । उपवासी बांधोनी ताडन करी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे दासां निंदी त्याचें तोंड । पहातां नरककुंड पूर्वजांसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He climbed the mountain by the support of a rope, only to fall to his ruin for the sake of one step. A physician who cured a hundred and eighteen ailments killed the very doctor and declared himself healed.

The mother who carried him nine months in her womb was stripped naked by him in public. He squeezes the milk of the Gayatri and then binds her to a fast and beats her.

Says Tuka, one who slanders the servants of God must look upon the hell that awaits his ancestors.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He climbed the mountain by the help of a rope, then took one careless step and fell to his ruin. A physician cured him of a hundred and eighteen diseases, and he killed that physician and called the debt repaid. The mother who carried him nine months in her womb, he stripped naked in the public square. He squeezed out the milk of the Gayatri, then bound her to a fast and beat her. Tuka says: look at the mouth that slanders God's servants. A pit of hell waits for his ancestors.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images of monstrous ingratitude to expose the man who betrays everyone who has helped him. The one saved by a rope grows careless and falls; the one cured of every illness murders his healer; the one carried in the womb shames his own mother in public; the one nourished by the sacred Gayatri starves and beats her. Each picture is the same pattern: turning on the very source of your life and rescue. He lands it on the person who slanders the devotees of God, naming that tongue as the worst of these betrayals, so foul that ruin falls even on the line behind him. The warning is aimed at the betraying pattern itself, a mirror to check in oneself.

GATHA 3872 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the greedy preacher

मराठी मूळ

न कळे ब्रह्मज्ञान आचार विचार । लटिका वेव्हार करीतसे ॥1॥
विश्वामित्री पोटीं तयाचा अवतार । नांव महाखर चांडाळाचें ॥ध्रु.॥
द्रव्यइच्छेसाटीं करीतसे कथा । काय त्या पापिष्ठा न मिळे खाया ॥2॥
पोट पोसावया तोंडें बडबडी । नाहीं धडफुडी एक गोष्टी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तया काय व्याली रांड । येउनिया भंड जनामध्यें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He does not know the knowledge of Brahman, nor right conduct, nor discernment. He carries on in false dealings.

Such a one, born from a corrupt lineage, bears the mark of the excluded. He performs religious discourses out of greed for money.

What would such a wrongdoer not eat? He babbles with his mouth only to fill his belly, without a single word of substance. Says Tuka, what kind of mother bore such a one, who comes and makes a spectacle of himself among the people?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He does not know the knowledge of Brahman. He does not know right conduct. He has no discernment. He carries on with false dealings. Born from a corrupt line, he bears the mark of the cast out, and his name is great donkey, outcaste. He gives religious talks only out of greed for money. What would such a sinner not eat? He babbles with his mouth only to fill his belly. There is not one word of substance in him. Tuka says: what kind of woman bore him, who comes and makes a spectacle of himself among the people?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a pattern, not setting up a man to despise: the preacher who has none of the thing he sells. The target knows neither the knowledge of Brahman nor conduct nor discernment, yet he holds forth as if he did, and the engine under the words is appetite, money for the purse, food for the belly. Tukaram's coarse insults, donkey, outcaste, what mother bore him, measure the gap between the holy office and the empty performance. The test the poem leaves for the listener is simple and aimed inward: is there one word of substance here, or only the belly talking?

GATHA 3873 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the God who already provides

मराठी मूळ

नित्य उठोनियां खायाची चिंता । आपुल्या तूं हिता नाठवीसी ॥1॥
जननीचे पोटीं उपजलासी जेव्हां । चिंता तुझी तेव्हां केली तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
चातकां लागूनि मेघ नित्य वर्षे । तो तुज उदास करील केवीं ॥2॥
पक्षी वनचरें आहेत भूमीवरि । तयांलागीं हरि उपेक्षीना ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भाव धरुन राहें चित्तीं । तरि तो श्रीपति उपेक्षीना ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every day you rise thinking only of what to eat. You never remember your own true welfare.

When you were born from your mother's womb, God Himself took care of your needs. The rain cloud pours down ceaselessly for the chataka bird.

How could He ever forsake you? Birds and forest creatures live upon the earth, and Hari does not neglect them. Says Tuka, if you hold devotion firmly in your chitta, Shripati will never forsake you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every day you rise and worry only about what to eat. You never remember your own true good. When you were born from your mother's womb, He already took care of your needs then. The cloud rains down without stopping for the chataka bird. How could He ever leave you wanting? Birds and forest creatures live on the earth, and Hari does not neglect them. Tuka says: hold devotion firmly in your mind, and then Shripati will never forsake you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is scolding a daily anxiety and naming the trust that would dissolve it. The man rises each morning consumed by the question of food, and so never turns to his own real welfare. Against that worry Tukaram sets the plain evidence of how God already works: He provided for you in the womb before you could ask, the cloud feeds the chataka, the birds and wild animals are kept alive without their planning. The point is not that you stop eating but that you stop letting the belly own your mind; hold devotion firmly, and Shripati, who has never neglected the least creature, will not neglect you.

GATHA 3874 Longing and Separation

Longing, the devotee who fears abandonment

मराठी मूळ

जेजे आळी केली तेते गेली वांयां । उरला पंढरिराया श्रम माझा ॥1॥
काय समाधान केलें कोण वेळे । कोणें माझे लळे पिाळयेले ॥ध्रु.॥
अभ्यास तो नाहीं स्वप्नीं ही दुिश्चता । प्रत्यक्ष कैंचा चि तो ॥2॥
आतां पुढें लाज वाटे पांडुरंगा । भक्त ऐसें जगामाजी जालें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां नाहीं भरवसा । मोकलिसी ऐसा वाटतोसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every prayer I made has gone in vain. Only my weariness remains, O Lord of Pandhari.

When has He ever granted me satisfaction? Who has ever honored my childlike pleas? Practice is absent even in dreams, let alone in waking life. Now, going forward, I feel ashamed, O Panduranga, that I have been called a devotee before the world.

Says Tuka, I no longer have any confidence. It seems as though You will let me go.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every plea I made has gone to waste. Only my weariness remains, O Lord of Pandhari. When did You ever give me peace? Who ever honored my childlike pleas? I have no practice, not even in dreams, let alone awake. So how could it ever be real before my eyes? Now I feel ashamed in front of others, Panduranga, that I am called a devotee in the world. Tuka says: now I have no confidence left. It feels as though You mean to let me go.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the dark hour of devotion, where the bhakta accuses God of silence. Tukaram lays out the ledger: every prayer wasted, no peace ever granted, no pleas honored, and on his own side no real practice even in sleep, so how could the vision ever come. The shame is public, he is called a devotee before the world while feeling like none. The poem does not resolve the fear; it holds it open, and the honesty of saying it aloud to Panduranga is itself the last thread of the relationship he is afraid of losing.

GATHA 3875 The Nature of God

Adoration, the vow to protect devotees

मराठी मूळ

पूवाअहूनि बहु भक्त सांभिाळले । नाहीं अव्हेरिले दास कोणी ॥1॥
जेजे शरण आले तेते आपंगिले । पवाडे विठ्ठले ऐसे तुझे ॥ध्रु.॥
मिरवे चरणीं ऐसीये गोष्टीचें । भक्तसांभाळाचें ब्रीद ऐसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मांसाटी येणें रूपा । माझ्या मायबापा पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From ancient times You have cared for many devotees. You have never rejected any servant.

Whoever came to You for refuge, You embraced. Such are Your glorious deeds, O Vitthal.

The very hallmark of Your feet is this: the vow to protect Your devotees. Says Tuka, it is for our sake that You have taken this form, O Panduranga, my mother and father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From of old You have cared for many devotees. You have never cast off any servant. Whoever came to You for refuge, You took them up. Such are Your great deeds, O Vitthal. This is what shines at Your feet, the standing vow to protect Your devotees. Tuka says: it is for our sake that You have come into this form, my mother and father, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising God by reciting His track record and then claiming a place in it. The argument is from history: across all time no one who took refuge was ever turned away, and this reliability is the very mark of Vitthal's feet, a standing vow to guard those who are His. The closing line lands the personal stake: the form standing on the brick at Pandhari is not for God's own sake but for ours, which is why Tukaram can call him mother and father. The praise is also a quiet claim on that protection.

GATHA 3876 Sacred Stories

Mythology, the Name cools the fire

मराठी मूळ

दद्रुनराचें पिलुं ह्मणे रामराम । नाहीं उदक उष्ण होऊं दिलें ॥1॥
कढेमाजी बाळ करी तळमळ । गोविंद गोपाळ पावें वेगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आज्ञा तये काळीं केली पावकासी । झणी पिलीयासी तापवीसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे ऐसे हे पवाडे । वणिनतां निवाडे सुख वाटे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A frog's child utters the name of Rama, and the water does not scald it. In the boiling pot the young one cries out.

O Govinda, O Gopala, come quickly. At that time the Lord commanded the fire itself not to burn the little creature.

Says Tuka, such are Your glorious deeds. It brings joy to recount them in full.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The frog's child cries out Rama, Rama, and the water is not allowed to scald it. In the boiling pot the little one writhes. O Govinda, O Gopala, come quickly. At that time He commanded the fire itself: do not heat the little ones. Tuka says: such are Your great deeds. To recount them fully brings joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells a small rescue story to show how directly the Name works. A frog's young, caught in boiling water, cries out the name of Rama, and the Lord orders the very fire not to burn them. The point is the reach of God's protection: even a creature as low as a frog, even in a pot already boiling, is saved the instant the Name is uttered. Tukaram says recounting such deeds is itself a joy, because each one widens the listener's confidence that no caller is too small to be heard.

GATHA 3877 The Power of the Name

The Name, mercy without limit

मराठी मूळ

करुणा बहुत तुझिया अंतरा । मज विश्वंभरा कळों आलें ॥1॥
पक्षीयासी तुझें नाम जें ठेविलें । तयें उद्धरिलें गणिकेसी॥ध्रु.॥
कुंटिणी ते दोष बहु आचरली । नाम घेतां आली करुणा तुज ॥2॥
हृदय कोमळ तुझें नारायणा । ऐसें बहुता जनां तारियेलें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे सीमा नाहीं तुझे दये । कोमळ हृदय पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Great is the compassion within Your chitta, O Vishvambhara. This has become clear to me.

You gave Your own name to a bird, and through that name You delivered even a courtesan. That woman had committed countless sins, yet when she uttered the Name, compassion stirred within You.

Your chitta is tender, O Narayana. In this way You have saved many souls.

Says Tuka, there is no limit to Your mercy. Your chitta is soft, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is great compassion within You, O Vishvambhara. This has become clear to me. The name You placed in a bird was the same name that lifted a courtesan. That harlot had done many sins, yet when she spoke the Name compassion stirred in You. Your heart is tender, O Narayana. In this way You have saved many people. Tuka says: there is no limit to Your mercy. Your heart is soft, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is marveling at how cheaply, and how completely, God's mercy is moved. He stacks the unlikeliest cases: a bird taught a name, a courtesan heavy with sin, both lifted the moment the Name is spoken. The lesson is that it is not the speaker's worth but the softness of God's heart that does the saving, and that heart answers the Name without weighing the record behind it. He ends where he began, on the limitlessness of that mercy, so the listener hears the invitation: if she could be saved, so can you.

GATHA 3878 The Power of the Name

The Name, the deathbed cry of Ajamila

मराठी मूळ

आजामेळा अंत मरणासी आला । तोंवरि स्मरला नाहीं तुज ॥1॥
प्राण जातेवेळे ह्मणे नारायण । त्यासाटीं विमान पाठविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुत कृपाळु होसी जगन्नाथा । त्रैलोक्यसमर्था सोइरिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तकाज तूं कैवारी । तुज साही चारी वणिनताती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ajamila had come to the very brink of death. Until that moment he had never remembered You.

At the moment of dying he uttered the name Narayana, and for that alone You sent a celestial chariot to fetch him. Supremely compassionate are You, O Lord of the world, O kinsman mighty over the three realms.

Says Tuka, You champion the cause of Your devotees, and all six schools of thought sing of You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ajamila came to the very end, to his death. Until then he had never remembered You. As his life was leaving he said Narayana, and for that You sent down a chariot from heaven. You are very merciful, O Lord of the world, kinsman mighty over the three realms. Tuka says: You are the champion of Your devotees' cause, and all six schools and all four sing of You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the story of Ajamila to press how late the Name can come and still work. A man who never once remembered God says Narayana only at the moment of dying, and that single utterance is enough for heaven to send a chariot. The point is the sheer mercy of it: not a lifetime of merit but one true cry at the end. He closes by naming God the champion of His devotees, sung by all the schools, so the hearer understands that no one's case is too late while breath remains for the Name.

GATHA 3879 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the keeper of His own word

मराठी मूळ

धर्म रक्षावया अवतार घेशी । आपुल्या पिाळसी भक्तजना ॥1॥
अंबऋषीसाटीं जन्म सोसियेलें । दुष्ट निदानिळले किती एक ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य तुज कृपासिंधु ह्मणतील । आपुला तूं बोल साच करीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज वणिनती पुराणें । होय नारायणें दयासिंधु ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To protect righteousness You take incarnation after incarnation. You guard Your own devoted people.

For the sake of Ambarisha You endured birth, and You vanquished countless wicked ones. Blessed are You, for they call You an ocean of grace.

Fulfill Your own word and make it true. Says Tuka, the Puranas describe You in full. Be now, O Narayana, that very ocean of mercy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To protect dharma You take birth again and again. You guard Your own devoted people. For the sake of Ambarisha You bore birth, and how many wicked ones You struck down. Blessed are You, they say, ocean of grace. Make Your own word come true. Tuka says: the Puranas describe You. Be now, Narayana, that ocean of mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises God's record of incarnation and then holds Him to it. The pattern is set: He descends in age after age to guard dharma and His devotees, He suffered birth for Ambarisha's sake, He cut down the wicked. From that history Tukaram presses a claim, you are called the ocean of grace, so make your own word true. The closing is half praise and half petition: the Puranas have already described you this way, now actually be that ocean of mercy for me.

GATHA 3880 Prayers

Prayer, a fair reckoning with God

मराठी मूळ

येउनी जाउनी पाहें तुजकडे । पडिल्या सांकडें नारायणा ॥1॥
आणीक कोणाचा मज नाहीं आधार । तुजवरि भार जीवें भावें ॥ध्रु.॥
निष्ठ अथवा होई तूं कृपाळ । तुज सर्वकाळ विसरेंना ॥2॥
आपुलें वचन राहावें सांभाळून । तुह्मां आह्मां जाण पडिपाडु ॥3॥
ज्याच्या वचनासी अंतर पडेल । बोल तो होईल तयाकडे ॥4॥
तुह्मां आह्मां तैसें नाहीं ह्मणे तुका । होशील तूं सखा जीवलगा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I come and go, looking toward You, O Narayana, for I am in distress. I have no other support.

My entire being, body and jiva, rests upon You. Whether You are stern or gracious, I will never forget You at any time.

Guard Your own word and keep it well. Between You and me, let there be a fair reckoning.

Whoever breaks the promise, the blame will fall on that side. Says Tuka, it will not be so between us. You will be my dearest friend.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I come and go, looking toward You, fallen into trouble, Narayana. I have no other support. My whole being, body and life, rests its weight on You. Whether You are harsh or gracious, I will not forget You at any time. Keep Your own word and guard it. Between You and me, let there be a fair account. Whoever breaks his promise, the blame will land on that side. Tuka says: it will not be that way between us. You will be my dearest friend.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays in the form of a bargain between two who are bound to each other. He has nowhere else to lean and lays his whole life on Narayana, and he pledges his own side first: harsh or kind, he will never forget God. Then he asks God to keep faith likewise and proposes a fair reckoning, with the blame falling on whoever breaks his word. The boldness is the intimacy: he does not beg from below but speaks as one friend holding another to a promise, and trusts that the bond will not be the one to fail.

GATHA 3881 Prayers

Prayer, save the fallen one

मराठी मूळ

आइक नारायणा वचन माझें खरें । सांगतों निर्धारिं तुजपासीं ॥1॥
नाहीं भाव मज पडिली लोककाज । राहिलेंसे काज तुझे पायीं ॥2॥
जरि तुज कांहीं करणें उचित । तारीं तूं पतित तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear me, O Narayana, for my words are true. I speak to You with certainty.

I have no attachment to worldly affairs. My only concern remains at Your feet.

If there is anything that is fitting for You to do, then deliver this fallen one. Says Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, Narayana, my words are true. I tell You with full certainty. I have no attachment, and the affairs of the world have fallen away from me. My only concern stays at Your feet. If there is anything fitting for You to do, then save this fallen one. Tuka says.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short, stripped prayer that puts everything on God's side of the ledger. Tukaram swears his word is true: worldly business has dropped away and his one remaining care rests at God's feet. Having emptied his own hands, he leaves the next move entirely to God, if there is anything fitting for you to do. The whole weight falls on the last plea, save this fallen one, spoken without any claim of merit, only the certainty that he has nowhere else to look.

GATHA 3882 Prayers

Prayer, the orphan asking to be claimed

मराठी मूळ

अनाथ परदेशी हीन दीन भोळें । उगलें चि लोळे तुझे रंगीं ॥1॥
आपुलें ह्मणावें मज नुपेक्षावें । प्रेमसुख द्यावें मायबापा ॥ध्रु.॥
कासवीचे परि दृष्टी पाहें मज । विज्ञानीं उमज दावुनियां ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am an orphan, a stranger, low, poor, and simple. Without reason I roll about in the dust of Your company.

Call me Your own and do not forsake me. Give me the joy of love, O mother and father.

Like a tortoise that nourishes its young with a glance, look upon me with the light of understanding.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am an orphan, a stranger, low and poor and simple. For no reason I roll about in the dust of Your company. Call me Your own and do not pass me by. Give me the joy of love, mother and father. Like the tortoise that feeds its young with a glance, look upon me, showing me understanding in the light of knowing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names his own helplessness so completely that there is nothing left to offer but it. He is orphaned, foreign, low, simple, with no claim except that he keeps rolling in the dust where God is. His whole request is relationship, not reward: call me your own, do not overlook me, give me the joy of love. The closing image carries the prayer, the tortoise is said to nourish its young by looking at them, so he asks only for God's glance, which would itself feed him and open his understanding.

GATHA 3883 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, arriving at Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

पावलों पंढरी वैकुंठभवन । धन्य आजि दिन सोनियाचा॥1॥
पावलों पंढरी आनंदगजरें । वाजतील तुरें शंख भेरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पावलों पंढरी क्षेमआलिंगनीं । संत या सज्जनीं निवविलें॥2॥
पावलों पंढरी पार नाहीं सुखा । भेटला हा सखा मायबाप ॥3॥
पावलों पंढरी येरझार खुंटली । माउली वोळली प्रेमपान्हा ॥4॥
पावलों पंढरी आपुलें माहेर । नाहीं संवसार तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have reached Pandhari, the abode of Vaikuntha. Blessed is this golden day.

I have arrived in Pandhari amid sounds of joy, with trumpets, conches, and drums resounding. I have reached Pandhari and been embraced by saints and holy ones who have soothed my soul.

I have reached Pandhari, and there is no end to the bliss, for my beloved friend and parent has been found. I have reached Pandhari, and all wandering has ceased, for the mother has showered her milk of love.

Says Tuka, I have reached Pandhari, my true home. There is no more worldly life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have reached Pandhari, the dwelling of Vaikuntha. Blessed is this day, this golden day. I have reached Pandhari amid an uproar of joy, with trumpets, conches, and drums sounding. I have reached Pandhari into a glad embrace; the saints and holy ones have cooled my soul. I have reached Pandhari, and there is no end to the bliss, for my friend, my mother and father, has met me. I have reached Pandhari, and my coming and going is over; the mother has let down her milk of love. I have reached Pandhari, my own mother's home. Tuka says: there is no more worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the homecoming poem, every line beginning again with the arrival because the arrival is the whole event. Pandhari is not a town here but Vaikuntha itself, reached on a day Tukaram calls golden, met with trumpets and conches and the embrace of the saints. The deepest claims come at the end: the wandering, the endless coming and going of birth and death, has stopped, and the mother has let down her milk, the image for love freely given. To reach Pandhari is to reach one's true maternal home, and there, he says, worldly life simply is no more.

GATHA 3884 Prayers

Surrender, prayer for fearlessness

मराठी मूळ

अभयदान मज देई गा उदारा । कृपेच्या सागरा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
देहभाव तुझ्या ठेवियेला पायीं । आणीक मी कांही नेणें दुजें ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवा भक्ति भाव नेणें मी पतित । आतां माझें हित तुझ्या पायीं ॥2॥
अवघा निरोपिला तुज देहभाव । आतां मज पाव पांडुरंगा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुजें नाम दिनानाथ । तें मज उचित करीं आतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Grant me the gift of fearlessness, O generous one, O ocean of grace, O Panduranga. I have placed my whole sense of self at Your feet and know nothing else.

I lack in service, devotion, and understanding. I am ignorant and fallen.

Now my welfare lies only at Your feet. I have surrendered my entire being to You.

Now come to me, O Panduranga. Says Tuka, Your name is the Lord of the lowly. Make that name true for me now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give me the gift of fearlessness, O generous one, O ocean of grace, Panduranga. I have laid my whole sense of self at your feet. I know nothing else. I am poor in service, poor in devotion, poor in understanding; I am fallen. Now my good lies only at your feet. I have handed over my whole being to you. Now come to me, Panduranga. Tuka says: your name is Lord of the lowly. Make that name true for me now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for one thing first, fearlessness, and grounds the whole prayer in having nothing to offer. He admits he is empty of the usual qualifications: no service, no devotion, no understanding, and he calls himself fallen. That is not despair but the ground of his claim, because he holds God to his own title, Lord of the lowly. If the name means anything, it must reach exactly this kind of person. Having placed his entire sense of self at the feet, he leaves himself with no other refuge and simply waits for God to come.

GATHA 3885 Prayers

Holding God to his vow

मराठी मूळ

लागो तुझी सोय ऐसे कोणी करी । माझे विठाबाई जननिये ॥1॥
पतितपावन ह्मणविसी जरी । आवरण करीं तरी माझें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं तरी ब्रीद टाकीं सोडूनियां । न धरिसी माया जरी माझी ॥2॥
बोलिला तो बोल करावा साचार । तरि लोक बरें ह्मणतील ॥3॥
करावा संसार लोक लाजे भेणें । वचनासी उणें येऊं नेदीं ॥4॥
तुह्मां आह्मां तैसें नाहीं ह्मणे तुका । होशील तूं सखा जीवलग ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who will set me on the right path, my Vithabai, my divine mother? If You truly call Yourself the Purifier of the Fallen, then lift the veil from over me. Otherwise, cast aside Your vow, if You do not care for me.

Let what You have spoken be made true, and then people will say it is good. One must keep up the household for the sake of honor.

Do not let Your word fall short. Says Tuka, let it not be so between us. You will be my dearest companion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Someone, set me on the right path, my Vithabai, my mother. If you call yourself the one who purifies the fallen, then lift the veil from over me. If not, then drop the title; let it go, if you will not hold me as your own. The word you have spoken, make it come true; then people will say it is good. One keeps up a household for the sake of honor. Do not let your word fall short. Tuka says: let it not be like that between us. You will be my dearest companion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls Vitthal his mother, then presses a sharp argument: a title carries an obligation. If God advertises himself as the purifier of the fallen, then saving Tukaram is not a favor but the keeping of a public vow. He even uses the worldly logic of reputation, that a person maintains his household so as not to lose face, to insist that God too must not let his word fall short. The whole poem is intimate pressure, not threat: he is binding God by God's own name. Behind the argument is the trust that the bond between them is real, so the demand can be made at all.

GATHA 3886 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, God as the only kin

मराठी मूळ

तू आह्मां सोयरा सज्जन सांगाति । तुजलागीं प्रीति चालो सदा ॥1॥
गण गोत मित्र तूं माझें जीवन । अनन्यशरण तुझ्या पांयीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्वगुणें तुझा दास । आवडे अभ्यास सदा तुझा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are our kinsman, our noble companion. May love for You flow on forever.

You are my family, my relatives, my friend, my very life. I surrender wholly at Your feet.

Says Tuka, with every quality I am Your servant. My constant joy is the practice of devotion to You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are our kinsman, our good companion. May love for you keep flowing always. You are my family, my people, my friend, my very life. I take refuge at your feet and nowhere else. Tuka says: in every quality I am your servant. The practice of devotion to you is my constant delight.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram folds every human tie into one figure: Vitthal is kinsman, friend, family, and life itself. By naming God as all relations at once, he quietly sets aside the ordinary network of relatives that usually defines a person, and rests his whole identity on this one bond. The phrase about taking refuge nowhere else marks that this is exclusive, not one loyalty among many. What he asks for is simply that the love keep flowing; the practice of devotion is not a duty here but his steady joy.

GATHA 3887 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, singing without rules

मराठी मूळ

आवडेल तैसें तुज आळवीन । वाटे समाधान जीवा तैसें ॥1॥
नाहीं येथें कांहीं लौकिकाची चाड । तुजविण गोड देवराया ॥ध्रु.॥
पुरवीं मनोरथ अंतरींचें आर्त । धायेवरि गीत गाई तुझे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लेंकी आळवी माहेरा । गाऊं या संसारा तुज तैसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I shall call upon You however my chitta desires. Let my jiva find whatever comfort it seeks.

There is no concern here for worldly convention. Nothing is sweet to me but You, O King of gods.

Fulfill the longings of my inner chitta. Let me sing Your song until the hunger of devotion is fully satisfied.

Says Tuka, as a daughter calls out for her mother's home, so shall I sing to You in this world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will call out to you however I please, in whatever way settles my heart. There is no concern here for what the world thinks proper. Nothing is sweet to me but you, King of gods. Fill the wishes of my heart, the longing deep inside; let me sing your song until that hunger is full. Tuka says: as a daughter calls toward her mother's home, so will I sing to you in this world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram claims the freedom to worship in his own way, refusing to measure his devotion against social rules of propriety. The point is that love decides the form, not custom: whatever calms his heart is the right way to call on God. He asks God to satisfy the inner longing, and frames himself with the image of a married daughter aching for her parents' home, a settled Marathi picture of homesickness. In that image this world is the in-laws' house and God is the true home he keeps singing toward.

GATHA 3888 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the babbling child

मराठी मूळ

माझें मुख नामीं रंगो सर्वकाळ । गोविंद गोपाळ राम कृष्ण ॥1॥
अबद्ध चांगलें गाऊं भलतैसें । कळलें हें जैसें मायबापा॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज न लगे वांकडें । मी तुझें बोबडें बाळ तान्हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May my mouth be colored with Your name at all times, Govinda, Gopala, Rama, Krishna. Whether I sing well or poorly, let me sing in whatever way I know, O mother and father.

Says Tuka, do not hold my faults against me. I am Your babbling infant child.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let my mouth be colored with your name at all times: Govinda, Gopala, Rama, Krishna. Whether the singing comes out clumsy or fine, let me sing it however I can, mother and father. Tuka says: do not hold my faults against me. I am your babbling infant, your small child.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for nothing but that the Name stay always on his lips, and he names the forms he loves. He sets aside the worry about whether his singing is good enough by reframing the whole relationship: God is mother and father, and he is a small child still learning to speak. A parent does not score an infant's babble for correctness. So the plea is that devotion be received for its love and not judged by its polish, and that his clumsiness be taken as a child's, not a sinner's.

GATHA 3889 The Power of the Name

The Name, the easy path

मराठी मूळ

यालागीं आवडी ह्मणा राम कृष्ण । जोडा नारायण सर्वकाळ ॥1॥
सोपें हें साधन लाभ येतो घरा । वाचेसी उच्चारा राम हरि ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगती कष्ट न लगे सायास । करावा अभ्यास विठ्ठलाचा ॥2॥
न लगे तप तीर्थ करणें महादान । केल्या एक मन जोडे हरि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं न वेचितां धन । जोडे नारायण नामासाटीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Therefore, with love, chant the names Rama and Krishna. Join with Narayana at all times.

This is the easy path. The reward comes right to your door.

Let your voice utter Rama and Hari. No hardships are needed, no elaborate efforts.

Simply practice the devotion of Vitthal. No austerity, no pilgrimage, no grand charity is required.

By making the mind one-pointed, Hari is attained. Says Tuka, without spending any wealth, Narayana is won through the Name alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

So, with love, say Rama, Krishna. Join with Narayana at all times. This is an easy practice, and the gain comes right to your house. Let your tongue speak Rama, Hari. It needs no hardship, no elaborate effort. Just practice Vitthal. No austerity, no pilgrimage, no great charity is needed. Make the mind one, and Hari is gained. Tuka says: without spending any wealth, Narayana is won through the Name alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the simple repetition of the Name against the whole apparatus of expensive religion. Austerity, pilgrimage, and grand charity are the costly, effortful, often status-marking routes; the Name costs nothing and is open to anyone with a tongue. The one condition he names is inward, a mind made single, one-pointed. So the path is easy in means but not careless: love and attention do the work that money and exertion claim to. The reward, he says, comes to your own door, no journey required.

GATHA 3890 The Power of the Name

The Name, mere ritual is empty

मराठी मूळ

झांकूनियां नेत्र काय जपतोसी । जंव नाहीं मानसीं प्रेमभाव ॥1॥
रामनाम ह्मणा उघड मंत्र जाणा । चुकती यातना गर्भवास ॥ध्रु.॥
मंत्र यंत्र संध्या करिसी जडीबुटी । तेणें भूतसृष्टी पावसील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐक सुंदर मंत्र एक । भवसिंधुतारक रामनाम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What use is closing your eyes and muttering prayers when there is no love in your mind? Know that the name of Rama is an open mantra. It frees one from the torments of rebirth.

If you practice mantras, yantras, rituals, and charms, you will only enter the realm of ghosts. Says Tuka, hear this one beautiful mantra: the name of Rama, which carries one across the ocean of worldly existence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What are you muttering with your eyes shut, when there is no love in your heart? Say the name of Rama; know it as an open mantra. It cancels the torment of being born again in the womb. If you work mantras, yantras, the daily rites, and herb charms, you will reach only the world of ghosts. Tuka says: hear this one beautiful mantra, the name of Rama, that carries you across the ocean of birth and death.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks ritual performed without feeling: shut eyes and mumbled formulas are useless if the heart holds no love. He contrasts the secret, technical machinery of mantras, yantras, and herb charms with the Name, which he calls an open mantra, nothing hidden, available to all. The secret arts, he warns, lead only to a low, ghostly result, while the simple name of Rama ferries one across the whole cycle of rebirth. The sting points at the pattern of empty technique, not at any one person; the test he sets is whether love is actually present.

GATHA 3891 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false devotee

मराठी मूळ

पापिया चांडाळा हरिकथा नावडे । विषयालागीं आवडें गाणें त्याला ॥1॥
ब्राह्मणा दक्षणा देतां रडे रुका । विषयालागीं फुका लुटीतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
वीतभरि लंगोटी नेदी अतीताला । खीरम्या देतो शाला भोरप्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याच्या थुंका तोंडावरि । जातो यमपुरी भोगावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wicked wrongdoer takes no pleasure in hearing the story of Hari but loves songs devoted to sense pleasures. He weeps at paying a coin as a gift to a Brahmin but freely squanders his wealth on sensory indulgence.

He will not give even a small loincloth to a holy guest but lavishes gifts upon sycophants. Says Tuka, spit upon his face. He is bound for the realm of Yama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wicked, low man takes no joy in the story of Hari, but he loves songs about the pleasures of the senses. Asked to give one coin to a Brahmin, he weeps over it; on his cravings he pours out money for nothing. He will not give a hand's width of loincloth to a holy wanderer, but he gives shawls to flatterers and frauds. Tuka says: spit on his face. He goes to the city of Yama to suffer for it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws the portrait of a man whose spending exposes his real religion. He hoards when devotion or charity is asked and squanders freely on his appetites and on the flatterers who feed his vanity, refusing even a scrap to a genuine holy guest. The harsh line, spit on his face, is aimed at the pattern of hypocrisy, the heart that values sensual indulgence over Hari and flatterers over the poor, and warns where that pattern ends. Read against oneself, it is a question about where one's own money and pleasure actually go.

GATHA 3892 Longing and Separation

Longing, hunger for the feet

मराठी मूळ

क्षुधारथी अन्नें दुष्काळें पीडिलें । मिष्टान्न देखिलें तेणें जैसें ॥1॥
तैसें तुझे पायीं लांचावलें मन । झुरे माझा प्राण भेटावया ॥ध्रु.॥
मांजरें देखिला लोणियांचा गोळा । लावुनियां डोळा बैसलेंसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां झडी घालूं पाहें । पांडुरंगे माये तुझे पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a starving person who catches sight of fine food during a famine, so has my mind become greedy for Your feet. My soul burns to meet You.

Like a cat that has spotted a lump of butter and sits staring at it with fixed eyes. Says Tuka, now rain down Your grace upon me. O Panduranga, O mother, at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like a starving man in a famine who suddenly sees fine food, that is how my mind has gone hungry for your feet. My very life burns to meet you. Like a cat that has spotted a lump of butter and sits with its eyes fixed on it, so I sit. Tuka says: now let me pounce, O Panduranga, O mother, at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his longing physical with two homely images of appetite. The famished man and the staring cat are not flattering pictures of piety; they are pictures of raw, fixed hunger, and that is exactly his point about how the mind craves God. The longing is not calm or polite, it burns, and he asks not merely to approach but to spring upon the feet the way the cat lunges for the butter. Calling Panduranga mother in the same breath keeps the hunger tender even as it is fierce.

GATHA 3893 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, asking only for the meeting

मराठी मूळ

स्वामीसी संकट पडे जे गोष्टीचें । काय त्या प्रेमाचें सुख मज ॥1॥
दुःखवीना चित्त तुझें नारायणा । कांहीं च मागेना तुजपासीं ॥ध्रु.॥
रिद्धि सिद्धि मोक्ष संपित्त विलास । सोडियेली आस याची जीवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एके वेळे देई भेटी । वोरसोनि पोटीं आलिंगावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why should I ask for anything that would trouble my Lord? What joy would such love bring me? I do not wish to sadden Your chitta, O Narayana, and so I ask nothing of You. Wealth, powers, liberation, comfort, I have given up the hope of all these.

Says Tuka, grant me only one meeting. Embrace me to Your chitta and let me feel that closeness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why would I ask for anything that would put my Lord in difficulty? What joy could such love give me? I do not want to grieve your heart, Narayana, so I ask nothing of you. Riches, powers, liberation, comfort, pleasures: I have given up all hope of these from my heart. Tuka says: just give me one meeting. Hold me to your heart and let me feel that closeness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines what love is allowed to want. He refuses to ask for the standard prizes, wealth, occult powers, even liberation, partly because they are beside the point and partly out of a strange courtesy: he will not burden the one he loves with demands. The test he applies is whether a request would trouble God's heart, and he chooses to ask for nothing that would. What remains is not a thing to be granted but the relationship itself: a single meeting and an embrace. Love that truly loves, he implies, wants the beloved and not the beloved's gifts.

GATHA 3894 Renunciation

Renunciation, won by long effort

मराठी मूळ

देव तिंहीं बळें धरिला सायासें । करूनियां नास उपाधीचा ॥1॥
पर्वपक्षी धातु धिःकारिलें जन । स्वयें जनादनन ते चि जाले ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे यासी न चले तांतडी । अनुभवें गोडी येइल कळों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those great ones seized God by sheer force of their effort, having first destroyed all worldly distractions. They renounced caste, possessions, and the opinions of the world.

They themselves became one with Janardana. Says Tuka, this cannot be done in haste. Through experience alone will the sweetness of it become known.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those great ones laid hold of God by force, by hard effort, after destroying all that distracts. They threw away caste, possessions, and the opinion of the world; rejected by people, they themselves became Janardana. Tuka says: this cannot be rushed. Through experience alone will its sweetness come to be known.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the path of the saints who went before, and he does not soften the cost. They seized God only after tearing down the props the world hands us: caste, property, and reputation, the very things that make a person respectable. Stripped of those and scorned by others, they ended up merged with God himself. The closing turn is a warning to anyone eager for quick results: this ripens through lived experience, not haste, and only practice over time lets its sweetness be tasted.

GATHA 3895 Longing and Separation

Longing, come quickly and sit with me

मराठी मूळ

भेटीवांचोनियां दुजें नाहीं चित्तीं । येणें काकुलती याजसाटीं ॥1॥
भेटोनियां बोलें आवडीचें गुज । आनंदाच्या भोजें जेवूं संगें ॥ध्रु.॥
मायलेकरासीं नाहीं दुजी परि । जेऊं बरोबरी बैसोनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें अंतरींचें आर्त । यावें जी त्वरित नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My chitta desires nothing but Your meeting. That is why I come pleading.

Let us meet and share the intimate secrets of devotion. Let us sit together and feast on bliss.

Between mother and child there is no formality. Let us sit side by side and share the meal.

Says Tuka, such is the longing of my chitta. Come quickly, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Nothing is in my heart but to meet you; that is why I come pleading. Let us meet and speak the dear secrets of love; let us eat together at a feast of joy. Between mother and child there is no other way; let us sit side by side and share the meal. Tuka says: such is the longing inside me. Come quickly, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips his wanting down to one thing, the meeting itself, and pictures it in the most domestic terms. What he hopes for is not awe at a distance but intimacy: shared secrets, a meal eaten together, sitting side by side. The image of mother and child carries the key word, no formality, because between them there is no distance to keep and no ceremony to observe. So he asks God to drop every gap of rank and simply come, and to come quickly, the way a child's hunger will not wait.

GATHA 3896 The Power of the Name

The Name at the hour of death

मराठी मूळ

आविसाचे आसे गळ गिळी मासा । फुटोनियां घसा मरण पावे ॥1॥
मरणाचे वेळे करी तळमळ । आठवी कृपाळ तये वेळीं ॥2॥
अंतकाळीं ज्याच्या नाम आलें मुखा । तुका ह्मणे सुखा पार नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Lured by the bait of desire, a fish swallows the hook. Its throat is torn and it perishes.

In its dying moments it writhes in agony and remembers the gracious Lord. Says Tuka, for the one whose lips utter the Name at the hour of death, there is no limit to the bliss that follows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A fish, drawn by the bait, swallows the hook. Its throat tears open and it dies. In its dying moment it writhes, and just then it remembers the gracious Lord. Tuka says: for the one whose lips speak the Name at the hour of death, there is no end to the bliss that comes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the most ordinary image of a trapped, dying creature and turns it toward the one thing that still matters at the end. The fish is caught by greed, and in its final agony something in it cries out and remembers God. The poem's claim is that the Name spoken at the very last breath is not too little and not too late: it opens onto bliss without limit. He is naming where to put your trust now, while there is still time to make the Name a habit, so that it rises on its own when the throat is failing.

GATHA 3897 Prayers

Plea through the saints, the orphan

मराठी मूळ

जायाचें शरीर जाईल क्षणांत । कां हा गोपिनाथ पावे चि ना ॥1॥
कृपेचे सागर तुह्मी संत सारे । निरोप हा फार सांगा देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
अनाथ अज्ञान कोणी नाहीं त्यासि । पायापें विठ्ठला ठेवीं मज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें करावें निर्वाण । मग तो रक्षण करिल माझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This body will perish in an instant. Why then does Gopinath not come? You saints are all oceans of mercy.

Please carry this message to God. I am an orphan, ignorant, with no one to call my own.

Place me at the feet of Vitthal. Says Tuka, let this be the final settlement. Then He Himself will take charge of my protection.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This body will be gone in a moment. Why does Gopinath still not come? You saints are all oceans of mercy. Please carry this message to God. I am an orphan, ignorant, with no one of my own. Lay me at Vitthal's feet. Tuka says: settle it once for all, this final settlement; then He Himself will take care of guarding me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is dying of impatience and sends his prayer through the saints, asking them to deliver his message to God. He presents himself with nothing to offer: no family, no learning, no one to call his own, only the urgency that the body could end at any instant. His one request is to be placed at Vitthal's feet, and he wants it made final and binding, a settlement that cannot be undone. The logic is that once God takes him on, the responsibility for protecting him passes to God, and he need carry it no longer.

GATHA 3898 Longing and Separation

Longing, the heap of sin

मराठी मूळ

त्रासला हा जीव संसारींच्या सुखा । तुजविण सखा नाहीं कोणी ॥1॥
ऐसें माझें मनीं वाटे नारायणा । घालावी चरणावरि मिठी ॥ध्रु.॥
कइं तें सुंदर देखोनि रूपडें । आवडीच्या कोडें आळंगीन ॥2॥
नाहीं पूर्व पुण्य मज पापरासी । ह्मणोनि पायांसी अंतरलों ॥3॥
अलभ्य लाभ कैंचा संचितावेगळा । विनवी गोपाळा दास तुका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My jiva is wearied of the pleasures of this world. Without You there is no companion.

This is what my mind feels, O Narayana: let me clasp Your feet in embrace. When will I behold that beautiful form and embrace it with the joy of longing? I have no store of past merit; I am a heap of sin.

That is why I have been kept from Your feet. Says Tuka, this servant appeals to Gopala: how can such rare gain come without the grace of destiny?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This life of mine is weary of worldly pleasures. Without You there is no companion at all. This is what my mind feels, O Narayana: let me throw my arms around Your feet. When will I see that beautiful form and embrace it with all my longing? I have no store of past merit; I am a heap of sin. That is why I have been kept far from Your feet. Tuka says: this servant begs of Gopala, how can such an undeserved gift come without grace?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has grown sick of the pleasures the world offers and finds in them no true friend; only Narayana is left to want. He aches for the sight and the embrace of God's beautiful form, but he holds himself responsible for the distance: he claims no merit, calls himself a heap of sin, and reads his separation as the just result. The turn comes at the end, when he sees that the gift he wants is by definition undeserved, so it can only come as grace and not as wages. His prayer is therefore an appeal, not a claim of right: he asks Gopala for what no past merit could ever earn.

GATHA 3899 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, spend this life on the Name

मराठी मूळ

मोलाचें आयुष्य वेचुनियां जाय । पूर्वपुण्यें होय लाभ याचा ॥1॥
अनंतजन्मींचे शेवट पाहतां । नर देह हातां आला तुझ्या ॥ध्रु.॥
कराल ते जोडी येईल कार्यासी । ध्यावें विठ्ठलासी सुखालागीं ॥2॥
सांचलिया धन होईल ठेवणें । तैसा नारायण जोडी करा ॥3॥
करा हरिभक्ती परलोकीं ये कामा । सोडवील यमापासोनियां ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे करा आयुष्याचें मोल । नका वेचूं बोल नामेंविण ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Precious life is spent and passes away. Only by prior merit does one gain this human birth.

After countless lifetimes, this human body has come into your hands. Whatever you earn now will serve you in the end.

Meditate on Vitthal for the sake of true happiness. As saved wealth becomes a treasure, so make Narayana your lasting store.

Practice devotion to Hari, for it will serve you in the world beyond and deliver you from the clutches of Yama. Says Tuka, use this life wisely. Do not waste your breath on anything other than the Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Precious life is being spent and slips away. Only by past merit do you gain it at all. After countless births, look: a human body has come into your hands. Whatever you earn now will serve you in the end. Meditate on Vitthal for the sake of true happiness. As saved money becomes a hoard, so make Narayana your lasting store. Do devotion to Hari; it will serve you in the world beyond and free you from the clutches of Yama. Tuka says: reckon the worth of this life. Do not spend your breath on anything but the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram addresses the listener directly and frames human birth as a rare, costly thing won only after countless lives. He treats life as a currency that is draining away, and presses the question of what you are buying with it. The whole argument is an economy: meditation on Vitthal is the only saving that becomes a real treasure, and devotion to Hari is the only asset that holds value past death and buys release from Yama, the lord of death. The closing instruction is blunt: this birth is too precious to spend, so do not waste a single breath on anything other than the Name.

GATHA 3901 The Power of the Name

The Name, nectar on the tongue

मराठी मूळ

आपुलिया हिता जो असे जागता अभंग
काय सुख आहे वाउगें बोलतां । ध्यातां पंढरिनाथा कष्ट नाहीं ॥1॥
सर्वकाळ वाचे उच्चारितां हरि । तया सुखा सरि पाड नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
रामकृष्णरंगीं रसना रंगली । अमृताची उकळी नाम तुझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य तयाचें वदन । जया नारायण ध्यानीं मनीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What joy is there in idle talk? There is no hardship in meditating upon the Lord of Pandhari. The bliss of uttering Hari's name with every breath has no comparison.

When the tongue is dyed in the color of Rama and Krishna, Your name becomes a boiling fountain of nectar. Says Tuka, blessed is the face of the one in whose mind and meditation dwells Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What joy is there in idle talk? There is no hardship in meditating on the Lord of Pandhari. To say Hari's name with every breath, all the time: no other joy can match that bliss. When the tongue is dyed in the colour of Rama and Krishna, Your name is a boiling spring of nectar. Tuka says: blessed is the face of the one who holds Narayana in mind and meditation.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs two ways of using the mouth and the mind. Idle chatter gives nothing, while resting the attention on the Lord of Pandhari costs no effort and yields a joy nothing can equal. He pictures the practice physically: the tongue itself takes on the colour of Rama and Krishna until the Name on it tastes like a spring of nectar that keeps welling up. The poem ends by blessing the very face of such a person, making the point that constant remembrance is not a chore to bear but the sweetest thing a human can do.

GATHA 3902 The Power of the Name

Kirtan, God walks behind the singer

मराठी मूळ

कीर्त्तनाच्या सुखें सुखी होय देव । पंढरीचा राव संगीं आहे ॥1॥
भक्त जाय सदा हरि कीतिन गात । नित्यसेवें अनंत हिंडतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
त्रैलोक्य भ्रमण फिरत नारद । त्यासंगें गोविंद फिरतसे ॥2॥
नारद मंजुळ सुस्वरें गीत गाये । मागाअ चालताहे संगें हरि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याला गोडी कीर्त्तनाची । नाहीं आणिकांची प्रीति ऐसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God Himself is made happy by the bliss of kirtan. The King of Pandhari walks alongside.

The devotee who always sings of Hari's glory is followed everywhere by the Infinite Lord. Narada roams the three worlds, and Govinda wanders with him.

Narada sings in a sweet and melodious voice, and Hari walks right behind him. Says Tuka, God has such a taste for kirtan. No one else has such love from Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God Himself is made happy by the joy of kirtan. The King of Pandhari walks at the singer's side. The devotee who always sings Hari's glory is followed everywhere by the Infinite. Narada roams the three worlds, and Govinda wanders with him. Narada sings his song in a sweet, tuneful voice, and Hari walks right behind him. Tuka says: God has such a taste for kirtan. He gives no one else this kind of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a startling reversal: kirtan is not only the devotee reaching for God, it is God being delighted and drawn near. He says the singer does not chase the Lord; the Lord follows the singer, walking at his side wherever he goes. The example of Narada, the wandering sage-musician with Govinda always a step behind him, shows this as a settled habit of God, not a one-off favour. The claim he lands is that of all forms of devotion, the sung praise of the Name is the one God most loves, so that to sing is to keep the best company there is.

GATHA 3903 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the mother and child

मराठी मूळ

बाळेंविण माय क्षणभरि न राहे । न देखतां होये कासाविस ॥1॥
आणिक उदंड बुझाविती जरी । छंद त्या अंतरीं माउलीचा ॥ध्रु.॥
नावडती तया बोल आणिकाचे । देखोनियां नाचे माय दृष्टी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी विठ्ठल माउली । आणिकांचे बोलीं चाड नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother cannot remain even a moment without her child. When she cannot see it, she becomes distressed.

Even if many others try to console her, her chitta longs only for her little one. She takes no pleasure in the words of others but dances with joy at the sight of her child.

Says Tuka, Vitthal is my mother, and I care nothing for the words of anyone else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother cannot stay still even a moment without her child. When she cannot see it she grows frantic. However many others try to comfort her, her heart is set only on her little one. Their words do not please her; she dances with joy the moment her child comes into sight. Tuka says: Vitthal is my mother, and I have no use for anyone else's words.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his longing for God by the plainest love he knows, a mother's need for her child. Such a mother cannot be quieted by any number of well-meaning voices; nothing eases her but the sight of the one she loves. He then flips the image so that Vitthal becomes the mother and he the child, but keeps the same exclusive devotion: no other counsel, no other comfort, will do. The poem says single-hearted love is not narrowness but the natural shape of real attachment, and he refuses every substitute for the one face he wants.

GATHA 3904 Faith and Trust

Faith, no fear for Hari's own

मराठी मूळ

हरिचिया भक्ता नाहीं भयचिंता । दुःखनिवारिता नारायण ॥1॥
न लगे वाहणें संसारउद्वेग । जडों नेदी पांग देवराया ॥ध्रु.॥
असों द्यावा धीर सदा समाधान । आहे नारायण जवळी च ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा सखा पांडुरंग । व्यापियेलें जग तेणें एकें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devotees of Hari know no fear or anxiety. Narayana is the remover of all sorrow.

There is no need to carry the burden of worldly worry, for the Lord does not let any debt accumulate. Keep your courage steady and remain content, for Narayana is always near.

Says Tuka, my friend is Panduranga, who alone has pervaded the entire world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The devotees of Hari have no fear and no anxiety. Narayana takes away their sorrow. They need not carry the worry of worldly life; the Lord does not let any debt pile up on them. Keep your courage steady, stay at peace, for Narayana is right beside you. Tuka says: my friend is Panduranga, who alone has filled the whole world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one who has handed his worries over and found them gone. He tells the devotee that fear and anxiety are not the believer's portion, because Narayana himself removes sorrow and clears away the debts of worldly life before they can settle. The instruction is to keep one's courage and stay at peace, and the ground for that calm is nearness: God is not far off but right at hand. The poem closes on the largest assurance, that this near friend, Panduranga, is the very one who pervades the whole world, so there is nowhere his care does not reach.

GATHA 3905 The Saints

Saints, the only festival

मराठी मूळ

दसरा दिवाळी तो चि आह्मां सन । सखे संतजन भेटतील ॥1॥
आमुप जोडल्या सुखाचिया राशी । पार या भाग्यासी न दिसे आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे काय होऊं उतराई । जीव ठेऊं पांयीं संतांचिये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dasara and Diwali are festivals for us only when we meet the company of saintly friends. Our heaps of happiness have been gathered, and there seems no end to this fortune.

Says Tuka, how can I repay this debt? Let me lay down my life at the feet of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dasara and Diwali are festivals for us only when we meet our friends the saints. Heaps of happiness have been gathered, and now I can see no end to this good fortune. Tuka says: how can I ever repay it? Let me lay my life down at the feet of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines what a festival is. The great days of the calendar, Dasara and Diwali, mean nothing to him on their own; they become true celebration only in the company of holy people. He counts that company as wealth already heaped up, a fortune so large he can see no limit to it. Faced with a gift this great, he finds no payment equal to it, and offers the only thing he has: his own life laid at the saints' feet.

GATHA 3906 Social Criticism

Social criticism, learning sold for gain

मराठी मूळ

खिस्तीचा उदीम ब्राह्मण कलयुगीं । महारवाडीं मांगीं हिंडतसे ॥1॥
वेवसाव करितां पर्वत मांगासी । ते पैं विटाळासी न मनिती ॥ध्रु.॥
मांगिणीशीं नित्य करीतसे लेखा । तोंडावरि थुंका पडतसे ॥2॥
आशा माया रांडा नांव हें कागदीं । आठवीना कधीं नारायण ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देह जालें पराधीन । पांडुरंगाविण गति नाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In this age, Brahmins have taken up the trade of moneylending. They roam through the lowest quarters without scruple.

When doing business, they do not consider the defilement of dealing with anyone and everyone. They keep daily accounts with all sorts of people, bringing shame upon their own faces.

They remember only the names of greed and worldly entanglement, never once recalling Narayana. Says Tuka, the body has become enslaved. Without Panduranga, there is no salvation.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In this age the Brahmin has taken up the moneylender's trade. He roams through the poorest quarters after his profit. Doing business, he counts no one too low to deal with, no defilement worth minding. Day after day he keeps his accounts with all sorts, and shame falls on his own face. Greed and worldly tangle, these are the names written on his page; Narayana he never once recalls. Tuka says: the body has become a slave. Without Panduranga there is no way out.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks a pattern, not a class: the man entrusted with sacred learning who has turned it into a hunt for profit. The bite of the poem is in the hypocrisy, since the one who fusses most about purity will set every scruple aside the moment money is in view, and so brings shame on himself by his own standards. What he records each day is greed and entanglement; the one name worth writing, Narayana, never appears in his accounts. The verse turns the satire into a warning for any reader: appetite makes the body a slave, and the only release from that bondage is Panduranga. The mirror it holds up asks whose ledger we are really keeping.

GATHA 3907 Social Criticism

Social criticism, sacred duty made a trade

मराठी मूळ

जगीं ब्रह्मक्रिया खिस्तीचा व्यापार । हिंडे घरोघर चांडाळाचे ॥1॥
आंतेजा खिचडी घेताती मागून । गिाळप्रधानि मायबहिणी ॥ध्रु.॥
उत्तमकुळीं जन्म क्रिया अमंगळ । बुडविलें कुळ उभयतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसी कलयुगाची चाली । स्वाथॉ बुडविलीं आचरणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In this world the sacred rituals have become a trade of exploitation. People wander from house to house seeking scraps.

They beg for scraps of food and in their greed have abandoned their own mothers and sisters. Born in a noble lineage, their conduct is reprehensible, and they have sunk both families.

Says Tuka, such is the way of this dark age. Self-interest has corrupted all practice.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In this world the sacred rites have been turned into a trade for gain. He wanders house to house after scraps. He begs for leftovers, and in his greed he has cast off his own mother and sister. Born in a noble line, his conduct is foul, and he has sunk both families. Tuka says: such is the way of this dark age. Self-interest has drowned every right practice.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes how the holiest duties can be hollowed out into a business of begging and gain. The picture is harsh: a man going door to door for scraps, so given over to greed that he abandons even his own mother and sister and disgraces the good family he was born into. The poem's grief is that high birth and noble lineage cannot save conduct once self-interest takes the wheel; the form remains while the substance rots. He names this as the mark of the dark age, but the lesson points inward, to ask whether our own observances have quietly become transactions and who we have set aside to keep them.

GATHA 3908 Longing and Separation

Longing, lift this burden now

मराठी मूळ

हा चि माझा नेम धरिला हो धंदा । यावरि गोविंदा भेटी द्यावी ॥1॥
हा चि माझा ध्यास सदा सर्वकाळ । न्यावयासी मूळ येसी कधीं ॥ध्रु.॥
डोळयांची भूक पहातां श्रीमुख । आलिंगणे सुख निवती भुजा ॥2॥
बहु चित्त ओढे तयाचिये सोई । पुरला हाकांहीं नवस नेणें ॥3॥
बहुबहु काळ जालों कासावीस । वाहिले बहुवस कळेवर ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां पाडावें हें ओझें । पांडुरंगा माझें इयावरि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is my vow and my chosen work. On this basis, O Govinda, grant me Your meeting.

This is my constant longing at all times: when will You come to take me home? My eyes hunger for the sight of Your blessed face, and my arms find joy only in Your embrace. My heart is drawn powerfully toward You, yet I do not know whether my pleas have been fulfilled.

For a very long time I have been in distress, wearing out many bodies. Says Tuka, now lift this burden from me, O Panduranga. This much and no more.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is my vow, the one work I have taken up: that on this, O Govinda, You grant me Your meeting. This is my longing all day, every day: when will You come to fetch me home? My eyes hunger for the sight of Your blessed face; my arms find rest only in Your embrace. My heart is pulled hard toward You, yet I do not know whether my cries have been heard. For a long, long time I have been in torment, wearing out body after body. Tuka says: now set down this load, O Panduranga. This much, and no more.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has narrowed his whole life to a single occupation: waiting for God to grant him a meeting. He pours out the body of that longing, the eyes starving for God's face, the arms that find peace only in embrace, the heart dragged toward him, alongside the doubt of one who has prayed long without a clear answer. He frames the wait as exhaustion across many lifetimes, bodies used up one after another in the same fruitless ache. The poem ends not with a polite request but with a demand born of that weariness: lift this burden now, Panduranga, this much and no more, I cannot carry it further.

GATHA 3909 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, resting in certainty

मराठी मूळ

जेणें माझें हित होइल तो उपाव । करिसील भाव जाणोनियां ॥1॥
मज नाहीं सुख दुःख तया खंती । भावना हे चित्तीं नाना छंदें ॥ध्रु.॥
तोडीं हे संबंध तोडीं आशापाश । मज हो सायास न करितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी तों राहिलों निंश्चत । कवळोनि एकांतसुख तुझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever serves my true welfare, You will do, knowing my devotion. I have no attachment to happiness or sorrow or regret.

The mind has many moods and whims. Break these bonds.

Break the snares of desire. Let it happen without any effort from me.

Says Tuka, I rest in certainty, embracing the solitary bliss of Your company.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever truly serves my good, You will do it. You know my heart, so do what is right. I have no clinging to happiness, to sorrow, to regret. My mind takes on many moods and whims. Cut these ties. Cut the snares of desire, and let it happen without any effort from me. Tuka says: I have come to rest in certainty, holding the solitary bliss of Your company.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram hands over the whole question of his welfare to Narayana and stops bargaining for outcomes. He claims to have let go of his pull toward pleasure and his recoil from pain, and he asks God to do the one thing he cannot do for himself: break the mind's restless attachments and the snares of desire. The point is that effort by the small self only tightens those knots, so he asks for them to be cut without his striving. What remains, once the bargaining stops, is a quiet certainty and the contentment of being alone with God.

GATHA 3910 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, drop the outward badge

मराठी मूळ

शिखा सूत्र तुझा गुंतला जमान । तंववरि तूं जाण श्रुतिदास ॥1॥
त्याची तुज कांहीं चुकतां चि नीत । होसील पतित नरकवासी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु जालासी चतुर शाहणा । शुद्ध आचरणा चुकों नको ॥2॥
शिखा सूत्र याचा तोडीं तूं संबंध । मग तुज बाध नाहींनाहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तरि वत्तूनिन निराळा । उमटती कळा ब्रह्मींचिया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As long as the sacred thread and the topknot bind you as a pledge, you remain a servant of the scriptures. If you slip from that discipline even once, you will fall and become a dweller in hell.

You may have become very clever and learned, but do not stray from pure conduct. If you wish to sever the tie of the sacred thread and topknot, then do so completely, and no harm will touch you.

Says Tuka, only then, standing apart, will the qualities of Brahman shine through.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As long as the sacred thread and the topknot bind you like a pledge, know that you are only a servant of the scriptures. Slip from that discipline even once and you fall; you become a dweller in hell. You may have grown clever and learned, but do not stray from pure conduct. If you would cut the tie of the thread and the topknot, then cut it completely; then no harm can touch you. Tuka says: only then, standing apart, do the qualities of Brahman shine through you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing a hard choice on the man who wears the marks of ritual rank. As long as the sacred thread and topknot bind you, you live as a servant of rule, and a single lapse drops you, because that kind of religion is all condition and penalty. He does not soften this into mere caution; he says the way out is to cut the tie completely, not to wear it loosely. The frame left unspoken is that the outward badge is a substitute for the inward thing: only when you stand free of the badge do the qualities of Brahman show through you. The test for the reader is whether their religion is a costume that can be failed or a reality that cannot.

GATHA 3911 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false-faithful wife

मराठी मूळ

पतिव्रता ऐसी जगामध्यें मात । भोगी पांच सात अंधारीं ते ॥1॥
भ्रतारासी लेखी श्वानाचे समान । परपुरुषीं जाण संभ्रम तो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तिच्या दोषा नाहीं पार । भोगील अघोर कुंभपाक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

She is praised in the world as a faithful wife, yet in the dark she consorts with five or seven others. She treats her husband like a dog and dotes upon other men.

Says Tuka, there is no end to her sin. She will suffer the most terrible torments of hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the world she is praised as a faithful wife, yet in the dark she lies with five or seven others. She counts her husband as no better than a dog and dotes on other men. Tuka says: there is no end to her sin. She will suffer the most terrible torments of hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the public name against the private deed: the woman called faithful is faithless in the dark. The sting is the gap between reputation and reality, the honor she keeps in the world while betraying the bond she is honored for. Read past the literal target, this is the figure of pretended devotion everywhere, the soul that wears one face in public worship and gives its real love elsewhere. The warning to examine is whether your own honored name covers a divided heart.

GATHA 3912 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fruitless act

मराठी मूळ

सिंदळीसी नाहीं पोराची पैं आस । सांटविल्याबीजास काय करी ॥1॥
अथवा सेतीं बीज पेरिलें भाजोन । सारा देइल कोण काका त्याचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं खायाची ते चाड । तरि कां लिगाड करुनी घेतोस ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A faithless woman has no care for the child she bears. What use is a seed once it has been stored away? Or if a roasted seed is sown in a field, who will pay the rent on such a crop? Says Tuka, if you have no desire to eat the fruit, then why do you take on the entanglement at all?

IN PLAIN WORDS

A faithless woman has no care for the child she bears. What use is a seed once it is locked away? Or if you roast a seed and sow it in a field, who will pay the rent on that crop? Tuka says: if you have no wish to eat the fruit, then why do you take on the entanglement at all?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images of effort that can bear no fruit: a stored seed that never reaches the ground, a roasted seed that cannot sprout yet still owes rent. The point is that some labor is doomed from the start because the living power in it has been killed. He turns it back as a question to the doer: if you do not even want the fruit, why take on the burden and the tangle of the act? Read against pretended devotion, it asks why a person keeps up the outward motions when the inner intent that would make them fruitful is dead.

GATHA 3913 The Nature of God

The one doer, ego dissolved

मराठी मूळ

चाले हें शरीर कोणाचिये सत्ते । कोण बोलवितें हरीविण ॥1॥
देखवी दाखवी एक नारायण । तयाचें भजन चुकों नका ॥ध्रु.॥
मानसाची देव चालवी अहंता । मी चि एक कर्त्ता ह्मणों नये ॥2॥
वृक्षाचीं हीं पानें हाले त्याची सत्ता । राहिली अहंता मग कोठें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे विठो भरला सबाहीं । तया उणें कांहीं चराचरीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By whose power does this body move? Who makes it speak, if not Hari? It is Narayana alone who causes all seeing and showing. Do not neglect His worship.

God drives the ego of the human mind. One should not say that I alone am the doer.

Even the leaves of a tree stir only by His power. Where then does the ego stand? Says Tuka, Vitthal fills everything on all sides. Nothing in the whole creation is lacking in Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By whose power does this body move? Who makes it speak, if not Hari? It is Narayana alone who causes all seeing and showing. Do not neglect His worship. God drives even the ego in the human mind. Do not say, I alone am the doer. The leaves of a tree stir only by His power. Where then does the ego stand? Tuka says: Vitthal fills everything on every side. Nothing in all creation is empty of Him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks a plain question and lets it dismantle the sense of being the doer: if you do not move your own body or speak your own words, on what does the claim I am the doer rest? He pushes it to the smallest thing, a leaf stirring on a tree, to show that even what feels like your own will is moved by God. The ego itself, he says, is driven by God, so there is no corner left from which to claim independent action. The frame is non-dual: Vitthal fills everything on all sides, nothing in creation is without Him, and worship is simply living in that fact rather than in the illusion of separate doership.

GATHA 3914 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, hold shame before the mind

मराठी मूळ

मायारूपें ऐसें मोहिलेंसे जन । भोगिती पतन नामाकर्मे॥1॥
काय याची प्रीती करितां आदर । दुरावितां दूर तें चि भलें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाना छंद अंगीं बैसती विकार । छिळयेले फार तपोनिधि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें सिकवितों तुज । आतां धरी लाज मना पुढें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through the form of illusion, people have been beguiled. They suffer downfall through misuse of the Name.

What good comes of cherishing such illusion? It is better to keep it at a distance. Countless passions and distortions take root in the being, and even great ascetics have been brought low by them.

Says Tuka, this is what I am teaching you now: hold shame before your own mind going forward.

IN PLAIN WORDS

People have been beguiled by the form of illusion. They fall by misusing the Name. What good comes of cherishing this illusion? Better to hold it far away. Many whims and distortions settle into the body, and even great ascetics have been brought low by them. Tuka says: this is what I am teaching you now. From here on, hold shame before your own mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns that Maya does not only deceive the worldly; it can corrupt the very practice of the Name when the Name is used as cover for craving. He names the stakes by pointing to ascetics, people of great discipline, who were still dragged down once passions took root in them, so no one can assume they are safe. His remedy is not external rule but inward shame, the honest sense before your own mind that catches the distortion early. The teaching is directed at self-examination: watch what whims are settling in you before they grow into a fall.

GATHA 3915 Prayers

Prayer, You alone are my life

मराठी मूळ

जेजे कांहीं मज होईल वासना । तेते नारायणा व्हावें तुह्मीं ॥1॥
काय भाव एक निवडूं निराळा । जाणसी तूं कळा अंतरींची ॥ध्रु.॥
तुजविण मज कोण आहे सखा । जें सांगा आणिकां जीवभाव ॥2॥
अवघें पिशुन जालें असे जन । आपपर कोण नाठवे हें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं चि जीवांचें जीवन । माझें समाधान तुझे हातीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever desire arises in me, may You become that very thing, O Narayana. How can I sort out my devotion as something separate? You know the inner workings of my heart.

Who else is my companion besides You? To whom else would I entrust my very life? The whole world has turned hostile. No one remembers what belongs to self and what to another.

Says Tuka, You alone are the life of all lives. My contentment is in Your hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever desire arises in me, may You become that very thing, O Narayana. How can I pick out one devotion as something apart? You know every working of my heart. Who else is my friend but You? To whom else could I tell the truth of my life? The whole world has turned hostile. No one remembers what is one's own and what is another's. Tuka says: You alone are the life of all that lives. My peace is in Your hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays that God will fill not just his worship but his every desire, so that there is no wanting left that points away from God. He says he cannot sort out a special devotion from the rest of himself, because God already knows the whole inner movement of his heart, the pure and the mixed alike. Set against a world he feels has turned faithless and self-serving, God is the one friend he can trust with his very life. The closing claim is total dependence: God is the life within all lives, and Tukaram's own peace is not in his hands but in God's.

GATHA 3916 Prayers

Lament, word-knowledge wrecks the path

मराठी मूळ

कैसी करूं आतां सांग तुझी सेवा । शब्दज्ञानें देवा नाश केला ॥1॥
आतां तुझें वर्म न कळे अनंता । तुज न संगतां बुडूं पाहें ॥ध्रु.॥
संध्या स्नान केली आचाराची नासी । काय तयापासीं ह्मणती एक ॥2॥
बुडविली भक्ति म्हणीते पाषाण । पिंडाचें पाळण स्थापुनियां ॥3॥
न करावी कथा ह्मणती एकादशी। भजनाची नासी मांडियेली ॥4॥
न जावें देउळा ह्मणती देवघरीं । बुडविलें या परी तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How shall I serve You now? Tell me. Word-knowledge has destroyed the true path.

Now Your secret is beyond my grasp, O Ananta. Without Your guidance, I am drowning.

Some have ruined the practice of daily prayers and ablutions. What can be had from them? They have sunk devotion by calling the image a mere stone and establishing the worship of the body alone.

They say do not attend kirtan and do not observe Ekadashi. They have laid waste to all devotional practice.

They say do not go to the temple but worship only at home. Says Tuka, in this way everything has been sunk.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How shall I serve You now? Tell me. Word-knowledge has destroyed the true path. Now Your secret is beyond me, O Ananta; without Your guidance I am sinking. Some have ruined daily prayer and ablution. What is to be had from such people? They drown devotion by calling the sacred image a mere stone, and set up the worship of the body alone. They say, hold no kirtan, keep no Ekadashi, and they lay waste to devotional practice. They say, do not go to the temple, worship only at home. Tuka says: in this way everything has been sunk.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram laments a clever, debunking knowledge that has talked the simple devotional life to pieces. He lists what it dismisses: daily prayer and bathing, the worshipped image treated as just stone, kirtan, the Ekadashi fast, going to the temple. The danger he names is that each dismissal sounds reasonable yet together they drown actual devotion and leave only the worship of the body, the self. Disoriented and feeling himself sinking, he turns back to God and asks to be told plainly how to serve, since the secret of the path is now beyond his own reasoning.

GATHA 3917 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no wish for liberation

मराठी मूळ

नमोनमो तुज माझें हें कारण । काय जालें उणें करितां स्नान ॥1॥
संतांचा मारग चालतों झाडूनि । हो का लाभ हानि कांहींतरि ॥ध्रु.॥
न करिसी तरि हेंचि कोडें मज । भक्ति गोड काज आणीक नाहीं ॥2॥
करीं सेवा कथा नाचेन रंगणीं । प्रेमसुखधणी पुरेल तों ॥3॥
महाद्वारीं सुख वैष्णवांचे मेळीं । वैकुंठ जवळी वसे तेथें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं मुक्तिसवें चाड । हें चि जन्म गोड घेतां मज ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Salutations to You, for this is my cause. What is lost by taking a holy bath? I walk the path cleared by the saints, whatever the gain or loss may be.

If You do not answer, then this itself is my delight: devotion is my only sweet occupation. I will serve, I will attend the sacred stories, and I will dance in the arena of kirtan until the hunger for the bliss of love is satisfied.

At the great gate, joy abounds in the company of Vaishnavas. Vaikuntha dwells right there.

Says Tuka, I have no desire for liberation. This very birth is sweet to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Salutations to You again and again; this is my whole aim. What is lost by taking a holy bath? I walk the path the saints have cleared, whatever the gain or loss. If You do not answer me, even this is my delight: devotion is my one sweet work, and no other. I will serve, I will attend the sacred stories, I will dance in the ground of kirtan until the hunger for the bliss of love is filled. At the great gate, in the company of Vaishnavas, there is joy; Vaikuntha dwells right there. Tuka says: I have no desire for liberation. This very birth is sweet to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that the path of the saints is enough for him whether or not it brings any reward. He goes further: even if God never answers, devotion itself is his delight, so the loving practice is not a means to something else but the thing he wants. He locates heaven in the doing, in kirtan and service and the company of devotees at the temple gate, saying Vaikuntha is already there. The radical close is his refusal of liberation itself; he would rather keep this human birth, because the birth that lets him love and sing God is sweeter to him than release.

GATHA 3918 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow renunciant

मराठी मूळ

होऊनि संन्यासी भगवीं लुगडीं । वासना न सोडी विषयांची ॥1॥
निंदिती कदान्न इच्छती देवान्न । पाहाताती मान आदराचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें दांभिक भजन । तया जनादनन भेटे केवीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having become a renunciant and wearing ochre robes, he still does not abandon the craving for sense pleasures. He condemns plain food but craves for fine dishes.

He watches for marks of honor and attention. Says Tuka, such hypocritical devotion will never lead to a meeting with Janardana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has become a renunciant and wears the ochre robe, yet he has not let go of his craving for the senses. He scorns plain food but longs for fine dishes. He keeps watch for marks of honor and respect. Tuka says: such hypocritical worship; how could it ever bring him to a meeting with Janardana?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the gap between the renunciant's robe and his unchanged appetite. The ochre cloth announces that the man has given up the world, but his craving for fine food and his hunger for honor show he has only relocated his desires, not dropped them. The point is not the robe but the self-display: outward renunciation can become one more way to be admired. He lands it on the cost, that such pretended worship can never reach God, and the reader is left to test whether their own giving-up is real or a costume.

GATHA 3919 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the showy ascetic

मराठी मूळ

लांबवूनि जटा नेसोनि कासोटा । अभिमान मोटा करिताती ॥1॥
सर्वांगा करिती विभूतिलेपन । पाहाती मिष्टान्न भक्षावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांचा नव्हे हा स्वधर्म । न कळतां वर्म मिथ्यावाद ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Growing long matted locks and wrapping themselves in loincloths, they strut about with great pride. They smear ash all over their bodies but look around for fine food to eat.

Says Tuka, this is not their true calling. Not knowing the secret, they live in falsehood.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They let their matted locks grow long and wrap the loincloth tight, and they carry themselves with great pride. They smear ash over their whole body, then look around for fine food to eat. Tuka says: this is not their true calling. Not knowing the secret, they live in falsehood.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the ascetic who has perfected the look of holiness, the long matted hair, the loincloth, the ash on the skin, and made it an occasion for pride. The tell is the wandering eye for good food: the body that performs renunciation still serves its appetite. He says this is not their real path, because they have taken hold of the outward marks while missing the inner secret that alone makes them true. Read inward, the warning is that an identity built on looking spiritual, with pride underneath, is simply a lived falsehood.

GATHA 3920 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the begging Naths

मराठी मूळ

कान फाडूनियां मुद्रा तें घालिती । नाथ म्हणविती जगामाजी ॥1॥
घालोनियां फेरा मागती द्रव्यासी । परि शंकरासी नोळखती ॥2॥
पोट भरावया शिकती उपाय । तुका ह्मणे जाय नर्क लोका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They split their ears and wear earrings, calling themselves Naths before the world. Going around on begging rounds, they ask for money, yet they do not truly know Shankara.

They learn tricks only to fill their bellies. Says Tuka, such ones go to hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They split their ears and put in the earrings, and call themselves Naths before the world. They go on their rounds and beg for money, yet they do not truly know Shankara. They learn these tricks only to fill their bellies. Tuka says: such ones go to the world of hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns to the Nath ascetics, marked by the split ears and the ring, who carry the name of a great tradition. His charge is that the name and the rite have become a livelihood: they go round begging coins while the God the order is built on, Shankara, remains unknown to them. The point is that the discipline has emptied into technique, learned only to feed the belly. He lands the cost bluntly, and the question for the reader is whether one's own practice has quietly become a means of getting rather than a real seeking of God.

GATHA 3921 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false ascetic

मराठी मूळ

कौडीकौडीसाटीं फोडिताती शिर । काढूनि रुधिर मलंग ते ॥1॥
पांघरती चर्म लोहाची सांकळी । मारिती आरोळी धैर्यबळें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांचा नव्हे चि स्वधर्म । न कळे चि वर्म गोविंदाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For a single coin they crack their skulls open, drawing blood. These fakirs wrap themselves in skins and iron chains and cry out with feigned courage.

Says Tuka, this is not their true calling. They have not grasped the secret of Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For a single coin they split their own heads open and draw their own blood. These malangs wrap themselves in animal skins and iron chains. They cry out loud, showing off their courage. Tuka says: this is not their true calling. They have not understood the secret of Govinda.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is looking at wandering ascetics who turn pain into a street act. They gash their heads and drape themselves in skins and chains, then roar to impress a crowd, all for a coin tossed their way. He names the gap: this self-wounding spectacle is not the path it pretends to be, and it has nothing to do with the inner secret of Govinda. The warning points at the pattern in all of us, the urge to perform hardship for an audience instead of seeking God.

GATHA 3922 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the predatory teacher

मराठी मूळ

दाढी डोई मुंडी मुंडुनियां सर्व । पांघुरति बरवें वस्त्र काळें ॥1॥
उफराटी काठी घेऊनियां हातीं । उपदेश देती सर्वत्रासी॥2॥
चाळवुनी रांडा देउनियां भेष । तुका ह्मणे त्यास यम दंडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They shave their beards, heads, and all, and drape themselves in fine black cloth. Carrying an inverted staff in hand, they go about giving instruction to all.

They lure women by giving them a religious garb. Says Tuka, Yama will punish them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They shave their beards, their heads, all of it, and drape themselves in fine black cloth. They carry an inverted staff in their hand. They go about giving instruction to everyone. They lure women by handing them a religious garb. Tuka says: Yama will punish them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes men who put on the full costume of a holy teacher, the shaved head, the dark robe, the staff held the wrong way, and dispense guidance to all who pass. Behind the dress is appetite, not teaching: they use the garb to draw women toward themselves. He lets the claim land hard, saying the lord of death will hold them to account. The point is the abuse of sacred trust; the costume of authority is exactly what makes the predation possible.

GATHA 3923 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion as trade

मराठी मूळ

होउनी जंगम विभूती लाविती । शंख वाजविती घरोघरीं ॥1॥
शिवाचें निर्माल्य तीर्था न सेविती । घंटा वाजविती पोटासाठीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यासी नाहीं शिवभक्ति । व्यापार करिती संसाराचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Becoming wandering mendicants, they smear ash and blow conches from house to house. They do not partake of Shiva's sacred offerings or holy water.

They ring their bells only for the sake of their stomachs. Says Tuka, they have no true devotion to Shiva. They are merely carrying on the trade of worldly life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They turn themselves into wandering mendicants and smear ash on their bodies. They blow their conches from house to house. They do not partake of Shiva's offerings or his holy water. They ring their bells only to fill their stomachs. Tuka says: they have no real devotion to Shiva. They are only carrying on the trade of worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram watches mendicants who carry every sign of Shaiva worship, the ash, the conch, the bell, door to door, yet skip the one thing the signs are for: receiving Shiva's offerings and sacred water. The bells ring for bread, not for God. He names the stakes plainly, that there is no real devotion here, only a livelihood dressed as worship. The probe is for anyone who keeps the outward forms of religion running while the heart of it has quietly become a business.

GATHA 3924 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the begging pilgrim

मराठी मूळ

लावूनियां मुद्रा बांधोनियां कंठीं । हिंडे पोटासाटीं देशोदेशीं ॥1॥
नेसोनि कोपीन शुभ्रवर्ण जाण । पहाती पक्वान्न क्षेत्रींचें तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे मावेचे मइंद । त्यापाशीं गोविंद नाहीं नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wearing religious stamps and tying sacred beads around the neck, they wander from land to land to fill their bellies. Donning a white loincloth, they look around for fine food at the holy places.

Says Tuka, such ones are frauds in disguise. Govinda is nowhere near them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They stamp themselves with religious marks and tie sacred beads around the neck. They roam from land to land to fill their bellies. They wear a clean white loincloth. At the holy places they look around for fine food. Tuka says: such people are frauds in disguise. Govinda is not near them, not at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tracks pilgrims who carry every credential, branded marks, beads, a spotless loincloth, but travel from shrine to shrine chasing good meals rather than God. The holy place becomes a free kitchen they survey for the best dish. He calls them what they are, frauds in disguise, and lands the verdict twice over: Govinda is nowhere near them. The examination is of using sacred travel and dress to feed the body while the soul goes hungry by choice.

GATHA 3925 Social Criticism

Social criticism, true renunciation named

मराठी मूळ

ऐसे नाना भेष घेऊनी हिंडती । पोटासाटीं घेती प्रतिग्रह ॥1॥
परमार्थासी कोण त्यजी संवसार । सांगापां साचार नांव त्याचें ॥2॥
जन्मतां संसार त्यजियेला शुकें । तोचि निष्कळंक तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In various disguises they roam about, accepting gifts for the sake of their bellies. Who truly renounces the world for the sake of the highest good? Tell me the name of such a one in truth.

Says Tuka, only Shuka, who renounced the world at the moment of his birth, is truly spotless.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In all sorts of disguises they roam about. They accept gifts only to fill their bellies. Who truly gives up the world for the sake of the highest good? Tell me, in truth, the name of even one such person. Tuka says: only Shuka, who renounced the world the moment he was born, is truly spotless.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram surveys the whole crowd of costumed beggars and asks a sharp question: name one who has actually renounced the world for God rather than for alms. The disguises change, but the motive stays the same, food. He answers his own challenge with a single example, Shuka, who turned from the world at the instant of birth, and calls him the one who is truly spotless. The contrast forces self-examination: real renunciation is inward and rare, not the outfit that begs.

GATHA 3926 Renunciation

Renunciation, family as fleeting

मराठी मूळ

िस्त्रया पुत्र कळत्र हें तंव मायावंत । शेवटींचा अंत नाहीं कोणी ॥1॥
यमाचिये हातीं बांधोनियां देती । भूषणें ही घेती काढूनियां ॥2॥
ऐसिया चोरांचा कैसा हा विश्वास । धरिली तुझी कास तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wife, sons, and family are all creatures of illusion. At the very end, none stands by you.

They bind you and hand you over to Yama, stripping away even your ornaments. Says Tuka, how can you trust such thieves? I have taken hold of Your shelter instead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wife, sons, family: all of this belongs to illusion. At the very end, none of them stays by you. They bind you and hand you over to Yama. They even strip the ornaments off your body. Tuka says: how can I trust such thieves? I have taken hold of Your shelter instead.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the comfort out of family life by naming its limit: those nearest to you belong to Maya and will not be there at the final hour. He pushes harder still, picturing them handing you over to death and taking back even the jewels off your body. He calls them thieves, not out of contempt for persons but to expose how completely they fail as a refuge. The conclusion is the move itself: he lets go of that false security and grips God's shelter instead.

GATHA 3927 Longing and Separation

Longing, vision over learning

मराठी मूळ

न लगती मज शब्दब्रह्मज्ञान । तुझिया दर्शनावांचूनियां॥1॥
ह्मणऊनि तुझें करितों चिंतन । नावडे वचन आणिकांचें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय ते महत्वी करावी मान्यता । तुज न देखतां पांडुरंगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज दिधल्यावांचूनि । न राहे त्याहूनि होइन वेडा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no use for the knowledge gained through mere words alone, without the vision of You. That is why I contemplate You ceaselessly.

The words of others hold no appeal for me. What greatness should I honor when I cannot see You, O Panduranga? Says Tuka, until I have given myself to You, I will not rest. Beyond that, I shall go mad.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no use for knowledge that is only words, not without the sight of You. That is why I keep thinking of You without stopping. The words of others do not appeal to me. What greatness should I honor when I cannot see You, O Panduranga? Tuka says: until I have given myself to You, I will not rest. Beyond that, I will go mad.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the prize that scripture-learning offers, the word-knowledge of Brahman, because without the direct sight of God it is hollow to him. He sets the stakes between two things only: erudition he can recite, or the face of Panduranga he longs to see, and he wants only the second. Every other voice and every honored greatness mean nothing while God stays hidden. He ends by binding himself to a single outcome, that he will not rest until he is wholly given over, and short of that he will lose his mind with longing.

GATHA 3928 Prayers

Prayer, the child's claim on the mother

मराठी मूळ

तुझा ह्मणोनियां दिसतों गा दीन । हा चि अभिमान सरे तुझा ॥1॥
अज्ञान बाळका कोपली जननी । तयासी निर्वाणीं कोण पावे ॥ध्रु.॥
तैसा विठो तुजविण परदेशी । नको या दुःखासीं गोऊं मज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज सर्व तुझी आशा । अगा जगदीशा पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Because I call myself Yours, I appear lowly, O God. This itself upholds Your honor.

When a mother is angry with her ignorant child, who comes to its rescue in the end? Says Tuka, O Vitthal, without You I am an exile. Do not consign me to this sorrow.

All my hope rests in You alone, O Jagadisha, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because I call myself Yours, I look lowly, O God. And this very thing keeps Your honor. When a mother grows angry with her foolish little child, who else comes to its rescue in the end? In the same way, Vithoba, without You I am an exile. Do not leave me to this sorrow. Tuka says: all my hope rests in You alone, O Jagadisha, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his own lowliness into a claim on God. If he looks wretched, it is because he belongs to God, so his condition is now God's reputation to defend. He reaches for the homeliest proof: even when a mother is furious at her child, no one but she will finally take it back, so God cannot finally abandon what is His. Naming himself an exile without Vitthal, he asks not to be left in sorrow and rests his whole hope on Panduranga, who has no other rescuer to defer to.

GATHA 3929 Longing and Separation

Longing, weary of rebirth

मराठी मूळ

जन्म मृत्यू फार जाले माझ्या जीवा । ऐक माझा धांवा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
सिणलों बहुत करितां येरझारा । रखुमाईच्या वरा पावें वेगीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं गा पतितपावन । घेई माझा सीण जन्मांतर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My jiva has endured countless births and deaths. Hear my cry, O Panduranga.

I am exhausted from making so many rounds. Come quickly, O husband of Rukmini.

Says Tuka, You are the Purifier of the Fallen. Take away my weariness of lifetimes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My jiva has gone through countless births and deaths. Hear my cry, O Panduranga. I am worn out from making so many rounds. Come quickly, O husband of Rukmini. Tuka says: You are the one who saves the fallen. Take away my weariness of many lifetimes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from inside the long machinery of birth and death, exhausted by circling through life after life. The plea is urgent and personal: hear me, come fast. He calls God by the title that obliges Him, patitapavana, the purifier of the fallen, because if that name is true then a fallen, tired soul is exactly His work. The asking is not for one rescue but for the end of the whole tiring round across lifetimes.

GATHA 3930 Longing and Separation

Longing, the silence of God

मराठी मूळ

आतां माझ्या दुःखा कोण हो सांगाती । रखुमाईचा पति पावे चि ना ॥1॥
कायविधा त्यानें घातलीसे रेखा । सुटका या दुःखा न होय चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी विसरूं नको चिंता । अगा पंढरिनाथा पाव वेगी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, who will share in my sorrow? The husband of Rukmini does not come. What line of fate has He drawn? There seems no escape from this misery.

Says Tuka, do not forget my plight. O Lord of Pandhari, come quickly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now who will share in my sorrow? The husband of Rukmini does not come. What line of fate has He drawn for me? There seems to be no escape from this misery. Tuka says: do not forget my trouble. O Lord of Pandhari, come quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the cry from the gap, when God has not yet answered. Tukaram has no one else to carry his grief and the one he waits for, Rukmini's husband, simply does not come. He wonders what fate has been written against him, since there seems no way out of the pain. Yet even the complaint stays addressed to God: do not forget me, Lord of Pandhari, come quickly. The verse holds longing and trust together, refusing to turn the silence into despair.

GATHA 3931 Longing and Separation

Longing, the pull to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीसी जावें ऐसें माझें मनीं । विठाई जननी भेटे केव्हां ॥1॥
न लगे त्याविण सुखाचा सोहळा । लागे मज ज्वाळा अग्नचिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचे पाहिलिया पाय । मग दुःख जाय सर्व माझें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind longs to go to Pandhari. When will I meet Vithabai, my mother? Without Him, no celebration brings happiness.

The flames of fire scorch me. Says Tuka, once I have seen His feet, all my sorrow will vanish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind longs to go to Pandhari. When will I meet Vithabai, my mother? Without Him no celebration brings me any joy. The flames of fire scorch me. Tuka says: once I have seen His feet, all my sorrow will go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram's whole mind is leaning toward Pandhari, aching for the moment he meets Vithoba, whom he addresses tenderly as mother. Apart from that, no festival or pleasure touches him; he says he burns as if in fire. He names exactly what would end it: the sight of those feet. The poem makes the cure single and concrete, not relief or distraction but the darshan of God, after which the sorrow simply leaves.

GATHA 3932 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, nothing left to give

मराठी मूळ

तन मन धन दिलें पंढरिराया । आतां सांगावया उरलें नाहीं ॥1॥
अर्थचाड चिंता नाहीं मनीं आशा । तोडियेला फांसा उपाधीचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक विठोबाचें नाम । आहे जवळी दाम नाहीं रुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have given my body, mind, and wealth to the Lord of Pandhari. There is nothing more left to offer.

There is no desire, no worry, no longing in my mind. The noose of worldly attachment has been cut.

Says Tuka, I have only the name of Vithoba with me. That name is near, though I have not a coin to my name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have given my body, my mind, and my wealth to the Lord of Pandhari. Now nothing is left to offer. There is no greed, no worry, no longing in my mind. The noose of worldly entanglement has been cut. Tuka says: I have only the one name of Vithoba with me. That name is close to me, though I do not have a single coin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes surrender as already complete: body, mind, and wealth have all gone to the Lord of Pandhari, so there is nothing further to hand over. With the giving done, the inner noises stop too, no craving for gain, no anxiety, no want, and the rope of worldly attachment falls away cut. What remains is one possession that outweighs all he gave up, the name of Vithoba kept near. He states the trade flatly: penniless of coin, yet rich in the Name.

GATHA 3933 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the body is on loan

मराठी मूळ

आलिया संसारा उठा वेग करा । शरण जा उदारा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
देह हें देवाचें धन कुबेराचें । तेथें मनुष्याचें काय आहे ॥ध्रु.॥
देता देविता नेता नेविता । येथ याची सत्ता काय आहे ॥2॥
निमित्याचा धनी केला असे झणी । माझेंमाझें ह्मणोनि व्यर्थ गेला ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कां रे नाशवंतासाटीं । देवासवें आटी पाडितोसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having come into this world, rise and make haste. Surrender to the generous Panduranga.

The body belongs to God, and wealth belongs to Kubera. What does the individual truly own here? The one who gives and makes others give, who takes and makes others take, it is He who holds all authority here.

One has been made a steward only for a time. Calling it mine, mine, one departs in vain.

Says Tuka, why do you quarrel with God for the sake of what is perishable?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have come into this world. Get up, make haste. Go and take refuge in the generous Panduranga. This body belongs to God. Wealth belongs to Kubera. What does a person here truly own? It is God who gives, and who makes others give; who takes, and who makes others take. What power belongs to you here? You have been made a steward, and only for a little while. Saying mine, mine, you go from here in vain. Tuka says: why, for the sake of what perishes, do you wear yourself out quarreling with God?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is rousing a person who clings to what was never theirs. He strips ownership down to nothing: the body is God's, wealth is Kubera's, and even the acts of giving and taking are God's doing, not ours. A human being is only a caretaker, holding it all for a short time, so the cry of mine, mine, is wasted breath. The stakes he names are urgent, rise now, make haste, take refuge, because the time is short. His closing question turns the knife on the listener's own struggle: why exhaust yourself fighting God over things that decay, when surrender to the generous Panduranga is what is offered.

GATHA 3934 The Nature of God

Nature of God, served through His own

मराठी मूळ

माय वनीं धाल्या धाये । गर्भ आंवतणें न पाहें॥1॥
तैसें पूजितां वैष्णव । सुखें संतोषतो देव ॥ध्रु.॥
पुत्राच्या विजयें । पिता सुखातें जाये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अमृतसिद्ध । हरे क्षुधा आणि व्याधि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a mother sees her child well-fed, she is content and does not look for an invitation to the feast. In the same way, when a Vaishnava is honored, God Himself is silently pleased.

A father shares in the joy of his son's victory. Says Tuka, this is the nectar of attainment. It quenches both hunger and disease.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When a mother sees her child has eaten and is full, she herself is satisfied. She does not look for a feast of her own. In the same way, when a Vaishnava is honored, God is gladly pleased. A father takes joy in his son's victory. Tuka says: this is the nectar that is won. It takes away hunger, and it takes away disease.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says how God receives worship: not directly, but through the joy of His devotees. He uses the homeliest images, a mother filled by watching her child eat, a father glad in his son's win, to show that God's contentment is bound up with the wellbeing of the Vaishnavas. So to honor God's people is to please God Himself. He calls this the nectar of attainment, and claims it heals both hunger and sickness, naming a fruit that is bodily as well as spiritual. The teaching lands as a redirection: serve the holy ones, and the service reaches God.

GATHA 3935 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the lover knows the thief

मराठी मूळ

तुझें अंगभूत । आह्मी जाणतों समस्त ॥1॥
येरा वाटतसे जना । गुढारसें नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
ठावा थारा मारा । परचिया संव चोरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भेदा । करुनि करितों संवादा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We know all that belongs to Your very nature, O Narayana. To others it appears mysterious and secret.

We know the thief's haunt, his hideout, and his ways. Says Tuka, though I create distinctions, it is only to carry on this conversation with You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We know all that belongs to Your very nature, Narayana. To other people You seem hidden and full of riddles. We know the thief's haunt, his hiding place, his ways. Tuka says: I make distinctions only so that I can keep up this conversation with You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from the intimacy of one who has come close to God. To the crowd, Narayana is a mystery, a tangle of riddles; to the devotee He is as known as a familiar thief whose hideout and habits are no secret. The playful image confesses how God steals into the heart and is caught by the one who loves Him. In the last line Tuka admits that the very talk of You and me, the keeping of distinctions, is something he sets up on purpose, only so the conversation can go on; he knows the separation is not finally real. The mood is teasing closeness, not doctrine.

GATHA 3936 Confession and Sin

Confession, the fear that betrays surrender

मराठी मूळ

तुज दिला देह । आजूनि वागवितों भय ॥1॥
ऐसा विश्वासघातकी । घडली कळतां हे चुकी ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलतों जें तोंडें । नाहीं अनुभविलें लंडें ॥2॥
दंड लाहें केला । तुका ह्मणे जी विठ्ठला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I surrendered this body to You, yet I still carry fear within. When I see the extent of this betrayal of trust, I recognize my error.

What I speak with my mouth, I have not truly experienced or embodied. Says Tuka, I have earned this punishment rightly, O Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I gave this body to You. Even now I go on carrying fear inside me. I am such a betrayer of trust. When I see it clearly, I know it is my own fault. What I speak with my mouth, I, a worthless one, have not truly lived. Tuka says: I have rightly earned this punishment, O Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches himself in a contradiction and names it honestly. He has handed his whole body over to God, yet fear still lives in him, and he sees that this fear is itself a breach of the surrender he made. He calls it betrayal of trust, and he refuses to spare himself: the holy words his mouth speaks he has not actually lived. There is no plea for mercy here, only the bare admission that whatever punishment comes, he has earned it. The poem turns the listener back toward self-examination: surrender that still clutches its fear has not yet become real.

GATHA 3937 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no real distance from the Mother

मराठी मूळ

माते लेकरांत भिन्न । नाहीं उत्तरांचा सीन ॥1॥
धाडींधाडीं वो भातुकें । रंजविल्याचें कौतुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
करुनि नवल । याचे बोलिलों ते बोल ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माते । पांडुरंगे कृपावंते॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Between a mother and her children there is no real separation. The words exchanged are never truly harsh.

Send gifts and tokens again and again, for the delight of pleasing the child is the true joy. I spoke those words only to create wonder.

Says Tuka, O mother Panduranga, O compassionate one, so it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Between a mother and her children there is no real separation. The words that pass between them are never truly harsh. Send the little gifts again and again; the delight is in pleasing the child. I spoke those words only to make a small wonder of it. Tuka says: so it is, O mother Panduranga, compassionate one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram softens any harshness in his own earlier complaints by appealing to the bond of mother and child. Between them there is no real distance, and even sharp words carry no real sting, because the love underneath cannot be broken. He pictures God as a mother who keeps sending small gifts and tokens, delighting simply in pleasing the child. Then he confesses that his own pointed words to God were said only to stir a little wonder and play, not in earnest grievance. He closes by naming Panduranga as the compassionate mother, settling the whole exchange back into tenderness.

GATHA 3938 The Power of the Name

The Name, asking nothing but the Name

मराठी मूळ

जरि न भरे पोट । तरि सेवूं दरकूट ॥1॥
परि न घलूं तुज भार । हा चि आमुचा निर्धार ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझें नाम अमोलिक। नेणती हे ब्रह्मादिक ॥2॥
ऐसें नाम तुझें खरें । तुका ह्मणे भासे पुरें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If my stomach is not filled, I will eat dry crusts. But I will not place any burden upon You.

This is my firm resolve. Your name is priceless; even Brahma and the gods cannot know its full worth.

Says Tuka, Your name is genuinely real. It feels sufficient and complete.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If my stomach is not filled, then I will eat dry crusts. But I will not lay any burden on You. This is my firm resolve. Your name is beyond price. Even Brahma and the gods do not know its full worth. Such is Your name, truly real. Tuka says: it feels enough; it feels complete.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a vow about what he will and will not ask of God. He will accept hunger and dry crusts rather than press God for his bodily needs, because he refuses to lay any burden on the one he loves. What he wants instead is the Name, which he calls priceless, a worth that even Brahma and the gods cannot fully measure. The point is a reordering of need: the Name alone is real and sufficient, so the cravings of the stomach can be left to fend for themselves. He ends in quiet contentment, the Name feels enough, it feels complete.

GATHA 3939 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, stake everything or stay bound

मराठी मूळ

सर्वस्वाची साटी । तरि च देवासवें गांठी ॥1॥
नाहीं तरी जया तैसा । भोग भोगवील इच्छा ॥ध्रु.॥
द्यावें तें चिं घ्यावें । ह्मणउनि घ्यावें जीवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे उरी । मागें उगवितां बरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Only by staking everything does one forge a bond with God. Otherwise, one's desires will lead one through whatever experiences they dictate.

What must be given must be given. That is why it must be offered with the whole life.

Says Tuka, it is better to settle the account and leave nothing behind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Only by staking everything do you forge a bond with God. If you do not, then your own desires will drag you through whatever they please. What must be given must be given; so give it with your whole life. Tuka says: it is better to settle the old account and leave nothing behind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets out the cost of true union with God and refuses to lower it. There is no partial bond: either you stake your whole self, or your unsurrendered desires keep dragging you through their cravings. The middle line presses the demand, what has to be given must be given, so hold nothing back and offer your very life. The closing image is of clearing a debt: settle the old account fully, leave no remainder of self behind. The poem treats half-surrender as no surrender at all, and names the total gift as the only way out of being ruled by desire.

GATHA 3940 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, nature cannot be dressed up

मराठी मूळ

गाढव शृंगारिलें कोडें । कांहीं केल्या नव्हे घोडें॥1॥
त्याचें भुंकणें न राहे । स्वभावासी करील काये ॥ध्रु.॥
श्वान शिबिके बैसविलें । भुंकतां न राहे उगलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्वभावकर्म । कांहीं केल्या न सुटे धर्म ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You may adorn a donkey however you wish, but it will never become a horse. Its braying will not cease.

What can be done about its nature? You may seat a dog in a palanquin, but it will not stop barking. Says Tuka, the actions born of one's innate nature cannot be shed by any means.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You can deck a donkey out with ornaments, but for all your doing it does not become a horse. Its braying will not stop. What can you do with its nature? You can seat a dog in a palanquin, but it will not stop barking and sit still. Tuka says: the deeds that come from one's own inborn nature cannot be shed by any means.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses blunt animal images to say that inner nature is not changed by outward show. A donkey loaded with finery is still a donkey and brays on; a dog placed in a palanquin still barks. The decoration is the false fix, the position or appearance that hides nothing of what a creature actually is. He generalizes the point: the conduct that springs from a person's deep-seated nature cannot simply be put off like clothing. The poem points at the pattern of pretending change while staying the same, and quietly asks the listener whether real transformation, not ornament, is what they are after.

GATHA 3941 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow teacher

मराठी मूळ

सेंकीं हें ना तेंसें जालें । बोलणें तितुकें वांयां गेलें॥1॥
स्वयें आपण चि रिता । रडे पुढिलांच्या हिता ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखसागरीं नेघे वस्ती । अंगीं ज्ञानपणाची मस्ती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गाढव लेखा । जेथें भेटेल तेथें ठोका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Neither this nor that has been accomplished. All the talk has gone to waste.

He himself is empty within, yet he weeps for the welfare of others. He will not dwell in the ocean of bliss, for he is drunk on the pride of his own supposed knowledge.

Says Tuka, count such a one as a donkey, and strike him wherever you find him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Neither this nor that has come of it; all his talk has gone to waste. He himself is empty inside, yet he weeps over the good of other people. He will not make his home in the ocean of bliss, because he is drunk on the pride of his own learning. Tuka says: reckon such a one a donkey, and wherever you meet him, give him a knock.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram goes after the empty man who instructs others while having nothing within. All his words come to nothing because they spring from no inner attainment, yet he poses as one weeping for everyone else's welfare. The reason he stays dry is named plainly: pride in his own supposed knowledge keeps him from ever entering the ocean of bliss. The closing line is deliberately rough, count him a donkey and knock him wherever you find him, but the target is the pattern of hollow, self-intoxicated teaching, not a person to be despised. It is a warning to examine whether one's own learning has become a barrier rather than a door.

GATHA 3942 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, why the wicked hate counsel

मराठी मूळ

आवडे सकळां मिष्टान्न । रोग्या विषा त्यासमान॥1॥
दर्पण नावडे तया एका । ठाव नाहीं ज्याच्या नाका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तैशा खळा । उपदेशाचा कांटाळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Everyone loves fine food, but to a sick person it is the same as poison. The mirror is hated only by the one whose nose is missing.

Says Tuka, in the same way, the wicked despise spiritual instruction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Everyone loves sweet, fine food, but to a sick person it is the same as poison. Only one man hates the mirror: the one who has no nose. Tuka says: in just this way, the wicked cannot stand spiritual instruction.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains why good counsel meets such hatred in some people, and the fault is in the receiver, not the counsel. Rich food is loved by all, yet to the sick it acts like poison; the only one who hates a mirror is the man whose face it would expose. By these images he shows that wholesome things are rejected by those whose own condition cannot bear them. So when the wicked recoil from spiritual instruction, it is because the teaching, like the mirror, shows them what they would rather not see. The poem turns the listener toward self-examination: aversion to good counsel may be a symptom of one's own disorder.

GATHA 3943 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the slanderer of saints

मराठी मूळ

अखंड संत निंदी । ऐसी दुर्जनाची बुिद्ध ॥1॥
काय ह्मणावें तयासी । तो केवळ पापरासि ॥ध्रु.॥
जो स्मरे रामराम । तयासी ह्मणावें रिकामें ॥2॥
जो तीर्थव्रत करी । तयासी ह्मणावें भिकारी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे विंच्वाची नांगी । तैसा दुर्जन सर्वांगीं॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wicked one ceaselessly slanders the saints. Such is the nature of the malicious.

What can one say to him? He is nothing but a heap of sin. He calls the one who chants Rama's name idle and useless.

He calls the one who goes on pilgrimage a beggar. Says Tuka, the sting of a scorpion is in its tail, but the wicked one is venomous in every limb.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He never stops slandering the saints; such is the mind of the malicious man. What can you say to him? He is nothing but a heap of sin. The one who remembers Rama, Rama, he calls idle and useless. The one who keeps pilgrimage and vow, he calls a beggar. Tuka says: the scorpion's sting is in its tail, but the wicked one is venomous in every limb.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the man whose settled habit is to slander the holy and mock devotion. Such a person inverts every good: the one who chants Rama's name he dismisses as idle, the one who keeps pilgrimage and vow he scorns as a beggar. Tukaram does not argue with him, judging him a heap of sin, beyond reasoning. The final image is exact and damning: a scorpion carries its venom only in its tail, but this man's malice runs through his whole being, leaving no harmless part. The poem warns the listener about the pattern of habitual contempt for goodness, which poisons a person through and through.

GATHA 3944 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the festival of love

मराठी मूळ

या रे नाचों अवघेजण । भावें प्रेमें परिपूर्ण ॥1॥
गाऊं पंढरीचा राणा । क्षेम देऊनिं संतजना ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख साधु सुखासाटीं । नाम हरिनाम बोभाटीं ॥2॥
प्रेमासाटीं तो उदार । देतां नाहीं सानाथोर ॥3॥
पापें पळालीं बापुडीं । काळ झाला देशधडी॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य काळ । आजि प्रेमाचा सुकाळ ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, let us all dance together, full of love and devotion. Let us sing of the King of Pandhari, greeting the saintly ones with joy.

For the sake of the happiness of the holy ones, let the name of Hari resound everywhere. He is generous with love, giving without distinction of high or low.

Sins have fled like refugees, and death itself has been banished. Says Tuka, blessed is this time. Today there is an abundance of love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, all of you, let us dance, full to the brim with love and devotion. Let us sing of the King of Pandhari, and embrace the saintly ones in joy. For the joy of the holy ones, let the name of Hari, Hari, be shouted everywhere. He is generous with love; He gives it without dividing high from low. The poor sins have run away; death itself has been driven from the land. Tuka says: blessed is this hour. Today there is a flood of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram bursts into a communal song of joy and calls everyone into the dance. The worship here is shared and bodily: dancing, singing of the King of Pandhari, embracing the saints, shouting the name of Hari aloud. He stresses that God's love is poured out generously and without rank, given alike to high and low. In the overflow of that love the enemies flee, sins run off like frightened refugees and death itself is banished from the land. The poem names the present moment as blessed, a rare hour when love is not scarce but flooding, and the whole tone is one of grateful, contagious celebration.

GATHA 3945 Prayers

Surrender, awaiting the Lord's word

मराठी मूळ

उपजलों मनीं । हे तों स्वामीची करणी ॥1॥
होइल प्रसादाचें दान । तरि हें कवुतक पाहेन ॥ध्रु.॥
येइल अभय जरि । तरि हे आज्ञा वंदिन शिरीं ॥2॥
भक्तिप्रयोजना । प्रयोजावें बंदिजना॥3॥
यश स्वामिचिये शिरीं । दास्य करावें किंकरीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आळीकरा । त्यासी योजावें उत्तरा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This desire arose in my mind; it is the Lord's doing. If the gift of His grace is granted, then I shall watch this wonder unfold.

If the assurance of fearlessness comes, I shall bow and receive that command upon my head. Let devotion be employed for the sake of the devoted.

Let the glory rest upon the master's head, and let the servant carry out the service. Says Tuka, the one who makes a plea should be met with a fitting answer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This longing rose up in my mind; it is the Lord's own doing. If the gift of His grace is given, then I will watch this wonder. If His fearlessness comes to me, I will bow and take His command upon my head. Let devotion be put to use for the sake of the devoted. Let the glory rest on the master's head, and let the servant do the service. Tuka says: the one who makes a plea should be met with a fitting answer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begins by refusing to take credit for his own desire: the very wish for God arose in him because God put it there. So he waits, watching, ready to act only on the Lord's signal. If grace and the gift of fearlessness come, he will obey at once and carry out the work as a servant, but he insists the credit belong to the master, not to him. The closing line is a quiet demand made in the language of fairness: a soul that pleads sincerely deserves an answer.

GATHA 3946 Faith and Trust

Faith, holding the feet though struck

मराठी मूळ

माझें मन पाहे कसून । परि चित्त न ढळे तुजपासून॥1॥
कापुनि देइन शिर । पाहा कृपण कीं उदार ॥ध्रु.॥
मजवरि घालीं घण । परि मी न सोडीं चरण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंतीं । तुजवांचूनि नाहीं गति ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Test my mind and see. My chitta will not waver from You.

I will cut off my head and offer it. See then whether I am miserly or generous.

Strike me with Your hammer, but I will not release Your feet. Says Tuka, in the end, there is no salvation without You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Test my mind and see. My chitta will not waver from You. I will cut off my head and offer it. See then whether I am miserly or generous. Strike me with Your hammer, but I will not let go of Your feet. Tuka says: in the end, there is no path for me but You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws his whole self open to inspection, daring God to test whether his devotion will hold. He answers the test in advance: he would cut off his own head and offer it, proof that he gives without holding back. Even under the hammer, even in pain, his grip on God's feet will not loosen. The last line names why there is no other refuge: at the end of everything, only God is the way through.

GATHA 3947 The Power of the Name

The Name, fearless in kirtan

मराठी मूळ

भूमीवरि कोण ऐसा । गांजूं शके हरिच्या दासा॥1॥
सुखें नाचा हो कीर्त्तनीं । जयजयकारें गर्जा वाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
काळा सुटे पळ । जाती दुरितें सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं । सांगूं मानाची हे निति ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who on this earth can trouble the servant of Hari? Dance joyfully in kirtan and let your voices roar with victory. Death itself takes flight, and all sins are scattered.

Says Tuka, I speak from the chitta: this is the true teaching of honor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who on this earth can trouble the servant of Hari? Dance with joy in the kirtan; let your voices roar with the cry of victory. Death itself runs away. All sins are scattered. Tuka says: from my chitta I tell you the true rule of honor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares the servant of Hari untouchable: no power on earth can harm one who belongs to God. The proof is in the singing itself. When devotees dance and shout the victory cry in kirtan, death takes flight and the whole weight of sin scatters. He offers this not as boast but as instruction spoken from the heart: real honor and safety lie in taking refuge in the Name, not in worldly standing.

GATHA 3948 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fallen Brahmin

मराठी मूळ

जातीचा ब्राह्मण । न करितां संध्यास्नान ॥1॥
सांडुनियां शिाळग्राम । नित्य वेश्येचा समागम ॥2॥
नेघे संतांचें जो तीर्थ । अखंड वेश्येचा जो आर्थ ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे पापी । पाहूं नका पुनरपि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A Brahmin by birth who does not perform his daily prayers and ablutions, who abandons the sacred Shaligrama stone and constantly frequents the courtesan, who will not take the sacred water of the saints but forever pursues the company of the faithless. Says Tuka, do not look upon such wrongdoers ever again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A Brahmin by birth who does not do his daily prayers and bathing, who throws aside the Shaligrama stone and keeps the constant company of the courtesan, who will not take the saints' holy water but forever chases the company of the faithless. Tuka says: such wrongdoers, do not look upon them again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures a man not by the rank he was born into but by what he actually does. He draws a sharp portrait of one who carries the name Brahmin yet drops every sacred duty, casts away worship of God, and binds himself instead to whatever degrades him. The point is not contempt for one person but a warning about a way of living: a holy name means nothing where holy practice has been abandoned. He counsels keeping such an example out of sight, lest its pull catch us too.

GATHA 3949 Autobiography

Defiance, done with pleasing people

मराठी मूळ

जालों जीवासी उदार । त्यासी काय भीडभार ॥1॥
करीन आडक्या घोंगडें । उभें बाजारीं उघडें ॥ध्रु.॥
जोंजों धरिली भीड । तोंतों बहु केली चीड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मूळ । तुझें उच्चारीन कुळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become generous with my very life. What care I for courtesy? I shall lay it all bare in the open marketplace for everyone to see.

The more I showed restraint, the more they caused me grief. Says Tuka, I shall proclaim your lineage from the root.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become generous with my very life. What do I care now for politeness? I will spread it all open in the marketplace for everyone to see. The more I held back out of deference, the more they vexed me. Tuka says: I will proclaim Your lineage from the root.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has stopped guarding his words to spare anyone's feelings; having staked his own life, he has nothing left to protect. He will say everything plainly, out in the open square, hiding nothing. He learned this the hard way: every time he showed deference, people only troubled him more. So he turns fully to God, vowing to declare the whole truth of God's glory openly, from its very source.

GATHA 3950 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one task of a life

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां हें चि काम । वाचे गाऊं तुझें नाम ॥1॥
आयुष्य मोलाची हे घडी । धरूं पायांची आवडी ॥ध्रु.॥
अमृताची खाणी । याचे ठायीं वेचूं वाणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । माझ्या जिवाच्या जिवलगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our only task is to sing Your name. Each moment of life is precious.

Let us hold fast to the love of Your feet. Your name is a mine of nectar.

Let me spend my speech only there. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, O life of my life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This alone is our work: to sing Your name with the tongue. Each moment of this life is precious. Let us hold to the love of Your feet. Your name is a mine of nectar. Let me spend my speech only there. Tuka says: O Panduranga, O life of my life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names a single purpose for a whole human life: to sing God's name aloud. Because each passing moment is too valuable to waste, he wants none of it spent elsewhere, only in love for God's feet. He calls the Name a mine of nectar, an inexhaustible source of sweetness, and resolves to spend all his speech digging there and nowhere else. The closing address, life of my life, makes plain that this is not duty but love: God is the very life within his life.

GATHA 3951 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the unskilled latecomer's plea

मराठी मूळ

मिळे हरिदासांची दाटी । रीग न होय शेवटी ॥1॥
तेथें म्या काय करावें । माझें कोणें आइकावें ॥ध्रु.॥
कैसें तुज लाजवावें । भक्त ह्मणोनियां भावें ॥2॥
नाचतां नये ताळीं । मज वाजवितां टाळी ॥3॥
अंतीं मांडिती भुषणें भूषणे । शरीर माझें दैन्य वाणें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे कमळापति । मज न द्यावें त्या हातीं॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the crowd of Hari's devotees gathers thick, there is no room left for me at the end of the line. What should I do then? Who will hear my plea? How shall I make You look at me with feeling, when so many devotees call upon You? I cannot keep rhythm in the dance, nor clap properly when playing the cymbals.

In the end, others wear ornaments, while my body stands in poor rags. Says Tuka, O Lord of Kamala, do not hand me over to their judgment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the crowd of Hari's devotees gathers thick, there is no room left for me at the end of the line. What should I do then? Who will hear my plea? How can I make You look at me, calling myself Your devotee, when so many call on You with feeling? I cannot keep the rhythm in the dance, nor clap right when I play the cymbals. In the end others put on ornaments, while my body stands in poor rags. Tuka says: O Lord of Kamala, do not hand me over to their judgment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures himself as the small, awkward devotee lost at the back of a vast, skilled crowd, sure he will be overlooked. He confesses he cannot dance in time or clap the cymbals properly, and that while others appear adorned and accomplished, he stands plain and poor. The fear underneath is that he will be measured against the polished devotees and found wanting. His prayer is that God judge him directly and not leave his worth to be decided by others; love, not skill, should be the measure.

GATHA 3952 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the single secret

मराठी मूळ

जाणों नेणों काय । चित्तीं धरुं तुझे पाय ॥1॥
आतां हें चि वर्म । गाऊं धरूनियां प्रेम ॥ध्रु.॥
कासया सांडूं मांडूं। भाव हृदयीं च कोंडूं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । जन्मोजन्मीं मागें सेवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whether I know or not, let me hold Your feet in my chitta. Now this alone is the secret: let me sing, holding fast to love.

Why should I abandon or restart? Let me contain my devotion within my own chitta. Says Tuka, O God, birth after birth, I ask only for Your service.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whether I know or do not know, let me hold Your feet in my chitta. Now this alone is the secret: let me sing, holding fast to love. Why should I drop one thing and take up another? Let me shut my devotion inside my own heart. Tuka says: O God, birth after birth, I ask only for Your service.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets aside the question of whether he understands anything; understanding is not the point, holding God's feet in the heart is. He has found the one secret worth keeping: to sing while clinging to love. He refuses the restless habit of taking up and abandoning practices, choosing instead to seal his devotion within and guard it. His only request, asked not once but for every future life, is to keep serving God.

GATHA 3953 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the heart closed to the Name

मराठी मूळ

जाळें घातलें सागरीं । बिंदु न राहे भीतरी ॥1॥
तैसें पापियाचें मन । तया नावडे कीर्त्तन ॥ध्रु.॥
गाढव गंगेसी न्हाणिलें। जाउनि उकरडएावरि लोळे ॥2॥
प्रीती पोसिलें काउळें । जाउनि विष्ठेवरी लोळे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसी हरी । कीरव्या नावडे कस्तुरी॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a net is cast into the sea, not a drop of water stays within it. So is the mind of the wrongdoer, to whom kirtan holds no appeal.

Bathe a donkey in the Ganga, and it goes and rolls on the garbage heap. Raise a crow with affection, and it goes and rolls upon filth.

Says Tuka, just so, the worm does not care for musk.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Cast a net into the sea, and not a drop of water stays inside it. So is the mind of the wrongdoer: kirtan holds no appeal for it. Bathe a donkey in the Ganga, and it goes off to roll on the rubbish heap. Raise a crow with love, and it goes off to roll in filth. Tuka says: just so, the worm has no taste for musk.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a heart that cannot retain holiness, the way a net cannot hold water. To such a mind, kirtan simply does not appeal; the sacred slides right through. His string of images, the donkey bathed in the Ganga that returns to the garbage, the crow raised with care that seeks out filth, the worm indifferent to fragrant musk, all make one point: even the purest thing offered cannot change a nature that is drawn elsewhere. The verse is less a verdict on others than a mirror: it asks where our own taste truly lies, in the Name or in the rubbish heap.

GATHA 3954 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the self-appointed saint

मराठी मूळ

तरलों ह्मणऊनि धरिला ताठा । त्यासी चळ जाला फांटा ॥1॥
वांयांविण तुटे दोड । मान सुख इच्छी मांड ॥ध्रु.॥
ग्वाहीविण मात । स्थापी आपुली स्वतंत्र ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसीं किती । नरका गेलीं अधोगती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Claiming to be saved, he adopted a stiff posture, and then his mind began to wander and branch off. Without any cause, he severed the bond, seeking honor and the comforts of the seat.

Without any witness, he establishes his own independent claim. Says Tuka, how many such ones have gone to hell, falling to the lowest state?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Saying he was saved, he took on a stiff pride, and then his mind began to wander and split off. For no reason he broke the bond, wanting honor and the comforts of the high seat. With no witness to back him, he sets up his own claim, answerable to none. Tuka says: how many such ones have gone to hell, fallen to the lowest state.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces the ruin of a man who declares himself liberated and lets that claim harden into pride. The pride untethers him: he drifts from the true path and snaps the bond of discipleship, chasing recognition and a comfortable seat of authority. With no one to vouch for him, he crowns himself a master accountable to nobody. Tukaram warns that this self-appointment is a downward road, and many who walked it have fallen to the lowest state. The danger he names is in any of us: claiming arrival as a cover for ego.

GATHA 3955 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, hard outside, sweet within

मराठी मूळ

कठिण नारळाचें अंग । बाहेरी भीतरी तें चांग ॥1॥
तैसा करी कां विचार । शुद्ध कारण अंतर ॥ध्रु.॥
वरि कांटे फणसफळा । माजि अंतरीं जिव्हाळा ॥2॥
ऊंस बाहेरी कठिण काळा । माजी रसाचा जिव्हाळा ॥3॥
मिठें रुचविलें अन्न । नये सतंत कारण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The coconut is hard on the outside, but it is good both outside and within. Make such a resolve: let the inner purpose be pure.

The jackfruit is covered with thorns on the surface, but inside there is tender sweetness. Sugarcane is hard and dark on the outside, but within flows sweet juice.

Salt seasons the food, yet its function is not always visible. Consider things in this way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The coconut's body is hard, yet good both outside and within. Make your resolve like that: let the inner purpose be pure. The jackfruit is covered with thorns on top, but inside there is tender sweetness. Sugarcane is hard and dark outside, but inside flows sweet juice. Salt gives food its taste, though its working is not seen. Consider things in this way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram teaches that a rough or unpromising surface can hold real sweetness within, and that what matters is the purity of the inner core. The coconut, the thorny jackfruit, the dark hard sugarcane all hide tenderness and sweet juice behind a forbidding outside. Salt makes a step further: it does its work unseen, flavoring everything while dissolving out of sight. The lesson is to set one's intention on the inner reality and not be deceived by appearances, neither put off by a hard exterior nor fooled by a pleasing one.

GATHA 3956 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, Pandhari the crown of pilgrimage

मराठी मूळ

सकळतीर्थांहूनि । पंढरीनाथ मुगुटमणी ॥1॥
धन्यधन्य पंढरी । जे मोक्षाची अक्षय पुरी ॥ध्रु.॥
विश्रांतीचा ठाव । तो हा माझा पंढरीराव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगतों स्पष्ट । दुजी पंढरी वैकुंठ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Among all sacred places, the Lord of Pandhari is the crest-jewel. Blessed, blessed is Pandhari, the eternal city of liberation.

He is the place of true rest, this King of Pandhari. Says Tuka, I tell you plainly: Pandhari is a second Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Above all sacred places, the Lord of Pandhari is the crest-jewel. Blessed, blessed is Pandhari, the deathless city of liberation. He is the place of true rest, this King of Pandhari, mine. Tuka says: I tell you plainly, Pandhari is a second Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram raises Pandhari above every other holy site, calling its Lord the crest-jewel of all pilgrimages. He blesses the city itself as the eternal town of liberation, the one place where the soul finds true rest. The Lord there, Panduranga, is not distant but his own: my King of Pandhari. He states it without hedging: Pandhari is Vaikuntha itself brought to earth, the very abode of God made present in this town.

GATHA 3957 The Power of the Name

The Name, warriors of Vitthal

मराठी मूळ

भाते भरूनि हरिनामाचे । वीर गर्जती विठ्ठलाचे॥1॥
अनंतनामाची आरोळी । एक एकाहूनि बळी ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं आणिकांचा गुमान । ज्याचे अंकित त्यावांचून ॥2॥
रिद्ध सिद्ध ज्या कामारी। तुका ह्मणे ज्याचे घरीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Filled with quivers of Hari's name, the warriors of Vitthal roar their battle cry. The shout of the infinite Name rings out; each one is mightier than the last.

They heed no one else, for they are pledged only to their Lord. Says Tuka, all powers and attainments attend him in whose home they dwell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Their quivers are full of Hari's name. The warriors of Vitthal roar their battle cry. The shout of the infinite Name rings out. Each one is mightier than the one before. They heed no one else. They are pledged only to their Lord, and to no one besides him. Tuka says: every power, every attainment, serves as a maidservant in his house.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints the lovers of the Name as an army on the field. Their weapon is not steel but Hari's name, packed full in their quivers, and the war cry they roar is the Name itself, each voice stronger than the last. What makes them invincible is single allegiance: they answer to no power but their Lord. The stakes are that the worldly siddhis and powers people chase as ends are reduced here to servants; they wait on the devotee of the Name rather than rule over him.

GATHA 3958 Longing and Separation

Longing, you live where your heart is

मराठी मूळ

ज्याची जया आस । तयाजवळी त्या वास ॥1॥
येर जवळी तें दुरी । धेनु वत्स सांडी घरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
गोडी ि◌प्रयापाशीं । सुख उपजे येरासी ॥2॥
तुका म्हणे बोल । घडे तयाठायीं मोल॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where one's longing lies, there one dwells. All else, even if near, is truly distant, like a cow that leaves home to find her calf.

Sweetness lies with the beloved, and joy arises in the other through that connection. Says Tuka, a word has value only where it finds its true place.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where your longing lies, there you live. Everything else, even what is near, is truly far. A cow leaves the house to go find her calf. Sweetness is with the beloved. Through that bond, joy rises in the other one too. Tuka says: a word has worth only where it finds its true place.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a law of the heart: you are not where your body stands, you are where your longing rests. Whatever you ache for is close, and whatever you do not, though it sit beside you, is distant; the cow walks away from the house because her love is in the calf, not the walls. He turns this on God: sweetness lives with the beloved, and the love that flows toward the beloved kindles answering joy in the beloved too. The closing line presses the point: speech, like longing, counts for nothing unless it lands where it truly belongs.

GATHA 3959 The Nature of God

The mother God, never forgetting

मराठी मूळ

बाळ माते निष्ठ होये । परि तें स्नेह करीत आहे॥1॥
तैसा तूं गा पुरुषोत्तमा । घडी न विसंबसी आह्मां ॥ध्रु.॥
नेणती भागली । कडे घेतां अंग घाली ॥2॥
भूक साहे ताहान । त्याचें राखे समाधान ॥3॥
त्याच्या दुःखें धाये । आपला जीव देऊं पाहे॥4॥
नांवें घाली उडी । तुका ह्मणे प्राण काढी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A child may be cross with its mother, yet the mother keeps on loving. Such are You, O Purushottama.

Not for a moment do You forget us. When the tired child falls, the mother catches it and takes it on her hip.

She endures hunger and thirst herself to keep the child content. When the child suffers, she would give her very life.

Says Tuka, for the sake of the child she would leap into the fire and surrender her last breath.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A child may be cross with its mother. Still the mother keeps on loving. You are like that, Purushottama. Not for a moment do you forget us. When the tired child stumbles and does not understand, the mother lifts it and sets it on her hip. She bears hunger and thirst herself to keep the child content. When the child suffers, she would give her own life. Tuka says: for the child she leaps into the fire and gives up her last breath.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the fear that God grows tired of our faults by setting God in a mother's place. A small child sulks and turns against its mother, yet her love does not waver; just so, Purushottama does not forget us even for an instant, however we behave. He follows the mother through her acts: she catches the falling child, goes hungry and thirsty so the child is fed, and would spend her own life for it. The final image lands the claim at full force, the mother flinging herself into the fire and surrendering her last breath; God's care for us is that total, that unearned, that fierce.

GATHA 3960 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the closing reckoning

मराठी मूळ

हें तों टाळाटाळीं । परि भोवताहे कळी ॥1॥
बरें नव्हेल शेवटीं । भय असों द्यावें पोटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
मुरगिाळला कान । समांडिलें समाधान ॥2॥
धन्य ह्मणे आतां । येथें नुधवा माथां॥3॥
अबोलणा तुका । ऐसें कांहीं लेखूं नका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is all evasion, but the quarrel is circling closer. The end will not be pleasant.

Keep a healthy fear within. The ear has been twisted, and contentment has been forced into place.

Says Tuka, do not now raise your head here. My silence should not be taken as nothing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is all dodging and delay. But the quarrel is circling closer. It will not end well. Keep some fear in your belly. The ear has been twisted. Quiet has been forced into place. He says, fine, that is enough now; do not raise your head here again. Tuka says: do not count my silence as nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns someone who keeps stalling and evading instead of facing a reckoning that is drawing near. The trouble is not going away; it circles closer, and the wise response is to keep a healthy fear inside rather than swagger. He points to a hard correction already delivered, an ear twisted, a forced silence, and tells the man to keep his head down and not provoke it again. The sting is in the last line: a saint's silence is not weakness or consent, and it should not be mistaken for nothing. Read it against the part of ourselves that mistakes another's patience for permission.

GATHA 3961 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, wake the sleeper

मराठी मूळ

किती लाजिरवाणा । मरे उपजोनि शाहाणा ॥1॥
एका घाई न करीं तुटी । न निघें दवासोई भेटी ॥ध्रु.॥
सोसूनि आबाळी । घायाळ तें ढुंग चोळी ॥2॥
सावध करी तुका । म्हणे निजले हो आइका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How shamefully a man who considers himself wise lives and dies. He will not make one decisive cut nor step out to meet the dawn.

He endures the beating and then rubs his bruises. Says Tuka, wake up, O you who sleep. Listen.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How shameful it is. A man who calls himself wise lives and then dies the same way. He will not make one clean cut. He will not step out to meet the dawn. He takes the beating, then sits and rubs his bruises. Tuka says: wake up, you who are asleep. Listen.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shames the man who prides himself on his cleverness yet dies no different from how he was born, having changed nothing. The fault is in his refusal to act decisively: he will not make the one clean break that frees him, will not rise to meet the new day. So he keeps absorbing the blows of life and then nursing the bruises, suffering without learning. The poem ends as a shout meant to land on the listener: you are the one asleep, so wake and pay attention. The wise self who never acts is the target, not any one man.

GATHA 3962 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, rest at the feet

मराठी मूळ

कुरुवंडी करीन काया । वरोनि पायां गोजिरिया ॥1॥
बैसलें तें रूप डोळां । मन चाळा लागलें ॥ध्रु.॥
परतें न सरवे दुरि । आवडी पुरी बैसली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विसावलों । येथें आलों धणीवरि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I shall make an offering of this body, worshipping those beautiful feet. That form is seated in my eyes, and my mind is captivated.

I cannot be pushed away to a distance, for love has settled fully within. Says Tuka, I have found rest. I have come here to my chitta's full contentment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will make an offering of this body. I will worship those lovely feet. That form has settled in my eyes. My mind is caught up in it. I cannot be pushed away to a distance. Love has settled in me, full and complete. Tuka says: I have found rest. I have come here to my heart's full contentment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment longing finds its home. He offers his very body in worship at Vitthal's beautiful feet, and the Lord's form is now lodged in his eyes so the mind has nowhere else to wander. He says he cannot be driven off, because love has taken its full seat within him; this is not a passing mood but a settled state. The poem closes in pure rest: he has arrived at the one place that satisfies the heart completely, and the seeking is over.

GATHA 3963 The Power of the Name

The Name, the easy great way

मराठी मूळ

साधनाचे कष्ट मोटे । येथें वाटे थोर हें ॥1॥
मुखें गावें भावें गीत । सर्व हित बैसलिया ॥ध्रु.॥
दासा नव्हे कर्म दान। तन मन निश्चळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आत्मनिष्ट । भागे चेष्ट मनाची॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The hardships of spiritual practice seem daunting. But here, the greatest thing is simply this: sing the song of God with love while sitting at ease.

All welfare is in that. The servant needs no rituals or charity; body and mind should simply be still.

Says Tuka, for the one established in the Self, even the restlessness of the mind subsides.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The hardships of spiritual practice are heavy. Here it feels like the great thing. Sing God's song with your mouth, with love, sitting at ease. All good is in that. The servant needs no rituals, no charity. Let body and mind be still. Tuka says: for the one settled in the Self, even the mind's restlessness wears away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs the grinding labor of formal practice against a far simpler path. Where austerities feel daunting and great, he says the truly great thing is small: to sing God's name aloud with love while sitting at ease. That singing holds all welfare in it; the devotee needs no elaborate rites or almsgiving, only a body and mind brought to stillness. The closing claim is the reward: for one who rests in the Self through the Name, even the mind's chronic restlessness quiets down on its own.

GATHA 3964 Prayers

Prayer, complaint to a withholding God

मराठी मूळ

घेतां आणिकांचा जीव । तेव्हां कींव कराना ॥1॥
आपलें तें वरदळ नेदा । हें गोविंदा कृपणता ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवा तरी इच्छा सांग । चोरिलें अंग साहेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अरे धन्या । निसंतान्या विठोबा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When taking the lives of others, You show no compassion. Yet Your own superficial possessions You will not give away.

O Govinda, this is miserliness. If You want service, then speak Your wish plainly.

Hiding behind excuses is unbearable. Says Tuka, O master, O childless Vithoba, how strange are Your ways.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you take the lives of others, you show no mercy then. Yet your own surplus you will not give away. Govinda, this is stinginess. If you want service from me, say your wish plainly. I cannot bear this hiding behind excuses. Tuka says: O master, O childless Vithoba, what strange ways are yours.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays in the voice of bold complaint, taking God to task the way a child argues with a parent. He charges that God spends lives freely yet withholds his own abundance, and he names this plainly as miserliness. His real ask follows: if God wants service from him, then God should state the demand openly instead of hiding behind evasions, which Tukaram cannot stand. The closing line is half scold, half intimacy, calling Vithoba childless and his ways strange; the harshness is the freedom of a devotee who trusts the bond enough to argue inside it.

GATHA 3965 Prayers

Prayer, guard the honor you gave us

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां केलें गुणवंत । तें उचित राखावें ॥1॥
तुह्मांसी तों चाड नाहीं । आणिकां कांहीं सुखदुःखां ॥ध्रु.॥
दासांचें तें देखों नये । उणें काय होइल तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विश्वंभरा । दृष्ट करा सामोरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have made us full of virtues. Maintain that honor.

You have no personal stake in anyone's joy or sorrow. The shortcomings of Your servants should not be allowed to show.

Whatever diminishment occurs, let it not be seen. Says Tuka, O Vishvambhara, turn Your gaze toward us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have made us full of good qualities. Keep that honor as it should be kept. You have no stake in anyone's joy or sorrow. Do not let your servants' failings be seen. Whatever falls short, let it not show. Tuka says: Vishvambhara, turn your gaze toward us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reminds God that the virtues in his devotees are God's own gift, and asks God to protect that gift rather than let it be disgraced. He grants that God stands above all gain and loss, untouched by anyone's pleasure or pain, and uses this to press his plea: precisely because God is disinterested, let him not expose the shortcomings of those who serve him. The prayer is that whatever in us is lacking be covered, not paraded. It closes by asking Vishvambhara, the all-sustainer, simply to turn his face toward his servants; the gaze itself is the protection sought.

GATHA 3966 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the scorner of kirtan

मराठी मूळ

अगत्य ज्या नरका जाणें । कीर्तनीं तों वीट मानी॥1॥
नावडेसा जाला बाप । आलें पाप वस्तीसि ॥ध्रु.॥
नारायण नाहीं वाचे । ते यमाचे अंदण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अभक्तासी । माता दासी जग झोडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who is eager for hell is the one who scorns kirtan. He has become displeasing to his own father, and sin has come to dwell with him.

One whose tongue does not utter Narayana is a gift offered to Yama. Says Tuka, the faithless one is beaten by the world, and even his mother becomes a servant to others.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who is set on going to hell is the one who finds kirtan tiresome. He has become hateful even to his own father. Sin has come to live with him. The tongue that does not say Narayana is a thing handed over to Yama. Tuka says: the faithless one is beaten by the whole world, and even his mother becomes a servant in other houses.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram defines who is truly bound for hell, not by ritual failing but by contempt for the singing of God's name. The person who finds kirtan a bore has, by that, made himself repellent even to his own father and taken sin in as a houseguest. A tongue that never utters Narayana is, he says, already made over to Yama, the lord of death. The closing image draws out the worldly cost: such a faithless one is battered by everyone, and the disgrace reaches his mother, reduced to servitude. The warning is aimed at the impulse in us that yawns at devotion, not at condemning any single person.

GATHA 3967 The Power of the Name

The Name, soldiers of Hari

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी हरिचे हरिचे । सुर किळकाळा यमाचे ॥1॥
नामघोष बाण साचे । भाले तुळसी मंजुरेचे ॥ध्रु.॥
आह्मी हरिचे हरिचे दास । कलिकाळावरि घालूं कास ॥2॥
आह्मी हरिचे हरिचे दूत । पुढें पळती यमदूत ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मांवरी । सुदर्शन घरटी करी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are Hari's own, we are Hari's own. We are warriors against the power of death and time.

Our arrows are the true chanting of the Name, and our spears are the sprigs of tulsi. We are Hari's own, we are Hari's servants.

We gird ourselves against the dark age. We are Hari's own, we are Hari's messengers.

Even the servants of Yama flee before us. Says Tuka, above us the Sudarshana disc keeps its protective watch.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are Hari's, we are Hari's. We are warriors against death and time. Our true arrows are the loud chanting of the Name. Our spears are sprigs of tulsi. We are Hari's, we are Hari's servants. We gird ourselves against the dark age. We are Hari's, we are Hari's messengers. The messengers of Yama flee before us. Tuka says: above us the Sudarshana disc keeps its guard.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sings the war song of those who belong wholly to Hari, calling them soldiers ranged against death and the grind of time. Their weapons turn the martial image tender: arrows are the ringing chant of the Name, spears are sprigs of tulsi, the leaf of devotion. Declaring themselves Hari's servants and messengers, they tighten their belts to fight the corruptions of the Kali age. The triumph is that Yama's own agents, the bringers of death, run away before them, and Krishna's Sudarshana disc circles overhead as their protection. To take the Name is to be unassailable.

GATHA 3968 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, spend all at the feet

मराठी मूळ

देवाचिये पायीं वेचों सर्व शक्ती । होतील विपित्त ज्याज्या कांहीं ॥1॥
मनाचे वांटणी चित्ताचा विक्षेप । राहो हा अनुताप आहे तैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घेई विठ्ठलाचा छंद । आनंदाचा कंद विस्तारेल ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let me spend all my strength at the feet of God. Whatever difficulties arise, let them be.

The partitioning of the mind and the scattering of attention: let this remorse remain as it is. Says Tuka, take up the practice of Vitthal with devotion, and the root of bliss will spread and flourish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me spend all my strength at God's feet. Whatever troubles come, let them come. The mind is divided. The attention is scattered. Let this remorse stay just as it is. Tuka says: take up the love of Vitthal, and the root of bliss will spread and flourish.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram resolves to pour his whole strength out at God's feet and to accept whatever hardships that costs him. He does not pretend his mind is whole; he names it honestly as split and scattered, and rather than forcing it quiet he lets the pang of that failure remain as it is, not papering over it. The turn is in the last line: instead of fighting the restless mind directly, take up the loving practice of Vitthal. From that single devotion the root of bliss spreads and grows on its own, and the divided mind is healed not by struggle but by love.

GATHA 3969 Autobiography

Lament, mocked for kirtan

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगा आतां ऐका हे विनंती । बहु माझे चित्तीं भय वाटे ॥1॥
नाहीं आइकिलें संतांचिया मुखें । तें या मज लोकें भडसाविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
विष्णुदासां गति नाहीं तरावया । ह्मणती गेले वांयां कष्टत ही ॥2॥
धिक्कारिती मज करितां कीर्तन । काय सांगों शीण ते काळचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज वाटतें उदास । काय करूं यास पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Panduranga, hear my plea now. Great fear has taken hold of my chitta.

The people have taunted me with things I never heard from the mouths of saints. They say devotees of Vishnu have no hope of liberation, that all their efforts go to waste.

They mock me for doing kirtan, and the suffering of those days is beyond telling. Says Tuka, I feel so dispirited; what shall I do about this, Panduranga?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga, hear my plea now. A great fear sits in my heart. People taunt me with things I never heard from the mouths of the saints. They say the servants of Vishnu have no way to cross over; they say all their toil is wasted. They scorn me when I do kirtan. How can I tell you the pain of those days? Tuka says: I feel so low. What shall I do about this, Panduranga?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings his discouragement straight to God and names exactly what is wounding him. People around him jeer that devotion is useless, that those who serve Vishnu will never be liberated, that their whole effort is thrown away. They mock him even as he sings God's praises, and the shame of it weighs on him. He does not pretend to be above the hurt; he confesses the fear in his heart and asks Panduranga, plainly, what he is supposed to do. The poem makes the prayer itself the answer: when the world scorns the path, you turn and ask the One you walk toward.

GATHA 3970 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, storming Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

वेढा वेढा रे पंढरी । मोर्चे लावा भीमातिरीं ॥1॥
चलाचला संत जन । करा देवासी भांडण ॥ध्रु.॥
लुटालुटा पंढरपूर। धरा रखुमाईचा वर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चला । घाव निशानी घातला॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Lay siege to Pandhari! Set up your camps along the banks of the Bhima! Come, come, O saintly ones, let us pick a fight with God. Plunder Pandharpur and seize the husband of Rakhumai.

Says Tuka, come along, the banner has been raised and the battle cry sounded.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lay siege, lay siege to Pandhari. Set up your camps along the bank of the Bhima. Come on, come on, you saints. Pick a fight with God. Plunder, plunder Pandharpur. Seize the husband of Rakhumai. Tuka says: come along. The banner is raised, the war cry is struck.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the language of war into the language of love. He calls the saints to march on Pandharpur, to lay siege to the temple town on the Bhima river, to plunder it and capture Vitthal, the husband of Rakhumai. The violence is a holy joke: the only thing being stormed is God's own resistance, and the only plunder is God himself. By making devotion an army with banners and a battle cry, he says the devotees mean to take the Lord by force of longing, refusing to leave Pandhari without him.

GATHA 3971 Faith and Trust

Faith, remember God in sorrow

मराठी मूळ

पहा ते पांडव अखंड वनवासी । परि त्या देवासी आठविती ॥1॥
प्रल्हादासी पिता करितो जाचणी । परि तो स्मरे मनीं नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
सुदामा ब्राह्मण दरिद्रें पीडिला । नाहीं विसरला पांडुरंग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा न पडावा विसर । दुःखाचे डोंगर जाले तरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look at the Pandavas, forever in exile in the forest, yet they never ceased remembering God. Prahlada's own father tormented him, yet he held Narayana in his mind.

Sudama the Brahmin was crushed by poverty, yet he never forgot Panduranga. Says Tuka, may I never forget You, even if mountains of sorrow pile upon me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look at the Pandavas. They lived in the forest in endless exile, yet they kept remembering God. Prahlada's own father tortured him, yet he held Narayana in his mind. Sudama the brahmin was crushed by poverty, yet he never forgot Panduranga. Tuka says: may I never forget you, even if mountains of sorrow pile on me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up three who suffered and held on, and turns their example into a prayer for himself. The Pandavas in their long forest exile, Prahlada under his father's torment, Sudama ground down by poverty: each kept God in mind through the worst of it. The point is that hardship is no excuse to forget; the ones we honor are precisely the ones who remembered while it hurt. So Tukaram asks for only this strength: that even if grief stacks up like mountains, the memory of Panduranga will not slip from him.

GATHA 3972 Prayers

Plea, do not cast me off

मराठी मूळ

निजसेजेची अंतुरी । पादलिया कोण मारी ॥1॥
तैसा आह्मासी उबगतां । तुका विनवितो संतां ॥ध्रु.॥
मूल मांडीवरी हागलें । तें बा कोणे रें त्यागिलें ॥2॥
दासी कामासी चुकली । ते बा कोणें रें विकली ॥3॥
पांडुरंगाचा तुका पापी । संतसाहें काळासि दापी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who beats the bedsheet for soiling the master's bed? In the same way, Says Tuka, I appeal to the saints not to grow weary of us. Does any mother abandon a child that has soiled her lap? Does anyone sell a servant woman for one mistake? Tuka, sinful though he is, belongs to Panduranga, and with the saints' support he can frighten even Death.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who beats the bedsheet for soiling the master's bed? In the same way, when you grow tired of us, Tuka begs the saints. The child messes on its mother's lap. Does any mother throw it away for that? A servant woman fails at her work. Does anyone sell her off for one mistake? Tuka is a sinner, but he belongs to Panduranga; with the saints behind him, he frightens even Death.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads with the saints not to give up on him, and he argues his case with homely examples. You do not throw out the bedsheet because the bed was soiled; no mother abandons a baby for messing her lap; no one sells a maidservant for a single mistake. He is asking the saints to bear with his faults the same way, since the fault is small against the bond. He admits he is a sinner, but insists the decisive fact is whose he is: he belongs to Panduranga, and standing inside the saints' protection he can even stare down Death.

GATHA 3973 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the dog at the door

मराठी मूळ

श्वानाचियापरी लोळें तुझ्या दारीं । भुंकों हरिहरि नाम तुझें ॥1॥
भुंकीं उठीं बैसें न वजायें वेगळा । लुडबुडीं गोपाळा पायांपाशीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मां वर्म आहे ठावें । मागेन ते द्यावें प्रेमसुख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a dog I roll at Your doorstep, barking Your name, Hari, Hari. I sit, I rise, I bark, never straying from Your feet, O Gopala, tumbling about at Your feet.

Says Tuka, I know the secret well: whatever I ask, You must grant me the joy of love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like a dog I roll at your door, barking your name, Hari, Hari. I bark, I get up, I sit down, I never leave your side. I tumble about at your feet, Gopala. Tuka says: I know the secret well. Whatever I ask, you must give me: the joy of love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the lowest image he can find and makes it his glory. He is a dog at God's doorstep, rolling, barking the Name, never straying from the feet of Gopala. Far from shame, this is total belonging: the dog stays because it has nowhere else it wants to be. Then he names the leverage he holds, the secret he claims to know: a creature this devoted can demand one thing and be sure of it, the sweetness of love itself. The humility and the boldness are the same move.

GATHA 3974 Renunciation

Renunciation, only God stays

मराठी मूळ

सोइरे धाइरे दिल्याघेतल्याचे । अंत हें काळीचें नाहीं कोणी ॥1॥
सख्या गोत्रबहिणी सुखाचे संगती । मोकलुनी देती अंतकाळीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलें शरीर आपुल्यासी पारिखें । परावीं होतील नवल काई ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां सोड यांची आस । धरीं रे या कास पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Relatives and kinfolk are only for give and take; none stand by you at the hour of death. Sisters and brothers share your happy times but leave you alone when the end comes.

Even your own body becomes a stranger to you; why be surprised that others turn away? Says Tuka, abandon all hope in them now and hold fast to the hem of Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Relatives and kinfolk are only for giving and taking. None of them stands by you at the hour of death. Sisters and brothers share your good times, then leave you alone when the end comes. Your own body becomes a stranger to you; why be surprised that others turn away? Tuka says: now let go of all hope in them. Hold fast to the hem of Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away the comforts we lean on and shows that none of them go the distance. Relatives are a transaction of give and take; brothers and sisters keep you company in good times but are absent at death; even your own body, the most intimate thing you have, finally turns foreign to you. If the body itself deserts you, he asks, why expect others to stay? The conclusion is not despair but redirection: stop pinning hope on what cannot follow you past death, and grip the one thing that can, the hem of Panduranga's garment.

GATHA 3975 The Power of the Name

The Name, no fear of death

मराठी मूळ

जन्ममरणांची कायसी चिंता । तुझ्या शरणागतां पंढरीराया ॥1॥
वदनीं तुझें नाम अमृतसंजीवनी । असतां चक्रपाणी भय कवणा ॥ध्रु.॥
हृदयीं तुझें रूप बिंबलें साकार । तेथें कोण पार संसाराचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझ्या चरणांची पाखर । असतां किळकाळ पायां तळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What worry of birth and death for those who have surrendered to You, O King of Pandhari? With Your name on the tongue, that nectar of immortality, who can fear anything, O Lord who holds the discus? Your form is imprinted upon the heart in full; what power does worldly life hold there? Says Tuka, with the shelter of Your feet as our shield, time and death lie crushed beneath us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What worry of birth and death is there for those who have surrendered to you, King of Pandhari? With your name on the tongue, that nectar that brings life back, who can fear anything, Lord who holds the discus? Your form is stamped on the heart, whole and clear. What hold does the world have there? Tuka says: with the shelter of your feet as our shield, time and death lie crushed beneath us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the surrendered soul it has nothing left to fear. Once you have given yourself to the King of Pandhari, the old dread of being born and dying again loses its grip. The Name on the tongue is a reviving nectar, and God's form pressed into the heart leaves no room for worldly fear to take hold. He ends with a startling reversal of the usual order: death and time, which crush everyone, are themselves crushed underfoot, because the devotee stands in the shelter of God's feet.

GATHA 3976 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the weapon of forgiveness

मराठी मूळ

क्षमाशस्त्र जया नराचिया हातीं । दुष्ट तयाप्रति काय करी ॥1॥
तृण नाहीं तेथें पडे दाविग्न । जाय तो विझोनि आपसया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे क्षमा सर्वांचें स्वहित । धरा अखंडित सुखरूप ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What can the wicked do to the one who holds the weapon of forgiveness in hand? Where there is no grass, a wildfire dies out on its own. Says Tuka, forgiveness is the true welfare of all. Hold it steadfast and dwell in bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can the wicked do to the one who holds the weapon of forgiveness in hand? Where there is no grass, a wildfire falls and dies out on its own. Tuka says: forgiveness is the true good of all. Hold it without a break, and live in joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reframes forgiveness as power, not weakness. The person who carries forgiveness like a weapon gives the malicious nothing to strike; their attack finds no purchase and fails. He pictures it as a wildfire reaching bare ground: with no grass to catch, the flame simply goes out by itself. Anger and insult are the dry grass that lets harm spread, and forgiveness starves them. So he counsels holding forgiveness unbroken as the real welfare of everyone, the steady ground of a life at peace.

GATHA 3977 The Power of the Name

The Name, grace lifts the lowly

मराठी मूळ

याति गुणें रूप काय ते वानर । तयांच्या विचारें वर्ते राम ॥1॥
ब्रह्महत्यारासि पातकी अनेक । तो वंद्य वाल्मीक तिहीं लोकीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नव्हे चोरीचा व्यापार । ह्मणा रघुवीर वेळोवेळां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What were the monkeys by birth, caste, or beauty? Yet Rama chose to act according to their wishes. Valmiki was a murderer laden with countless sins, yet he became revered in all three worlds.

Says Tuka, this is no stolen affair. Simply say Raghuvira again and again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By birth, by quality, by looks, what were the monkeys? Yet Rama chose to act according to their counsel. Valmiki was a killer, weighed down with many sins, yet he became honored in all three worlds. Tuka says: this is no shady trade. Just say Raghuvira, again and again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram points to two unlikely cases to show that grace does not check your credentials. The monkeys of the Ramayana had nothing to recommend them by caste, character, or beauty, yet Rama worked through them and took their counsel. Valmiki had been a murderer heavy with sin, yet he rose to be revered across all three worlds. The lesson is that the Name lifts whoever takes it, regardless of where they start. And he insists there is no catch, no hidden cost, nothing underhanded: the whole price is simply to say Raghuvira again and again.

GATHA 3978 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, reverence in kirtan

मराठी मूळ

पानें जो खाईल बैसोनि कथेसी । घडेल तयासी गोहत्या ॥1॥
तमाखू ओढूनि काढला जो धूर । बुडेल तें घर तेणें पापें ॥ध्रु.॥
कीर्तनीं बडबड करील जो कोणी । बेडुक होउनी येइल जन्मा ॥2॥
जयाचिये मनीं कथेचा कंटाळा । होती त्या चांडाळा बहु जाच ॥3॥
जाच होती पाठी उडती यमदंड । त्याचें काळें तोंड तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who chews betel leaf while sitting at a sacred discourse incurs the sin of cow-slaughter. One who smokes tobacco and blows its fumes will ruin his entire household by that sin.

Whoever chatters during kirtan will be reborn as a frog. One whose mind is weary of the sacred story will suffer terrible torments.

Says Tuka, those tormented by Yama's rod, their faces blackened with shame.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who sits at the sacred discourse chewing betel leaf earns the sin of killing a cow. One who smokes tobacco and blows out the smoke will sink his whole house by that sin. Whoever chatters during kirtan will be born again as a frog. The one whose mind is sick of the holy story suffers many torments. Torments fall on his back, the rod of Yama strikes him; his face is blackened, Tuka says.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses harsh, exaggerated penalties to drive home one thing: how a person treats the sacred discourse reveals what is in the heart. Chewing betel, smoking and puffing smoke, chattering through the kirtan, growing bored of the holy story; these are the small contempts he piles up, and he answers each with an outsized punishment, down to rebirth as a frog and Yama's rod on the back. The point is not literal bookkeeping of sins but a warning to examine your own restlessness: the inattention you bring to God's presence is itself the disease. Read it against your own wandering mind, not as a charge sheet against the person next to you.

GATHA 3979 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, say Rama amid work

मराठी मूळ

कामांमध्यें काम । कांहीं ह्मणा रामराम । जाइल भवश्रम । सुख होईल दुःखाचें ॥1॥
कळों येईल अंतकाळीं । प्राणप्रयाणाचे वेळीं । राहाती निराळीं । रांडापोरें सकळ ॥ध्रु.॥
जीतां जीसी जैसा तैसा । पुढें आहे रे वोळसा । उगवुनि फांसा । काय करणें तें करीं ॥2॥
केलें होतें या चि जन्में । अवघें विठोबाच्या नामें । तुका ह्मणे कर्म । जाळोनियां तरसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Amidst all your work, say Rama, Rama at least a little. The weariness of worldly existence will vanish and sorrow will turn to joy.

You will understand at the final hour, when life departs the body, that wife and children all stand apart from you. While alive, be as you are, but know that ahead lies a passage through darkness; free yourself from that snare and do what must be done.

Says Tuka, everything accomplished in this very birth through Vithoba's name burns away all karma and carries you across.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the middle of all your work, say at least a little: Rama, Rama. The weariness of this world will go, and the sorrow will turn to joy. You will understand at the last hour, when the breath is leaving, that wife and children all stand apart from you. While you live, be as you are; but ahead lies a dark passage. Loosen the noose, and do what must be done. Whatever is done in this very birth, all of it through Vithoba's name, Tuka says, burns up your karma and carries you across.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for something small and immediate: not retreat from the world, but the Name slipped in among ordinary work. Even a little Rama, Rama lightens the weariness of living and turns sorrow toward joy. He sharpens it with the deathbed view, when wife and children are seen to stand apart and a dark passage waits ahead, so you should loosen the noose now and do what truly matters while you can. The promise is that the work done in this very life, all of it carried on Vithoba's name, burns away the karma that binds and ferries you across.

GATHA 3980 The Nature of God

Nature of God, waves on one sea

मराठी मूळ

तुज मज ऐसी परी । जैसे तरंग सागरीं ॥1॥
दोहींमाजी एक जाणा । विठ्ठल पंढरीचा राणा ॥ध्रु.॥
देव भक्त ऐसी बोली । जंव भ्रांति नाहीं गेली ॥2॥
तंतु पट जेवीं एक । तैसा विश्वेंसीं व्यापक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You and I are like waves upon the ocean. Know that within both there is only one: Vitthal, the King of Pandhari.

The talk of God and devotee being separate lasts only as long as delusion remains. As thread and cloth are one, so is He pervading the entire universe.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You and I are like waves on the ocean. Know that within both there is only one: Vitthal, the King of Pandhari. The talk of God and devotee being two lasts only as long as the delusion has not gone. As thread and cloth are one, so he spreads through the whole universe.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the nondual heart of his faith. He and God look like two, the way separate waves rise on the sea, but in both there is a single reality: Vitthal of Pandhari. The sense of God and devotee being apart is real only while delusion lasts; when that clears, the twoness dissolves. He gives the weaver's image to finish: cloth is nothing but its thread arranged, and just so the one God is woven through the entire universe, never standing outside it.

GATHA 3981 Longing and Separation

Longing, where has God gone

मराठी मूळ

कोठें गुंतलासी योगीयांचे ध्यानीं । आनंदकीर्तनीं पंढरीच्या ॥1॥
काय काज कोठें पडलीसे गुंती । कानीं न पडती बोल माझे ॥ध्रु.॥
काय शेषनशयनीं सुखनिद्रा आली । सोय कां सांडिली तुह्मी देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोठें गुंतलेती सांगा । किती पांडुरंगा वाट पाहूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where have You become entangled, O Lord? In the meditation of yogis, or in the joyful kirtan of Pandhari? What business holds You, what knot has caught You, that my cries do not reach Your ears? Have You fallen into blissful sleep upon the serpent Shesha, and forsaken all thought of me? Says Tuka, tell me where You are caught up, Panduranga. How long must I wait?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where are you caught up, Lord? In the meditation of the yogis, or in the joyful kirtan of Pandhari? What work has hold of you? What knot has caught you, that my cries do not reach your ears? Have you fallen into a happy sleep on the serpent Shesha? Why have you let go of all thought of me, my God? Tuka says: tell me where you are held, Panduranga. How long must I keep watching the road?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is calling out to a God who has gone silent, and he names every place that might be holding him. Maybe Vitthal is absorbed in the yogis' meditation, or in the kirtan at Pandhari, or asleep on the serpent Shesha in the heaven of milk. The poem turns the saint's distress into a kind of teasing complaint: whatever has hold of you, why has it pulled you away from me? Behind the questions is one ache, named plainly at the end: how long must I keep waiting on the road, watching for you to come.

GATHA 3982 The Nature of God

God's love, beyond mother and father

मराठी मूळ

माउलीसी सांगे कोण । प्रेम वाढवी ताहानें ॥1॥
अंतरींचा कळवळा । करीतसे प्रतिपाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
मायबापाची उपमा। तुज देऊं मेघश्यामा ॥2॥
ते ही साजेना पाहातां । जीवलगा पंढरिनाथा ॥3॥
माय पाळी संसारीं । परलोक राहे दुरी ॥4॥
तैसा नव्हेसी अनंता । काळावरी तुझी सत्ता ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायणा। तुह्मां बहुत करुणा ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who can teach a mother her love? Hunger itself deepens her affection. The tenderness within her chitta makes her nurture and protect.

Shall I compare You to a mother and father, O dark-hued Lord? Even that comparison falls short, O beloved Lord of Pandhari. A mother cares for this world alone, while the next world stays far away.

But You are not like that, O Ananta; Your sovereignty extends even over Death. Says Tuka, O Narayana, how great is Your compassion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who has to teach a mother to love? The child's hunger only deepens her love. The ache inside her makes her nurse and guard the child. Shall I compare you to a mother and a father, dark-hued Lord? Even that comparison falls short when I look at you, beloved Lord of Pandhari. A mother cares for you in this world; the next world stays far from her reach. You are not like that, Ananta: your rule reaches even over Death. Tuka says: Narayana, how great is your mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the strongest human image of love, a mother's, and then shows it is still too small for God. A mother does not need to be taught to love; the child's helplessness draws it out of her on its own. But her care stops at the edge of this life, and the next world lies beyond her. God's care does not stop there, because his authority reaches even over death itself. So the dearest comparison Tukaram can find, mother and father, falls short of the mercy he is actually praising.

GATHA 3983 The Nature of God

God's love, the test of a true mother

मराठी मूळ

कोड आवडीचें । पुरवीना बाळकाचें ॥1॥
तेव्हां कैसी ते माउली । जाणा काशासाटीं व्याली ॥ध्रु.॥
वत्साचिये आसे। धेनु धांवेना गोरसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धरि । बाळ टाकिलें वानरीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If a mother will not fulfill the fond wishes of her child, then what kind of mother is she, and why did she give birth at all? If a cow will not run with milk for the sake of her calf, then, Says Tuka, she is like a monkey that drops its young and moves on.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If she will not grant her child's fond wish, what kind of mother is she? Know this: then why did she give birth at all? If a cow will not run with milk for the sake of her calf, Tuka says: she is like a monkey that holds its young and then throws it away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with the logic of motherhood itself. A mother who refuses her child's longing, a cow whose milk does not flow for her calf, has betrayed the very bond that made her a mother. He sharpens it with a hard image: a monkey that carries its young only to fling it away. The poem is really an argument addressed upward: if God is mother to us, then he cannot withhold himself from the one who cries for him, or the name mother means nothing.

GATHA 3984 The Nature of God

God's presence, where the kirtan is

मराठी मूळ

भक्तांची सांकडीं स्वयें सोसी देव । त्यांपाशीं केशव सर्वकाळ ॥1॥
जये ठायीं कीर्तन वैष्णव करिती । तेथें हा श्रीपति उभा असे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव सर्वाठायीं जाला । भरुनी उरला पांडुरंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God Himself bears the hardships of His devotees; Keshava is with them at all times. Wherever the Vaishnavas hold kirtan, there Shripati stands present.

Says Tuka, God has become all-pervading. Panduranga fills and overflows everything.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God himself bears the hardships of his devotees; Keshava is with them at all times. Wherever the Vaishnavas hold kirtan, there Shripati stands present. Tuka says: God has become every place. Panduranga has filled it all, and still he overflows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says God does not watch his devotees' troubles from a distance; he takes their burdens onto himself and stays beside them always. The poem locates that presence concretely: wherever singers gather to chant his name, Shripati is standing right there. From this it opens out to the largest claim, that Panduranga has become every place, filling all of it and still spilling beyond it. Nearness to the devotee and the all-pervading fullness of God are named as one and the same thing.

GATHA 3985 The Power of the Name

The Name, even backward it saves

मराठी मूळ

तुझिया नामाचा विसर न पडावा । ध्यानीं तो राहावा पांडुरंग ॥1॥
उफराटें नाम वाल्मीक बोलीला । तो ही वंद्य केला नारायणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज तुझा चि भरवसा । धांवुनियां कैसा येसी देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May I never forget Your name; may Panduranga remain ever in my meditation. Valmiki chanted the name in reverse, yet even he was honored by Narayana.

Says Tuka, my trust is in You alone. How swiftly You come running to my aid, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me never forget your name; let Panduranga stay in my meditation. Valmiki spoke the name backward, and even him Narayana made worthy of honor. Tuka says: my trust is in you alone. How quickly you come running, my God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays first for one thing, that he never lose hold of the Name and that Vitthal stay fixed in his attention. Then he gives his reason: the Name is so powerful that even spoken backward it lifted Valmiki, the hunter, into a saint whom God himself honored. If the Name works even said wrong, then the saint's trust in it can be total. The closing line catches the surprise of grace: he leans on God alone, and God comes running before he can finish.

GATHA 3986 Prayers

Surrender, the heap of all sins

मराठी मूळ

अवघ्यां पातकांची मी एक रासी । अवघा तूं होसी सवौत्तमु ॥1॥
जैसा तैसा लागे करणें अंगीकार । माझा सर्व भार चालविणें ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघें चि मज गिंळयेलें काळें । अवघीं च बळें तुझे अंगीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां खुंटला उपाय । अवघे चि पाय तुझे मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am the very heap of all sins, while You are the supreme among all. However I am, You must accept me and carry my entire burden.

Darkness has swallowed me whole, yet all strength resides in You. Says Tuka, every remedy has now been exhausted; Your feet alone remain for me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am the one heap of all sins; you are the highest of all that is good. Whatever I am, you have to take me up and carry my whole load. Darkness has swallowed me completely; all the strength is in you. Tuka says: now every remedy is finished. Your feet are all that is left for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets two extremes side by side: he is the gathered mass of every sin, and God is the highest good there is. From that gap he draws not despair but a claim on God: precisely because I am this and cannot fix it, the work of carrying me must be yours. He admits the dark has closed over him and that he has no strength of his own to spend. When every other remedy has run out, only one thing remains, and he names it plainly: your feet. The end of self-effort is the beginning of surrender.

GATHA 3987 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the heart over the stone

मराठी मूळ

मूतिनमंत देव नांदतो पंढरी । येर ते दिगांतरीं प्रतिमारूप॥1॥
जाउनियां वना करावें कीर्तन । मानुनी पाषाण विठ्ठलरूप ॥2॥
तुका मुख्य पाहिजे भाव । भावापासीं देव शीघ्र उभा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The living God dwells in Pandhari; elsewhere He exists only as images in distant lands. One may go to the forest and do kirtan, worshipping a stone as Vitthal's form.

Says Tuka, what truly matters is sincere devotion. Where there is genuine feeling, God stands at once.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The living God dwells in Pandhari; elsewhere he is only an image set in distant places. You may go off to the forest and do kirtan, taking a stone for Vitthal's form. Tuka says: what is needed above all is feeling. Where the feeling is, God stands there at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram seems to rank places of worship, the living God at Pandhari above the mere images elsewhere, but he is leading somewhere else. Even a stone in a forest can be taken as Vitthal, he allows, and then he tells you what actually decides the matter. The one thing that counts is bhava, true feeling; the form is not the point. Wherever the heart genuinely turns, God is already standing there. Presence follows sincerity, not location or material.

GATHA 3988 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the boats of the Name

मराठी मूळ

धरिल्या देहाचें सार्थक करीन । आनंदें भरीन तिन्ही लोक ॥1॥
लावीन निशाान जावया वैकुंठा । माजवीन पेठा कीर्तनाच्या॥ध्रु.॥
नामाचिया नौका करीन सहस्रवरि । नावाडा श्रीहरि पांडुरंग ॥2॥
भाविक हो येथें धरा रे आवांका । ह्मणे दास तुका शुद्धयाति ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will make this body's life worthwhile and fill the three worlds with bliss. I will plant the banner that leads to Vaikuntha and open the marketplace of kirtan.

I will build a thousand boats of the Name, with Shrihari Panduranga as the boatman. Come, O faithful ones, make room aboard.

Says Tuka, of pure birth, I call you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will make this body I have been given count for something; I will fill all three worlds with joy. I will raise the banner for the road to Vaikuntha; I will set up a thriving market of kirtan. I will build a thousand boats out of the Name, with Shrihari Panduranga as the boatman. Faithful ones, come, make room and climb aboard. Tuka, the servant, says: I am calling you, I of pure lineage.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns his own life into a public mission and announces it like a herald. He will not waste the body he was given; he will flood the three worlds with bliss, plant the flag on the road to Vaikuntha, and open a bustling marketplace where the only goods are kirtan. The boldest image is the rescue fleet: a thousand boats made of the Name, with God himself as the boatman, and an open call for everyone faithful to climb in. It is the ecstasy of a saint who wants not private liberation but a crossing wide enough to carry the crowd.

GATHA 3989 The Nature of God

God's faithfulness, walking beside you

मराठी मूळ

अनुसरे त्यासी फिरों नेदी मागें । राहें समागमें अंगसंगें ॥1॥
अंगसंगें असे कर्मसाक्ष देव । जैसा ज्याचा भाव तैसा राहे ॥2॥
फळपाकीं देव देतील प्राणीयें । तुका ह्मणे नये सवें कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God follows one who follows Him and never lets such a one turn back. He walks alongside, step by step, witnessing every deed.

As one's faith is, so God remains. When the fruit of actions ripens, God repays each being.

Says Tuka, nothing accompanies you in the end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever follows him, God will not let turn back; he stays with that one, close as a body. Close as a body, God is the witness of every deed; as each one's faith is, so he remains for them. When the fruit of your actions ripens, God gives each living being its due. Tuka says: in the end nothing else goes with you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a God who answers commitment with commitment: turn toward him and he will not let you slip back, and he keeps step beside you so closely that he witnesses everything you do. He meets each person according to that person's own faith, so the relationship is exact and personal. He also weighs deeds, repaying each being when its actions ripen. The closing line strips life down to what survives it: nothing you carried goes with you at the end, only the God who walked beside you.

GATHA 3990 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one essential act

मराठी मूळ

संसारीं असतां हरिनाम घेसी । तरीं च उद्धरसी पूर्वजेंसी ॥1॥
अवघीं च इंद्रियें न येती कामा । जिव्हे रामनामा उच्चारीं वेगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीरसंपत्ति नव्हे रे आपुली । भ्रांतीची माउली अवघी व्यर्थ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सार हरिनामउच्चार । ये†हवी येरझार हरीविण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If while living in the world you take the name of Hari, then you will be liberated along with your ancestors. All the senses prove useless in the end; let the tongue quickly utter the name of Rama.

Bodily wealth is not truly yours; it is all the vain progeny of delusion. Says Tuka, the essence is the utterance of Hari's name; without Hari, everything else is mere running back and forth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If, while living in the world, you take the name of Hari, then you will be carried across, and your ancestors with you. None of the senses will come to your aid at the end; quickly, with the tongue, say the name of Rama. The body and its wealth are not really yours; they are the useless offspring of delusion. Tuka says: the essence is the saying of Hari's name. Apart from that, without Hari, there is only going back and forth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the householder that liberation does not wait for retreat from the world; take Hari's name while still in the thick of it, and you will be carried across, your ancestors lifted along with you. At the end the senses give no help, so he urges the simplest possible act now: let the tongue say Rama's name. Body and possessions feel like ours but are only the barren children of delusion, nothing to lean on. The whole teaching reduces to one thing: uttering Hari's name is the essence, and without it life is just endless coming and going.

GATHA 3991 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, asking only for the form

मराठी मूळ

सावळें सुंदर रूप मनोहर । राहो निरंतर हृदयीं माझे॥1॥
आणीक कांहीं इच्छा आह्मां नाहीं चाड । तुझें नाम गोड पांडुरंगे ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्मोजन्मीं ऐसें मागितलें तुज । आह्मांसी सहज द्यावें आतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज ऐसे दयाळ । धुंडितां सकळ नाहीं आह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May that dark and beautiful form, enchanting to the heart, remain forever in my heart. I have no other wish or craving; Your name alone is sweet to me, O Panduranga.

Birth after birth I have asked this of You; grant it to me now, for it comes naturally to You. Says Tuka, searching everywhere, I find no one as compassionate as You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That dark and lovely form, so beautiful to the heart: let it stay forever in my heart. We want nothing else, have no other craving; your name is sweet to us, Panduranga. Birth after birth I have asked you only this; now give it to us freely. Tuka says: searching everywhere, we find no one as kind as you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a request that refuses every ordinary request. He asks not for relief or reward but only that Vitthal's dark, beautiful form stay lodged in his heart and that the sweet Name never leave his mouth. He says this is the one thing he has begged across many lifetimes, and he asks God to give it freely, as something that costs God nothing to grant. The reason he keeps asking the same one is in the last line: he has searched everywhere and found no one else this merciful, so there is no other door to knock on.

GATHA 3992 The Nature of God

God's love, bound to his devotees

मराठी मूळ

भक्तांहून देवा आवडे तें काइ । त्रिभुवनीं नाहीं आन दुजें ॥1॥
नावडे वैकुंठ क्षीराचा सागर । धरोनि अंतर राहे दासा॥ध्रु.॥
सर्वभावें त्याचें सर्वस्वें ही गोड । तुळसीदळ कोड करुनी घ्यावें॥2॥
सर्वस्वें त्याचा ह्मणवी विकला । चित्त द्यावें बोला सांगितल्या ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तिसुखाचा बांधिला । आणीक विठ्ठला धर्म नाहीं॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What does God love more than His devotees? There is nothing else in all three worlds. He cares not for Vaikuntha or the ocean of milk; He stays close to His servants.

Everything about His devotees is dear to Him in every way; He delights in receiving even a single tulsi leaf. He calls Himself sold to them entirely, giving His heart to whatever words they speak.

Says Tuka, Vitthal is bound by the joy of devotion; He has no other duty.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What does God love more than his devotees? In all three worlds there is nothing else. He does not care for Vaikuntha or the ocean of milk; he holds a place in his heart and stays with his servant. Everything of the devotee's is sweet to him, in every way; he takes a single tulsi leaf and treasures it. He calls himself wholly sold to them; he gives his attention to whatever they say. Tuka says: Vitthal is bound by the joy of devotion. Other than that, he has no duty at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says God prizes nothing in the three worlds above his devotees, not even his own heaven or the ocean of milk where he reclines. He keeps a place in his heart and stays down here with his servant instead. Everything the devotee offers delights him, down to a single tulsi leaf he treasures like a fortune; he even calls himself sold to them outright, attending to their every word. The closing claim is the boldest: the joy of devotion is the one thing that binds God, and apart from answering it he holds himself to no other obligation at all.

GATHA 3993 The Power of the Name

The Name, the lowly one's friend

मराठी मूळ

राम कृष्ण गोविंद नारायण हरी । केशवा मुरारी पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
लक्ष्मीनिवासा पाहें दिनबंधु । तुझा लागो छंदु सदा मज ॥2॥
तुझे नामीं प्रेम देई अखंडित । नेणें तप व्रत दान कांहीं॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें हें चि गा मागणें । अखंड ही गाणें नाम तुझें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rama, Krishna, Govinda, Narayana, Hari, Keshava, Murari, Panduranga. O Lord of Lakshmi, look upon me, O Friend of the lowly.

May Your enchantment possess me always. Grant me unbroken love for Your name; I know no austerity, vows, or charity.

Says Tuka, this alone is my request: to sing Your name without ceasing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rama, Krishna, Govinda, Narayana, Hari. Keshava, Murari, Panduranga. You who are the home of Lakshmi, look at me. You are the friend of the lowly. Let me stay caught up in You always. Give me unbroken love for Your name. I know nothing of penance, vows, or charity. Tuka says: this is my one request. Let me sing Your name forever, without a break.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings the names of God together and then asks for only one thing. He calls Vitthal the home of Lakshmi and the friend of the lowly, and on that ground he asks to be looked upon. He admits he has none of the standard credentials: no austerity, no vows, no almsgiving. So his whole prayer narrows to a single request, that he be given unbroken love for the Name and never stop singing it. The poem makes the Name itself the path, in place of every other practice.

GATHA 3994 The Power of the Name

The Name, the only practice

मराठी मूळ

हरी तुझें नाम गाईन अखंड । याविण पाखंड नेणें कांहीं ॥1॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां देई संतसंग । तुझे नामीं रंग भरो मना॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will sing Your name unceasingly, O Hari. Beyond this, I know no other practice.

Says Tuka, grant me now the company of saints, and let my mind be dyed in the color of Your name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hari, I will sing Your name without stopping. Apart from this, I know no other way. Tuka says: now give me the company of the saints. Let my mind be dyed in the color of Your name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that singing the Name is the one practice he knows, and he calls everything else mere pretense. Then he names what he needs to keep it up: the company of the saints. The closing image is of cloth taking dye, and he asks that his mind soak up the color of the Name the same way, all the way through. Singing, satsang, and a mind fully steeped in God are bound together as one path.

GATHA 3995 The Power of the Name

The Name, drop the labor

मराठी मूळ

गाबाळाचे ग्रंथीं कां रे पडां सदा । मिथ्या भेदवादा वागवितां ॥1॥
संसारगाबाळीं पडसी निखळ । जालासी तूं खळ तेणें मना ॥ध्रु.॥
साधनसंकटीं गुंतसी कासया । व्यर्थ गा अपायामाजी गुंती ॥2॥
निर्मळ फुकाचें नाम गोविंदाचें । अनंतजन्माचे फेडी मळ ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नको करूं कांहीं कष्ट । नाम वाचे स्पष्ट हरि बोलें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you remain entangled in confusing texts and false disputes over differences? You have become thoroughly ensnared in worldly confusion, and your mind has grown wicked by it. Why do you get caught up in difficult practices? It is a vain and harmful entanglement.

The name of Govinda is pure and free; it washes away the stains of countless births. Says Tuka, do not labor at anything; simply speak the name of Hari clearly with your tongue.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you keep falling into muddled books, carrying around false talk of this difference and that? You sink right into the mess of worldly life, and your mind turns hard and wicked from it. Why get tangled in difficult practices? It is a useless snare, full of harm. The name of Govinda is clean and free of cost. It wipes away the stains of countless births. Tuka says: do not work yourself to exhaustion. Just speak the name of Hari clearly with your tongue.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the impulse to make liberation into hard labor and clever argument. He points to two traps: getting lost in confusing texts and quarrels over differences, and getting tangled in austere practices that only entangle you further. Against both he sets the Name of Govinda, which costs nothing and is freely available, and which washes off the residue of innumerable births. His instruction is to stop straining and simply say the Name aloud. The radical claim is that the easiest thing, the spoken Name, does what all the strenuous methods promised and failed to do.

GATHA 3996 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, holding the feet

मराठी मूळ

भाव धरिला चरणीं ह्मणवितों दास । अहिनिशीं ध्यास करीतसें ॥1॥
करीतसें ध्यास हृदयीं सकळ । भाव तो सबळ धरियेला ॥2॥
धरिले निश्चळ न सोडीं ते पाय । तुका ह्मणे सोय करीं माझी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have placed my devotion at Your feet and call myself Your servant. Day and night I hold You in my thoughts.

I meditate upon You in my heart with all my being, for I have taken hold of this faith with great strength. I have grasped Your feet firmly and will not let go.

Says Tuka, show me the way forward.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have set my love at Your feet and I call myself Your servant. Day and night I keep You in my thoughts. I keep You in my thoughts, in my whole heart. I have taken hold of this faith with all my strength. I have grasped those feet and will not let go. Tuka says: now make a way for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a devotion that is both total and stubborn. He has fixed his love on God's feet, taken the name of servant, and keeps God in mind around the clock. The act repeated through the poem is gripping the feet and refusing to release them. Having held on this firmly, he turns to God with one plea: make the way forward for me. The devotion is his to give, but the path is God's to open.

GATHA 3997 The Power of the Name

The Name, the lisping child

मराठी मूळ

तुझें नाम गाया न सोपें डवळा । गाऊं कळवळा प्रेमाचिया ॥1॥
येइल आवडी जैसी अंतरींची । तैसी मनाची कीर्ती गाऊं ॥2॥
माझें मुख नामीं रंगो सर्वकाळ । गोविंद गोपाळ राम कृष्ण ॥3॥
अबद्ध चांगलें गाऊं जैसें तैसें । बाहे बाळ जैसें मायबापा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे मज न लावीं वांकडें । मी तुझें बोबडें बाळ तान्हें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Singing Your name is not easy for one who is clumsy; I will sing with the earnestness of love. Whatever affection rises from within, with that I will sing from the chitta.

May my mouth be ever colored with the name: Govinda, Gopala, Rama, Krishna. Whether my singing is rough or fine, I will sing however I can, like a child babbling to its parents.

Says Tuka, do not look upon me crookedly; I am Your lisping infant child.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Singing Your name is not easy for a clumsy one. So I will sing it with the ache of love. Whatever longing rises inside me, with that I will sing Your praise from my heart. Let my mouth be colored with the name always: Govinda, Gopala, Rama, Krishna. Whether it comes out rough or fine, I will sing it however I can, the way a child calls out to its mother and father. Tuka says: do not look on me crookedly. I am Your lisping little baby.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he has no skill for singing the Name, so he offers the only thing he has, which is love. He says he will sing from whatever longing rises in him, polished or not, and asks that his mouth never lose the color of the Name. The governing image is a small child babbling to its parents: the words do not need to be correct, because a parent does not judge an infant's speech. So he asks God not to look at him crookedly, not to weigh the quality of his song, but to receive it as a mother and father receive a lisping baby.

GATHA 3998 The Nature of God

Nature of God, formless yet coming

मराठी मूळ

आतां तुज मज नाहीं दुजेपण । दाखवीं चरण पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
तुज रूप रेखा नाम गुण नाहीं । एक स्थान पाहीं गांव सिंव ॥ध्रु.॥
नावडे संगाति तुजा दुजयाची । आपुल्या भक्तांची प्रीति तुह्मां ॥2॥
परि आह्मांसाटीं होसील सगुण । स्तंभासी फोडून जयापरि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणें तैसें तुज काय उणें । देई दरुषण चरणांचें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now there is no separation between You and me; show me Your feet, O Panduranga. You have no form, no outline, no name, no quality, no fixed place or boundary.

You care not for the company of any other, for Your love is only for Your own devotees. Yet for our sake You take on a visible form, as You once burst through the pillar for Prahlada.

Says Tuka, what is lacking in You? Grant me the sight of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now there is no separateness between You and me. Show me Your feet, Panduranga. You have no form, no outline, no name, no quality. You have no one fixed place, no town, no border. You take no pleasure in the company of any other. Your love is only for Your own devotees. Yet for our sake You will take on a visible form, the way You once burst out of the pillar. Tuka says: what could be too much for You? Give me the sight of Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds two things about God at once. On one side, God is utterly without form, name, quality, or location, and shares Himself with no one but His own devotees. On the other side, that same formless God takes on a visible body for the sake of those who love Him, and Tukaram recalls Narayana bursting out of the pillar to save Prahlada as proof. So he reasons: if God can do that, nothing is beyond Him. On that ground he asks for what he wants, the sight of those feet, with the separation between himself and God already dissolved.

GATHA 3999 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, surrender or the abyss

मराठी मूळ

करणें तें हें चि करा । नरका अघोरा कां जातां॥1॥
जयामध्यें नारायण । शुद्धपण तें एक ॥ध्रु.॥
शरणागतां देव राखे। येरां वाखे विघ्नाचे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लीन व्हावें । कळे भावें वर्म हें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do this one thing and no other; why go to the dreadful hell? That alone is purity in which Narayana dwells. God protects those who surrender; all others face the storms of obstacles.

Says Tuka, one must become humble. Through devotion alone does this secret become clear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do this one thing and nothing else. Why go to the dreadful hell? The one pure thing is the thing that has Narayana inside it. God guards those who come to Him for refuge. The rest are torn apart by obstacles. Tuka says: you must become humble. Only through devotion does this secret become clear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a stark choice: do this one thing, or go down to a terrible hell. The one thing is whatever has God within it; that alone is pure, and everything else is not. He draws the line plainly: those who surrender are protected, and those who do not are battered by every obstacle. The condition is humility, becoming low. He ends by saying the whole secret only opens to one who approaches through devotion, not through cleverness.

GATHA 4000 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the story carries you across

मराठी मूळ

आणीक नका करुं चेष्टा । व्हाल कष्टा वरपडी॥1॥
सुखें करा हरिकथा । सर्वथा हे तारील ॥ध्रु.॥
अनाथाचा नाथ देव। अनुभव सत्य हा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बहुतां रिती । धरा चित्तीं सकळ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not make useless efforts elsewhere; you will only fall into misery. Happily engage in the story of Hari; it will certainly carry you across.

God is the Lord of the helpless; this truth is proven by experience. Says Tuka, in many ways, hold this firmly in your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not waste your effort on other things. You will only fall into hardship. Gladly tell the story of Hari. That, above all, will carry you across. God is the protector of the helpless. This is a truth proven by experience. Tuka says: in many ways I tell you, hold all of this in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against spending effort on anything else, since it leads only to suffering. In its place he sets one practice, gladly telling and hearing the story of Hari, and promises it will carry the listener across the worldly sea. He grounds the promise not in theory but in experience: God really does protect the helpless, and he has seen it. The closing line is an urging to take all of this to heart and keep it there.

Tukaram Gatha

तुकाराम गाथा

Original Marathi with English translation, a plain-language reading, and an explanation of what each abhanga means

Volume 9: Gatha 4001-4575 - 574 abhangas

About This Edition

This reading edition brings together four layers for every abhanga: the original Marathi, an English translation, a rendering in plain words, and a short explanation of its meaning.

The English layers are devotional reading aids. No translation can fully carry Tukaram's Marathi music, wordplay, cultural setting, or spiritual force. Readers are encouraged to return to the original and to consult Marathi teachers and established scholarly editions.

Marathi source: Tukaram Gatha on Marathi Wikisource. The source dataset identifies the Marathi text as public domain. English reading layers are from the Ananta Satsang online edition.

Editorial note: We ask forgiveness for any inaccuracies in rendering Tukaram Maharaj's original Marathi.

Contents

Gatha 4001-4050
50 abhangas

Gatha 4051-4100
50 abhangas

Gatha 4101-4150
50 abhangas

Gatha 4151-4201
50 abhangas

Gatha 4202-4251
50 abhangas

Gatha 4252-4301
50 abhangas

Gatha 4302-4351
50 abhangas

Gatha 4352-4401
50 abhangas

Gatha 4402-4451
50 abhangas

Gatha 4452-4501
50 abhangas

Gatha 4502-4551
50 abhangas

Gatha 4552-4575
24 abhangas

GATHA 4001 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty teacher

मराठी मूळ

मुखें सांगे भ्रमकथान । जन लोकाची कापितो मान॥1॥
असत्य सांगतो जनासी । नाहीं अनुभव आपणासी ॥ध्रु.॥
कथा करितो ज्ञानाची । अंतरीं आशा बहु लोभाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तो चि वेडा। त्याचें बहू उद्देश हाणावा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He speaks deluding stories from his mouth and nods along with the crowd. He tells falsehoods to the people, having no experience of his own.

He discourses on knowledge while harboring greed and desire within. Says Tuka, such a man is truly mad; his pretensions deserve to be exposed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With his mouth he tells deluding tales. He is cutting the throats of the people. He tells the people what is not true, for he has no experience of his own. He gives discourses on knowledge, while inside him there is much craving and greed. Tuka says: that man is the real madman. His pretense should be thoroughly exposed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on the teacher who speaks of God without knowing God. The man preaches wisdom and lectures the crowd, but he has no inner experience to back it, so what he hands them is delusion, and Tukaram calls it a cutting of throats because false guidance ruins the people who trust it. Worse, the same mouth that talks of knowledge hides a heart full of greed. The poem names the pattern bluntly: such pretension should be unmasked. The warning is also a mirror, asking whether what we teach is something we have actually lived.

GATHA 4002 Worldly Life

Worldly life, trades steeped in sin

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं दुसरा विचार । न लगे करावा चि फार ॥1॥
सेटए ना चौधरी । पांडेपण वाहे शिरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
पाप न लगे धुंडावें॥ पाहिजे तरि तेथें जावें ॥2॥
जकातीचा धंदा । तेथें पाप वसे सदा ॥3॥
गाई ह्मसी हेड । तुप विकी महा द्वाड ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहीं । तेथें पुण्या रीघ नाहीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No great deliberation is needed for this. Becoming a merchant, a headman, or a revenue officer, one carries the weight of worldly position on one's head.

Sin needs no searching; it is right there if you go looking. The tax-collection trade is where sin dwells permanently.

One who sells adulterated ghee from a cow's milk is deeply wicked. Says Tuka, look closely: there is no room for virtue in such pursuits.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no need to think long about this. The big merchant, the headman, the revenue clerk: each one carries the weight of his office on his head. You do not have to go searching for sin. It is right there, the moment you step in. The tax-collecting trade is a place where sin lives all the time. The man who waters down ghee from the cow's milk and sells it is deeply crooked. Tuka says: look and see. There is no doorway for virtue in any of that.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks plainly at certain worldly occupations and judges them by the sin built into them. The merchant, the village headman, the revenue officer all carry the load of their position, and the tax trade in particular is a place where wrongdoing is constant rather than occasional. He gives a sharp example, the dealer who adulterates ghee and sells it as pure, as a stand-in for trades that run on cheating. His point is not that work itself is evil but that some occupations leave no opening for virtue to enter. The poem invites an honest look at how one earns, and at whether the daily means itself is clean.

GATHA 4003 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the oldest kinship

मराठी मूळ

तुझी माझी आहे जुनी सोयरीक । आधीं बंधु लेंक मग जाले ॥1॥
वांटेकरी ह्मणून पुसती आतां । परि आहे सत्ता करीन ते ॥ध्रु.॥
लेंकीचें लेंकरुं नातु जाल्यावरी । मंगळा ही दुरि अंतरलों ॥2॥
बाइलेचा भाऊ पिसुना सोयरा । ह्मणउनि करा विनोद हा ॥3॥
आकुळीं तों करुं नये तें चि केलें । न बोलावें भलें तों चि आतां ॥4॥
न ह्मणसी लेंकी माउसी बहिणी । आह्मां केलें धणी पापाचें त्या ॥5॥
बहु पांचांजणी केली विटंबना । नये दाऊं जना तोंड ऐसें ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे आधीं मूळ तें चि धरुं । मागील तें करुं उरी आतां ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You and I have an old kinship; we were kin before brothers and children came along. Now the heirs ask about shares, but the authority remains mine to exercise.

After grandchildren and great-grandchildren arrived, even auspicious occasions grew distant. A wife's brother is but a nosy relative, so let us make light of this.

In the confusion, what should not have been done was done; now it is best not to speak of it. Says Tuka, let us first hold fast to the original bond and then settle whatever remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You and I have an old kinship. We were bound before there were any brothers or children. Now the heirs come asking about their shares. But the right is mine, and I will use it. After daughters' children and grandchildren came along, even the festivals grew distant from me. A wife's brother is just a meddling in-law, so let us make light of this. In the confusion, what should not have been done got done. Now the kind thing is to say no more about it. Do not call them daughter, aunt, sister. They have made me a master of nothing but sin. The five of them shamed me badly. One should not show such a face to the world. Tuka says: let us first hold to the original bond. Whatever is left over, let us settle it after.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of his bond with God as the oldest kinship of all, older than any tie of blood or family. He sets that original relationship against the crowd of worldly relations that came later: heirs claiming shares, in-laws meddling, festivals and obligations pulling him away. He treats those entanglements wryly, even the sense of shame they have brought him, as things best laughed off and not dwelt on. His resolve is to grip the first bond, the one with God, before anything else. The worldly accounts can wait; the kinship that came before everything comes first.

GATHA 4004 Autobiography

Old age, the spent vessel

मराठी मूळ

मागें बहुत जाले खेळ । आतां बळ वोसरलें ॥1॥
हालों नये चालों आतां । घट रिता पोकळ ॥ध्रु.॥
भाजल्याची दिसे घडी । पट ओढी न साहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पाहतां घडी । जगा जोडी अंगारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Many games have been played in the past, but now the strength has waned. I cannot walk or move anymore; this vessel is empty and hollow.

It shows the crease of one who has been scorched; it cannot bear even a gentle tug. Says Tuka, when you look at this body, all it offers the world is ashes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Many games have been played already. Now the strength has drained away. I cannot stir, I cannot walk anymore. The pot is empty and hollow. It shows the crack of a thing that has been fired. It cannot bear even a tug on the cloth. Tuka says: look at this body. All it has to give the world now is ashes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as an old man taking stock of a worn-out body. The games of an active life are behind him, the strength is gone, and he can no longer move about. He pictures the body as an empty clay pot, fired and cracked, unable to take even the lightest strain. The closing line is unsparing: this body, looked at honestly, has nothing left to offer the world but ashes. It is a clear-eyed reckoning with the body's end, the kind of looking that turns a person toward what does not turn to ash.

GATHA 4005 Prayers

Cry for help, come running

मराठी मूळ

आळस आला अंगा । धांव घालीं पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
सोसूं शरीराचे भाव । पडती अवगुणाचे घाव ॥ध्रु.॥
करावीं व्यसनें। दुरी येउनि नारायणें ॥2॥
जवळील दुरी । जालों देवा धरीं करीं॥3॥
ह्मणउनि देवा । वेळोवेळां करीं धावा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । दुरी धरूं नका अंगा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Laziness has overtaken my body; rush to my aid, O Panduranga. I endure the moods of this body as the blows of bad qualities rain down.

Narayana, come near and drive away these vices. I have strayed far from You, O Lord; take me by the hand.

Therefore, O God, come rushing to my rescue again and again. Says Tuka, Panduranga, do not hold me at a distance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Laziness has come over my body. Come running, Panduranga. I bear the moods of this body, and the blows of my bad qualities keep falling. Narayana, come close and drive these habits away. I am near You, yet I have gone far; God, take me by the hand. So, God, again and again I call You to come. Tuka says: Panduranga, do not hold me away from You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying out of weakness, not strength. He names a sluggishness that has crept into his body, and the way his own faults strike at him like blows he cannot stop. He does not pretend to fix himself; he asks Narayana to come near and drive the habits out, and to take him by the hand. The ache underneath is that he is near God and still feels far, so he calls again and again, and his last word is the plea not to be kept at a distance.

GATHA 4006 Social Criticism

Social criticism, as seed so fruit

मराठी मूळ

झंवविली महारें । त्याची व्याली असे पोरें ॥1॥
करी संताचा मत्सर । कोपें उभारोनि कर ॥ध्रु.॥
बीज तैसें फळ । वरी आलें अमंगळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठावें । ऐसें जालें अनुभवें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One fathered by a lowly person bears fruit according to that seed. He harbors envy toward the saints and raises his fist in anger.

As the seed, so the fruit; what grows from it is inauspicious. Says Tuka, this is known and proven by experience.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is the offspring of a base begetting, and the fruit follows the seed. He hates the saints, and raises his fist in anger. As the seed, so the fruit; what comes of it is foul. Tuka says: I know this; experience has made it plain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pointing at a pattern, not a person, when he ties what someone produces to the root it grew from. The man he describes hates the saints and lifts his fist against them, and Tukaram reads that hatred as the natural fruit of a corrupt source. The claim is harsh: vile conduct comes from a vile beginning, as fruit comes from seed. He grounds it not in theory but in what he says he has watched happen. The mirror for the listener is to ask what kind of fruit one's own anger toward holy people is bearing.

GATHA 4007 Social Criticism

Social criticism, blaming God

मराठी मूळ

पापी तो नाठवी आपुल्या संचिता । ठेवी भगवंता वरी बोल ॥1॥
भेईना करितां पापाचे डोंगर । दुर्जन पामर दुराचारी॥ध्रु.॥
नाठवी तो खळ आपुली करणी । देवासी निंदोनि बोलतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याच्या तोंडा लागो काटी । नाहीं जगजेठी जया चित्तीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wrongdoer never reflects on his own accumulated deeds but lays blame upon God. He fears not though he piles up mountains of sin, that wretched and vile wrongdoer.

The wicked one never recalls his own conduct; he goes on slandering God. Says Tuka, may thorns fill his mouth, for he who has no room in his chitta for the Lord of the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sinner never thinks of his own gathered deeds; he puts the blame on God. He piles up mountains of sin and is not afraid, that low, wretched, evil-living man. The fool never recalls his own doing; he goes on slandering God. Tuka says: let thorns fill the mouth of the man who has no room for the Lord of the world in his heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the move of a man who will not own his own life. Such a person ignores the deeds he has stored up and lays the fault on God instead, heaping sin without fear. The thing Tukaram cannot bear is the slander: the same mouth that should hold the Name is used to abuse the Lord. His curse, that thorns fill that mouth, is aimed at the speech, not at damning the soul. The self-examination underneath is the question of whether we blame God for the harvest of our own choices, and whether the Lord has any room left in our heart.

GATHA 4008 The Nature of God

Nondual seeing, no ground for fate

मराठी मूळ

आधीं देह पाहता वाव । कैचा प्रारब्धासी ठाव॥1॥
कां रे रडतोसी माना । लागें विठ्ठलचरणा ॥ध्रु.॥
दुजेपण जालें वाव। त्रिभुवनासि नाहीं ठाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खरे पाहें । विठ्ठल पाहोनियां राहें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When you look closely, this body itself is empty; where then is there any ground for fate? Why do you weep? Devote yourself to the feet of Vitthal. When duality itself is seen to be hollow, there is no place for it in all three worlds.

Says Tuka, look truly and remain steadfast in the vision of Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look first: the body itself is empty. Where then is there any place for fate? Why are you crying, my mind? Hold to Vitthal's feet. Duality has become empty; in the three worlds it has no place. Tuka says: see truly. Look at Vitthal, and stay.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is cutting away the ground that worry stands on. He tells his own mind to look closely and see that the body it grieves over is hollow; if the body is empty, the karma and fate hung on it have nowhere to rest. He pushes further, saying duality itself is hollow and has no place in all three worlds. The cure he offers is not argument but attention: hold to Vitthal's feet, look truly at Vitthal, and remain there. The weeping stops not because the problem is solved but because the seer sees there was no second thing to fear.

GATHA 4009 Renunciation

Renunciation, women and wealth

मराठी मूळ

िस्त्रया धन बा हें खोटें । नागवले मोठे मोठे ॥1॥
ह्मणोनि सांडा दोनी । सुख पावाल निदानीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्वदुःखासी कारण । हीं च दोन्हीचीं प्रमाण ॥2॥
आशा सर्वस्वें सांडावी । तेणें निजपदवी पावावी ॥3॥
देह लोभें नाडला । घाला यमाचा पडला॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे निरापेक्षा । कांहीं न धरावी अपेक्षा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Women and wealth are false; they have ruined even the mightiest. Therefore abandon both, and you will find peace in the end.

These two alone are the root cause of all suffering. Desire must be abandoned entirely, and by that one attains the supreme state.

The body deluded by greed falls into Yama's trap. Says Tuka, be free of all expectation; hold onto no craving whatsoever.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Women and wealth are false, my friend; they have stripped even the great ones bare. So let both go, and in the end you will find peace. These two alone are the cause of all sorrow; both are the proof of it. Desire must be given up entirely, and by that the true state is reached. The body deluded by greed has fallen into Yama's trap. Tuka says: want nothing; hold to no craving at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming two snares and the cost of carrying them. He calls women and wealth false because the security people stake on them does not hold; even the mighty have been ruined by them. He does not soften the prescription: let both go entirely, give up desire itself, and the true state opens. The stakes are stated plainly, the body lost to greed falls into death's noose. Read for self-examination, the abhanga is less about scorning others than about loosening one's own grip on what cannot be kept.

GATHA 4010 The Power of the Name

The Name, intention and essence

मराठी मूळ

जेंजें होआवें संकल्पें । तें चि पुण्य होय पाप ॥1॥
कारण तें मनापासीं । मेळविल्या मिळे रसीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडी मांडी हाली चाली । राहे तरि भली बोली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सार । नांव जीवनाचे सागर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whatever arises by intention becomes either virtue or sin. The cause lies with the mind; when it is aligned, the essence is tasted.

Whether you start or stop, move or stay still, speak well while you remain. Says Tuka, the essence of this is the name, which is the ocean of true life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whatever arises by intention becomes either merit or sin. The cause lies with the mind; align it, and the essence is tasted. Whether you put down or take up, move or stay, speak well while you remain. Tuka says: the heart of it is the Name, the ocean of true living.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is locating the root of merit and sin in intention rather than in the act alone. The same deed turns to virtue or to fault depending on the mind behind it, so the work is to align the mind, and then the real taste is given. Whatever the body does, start or stop, move or rest, he asks that speech stay good while life lasts. The single thing he calls the essence is the Name, which he names the ocean that holds all true life. The point is that practice need not be elaborate when the Name is held and the intention is clean.

GATHA 4011 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the body of wet clay

मराठी मूळ

ओले मातीचा भरवसा । कां रे धरिशी मानसा ॥1॥
डोळे चिरीव चांगले । वृद्धपणीं सरवया जाले ॥ध्रु.॥
नाक सरळ चांगलें । येउन हनवटी लागलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें नाहीं । तंव हरिला भज रे कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you place your trust in this body made of wet clay, O mortal? Those fine, sharp eyes will droop and blur in old age. That straight, handsome nose will bend down and touch the chin.

Says Tuka, before that time arrives, worship Hari with whatever you have.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you trust this body of wet clay, O man? Those fine, cut eyes will dim and run in old age. That straight, handsome nose will droop and touch the chin. Tuka says: before that day comes, worship Hari with whatever you have.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pressing the brevity of the body against the urgency of practice. He calls the body wet clay to say it has no firmness worth trusting, and he walks through the slow ruin of the very features people prize, the sharp eyes that will blur, the fine nose that will sag to the chin. The stakes are time: the decay is certain and already on its way. So the instruction is to worship Hari now, before age arrives, with whatever one has, rather than waiting for a strength that is leaving.

GATHA 4012 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the age foretold

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मां सांगतों कलयुगा फळ । पुढें होइल ब्रह्मगोळ॥1॥
आह्मां ह्मणतील कंटक । ऐसा पाडिती दंडक ॥ध्रु.॥
ि◌स्त्रया पूजुनि सरे देती । भलते ि◌स्त्रयेसि भलते जाती ॥2॥
श्रेष्ठ वर्ण वेदविद्वांस। अंगीकारी मद्यमांस ॥3॥
चारी वर्ण अठरा याती । कवळ करिती एक पंक्ती ॥4॥
ह्मणती अंबेचा क्रीडाकल्लोळ । शिवरूप प्राणी सकळ ॥5॥
ऐसें होइल शकुन देतों । अगोदर सांगुन जातों ॥6॥
तुका सद्गुरुदास्य करी । ि◌सिद्ध पाणी वाहे घरीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I tell you the fruit of this Kali Yuga; ahead, chaos will engulf the world. They will call us troublemakers and establish such corrupt customs.

They will worship women and offer them up; anyone will go with anyone. The highest castes and Vedic scholars will take to meat and liquor.

All four castes and eighteen communities will eat together from one plate. They will say it is all the sport of the Goddess, that every creature is a form of Shiva.

Says Tuka, I give you this omen and tell you in advance. Tuka serves the Sadguru, and by that, perfection flows into his household like water.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I tell you the fruit of this Kali age; ahead there will be chaos in the world. They will call us troublemakers and lay down rules to match. They will worship women and give them away; anyone will couple with anyone, any caste with any caste. The highest castes, the knowers of the Vedas, will take to liquor and meat. All four castes and the eighteen communities will eat together from one plate. They will say it is the Goddess's play, that every creature is a form of Shiva. I give you this as an omen; I tell you beforehand and go. Tuka serves the Sadguru, and at his house the perfected ones carry water.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is foretelling a coming disorder and naming who will be blamed for resisting it. He sketches an age where rules are bent to license, where the learned abandon their discipline for liquor and meat, and where every boundary is dissolved and then justified as the sport of the Goddess or the oneness of all in Shiva. His grievance is with the misuse: high doctrine, that all is divine, turned into a permission slip for appetite. He marks himself and his fellow devotees as the ones such an age will brand troublemakers. He ends by setting his own ground against it: he serves the true Guru, and that service, not the slogans, is what brings the perfected to his door.

GATHA 4013 Social Criticism

Social criticism, selling the sacred

मराठी मूळ

त्या हरिदासांची भेटी घेतां । नकान उभयतासी जातां॥1॥
माते परीस थोरी कथा । भाड घेतां न लाजे ॥ध्रु.॥
देतां घेतां नरकवासी । उभयतांसी रवरव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नरकगांवा । जाती हांवा धरोनि ॥3॥
देव गावा ध्यावा ऐसें जालें । परदेशी नाहीं उगलें ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who take payment to grant audiences with saints send both parties to hell. Greater than a mother is the sacred discourse, yet they are not ashamed to charge a fee.

Both giver and taker become dwellers in hell, suffering in the pit of torment. Says Tuka, they rush eagerly toward the city of hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who take a fee to grant a meeting with the saints send both sides to hell. Greater than a mother is the holy telling, yet they are not ashamed to charge for it. Both the giver and the taker become dwellers in hell; both fall into the screaming pit. Tuka says: they go to the town of hell, and they run there eagerly. It has come to this, that God must be sung and meditated on, yet the stranger is not left alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking the traffic in holy things, not the things themselves. He says the discourse of God is greater than a mother, and so charging money to arrange a meeting with the saints debases what should be freely given. The verdict falls on both parties, the one who takes the fee and the one who pays it, because both have agreed to price the priceless. His image of the screaming pit is severe, but the target is the transaction. The self-examination is to ask whether we have learned to put a gate and a fee around what God meant to be open.

GATHA 4014 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the test by fire

मराठी मूळ

वडील आणि धाकुलें । नाहीं ऐसें जालें दुसरें तें ॥1॥
नाहीं लागत मुळीहूनि । सुहृदजन आणि जननी ।
लागल्या लागें त्यागें सांडूनि। लोभीये मांडणी संयोगाची ॥ध्रु.॥
शिव बाटला जीवदशे । बहुत ओतत आलें ठसें ।
हीन जालें भूषणाचें इच्छे । निवडती कैसे गुणागुण ॥2॥
आतां हे हुतांश तों बरें । अवघे एक च मोहरें ।
पिटिलियाविण नव्हे खरें । निवडें बरें जातिशुद्ध ॥3॥
तुका उतावेळ याजसाटीं । आहे तें निवेदीन पोटीं ।
आवडी द्यावी जी येथें लाटी । तुझी जगजेठी कीर्ती वाखाणीन ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Elder or younger, nothing quite like this has ever been. From the very root, neither kinsmen nor mother are of any use.

Driven by attachment, they abandon all and set up the marketplace of union. Shiva became tainted by worldly existence; many impressions have been stamped upon Him.

The luster of ornaments has dimmed, and how shall virtues and faults be sorted? Now let the fire of truth burn well; let all face the same test. Without being beaten, the truth will not emerge; only then does pure lineage become clear.

Says Tuka, I am eager for this reason: I will offer all I have. Grant me Your love here, O Lord of the world, and I will sing Your glory.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Elder or younger, there has never been anything else like this. From the root, neither kinsmen nor mother are of any use. Driven by attachment, people leave all and set up the marketplace of union; the greedy build their arrangement of meeting. Even Shiva was stained by the state of a living being; many marks have been pressed into Him. The shine of the ornament has gone dull; how then are good and bad to be told apart? Now let the fire of truth burn well, and let all meet one test. Without being beaten, the truth will not come out; only then does the pure metal show clear. Tuka says: for this I am eager. I will lay open what is within me. Grant me Your love here, O Lord of the world, and I will sing Your glory.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking to be tested rather than spared. He observes that kin and mother are no help at the root, that attachment drives people into a marketplace of bonds, and that even the high name of Shiva gets tarnished once it is dragged through worldly use. When the ornament has lost its shine, true and false can no longer be told apart by looking, so he asks for the fire and the hammer. The blow that hurts is the very thing that proves the metal pure. He welcomes it, offering to lay his inner life bare, and asks only for God's love so that he may sing the Lord's glory through the testing.

GATHA 4015 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, carried like a chick

मराठी मूळ

भोगी जाला त्याग । गीती गातां पांडुरंग । इंद्रियांचा लाग । आह्मांवरूनि चुकला ॥1॥
करुनि ठेविलों निश्चळ । भय नाहीं तळमळ । घेतला सकळ । अवघा भार विठ्ठलें ॥ध्रु.॥
तळीं पिक्षणीचे परी । नखें चोंची चारा धरी । आणुनियां घरीं । मुखीं घाली बाळका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ये आवडी । आह्मीं पांयीं दिली बुडी । आहे तेथें जोडी । जन्मांतरींचें ठेवणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Renunciation came naturally while singing the songs of Panduranga. The grip of the senses has loosened from me.

He has made me steady and free of fear and anxiety; Vitthal has taken up my entire burden. Like a mother bird that holds food in beak and claw, brings it home, and places it in her chick's mouth, so does He care for me.

Says Tuka, with this love we have plunged at His feet. The treasure stored from past births is right there at His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Renunciation came of itself while I sang of Panduranga. The grip of the senses slipped off me. He has made me still; there is no fear, no restlessness. Vitthal has taken up the whole burden. Like a mother bird that holds food in beak and claw, brings it to the nest, and puts it in her chick's mouth, so He feeds me. Tuka says: with this love we have plunged at His feet. The treasure stored from past births is right there at His feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a letting-go that arrived without effort. Singing of Panduranga, he found renunciation come on its own and the hold of the senses simply loosen. The relief is total: he is made still, without fear or unease, because Vitthal has lifted his whole burden. His image is tender and helpless at once, a chick fed by the mother bird who carries the food and places it in its mouth, which is to say he is no longer the one providing for himself. The plunge at the feet is glad surrender, and there, he says, the treasure saved up across many births is finally found.

GATHA 4016 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the hollow show

मराठी मूळ

कुंकवाची ठेवाठेवी । बोडकादेवी काशाला ॥1॥
दिवस गमा भरा पोट । कां गे नेटनेटावा ॥ध्रु.॥
दिमाख हा कोणां दावा । लटकी जीवा चरफड ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे झोंडगीं हो । कुंफ्दा कां हो कोरडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why store vermillion when you have a shaven head, O widowed goddess? Just pass the day, fill your belly; why make such a fuss? Whom are you showing off to? This agitation of the jiva is pointless. Says Tuka, just become a ragpicker; why cry dry tears?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why store away vermillion when your head is shaven, widowed one? Just pass the day and fill your belly; why all this fuss over looking proper? Whom is this display for? This burning of the heart is false. Tuka says: just become a ragpicker; why weep dry tears?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing a show kept up after its meaning is gone. He pictures a widow who hoards the vermillion she can no longer wear, fretting over an appearance that fits nothing in her life, and he asks the blunt question of whom the display is even for. The agitation, he says, is hollow, a heat with no real fire under it. His harshness, telling her to drop the pretense and simply live, is aimed at the empty performance, not at her grief. The mirror for any listener is the fuss we keep up for an audience over things that have already lost their place.

GATHA 4017 Devotion to Vitthal

Clinging to the feet, the Lord loses nothing

मराठी मूळ

तुझें प्रेम माझ्या हृदयीं आवडी । चरण न सोडीं पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
कासया सिनासि थोरिवां कारणें । काय तुझें उणें होइल देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
चातकाची चिंता हरली जळधरें । काय त्याचें सरे थोरपण ॥2॥
चंद्र चकोरांचा पुरवी सोहळा । काय त्याची कळा न्यून होय ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज अनाथा सांभाळीं । हृदयकमळीं ि◌स्थर राहें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your love is the delight of my heart; I will not release Your feet, O Panduranga. Why do You hesitate for the sake of Your dignity? What will it cost You, O Lord? The rain cloud quenches the chataka bird's longing; does its greatness diminish by that? The moon fulfills the chakor bird's delight; does its splendor decrease thereby? Says Tuka, protect me, this helpless one. Remain steady in the lotus of my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your love is the delight of my heart. I will not let go of Your feet, Panduranga. Why do You hold back for the sake of Your dignity? What would it cost You, Lord? The rain cloud ends the chataka bird's thirst; does its greatness shrink because of that? The moon fills the chakora bird with delight; does its splendor grow less? Tuka says: protect me, this helpless one. Stay steady in the lotus of my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds onto Vitthal's feet and refuses to let go, then argues with the Lord's hesitation. He hears God hanging back as if grace would somehow lower his standing, and he answers that giving costs the giver nothing. The rain cloud quenches the thirsty bird without losing its grandeur; the moon delights the chakora without dimming its light. So God can stoop to one helpless devotee and lose nothing of his greatness. The closing plea names the only request: come and stay fixed in the heart.

GATHA 4018 Ecstasy and Joy

Grace as inheritance, the easy feast

मराठी मूळ

आम्ही आइते जेवणार । न लगे सोसावे डोंगर । सुखाचा वेव्हार । तेणें चि वाढलें ॥1॥
ठेवा जोडला मिरासी । ठाव जाला पायांपासी । नव्हे आणिकांसी । रीघ तेथें यावया ॥ध्रु.॥
बळी दिला जीवभाव । नेणें आणिकांचे नांव । धरिला एक भाव । तो विश्वास फळला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों बळी । आह्मी निकट जवळी । बोलिलों तें पाळीं । वचन स्वामी आमचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the ones who feast on what is ready; we need not endure mountains of toil. The transaction of joy has only increased by that.

An inheritance has been secured, a place at His feet has been won, where none else may enter. We have offered up our very life-breath and know no other name.

We held to one faith alone, and that trust has borne fruit. Says Tuka, we have made our offering. We are close, right beside Him.

Our Lord keeps the promise He gave us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are the ones who eat what is already cooked. We do not have to cross mountains of toil. The dealing of joy has only grown by that. An inheritance has been won, a place secured at His feet, where no one else can push in. We have given up our very life-breath; we know no other name. We held to one faith alone, and that trust has borne fruit. Tuka says: we have made our offering. We are close, right beside Him. Our Lord keeps the word He gave us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the way of devotion as effortless inheritance, not earned by harsh labor. He is one who simply eats the meal already prepared, not one who must climb mountains of austerity, and joy keeps increasing because of that ease. The price was a different kind: he handed over his own life-breath and his attention, refusing every other name. That single-pointed trust is what bore fruit and won him a fixed place at the feet where no rival can crowd in. The poem ends in confidence that the Lord keeps his promise to those who come this near.

GATHA 4019 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion at the feet, not the face

मराठी मूळ

न लगावी दिठी । माझी तुझे मुखवटी ॥1॥
आधीं पाउलें पाउलें । ते मी पाहेन तें भलें ॥ध्रु.॥
देईन हे काया । वरि सांडणें सांडाया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । बहु आवडसी जीवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not cast my gaze upon Your face, Lord. Let me first behold Your feet, step by step; that alone will satisfy me.

I will lay down this body, ready to be discarded. Says Tuka, O God, my jiva loves You dearly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not turn my gaze to Your face, Lord. First let me look at Your feet, step by step; that alone will satisfy me. I will lay down this body, ready to be thrown away. Tuka says: O God, my jiva loves You dearly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks to be kept at the feet rather than lifted to the face. The face is the higher, intimate vision, and he sets it aside, content to gaze at the feet step by step, because that lowliness is itself his devotion. He offers the body freely, treating it as something to be discarded once it has served. The closing line names the bare truth underneath the request: the soul simply loves God, and that love asks for nearness at the feet, not for elevation.

GATHA 4020 Devotion to Vitthal

The simple folk, devotion within reach

मराठी मूळ

कोण आमचीं योगतपें । करूं बापें जाणावीं ॥1॥
गीत संतसंगें गाऊं । उभीं ठाऊं जागरणीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आमुचा तो नव्हे लाग । करूं त्याग जावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे इंद्रियांसी । ये चि रसीं रंगवूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What yoga or austerities are within our reach, we who are simple folk? We will sing in the company of saints and stand awake at the night vigil. Such rigorous striving is not our way, nor can we renounce everything and depart.

Says Tuka, we will color all our senses in this one flavor of devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What yoga or austerities are within our reach, we plain people? We will sing the song in the company of saints, and stand awake through the night vigil. Hard striving is not our way; nor can we renounce everything and go off. Tuka says: we will color all our senses in this one flavor.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the path of yoga and severe austerity as something beyond ordinary people like himself. In its place he names what such people can actually do: sing with the saints, keep the night vigil, stay together in company. He admits plainly that they cannot renounce the world and walk away into solitude. So instead of starving the senses, he turns them: every sense gets dyed in the single flavor of devotion, which becomes the whole practice.

GATHA 4021 The Power of the Name

The Name, the boat across the ocean

मराठी मूळ

नाम तारक भवसिंधु । विठ्ठल तारक भवसिंधु ॥1॥
नामधारक तया अरि मित्रु । समता त्यागुनियां क्रोधु ॥ध्रु.॥
नामधारक तया । कदापि न घडे विषयाचा बाधु ॥2॥
ज्या नामें तरले शुकादिक । नारद संत मुनिजन साधु ॥3॥
जाणूनियां जे नसरें । ते नेणति जैसा गज अंधु ॥4॥
सहज तुकया । नाम चि जपतां स्वरुपीं वेधु ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Name is the vessel to cross the ocean of worldly existence; Vitthal is the vessel to cross the ocean of worldly existence. One who bears the Name regards friend and foe alike, casting aside anger and abiding in equanimity.

No sensory temptation can ever touch the bearer of the Name. By that Name, Shuka and others were liberated, along with Narada, saints, and sages.

Those who knowingly refuse it are like a blind elephant, stumbling in ignorance. Says Tuka, simply by chanting the Name, one naturally becomes absorbed in the true Self.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Name is the boat that carries you across the ocean of worldly life; Vitthal is the boat that carries you across. One who holds the Name sees enemy and friend as the same, letting go of anger and resting in evenness. No temptation of the senses can ever harm the one who holds the Name. By that Name Shuka and others crossed over, and Narada, and the saints, sages, and seekers. Those who know it and still refuse it are like a blind elephant, stumbling on. Tuka says: simply by repeating the Name, one is naturally drawn into the true Self.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga makes the Name the whole vessel of liberation, identifying it with Vitthal himself. Holding the Name is not a magic charm but a change of heart: the devotee treats friend and foe alike, drops anger, and grows steady, so that no craving can take hold. Tukaram backs the claim by naming those who crossed over by it, from Shuka to Narada and the saints. Then he turns to the willful: those who recognize the Name and still refuse it are like a blind elephant blundering forward. The promise is that mere repetition, kept up, pulls one naturally into one's true nature.

GATHA 4022 The Power of the Name

The Name as family duty, refusing even liberation

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां वैष्णवांचा कुळधर्म कुळींचा । विश्वास नामाचा एका भावें ॥1॥
तरी च हरिचेदास ह्मणवितां श्लाघीजे । निर्वासना कीजे चित्त आधी ॥ध्रु.॥
गाऊं नाचूं प्रेमें आनंदें कीर्तनीं । भुक्ति मुक्ति दोन्ही न मगों तुज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा ऐसी यांची सेवा। द्यावी जी केशवा जन्मोजन्मीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Our ancestral duty, the heritage of our Vaishnava clan, is faith in the Name with single-pointed devotion. Only then can one truly claim to be a servant of Hari; first make the mind free of desire.

We will sing and dance with love and bliss in kirtan; we ask You for neither worldly enjoyment nor liberation. Says Tuka, O Keshava, grant us this service of the saints, birth after birth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our family duty, the inheritance of our Vaishnava line, is faith in the Name with single feeling. Only then can you rightly be called a servant of Hari; first make the mind free of desire. We will sing and dance with love and joy in the kirtan. We ask You for neither worldly pleasure nor liberation. Tuka says: O Keshava, grant us this service, birth after birth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presents devotion to the Name as something inherited, the duty of his Vaishnava clan, held with whole-hearted faith. He sets a condition under the boast: you can only call yourself Hari's servant once the mind has been emptied of desire. Then comes the radical refusal: in the joy of kirtan he wants neither worldly enjoyment nor even liberation, the two prizes most seekers chase. What he asks for instead is the service itself, the singing and dancing before God, and he asks for it not once but in every birth to come.

GATHA 4023 Prayers

The rare human birth, gripping God's waist

मराठी मूळ

पावलों हा देह कागतालिन्यायें । न घडे उपायें घडों आलें ॥1॥
आतां माझीं खंडीं देह देहांतरें । अभय दातारें देऊनियां॥ध्रु.॥
अंधळ्याचे पाठीं धनाची चरवी । अघटित तेंवि घडों आलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे योग घडला बरवा । आतां कास देवा न सोडीं मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I obtained this human body as if by a stroke of luck; what could not happen by design has come to pass. Now, O generous Lord, end my cycle of body after body by granting me fearlessness.

Like a blind man finding a purse of gold, this impossible thing has happened. Says Tuka, this fortunate union has occurred. Now I will not let go of Your waist, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I came into this human body as if by sheer chance, the way a crow lands just as a fruit falls. What could not happen by any plan has happened. Now, generous Lord, end my round of body after body by granting me fearlessness. Like a blind man stumbling onto a pot of gold, this impossible thing has come to pass. Tuka says: a good joining has happened. Now I will not let go of Your waist, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marvels that this human birth, and the meeting with God it allows, came almost by accident, not by his own design. He uses two images of unearned luck: the crow at the falling fruit, and the blind man stumbling on buried gold. Because the chance is so rare and undeserved, he will not waste it. He asks the Lord to break the cycle of repeated bodies by giving him fearlessness, the freedom that ends rebirth. Having found God by luck, he resolves to grip him tight and never let go.

GATHA 4024 Confession and Sin

Confession, the knot that will not loosen

मराठी मूळ

कळे परि न सुटे गांठी । जालें पोटीं कुपथ्य ॥1॥
अहंकाराचें आंदणें जीव । राहे कींव केली ते ॥ध्रु.॥
हेंकडाची एकी च वोढी । ते ही खोडी सांगती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगों किती । कांहीं चित्तीं न राहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One understands, yet the inner knot does not loosen; the wrong diet has already entered the belly. The ego's dowry holds the jiva captive; where then is the compassion it was promised? Stubbornness pulls in only one direction, and even that fault people will point out.

Says Tuka, how much can I explain? Nothing stays in anyone's mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I understand, yet the knot will not come loose; the wrong food is already in my belly. The ego's dowry holds the jiva captive; where is the mercy that was promised? Stubbornness pulls only one way, and even that fault people keep pointing out. Tuka says: how much can I keep explaining? Nothing stays in the mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses a failure he can see clearly but cannot fix. He knows the knot of attachment is there, yet knowing does not untie it; the harm is already swallowed, like bad food taken in. The ego comes as a dowry the soul cannot return, keeping it bound, so the promised relief never arrives. His own stubbornness drags him in one fixed direction, a fault others notice and name aloud. The poem ends in honest exhaustion: explaining the problem changes nothing, because the teaching will not stay in the mind. It points the reader to watch this same gap in themselves.

GATHA 4025 Social Criticism

Social criticism, speak up against the wicked

मराठी मूळ

सांडावी हे भीड अधमाचे चाळे । मद्यपीर बरळे भलत्या छंदें ॥1॥
ऐसे तंव तुह्मी नाहीं जी दिसत । कां हें अनुचित वदलेत ॥ध्रु.॥
फांटा जाला त्यासी नाहीं वोढा वारा । वेरसा चि खरा हाटो गुण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं ज्याच्या बापा ताळा । तो देखे विटाळा संतां अंगीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Abandon the timidity that tolerates the ways of the wicked. A drunkard babbles whatever fancy takes him.

Surely you are not that sort; why then have you spoken such improper words? A spoiled branch catches no breeze; its true nature shows itself everywhere. Says Tuka, one whose own father has no sense of propriety sees impurity in the saints themselves.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Drop the timidity that puts up with the ways of the wicked. A drunkard babbles whatever fancy seizes him. Surely you are not that kind of man; why then did you speak such improper words? A spoiled branch catches no breeze; its real nature shows itself everywhere. Tuka says: a man whose own father has no sense of decency is the one who sees impurity on the bodies of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the listener to stop being so deferential that they tolerate evil; silence in front of the wicked is itself a fault. He compares the offender to a drunkard who blurts out whatever crosses his mind, then presses the person who has spoken badly: you seemed better than this, so why these improper words? The spoiled-branch image says a corrupt nature betrays itself in every direction. The closing line turns the charge sharpest: the man who sneers that the saints are impure is only revealing the indecency bred in his own house. The poem aims at the slandering pattern, urging the hearer not to harbor it.

GATHA 4026 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration of the form, the demanding child

मराठी मूळ

आवडे हें रूप गोजिरें सगुण । पाहातां लोचन सुखावलें ॥1॥
आतां दृष्टीपुढें ऐसा चि तूं राहीं । जों मी तुज पाहें पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
लाचावलें मन लागलीसे गोडी । तें जीवें न सोडीं ऐसें जालें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी केली जे लडिवाळी । पुरवावी आळी मायबापें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I love this beautiful and gracious form. Beholding it, my eyes are filled with delight.

Now remain before my sight just as You are, so that I may gaze upon You, O Panduranga. My mind has tasted the sweetness and grown eager; it has become inseparable from this love.

Says Tuka, we have been playful children; now, as our parents, fulfill our every whim.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I love this lovely form with all its qualities. When I look at it, my eyes are filled with joy. Now stay just like this before my sight, so that I may keep gazing at You, Panduranga. My mind has tasted the sweetness and grown greedy for it; it has become something I cannot give up while I live. Tuka says: we have been your spoiled children; now, as our mother and father, grant us every whim.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram delights in the visible, qualified form of Vitthal and asks the Lord simply to hold still so he can keep gazing. He admits the look has made his mind greedy: it has tasted sweetness and now cannot let go of it for as long as he lives. Rather than apologize for this hunger, he leans into it, casting himself and his fellow devotees as small children and God as the parent. The plea is the plea of a child: indulge our every whim. The boldness is allowed precisely because the bond is a family one, love claiming its rights.

GATHA 4027 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, seize the boundless joy now

मराठी मूळ

तिळ एक अर्ध राई । सीतबुंद पावे काई । तया सुखा नाहीं । अंतपार पाहतां ॥1॥
ह्मणउनी करा लाहो । नका मागें पुढें पाहों । अवघ्यामध्यें आहों । सावचित्त तों ॥ध्रु.॥
तीथॉ न येती तुळणी । आजिया सुखाची धणी । जे कासी गयेहुनी । जीं आगळीं असती ॥3॥
येथें धरी लाज । वर्ण अभिमान काज । नाडला सहज । तुका ह्मणे तो येथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A sesame seed, half a mustard grain, a single drop of dew: even that much of this bliss, when tasted, proves boundless. Therefore seize this opportunity.

Do not look ahead or behind; act while you remain fully aware. No pilgrimage compares to the fullness of this present joy, which surpasses even Kashi and Gaya.

Says Tuka, one who clings to shame, caste-pride, or self-importance here is the one who is naturally lost.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A single sesame seed, half a mustard grain, one drop of dew: even that little of this bliss, once tasted, has no end. So seize the chance. Do not look behind you or ahead; act while you are still fully awake to it. We are all in the middle of it now. No pilgrimage can match the fullness of today's joy, which is greater even than Kashi and Gaya. Tuka says: whoever clings here to shame, to caste-pride, or to self-importance is the one who is simply lost.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the bliss of devotion is boundless from the very first taste, however tiny that taste seems. Because it is so vast and so present, he urges the hearer to grab it now, not to drift backward into the past or forward into worry but to act while fully aware. He ranks this living joy above the great pilgrimage sites, Kashi and Gaya, since they are distant and this is at hand. The warning lands on what blocks it: shame, pride in caste, and self-importance. The one who hugs those here, in the open invitation of the kirtan, loses the very thing offered to everyone.

GATHA 4028 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one who saves even by a glance

मराठी मूळ

4028. विठोबाचें नाम ज्याचे मुखीं नित्य । त्या देखिल्या पतित उद्धरिलि ॥1॥
विठ्ठलविठ्ठल भावें ह्मणे वाचे । तरी तो काळाचे दांत ठेंसी ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुत तारिले सांगों किती आतां । ऐसा कोणी दाता दुजा नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे म्यां ही ऐकोनियां कीर्ती । धरिला एकांतीं हृदयामाजी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One in whose mouth the name of Vithoba lives daily can uplift even the fallen by his mere sight. One who utters Vitthal, Vitthal with true feeling crushes the very teeth of Death.

So many have been saved; how many more can I describe? There is no other benefactor like Him. Says Tuka, hearing of His fame, I too have embraced Him in the solitude of my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who has Vithoba's name always in his mouth uplifts even the fallen by the mere sight of him. One who says Vitthal, Vitthal with true feeling breaks the very teeth of Death. So many have been saved; how many can I count now? There is no other giver like Him. Tuka says: I too, hearing of His fame, have held Him alone in my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga praises both the Name and the one who keeps it constantly. Such a person becomes saving to others: even a glance at him lifts the fallen, and his heartfelt repetition of Vitthal's name shatters the power of Death itself. Tukaram says he cannot even count the many the Name has rescued, and that no other benefactor compares to this Lord. Then he places himself among the saved: having only heard of that fame, he has taken God into the quiet of his own heart and holds onto him there.

GATHA 4029 The Power of the Name

The Name lifts the lowly, not the learned

मराठी मूळ

भोळे भक्तिभाव धरिती मानसीं । त्यासी हृषीकेशी जवळी च ॥1॥
भाव नाहीं मनीं अभाविक सदा । त्याचिया मी खेदा काय सांगों ॥ध्रु.॥
गणिकेसारिकीं नामें उद्धरीलीं । सज्ञानें पडिलीं खटाटोपीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय शुद्ध माझी जाति । थोर केली ख्याती हरिनामें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those innocent souls who hold sincere devotion in their minds find Hrishikesha always near. Those without faith, forever faithless, their misery is beyond my words.

Courtesans were liberated by the Name alone, while scholars fell into elaborate traps of their own making. Says Tuka, what purity does my caste possess? It is Hari's name that has given me great renown.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The simple souls who hold a sincere heart in their minds, Hrishikesha stays close to them. Those who have no faith in their minds, who are always faithless, what can I say about their misery? Courtesans were lifted up by the Name alone. Scholars fell into their own elaborate traps. Tuka says: what is so pure about my caste? It is Hari's name that has made me known.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets nearness to God by one measure only: a sincere heart, not learning or birth. The unschooled who simply trust find Hrishikesha standing beside them, while the clever who trust nothing build cages of their own making and fall into them. He drives the point home with the sharpest contrast available: courtesans, the most despised, were carried across by the Name, while scholars sank. Then he turns it on himself, refusing any claim to high caste, and says plainly that whatever renown he has comes from Hari's name and not from him. The poem asks you to stop trusting your credentials and start trusting the Name.

GATHA 4030 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the harm of bad company

मराठी मूळ

आड पडे काडी । तरि ते बहुत पाणी खोडी ॥1॥
दुर्जनाचे संगती । बहुतांचे घात होती ॥ध्रु.॥
एक पडे मासी । तरी ते बहु अन्न नासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रांड । ऐसी कां ते व्याली भांड॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A single stick placed crosswise blocks a great flow of water. In the company of the wicked, many are destroyed.

A single fly falling into food spoils the entire meal. Says Tuka, why did that cursed woman bring forth such quarrelsome offspring?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A single stick laid crosswise will hold back a great deal of water. In the company of the wicked, many are destroyed. A single fly falling in spoils a whole plate of food. Tuka says: why did that wretched woman give birth to such a quarrelsome creature?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning how little it takes for one corrupt presence to ruin many. A twig dams a stream; a fly spoils a full meal; in the same way one wicked companion drags down everyone around. The lesson is not really about the stick or the fly but about the company you keep and the disproportion of the damage it does. The closing line is bitter scorn aimed at the troublemaker who poisons a whole circle. Read it as a hard look at how readily a small contamination spreads, and a caution to watch the company we sit in, including our own role in it.

GATHA 4031 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the ghost of Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीचें बा भूत मोटें । आल्या गेल्या झडपी वाटे॥1॥
तेथें जाऊं नका कोणी । गेले नाहीं आले परतोनि ॥2॥
तुका पंढरीसी गेला । पुन्हा जन्मा नाहीं आला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The spirit of Pandhari is a mighty one; it seizes all who pass by on the road. Let no one go there, for those who went never came back.

Tuka went to Pandhari and never returned to be born again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The spirit of Pandhari is a mighty one. It pounces on everyone who comes and goes along the road. Let no one go there. Those who went have not come back. Tuka went to Pandhari, and was not born again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram plays at warning you away from Pandhari with the language of a haunting, but the warning is an invitation in disguise. He calls the presence at Pandhari a great spirit that seizes every passerby, and says darkly that no one who went ever returned. Then he reveals the real meaning: not coming back means not being born again, the end of the cycle of birth and death. So the thing to fear, if you cling to this world, is exactly the thing to want. Going to Pandhari, to Vitthal, is what releases the soul for good.

GATHA 4032 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the merchant of truth

मराठी मूळ

बरवे दुकानीं बैसावें । श्रवण मनन असावें ॥1॥
सारासाराचीं पोतीं । ग्राहिक पाहोनि करा रितीं ॥ध्रु.॥
उगे चि फुगों नका गाल । पूर्ण सांठवावा माल ॥2॥
सत्य तराजू पैं धरा । नका कुडत्रिम विकरा ॥3॥
तुका जाला वाणी । चुकवुनि चौ†यासीच्या खाणी ॥4॥
काय करूं आतां या मना । न संडी विषयांची वासना ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sit well at your shop. Let there be hearing and reflecting.

Sort the bundles of the essential from the non-essential, sizing up each customer. Do not puff up your cheeks in vain; stock your store with genuine goods.

Hold the scale of truth and do not sell counterfeit wares. Says Tuka, I have become a true merchant, having escaped the mines of eighty-four hundred thousand births.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sit well at your shop. Keep hearing and reflecting. Sort the bundles of the essential from the unessential, and empty them out by sizing up each customer. Do not puff out your cheeks for nothing. Stock your store full with genuine goods. Hold the scale of truth. Do not sell counterfeit wares. Tuka says: I have become a true merchant, having escaped the mines of eighty-four hundred thousand births. What shall I do now with this mind, that will not give up its craving for the things of the senses.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the spiritual life into a shopkeeper's trade and tells you how to run it honestly. Sitting at the shop is steady practice; hearing and reflecting are the merchant's daily care; sorting the essential from the unessential and reading each customer is discernment. He scorns empty show, the puffed cheeks of the boaster, and insists on a full stock of real goods, a true scale, and no counterfeit. By living this way he says he has become a genuine merchant and escaped the eighty-four lakh forms of rebirth. The last line keeps him honest: even so, the mind still craves the senses, and the trade is not yet finished.

GATHA 4033 Prayers

Prayer, the mind dragging toward ruin

मराठी मूळ

प्राथिनतां ही राहेना । आदरें पतना नेऊं पाहे ॥1॥
आतां धांवधावें गा श्रीहरी । गेलों वांयां नाहीं तरी ।
न दिसे कोणी आवरी। आणीक दुजा तयासी ॥ध्रु.॥
न राहे एके ठायीं एकी घडी। चित्त तडतडा तोडी ।
घालूं पाहे बा हे उडी या भवडोहीं ॥2॥
आशा तृष्णा कल्पना पापिणी । घात मांडला माझा यांणीं ।
तुका ह्मणे चक्रपाणी । काय अजोनि पाहातोसी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even when I plead with this mind, it will not stay; it eagerly drags me toward ruin. O Shrihari, rush to my aid now.

If You do not, I am lost. I see no one else who can restrain it.

It will not rest in one place for a single moment; it tears away from me. It seeks to leap into the deep well of worldly existence.

Desire, craving, and sinful imagination have conspired to destroy me. Says Tuka, O Lord who holds the discus, what are You still waiting to see?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even when I plead with it, this mind will not stay. Eagerly it tries to carry me down to ruin. Now run, run to me, O Shrihari, or else I am lost for nothing. I see no one else who can hold it back. It will not stay in one place for even a moment. It tears my heart this way and that. It wants to leap into this deep well of worldly life. Desire, craving, and sinful imagination, these sinners, have set out to destroy me. Tuka says: O Lord who holds the discus, what are you still waiting to see?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a cry for rescue from a mind the speaker cannot govern. Tukaram describes the mind as a force that will not stay still and actively hauls him toward his own destruction, leaping for the deep well of worldly existence. He names the conspirators by name: hope, craving, and sinful imagination have ganged up to finish him off, and he confesses he has no power of his own to restrain them. So the only move left is to call on Shrihari to come running. The closing question is almost a reproach, urging the Lord who carries the discus to stop watching and act before it is too late.

GATHA 4034 Sacred Stories

Mythology, Ravana takes nothing across

मराठी मूळ

पाषाण परिस भूमि जांबूनद । वंशाचा संबंध धातयाचा॥1॥
सोनियाची पुरी समुद्राचा वेढा । समुदाय गाढा राक्षसांचा ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसी सहस्त्र त्या सुंदरा कामिनी । माजी मुखरणी मंदोदरी ॥2॥
पुत्रपौत्राचा लेखा कोण करी । मुख्य पुत्र हरी इंद्रा आणी ॥3॥
चौदा चौकडिया आयुष्यगणना । बंधुवर्ग जाणा कुंभकर्ण॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याचे देव बांदवडी । सांगातें कवडी गेली नाहीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Lanka's foundation was of stone and gold, its lineage that of a noble dynasty. Its golden city was surrounded by ocean, and its populace a mighty host of rakshasas.

A thousand beautiful women graced it, with Mandodari chief among them. Who could count Ravana's sons and grandsons, when his chief son conquered even Indra? His lifespan numbered fourteen times four ages, and his brother was mighty Kumbhakarna.

Says Tuka, yet for him who held even the gods captive, not a single cowrie went with him in the end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lanka's stone was touchstone, its earth was gold. Its lineage was that of a noble dynasty. The golden city was ringed by the ocean, and its people a mighty host of rakshasas. A thousand beautiful women were there, and Mandodari was chief among them. Who could count Ravana's sons and grandsons, when his own son conquered even Indra? His lifespan was fourteen times four ages. His brother, you know, was Kumbhakarna. Tuka says: yet for him who held the very gods captive, not a single cowrie went with him in the end.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram heaps up Ravana's glory only to strip it away in one line. He lists the gold and stone of Lanka, its noble line, its ocean wall, its army of rakshasas, its thousand women and chief queen Mandodari, his uncountable descendants, his son who beat Indra, his immense lifespan, his giant brother. Every detail says power, wealth, permanence. Then the turn: this king who held the gods themselves as prisoners carried not one cowrie, the smallest coin, with him when he died. The poem uses the grandest possible example to make the plainest possible point, that nothing of what we amass goes with us, so do not stake your life on it.

GATHA 4035 Worldly Life

Worldly life, you reap what you sow

मराठी मूळ

पापांचीं संचितें देहासी दंडण । तुज नारायणा बोल नाहीं ॥1॥
पेरी कडू जिरें मागे अमृतफळ । आकान वृक्षफळें कैसीं येती ॥ध्रु.॥
सुख अथवा दुःख भोग हो देहेचा । नास हा ज्ञानाचा न करावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां देवा कां रुसावें । मनासी पुसावें काय केलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The accumulated sins punish the body; no blame attaches to You, O Narayana. One who sows bitter cumin and expects the fruit of nectar: how can sweet fruit come from a bitter tree? Whether pleasure or pain, it is the body's due experience.

Do not let it destroy your wisdom. Says Tuka, why be angry with God now? Ask your own mind what it has done.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sins you have stored up punish the body. No blame falls on you, O Narayana. If a man sows bitter cumin and then asks for the fruit of nectar, how can sweet fruit come from that? Whether the body meets pleasure or pain, let it be its own experience. Do not let it destroy your wisdom. Tuka says: why be angry with God now? Ask your own mind what it has done.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to let God be blamed for what we suffer. The body is punished by sins we ourselves accumulated, so the fault is not Narayana's. He drives it home with farming: sow bitter cumin and you cannot harvest nectar; a bitter tree gives no sweet fruit. Pleasure and pain are the body's due, and the real danger is letting them wreck your wisdom by turning you resentful. So the poem closes by redirecting the complaint inward: instead of being angry at God, question your own mind about what it has done. It is a teaching on owning the consequences of one's own acts.

GATHA 4036 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the mother who shelters

मराठी मूळ

लाभ पुढें करी । घात नारायण वारी ॥1॥
ऐसी भक्ताची माउली । करी कृपेची साउली ॥ध्रु.॥
माय बाळकासी । जीव भाव वेची तैसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाड । नाहीं शरणागता आड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana places gain before His devotees and wards off their harm. Such is the mother-love of devotion; He shelters them in the shade of His grace.

As a mother gives her very life and jiva for her child, so does He. Says Tuka, there is no obstacle that can bar the way of one who has surrendered.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana puts gain in front of his devotee and turns harm away. Such is the mother-love of devotion. He makes a shade of his grace. As a mother spends her very life and being on her child, so does he. Tuka says: there is no trap, no obstacle, that can block the one who has surrendered.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how God treats the one who loves him, and the whole image is maternal. Narayana places good before the devotee and wards off what would harm, spreading the shade of his grace over them. The comparison is a mother who pours out her own life and heart for her child, holding nothing back; God's care is that total. The point is that devotion is met by a love that protects, not by indifference. And the closing line gives the assurance: for the one who has truly surrendered, nothing can stand in the way, because the protection is the protector's own doing, not the devotee's strength.

GATHA 4037 Longing and Separation

Longing, take me as your own

मराठी मूळ

आपुलेंसें करुनी घ्यावें । आश्वासावें नाभींसें ॥1॥
ह्नउनि धरिले पाय । आवो माय विठ्ठले ॥ध्रु.॥
कळलासे सीन चिंता । शम आतां करावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवीं वसें । मज नसें वेगळे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make me Your own and comfort me with Your embrace. That is why I have taken hold of Your feet, O Mother Vitthal.

The weary sting of anxiety is known to me now; let there be peace at last. Says Tuka, dwell within my chitta and never be apart from me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Make me your own and take me up. Comfort me with your embrace. That is why I have taken hold of your feet, O Mother Vitthal. You know how worn I am with worry. Now give me peace. Tuka says: dwell within my heart, and never be apart from me.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the plea of a tired devotee asking to be claimed. Tukaram asks Vitthal, whom he addresses as Mother, to make him his own and to comfort him, and he says he has gripped those feet for exactly that reason. He admits openly that anxiety has worn him out, and asks only for peace now, nothing grander. The final request is the deepest one: not a gift or a rescue from outside, but for Vitthal to live inside his heart and never leave. The longing here is for union and constant presence, the end of feeling separate from God.

GATHA 4038 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, you alone are real

मराठी मूळ

तुजविणं कांहीं । ◌ि◌स्थर राहे ऐसें नाहीं ॥1॥
कळों आलें बहुता रीती । पांडुरंगा माझ्या चित्तीं ॥ध्रु.॥
मोकलिली आस। सर्वभावें जालों दास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं चि खरा । येर वाउगा पसारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without You, nothing remains steady; nothing holds. This I have come to know in many ways, O Panduranga, deep in my chitta.

I have released all other hopes and become Your servant with my whole being. Says Tuka, You alone are real; everything else is a vain display.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without you, nothing stays steady. Nothing holds. This I have come to know in many ways, O Panduranga, in my heart. I have let go of all hope elsewhere. With my whole being I have become your servant. Tuka says: you alone are real. Everything else is a useless spread.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the conclusion that drives his surrender. Through many turns of experience he has learned that nothing apart from God holds steady or lasts, and he addresses this knowing directly to Panduranga. Having seen that, he releases every other hope and gives himself entirely as a servant, with his whole being and not in part. The closing claim is the firm ground under it all: God alone is real, and everything else is a vain, scattered display. The poem is the moment when seeking elsewhere stops because the seeker has settled where reality actually is.

GATHA 4039 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the wicked at holy discourse

मराठी मूळ

खोंकरी आधन होय पाकसिद्ध । हें तों घडों कधीं शके चि ना ॥1॥
खापराचे अंगीं घासितां परिस । न पालटे कीस काढिलिया ॥2॥
पालथे घागरी रिचवितां जळ । तुका ह्मणे खळ तैसे कथे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cooking cannot be done with twigs of thorns; how could that ever work? Rubbing a potsherd against a touchstone will not change it, no matter how you scrape. Says Tuka, pouring water into an upturned pot is what the wicked are like when they come to a sacred discourse.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You cannot finish cooking on a fire of thorny twigs. That can never happen. Rub a potsherd against a touchstone, and however much you scrape it, it does not change. Tuka says: pouring water into an upturned pot is what the wicked are like when they sit at sacred discourse.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the kind of person on whom holy teaching has no effect. He stacks three images of futile effort: thorny twigs cannot cook a meal, a potsherd against a touchstone never turns to anything precious, and water poured over an upside-down pot simply runs off and nothing is held. Each picture is of an input wasted because the receiver cannot receive. The third is the key: the wicked at a sacred discourse are the upturned pot, soaking up nothing of what is poured. The poem is less an insult than a warning to examine whether we sit there open or sealed shut.

GATHA 4040 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fawning, stingy man

मराठी मूळ

नागलें देखोनि चांगलें बोले । आपुलें वेचूनि त्याजपुढें खुले ॥1॥
अधमाचे ओंगळ गुण । उचित नेणें तो धर्म कोण॥ध्रु.॥
आर्तभूता न घली पाण्याचा चुळ । न मागे त्यासी घाली साखर गुळ ॥2॥
एकासी आड पडोनि होंकरी । एकासी देखोनि लपवी भाकरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ते गाढवपशु । लाभेंविण केला आयुष्यनाशु॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing a well-dressed person, the base man speaks sweetly and opens his purse before him. Yet the vile one's habits are ugly; he knows neither propriety nor dharma.

He will not offer even a sip of water to one in need, but will heap sugar and jaggery before one who never asked. He blocks one person rudely while hiding his bread from another.

Says Tuka, such people are mere donkeys; without true gain, they have wasted their entire lives.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seeing a well-dressed man, the base fellow speaks sweetly and opens his purse before him. The vile one's habits are ugly. He knows neither what is fitting nor what dharma is. He will not pour even a sip of water for one in need, but heaps sugar and jaggery before one who never asked. He blocks one person rudely, and hides his bread when he sees another. Tuka says: such people are mere donkeys, beasts; without any true gain they have wasted their whole lives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the man whose generosity follows status, not need. He fawns on the well-dressed and opens his purse to them, while refusing a sip of water to someone who is genuinely suffering and lavishing sweets on those who never asked. He rebuffs one person and hides his food from another; his giving is all calculation and show, with no sense of what is fitting or of dharma. Tukaram calls such a life that of a beast, and says its whole length has been spent without earning anything real. The poem points at the pattern of serving power and ignoring need, and asks us to weigh which way our own giving leans.

GATHA 4041 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false teacher

मराठी मूळ

पिंडपोशकाच्या जळो ज्ञानगोष्टी । झणी दृष्टभेटी न हो त्याची ॥1॥
नाहीं संतचिन्ह उमटलें अंगीं । उपदेशालागीं पात्र जाला ॥ध्रु.॥
पोहों सिणलें नये कासे लावितो आणिका । ह्मणावें त्या मूर्खा काय आतां ॥2॥
सिणलें तें गेलें सिणलियापासीं । जाली त्या दोघांसी एक गति ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे अहो देवा दिनानाथा। दरुषण आतां नको त्याचें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cursed be the spiritual talk of one who merely feeds his belly. May I never have to look upon his face.

He bears no mark of saintliness on his person, yet he has set himself up as a teacher. He himself is drowning and cannot swim, yet he ties others to his waist.

What can one say to such a fool? Those who clung to him are lost along with him; both share the same fate. Says Tuka, O Lord of the lowly, let me never have to see such a one again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Cursed be the holy talk of a man who only feeds his belly. Let me never even catch sight of his face. No sign of saintliness shows on him, yet he has set himself up to teach. He is drowning and cannot swim, and still he ties others to his waist. What can you say to such a fool? Those who clung to him are lost along with him. The two share one fate. Tuka says: O Lord of the lowly, let me never see such a one again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the man who trades on spiritual words while living for his own appetite. The test he uses is plain: nothing of the saint has actually appeared in this man's life, so his teaching is hollow. The drowning swimmer is the heart of it. A teacher who has not crossed cannot carry anyone across; he only pulls his followers under with him. So the warning runs both ways: examine whether a guide has truly changed, and examine whether you are clinging to someone who is sinking.

GATHA 4042 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the counterfeit saint

मराठी मूळ

संतचिन्हें लेउनि अंगीं । भूषण मिरविती जगीं ॥1॥
पडिले दुःखाचे सागरीं । वहावले ते भवपुरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कामक्रोधलोभ चित्तीं । वरिवरि दाविती विरक्ती ॥2॥
आशापाशीं बांधोनि चित्त । ह्मणती जालों आह्मी मुक्त ॥3॥
त्यांचे लागले संगती । जाली त्यांसी ते चि गति ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे शब्दज्ञानें । जग नाडियेलें तेणें॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They put on the outward marks of saints and parade their ornaments before the world. Yet they have fallen into the ocean of sorrow, swept away by the flood of worldly existence.

Desire, anger, and greed fill their chittas while they display detachment on the surface. With their minds bound by the noose of desire, they declare themselves liberated.

Those who kept their company met the very same fate. Says Tuka, by mere verbal knowledge, the world has been deceived.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They put on the marks of saints and parade the ornaments before the world. Yet they have fallen into the ocean of sorrow, swept away in the flood of worldly life. Desire, anger, and greed fill their minds, while on the surface they show detachment. Their minds are tied in the noose of craving, and still they say, We are free. Those who kept their company came to the same end. Tuka says: by mere word-knowledge, the world has been deceived.

WHAT IT MEANS

This names the gap between the outward show of holiness and the inner state. The marks and ornaments are real to look at, but underneath sit the same desire, anger, and greed that bind everyone else. The sharp point is the claim of freedom: a mind still caught in the noose announces itself as liberated, which is the deception. Tukaram calls it word-knowledge, learning that stays in the mouth and never changes the heart, and he warns that the followers inherit the teacher's bondage. The examination he invites is honest: is the detachment lived, or only displayed.

GATHA 4043 Prayers

Prayer, holding God to his vow

मराठी मूळ

दोष करूनि आह्मी पतित सिद्ध जालों । पावन मागों आलों ब्रीद तुझें ॥1॥
आतां पतिता तारावें कीं ब्रीद हें सोडावें । यांत जें पुरवे तें चि सांगा ॥ध्रु.॥
उद्धार तुमच्यानें नव्हे हो श्रीहरि। सोडा झडकरी ब्रीद आतां ॥2॥
तें ब्रीद घेउनी हिंडों दारोदारीं । सांगूं तुझी कीर्ती रे पांडुरंगा ॥3॥
देवें हारविलें ब्रीद हें सोडिलें । पतितें जिंकिलें आह्मीं देवा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मीं उठलों दैन्यवरि। विचारा श्रीहरी तुह्मी आतां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By committing sins, we have firmly established ourselves as the fallen. We have come to seek purification, relying on Your vow, O Lord.

Now choose: either uplift the fallen, or give up Your vow. Tell us which one suits You better.

If You cannot deliver us, O Shrihari, then abandon Your vow at once. We will take that broken vow and carry it door to door, proclaiming Your fame, O Panduranga.

God has lost; He gave up His vow. The wrongdoers have won; we have defeated God.

Says Tuka, we have risen up against our lowliness. Now consider Your next move, O Shrihari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By our sins we have made ourselves the fallen, proven and complete. We have come to ask for the purifying that Your vow promises. Now choose: either save the fallen, or give up Your vow. Tell us plainly which one suits You. If You cannot lift us up, Shrihari, then drop Your vow at once. We will take that broken vow and go door to door with it, telling everyone Your fame, Panduranga. God has lost; He has given up His vow. The wrongdoers have won; we have defeated God. Tuka says: we have risen up out of our wretchedness. Now think it over, Shrihari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns God's own reputation into a claim he can press. The Lord is famed as the one who lifts the fallen, so Tukaram presents himself as exactly that, fully fallen, and demands that the vow be honored. The boldness is deliberate: either God saves him or God breaks his word, and a God who breaks his word loses his glory before the world. The line about defeating God is not arrogance but the lover's gambit; he stakes everything on the Lord caring more about his promise than about Tukaram's worthiness. It is prayer as a loving challenge, leaning the whole weight of one's hopelessness on God's faithfulness.

GATHA 4044 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the dance of surrender

मराठी मूळ

राम कृष्ण ऐसीं उच्चारितां नामें । नाचेन मी प्रेमें संतांपुढें ॥1॥
काय घडेल तें घडो ये सेवटीं । लाभ हाणी तुटी देव जाणे ॥ध्रु.॥
चिंता मोह आशा ठेवुनि निराळीं । देईन हा बळी जीव पायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं उरों नेदीं उरी । सांडीन हे थोरी ओवाळोनी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Uttering the names Rama and Krishna, I will dance with love before the saints. Whatever may happen in the end, let it happen; God knows the profit and loss.

Setting aside worry, delusion, and desire, I will lay down this very life at His feet. Says Tuka, I will hold back nothing; I will toss away all pride as an offering.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Saying the names Rama and Krishna, I will dance with love before the saints. Whatever happens in the end, let it happen. God knows the profit and the loss. Setting aside worry, delusion, and desire, I will lay this very life at His feet. Tuka says: I will hold back nothing. I will throw away all my standing as an offering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes total self-offering through the Name. He sings Rama and Krishna and dances before the saints, refusing to calculate outcomes; the ledger of profit and loss is handed over to God. To dance freely he must first put down the three weights that bind the mind, worry, delusion, and desire. Then comes the full price: not only worry but life itself, and not only life but pride and reputation, all waved away as one waves a lamp in offering. Nothing is kept back, because keeping back anything would still be a calculation.

GATHA 4045 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the Lord who serves

मराठी मूळ

देव धरी नाना सोंगें । नाम श्रेष्ठ पांडुरंग ॥1॥
तो हा गविळयाचे घरीं । नाम सारितो मुरारि ॥ध्रु.॥
धन्य यशोदेचें प्रारब्ध । नाचे अंगणीं गोविंद ॥2॥
ऐशा भक्तांसाटीं देवें । नाना धरियेलीं नांवें ॥3॥
होय दासांचा जो दास । तुका ह्मणे विठ्ठलास॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God takes on many guises; the greatest name is Panduranga. Here He is, in the milkman's house, known by the name Murari.

Blessed is Yashoda's fortune, for Govinda dances in her courtyard. For the sake of such devotees, God has taken on countless names.

Says Tuka, the one who becomes the servant of His servants is Vitthal Himself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God takes on many disguises; the greatest name is Panduranga. Here He is in the milkman's house, going by the name Murari. Blessed is Yashoda's fortune, for Govinda dances in her courtyard. For the sake of such devotees, God has taken on countless names. Tuka says: the one who becomes the servant of His servants is Vitthal Himself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram marvels at how God lowers Himself for love. The one Reality wears many forms and names, and He does it not out of grandeur but to draw near to those who love Him, becoming the child in a cowherd's house, dancing in Yashoda's courtyard. The closing turn is the radical claim: God's greatness shows not in being served but in serving, He makes Himself the servant of His own servants. So Vitthal at Pandhari is the same Lord who stoops lowest. Divine majesty, here, looks like tenderness and willing smallness.

GATHA 4046 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, grace free for the taking

मराठी मूळ

आइत्या भाग्या धणी व्हावे । केनें घ्यावें न सरे तें॥1॥
केणें आहे पंढरपुरीं । उधाराचें लाभीक ॥ध्रु.॥
बाखराची करुनी रीती । भरा पोतीं लवलाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतांपाडें । करूं पुढें वाखती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should seize the fortune that comes freely; what is given so readily never runs out. Where else is there such bounty as in Pandharpur, this treasure available on credit? Fill your sacks quickly, as merchants do.

Says Tuka, following the saints, we will share this wealth with those ahead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seize the fortune that comes to you free; what is given so freely never runs out. Where else is there such wealth as in Pandharpur, this treasure to be had on credit? Make ready your sacks and fill them fast, the way traders do. Tuka says: following the saints, we will share it with those who come after.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures God's grace as a windfall offered without price and urges people not to let it pass. The marketplace image carries the point: this is wealth available on easy terms, even on credit, so the only foolishness would be to walk away with empty sacks. The urgency, fill them fast, is the urgency of devotion, take while the offer stands. And the closing line widens it past hoarding: in the company of the saints, the wealth gathered is meant to be passed on to those still coming. Grace received freely is meant to be shared freely.

GATHA 4047 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the pilgrim's one prayer

मराठी मूळ

जन्मोजन्मीं दास । व्हावें हे चि माझी आस ॥1॥
पंढरीचा वारकरी । वारी चुकों नेदीं हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
संतसमागम । अंगीं थिरावलें प्रेम ॥2॥
स्नान चंद्रभागे । तुका ह्मणे हें चि मागें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My sole desire is to be a servant of God, birth after birth. Let me be a pilgrim of Pandhari, and may Hari never let me miss the annual pilgrimage.

In the company of saints, may love become firmly rooted in my being. Says Tuka, bathing in the Chandrabhaga is all I ask.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To be Your servant, birth after birth, this alone is my desire. Let me be a pilgrim of Pandhari; Hari, never let me miss the pilgrimage. The company of saints, and love grown firm and steady in me. A bath in the Chandrabhaga. Tuka says: this is all I ask.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the whole of what he wants, and it is strikingly small. He asks not for release or reward but only to keep serving God through every life, and to keep walking the pilgrimage to Pandhari without ever falling out of step. With that he asks for the things that make the path stay alive: the company of saints, love that has put down roots and steadied, and the bath in the river at Pandharpur. The prayer is a refusal of grander ambitions; the devotee's heaven is simply never losing the road to his Lord.

GATHA 4048 Longing and Separation

Longing, the Mother of Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

कां गा कोणी न ह्मणे पंढरीची आई । बोलावितें पाहीं चाल नेटें ॥1॥
तेव्हां माझ्या मना होइल समाधान । जाइल सर्व शीण जन्मांतरिंचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी होशील माउली । वोरसोनि घाली प्रेमपान्हा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Will someone not say to me, 'Come, the Mother of Pandhari calls you'? She beckons; look, She calls you to come eagerly. Then my mind will find peace, and the weariness of countless births will vanish.

Says Tuka, You will be my Mother, overflowing with the milk of love and pressing it upon me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Will no one say to me, The Mother of Pandhari is calling you? Look, She beckons; come quickly. Then my mind will find rest, and the weariness of all my births will fall away. Tuka says: You will be my Mother, overflowing, and You will press the milk of love upon me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out as a child aching for word that the Mother has called. Here Vitthal at Pandhari is the mother, and the longing is for the summons itself, the message that he is wanted. He names what that call would heal: not just present trouble but the exhaustion carried across many lifetimes, gone the moment he is taken to Her. The closing image is the deepest tenderness, a mother so full of love that she presses her milk on the child unasked. The poem is the helplessness of love that cannot reach God by its own effort and waits to be called home.

GATHA 4049 The Power of the Name

The Name, the whole of scripture

मराठी मूळ

वेद अनंत बोलिला । अर्थ इतका चि शोधिला॥1॥
विठोबासी शरण जावें । निजनिष्ट नाम गावें ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळशास्त्रांचा विचार । अंतीं इतका चि निर्धार ॥2॥
अठरापुराणीं सिद्धांत । तुका ह्मणे हा चि हेत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Vedas have spoken endlessly, but the essence they reveal is just this: take refuge in Vithoba and sing His name with unwavering faith. The conclusion of all the scriptures points to the same truth.

Says Tuka, this very intent is the established teaching of all eighteen Puranas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Vedas have spoken without end, but the meaning they searched out comes to just this: take refuge in Vithoba, and sing His name with steady, single-hearted faith. The thought of all the scriptures, in the end, settles on this one certainty. Tuka says: this is the very conclusion of the eighteen Puranas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the whole vast body of scripture down into a single instruction. The Vedas, all the schools of learning, the eighteen Puranas, after every word, point to one thing: surrender to Vithoba and chant His name with unwavering faith. The boldness is in the compression. He is saying the endless argument was never the destination; the destination is simple devotion that anyone can do. For the seeker who feels lost in the mass of teachings, this is mercy: the essence is short, and it is within reach.

GATHA 4050 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the grip of Maya

मराठी मूळ

मायेचा मारिला अंगीं नाहीं घाव । दुःखें तरी लव धडधडी ॥1॥
न पवे धांवणें न पवे चि लाग । न चलती माग धरावया ॥2॥
भेणें तरि अंगा लावियेल्या राखा । परी त्यासी वाखा करीतसे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नेदी हाका मारूं देवा । लोकापाठी हेवा लागलासे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Maya has struck, yet there is no wound on the body; still, the slightest pain makes one tremble. One cannot keep up with it, cannot catch it, cannot trace the path to subdue it.

Out of fear, one smears ashes on the body, yet Maya keeps taunting. Says Tuka, Maya does not even let me cry out to God; I am caught up in jealousy and the ways of the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Maya strikes, yet no wound shows on the body; still the least pain makes one tremble. You cannot run fast enough to escape it, cannot catch it, cannot trace its track to pin it down. Out of fear a man smears ashes on his body, yet Maya keeps mocking him. Tuka says: Maya will not even let me cry out to God; I am caught up in envy and the ways of the people around me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how illusion holds a person without leaving a mark. Maya wounds but draws no blood, so the hurt cannot be located or fought; you cannot outrun it, seize it, or follow its trail. Even the outward gestures of renunciation, ashes on the body, do not free a man, because the bondage is inward and keeps taunting him. The cruelest part is named last: Maya's tightest grip is that it crowds out the one thing that could break it, the cry to God, by keeping the mind busy with envy and the opinions of others. The self-examination is direct, where does my attention actually go.

GATHA 4051 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the heart without mercy

मराठी मूळ

धिग तो दुर्जन नाहीं भूतदया । व्यर्थ तया माया प्रसवली ॥1॥
कठिण हृदय तया चांडाळाचें । नेणे पराचें दुःख कांहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुला का प्राण तैसे सकळ लोक । न करी विवेक पशु जैसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें कापीतसे गळे । आपुलिया वेळे रडतसे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Shame on the cruel one who has no compassion for living beings; his mother gave birth in vain. Hard is the heart of that wretch; he knows nothing of another's pain.

He does not see that his own life-breath is the same as that of all beings. He lacks all discernment, like an animal.

Says Tuka, he happily cuts the throats of others, yet when his own time comes, he weeps.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Shame on the cruel man who has no pity for living beings; his mother bore him for nothing. Hard is the heart of that wretch; he knows nothing of another's pain. He does not see that his own breath of life is the same breath in all beings. He weighs nothing, like an animal. Tuka says: he gladly cuts the throats of others, yet when his own turn comes, he weeps.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures a person by one thing, compassion for living beings, and finds the cruel man failing it completely. The reason he gives is spiritual, not merely sentimental: the same life-breath moves in him and in every creature, so harming another is a kind of blindness to that shared life. To miss this, Tukaram says, is to live without discernment, on the level of an animal. The closing line catches the cruel man's hypocrisy: he inflicts on others exactly the suffering he cannot bear when it turns toward him. The poem points at the pattern of a heart that feels its own pain but is dead to everyone else's.

GATHA 4052 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, the Lord arriving on Garuda

मराठी मूळ

गरुडावरि बैसोनि येतो जगजेठी । त्याचे चरणीं मिठी घालूं चला ॥1॥
सांवळें रूपडें देखिलें लोचनीं । शंख चक्र दोन्ही शोभताहे ॥ध्रु.॥
पीतांबर झळके हे चि त्याची खूण । वाकी रुणझुण करिताती ॥2॥
गरुडाचा चपेटा असे नेटें । कस्तुरीमळवट शोभताहे ॥3॥
पदक एकावळी शोभताहे कंठीं । तुका ह्मणे मिठी घालूं चला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Riding upon Garuda, the Lord of the world approaches. Come, let us embrace His feet.

That dark, beautiful form is seen by these eyes; the conch and discus shine splendidly in His hands. The yellow garment gleams; this is His mark.

The anklets jingle melodiously. Garuda soars with majestic speed, and the mark of musk paste adorns the Lord's forehead.

A pendant and a single-strand necklace grace His throat. Says Tuka, come, let us embrace Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Lord of the world comes riding on Garuda. Come, let us clasp His feet. This dark, lovely form is seen by my eyes; the conch and the discus both shine in His hands. The yellow garment gleams: that is His mark. The anklets ring softly. Garuda comes on with strong, swift wings, and the musk paste shines on the Lord's brow. A pendant and a single strand of jewels grace His throat. Tuka says: come, let us hold Him close.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is pure adoration, a devotee watching the Lord arrive and pointing out each beloved detail. Tukaram names the signs by which Vitthal is known: the dark beautiful form, the conch and discus, the yellow silk, the ringing anklets, the musk mark on the brow, the necklace at the throat, all seen as the eagle Garuda sweeps Him near. The poem is built on the repeated call, come, let us embrace His feet, then come, let us hold Him close. The point of the seeing is not to describe but to draw near; every shining detail is an invitation, and the only fit response to the Lord's coming is to run and clasp Him.

GATHA 4053 The Necessity of Experience

Social criticism, the empty talker

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं पाक होत उफराटे चाली । बोलिली ते केली व्हावी नीत ॥1॥
नाहीं मानूं येत वांजटाचे बोल । कोरडे च फोल चवी नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
तरुवरा आधीं कोठें आहे फळ । चावटा बरळ ह्मणा त्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती ठकलीं बापुडीं । गव्हा आहे गोडी मांडे पु†या ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No cooking is done by walking backwards; what has been spoken must be practiced. The words of one who has no experience carry no weight; they are empty and tasteless.

Where is the fruit before the tree has grown? Call such a person a mere babbler. Says Tuka, how many innocent souls have been deceived this way. Wheat has its own sweetness, but that only shows in the bread and cakes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No food is cooked by walking backwards. What you have said, you must actually do; that is right. The words of a man with no experience carry no weight. They are dry and hollow; they have no taste. Where is the fruit before the tree has even grown? Call such a man a babbler. Tuka says: how many poor, simple souls have been deceived this way. Wheat has its own sweetness, but you taste it only in the bread and the cakes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is testing words against deeds. Talking about the goal does not bring it any nearer, just as cooking is not done by walking backward; a man must practice what he preaches. He warns against the speaker who has never lived what he says: his words are dry, tasteless, and as empty as expecting fruit from a tree that has not yet grown. Such talk has deceived many trusting people. The point is plain: wheat holds real sweetness, but you only know it once it has been ground and baked, and so a teaching is proven only when it is lived.

GATHA 4054 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the gift of love poured out

मराठी मूळ

जाली हरिकथा रंग वोरसला । उचितासी आला पांडुरंग ॥1॥
वांटितो हें प्रेम उचिताचा दाता । घेई रे तूं आतां धणीवरि ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेम देऊनियां अवघीं सुखीं केलीं । जें होतीं रंगलीं विटलीं तीं ॥2॥
तुकें हें दुर्बळ देखियलें संतीं । ह्मणउनि पुढती आणियेलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Hari-katha has unfolded and its color has spread. Panduranga has come with His bountiful gift.

He distributes this love as a generous giver; receive it now to your full satisfaction. By giving love, He has made everyone joyful, even those who were weary and indifferent.

Says Tuka, the saints saw this poor one and brought him forward once more.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Hari-katha has begun, and its color has spread over everything. Panduranga has come to the deserving. He shares out this love, the giver who gives to the worthy. Take it now, take it to the full. By giving love, he has made everyone happy; even those who were stained and worn out are glad now. Tuka says: the saints saw how poor and weak I was, and so they brought me forward again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing a gathering where the telling of Hari's story turns into an outpouring of grace. Panduranga himself arrives and gives away love freely, and Tukaram urges the listeners to receive it without holding back. This love reaches even those who came in weary or indifferent, leaving no one untouched. In the last line he places himself among the lowest: it was the saints who noticed how destitute he was and drew him in to receive this gift along with the rest.

GATHA 4055 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, handing over every burden

मराठी मूळ

संकिल्पला तुज सकळ ही भाव । कोण एक ठाव उरला तेथें ॥1॥
इंद्रियव्यापार जेंजें कांहीं कर्म । करितों ते धर्म सकळ तुझे ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें हित फार लागला विचार । तुज सर्व भार चालवणें ॥2॥
जो कांहीं लौकिक करिसी तो तुझा । अपमान पूजा कांहींतरि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मी तों राहिलों निंश्चत । तुज कळे हित तैसें करीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have offered You all my devotion; what corner remains that is not Yours? Every act of the senses, whatever work I do, all that merit belongs to You. My greatest interest is this one thought: that You must carry my every burden.

Whatever worldly honor or insult comes, it is Yours in any case. Says Tuka, I remain at ease, knowing You will do what is best for me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have given all my devotion to you. What single place is left that is not yours? Whatever the senses do, whatever work I perform, all that merit is yours. My one great concern is this thought: that you must carry my every burden. Whatever honor or insult the world gives me, it is yours either way. Tuka says: I have come to rest, free of worry. You know what is good for me; do as you see fit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays down the whole of his life at God's feet and keeps nothing back for himself. Every action of the senses, every deed and its merit, he assigns to God rather than to his own account. His one remaining wish is that God should carry all his burdens, and he extends this even to public honor and insult, treating both as God's affair and not his own. Having handed everything over, he says he now rests without anxiety, trusting God to do whatever is truly best for him.

GATHA 4056 Confession and Sin

Confession, remorse burns sin away

मराठी मूळ

भय नाहीं भेव । अनुतापीं नव्हतां जीव ॥1॥
जेथें देवाची तळमळ । तेथें काशाचा विटाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
उच्चारितां दोष । नाहीं उरों देत लेश ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त । होय आवडी मिश्रित॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no fear or dread when the jiva burns with remorse. Where the chitta yearns for God, what impurity can remain? The moment one confesses one's faults, not a trace of them is left.

Says Tuka, the mind becomes blended with loving devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no fear, no dread, when the soul burns with remorse. Where there is a deep longing for God, what defilement can stay? The moment you speak your faults aloud, not a trace of them is left. Tuka says: then the mind becomes mixed through with loving devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming what true remorse does. When the soul aches with repentance and longs for God, there is no room left for fear or for stain; the longing itself cleanses. Speaking one's faults openly, confessing them, leaves not a trace behind. And once the faults are gone, the mind is no longer left empty but is steeped through with loving devotion.

GATHA 4057 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the self becomes Hari

मराठी मूळ

ध्यानीं ध्यातां पंढरिराया । मनासहित पालटे काया॥1॥
तेथें बोला कैची उरी । माझें मीपण जाला हरि ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्तचैतन्यीं पडतां मिठी । दिसे हरिरूप अवघी सृष्टि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगों काय । एकाएकीं हरिवृत्तमय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

While meditating upon the King of Pandhari, both mind and body are transformed. What room is left for words when my very sense of 'I' has become Hari? When consciousness merges into pure awareness, the entire creation appears as Hari's form.

Says Tuka, what more can I say? All at once, everything has become pervaded by Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As I meditate on the King of Pandhari, my body changes along with my mind. What room is left there for words? My own sense of 'I' has become Hari. When the mind embraces pure awareness, the whole creation looks like Hari's own form. Tuka says: what can I tell you? All at once, everything is filled with Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what happens in deep meditation on Vitthal, the King of Pandhari. Mind and body are both transformed, and words fail, because the very 'I' that would speak has dissolved into Hari. When his awareness merges with pure consciousness, the whole world appears as nothing but Hari's form. He ends by admitting that this state is beyond report: in a single moment, everything is steeped in Hari.

GATHA 4058 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, refusing to slander

मराठी मूळ

कोणा ही केंडावें हा आह्मां अधर्म । जोजो पावे श्रम तोतो देव ॥1॥
ह्मणउनि चित्ता सिकविलें वोजें । आतां हें चि दुजें न बोलावें ॥ध्रु.॥
हालविलें जरि परउपकारें । जिव्हे पाप खरें उपाधीचें॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीव प्रारब्धा आधीन । कोण वाहे सीण करुणा शोभे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To slander anyone is a sin in our eyes. Whoever suffers hardship is God to us.

For this reason I have taught my mind its duty: no other word should be spoken. If the tongue moves to criticize, even for another's benefit, it commits the sin of interference.

Says Tuka, every jiva is subject to its own destiny. Who would bear the burden of needless grief? Compassion alone is fitting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To slander anyone is, for us, a sin. Whoever is in distress is God to us. So I have carefully taught my mind its duty: from now on, speak no other word than this. Even if the tongue moves to criticize for someone else's good, that meddling is a real sin upon it. Tuka says: every soul is bound by its own destiny. Who would carry needless grief? Compassion alone is fitting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets out a strict rule for his own speech. To run anyone down is a sin in his eyes, and he sees God in everyone who suffers, so he has trained his mind to say nothing else. He goes further: even faultfinding offered as helpful advice is still meddling, and the tongue that does it takes on real guilt. Since each soul carries its own destiny anyway, brooding over others' faults is needless grief; the only fitting response to another person is compassion.

GATHA 4059 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the festival bath cleanses all

मराठी मूळ

देव तिळीं आला । गोडगोड जीव धाला ॥1॥
साधला हा पर्वकाळ । गेला अंतरींचा मळ ॥ध्रु.॥
पापपुण्य गेलें । एका स्नानें चि खुंटलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे वाणी । शुद्ध जनादननीं जनीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God has come in the sesame offering; the jiva is satiated with sweetness. This auspicious moment has borne fruit; the inner impurity is gone.

Sin and merit have both ended; a single holy bath has settled everything. Says Tuka, the tongue has become pure in the celebration honoring Janardana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God has come into the sesame offering; the soul is filled with sweetness. This holy time has borne its fruit; the impurity within is gone. Sin and merit are both ended; a single sacred bath has settled it all. Tuka says: in the gathering that honors Janardana, the tongue has become pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is celebrating a sacred occasion, marked by the sesame offering and the holy bath, in which God himself is present. In that moment the soul is satisfied through and through, and the inner stain is washed away. He says the single sacred bath ends both sin and merit at once, lifting him past the whole ledger of deeds. And in the festival that honors Janardana, even his speech is made pure.

GATHA 4060 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, heaven brought home

मराठी मूळ

काय उणें मज पांडुरंगा पायीं । रिद्धिसिद्धि ठायीं वोळगती ॥1॥
कोण पाहे सुखा नासिवंताकडे । तृष्णेचें बापुडें नहों आह्मी ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वर्गसुखें आह्मीं केलीं पावटणी । पापपुण्यें दोन्ही उलंडिलीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घरीं आणिलें वैकुंठ । वसविली पेठ वैष्णवांची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What am I lacking at the feet of Panduranga? All powers and perfections wait upon me there. Who would look toward perishable pleasures? We are not the wretches of craving.

We have made heavenly joys our stepping-stones and vaulted beyond both sin and merit. Says Tuka, we have brought Vaikuntha into our very home and established a settlement of Vaishnavas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What do I lack at Panduranga's feet? All powers and perfections wait upon me there. Who would look toward pleasures that perish? We are not the wretches of craving. We have made the joys of heaven our stepping-stones, and stepped over both sin and merit alike. Tuka says: we have brought Vaikuntha into our own home and settled a whole market town of Vaishnavas.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says that at Vitthal's feet he lacks nothing, for every power and perfection already serves him there. He refuses perishable pleasures and denies being one of craving's wretches. Then he raises the claim higher: even the joys of heaven are only a stair he steps on, and he has stepped clean over both sin and merit, beyond the whole bargain of reward and punishment. The end is bold: Vaikuntha, God's own abode, has been brought into his very home, and around it a whole settlement of devotees has grown up.

GATHA 4061 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the infinite giver

मराठी मूळ

माझें मागणें तें किती । दाता लक्ष्मीचा पति ॥1॥
तान्हेल्यानें पीतां पाणी । तेणें गंगा नव्हे उणी ॥ध्रु.॥
कल्पतरु जाला देता । तेथें पोटाचा मागता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संतां ध्यातां । परब्रह्म आलें हाता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How small is my asking, when the giver is the Lord of Lakshmi Himself? When a thirsty man drinks water, is the Ganga thereby diminished? When the wish-fulfilling tree becomes the giver, who before it is merely a beggar for bread? Says Tuka, by meditating on the saints, the Supreme Brahman comes into one's hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How small is my asking, when the giver is the Lord of Lakshmi himself? When a thirsty man drinks his water, the Ganga is not made any less. When the wish-granting tree itself becomes the giver, who would stand before it begging only for a bellyful? Tuka says: by meditating on the saints, the Supreme Brahman comes into your hands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his small request against the boundlessness of the one he asks. The giver is the Lord of Lakshmi, so infinitely rich that one man's request takes nothing from him, just as a thirsty drinker does not shrink the Ganga. Before a wish-granting tree, it would be foolish to beg only for food; the giver can grant far more. He closes with where the real treasure lies: by dwelling on the saints, the Supreme Brahman itself comes into one's hands.

GATHA 4062 The Saints

The saints, teaching by living it

मराठी मूळ

अर्भकाचे साटीं । पंतें हातीं धरिली पाटी ॥1॥
तैसे संत जगीं । क्रिया करुनी दाविती अंगीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बालकाचे चाली । माता जाणुनि पाउल घाली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाव । जनासाटीं उदकीं ठाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the sake of a child, the teacher takes up the writing-slate. In the same way, saints act out their teachings in their own lives for the world to see.

As a mother understands the child's pace and places her footstep accordingly, so do the saints guide us. Says Tuka, the boat exists for the people's sake, to carry them upon the water.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the sake of a small child, the teacher takes the writing-slate in his own hand. In the same way, saints in this world act out their teaching in their own bodies. As a mother knows the child's pace and places her step to match it, so the saints walk with us. Tuka says: the boat exists for the people's sake, to give them a footing upon the water.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains how saints teach. Like a teacher who picks up the slate himself so a child can learn by watching, the saints do not merely instruct in words; they live out the teaching in their own conduct for the world to see. Like a mother who shortens her stride to match her child's small steps, they meet ordinary people where they are.

And like a boat, they exist for others' sake, giving people a footing to cross what they could not cross alone.

GATHA 4063 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, a bond across many births

मराठी मूळ

जन्मोजन्मींची संगत । भेटी जाली अकस्मात ॥1॥
आतां सोडितां सुटेना । तंतु प्रीतीचा तुटेना ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें चित्त तुझ्या पायां । मिठी पडिली पंढरिराया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंतीं । तुझी माझी एक गति ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A friendship spanning many births has met with a sudden reunion. Now this bond cannot be broken; the thread of love will not snap.

My mind has fallen at Your feet in an embrace, O King of Pandhari. Says Tuka, in the end, Your destiny and mine are one and the same.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A companionship from birth after birth has met again, all at once. Now, even if I try to let go, it will not loosen; the thread of love will not snap. My mind has fallen at your feet and clasped them, O King of Pandhari. Tuka says: in the end, your way and mine are one and the same.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells of a love that feels older than this life, a companionship carried through many births, suddenly renewed in reunion. The bond is now past breaking; even if he tried to release it, the thread of love would hold. His mind has fallen at Vitthal's feet and clings there in embrace. The final line states the whole hope of his devotion: that at the last his destiny and God's will be one and the same.

GATHA 4064 Longing and Separation

Longing, asking the way to the feet

मराठी मूळ

सांग पांडुरंगा मज हा उपाव । जेणें तुझे पाव आतुडति ॥1॥
न कळे हा निर्धार ब्रह्मादिकां पार । कायसा विचार माझा तेथें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां धरुनियां धीर । राहूं कोठवर मायबापा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, O Panduranga, what is the way by which I may reach Your feet? Even Brahma and the other gods cannot fathom Your depths; what place does my feeble reasoning have there? Says Tuka, how much longer must I hold my patience, O my Mother and Father?

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, Panduranga, the way by which I may reach your feet. Even Brahma and the gods cannot grasp your depth; what is my poor reasoning worth there? Tuka says: holding my patience now, how long must I wait, O my Mother and Father?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is pleading for guidance toward union with God. He knows his own mind cannot find the way, since even Brahma and the high gods cannot fathom God's depth; his small reasoning is helpless there. So he simply asks God to show him the way to his feet. The cry at the end mixes trust with strain: he is holding on to his patience, but he is weary of waiting, and he calls Vitthal his Mother and Father, the one bound to answer a child.

GATHA 4065 Surrender and Acceptance

Grace alone, effort cannot reach God

मराठी मूळ

काय फार जरी जालों मी शाहाणा । तरी नारायणा नातुडसी ॥1॥
काय जालें जरी मानी मज मन । परि नातुडति चरण तुझे देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय जालें जरी जालों उदासीन । परि वर्म भिन्न तुझें देवा ॥2॥
काय जालें जरी केले म्यां सायास । ह्मणवितों दास भक्त तुझा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज दाविल्यावांचून । तुझें वर्म कोण जाणे देवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if I become very learned, O Narayana, I cannot reach You. Even if my own mind respects me, Your feet still elude me, O God.

Even if I become detached, Your secret remains hidden, O Lord. Even if I undertake great efforts and call myself Your servant and devotee, it avails nothing.

Says Tuka, unless You reveal Yourself, who can know Your mystery, O God?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even if I become very learned, O Narayana, I still cannot reach You. Even if my own mind respects me, Your feet still slip away from me, O God. Even if I become detached, Your secret stays hidden, O God. Even if I labor hard and call myself Your servant, Your devotee, it comes to nothing. Tuka says: unless You show Yourself, who can know Your mystery, O God?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is taking apart the idea that you can earn your way to God. He lists the things a seeker is proud of: learning, self-respect, detachment, hard discipline, the title of servant and devotee. One by one he says each of them fails to reach the feet. The point is not that effort is bad, but that it cannot pry open what only God can open. The mystery stays sealed until God Himself reveals it; the last word belongs to grace, not to the seeker's striving.

GATHA 4066 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage to Pandhari, meeting Brahman

मराठी मूळ

जातां पंढरीच्या मागॉ । काय वणूप सुखा मग ॥1॥
घडे लाभ लक्षकोटि । परब्रह्मीं होइल भेटी ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम गर्जत येती संत । त्यांच्या दर्शनें होईजे मुक्त ॥2॥
जो अलक्ष्य ब्रह्मादिकां । आला संनिध ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Walking the road to Pandhari, how can I describe the joy that follows? Gain beyond counting is earned; one meets the Supreme Brahman. The saints come chanting the Name in a roar; by their mere sight one is set free.

He who is beyond the reach of even Brahma has come close. Says Tuka, He stands right here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Walking the road to Pandhari, how can I describe the joy that follows? The gain is past all counting; one meets the Supreme Brahman. The saints come chanting the Name in a roar, and at the mere sight of them one is set free. Tuka says: He who is beyond the reach of even Brahma and the gods has come near, He stands right here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising the pilgrimage to Pandhari as a road whose reward cannot be measured. He says the walk itself ends in meeting the Supreme Brahman, the very absolute that philosophy strains toward. The saints walking the same road, chanting the Name aloud, are themselves freeing: their sight alone releases you. The startling claim he lands is that the God whom even Brahma and the high gods cannot reach has come close and stands right here, on this road, with these pilgrims.

GATHA 4067 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, hold the Name now

मराठी मूळ

सारासार विचार करा उठाउठी । नाम धरा कंठीं विठोबाचें ॥1॥
तयाच्या चिंतनें निरसलें संकट । तरलों दुर्घट भवसिंधु ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्मोनियां कुळीं वाचे स्मरे राम । धरी हा चि नेम अहिनिशीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोटी कुळें तीं पुनीत । भावें गातां गीत विठोबाचे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Make haste and discern the real from the unreal. Hold the name of Vithoba at your throat.

By contemplating Him, every calamity dissolves, and the impassable ocean of worldly existence is crossed. Having been born in a human family, let the tongue remember Rama; make this your firm resolve, day and night.

Says Tuka, millions of families are purified when one sings the songs of Vithoba with true feeling.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Make haste; weigh the real against the unreal. Hold the name of Vithoba at your throat. By remembering Him, every danger dissolves, and the hard ocean of this world is crossed. You were born into a human family: let your tongue remember Rama. Make this your firm rule, day and night. Tuka says: millions of families are made pure when one sings the songs of Vithoba with true feeling.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is urging the listener to act now, not later. He frames the whole of life as a single discrimination: the real against the unreal, and tells you to settle it quickly and keep the Name on your lips. He names the stakes plainly. The Name dissolves danger and carries you across the ocean of birth and death, which no other means can. The human birth is the rare chance to do this, so make remembrance a fixed daily rule. The closing claim widens the reward: one person singing Vithoba's songs with true feeling purifies not just himself but countless generations of his family.

GATHA 4068 Autobiography

Vow, never sell the discourse

मराठी मूळ

मोल घेऊनियां कथा जरी करीं । तरी भंगो हरी देह माझा ॥1॥
माझी कथा करा ऐसें ह्मणें कोणा । तरी झडो जाणा जिव्हा माझी ॥ध्रु.॥
साहए तूं जालासी काय उणें तुपें । आणीक भूतांपें काय मागों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्व सिद्ध तुझे पायीं । तूं माझा गोसावी पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I ever take payment for performing a sacred discourse, O Hari, may You destroy this body of mine. If I ever ask someone to arrange my discourse, may my tongue fall off.

You have become my patron; what then is lacking? Why should I beg from any other being? Says Tuka, all perfection lies at Your feet. You are my master, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I ever take payment for telling the sacred story, O Hari, then break this body of mine. If I ever ask anyone to arrange my discourse, then let my tongue fall off. You have become my support; what then is lacking? Why should I beg from any other being? Tuka says: all fulfillment lies at Your feet. You are my master, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making a vow about how he will and will not live as a singer of God's story. He swears never to take money for the sacred discourse and never to angle for invitations to perform, and he calls down ruin on his own body and tongue if he breaks it. The vow rests on a reason: God Himself has become his support, so there is nothing left to lack and no one else to beg from. Naming Panduranga as his only master, he is rejecting the temptation to turn devotion into a trade. The kirtan is for God, not for a fee or a reputation.

GATHA 4069 The Nature of God

Grace turns knowledge into Brahman

मराठी मूळ

जरि हा हो कृपा करिल नारायण । तरी हें चि ज्ञान ब्रह्म होय ॥1॥
कोठोनियां कांहीं न लगे आणावें । न लगे कोठें जावें तरावया ॥ध्रु.॥
जरी देव कांहीं धरिल पैं चित्तीं । तरि हे चि होती दिव्य चक्षु ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव दावील आपणा । तरि जीवपणा ठाव नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If Narayana chooses to be gracious, then this very knowledge becomes Brahman. Nothing needs to be brought from anywhere; one need not go anywhere to be saved.

If God holds something in His chitta, then these very eyes become divine. Says Tuka, if God reveals Himself, there is no more room for the illusion of separate selfhood.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If Narayana chooses to be kind, then this very knowledge becomes Brahman. Nothing has to be fetched from anywhere; you need go nowhere to be saved. If God holds something in His heart, then these very eyes become divine eyes. Tuka says: if God shows Himself, then there is no room left for separate selfhood.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that everything turns on God's grace, not on going somewhere or acquiring something. With grace, the ordinary knowledge you already have becomes Brahman itself; nothing needs to be brought from elsewhere and no journey is required for liberation. When God wills it, the same eyes you now have see divinely. The final claim is the sharpest: once God reveals Himself, the sense of being a separate self has no place left to stand. Realization is not an addition; it is the dissolving of the I that thought itself apart.

GATHA 4070 Prayers

Prayer, no other authority over me

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगा कृपाळुवा दयावंता । धरिसील सत्ता सकळ ही ॥1॥
कां जी आह्मांवरी आणिकांची सत्ता । तुह्मासी असतां जविळक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पायीं केलें निवेदन । उचित हें दान करीं आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Panduranga, compassionate and merciful one, You hold all power. Why then should others have authority over us, when You are so near? Says Tuka, I have made my offering at Your feet. Now grant me the gift that is fitting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Panduranga, kind and merciful one, You hold all power. Why then should others have authority over us, when You are so near? Tuka says: I have made my offering at Your feet. Now give me the gift that is fitting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying with a quiet challenge inside the prayer. Since Panduranga holds all power and stands so near, he asks why any other force should still rule over him. The unspoken frame is the pull of fate, of worldly masters, of fear; he is asking to be set under God's authority alone. Having placed his whole self at God's feet as an offering, he asks God to answer with the fitting gift. He leaves what is fitting to God, trusting the merciful one to know it better than he does.

GATHA 4071 The Power of the Name

The Name as weapon, the inner war

मराठी मूळ

रात्री दिवस आह्मां युद्धाचा प्रसंग । अंतर्बाहए जग आणि मन ॥1॥
जीवा ही आगोज पडती आघात । येऊनियां नित्य नित्य करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझ्या नामाचिया बळें । अवघीयांचें काळें केलें तोंड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Day and night we face the battle within and without: the world and the mind. Blows strike even the very jiva, coming again and again, without ceasing.

Says Tuka, by the strength of Your name, we have blackened the faces of all our enemies.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Day and night we are in the thick of battle, within and without: the world, and the mind. Blows fall even on the very life in us, striking again and again, without stopping. Tuka says: by the strength of Your name, we have blackened the faces of all of them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the spiritual life as constant war, fought on two fronts at once: the outer world and the inner mind. The attacks are relentless and reach all the way down to the living soul, coming again and again with no pause. Against this he names his one weapon, the Name of God, and says its strength has put every assailant to shame, blackening their faces in defeat. The poem points the listener inward: the hardest enemy is the mind, and the answer is not to fight it with the mind but to hold the Name.

GATHA 4072 Surrender and Acceptance

Self-abasement, dust at the saints' feet

मराठी मूळ

होइन खडे गोटे । चरणरज साने मोठे । पंढरीचे वाटे । संतचरणीं लागेन ॥1॥
आणीक काय दुजें । म्या मागणें तुजपासीं । अविट तें सुख । भय नास नाहीं ज्यासी ॥ध्रु.॥
होइन मोचे वाहणा । पायीं सकळां संतजनां । मांजर सुकर सुणा । जवळी शेष घ्यावया ॥2॥
सांडोवा पायरी । वाहळ बावी गंगातिरी । होइन तयावरी । संतसज्जन चालती ॥3॥
लागें संतां पांयीं । ऐसा ठेवीं भलता ठायीं । तुका ह्मणे देई । धाक नाहीं जन्माचा ॥4॥
आपुलें कारण साधों जी विचार । करावा हा धीर धरूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
काय करावया आणिका या युक्ति । काय नव्हे भक्ति विठोबाची ॥2॥
एक पुढें गेले वाट दावूनियां । मारग तो वांयां कोण सांडी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी विठोबासी चिंता । भेईना सर्वथा न घडे तें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let me become the pebbles and stones, small and great, on the road to Pandhari, so that the feet of saints may touch me. What else do I ask of You? Only that imperishable joy which knows no fear or decay.

Let me become the sandals and shoes on the feet of all the saints, or a cat, a pig, or a dog nearby to eat their leftovers. Let me be a stepping-stone, a well-bucket, a railing by the Ganga, upon which saints and good people walk.

Says Tuka, place me at the saints' feet wherever You will; I have no fear of any birth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let me become the pebbles and stones, small and large, on the road to Pandhari, so the feet of the saints may touch me. What else would I ask of You? Only that unfading joy which knows no fear and no decay. Let me become the sandals and shoes on the feet of all the saints, or a cat, a pig, a dog nearby to eat their leftovers. Let me be a stepping-stone, a well-bucket, a railing by the Ganga, on which saints and good people walk. Tuka says: place me at the saints' feet wherever You will; I have no fear of any birth. Let me secure my own purpose; hold steady and stay patient. What use is there in other devices? Is the devotion of Vithoba not enough? Some have gone ahead and shown the way; who would throw that road away? Tuka says: my care is fixed on Vithoba; I have no fear at all, for what should not happen will not.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays to be made the lowest thing near the saints rather than anything high away from them. He asks to be the road-stones, the sandals, even the animals that eat their scraps, anything that keeps him at their feet. The frame is that nearness to the saints is worth more than any dignity, and the only thing he truly wants is the deathless, fearless joy that company brings. Because of that, he says he no longer dreads being reborn in any form. The second movement turns to resolve: the one needed thing is patience and trust, since Vithoba's devotion is already enough and the saints have walked the road ahead and marked it. He ends without fear, certain that with his care set on Vithoba, nothing that should not happen ever will.

GATHA 4073 Devotion to Vitthal

Refusal of liberation, choosing the saints

मराठी मूळ

कासया व्हावें जीतांचि मुक्त । सांडुनियां थीतें प्रेमसुख ॥1॥
वैष्णवांचा दास जाला नारायण । काय त्या मिळोन असे काम ॥ध्रु.॥
काय त्या गांठीचें पडलें सुटोन । उगला चि बैसोन धीरु धरीं ॥2॥
सुख आह्मांसाटीं केलें हें निर्माण । निद।व तो कोण हाणे लाता ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज न लगे सायोज्यता । राहेन या संतां समागमें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why seek to be liberated while still alive, abandoning the settled joy of love? Narayana Himself has become the servant of the Vaishnavas; what remains to be accomplished by joining Him? What is there knotted in your bundle that needs untying? Simply sit still and hold your patience. This bliss was created for our sake; who but a fool would kick it away? Says Tuka, I do not want oneness with God. I would rather remain in the company of these saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why want to be liberated while alive, throwing away the settled joy of love? Narayana Himself has become the servant of the Vaishnavas; what is left to gain by merging into Him? What knot in your bundle still needs untying? Just sit still and keep your patience. This joy was made for our sake; who but a fool would kick it away? Tuka says: I do not want oneness with God. I would rather stay in the company of these saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the prize that most seekers chase. He turns down liberation-in-life and even final union with God, because both would mean leaving the living joy of loving devotion. He points out the reversal at the heart of bhakti: God Himself has become the servant of His devotees, so there is nothing higher to merge into. His advice is to stop straining as if some knot still needs untying, and simply rest in the love already given, a bliss made for the devotee's sake. Ending on the boldest note, he says he wants the company of the saints more than oneness with God itself.

GATHA 4074 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration of Pandhari, every wish fulfilled

मराठी मूळ

आवडे पंढरी भीमा पांडुरंग । चंद्रभागा लिंग पांडुरंग॥1॥
कामधेनु कल्पतरु चिंतामणी । आवडीची धणी पुरवीती॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जीवा थोर जालें सुख । नाठवे हे भूक तान कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I love Pandhari, the Bhima, and Panduranga. Chandrabhaga is the very emblem of Panduranga.

Like the wish-fulfilling cow, the wish-granting tree, and the wish-yielding gem, they satisfy every desire. Says Tuka, the jiva has found such great joy that it remembers neither hunger nor thirst.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I love Pandhari, the Bhima river, and Panduranga. Chandrabhaga is the very sign of Panduranga. Like the wish-granting cow, the wish-granting tree, the wish-granting jewel, they fulfill every desire to the full. Tuka says: the soul has found such great joy that it remembers no hunger and no thirst.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pours out love for the holy place itself: Pandhari, the river Bhima, the curve called Chandrabhaga, and Panduranga who is their meaning. He compares them to the three great wish-fulfillers of myth, the divine cow, the wish-tree, and the wish-jewel, saying they satisfy every longing completely. The closing line names the effect on the devotee: the joy is so great that the soul forgets hunger and thirst altogether. The place and its God are not a means to something else; resting in them, the ordinary cravings simply fall silent.

GATHA 4075 Surrender and Acceptance

Trust, God as tender Mother

मराठी मूळ

लाडें भाकितों करुणा । तूं रे उदाराचा राणा ॥1॥
करिसी आमुचा सांभाळ । तूं रे माउली स्नेहाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं चिंता रे आह्मांसी । तूं चि भार चालविसी ॥2॥
आह्मी जालों उदासीन । तूं चि करिसी जतन ॥3॥
आह्मां नाहीं जीवनास । तूं चि पुरविसी घास ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे भलते सवें । जातां मागें मागें धांवे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With fond pleading I call out to You, O King of generosity. You look after us, O compassionate Mother.

We have no worry at all, for You Yourself carry our every burden. We have become carefree, and You Yourself watch over us.

We lack even our daily sustenance, and You Yourself provide each morsel. Says Tuka, wherever we wander, You come running close behind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With fond pleading I call out to You, O King of the generous. You take care of us, O loving Mother. We have no worry at all, for You carry our whole burden. We have grown carefree, and You Yourself watch over us. We have nothing to live on, and You Yourself provide each mouthful. Tuka says: wherever we wander, You come running close behind.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks in the voice of a child who has handed everything over. He calls God both King of the generous and loving Mother, and on that ground refuses all worry: the burden is God's to carry, not his. The frame is total dependence, freely chosen; having no resources of his own, he trusts God to supply each day's morsel. The final image lands the trust as tenderness, God following the wandering child everywhere, running close behind so he is never lost. Surrender here is not grim resignation but the ease of a child safe in a mother's keeping.

GATHA 4076 Devotion to Vitthal

Refuge, strength from God's feet

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां हें सकळ । तुझ्या पायांचें चि बळ ॥1॥
करूं अमृताचें पान । दुजें नेणों कांहीं आन ॥ध्रु.॥
जयाचा जो भोग। सुख दुःख पीडा रोग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । तुझे पायीं माझा ठेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All our strength comes from the power of Your feet. We drink the nectar of that alone and know no other thing.

Whatever joy or sorrow, affliction or illness comes, is each one's own portion to bear. Says Tuka, O God, my treasure lies at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All that we have is the strength of Your feet alone. We drink the nectar of that one thing and know nothing else. Whatever comes, joy or sorrow, affliction or illness, is each one's own portion to bear. Tuka says: O God, my treasure is laid up at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces every bit of his strength back to a single source, the feet of God, and says he drinks that one nectar and wants nothing besides. He then sets the troubles of life in their place: joy and sorrow, pain and sickness are each person's own allotment, to be borne rather than fought. The frame is acceptance grounded in refuge; because his real treasure is kept safe at God's feet, the shifting fortunes of the body do not touch what matters. He is not denying that pain comes, only refusing to let it be the center.

GATHA 4077 Worldly Life

Warning, the divided heart

मराठी मूळ

प्रपंच परमार्थ संपादोनि दोन्ही । एक ही निदानीं न घडे त्यासी ॥1॥
दोहीं पेंवावरी ठेवूं जातां हात । शेवटीं अपघात शरीराचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तया दोहींकडे धका । शेवटीं तो नरकामाजी पडे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who tries to succeed at both worldly life and spiritual life together will accomplish neither in the end. Reaching for two granary bins at once leads to an accident of the body.

Says Tuka, such a person is shoved from both sides and finally falls into hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you try to win at worldly life and the spiritual life both at once, you will not finish either one. Reach for two granary bins at the same time, and in the end your body comes to harm. Tuka says: such a person is shoved from both sides, and at last he falls into hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning against the half-and-half life that keeps one foot in the world and one foot on the path. He says you cannot complete both at once; whoever tries finishes neither. His image is a man reaching for two grain bins together: he loses his balance and falls. The claim is sharp. To divide the heart this way is not safety but ruin, because the man pulled both directions ends up shoved from both sides into the worst place. The point is to choose, not to hedge.

GATHA 4078 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one true comfort

मराठी मूळ

संसारा आलिया एक सुख आहे । आठवावे पाय विठोबाचे ॥1॥
येणें होय सर्व संसार सुखाचा । न लगे दुःखाचा लेश कांहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
घेईल तयासी सोपें आहे सुख । बोलियेलें मुखें नारायण ॥2॥
सांगितली सोय करुणासागरें । तुह्मां कांहो बरें न वाटतें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तेणें उपकार केला । भोळ्या भाविकाला तरावया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having come into this world, there is one true comfort: remembering the feet of Vithoba. By this, all of worldly life becomes joyful and not a trace of suffering remains.

This happiness is available to whoever takes it; simply speak Narayana with the mouth. The ocean of compassion has shown the way.

Why does it not feel right to you? Says Tuka, He has done a great favor for the faithful, to carry them across.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Having come into this world, there is one comfort: remember the feet of Vithoba. By this, all of worldly life turns to joy, and not a trace of suffering is left. This happiness is there for whoever will take it; only speak Narayana with your mouth. The ocean of compassion has shown the way. Why does it not seem good to you? Tuka says: He has done this favor for the faithful, to carry them across.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the single comfort available to anyone born into this life: keep Vithoba's feet in mind. He insists the practice is easy and open to all; you need only say the Name, Narayana, with your mouth, and worldly life turns sweet with no suffering left. The way has been shown freely by God, the ocean of mercy, so the saint is puzzled, almost grieved, that people still hold back from it. The closing line frames the whole thing as a gift: God laid out this simple path on purpose, to ferry the faithful across the world they are drowning in.

GATHA 4079 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, fearless in God

मराठी मूळ

आह्मां भय धाक कोणाचा रे पाहें । काळ मशक काय मानव हे ॥1॥
आह्मांसी ते काय चिंता या पोटाची । माउली आमुची पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
काय करावी हे कोणाची मान्यता । करितां अनंता कोण वारी ॥2॥
नाहीं शीण आह्मां जालें कवतुक । पुनीत हे लोक करावया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे खातों आनंदाचे लाडू । नका चरफडूं घ्या रे तुह्मी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whom should we fear? What is Death to us but a mosquito? What are mere mortals to us? What worry do we have about our bellies? Panduranga is our Mother. Whose approval do we need? When the Infinite One blesses us, who can stop us? We feel no weariness; it has all become a delight, for we are here to purify these people.

Says Tuka, we feast on the sweets of bliss. Stop fretting and take your share.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whom should we fear? What is Death to us but a mosquito? What are mere men? Why should we worry about this belly? Panduranga is our Mother. Whose approval do we need? When the Infinite One acts, who can stop it? We feel no weariness; it has all become play, for we are here to make these people pure. Tuka says: we are eating the sweets of bliss. Stop fretting; come and take your share.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from a state where every ordinary fear has dropped away. Death, other people, even the daily anxiety over food, none of it can touch one whose Mother is Panduranga. He needs no one's approval, because when the Infinite One is at work no one can obstruct it. He reframes his own labor as effortless play, undertaken not for himself but to purify those around him. The last line turns to the listener with an open hand: he is feasting on joy, so stop your anxious fretting and come share in it.

GATHA 4080 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the counterfeit exposed

मराठी मूळ

तांबगी हें नाणें न चले ख†या मोलें । जरी हिंडविलें देशोदेशीं ॥1॥
करणीचें कांहीं न मने सज्जना । यावें लागे मना वृद्धांचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
हिरयासारिका दिसे शिरगोळा । पारखी ते डोळां न पाहाती ॥2॥
देऊनियां भिंग कामाविलें मोतीं । पारखिया हातीं घेतां नये ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे काय नटोनियां व्यर्थ । आपुलें हें चित्त आपणा ग्वाही ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A copper coin will not pass for true currency, no matter how far you carry it. Actions that do not satisfy the wise are worthless; one must win the approval of the elders.

Glass may look like a diamond, but experts will not give it a second glance. A false pearl made with a coating cannot pass through a jeweler's hands.

Says Tuka, what use is dressing up in vain? Your own conscience is your true witness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A copper coin will not pass as real money, no matter how far you carry it across the land. Whatever the good do not accept counts for nothing; you must win the mind of the elders. Glass can look like a diamond, but the expert will not even glance at it. Coat a bead in foil and call it a pearl; it cannot pass through the jeweler's hands. Tuka says: what use is dressing yourself up in vain? Your own heart is your witness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tests false piety the way a market tests coin and gem. A copper piece, glass cut like a diamond, a foiled bead sold as a pearl: each may travel far and fool the crowd, but it fails the one who actually knows. So with a man's conduct; the approval of the wise and the elders is the assay that matters, not the size of the audience taken in. The point lands inward: there is no use dressing up an empty life, because your own conscience already knows what you are, and it is the witness you cannot bribe.

GATHA 4081 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, keep your own ground

मराठी मूळ

चित्ता मिळे त्याचा संग रुचिकर । क्षोभवितां दूर तों चि भलें ॥1॥
ऐसी परंपरा आलीसे चालत । भलत्याची नीत त्यागावरी ॥ध्रु.॥
हो कां पिता पुत्र बंधु कोणी तेही । विजाति संग्रहीं धरूं नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्य पाळावें वचन । अन्यथा आपण करूं नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The company that agrees with the mind is pleasant; when it provokes, it is best kept at a distance. Such has been the way passed down through ages: one must renounce whatever crosses one's path of goodness.

Be it father, son, or brother, one should not harbor the company of those of contrary nature. Says Tuka, one must keep one's word of truth and never behave otherwise.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Company that suits your mind is pleasant; when it provokes you, it is best kept far off. This is the way handed down through the ages: turn away from anyone who crosses your path of good. Be he father, son, or brother, do not keep close company with one whose nature runs against yours. Tuka says: hold to your word of truth, and never act otherwise.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives practical counsel on the company one keeps. Good company steadies the mind; company that agitates it should be kept at a distance, and this, he says, is the wisdom passed down through generations. He pushes the rule to its hard edge: even father, son, or brother is no exception if their nature pulls you off the path of goodness. Kinship does not override the soul's direction. The closing measure of the whole thing is simple integrity: keep your word, stay true, and never let circumstance bend you into acting otherwise.

GATHA 4082 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, the inner witness

मराठी मूळ

आपुली कसोटी शुद्ध राखी कारण । आगीनें भूषण अधिक पुट ॥1॥
नाहीं कोणासवें बोलणें लागत । निंश्चतीनें चित्तसमाधान ॥ध्रु.॥
लपविलें तें ही ढेंकरें उमटे । खोटियाचें खोटें उर फोडी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निंदा स्तुति दोन्ही वाव । आपुलाला भाव फळा येतो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Maintain your own purity for a good reason; fire only enhances the luster of gold. There is no need to argue with anyone; certainty and contentment come from inner conviction.

What is hidden within is revealed by a belch; the falsehood in a false man breaks through on its own. Says Tuka, both praise and blame are hollow. One's own inner faith is what bears fruit.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Keep your own testing pure, for good reason; fire only deepens the shine of gold. Then you need argue with no one; certainty itself gives the heart its peace. What you hide inside still surfaces, the way a belch gives you away; the falseness in a false man bursts his own chest open. Tuka says: praise and blame are both empty. It is your own inner faith that bears the fruit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges you to keep yourself genuine, comparing the tested soul to gold, which only grows brighter in the fire of trial. If you are real within, you need not argue your case to anyone; inner certainty is its own peace. He warns that what is concealed always leaks out, like a belch betraying what was swallowed, and the falseness in a pretender finally breaks him from inside. The conclusion sets the true measure: other people's praise and blame are both hollow, and only your own inward faith actually bears fruit.

GATHA 4083 The Moral Ideal

Moral counsel, gladness at another's ruin

मराठी मूळ

आणिकांच्या घातें मानितां संतोष । सुखदुःख दोष अंगीं लागे ॥1॥
ऐसें मनीं वाहूं नयेती संकल्प । करुं नये पाप भांडवल ॥ध्रु.॥
क्लेशाची चित्तीं राहाते कांचणी । अग्नींत टाकोनी ठाव जाळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येणें घडे पुण्यक्षय । होणार तें होय प्रारब्धें चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Taking pleasure in the ruin of others brings both joy and sorrow as flaws upon oneself. One should not entertain such thoughts in the mind or make sin one's capital.

The thorn of malice lodges in the chitta; like throwing something into fire, it burns away one's own ground. Says Tuka, by this, one's merit is destroyed. Whatever was destined happens by fate alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you find pleasure in another's downfall, both the joy and the sorrow, the fault, cling to your own body. Do not carry such designs in your mind; do not make sin your stock in trade. The thorn of spite that stays in the heart is like throwing fire down: it burns the very ground you stand on. Tuka says: by this your merit is spent. Whatever is to happen happens by destiny alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram examines the quiet pleasure people take in seeing an enemy ruined. He says the fault of it sticks to you, not to them; to plot another's harm is to make sin your working capital. The malice you keep in your heart is like setting a fire under yourself; it consumes your own footing. And it is wasted besides, because it burns away your accumulated merit while changing nothing: what is destined will happen by fate regardless. The teaching points not at the rival but at the spiteful impulse, which only injures the one who holds it.

GATHA 4084 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion that wants

मराठी मूळ

अज्ञानाची भक्ति इच्छती संपत्ती । तयाचिये मती बोध कैंचा ॥1॥
अज्ञानाची पूजा कामिक भावना । तयाचिया ध्याना देव कैंचा ॥ध्रु.॥
अज्ञानाचें कर्म फळीं ठेवी मन । निष्काम साधन तया कैंचें ॥2॥
अज्ञानाचें ज्ञान विषयावरी ध्यान । ब्रह्म सनातन तया कैंचें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जळो ऐसियांचे तोंड । अज्ञानाचें बंड वाढविती ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The devotion of the ignorant craves only wealth. How can wisdom dawn in such a mind? The worship of the ignorant is driven by desire.

How can God be present in such meditation? The karma of the ignorant fixes its mind on results. How can selfless practice come to such a one? The knowledge of the ignorant is fixed on sense-objects.

How can the eternal Brahman come to such a one? Says Tuka, let the mouths of such people burn. They only spread the riot of ignorance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The devotion of the ignorant craves wealth; how could understanding dawn in such a mind? The worship of the ignorant is moved by desire; how could God live in such meditation? The work of the ignorant keeps its eye on the reward; how could selfless practice come to him? The knowledge of the ignorant is fixed on the things of the senses; how could the eternal Brahman come to him? Tuka says: let such mouths burn. They only swell the riot of ignorance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays bare a devotion that is really self-seeking. The ignorant man prays for wealth, worships out of desire, works only for the fruit, and calls his sense-bound thinking knowledge; in each case the saint asks how God or wisdom could possibly enter so blocked a heart. The whole structure is a mirror for self-examination: it asks the listener to notice which of these motives is secretly his own. The harsh closing curse is aimed not at any single person but at the pattern itself, the loud false teaching that spreads ignorance instead of dispelling it.

GATHA 4085 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the gilded hypocrite

मराठी मूळ

गुळें माखोनियां दगड ठेविला । वर दिसे भला लोकाचारी ॥1॥
अंतरीं विषयाचें लागलें पैं पिसें । बाहिरल्या वेषें भुलवी लोकां ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसिया डांभिकां कैची हरिसेवा । नेणे चि सद्भावा कोणे काळीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येणें कैसा होय संत । विटाळलें चित्त कामक्रोधें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He has coated a stone with jaggery and set it out; on the surface it looks fine to the world. But within, the madness of sensory pleasures has taken hold; he deceives people with his outward garb.

How can such a hypocrite serve Hari? He has never known genuine devotion. Says Tuka, how can such a one become a saint when his mind is polluted with lust and anger?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has smeared a stone with jaggery and set it out; on the surface it looks fine, fit for the world's customs. But inside, the madness for sense-pleasure has gripped him; with his outward dress he fools the people. How can such a fraud do the service of Hari? He has never once known true devotion. Tuka says: how can such a man become a saint, when his heart is fouled with lust and anger?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the disguise off religious pretense. His image is a plain stone coated in jaggery: sweet and respectable on the outside, worthless within. So with the hypocrite whose pious costume hides a mind eaten by craving; the costume deceives the crowd but not the truth. The saint asks plainly how such a man could serve Hari or be counted a saint while lust and anger still pollute his heart. The criticism is aimed at the pattern of outward show over inner cleanness, and it presses the listener to ask whether his own piety is more than a coating.

GATHA 4086 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the squandered birth

मराठी मूळ

आयुष्य वेचूनि कुटुंब पोसिलें । काय हित केलें सांग बापा ॥1॥
फुकाचा चाकर जालासी काबाडी । नाहीं सुख घडी भोगावया ॥ध्रु.॥
दुर्लभ मनुष्यजन्म कष्टें पावलासी । दिला कुटुंबासी कामभोग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें आयुष्य नासिलें । पाप तें सांचिलें पतनासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You spent your entire life nourishing your family; tell me, father, what good did it do you? You became a free laborer, a drudge, without a moment's happiness to enjoy. This rare human birth you won through great effort, and you gave it over to family and sensual pleasure.

Says Tuka, you have squandered your lifespan like this, only heaping up sin to hasten your fall.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You spent your whole life feeding your family; tell me, father, what good did it do you? You became a free servant, a drudge, without one hour of happiness to enjoy. This rare human birth you won with great pain, and you handed it over to family and the pleasures of the body. Tuka says: you have wasted your lifespan this way, only piling up the sin that hastens your fall.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confronts a man at the end of an ordinary working life. He spent every year of it providing for his household, and the saint asks him bluntly what he gained for himself: nothing but the lot of an unpaid drudge, with no real happiness in it. The stakes are the birth itself. A human life, hard to obtain, is the one chance to seek God, and this man traded it for family duty and bodily pleasure. The verse is a shaking-awake: a life poured out only on the world is not merely empty but actively ruinous, heaping up the consequences that drag the soul down.

GATHA 4087 The Saints

Saints, become one to find one

मराठी मूळ

अनंत लक्षणें वाणितां अपार । संताचें तें घर सांपडेना ॥1॥
जये घरीं संत राहती आपण । तें तुह्मां ठिकाण आतुडेना ॥ध्रु.॥
ठिकाण धरूनी पाहवे ते संत । उगा च अकांत करूं नये ॥2॥
संत होऊनियां संतांसी पाहावें । तरि च तरावें तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The virtues of the saints are infinite and beyond description; their true dwelling cannot be found. The place where saints choose to reside is beyond your reach.

Hold firmly to your own ground and seek out the saints from there; do not make a pointless commotion. Says Tuka, one must become a saint oneself in order to truly see the saints, and only then can one be saved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The marks of the saints are endless, beyond all telling; their true house cannot be found. The place where the saints themselves live, you will not stumble upon. Hold your own ground and look for the saints from there; do not raise a pointless commotion. Tuka says: you must become a saint yourself to truly see the saints, and only then are you carried across.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the saints cannot be located the way one finds a house on a map; their qualities are beyond counting and their real dwelling is not a place you can blunder into. So the seeker's frantic searching outside is a pointless commotion. The instruction is to hold steady on your own inner ground and seek from there. The deep claim comes last: like is recognized by like, so you can only truly see a saint by becoming one yourself, and it is that inner transformation, not the finding of an address, that ferries you across.

GATHA 4088 Longing and Separation

Longing, sleepless for the Name

मराठी मूळ

संतांचा पढीयावो कैशापरि लाहो । नामाचा आठवो कैसा राहे ॥1॥
हे चि थोर चिंता लागली मनासी । निजतां निद्रेसी न लगे डोळा ॥ध्रु.॥
जेवितां जेवणीं न लगे गोड धड । वाटतें काबाड विषयसुख ॥2॥
ऐसिया संकटीं पाव कृपानिधी । लावीं संतपदीं प्रेमभावें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मीं नेणों कांहीं हित । तुजविण अनाथ पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How may I earn the companionship of saints? How may the remembrance of the Name stay with me always? This great anxiety has seized my mind; even at night, sleep does not come. While eating, nothing tastes good; sensory pleasure feels like drudgery.

In such distress, come to my rescue, O treasure of mercy, and attach me to the feet of saints with bonds of love. Says Tuka, I know nothing of what is good for me. Without You, I am an orphan, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How am I to win the company of the saints? How can the remembrance of the Name stay with me always? This one great anxiety has seized my mind; when I lie down, sleep will not come to my eyes. At meals nothing tastes sweet or right; the pleasures of the senses feel like drudgery. In such distress, come to my rescue, treasure of mercy; bind me to the feet of the saints with love. Tuka says: I know nothing of what is good for me. Without You I am an orphan, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the cry of holy longing turned inward as restlessness. Tukaram cannot rest until he gains the company of saints and a remembrance of the Name that never slips; the wanting keeps him from sleep and takes the savor out of food, while ordinary pleasures now feel like a burden. He turns the whole ache into a prayer, asking the merciful Lord to rescue him and tie him with love to the saints' feet. The closing confession names the stakes honestly: he does not even know what is truly good for him, and without Panduranga he is simply an orphan, helpless and unclaimed.

GATHA 4089 The Saints

Pandhari, the leveling of caste

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीचा वास धन्य ते चि प्राणी । अमृताची वाणी दिव्य देहो ॥1॥
मूढ मतिहीन दुष्ट अविचारी । ते होती पंढरी दयारूप ॥ध्रु.॥
शांति क्षमा अंगीं विरक्ति सकळ । नैराश्य निर्मळ नारी नर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं वर्णा अभिमान । अवघे जीवनमुक्त लोक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed are those souls who dwell in Pandhari. Their speech is nectar and their bodies are divine.

Even the dull, the dim-witted, the wicked, and the thoughtless become forms of compassion in Pandhari. Serenity, forgiveness, detachment, and purity fill their beings, both men and women.

Says Tuka, there is no pride of caste among them. All are living liberated souls.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed are the souls who live in Pandhari. Their speech is nectar; their bodies are divine. Even the dull, the dim-witted, the wicked, the thoughtless, in Pandhari they become forms of mercy. Peace and forgiveness fill their bodies. The women and the men are pure, and they want nothing. Tuka says: among them there is no pride of caste. All of them are people set free while still alive.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming what the holy ground of Pandhari does to the people who live in it. He says the place itself remakes them: even the dull and the cruel are turned into forms of compassion, their bodies divine and their speech sweet as nectar. He fills them with peace, forgiveness, purity, and the freedom of wanting nothing. The sharp claim sits in the last line: among these people there is no pride of caste, and every one of them, woman or man, is already liberated, not after death but now, alive. The pull of Pandhari dissolves the very rankings the world lives by.

GATHA 4090

The Necessity of Experience

Knowledge versus lived experience

मराठी मूळ

देखीचें तें ज्ञान करावें तें काई । अनुभव नाहीं आपणासी ॥1॥
इंद्रियांचे गोडी ठकलीं बहुतें । सोडितां मागुतें आवरेना ॥ध्रु.॥
युक्तीचा आहार नीतीचा वेव्हार । वैराग्य तें सार तरावया ॥2॥
नाव रेविाळतां घाला घाली वारा । तैसा तो पसारा अहंतेचा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बुिद्ध आपुले अधीन । करी नारायण आतुडे तों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Of what use is knowledge gained only from observation, without personal experience? Many have been deceived by the allure of the senses; once released, they cannot be reined in again. A measured diet, righteous conduct, and detachment are the essentials for crossing over.

When a boat is rocked, the wind strikes blow after blow; such is the storm of egoism. Says Tuka, keep the intellect under your own control and strive until Narayana is attained.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What use is the knowledge you get only from watching, when you have no experience of your own? The sweetness of the senses has cheated many. Once you let it loose, it will not be reined in again. A measured diet, honest dealing, dispassion: these are what carry you across. When a boat is rocked, the wind strikes it blow on blow. The sprawl of the ego is just like that. Tuka says: keep your mind under your own command, and strive until Narayana is reached.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing a hard line between knowing about the path and walking it. Knowledge gathered by watching others is useless, he says, if you have no experience of your own; many have been deceived by the pleasure of the senses, which cannot be reined back once let loose. What actually carries a person across is plain and practical: a measured diet, honest conduct, and dispassion. He pictures the ego as a wind battering a rocked boat, blow after blow. So he ends with the instruction: keep your own mind under your control, and do not stop striving until Narayana himself is reached.

GATHA 4091 Prayers

Prayer, all beings are God

मराठी मूळ

नर नारी बाळें अवघा नारायण । ऐसें माझें मन करीं देवा ॥1॥
न यो काम क्रोध द्वेष निंदा द्वंद । अवघा गोविंद निःसंदेह ॥ध्रु.॥
करोनियां साहए पुरवीं मनोरथ । व्हावें कृपावंत तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Men, women, and children are all Narayana; make my mind see this, O Lord. Let neither lust, anger, hatred, slander, nor conflict arise in me; let everything be Govinda beyond all doubt.

Be my ally, fulfill my chitta's desire, and be gracious to me. Says Tuka, this is my prayer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Men, women, children: all of them are Narayana. Make my mind see this, O God. Let no lust, no anger, no hatred, no slander, no quarrel rise in me. Let everything be Govinda, with no doubt left. Be my help; fulfill the longing of my heart. Be gracious to me, Tuka says.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking God for a single change of sight: that he may see Narayana in every person, in men, women, and children alike. He knows he cannot manage this on his own, so he prays for the mind itself to be remade. The plea is double: clear out lust, anger, hatred, slander, and quarrel, and let everything without exception appear as Govinda, beyond any doubt. He closes by asking God to be his ally, to fulfill his heart's one desire, and to show him grace. The whole abhanga is a request to be given the eyes that see God everywhere.

GATHA 4092 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the flatterer who forgets God

मराठी मूळ

आपुल्या पोटासाटीं । करी लोकांचिया गोष्टी ॥1॥
जेणें घातलें संसारीं । विसरला तो चि हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पोटा घातलें अन्न । न ह्मणे पतितपावन ॥2॥
मी कोठील आणि कोण । हें न कळे ज्यालागून ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नरस्तुति । करितो भाट त्रिजगतीं॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the sake of his own belly, he gossips about others. He has forgotten Hari, the very one who placed him in this world.

When food is placed in his belly, he does not even say 'Purifier of the Fallen.' He does not know who he is or where he came from. Says Tuka, he goes about praising mortals like a court bard in all three worlds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the sake of his own belly, he tells tales about other people. The very Hari who placed him in this world, that one he has forgotten. Food goes into his belly, and he never says, Purifier of the fallen. Who he is, where he came from: this he does not know. Tuka says: he goes about praising mortals like a court bard, through all three worlds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing the man who lives by flattering others for his own gain. To fill his belly he gossips and tells tales, and in doing so he has forgotten the very Hari who put him into this life. He eats his food without once naming the Lord, the Purifier of the fallen; he has no idea who he is or where he came from. Tukaram fixes the pattern in a single image: such a man is a court bard, wandering the three worlds singing the praises of mere mortals instead of God. The warning is for anyone who spends their voice on flattering people while staying silent toward the One who gave them everything.

GATHA 4093 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty preacher

मराठी मूळ

स्वयें आपण चि रिता । रडे पुढिलांच्या हिता ॥1॥
सेकीं हें ना तेंसें जालें । बोलणें तितुकें वांयां गेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखसागरीं नेघे वस्ती । अंगीं ज्ञानपणाची मस्ती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गाढव लेखा। जेथें भेटेल तेथें ठोका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He himself is empty within, yet he weeps for the welfare of others. In the end, neither this nor that was accomplished; all his words went to waste.

He will not take up residence in the ocean of bliss, yet he parades the arrogance of spiritual knowledge. Says Tuka, count him a donkey. Wherever you find him, give him a good thrashing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He himself is empty inside, yet he weeps over the good of others. In the end it came to neither this nor that; all his talking went to waste. He will not take up his dwelling in the ocean of bliss, yet he wears the swagger of spiritual knowing. Tuka says: count him a donkey. Wherever you meet him, give him a good thrashing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is unmasking the man who preaches to others while empty within himself. He weeps and worries over everyone else's welfare, but has nothing inside, so in the end nothing comes of it and all his words are wasted. He refuses to actually dwell in the ocean of bliss that he talks about, yet he carries himself with the arrogance of one who knows. The blunt last line is satire aimed at the posture, not the person: such a one is no better than a donkey, and the swagger deserves to be beaten out of it. The point turns back on us: do not parade a knowing you have not lived.

GATHA 4094 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the renunciant for fame

मराठी मूळ

जगीं कीतिन व्हावी । ह्मणोनी जालासी गोसावी॥1॥
बहुत केलें पाठांतर । वर्म राहिलेंसे दूर ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्तीं नाहीं अनुताप। लटिकें भगवें स्वरूप ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You became a renunciant so that you might gain fame in the world. You have memorized much, but the essence remains far away.

There is no remorse in your chitta; your saffron robes are a lie.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You became a renunciant so the world would give you fame. You memorized a great deal, but the heart of it stayed far away. There is no remorse in your mind. Your saffron robe is a lie.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is confronting the person who took up renunciation as a way to be admired. He says it plainly: you put on the holy life for fame, not for God. You have memorized scriptures and recitations by the heap, yet the essence, the inner point of it all, has stayed far from you. Without true remorse in the mind, the outer dress means nothing. So he calls the saffron robe itself a lie, because the costume of holiness is worn over an unchanged heart. The reproach asks each of us whether our outer marks of devotion match anything inside.

GATHA 4095 Worldly Metaphors

The seal of Vithoba over caste

मराठी मूळ

प्राक्तनाच्या योगें आळशावरी गंगा । स्नान काय जगा करूं नये ॥1॥
उभी कामधेनु मागिलें अंगणीं । तिसी काय ब्राह्मणीं वंदूं नये ॥ध्रु.॥
कोढियाचे हातें परिसें होय सोनें । अपवित्र ह्मणोन घेऊं नये ॥2॥
यातिहीन जाला गांवींचा मोकासी । त्याच्या वचनासी मानूं नये ॥3॥
भावारूढ तुका मुद्रा विठोबाची । न मनी तयांचीं तोंडें काळीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the Ganga flows toward a lazy man by destiny, should one not bathe in it? If a wish-fulfilling cow stands in the backyard, should a Brahmin not bow to it? If a touchstone turns something to gold in a leper's hand, should one refuse it as impure? If a of lowly station man becomes the village headman, should his command not be obeyed? Says Tuka, the seal of Vithoba is upon me, borne aloft by faith. Those who refuse to honor it have blackened faces.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If by destiny the Ganga flows up to a lazy man, should the world not bathe in it? If the wish-granting cow stands in the back courtyard, should a Brahmin not bow to her? If gold is made by a touchstone held in a leper's hand, should you refuse it as impure? If a man of low birth becomes the headman of the village, should his word not be obeyed? Tuka says: the seal of Vithoba is set on me, and faith holds me up. Those who will not honor it, their faces are blackened.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up four cases to break the rule that worth follows birth or status. If the Ganga reaches even a lazy man, the wish-cow stands in a back yard, a touchstone turns iron to gold in a leper's hand, or a low-born man rises to headman, the gift and the authority are real no matter the vessel that carries them; only a fool refuses them as impure. He turns this on himself: the seal of Vithoba is stamped on him and faith lifts him up, so his own low standing in the world's eyes counts for nothing. The closing line says those who scorn that mark for the sake of his birth are the ones disgraced, their faces blackened. Honor the divine wherever it appears, not the social label on the one who bears it.

GATHA 4096 Faith and Trust

Faith, the child's claim on God

मराठी मूळ

बोलिलों उत्कर्षॉ । प्रेमरस दाशत्वें ॥1॥
साच करिता नारायण । जया शरण गेलों तो ॥ध्रु.॥
समर्थ तो आहे ऐसा । धरिली इच्छा पुरवी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लडिवाळाचें । द्यावें साचें करूनियां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have spoken boldly, intoxicated by the devotion of servitude. Narayana, to whom I have surrendered, makes it all come true.

He is powerful enough to fulfill every desire one holds. Says Tuka, the longing of a loving child must be fulfilled in earnest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have spoken boldly, drunk on the sweetness of being his servant. Narayana, the one to whom I surrendered, makes my words come true. He is strong enough for this; the desire I held, he fulfills it. Tuka says: what a fondly loved child asks for must be made to come true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is owning his bold speech and naming where its confidence comes from. He has spoken out daringly, drunk on the joy of being God's servant, and he is sure Narayana, the one he surrendered to, will make his words come good. The ground of that certainty is simple: God is powerful enough to fulfill any longing held before him. The closing image is intimate and almost demanding: a beloved child's wish has to be granted. Tukaram claims exactly that footing with God, the trusting boldness of a child who knows the parent will not refuse.

GATHA 4097 The Nature of God

The Name, his power over death

मराठी मूळ

विचा केला ठोबा । ह्मणोनि नांव तो विठोबा ॥1॥
कां रे नेणां त्याचें नांव । काय वेदासि नाहीं ठाव ॥ध्रु.॥
शेष स्तुती प्रवर्तला । जिव्हा चिरूनि पलंग जाला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सत्ता । ज्याची काळाचिये माथा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He stood upon a brick, and so His name became Vithoba. Why do you not know His name? Is there no place for it in the Vedas? Shesha began to praise Him, splitting his tongue into a thousand hoods.

Says Tuka, His authority reigns even over the head of Death.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He made his stand on a brick, and so his name became Vithoba. Why do you not know his name? Is there no place for it in the Vedas? Shesha set about praising him, and split his tongue into many hoods. Tuka says: his rule reaches even to the head of Death.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching the Name and the greatness behind it. He recalls the story that the Lord stood waiting on a brick at Pandhari, and from that his name became Vithoba; then he challenges the listener, how can you not know this name, when even the Vedas hold a place for it? He says the serpent Shesha exhausted himself in praise until his tongue split into many hoods, an image of praise that can never finish. The closing claim is the largest: this Lord's authority reaches over the very head of Death. The Name we treat as small carries power that nothing, not even death, stands above.

GATHA 4098 The Necessity of Experience

Self-knowledge cannot be told, only shared

मराठी मूळ

भ्रतारअंगसंगें सुखाची वेवस्था । आधीं तों सांगतां नये कोणा ॥1॥
तथापि सांगणें कुमारिकेपाशीं । ते काय मानसीं सुख मानी ॥ध्रु.॥
तैसा आत्मबोध आधीं बोलों नये । बोलासी तो काय सांपडेल ॥2॥
तथापि सांगणें बहिर्मुखापाशीं । तो काय संतोषासी मूळ होय ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे संत सुखाचे विभागी । ब्रह्मानंद जगीं साधुरूपें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The bliss of union with one's beloved cannot be described beforehand to anyone. Yet even when one tells an unmarried girl about it, does she truly feel that joy in her heart? In the same way, the knowledge of the Self should not be spoken of prematurely; can it be captured in words alone? Even so, telling an outward-facing person about it will not make him the source of true contentment.

Says Tuka, the saints share in the bliss of the Self; Brahmananda walks the world in the form of holy beings.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The joy of union with one's beloved cannot be described beforehand to anyone. Even if you tell it to an unmarried girl, does she feel that joy in her heart? In the same way, the knowledge of the Self should not be spoken of before its time. Can it be caught in words at all? And even if you tell an outward-turned person, will that make him the source of true contentment? Tuka says: the saints share in this joy of the Self. The bliss of Brahman walks the world in the form of the holy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why the knowledge of the Self cannot simply be handed over in speech. He uses a frank human comparison: the bliss of union with one's beloved cannot be told in advance, and describing it to an unmarried girl gives her no taste of it. Self-knowledge is the same; it should not be spoken of prematurely, and words can never truly hold it, least of all for a person whose attention is turned outward. So where does it actually pass from one to another? In the company of the saints, who themselves share in that bliss. He ends with the point of the whole poem: the joy of Brahman does not live only in scripture but moves through the world in living, holy people, and that is where it is caught.

GATHA 4099 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the lawlessness of the age

मराठी मूळ

कलयुगामाजी थोर जालें बंड । नष्ट लोक लंड जाले फार ॥1॥
न धरिती सोय न पुसती कोणा । येतें जैसें मना तैसें चाले ॥ध्रु.॥
सज्जनाचा वारा टेकों नेदी द्वारा । ऐसिया पामरा तारी कोण ॥2॥
विश्वास तयाचा बैसेना कोठें ही । स्तुति निंदा पाहीं जीवीं धरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कैसें केलें नारायणें । जाणावें हें कोणें तयाविण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the Kali Yuga, great disorder has arisen. Wicked and brazen people have multiplied.

They follow no guidance and ask no one; they act on whatever enters their minds. They will not let the breeze of a good person touch their door; who can save such wretches? Trust cannot be placed in them anywhere; they cherish both praise and blame equally.

Says Tuka, how strange is this creation of Narayana. Who but He can understand it?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the Kali age a great disorder has risen up. Wicked and brazen people have grown many. They keep to no right way and ask no one; whatever comes into the mind, that is how they go. They will not let the breeze of a good man touch their door. Who can carry such wretches across? No trust will settle on them anywhere; they hold praise and blame as one and the same in their hearts. Tuka says: what a thing Narayana has made. Who but he could understand it?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is lamenting the moral chaos he sees in the present age. He describes people grown wicked and shameless in great numbers, who follow no settled way and consult no one, acting only on whatever impulse rises in the mind. They will not even let the breeze of a good person reach their door, shutting out the one influence that might save them; trust cannot rest on them, and they treat praise and blame as equal, indifferent to either. The point lands on self-examination: these are not distant monsters but the patterns of a heart closed to good company and ungoverned by any inner standard. Tukaram hands the riddle back to God, wondering how such a creation came to be and admitting that only Narayana can understand it.

GATHA 4100 Worldly Metaphors

Social criticism, the man who steals credit

मराठी मूळ

आपुली बुटबुट घ्यावी । माझी परताप द्यावी ॥1॥
आपुला मंत्र नव्हे बरा । माझा बईल चुकला मोरा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐशा नरा । परिस न झोंबे खापरा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He wants to keep his own faults to himself and have my accomplishments credited to him. His own mantra does not work, yet he says my bull missed the peacock.

Says Tuka, a touchstone will not cling to a potsherd, no matter what such a man does.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He wants to keep his own faults to himself and have my good work handed over to him. His own charm does not work, yet he says my bull missed the peacock. Tuka says: with a man like this, a touchstone will not cling to a potsherd.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing the man who hoards his own faults while claiming another's merit. He keeps his shortcomings hidden and tries to have Tukaram's accomplishments credited to himself; his own efforts come to nothing, yet he turns and blames Tukaram for missing the mark. The closing proverb names the pattern: a touchstone will not cling to a broken shard of clay. Just as a touchstone cannot turn worthless pottery into gold, no real worth will fasten onto a man of this character, however he postures. The warning is against the habit of grabbing credit and shifting blame, which leaves a person unchanged no matter what he claims.

GATHA 4101 True Worship

The Name, fearless kirtan

मराठी मूळ

भावभक्तिवादें करावें कीर्तन । आशाबधी मन करुं नये ॥1॥
अन्न पाणी धन द्रव्य नारायण । विठ्ठला वांचून बोलूं नये ॥ध्रु.॥
सप्रेम करावें देवाचें कीर्तन । भय द्या सोडून शरीराचें॥2॥
तरी मग जोडे विठ्ठलनिधान । केलिया कीर्तन सिद्ध पावे ॥3॥
देव जोडिलिया तया काय उणें । तुका ह्मणे मन धीट करा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Perform kirtan with sincere devotion and feeling. Do not let the mind become bound by desire.

Food, water, wealth, and riches are all Narayana; speak of nothing but Vitthal. Perform God's kirtan with genuine love, abandoning all fear for the body.

Then the treasure of Vitthal is won; kirtan performed this way reaches perfection. Says Tuka, when God is won, what can be lacking? Make your mind bold.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sing kirtan with sincere feeling and love. Do not let your mind be bound by desire. Food, water, wealth, and riches: all of it is Narayana. Speak of nothing but Vitthal. Sing God's kirtan with love, and let go of all fear for the body. Then the treasure of Vitthal is won; kirtan done this way reaches its fulfillment. When God is won, what could be lacking? Tuka says: make your mind bold.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out how kirtan is to be done and what it asks of you. Sing with real feeling, not with a mind hooked on what you want, and treat everything you depend on, food and water and money, as Narayana, while letting your speech rest on Vitthal alone. The hard turn is the body: love must drop its fear for it, because clinging to the body keeps the mind small. Do this and the whole treasure is yours, and with God won, nothing is left to lack. So his last word is not gentle but a command to the timid heart: make your mind bold.

GATHA 4102 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, merit ripens the mind

मराठी मूळ

चोरासी चांदणें वेश्येसी सेजार । परिसेंसी खापर काय होय ॥1॥
दुधाचे आधणीं वैरिले पाषाण । कदा काळीं जाण पाकनव्हे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरि पूर्वपुण्यें सिद्ध । तरि च राहे बुद्ध संतसंगीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Moonlight is wasted on a thief, and a courtesan's bed on a potsherd; a touchstone cannot change a potsherd into gold. Stones placed in boiling milk will never cook, no matter how long you wait.

Says Tuka, only if past merit is ripe does the mind come to rest in the company of saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Moonlight is wasted on a thief. A courtesan's bed is wasted on a potsherd. A touchstone cannot turn a potsherd into gold. Put stones in boiling milk and they will never cook, however long you wait. Tuka says: only if past merit is ripe does the mind come to rest in the company of saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images of the wrong thing meeting the wrong receiver: light on a thief who fears it, a touchstone helpless against a potsherd, stones that will not soften in milk. The point is that the best gift does nothing if the one receiving it has no capacity to take it in. He then turns this to the inner life: keeping company with saints is the same kind of gift, and the mind only settles there when something in you is already ripe. He calls that ripeness past merit, naming a sober truth that the receiver, not just the giver, decides whether grace lands.

GATHA 4103 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, teaching wasted on the fool

मराठी मूळ

रोगिया मिष्टान्न मर्कटा चंदन । कागासी लेपन कर्पूराचें ॥1॥
निर्नासिका जैसा नावडे आरिसा । मूर्खालागीं तैसा शास्त्रबोध ॥ध्रु.॥
दास तुका ह्मणे विठ्ठलउदारें । अज्ञानअंधारें दूरी केलें ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rich food is wasted on a sick man, sandalwood on a monkey, and a camphor paste on a crow. A mirror is hateful to one who has lost his nose; so too is scriptural teaching to a fool.

Says Tuka, the generous Vitthal has driven away the darkness of ignorance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Rich food is wasted on a sick man. Sandalwood is wasted on a monkey. Camphor paste is wasted on a crow. A mirror is hateful to a man who has lost his nose. So is scriptural teaching to a fool. Tuka, the servant, says: the generous Vitthal has driven away the darkness of ignorance.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up images of good things offered to those who cannot use them, ending with the sharpest one: a mirror hated by the man with no nose, because it only shows him what he lacks. To the fool, scripture is the same; its teaching only irritates, since he has no eye to receive it. The point is aimed at a pattern, the closed mind that resents the very thing that could free it, not at sneering. Tukaram then turns it on himself in gratitude: he was that darkness, and the generous Vitthal drove it away.

GATHA 4104 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, guard the essence

मराठी मूळ

मथनासाटीं धर्माधर्म । त्याचें वर्म नवनीत ॥1॥
तें चि तें घाटूं नये । आलें जाय नासूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
सांभाळावें वरावर । वर्म दूर न वजावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घालें पोट । मग बोटचांचणी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dharma and adharma are like the churning; the butter is their inner essence. That essence should not be handled carelessly; it spoils if it comes and goes.

Guard it carefully, layer upon layer; do not let the essence drift far. Says Tuka, first fill the belly, then pick at the crumbs.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dharma and adharma are like the churning. The butter is their inner essence. That essence should not be handled carelessly; it comes and it spoils. Guard it carefully, layer upon layer. Do not let the essence drift far. Tuka says: first fill the belly, then pick at the crumbs.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the churning of milk as a picture of weighing right and wrong: the labor of sorting dharma from adharma yields one fine thing, the butter, which is the real essence underneath. That essence is delicate; handle it roughly and it spoils, so it must be kept close and guarded, never allowed to drift out of reach. His closing image is homely and practical: take the substantial nourishment first, then bother with the scraps. The teaching is to seize and protect the core truth and not lose it in fussing over the details around it.

GATHA 4105 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, all in Your hands

मराठी मूळ

माझा घात पात अथवा हित फार । अवघा विचार तुझ्या हातीं ॥1॥
ठेवुनि जीव भाव तुझ्या ठायीं चित्त । राहिलों निवांत पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्ताचा चाळक बुद्धीचा जनिता । काय नाहीं सत्ता तुझे हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय करिसी तें पाहीन । ठेविसी राहीन सुखें तेथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My ruin or my great welfare, every consideration is in Your hands. Having placed my life, my devotion, and my mind in You, I remain at peace, O Panduranga.

You are the mover of the mind and the father of the intellect; is there anything beyond Your power? Says Tuka, I will watch whatever You do with me. Wherever You place me, I will stay there happily.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My ruin or my great good: every reckoning of it is in Your hands. I have placed my life, my devotion, and my mind in You, and I rest at peace, O Panduranga. You are the one who moves the mind and fathers the intellect. Is anything beyond Your power? Tuka says: I will watch whatever You do with me. Wherever You place me, I will stay there happily.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a poem of handing everything over. Tukaram says his harm and his welfare alike are no longer his to manage; the whole accounting belongs to Panduranga, and having given his life, his feeling, and his mind, he can finally rest. His reason is that God already runs the very mind and intellect that would otherwise do the worrying, so nothing lies outside that power. The result is a settled trust without conditions: he will simply watch what God does and stay content wherever he is placed. The peace is not passive resignation but the relief of a mind that has stopped fighting for control.

GATHA 4106 The Saints

The saints, dust as holy water

मराठी मूळ

संतपाउलें साजिरीं । गंगा आली आह्मांवरी ॥1॥
जेथें पडे रजधुळी । तेथें करावी अंघोळी ॥ध्रु.॥
स्वेतबंद वाराणसी। अवघीं तीर्थॉ तयापासीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य जालों । संतसागरीं मिळालों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The beautiful feet of the saints have brought the Ganga flowing over us. Wherever the dust of their feet falls, there one should bathe.

The holy city of Varanasi, and all the sacred waters, reside near them. Says Tuka, blessed am I, for I have merged into the ocean of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The beautiful feet of the saints have brought the Ganga flowing over us. Wherever the dust of their feet falls, there one should bathe. Varanasi and all the holy waters live near them. Tuka says: blessed am I, for I have merged into the ocean of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the geography of pilgrimage inside out. The sacred river does not wait at a distant place; it flows wherever the saints walk, so the true bathing ground is the dust of their feet right here. Varanasi and every holy water already dwell beside them, which means the company of the saints is itself the pilgrimage. He ends in plain gratitude: to be among them is not to visit the ocean but to dissolve into it. The claim is that nearness to living holy people outweighs any famous shrine.

GATHA 4107 Faith and Trust

Faith, God as parent

मराठी मूळ

न घडे मायबापें बाळकाचा घात । आपणादेखत होऊं नेदी ॥1॥
कां मी मनीं चिंता वाहूं भय धाक । काय नव्हे एक करितां तुज ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्म जाणे त्याच्या हिताचे उपाय । तान भूक वाहे कडिये खांदीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं गा कृपावंत भारी । ऐसें मज हरी कळों आलें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A mother and father would never harm their child; they would not let harm come even before their own eyes. Then why should I carry worry, fear, and dread in my mind? Is anything impossible for You? A parent knows the remedies for the child's welfare, carrying its hunger and thirst upon hip and shoulder.

Says Tuka, You are exceedingly compassionate, O Hari. This I have come to understand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A mother and father would never harm their child. They would not let harm come to it before their own eyes. So why should I carry worry, fear, and dread in my mind? Is anything impossible for You? A parent knows the remedies for the child's welfare, and carries its hunger and thirst on hip and shoulder. Tuka says: You are exceedingly compassionate, O Hari. This I have come to understand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues himself out of fear by picturing God as a parent. No mother or father lets their child come to harm in front of them, so his own dread is misplaced and even insulting to that care. He notes that a parent not only protects but knows the cure for what ails the child and carries its hunger and thirst as its own. The point is that anxiety is faithlessness; it acts as if God were less attentive than an ordinary parent. His conclusion is quiet certainty: he has come to understand that Hari's compassion is greater than he feared, so the worry can be set down.

GATHA 4108 The Power of the Name

The Name, the sword of peace

मराठी मूळ

करावें कीर्तन । मुखीं गावे हरिचे गुण ॥1॥
मग कांहीं नव्हे बाधा । काम दुर्जनाच्या क्रोधा ॥ध्रु.॥
शांतिखड्ग हातीं। काळासी ते नागविती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दाता सखा । ऐसा अनंतासारिखा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Perform kirtan and sing the virtues of Hari. Then no harm can come from lust, the wicked, or anger.

Those who hold the sword of peace in hand can outwit even Death. Says Tuka, there is no friend and benefactor like the Infinite One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sing kirtan, and let your mouth sing the virtues of Hari. Then no harm can come to you, not from lust, not from the wicked, not from anger. Those who hold the sword of peace in hand strip even Death of its power. Tuka says: there is no giver and friend like the Infinite One.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the Name a defense. Once the mouth is busy singing Hari's praises, the usual attackers, lust, wicked people, and anger, find no opening to wound you. He gives the singer a paradoxical weapon: a sword of peace, which disarms even Death, the one enemy no ordinary blade can touch. The stakes are large: kirtan is not decoration but protection against everything that ruins a life. He closes by naming why this works, that the Infinite One is a friend and giver beyond any other, so leaning on that Name is the safest stance there is.

GATHA 4109 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, glory beyond writing

मराठी मूळ

तुझी कीर्ती सांगों तुजपुढें जरी । ब्रह्मांडीं ही हरी माईना ते ॥1॥
मेरूची लेखणी सागराची शाई । कागद हा मही न पुरे चि ॥ध्रु.॥
अनंत अपार आपंगिले भक्त । माझें चि संचित ओडवेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मां बोल नाहीं देवा । पामरें म्यां सेवा केली नाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I were to recount Your glory before You, O Hari, even the universe could not contain it. If Mount Meru were the pen, the ocean the ink, and the earth the paper, still it would not suffice.

Countless devotees have You embraced; only my own accumulated merit falls short. Says Tuka, there is no fault in You, O God. It is this pitiable one who has failed to serve You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I tried to recount Your glory to Your face, O Hari, the whole universe could not hold it. If Mount Meru were the pen, the ocean the ink, and the earth the paper, even that would not be enough. You have taken in countless, boundless devotees; only my own store of merit falls short. Tuka says: there is no fault in You, O God. It is this poor wretch who has not served You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reaches for the largest measures he can name, the universe, Meru as a pen, the ocean as ink, and finds them all too small to write God's glory. Against that boundlessness he sets a single shortfall, and he is careful to locate it correctly. God has gathered in countless devotees without limit; if Tukaram has not been gathered, the lack is not in God's reach but in his own thin store of merit. So he refuses to blame heaven for any distance he feels. The fault, he insists, is entirely his own failure to serve, a deliberate humility that keeps the door open rather than shutting it in resentment.

GATHA 4110 The Nature of God

Nature of God, grace over effort

मराठी मूळ

काय साधनाच्या कोटी । केल्या आटी होती त्या॥1॥
देव कृपा करी जरी । होय उजरी स्वरूपीं ॥ध्रु.॥
केले होते चिंता श्रम । उपरम न होतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळों आलें । सर्व जालें आपरूप ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What use are millions of spiritual practices and strivings? If God is gracious, illumination dawns within the Self. All the anxiety and labor one has endured come to rest only when He grants His grace.

Says Tuka, now I understand: everything has become a revelation of the Self.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What use are millions of practices and strivings? They only wear you out. If God shows grace, the light dawns within the Self. All the worry and the labor went on without rest until then. Tuka says: now I understand. Everything has become the Self's own form.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs effort against grace and finds effort, by itself, exhausting and empty. Countless disciplines only grind a person down; the actual opening, the light within, comes when God is gracious. He admits that all his own anxiety and toil never came to rest while he was relying on them. The realization that ends the poem reframes everything: once grace dawns, he sees that all of it, the whole world, was always the Self's own form. The point is not that practice is worthless but that it cannot manufacture what only grace reveals.

GATHA 4111 The Power of the Name

The Name, the song enough

मराठी मूळ

तुज काय करूं मज एक सार । अमृतसागर नाम तुझें ॥1॥
काय येणें उणें आह्मां तयापोटीं । गोवितां हे कंठीं कामधेनु ॥ध्रु.॥
नोळखे तानुलें माय ऐसी कोण । वोरसे देखून शोक त्याचा ॥2॥
जो नाहीं देखिला याचक नयनीं । तो पावे घेउनि लज्जा दान ॥3॥
नामासाटीं प्राण सांडियेला रणीं । शूर ते भांडणीं न फिरती ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी गातां गीतीं भला । भेटूनी विठ्ठला काय चाड ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What shall I offer You? I have one treasure: Your name, an ocean of nectar. What could be lacking when we tie this wish-fulfilling cow to our necks? What kind of mother does not recognize her hungry child? She overflows with milk upon seeing its distress.

He who has never seen a supplicant before His eyes gives with such bashful generosity. Warriors who gave their lives on the battlefield for the sake of the Name never turned back.

Says Tuka, when we sing Your songs so well, what further need is there to meet Vitthal in person?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What shall I give You? I have one treasure: Your name, an ocean of nectar. What could we lack with this wish-granting cow tied at our throat? What mother does not know her hungry child? She overflows with milk the moment she sees its distress. He who never saw a beggar before His eyes gives, and gives bashfully. Warriors who threw away their lives in battle for the Name never turned back. Tuka says: when we sing Your songs well, what need is left to meet Vitthal in person?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks what a poor man could possibly offer God and answers that he already holds the one treasure, the Name, an ocean of nectar and a wish-granting cow worn at the throat. He stacks up reasons it is enough: God responds like a mother whose milk lets down at the mere sight of her child's hunger, giving even before being asked and almost shy in His generosity. He recalls warriors who died for the Name and never retreated, showing how total a hold it can take. The startling close is his claim that singing the songs well makes meeting Vitthal in the flesh almost beside the point, because the Name already delivers the whole of God.

GATHA 4112 Autobiography

Autobiography, the saints lifted me

मराठी मूळ

कृपेचे सागर हे साधुजन । तिंहीं कृपादान केलें मज॥1॥
बोबडे वाणीचा केला अंगीकार । तेणें माझा ि◌स्थर केला जीव ॥ध्रु.॥
तेणें सुखें मन ि◌स्थर जालें ठायीं । संतीं दिला पायीं ठाव मज ॥2॥
नामी नामी ऐसें बोलिलों वचन । तें माझें कल्याण सर्वस्व ही ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जालों आनंदनिर्भर । नाम निरंतर घोष करुं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints are oceans of grace. They bestowed their merciful gift upon me.

They accepted my faltering, lisping speech, and by that my jiva was steadied. With that happiness, my mind became firm in its place; the saints granted me a spot at their feet.

I stammered "Name, Name" as my only utterance, and that became my salvation and everything. Says Tuka, I am brimming with bliss. Let us raise the constant chorus of the Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints are oceans of grace. They gave me their merciful gift. They accepted my faltering, lisping speech, and by that my soul was steadied. With that happiness my mind grew firm in its place; the saints gave me a spot at their feet. I could only stammer "Name, Name," and that became my whole salvation. Tuka says: I am brimming with bliss. Let us raise the Name's unbroken chorus.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells how the saints rescued him. They are oceans of grace, and their gift to him was simple acceptance: they took in his clumsy, lisping speech instead of despising it, and that welcome alone steadied his wavering soul. Given a place at their feet, his mind settled and grew firm. He had nothing eloquent to offer, only the stammered cry of the Name, yet that became his entire salvation. The poem ends in overflow, with Tukaram so full of bliss that he calls everyone to keep the chorus of the Name unbroken.

GATHA 4113 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the house where peace lives

मराठी मूळ

भक्तीचें वर्म जयाचिये हातीं । तया घरी शांति दया ॥1॥
अष्टमार्सिद्ध वोळगती द्वारीं । न वजती दुरी दवडितां॥ध्रु.॥
तेथें दुष्ट गुण न मिळे निशेष । चैतन्याचा वास जयामाजी ॥2॥
संतुष्ट चित्त सदा सर्वकाळ । तुटली हळहळ त्रिगुणाची ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें काय तो संदेह । आमचें गौरव आह्मी करूं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the home of one who holds the secret of devotion, there dwell peace and compassion. The eight mystic powers wait at his door and will not leave even when driven away.

No evil quality can enter where pure consciousness resides. The mind is content at all times; the agitation of the three gunas has been severed.

Says Tuka, what doubt can remain here? We shall celebrate our own glory.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the house of one who holds the secret of devotion, peace and compassion live. The eight mystic powers wait at his door. Drive them away, and they will not go far. No evil quality can enter there. Pure consciousness lives in that place. The mind is content, always, at every hour. The ache of the three gunas has been cut. Tuka says: what doubt is left here? We will sing our own glory.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what devotion does to a person from the inside. He says the one who carries the secret of bhakti becomes a house where peace and compassion settle, and where the very powers that others chase, the eight siddhis, hang about the door uninvited and refuse to leave. The point is not the powers but the indifference to them: when consciousness itself is at home in you, no wicked quality can find a foothold, and the restless pull of the three gunas, the whole machinery of craving and reaction, goes quiet. The closing boast is deliberate. Having given himself away to God, he claims the right to celebrate the glory that is now his, because it is no longer separate from God's.

GATHA 4114 Faith and Trust

Faith, only the real holds

मराठी मूळ

साच हा विठ्ठल साच हें करणें । संत जें वचनें बोलियेले ॥1॥
साच तें स्वहित साच ते प्रचित । साच वेद नीत सांगतील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे घेती साच साच भावें । लटिकें वर्म ठावें नाहीं त्यांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Vitthal is real, and real is the practice that the saints have spoken of in their words. Real is one's own welfare, real is direct experience, and real is what the Vedas truthfully declare.

Says Tuka, those who receive with genuine faith find the truth. Those who deal in falsehood do not know the secret.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Vitthal is real. This practice is real, the practice the saints spoke of in their words. Your own welfare is real. Direct experience is real. What the Vedas truly declare is real. Tuka says: those who take it up with real faith receive the truth. Those who deal in falsehood do not know the secret.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is drawing a single line through everything that matters and calling it real. Vitthal is real, the saints' instruction is real, one's own true good is real, and so is the firsthand experience that confirms it and the truth the Vedas declare. He is insisting that these are not opinions to weigh but facts to stand on. The test he names is faith: what you receive depends on what you bring, and the one who comes with genuine sincerity finds the truth, while the one who trades in pretense stays locked outside the secret.

GATHA 4115 Worldly Life

Withdrawal, the company that wearies

मराठी मूळ

संगें वाढे सीण न घडे भजन । त्रिविध हें जन बहु देवा ॥1॥
याचि दुःखें या जनाचा कांटाळा । दिसताती डोळां नानाछंद ॥ध्रु.॥
एकविध भाव राहावया ठाव । नेदी हा संदेह राहों चित्तीं ॥2॥
शब्दज्ञानी हित नेणती आपुलें । आणीक देखिलें नावडे त्या ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां एकलें चि भलें । बैसोनि उगलें राहावें तें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the company of worldly people, weariness grows and devotion does not happen. The people of this world are of three kinds, O God.

It is this very sorrow over people that makes me weary of them; their endless whims fill my eyes. There is no place for single-pointed devotion to remain; doubt does not allow it to settle in the mind.

The book-learned do not know their own good, nor do they like what they see in others. Says Tuka, now it is best to be alone, to sit quietly by oneself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In company, weariness grows and devotion does not happen. The people of this world are of three kinds, O God. It is this very sorrow over people that wearies me of them. Their endless whims are before my eyes. There is no room left for single-pointed love to stay. Doubt will not let it settle in the mind. The book-learned do not know their own good, and they do not like what they see in others. Tuka says: now it is best to be alone, to sit quietly by oneself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is telling God why he is pulling back from people. He has found that crowded company drains him and crowds out devotion, because the endless whims and divisions of others keep his mind unsettled and leave no room for single-pointed love to take root. He is hardest on the merely book-learned, who miss their own good and cannot bear what they see in others, naming a pattern, not despising the persons caught in it. The conclusion is a deliberate retreat: better to sit alone and quiet than to lose the one thing in the noise of many.

GATHA 4116 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, the show and the real

मराठी मूळ

तुझें वर्म आह्मां कळों आलें सुखें । संतांचिया मुखें पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
अवघा चि नट वाउगा पसारा । चेईला तूं खरा तूं चि एक ॥ध्रु.॥
ह्मणउनि देहबुद्धि नासिवंता । नातळे या चित्ता नेदावया ॥2॥
सोय हे लागली पुढिलांची वाट । पावले जे नीट तुजपाशीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं कोणासवें काज । बोलायाचें मज अंतरींचें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your secret has become happily known to me through the mouths of the saints, O Panduranga. This entire spectacle is a mere show, a vain display.

You alone are the real one who has truly awakened. Therefore I will not let the perishable body-consciousness touch my mind.

I have found the path of those who went before, those who reached You directly. Says Tuka, I have no business with anyone else. What I must speak is from the depths of my heart.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your secret has come to me, happily, through the mouths of the saints, O Panduranga. The whole thing is a stage, an empty display. You are the real one, awake. You alone are the one. So I will not let perishing body-consciousness touch my mind. I will not give it room. I have found the path of those who went before, those who reached straight to You. Tuka says: I have no business with anyone else. What I have to say is from inside my heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the saints handed him the secret, and the secret undoes the world he was taking seriously. He now sees the whole spread of things as a staged show, a vain display, with only one waking reality behind it, which is Panduranga. From this he draws a practical rule: he refuses to let body-consciousness, the sense of being this perishable self, touch his mind at all. Following the straight path the earlier saints walked to God, he renounces every other concern, and the closing line marks that this is not theory borrowed from others but something spoken from his own inner depth.

GATHA 4117 The Necessity of Experience

Liberation, the root cut

मराठी मूळ

पुण्यपापा ठाव नाहीं सुखदुःखा । हानिलाभशंका नासलिया ॥1॥
जिंता मरण आलें आप पर गेलें । मूळ छेदियेलें संसाराचें ॥ध्रु.॥
अधिकार जाती वर्णधर्मयाती । ठाव नाहीं सत्यअसत्याशी ॥2॥
जन वन भिन्न आचेत चळण । नाहीं दुजेपण ठाव यासी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणें देह वाईलें विठ्ठलीं । तेव्हां च घडली सर्व पूजा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no place for merit or sin, pleasure or pain, once the fear of loss and gain is destroyed. Living death has come: self and other are gone, and the very root of worldly existence has been cut.

Authority, caste, and creed lose their ground; truth and falsehood themselves have no place. Town and forest, stillness and motion, are no longer separate; there is no room for duality.

Says Tuka, when the body was offered to Vitthal, all worship was at once complete.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no place for merit or sin, none for pleasure or pain, once the fear of loss and gain is gone. Living, death has come. Self and other are gone. The root of worldly life is cut. Authority, caste, the duties of birth, all lose their ground. Truth and falsehood have no place. Town and forest, stillness and motion, are no longer two. There is no room left for duality. Tuka says: when the body was given to Vitthal, all worship was complete at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing what is left after the self dies while the body still lives. Once the fear of loss and gain dissolves, the whole grid of opposites loses its hold: merit and sin, pleasure and pain, self and other, even the social map of caste and authority and the line between true and false. He says town and forest, stillness and motion, are no longer separate, because duality itself has no foothold anymore. The radical claim is in the last line: he did not perform countless rites; he simply gave the body to Vitthal, and in that single act of surrender every form of worship was already finished.

GATHA 4118 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, only the place of a servant

मराठी मूळ

संकोचतो जीव महत्त्वाच्या भारें । दासत्व चि बरें बहु वाटे ॥1॥
कळावी जी माझी आवडी हे संतां । देणें तरि आतां हें चि द्यावें ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमचे चरण पावविलों सेवा । ह्मणउनि हेवा हा चि करीं ॥2॥
विनउनी तुका वंदितो चरण । लेखा रजरेण चरणींचें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The jiva shrinks under the weight of greatness; servitude feels far better. May the saints know my longing.

If anything is to be given me, let it be this: the privilege of serving at your feet. Therefore this alone is my aspiration.

Says Tuka, humbly I bow at your feet. Count me as the dust beneath your steps.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The jiva shrinks under the weight of greatness. To be a servant feels far better. Let the saints know this longing of mine. If anything is to be given to me now, give only this. You brought me to the service of your feet. So this alone is what I covet. Tuka says: humbly I bow at your feet. Count me as the dust of the dust at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing greatness and asking for the lowest place instead. He says the soul cannot bear the burden of being made great; what feels right, what it can carry, is the place of a servant. So when he asks the saints to grant his one desire, the desire is not power or honor but the privilege of serving at the feet he has already been brought to. He ends by asking to be counted as the dust beneath the dust of those feet, which is the whole prayer: let me be small enough to belong here.

GATHA 4119 Faith and Trust

Faith, the near and the far shore

मराठी मूळ

देव कैंचा तया दुरी । भाका बरी करुणा ॥1॥
आळवित्या न लगे धर । माय जाणे रे भातुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
नावे तरी ज्याचा भार । पैल पार जवळी त्या ॥2॥
आतां परदेशी तुका । जाला लोकांवेगळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can God be far from one whose call is sincere? A mother knows the child's little desires without being told. The boat carries whatever burden is placed upon it; the far shore is near for the one who boards.

Says Tuka, now Tuka has become a stranger to this world, set apart from all people.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How can God be far from the one whose call is sincere? A mother knows her child's small wants before they are spoken. The boat carries whatever weight is put on it. For the one who steps aboard, the far shore is near. Tuka says: now Tuka has become a stranger, set apart from all people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is answering the fear that God is distant. He says distance is not the issue when the call is sincere, just as a mother reads her child's small needs without being told. The boat image makes the same point about effort: you do not swim the river, you board, and then whatever burden you carry the boat carries, and the far shore that looked impossible is suddenly close. The last line names the cost and the freedom together: leaning wholly on God has made him a stranger to ordinary people, set apart, which he reports without complaint.

GATHA 4120 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the man who is no man

मराठी मूळ

भक्ति ज्याची थोडी । पूर्ण विषयांची गोडी ॥1॥
तो नर चि नव्हे पाहीं । खर जाणावा तो देहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
भजन पूजन ही नेणे । काय स्वरूपासी जाणे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याला । भोवंडून बाहेर घाला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One whose devotion is meager and whose relish for sensory pleasures is full is no true human being. Know him to be a donkey in a human body.

He knows neither worship nor prayer; how then can he know the Self? Says Tuka, spin him around and throw him out.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His devotion is small. His relish for sense-pleasures is full. Look: he is no man at all. Know him to be a donkey in a human body. He does not know worship or prayer. How then would he know the Self? Tuka says: spin him around and throw him out.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is taking the measure of a life and finding it empty. The person he draws is unbalanced in a precise way: almost no devotion, full appetite for the senses, and on that count he says the human shape is wasted, a beast wearing a man's body. The reason follows: someone who has never even taken up worship or prayer has no way to reach the Self at all. The harsh closing line is aimed at the pattern of a wholly self-indulgent, godless life, and read against oneself it is a warning: do not be the figure that gets spun around and put out.

GATHA 4121 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, grand kin and an empty bowl

मराठी मूळ

समुद्र हा पिता बंधु हा चंद्रमा । भगिनी ते रमा शंखाची या ॥1॥
मेहुणा जयाचा द्वारकेचा हरि । शंख दारोदारीं भीक मागे ॥2॥
दुष्ट हें जाणावें आपुलें स्वहित । तुका ह्मणे मात ऐसी आहे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The ocean is the conch's father, the moon is its brother, Lakshmi born of the ocean is its sister. Its brother-in-law is Hari of Dwaraka.

Yet the conch goes begging from door to door. Says Tuka, know this about wicked fate. Despite great connections, one may still beg.

Such is the way of the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The ocean is the conch's father. The moon is its brother. Lakshmi, born of the ocean, is its sister. Its brother-in-law is Hari of Dwaraka. Yet the conch goes from door to door, begging. Tuka says: know what is truly good for you. Such is the way of things.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses the conch to mock the false security of connections. By birth the conch has the grandest family imaginable: the ocean for a father, the moon for a brother, Lakshmi for a sister, and Krishna of Dwaraka, who blows the conch, for a brother-in-law. And still it ends up begging at every door, because lineage and high relations do not feed you. The lesson is turned back on the listener: stop leaning on impressive associations and attend to your own real good, since this is simply how the world goes.

GATHA 4122 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, time is eating the days

मराठी मूळ

भवाचिया संगें बहु च नाडिले । किळकाळें पाडिले तोंडघसीं ॥1॥
तया भवसंगें गुंतलासी वांयां । धन पुत्र जाया भुलों नको ॥ध्रु.॥
जेजे घडी जाय तेते काळ खाय । प्राण्या तरणोपाय काय केला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे करीं सर्व ही तूं त्याग । अपाअ हें सर्वांग जगदीशीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Worldly attachment has cheated many; time has dashed them face-first to the ground. You are entangled in vain in this worldly attachment.

Do not be deluded by wife, children, and wealth. With each passing moment, Death devours you.

O creature, what means of salvation have you prepared? Says Tuka, renounce everything and offer your whole being to the Lord of the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Worldly attachment has cheated many. Time has thrown them face-down on the ground. You are tangled in that attachment for nothing. Do not be fooled by wealth, by son, by wife. Every passing moment, death eats it. O creature, what have you done to save yourself? Tuka says: give it all up. Offer your whole being to the Lord of the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is shaking a complacent listener awake. He points to the wreckage already made: countless people cheated by worldly attachment and slammed face-first to the ground by time, and warns that the things you cling to, wealth, son, wife, are the very hooks. Then he names the clock: every moment that passes is being eaten by death, so the comfort of having time is an illusion. The blunt question, what have you actually done to be saved, leaves only one answer he will accept: let go of all of it and hand your whole self over to God.

GATHA 4123 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the sick man and the medicine

मराठी मूळ

रुचे सकळा मिष्टान्न । रोग्या विखाच्या समान॥1॥
तरि कां तया एकासाटीं । काम अवघें करणें खोटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
दर्पण नावडे एका । ठाव नाहीं ज्याच्या नाका ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खळा । उपदेशाचा कांटाळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Rich food is relished by all, but to a sick man it is like poison. Should all fine food be condemned for the sake of that one person? A mirror is hateful to the one who has no nose.

Says Tuka, the wicked are allergic to good counsel.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Everyone enjoys rich food. To a sick man it is like poison. So should all good food be condemned for that one man's sake? A mirror is hateful to the one who has no nose. Tuka says: the wicked have no taste for good counsel.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why some people recoil from teaching, without letting the teaching take the blame. Rich food is good and most people relish it; if a sick man cannot stomach it, the fault is in his sickness, not in the food, and you would not condemn the food because of him. The mirror is sharper: a man with no nose hates the mirror because it shows him the lack, not because the mirror is wrong. So when the wicked cannot bear good counsel, the aversion exposes their own condition, and the point turned inward is to ask whether it is the medicine you are refusing or your own sickness you are protecting.

GATHA 4124 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, stay awake, the thief is near

मराठी मूळ

जागा घरटी फिरे तस्कराची दिवसाराती । नीदसुरें नाडिलीं असो मागों किती ॥1॥
हाट करी सकळ जन । वस्तु करा रे जतन ॥ध्रु.॥
हुशार ठायीं । निजनिजेलिया पाहीं ॥2॥
सावचित्त असे खरा । लाभ घेउन जाये घरा ॥3॥
तराळ राळ बोंबें उतराई। राखा आपुलिया भाई ॥4॥
हरिच्या नामीं घालूं जागा । तुका ह्मणे हुशार गा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The thief's gang prowls day and night around the house. Those who sleep carelessly have been robbed.

How long shall we keep asking? The marketplace is bustling with all kinds of people; guard your goods carefully. Be vigilant where you rest and sleep.

The truly alert one takes his profit and goes home safely. Protect your own share amidst the noise and commotion.

Says Tuka, let us stay awake in Hari's name. Be alert.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The thief's gang circles the house, day and night. Those who sleep carelessly have been robbed. How long shall we keep asking? The whole world is a busy market. Guard your goods. Be alert wherever you rest, even as you fall asleep. The truly watchful one takes his profit and goes home. Keep your own share safe in the noise. Tuka says: let us stay awake in Hari's name. Be alert.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns daily life into a marketplace where you can be robbed in your sleep. The thieves circling the house, day and night, are the senses and the pull of the world, and the careless sleeper who loses everything is the soul that drifts through life unguarded. He presses the urgency: this is a crowded, bustling market, so watch your goods and stay alert even as drowsiness comes. The reward is for the vigilant trader who pockets his real profit and reaches home safe, and the way to stay awake, the one safeguard he names, is to keep the mind fixed on Hari's name through all the noise.

GATHA 4125 The Saints

Adoration, the saints lift the lowly

मराठी मूळ

संतांनीं सरता केलों तैसेपरी । चंदनीं ते बोरी व्यापियेली॥1॥
गुण दोष याती न विचारितां कांहीं । ठाव दिला पायीं आपुलिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें समर्थाच्या मना । तरि होय राणा रंक त्याचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints made me worthy, just as a thorn-bush is transformed by the proximity of sandalwood. Without considering my virtues, faults, or caste, they gave me a place at their own feet.

Says Tuka, when it pleases the powerful one, even his pauper becomes a king.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The saints made me worthy. I was a thorn-bush, and the nearness of sandalwood passed into me. They did not weigh my virtues, my faults, or my caste. They gave me a place at their own feet. Tuka says: when it pleases the powerful one, even his pauper becomes a king.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that his worth came from outside himself, given by the saints. He pictures himself as a worthless thorn-bush that takes on fragrance only because sandalwood grows beside it; the change is borrowed, not earned. The point lands when he says the saints never checked his merit, his sins, or his caste before taking him in: their grace ignores exactly the things that the world uses to rank a man. The closing line names the stakes plainly: a great one's favor can raise a beggar to a throne, so everything depends on being claimed, not on deserving it.

GATHA 4126 Prayers

Prayer, a child asking to be carried

मराठी मूळ

चित्तीं तुझे पाय डोळां रूपाचें ध्यान । अखंड मुखीं नाम वर्णावे गुण ॥1॥
हें चि एक तुह्मां देवा मागणें दातारा । उचित तें करा माझा भाव जाणूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
खुंटली जाणींव माझें बोलणें आतां । करूं यावी तैसी करावी बाळकाची चिंता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां नको देऊं अंतर । न कळे पुढें काय बोलों विचार॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your feet in my chitta, the vision of Your form in my eyes, Your name unbroken on my tongue, singing Your virtues always. This is my only prayer to You, O generous Lord.

Grant what is fitting, knowing my devotion. My knowledge has reached its limit; I cannot say more now.

Care for me as one cares for a child. Says Tuka, do not withdraw from me now. I do not know what I may say next, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your feet in my mind. The vision of your form in my eyes. Your name unbroken on my tongue, your virtues always sung. This is the one thing I ask of you, generous Lord. Do what is fitting; you know my heart. My knowing has run out. I have nothing more to say. Care for me the way one cares for a child. Tuka says: do not withdraw from me now. I do not know what I will say next, Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praying for a single condition of life and then handing over the rest. He asks only that his mind, his eyes, and his tongue stay fixed on God; that one request replaces every other want. Then he admits the limit of his own understanding and stops choosing for himself, telling God to do whatever is fitting because God already knows his devotion. The closing image is the heart of it: he asks to be tended like a small child who cannot manage on its own, and begs God not to pull away, since he no longer trusts even his own next words.

GATHA 4127 The Saints

Adoration, the saints are all my wealth

मराठी मूळ

संतांच्या पादुका घेईन मोचे खांदीं । हातीं टाळ दिंडी नाचेन पुढें ॥1॥
भजनविधी नेणें साधन उपाय । सकळ सिद्ध पाय हरिदासांचे ॥ध्रु.॥
ध्यानगति मति आसन समाधि । हरिनाम गोविंदीं प्रेमसुख ॥2॥
नेणता निर्लज्ज नेणें नादभेद । सुखें हा गोविंद गाऊं गीतीं ॥3॥
सर्व जोडी मज गोत आणि वित्त । तुका ह्मणे संतमहंतपाय ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I will carry the sandals of the saints on my shoulders and dance ahead of the procession, cymbals in hand. I know no method of worship, no spiritual practice.

All perfection lies in the feet of Hari's servants. Meditation, concentration, posture, and samadhi are all found in the love of Govinda's name.

Ignorant and shameless, I know no musical refinement; I will simply sing Govinda's song with joy. Says Tuka, the feet of the great saints are all my wealth, my kin, my treasure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will carry the sandals of the saints on my shoulder. With cymbals in my hand I will dance ahead of the procession. I know no rule of worship, no method, no means. All perfection is in the feet of Hari's servants. The way of meditation, the right mind, the posture, the deep absorption: these are all in Govinda's name, in the joy of love. I am ignorant and shameless. I know nothing of musical refinement. I will simply sing this Govinda's song with joy. Tuka says: the feet of the great saints are all my kin and all my treasure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is refusing the whole apparatus of technique and putting everything on devotion to the saints. He casts himself as a man with no training, who carries the saints' sandals and dances before the procession because that is all he can offer. Where others seek perfection through meditation, posture, and samadhi, he says all of it is already contained in the love of God's name. He even owns his lack of musical skill and his shamelessness, refusing to be embarrassed, because the singing matters and the polish does not. The last line names what has replaced family and property for him: the feet of the saints are now his kin and his wealth.

GATHA 4128 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the bondsman in the saints' courtyard

मराठी मूळ

हरिजनीं प्राण विकली हे काया । अंकिला मी तया घरीं जालों ॥1॥
ह्मणियें सत्वर करीन सांगतां । घेईन मी देतां शेष त्यांचें ॥ध्रु.॥
आस करूनियां राहेन अंगणीं । उचिष्टाची धणी घ्यावयासी ॥2॥
चालतां ते मागाअ चरणीचे रज । उडती सहज घेइन आतां ॥3॥
दुरि त्यांपासूनि न वजें दवडितां । तुका ह्मणे लाता घेइन अंगीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have sold my life and body to the servants of Hari; I have become a bondsman in their household. Tell me what to do and I will do it at once.

Whatever remains of their meal, I will gladly receive. I will wait hopefully in their courtyard just to have my fill of their leftovers.

As they walk ahead, I will catch the dust rising naturally from their feet. I will not go far from them even if they drive me away.

Says Tuka, I will take their kicks upon my body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have sold my life and my body to the servants of Hari. I have become a bondsman in their house. Tell me, and I will do it at once. Whatever is left of their meal, I will take. I will wait in their courtyard, hoping, to get my fill of their leftovers. As they walk, I will catch the dust that lifts from their feet. I will not go far from them, even if they drive me off. Tuka says: I will take their kicks upon my body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes total self-surrender to the saints in the most degrading terms he can find, and means every one of them. He says he has sold himself into bondage in their household and will obey any order at once. Then he reaches for the lowest place a person can take: eating their leftovers, waiting in the courtyard, gathering the dust off their feet. The final line refuses even self-respect as a limit; he will stay close and take their blows rather than leave, because being near them at any cost is worth more to him than dignity.

GATHA 4129 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the longing fulfilled

मराठी मूळ

पुण्य फळलें बहुतां दिवसां । भाग्यउदयाचा ठसा । जाला सन्मुख तो कैसा । संतचरण पावलों ॥1॥
आजि फिटलें माझें कोडें । भवदुःखाचें सांकडें । कोंदाटलें पुढें । ब्रह्म सावळें॥ध्रु.॥
आलिंगणें संतांचिया । दिव्य जाली माझी काया । मस्तक पाया । वरी त्यांच्या ठेवितां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य झालों । सुखें संतांचिया धालों । लोटांगणीं आलों । पुढें भार देखोनी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The merit of many days has borne fruit. The mark of fortune's dawn has appeared.

How beautifully has this come about: I have reached the feet of the saints. Today my longing is fulfilled and the stranglehold of worldly sorrow is broken.

The dark and beautiful Brahman has gathered before me. By the embrace of the saints, my body has become divine.

Placing my head upon their feet has transformed me. Says Tuka, I am blessed; I am sated by the joy of the saints. I have come and prostrated before them, seeing their splendor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The good of many days has borne fruit. The mark of fortune's dawn has shown itself. How has this happened: I have reached the feet of the saints. Today my longing is answered. The chokehold of worldly sorrow is broken. The dark and beautiful Brahman stands gathered before me. By the saints' embrace, my body has become divine. I laid my head on their feet, and it changed me. Tuka says: I am blessed. I am full with the joy of the saints. I came and threw myself down before them, seeing their weight of glory.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming a moment of arrival and crediting it to long-stored merit finally ripening. He had longed to reach the feet of the saints, and now that it has happened, the grip of worldly grief loosens all at once. The turn is that meeting the saints is the same as meeting God: the dark, beautiful Absolute stands before him in their company. He says their embrace made his very body sacred and laying his head at their feet transformed him, so the explainer is that for him the saints are not separate from the God he sought. The end is pure gratitude: he falls full-length before them, overwhelmed by what he sees.

GATHA 4130 Prayers

Prayer, the Name dissolves all difference

मराठी मूळ

ठाव देऊनिया राखें पायापासीं । मी तों आहें रासी पातकाची ॥1॥
पातकाची रासी ह्मणतां लागे वेळ । ऐके तो कृपाळ नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
नारायणनामें अवघें सांग जालें । असंग चि केलें एकमय ॥2॥
एकमय जालें विठोबाच्या नामें । भेदाभेद कर्म आणिक कांहीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं चिंतिलें जें होतें । तें होय आपैतें नामें याच्या ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Grant me a place and keep me near Your feet, though I am a heap of sin. To call me a heap of sin takes time to explain, but the compassionate Narayana listens.

Through Narayana's name, everything was made whole, all separateness dissolved into oneness. Everything has become one through Vithoba's name; distinctions of difference and karma have vanished.

Says Tuka, whatever was wished for in the chitta comes to pass of its own accord through this Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Give me a place and keep me near your feet, though I am a heap of sin. To count out my sins would take a long time, but the compassionate Narayana listens. Through Narayana's name everything was made whole. The separate was made into one thing. It became one through Vithoba's name. Difference and sameness, karma, and all the rest: gone. Tuka says: whatever the heart wished for comes to pass of its own accord through this Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for a place at God's feet while openly admitting he is nothing but a pile of sin, and rests his whole case on God's mercy rather than his record. The hinge is that his sins are too many to recount, yet the compassionate Narayana hears him anyway, so listening, not deserving, is what saves. He then claims the Name's power directly: it makes the broken whole and collapses every division, including the distinctions of difference, sameness, and karma that the mind lives by. The last line states the reward plainly: through the Name, the heart's true desire is fulfilled by itself, without his contriving it.

GATHA 4131 Faith and Trust

Faith, fearless in God's strength

मराठी मूळ

आतां आह्मां भय नाहीं बा कोणाचें । बळ विठोबाचें जालें असे ॥1॥
धीर दिला आह्मां येणें पांडुरंगें । न पांगों या पांगें संसाराच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा कैवारी हा देव । नाहीं भय भेव त्याच्या संगें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now we fear no one, for Vithoba's strength is ours. This Panduranga has given us courage; we will not scatter in the snares of worldly life.

Says Tuka, this God is my champion. In His company, there is no fear or dread.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now we fear no one. Vithoba's strength has become ours. This Panduranga has given us courage. We will not be scattered in the snares of worldly life. Tuka says: this God is my champion. In his company there is no fear and no dread.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is declaring a fearlessness that is not his own but borrowed from God. The ground of it is plain: Vithoba's strength has become his, so there is no one left to be afraid of. He names the danger he has escaped, the snares of worldly life that scatter a person, and says the courage Panduranga gave him holds him together against it. The close states the reason once more: with God as his champion at his side, fear and dread simply have no place.

GATHA 4132 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the relief of devotion

मराठी मूळ

भक्ति आह्मी केली सांडुनी उद्वेग । पावलों हें सांग सुख याचें ॥1॥
सुख आह्मां जालें धरितां यांचा संग । पळाले उद्वेग सांडूनिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख बहु जालें जिवा । घडली या सेवा विठोबाची ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We took up devotion, casting off our torment, and gained this joy from it. Joy has come to us by holding their company, and all distress has fled.

Says Tuka, great happiness has come to the soul, for we have been granted the service of Vithoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We took up devotion and threw off our distress. From it we have come into this whole joy. Joy came to us by holding his company. The distress fled and was left behind. Tuka says: great happiness has come to my soul, for the service of Vithoba has fallen to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the simple exchange that devotion made for him: he set down his agitation and received joy in its place. The point is that the joy was not generated by effort but came through keeping company with God, and once that company was held, the distress did not linger but ran off on its own. He counts being given the service of Vithoba as the cause of it all. The explainer is that for Tukaram, serving God is not a burden added to life but the very thing that lifts the burden off.

GATHA 4133 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, learning without a steadied mind

मराठी मूळ

शास्त्रज्ञ हो ज्ञाते असती बहुत । परि नाहीं चित्त हाता आलें ॥1॥
क्षणा एका साटीं न धरवे धीर । तेणें हा रघुवीर अंतरतो ॥ध्रु.॥
तोळाभर सोनें रतिभार राई । मेळविल्या पाहीं नास होतो ॥2॥
हरीचे अंकित असती विरळागत । तयांसी अच्युत कृपा करी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे काय धुडवण्या गोष्टी । जंव नाहीं गांठी चित्त आलें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Many scholars know the scriptures well, yet the mind has not come under control. For want of patience even for a single moment, Raghuvira slips away.

A measure of gold mixed with even a speck of impurity is ruined when inspected. Those who are truly pledged to Hari are very rare.

To them alone does the imperishable Lord show His grace. Says Tuka, what use is idle talk? Until the mind is firmly grasped, nothing avails.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There are many who know the scriptures well, yet the mind has not come into their hands. They cannot hold steady even for a single moment, and by that the Raghuvira slips away. A measure of gold, mixed with even a speck of impurity, is found ruined when it is tested. Those truly pledged to Hari are very few. To them alone the imperishable Lord gives his grace. Tuka says: what use is talk that only stirs up dust? Until the mind itself is in your grasp, nothing holds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning that scriptural learning is worthless without a mastered mind. Many scholars know the texts, he says, yet have no control over their own attention, and the moment they cannot hold steady, God slips out of reach. His image of gold makes the standard exact: even a tiny impurity ruins the whole measure when it is assayed, so partial devotion does not pass. He observes that the truly committed are rare and that grace is given to them alone, then turns the warning on idle discussion itself. The self-examination he points to is plain: stop talking and ask whether you actually hold your own mind, because nothing else counts until you do.

GATHA 4134 True Worship

True worship, chanting without conduct

मराठी मूळ

इंद्रियांसी नेम नाहीं । मुखीं राम ह्मणोनि काई ॥1॥
जेविं मासीसंगें अन्न । सुख नेदी तें भोजन ॥ध्रु.॥
कीर्तन करावें । तैसें करुनी दावावें ॥2॥
हें तों अंगीं नाहीं चिन्हें । गाइलें वेश्येच्या ढव्यानें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नका रागा । संत शिवूं नेदिती अंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the senses are not disciplined, what use is it to chant Rama with the mouth? It is like food cooked with a fly in it; such a meal gives no satisfaction. One should perform kirtan and live accordingly, demonstrating it by one's own conduct.

These marks are absent from your person; it is as if you have been singing from a deceiver's songbook. Says Tuka, do not be angry; the saints will not let such a one come near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the senses keep no discipline, what is the use of saying Rama with the mouth? It is like food cooked with a fly in it; that meal gives no pleasure. You should do kirtan, and then live it out, showing it by what you do. These marks are not on your body; you have sung as if from a deceiver's songbook. Tuka says: do not be angry. The saints will not let such a one touch them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking the pattern of chanting God's name while the life behind it stays undisciplined. His test is conduct: the name on the tongue means nothing if the senses run loose, just as a meal is spoiled past eating by a single fly. Real kirtan, he says, must be matched by a life that proves it, and when those marks are missing the singing is borrowed and false, like songs taken from a cheat's book. He turns to such a person directly but tells them not to take it as personal contempt; the warning is about the gap between word and deed, and the consequence is plain, that the saints keep their distance from a life that does not match its own praise.

GATHA 4135 The Power of the Name

The Name, refusing heaven for the Name

मराठी मूळ

न लगे देवा तुझें आह्मांसी वैकुंठ । सायुज्याचा पट न लगे मज ॥1॥
देई तुझें नाम मज सर्वकाळीं । मागेन वनमाळीहें चि तुज ॥ध्रु.॥
नारद तुंबर उद्धव प्रल्हाद । बळी रुक्मांगद नाम ध्याती ॥2॥
सिद्ध मुनिगण गंधर्व किन्नर । करिताती गजर रामनामें॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हरी देई तुझें नाम । अखंडित प्रेम हें चि द्यावें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not want Your Vaikuntha, O Lord. The garment of union with the Absolute is not for me.

Give me Your name for all time; this alone I will ask of You, O Vanamali. Narada, Tumbara, Uddhava, Prahlada, Bali, and Rukmangada all meditate on the Name.

Siddhas, sages, gandharvas, and kinnars raise the chant of Rama's name. Says Tuka, O Hari, give me Your name. Grant me this unbroken love and nothing else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not want your Vaikuntha, Lord. The robe of union with the Absolute is not for me. Give me your name for all time. This alone I will ask of you, Vanamali. Narada, Tumbara, Uddhava, Prahlada, Bali, and Rukmangada all meditate on the Name. The siddhas, the company of sages, the gandharvas, the kinnaras, all raise the cry of Rama's name. Tuka says: Hari, give me your name. Grant me this unbroken love, and nothing else.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the highest rewards a devotee can be offered and asks for one thing only. He turns down Vaikuntha and even sayujya, the merging into the Absolute that scriptures treat as the final goal, calling that union a garment he does not want. What he wants instead is God's name held always, and that is his entire request. He backs it by naming the great devotees and the heavenly hosts who themselves choose to chant the Name rather than rest in liberation, so his choice stands in good company. The close states the price and the prize together: he asks for the Name and an unbroken love for it, and refuses everything else.

GATHA 4136 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the grace received in full

मराठी मूळ

पावलों प्रसाद इच्छा केली तैसी । जालें या चित्तासी समाधान ॥1॥
मायबाप माझा उभा कृपादानी । विटे सम जोडूनि पादांबुजें ॥ध्रु.॥
सांभाळासी येऊं नेदी च उणीव । अधिकारगौरव राखे तैसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्व अंतर्बाहए आहे । जया तैसा राहे कवळूनी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have received the grace I wished for; my mind is now at peace. My Mother and Father stands as a generous giver, His lotus feet joined together upon the brick.

He comes to my care and never allows any want. He preserves my dignity as it ought to be.

Says Tuka, He is within and without, embracing each one as that one needs.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have received the grace I wished for. My mind is now at peace. My Mother and Father stands here giving grace, his lotus feet set level together on the brick. He sees to my care and lets no want come near. He keeps my dignity as it should be kept. Tuka says: he is within and without, holding each one close in the way that one needs.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting a prayer answered and the settled peace that follows. The grace he asked for has come, and his restless mind has finally come to rest. He calls Vithoba his Mother and Father, standing on the brick at Pandhari with feet joined, and says this parent attends to him so completely that no lack is allowed to reach him. He notes too that God guards his standing, keeping his honor intact rather than only meeting his needs. The closing thought is the frame the poem leaves unspoken: this God is present inside and outside alike, and embraces each person exactly according to what that person requires.

GATHA 4137 Ecstasy and Joy

Reunion, the meal of love

मराठी मूळ

होतें तैसें पायीं केलें निवेदन । अंतरलों दिन बहुत होतों ॥1॥
संबोखुनी केलें समाधान चित्त । वोगरुणि भात प्रेमरस॥ध्रु.॥
नामरत्नमणी करुनी भूषण । अळंकारमंडण माळा दिली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें जालों निरामय । नामीं नामसोय निमग्नता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As I was, so I offered myself at His feet. I had been starved of Him for many long days.

He consoled me and settled my mind, serving me a meal of love. He adorned me with the jeweled garland of the Name as my ornament and decoration.

Says Tuka, I have happily become free of all ailment, immersed in the Name, absorbed in the Name's own way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As I was, just so, I offered myself at his feet. I had been kept from him for many days. He comforted me and settled my mind. He served me a meal of love. He made the jewel of the Name into an ornament for me. He gave me a garland to adorn me. Tuka says: I have become well and free of all sickness. I am sunk in the Name, lost in the Name's own way.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one taken back after a long separation. He does not clean himself up first; he comes to Vitthal's feet exactly as he is, after many empty days. The Lord answers not with rebuke but with care: he calms the restless mind and feeds it on love, then dresses the devotee in the Name as if in jewels and a garland. The result is health, the end of the ache that the separation was. To be cured here is simply to be wholly absorbed in the Name, with no part of the self left outside it.

GATHA 4138 The Necessity of Experience

Ecstasy, the mind absorbed

मराठी मूळ

ि्स्थरावली वृत्त पांगुळला प्राण । अंतरींची खुण पावूनियां ॥1॥
पुंजाळले नेत्र जाले अधौन्मिळत । कंठ सद्गदित रोमांच आले ॥ध्रु.॥
चित्त चाकाटलें स्वरूपा माझारी । न निघे बाहेरी सुखावलों ॥2॥
सुनीळ प्रकाश उदैजला दिन । अमृताचें पान जीवनकळा ॥3॥
शशिसूर्या जाली जीवें ओंवाळणी । आनंदा दाटली आनंदाची ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें प्रेमासी डुलत । वीरालों र्निंश्चत र्निंश्चतीनें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mind's activity has stilled; the breath has grown quiet, having received the inner sign. The eyes have grown luminous and half-closed; the throat is choked with emotion, and the hair stands on end.

The mind is stunned, absorbed within the true form; it does not come back out, for it has found its joy. A deep blue radiance has dawned; the nectar of the life-force flows.

The sun and moon have been offered as oblation to the jiva; bliss is brimming over with bliss. Says Tuka, swaying happily in love, I rest in perfect and certain peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mind's motion has stopped. The breath has gone still. The inner sign has been received. The eyes shine and are half closed. The throat chokes with feeling. The hair stands up. The mind is stunned inside the true form. It does not come back out. I am at rest in joy. A deep blue light has dawned like daybreak. I drink the nectar, the power of life. Sun and moon are waved as a lamp before this life. Bliss is crowded full of bliss. Tuka says: I sway in love, happy. I have dissolved into a peace that is sure and without doubt.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the body and mind in the grip of what he has long sought. The signs are the classic marks of devotional rapture: stilled breath, half-closed shining eyes, a choked throat, hair on end. He names what causes them: the mind has fallen still inside the divine form itself and will not return to ordinary life, because it has found its joy there. A deep blue radiance dawns, the very color of the Lord, and the whole world, even sun and moon, is offered like a small lamp waved before this living presence. The poem ends not in agitation but in a settled, doubtless peace.

GATHA 4139 Longing and Separation

Longing, the silent Lord

मराठी मूळ

बोध्यअवतार माझिया अदृष्टा । मौन्य मुखें निष्ठा धरियेली ॥1॥
लोकांचियेसाटीं शाम चतुर्भुज । संतांसवें गुज बोलतसां ॥ध्रु.॥
आलें कलियुग माझिया संचिता । डोळां हाकलितां न पडेसी ॥2॥
म्यां च तुझें काय केलें नारायणा । कां नये करुणा तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By my destiny, this teaching incarnation has sealed its lips in silence. For the sake of the world, You are the dark four-armed Lord, speaking Your secrets with the saints.

The Kali Yuga has dawned according to my own past deeds; even when I search with my eyes, You do not appear. What have I done to You, O Narayana? Says Tuka, why does compassion not come?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By my own bad fortune, the teaching Lord has gone silent, his mouth shut, holding to stillness. For the rest of the world you are the dark four-armed one, and you speak your secrets with the saints. The Kali age has come because of what I myself have stored up; though I beat my eyes searching, you do not appear to me. What have I done to you, Narayana? Tuka says: why does your compassion not come to me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram complains of a God who answers others but stays silent to him. He turns the blame inward at first: it is his own destiny and his own past deeds that have shut the Lord's mouth and brought on this dark age for him alone. He sees Narayana speaking freely with the saints and showing his form to the world, yet for Tukaram there is only silence and an empty search. The poem is not contempt but a wounded question to a beloved who seems to withhold: I cannot find what I have done to deserve this; why does your mercy not come? It names the stake of all longing, the fear that one is being passed over.

GATHA 4140 The Power of the Name

The Name, ever on the lips

मराठी मूळ

मुखीं विठ्ठलाचें नाम । मग कैचा भवभ्रम ॥1॥
चालतां बोलतां खातां । जेवितां निद्रा करितां ॥ध्रु.॥
सुखें असों संसारीं । मग जवळी च हरि ॥2॥
मुक्तिवरील भक्ति जाण । अखंड मुखीं नारायण ॥3॥
मग देवभक्त जाला । तुका तुकीं उतरला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With Vitthal's name on the tongue, where is there room for worldly delusion? Walking, talking, eating, feasting, or sleeping, keep His name always. Dwell happily in the world, and Hari will be right beside you.

Devotion that surpasses even liberation means keeping Narayana unbroken on the lips. Then the devotee has become one with God.

Says Tuka, he has passed the final test.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With Vitthal's name in the mouth, where is the muddle of this world? While walking, talking, eating, feasting, or sleeping, keep it. Live happily in the world, and then Hari is right beside you. Know this: the devotion that is higher than liberation is to keep Narayana unbroken in the mouth. Then one has become God's devotee. Tuka says: Tuka has weighed true on the scale.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the practice almost absurdly simple: keep Vitthal's name in the mouth and the confusion of worldly life loses its grip. He insists this is not a withdrawal from ordinary life but something carried right through it, through every act from eating to sleeping. He even ranks it: this unbroken remembrance is worth more than liberation itself, because it makes God present at your side instead of merely freeing you. The closing image is a scale; Tuka has been weighed and found true, the test of a real devotee passed by this one constant thing.

GATHA 4141 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the one thing known

मराठी मूळ

प्रेम जडलें तुझे पायीं । आणीक न सुचे मजला कांहीं ॥1॥
रात्रीदिवस तुझें ध्यान । तें चि माझें अनुष्ठान ॥ध्रु.॥
नामापरतें नेणें दुजें । ऐसें कळलें मजला निज ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंतकाळीं । आह्मां सोडवीं तात्काळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My love is fastened at Your feet; nothing else comes to my mind. Day and night I meditate on You; that alone is my spiritual practice.

I know no other thing besides the Name; this I have come to know as my deepest truth. Says Tuka, at the hour of death, deliver me without delay.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My love has fastened on your feet. Nothing else occurs to me. Night and day I think of you. That alone is my practice. I know nothing else but the Name. This I have come to know as my own truth. Tuka says: at the hour of death, set me free at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports a love that has narrowed his whole attention to one point. His mind no longer wanders to other things, because it is fixed on the Lord's feet day and night, and he treats this constant attention itself as his entire spiritual discipline. He claims to know nothing besides the Name, and he calls this his deepest, most personal truth rather than a borrowed teaching. The poem ends by naming the stake: he asks that at the final moment, the hour of death, this love be honored and he be released without delay.

GATHA 4142 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the feet are all pilgrimage

मराठी मूळ

तुझे पाय माझी काशी । कोण जाय माझें काशी॥1॥
तुझें रूप तें चि ध्यान । तें चि माझें अनुष्ठान ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझे चरण ते चि गया । जालें गयावर्जन देहा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सकळ तीर्थॉ । तुझें पायीं वसती येथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Your feet are my Kashi; who needs to go to any other Kashi? Your form is my meditation; that is my daily practice. Your feet are my Gaya; by them, the body's pilgrimage to Gaya is fulfilled.

Says Tuka, all the sacred places dwell right here at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your feet are my Kashi. Why should anyone go to some other Kashi? Your form is my meditation. That alone is my practice. Your feet are my Gaya. By them the body's pilgrimage to Gaya is done. Tuka says: all the holy places dwell here, at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram collapses the whole map of sacred geography into the Lord's feet. Pilgrims travel to Kashi for liberation and to Gaya to release the dead; he says he needs neither journey, because both shrines are already present in Vitthal. Gazing on the Lord's form is the only meditation he keeps, and bowing to his feet completes every rite the far places promise. The claim is radical and meant to be: the body's restless search for holy ground ends where the devotee already stands, since all the sacred sites live at those feet.

GATHA 4143 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the bored worldling

मराठी मूळ

क्षुधा तृषा कांहीं सर्वथा नावडे । पहावया धांवें कोल्हांटासी ॥1॥
कथेसी साक्षेपें पाचारिला जरी । ह्मणे माझ्या घरीं कोणी नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बलत्कारीं जरी आणिला कथेसी । निद्रा घे लोडेंसी टेंकूनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे थुंका त्याच्या तोंडावरी । जातो यमपुरी भोगावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He ignores hunger and thirst entirely, yet runs to watch a street performer. If he is earnestly called to a sacred discourse, he says there is no one at home.

If he is dragged by force to the discourse, he leans against a pillow and falls asleep. Says Tuka, spit upon the face of such a one. He is headed to Yama's city to suffer there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hunger and thirst he ignores completely, yet he runs to watch a street acrobat. If he is sincerely called to the sacred story, he says there is no one home. If he is dragged to the discourse by force, he leans on a cushion and falls asleep. Tuka says: spit on the face of such a one. He is going to Yama's city to suffer there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a sharp portrait of a man whose appetites tell on him. He will forget food and drink to gawk at a passing entertainer, but when invited to hear God's story he pretends to be out, and if forced to attend he props himself up and sleeps through it. The harsh line, spit on his face, is aimed at the pattern, not at a single soul to be despised: the readiness to spend oneself on idle spectacle while treating the one thing that matters as a chore. The warning is meant to make the listener test his own attention, since this neglect, Tukaram says, leads to suffering in the realm of death.

GATHA 4144 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the easiest ladder

मराठी मूळ

श्रीराम सखा ऐसा धरीं भाव । मीपणाचा ठाव पुसीं मना ॥1॥
शरण निरंतर ह्मण तूं गोविंदा । वाचे लावीं धंदा नारायण ॥ध्रु.॥
यापरि सोपान नाहीं रे साधन । वाहातसें आण तुझी मना ॥2॥
नको कांहीं करूं अळस अंतरीं । जपें निरंतर रघुपती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मोठा लाभ नरदेहीं । देहीं च विदेही होती नामें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hold the conviction that Rama is your true friend, and erase the seat of ego from your mind. Say Govinda ceaselessly as one who has surrendered, and set your tongue to the work of chanting Narayana.

There is no easier practice than this, O mind; I swear this to you. Do not allow any laziness within.

Chant Raghupati without ceasing. Says Tuka, the greatest gain in human birth is this: through the Name, one becomes liberated even while in the body.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hold this conviction: Shri Rama is my friend. Wipe out the seat of I-ness in your mind. Say it forever, surrendered: you, Govinda. Set your tongue to the work of Narayana. There is no easier step than this, no practice like it; I swear this to you, O mind. Do not be lazy within at all. Repeat Raghupati without stopping. Tuka says: the great gain of human birth is this, that by the Name one becomes free even while still in the body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the mind toward the simplest possible path. The first move is inward: take Rama as your true friend and erase the place where the ego sits. The rest is the tongue's labor, the ceaseless saying of Govinda, Narayana, Raghupati in an attitude of surrender. He vows there is no easier ladder than this and warns against the one real obstacle, the inner laziness that lets the practice slip. The stake he names is the highest one available to a human being: through the Name a person can become liberated, videha, free, while still living in the body.

GATHA 4145 Prayers

Prayer, the rescuer of others

मराठी मूळ

सर्वापरी तुझे गुण गाऊं उत्तम । तुझेठायीं प्रेम राहो माझें ॥1॥
माउलीपरिस आहेसी उदार । तरि कां निष्ठ मन केलें॥ध्रु.॥
गजेंद्राकारणें केलें त्वां धांवणें । तरि कां निर्वाण पाहातोसी॥2॥
प्रल्हादास कष्टीं रिक्षलें तों देवा । तरि कां केशवा सांडी केली ॥3॥
अन्यायी अजामेळ तो जाला पावन । ऐसें हें पुराण हाका मारी ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे थोर अपराध । नाम करी छेद क्षणमात्रें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May I sing Your finest virtues in every possible way. May my love for You remain steady.

You are more generous than a mother; why then have You made my mind so stubborn? For Gajendra's sake, You came running; why then do You watch my ordeal and wait? You rescued Prahlada from torment, O God; why then have You abandoned me? The sinful Ajamila was made pure; so the Puranas cry out. Says Tuka, my offenses are great, yet Your name cuts them away in an instant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In every way let me sing your virtues well. Let my love for you stay steady. You are more generous than a mother; why then have you made my mind so hard? For the elephant king you came running; why then do you watch my crisis and wait? You saved Prahlada from his torment, God; why then have you cast me off, Keshava? The lawless Ajamila was made pure; the old story cries this aloud. Tuka says: my offenses are great, yet your Name cuts them off in a single moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads by holding up the Lord's own record. He asks only to keep singing and to keep loving, then presses the contrast: a God kinder than a mother seems to have left his mind stubborn and dry. He recites the famous rescues, the elephant Gajendra pulled from the crocodile, the boy Prahlada saved from torment, the sinner Ajamila made pure, and turns each into a question, why them and not me. The argument lands on grace itself: his sins may be great, but if the Name purified even Ajamila, then it can cut his away in an instant too. The complaint is really an appeal to the mercy he is sure is there.

GATHA 4146 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the undivided mind

मराठी मूळ

आतां वांटों नेदीं आपुलें हें मन । न सोडीं चरण विठोबाचे ॥1॥
दुजियाचा संग लागों नेदीं वारा । आपुल्या शरीरावरूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
यावें जावें आह्मीं देवा च सांगातें । मागूनी करीत हें चि आलों ॥2॥
काय वांयां गेलों तो करूं उद्वेग । उभा पांडुरंग मागें पुढें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे प्रेम मागतों आगळें । येथें भोगूं फळें वैकुंठींचीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now I will not let my mind be divided. I will not release the feet of Vithoba.

I will not let the breeze of any other's company touch my body. Coming and going, I will always walk with God; this is what I have been doing all along.

Says Tuka, if we have not gone to waste, why should we fret? Panduranga stands before us and behind us. I ask for a love beyond measure; let me taste the fruits of Vaikuntha right here.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I will not let this mind of mine be divided. I will not let go of Vithoba's feet. I will not let the wind of any other's company touch my body. Coming and going, I keep company with God alone; this is what I have been doing all along. Why should I fret that I have been wasted? Panduranga stands behind me and before me. Tuka says: I ask for a love beyond measure. Let me taste the fruits of Vaikuntha right here.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram resolves to keep his whole attention on one object. He refuses to split his mind or loosen his hold on Vithoba's feet, and he will not even let the influence of other company brush against him. His one companion in all his coming and going is God, and he notes this has long been his way. He sets aside the worry of having wasted his life by pointing to a Lord who guards him front and back. What he asks for is not heaven later but more love now, enough that the fruits of Vaikuntha are tasted here in this life.

GATHA 4147 The Power of the Name

The Name, the precious moment

मराठी मूळ

आतां आह्मां हें चि काम । वाचे स्मरूं रामराम ॥1॥
ऐसी मोलाची हे घडी । धरूं पायांची आवडी ॥ध्रु.॥
अमृताची खाणी । तये ठायीं वेचूं वाणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । माझ्या जीवींच्या जिवलगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now this alone is my work: to remember Rama, Rama with my tongue. This moment is precious; let me hold fast to my love for His feet.

The tongue is a mine of nectar; let me spend my speech only there. Says Tuka, O Panduranga, O dearest beloved of my jiva.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now this alone is my work: with my tongue to remember Rama, Rama. This moment is precious; let me hold to my love for the feet. The tongue is a mine of nectar; there let me spend my speech. Tuka says: O Panduranga, dearest beloved of my life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reduces his entire occupation to one task, the tongue's repetition of Rama's name. He treats the present moment as something costly and not to be squandered, to be filled instead with love for the Lord's feet. The tongue, he says, is a mine of nectar; spent on the Name it yields what is sweetest, so he will spend his speech nowhere else. The poem closes by naming the one it is addressed to, Panduranga, called the most beloved of his very life, so that all this remembering is plainly an act of love.

GATHA 4148 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage, dancing at Pandharpur

मराठी मूळ

आतां जावें पंढरीसी । दंडवत विठोबासी ॥1॥
जेथें चंद्रभागातिरीं । आह्मी नाचों पंढरपुरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
जेथें संतांची दाटणी । त्याचें घेऊं पायवणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी बळी । जीव दिधला पायां तळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now let us go to Pandhari and bow before Vithoba. There on the banks of the Chandrabhaga, we shall dance in Pandharpur.

Where the saints gather in great throngs, let us take the holy water that has touched their feet. Says Tuka, we are strong, for we have laid down our lives beneath His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now let us go to Pandhari and bow flat before Vithoba. There on the bank of the Chandrabhaga, we dance in Pandharpur. Where the saints are gathered thick, let us take the water that has washed their feet. Tuka says: we are the strong ones, for we have laid down our life beneath his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls the listeners with him on pilgrimage to Pandharpur, the home of Vithoba. The journey ends in worship and in joy: a full prostration before the Lord, then dancing on the bank of the river Chandrabhaga. He looks forward to the crowd of saints there and counts it a privilege to receive the water that has touched their feet, treating their company as itself holy. The closing turns the world's idea of strength upside down: the truly strong, he says, are those who have surrendered completely, who have laid their very life down beneath the Lord's feet.

GATHA 4149 Prayers

Bold pleading, holding the rope of the Name

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी नरका जातां काय येइल तुझ्या हाता । ऐसा तूं अनंता विचारीं पां ॥1॥
तुज शरण आलियाचें काय हें चि फळ। विचारा दयाळ कृपानिधी ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझें पावनपण न चले आह्मांसीं । ऐसें हृषीकेशी कळों आलें ॥2॥
आह्मी दुःख पावों जन्ममरण वेथा । काय तुझ्या हाता येत असे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी खादली हो रडी । आह्मी धरली सेंडी नाम तुझें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I go to hell, what comes into Your hands, O Infinite Lord? Consider this. Is this the fruit of having surrendered to You? Think on it, O Compassionate One, O Treasure of mercy.

Has Your power of purification no effect upon us? So it seems, O Hrishikesha. If we suffer and endure the agonies of birth and death, what good does it do You? Says Tuka, You have been defeated, O Lord. We have held onto the end of the rope of Your name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I go to hell, what comes into Your hands, O Infinite One? Think about that. Is this the fruit of having come to You for refuge? Consider it, O merciful One, O treasure of mercy. Your power to make the impure clean does not work on us. That much I have come to see, O Hrishikesha. We suffer; we bear the pain of birth and death. What good does that bring You? Tuka says: You have eaten dirt; You are shamed. We have grabbed hold of the tuft of Your name and we will not let go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues with God like a debtor who knows his creditor's reputation is on the line. He took refuge in the Lord; if he is still dragged through hell and through birth and death, then it is not only his loss but God's, because God is the one called the purifier of the fallen. So he asks bluntly: what do You gain by letting me suffer? The mood is daring, almost teasing, but the ground under it is total dependence: he has nothing to bargain with except his grip on the Name, and he announces he will not loosen that grip whatever happens.

GATHA 4150 Longing and Separation

Daring argument, let the saints judge

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगे पाहा खादलीसे रडी । परिणाम सेंडी धरिली आह्मी ॥1॥
आतां संतांनीं करावी पंचाईत । कोण हा फजितखोर येथें ॥ध्रु.॥
कोणाचा अन्याय येथें आहे स्वामी । गर्जतसों आह्मी पातकी ही ॥2॥
याचें पावनपण सोडवा चि तुह्मी । पतितपावन आह्मी आहों खरें ॥3॥
आह्मी तंव आहों अन्यायी सर्वथा । याची पावन कथा कैसी आहे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी मेलों तरी जाणा । परि तुमच्या चरणा न सोडावें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Look, Panduranga has been defeated. In the end, it is we who held the rope's end.

Now let the saints hold court and decide: who is the one put to shame here? Whose injustice is at work, O Lord? Even we wrongdoers proclaim it aloud. Your claim of purifying the fallen has been exposed; we, the fallen, are the true deliverers.

We are guilty, to be sure. But how genuine is Your claim of being the savior? Says Tuka, even if we perish, know this: we shall never let go of Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Look, Panduranga has eaten dirt; He is shamed. In the end it is we who held on to the tuft. Now let the saints sit and judge this case: who is the one disgraced here? Whose is the wrong, O Lord? We cry out that we are the sinners. It is Your own claim to purify the fallen that has been put to the test; we, the fallen, are the real saviors here. We are guilty through and through, true. So how does Your story of saving stand? Tuka says: even if we die, know this. We will not let go of Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stages a courtroom and asks the assembly of saints to decide who has lost face. His logic turns the usual roles upside down: he freely admits he is a sinner, so if he is not saved the failure falls on God, whose whole name is the one who lifts up the fallen. By holding on no matter what, the sinner is the one keeping the relationship alive, which is why he half-jokingly calls himself the savior. Underneath the playful reversal is fierce loyalty: he would rather die at the Lord's feet than release them, and he is betting that God cannot afford to let a clinging devotee fall.

GATHA 4151 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the belly-filling false guru

मराठी मूळ

घालूनियां मध्यावर्ती । दाटुनि उपदेश देती ॥1॥
ऐसे पोटभरे संत । तयां कैंचा भगवंत ॥ध्रु.॥
रांडापोरांतें गोविती । वर्षासन ते लाविती ॥2॥
जसे बोलती निरोपणीं । तैसी न करिती करणी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तया । तमोगुणियाची क्रिया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They place people in their midst and forcefully press their teachings upon them. Such are these saints who fill only their bellies; how can they know God? They entangle wives and children, extracting annual subscriptions from them.

They do not practice what they preach. Says Tuka, theirs is the way of darkness and ignorance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They set a man in the middle and press their teaching on him by force. Such are these belly-filling saints; what God can they have? They snare wives and children and fix a yearly fee on them. What they say in their sermons, they do not do in their deeds. Tuka says: theirs is the work of darkness and dullness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the religious teacher who has made piety a business. The signs are exact: he corners people and pushes initiation on them, he ropes in whole households, and he collects a standing subscription from them. The real charge is the gap between word and act, the preacher who never lives what he preaches; a man so busy filling his stomach cannot be carrying God. By calling it the work of tamas, dullness and darkness, Tukaram names the pattern rather than one man, and the listener is left to test his own teachers, and himself, against the same measure of word matched to deed.

GATHA 4152 Renunciation

Renunciation, the lone fearless seeker

मराठी मूळ

वैभव राज्य संपत्ती टाकावी । उदरार्थ मागावी माधोकरी॥1॥
आपुलें तें आधीं करावें स्वहित । ऐसी आहे नीत स्वधर्माची ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्ण कुळ जाति याचा अभिमान । तजावा सन्मान लौकिकाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे राहे एकाकी निःशंक । देउनियां हाक कंठीं काळ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One should renounce power, kingdom, and wealth, and beg for alms from door to door. First attend to your own spiritual welfare; such is the law of one's true dharma.

Abandon pride of caste, clan, and lineage, and reject the honor of worldly reputation. Says Tuka, dwell alone and fearless, placing the noose of Death around your own neck as a garland.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Throw away splendor, kingdom, and wealth; beg from door to door for the food of your belly. First do your own true good. That is the law of one's own dharma. Pride of caste, of family, of birth: leave it. Give up the honor of worldly name. Tuka says: live alone and without fear, with the call already given, with Death as a garland at your throat.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the path of the renouncer in plain steps. Let go of power and possessions, accept the begging bowl, and put your own liberation first, since that, not duty to the world, is what your truest dharma asks. Then drop the inner possessions too: pride of caste and lineage and the craving for a good reputation. The last line is the hardest: live alone and unafraid, having already accepted death so fully that you wear it around your neck like an ornament. Only one who has made peace with dying can be this free.

GATHA 4153 The Necessity of Experience

Self-inquiry, the Eye behind the eyes

मराठी मूळ

हातपाय मिळोनि मेळा । चला ह्मणती पाहों डोळां॥1॥
देखणी नव्हे देखती कैसे । सकळांचा देखणा डोळा चि असे ॥2॥
डोळ्याचा डोळा पाहों गेला । तुका ह्मणे तो पाहों ठेला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The hands, feet, and all the limbs gathered together and said, "Come, let us go and see with our own eyes." But the eyes are not the true seer; how then do they see? The one who truly sees is the eye behind all eyes. Says Tuka, the eye that went to see the Eye of all eyes was itself absorbed in the seeing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The hands and feet and the rest gathered together and said, come, let us go and see with our eyes. But the eyes are not the seer; how do they see at all? The one who sees in everyone is the single seeing Eye. Tuka says: the eye that went to look at the Eye of all eyes stood still in the looking.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the act of seeing into a riddle about who the real perceiver is. The limbs set out to see God, trusting the eyes, but the eyes are only instruments; they do not see by themselves. Behind every pair of eyes there is one Seeing, the awareness that looks through all of them. When the small eye finally goes to look at that Eye, it cannot stand apart and observe it; it is absorbed, the watcher dissolves into what it was watching. He is pointing past the senses to the witnessing consciousness that no sense can ever turn around and catch.

GATHA 4154 True Worship

True worship, the two feet of devotion

मराठी मूळ

मुखें संति इंिद्रयें जती । आणिक नेणे भाव भक्ती॥1॥
देवा हे चि दोन्ही पदें । येर गाइलीं विनोदें ॥2॥
चित्ताचें आसन। तुका करितो कीर्त्तन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Restraining the mouth is saintliness; restraining the senses is austerity. Beyond these, one need know no other devotion or feeling.

These are the two feet of true worship, O God. Everything else is sung only for amusement.

Says Tuka, the seat of kirtan is the seat of the mind itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To hold the mouth still is sainthood; to hold the senses still is austerity. Beyond these, know no other feeling, no other devotion. O God, these are the two feet of true worship. Everything else is sung only for sport. Tuka says: the seat of kirtan is the mind itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips worship down to two disciplines: guarding the tongue and reining in the senses. He calls these the two feet on which real devotion stands, and dismisses the rest as decoration, things sung for entertainment rather than truth. The closing line moves worship inward: kirtan, the singing of God's praise, does not finally happen in the throat or the hall but on the seat of the mind. If the mind is not gathered and quiet, the outward song is only sport; the real practice is the steadying of attention itself.

GATHA 4155 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, longing fulfilled at His face

मराठी मूळ

धांवोनियां आलों पहावया मुख । गेलें माझें दुःख जन्मांतरिंचें ॥1॥
ऐकिलें ही होतें तैसें चि पाहिलें । मन िस्थरावलें तुझ्या पायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी इच्छा पूर्ण जाली । कांहीं न राहिली वासना हे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I came running to see Your face, and the sorrow of countless births was dispelled. What I had heard was exactly what I now beheld.

My mind became steady at Your feet. Says Tuka, my desire is completely fulfilled. No trace of longing remains.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I came running to see Your face, and the sorrow of my many births fell away. What I had heard, just that I now saw. My mind has come to rest at Your feet. Tuka says: my wish is wholly fulfilled. Not a trace of craving is left.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the moment of arrival after long seeking. Tukaram rushes to the darshan of God's face, and in that sight the grief carried across countless lifetimes simply drops. What he had only heard described in others' words he now confirms with his own eyes, and the proof steadies a mind that had never been still. The poem ends in complete rest: every desire is satisfied because the one desire has been met, and when the deepest longing is filled there is nothing further left to want.

GATHA 4156 Autobiography

Autobiography, breaking with the world for His feet

मराठी मूळ

गावलोकिकाहीं लावियेलें पिसें । काय सांगों ऐसें तुजपासीं ॥1॥
तोंड काळें केलें फिरविलें मज । नाहीं धरिली लाज पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
काय तुजपासीं सांगों हें गा†हाणें । मग काय जिणें तुझें माझें ॥2॥
कोणासाटीं आतां करावा संसार । केली वारावार आपणें चि ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी मोडिला घरचार । धरियेला धीर तुझ्या पायीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The village and the world have driven me mad. How can I tell You what has happened? They have blackened my face and turned me around.

They show no shame, O Panduranga. What complaint shall I bring before You? If I do, what life remains for You and me together? For whose sake should I continue this worldly life? I have been shamed again and again by my own doing.

Says Tuka, I have broken with my household. My resolve rests firmly at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The village and the world have made me out to be mad. What can I tell You of this? They blackened my face and turned me about. They felt no shame, O Panduranga. What complaint shall I bring to You? If I do, what life is left for You and me? For whose sake should I keep this worldly life going now? I have brought ruin on myself, again and again, by my own hand. Tuka says: I have broken up my household. I have set my firm trust at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells how the world treated him once he turned wholly to God: it called him mad, shamed him publicly, humiliated him without shame. Yet he refuses to lodge a real complaint, because a quarrel over insults would only put distance between him and the Lord. He asks for whom he should keep up ordinary worldly life at all, and admits the break was his own doing, repeated by choice. The poem ends with the decision made: he has dismantled his home and household ties and placed all his steadiness in God's feet, accepting the world's scorn as the price of that refuge.

GATHA 4157 The Moral Ideal

Moral protest, Narayana in every body

मराठी मूळ

जीवें जीव नेणे पापी सारिका चि । नळी दुजयाची कापूं बैसे ॥1॥
आत्मा नारायण सर्वां घटीं आहे । पशुमध्यें काय कळों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
देखत हा जीव हुंबरे वरडत । निष्ठाचे हात वाहाती कैसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तया चांडाळासी नर्क । भोगिती अनेक महादुःखें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The sinful one does not recognize that every being shares the same life-breath. Like a parrot, he sits ready to snip another's stem.

Narayana, the Self, dwells in every body. Should this not be evident even among animals? The living creature howls and bellows in plain sight, yet the merciless hands keep working.

Says Tuka, such wretches will endure countless torments in hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The sinner does not feel that every life is one life like his own. Like a butcher he sits down to cut another's throat. The Self, Narayana, lives in every body. Should this not be known even among the animals? Right before his eyes the creature lows and cries out, yet how do these merciless hands keep moving? Tuka says: such a wretch goes to hell. He suffers many great agonies there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram condemns cruelty to living beings by grounding it in non-duality. The killer's blindness is that he cannot feel another's life as the same life that beats in him. But the same Self, named Narayana here, dwells in every body, and that includes the animal he is about to slaughter. The poem stares at the scene without flinching: the creature bellows and weeps in plain sight, and still the hands do not stop. Tukaram aims his warning at the hardness that lets a person ignore obvious suffering, and he insists such hardness has a cost, calling it a road into great torment.

GATHA 4158 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, where feeling is, God comes

मराठी मूळ

मनीं भाव असे कांहीं । तेथें देव येती पाहीं ॥1॥
पाहा जनाई सुंदरी । तेथें देव पाणी भरी ॥ध्रु.॥
शुद्ध पाहोनियां भाव । त्याचे हृदयीं वसे देव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विठोबासी । ठाव देई चरणापासीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where there is true feeling in the mind, there God comes, without question. Look at the devout Janai: God Himself carried water for her.

Seeing pure devotion, God takes up residence in that mind. Says Tuka, give Vithoba a place at your feet in your own mind.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where there is some true feeling in the mind, there, see, God comes. Look at Janai, the lovely one: there God Himself drew water for her. Seeing feeling that is pure, God lives in that heart. Tuka says: give Vithoba a place near His own feet, in you.

WHAT IT MEANS

The teaching here is that God responds to the heart, not to display. Wherever genuine feeling rises in the mind, God draws near, and Tukaram offers the saint Janai as proof: her love was so real that the Lord Himself stooped to carry water for her. Purity of devotion is what makes a heart fit for God to dwell in. The closing line turns it into instruction for the listener: make room within yourself for Vithoba, set Him at His own feet inside you, and the same nearness that came to Janai becomes possible.

GATHA 4159 The Nature of God

Nature of God, refuge of the helpless

मराठी मूळ

भागल्याचें तारूं शिणल्याची साउली । भुकेलिया घाली प्रेमपान्हा ॥1॥
ऐसी हे कृपाळू अनाथांची वेशी । सुखाची च राशी पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळां सन्मुख कृपेचिया दृष्टी । पाहे बहु भेटी उतावीळां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें आतां उरला कैंचा । अनंता जन्मींचा शीण भाग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the weary He is a raft, for the exhausted He is shade, and for the hungry He pours forth the milk of love. Such is this compassionate refuge of the helpless, a very treasure of joy: Panduranga.

He looks upon all with the gaze of mercy, eager to meet those who long for Him. Says Tuka, what weariness or burden of countless births can remain here now?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the worn-out He is a boat; for the weary, shade; to the hungry He gives the milk of love. So merciful is this gateway for the orphaned, this very heap of joy, Panduranga. With eyes of mercy He faces everyone, looking eagerly to meet those who long for Him. Tuka says: what is left here now of the weariness, the burden of my endless births?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes God by what God does for the helpless. To the one exhausted by life's crossing He is the boat; to the tired He is shade; to the starving He gives love like a mother's milk. Calling Him a gateway for the orphaned, Panduranga is named as a sheer mass of joy who turns His merciful gaze on all and waits eagerly for whoever longs for Him. Against such a refuge the speaker's own long weariness has no standing left: the fatigue accumulated over countless births simply cannot survive contact with this mercy.

GATHA 4160 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Father who cannot abandon

मराठी मूळ

काय न्यून आहे सांगा । पांडुरंगा तुह्मांपें ॥1॥
आमुची तों न पुरे इच्छा । पिता ऐसा मस्तकीं ॥ध्रु.॥
कैसी तुह्मां होय सांडी । करुणा तोंडीं उच्चारें ॥2॥
आश्चर्य चि करी तुका । हे नायका वैकुंठिंचिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, what is lacking with You, O Panduranga? Our desire never finds its end, with a Father such as You crowning our heads. How can You abandon one who cries out Your name in anguish? Says Tuka, this is wondrous indeed, O Lord of Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, what is lacking with You, O Panduranga? Our wish never runs short, with a Father like You over our heads. How could You forsake the one who cries Your name in his pain? Tuka says: this is a wonder, O Lord of Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reasons from God's abundance to God's faithfulness. Nothing is wanting in Panduranga, so with such a Father watching over them his children's needs can never go unmet. From this he presses the real point: it would be unthinkable for so full a Father to abandon a child who calls out His name in distress. The poem ends in wonder rather than fear, marveling at the Lord of Vaikuntha whose nature makes desertion impossible; the devotee's confidence rests not on his own worth but on what God simply is.

GATHA 4161 Prayers

Prayer, the road ahead blocked

मराठी मूळ

चित्त गुंतलें प्रपंचें । जालें वेडें ममतेचें ॥1॥
आतां सोडवीं पांडुरंगा । आलें निवारीं तें आंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
गुंतली चावटी । नामीं रूपीं जाली तुटी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चाली । पुढें वाट खोळंबली॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind has become entangled in worldly life; it has gone mad with attachment. Now deliver me, O Panduranga.

Ward off what has come upon me. Idle mischief has crept in, creating a rift between me and Your name and form.

Says Tuka, the road ahead has been blocked.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind is tangled in worldly life. It has gone mad with attachment. Now set me free, Panduranga. Ward off what has come upon me. Idle mischief has crept in. It has cut me off from Your name and Your form. Tuka says: the road ahead is blocked.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a soul that knows it is stuck and cannot move on its own. His mind has wrapped itself around the things of the world until it is sick with attachment, so he asks Panduranga to do the untangling for him. The danger he names is precise: useless busyness and chatter have slipped in and severed his contact with God's name and form, the very things that kept him oriented. With the path forward sealed, he has nothing left but to call on the one who can clear it.

GATHA 4162 Confession and Sin

Confession, the moment never comes

मराठी मूळ

किती एका दिसीं । बुद्धि जाली होती ऐसी ॥1॥
कांहीं करावें स्वहित । तों हें न घडे उचित ॥ध्रु.॥
अवलंबुनी भीक। लाज सांडिली लौकिक ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दीन । जालों मनुष्यपणा हीन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On how many days has the thought arisen: I should do something for my own spiritual good? Yet the right moment never comes. I have taken up begging, casting aside all worldly shame.

Says Tuka, I have become forlorn, lower even than human dignity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How many days the thought has come to me: I should do something for my own good. But the right moment never arrives. I have taken to begging. I have thrown away all worldly shame. Tuka says: I am wretched, fallen below even the dignity of a human being.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses the gap between good intention and the act that never follows. Again and again he resolves to work for his own spiritual welfare, and again and again the right occasion slips past him, so the resolve stays a thought. He admits where this drift has left him: living off others, with the ordinary shame of respectable life cast aside. The harshness is aimed at himself, naming how endlessly postponed self-care can sink a person below even basic human standing, and the confession itself is the first honest move out of that pit.

GATHA 4163 Longing and Separation

World-weariness, take me out of here

मराठी मूळ

आतां बरें जालें । सकाळीं च कळों आलें ॥1॥
मज न ठेवीं इहलोकीं । आलों तेव्हां जाली चुकी ॥ध्रु.॥
युगमहिमा ठावा । नव्हता ऐसा पुढें देवा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ठेवीं । भोगासाटीं निरयगांवीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now it is good that it became clear to me early. Do not keep me in this world, O Lord; coming here in the first place was a mistake.

I had not known beforehand, O God, the weight of this age's darkness. Says Tuka, place me in the realm of suffering if I must endure it for my past deeds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now it is good. It became clear to me early. Do not keep me in this world, Lord. Coming here at all was a mistake. I did not know beforehand, God, how heavy the darkness of this age would be. Tuka says: if I must pay for what I have done, then put me in the land of suffering.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is so worn down by the world that he counts being born into it as an error, and he is relieved to have seen this clearly while there is still time. He pleads with God not to leave him here, confessing he had no idea how crushing the corruption of this age would prove. The final line is stark: rather than be kept in this world, he would accept even hell as the price of his past deeds. The verse is not despair for its own sake; it is a soul asking to be removed from a place it can no longer trust, and willing to bear the cost.

GATHA 4164 Prayers

Prayer, the parent must spare the child

मराठी मूळ

परि आतां माझी परिसावी विनंती । रखुमाईच्या पती पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
चुकलिया बाळा न मारावें जीवें । हित तें करावें मायबापीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा ह्मणताती मज । आतां आहे लाज हे चि तुह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

But now, hear my humble plea, O Lord of Rakhumai, O Panduranga. Do not strike a wayward child to death; it is the duty of parents to do what is best.

Says Tuka, they call me Yours. Now the honor to uphold is Yours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

But now hear my plea, Lord of Rakhumai, Panduranga. Do not put a straying child to death. Parents must do what is good for it. Tuka says: they call me Yours. Now the honor of that is Yours to keep.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pleads as an erring child before a parent who has the power to punish. He does not deny that he has gone astray; he asks instead that God act the way good parents act, correcting the child for its welfare rather than destroying it. Then he turns the claim around: since the world calls him God's own, his failures now reflect on God, and the honor at stake belongs to the Lord. It is the bold logic of the bhakta, binding God to him by love and by reputation, so that to abandon the devotee would be to lose face.

GATHA 4165 Worldly Life

Lament, the age undone by sin

मराठी मूळ

पापाचिया मुळें । जालें सत्याचें वाटोळें ॥1॥
दोष जाले बिळवंत । नाहीं ऐसी जाली नीत ॥ध्रु.॥
मेघ पडों भीती । पिकें सांडियेली िक्षती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं । वेदा वीर्य शक्ति नाहीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Because of sin, truth has been undone. Faults have become powerful, and righteousness has vanished.

The rains threaten to fall destructively; the crops have been abandoned in the fields. Says Tuka, the Vedas have lost their strength and vigor.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because of sin, truth has been ruined. Faults have grown strong. Right conduct is nowhere to be found. The rains threaten to fall and destroy. The crops are left lying in the fields. Tuka says: even the Vedas have lost their strength and power.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram laments an age where wrong has overpowered right and truth itself has come undone. He paints the breakdown spreading outward: sins grow muscular, righteousness disappears, and even the land turns hostile, with ruinous rains and abandoned harvests. The closing line is the gravest, that the Vedas, the oldest source of order, have lost their potency to hold things together. The poem names the stakes of a world cut loose from dharma, where the supports people once leaned on no longer bear weight.

GATHA 4166 Longing and Separation

The Name, the boat across the ocean

मराठी मूळ

ऐसा दुस्तर भवसागर । नेणों कैसा उतरूं पार ॥1॥
कामक्रोधादि सावजें थोर । दिसताती भयंकर ॥ध्रु.॥
मायाममतेचे भोवरे । घेती भयानक फेरे ॥2॥
वासनेच्या लहरा येती । उद्योगहेलकावे बसती ॥3॥
तरावया एक युक्ति असे । तुका नामनावेमधीं बैसे॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How fearsome is this ocean of worldly existence; I do not know how I shall cross to the other shore. The wild beasts of lust and anger loom terribly.

The whirlpools of illusion and attachment spin with frightening force. Waves of desire surge, and the storms of restless striving toss one about.

Says Tuka, there is one means to cross: sit in the boat of the Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This ocean of worldly existence is so hard to cross. I do not know how I will reach the far shore. The wild beasts of lust and anger loom, and they look terrible. The whirlpools of illusion and attachment turn in frightening circles. Waves of desire come; the storms of restless striving toss me about. Tuka says: there is one way to cross. Sit in the boat of the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram maps the spiritual crossing as a sea voyage and fills the water with every hazard. Lust and anger are predatory beasts, illusion and attachment are whirlpools, desire and restless effort are the waves and squalls that capsize a swimmer. The point of the catalogue is that no one can fight all this by their own strength. The single answer he offers is to stop swimming and climb aboard the Name of God, the one vessel that carries the soul over a sea it could never cross alone.

GATHA 4167 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the God who will not leave

मराठी मूळ

देव जडला जाइना अंगा । यासी काय करूं सांगा॥1॥
वरकड देव येती जाती । हा देव जन्माचा सांगाती ॥ध्रु.॥
अंगीं भरलें देवाचें वारें । देव जग चि दिसे सारें ॥2॥
भूत न बोले निरुतें। कांहीं केल्या न सुटे तें ॥3॥
जीव खादला दैवतें । माझा आणि पंचभूतें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे वाडें कोडें । उभें पुंडलिकापुढें॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God has become fixed in my being and will not leave. What shall I do about this, tell me? Other gods come and go, but this God is a companion for life.

The wind of God has filled my body; the whole world appears as God. This spirit within me will not speak a false word; nothing can dislodge it.

This deity has consumed my jiva and the five elements. Says Tuka, with great joy, He stands before Pundalika.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God has lodged in my being and will not go. Tell me, what can I do about this? Other gods come and go; this God is a companion for life. The wind of God has filled my body. The whole world looks like nothing but God. The spirit in me will not speak a false word. Nothing I do can shake it loose. This deity has eaten up my jiva and the five elements. Tuka says: with great delight, He stands before Pundalika.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes possession by God as something he can no longer reverse, half complaint and half wonder. Lesser gods are visitors who arrive and depart, but this one has settled in for good as a lifelong companion. The takeover is total: God's presence fills his body like a wind, the world dissolves into God alone, and try as he might he cannot dislodge it. He says the deity has devoured his very self and the five elements of which his body is made, leaving nothing that is not God. The verse ends in joy, with that same God standing at Pandharpur before the devotee Pundalika who first drew Him there.

GATHA 4168 Prayers

Prayer, born among the Lord's lovers

मराठी मूळ

हरिदासाचिये घरीं । मज उपजवा जन्मांतरीं ॥1॥
ह्मणसी कांहीं मागा । हें चि देगा पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
संतां लोटांगणीं । जातां लाजों नको मनीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अंगीं । शक्ती देई नाचें रंगीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let me be born in the household of a Hari-devotee in my next life. You say, ask for anything; this alone is what I ask, O Panduranga.

When I prostrate before the saints, let me never feel shame in my mind. Says Tuka, give me the strength to dance with abandon in devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the house of one who loves Hari, let me be born in my next life. You say, ask for something; this alone I ask, Panduranga. When I fall flat before the saints, let me feel no shame in my mind. Tuka says: put the strength in my body to dance with abandon in Your worship.

WHAT IT MEANS

Offered any boon, Tukaram asks for nothing the world prizes; he asks only to be reborn into a household of devotees. The request shows what he values: not wealth or release in the abstract, but the company that keeps a soul turned toward God. He asks for two graces in particular, that he never feel embarrassed prostrating before the saints, and that his body have the strength to lose itself in dancing worship. It is a prayer to belong wholly to the world of bhakti, without the pride that holds a person back from it.

GATHA 4169 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the emptiness of mere argument

मराठी मूळ

लटिक्याचें आंवतणें जेविलिया साच । काय त्या विश्वास तो चि खरा ॥1॥
कोल्हांटिणी लागे आकाशीं खेळत । ते काय पावत अमरपद ॥ध्रु.॥
जळमंडपयाचे घोडे राउत नाचती । ते काय तडवती युद्धालागीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसें मतवादीयांचें जिणें। दिसे लाजिरवाणें बोलतां चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If someone has truly feasted at a false invitation, will he trust that host again? An acrobat may perform tricks in the sky; does she thereby attain immortality? Wooden horses and riders dance at a water-festival; will they charge into a real battle? Says Tuka, such is the life of those who argue over doctrines. Even to speak of it is embarrassing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If a man has feasted at a false invitation, does he really trust that host? An acrobat tumbles through tricks in the sky; does she win the deathless state by it? Wooden horses and their riders dance at the water-festival; will they charge into a real battle? Tuka says: such is the life of those who argue over doctrines. Even to speak of it is shameful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up three pictures of effort that looks like the real thing but produces nothing. A feast you only imagined leaves you hungry; an acrobat's skyward stunts win applause but not immortality; festival horses that prance are useless when a true fight comes. Each image exposes performance mistaken for substance. He then turns the mirror on those who spend their lives debating doctrines, treating clever argument as if it were the goal. The warning is not contempt for thought but a caution against the pattern of substituting talk about God for the actual living of devotion.

GATHA 4170 Longing and Separation

Longing, others were saved, why not me

मराठी मूळ

काय आह्मीं केलें ऐसें । नुद्धरीजेसें सांगावें ॥1॥
हरण कोल्हें वैकुंठवासी । कोण त्यासी अधिकार ॥ध्रु.॥
गजा नाडएा सरोवरीं । नाहीं हरी विचारिलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे गणिका नष्ट। माझे कष्ट त्याहूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What have I done that is so terrible that You refuse to save me? Tell me. A deer and a jackal became dwellers of Vaikuntha; what special qualification did they possess? When the elephant Gajendra was trapped in the lake, Hari did not pause to deliberate.

Says Tuka, the courtesan was wretched, yet my sufferings are greater even than hers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What have I done that is so terrible You refuse to save me? Tell me. A deer and a jackal became dwellers of Vaikuntha; what right did they have to it? When the elephant was trapped in the lake, Hari did not stop to think it over. Tuka says: the courtesan was a sinner, yet my hardships are greater than hers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his case by holding up those God has already rescued. A deer, a jackal, the trapped elephant Gajendra, the fallen courtesan, none of them had any special merit, yet Hari saved them without hesitation. So he asks what crime of his could possibly be bad enough to make God hold back now. The argument is the bhakta's audacity again: he turns God's own record of unearned grace into a claim on it. Naming his suffering as worse than the courtesan's, he insists he has more reason, not less, to be reached for.

GATHA 4171 Social Criticism

Satire, the guru who brought ruin

मराठी मूळ

भाग्यासाटीं गुरु केला । नाहीं आह्मांसी फळला॥1॥
याचा मंत्र पडतां कानीं । आमच्या पेवांत गेलें पाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
गुरु केला घरवासी । आमच्या चुकल्या गाईम्हसी ॥2॥
स्वामी आपुली बुटबुट घ्यावी । आमुची प्रताप टाकुन द्यावी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे नष्ट । त्यांसी दुणे होती कष्ट ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I took a guru for the sake of good fortune, but it did not bear fruit for me. The moment his mantra entered my ears, water flooded into our granary.

I chose a householder guru, and our cows and buffaloes went astray. Master, you should keep your own faults to yourself and let go of your claim on my achievements.

Says Tuka, such worthless ones only bring redoubled misery.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I took a guru for good fortune. He bore me no fruit. The moment his mantra fell on my ears, water flooded into our granary. I took a householder guru, and our cows and buffaloes wandered off. Master, keep your own ruin to yourself; let go of your claim on what I gain. Tuka says: such worthless ones only double a person's troubles.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram aims his wit at the worldly guru taken for profit rather than for God. He went looking for good fortune through a teacher, and the verse reports a string of comic disasters: the mantra arrived, the granary flooded, the livestock strayed. The complaint is that a guru who is himself sunk in household concerns has nothing real to give and yet claims credit for the disciple's gains. The criticism points at a pattern, the spiritual transaction entered for material reward, and warns that leaning on such a teacher only multiplies trouble. The self-examination is to ask why one sought a guru for fortune at all.

GATHA 4172 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the tender feet on the brick

मराठी मूळ

गुणा आला ईटेवरी । पीतांबरधारी सुंदर जो ॥1॥
डोळे कान त्याच्या ठायीं । मन पायीं राहो हें ॥ध्रु.॥
निवारोनी जाय माया । ऐसी छाया जयासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे समध्यान । हे चरण सकुमार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He has come to the edge of the brick, that beautiful one clad in a yellow garment. Let my eyes and ears be fixed upon Him.

Let this mind remain at His feet. His very shadow banishes illusion from all who are near.

Says Tuka, meditate evenly upon these tender and delicate feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has come and stood upon the brick, that beautiful one in the yellow garment. Let my eyes and my ears rest on Him. Let this mind stay at His feet. His shadow alone drives illusion away. Tuka says: meditate steadily on these tender, delicate feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram fixes his whole attention on Vitthal standing on the brick at Pandharpur, beautiful in his yellow silk. He gathers his senses, eyes and ears, onto that single form, and asks that his mind settle at the feet and not move. He names what the feet do: even their shadow scatters Maya, the illusion that ordinarily holds the soul. The closing instruction is plain and practical, to hold a steady meditation on those tender feet, making the standing image at the shrine the one resting place of the mind.

GATHA 4173 Devotion to Vitthal

The kirtan, lost in the Name

मराठी मूळ

रंगीं रंगें नारायण । उभा करितों कीर्त्तन ॥1॥
हातीं घेउनियां वीणा । कंठीं राहें नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
देखिलीसे मूर्ती । माझ्या हृदयाची विश्रांति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । देई कीर्त्तनाचा हेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With joy and color, Narayana stands as I perform kirtan. With the veena in my hands, let Him remain at my throat, O Narayana.

I have seen that form which is the repose of my heart. Says Tuka, O God, grant me the passion for kirtan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I stand and sing kirtan, lost in the color of Narayana. I take the veena in my hands. Stay on my tongue, O Narayana. I have seen that form. It is the rest of my heart. Tuka says: O God, give me this hunger for kirtan.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is asking God for one gift, and the gift is the singing itself. He stands up with the veena and loses himself in the colour of the Name, and he prays that Narayana will live on his throat so the song keeps coming. The form he has seen is what gives his heart its only rest. So when he asks for the hunger for kirtan, he is asking not for liberation but for the love that makes him sing; the longing is already the reward.

GATHA 4174 Faith and Trust

Faith, demanding the promised treasure

मराठी मूळ

तुझा भरवसा आम्हां । फार होता पुरुषोत्तमा ॥1॥
भवसागरसंकटीं । तारिशील जगजेठी ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम आदित्याचें झाड। त्याचा न पडे उजड ॥2॥
सिलंगणीचें सोनें । त्यासीं गाहाण ठेवी कोण ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । ि◌ब्रद सोडूनियां ठेवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I had great faith in You, O Supreme Being. I trusted You would carry me across the perilous ocean of worldly existence, O Lord of the world.

The name is a tree planted by the sun itself; its shade will never be barren. Who would pawn gold that has been tested by the touchstone? Says Tuka, O God, set aside Your vow and show me Your hidden treasure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I had great faith in you, Purushottama. I trusted you would carry me across the dangerous sea of this world, Lord of the world. The Name is a tree planted by the sun. Its shade never fails. Who pawns gold that has passed the touchstone? Tuka says: God, set aside your vow and give me the treasure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his claim on God like a creditor calling in a debt. He has trusted God to ferry him across the ocean of birth and death, and he reminds God that the Name is no ordinary shelter: it is a tree planted by the sun, whose shade can never fail. His images all say the same thing, that what God has given is already proven true, like gold tested on the touchstone that no one would think to pawn. So he ends boldly, telling God to drop whatever reserve He keeps and hand over the hidden treasure He has promised.

GATHA 4175 Prayers

Prayer, the pilgrim's only wishes

मराठी मूळ

जालों आतां दास । माझी पुरवीं हे आस ॥1॥
पंढरीचा वारकरी । वारी चुकों नेदीं हरी ॥ध्रु.॥
संतसमागम । अंगीं भरोनियां प्रेम ॥2॥
चंद्रभागे स्नान । तुका ह्मणे हें चि दान ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have now become Your servant; fulfill this longing of mine. Let me be a pilgrim of Pandhari, and let Hari never allow me to miss the annual pilgrimage.

In the company of saints, may love fill my being. Says Tuka, bathing in the Chandrabhaga is all the gift I ask.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now I have become your servant. Fulfill this longing of mine. Make me a pilgrim of Pandhari. Hari, never let me miss the pilgrimage. Let love fill my body in the company of the saints. Tuka says: a bath in the Chandrabhaga, that is the only gift I ask.

WHAT IT MEANS

Now that he belongs to God, Tukaram names the small, exact things he wants. He asks only to remain a Varkari, one of the pilgrims who walk to Pandharpur, and never to miss the yearly walk. The rest of his prayer is just as humble: the company of saints, love filling his body, a bath in the river Chandrabhaga that flows past the temple. He wants no heaven and no power; the pilgrimage, the saints, and the river are the whole of what he calls a gift.

GATHA 4176 Prayers

Surrender, no one else to turn to

मराठी मूळ

यासाटीं करितों निष्ठ भाषण । आहेसी तूं जाण सर्वदाता ॥1॥
ऐसें दुःख कोण आहे निवारिता । तें मी जाऊं आतां शरण त्यासी ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसलासे केणें करुनि एक घरीं । नाहीं येथें उरी दुस†याची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलें अवघें पायांपें । आतां मायबापें नुपेक्षावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is for this reason that I speak to You with urgency: You are the giver of all, I know. What other remover of sorrow is there that I should go and surrender to instead? You have taken up sole residence in my home; no room remains for anyone else.

Says Tuka, everything has come to Your feet. Now, O Mother and Father, do not neglect me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is why I speak to you so urgently: I know you are the giver of all. Who else can take away such sorrow, that I should go and surrender to him instead? You have come and settled alone in my house. There is no room left here for anyone else. Tuka says: everything has come to your feet. Now, mother and father, do not turn away from me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains why his speech to God is so insistent: there is simply no second address for his sorrow. He knows God is the one giver of all, so going elsewhere would be pointless; no other power can lift the grief he carries. He pictures God as having taken sole residence in his house, leaving no room for any rival refuge. Having laid everything at the feet of the one he calls mother and father, he asks the only thing left to ask, that God not neglect what has been wholly handed over.

GATHA 4177 Autobiography

The God-mad boy, the world's contempt

मराठी मूळ

पोरा लागलीसे चट । धरी वाट देवळाची ॥1॥
सांगितलें नेघे कानीं । दुजें मनी विठ्ठल ॥ध्रु.॥
काम घरीं न करी धंदा । येथें सदा दुश्चत्त ॥2॥
आमुचे कुळीं नव्हतें ऐसें । हें चि पिसें निवडलें ॥3॥
लौकिकाची नाहीं लाज । माझें मज पारिखें॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे नरका जाणें । त्या वचनें दुष्टाचीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The boy has caught the obsession; he keeps running to the temple. He will not listen to anyone; his mind holds only Vitthal.

He does no work at home, always absent-minded here. Nothing like this ever happened in our family before; this peculiar madness has singled him out.

He has no shame before the world; what is mine feels foreign to me. Says Tuka, those who speak such words are the wicked ones who are bound for hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The boy has caught the obsession. He keeps to the road to the temple. He hears nothing you tell him. His mind holds only Vitthal. He does no work at home, no trade. Here he is always absent. No one in our family was ever like this. This madness has picked him out. He has no shame before the world. What is mine has become a stranger to me. Tuka says: it is the wicked who say he is bound for hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets the worldly relatives speak, and then turns their verdict back on them. In their voice, the boy is a scandal: he runs to the temple, ignores everyone, neglects work and trade, brings a madness no one in the family ever had, and has lost all shame before society. The complaint that even his own people now feel foreign to him is meant as an insult to the devotee. But Tukaram's signature line flips it: those who condemn such a God-intoxicated boy as hell-bound are themselves the wicked ones. The poem asks the listener which side of that judgment they are standing on.

GATHA 4178 Longing and Separation

Longing, coaxing the silent God

मराठी मूळ

देवा बोलें आतां बोला । त्वां कां धरिला अबोला॥1॥
भेऊं नको देई भेटी । तूं कां पडिलासी संकटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
तुझ्या जीवींचें मी जाणें । ह्मणसी मुक्ती आह्मां देणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे न लगे कांहीं । चित्त राहो तुझे पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, speak now, say something. Why have You become silent? Do not be afraid; grant me Your meeting.

Why have You put Yourself in such a difficult position? I know what is in Your chitta: You think You will have to grant me liberation. Says Tuka, I need nothing of the sort. Just let my mind remain at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God, speak now, say something. Why have you fallen silent? Do not be afraid. Grant me your meeting. Why have you put yourself in such a tight spot? I know what is in your heart. You think you will have to give me liberation. Tuka says: I want nothing of the kind. Just let my mind rest at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram teases his silent God the way one coaxes a reluctant friend. He imagines that God has gone quiet out of a kind of worry, as if afraid that meeting Tukaram will oblige Him to hand over liberation. So Tukaram tells God to relax, because he is not after liberation at all. The whole point of the prayer is to release God from that supposed debt: all he asks is that his mind be allowed to stay at God's feet, which is the only gift he ever wanted.

GATHA 4179 Devotion to Vitthal

Humility, the smallest in God's court

मराठी मूळ

यमधर्म आणिक ब्रह्मादिक देव । त्यांचा पूर्ण भाव तुझे पायीं ॥1॥
करिती स्मरण पार्वतीशंकर । तेथें मी किंकर कोणीकडे॥ध्रु.॥
सहजरमुखेंसी घोष फणिवराचा । मज किंकराचा पाड काय ॥2॥
चंद्र सूर्य आणि सर्व तारांगणें । करिती भ्रमण प्रदिक्षणा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांसी स्वरूप कळेना । तेथें मज दीना कोण पुसे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Yama, Brahma, and all the gods hold perfect devotion at Your feet. Parvati and Shankara ceaselessly remember You.

Where do I, a mere servant, stand in that company? Shesha with his thousand mouths raises a constant hymn. What is the standing of this humble servant? The sun, moon, and all the stars revolve around You in circumambulation.

Says Tuka, when even they cannot fathom Your nature, who will pay attention to a wretch like me?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Yama, Brahma, and all the gods hold full devotion at your feet. Parvati and Shankara remember you without stopping. Where do I, a servant, stand among them? Shesha with his many mouths sings your hymn without end. What weight does a servant like me carry? The moon, the sun, and all the host of stars go round you in circles. Tuka says: when even they cannot grasp your nature, who will ask after a wretch like me?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his own smallness against the grandest worshippers in creation. The death-lord Yama, the creator Brahma, Parvati and Shankara, the thousand-mouthed serpent Shesha, the sun and moon and all the stars, every one of them already adores God and circles Him in worship. Set beside that company, Tukaram counts for nothing, a servant of no weight. Yet the smallness is not despair: by confessing that even these mighty beings cannot fathom God's nature, he turns his own littleness into a plea, asking why the Lord would bother to notice a wretch like him, which is exactly the noticing he hopes for.

GATHA 4180 Faith and Trust

Faith, devotion makes God the debtor

मराठी मूळ

विठोबाचे पायीं जीव म्यां ठेविला । भक्तिभावें केला देव ऋणी ॥1॥
देव माझा ऋणी आहे सहाकारी । परसपरवारि भवभय ॥ध्रु.॥
भवभयडोहीं बुडों नेदी पाहीं । धरूनियां बाही तारी मज ॥2॥
तारियेले दास पडिल्या संकटीं । विष केलें पोटीं अमृतमय ॥3॥
अमृतातें सेवीतसे नामरसा । तोडियेला फांसा बंधनाचा ॥4॥
बंधनाचा फांसा आह्मीं कांहीं नेणों । पाय तुझे जाणों पद्मनाभा ॥5॥
पद्मनाभा नाभिकमळीं ब्रह्मादिक । त्रैलोक्यनायक ह्मणविसी ॥6॥
ह्मणविसी देवा दासाचा अंकित । मनाचा संकेत पाहोनियां ॥7॥
पाहोनियां दृढ निश्चय तयाचा । तो चि दास साचा जवळीक ॥8॥
जवळीक जाली ब्रह्मीं सुखावले । मार्ग दाखविले मूढा जना ॥9॥
मूढा जनामाजी दास तुझा मूढ । कास तुझी दृढ धरियेली ॥10॥
धरियेले तुझे पाय रे विठ्ठला । तुका सुखी जाला तुझ्या नामें ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I placed my life at Vithoba's feet and made God my debtor through devotion. God is my debtor and my ally, saving me from the terror of worldly existence.

He does not let me drown in the well of worldly fear, but holds my arm and pulls me across. He has rescued His servants in times of distress, turning poison in their bellies into nectar.

I drink the nectar of His name-juice; the noose of bondage has been cut. I know nothing of bondage's snare; I know only Your feet, O Padmanabha.

From Your lotus-navel sprang Brahma; You are called the Lord of the three worlds. You call Yourself the servant of Your servants, watching the intent of their hearts.

The one whose resolve is firm is the true devotee, closest to You. In that closeness, the jiva rejoices in Brahman; the path has been shown to the ignorant.

Says Tuka, among the ignorant, I am Your ignorant servant, and I have held fast to Your waist.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I placed my life at Vithoba's feet. By devotion I made God my debtor. My God is my debtor and my helper. He keeps the fear of this world away. He does not let me drown in the deep well of worldly fear. He holds my arm and carries me across. He has saved his servants in their troubles. He turned the poison in their bellies into nectar. I drink the nectar of the Name. The noose of bondage is cut. I know nothing of the noose of bondage. I know only your feet, Padmanabha. Padmanabha, from your navel-lotus came Brahma and the rest. You are called the lord of the three worlds. You call yourself the slave of your slave, watching the secret of his mind. Seeing his firm resolve, that one is the true servant, close to you. In that closeness the jiva rejoices in Brahman, and the path is shown to the foolish people. Among the foolish people I am your foolish servant. I have held your support fast. I have held your feet, Vitthal. Tuka says: Tuka has grown happy through your Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes a daring claim: by sheer devotion, the servant has put God in his debt. Having laid his life at Vithoba's feet, he says God now owes him rescue, and so God holds his arm above the deep well of worldly fear and carries him across, just as He once turned poison to nectar in the bellies of His devotees. The instrument of all this is the Name, whose sweetness cuts the noose of bondage so cleanly that Tukaram says he no longer even knows what bondage is. The poem then names the strange reversal at the heart of bhakti: the Lord of the three worlds, from whose navel-lotus Brahma was born, willingly calls Himself the slave of His slave, won over by a devotee's firm resolve. Tukaram places himself last in line, the most foolish among foolish people, and says that holding fast to those feet is exactly what has made him happy.

GATHA 4181 Prayers

Prayer, carry me to the far shore

मराठी मूळ

बहु क्लेशी जालों या हो नरदेहीं । कृपादृष्टी पाहीं पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
पांडुरंगा सर्वदेवांचिया देवा । घ्यावी माझी सेवा दिनानाथा ॥ध्रु.॥
दिनानाथ ि◌ब्रद त्रिभुवनीं तुझें । मायबापा ओझें उतरावें ॥2॥
उतरीं सत्वर पैलथडी नेई । पूर्णसुख देई पायांपाशीं॥3॥
पायांपाशीं मज ठेवीं निरंतर । आशा तुझी फार दिवस केली ॥4॥
केली आस तुझी वाट मी पाहातों । निशिदिनीं ध्यातों नाम तुझें॥5॥
नाम तुझें गोड स्वभक्ता आवडे । भक्तांलागीं कडे खांदा घेसी॥6॥
घेसी खांद्यावरी खेळविसी लोभें । पाउल शोभे विटेवरि ॥7॥
विटेवरि उभा देखिलासी डोळां । मनाचा सोहळा पुरविसी ॥8॥
पुरवीं सत्वर त्रैलोक्यस्वामिया । मिठी घाली पायां तुका भावें ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have suffered greatly in this human body. Look upon me with the eye of grace, O Panduranga.

O God of all gods, accept my service, O Lord of the lowly. Your name in the three worlds is "Protector of the afflicted," O Mother and Father; lift this burden from me.

Carry me swiftly to the far shore and grant me perfect joy at Your feet. Keep me near Your feet always; I have hoped for You for so many days.

I have set my hope on You and watch for You; day and night I meditate on Your name. Your name is sweet; Your devotees cherish it.

You carry Your devotees upon Your shoulders and caress them with love. Your feet shine upon the brick; You fulfill every desire of the chitta.

Says Tuka, fulfill this now, O Lord of the three worlds. I clasp Your feet with devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have suffered greatly in this human body. Look on me with the eye of grace, Panduranga. Panduranga, God of all the gods, take up my service, Lord of the lowly. Your name through the three worlds is Lord of the lowly, mother and father; lift this load from me. Lift me at once and carry me to the far shore. Give me full joy at your feet. Keep me always near your feet. I have hoped for you so many days. I have set my hope on you and I watch the road. Night and day I dwell on your Name. Your Name is sweet. Your devotees love it. You take your devotees up on your shoulder. You take them on your shoulder and play with them in love. Your foot is lovely on the brick. I have seen you standing on the brick with my own eyes. You fulfill the heart's festival. Fulfill it quickly, Lord of the three worlds. Tuka says: Tuka clasps your feet with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Worn down by the suffering of human life, Tukaram presses his case on Panduranga by holding the Lord to His own title, Protector of the lowly. He treats the name as a promise that has to be kept: if God is called the refuge of the afflicted across the three worlds, then He must lift this burden and ferry Tukaram across the ocean to the far shore. The plea is woven with patience and intimacy, the long days of watching the road, the night and day repetition of the sweet Name, the picture of God lifting His devotees onto His shoulder to play with them in love. At the centre is the form he has actually seen, the feet standing on the brick at Pandharpur, and the whole poem ends by simply clasping those feet and asking that the long-hoped rescue come quickly.

GATHA 4182 Longing and Separation

Longing, homeward after many births

मराठी मूळ

एक वेळे तरी जाईन माहेरा । बहुजन्म फेरा जाल्यावरी॥1॥
चित्ता हे बैसली अविट आवडी । पालट ती घडी नेघे एकी ॥ध्रु.॥
करावें ते करी कारणशरीर । अंतरीं त्या धीर जीवनाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तरि होइल विलंब । परि माझा लाभ खरा जाला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At least once let me go home to my true home, after so many cycles of birth. This undying love has settled in my chitta; not a single moment would I trade it.

The causal body does what it must, but within it the sustenance of true life abides. Says Tuka, there may be delay, but my gain is real and lasting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At least once let me go home to my true home, after so many rounds of birth. An unfading love has settled in my heart. I would not trade it for a single moment. The causal body does what it must. Within it the strength of true life holds steady. Tuka says: there may be delay, but my gain is real and lasting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks of returning home like a married daughter longing for her parents' house, except his true home lies beyond the long round of births. The love that has lodged in his heart is unfading, and he would not exchange it for anything even for an instant. He distinguishes between the outer life and the inner one: the causal body keeps running its course, but the real sustenance of life holds firm underneath it. So even if reaching home is delayed, he is content, because the gain itself is already real and will not be lost.

GATHA 4183 The Saints

The saints, God's credit is theirs

मराठी मूळ

सांग त्वां कोणासी तारिलें । संतांवेगळें उद्धरिलें॥1॥
संत शब्द उपदेशी । मग तूं हो ह्मणशी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं तुझा उपकार । करूं संतांचा उच्चार ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tell me, whom have You saved apart from the saints? Whom have You liberated on Your own? The saints speak the word of guidance, and then You say, "Yes, I did it." Says Tuka, the credit is not Yours at all. Let us praise the saints instead.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tell me, whom have you saved? Whom have you ever lifted up without the saints? The saints speak the teaching. Then you say, I did it. Tuka says: the favor is not yours at all. Let us speak the praise of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a blunt question and will not let Him take the credit. He claims that God has never saved a single soul on His own; it is always the saints who first speak the word of teaching that turns a person toward God. Only afterward, he says, does God step in and announce that He did the saving. The signature line drives the correction home: the favour belongs to the saints, not to God, so it is the saints whose praise should be sung. The poem is really about where a seeker should look for help, at the living teachers through whom grace actually arrives.

GATHA 4184 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari is Kashi itself

मराठी मूळ

उमा रमा एके सरी । वाराणसी ते पंढरी ॥1॥
दोघे सारिखे सारिखे । विश्वनाथ विठ्ठल सखे ॥ध्रु.॥
तेथें असे भागीरथी। येथें जाणा भीमरथी ॥2॥
वाराणशी त्रिशुलावरी । सुदर्शनावरि पंढरी ॥3॥
मनकणिनका मनोहर । चंद्रभागा सरोवर ॥4॥
वाराणशी भैरवकाळ । पुंडलीक क्षेत्रपाळ ॥5॥
धुंडिराज दंडपाणी। उभा गरुड कर जोडुनी ॥6॥
गया ते चि गोपाळपुर । प्रयाग निरानरसिंपुर ॥7॥
तेथें असती गयावळ । येथें गाई आणि गोपाळ॥8॥
शमीपत्रपिंड देती । येथें काला निजसुखप्रिाप्त ॥9॥
संतसज्जनीं केला काला । तुका प्रसाद लाधला ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Uma and Rama stand equal; Varanasi is the same as Pandhari. Both are alike: Vishwanath and Vitthal are friends.

The Ganga flows there; know that the Bhima flows here. Varanasi rests on the trident; Pandhari rests on the Sudarshana discus.

The beautiful Manikarnika ghat corresponds to the splendid Chandrabhaga. Bhairava guards Varanasi; Pundalika is the guardian of this sacred land.

Dhundiraja stands with his staff there; here stands Garuda with hands folded. Gaya is the same as Gopalpur; Prayag is the same as Narasimhapur.

Gayawals serve there; here, cows and cowherds serve. There, offerings are made with shami leaves; here, the offering is the attainment of true bliss.

Says Tuka, the saints and the good performed the rites, and Tuka received the grace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Uma and Rama are equal. Varanasi and Pandhari are one. The two are alike, alike: Vishwanath and Vitthal are friends. The Ganga flows there. Know that the Bhima flows here. Varanasi rests on the trident. Pandhari rests on the Sudarshana discus. The lovely Manikarnika ghat is here the splendid Chandrabhaga. Bhairava guards Varanasi. Pundalika guards this holy place. Dhundiraja stands there with his staff. Here Garuda stands with folded hands. Gaya is this same Gopalpur. Prayag is this same Narasimhapur. Pilgrim-priests serve there. Here cows and cowherds serve. There they offer the rice-ball with shami leaves. Here the offering is the gaining of one's own bliss. Tuka says: the saints and the good made the shared meal, and Tuka received the grace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the pilgrim who travels far to Kashi by mapping every holy thing of the north onto his own Pandharpur. Point by point he matches them: Uma to Rama, Vishwanath to Vitthal, the Ganga to the Bhima river, the Manikarnika ghat to the Chandrabhaga, Gaya and Prayag to local shrines, even the guardian deities and the serving priests. The claim is that one need not go anywhere, because Pandhari already holds all of it. The closing line lifts the comparison higher: where Kashi offers ritual rice-balls to the dead, Pandhari offers the attainment of one's own bliss, the shared meal of the saints, and that is the grace Tukaram says he has received.

GATHA 4185 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the empty boaster

मराठी मूळ

फटएाचे बडबडे चवी ना संवाद । आपुला चि वाद आपणासी ॥1॥
कोणें या शब्दाचे मरावें घाणी । अंतरें शाहाणी राहिजे हो ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्यासी करावें वचन । त्याचे येती गुण अंगास ते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A braggart's chatter has neither flavor nor substance. It is just his own argument with himself.

Why should anyone suffer the stench of such words? Stay wise within and keep your distance. Says Tuka, the qualities of the one you choose to counsel will naturally come upon you.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A braggart's chatter has no flavor and no substance. It is only his own argument with himself. Why should anyone die in the stench of such words? Stay wise within, and keep your distance. Tuka says: the qualities of the one you choose to speak with come onto your own body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is warning against the man who talks loudly and says nothing. His noise is just an argument he is having with himself; there is no flavor in it and no truth. So do not waste your breath answering him; stay quiet and wise inside and step back from the foul air of his words. The closing line names the real stake: whatever quality belongs to the person you keep talking with rubs off onto you, so choosing your company is choosing what you become.

GATHA 4186 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the wasted life

मराठी मूळ

दिवसा व्यापारचावटी । रात्री कुटुंबचिंता मोटी ॥1॥
काय करूं या मनासी । नाठवे हृषीकेशी ॥ध्रु.॥
वेश्येपाशीं रात्रीं जागे । हरिकीर्त्तनीं निद्रा लागे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय जालासी । वृथा संसारा आलासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By day he is absorbed in business and gossip; by night he is weighed down by worry over his family. What shall I do with this mind? It never remembers Hrishikesha.

He stays awake all night at a courtesan's side, yet falls asleep the moment Hari's kirtan begins. Says Tuka, what has become of you? You have come into this world in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By day he is busy with business and gossip. By night the family's worries weigh heavy on him. What shall I do with this mind? It never remembers Hrishikesha. He stays awake all night beside a courtesan. He falls asleep the moment Hari's kirtan begins. Tuka says: what have you become? You have come into this world for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a single day and shows a life leaking away through it. The hours go to trade and chatter and household anxiety, and not one moment is given to God. He sharpens the charge with a pair of opposites: this man can stay awake all night for pleasure, yet sleep takes him the instant Hari's kirtan starts, which shows exactly where his heart is pointed. The closing question is aimed not at contempt but at self-examination: a human birth is the chance to remember God, and to spend it this way is to waste the chance entirely.

GATHA 4187 Prayers

Prayer, asking for true understanding

मराठी मूळ

अहो कृपावंता । हाई बुद्धीचा ये दाता ॥1॥
जेणें पाविजे उद्धार । होय तुझे पायीं थार ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । माझें अंतर वसवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Compassionate One, grant me the gift of true understanding, by which I may attain liberation and find a firm place at Your feet. Says Tuka, O God, come and dwell within my chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Compassionate One, give me the gift of true understanding. By it I may reach liberation and find a firm place at your feet. Tuka says: O God, come and dwell within me.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a short, direct prayer for one thing: right understanding. Tukaram does not ask for comfort or fortune but for the discernment by which a soul is set free and finds steady footing at God's feet. He calls God compassionate because he is leaning entirely on that mercy to give what he cannot earn on his own. The last line turns the request inward: it is not enough to be granted the gift from outside; he asks God to come and live within him, so the understanding has its source there.

GATHA 4188 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the slanderer as washerman

मराठी मूळ

निंदक तो परउपकारी । काय वणूप त्याची थोरी । जे रजकाहुनि भले परि । सर्व गुणें आगळा ॥1॥
नेघे मोल धुतो फुका। पाप वरच्यावरि देखा । करी साधका । शुद्ध सरते तिहीं लोकीं ॥ध्रु.॥
मुखसंवदणी सांगते । अवघें सांटविलें तेथें । जिव्हा साबण निरुतें । दोष काढी जन्माचे ॥2॥
तया ठाव यमपुरीं । वास करणें अघोरीं । त्यासी दंडण करी । तुका ह्मणे न्हाणी ते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The slanderer is truly a selfless benefactor. How can I describe his greatness? He is even better than a washerman in every way.

He charges no fee but washes away our sins for free. Just look: he takes our faults upon himself.

His tongue is the soap that scrubs out the stains of lifetimes. What is stored in his gossip-laden mouth cleanses everything.

Says Tuka, his dwelling is in Yama's city, where terrible suffering awaits. Yet that very suffering of his is what cleanses us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The slanderer is truly a benefactor to others. How can I describe his greatness? He is even better than a washerman, finer in every quality. He takes no fee; he washes for free. Look how he takes our sins onto himself. His tongue is the soap that scrubs out the stains of many lifetimes. Everything stored up in his gossiping mouth cleanses us. Tuka says: his place is in Yama's city, his dwelling in that terrible suffering; that very suffering of his is the bath that washes us clean.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns slander on its head with a mock-praise: the very man who runs you down is doing you a service. A washerman charges a fee, but the slanderer cleans you for nothing, scrubbing away the faults of lifetimes with the soap of his own tongue. The dark turn is that he pays the bill himself, because the man who lives on others' faults earns the suffering of Yama's hell, and that suffering of his is what leaves the slandered one washed clean. The point for self-examination is to stop fearing or resenting the one who criticizes you; his words wear away your defects, and the harm of the habit falls on the one who indulges it, not on you.

GATHA 4189 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, no time for the Name

मराठी मूळ

प्रपंचाची पीडा सोसिती अघोरी । जया क्षणभरी नाम नये ॥1॥
नाम नाठविती आत्मया रामाचें । धिग जिणें त्याचें भवा मूळ ॥ध्रु.॥
मूळ ते पापाचें आचरण तयाचें । नाहीं राघवाचें स्मरण त्या ॥2॥
स्मरण भजन नावडे जयासी । आंदणीया दासी यमदूतां॥3॥
चिंतन रामाचें न करी तो दोषी । एकांत तयासीं बोलों नये ॥4॥
नये त्याचा संग धरुं ह्मणे तुका । धरितां पातका वांटेकरी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who endure grievous worldly suffering yet cannot spare a moment for the Name are to be pitied. Cursed is the life of one who never remembers Rama, the Self.

Sin is the root of such a one's conduct; he has no remembrance of Raghava. One who has no love for remembrance, worship, or devotion is a gift-slave to Yama's messengers.

One who does not contemplate Rama is a wrongdoer; one should not even speak to such a person in private. Says Tuka, do not keep the company of such a one, for by associating with him, you become a partner in his sin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They endure the terrible suffering of worldly life, yet cannot find a single moment for the Name. Cursed is the life of one who never remembers Rama, the Self; that life is the root of rebirth. The root of his conduct is sin; he has no remembrance of Raghava. One who has no love for remembrance, worship, or devotion is a gift-slave to Yama's messengers. One who does not contemplate Rama is a sinner; do not even speak with him in private. Tuka says: do not keep his company, for if you do, you become a sharer in his sin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is struck by a strange refusal: people will bear endless worldly pain without complaint, yet cannot spare one moment to remember God. He names the cost plainly: a life without remembrance of Rama is the root of more rebirth, and such a person hands himself over to death's messengers as if he were a slave given away as a gift. The harsh counsel to avoid this person, and not even talk with him alone, is pointed at the pattern, not at hatred of the man, since the danger Tukaram names is contagious: keep company with a life built on forgetting God, and you take on a share of it yourself.

GATHA 4190 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, meaning over rote

मराठी मूळ

अथॉविण पाठांतर कासया करावें । व्यर्थ चि मरावें घोकूनियां ॥1॥
घोकूनियां काय वेगीं अर्थ पाहे । अर्थरूप राहे होऊनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्याला अथाअ आहे भेटी । नाहीं तरी गोष्टी बोलों नका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why memorize texts without understanding their meaning? One only dies in vain by rote learning. Instead of just memorizing, quickly seek the meaning.

Become the meaning itself. Says Tuka, one who has met the essence may speak. Otherwise, do not even talk about it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why memorize a text without its meaning? You only die in vain by reciting by rote. Instead of mere repetition, quickly look for the meaning. Stay in it, become the meaning itself. Tuka says: one who has met the meaning may speak; otherwise, do not even talk about it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cuts at hollow learning, the kind that chants the words and never reaches what they say. To memorize a scripture without grasping its sense is to spend a life in vain. The real instruction is to go past repetition into the meaning, and then further still, to live it until you yourself become what the words point to. The closing line sets the right to speak by that test: only one who has actually met the meaning may talk about it; the rest should keep silent rather than recite what they have not understood.

GATHA 4191 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, you become your company

मराठी मूळ

बसतां चोरापाशीं तैसी होय बुद्धि । देखतां चि चिंधी मन धांवे ॥1॥
व्यभिचा†यापासीं बैसतां क्षणभरी । देखतां चि नारी मन धांवे ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रपंचाचा छंद टाकूनियां गोवा । धरावें केशवा हृदयांत ॥2॥
सांडुनियां देई संसाराची बेडी । कीर्तनाची गोडी धरावी गा ॥23॥
तुका ह्मणे तुला सांगतों मी एक । रुक्मणीनायक मुखीं गावा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sitting with a thief makes the mind think like a thief; the moment you see a rag, the mind races toward it. Sitting even for a moment with an adulterer, the mind runs at the sight of a woman.

Abandon the clinging web of worldly preoccupation and hold Keshava in your heart. Cast off the shackles of worldly life and cultivate a taste for kirtan.

Says Tuka, I tell you this one thing: sing of Rukmini's Lord with your lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sit beside a thief and your mind turns like a thief's; the moment it sees a rag, the mind runs toward it. Sit even a moment beside an adulterer, and at the sight of a woman the mind runs. Throw off the tangle of worldly habit and hold Keshava in your heart. Cast off the shackles of worldly life, and grow a taste for kirtan. Tuka says: I tell you this one thing, sing of Rukmini's Lord with your lips.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shows how company shapes the mind by watching it borrow the habits of whoever sits near. Beside a thief the mind starts grabbing, even at a rag; beside an adulterer it chases at the first sight of a woman. The remedy is to change what you keep close: drop the tangled habits of worldly life, hold Keshava in the heart, and let a taste for kirtan grow where the old craving was. The single instruction he leaves you with is plain and doable, to keep the name of Rukmini's Lord on your lips, so the mind has something holy to keep company with.

GATHA 4192 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, bearing blows for the divine

मराठी मूळ

मस्तकीं सहावें ठांकियासी जाण । तेव्हां देवपण भोगावें गा ॥1॥
आपुलिये स्तुती निंदा अथवा मान । टाकावा थुंकोन पैलीकडे ॥ध्रु.॥
सद्गुसेवन तें चि अमृतपान । करुनी प्राशन बैसावें गा ॥2॥
आपुल्या मस्तकीं पडोत डोंगर । सुखाचें माहेर टाकुं नये ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां सांगूं तुला किती । जिण्याची फजीती करुं नये ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When you can endure blows upon the head, then alone can you enjoy the state of divinity. Whether it is praise or blame or honor, spit it all to the other side.

The service of the Sadguru is the true nectar; drink it deeply and be at rest. Even if mountains fall upon your head, do not abandon the home of true joy.

Says Tuka, how much more shall I tell you? Do not make a disgrace of this life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When you can bear blows upon your head, then alone may you taste the state of the divine. Praise or blame or honor, your own, spit it all to the far side. The service of the Sadguru is the true nectar; drink it and sit at rest. Though mountains fall upon your head, do not abandon the home of joy. Tuka says: how much more shall I tell you? Do not make a disgrace of this life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets a steep price on the divine state: you reach it only when you can take blows to the head without flinching, which means letting go of the self that needs defending. Praise, blame, and even honor are to be spat away, since all of them feed the very pride that must die. What replaces them is the service of the true teacher, which he calls nectar; drink that and rest in it. The warning at the end is for self-examination: the home of joy is worth keeping even if mountains fall on you, so do not throw a human life away in petty disgrace.

GATHA 4193 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the mother and child

मराठी मूळ

स्वामिसेवा गोड । माते बाळकाचें कोड ॥1॥
जेंजें मागावें भातुकें । तेंतें पुरवी कौतुकें ॥ध्रु.॥
खेळविलें कोडें । हरुषें बोले कीं बोबडें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाड । तेथें पुरे माझें कोड ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The service of the Lord is sweet. A mother delights in her child's play.

Whatever toy the child asks for, she provides it with delight. She plays with the child joyfully, smiling when it babbles.

Says Tuka, there my every desire is fulfilled in that tender love.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The service of the Lord is sweet, like a mother's delight in her child's play. Whatever toy the child asks for, she gives it gladly. She plays with it happily, smiling when it babbles. Tuka says: in that tender love every desire of mine is fulfilled.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes serving God through the simplest tenderness there is, a mother with her small child. The work is not duty but delight: she gives the child whatever it asks, plays along, and smiles even at its babbling. He places himself as the child in this love, trusting that God indulges the devotee the way a mother indulges her little one. The closing line is the whole point: inside that love nothing more needs to be sought, because every desire is already met.

GATHA 4194 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name needs only faith

मराठी मूळ

तुझें नाम पंढरिनाथा । भावेंविण नये हाता ॥1॥
दाहां नये विसां नये । पंनासां साटां नये ॥ध्रु.॥
शां नये सहस्रा नये। लक्षकोडीलागीं नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पंढरिनाथा । भावेंविण नये हाता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The name of the Lord of Pandhari cannot be obtained without true devotion. It cannot be bought for ten, twenty, fifty, or sixty coins.

It cannot be had for a hundred, a thousand, or even millions. Says Tuka, O Lord of Pandhari, without devotion it does not come into one's hands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Your name, O Lord of Pandhari, does not come into the hand without faith. It cannot be bought for ten, nor for twenty, nor for fifty or sixty. Not for a hundred, not for a thousand, not for a million coins. Tuka says: O Lord of Pandhari, without faith it never comes into the hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists that the Name has only one price, and it is not money. He runs the numbers upward, ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand, millions, to show that no sum can purchase it. What it asks for instead is bhava, true faith or feeling of the heart; the Name comes into your hand only when that is present. The repetition that frames the poem drives the single claim home: spiritual treasure is not bought, it is received by the heart that believes.

GATHA 4195 The Saints

Saints, shun the company that turns from them

मराठी मूळ

संतांपायीं विन्मुख जाला । तो जरि संगति मागों आला ॥1॥
तरि त्याहुनि दुरी जावें । सुखें एकांतीं बैसावें ॥ध्रु.॥
आत्मचर्चा नाहीं जेथें । अगी लावुनि द्यावी तेथें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । चित्ता समाधान कांहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one who turned his back on the saints comes seeking your company, move further away from him. Sit happily in solitude instead.

Where there is no discussion of the Self, set fire to that place and leave. Says Tuka, there is no peace of mind to be found there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If one who has turned his back on the saints comes asking for your company, then move further away from him. Sit happily alone instead. Where there is no talk of the Self, set fire to that place and go. Tuka says: there is no peace of mind to be had there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counsels how to guard your own spiritual life by choosing company. A person who has rejected the saints may still come seeking your fellowship, and the advice is to step back from him rather than be drawn along, choosing solitude over harmful closeness. He makes the test sharp: any gathering with no talk of the Self is worth burning down and leaving, an image aimed at the emptiness of the place, not at any person in it. The reason given is simple and practical: such company leaves the mind no peace, so it is no loss to walk away.

GATHA 4196 The Saints

Saints, the diamond keeps its worth

मराठी मूळ

हिरा ठेवितां काळें गाहाण । मोल न तुटे दुकाळीं जाण ॥1॥
तैसे संतजन पाहीं । विनटले श्रीहरिपायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसे भक्त । तयांसी जन हें निंदित ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A diamond placed in safekeeping, even in dark times, does not lose its value. Such are the saintly ones, devoted to the feet of Shrihari.

Says Tuka, such devotees may be slandered by the world, but their worth never diminishes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A diamond left in safekeeping, even through dark times, does not lose its value, even in a famine. So look at the saints: they are joined wholly to the feet of Shrihari. Tuka says: such devotees the world may slander, yet their worth does not fall.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the slander that lands on holy people with a steady image. A diamond does not cheapen because times are hard or a famine comes; its worth is in itself, not in the world's mood. The saints are like that, fastened to the feet of Shrihari, so their value rests in that bond and nowhere else. The point for self-examination is to weigh the saints by what they are joined to, not by the world's opinion of them, since slander cannot lower what was never priced by the world.

GATHA 4197 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the pilgrimage that never leaves home

मराठी मूळ

परिसें गे सुनेबाई । नको वेचूं दूध दहीं ॥1॥
आवा चालिली पंढरपुरा । वेसीपासुनि आली घरा ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐकें गोष्टी सादर बाळे । करीं जतन फुटकें पाळें ॥2॥
माझे हातींचा कलवडू । मजवाचुंनि नको फोडूं ॥3॥
वळवटिक्षरीचें लिंपन । नको फोडूं मजवांचून ॥4॥
उखळ मुसळ जातें । माझें मन गुंतलें तेथें ॥5॥
भिक्षुक आल्या घरा । सांग गेली पंढरपुरा ॥6॥
भक्षीं मपित आहारु । नको फारसी वरो सारुं ॥7॥
सून ह्मणे बहुत निकें । तुह्मी यात्रेसि जावें सुखें ॥8॥
सासूबाई स्वहित जोडा । सर्व मागील आशा सोडा ॥9॥
सुनमुखीचें वचन कानीं । ऐकोनि सासू विवंची मनीं ॥10॥
सवतीचे चाळे खोटे । म्यां जावेंसें इला वाटे॥11॥
अतां कासया यात्रे जाऊं । काय जाउनि तेथें पाहूं॥12॥
मुलें लेंकरें घर दार । माझें येथें चि पंढरपूर ॥13॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें जन । गोवियेलें मायेंकरुन ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Listen, dear daughter-in-law, do not waste the milk and curds. Your mother-in-law has set out for Pandharpur but only got as far as the village gate before turning back home.

Listen carefully, child, and guard the cracked pot with care. Do not break my curd-stirrer without me.

Do not break the dried-dung coating on the grinding-stones without me. My mind is attached to the mortar, pestle, and grinding-stone.

If a mendicant comes to the house, tell him I have gone to Pandharpur. Eat simply and do not cook too elaborately.

The daughter-in-law says sweetly, go happily on your pilgrimage, mother; give up all backward-looking attachment. Hearing her daughter-in-law's words, the old woman thinks to herself: my rival wants me gone.

So why should I go on pilgrimage at all? What would I see there anyway? My children, grandchildren, house, and home are my Pandharpur right here. Says Tuka, such is the way of people, bound by the ropes of illusion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Listen, daughter-in-law: do not waste the milk and the curds. Your mother-in-law has set out for Pandharpur. She got as far as the village gate, and then she came back home. Listen carefully, child, and guard the cracked pot. Do not break my curd-stirrer while I am gone. Do not break the dried-dung coating on the grinding-stones while I am gone. My mind is caught in the mortar, the pestle, the grinding-stone. If a beggar comes to the house, tell him I have gone to Pandharpur. Eat plainly. Do not cook elaborate food. The daughter-in-law says sweetly: this is very good, go on your pilgrimage happily. Mother-in-law, gather your own true welfare; let go of every backward longing. Hearing her daughter-in-law's words, the old woman thinks in her heart: my rival wants me gone. These are her false games; she only wishes I would leave. So why should I go on pilgrimage now? What would I go and see there anyway? My children, my grandchildren, my house and door, my Pandharpur is right here. Tuka says: this is how people are, bound fast by Maya.

WHAT IT MEANS

The whole abhanga is a comic portrait of a pilgrim who never makes it past the gate. The old woman announces she is leaving for Pandharpur, the holy town of Vitthal, but turns back before she has gone a step, fussing over the curds, the cracked pot, the stirrer, the grinding-stones. Her mind is glued to the kitchen, not to God. When the daughter-in-law urges her to go and let go of attachment, she hears only rivalry and convinces herself that her home, her children, her house, is itself Pandharpur. Tuka names the pattern without insult: this is how Maya binds an ordinary person, who mistakes the clutch of household things for piety and calls it pilgrimage. The mirror is turned toward anyone who plans the journey to God but cannot loosen a single grip to take it.

GATHA 4198 Social Criticism

Satire, the slanderer in human dress

मराठी मूळ

एक ते गाढव मनुष्याचे वेष । हालविती पुस पुढें दाढी ॥1॥
निंदा हें भोजन जेवण तयांसी । जोडी घरीं रासी पातकांच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुखें बैसोनियां खाती । कुंभपाकीं होती नर्कवासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Some are donkeys in human form, wagging their whiskers and stroking their beards. Slander is their daily meal; they heap up stores of sin at home.

Says Tuka, they sit and eat contentedly, but they will dwell in the boiling hell of Kumbhapaka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Some are donkeys dressed as men, wagging their tails and stroking their beards. Slander is their meal; that is what they eat. At home they pile up heaps of sins. Tuka says: they sit and eat in comfort now, but they will fall into the boiling hell of Kumbhapaka.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka strikes hard at people who make slander their daily food. Outwardly they look like men, grooming the beard, carrying themselves with dignity, but he calls them donkeys in disguise, because their real diet is the tearing-down of others. Each act of slander, he says, stacks up like stored grain into a hoard of sins inside the house. The comfort they enjoy now is borrowed against a reckoning: the boiling hell named Kumbhapaka. The warning lands not as contempt for any one person but as a hard look at the habit of feeding on other people's faults.

GATHA 4199 Longing and Separation

Trust, God does not delay

मराठी मूळ

मागत्याची टाळाटाळी । झिंज्या वोढूनि कपाळीं॥1॥
ऐसा तंव मोळा । तुमचा नसेल गोपाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
नसेल ना नवें । ऐसें धरियेलें देवें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला । उशीर नाहीं तो विठ्ठला॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He evades the one who asks, pulling wrinkles across his forehead. Surely, O Gopala, Yours is not such a disposition.

Or is it something new that God has adopted? Says Tuka, there has been no delay on Vitthal's part.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man who is asked for something stalls and dodges, wrinkling his forehead. But O Gopala, surely Your way is not like that. Has God taken up some new habit? No, He has not. Tuka says: there has never been any delay on Vitthal's part.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka contrasts a tight-fisted human with the open hand of God. When you ask a grudging man for help, he frowns and puts you off; that is the way of the world. Then he turns to Gopala and insists that giving is not that kind of withholding nature. He even half-asks whether God has picked up some new, stingy habit, and answers his own doubt: no, nothing has changed. The settled conviction is that Vitthal has never once been slow to give; if there is a delay, it is not on God's side.

GATHA 4201 Social Criticism

Self-examination, the eye that misses its own faults

मराठी मूळ

संसार करिती मोठएा महत्वानें । दिसे लोका उणें न कळे त्या ॥1॥
पवित्रपण आपुलें घरच्यासी च दिसे । बाहेर उदास निंदिताती ॥ध्रु.॥
आपणा कळेना आपले अवगुण । पुढिलाचे दोषगुण वाखाणिती ॥2॥
विषयाचे ध्यासें जग बांधियेलें । ह्मणोनि लागले जन्ममृत्यु ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें संचित चि असें । देवाजीचें पिसे सहजगुण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who conduct worldly life with great self-importance appear deficient to others, yet cannot see it themselves. Their own purity is visible only to their household; outsiders see only their flaws and speak ill of them.

They cannot see their own faults, yet they readily enumerate the virtues and vices of others. The world is bound by the chains of sensory obsession, and therefore birth and death persist.

Says Tuka, such is my own accumulated destiny: a natural madness for God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who run their worldly life with great self-importance look deficient to others, and cannot see it in themselves. Their purity is visible only to their own household; outside, people are cold and speak ill of them. They cannot see their own faults, but they freely list the virtues and faults of others. The world is bound by its craving for sense-objects, and so birth and death keep coming. Tuka says: this is simply what I have stored up, a natural madness for God.

WHAT IT MEANS

The abhanga sets a blind spot against a clear one. People who carry themselves with self-importance in worldly affairs cannot see how poorly they appear to others; their own family may call them pure, but outsiders see only the flaws. The sharper point is the double standard: they are expert at cataloguing everyone else's virtues and vices while staying blind to their own. Tuka names the engine underneath, the craving for sense-objects, as the very thing that keeps the round of birth and death turning. He closes by pointing at himself instead of at them: whatever he has been given to store up is just one thing, a natural madness for God, and the contrast is meant to turn the listener's eye back onto his own faults rather than his neighbour's.

GATHA 4202 Worldly Life

Counsel, keep good company

मराठी मूळ

गव्हाराचें ज्ञान अवघा रजोगुण । सुखवासी होऊन विषय भोगी ॥1॥
त्यासी ज्ञानउपदेश केला । संगेंविण त्याला राहावेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे संग उत्तम असावा । याविण उपावा काय सांगों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The knowledge of the pleasure-seeker is all passion. He dwells in comfort and indulges in sensory enjoyments.

Even when spiritual teaching is offered to him, he cannot live without worldly company. Says Tuka, one must keep good company. Beyond this, what other remedy can I suggest?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The pleasure-seeker's knowledge is all restless passion. He lives in comfort and feeds on the senses. Even when you give him spiritual teaching, he cannot stay away from worldly company. Tuka says: one must keep good company. Apart from this, what other remedy can I name?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka diagnoses the comfortable worldly man and prescribes one cure. Such a person's so-called knowledge is nothing but rajas, the drive toward enjoyment; he settles into ease and lives off sense-pleasures. Teaching alone will not move him, because the moment instruction ends he slides back into the company that holds him. So the remedy is not more doctrine but a change of company: surround yourself with the good, the satsang. Tuka offers it plainly as the one practical lever, asking what else there is to suggest, since the company we keep shapes us more than any lesson.

GATHA 4203

Social Criticism

Satire, the worldly heart and the stung conscience

मराठी मूळ

भाग्यालागी लांचावले । देवधर्म ते राहिले ॥1॥
कथे जातां अळसे मन । प्रपंचाचें मोटें ज्ञान ॥ध्रु.॥
अखंडप्रीति जाया । नेणे भजनाच्या ठाया ॥2॥
कथाकीर्त्तन धनाचें । सर्वकाळ विषयीं नाचे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे पंढरिराया । ऐसे जन्मविले वांयां॥4॥
पतिव्रतेची कीर्ती वाखाणितां । सिंदळईच्या माथां तिडिक उठे ॥2॥
आमुचें तें आहे सहज बोलणें । नाहीं विचारून केलें कोणीं ॥ध्रु.॥
अंगें उणें त्याच्या बैसे टाळक्यांत । तेणें ठिणग्या बहुत गाळीतसे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी काय करणें त्यासी । ढका खवंदासी लागतसे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Lured by fortune, they have abandoned worship and dharma. The mind grows lazy at the thought of a sacred discourse, yet it possesses great expertise in worldly affairs.

One's constant love is for wife and children; one knows not the place of devotion. The kirtan they perform is for the sake of wealth; they dance to the tune of sense-objects at all times.

Says Tuka, O King of Pandhari, such people were born in vain. When the virtue of a faithful wife is praised, a wrinkle of irritation rises on the forehead of the unchaste.

Our speech is simply natural and straightforward; no one has stopped to consider it. The one who is deficient within gets a burning in his skull, and so he throws off sparks.

Says Tuka, what can we do about such people? The kicks land back on the one who kicks.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bribed by fortune, they have left worship and dharma behind. The mind grows lazy at the thought of a sacred discourse, but it has great skill in worldly affairs. Their constant love is for wife and children; they do not know the place of devotion. The kirtan they perform is for the sake of money; they dance always to the tune of the senses. Tuka says: O King of Pandhari, such people were born in vain. When the virtue of a faithful wife is praised, a sharp pang rises in the head of the unchaste woman. Our speech is just plain and straight; no one stops to weigh it. The one who is lacking inside takes it into his own skull, and throws off many sparks. Tuka says: what can we do about such a one? The kick lands back on the one who kicked.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka describes hearts owned by the world and then explains why honest words enrage them. Such people skip worship and dharma, find sacred discourse tiresome but worldly business effortless, love only family, and even turn kirtan into a way to earn money, dancing all day to the senses. He says they were born in vain, then gives the telling image: praise a faithful wife and the unchaste woman feels the sting on her own forehead. His own speech, he insists, is simply plain and straight, aimed at no one in particular; if it burns someone, it is because that person recognizes the lack in himself and reacts with sparks of anger. The closing proverb turns it inward: the kick returns to the kicker, so the offence a listener takes is a measure of his own conscience, not of any malice in the words.

GATHA 4204 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, knowing God past words

मराठी मूळ

आहे ऐसा देव वदवावी वाणी । नाहीं ऐसा मनीं अनुभवावा ॥1॥
आवडी आवडी किळवराकिळवरी । वरिली अंतरी ताळी पडे ॥ध्रु.॥
अपूर्व दर्शन मातेपुत्रा भेटी । रडूं मागे तुटी हर्षयोगें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एकें कळतें दुसरें । बरियानें बरें आहाचाचें आहाच ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That God exists, let the tongue proclaim. That He does not exist, let the mind experience through direct realization.

Wave upon wave of longing and the cry of devotion arise, and when the inner being is satisfied, realization dawns. The rare meeting of mother and child brings tears that follow the burst of joy.

Says Tuka, one thing is understood, then another reveals itself. The good within the good is simply as it is.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That God exists, let the tongue say it. That He is not a mere thing, let the mind taste in direct experience. Wave on wave of longing rises, love calling to love, and when the inner being is filled, the chord falls into place. Like the rare meeting of mother and child, the tears come after the burst of joy. Tuka says: one thing is understood, and then the next reveals itself. The real is truly real; the shallow stays shallow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka marks the line between saying God and tasting God. The tongue can declare that God exists, but the proof he wants is not a statement; it is direct realization in the mind, where what looked like nothing turns out to be everything. He describes how it comes: longing breaks over the heart in waves, love answering love, until the inner being is satisfied and everything tunes into harmony, like the overwhelming reunion of mother and child where the weeping follows the joy. Realization, he says, is progressive: grasp one thing and the next opens of itself. The closing line is a touchstone, what is genuinely real proves itself real, while the merely shallow shows up as shallow, so the only test is to taste it.

GATHA 4205

Prayers

Prayer, the Name above every gift

मराठी मूळ

हे चि माझे चित्तीं । राहो भावप्रीति । विठ्ठल सुषुप्ती। जागृति स्वप्नासी ॥1॥
आणिक नाहीं तुज मागणें । राज्यचाड संपित्त धन । जिव्हे सुख तेणें । घेतां देहीं नाम तुझें॥ध्रु॥
तुझें रूप सर्वाठायीं । देखें ऐसें प्रेम देई । न ठेवावा ठायीं । अनुभव चित्ताचा ॥2॥
जन्ममरणाचा बाध । समुळूनि तुटे कंद । लागो हा चि छंद। हरि गोविंद वाचेसी ॥3॥
काय पालटे दरुषणें । अवघें कोंदाटे चैतन्य । जीवशिवा खंडण । होय ते रे चिंतितां ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे या चि भावें । आह्मीं धालों तुझ्या नामें । सुखें होत जन्म । भलते याती भलतैसीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May this love and devotion for Vitthal remain in my chitta in waking, dreaming, and deep sleep. I ask You for nothing else: no kingdom, no wealth, no possessions.

The tongue finds its joy in taking Your name while in this body. Let me see Your form everywhere; grant me such love.

Let the mind's experience not be kept in one place but pervade all. May the root of birth and death be completely severed.

May this one passion cling to the tongue: Hari, Govinda. What is transformed by Your sight? All is flooded with pure consciousness.

The boundary between jiva and God is shattered in that contemplation. Says Tuka, with this very devotion we are sated by Your name. Let births come happily, in any caste, in any form.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let only this stay in my heart: love and devotion. Vitthal in deep sleep, in waking, in dream. I ask You for nothing else: no craving for kingdom, no wealth, no possessions. The tongue's whole joy is taking Your name while I live in this body. Let me see Your form everywhere; grant me such love. Do not keep the mind's experience fixed in one place; let it spread through all. Let the root of birth and death be cut clean away. Let this one passion cling to my tongue: Hari, Govinda. What changes at Your sight? Everything is flooded with pure consciousness. The wall between jiva and God is shattered in that contemplation. Tuka says: with this very devotion we are filled full by Your name. Let births come gladly, in any caste, in any form.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer that refuses every prize except love of God. Tuka asks that devotion to Vitthal hold his heart through all three states, waking, dream, and deep sleep, and explicitly waves away kingdom, wealth, and possessions. What he wants instead is the Name on his tongue while he lives, the sight of God's form everywhere, and a realization that does not stay penned in one place but pervades everything. The stakes he names are the deepest ones: the very root of birth and death cut away, and the boundary between the individual soul and God shattered in contemplation, so that all is seen as one pure consciousness. So complete is this that he no longer fears rebirth; if births must come, let them come gladly, in any caste or form, because the Name has already made him full.

GATHA 4206

Longing and Separation

Longing, breaking God's silence

मराठी मूळ

मौन कां धरिलें विश्वाच्या जीवना । उत्तर वचना देई माझ्या ॥1॥
तूं माझें संचित तूं चि पूर्वपुण्य । तूं माझें प्राचीन पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
तूं माझें सत्कर्म तूं माझा स्वधर्म । तूं चि नित्यनेम नारायणा ॥2॥
कृपावचनाची वाट पाहातसें । करुणा वोरसें बोल कांहीं ॥3॥
तुका म्हणे प्रेमळाच्या प्रियोत्तमा । बोल सर्वोत्तमा मजसवें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have You fallen silent, O Life of the universe? Answer my words. You are my destiny, You are my past merit, You are my ancient inheritance, O Panduranga.

You are my righteous action, You are my own dharma, You are my daily practice, O Narayana. I watch for a word of grace from You.

Speak something, overflowing with compassion. Says Tuka, O Beloved of the loving, O Supreme One, speak with me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have You gone silent, O Life of the universe? Answer my words. You are my stored merit, You are my old good deeds, You are my ancient inheritance, O Panduranga. You are my good works, You are my own dharma, You are my daily practice, O Narayana. I am watching for a word of grace from You. Overflow with mercy; say something. Tuka says: O Beloved of those who love, O Highest of all, speak with me.

WHAT IT MEANS

The whole abhanga is one cry against God's silence. Tuka, the Life of the universe, has gone quiet, and Tuka pleads for a single word in answer. He then lays everything he has at God's feet: his merit, his past good deeds, his inheritance, his righteous works, his dharma, his daily discipline, all of it is not his own doing but Panduranga himself. Having no other ground to stand on, he simply waits, watching for one word of grace, asking God to overflow with compassion and speak. The longing is total because he has handed God his entire spiritual account and now needs only the reply.

GATHA 4207 Autobiography

Boldness, wrestling the Almighty in prayer

मराठी मूळ

काय करूं आतां धरुनियां भीड । निःशंक हें तोंड वाजविलें ॥1॥
नव्हे जगीं कोणी मुकियाचा जाण । सार्थक लाजोनी नव्हे हित ॥ध्रु.॥
आलें तें उत्तर बोलें स्वामीसवें । धीट नीट जीवें होऊनियां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मना समर्थासीं गांठी । घालावी हे मांडी थापटूनि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What shall I do now, holding back out of shyness? I have opened my mouth without reservation. No one in this world recognizes the mute; remaining silent out of shame brings no good.

Whatever answer came, I spoke it to my Lord, boldly and straightforwardly. Says Tuka, O mind, when you have the chance to meet the Capable One, slap your thigh and wrestle Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What shall I do now, holding back out of shyness? I have opened my mouth without fear. No one in this world takes notice of the silent man; staying quiet out of shame brings no good. Whatever answer came to me, I spoke it to my Lord, plainly and boldly, putting my life into it. Tuka says: O my mind, when you get a chance to grapple with the Almighty, slap your thigh and close in.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka turns prayer into a wrestling match and argues against timidity before God. He asks why he should hold back out of shyness, and answers that the world ignores the man who stays mute; silence kept out of shame wins nothing. So he speaks his whole heart to his Lord, boldly and straight, staking his life on it rather than swallowing his words. The closing image is the bold one: he tells his own mind that when it gets the rare chance to take hold of the Almighty, it should slap its thigh like a wrestler entering the ring and grapple. Reverence, here, does not mean keeping a fearful distance; it means coming close enough to contend.

GATHA 4208 Longing and Separation

Longing, the child crying for the breast

मराठी मूळ

माझिया तो जीवें घेतला हा सोस । पाहें तुझी वास भेटावया ॥1॥
मातेविण बाळ न मनी आणिका । सर्वकाळ धोका स्तनपाना ॥ध्रु.॥
वोसंगा निघाल्या वांचूनि न राहे । त्याचें आर्त माय पुरवीते ॥2॥
तुका म्हणे माते भक्तां तूं कृपाळ । गिळियेले जाळ वनांतरीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My jiva has taken up this longing to meet You; I watch and wait for You. A child does not accept anyone other than its mother; its only anxiety is for the breast.

Until it is taken into her lap, it will not rest; the mother fulfills its every cry. Says Tuka, O Mother, You are compassionate to Your devotees. You swallowed the forest fire for their sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My whole soul has taken up this longing: I watch and wait to meet You. A child wants no one but its mother; its only worry, all day long, is the breast. It will not rest until it is taken into her lap, and the mother answers its every cry. Tuka says: O Mother, You are merciful to Your devotees. You swallowed the forest fire to save them.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka prays to God as Mother and makes himself the nursing child. His whole being has fixed on one longing, to meet God, the way an infant accepts no substitute for its mother and frets all day for nothing but the breast. The child will not be quieted until it is gathered into her lap, and a true mother meets every cry; so Tuka asks the same nearness and the same response from God. He grounds his trust in the divine record of rescue, recalling that this Mother once swallowed the forest fire to save the cowherds and cattle, the deed of Krishna at Vrindavan. The plea is simple: be to me what a mother is to her child, and you have already proved you will.

GATHA 4209 Krishna Leela

Praise, Krishna swallows the forest fire

मराठी मूळ

ते काय पवाडे नाहीं म्यां ऐकिले । गोपाळ रिक्षले वनांतरीं ॥1॥
मावेचा वोणवा होऊनि राक्षस । लागला वनास चहूंकडे ॥ध्रु.॥
गगनासी ज्वाळा लागती तुंबळ । गोधनें गोपाळ वेडावलीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तेथें पळावया वाट । नाहीं वा निपट ऐसें जालें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Have I not heard those tales of valor? The cowherds were rescued in the forest. A demon took the form of a wildfire and set the forest ablaze on all sides.

Flames leapt up to the sky in towering pillars; the cattle and cowherds were bewildered. Says Tuka, there was absolutely no way to flee. That is how dire the situation had become.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Have I not heard those tales of His power? The cowherds were saved in the forest. A demon turned into a wildfire and set the forest blazing on every side. Towering flames rose to the sky; the cattle and the cowherds were lost in fear. Tuka says: there was no way at all to flee. That is how desperate it had become.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tuka recalls one of Krishna's deeds as the cowherd of Vrindavan to prove the reach of his power. He has heard the tale, he says, of how the gopas were rescued in the forest when a demon took the form of a wildfire and ringed the woods in flame. He sets the scene at its worst: pillars of fire reaching the sky, the cattle and cowherds dazed with terror, and absolutely no path of escape left. By stopping at the moment of total helplessness, he sharpens the point left implicit: when no human escape remained, deliverance came only from Krishna. The remembered miracle becomes ground for trust that the same Lord saves those who have no other way out.

GATHA 4210 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the cowherds' cry for rescue

मराठी मूळ

धडकला अग्न आह्मा येती वरी । गोपाळ श्रीहरी विनविती ॥1॥
अरे कृष्णा काय विचार करावा । आला रे वोणवा जळों आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
अरे कृष्णा तुझें नाम बिळवंत । होय कृपावंत राख आतां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अरे कृष्णा नारायणा । गोपाळ करुणा भाकितिले ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fire raged and flames rose overhead. The cowherds pleaded with Shrihari.

O Krishna, what is to be done? The wildfire has come to burn us. O Krishna, Your name is mighty; be compassionate and protect us now.

Says Tuka, O Krishna, O Narayana, the cowherds cried out to You in anguish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The fire has caught. Its flames leap up overhead. The cowherds plead with Shrihari. O Krishna, what should we do? The wildfire has come; we will burn now. O Krishna, your name is mighty. Be kind. Protect us now. Tuka says: O Krishna, O Narayana, the cowherds cried out to you in their anguish.

WHAT IT MEANS

This opens a sequence on the forest fire that surrounds Krishna and the cowherds. The danger is plain and immediate: the flames are already overhead and the boys know they will die. They do not look for water or a way to run; they turn to Krishna himself and to the power they trust in his name. The poem fixes the whole weight of the moment on that one appeal, calling for kindness and rescue right now. Tuka closes by naming what is really happening: this is a cry of anguish flung at God, not a plan.

GATHA 4211 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, reminding the Lord of his deeds

मराठी मूळ

अरे कृष्णा आह्मी तुझे निज गडी । नवनीत आवडी देत होतों ॥1॥
अरे कृष्णा आतां राखेंराखें कैसें तरीं । संकटाभीतरीं पडियेलों ॥ध्रु.॥
वरुषला इंद्र जेव्हां शिळाधारीं । गोवर्धन गिरी उचलिला ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे पवाडे गोपाळ । वणिनती सकळ नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Krishna, we are Your true companions. We used to offer You fresh butter with love.

O Krishna, save us now somehow; we have fallen into grave danger. When Indra unleashed his deluge, You lifted the Govardhana mountain on Your fingertip.

Says Tuka, the cowherds recount all Your heroic deeds before You, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Krishna, we are your own playmates. We used to give you fresh butter, and gladly. O Krishna, save us now somehow; we have fallen into a great danger. When Indra poured down rain in sheets, you lifted up the Govardhana mountain. Tuka says: the cowherds recount all your great deeds before you, O Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cowherds press their case by reminding Krishna who they are to him and what he has already done. They name their nearness, the playmates who fed him butter with love, and then his own past rescue, the lifting of Govardhana when Indra's storm threatened them. The logic is intimate, not theological: you saved us before, you are ours, save us again. Tuka points out that they are reciting his heroic deeds back to him, holding up his own record as their plea.

GATHA 4212 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the rescuer's record recited

मराठी मूळ

अरे कृष्णा तुवां काळया नाथिला । दाढे रगडिला रिठासुर ॥1॥
अरे कृष्णा तुवां पुतना शोषिली । दुर्बुद्धि कळली अंतरींची ॥ध्रु.॥
गोपाळ करुणा ऐसी नानापरी । भाकिती श्रीहरी तुजपुढें ॥2॥
तुझें नाम कामधेनु करुणेची । तुका ह्मणे त्यांची आली कृपा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Krishna, You subdued the serpent Kaliya. You crushed the demon Rishtasura in Your jaws.

O Krishna, You destroyed Putana, discerning her wicked intent. The cowherds plead in many such ways before You, O Shrihari.

Your name is the wish-fulfilling cow of compassion. Says Tuka, His grace descended upon them.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Krishna, you mastered the serpent Kaliya. You crushed the demon Rishtasura in your jaws. O Krishna, you dried up Putana, for you saw the wickedness hidden in her heart. In many such ways the cowherds plead before you, O Shrihari. Your name is the wish-granting cow of mercy. Tuka says: his grace came down upon them.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cowherds keep listing the times Krishna struck down what came to harm: the serpent, the demon, the murderous nurse whose hidden intent he saw through. Each memory says the same thing in a new way, that he has always destroyed the threat and protected his own. The poem then turns the recital into a claim about his name itself, calling it the wish-granting cow of mercy, the source that answers every need. Tuka closes by saying the plea worked: grace descended on them.

GATHA 4213 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the small child takes the terrible form

मराठी मूळ

चहुंकडूनियां येती ते कलोळ । सभोंवते जाळ जविळ आले ॥1॥
सकुमार मूतिन श्रीकृष्ण धाकुटी । घोंगडी आणि काठी खांद्यावरि ॥ध्रु.॥
लहान लेंकरुं होत ते सगुण । विक्राळ वदन पसरिलें ॥2॥
चाभाड तें एक गगनीं लागलें । एक तें ठेविलें भूमीवरि ॥3॥
तये वेळे अवघे गोपाळ ही भ्याले । तुकें ही लपालें भेऊनियां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

From all four sides the fiery waves advanced; the ring of flame drew close. There stood the delicate form of little Krishna, with a blanket and a staff upon His shoulder.

That small child took on His divine form and opened His terrible, vast mouth. One jaw reached to the sky and the other rested on the earth.

At that moment, all the cowherds were terrified. Says Tuka, even I hid myself in fear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From all four sides the waves of fire come on. The ring of flame draws near. There stands the delicate little Krishna, a blanket and a staff on his shoulder. That small child took on his divine form and opened his terrible, vast mouth. One jaw reached the sky; the other rested on the earth. At that moment all the cowherds were afraid. Tuka says: even I hid myself in fear.

WHAT IT MEANS

The rescue does not come as comfort but as terror. The fire closes in from every side, and the same little boy with his blanket and staff suddenly opens into a form whose mouth spans heaven and earth. The poem holds both pictures at once, the tender child and the engulfing immensity, so the reader feels how the saving power is itself overwhelming. Tuka places himself inside the scene, hiding with the frightened cowherds, refusing to stand at a safe distance and admire. The point is that meeting God's full reality is not soothing; it shakes you.

GATHA 4214 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the mouth swallows the fire

मराठी मूळ

श्रीमुख वोणवा गिळीत चालिलें । भ्यासुर वासिलें वदनांबुज ॥1॥
विक्राळ त्या दाढा भ्यानें पाहावेना । धाउनी रसना ज्वाळ गिळी ॥ध्रु.॥
जिव्हा लांब धांवे गोळा करी ज्वाळ । मोटें मुखकमळ त्यांत घाली ॥ 2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघा वोणवा गिळला। आनंद जाहाला गोपाळांसी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The divine mouth advanced, swallowing the wildfire as it went. Fearsome and gaping was that lotus-face.

His terrible jaws were too dreadful to behold. His tongue raced out and gathered the flames in a mass, drawing them into that vast mouth.

Says Tuka, He swallowed the entire wildfire, and the cowherds were filled with joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The holy mouth moved forward, swallowing the wildfire as it went. That lotus-face gaped, fearsome. The terrible jaws were too dreadful to look at. His tongue raced out and swept the flames into a mass. The great lotus-mouth took them all in. Tuka says: he swallowed the whole wildfire, and the cowherds were filled with joy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the rescue is carried out in front of them. The vast mouth advances on the fire and the tongue gathers the flames like a heap and draws them in, until nothing of the wildfire is left. The poem keeps the image fearsome on purpose: the same gaping form that frightened them is what saves them. Tuka ends on the swing from dread to joy, the cowherds' relief once the danger is simply gone, swallowed whole.

GATHA 4215 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, please be small again

मराठी मूळ

गोपाळ प्रीतीनें कैसे विनविती । विक्राळ श्रीपती होऊं नको ॥1॥
नको रे बा कृष्णा धरुं ऐसें रूप । आह्मां चळकांप सुटलासे ॥ध्रु.॥
होई बा धाकुटा शाम चतुर्भूज । बैसोनियां गुज सुखें बोलों ॥2॥
वोणव्याच्या रागें गिळशील आह्मां । तुका मेघशामा पायां लागे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The cowherds lovingly implored Him: Do not take this fearsome form, O Lord. Please, dear Krishna, do not hold such a shape; we are trembling all over.

Become small again, our dark four-armed friend, so we may sit together and talk in comfort. In Your fury against the fire, You might swallow us too.

Says Tuka, O dark-clouded Lord, I fall at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cowherds lovingly plead with him: Do not stay this fearsome shape, O Lord. Please, dear Krishna, do not hold such a form; we are trembling all over. Become the little dark four-armed one again, so we may sit together and talk happily. In your anger at the fire, you might swallow us too. Tuka says: O dark-clouded Lord, I fall at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Now that the fire is gone, the cowherds want their friend back, not the engulfing immensity. Their love asks for nearness over majesty: come down to our size so we can sit and talk again. They even confess a fear that his fury, having swallowed the fire, might not stop at the fire and could swallow them. The prayer is tender and a little frightened at once. Tuka joins their plea, falling at the feet of the dark-clouded Lord, asking for the approachable face of God rather than the overwhelming one.

GATHA 4216 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the child returns, the boys wonder

मराठी मूळ

सांडियेलें रूप विक्राळ भ्यासुर । झालें सकुमार कोडिसवाणें ॥1॥
शाम चतुर्भुज मुकुट कुंडलें । सुंदर दंडलें नव बाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
गोपाळ ह्मणती कैसें रे बा कृष्णा । रूप नारायणा धरियेलें ॥2॥
कैसा वाढलासी विक्राळ जालासी । गटगटा ज्वाळांसी गिळियेलें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें पुसती गोपाळ । अनाथवत्सल ह्मणोनियां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He set aside that fearsome, terrible form and became tender and beautiful once more. Dark, four-armed, with crown and earrings, a lovely new child, adorned and gentle.

The cowherds said, What was that, dear Krishna? What form did You assume, O Narayana? How You grew and became so enormous, gulping down the flames in great swallows. Says Tuka, the cowherds ask with innocent devotion, for He is the tender guardian of the helpless.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He let go of that fearsome, terrible form and became tender and lovely again. Dark, four-armed, with crown and earrings, a beautiful new child, gentle and adorned. The cowherds say: What was that, dear Krishna? What form did you take, O Narayana? How you grew, how terrible you became, gulping down the flames in great swallows. Tuka says: the cowherds ask with simple devotion, for he is the tender guardian of the helpless.

WHAT IT MEANS

Krishna grants the request and shrinks back into the gentle child, crowned and beautiful. But the boys cannot let the wonder go; they keep asking what they just saw, how their small friend swelled into something that swallowed fire. Their questions are not doubt but artless devotion, the awe of people who love him and have just glimpsed what he really is. Tuka names the reason he answers them at all: he is the tender guardian of the helpless, who lets the small and bewildered come close and ask.

GATHA 4217 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, is your soft mouth burned

मराठी मूळ

बा रे कृष्णा तुझें मुख कीं कोमळ । कैसे येवढे ज्वाळ ग्रासियेले ॥1॥
बा रे कृष्णा तुझी जिव्हा कीं कोवळी । होईल पोळली नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसें कृष्णा तुझें पाहूं मुखकमळ । असेल पोळलें कोणे ठायीं ॥2॥
घोंगडिया घालीं घालूनियां तळीं। वरी वनमाळी बैसविती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भावें आकिळला देव । कृपासिंधुराव त्रैलोक्याचा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dear Krishna, Your mouth is so soft. How did You swallow such mighty flames? Dear Krishna, Your tongue is so tender; surely it must be burned, O Narayana.

Sit down, Krishna; let us look at Your face. Is it scorched anywhere? They spread a blanket on the ground and seat Vanamali upon it.

Says Tuka, their devotion overwhelmed God, that ocean of mercy, Lord of the three worlds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dear Krishna, your mouth is so soft. How did you swallow such mighty flames? Dear Krishna, your tongue is so tender; surely it has been burned, O Narayana. Sit down, Krishna; let us look at your lotus-face. Has it been scorched anywhere? They spread a blanket on the ground and seat Vanamali on it. Tuka says: their devotion overcame God, that ocean of mercy, Lord of the three worlds.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cowherds' awe turns into tenderness for his body. They worry that the soft mouth and tender tongue that swallowed the fire must have been burned, and they sit him down to check his face for scorch marks. They treat the Lord of the three worlds as a child they must care for. The poem shows love reaching up and pulling God down into being looked after. Tuka says this devotion overcame him: the ocean of mercy lets himself be held and fussed over by those who love him.

GATHA 4218 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the sky inside his mouth

मराठी मूळ

एक ह्मणती मुख वासीं नारायणा । पाहों दे वदना डोळेभरि ॥1॥
वासुनियां मुख पहाती सकळ । अवघे गोपाळ व्योमाकार ॥ध्रु.॥
ह्मणती गोपाळ बेटे हो हा देव । स्वरूपाचा ठाव न कळे याच्या ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघे विठोबाभोंवते । मिळाले नेणते लहानथोर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One cowherd says, Open Your mouth, O Narayana; let us gaze upon Your face to their full satisfaction. He opens His mouth and they all look in: every cowherd sees the vast expanse of the sky within.

They say, This boy is really God in disguise. The depths of His true nature cannot be fathomed.

Says Tuka, they all gathered around Vithoba, young and old, not understanding at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One says: Open your mouth, O Narayana; let us look our fill at your face. He opens his mouth and they all look in, and every cowherd sees the whole expanse of the sky inside. They say: This boy is really God in disguise. We cannot reach the bottom of who he is. Tuka says: they all gathered round Vithoba, young and old, not understanding at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

When he opens his mouth at their asking, they see the entire sky within it, the whole universe inside the child. That sight tells them plainly what their friend is: God hidden in a boy, with a depth they cannot fathom. The poem lets the realization arrive through looking, not through being told. Tuka ends gently on the gap that remains, the crowd of young and old pressed around Vithoba, near to him and loving him, and still not understanding what they are near.

GATHA 4219 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the fortunate ones and the rest of us

मराठी मूळ

एक ह्मणती कृष्णा वासिलें त्वां मुख । तेव्हां थोर धाक पडिला आह्मां ॥1॥
गिळों लागलासी अग्नीचे कल्लोळ । आह्मी चळचळां कांपतसों ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्वाळांबरोबरि गिळशील आह्मां। ऐसें मेघशामा भय वाटे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे भाग्याचे गोपाळ । फुटकें कपाळ आमुचें चि ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One cowherd says, Krishna, when You opened Your mouth, a great terror fell upon us. As You began swallowing the torrents of flame, we were trembling all over.

We feared that along with the flames, You would swallow us too, O dark-clouded Lord. Says Tuka, how fortunate were those cowherds. The cracked forehead is only ours.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One says: Krishna, when you opened your mouth, a great fear fell on us. As you began swallowing the torrents of flame, we trembled and shook. We feared that along with the flames you would swallow us too, O dark-clouded Lord. Tuka says: how fortunate those cowherds were. The cracked forehead is only ours.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cowherds confess the terror they felt even while being saved, the fear that the swallowing might not spare them. Then Tuka turns the whole scene back on himself and on us. Those boys stood beside Krishna and saw him with their own eyes; their luck was complete. The cracked, unlucky forehead, he says, belongs to us who came too late and did not see. It is a sharp claim against his own fortune, naming the ache of the devotee who longs for a nearness the lila already gave to others.

GATHA 4220 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the Lord names what he is

मराठी मूळ

गोपाळांचें कैसें केलें समाधान । देउनि आलिंगन निवविले ॥1॥
ज्वाळाबरोबरि तुह्मां कां ग्रासीन । अवतार घेणें तुह्मांसाटीं ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्गुण निर्भय मी सर्वांनिराळा । प्रकृतिवेगळा गुणातीत ॥2॥
चिन्मय चिद्रूप अवघें चिदाकार । तुका ह्मणे पार नेणे ब्रह्मा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How He consoled the cowherds, giving them His embrace and comforting them. Why would I swallow you along with the flames? It is for your sake alone that I took birth.

I am without qualities, without fear, separate from all, beyond nature, beyond the three gunas. I am pure consciousness, pure awareness, all of the form of consciousness.

Says Tuka, even Brahma cannot fathom My depths.

IN PLAIN WORDS

See how he comforted the cowherds, giving them his embrace and quieting them. Why would I swallow you along with the flames? I took birth for your sake alone. I am without qualities, without fear, apart from everything, beyond nature, beyond the three gunas. I am all consciousness, all awareness, everything in the form of awareness. Tuka says: even Brahma does not know my limit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Krishna answers their fear with an embrace and then with the truth about himself. To the boys he speaks of love: I would never harm you; I came into this body only for your sake. Then the poem lifts into plain Vedanta from Krishna's own mouth: he is beyond qualities, beyond fear, beyond nature and the three gunas, pure consciousness taking every form. The two halves belong together, the tender protector and the formless absolute are one. Tuka seals it by saying even Brahma cannot measure that depth.

GATHA 4221 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the promise and the closed eyes

मराठी मूळ

ऐसा मी अपार पार नाहीं अंत । परि कृपावंत भाविकांचा ॥1॥
दुर्जनां चांडाळां करीं निदानळण । करीं संरक्षण अंकितांचें ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्त माझे सखे जिवलग सांगाती । सर्वांग त्यांप्रति वोडवीन ॥2॥
पीतांबरछाया करीन त्यांवरी । सदा त्यांचे घरीं दारी उभा ॥3॥
माझे भक्त मज सदा जे रातले । त्यांघरीं घेतलें धरणें म्यां ॥4॥
कोठें हें वचन ठेविलें ये वेळे । तुका ह्मणे डोळे झांकियेले ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am boundless, without end or limit, yet I am full of compassion for the faithful. I crush the wicked and protect those who are pledged to Me.

My devotees are My friends, My dear companions. I will extend My whole being to shield them.

I will spread the shade of My yellow garment over them and stand always at their door. My devotees who are always devoted to Me, in their homes I have taken up permanent residence.

Says Tuka, where has that promise gone now? You have simply closed Your eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am boundless; I have no edge, no end. Yet I am full of mercy for the faithful. I destroy the wicked and the cruel. I guard those who are pledged to me. My devotees are my friends, my dear companions; I will hold out my whole body to shield them. I will spread the shade of my yellow garment over them and stand always at their door. My devotees who are always given to me, in their houses I have settled to stay. Tuka says: where have you put that promise now? You have simply shut your eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Krishna lays out his side of the covenant in full: the limitless one binds himself to the faithful, destroying what threatens them and standing guard at their door, even taking up permanent residence in their homes. Then Tuka, in his own voice, turns the long promise into a complaint. If all that was sworn, where is it now; why does God seem absent and unmoved. The closing line, that he has simply closed his eyes, is the cry of a devotee holding the Lord to his own word. The poem does not soften the protest; it sets the grandeur of the promise against the silence the bhakta is feeling, and lets the ache stand.

GATHA 4222 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the wife who rules a slave to lust

मराठी मूळ

भ्रतारेंसी भार्या बोले गुज गोष्टी । मज ऐसी कष्टी नाहीं दुजी ॥1॥
अखंड तुमचें धंद्यावरी मन । माझें तों हेळण करिती सर्व ॥ध्रु.॥
जोडितसां तुह्मी खाती हेरेंचोरें । माझीं तंव पोरें हळहळीती ॥2॥
तुमची व्याली माझे डाई हो पेटली । सदा दुष्ट बोली सोसवेना ॥3॥
दुष्टबुति नंदुली सदा द्वेष करी । नांदों मी संसारीं कोण्या सुखें ॥4॥
भावा दीर कांहीं धड हा न बोले । नांदों कोणां खालें कैसी आतां ॥5॥
माझ्या अंगसंगें तुह्मांसी विश्रांति । मग धडगति नाहीं तुमची ॥6॥
ठाकतें उमकतें जीव मुठी धरूनि। परि तुह्मी अजूनि न धरा लाज ॥7॥
वेगळे निघतां संसार करीन । नाहीं तरी प्राण देतें आतां ॥8॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला कामाचा अंकित। सांगे मनोगत तैसा वर्ते ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A wife speaks intimately to her husband: there is no one as miserable as I. Your mind is always absorbed in business; everyone neglects me.

You earn, but thieves and pilferers consume it, while my children go hungry. Your mother, that demon, has turned against me; her harsh words are unbearable.

My wicked sister-in-law harbors constant malice; in what happiness shall I continue in this household? The brother-in-law speaks nothing straight. Under whose shelter shall I now live? Only in your embrace do I find rest, but then you lose all sense of propriety.

I hold my breath and clench my fists in anguish, yet even now you show no shame. Let us separate and set up our own home, or else I will end my life right now.

Says Tuka, one who has become a slave to desire speaks his mind and acts accordingly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A wife speaks close to her husband, telling her woes. There is no one as wretched as I am. Your mind is always on your business. Everyone here treats me as nothing. You earn, and thieves and pilferers eat it up, while my children go hungry. Your mother, that demon, has turned on me; I cannot bear her cruel words. My wicked sister-in-law hates me without end. In what happiness am I to live in this house? The brother-in-law never says one straight word. Under whose shelter am I now to stay? Only in my arms do you find rest; after that you keep no sense of shame. I hold my breath and clench my fists in pain, and still you feel no shame. Set up a separate home, and I will keep house. If not, I will give up my life right now. Tuka says: a man who has become the servant of lust speaks her mind and acts just as she wishes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stages a marital quarrel to expose what desire does to a man. The wife pours out grievance after grievance against his family and then issues the demand: break from your parents and siblings, set up a separate house for me alone, or I will die. The point lands in the signature line: the husband, enslaved to lust, has no mind of his own; he simply echoes whatever she wants and obeys. Examine the pattern, not the woman: when craving rules, a person surrenders their own judgment and is led wherever the desire points. The household here is the inner life that craving tears apart.

GATHA 4223 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the husband led like a donkey by craving

मराठी मूळ

कामाचा अंकित कांतेतें प्राथिनत । तूं कां हो दुिश्चत्त निरंतर ॥1॥
माझीं मायबापें बंधु हो बहिण । तुज करी सीण त्यागीन मी ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यांचें जरि तोंड पाहेन मागुता । तरि मज हत्या घडो तुझी ॥2॥
सकाळ उठोन वेगळा निघेन । वाहातों तुझी आण निश्चयेंसी ॥3॥
वेगळें निघतां घडीन दोरे चुडा । तूं तंव माझा जोडा जन्माचा कीं ॥4॥
ताईत सांकळी गळांचि दुलडी । बाजुबंदजोडी हातसर ॥5॥
वेणीचे जे नग सर्व ही करीन । नको धरुं सीण मनीं कांहीं ॥6॥
नेसावया साडी सेलारी चुनडी । अंगींची कांचोळी जिाळया फुलें ॥7॥
तुका ह्मणे केला रांडेनें गाढव । मनासवें धांव घेतलीसे ॥8॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Enslaved by desire, the husband pleads with his wife: why are you always so unhappy? My parents, brothers, and sisters, I will abandon all of them if they cause you grief. If I ever look upon their faces again, may the sin of your murder fall upon me.

Tomorrow morning I will move out on my own. I swear this oath to you with certainty.

When we set up our own home, I will have bangles and a necklace made for you, a gold chain, a pendant, arm-bands, and bracelets. I will have every ornament for your hair made as well.

Do not carry any sorrow in your mind. A silk sari, a fine shawl, a bodice, a net of flowers for your blouse.

Says Tuka, the woman has made a donkey of him, and he runs wherever his mind leads.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man enslaved to lust pleads with his wife. Why are you unhappy all the time? My mother and father, my brothers and sister: if they cause you grief, I will abandon them all. If I ever look on their faces again, may the guilt of your murder fall on me. Tomorrow morning I will move out on my own. I swear this oath to you for certain. Once we set up our own home, I will have bangles and a necklace made for you. You are my partner for this whole life. An amulet, a chain, a double-stranded necklace, a pair of arm-bands, a bracelet. I will have every ornament for your hair made too. Do not carry any sorrow in your mind. A sari to wear, a fine shawl, a bodice, a net of flowers for your blouse. Tuka says: the woman has made a donkey of him, and he runs wherever his mind leads.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the answering half of the quarrel, now from the man's side. To soothe his wife he renounces his own parents and siblings, swears terrible oaths, and promises an endless list of ornaments and fine clothes. Tukaram lets the cascade of bribes run long on purpose, because each gift is one more proof of how completely the man has surrendered. The signature line names it plainly: craving has made him a donkey, dragged along behind his own appetite. Look at the pattern in yourself: when desire takes the reins, a person will throw over every loyalty and promise anything to keep feeding it.

GATHA 4224 Worldly Metaphors

Discernment, the mark of Hari shows the true

मराठी मूळ

उजिळतां उजळे दीपकाची वाती । स्वयंभ ते ज्योति हि†या अंगीं ॥1॥
एकीं महाकष्टें मेळविलें धन । एकासी जतन दैवयोगें ॥ध्रु.॥
परिमळें केलें चंदनाचे चिन्ह । निवडी ते भिन्न गाढव तो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जया अंगीं हरिठसा । तो तरे सहसा वंद्य होय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Trimming a lamp's wick makes it burn brighter, for the flame is inherently in the wick. One man acquires wealth with great labor, while another has it preserved by destiny.

Sandalwood is identified by its fragrance; the fool who cannot discern it is like a donkey. Says Tuka, one in whom the mark of Hari is stamped crosses over easily and becomes honored.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Trim the wick and the lamp burns brighter; the flame was already there, alive in the wick itself. One man gathers wealth with great toil; another keeps it by his good fortune. Sandalwood is known by its fragrance; only a donkey cannot tell it apart. Tuka says: the one who carries the mark of Hari on him crosses over easily and is honored everywhere.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching how the genuine reveals itself and why some recognize it and some do not. The lamp's flame is not added from outside; trimming the wick only lets what is already there shine, just as discipline uncovers the light already in a person. Sandalwood announces itself by its scent; anyone who cannot tell it from ordinary wood is a fool. The whole point rests on the last line: a person stamped with the mark of Hari, the living presence of God, crosses the ocean of birth easily and is honored on his own. The fragrance is real devotion, and it cannot be faked.

GATHA 4225 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, reckoning a wasted life

मराठी मूळ

बारावषॉ बाळपण । तें ही वेचलें अज्ञानें ॥1॥
ऐसा जन्म गेला वांयां । न भजतां पंढरिराया ॥ध्रु.॥
बाकी उरलीं आठएाशीं। तीस वेचलीं कामासी ॥2॥
बाकी उरलीं आठावन्न । तीस वेचली ममतेनें ॥3॥
बाकी उरलीं आठावीस । देहगेह विसरलास ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा झाडा । संसार हा आहे थोडा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Twelve years of childhood are spent in ignorance. Thus life has gone to waste without worshipping the Lord of Pandhari.

Of the remaining eighty-eight years, thirty were spent in the pursuit of desire. Of the remaining fifty-eight, thirty were consumed by attachment.

Of the remaining twenty-eight, you forgot even your own body and home. Says Tuka, do the reckoning: this span of worldly life is very brief.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Twelve years of childhood, and those went in ignorance. So this birth has gone to waste, never worshipping the King of Pandhari. Of eighty-eight years left, thirty went to lust and craving. Of fifty-eight left, thirty were eaten by attachment. Of twenty-eight left, you forgot your own body and home. Tuka says: do the accounts. This worldly life is very short.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram does the arithmetic of a life out loud, subtracting year after year to show how little is actually left for God. Childhood goes to ignorance, the prime to lust, the next stretch to attachment, the last to mere maintenance of body and household, and Pandhari, the Lord, never once gets worshipped. By counting down to a small remainder, he forces the listener to feel how brief the span really is. The call is to face the ledger honestly while there is still time, and to spend what remains on the one thing the whole life kept postponing.

GATHA 4226 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only the chosen are truly pure

मराठी मूळ

सोवळा तो जाला । अंगीकार देवें केला ॥1॥
येर करिती भोजन । पोट पोसाया दुर्जन ॥ध्रु.॥
चुकला हा भार । तयाची च येरझार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दास । जाला तया नाहीं नास॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He alone is pure whom God has accepted. All others merely eat to sustain their bellies, the wretches.

The one who has missed this opportunity keeps going back and forth in vain. Says Tuka, the one who became God's servant never faces destruction.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He alone is pure whom God has taken as His own. The rest only eat to fill their bellies, poor wretches. The one who missed this gift just keeps going back and forth in vain. Tuka says: the one who has become God's servant never comes to ruin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram redefines purity, taking it away from ritual and giving it to God's choosing. The truly clean person is not the one who keeps the outward rules but the one God has accepted; everyone else, however busy, is merely feeding a body and going nowhere. Whoever lets that one chance slip is trapped in the round of birth and death, coming and going to no purpose. The blessing falls on the servant of God, who alone is beyond destruction. The point of self-examination: am I living to fill the belly, or have I given myself to be His?

GATHA 4227 Confession and Sin

Confession, anger is the only defilement

मराठी मूळ

आजि शिवला मांग । माझें विटाळलें आंग ॥1॥
यासी घेऊं प्रायिश्चत्त । विठ्ठलविठ्ठल हृदयांत ॥ध्रु.॥
जाली क्रोधासी भेटी । तोंडावाटे नर्क लोटी ॥2॥
अनुतापीं न्हाऊं । तुका ह्मणे रवी पाहूं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Today one I was taught to shun has touched me; my body has been defiled. For this I shall take atonement by chanting Vitthal, Vitthal from the heart.

I met with anger today, and through my mouth it poured forth hellish filth. Says Tuka, let me bathe in remorse and then look upon the sun.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today an outcaste touched me; my body has been defiled. For this I will take my atonement: Vitthal, Vitthal in the heart. Today I met with anger, and my mouth poured out filth like hell. Tuka says: let me bathe in remorse, then look upon the sun.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram seizes the language of ritual pollution and turns it inward against himself. The real defilement, he says, was not a person's touch but his own anger, which poured hellish filth out of his mouth. So the cleansing he prescribes is not a ritual bath but the name of Vitthal held in the heart and a sincere bath in remorse, after which he can again face the light. The poem rebukes the whole logic of caste pollution: blaming another for defiling you is itself the impurity. Watch your own anger, not your neighbor's touch.

GATHA 4228 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, safe at rest beside the Lord

मराठी मूळ

ठाव तुह्मांपाशीं । जाला आतां हृषीकेशी ॥1॥
न लगे जागावें सतत । येथें स्वभावें हे नीत ॥ध्रु.॥
चोरटएासी थारा। येथें कैंचा जी दातारा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मनें । आह्मां जालें समाधान॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A place has been found beside You now, O Hrishikesha. There is no need to keep constant guard; this is the natural order here.

Where can a thief find shelter in such a place, O generous Lord? Says Tuka, our minds have found their peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A place beside you has become mine now, Hrishikesha. There is no need to keep watch all the time; here this is simply the nature of things. What shelter could a thief ever find in this place, O giver? Tuka says: in our mind we have found peace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the rest of one who has found his place beside God. Once he is settled close to Hrishikesha, the Lord of the senses, he no longer has to stand guard, because safety is built into that place itself. No thief, no enemy of the soul, can find a foothold near the giver of all. The result is the line that closes it: the mind has found its peace. He is naming the security that comes only from nearness to God, where vigilance gives way to trust.

GATHA 4229 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the child's whims indulged by grace

मराठी मूळ

पिाळयेले लळे । माझे विठ्ठले कृपाळे ॥1॥
बहुजन्माचें पोषणें । सरतें पायांपाशीं तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
सवे दिली लागों । भातें आवडीचें मागों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भिन्न । नाहीं दिसों दिलें क्षण॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My loving whims have been indulged by the gracious Vitthal. The nurturing of many births has come to fulfillment at His feet.

He has allowed me to follow Him and ask for the food of my chitta's desire. Says Tuka, He has not let me feel separate from Him for even a moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My little whims have been indulged by my merciful Vitthal. The care carried across many births reaches its end here at His feet. He let me come close and follow Him, and ask for the food I love. Tuka says: not for a moment has He let me feel apart from Him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a beloved child whose every small wish the gracious Vitthal has granted. The nurturing of many lifetimes, all the seeking carried from birth to birth, finally comes to rest at the Lord's feet. God lets him draw near, walk behind Him, and even ask for the very things his heart craves. The closing line holds the whole grace: not for a single moment is he allowed to feel separate from God. This is union spoken in the tender idiom of a child indulged by a loving parent.

GATHA 4230 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari is heaven on earth

मराठी मूळ

जो या गेला पंढरपुरा । आणीक यात्रा न मानी तो॥1॥
सुलभ माय पंढरिराणा । पुरवी खुणा अंतरींच्या ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्मांतरिंच्या पुण्यरासी । वारी त्यासी पंढरी ॥2॥
बाहेर येतां प्राण फुटे । रडें दाटे गहिवरें ॥3॥
दधिमंगळभोजन सारा । ह्मणती करा मुरडींव ॥4॥
मागुता हा पाहों ठाव । पंढरिराव दर्शनें ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे भूवैकुंठ । वाळुवंट भींवरा ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who has been to Pandharpur accepts no other pilgrimage. The gentle Lord of Pandhari fulfills every secret longing.

The accumulated merit of many births draws one to the Pandhari pilgrimage. When it comes time to leave, the soul breaks; sobs of deep emotion well up.

After the farewell meal is finished, they plead, let us turn back once more. Let us behold the Lord of Pandhari one more time through His darshan.

Says Tuka, Pandhari is Vaikuntha on earth, and the sands of the Bhimra are its holy ground.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who has gone to Pandharpur counts no other pilgrimage worth it. The gentle mother, the King of Pandhari, fills the secret longings of the heart. The piled-up merit of many births draws a soul to the Pandhari pilgrimage. When the time comes to leave, the heart breaks; sobs and tears well up. The farewell meal with curds is finished, and they cry, let us turn back. Let us see this place again, the Lord of Pandhari in his darshan. Tuka says: Pandhari is Vaikuntha on earth, and the sands of the Bhima are its holy ground.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exalts the pilgrimage to Pandharpur above every other holy journey. Reaching Vithoba there satisfies the longings a pilgrim cannot even put into words, and only the merit of many lifetimes brings one to that shrine. He dwells on the grief of departure, the breaking heart and welling tears, the pilgrims who have eaten the parting meal yet beg to turn back for one more look at the Lord. The final claim is the boldest: Pandhari is not a road to heaven but Vaikuntha itself set down on earth, with the riverbank sands of the Bhima as sacred ground. Place and presence are one.

GATHA 4231 Worldly Life

Social criticism, flee the quarreling town

मराठी मूळ

न मिळती एका एक । जये नगरीचे लोक ॥1॥
भलीं तेथें राहूं नये । क्षणें होईल न कळे काय ॥ध्रु.॥
न करितां अन्याय । बळें करी अपाय ॥2॥
नाहीं पुराणाची प्रीति । ठायींठायीं पंचाइती ॥3॥
भल्या बु†या मारी । होतां कोणी न निवारी ॥4॥
अविचा†या हातीं । देऊनि प्रजा नागविती ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे दरी । सुखें सेवावी ते बरी ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In a city where people do not get along with one another, a good person should not stay. At any moment, something terrible may happen without warning.

Even without provocation, they resort to violence. There is no love for sacred discourse; only quarreling at every turn.

They beat the good and the gentle, and no one intervenes. The administration is handed to the unprincipled, who oppress the people.

Says Tuka, better to dwell happily in a cave in the wilderness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The people of some town cannot get along with one another. A good person should not stay there. In a moment, who knows what will happen. Even when no wrong is done, they do harm by force. They have no love for the sacred stories; there are disputes at every turn. They beat the good and the gentle, and no one steps in to stop it. Power is handed to the reckless, who strip the people bare. Tuka says: better to live happily in a cave in the wilderness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints a town poisoned by strife and counsels the good to get out. Where people cannot live together, violence erupts without cause, there is no taste for sacred teaching, only endless quarrels, and the gentle are beaten while bystanders do nothing. Worst of all, authority falls to the unprincipled, who plunder those they should protect. His verdict is stark: a cave in the wild, lived in peace, is better than such a place. The poem is a judgment on the company we keep, that an environment ruled by malice and lawless power is no place to seek the good life.

GATHA 4232 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the obstinate heart cannot be taught

मराठी मूळ

शिकवणें नाक झाडी । पुढील जोडी कळेना ॥1॥
निरयगांवीं भोग देता । तेथें सत्ता आणिकांची ॥ध्रु.॥
अवगुणांचा सांटा करी । ते चि धरी जीवासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जडबुद्धि । कर्मशुद्धी सांडवीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You wipe his nose and teach him manners, yet he cannot see the gain that lies ahead. In the realm of hell, others hold the power, not he.

He hoards a store of vices and clings to them with his very life. Says Tuka, his intellect is dull. Make him purify his actions.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You wipe his nose and try to teach him, and still he cannot see the gain that lies ahead. In the town of hell the suffering is dealt out, and there the power is in another's hands. He gathers a hoard of vices and holds onto them with his very life. Tuka says: his mind is dull. Make him purify his deeds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a person too stubborn to learn even when patiently taught. You care for him like a child, yet he cannot grasp the reward that lies ahead, so he piles up faults and clings to them as if they were his life. He forgets that in the realm of suffering the power belongs to others, not to him, and there will be no escaping the account. The remedy Tukaram urges is not contempt but correction: get him to purify his actions. Look at the dullness as a pattern, the heart that hoards its vices and refuses the gain it cannot yet see.

GATHA 4233 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Vaishnava's badge of war

मराठी मूळ

गोपीचंदन मुद्रा धरणें । आह्मां लेणें वैष्णवां ॥1॥
मिरवूं अळंकार लेणें । हीं भूषणें स्वामीचीं ॥ध्रु.॥
विकलों ते सेवाजीवें । एक्या भावें एकविध ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे शूर जालों । बाहेर आलों संसारा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To wear the sandal-paste marks and the sacred seal is our adornment as Vaishnavas. We parade these ornaments and jewels; they are the insignia of our Lord.

We have sold our lives in single-pointed service to Him alone. Says Tuka, I have become a warrior who has emerged victorious from the battlefield of worldly life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To wear the sandal-paste mark and the sacred seal is our adornment, ours as Vaishnavas. We carry these ornaments and jewels; they are the insignia of our Lord. We have sold our very lives into service, with one feeling, single and undivided. Tuka says: I have become a warrior, and I have come out of worldly life victorious.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the outward signs of the devotee into the regalia of a soldier. The sandal-paste marks and the holy seal are not decoration but the insignia of the Lord whose army the Vaishnavas belong to. To wear them is to have sold one's life into single-pointed service, undivided in heart. The closing image names the stakes: worldly life is a battlefield, and the devotee who serves wholly is the warrior who walks off it victorious. Devotion here is not retreat but conquest, the sign worn openly as a banner.

GATHA 4234 Social Criticism

Social criticism, no rank saves you

मराठी मूळ

विषयांचे लोलिंगत । ते फजीत होतील ॥1॥
न सरे येथें यातिकुळ । शुद्ध मूळबीज व्हावें ॥ध्रु.॥
शिखासूत्र सोंग वरि । दुराचारी दंड पावे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे अभिमाना । नारायणा न सोसे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who wallow in sensory pleasures will be put to shame. Caste and lineage will not avail them here; one must become pure from the root.

The outward marks of sacred thread and topknot are mere appearance; the one of corrupt conduct will be punished. Says Tuka, Narayana cannot endure pride.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who wallow in the pleasures of the senses will be put to shame. Caste and lineage will not help you here. You must become pure from the root. The sacred thread and the topknot are only an outward costume. The one whose conduct is corrupt is punished. Tuka says: Narayana cannot bear pride.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away every credential a person hides behind. Birth, caste, and family line carry no weight in the matter that counts; what is asked for is purity at the root, not on the surface. The sacred thread and topknot, the visible badges of religious status, are called a costume: they decorate the outside while the conduct beneath stays rotten, and that conduct is what gets punished. The poem ends on the deepest cause: Narayana cannot endure pride. The whole apparatus of rank is itself the pride that God will not abide, so the warning turns the listener inward to examine what they are actually leaning on.

GATHA 4235 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the stolen gift of land

मराठी मूळ

वडिलें दिलें भूमिदान । तें जो मागे अभिळासून ॥1॥
अग्रपूजेचा अधिकारी । श्रेष्ठ दंड यमा घरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
उभयकुल समवेत । नकाअ प्रवेश अद्भुत ॥2॥
तप्तलोहें भेटी । तुका ह्मणे कल्पकोटी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If one reclaims the land that one's forefathers gave as a charitable donation, the one who held the honor of first worship will receive the harshest punishment in Yama's house. Together with both family lines, he enters a dreadful hell.

Says Tuka, for an entire cosmic age, he must embrace pillars of burning iron.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Land that the elders gave away in charity, and a man takes it back out of greed. He once held the honor of the first worship; now the worst punishment in Yama's house is his. Both family lines go with him. The descent into hell is terrible. Tuka says: for ten million ages he embraces pillars of burning iron.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names one specific betrayal and follows it all the way to its end. Land that ancestors donated as a sacred charity is reclaimed by a descendant out of pure covetousness, and the higher the man's former standing, the heavier the reckoning. The penalty is not his alone: both lineages are dragged down with him, and the entry into hell is dreadful. The closing image fixes the scale, embracing pillars of burning iron for ten million ages, so that a quiet act of greed is measured against an almost endless suffering. The poem asks the listener to weigh what a gift once consecrated really costs to take back.

GATHA 4236 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the false witness

मराठी मूळ

लटिकी ग्वाही सभेआंत । देतां पतित आगळा॥1॥
कुंभपाकीं वस्ती करुं । होय धुरु कुळेसी ॥ध्रु.॥
रजस्वला रुधिर स्रवे । तें चि घ्यावें तृषेसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन्मा आला । काळ जाला कुळासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who bears false witness in an assembly is the most fallen of all. He will dwell in the boiling hell of Kumbhapaka, and his entire family line is set ablaze.

Says Tuka, the day he was born became a dark day for his entire clan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The man who gives false testimony in the assembly is the most fallen of all. He will live in the boiling hell of Kumbhapaka, and his whole family line is set on fire. Tuka says: the day he was born became a dark day for his clan.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram fixes on the lie told under oath, the false witness in a public assembly, and calls it the lowest fall a person can take. The consequence is the boiling cauldron-hell of Kumbhapaka, and again the ruin is not contained to one man: his entire family is set ablaze with him. The final line lands the verdict at the very beginning of his life, saying his birthday itself became a curse on his people. The point is not relish at his fate but the weight Tukaram puts on truthful speech: a single false word can be heavy enough to darken a whole lineage, which asks the hearer to guard their own tongue.

GATHA 4237 The Moral Ideal

Moral ideal, the fearless wrongdoer

मराठी मूळ

आचरे दोष न धरी धाक । परीपाक दुःखाचा ॥1॥
चांडाळ तो दुराचारी । अंगीकारी कोण त्या ॥ध्रु.॥
नव्हे संतान वोस घर । अंधकार कुळासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचें दान । घेतां पतन दुःखासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He commits faults without any fear; the result is only suffering. Who will accept such a wretched wrongdoer? He has no progeny; his house stands desolate, and darkness covers his lineage.

Says Tuka, accepting gifts from such a person leads only to a downfall of sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He does wrong and keeps no fear of it. The ripening of it is only sorrow. He is an outcaste in his conduct, a corrupt man. Who will take him in? He has no children; his house stands empty; darkness covers his line. Tuka says: take a gift from such a person and you fall into sorrow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the person who sins without any inner dread, and traces what such fearlessness ripens into: only suffering. By his conduct, not his birth, he has made himself an outcaste, and the poem asks plainly who would shelter him. His house is left without children, desolate, his lineage swallowed in darkness. The closing turn widens the warning to the listener: even accepting a gift from such a person draws you down into his sorrow, so the verse cautions against being entangled with corruption, not just against committing it.

GATHA 4238 Social Criticism

Social criticism, a life gone to waste

मराठी मूळ

कीविलवाणा जाला आतां । दोष करितां न विचारी॥1॥
अभिळाषी नारी धन । झकवी जन लटिकें चि ॥ध्रु.॥
विश्वासिया करी घात । न धरी चित्ता कांटाळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं आला । वृथा गेला जन्मासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He has become pitiable now, committing sins without a second thought. He lusts after women and wealth, deceiving people with lies.

He betrays those who trust him and feels no revulsion in his chitta. Says Tuka, he has not truly been born; his life has gone entirely to waste.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has become a pitiful thing now, doing wrong without a second thought. He lusts after women and wealth and cheats people with plain lies. He destroys the one who trusted him and feels no disgust in his heart. Tuka says: he was never truly born; his whole life has gone to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sketches a man so given over to wrongdoing that he no longer pauses before doing it, driven by craving for women and money and content to deceive openly. The sharpest charge is the betrayal of trust done without a flicker of revulsion in the heart, for the deadened conscience is worse than the act. The verdict is severe but pointed at the pattern: a person who lives this way has wasted the very gift of birth. Tukaram's measure of a human life is not its length or its gains but whether it was lived toward truth, and by that measure such a life never began. The listener is left to ask whether their own conscience can still feel that disgust.

GATHA 4239 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the religion that is sold

मराठी मूळ

घेऊं नये तैसें दान । ज्याचें धन अभिळाषी ॥1॥
तो ही येथें कामा नये । नकान जाय ह्मणोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
विकी स्नानसंध्या जप । करी तप पुढिलांचें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दांभिक तो । नकान जातो स्वइच्छा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not accept improper gifts from one who covets your wealth. Such a person is of no use here either; he goes to hell because of it.

He sells his prayers, his rituals, and his austerities, performing them for others' benefit alone. Says Tuka, that hypocrite goes to hell of his own free will.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not take such a gift, given by one who covets your wealth. He too is of no use here; he goes to hell because of it. He sells his bathing and his prayers and his chanting; he does his austerities for someone else's sake. Tuka says: that hypocrite goes to hell of his own free will.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against a tangled exchange: a gift offered by someone who is really after your wealth, which corrupts both the giver and the taker. He then turns on the man who has made his religion a trade, selling his ritual bath, his prayers, his chanting, performing his austerities not for God but on commission for others. The verse names this hypocrisy as self-chosen ruin: he goes to hell of his own free will, because no one forced him to make devotion a business. The point lands on motive over form. Outwardly the rites are correct; inwardly they are for sale, and that hollow inside is the fall. It invites the listener to ask for whose sake their own practice is done.

GATHA 4240 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, become fire itself

मराठी मूळ

सदा नामघोष करूं हरिकथा । तेणें सदा चित्ता समाधान ॥1॥
सर्वसुख ल्यालों सर्व अलंकार । आनंदें निर्भर डुलतसों ॥ध्रु.॥
असों ऐसा कोठें आठव ही नाहीं । देहीं च विदेही भोगूं दशा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी जालों अग्नरूप । लागों नेदूं पापपुण्य आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We will always raise the chant of the Name and perform Hari's sacred discourse. By that, the mind is forever at peace.

We have donned every ornament of joy and sway in bliss. We no longer even remember where we are; while in the body, we experience the state of the bodiless.

Says Tuka, we have become fire itself. We will not let either sin or merit cling to us now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We will always raise the cry of the Name and tell the story of Hari. By that the heart is always at peace. We have put on every ornament of joy, and we sway, full of bliss. We do not even remember where we are; while in the body, we taste the state of the bodiless. Tuka says: we have become fire itself. We will let neither sin nor merit cling to us now.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a fullness reached through one practice: the constant chant of the Name and the telling of Hari's story, which keeps the heart steadily at peace. The joy is total enough to be worn like ornaments, swaying the whole body, and so complete that even the awareness of place dissolves; though still embodied, he tastes the freedom of one with no body. The closing image is the radical claim, holding firm rather than softened: we have become fire itself. As fire burns clean and lets nothing stick, this state lets neither sin nor merit cling, for the soul absorbed in the Name has passed beyond the whole ledger of good and bad deeds.

GATHA 4241 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the boaster and the true saint

मराठी मूळ

वरिवरि बोले युद्धाचिया गोष्टी । परसैन्या भेटी नाहीं जाली ॥1॥
पराव्याचे भार पाहुनियां दृष्टी । कांपतसे पोटीं थरथरां ॥ध्रु.॥
मनाचा उदार रायांचा जुंझार । फिरंगीचा मार मारीतसे॥2॥
धन्य त्याची माय धन्य त्याचा बाप । अंगीं अनुताप हरिनामें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे साधु बोले खर्गधार । खोचती अंतरें दुर्जनाचें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

On the surface he talks of war, but he has never actually faced the enemy's army. At the sight of the opposing forces, he trembles within.

He is generous only in his mind, a warrior only in his own imagination, wielding an imaginary sword. Blessed is the mother and father of the one whose body truly burns with remorse for Hari's sake.

Says Tuka, the words of a true saint cut like a sword's edge, piercing the inner darkness of the wicked.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On the surface he talks of battle, but he has never met the enemy's army. The moment he sees the opposing ranks, his belly trembles. He is generous only in his mind, a warrior only in his thoughts, swinging a sword that is not there. Blessed is the mother, blessed is the father, of the one whose body truly burns with longing for Hari's Name. Tuka says: the words of a true saint cut like the edge of a sword; they pierce the inner dark of the wicked.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts the empty boaster with the genuine devotee. The boaster speaks loudly of war but has never faced an enemy; at the first sight of real ranks he shakes inside, generous and brave only in his own imagination, swinging an imaginary sword. Against him stands the one whose whole body burns with longing for Hari's Name, and Tukaram calls even that person's parents blessed for having brought him into the world. The closing turn redefines courage: the true saint's weapon is speech, words sharp as a sword's edge that cut straight through the inner darkness of the wicked. Real valor is not noise about battle but the burning sincerity that lets plain words pierce. The listener is asked which kind of warrior they are.

GATHA 4242 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, impossible images, all is illusion

मराठी मूळ

गंधर्वनगरीं क्षण एक राहावें । तें चि पैं करावें मुळक्षत्र ॥1॥
खपुष्पाची पूजा बांधोनि निर्गुणा । लक्ष्मीनारायणा तोषवावें ॥ध्रु.॥
वंध्यापुत्राचा लग्नाचा सोहळा । आपुलिया डोळां पाहों वेगीं ॥2॥
मृगजळा पोही घालुनि सज्ञाना । तापलिया जना निववावें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मिथ्या देहेंिद्रयकर्म । ब्रह्मार्पण ब्रह्म होय बापा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dwell for a moment in the city of illusion and then use it as your foundation. Worship the formless Lakshmi-Narayana with sky-flowers and see if He is pleased.

Witness with your own eyes the wedding celebration of a barren woman's son. Sprinkle the water of a mirage upon a scorched assembly and cool them.

Says Tuka, the body, senses, and their actions are all illusory. When all is offered to Brahman, one becomes Brahman, O child.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stay a moment in the city of the sky-spirits, and make that your foundation. Worship the formless with flowers that grow in the sky, and try to please Lakshmi-Narayana. Watch with your own eyes the wedding feast of a barren woman's son. Pour the water of a mirage over a scorched crowd and cool them. Tuka says: the body, the senses, and their deeds are all unreal. Offered to Brahman, one becomes Brahman, O child.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strings together images that cannot exist: a city of sky-spirits used as solid ground, flowers grown in the empty sky, the son of a barren woman holding a wedding, a mirage that gives real water. Each is impossible, and that is the lesson: the world we take as solid is exactly as unreal as these. From this he draws the conclusion that the body, the senses, and all their actions are equally illusory, no more substantial than mirage-water. The closing turn is the release: when everything, including this unreal self, is offered up to Brahman, the offerer becomes Brahman. The tender address, O child, frames the whole thing as instruction, leading the listener from seeing through illusion to surrendering into the only thing that is real.

GATHA 4243 Prayers

Prayer, begging for the leftovers

मराठी मूळ

तुझा ह्मणविलों दास । केली उच्छिष्टासी आस॥1॥
मुखीं घालावा कवळ । जरी तूं होशील कृपाळ ॥2॥
सीण भाग माझा पुसें । तुका ह्मणे न करीं हांसें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I call myself Your servant and have set my hope on Your leftovers. Place a morsel in my mouth, if only You will be gracious.

Wipe away my weariness and fatigue. Says Tuka, do not laugh at me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You let me be called Your servant. I have set my hope on Your leftovers. Put a morsel in my mouth, if You will be kind. Wipe away my weariness and my tiredness. Tuka says: do not laugh at me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays from the lowest place he can take, and keeps it there. He does not ask for a place at the table, only for the leftovers, and for a single morsel to be set in his mouth if God chooses to be gracious. He asks that his weariness and exhaustion be wiped away, the tiredness of a servant who has nothing of his own. The closing line is the rawest, do not laugh at me, the plea of someone who knows how small his request is and fears even that might be met with scorn. The prayer makes humility itself the whole of the devotee's claim on God: not merit, only need.

GATHA 4244 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, wanting nothing but to give

मराठी मूळ

काय मागें आह्मी गंुतलों काशानीं । पुढें वाहों मनीं धाक देवा ॥1॥
कीतिन चराचरीं आहे तैसी आहे । भेटोनियां काय घ्यावें आह्मां ॥ध्रु.॥
घेउनी धरणें बैसती उपवासी । हट आह्मांपासीं नाहीं तैसा ॥2॥
तातडी तयांनीं केली विटंबणा । आह्मां नारायणा काय उणें ॥3॥
नाहीं मुक्तिचाड वास वैकुंठींचा । जीव भाव आमुचा देऊं तुज ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे काय मानेल तें आतां । तूं घेई अनंता सर्व माझें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What are we entangled in behind us? Why carry dread of what lies ahead, O God? Your fame pervades all creation as it is; what more is there for us to gain by meeting You? Some sit on hunger-strikes demanding Your audience, but we are not that stubborn. Those who pressed You in haste only brought humiliation upon themselves.

We lack nothing, O Narayana. We have no craving for liberation or a seat in Vaikuntha.

We will give You our life and jiva. Says Tuka, whatever pleases You now, take everything of mine, O Infinite One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What were we entangled in before? Why carry dread in the mind of what lies ahead, O God? Your fame fills all that moves and stands still, just as it is; what is there for us to gain by meeting You? Some sit in hunger-strikes, demanding Your audience; we have no such stubbornness. Those who pressed You in haste only brought shame on themselves. We lack nothing, O Narayana. We have no craving for liberation or for a seat in Vaikuntha. We give You our life and our soul. Tuka says: take whatever pleases You now; take everything of mine, O Infinite One.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays down both fear and demand. He refuses to fret over past entanglements or future dread, and he notes that God's glory already fills the whole moving and unmoving world, so there is nothing extra to be won by forcing a meeting. He sets himself apart from those who try to coerce God, the ones who fast in protest demanding a vision, recalling that such pressure only humiliated them. Then comes the heart of it: he wants nothing, not even liberation, not even a place in Vaikuntha, the very goals most devotees chase. Having emptied himself of every demand, he offers the only thing left, his life and his soul, and tells the Infinite to take all of it on God's own terms. Love that asks for nothing becomes a love that can give everything.

GATHA 4245 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, plundering God's treasure

मराठी मूळ

जालों बिळवंत । होऊनियां शरणागत ॥1॥
केला घरांत रिघावा । ठायीं पाडियेला ठेवा ॥ध्रु.॥
हाता चढे धन । ऐसें रचलें कारण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मिठी । पायीं देउनि केली लुटी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become mighty by becoming a surrendered one. I gained entry into His home and found the treasure exactly where it was kept.

Wealth that comes easily into one's hands: such is the arrangement He has made. Says Tuka, I embraced His feet and plundered the entire store.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become mighty by becoming one who surrenders. I made my way into His house and found the treasure lying right where it was kept. Wealth comes easily into my hands; that is how He has arranged it. Tuka says: I clasped His feet and looted the whole store.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the language of weakness inside out: he became powerful precisely by giving up, by becoming one who has surrendered. Surrender is the entry; once inside God's house he finds the treasure waiting exactly where it was always kept, and the wealth falls into his hands without effort because God has arranged it that way. The closing image is gleeful and bold: clasping the Lord's feet, he plundered the entire store. The paradox is the whole teaching. What no force or striving can seize, total self-giving carries off completely, so the one who lays down all power walks away with all the riches.

GATHA 4246 The Moral Ideal

Warning, the wages of lust

मराठी मूळ

दासीचा जो संग करी । त्याचे पूर्वज नकान द्वारीं॥1॥
ऐसे सांगों जातां जना । नये कोणाचिया मना ॥ध्रु.॥
बरें विचारूनी पाहें । तुज अंतीं कोण आहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रांडलेंका । अंतीं जासिल यमलोका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The one who consorts with a maid-servant sends his ancestors to the gates of hell. When one tries to tell people this, it does not sit well with anyone.

Think carefully about who will stand by you in the end. Says Tuka, you slave of lust, in the end you will go to Yama's realm.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The man who beds a servant-girl sends his ancestors to the gates of hell. When you go and tell people this, it pleases no one. Think carefully: who will stand by you at the end? Tuka says: you slave of lust, in the end you will go to Yama's realm.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names a sin the world does not want named, and refuses to soften it. He says the man who uses a powerless servant-girl for his lust drags down even those who came before him, and warns that this plain truth makes everyone uncomfortable. He turns the listener to the only question that matters: when the body falls, who will actually be with you? The pleasure passes; the account remains, and he says it leads straight to the realm of death. The sting is aimed at the pattern of using the weak for appetite, not at one person to be despised.

GATHA 4247 Renunciation

Renunciation, the seed that will not sprout

मराठी मूळ

गुळ सांडुनि गोडी घ्यावी । मीठ सांडुनि चवि चाखावी ॥1॥
ऐसा प्रपंच सांडुनि घ्यावा । मग परमार्थ जोडावा॥ध्रु.॥
साकरेचा नव्हे ऊंस । आह्मां कैंचा गर्भवास ॥2॥
बीज भाजुनि केली लाही । जन्ममरण आह्मांसि नाहीं ॥3॥
आकारासी कैंचा ठाव । देह प्रत्यक्ष जाला वाव ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघें जग । सर्वां घटीं पांडुरंग ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Abandon sugar, yet keep its sweetness. Discard salt, yet retain its flavor.

In the same way, renounce worldly life and then gain the spiritual treasure. Sugar does not revert to sugarcane; how then can we return to the womb? A seed once roasted into puffed grain will not sprout again; birth and death are no more for us.

Where can form find a foothold when the body itself has become empty? Says Tuka, the whole world is pervaded by Panduranga in every being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Keep the sweetness, but let the sugar go. Keep the flavor, but let the salt go. In the same way, let worldly life go, and then take up the spiritual treasure. Sugar does not turn back into cane; so how can we return to the womb? A seed once roasted into puffed grain will not sprout again; for us there is no more birth and death. Where can form take hold, when the body itself has become empty? Tuka says: the whole world is full of Panduranga, in every single being.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a renunciation that keeps the essence and drops only the husk. You do not lose sweetness by letting go of the sugar, and you do not lose the truth by letting go of worldly life; you finally hold it cleanly. He gives two images for the change being irreversible: refined sugar never becomes cane again, and roasted grain never sprouts again, so for the one who has turned, birth and death are finished. With the body seen as empty, separate form has nowhere left to stand. What remains is the one presence, Panduranga, filling every being everywhere.

GATHA 4248 Prayers

Surrender, the babbling child

मराठी मूळ

आमुचें दंडवत पायांवरि डोई । व्हावें उतराई ठेवूनियां॥1॥
कराल तें काय नव्हे जी विठ्ठला । चित्त द्यावें बोला बोबडिया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी लडिवाळें अनाथें । ह्मणोनि दिनानाथें सांभाळावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My prostration places my head upon Your feet. Accept it and be free of any debt to me.

Is there anything You cannot do, O Vitthal? Lend Your ear to this babbling child's words. Says Tuka, we are Your helpless little ones. Therefore, O Lord of the lowly, You must look after us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My bow lays my head on Your feet. Accept it, and let Yourself owe me nothing. Is there anything You cannot do, O Vitthal? Lend Your ear to these babbling words. Tuka says: we are Your spoiled helpless little ones; so, Lord of the destitute, You must look after us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes empty-handed and makes his very helplessness the claim. He bows so completely that his prostration cancels any debt God could owe him; the offering is total. Then he leans on God's unlimited power and asks only that his stammering, childlike words be heard. He calls himself and his fellow devotees spoiled, helpless children who have nothing to give. The whole appeal rests on God's own title, Lord of the destitute: if that is who You are, then caring for the helpless is simply what You do.

GATHA 4249 Ecstasy and Joy

Joy, sheltered by the Mother

मराठी मूळ

भाग्यवंत आह्मी विष्णुदास जगीं । अभंग प्रसंगीं धैर्यवंत ॥1॥
नाही तें पुरवीत आणुनि जवळी । गाउनी माउली गीत सुखें ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रीति अंगीं असे सदा सर्वकाळ । वोळली सकळ सुखें ठायीं ॥2॥
आपुल्या स्वभावें जैसे जेथें असों । तैसे तेथें दिसों साजिरे चि ॥3॥
वासनेचा कंद उपडिलें मूळ । दुरितें सकळ निवारिलीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्तजनाची माउली । करील साउली विठ्ठल आह्मां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the fortunate ones, servants of Vishnu in this world, steadfast and courageous in every trial. Our Mother provides what is lacking and brings it near, singing Her song of joy.

Love dwells in our being at all times; every happiness has settled in its place. In our natural state, wherever we are, we appear radiant and fresh.

The root of desire has been uprooted; all sins have been destroyed. Says Tuka, Vitthal will spread His shade over us, the children of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are the fortunate ones, servants of Vishnu in this world, unbroken and steady in every trial. Our Mother brings near whatever is missing, and sings Her song of joy. Love is in us always, all the time; every happiness has settled into its place. Just as we are, wherever we are, we look fresh and lovely. The root of desire has been pulled up; every sin has been cleared away. Tuka says: Vitthal, the Mother of His devotees, will spread His shade over us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counts the wealth of those who belong wholly to God. He calls the devotees fortunate and steady in any trial, because the Lord, here named as Mother, supplies what they lack and fills them with song. With love settled in them and every joy in its place, they need no improvement: as they naturally are, wherever they happen to be, they shine. The transformation is described as desire torn out by the root and sin wiped clean. The poem ends in shelter: Vitthal, mothering His devotees, spreads His shade over them.

GATHA 4250 The Saints

The saints, one glance bears fruit at once

मराठी मूळ

तीर्थॉ फळती काळें जन्में आगिळया । संतदृष्टी पाया हेळामात्रें ॥1॥
सुखाचे सुगम वैष्णवांचे पाय । अंतरींचा जाय महाभेव ॥ध्रु.॥
काळें हि न सरे तपें समाधान । कथे मूढजन समाधिस्थ ॥2॥
उपमा द्यावया सांगतां आणीक । नाहीं तिन्ही लोक धुंडाळतां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मी राहिलों येणें सुखें । संतसंगें दुःखें नासावया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Pilgrimages bear fruit over many lifetimes, but a single glance from a saint's eye bears fruit instantly. The feet of the Vaishnavas are the easy path to joy; the great dread within is dispelled.

Even over ages, austerities do not yield contentment, yet in a sacred discourse, even a dull person enters deep absorption. No comparison can be found for this in all three worlds, search as you may.

Says Tuka, I have remained in this joy, for the company of saints destroys all sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pilgrimages bear fruit only over many lifetimes; a single glance from a saint bears fruit in an instant. The feet of the Vaishnavas are the easy road to joy; the great dread inside is gone. Even ages of austerity do not bring peace, yet in a holy discourse even a dull man falls into deep absorption. There is nothing in all three worlds to compare it to, search as you may. Tuka says: I have stayed in this joy, so that the company of saints may destroy my sorrow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures the saints against the hard, slow paths and finds them swifter. Sacred journeys may take lifetimes to ripen, but one look from a true saint ripens at once, and the feet of the devotees are the simple way into joy that lifts the deep fear within. Long austerities can fail to bring contentment, while a single holy discourse can carry even a slow-witted person into absorption. He insists nothing in the three worlds compares to this. So he has chosen to settle in this joy, letting the company of saints undo his sorrow.

GATHA 4251 Confession and Sin

Confession, the whole burden on Vithoba

मराठी मूळ

संतजना माझी यावया करुणा । ह्मणउनी दीन हीन जालों ॥1॥
नेणें योग युक्ती नाहीं ज्ञान मति । गातसें या गीती पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
भाव भक्ती नेणें तप अनुष्ठान । करितों किर्त्तन विठ्ठलाचें ॥2॥
ब्रह्मज्ञान ध्यान न कळे धारणा । एका नारायणा वांचूनियां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझा विटोबासी भार । जाणे हा विचार तो चि माझा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have become poor and lowly so that the saintly ones may show me compassion. I know no yoga, no technique, no wisdom, no intellect.

I sing these songs of Panduranga. I know neither devotion nor austerity nor ritual practice.

I perform Vitthal's kirtan alone. I understand neither Brahman-knowledge, nor meditation, nor concentration, except for Narayana alone.

Says Tuka, my entire burden is upon Vithoba. He alone knows what is right for me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have become poor and lowly so that the saints might take pity on me. I know no yoga, no technique, no wisdom, no quick mind; I just sing these songs of Panduranga. I do not know devotion, or austerity, or ritual; I only sing Vitthal's kirtan. I understand no knowledge of Brahman, no meditation, no holding the mind still, nothing but Narayana alone. Tuka says: my whole burden is on Vithoba; he alone knows what is right for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram empties his hands of every credential before he asks for help. He says his low, poor condition is itself the appeal, drawing the saints' compassion; he claims no yoga, no learning, no sharp intellect. All he can do is sing the Name of Panduranga, and he denies even devotion, austerity, and ritual as his own achievements. Knowledge of Brahman, meditation, concentration: he disowns them all, holding only to Narayana. Stripped of every method, he sets the entire weight of his life on Vithoba, trusting that God alone knows what is good for him.

GATHA 4252 Confession and Sin

Confession, the unworthy servant

मराठी मूळ

ऐसें काय उणें जालें तुज देवा । भावेंविण सेवा घेसी माझी ॥1॥
काय मज द्यावा न लगे मुशारा । पहावें दातारा विचारूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
करितों पाखांडें जोडूनि अक्षरें । नव्हे ज्ञान खरें भक्तिरस ॥2॥
गुणवाद तुझे न बोलवे वाणी । आणिका छळणी वाद सांगें ॥3॥
तरी आतां मज राखें तुझे पायीं । देखसील कांहीं प्रेमरस ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तुज हांसतील लोक । निःकाम सेवक ह्मणोनियां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What is it that You lack, O God, that You will not accept my service without true devotion? Must I be paid wages? Consider this, O generous Lord. I compose verses by stringing together syllables in artifice; it is not genuine wisdom or the nectar of devotion.

My tongue cannot truly sing Your praises; I only know how to argue and wrangle with others. Even so, keep me at Your feet.

Perhaps You will find some trace of love there. Says Tuka, people will laugh at You, calling me Your selfless servant when I am no such thing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What do You lack, O God, that You will not take my service unless it has real love in it? Must I be paid wages? Look closely and consider, O generous Lord. I make a sham, stringing syllables together; it is not real wisdom, not the nectar of devotion. My tongue cannot truly sing Your goodness; I only know how to argue and wrangle with others. Even so, now keep me at Your feet; perhaps there You will find some trace of love. Tuka says: people will laugh at You for calling me a selfless servant.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram confesses the hollowness of his own service even as he clings to God. He asks why God, who lacks nothing, should refuse service that has no genuine love behind it, and whether he must somehow be paid for it. He admits his verses are clever artifice, not true wisdom or devotion, and that his tongue is better at quarreling than at praise. Yet he still begs to be kept at God's feet, hoping that nearness alone might grow some real love in him. The closing turn is self-mocking: if God claims him as a selfless servant, even the world will laugh at the claim.

GATHA 4253 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false saint

मराठी मूळ

भोंदावया मीस घेऊनि संतांचें । करी कुटुंबाचें दास्य सदा ॥1॥
मनुष्याचे परी बोले रावा करी । रंजवी नरनारी जगामध्यें॥ध्रु.॥
तिमयाचा बैल करी सिकविलें । चित्रींचें बाहुलें गोष्टी सांगे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा जळो हे महंती । लाज नाहीं चित्तीं निसुगातें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Under the guise of sainthood, he deceives others while serving his own family day and night. He speaks like a human being, puts on a show, and entertains men and women in the world.

He is like a ventriloquist's puppet or a painted doll that tells stories. Says Tuka, O God, cursed is such spiritual leadership. The shameless one feels no remorse.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He puts on the disguise of a saint to cheat others, while day and night he serves only his own household. He talks like a man, makes a show, and entertains the men and women of the world. He is a trained performing bull, a painted doll that tells stories. Tuka says: O God, let such sainthood burn; the shameless man feels nothing in his heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram exposes the man who wears holiness as a costume. The robe and the title are a disguise for deceit, while in truth his whole devotion goes to feeding his own family. He performs piety for an audience, charming the crowd of men and women, but he is only a trained animal going through tricks or a painted puppet reciting borrowed tales. Tukaram curses this kind of religious leadership outright. The point falls on the pattern of using sanctity as a show: a heart so shameless that it feels no sting at the fraud.

GATHA 4254 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the fraudulent exorcist

मराठी मूळ

अंगीं घेऊनियां वारें दया देती । तया भक्ता हातीं चोट आहे ॥1॥
देव्हारा बैसोनि हालविती सुपें । ऐसीं पापी पापें लिंपताती ॥ध्रु.॥
एकीबेकीन्यायें होतसे प्रचित । तेणें लोक समस्त भुलताती ॥2॥
तयाचे स्वाधीन दैवतें असती । तरी कां मरती त्यांचीं पोरें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे पाणी अंगारा जयाचा । भक्त कान्होबाचा तो ही नव्हे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who take on a spirit and then give blessings while possessed hold deception in their hands. They sit at the shrine and wave a winnowing fan, and such sinful ones are smeared with sin.

By a trick of coincidence, something appears to come true, and the people are deluded. If the deities were truly under their control, why do their own children die? Says Tuka, one who deals in holy water and sacred ash is not even a devotee of God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who let a spirit ride them and then hand out blessings have only deceit in their hands. They sit at the shrine and wave a winnowing fan, and such sinners smear themselves with sin. Once in a while a thing comes true by chance, and all the people are fooled. If the gods were really under their control, why do their own children die? Tuka says: a man who deals in holy water and sacred ash is not even a devotee of God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the mask off the possession-priest who trades on people's fear. The man pretends a spirit possesses him, blesses from the shrine, waves his fan, and calls it power, but it is fraud, and he only piles sin on himself. A rare coincidence that comes true is enough to delude the crowd. Then Tukaram lands the test no fraud can pass: if you truly commanded the gods, your own children would not die. The verse aims at the trade in holy water and ash that preys on the credulous; the one who runs it is not even a devotee, let alone a holy man.

GATHA 4255 Prayers

Prayer, do not fob me off

मराठी मूळ

कोणा एकाचिया पोरें केली आळी । ठावी नाहीं पोळी मागें देखी ॥1॥
बुझाविलें हातीं देउनी खापर । छंद करकर वारियेली ॥ध्रु.॥
तैसें नको करूं मज कृपावंता । काय नाहीं सत्ता तुझे हातीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मायबापाचें उचित । करावें तें हित बाळकाचें ॥3॥
मनीं ध्यान करी अहंता धरूनी । तया चक्रपाणी दूर ठेला ॥ध्रु.॥
मान अभिमान सांडुनियां द्यावे । अवघ्यां नीच व्हावें तरी प्राप्त ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि कोणासी सांगावें । सादर होउनि भावें भजें देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A child somewhere made a fuss, never having seen a proper flatbread. They calmed it by putting a potsherd in its hand and distracted it from its crying.

Do not do this with me, O Compassionate One. Is there nothing within Your power? Says Tuka, it is the duty of parents to do what is truly good for the child. One who meditates with ego in the mind finds God standing far away.

Abandon pride and self-importance; become humble before all. Only then is God attained.

Says Tuka, to whom should this be told? With devotion and sincerity, worship God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Some child made a fuss, never having seen a real flatbread. They quieted it by putting a potsherd in its hand and stopped its endless crying. Do not do this to me, O Compassionate One. Is there nothing in Your power? Tuka says: it is the duty of a mother and father to do what is truly good for the child. The one who meditates while holding on to ego finds the Lord standing far off. Drop honor and self-importance; become lowest of all, and then He is reached. Tuka says: who can this even be told to? Become attentive, and worship God with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begs God not to pacify him with a worthless substitute. He gives the homely picture of a crying child fooled by a broken shard placed in its hand because it has never seen real food. He asks God not to fob him off that way, since nothing is beyond God's power, and reminds Him that true parents give the child what actually helps, not a distraction. Then the poem turns to the seeker: meditation done while clutching ego pushes the Lord far away. Only by laying down pride and self-importance, becoming the lowest of all, is God reached, and the one road is attentive, loving worship.

GATHA 4256 Social Criticism

Social criticism, counsel wasted on the proud

मराठी मूळ

अधमाचें चित्त अहंकारीं मन । उपदेश शीण तया केला ॥1॥
पापियाचें मन न करी आचार । विधवे शृंगार व्यर्थ केला ॥ध्रु.॥
अधमाचें चित्त दुश्चित्त ऐकेना । वांयां सीण मना करूं काय ॥2॥
गर्धबासी दिली चंदनाची उटी । केशर लल्हाटीं शुकराच्या॥3॥
पतिवंचकेसी सांगतां उदंड । परि तें पाषांड तिचे मनीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसें अभावीं सांगतां । वाउगा चि चित्ता सीण होय ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mind of the wicked is filled with ego; teaching him is a waste of effort. The mind of a wrongdoer will not follow righteous conduct; adorning a widow is equally pointless.

The mind of the wicked is restless and will not listen; why should we trouble our own minds in vain? It is like applying sandalwood paste to a donkey or saffron to a pig's forehead. No matter how much you tell an unfaithful woman, her mind remains steeped in deceit.

Says Tuka, preaching to the faithless brings only needless fatigue to the chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The base man's mind is full of ego; teaching him only wears you out. The sinner's mind will not keep good conduct; dressing up a widow is just as useless. The base man's mind is restless and will not listen; why wear out your own mind for nothing? It is like rubbing sandalwood paste on a donkey, or saffron on a pig's forehead. Tell an unfaithful woman all you like; her mind stays steeped in deceit. Tuka says: preaching to the faithless brings only pointless tiredness to the heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns that good counsel is wasted where there is no openness to receive it. A mind packed with ego cannot take teaching, and a heart set on wrongdoing will not keep to good conduct, so the effort exhausts the teacher for nothing. He piles on blunt images of misplaced effort: sandalwood paste on a donkey, saffron on a pig, finery on one who will not value it. However much you say, a mind steeped in deceit stays as it is. The lesson is about discernment, knowing where teaching can land, not about writing off a person; the warning is to spend your strength where the heart is willing.

GATHA 4257 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the man who will not listen

मराठी मूळ

किती उपदेश करावा खळासी । नावडे तयासी बरें कांहीं ॥1॥
शुद्ध हे वासना नाहीं चांडाळाची । होळी आयुष्याची केली तेणें ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं शुद्ध भाव नायके वचन । आपण्या आपण नाडियेलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यासी काय व्याली रांड । करितो बडबड रात्रदिस ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How much counsel can one give to the wicked? Nothing good appeals to them. The wretch has no pure desire; he has made a bonfire of his own lifespan.

He has no genuine feeling and will not heed good words; he has only ruined himself. Says Tuka, what cursed woman bore such a one? He babbles senselessly day and night.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How much can you counsel a wicked man? Nothing good appeals to him. The wretch has no clean desire; he has made a bonfire of his own life. He has no true feeling and will not hear good words; he has ruined himself, by himself. Tuka says: what cursed woman gave birth to him? He babbles on, day and night.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the man who cannot be reached because he refuses to be reached. No amount of counsel takes hold, since nothing good attracts him and his desires are unclean; he is burning up his own lifespan like a bonfire. He has no genuine feeling and will not listen, so the ruin is self-inflicted, not done to him by anyone else. The harsh outburst about his birth is the cry of a teacher worn down by a heart that will not turn. The warning lands on the pattern of willful deafness and the empty noise it makes, day and night, in place of real listening.

GATHA 4258 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false devotee

मराठी मूळ

संत देखोनियां स्वयें दृष्टी टाळी । आदरें न्याहाळी परस्त्रीसी ॥1॥
वीट ये कर्णासी संतवाक्यामृता । स्त्रीशब्द ऐकतां निवे कर्ण ॥ध्रु.॥
कथेमाजी निज वाटे नित्यक्षणीं । ◌ स्त्रयेचे कीर्त्तनीं प्रेमें जागे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी क्रोधासी न यावें । स्वभावा करावें काय कोणीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

At the sight of a saint, he averts his eyes, yet he gazes adoringly at another man's wife. The nectar of saints' words grates on his ears, but when a woman speaks, his ears are soothed.

He falls asleep every moment during a sacred discourse, yet at the performance of a woman, he is wide awake with passion. Says Tuka, do not be angry with such people. What can anyone do about their nature?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When he sees a saint, he turns his eyes away. But he stares with longing at another man's wife. The nectar of a saint's words sickens his ears. When a woman speaks, his ears are soothed. During the sacred discourse he dozes off every moment. At a woman's performance he is wide awake with passion. Tuka says: do not be angry with such people. What can anyone do about their nature?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds up a portrait of a man whose appetites have flipped the holy and the profane. Everything that should draw him, the saint, the saint's words, the sacred story, repels him; everything that should not hold him, another's wife, her voice, her dancing, wakes him fully. The poem names the pattern without softening it: the man is not asleep by accident, he is asleep only to what is good. Then Tukaram turns the blade back: do not waste anger on him, ask instead what a person's own nature is doing. The closing line is an examination of how the heart bends, not a license to despise the man caught in the bending.

GATHA 4259 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, grace where effort fails

मराठी मूळ

मणि पडिला दाढेसी मकरतोंडीं । सुखें हस्तें चि काढवेल प्रौढीं ॥1॥
परि मूर्खाचें चित्त बोधवेना । दुधें कूर्मीच्या पाळवेल सेना ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळ पृथ्वी हिंडतां कदाचित । ससीसिंगाची प्राप्त होय तेथें ॥2॥
अतिप्रयत्नें गाळतां वाळुवेतें । दिव्य तेलाची प्राप्त होय तेथें ॥3॥
अतिक्रोधें खवळला फणी पाही । धरूं येतो मस्तकीं पुष्पप्रायी ॥4॥
पहा ब्रह्मानंदें चि एकीं हेळा । महापातकी तो तुका मुक्त केला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A jewel caught in the jaws of a crocodile could still be removed with a steady, daring hand. But the mind of a fool simply cannot be enlightened.

An army of turtles could be nourished with milk, if one tried hard enough. If you scoured the whole earth, you might somehow find a hare's horn.

If you pressed sand hard enough, you might extract rare oil. Even a furious serpent could be subdued and have a flower placed upon its head.

Says Tuka, by the bliss of Brahman alone has this great wrongdoer been effortlessly set free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A jewel that has fallen into a crocodile's jaws, a steady, daring hand can still pull it out. But the mind of a fool cannot be made to understand. An army of turtles could be raised on milk, if one tried hard enough. Wander the whole earth and you might somehow find a hare's horn. Press sand hard enough and you might draw out rare oil. Even a raging cobra can be tamed and have a flower laid on its head. Tuka says: by the bliss of Brahman alone, this one great sinner was set free without effort.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up impossibilities to measure one harder thing and then one easier thing. A jewel from a crocodile's mouth, an army of turtles fed on milk, a hare's horn, oil pressed from sand, a flower set on a furious serpent: all are absurd, yet he calls the fool's awakening harder still. The point is that no amount of clever effort can open a closed mind. Against all that strain he sets the last line, where the impossible happens without effort: the bliss of Brahman, sheer grace, freed even a great sinner. He puts himself in that place, naming himself the sinner, so the claim lands on his own life: what striving could never reach, grace did, and did it easily.

GATHA 4260 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the fearless servant

मराठी मूळ

भोळे भाविक हे जुनाट चांगले । होय तैसें केलें भक्तिभावें ॥1॥
ह्मणउनि चिंता नाहीं आह्मां दासां । न भ्यों गर्भवासा जन्म घेतां ॥ध्रु.॥
आपुलिया इच्छा करूं गदारोळ । भोगूं सर्वकाळ सर्व सुखें ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

These innocent, devout, old-fashioned faithful ones are truly fine. Whatever happened, they accepted it with loving devotion.

Therefore we servants have no worry; we do not fear the womb or taking birth again. At our own pleasure we will raise a joyful uproar and enjoy every happiness at all times.

IN PLAIN WORDS

These simple, trusting, old-fashioned faithful ones are truly good. Whatever came, they took it with loving devotion. So we servants have no worry. We do not fear the womb, we do not fear taking birth again. As we please we will raise a joyful uproar and enjoy every happiness at all times.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises the old, plain-hearted devotees who met whatever life brought them with love rather than complaint, and then claims their freedom for himself and his fellow servants. Because such trust has shut out fear, the thing people dread most, the womb and another birth, has lost its terror. Rebirth, the engine of worldly anxiety, becomes nothing to flee. What remains is not grim endurance but celebration: free of dread, the servants make a joyful noise and take every happiness as it comes. The fearlessness and the festivity are the same gift seen from two sides.

GATHA 4261 Prayers

Prayer, spare the erring child

मराठी मूळ

आतां तरी माझी परिसा वीनवती । रखुमाईच्या पति पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
चुकलिया बाळा न मारावें जीवें । हित तें करावें मायबापीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझा ह्मणताती मज । आतां आहे लाज हे चि तुह्मां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now hear my humble plea, O Lord of Rakhumai, O Panduranga. Do not strike a wayward child to death; it is the duty of parents to seek the child's welfare.

Says Tuka, they call me Yours. The honor to uphold is Yours now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now hear my humble plea, O Lord of Rakhumai, O Panduranga. Do not strike a wayward child dead. Parents are meant to seek their child's good. Tuka says: they call me Yours. The honor to keep now is Yours.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes as a child who knows he has gone wrong and pleads not for reward but for mercy. He invokes the relationship itself: a parent does not kill a straying child, a parent works for the child's welfare, so let God act as the parent he is. Then he presses the claim home by naming what is at stake for God, not for himself. The world calls him God's own; if God now lets him fall, it is God's name, God's honor, that suffers. He makes his own rescue a matter of the Lord's good name.

GATHA 4262 Longing and Separation

Longing, no skill but love

मराठी मूळ

नाही बळयोग अभ्यास कराया । न कळे ते क्रिया साधनाची ॥1॥
तुझिये भेटीचें प्रेम अंतरंगीं । नाहीं बळ अंगीं भजनाचें ॥ध्रु.॥
काय पांडुरंगा करूं बा विचार । झुरतें अंतर भेटावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगा वडिलपणें बुद्धी । तुजविण दयानिधी पुसों कोणां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no strength for yoga or spiritual practice; I do not understand the methods of discipline. Within my chitta there is longing to meet You, but I lack the strength for formal worship.

What shall I do, O Panduranga? My inner being yearns to meet You. Says Tuka, counsel me with the wisdom of an elder. Apart from You, O Treasure of mercy, whom shall I ask?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no strength for yoga, no power to keep up the practice. I do not understand the methods of discipline. In my heart there is love that longs to meet You. But in my body there is no strength for formal worship. What shall I do, O Panduranga? My inner being pines to meet You. Tuka says: counsel me as an elder would. Apart from You, O Treasure of mercy, whom shall I ask?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out exactly what he lacks: no aptitude for yoga, no stamina for disciplined practice, no grasp of the formal methods that are supposed to reach God. What he does have is the only thing he cannot manufacture, a heart that aches to meet the Lord. The poem sets that pure longing against his complete incapacity and makes the incapacity the whole appeal. Then he asks God himself for the guidance a wise elder would give, because the usual sources of help are exactly what he has just confessed he cannot use. With no method and no teacher left, he has nowhere to turn but to the one he longs for.

GATHA 4263 Longing and Separation

Longing, the complaint of the overlooked

मराठी मूळ

जिहीं तुझी कास भावें धरियेली । त्यांची नाहीं केली सांड देवा ॥1॥
काय माझा भोग आहे तो न कळे । सुखें तुह्मी डोळे झांकियेले ॥ध्रु.॥
राव रंक तुज सारिके चि जन । नाहीं थोर लहान तुजपाशीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मागें आपंगिलें भक्तां । माझिया संचिता कृपा नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who held fast to Your hem with sincere devotion were never abandoned by You, O God. What my own destiny holds, I do not know.

You have peacefully closed Your eyes. Rich and poor are the same to You; there is no great or small in Your sight.

Says Tuka, in the past You embraced other devotees, but Your grace has not come to my accumulated karma.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who held fast to Your hem with love, You never abandoned them, O God. What my own fate holds, I do not know. You have calmly closed Your eyes. Rich and poor are the same to You. With You there is no great and no small. Tuka says: in the past You took up other devotees. But Your grace has not come to my store of karma.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses a grievance, but he argues it from God's own record. Others clung to God and were never cast off; God himself is famously even-handed, treating rich and poor, great and small, alike. So why, Tukaram asks, has that grace passed him by? The line that God has calmly closed His eyes is the sharp center: it can mean God is indifferent, or that God is overlooking faults, and Tukaram lets the ache sit there unresolved. He is not denying God's mercy; he is holding God to it, asking why the karma that weighs him down has not yet been met by the grace shown to everyone else.

GATHA 4264 The Nature of God

Nature of God, formless yet visible

मराठी मूळ

पहावया तुझा जरि बोलें अंत । तरि माझे जात डोळे देवा ॥1॥
स्तंबीं तुज नाहीं घातलें प्रल्हादें । आपुल्या आनंदें अवतार ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्ताचिया काजा जालासी सगुण । तुज नाहीं गुण रूप नाम ॥2॥
ऐसा कोण देवा अधम यातीचा । निर्धार हा साचा नाहीं तुझा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे बोले कवतुकें गोष्टी । नेदीं येऊं पोटीं राग देवा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I try to test Your patience, O God, my own eyes will wear out first. It was not Prahlada who placed You in the pillar; You took incarnation of Your own delight.

For the sake of Your devotees You became visible, though You truly have no quality, form, or name. What person, O God, is so lowly in caste that Your firm resolve will not reach them? Says Tuka, I speak these words playfully. Do not harbor anger in Your heart, O Lord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I tried to find the end of You by speaking, my own eyes would give out first, O God. Prahlada did not put You inside the pillar. You took that form out of Your own delight. For the sake of Your devotees You took on form, though You have no quality, no shape, no name. What person is so low in birth that Your firm resolve will not reach him? Tuka says: I speak these things playfully. Do not let anger rise in Your heart, O Lord.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds two truths together: God is endless and beyond all attributes, yet God takes form for love of His devotees. No one forces this; Prahlada did not conjure God into the pillar, God burst out of His own joy. The God who has no quality, shape, or name still puts on quality, shape, and name to be near those who need Him. From this Tukaram draws the radical reach of grace: no birth is too low for God's resolve to find. Then, having spoken so boldly about the nature of the Lord, he ends with a child's disarming caution, calling his own words play and asking God not to take offense.

GATHA 4265 Prayers

Prayer, dullness laid before mercy

मराठी मूळ

प्रगट व्हावें हे अज्ञानवासना । माझी नारायणा हीनबुिद्ध ॥1॥
खाणीवाणी होसी काष्टीं तूं पाषाणीं । जंतु जीवाजनीं प्रसिद्ध हा ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्ञानहीन तुज पाहें अल्पमति । लहान हा चित्तीं धरोनियां ॥2॥
परि तूं कृपाळ होसी देवराणा । िब्रदें तुझीं जना प्रसिद्ध हें ॥3॥
उतावीळ बहु भक्तांचिया काजा । होसी केशीराजा तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May this veil of ignorance and my dull intellect be made visible before You, O Narayana. You dwell in mines, in markets, in wood, in stone, in every creature and living being; this is well known.

I seek You with meager understanding, holding this small thought in mind. But You are compassionate, O King of gods; Your pledges are famous among all people.

Says Tuka, You are ever eager to rush to the aid of Your devotees, O Lord Keshi.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let it be shown plainly, this craving born of ignorance, this poor wit of mine, O Narayana. You are found in mines, in markets, in wood and in stone, in every creature and living thing. This is well known. I look toward You with a small, dim understanding, holding only this little thought in mind. Yet You are compassionate, O King of gods. Your pledges are famous among all people. Tuka says: You are quick, so quick, to rush to Your devotees' aid, O Lord Keshi.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings God not his merit but his deficiency, asking that his ignorance and dullness be laid bare before the Lord rather than hidden. He sets his smallness against God's vastness: the One who fills mines, markets, wood, stone, and every living thing is the One a feeble mind is trying to reach with a single faint thought. The prayer does not rest on the seeker's capacity but on God's character. God is known to be merciful, His promises are famous, He is eager, even impatient, to run to the help of His devotees. Tukaram offers his weakness precisely because he trusts that reputation.

GATHA 4266 Faith and Trust

Faith, the only support

मराठी मूळ

जरी तुझा मज नसता आधार । कैसा हा संसार दु÷हावला ॥1॥
ऐसा बळी कोण होइल पुरता । जो हे वारी चिंता आशापाश ॥ध्रु.॥
मायामोहफांसा लोकलाजबेडी । तुजवीण तोडी कोण एक ॥2॥
हें तों मज कळों आलें अनुभवें । बरें माझ्या जीवें पांडुरंगा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे यास तूं चि माझा गोही । पुरी भाव नाहीं जना लोका ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If I did not have Your support, how could I have endured this worldly life? Who else is strong enough to ward off the anxiety of desire and attachment? The snare of illusion and the fetters of worldly shame: who but You can sever them? This I have come to know by experience, deep in my jiva, O Panduranga. Says Tuka, You alone are my witness in this. The world and its people do not fully understand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If I did not have Your support, how could I have borne this worldly life? Who else is strong enough to drive off the dread of desire and attachment? The snare of illusion, the chain of worldly shame: who but You can cut them? This I have come to know from my own experience, deep in my life, O Panduranga. Tuka says: in this You alone are my witness. The people of the world do not truly understand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram testifies that God's support is the one thing that made his life in the world bearable. He names the forces that bind a person, the anxiety of desire and attachment, the snare of illusion, the chain of caring what others think, and asks who but God is strong enough to cut them. The claim is not borrowed from scripture but earned: he says he knows it from his own experience, deep in his being. Then he marks how private that knowledge is. The world cannot see it and does not understand, so God alone stands as witness to what God has done for him.

GATHA 4267 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the settled heart

मराठी मूळ

तुजविण चाड आणिकांची कांहीं । धरीन हें नाहीं तुज ठावें ॥1॥
तरणउपाय योगक्षेम माझा । ठेवियेला तुझ्या पायीं देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
कोण मज आळी काय हे तांतडी । सोनियाची घडी जाय दिस ॥2॥
तुझिया नामाचें ल्यालोंसें भूषण । कृपा संतजन करितील ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जाला आनंदाचा वास । हृदया या नास नव्हे कधीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That I would cherish anything other than You is something that will never happen, and You know it. My means of crossing over, my welfare, and my security have all been placed at Your feet, O God.

What complaint do I have, what is my hurry? Each day passes like a golden moment. I have worn the ornament of Your name.

The saintly ones will bestow their grace. Says Tuka, the home of bliss has been established in this heart. It shall never be destroyed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That I would want anything besides You will never happen, and You know it. My way across, my welfare, my keeping, I have laid them all at Your feet, O God. What grievance have I, what is the hurry? Each day passes like a golden moment. I have put on the ornament of Your name. The saints will give their grace. Tuka says: the home of bliss has settled in this heart. It will never be destroyed.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a poem of a heart that has stopped striving and started resting. Tukaram has handed over everything he might otherwise scramble to secure, his salvation, his well-being, his protection, and placed it all at God's feet. With nothing left to grasp at, there is no complaint and no rush; each day becomes golden simply because he wears the name of God like a jewel. He trusts the saints to add their grace. The closing claim is the calm that follows surrender: bliss has not visited but moved in, made its home in his heart, and that dwelling cannot be destroyed.

GATHA 4268 Prayers

Prayer, kept a servant forever

मराठी मूळ

हें चि सुख पुढे मागतों आगळें । आनंदाचीं फळें सेवादान ॥1॥
जन्मजन्मांतरीं तुझा चि अंकिला । करूनि विठ्ठला दास ठेवीं ॥ध्रु.॥
दुजा भाव आड येऊं नेदीं चित्ता । करावा अनंता नास त्याचा ॥2॥
अभय देऊनि करावें सादर । क्षण तो विसर पडों नेदीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी जेजे इच्छा करूं । ते ते कल्पतरू पुरविसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is the greater joy I ask for going forward: the fruit of bliss in service and self-offering. Birth after birth, make me Your own, O Vitthal; keep me as Your servant.

Do not let any second thought enter my mind; O Infinite One, destroy it at once. Grant me assurance and make me attentive.

Do not let me forget You for even a moment. Says Tuka, whatever desires we hold, You, like the wish-fulfilling tree, fulfill them all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is the greater joy I ask for from here on: the fruits of bliss that come from service and self-giving. Birth after birth, make me Your own, O Vitthal. Keep me as Your servant. Do not let a second thought come between my mind and You. O Endless One, destroy it at once. Give me Your assurance and make me attentive. Do not let me forget You for even a moment. Tuka says: whatever desires we hold, You, the wish-granting tree, fulfill them all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for the one boon that does not end in rebirth's weariness but deepens it into joy: to be God's servant, life after life. The reward he wants is not release from service but the bliss that service itself gives. He prays against the one thing that could spoil it, the second thought, any rival attachment that comes between his mind and God, and asks God to destroy it instantly and keep him alert and unforgetting. The final line names why he dares ask so much: God is the wish-fulfilling tree, who grants whatever the heart truly desires. So Tukaram makes sure his deepest desire is only to belong to God.

GATHA 4269 Prayers

Prayer, jest withdrawn before the Lord

मराठी मूळ

तुज केलिया नव्हे ऐसें काई । डोंगराची राई क्षणमात्रें॥1॥
मज या लोकांचा न साहे आघात । देखणें प्रचित जीव घेती ॥ध्रु.॥
सहज विनोदें बोलियेलों गोष्टी । अरंभी तों पोटीं न धरावी ॥2॥
दीनरूप मज करावें नेणता । याहुनी अनंता आहें तैसा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जेणें मज तूं भोगसी । तें करीं जनासीं चाड नाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Is there anything that is impossible for You? You could reduce a mountain to mustard in an instant. I cannot endure the assaults of these people; their very gaze takes my life.

I spoke these words in simple jest; do not hold them against me. Regard me as lowly, as ignorant, even more so than I already am.

Says Tuka, do whatever pleases You with me. I have no need for what the world thinks.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Is there anything You cannot do? You could turn a mountain to mustard in an instant. I cannot bear the blows of these people. Their very gaze takes my life. I spoke those words in simple jest. Do not hold them against me from the start. Make me lowly, make me unknowing, even more than I already am. Tuka says: do with me whatever pleases You. I have no need of what the world thinks.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begins by confessing God's limitless power, that the One who could shrink a mountain to a mustard seed can surely do anything, and then admits his own small wound: he cannot endure the hostility of people, whose mere looks drain the life from him. The poem reads as a half-apology for words spoken too freely; he asks God not to take his jesting to heart. Then comes the turn that resolves the hurt: instead of asking to be raised above his accusers, he asks to be made even lowlier and more ignorant than he is. He surrenders the whole matter to God's pleasure and lets go of the world's opinion altogether, which is exactly what frees him from the gazes that were killing him.

GATHA 4270 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, You already know my heart

मराठी मूळ

ऐसा सर्व भाव तुज निरोपिला । तूं मज एकला सर्वभावें ॥1॥
अंतरींची कां हे नेणसील गोष्टी । परि सुखासाटीं बोलविसी ॥ध्रु.॥
सर्व माझा भार तुज चालवणें । तेथें म्यां बोलणें काय एक ॥2॥
स्वभावें स्वहित हिताचें कारण । कौतुक करून निवडिसी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं हें जाणसी गा देवा । आमुच्या स्वभावा अंतरींच्या ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have offered all my feelings to You. You are mine alone, with all my chitta.

Why do You not know these innermost matters? Yet for the sake of joy, You make me speak. All my burdens are Yours to carry; what need is there for me to say anything? By Your own nature, You bring about our true welfare, sorting things out with playful grace.

Says Tuka, You know all this, O God, the innermost nature of our chittas.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have offered You all my feelings. You are mine alone, with my whole heart. Why do You act as if You do not know what is inside me? You make me say it only for the joy of it. The whole weight of me is Yours to carry. What is there left for me to say? By Your own nature You work my true good; You sort it all out as if in play. Tuka says: You know this, O God. You know the inmost nature of our hearts.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram has handed his whole inner life over to Vitthal and knows the surrender is already complete. So he gently teases God: why pretend not to know what is in my heart, when You know it better than I do? He sees that God draws the prayer out of him not from need but for the sweetness of being asked. Once the whole burden is carried by God, the devotee has nothing left to plead; God arranges everything for the soul's good, lightly, as if at play. The poem rests in the certainty that the Lord already knows the inmost self, so words are only the overflow of love.

GATHA 4271 The Nature of God

Mercy, the mother loves the difficult child

मराठी मूळ

लोखंडाचे न पाहे दोष । शिवोन परीस सोनें करी॥1॥
जैसी तैसी तरीं वाणी । मना आणी माउली ॥ध्रु.॥
लेकराचें स्नेहे गोड । करी कोड त्यागुणें ॥ ॥
मागें पुढें रिघे लोटी । साहे खेटी करी तें ॥3॥
तुका विनंती पांडुरंगा । ऐसें सांगा आहे हें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The touchstone does not look at the faults of iron; by its touch, it turns iron into gold. Just so, a mother brings her child to mind, however the child may be.

Out of love for her child, she fulfills every wish. She pushes and pulls, endures every hardship the child causes.

Says Tuka, O Panduranga, tell me, is this not so?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The touchstone does not look at the faults of the iron. It touches it and turns it to gold. However the child speaks, the mother takes it to heart. Out of love she grants its every wish. She pushes it forward, pulls it back, and bears every trouble it makes. Tuka says: O Panduranga, tell me, is it not so?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God to deal with him the way a touchstone deals with iron and a mother deals with her child. The touchstone never inspects the iron's flaws; one touch and the base metal is gold, faults and all. So too a mother takes whatever her child blurts out straight to her heart, fulfills its wishes, and endures every hardship it causes without turning away. Tukaram presses the comparison on Panduranga as a question, almost daring God to deny it: this is what real love does, so love me like that. The plea is for grace that does not weigh the devotee's worthiness first.

GATHA 4272 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the worldly hypocrite

मराठी मूळ

4274. पर्वकाळीं धर्म न करी नासरी । खर्ची राजद्वारीं द्रव्यरासी ॥1॥
सोइ†याची करी पाहुणेर बरा । कांडवी ठोंबरा संतांलागीं ॥ध्रु.॥
बाइलेचीं सर्व आवडीनें पोसी । मातापितरांसी दवडोनी ॥2॥
श्राद्धीं कष्टी होय सांगतां ब्राह्मण । गोवार मागून सावडीतो ॥3॥
नेतो पानें फुलें वेश्येला उदंड । ब्राह्मणासी खांड नेदी एक ॥4॥
हातें मो†या शोधी कष्ट करी नाना । देवाच्या पूजना कांटाळतो ॥5॥
सारा वेळ धंदा करितां श्रमेना । साधूच्या दर्शना जातां कुंथे ॥6॥
हरिच्या कीर्तनीं गुंगायासि लागे । येरवीं तो जागे उगला चि ॥7॥
पुराणीं बैसतां नाहीं रिकामटी । खेळतो सोंगटी अहोरात्रीं ॥8॥
देवाच्या विभुती न पाहे सर्वथा । करी पानवथा नेत्रभिक्षा ॥9॥
गाईला देखोनी बदबदां मारी । घोडएाची चाकरी गोड लागे ॥10॥
ब्राह्मणाचें तीर्थ घेतां त्रास मोटा । प्रेमें घेतो घोंटा घटघटां ॥11॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे प्रपंचीं गुंतले । जन्मोनि मुकले विठोबासी ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He does no charity on holy days, but spends heaps of wealth at the royal court. He feasts his friends lavishly but turns away the saints with harsh words.

He lovingly maintains his wife's relatives but drives away his own parents. He grumbles when told to feed brahmins at the ancestral rites.

He brings abundant flowers and gifts to the courtesan but will not give a morsel of sugar to a brahmin. He labors hard searching for pearls by hand but is disgusted by the worship of God.

He toils all day in business without tiring but groans at the thought of visiting a saint. At Hari's kirtan he falls asleep, though otherwise he stays wide awake.

He says he has no free time to sit for a discourse, yet plays dice day and night. He never visits holy places of God but feasts his eyes at taverns.

He beats the cow on sight but delights in grooming his horse. He finds it a great burden to accept holy water from a brahmin but gulps down liquor with relish.

Says Tuka, such people, entangled in worldly life, are born only to lose Vitthoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

On the holy day he gives no charity, but at the king's court he spends heaps of money. He feasts his cronies well, but serves the saints coarse gruel. He keeps his wife's relatives in comfort and drives his own parents away. At the ancestral rites he grumbles when told to feed a brahmin. He carries armfuls of flowers and gifts to the courtesan, but will not give a brahmin one lump of sugar. He digs for pearls with his hands and takes endless trouble, but the worship of God disgusts him. He works at business all day and never tires, but groans at the thought of going to see a holy man. At Hari's kirtan he grows drowsy; everywhere else he stays wide awake. He says he has no spare time to sit at a scripture reading, yet he plays dice day and night. He never looks on the holy sights of God, but feasts his eyes at the tavern. He sees a cow and beats it hard, but loves to groom his horse. Taking holy water from a brahmin is a great burden to him, but he gulps down liquor with relish. Tuka says: such people, tangled in worldly life, are born only to lose Vitthoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a portrait of the man whose appetites and his devotions are exactly reversed. Tukaram lays the contradictions side by side: lavish at court but stingy with saints, generous to the courtesan but withholding from the brahmin, tireless at business but exhausted at the threshold of worship, wide awake everywhere except at kirtan. Each pairing exposes where the heart truly leans; the man has energy and money in abundance, just never for God. The point is not to despise this man but to recognize the pattern in oneself, the way we always find time, effort, and tenderness for what we actually want. Tukaram names the cost at the end: a whole human birth spent this way is a life that lets Vitthal slip away.

GATHA 4273 The Power of the Name

The Name, warriors of Rama

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी रामाचे राऊत । वीर जुंझार बहुत ॥1॥
मनपवनतुरंग । हातीं नामाची फिरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
वारू चालवूं चहूंखुरीं । घाला घालूं यमपुरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पेणें । आह्मां वैकुंठासी जाणें॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We are the horsemen of Rama, mighty warriors in battle. The mind and breath are our steed, and the Name is the sword in our hand.

We ride our horse on all four hooves and charge straight into the city of Death. Says Tuka, our destination is Vaikuntha itself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We are the horsemen of Rama, many mighty warriors in battle. Mind and breath are our horse; the Name is the sword in our hand. We drive our steed at full gallop on all four hooves and charge straight into the city of Death. Tuka says: our resting place, the place we are going, is Vaikuntha itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the inner life into a battlefield and casts the devotees as Rama's mounted soldiers. The horse they ride is the mind joined to the breath; the weapon they wield is the Name. With these alone they charge fearlessly at Yama, the city of Death, the one enemy that defeats everyone else. The claim is bold: armed only with the Name, they ride past death itself. Their destination is not survival but Vaikuntha, the abode of God, so the war is already as good as won.

GATHA 4274 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, no caste at the feet of Hari

मराठी मूळ

पवित्र तें कुळ पावन तो देश । जेथें हरिचे दास घेती जन्म ॥1॥
कर्मधर्म त्याचे जाला नारायण । त्याचेनी पावन तिन्ही लोक ॥ध्रु.॥
वर्णअभिमानें कोण जाले पावन । ऐसें द्या सांगून मजपाशीं ॥3॥
अंत्यजादि योनि तरल्या हरिभजनें । तयाचीं पुराणें भाट जालीं ॥3॥
वैश्य तुळाधार गोरा तो कुंभार । धागा हा चांभार रोहिदास ॥4॥
कबीर मोमीन लतिब मुसलमान । शेणा न्हावी जाण विष्णुदास ॥5॥
काणोपात्र खोदु पिंजारी तो दादु । भजनीं अभेदू हरिचे पायीं ॥6॥
चोखामेळा बंका जातीचा माहार । त्यासी सर्वेश्वर ऐक्य करी ॥7॥
नामयाची जनी कोण तिचा भाव । जेवी पंढरीराव तियेसवें ॥8॥
मैराळा जनक कोण कुळ त्याचें । महिमान तयाचें काय सांगों ॥9॥
यातायातीधर्म नाहीं विष्णुदासा । निर्णय हा ऐसा वेदशास्त्रीं ॥10॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी विचारावे ग्रंथ । तारिले पतित नेणों किती ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Sacred is the family and holy is the land where the servants of Hari take birth. Narayana Himself has become their merit and dharma; through them, all three worlds are purified.

Tell me, who has ever been purified by mere pride of caste? The lowborn and all other beings have been saved by devotion to Hari; the Puranas themselves sing their praises. Tulsidhara the merchant, Gora the potter, Rohidas the cobbler.

Kabir the weaver, Latif the Muslim, Shena the barber, all servants of Vishnu. Kanopatra, Khodu the cotton-carder, Dadu: all equal at the feet of Hari in devotion.

Chokhamela and Banka, born as Mahars, yet the Lord of all made them one with Himself. Namdev's Jani, what was her status? Yet the Lord of Pandhari dined with her.

Janaka the king of Mithila, what was his lineage? How can one describe his greatness? For the servants of Vishnu there is no distinction of caste; this is the clear verdict of the Vedas and scriptures. Says Tuka, search the sacred texts; countless wrongdoers have been saved, beyond all counting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Sacred is the family, holy is the land, where the servants of Hari are born. Narayana himself becomes their duty and their merit; through them all three worlds are made pure. Tell me, who was ever made holy by pride of caste? Say it to my face. The lowborn and every kind of birth have been carried across by devotion to Hari; the Puranas themselves became their bards. Tuladhara the merchant, Gora the potter, Rohidas the cobbler. Kabir the weaver, Latif the Muslim, Shena the barber, all servants of Vishnu. Kanopatra, Khodu, Dadu the cotton-carder: all undivided at the feet of Hari in their devotion. Chokhamela and Banka, Mahars by caste, and the Lord of all made them one with himself. Namdev's Jani, what was her standing? Yet the King of Pandhari ate with her. Janaka the king, what was his lineage? How can I tell his greatness? For the servants of Vishnu there is no rule of high birth and low; this is the verdict of the Vedas and the scriptures. Tuka says: search the books yourselves. The fallen ones who have been saved are past all counting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws down a direct challenge: name one person ever sanctified by caste pride alone. He answers with a roll call of saints drawn from every rank, a merchant, a potter, a cobbler, a weaver, a Muslim, a barber, Mahars, a serving woman, even a king, and insists that devotion to Hari, not birth, is what carried each of them across. The repeated point is that at the feet of God all these distinctions dissolve; the Lord himself dined with the maidservant Jani and made the outcaste Chokhamela one with him. To anyone who would defend the hierarchy of birth, Tukaram says: go check the scriptures, the verdict is already against you. The poem lands as a flat denial that caste has any standing in the life of God.

GATHA 4275 The Power of the Name

The Name, hold to Your own pledge

मराठी मूळ

4277. नामासारिखी करणी । हे तों न दिसे त्रिभुवनीं ॥1॥
सिलंगणीचें सोनें । ठेवूं नये तें गाहाण ॥ध्रु.॥
आदित्याचीं झाडें । काय त्याचा उजड पडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । ि◌ब्रदें सोडोनियां ठेवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is nothing in the three worlds equal to the Name in its power. Gold from the touchstone should never be mortgaged.

Can the sun's trees ever cause darkness to fall? Says Tuka, O God, do not set aside Your own sacred pledges.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no act in all three worlds equal to the Name. Gold proved by the touchstone should never be pawned away. Can the sun, the tree of light, ever let darkness fall? Tuka says: O God, do not set aside Your own sacred pledges.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram declares that nothing anywhere matches the power of the Name, then guards that claim with two images. Gold once tested true is never handed over as pawn; the Name, once known to be supreme, must not be treated as a mere bargaining chip. And the sun cannot produce darkness, because giving light is simply what it is. In the same way, God has bound himself by promises of mercy that belong to his very nature. So the closing line is half plea, half reminder: keep faith with the pledges You have made, for to break them would be to act against Yourself.

GATHA 4276 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the fire that fuel never quenches

मराठी मूळ

येऊनि संसारा काय हित केलें । आयुष्य नासिलें शिश्नोदरा ॥1॥
विषय सेवितां कोण तृप्त जाला । इंधनीं निवाला अग्न कोठें ॥ध्रु.॥
देखोनी मृगजळ भांबावलीं वेडीं । विचाराची थडी न टाकिती ॥2॥
ऐसियां जीवांसी सोय न लाविसी । निष्ठ कां होसी कृपाळुवा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा अगाध पैं थोरी । सर्वांचे अंतरीं पुरलासी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having come into this world, what good have you done? You have wasted your life on the belly and its appetites. Who has ever been satisfied by indulging in sense pleasures? When has fire ever been quenched by adding fuel? Seeing a mirage, the foolish are bewildered, yet they will not take shelter on the bank of discrimination.

O merciful One, why do You not set such jivas on the right path? Why do You remain indifferent? Says Tuka, O God, unfathomable is Your greatness; You dwell within the hearts of all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have come into this world; what good have you done? You have ruined your life on the belly and below it. Who was ever made full by feeding on sense pleasures? Where has fire ever been put out by adding fuel? The foolish see a mirage and run about bewildered; they will not stand on the bank of discrimination. O merciful one, why do You not set such souls on the road? Why do You stay so unmoved? Tuka says: O God, unfathomable is Your greatness; You fill the heart of every being.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens by holding a life up to a single test: what good have you actually done with it, or did you spend it all on appetite? He answers with two plain images of an endless craving, sense pleasure that never satisfies and fire that only flares higher when you feed it. People chase these the way the deluded chase a mirage, never stepping onto the firm bank of viveka, of discrimination between the real and the unreal. Then the prayer turns to God: You are merciful and You dwell inside every heart, so why do You leave such souls wandering? The poem holds together the failure of the seeker and an appeal to the very God who lives within him to turn him around.

GATHA 4277 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, serve the all-capable Lord

मराठी मूळ

समर्थाचे सेवे बहु असे हित । विचार हृदयांत करुनी पाहें ॥1॥
वरकडोऐसा नव्हे हा समर्थ । क्षणें चि घडित सृष्टी नाशें ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याची कृपा होतां आपणा ऐसें करी । उरों नेदी उरी दारिद्राची ॥2॥
ऐशालागीं मन वोळगे अहनिशीं । तेणें वंद्य होशी ब्रह्मांदिकां ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि आहे पैं मुद्दल । सत्य माझा बोल हा चि माना ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is great benefit in serving the Capable One; reflect on this in your chitta. This Lord is not like any ordinary master; in an instant He creates and destroys the universe.

When His grace descends, He makes you equal to Himself and leaves no trace of poverty. If you devote your mind to Him day and night, you become worthy of reverence even to Brahma and the gods.

Says Tuka, this alone is the true capital; accept my words as truth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Great good lies in serving the Capable One. Turn it over in your heart and see. This Lord is not like any ordinary master; in a single moment he makes and unmakes the universe. When his grace comes, he makes you like himself; he leaves no remnant of poverty behind. Serve him with your mind day and night, and you become worthy of reverence even to Brahma and the gods. Tuka says: this alone is the real capital. Take my word for true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges the listener to weigh, in his own heart, where real benefit lies, and points to service of the all-capable Lord. He sharpens the point by contrast: an ordinary master can give only ordinary things, but this Master creates and destroys whole worlds in an instant. When such a Lord's grace falls on you, he raises you to his own state and burns away every trace of want; constant devotion makes even the gods bow to you. The closing image is mercantile: of all the wealth a person could gather, this is the only true capital. Everything else is spent and gone, but this is what actually pays.

GATHA 4278 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the bitterness gone from the fruit

मराठी मूळ

पिकलिये सेंदे कडुपण गेलें । तैसें आह्मां केलें पांडुरंगें ॥1॥
काम क्रोध लोभ निमाले ठायीं चि । सर्व आनंदाची सृष्ट जाली ॥ध्रु.॥
आठव नाठव गेले भावाभाव । जाला स्वयमेव पांडुरंग ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भाग्य या नांवें ह्मणीजे । संसारीं जन्मीजे या चि लागीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As the bitterness leaves a ripened wood-apple, so has Panduranga transformed us. Lust, anger, and greed have perished where they stood; all creation has become nothing but bliss.

Memory and forgetfulness, like and dislike, have all dissolved; Panduranga Himself has become everything. Says Tuka, this is what true fortune means; it is for this alone that one should take birth in this world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As the bitterness leaves the wood-apple once it ripens, so Panduranga has done with us. Lust, anger, and greed died on the spot. Everything became a world of pure bliss. Remembering and forgetting are gone, and liking and disliking with them. Panduranga himself has become everything. Tuka says: this is what should be called good fortune. It is for this alone that one should be born into this world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the change God has worked in him through one homely image: the wood-apple that is bitter while green turns sweet of itself once it ripens. So with him, lust, anger, and greed did not have to be fought down one by one; they simply died where they stood as everything turned to bliss. The pairs the mind lives by, remembering and forgetting, liking and disliking, fall away too, and Panduranga alone remains as all that is. Tukaram names this state the only thing that truly deserves to be called good fortune. A human birth, he says, is worth taking for this and nothing less.

GATHA 4279 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the human birth and the Name

मराठी मूळ

येऊनि नरदेहा विचारावें सार । धरावा पैं धीर भजनमागाअ ॥1॥
चंचळ चित्तासी ठेवूनियां ठायीं । संतांचिये पायीं लीन व्हावें ॥ध्रु.॥
नामापरतें जगीं साधन सोपें नाहीं । आवडीनें गाई सर्वकाळ ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे धन्य वंश त्या नराचा । ऐसा निश्चयाचा मेरु जाला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having obtained a human body, seek out the essence. Hold firm to the path of devotion.

Steady the restless mind and become humble at the feet of the saints. There is no easier spiritual practice in this world than the Name; sing it with love at all times.

Says Tuka, blessed is the lineage of that person who has become as firm as Mount Meru in this resolve.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have come into a human body; now seek out the essence. Hold firm; take the path of devotion. Set the restless mind down in one place and grow humble at the feet of the saints. In all the world there is no practice easier than the Name; sing it with love at every hour. Tuka says: blessed is the family of the one who has grown as firm in this resolve as Mount Meru.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram treats the human birth as a rare chance that must be used to find what is essential, not squandered. The path he names has three plain steps: take up devotion and hold steady, still the wandering mind and fix it in one place, and bow low at the feet of the saints. He then sets the Name above every other practice, not because it is lofty but because it is the easiest thing in the world, available to anyone who will sing it with love at all times. The closing blessing rests on firmness: the one who becomes as immovable as Mount Meru in this resolve sanctifies not only himself but his whole line.

GATHA 4280 Renunciation

Renunciation, the devotee leaves karma behind

मराठी मूळ

षडधसीं रांधिलें खापरीं घातलें । चोहोटा ठेविलें मध्यरात्रीं ॥1॥
त्यासी सदाचारी लोक न शिवती । श्वानासी निश्चती फावलें तें ॥ध्रु.॥
तैसें दुष्टकर्म जालें हरिभक्ता । त्यागिली ममता विषयासक्ति ॥2॥
इहपरलोक उभय विटाळ । मानिती केवळ हरिचे दास ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा आवडे हे सेवा । अनुदिनीं व्हावा पूर्ण हेतु ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Food cooked in the six forbidden ways, placed in a broken pot, left at the crossroads at midnight: no virtuous person will touch it, but a dog surely finds it and eats it freely. Just so, when one becomes a devotee of Hari, all sinful karma is abandoned.

The pleasures of this world and the next are both considered defilement by the true servants of Hari. Says Tuka, O God, may this service be dear to You, and may my devotion be fulfilled day after day.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Food cooked in the six forbidden ways, dropped into a broken pot, left at the crossroads at midnight: no decent person will touch it, but a dog comes upon it and eats it freely. Just so, once a man becomes a devotee of Hari, his evil deeds are dropped behind him. He gives up the grip of attachment and the clinging to pleasures. This world and the next, both, the servants of Hari count as defilement. Tuka says: O God, may this service be dear to You, and may my whole purpose be fulfilled day after day.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses a stark image to show what happens to sin once a person turns to God. Impure food set out at midnight is refused by everyone respectable and left for a stray dog; in the same way, the devotee simply walks away from his evil karma and lets it fall to whatever will take it. With it he lets go of attachment and of the hunger for sense pleasures. He goes further: the true servant of Hari treats both the rewards of this world and the heavens of the next as defilement, wanting neither. The poem ends not in boasting but in prayer, asking that this very renunciation be pleasing to God and that the devotee's one aim be fulfilled each day.

GATHA 4281 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the seed that cannot sprout again

मराठी मूळ

बीज भाजुनि केली लाही । आह्मां जन्ममरण नाहीं॥1॥
आकाराशी कैंचा ठाव । देहप्रत्यक्ष जाला देव ॥ध्रु.॥
साकरेचा नव्हे उस । आह्मां कैंचा गर्भवास ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे औघा योग । सर्वां घटीं पांडुरंग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The seed has been roasted into puffed grain; for us there is no more birth and death. Where can form find a foothold when the body itself has become God? Sugar cannot return to sugarcane; how then can we return to the womb? Says Tuka, by the common path of yoga, Panduranga dwells in every being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The seed has been roasted into puffed grain; for us there is no more birth and death. Where can form find a place to stand, when the body itself has plainly become God? Sugar can never go back to being sugarcane. How then can there be any womb left for us? Tuka says: this is the whole of yoga. Panduranga is in every vessel.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram states the fruit of his realization through two images of an irreversible change. A seed roasted into puffed grain can never sprout again, and sugar can never turn back into the cane it came from; in the same way, for him birth and death are finished, with no womb left to return to. He pushes the claim as far as it goes: form itself has nowhere to stand, because this very body has plainly become God. Then he closes by widening it past himself, saying this is the whole of yoga, the one thing it all comes to. The same Panduranga he has merged into dwells, he says, in every single being.

GATHA 4282 Sacred Stories

Praise of Pundalik, God brought to earth

मराठी मूळ

वैकुंठींचा देव आणिला भूतळा । धन्य तो आगळा पुंडलीक ॥1॥
धारिष्ट धैर्याचा वरिष्ठ भक्तांचा । पवित्र पुण्याचा एकनिष्ठ ॥ध्रु.॥
पितृसेवा पुण्यें लाधला निधान । ब्रह्म सनातन अंगसंगें ॥2॥
अंगसंगें रंगें क्रीडा करी जाणा । ज्या घरीं पाहुणा वैकुंठींचा ॥3॥
धन्य त्याची शक्ति भक्तीची हे ख्याति । तुका ह्मणे मुक्ति पायीं लोळे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The God of Vaikuntha was brought down to earth. Blessed beyond all others is Pundalik.

He is the foremost in fortitude and patience, the greatest among devotees, singularly devoted and holy in merit. Through the merit of serving his parents, he attained the supreme treasure: the eternal Brahman, close as his own body.

In that intimacy, God plays and delights, for Pundalik's home hosts the Guest from Vaikuntha. Blessed is his power, renowned is his devotion.

Says Tuka, even liberation rolls at his feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The God of Vaikuntha was brought down to earth. Blessed above all others is Pundalik. He is the foremost in fortitude and patience, the greatest among devotees, single in his devotion, holy in his merit. By the merit of serving his parents he won the supreme treasure: the eternal Brahman, close as his own body. In that closeness God plays and delights, for in his house stays the Guest from Vaikuntha. Blessed is his strength; his devotion is renowned. Tuka says: even liberation rolls at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising Pundalik, the devotee whose story stands behind Pandhari. By staying with his parents and serving them, Pundalik drew the Lord of Vaikuntha down to earth, where he waits even now on the brick. The poem names what made this possible: steady patience, single devotion, simple service of mother and father. Because he held God that close, in his own home, the highest goal that others strain for came to him on its own. Tuka ends with the measure of it: liberation itself, the thing seekers chase, lies down at the feet of one whose love was that plain and that whole.

GATHA 4283 Worldly Metaphors

The musk deer, worth unrecognized

मराठी मूळ

मृगाचिये अंगीं कस्तुरीचा वास । असे ज्याचा त्यास नसे ठाव ॥1॥
भाग्यवंत घेती वेचूनियां मोलें । भारवाही मेले वाहतां ओझें ॥ध्रु.॥
चंद्रामृतें तृप्तपारणें चकोरा । भ्रमरासी चारा सुगंधाचा ॥2॥
अधिकारी येथें घेती हातवटी । परीक्षावंता दृष्टी रत्न जैसें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे काय अंधिळया हातीं । दिले जैसें मोतीं वांयां जाय ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The musk deer carries the fragrance of musk in its own body, yet it does not know where the scent resides. The fortunate purchase it at great price, while the beast of burden dies carrying the load.

The moon's nectar satisfies the chakor bird; the bee feeds on fragrance alone. Only those with the right capacity grasp the skill, just as a jeweler recognizes a gem.

Says Tuka, what use is it to place a pearl in the hand of a blind man? It only goes to waste.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The musk deer carries the scent of musk in its own body, yet it does not know where the scent lives. The fortunate buy it at a high price; the pack animal dies carrying its load. The moon's nectar fills the chakor bird; the bee feeds on fragrance alone. Those with the right capacity take up the skill, the way a jeweler knows a gem at sight. Tuka says: what use is a pearl placed in a blind man's hand? It only goes to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying that the treasure can be carried and still be missed. The deer holds musk in its own body but does not know it, just as a soul can hold God within and never sense it. Worth answers only to capacity: the fortunate pay any price for the scent, while the beast of burden dies under a load it cannot value, and only the jeweler's eye knows the gem. The point turns back on the listener, not against the deer or the blind man: the Name and the Self are here, near as your own body, but they reach only the one ready to receive them. To stay unready is to be the hand that lets the pearl fall.

GATHA 4284 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage to Pandhari, the prayer to not return

मराठी मूळ

आलिया संसारीं देखिली पंढरी । कीतिन महाद्वारीं वानूं तुझी ॥1॥
पताकांचे भार नामाचे गजर । देखिल्या संसार सफळ जाला ॥ध्रु.॥
साधुसंतांचिया धन्य जाल्या भेटी । सांपडली लुटी मोक्षाची हे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां हें चि पैं मागणें । पुढती नाहीं येणें संसारासी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having come into this world, I have seen Pandhari. I sing Your glory at the great gateway.

Seeing the towering flags and hearing the resounding chant of the Name, this worldly life has become fruitful. Blessed were the meetings with saints and holy ones; the treasure of liberation was found.

Says Tuka, this alone is my prayer now: may I never have to return to this world again.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Having come into this world, I have seen Pandhari. At the great gateway I sing your glory. The weight of the banners, the roar of the Name: seeing this, my worldly life has borne fruit. Blessed were the meetings with saints and holy ones; the treasure of liberation was found. Tuka says: now this alone is my prayer, that I never come back to this world again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram counts his birth worthwhile only because it brought him to Pandhari. The flags over the temple and the thunder of the Name turn an ordinary life into one that has reached its purpose, and the company of saints he met along the way is itself the treasure others call liberation. Having found this, he wants one thing more, and it is not more of the world. His closing prayer is to be done with rebirth altogether: let this visit be the last arrival, so there is no further return to suffering. The pilgrimage is not a stop on the road of life; it is the whole point of having lived.

GATHA 4285 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false ascetic

मराठी मूळ

ऐसे कैसे जाले भोंदू । कर्म करोनि ह्मणति साधु॥1॥
अंगा लावूनियां राख । डोळे झांकुनी करिती पाप ॥ध्रु.॥
दावुनि वैराग्याची कळा । भोगी विषयाचा सोहळा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांगों किती । जळो तयांची संगती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How have such imposters come to be, performing rituals and calling themselves saints? They smear ash on their bodies and close their eyes, yet commit sin. They display the art of renunciation while enjoying the pleasures of the senses.

Says Tuka, how much more can I say? Cursed be their company.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How did such frauds come to be, doing the rites and calling themselves saints? They smear ash on their bodies and shut their eyes, yet they go on sinning. They put on the show of renunciation while they feast on the pleasures of the senses. Tuka says: how much can I say? Let their company burn.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing the gap between the costume of holiness and the conduct underneath it. The ash, the closed eyes, the performed detachment are all on display, while the senses are still being indulged in private. He is not mocking renunciation itself; he is naming the pattern of using its signs as cover for the same old appetites. The warning lands on the listener too: examine whether your own practice is real or a presentation. He refuses such company outright, because nearness to a fraud quietly teaches the fraud.

GATHA 4286 Faith and Trust

Faith, indifferent to praise or blame

मराठी मूळ

कोणी निंदा कोणी वंदा । आह्मां स्वहिताचा धंदा॥1॥
काय तुह्मांसी गरज । आह्मी भजूं पंढरिराज ॥ध्रु.॥
तुह्मांसारिखें चालावें । तेव्हां स्वहिता मुकावें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हो कां कांहीं । गळ दिला विठ्ठल पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let some slander us, let some praise us; our business is our own spiritual welfare. What concern is it of yours? We worship the Lord of Pandhari.

If we were to follow your ways, we would lose our own good. Says Tuka, let whatever may happen; I have cast my anchor at Vitthal's feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let some slander us, let some praise us; our work is our own good. What is it to you? We worship the Lord of Pandhari. If we walked your way, we would lose our own welfare. Tuka says: let whatever comes, come; I have dropped my anchor at Vitthal's feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the opinions of others aside as none of his concern. Praise and blame are treated as the same noise, because his real business is his own spiritual good, kept through worship of the Lord of Pandhari. To bend his path to please the crowd would be to trade away that good, and he refuses the bargain. The closing image is the firm one: he has cast his anchor at Vitthal's feet, so the surface weather of approval or insult cannot move him. Whatever happens, he stays held.

GATHA 4287 Prayers

Prayer, holding God to his pledge

मराठी मूळ

तुझे नामें दिनानाथा । आह्मी उघडा घातला माथा॥1॥
आतां न धरावें दुरी । बोल येईल ब्रीदावरी ॥ध्रु.॥
पतित होतों ऐसा ठावा । आधीं कां न विचारावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझे पायीं । आह्मी मिरास केली पाहीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Lord of the lowly, in Your Name I have laid bare my head. Do not keep me at a distance now, or it will reflect on Your own pledges.

You knew I was a wrongdoer beforehand; why did You not consider that before? Says Tuka, I have staked my claim at Your feet; know this well.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Lord of the lowly, in your Name I have laid my head bare before you. Do not keep me far off now, or the blame will fall on your own promise. You knew I was a fallen one; why did you not weigh that beforehand? Tuka says: at your feet I have made my claim; see this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws himself wholly on God's mercy and then presses the claim with surprising boldness. He has surrendered, head bared, trusting the title that names God the protector of the lowly. So he argues that to turn him away now would stain God's own reputation, the very pledge that drew him. His sharp question, why did you not consider my failings before accepting me, holds the Lord to the deal: you took me knowing what I was. The closing line states his right outright; the devotee's helplessness has become his standing ground, and he refuses to let God off the hook.

GATHA 4288 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, the eye of pure consciousness

मराठी मूळ

रक्त श्वेत कृष्ण पीत प्रभा भिन्न । चिन्मय अंजन सुदलें डोळां ॥1॥
तेणें अंजनगुणें दिव्यदृष्ट जाली । कल्पना निवाली द्वैताद्वैत ॥ध्रु.॥
देशकालवस्तुभेद मावळला । आत्मा निर्वाळला विश्वाकार ॥2॥
न जाला प्रपंच आहे परब्रह्म । अहंसोहं ब्रह्म आकळलें ॥3॥
तत्त्वमसि विद्या ब्रह्मानंद सांग । तें चि जाला अंगें तुका आतां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Red, white, black, yellow: the lights appear different, yet the collyrium of pure consciousness has been applied to my eyes. By the virtue of that collyrium, divine sight has arisen; the duality of dual and nondual has been extinguished.

The distinctions of place, time, and object have dissolved; the Self has been revealed in the form of the universe. The world has not come into being; what exists is the supreme Brahman.

The truth of 'I am That' has been grasped. Says Tuka, the wisdom of 'Thou art That,' the bliss of Brahman, has now become his very being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Red, white, black, yellow: the lights look separate, yet the collyrium of pure consciousness has been laid on my eyes. By the power of that collyrium a divine seeing has risen; the very split of dual and nondual has gone quiet. The differences of place, time, and thing have set like the sun; the Self stands clear as the form of the whole universe. The world has not come into being; what is, is the supreme Brahman. 'I am That' is grasped: aham so'ham, I am Brahman. The knowing of 'Thou art That,' the bliss of Brahman, is whole. Tuka says: that very thing Tuka has now become, in his own being.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is Tukaram reporting a state of realization in the plain words of nondual seeing. Once the eye is anointed with pure consciousness, the many colored lights are seen as one; even the quarrel between dual and nondual falls silent, because both were ideas the new sight no longer needs. The ordinary frame of place, time, and separate objects dissolves, and the Self shows itself as the form of everything. He states the radical claim without softening it: the world never truly arose; only the supreme Brahman is, and the great sayings 'I am That' and 'Thou art That' are no longer phrases to learn but his very being now.

GATHA 4289 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the man without discipline

मराठी मूळ

नीत सांडोनि अवनीत चाले । भंडउभंड भलतें चि बोले ॥1॥
त्यांत कोणाचें काय बा गेलें । ज्याचें तेणें अनहित केलें ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्यासि वंदावें त्यासी निंदी । मैत्री सांडोनि होतसे दंदी॥2॥
आन यातीचे संगती लागे । संतसज्जनामध्यें ना वागे॥3॥
केल्याविण पराक्रम सांगे । जेथें सांगे तेथें चि भीक मागे ॥4॥
करी आपुला चि संभ्रम । परि पुढें कठीण फार यम ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं नित्यनेम । चित्तीं न धरी तो अधम ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Abandoning what is right, he walks the path of wrong. He speaks recklessly without restraint.

In this, whose loss is it? Each one has harmed only himself. He slanders those who deserve reverence and, forsaking friendship, picks quarrels.

He keeps the company of lowly people but will not move among saints and good folk. He boasts of feats he never performed, yet begs at the very place he brags.

He makes a great show of himself, but ahead lies the terrible reckoning of Yama. Says Tuka, he who holds no daily discipline in his chitta is truly the lowest of all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He drops what is right and walks the crooked way; he talks loosely, says whatever he likes. And whose loss is it? Each such man has only harmed himself. He slanders the one he ought to honor, and casting off friendship, he picks fights. He keeps the company of low people and will not move among saints and good folk. He brags of feats he never did, and he begs in the very place where he boasts. He makes a great show of himself, but ahead waits the hard reckoning of Yama. Tuka says: the man who holds no daily discipline in his heart is the lowest of all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a portrait of the undisciplined man and lets the consequences speak. The loose tongue, the slander of those worthy of respect, the picking of quarrels, the boasting that collapses into begging: each is a way of harming no one so much as himself. He chooses low company and shuns the saints whose nearness might have steadied him, so nothing in his life pulls upward. The poem aims at the pattern, not at any one person to despise: a life with no fixed practice held in the heart drifts, and Tuka names the hard reckoning that waits to call it the lowest state. The remedy is implied in the charge: keep some daily discipline, and keep the company that holds it.

GATHA 4290 Renunciation

Renunciation, beyond honor and shame

मराठी मूळ

मानूं कांहीं आह्मी आपुलिया स्वइच्छा । नाहीं तरि सरिसा रंकरावो ॥1॥
आपुल्या उदास आहों देहभावीं । मग लज्जाजीवीं चाड नाहीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खेळों आह्मी सहजलीळे । ह्मणोनी निराळे सुख दुःख ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If we honored our own desires, then rich and poor would be equal. We are indifferent to the sense of the body; we have no craving for honor or the fear of shame.

Says Tuka, we play in the natural ease of being; therefore joy and sorrow stand apart from us.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If we lived by our own wishes, then rich and poor would stand as one to us. We are indifferent to the sense of the body, so we have no greed for honor and no fear of shame. Tuka says: we play in the natural ease of being, and so joy and sorrow stand apart from us.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the freedom of one who has let go of the body's claims. When the sense of being this body falls away, the difference between rich and poor loses its grip, and with it both the hunger for honor and the dread of disgrace. What others spend their lives managing simply does not move him. He calls his way of living a play in the natural ease of being, sahaja, effortless and unforced. From that ground the pairs that rule ordinary life, pleasure and pain, gain and loss, no longer reach him; they stand apart while he plays free.

GATHA 4291 The Saints

Saints, reverence for the one who lives his words

मराठी मूळ

बोले तैसा चाले । त्याचीं वंदीन पाउलें ॥1॥
अंगें झाडीन अंगण । त्याचें दासत्व करीन ॥ध्रु.॥
त्याचा होईन किंकर। उभा ठाकेन जोडोनि कर ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देव । त्याचे चरणीं माझा भाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who walks as he talks, I will bow at his feet. I will sweep his courtyard with my own body and serve him as his servant.

I will become his attendant, standing before him with folded hands. Says Tuka, such a one is God Himself; my devotion rests at his feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who walks as he talks, I will bow at his feet. With my own body I will sweep his courtyard; I will be his servant. I will become his attendant, standing before him with folded hands. Tuka says: such a one is God; my heart rests at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets a single test for the saint: that he lives what he speaks, word and deed as one. To such a person he offers not polite respect but full service, sweeping the courtyard with his own body, standing ready with folded hands like a servant. The lowliness is the point; he wants to serve, not be served. The closing line says why the bowing is no exaggeration: in the one whose life and teaching are one, God himself is present, so Tuka's whole devotion rightly rests at his feet.

GATHA 4292 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, attention held while the hands work

मराठी मूळ

पाण्या निघाली गुजरी । मन ठेविलें दो घागरीं । चाले मोकळ्या पदरीं । परी लक्ष तेथें ॥1॥
वावडी उडाली अंबरीं। हातीं धरोनियां दोरी । दिसे दुरिच्या दुरी । परी लक्ष तेथें॥ध्रु.॥
चोर चोरी करी । ठेवी वनांतरीं । वर्ततसे चराचरीं । परी लक्ष तेथें ॥2॥
व्यभिचारिणी नारी । घराश्रम करी । परपुरुष जिव्हारीं । परी लक्ष तेथें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे असों भलतिये व्यापारीं। लक्ष सर्वेश्वरीं । चुकों नेदी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A water-carrier woman goes to fetch water, her mind fixed on the two pots on her head. She walks with her sari loose, yet her attention is there.

A kite soars high in the sky, held by a string in the hand. It appears far, far away, yet the attention is there.

A thief commits theft and hides his loot in the forest. He moves about in the world, yet his attention is there.

An unfaithful woman runs her household, but her chitta belongs to another man, and her attention is there. Says Tuka, let us be engaged in any occupation; let our attention never stray from the Lord of all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The water-carrier woman sets out for water, her mind kept on the two pots on her head. Her sari hangs loose as she walks, but her attention is there. The kite flies up into the sky, the string held in the hand. It looks far, far away, but the attention is there. The thief commits his theft and hides the loot in the forest; he moves about in the world, but his attention is there. The unfaithful woman runs her household, but her heart is with another man, and her attention is there. Tuka says: let us be busy in whatever work; let the attention stay on the Lord of all, and never lose it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching how to keep God in mind through a working life. He gathers four ordinary figures, the woman balancing pots, the flyer holding the kite string, the thief minding his hidden loot, the unfaithful wife, and finds in each the same trait: the hands are busy with one thing while the attention stays fixed elsewhere, unbroken. He uses even the thief and the adulteress without flinching, because the lesson is about the power of held attention, not about their morality. The point lands on the seeker: you do not need to abandon your work; you need only fix your attention on the Lord of all and keep it there as steadily as these people keep theirs. Remembrance, not idleness, is the practice.

GATHA 4293 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari greater than every holy place

मराठी मूळ

जनाचिया मना जावें कासियेसी । माझी वाराणसी पांडुरंग ॥1॥
तेथें भागीरथी येथें भीमरथी । अधिक ह्मणती चंद्रभागा॥ध्रु.॥
तेथें माधवराव येथें यादवराज । जाणोनियां भाव पुंडलिकाचा ॥2॥
विष्णुपद गया ते चि येथें आहे । प्रत्यक्ष हें पाहे विटेवरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हे चि प्रपंच उद्धरी । आतां पंढरपुरी घडो बापा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let the minds of the people go to Kashi if they wish. My Varanasi is Panduranga.

There flows the Ganges; here flows the Bhimrathi. The Chandrabhaga, they say, is even greater.

There is Madhavarao; here is Yadavaraj, who recognized Pundalik's devotion. The Vishnupada of Gaya is right here; see it for yourself on the brick.

Says Tuka, this alone will deliver our worldly existence; may a visit to Pandharpur be granted, dear father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let the minds of people go to Kashi if they want. My Varanasi is Panduranga. There flows the Bhagirathi; here flows the Bhimrathi, and they say the Chandrabhaga is greater still. There is Madhavarao; here is Yadavaraj, who knew the love of Pundalik. The Vishnupada of Gaya is right here; see it with your own eyes on the brick. Tuka says: this alone will lift our worldly life; now, dear father, let a visit to Pandharpur be granted to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the pull of the famous pilgrimage places by setting them all aside for Pandhari. Let others travel to Kashi and Gaya; his Varanasi is Panduranga himself, his sacred river the Chandrabhaga, his holy site the brick where the Lord stands. He matches each great place point for point and claims his own is greater, because here God is present in plain sight, not merely commemorated. The reason he gives is Pundalik, whose love drew the Lord to this very spot. So he ends not with more travel but with a plain prayer: this place alone will carry his worldly life across, so let him simply be granted the visit to Pandharpur.

GATHA 4294 Renunciation

Driving off shame, Rama my master

मराठी मूळ

नको येऊं लाजे होय तूं परती । भजों दे श्रीपती सखा माझा ॥1॥
तुझे संगतीनें मोटा जाला घात । जालों मी अंकित दुर्जनाचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे रांडे घेइन काठीवरी । धनी सहाकारी राम केला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not come, O shame, turn back. Let me worship my friend Shripati in peace.

By your company, great harm has been done; I have become enslaved to the wicked. Says Tuka, O wretched shame, I will take a stick to you; I have made Rama my master and protector.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not come near me, shame. Turn back. Let me worship Shripati, my friend, in peace. Your company has done me great harm. Because of you I became the servant of the wicked. Tuka says: I will take a stick to you, you wretch. I have made Rama my master and my helper.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns on the social shame that keeps him from open worship and treats it as a person to be driven out. He says that shame, the fear of how others see him, has been ruinous: by obeying it he ended up enslaved to bad company instead of serving God. So he refuses it outright and even threatens it with a stick, naming Rama as his real master and protector. The point is that worry about reputation is itself the wicked master that must be beaten back before one can love God freely.

GATHA 4295 Worldly Metaphors

Devotion as a loan, settle the account

मराठी मूळ

भक्तिऋण घेतलें माझें । चरण गाहाण आहेत तुझे॥1॥
प्रेम व्याज देई हरी । माझा हिशेब लवकरी करीं ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें मी न सोडीं धन । नित्य करितों कीर्त्तन ॥2॥
तुझें नाम आहे खत । सुखें करी पंचाईत ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे गरुडध्वजा । यासी साक्ष श्रीगुरुराजा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have taken a loan of devotion, and Your feet are my collateral. Pay me the interest of divine love, O Hari; settle my account quickly.

I will not let go of my wealth; daily I perform kirtan. Your Name is my written bond; hold the tribunal at Your pleasure.

Says Tuka, O Lord of the Garuda banner, the Guru Himself is witness to this.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have taken a loan, and the loan is mine. Your feet are the pledge I hold against it. Pay me the interest, Hari: pay me in love. Settle my account quickly. I will not give up my wealth; every day I sing your kirtan. Your Name is the written bond. Hold the court whenever you please. Tuka says: Lord of the Garuda banner, the Guru himself is witness to this.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his claim on God in the language of a moneylender's ledger. The loan is his devotion; the collateral he holds is God's own feet; the interest he demands is divine love, and he wants the account settled now. His daily kirtan is the capital he refuses to surrender, and God's Name is the signed bond that makes the debt legally binding. By turning love into a contract with the Guru as witness, he makes grace something he can rightfully insist on rather than only beg for.

GATHA 4296 Sacred Stories

The Lord who rescued his devotees

मराठी मूळ

फिरविलें देऊळ जगामाजी ख्याति । नामदेवा हातीं दुध प्याला ॥1॥
भरियेली हुंडी नरसी महत्याची । धनाजीजाटाचींसेतें पेरी ॥ध्रु.॥
मिराबाईसाटीं घेतों विष प्याला । दामाजीचा जाला पाढेवार ॥2॥
कबीराचे मागीं विणूं लागे सेले । उठविलें मूल कुंभाराचें ॥3॥
आतां तुह्मी दया करा पंढरिराया । तुका विनवी पायां नमीतसे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He turned the temple around, making Namdev famous throughout the world, and drank milk from Namdev's hands. He honored the promissory note of Narsi Mehta and sowed the fields of Dhanaji Jat.

For Mirabai's sake He drank poison. He became Damaji's guarantor.

He wove cloth for Kabir and revived the potter Gora's dead child. Now, O Lord of Pandhari, show us the same mercy.

Tuka bows at Your feet in supplication.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He turned the temple around and made Namdev famous through the world; he drank the milk from Namdev's hand. He paid the promissory note for Narsi Mehta, and he sowed the fields of Dhanaji Jat. For Mirabai's sake he took the poison and drank it. He became Damaji's surety. He wove cloth at Kabir's loom and brought the potter's dead child back to life. Now show us the same mercy, Lord of Pandhari. Tuka begs, bowing at your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lists the famous rescues God performed for earlier saints and then asks plainly for the same. Each line names a debt God paid or a danger he turned aside: he honored Narsi Mehta's bond, drank the poison meant to kill Mirabai, stood surety for Damaji, wove cloth at Kabir's loom, revived the potter's child. The piling up of stories is an argument: a Lord with this record cannot refuse the one bowing now. Tukaram puts himself in that same line of helpless devotees and asks Panduranga to act in character once more.

GATHA 4297 Prayers

Plea for grace, do not withdraw it

मराठी मूळ

हे चि वेळ देवा नका मागें घेऊं । तुह्मांविण जाऊं शरण कोणा ॥1॥
नारायणा ये रे पाहें विचारून । तुजविण कोण आहे मज ॥ध्रु.॥
रात्रहि दिवस तुज आठवूनि आहें । पाहातोसी काये सत्त्व माझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे किती येऊं काकुलती । कांहीं माया चित्तीं येऊं द्यावी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God, do not withdraw this moment of grace. Without You, to whom shall I go for refuge? O Narayana, come, consider this: who do I have besides You? Day and night I remember You ceaselessly.

What are You testing in my sincerity? Says Tuka, how many more times must I plead? Let some compassion arise in Your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is the very moment, God; do not take it back. Without you, to whom would I go for refuge? Come, Narayana, and think it over: who do I have besides you? Day and night I remember you, without stopping. What are you weighing in me? What are you testing? Tuka says: how many more times must I plead? Let a little tenderness for me come into your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches God in a moment of grace and begs him not to withdraw it. He has nowhere else to turn, so he reasons with God directly: if there is no other refuge, why hold back? He has kept God in mind night and day, and he cannot understand what is still being tested or weighed in him. The poem is the prayer of someone worn out by waiting, asking not for proof but simply for a little mercy to rise in God's heart.

GATHA 4298 Worldly Metaphors

The crooked stay crooked, harming the good

मराठी मूळ

इंद्रावणा केलें साकरेचें आळें । न सांडी वेगळें कडुपण ॥1॥
कावळ्याचें पिलूं कौतुकें पोशिलें । न राहे उगलें विष्ठेविण ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षेम देतां अंगा गांधेलाची पोळी । करवी नादाळी महाशब्द ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे न होती ते भले । घालिती ते घाले साधुजना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if you raise the bitter gourd in a bed of sugar, it will not give up its bitterness. Even if you lovingly raise a crow's chick, it will not stop eating filth.

If you embrace a branded bull, it will kick and make a terrible noise. Says Tuka, those who are not truly good will not become so; they will only cause harm to the saintly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Raise a bitter gourd in a bed of sugar; it will not give up its bitterness. Lovingly raise a crow's chick; it still will not leave off eating filth. Embrace a branded bull and it kicks and bellows a fearful noise. Tuka says: such people do not turn good. They only strike blows at the holy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses three plain images to say that some natures will not be reformed by kindness. The bitter gourd keeps its bitterness even when grown in sugar; the crow's chick still feeds on filth no matter how well it is raised; the vicious bull kicks even at an embrace. He applies this to people whose hearts are set against goodness: gentleness does not soften them, and they repay the saintly with injury. The point is sober rather than contemptuous, a warning to recognize a hardened pattern and not expect it to change of itself.

GATHA 4299 Worldly Metaphors

What cannot be forced, no effort makes Brahman

मराठी मूळ

मुसळाचें धनु नव्हे हो सर्वथा । पाषाण पिळतां रस कैंचा ॥1॥
वांझे बाळा जैसें दुध नाहीं स्तनीं । गारा त्या अधणीं न सिजती ॥ध्रु.॥
नवखंड पृथ्वी पिके मृगजळें । डोंगर भेटे बळें असमानासी ॥2॥
नैश्वर ब्रह्म तेव्हां होय ब्रह्म । तुका ह्मणे श्रम करुनी काय ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A pestle can never become a bow. You cannot extract juice by crushing a stone.

A barren woman has no milk in her breasts; pebbles will not soften in boiling water. The whole earth will not be irrigated by a mirage, nor will a mountain meet the sky by force.

When the perishable body becomes Brahman, then it truly becomes Brahman. Says Tuka, until then, what is the use of laboring?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A pestle can never be a bow. You cannot squeeze juice out of a stone. A barren woman has no milk in her breast. Pebbles will not soften, however long you boil them. The mirage will not water the nine lands of the earth, and no force makes a mountain touch the sky. Only when the perishable becomes Brahman is it truly Brahman. Tuka says: until then, what is all this labor worth?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up impossible things to expose effort that cannot reach its goal. A pestle will not become a bow, a stone yields no juice, a mirage waters nothing: each is a thing trying to be what it is not. He turns this on spiritual striving itself. The perishable self becomes Brahman only when it actually becomes Brahman, by grace and realization, not by piling up technique. Mere labor without that inner change is as futile as boiling pebbles soft, and he asks the reader to see this clearly rather than trust effort alone.

GATHA 4300 Worldly Metaphors

Robbery at the deathbed, only the Name stands

मराठी मूळ

धन्या आतां काय करूं । माझें तान्हुलें लेकरूं॥1॥
धन्या अवचित मरण आलें । मज कोणासी निरविलें ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें दारवंड नका पाडूं । त्याचे हात पाय तोडूं ॥2॥
एके हातीं धरली दाढी । घे कु÷हाडी दुजे हातीं ॥3॥
येरी घाव घालूं पाहे । तंव तो उठोनि उभा राहे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघीं चोरें । सेकी रामनाम सोइरें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A woman cries out, 'Husband, what shall I do? My little infant child!' She laments that death has come suddenly and wonders to whom she has been entrusted. She begs the intruders not to break down her door and threatens to break their hands and feet.

One holds the old man by his beard while the other raises an axe. Just as the blow is about to fall, the old man rises and stands.

Says Tuka, in the end, all these thieves are vanquished; the Name of Rama is the only true friend.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Husband, what shall I do now? My little nursing child! Husband, death has come without warning. To whom have you left me? Do not break down my door, she cries; I will cut off their hands and their feet. One robber grips the old man by the beard. The other lifts the axe in his hand. As the blow is about to fall, the old man rises and stands up. Tuka says: in the end all these are thieves. At the last, only the Name of Rama is your kin.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram stages a household robbery as a picture of how death and attachment plunder a person. The wife wails over her infant and her sudden widowhood; the thieves break in, seize the old man, and raise the axe. The frightened defenses and the bonds of family are shown to be helpless at the moment of crisis. He names the lesson at the end: everything we lean on, possessions, kin, even the body, behaves like a thief in the final hour, and the one true relative who stays is the Name of Rama.

GATHA 4301 The Necessity of Experience

Merged in the formless, no ego left

मराठी मूळ

निरंजनीं आह्मीं बांधियेलें घर । निराकारीं निरंतर राहिलों आह्मी ॥1॥
निराभासीं पूर्ण जालों समरस । खंड ऐक्यास पावलों आह्मी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां नाहीं अहंकार । जालों तदाकार नित्य शुद्ध ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We have built our home in the stainless void. We dwell forever in the formless.

We have become fully merged in the untainted essence, attaining the wholeness of unity. Says Tuka, now there is no ego left. We have become one with That, eternally pure.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We have built our house in the stainless void. We live there always, in the formless. We are wholly merged in the unblemished essence; we have reached the unbroken oneness. Tuka says: now there is no ego left. We have become one with That, forever pure.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the settled end of the path as a dwelling rather than a passing experience. He has made his home in the formless, stainless ground and stays there without leaving. There he is fully merged into the pure essence, no longer a separate self standing apart from it. The closing claim is the heart of it: the ego that did the seeking is simply gone, and what remains is unbroken oneness with That, eternally pure.

GATHA 4302 Ecstasy and Joy

Lulled to sleep in the Self, grace bestowed

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगें सत्य केला अनुग्रह । निरसोनि संदेह बुद्धभेद॥1॥
जीवशिवा सेज रचिली आनंदें । औठावे पदीं आरोहण॥2॥
निजीं निजरूपीं निजविला तुका । अनुहाते बाळका हलरु गाती ॥3॥
माझ्या विठोबाचें वर्म आहे दुरी । कैंची तेथें उरी देहभावा ॥ध्रु.॥
यज्ञ याग जप तप अनुष्ठान । राहे ध्येय ध्यान आलीकडे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे होय उपरति चित्ता । अंगीं सप्रेमता येणें लागें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Panduranga has truly bestowed His grace, dispelling all doubt and confusion of the intellect. A bed of bliss was prepared for the union of the individual jiva and Shiva, an ascent to the eighth state.

Tuka was lulled to sleep in his own true nature, as parents sing a lullaby to their infant child. My Vitthoba's secret is beyond reach; how can the sense of body survive there? Sacrifices, chanting, austerities, and rituals all remain on this side, unable to reach where meditation and its object merge.

Says Tuka, let the mind turn inward in dispassion; for that, genuine love must arise within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Panduranga has truly given his grace, clearing away every doubt and the splitting of the mind. A bed of bliss was made for the joining of jiva and Shiva, a climbing to the eighth state. Tuka was put to sleep in his own true nature, while the unstruck sound sang a lullaby to the child. My Vithoba's secret lies far off; what room is there, there, for the sense of being a body? Sacrifice and rite, chanting, penance, and observance, with their goal and their meditation, all stay on the near side. Tuka says: let the mind turn back and rest; for that, true love must rise in you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the union he longed for was given, not earned: Panduranga's grace dissolved his doubts and the divided mind. He pictures the joining of the individual soul and Shiva as a bed of bliss and an ascent to the highest state, where he is rocked to sleep in his own true nature while the inner unstruck sound hums a lullaby. In that place the very sense of being a body has no room, and all the outward disciplines, sacrifice, chanting, penance, even meditation and its object, are left behind on the near shore. The final word names the one thing still asked of us: genuine love, which alone lets the mind turn back and rest.

GATHA 4303 The Necessity of Experience

Beyond words and ritual, bliss in dissolving the body

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं शब्दाधीन वर्म आहे दुरी । नव्हे तंत्रीं मंत्रीं अनुभव तो ॥1॥
हर्षामषॉ अंगीं आदळती लाटा । कामक्रोधें तटा सांडियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
न सरे ते भक्ति विठोबाचे पायीं । उपरति नाहीं जेथें चित्ता ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सुख देहनिरसनें । चिंतनें चिंतन तद्रूपता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The secret is not subject to words; it lies far beyond. True experience cannot be gained through mantras or tantras.

Waves of joy and ecstasy crash against the body; the shores of lust and anger have been abandoned. That devotion at Vitthoba's feet never runs dry, for there the mind finds no restlessness.

Says Tuka, the bliss lies in dissolving the sense of the body; through contemplation upon contemplation, one becomes That.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The secret is not under the rule of words; it lies far off. That experience does not come by tantra or mantra. Waves of joy and rapture break over the body. The shores of lust and anger have been left behind. That devotion at Vithoba's feet never runs dry, and there the mind finds no restlessness. Tuka says: the bliss is in dissolving the sense of the body. By contemplation upon contemplation, one becomes That.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram insists the highest truth cannot be reached through language or technique; mantras and tantras do not deliver it. What he knows instead is direct: waves of joy break over him, and the old pulls of lust and anger have been left on the far bank. Devotion at Vithoba's feet is the inexhaustible spring where the mind stops being restless. He locates the bliss precisely in letting the sense of being a body dissolve, and says that sustained, repeated contemplation is how one finally becomes That rather than merely thinking about it.

GATHA 4304 The Power of the Name

The Name through the lineage, the servant enthroned

मराठी मूळ

शोधूनि अन्वय वंश वंशावळी । परस्परा कुळीं उच्चारण ॥1॥
ह्मणविलें मागें पुढें चाले कैसें । केला सामरस्यें अभिषेक ॥ध्रु.॥
एकछत्र झळके उन्मनी निशाणी । अनुहाताच्या ध्वनी गगन गर्जे ॥2॥
तुकया स्वामी स्थापी निजपदीं दासा । करूनि उल्हासा सप्रेमता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Tracing the lineage from one generation to the next, the Name is uttered through each family line. What was proclaimed in the past, how does it continue forward? The anointing was performed in the spirit of complete oneness.

A single royal canopy gleams with the banner of the transcendent state. The unstruck sound reverberates through the sky.

The Master of Tuka establishes His servant on the highest seat, with joyful and loving exuberance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tracing the line, the family and the long descent, the Name is spoken from house to house in turn. What was handed down before, how does it carry on ahead? The anointing was done in pure oneness. A single canopy shines with the banner of the mind beyond mind. The unstruck sound roars through the sky. Tuka says: the Master of Tuka seats his servant on the highest place, doing it with joy and with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sees the Name passed down a living lineage of teachers and devotees, spoken from household to household across the generations. He wonders at how that inheritance keeps moving forward, and answers that the consecration is sealed not by blood but by complete inner oneness. The royal canopy and the banner stand for the transcendent state of mind beyond mind, with the inner unstruck sound filling the sky like thunder. The close turns personal: the Master crowns his servant on the highest seat, and does it gladly, out of love, so that the lineage of grace lands on Tuka himself.

GATHA 4305 The Necessity of Experience

Alchemy of the Self, perfect health in the soul

मराठी मूळ

प्रवृत्तनिवृत्तीचे आटूनियां भाग । उतरिलें चांग रसायण॥1॥
ज्ञानिाग्नहुताशीं कडशिले वोजा । आत्मसिद्धकाजा लागूनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
ब्रह्मीं ब्रह्मरस शीघ्र जाला पाक । घेतला रुचक प्रतीतीमुखें ॥2॥
स्वानुभवें अंगीं जाला समरस । साधनी निजध्यास ग्रासोग्रासीं ॥3॥
अरोग्यता तुका पावला अष्टांगीं । मिरविला रंगीं निजात्मरंगें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The aspects of worldly engagement and renunciation were distilled, and a perfect elixir was extracted. In the fire of wisdom, the raw material was refined for the sake of Self-realization.

The essence of Brahman was swiftly cooked in the Brahman itself, and its flavor was tasted through direct experience. Through Self-realization, the whole being became saturated, the practice infused into every morsel.

Says Tuka, perfect health of all eight limbs was attained, and he was adorned in the radiance of the true Self.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The parts of action and renunciation were boiled down, and a fine elixir was drawn off. In the fire of wisdom the raw stuff was refined, for the work of knowing the Self. In Brahman the essence of Brahman was cooked quickly, and its taste was taken in by direct knowing. By his own experience the whole being was made one essence; the practice fed it, mouthful by mouthful. Tuka says: full health was reached in all eight limbs, and he shone, colored through with the color of his own true Self.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes Self-realization as a work of alchemy, distilling a pure elixir from the raw life of action and renunciation. The fire is wisdom, the crucible is Brahman, and the cooking yields an essence whose taste is direct knowing rather than secondhand report. He says this experience saturated his whole being, fed steadily as if mouthful by mouthful, until he was wholly one essence. The closing image is of perfect health reaching every limb and of a man dyed through with the color of his own true Self, fully restored in God.

GATHA 4306 True Worship

True worship, the unclean mind

मराठी मूळ

काय बा करिशी सोवळें ओवळें । मन नाहीं निर्मळ वाउगें चि ॥1॥
काय बा करीसी पुस्तकांची मोट । घोकितां हृदयस्फोट हाता नये ॥ध्रु.॥
काय बा करीसी टाळ आणि मृदंग । जेथें पांडुरंग रंगला नाहीं ॥2॥
काय बा करीसी ज्ञानाचिया गोष्टी । करणी नाहीं पोटीं बोलण्याची ॥3॥
काय बा करीसी दंभलौकिकातें। हित नाहीं मातें तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What use is your ritual purity and impurity when the mind is not clean? It is all in vain. What use is carrying a load of books when, despite memorizing them, the heart's truth eludes your grasp? What use are cymbals and drums where Panduranga has not been moved to delight? What use are talks of knowledge when there is no practice behind the words? What use is pretense and worldly show? Says Tuka, there is no benefit in it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What is the use of your clean and unclean, your ritual purity, when the mind itself is not clean? It is all in vain. What is the use of carrying a load of books? You memorize them till your heart bursts, and still the truth does not come into your hand. What is the use of cymbals and the drum where Panduranga has not been moved to delight? What is the use of talk about knowledge when there is no doing behind the words? What is the use of pretense and show before the world? Tuka says: there is no good in it for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips off the outer marks of religion one by one and asks the same question of each: what good is it. Ritual purity is empty when the mind is foul; books are empty when the heart's truth never reaches your hand; cymbals and drum are empty where God is not delighted; learned talk is empty when no living practice stands behind it. The test he applies is always inward: has the mind been cleaned, has Panduranga been moved, is there doing under the words. He ends by naming the worst of these, the religion kept up only for show before others, and says plainly it benefits him nothing.

GATHA 4307 Longing and Separation

Longing, asking to see the form

मराठी मूळ

स्वामी तूं ही कैसा न पडसी डोळां । सुंदर सांवळा घवघवीत ॥1॥
चतुर्भुज माळा रुळे एकावळी । कस्तुरी निडळीं रेखिलीसे ॥ध्रु.॥
शंख चक्रा गदा रुळे वैजयंती । कुंडलें तळपती श्रवणीं दोन्ही ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्वामी आतां दावीं पाय । पांडुरंग माय कृपावंते ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Lord, how is it that You do not appear before my eyes, You who are so beautiful, dark, and radiant? Four-armed, with a garland swinging on a single string, with musk drawn upon Your forehead. Conch, discus, and mace, the Vaijayanti garland swaying, and two earrings gleaming at Your ears.

Says Tuka, O Lord, show me Your feet now. O Panduranga, my compassionate Mother.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lord, how is it that You do not fall before my eyes? You are beautiful, dark, and shining. Four-armed, a single garland swinging on its string, with musk drawn upon Your forehead. The conch, the discus, the mace; the Vaijayanti garland sways; two earrings glitter at Your ears. Tuka says: Lord, show me Your feet now. Panduranga, my mother, full of mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is aching to see Vitthal's form and complains, tenderly, that it will not appear before his eyes. He then describes that form in detail anyway, dark and radiant, four-armed, garlanded, musk on the brow, conch and discus and mace in the hands, earrings flashing, as if longing has already painted what the eyes have not been granted. The vision in the mind only sharpens the hunger for the real darshan. So he closes by asking for the simplest, nearest gift, just the sight of the feet, and calls Panduranga his mother, leaning on God's mercy the way a child leans on a parent.

GATHA 4308 Prayers

Prayer, nowhere else to turn

मराठी मूळ

आणीक कोणापुढें वासूं मुख सांग । कीं माझें अंतरंग कोण जाणे ॥1॥
पाहें तुजकडे येऊनि जाऊनी । पांडुरंगा मनीं विचारावें ॥ध्रु.॥
भय चिंता अवघे उद्योग सांडिले । आठवुनी पाउलें असें तुझीं ॥2॥
नका विसरुं मज वैकुंठनायका । विनवितो तुका बंदीजन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Before whom else shall I open my mouth, tell me? Who else knows my innermost mind? I look toward You, coming and going. O Panduranga, consider this in Your mind.

I have abandoned all fear, worry, and every undertaking, remembering only Your feet. O Lord of Vaikuntha, do not forget me.

Tuka, Your humble servant, beseeches You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Before whom else shall I open my mouth, tell me? Who else knows my inmost heart? I keep looking toward You, coming and going. Panduranga, weigh this in Your mind. I have thrown down fear, worry, and every undertaking, remembering only Your feet. Do not forget me, Lord of Vaikuntha. Tuka says: I am Your prisoner, and I beg You.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays out of having no one else: only God knows his innermost heart, so to whom else could he even speak. He describes a soul that keeps turning back toward God, coming and going, and asks God to take that to heart. Then he names what he has staked on this: he has let go of fear, of worry, of every other effort, and holds onto the feet alone. With nothing left in reserve, his one request becomes a plea not to be forgotten, and he signs himself God's bound captive, dependent and unashamed of it.

GATHA 4309 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the Guru raises the head

मराठी मूळ

सद्गूचे चरणीं ठेविला मस्तक । देउनियां हस्तक उठविलें ॥1॥
उठविलें मज देऊनियां प्रेम । भावाथॉ सप्रेमे नमस्कारीं॥2॥
नमस्कारीं त्याला सद्गुरायाला । तुका ह्मणे बोला नाम वाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I placed my head at the feet of the Sadguru. He raised me up, offering me his hand.

He lifted me by giving me divine love. I bow with genuine devotion.

Bow to him, to the Sadguru. Says Tuka, speak the Name with your voice.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I laid my head at the feet of the Sadguru. He gave me his hand and raised me up. He raised me up by giving me love. With true feeling and full of love, I bow. Bow to him, to the Sadguru. Tuka says: speak the Name with your tongue.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the moment of surrender to the true teacher: he lays his head at the Guru's feet, and the Guru reaches down a hand and lifts him. What lifts him is not correction but love freely given, and that love draws a fresh bow of genuine devotion in return. The whole movement is downward in humility and then upward by grace. He turns to the listener and gives the simple instruction that follows from it: bow to the Sadguru, and let your tongue keep speaking the Name.

GATHA 4310 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the Guru's blessing

मराठी मूळ

सद्गुने मज आशीर्वाद दिला । हरुष भरला हृदयीं माझे ॥1॥
हृदयींचा भाव कळला गुरूसी । आनंदउल्हासीं बोले मज ॥2॥
बोले मज गुरु कृपा तो करूनि । तुका ह्मणे मनीं आनंदलों ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Sadguru gave me his blessing, and joy filled my mind. The Guru understood the feeling in my mind and spoke to me with delight and exuberance.

The Guru spoke to me with grace. Says Tuka, my mind is overflowing with bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Sadguru gave me his blessing, and joy filled my heart. The Guru understood the feeling in my heart and spoke to me with delight and gladness. The Guru spoke to me, showing his grace. Tuka says: in my mind I have become full of bliss.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the joy that follows the surrender: the Guru gives his blessing, and Tukaram's heart fills up at once. He marks that the Guru did not need to be told anything; he read the feeling in the heart and answered it with his own delight. The grace is mutual and wordless before it is spoken. Tukaram ends simply reporting his state, that his mind has overflowed with bliss, leaving the cause squarely with the Guru's grace and not with anything he himself did.

GATHA 4311 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, the root of bliss seen within

मराठी मूळ

आनंदाचा कंद गाइयेला गीतीं । पाहियेला चित्तीं देवराव ॥1॥
देवराव तो ही आहे निश्चयेसीं । अखंड नामासी बोलवितो ॥2॥
बोलवितो मज कृपा तो करूनि । तुका ह्मणे मनीं धरा भाव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The root of all bliss has been sung in song. The Lord has been seen within the chitta.

That Lord is truly present; He continually inspires the chanting of the Name. He makes me speak, bestowing His grace.

Says Tuka, hold this devotion in your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The root of all bliss has been sung in song. The Lord has been seen within the heart. That Lord is truly there, beyond doubt; He keeps the unbroken Name speaking. He makes me speak, showing me His grace. Tuka says: hold this feeling in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports an inward seeing: the source of all joy, which he has been singing about, has now been beheld within his own heart, not somewhere far off. He insists this presence is certain, not imagined, and that it is what keeps the Name flowing on his lips without break. He even credits his own speech to God's grace working through him, so the singing is itself a gift. He turns to the listener with the only instruction that fits such an experience: hold this same feeling in your own heart.

GATHA 4312 The Power of the Name

The Name, never stop the kirtan

मराठी मूळ

सातादिवसांचा जरी जाला उपवासी । तरीं कीर्तनासी टाकुं नये ॥1॥
फुटो हा मस्तक तुटो हें शरीर । नामाचा गजर सोडूं नये ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीराचे होत दोनी ते ही भाग । परि कीर्त्तनाचा रंग सोडों नये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसा नामीं ज्या निर्धार । तेथें निरंतर देव असे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if you have fasted for seven days, do not abandon the kirtan. Let this head crack open, let this body fall apart, but never stop the chanting of the Name.

Even if the body breaks into two pieces, do not give up the joy of kirtan. Says Tuka, wherever there is such firm resolve in the Name, God is ever present there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even if you have fasted for seven days, do not give up the kirtan. Let this head split, let this body break, but do not let go of the loud singing of the Name. Even if the body breaks into two pieces, do not give up the joy of kirtan. Tuka says: where there is such firm resolve in the Name, God is there without break.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pushes the singing of the Name above every other claim, even the claims of the body. Seven days of fasting, a splitting head, a body falling apart: none of these is reason enough to stop the kirtan. He states it in the most extreme terms, the body broken in two, to make the resolve unmistakable. The point is not to harm the body but to show that nothing outside should be allowed to break the Name. And he names the reward of such firmness: wherever a person holds to the Name with this resolve, God is continuously, unbrokenly present there.

GATHA 4313 The Saints

Saints, the pilgrimage to Alandi

मराठी मूळ

चला आळंदीला जाऊं । ज्ञानदेवा डोळां पाहूं ॥1॥
होतिल संताचिया भेटी । सुखाचिया सांगों गोष्टी ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्ञानेश्वर ज्ञानेश्वर । मुखीं ह्मणतां चुकती फेर ॥2॥
तुह्मां जन्म नाहीं एक । तुका ह्मणे माझी भाक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, let us go to Alandi and behold Dnyandev with our own eyes. There we shall meet the saints and share words of happiness.

By simply repeating 'Dnyaneshwar, Dnyaneshwar,' the cycles of birth and death are broken. Says Tuka, I give you my word: you will not take another birth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, let us go to Alandi and see Dnyandev with our eyes. There the saints will meet us, and we will share words of happiness. Dnyaneshwar, Dnyaneshwar: say it with your mouth, and the rounds of birth are escaped. Tuka says: I give you my word, you will not be born again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls the listener to a pilgrimage to Alandi, the seat of the saint Dnyaneshwar, to take darshan and to meet the company of saints there. The journey is framed as joy and shared good company, not duty. Then he raises the stakes: merely saying the name Dnyaneshwar breaks the cycle of repeated birth. He stands behind this with a personal pledge, giving his word that the one who does so will not be born again, which is how strongly he holds the saint and his name to be liberating.

GATHA 4314 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name on the lips

मराठी मूळ

चरणीं नमन सद्गूच्या पूर्ण । नित्य हरिगुण गाऊं सदा ॥1॥
गोवर्धन जेणें नखीं हो धरिला । काळ्या नाथिला महाबळी ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐसे हरिगुण गातो वाचेवरि । पतितासी तारी जनादनन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि सज्जना जीवन । वाचेसी स्मरण गोविंदाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I bow at the feet of the Sadguru with complete reverence. Let us always sing the glories of Hari.

He who lifted Govardhan on His fingertip, who subdued the mighty Bali. I sing such glories of Hari with my voice.

Janardana saves even the fallen. Says Tuka, this is the very life of the good: the remembrance of Govinda on their lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I bow at the feet of the Sadguru with full reverence. Let us always sing the virtues of Hari, day after day. He held up Govardhan on a fingernail; He tamed the mighty Bali. I sing such virtues of Hari with my voice. Janardana saves the fallen. Tuka says: this very thing is the life of the good, the remembrance of Govinda on the tongue.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens by bowing to the Guru and then sets the daily task: to keep singing the glories of Hari. He recalls God's deeds, lifting Govardhan on a fingertip, subduing the mighty Bali, as the deeds he means to sing. The point of recalling them is that this same God, Janardana, is the one who saves even the fallen. So the conclusion is practical and warm: for a good person, life itself is just this, keeping the remembrance of Govinda always on the lips.

GATHA 4315 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, no liberation without a Guru

मराठी मूळ

सद्गूवांचूनि प्रेतरूप वाणी । बोलती पुराणीं व्यासऋषि॥1॥
ह्मणोनि तयाचें पाहूं नये तोंड । निगुरा अखंड सुतकाळा ॥ध्रु.॥
कोणे परी तया नव्हे चि सुटका । देह त्याचा लटिका जाणा तुह्मी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसीं बोलती पुराणें । संतांचीं वचनें मागिलां हो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without the Sadguru, all speech is like a corpse; so say the sage Vyasa and the Puranas. Therefore, do not even look upon the face of one without a Guru; such a person is forever in a state of impurity.

By no means can such a one find liberation. Know that his body is illusory.

Says Tuka, this is what the Puranas declare; these are the words of the saints of old.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without the Sadguru, speech is a corpse; so the sage Vyasa and the Puranas say. Therefore do not even look at the face of one who has no Guru; such a person is unbroken impurity. By no means is there any release for him. Know this: his body is a false thing. Tuka says: this is what the Puranas declare; these are the words of the saints of old.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses how indispensable a true teacher is by setting the highest authorities behind the claim: the sage Vyasa and the Puranas. Speech without the guidance of a Sadguru, he says, is dead matter, a corpse. He then states the warning in its sharpest form, that the guru-less life is mere defilement and cannot reach liberation, and that such a body is hollow and unreal. The harshness is aimed at the condition, the state of having no living guidance, not at scorn for the person; the cure named throughout is simply to take a true Guru. He grounds it all in the Puranas and the saints of old, claiming nothing as his own opinion.

GATHA 4316 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, judge by the holy, not the harmless

मराठी मूळ

डिवेना डसेना बुझेना निर्मळ । परि अमंगळ स्वीकारीना॥1॥
परंतु गर्धब अपवित्र जाणा । पर्वकाळीं दाना देऊं नये ॥ध्रु.॥
डिवी लात्री बुजे बहु नेदी दुध । मुखीं नाहीं शुद्ध विष्ठा खाय ॥2॥
परंतु ते गाय पवित्र हो जाणा । पर्वकाळीं दाना देऊजेते॥3॥
ब्राह्मणें ब्राह्मणा सद्गू करावा । परि न करावा शूद्रादिक ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे देवें सांगितली सोय । ह्मणोनि त्याचे पाय धरिले जीवें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A donkey does not kick, does not bite, and is docile and clean, yet it is considered impure and should not be given as a gift on holy occasions. A cow kicks, charges, is stubborn, and does not give milk easily.

Its mouth is not clean; it eats anything. Yet the cow is considered sacred and fit to be given as a gift on holy days.

A brahmin should accept as Sadguru only a brahmin, not one of lower caste. Says Tuka, this is the path God has prescribed; therefore I have held fast to His feet with all my life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A donkey does not kick, does not bite, is calm and clean; yet it is held impure, and you must not give it as a gift on a holy day. The cow kicks, charges, is stubborn, gives milk only with trouble. Its mouth is not clean; it eats filth. Yet know the cow is holy and is given as a gift on holy days. Tuka says: God told me this is the right way, and so I have held His feet with my whole life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses two animals to overturn judgment by surface behavior. The donkey is mild, clean, and well-mannered, yet counts as unfit; the cow is rough, stubborn, and unclean in its habits, yet is held sacred and given on holy days. His point is that worth is not read off outward tidiness or temper but off a deeper holiness that the surface can hide. The reader does best to take the lesson at this level, that what looks well-behaved is not automatically what is holy, and to test things by their true sacredness rather than their manners. Tukaram presents it as a way God showed him, and says it is why he has clung to God's feet with all his life.

GATHA 4317 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the one who carries all

मराठी मूळ

संसारींचें ओझें वाहता वाहाविता । तुजविण अनंता नाहीं कोणी ॥1॥
गीतेमाजी शब्द दुंदुभीचा गाजे । योगक्षेमकाज करणें त्याचें ॥ध्रु.॥
चतुर्भुजा करीं वारू शृंगारावे । सारथ्य करावें अर्जुनाचें ॥2॥
श्वपच अंत्यज भक्तिस्नेहें जाला । अचळपदीं केला ध्रुव तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The burden of worldly life, whether borne or caused to be borne, no one but You can carry it, O Ananta. In the Gita, the words thunder like a great drum: it is He who provides and protects.

With four arms, He adorned the horses and drove Arjuna's chariot. The excluded and the overlooked were embraced through devotion.

Says Tuka, Dhruva was established on the imperishable seat.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The burden of worldly life, whether You carry it or have it carried, no one but You can bear it, Ananta. In the Gita the words sound like a great drum: it is He who provides and protects. With four arms He decked the horses and drove Arjuna's chariot. The outcast and the lowborn were made His own through love. Tuka says: Dhruva was set on the unmoving seat.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names God, Ananta, as the only one who can truly carry the weight of worldly existence, whether He bears it directly or arranges for it to be borne. He points to the Gita, whose promise of providing for and protecting His own thunders like a war drum, and to its scene of the four-armed Lord stooping to drive Arjuna's chariot. The thread running through his examples is that this great God comes low for the lowly: the outcast and the despised are taken in through devotion, and the child Dhruva is fixed on the unshakable, eternal place. The point is that God's care reaches exactly those the world counts as least.

GATHA 4318 Worldly Life

Impermanence, fortune's fall

मराठी मूळ

कवणदिस येइल कैसा । न कळे संपत्तीचा भरंवसा॥1॥
चौदा चौकडिया लंकापति । त्याची कोण जाली गती ॥ध्रु.॥
लंकेसारिखें भुवन । त्याचें त्यासी पारखें जाण ॥2॥
तेहतीस कोटि बांदवडी । राज्य जातां न लगे घडी ॥3॥
ऐसे अहंतेनें नाडिले । तुका ह्मणे वांयां गेले ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who knows what turn fortune may take and when? Consider Ravana, the lord of Lanka with his fourteen powers. Even a realm like Lanka became foreign to him.

He had imprisoned thirty-three crore gods, yet when his kingdom fell, it took not even a moment. Says Tuka, all such people were ruined by ego and went to waste.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who knows what day it will come, or how. There is no trusting in wealth. Ravana was lord of Lanka with his fourteen powers. What became of him? A realm like Lanka, and it turned strange to its own master. He held thirty-three crore gods in prison; yet the kingdom fell in less than an hour. Pride ruined them all. Tuka says: they went to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram uses Ravana as the warning. No wealth, no power, no kingdom can be trusted to last; the day of its loss comes without notice. He takes the largest case he can name, the lord of Lanka who imprisoned even the gods, and shows how fast the whole thing collapsed: not even an hour. The cause is not bad luck but ego, the swelling pride that makes a person think the empire is his to keep. If even that ruined the mightiest, examine where your own pride leans on what you own.

GATHA 4319 The Necessity of Experience

Nondual seeing, world as appearance

मराठी मूळ

लटिका प्रपंच वांजेची संतति । तत्वज्ञा हे भ्रांति बाधूं नेणे ॥1॥
सूर्यबिंबीं काय अंधार रिघेल । मृगजळें तिंबेल नभ काई ॥ध्रु.॥
तैसा दृश्यभास नाडळे चि डोळा । प्रकाशसोहळा भोगीतसे ॥2॥
भोग भोग्य भोक्ता नाडळे चि कांहीं । चैतन्यविग्रहीं पूर्णकाम ॥3॥
तुका ब्रह्मानंदीं आहे तुकब्रह्म । प्रपंचाचें बंड न देखे डोळां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This world is false, its offspring barren. One who knows the truth is not troubled by this illusion.

Can darkness enter the orb of the sun? Can a mirage soak the sky? Just so, the appearance of the visible world does not delude the eye. One revels in the splendor of pure light.

Enjoyer, enjoyed, and enjoyment are nowhere to be found; in the body of pure consciousness, one is perfectly fulfilled. Tuka abides in the bliss of Brahman; the tumult of the world does not appear before his eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This world is false, like the children of a barren woman. One who knows the truth is not harmed by this confusion. Can darkness get into the disc of the sun? Can a mirage wet the sky? So too the look of the visible world does not catch the eye. I taste only the joy of pure light. Enjoyer, thing enjoyed, enjoying: none of it is found. In the body of pure consciousness, every want is full. Tuka says: Tuka is Brahman, abiding in the bliss of Brahman. The uproar of the world does not appear before my eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks from inside realization, not toward it. He calls the world false in the strong sense: as real as the offspring of a barren woman, that is, never born at all. For one who has seen the truth this is no threat, just as darkness cannot enter the sun and a mirage cannot soak the sky. The whole structure of experience, the one who enjoys, the thing enjoyed, the act of enjoying, dissolves; in pure consciousness nothing is lacking. The closing claim is deliberately radical: he does not say he worships Brahman but that he is Brahman, and from there the world's tumult simply does not register.

GATHA 4320 Renunciation

Renunciation, no fondness for the senses

मराठी मूळ

न ह्मणे वो आह्मी आपुलेनि चित्तीं । निःशेष अतिप्रीति विषयीं तो ॥1॥
खोटा तो विटाळ । ह्मणोनि गाबाळ सांडियेले॥ध्रु.॥
भांगतमाखूचा चित्ताचा आदर । कोरडें उत्तर चाटावें तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी नव्हों फजितखोर । तुटीचा व्यापार करावया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

We do not say that we have any fondness in our chittas for sense pleasures. That defilement is false; therefore we have cast aside all that worthless clutter.

The mind's craving for intoxicants deserves only dry, hollow words. Says Tuka, we are not the ones to be shamed; we are not here to do business at a loss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

We do not say in our own minds that we keep any love for the senses; that love is wholly gone. That defilement is false. So we threw the worthless trash away. The mind's longing for intoxicants deserves only dry, empty words to lick. Tuka says: we are not ones to be shamed. We will not trade at a loss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is stating plainly that he keeps no secret fondness for sense pleasures; the attachment is gone, root and all. He names such craving a defilement and a lie, fit only to be discarded as clutter. The line about intoxicants is contemptuous of the appetite, not the addict: a mind hungry for such things gets nothing but dry, hollow words to chew on. He closes like a shrewd merchant who refuses a losing bargain, because to trade lasting peace for fleeting pleasure is to do business at a loss and end up disgraced.

GATHA 4321 Longing and Separation

Refuge, the Name and Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

अनाथाचा नाथ पतितपावन । दीनाचें रक्षण करीतसे॥1॥
ऐसें जाणोनियां नामीं विश्वासलों । भीमातिरा आलों धांवत चि ॥ध्रु.॥
स्नान हें करितां त्रिताप निवाले । महाद्वारा आलें मन माझें ॥2॥
तेथें अनुमात्र रीग नव्हे याचा । परतलों साचा तेथूनियां ॥3॥
पुंडलिकापाशीं येऊनि पुसिलें । चिन्मय दाटलें जनादनन ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां दुजा देव नाहीं । बाप तरी आई तो चि विठो ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is the Lord of the destitute, the Purifier of the Fallen, the Protector of the helpless. Knowing this, I placed my faith in the Name and came running to the banks of the Bhima.

Bathing there, the three afflictions were cooled. My mind arrived at the great gateway.

But there, not even an atom of sin could enter; I turned back from that point, truly purified. Coming to Pundalik, I asked, and the radiant presence of Janardana filled everything.

Says Tuka, now there is no other god. Mother, father: Vittho alone is all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is the Lord of the orphaned, the Purifier of the fallen. He guards the helpless. Knowing this, I trusted the Name and came running to the bank of the Bhima. I bathed there, and the three torments cooled. My mind reached the great gateway. Not even an atom of sin could enter there. I turned back from that place, truly cleansed. I came to Pundalik and asked, and the radiant Janardana filled everything. Tuka says: now there is no other god. Mother and father, both, are Vittho alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces a pilgrim's path that is also an inner one. He starts from who God is to the helpless, an orphan's lord and a purifier of the fallen, and that knowledge sends him running to the river at Pandhari. The bath cools the three afflictions, and at the temple's great gate he finds sin cannot follow him a single atom further. Coming to Pundalik, the devotee whose love drew Vitthal to Pandhari, he sees the divine presence fill all things. The conclusion is total: there is no second god, and Vitthal is at once mother and father to him.

GATHA 4322 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the warrior who calls his armor a curse

मराठी मूळ

ढालतलवारे गुंतले हे कर । ह्मणे जुंझणार कैसा जुंझे ॥1॥
पेटी पडदळे सिले टोप ओझें । हें तों जालें दुजें मरणमूळ ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसविलें मला येणें अश्वावरी । धावूं पळूं तरी कैसा आतां ॥2॥
असोनि उपाय ह्मणे हे अपाय । ह्मणे हायहाय काय करूं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे हा तों स्वयें परब्रह्म । मूर्ख नेणे वर्म संतचरण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His hands are bound by shield and sword. He says, 'How can a warrior fight like this?' The armor, helmet, and baggage have become a second cause of death.

'They seated me on this horse; how can I now run or flee?' Though he has every means at hand, he calls them obstacles, crying 'Alas, alas, what shall I do?' Says Tuka, this man is the supreme Brahman itself, yet the fool does not know the secret that lies at the saints' feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His hands are full of shield and sword. He says, how can a fighter fight like this? The breastplate, the chain mail, the helmet, all this weight: he calls it a second cause of death. They set me on this horse, he says; now how can I run, how can I flee? Every weapon is in his hands, and he calls it a danger. He cries, alas, alas, what shall I do? Tuka says: this man is the supreme Brahman himself, yet the fool does not know the secret that lies at the saints' feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

The picture is a soldier given everything he needs to win, and treating each gift as a burden that will get him killed. The shield and sword tie up his hands, the armor weighs him down, the horse traps him; he wails that he is helpless when in truth he is fully equipped. Tukaram turns the image on us: the man is the supreme Brahman, complete and lacking nothing, yet he stands paralyzed and complaining. The secret he is missing is plain and near, lying at the feet of the saints, and only his own foolishness keeps him from seeing that what he calls his ruin is his rescue.

GATHA 4323 The Nature of God

God's mercy, He keeps His word

मराठी मूळ

किडा अन्नाचें मानुस । त्याचा ह्मणविल्या दास॥1॥
तें ही त्यासी उपेक्षीना । बोल आपुला सांडीना ॥ध्रु.॥
तो तूं नराचा नरेंद्र । तुजपासूनि इंद्र चंद्र ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे विश्वंभर । तुज वर्णी फणीवर ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even an insect born of food becomes human. And yet, having called Himself the servant of such beings, God does not neglect them.

He does not abandon His own word. You are the King of kings among men.

From You come Indra and Chandra. Says Tuka, O Lord of the Universe, even the serpent Shesha sings Your praises.

IN PLAIN WORDS

An insect bred in food becomes a man. Having called Himself the servant of such a one, He does not neglect him. He does not abandon His own word. You are the King of kings among men. From You come Indra and Chandra. Tuka says: O Bearer of the worlds, even the serpent Shesha sings Your praise.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is praising God's faithfulness to the lowest of creatures. He starts from how mean a beginning can be, a worm born in food, and then makes the astonishing claim: God has bound Himself by calling Himself the servant of such beings, and He will not break that word. The wonder is the contrast: the same Lord from whom Indra and Chandra take their being, whom even the cosmic serpent Shesha praises, stoops to keep faith with the smallest. The point is that no creature is too low to be held by His promise.

GATHA 4324 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the God-lover called mad

मराठी मूळ

कोटिजन्म पुण्यसाधन साधिलें । तेणें हाता आलें हरिदास्य ॥1॥
ऐसिया प्रेमळा ह्मणताती वेडा । संसार रोकडा बुडविला ॥2॥
एकवीस कुळें जेणें उद्धरिलीं । हे तों न कळे खोली भाग्यमंदा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याची पायधुळी मिळे । भवभय पळे वंदितां चि ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through the merit of countless births, the service of Hari came into one's hands. People call such a lover of God a madman, saying he has drowned his worldly prospects.

Yet he has liberated twenty-one generations of his family. This depth is beyond the understanding of the unfortunate.

Says Tuka, if one obtains the dust of his feet, the fear of worldly existence flees at the mere act of bowing.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Through the merit gathered over countless births, the service of Hari came into his hands. People call such a lover of God mad and say he has drowned his worldly future right before their eyes. Yet he has lifted up twenty-one generations of his family. The unlucky cannot see this depth. Tuka says: if you get the dust of his feet, the fear of this world flees the moment you bow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the world's verdict on the devotee. To outsiders the man who gives himself to Hari looks insane, throwing away his livelihood and prospects. But Tukaram reverses the account: that service was earned across countless lifetimes of merit, and far from ruining himself, the devotee redeems twenty-one generations of his line. Those who call him mad are simply too unfortunate to see how deep this goes. The closing turn makes the devotee himself a means of grace: merely bowing to take the dust of his feet drives off the fear of worldly existence.

GATHA 4325 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, death sits close by

मराठी मूळ

उपजला प्राणी न राहे संसारीं । बैसला सेजारी काळ उसां ॥1॥
पाहा तो उंदीर घेउनि जाय बोका । तैसा काळ लोका नेत असे ॥ध्रु.॥
खाटिकाचे घरीं अजापुत्र पाहें । कसाबाची गाय वांचे कैसी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं करा काढाकाढी । जाती ऐसी घडी पुन्हा नये ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Every being that is born does not remain in this world forever. Death sits close by, watching for its moment.

See how a cat seizes a mouse and carries it away; just so, Death carries people off. Look at the goat's kid in the butcher's house.

How can the slaughterhouse cow survive? Says Tuka, do something quickly; such a moment, once gone, never returns.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every being that is born does not stay in this world. Death sits at the bedside, its head on the same pillow. Look how the cat picks up the mouse and carries it off; just so death is carrying people away. Look at the goat's kid in the butcher's house. How will the slaughterhouse cow survive? Tuka says: do something quickly, set it right. The moment that goes like this does not come again.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram drives home that no one born stays, and death is not far off but lying right beside us, sharing the pillow. He piles up images of the doomed: the mouse already in the cat's mouth, the kid and the cow in the butcher's yard, all of them living out their last moments without escape. We are no different, carried off the same way. So the urgency is practical: do something now, while you still can, because this present moment, once spent, will never return to be used for your liberation.

GATHA 4326 Devotion to Vitthal

Pilgrimage, the road to Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीस जाऊं ह्मणती । यम थोर चिंता करि ती ॥1॥
या रे नाचों ब्रह्मानंदें । विठ्ठलनामाचिया छंदें ॥ध्रु.॥
धरिली पंढरीची वाट । पापें रिगालीं कपाट ॥2॥
केलें भीमरेचें स्नान । यमपुरी पडिले खान ॥3॥
दुरोनि देखिली पंढरी । पापें गेलीं दुरच्यादुरी ॥4॥
दुरोनि देखिलें राउळ । हरुषें नाचती गोपाळ ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं जाणें । अखंड पंढरिराहणें ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who say they will go to Pandhari cause great worry to Yama. Come, let us dance in the bliss of Brahman, in the joyful chanting of Vitthal's Name.

The moment one sets foot on the road to Pandhari, sins retreat behind closed doors. Bathing in the Bhimra river, the realm of Yama crumbles.

Seeing Pandhari from afar, sins flee far, far away. Seeing the temple from a distance, the cowherds dance with delight.

Says Tuka, there is no need to leave; one should dwell in Pandhari forever.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When people say they will go to Pandhari, Yama himself worries greatly. Come, let us dance in the bliss of Brahman, in the joy of Vitthal's Name. The moment one takes the road to Pandhari, sins shut themselves behind doors. Bathe in the Bhimra, and the city of Yama crumbles. See Pandhari from far off, and sins flee far, far away. See the temple from a distance, and the cowherds dance with delight. Tuka says: there is no need to go away. Stay in Pandhari forever.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the pilgrimage to Pandhari a rout of death itself. Yama, the lord of death, grows anxious the moment a soul sets out, because each step on that road slams the door on sin and each act of worship dismantles his kingdom. The call is to dance now in the Name of Vitthal rather than wait. He builds the relief in stages: setting out, bathing in the Bhima, the first far sight of the town and the temple, with sins fleeing further at each step. The closing line turns the journey inward: the true goal is not to arrive and leave but to dwell in Pandhari without ever departing.

GATHA 4327 The Nature of God

Nonduality, the one and the many

मराठी मूळ

पय दधि घृत आणि नवनीत । तैसें दृश्यजात एकपणें ॥1॥
कनकाचे पाहीं अलंकार केले । कनकत्वा आले एकपणें ॥ध्रु.॥
मृत्तकेचे घट जाले नानापरी । मृत्तका अवधारीं एकपणें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे एक एक ते अनेक । अनेकत्वीं एक एकपणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Milk, curd, ghee, and butter are all one in essence, just as all visible things share a single nature. Ornaments made of gold, when examined, are all gold in their oneness.

Pots made of clay come in many forms, yet it is all clay in its oneness. Says Tuka, the One appears as the many, and within the many there is only the One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Milk, curd, ghee, and butter: just so the whole visible world is one. Look at the ornaments made of gold; in being gold they are one. Pots of clay are made in many shapes; know that as clay they are one. Tuka says: the one is these many, and within the many there is the oneness of the one.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram teaches nonduality through plain household substances. Milk that becomes curd, ghee, and butter is one thing throughout; gold worked into many ornaments is still only gold; clay shaped into countless pots is still only clay. By this he says the whole visible world, in all its variety, has a single nature underneath. The forms are real enough as forms, but they add nothing to the substance and take nothing from it. The conclusion holds both sides together: the one appears as the many, and the many never stops being the one.

GATHA 4328 Autobiography

Realization, the body burned away

मराठी मूळ

पंधरा दिवसांमाजी साक्षात्कार जाला । विठोबा भेटला निराकार ॥1॥
भांबगिरिपाठारीं विस्त जाण केली । वृत्त थिरावली परब्रह्मीं ॥ध्रु.॥
निर्वाण जाणोनि आसन घातलें । ध्यान आरंभिलें देवाजीचें ॥2॥
सर्प विंचू व्याघ्र आंगासी झोंबले । पीडूं जे लागले सकिळक ॥3॥
दीपकीं कर्पूर कैसा तो विराला । तैसा देह जाला तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Within fifteen days, direct realization came to pass. The formless Vitthoba was met.

On the plateau of Bhambanath, the inner quest was undertaken, and the mind became steady in the supreme Brahman. Knowing the final truth, the seat of meditation was established, and contemplation on the Lord began.

Serpents, scorpions, and tigers clung to the body, tormenting it in every way. As camphor dissolves entirely in flame, so did the body dissolve.

Says Tuka, just so was this body consumed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Within fifteen days the vision came. I met the formless Vithoba. On the plateau of Bhambanath I made my search, and my awareness grew steady in the supreme Brahman. Knowing the final end, I set my seat and began meditation on the Lord. Snakes, scorpions, and tigers seized my body and set about tormenting it in every way. As camphor melts away in a flame, so did this body become. Tuka says: just so was this body consumed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reports an intense passage of his own practice. Going to the Bhambanath hill, he sat for meditation as one ready for the end, and within a short span the formless Vitthal was directly seen, his attention fixed steady in Brahman. He does not hide the ordeal: snakes, scorpions, and tigers came at the body and tormented it. The closing image carries the meaning, for camphor set alight leaves nothing behind. So the body, and the self bound up with it, was burned away entirely in the fire of that realization, consumed without remainder.

GATHA 4329 The Necessity of Experience

Realization, the mind at rest in the Self

मराठी मूळ

अज्ञान हा देह स्वरूपीं मीनला । सर्व वोसावला देहपात ॥1॥
ज्ञानस्वरूपाची सांगड मिळाली । अंतरीं पाहिली ज्ञानज्योती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्त स्वरूपीं राहिलें । देह विसावलें तुझ्या पायीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The ignorant body has merged into the true Self. All bodily consciousness has come to rest.

The support of the nature of pure knowledge has been found, and the inner light of wisdom has been seen. Says Tuka, the mind has settled in its true nature; the body has found rest at Your feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This ignorant body has merged into the true Self. All falling away of the body is over. The bond with the nature of knowledge has been found. Within, I have seen the light of knowledge. Tuka says: the mind has stayed in its own true nature. The body has come to rest at Your feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the settling that follows realization. The body, which he calls ignorant because it is the seat of not-knowing, has dissolved into the true Self, and with it ends all the anxiety of bodily decline. He has found his union with knowledge itself and seen the inner light of wisdom directly. The result is quiet rather than dramatic: the restless mind simply stays put in its own real nature and stops wandering. He gives the rest a direction, laying the body down at God's feet, so that knowledge and devotion close as one.

GATHA 4330 Sacred Stories

Legend, God settles the account

मराठी मूळ

दामाजीपंताची रसद गुदरली । लज्जा सांभिाळली देवरायें ॥1॥
तयाचें चरित्र परिसा हो सादरें । करितों नमस्कार संतजना ॥ध्रु.॥
मंगळवेढा असे विस्त कुटुंबेंसी । व्यापारी सर्वांसी मान्य सदा ॥2॥
कर्म काय करी ठाणाचा हवाला । तों कांहीं पडला कठिण काळ ॥3॥
धान्याचीं भांडारें होतीं तीं फोडिलीं । पंढरी रिक्षली दुष्काळांत ॥4॥
दुबळें अनाथ तें हि वांचविलें । राष्टधांत ते जाली कीर्त्त मोठी ॥5॥
मुजुम करीत होता कानडा ब्राह्मण । फिर्याद लिहून पाठविली ॥6॥
अविंदाचें राज्य बेदरीं असतां । कागद पाहतां तलब केली ॥7 ॥
दामाजीपंतासी धरोनि चालविलें । इकडे या विठ्ठलें माव केली ॥8॥
विकते धारणे सवाईचें मोल । धान्याचें सकळ द्रव्य केलें ॥9॥
दामाजीपंताच्या नांवें अर्जदास्त । लिहून खलेती मुद्रा केली ॥10॥
विठो पाडेवार भक्तां साहए जाला । वेदरासी गेला रायापासीं ॥11॥
जोहार मायबाप पुसती कोठील । तंव तो ह्मणे स्थळ मंगळवेढें ॥12॥
दामाजीपंतांनीं रसद पाठविली । खलेती ओतिली अर्जदास्त ॥13॥
देखोनियां राजा संतोष पावला । ह्मणे व्यर्थ त्याला तलब केली॥14॥
काय तुझें नांव पुसती यंत्रधारी । तो ह्मणे बेगारी विठा कां जी॥15॥
पावल्याचा जाब द्यावा मायबाप । करोनि घेतों माप ह्मणती ते॥16॥
पावल्याचा जाब दिधला लिहून । तसरीफ देऊन पाठविला ॥17॥
छत्री घोडा शिबिका आभरणांसहित । दिला सवें दूत पाठवूनि॥18॥
वाटे चुकामुक जाली याची त्यांची । ते आले तैसे चि मंगळवेढा॥19॥
दामाजीपंतासी बेदरासी नेलें । राजा ह्मणे जालें कवतुक ॥20॥
काल गेला विठा बेगारी देऊन । तसरीफ देऊन जाब दिला ॥21॥
काय तुमचें काज बोला जी सत्वर । बोलाजी निर्धार वचनाचा॥22॥
कैंचा विठा कोण पाठविला कधीं । काढोनियां आधीं जाब दिला॥23॥
पहातां चि जाब हृदय फुटलें । नयन निडारले राजा देखे ॥24॥
सावळें सकुमार रूप मनोहर । माथां तेणें भार वाहियेला ॥25॥
दामाजीपंतासी रायें सन्मानिलें । तो ह्मणे आपुलें कर्म नव्हे ॥26॥
आतां तुमची सेवा पुरे जी स्वामिया । शिणविलें सखया विठोबासी॥27॥
निरोप घेऊनि आला स्वस्थळासी । उदास सर्वासीं होता जाला ॥28॥
दामाजीपंतांनीं सेविली पंढरी । ऐसा त्याचा हरि निकटवृत्त ॥29॥
तुका ह्मणे विठो अनाथ कैवारी । नुपेक्षी हा हरि दासालागीं ॥30॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Damajipant's revenue account was settled, and the Lord Himself preserved his honor. Listen with attention to his story.

I bow to the holy ones. Damajipant lived at Mangalvedha with a large family, a merchant respected by all.

His duty was to manage the revenue of the district, but hard times befell him. He broke open the grain stores and fed the people of Pandhari during the famine.

He saved the poor and the destitute, and great fame spread throughout the land. The Kannada brahmin who was auditing the accounts wrote a complaint and sent it to the court.

The kingdom of the Bahmani sultan was at Bidar. Upon reading the letter, a summons was issued.

Damajipant was seized and taken away. Meanwhile, Vitthal assumed a disguise.

He sold grain at the market rate plus a surcharge and converted it all into cash. He wrote a receipt in Damajipant's name with a sealed document.

Vittho became the guarantor and went to Bidar before the king. 'Greetings, my lord,' they ask, 'where are you from?' He replies, 'From Mangalvedha.' 'Damajipant has sent the revenue, with receipts and documents.' Seeing this, the king was pleased and said, 'We summoned him for nothing.' 'What is your name?' asks the officer.

He replies, 'Vitha the laborer, sir.' They ask him to certify the receipt with measurement. He gave a written acknowledgment, and the king honored him with a robe, a parasol, a horse, a palanquin, and ornaments, sending an escort with him.

On the road, they missed each other. The escorts arrived at Mangalvedha as they were.

Damajipant was taken to Bidar, and the king said, 'A marvel has occurred. Yesterday a man named Vitha the laborer came and settled the accounts.' 'State your business quickly; speak your conviction plainly.' 'What Vitha? Who sent him? The accounts were already settled before I arrived.' When he examined the receipt, his heart burst with emotion; his eyes filled with tears.

The king saw a dark, tender, beautiful form. That One had carried the burden on His own head.

The king honored Damajipant, who said, 'This is not my doing.' 'Enough of your service now, my lord. You have exhausted my dear Vitthoba.' Taking leave, he returned home and became detached from all worldly things.

Damajipant devoted himself to Pandhari. Such is the closeness of his Hari.

Says Tuka, Vittho is the champion of the helpless; Hari never forsakes His devotee.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Damajipant's revenue account came due, and the Lord himself kept his honor. Listen with care to his story. I bow to the holy ones. Damajipant lived in Mangalvedha with a large family, a merchant whom all respected. His duty was to manage the district's grain. Then a hard time fell. He broke open the grain stores and fed the people of Pandhari through the famine. He saved the poor and the helpless, and his fame spread through the land. The Kannada brahmin auditing the accounts wrote a complaint and sent it on. The sultan's kingdom was at Bidar. When the king read the letter, a summons was issued. Damajipant was seized and led away. Meanwhile Vitthal put on a disguise. He sold grain at the market rate with a surcharge and turned it all into cash. He wrote a receipt in Damajipant's name and sealed the document. Vittho became the guarantor and went to Bidar before the king. They greet him and ask where he is from. He says, from Mangalvedha. Damajipant has sent the revenue, with receipts and papers. The king was pleased and said, I summoned him for nothing. The officer asks his name. He says, Vitha the laborer, sir. They ask him to certify the receipt with the measure. He gave a written acknowledgment, and was sent off honored with a robe, a parasol, a horse, a palanquin, and ornaments, with an escort. On the road they missed each other; the escort arrived at Mangalvedha. Damajipant was brought to Bidar. The king said, a marvel has happened. Yesterday Vitha the laborer came and settled the accounts. State your business quickly; speak plainly. What Vitha? Who sent him, and when? The accounts were settled before I arrived. When he looked at the receipt, his heart broke open; his eyes filled. The king saw a dark, tender, lovely form: that One had carried the burden on his own head. The king honored Damajipant, who said, this is not my doing. Enough of your service now, my lord; I have worn out my dear Vithoba. He took his leave, came home, and grew detached from everything. Damajipant gave himself to Pandhari. So near is his Hari. Tuka says: Vittho is the champion of the helpless; this Hari never forsakes his servant.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a telling of the Damajipant legend, and Tukaram lets the story carry the claim. A revenue officer opens the state granaries to feed famished people and is summoned to answer for the loss. While he is dragged toward the king's court, Vitthal himself takes the form of a low laborer, sells the grain, pays the account in full, and gets it sealed and acknowledged before the officer ever arrives. The point lands when Damajipant sees the receipt and recognizes who paid: the dark, tender form that bore the burden on his own head. The frame the poem leaves unspoken is that God does not stay above the ledger; he steps in disguised as a servant to cover the debt of one who served his people, then disappears. Tuka closes by naming the law he draws from it: Hari is the protector of the helpless and never abandons the one who is his.

GATHA 4331 Devotion to Vitthal

Grinding-songs, God everywhere

मराठी मूळ

पहिली माझी ओवी ओवीन जगत्र । गाईन पवित्र पांडुरंग ॥1॥
दुसरी माझी ओवी दुजें नाहीं कोठें । जनीं वनीं भेटे पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
तिसरी माझी ओवी तिळा नाहीं ठाव । अवघा चि देव जनीं वनीं ॥2॥
चवथी माझी ओवी वैरिलें दळण । गाईन निधान पांडुरंग ॥3॥
पांचवी माझी ओवी ते माझिया माहेरा । गाईन निरंतरा पांडुरंगा ॥4॥
साहावी माझी ओवी साहा ही आटले। गुरुमूर्त्त भेटले पांडुरंग ॥5॥
सातवी माझी ओवी आठवे वेळोवेळां। बैसलासे डोळां पांडुरंग ॥6॥
आठवी माझी ओवी आठावीस योग। उभा चंद्रभागे पांडुरंग ॥7॥
नववी माझी ओवी सरलें दळण। चुकलें मरण संसारीचें ॥8॥
दाहावी माझी ओवी दाहा अवतारा । न यावें संसारा तुका ह्मणे ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My first ovi I shall weave for the whole world: I shall sing of the holy Panduranga. My second ovi says there is no second anywhere; in village and forest, Panduranga is met.

My third ovi says there is not a sesame seed's space without Him; God is everywhere, in field and forest. My fourth ovi: the grinding has been assigned, and I shall sing of the treasure, Panduranga.

My fifth ovi is for my mother's home: I shall sing ceaselessly of Panduranga. My sixth ovi: the six philosophies have been exhausted, and I have met the Guru incarnate, Panduranga.

My seventh ovi I remember again and again: Panduranga is seated before my eyes. My eighth ovi unites the twenty-eight yogas: Panduranga stands on the bank of the Chandrabhaga.

My ninth ovi: the grinding is done and the death of worldly life is ended. Says Tuka, my tenth ovi: O Ten Incarnations, may there be no more returning to this world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My first ovi I weave for the whole world: I will sing of the holy Panduranga. My second ovi: there is no second anywhere; in village and forest, Panduranga is met. My third ovi: there is not a sesame seed's space without him; it is all God, in field and forest. My fourth ovi: the grinding has been set before me, and I will sing of the treasure, Panduranga. My fifth ovi is for my mother's home; I will sing of Panduranga without ceasing. My sixth ovi: the six schools are spent, and I have met the Guru in person, Panduranga. My seventh ovi I remember again and again: Panduranga is seated before my eyes. My eighth ovi joins the twenty-eight yogas: Panduranga stands on the bank of the Chandrabhaga. My ninth ovi: the grinding is done, and the death of worldly life is ended. Tuka says: my tenth ovi, O Ten Incarnations, let me not come back to this world again.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a grinding-song, an ovi sung at the millstone, and Tukaram counts the verses one to ten while turning each number into a confession of where God is. He moves from singing for the whole world, to there being no second anywhere, to not a seed's width of space without God, until the very labor and the household become places God fills. The frame the plain layer holds back is that the count is also a ladder: the six philosophies wear out, the Guru is met in person, the twenty-eight yogas converge, and the milling of ordinary life turns out to be the end of rebirth. By the tenth verse the song is no longer about grinding grain but about the grinding of worldly existence coming to a stop. Tuka's last line names the stake plainly: let this be the last return to this world.

GATHA 4332 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Ganesha, remover of obstacles

मराठी मूळ

धरोनियां फरश करी । भक्तजनाचीं विघ्नें वारी॥1॥
ऐसा गजानन महाराजा । त्याचें चरणीं हालो लागो माझा ॥ध्रु.॥
सेंदुर शमी बहिप्रय ज्याला । तुरा दुर्वांचा शोभला ॥2॥
उंदिर असे जयाचें वहन । माथां जडितमुगुट पूर्ण ॥3॥
नागयज्ञोपवीत रुळे । शुभ्र वस्त्र शोभित साजिरें ॥4॥
भावमोदक हराभरी । तुका भावें हे पूजा करी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wielding the axe in hand, He removes the obstacles of His devotees. Such is the great Lord Gajanan.

May my allegiance rest forever at His feet. He is fond of vermilion and shami leaves; a tuft of durva grass adorns Him.

A mouse is His mount, and a jeweled crown graces His head. The sacred thread of a serpent hangs across His chest, and bright garments shine beautifully upon Him.

Says Tuka, I worship Him with modakas of pure devotion, offered in abundance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He holds the axe in his hand and clears away the obstacles of his devotees. Such is the great Lord Gajanan. Let my allegiance rest at his feet. He loves vermilion and shami leaves; a tuft of durva grass adorns him. A mouse is his mount; a jeweled crown is full upon his head. The serpent's sacred thread hangs across him; bright, lovely garments shine on him. Tuka says: I offer him modakas of pure feeling, in plenty, and worship him with love.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises Gajanan, the elephant-faced Ganesha, the one called on to remove obstacles before any undertaking. He names the god by his familiar marks: the axe that clears the way, the vermilion and shami and durva offerings, the mouse he rides, the jeweled crown, the serpent worn as a sacred thread. The frame the plain layer withholds is that this is itself an act of worship, an invocation at a beginning. The closing turn is the heart of it: the true offering is not the ritual modaka but the modaka of feeling, devotion shaped into the sweet placed before God. Tuka asks only that his allegiance stay fixed at those feet.

GATHA 4333 The Power of the Name

The Name, who has been saved by it

मराठी मूळ

नाम आहे जयापाशीं । जेथें राहे तेथें चि काशी॥1॥
ऐसा नामाचा महिमा । जाणे वाल्मीक शंकर उमा ॥ध्रु.॥
नाम प्र†हादबाळ । जाणे पापी आजामेळ ॥2॥
नाम जाणे तो नारद । नामें ध्रुवा अक्षय पद ॥3॥
नाम गणिकेतें तारी । पशु गजेंद्र उद्धारी॥4॥
नाम जाणे हणुमंत । जाणताति महासंत ॥5॥
नाम जाणे शुकमूतिन । जाणे राजा परिक्षती ॥6॥
नाम जाणे तुका । नाहीं संसाराचा धोका ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever the Name resides, that place itself becomes Kashi. Such is the greatness of the Name; Valmiki, Shankara, and Uma know it well.

The child Prahlad knew the Name; so did the wrongdoer Ajamila. Narada knew the Name; through the Name, Dhruva attained an imperishable seat.

The Name delivered the courtesan and delivered the elephant Gajendra. Hanuman knew the Name; the great saints know it.

The sage Shuka knew it; so did King Parikshit. Says Tuka, I too know the Name; there is no fear of worldly existence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever the Name lives, that place itself becomes Kashi. Such is the greatness of the Name; Valmiki, Shankara, and Uma know it. The child Prahlad knew the Name; so did the sinner Ajamila. Narada knew the Name; through the Name Dhruva won an undying seat. The Name saved the courtesan; it lifted up the elephant Gajendra. Hanuman knows the Name; the great saints know it. The sage Shuka knew it; so did King Parikshit. Tuka says: I too know the Name; there is no fear of worldly life for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his case for the Name by calling a long roll of witnesses. He says the Name carries Kashi within it: wherever it is spoken, that spot becomes the holy city, so a pilgrimage is not needed where the Name is. Then he lists who has been carried by it, deliberately mixing the great and the fallen: sages like Valmiki, Narada, and Shuka stand beside a wrongdoer like Ajamila and a courtesan, even an animal like Gajendra. The unspoken frame is that the Name does not check your record before it saves you; it reached a child, a king, a sinner, and a beast alike. Tuka places himself last in the line and draws the only conclusion he needs: he too holds the Name, so worldly existence holds no fear for him.

GATHA 4334 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the rare human birth

मराठी मूळ

बहुतां जन्मां अंतीं जन्मलासी नरा । देव तूं सोइरा करीं आतां ॥1॥
करीं आतां बापा स्वहिताचा स्वार्थ । अनर्थाचा अर्थ सांडीं आतां ॥ध्रु.॥
सांडि आतां कुडी कल्पनेची वाट । मार्ग आहे नीट पंढरीचा ॥2॥
पंढरीस जावें सर्व सुख घ्यावें । रूप तें पाहावें विटेवरि ॥3॥
विटेवरि नीट आनंदाचा कंद । तुका नाचे छंद नामघोषें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

After countless births, you have at last been born as a human. Now make God your true companion.

Now, dear one, pursue the goal of your own welfare; abandon the pursuit of what leads to ruin. Give up the crooked path of false imagination.

The road to Pandhari is straight and clear. Go to Pandhari and receive all happiness.

Behold that form standing on the brick, the root of all bliss. Says Tuka, I dance in the joy of the Name's resounding chant.

IN PLAIN WORDS

After many births, at last you are born a human, man. Now make God your kin. Now, dear one, work for your own true good; let go of the pursuit that ends in ruin. Give up the crooked road of false imagining. The road to Pandhari is straight. Go to Pandhari and take all happiness. Look at that form standing on the brick, the root of all joy. Tuka says: I dance to the rhythm, in the loud chant of the Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks straight to the listener about how rare this moment is. A human birth has come only after countless lives, and he treats it as a narrow opening that must not be wasted on what leads to ruin. The frame he names is the choice between two roads: the crooked path of false imagining, and the straight road to Pandhari. He tells the person to drop the first and take the second, because the form standing on the brick at Pandhari is the root of all happiness and is there to be received. The poem ends not in argument but in example, with Tuka himself dancing in the loud chant of the Name, showing what taking that road looks like.

GATHA 4335 Appeals and Exhortations

Warning, the company you keep

मराठी मूळ

किती सांगों तरि नाइकति बटकीचे । पुढें सिंदळीचे रडतील ॥1॥
नका नका करुं रांडेची संगती । नेवोनी अधोपाती घालिल यम ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जरी देवीं नाहीं चाड । हाणोनि थोबाड फोडिल यम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No matter how much I tell them, the stubborn ones will not listen. In the end they will weep over their own ruin.

Do not, do not keep the company of wickedness; Yama will drag you down to the lowest depths. Says Tuka, if there is no longing for God, Yama will smash your face and cast you down.

IN PLAIN WORDS

However much I tell them, the stubborn ones will not listen. Later the loose ones will weep. Do not, do not keep wicked company; Yama will carry you down and throw you into the lowest place. Tuka says: if there is no longing for God in you, Yama will strike your mouth and break it.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a blunt warning, and Tukaram does not soften it. He has spoken again and again, and the people set in their ways still will not hear, so he says plainly where their course ends: in grief, and in Yama, the lord of death, dragging them down to the lowest place. The harshness is aimed at the pattern, not at scorn for the person: it is the refusal to listen and the clinging to corrupt company that he is striking at. The hinge of the whole poem is its last line, that the real danger is having no longing for God at all. The threat is meant to wake that longing before it is too late, not to consign anyone to contempt.

GATHA 4336 Worldly Metaphors

Satire, the show outshines the wedding

मराठी मूळ

उधानु काटीवरि चोपडुची आस । नवरा राजस मिरवतसे ॥1॥
जिव्हाळ्याचा काठी उबाळ्याच्या मोटा । नवरा चोहटा मिरवतसे ॥ध्रु.॥
तुळसीची माळ नवरीचे कंठीं । नोवरा वैकुंठीं वाट पाहे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसी नोव†याची कथा । परमार्थ वृथा बुडविला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The groom rides on a mare, hoping for sweets, parading himself as a handsome bridegroom. Bundles of firewood and rolls of bedding: the bridegroom parades through the crossroads.

A tulsi garland hangs at the bride's neck, while the groom waits at the gates of Vaikuntha. Says Tuka, this is the story of the groom whose spiritual life was drowned in worldly show.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The groom rides up hoping for sweets, parading himself as a fine bridegroom. With sticks for the tongue and bundles for show, the groom struts through the crossroads. A tulsi garland hangs at the bride's neck, while the groom stands waiting at the gate of Vaikuntha. Tuka says: this is the tale of the groom whose spiritual life was drowned in show.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells a small wedding scene as a parable and lets the irony do the work. A groom parades through the crossroads making a great display, hungry for sweets and praise, all surface and noise. The contrast the poem sets up is the quiet bride wearing the tulsi garland of devotion while the showy groom is left waiting at the gate of liberation, never entering. The frame left unspoken is that the groom stands for a life that turns religion into spectacle: busy with appearances, it loses the thing it was for. Tuka names the loss plainly at the end, that the man's whole spiritual life was drowned in show. The warning is pointed at the impulse to perform devotion rather than live it.

GATHA 4337 The Nature of God

God's greatness, the child and the Mother

मराठी मूळ

न कळे महिमा वेद मोनावले । जेथें पांगुळले मनपवन ॥1॥
चंद्र सूर्य ज्याचें तेज वागविती । तेथें माझी मती कोणीकडे ॥ध्रु.॥
काय म्यां वाणावें तुझ्या थोरपणा । सहस्रवदना वर्णवेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी बाळ तूं माउली । कृपेची साउली करीं देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His greatness cannot be known; the Vedas have fallen silent before it. The mind and breath falter and grow lame.

The sun and moon carry His radiance; where then does my small intellect stand? How can I describe Your greatness when even the thousand-headed Shesha cannot express it? Says Tuka, I am a child and You are my Mother. Spread the shade of Your grace over me, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His greatness cannot be known; the Vedas fall silent before it, where mind and breath go lame. The sun and moon only carry his light; what is my small wit beside that? How can I describe your greatness, when even thousand-mouthed Shesha cannot tell it? Tuka says: we are children and you are the Mother. Spread the shade of your grace over me, O God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits at the start that praise has a limit. He stacks up the greatest witnesses he knows, the Vedas, the mind and breath, the sun and moon, the thousand-mouthed serpent Shesha, and shows that all of them fall silent or come up short before God's greatness. The frame is the gap between an immeasurable God and a small human intellect that cannot hope to describe him. Rather than despair at that gap, the poem turns it into intimacy: if I cannot reach you with words, let me come as a child to a mother. The closing prayer changes the whole key, asking not for understanding but simply for the shade of grace, which a child receives without needing to comprehend it.

GATHA 4338 The Saints

The saints, grace through the dust of their feet

मराठी मूळ

संतचरणरज लागतां सहज । वासनेचें बीज जळोन जाय ॥1॥
मग रामनामीं उपजे आवडी । सुख घडोघडी वाढों लागे ॥ध्रु.॥
कंठीं प्रेम दाटे नयनीं नीर लोटे । हृदयीं प्रगटे रामरूप॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे साधन सुलभ गोमटें । परि उपतिष्ठे पूर्वपुण्यें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When the dust of the saints' feet touches one spontaneously, the very seed of desire is burned away. Then love for Rama's Name arises, and happiness grows moment by moment.

Emotion chokes the throat, tears stream from the eyes, and the form of Rama appears in the heart. Says Tuka, this path is simple and beautiful, but it comes only through the merit of past lives.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the dust of the saints' feet touches you of its own accord, the very seed of desire burns away. Then love for Rama's Name is born, and happiness grows moment by moment. Love swells in the throat, tears stream from the eyes, the form of Rama appears in the heart. Tuka says: this path is easy and lovely, yet it comes only by the merit of past lives.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the chain of grace that begins with the saints. He says the touch of the dust of their feet, when it comes on its own, burns the very seed of craving, so the change does not start with effort but with contact. From that follows a sequence the plain layer simply reports: love for Rama's Name arises, joy grows, the throat chokes with feeling, tears come, and Rama's form shows itself in the heart. The frame he adds at the end holds two truths together without softening either: the path is easy and beautiful, and yet it is not had on demand. He says it ripens only through the merit of past lives, which is his way of marking such an encounter as grace, not as something one can simply seize.

GATHA 4339 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, hold me as your only one

मराठी मूळ

विधवेसि एक सुत । अहनिनशीं तेथें चित्त ॥1॥
तैसा तूं मज एकला । नको मोकलूं विठ्ठला ॥ध्रु.॥
सुपुत्रालागीं बाप । अवघे तेथें चि संकल्प ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं । पतिव्रते जैसा पति॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A widow has but one son, and day and night her chitta is fixed on him. Just so, You are my only one; do not abandon me, O Vitthal.

As a father devotes all his hopes to a worthy son, so is my devotion to You. Says Tuka, as a faithful wife holds her husband in her chitta, so do I hold You.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A widow has one son, and day and night her chitta is fixed on him. So are you to me, my only one: do not let me go, O Vitthal. As a father puts all his hopes in a worthy son, so my whole intent rests there. Tuka says: as a faithful wife holds her husband in her chitta, so I hold you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays by piling up images of single-hearted attachment. He compares his hold on Vitthal to a widow with one son, a father pledged to a worthy child, and a faithful wife fixed on her husband, three bonds in which the whole heart is given to one and there is no second to fall back on. The frame the plain layer leaves unspoken is that each image is also a claim of dependence: the widow has no one else, so the loss would be total. That is why the refrain turns into a plea not to be let go. Tuka is asking God to honor the same exclusiveness he himself feels, to be to him what these undivided loves are to their object.

GATHA 4340 Devotion to Vitthal

Indignation, defending God's devotees

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणे विठ्ठल पाषाण । त्याच्या तोंडावरि वाहाण॥1॥
नको नको दर्शन त्याचें । गलितकुष्ट भरो वाचे ॥ध्रु.॥
शिाळग्रामासि ह्मणे धोंडा । कोड पडो त्याच्या तोंडा ॥2॥
भावी सद्गु मनुष्य । त्याचें खंडो का आयुष्य ॥3॥
हरिभक्ताच्या करी चेष्टा । त्याचे तोंडीं पडो विष्ठा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे किती ऐकों । कोठवरी मर्यादा राखों ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who calls Vitthal a mere stone deserves a shoe across his face. May I never see the face of such a person; may his mouth rot with leprosy.

He who calls the Shaligrama a rock, may sores cover his mouth. He who considers the true Guru a mere mortal, may his life be cut short.

He who mocks the devotees of Hari, may filth fall upon his tongue. Says Tuka, how much more can I hear? How long can I endure such insults to the Lord?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever calls Vitthal a mere stone, a shoe belongs across his face. I do not want the sight of such a one; let his mouth fill with rotting sores. Whoever calls the Shaligram a rock, let sores break out on his mouth. Whoever takes the true Guru for an ordinary man, let his life be cut short. Whoever mocks the devotees of Hari, let filth fall on his tongue. Tuka says: how much am I to hear? How long am I to keep my patience?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is one of Tukaram's fiercest poems, and it is the cry of a man whose limit has been reached by those who jeer at God, the sacred image, the Guru, and the devotees. The curses are violent on the surface, but the target is a pattern of speech: the habit of reducing the holy to dead stone and mocking those who love it. The honest way to read it is to feel the heat as the measure of his devotion rather than as a sentence on any soul; the final lines, asking how much he can bear and how long he can hold his patience, show a man at the edge, not a man dispensing judgments calmly. It is a warning against the contempt in oneself, the easy sneer that empties the sacred of meaning, more than a wish of harm on a neighbor. The stakes Tuka names are how much insult to the Lord a lover of God can stand to hear.

GATHA 4341 The Power of the Name

The Name, even gods envy human birth

मराठी मूळ

स्वगाअचे अमर इच्छताति देवा । मृत्युलोकीं व्हावा जन्म आह्मां ॥1॥
नारायणनामें होऊं जिवनमुक्त । किर्त्तनीं अनंत गाऊं गीती ॥ध्रु.॥
वैकुंठींचे जन सदा चिंतिताति । कइं येथें येती हरिचे दास ॥2॥
यमधर्म वाट पाहे निरंतर । जोडोनियां कर तिष्ठतसे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे पावावया पैल पार । नामंत्र सार भाविकासि॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The immortals of heaven desire, O God, to take birth in the mortal world. Through Narayana's Name we shall become liberated while alive, singing the songs of the Infinite in kirtan.

The beings of Vaikuntha constantly wonder when the servants of Hari will come among them. Yama himself waits ceaselessly, standing with folded hands.

Says Tuka, for crossing to the far shore, the mantra of the Name is the essence for the faithful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The immortals of heaven long, O God, to be born in the mortal world. Through Narayana's Name we become liberated while still alive, and sing the songs of the Infinite in kirtan. The people of Vaikuntha keep wondering when the servants of Hari will come among them. Yama himself waits without end, standing with folded hands. Tuka says: to reach the far shore, the mantra of the Name is the essence for the faithful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the usual ranking of worlds upside down. The immortals in heaven, who are supposed to be the lucky ones, actually long to be born here in the mortal world, because only here can one sing the Name and become liberated while still alive. The frame the plain layer holds back is why earth is the privileged place: the Name and kirtan are available to a living body, and through them one is freed now, not after death. He sharpens it with two images, the residents of Vaikuntha eagerly awaiting Hari's servants, and Yama, the lord of death, standing with folded hands before such a devotee instead of dragging him off. Tuka's closing line states the means simply: for the faithful, the mantra of the Name is the one essential thing that carries them across.

GATHA 4342 The Nature of God

Nondual vision, hold the feet

मराठी मूळ

व्यापक हा विश्वंभर । चराचर याचेनी ॥1॥
पंढरिराव विटेवरि । त्याचींच धरीं पाउलें ॥ध्रु.॥
अवघियांचा हा चि ठाव । देवोदेवीं सकळ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणें न करीं सोस । भेदें दोष उफराटे॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Lord pervades all; He sustains all that moves and is still. The Lord of Pandhari stands upon the brick; hold fast to His feet alone.

He is the refuge of all, present in every god and goddess. Says Tuka, do not exhaust yourself in vain; making distinctions only leads to error.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Lord fills everything. He holds up all that moves and all that stays still. The Lord of Pandhari stands on the brick. Hold onto those feet alone. He is the one resting place of all. He is in every god and every goddess. Tuka says: do not wear yourself out. To see things as separate is the upside-down error.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram begins from the widest claim and brings it down to one point. The Lord is not somewhere far off: he pervades all that moves and is still, and lives inside every god and goddess people run to. So there is no need to scatter your effort across many objects of worship. The single resting place of everything is standing right there on the brick at Pandhari; hold those feet alone. To treat things as separate, as if devotion must be spread among rival deities, is the error turned upside down.

GATHA 4343 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, the secret sweetness

मराठी मूळ

पसरोनि मुखें । कैसे धालों बा हारीखें ॥1॥
ब्रह्मादिका दुर्लभ वांटा । आह्मां फावला राणटां ॥ध्रु.॥
गोड लागे काय तरि। कृपावंत जाला हरि ॥2॥
उडती थेंबुटें । अमृताहुनि गोमटें ॥3॥
गोडाहुनि गोड । जिव्हा नाचे वाटे कोड ॥4॥
खुणावुनि तुका । दावी वर्म बोलों नका ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With mouths wide open, how happily we are satisfied. What is rare even for Brahma and the gods has been freely granted to us, the simple folk.

Why does it taste so sweet? Because Hari has become gracious. The drops that splash are sweeter than nectar itself.

Sweeter than sweet, the tongue dances with delight. Says Tuka, making a sign: know the secret, but do not speak of it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Our mouths are open wide. How happily we are filled. The share that is hard for Brahma and the gods to get has fallen freely to us, the simple ones. Why does it taste so sweet? Because Hari has turned gracious. Even the splashing drops are sweeter than nectar. Sweeter than sweet; the tongue dances with wonder. Tuka says, making a sign: know the secret, but do not speak it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing the taste of grace and guarding it at the same time. What the highest gods can barely earn has been handed freely to ordinary people, and the only reason is that Hari chose to be kind. The poem keeps reaching for the flavor and failing to hold it: sweeter than nectar, sweeter than sweet, until the tongue itself dances. The last line turns to a gesture instead of words. Some things in this taste can be pointed to but not explained; Tuka signals to keep the secret rather than cheapen it by talking.

GATHA 4344 Devotion to Vitthal

Belonging, Pandhari as home

मराठी मूळ

आमुचि मिरास पंढरी । आमुचें घर भीमातिरीं ॥1॥
पांडुरंग आमुचा पिता । रकुमाबाई आमुचि माता ॥ध्रु.॥
भाव पुंडलीक मुनि । चंद्रभागा आमुची बहिणी ॥2॥
तुका जुन्हाट मिराशी । ठाव दिला पायांपाशीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Pandhari is our ancestral estate. Our home is on the banks of the Bhima.

Panduranga is our father, and Rukmini is our mother. The sage Pundalik is our brother, and the Chandrabhaga is our sister.

Says Tuka, ours is an ancient inheritance; a place has been given at His feet.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pandhari is the land we have inherited. Our house stands on the bank of the Bhima. Panduranga is our father. Rakhumai is our mother. The sage Pundalik is our brother. The Chandrabhaga is our sister. Tuka says: ours is an old inheritance. A place has been given at his feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram claims the holy town not as a place he visits but as the family estate he was born into. He names each member of that household: Panduranga as father, Rakhumai as mother, the saint Pundalik as brother, the river Chandrabhaga as sister. By doing this he turns devotion into kinship; belonging at Pandhari is not earned by merit but received like a birthright. The closing line names the gift plainly: an ancient inheritance, and within it a place granted at the Lord's feet.

GATHA 4345 Longing and Separation

Longing, the cry against God's silence

मराठी मूळ

गंगा गेली सिंधुपाशीं । जरी तो ठाव नेदी तिशी॥1॥
तिणें जावें कवण्या ठाया । मज सांगा पंढरिराया ॥ध्रु.॥
जळ क्षोभलें जलचरां । माता बाळा नेदी थारा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आलों शरण । देवा त्वां कां धरिलें मौन्य ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If the Ganga goes to the ocean and the ocean refuses her a place, where shall she go? Tell me, O Lord of Pandhari. If the water turns hostile to the fish, if a mother denies shelter to her child, what then? Says Tuka, I have come seeking refuge. O God, why have You maintained this silence?

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Ganga goes down to the ocean. If the ocean will not give her a place, where is she to go? Tell me that, Lord of Pandhari. If the water turns against the fish that live in it, if a mother gives her child no shelter, then what? Tuka says: I have come to you for refuge. God, why have you kept silent?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses his complaint as a string of impossible refusals. The river belongs in the ocean, the fish belong in the water, the child belongs with its mother; if even these last refuges turned someone away, there would be nowhere left to go. He sets himself in that place: he has come to the only one who could shelter him, and the Lord has answered with silence. The poem is not doubt so much as a wounded demand, holding God to the bond a refuge owes whoever runs to it.

GATHA 4346 The Moral Ideal

Integrity, inner and outer as one

मराठी मूळ

बैसो आतां मनीं । आले तैसें चि वदनीं ॥1॥
मग अवघें चि गोड । पुरे सकळ हि कोड ॥ध्रु.॥
बाहेरील भाव । तैसा अंतरीं हि वाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मणि । शोभा दाखवी कोंदणीं॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let what is within settle in the mind; let it come out through the lips just as it is. Then everything becomes sweet, and all longing is fulfilled.

Let the outer feeling be the same as the inner space. Says Tuka, a gem reveals its beauty when set in the right mounting.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let it settle in the mind now, and let it come to the lips exactly as it is. Then everything turns sweet, and every longing is satisfied. Let the feeling you show outside be the same as the space within. Tuka says: a gem shows its beauty when it is set in the right mounting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is teaching that words are sweet only when they match the heart behind them. Let what truly rests in the mind be what comes out of the mouth, with nothing added or staged. When the inner and the outer agree, speech itself becomes sweet and the heart's longing is met. The closing image makes the standard concrete: a gem needs its proper setting to shine, and a feeling needs honest expression to show its real worth. The opposite, saying one thing while feeling another, is the flaw the poem warns against.

GATHA 4347 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, vigilant nearness

मराठी मूळ

वेठी ऐसा भाव । न करी अहाच उपाव ॥1॥
रूप डसवी न जिवा । अवघा ये च ठायीं हेवा ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपणाचेपरि । लेखा पळनिमिषेवरि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आस । संनिध चि जगदीशा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not approach devotion as forced labor; do not practice it merely as a calculated remedy. Let the divine form be fixed in the soul.

Let all desire be concentrated at this one place. Like a miser who counts every passing moment, so should one watch over one's devotion.

Says Tuka, longing for the Lord of the world, keep Him ever near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not take to devotion as forced labor. Do not work it like a clever bargain. Let the form take root in your soul, and let every desire gather at this one place. Like a miser who counts each passing moment, watch over it that closely. Tuka says: keep your longing for the Lord of the world right beside you.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram warns against two cheap ways of approaching God: dragging through devotion as though it were a chore, and treating it as a calculated trade for some return. Instead the Lord's form should sink into the soul until every other desire is drawn to that single point. He borrows the miser as a model, not for greed but for attentiveness: a miser guards each moment of his hoard, and devotion deserves that same unbroken watch. The aim is nearness, keeping the longing for God close at every instant rather than setting it aside.

GATHA 4348 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one assurance

मराठी मूळ

सर्वसुखा अधिकारी । मुखें उच्चारी हरिनाम ॥1॥
सर्वांगें तो सवौत्तम । मुखीं नाम हरीचें ॥ध्रु.॥
ऐशी उभारिली बाहे। वेदीं पाहें पुराणीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे येथें कांही । संदेह नाहीं भरवसा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who utters Hari's Name with his mouth is entitled to all happiness. He who has Hari's Name on his lips is supreme among all.

The Vedas and Puranas raise their arms and declare this truth. Says Tuka, in this matter there is not the slightest doubt; you may be fully assured.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever says Hari's Name with his mouth has a claim to every joy. With Hari's Name on his lips, he is best of all, through and through. The Vedas and the Puranas raise their arms and tell it so. Tuka says: in this there is no doubt at all. You can rest sure of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the spoken Name the whole qualification for blessedness. The one who utters Hari's Name is entitled to all happiness and counts as supreme, no other credential required. He calls the Vedas and Puranas as witnesses, picturing them raising their arms to proclaim the same thing. The closing line removes any hedging: there is no doubt here, and the listener can rest fully assured. The teaching levels the field, since the Name is open to anyone who will speak it.

GATHA 4349 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the formless takes form

मराठी मूळ

जो का निर्गुण निराकार । तेथें धरियेले अवतार॥1॥
निर्गुण होता तो सगुणासि आला । भक्तिसाटीं प्रगटला ॥ध्रु.॥
जो का त्रिभुवनचाळक । तो हा नंदाचा बाळक ॥2॥
सोडविलें वसुदेवदेवकीसि । अवतार धरिला तिचे कुशी ॥3॥
मारियेला कंसराणा । राज्यीं स्थापिलें उग्रसेना ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे देवादिदेव । तो हा उभा पंढरिराव ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who is formless and without qualities took on an incarnation. The One without attributes came into the world of form, manifesting for the sake of His devotees.

He who governs all three worlds became Nanda's little child. He freed Vasudeva and Devaki, taking birth from her womb.

He slew the tyrant Kamsa and established Ugrasena on the throne. Says Tuka, this God of gods stands here in Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who has no qualities and no form took on a body here. The one beyond attributes came into form. For his devotees he appeared. The one who governs all three worlds became the little child of Nanda. He set Vasudeva and Devaki free, taking birth from her womb. He killed the tyrant king Kamsa and set Ugrasena on the throne. Tuka says: this God of gods is the one who stands here in Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the descent of the formless into form and then names where it ends. The one without qualities or shape, the ruler of all three worlds, became Nanda's small child for the sake of his devotees. The poem runs through the story: birth from Devaki's womb, the release of his imprisoned parents, the killing of the tyrant Kamsa, the restoring of Ugrasena to the throne. Then it lands the claim that matters for the worshipper: that same God of gods is the figure standing on the brick at Pandhari. The far-off absolute and the near, visible Lord are one.

GATHA 4350 The Power of the Name

The Name, the treasure that never runs out

मराठी मूळ

जुनाट हें धन अंत नाहीं पार । खात आले फार सरलें नाहीं ॥1॥
नारद हा मुनि शुक सनकादिक । उरलें आमुप तुह्मां आह्मां ॥ध्रु.॥
येथूनियां धना खाती बहु जन । वाल गुंज उणें जालें नाहीं ॥2॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is an ancient treasure without end or limit. So many have partaken of it, yet it has never been exhausted.

The sage Narada, Shuka, and the Sanakadiks have all drawn from it. What remains is enough for you and for us.

Says Tuka, though countless people feed from this treasure, not even a grain has diminished.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is an old treasure with no end and no edge. Many have fed on it for a long time, and it has not run out. The sage Narada, Shuka, the Sanaka brothers, all took from it, and there is still plenty left for you and for us. Many people feed from this treasure, yet not a grain of it has grown less.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the Name, the wealth of God, as a treasure that cannot be spent. It is ancient and without limit; ages of people have drawn on it and it has never been depleted. He names great seekers, Narada, Shuka, the sons of Brahma, who all fed from it, and notes that the supply for ordinary people like us is undiminished. The point is reassurance: no matter how many partake, this riches loses nothing, so no one need fear arriving too late or finding the store empty.

GATHA 4351 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the proud man's rot

मराठी मूळ

कोडियाचें गोरेपण । तैसें अहंकारीज्ञान ॥1॥
त्यासि अंतरीं रिझे कोण । जवळी जातां चिळसवाण ॥ध्रु.॥
प्रेतदेह गौरविलें। तैसें विटंबवाणें जालें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे खाणें विष्ठा । तैशा देहबुद्धचेष्टा॥3॥
पाया जाला नारू । तेथें बांधला कापूरु ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fairness of a leper is only skin-deep; just so is the knowledge of the egotist. Who in their chitta is pleased with him? Coming close, one feels only revulsion.

Adorning a corpse does not lend it dignity; it only becomes more grotesque. Says Tuka, eating filth is what the body-bound intellect amounts to.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A leper's fair skin is only on the surface. The knowledge of a proud man is just like that. Who is pleased with him at heart? Go near him and you feel only disgust. Dress up a corpse and it gains no dignity; it only grows more grotesque. Tuka says: the schemes of a body-bound mind are like eating filth. A sore opens on the foot, and there they bind camphor over it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the hollowness of learning carried by an egotist. Knowledge worn for show is like the fair skin of a diseased man: pleasant only at first glance, repellent once you come close. Decorating it is as futile as dressing a corpse, which only makes the ruin more obvious. The harshness aims at the pattern, not at any person's worth: when the mind is bound to the body and to pride, even its cleverness is foul, like binding fragrant camphor over a festering sore. The poem asks the listener to check whether their own learning serves truth or only feeds the ego.

GATHA 4352 Worldly Metaphors

Social criticism, caste as self-degradation

मराठी मूळ

तेथें बिबव्याचें काम । अधमासि तों अधम ॥1॥
रुसला गुलाम । धणी करीतो सलाम ।
तेथें चाकराचें काम । अधमासि तों अधम ॥ध्रु.॥
रुसली घरची दासी । धणी समजावी तियेसि ।
तेथें बटकीचें काम। अधमासि तों अधम ॥2॥
देव्हा†यावरि विंचू आला । देवपूजा नावडे त्याला ।
तेथें पैजारेचें काम । अधमासि तों अधम ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जाती । जातीसाटीं खाती माती ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where a shoe is the remedy, one worse than the lowest is at work. When a slave sulks, the master bows to him; there, a servant's work is needed.

When the household maid is offended, the master must console her; there, a handmaid's work is needed. When a scorpion climbs onto the altar, the worship of God becomes impossible; there, a sandal is what is needed.

Says Tuka, those who cling to caste end up eating dirt for the sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where a beating is the cure, the lowest gets something lower still. When a slave sulks, the master bows to him; there a servant's handling is what is needed. When the house maid takes offense, the master must coax her; there a handmaid's handling is what is needed. When a scorpion climbs onto the shrine, worship cannot go on; there a sandal is what is needed. Tuka says: those who live for caste end up eating dirt for the sake of it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up cases where the right response is plain force or correction, not flattery. A sulking slave or an offended maid may have to be coaxed by a soft master, but a scorpion on the altar gets the sandal, because it only blocks the worship. He is naming people who, out of pride, insist on being handled gently when what they truly need is to be put in their place. The closing turns the blade on caste-pride itself: those who cling to caste and live by its rankings end up degraded, eating dirt for the sake of a thing that lifts no one. The poem invites self-examination about the pride one defends as honor.

GATHA 4353 The Power of the Name

The Name, the final weapon

मराठी मूळ

ब्राह्मणा न कळे आपुलें तें वर्म । गंवसे परब्रह्म नामें एका ॥1॥
लहानथोरासि करितों प्रार्थना । दृढ नारायणा मनीं धरा॥ध्रु.॥
सर्वांप्रति माझी हे चि असे विनंती । आठवा श्रीपती मनामाजी ॥2॥
केशव नारायण करितां आचमन । ते चि संध्या स्नान कर्म क्रिया ॥3॥
नामें करा नित्य भजन भोजन । ब्रह्मकर्म ध्यान याचे पायीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि निर्वाणींचें शस्त्र । ह्मणोनि सर्वत्र स्मरा वेगीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The brahmin does not know his own true essence. The supreme Brahman is found through the Name alone.

I entreat all, young and old: hold Narayana firmly in your minds. This is my humble prayer to everyone: remember Shripati in the depths of your mind.

Uttering 'Keshava, Narayana' while performing the daily rituals, that itself becomes the evening prayer, the bathing, and every observance. Let the Name be your daily worship, your sustenance, your meditation at His feet.

Says Tuka, this is the ultimate weapon; therefore, remember it everywhere without delay.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The brahmin does not know his own secret. The supreme Brahman is found through the one Name. I pray to small and great alike: hold Narayana firmly in your mind. This is my one request to all of you: remember Shripati within your mind. Say Keshava, Narayana while you sip the water, and that itself is your evening prayer, your bath, your every rite. Make the Name your daily worship and your daily food, and let your sacred duty and your meditation be at his feet. Tuka says: this is the weapon for the last hour. So remember it everywhere, and quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells even the learned brahmin that the essence he searches for in ritual is reached only through the Name. He pleads with everyone, high and low, to hold Narayana fast in the mind. Then he folds all the prescribed observances into the Name: utter Keshava and Narayana, and that single act stands in for the twilight prayer, the ritual bath, and every duty, becoming worship, food, and meditation at once. He calls the Name the weapon for the moment of death, the one thing that holds when nothing else can. The closing urgency, remember it everywhere and without delay, makes the practice immediate rather than something saved for later.

GATHA 4354 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the body's one use

मराठी मूळ

नरदेह वांयां जाय । सेवीं सद्गूचे पाय ॥1॥
सांडोनियां अहंभाव । धरीं भक्ती पूजीं देव ॥ध्रु.॥
थोराचिये वाटे। जातां भवशोक आटे ॥2॥
प्रल्हादातें तारी । तुका ह्मणे तो कंठीं धरीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This human body will go to waste without serving the Sadguru's feet. Abandon the ego and worship God with devotion.

Walking the path of the great ones, the sorrow of worldly existence is consumed. Says Tuka, He who saved Prahlad, hold Him close to your chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This human body goes to waste if you do not serve the Sadguru's feet. Let go of the ego. Hold to devotion and worship God. Walk the path of the great ones, and the sorrow of this world burns away. He saved Prahlad. Tuka says: hold that One close in your heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells you what a human birth is for and what wastes it. The body is not an end in itself; if it never bends to serve the teacher's feet, it is thrown away. The way through is plain: drop the ego, worship God with devotion, and follow the road the great souls already walked, for on that road the grief of worldly existence is consumed. He grounds the promise in fact, the same Lord who rescued the child Prahlad, and tells you to keep that Lord pressed close in your heart.

GATHA 4355 Worldly Life

Worldly life, character and destiny

मराठी मूळ

संचित तैशी बुद्धि उपजे मनामधीं । सांगितलें सिद्ध नव जाय ॥1॥
ज्याचा जैसा ठेवा तो त्यापाशीं धांवे । न लगती करावे उपदेश ॥2॥
घेऊन उठती आपुलाले गुण । भविष्याप्रमाणें तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As is one's accumulated karma, so does the intellect arise in the mind. What has been foretold cannot be undone by advice.

Whatever treasure lies within a person, it runs toward him on its own; no teaching is needed. Says Tuka, people rise carrying their own inherent qualities, according to their destiny.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As your accumulated karma is, so the intellect rises in your mind. What is already written cannot be undone by advice. Whatever treasure lies inside a person runs toward him on its own; no teaching is needed for it. People stand up carrying their own inborn qualities. Tuka says: it goes according to what is to come.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming how stubbornly a person's nature follows them. The mind you think with is shaped by the karma you have stored, so the kind of intellect that arises is already set, and counsel from outside cannot reverse what is fixed. He pushes the point further: whatever a person carries within, good or bad, comes to them by itself, without anyone needing to teach it. Each one rises into life bearing their own inherent traits, unfolding as destiny requires. It is a sober look at how character runs ahead of advice.

GATHA 4356 Longing and Separation

Longing, the exiled fawn

मराठी मूळ

कुरंगीपाडस चुकलेसे वनीं । फुटे दुःखेंकरोनि हृदय त्याचें ॥1॥
तैसा परदेशी जालों तुजविण । नको हो निर्वाण पाहूं माझें ॥ध्रु.॥
अपराध्याच्या कोटि घालीं सर्व पोटीं । नको या शेवटीं उपेक्षूं गा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असों द्यावी माझी चिंता । कृपाळु अनंता पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a fawn separated from its mother in the forest, my heart breaks with anguish. Just so have I become an exile without You.

Do not look on at my final destruction, O Lord. Forgive millions of offenses; put them all into Your belly.

Do not forsake me at this end. Says Tuka, let my worry remain with You, O merciful Ananta, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Like a fawn that has lost its mother in the forest, its heart breaking with grief, so I have become an exile without You. Do not stand and watch my final ruin. I have committed millions of offenses; take them all into Your belly. Do not forsake me at this end. Tuka says: let my care be Yours to carry, O merciful Ananta, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram cries out from the pain of feeling cut off from God. He compares himself to a fawn that has lost its mother in the forest, its heart splitting with anguish, and says that without the Lord he is exactly that lost and that homeless. He begs God not to be a bystander to his destruction, and asks Him to swallow up the millions of wrongs he has done, to take them inside and make them disappear. The final plea is total surrender: do not abandon me now, and let my worry no longer be mine but Yours, merciful Ananta, Panduranga.

GATHA 4357 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the free gift at Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

धन्य जालों हो संसारीं । आह्मी देखिली पंढरी ॥1॥
चंद्रभागे करुं स्नान । पुंडलीकाचें दर्शन ॥ध्रु.॥
करुं क्षेत्रप्रदिक्षणा। भेटूं सत या सज्जनां ॥2॥
उभे राहूं गरुडपारीं । डोळेंभरुनी पाहों हरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे वाळवंटीं । महालाभ फुकासाटीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Blessed am I in this world, for I have seen Pandhari. Let us bathe in the Chandrabhaga and take darshan of Pundalik.

Let us circumambulate the holy place and meet the true saints. Let us stand at the Garuda pillar and gaze upon Hari to our full satisfaction.

Says Tuka, in the sand-bed of Pandhari, the greatest gain comes freely.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Blessed am I in this world, for I have seen Pandhari. Let us bathe in the Chandrabhaga and take darshan of Pundalik. Let us walk around the holy place and meet the true saints. Let us stand at the Garuda pillar and look at Hari until our eyes are full. Tuka says: on the sand-bed of Pandhari the great gain costs nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is overflowing at the pilgrimage town and counting its blessings one by one. To have simply seen Pandhari makes a life worthwhile, and he calls others to share the round of it: bathe in the river Chandrabhaga, take darshan of Pundalik, circle the holy ground, and meet the saints gathered there. The heart of the visit is to stand at the Garuda pillar and gaze at Hari until the eyes are satisfied. He ends with the wonder of it: the highest gain a soul can win is handed out free on the sand of Pandhari, with no price asked.

GATHA 4358 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the pilgrim bound for Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीचा वारकरी । खेपा वैकुंठबंदरीं ॥1॥
तया नाहीं आणखी पेणें । सदा वैकुंठीं राहाणें ॥ध्रु.॥
आला गेला केल्या यात्रा । उद्धरिलें कुळा सर्वत्रा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नाहीं । यासि संदेह कल्पांतीं ही ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The pilgrim of Pandhari makes his journeys to the port of Vaikuntha. He needs no other destination; his dwelling is forever in Vaikuntha.

By coming and going on pilgrimage, he has delivered his entire lineage. Says Tuka, there is not the slightest doubt about this, even at the end of time.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The pilgrim of Pandhari makes his trips to the port of Vaikuntha. He needs no other destination; he dwells in Vaikuntha forever. By coming and going on pilgrimage, he has saved his whole lineage. Tuka says: there is not the slightest doubt about this, even at the end of time.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the Pandhari pilgrim's repeated journey mean something far larger than a road trip. Each visit, he says, is really a voyage to the harbor of Vaikuntha, God's own abode, so the pilgrim has no other goal and already lives there always. The merit does not stop at the pilgrim: by his comings and goings he lifts up his entire family line. Tukaram seals it with full certainty, saying there is no doubt in this at all, not even when the ages dissolve at the end of time.

GATHA 4359 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the cowherd dawn

मराठी मूळ

सोडियेल्या गाई नवलक्ष गोपाळीं । सवें वनमाळी चालियेला ॥1॥
सुदीन समय भाग्याचा उदय । चारावया गाई वनामाजी ॥ध्रु.॥
गाईगोपाळांच्या संगें चाली हरि । क्रीडा नानापरि खेळताति ॥2 ॥
काठी कांबळीया मोहरीया पोंवा । सिदोरी गांजिवा खांद्यावरि ॥3॥
गोधनें संवगडे खेळे नानापरी । आले भीमातीरीं वेणुनादा ॥4॥
तेथें उभा ठेला गोपाळांसहित । सिदोरिया सोडीत बैसे तेथें ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे ज्यांनीं आणिल्या भाकरी । नेऊनियां हरीपुढें देती ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The nine hundred thousand cowherds released their cows, and the Lord Vanamali walked along with them. It was the blessed dawn of good fortune, going to graze the cows in the forest.

Hari walked with the cows and cowherds, playing games of every kind. Staffs, blankets, nose-rings, scarves, and lunch bundles and quivers slung over their shoulders.

The cattle and friends played in every way, coming to the banks of the Bhima, drawn by the sound of the flute. There He stood with the cowherds.

They untied their bundles and sat down together. Says Tuka, those who had brought their bread offerings placed them before Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cowherds let loose nine hundred thousand cows, and Vanamali walked along with them. It was a blessed dawn, a rising of good fortune, going out to graze the cows in the forest. Hari walked among the cows and cowherds, playing games of every kind. Staffs, blankets, nose-flutes, panpipes, lunch bundles and pouches were slung over their shoulders. The cattle and the friends played in every way, and they came to the bank of the Bhima, drawn by the sound of the flute. There He stood with the cowherds. They untied their bundles and sat down. Tuka says: those who had brought their bread carried it forward and laid it before Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is painting the simple morning when Krishna goes out herding with the cowherd boys. A vast number of cows are turned loose and Vanamali walks among them; the poet calls the hour itself blessed, a sunrise of good fortune, just because the Lord is going to the forest. He fills in the homely detail: the boys carry their staffs and blankets, their nose-flutes and panpipes, their lunch bundles over their shoulders, romping with the cattle until the flute draws them to the river Bhima. The scene closes in tender reverence: they sit, open their food, and the ones who brought bread bring it first to Hari, the meal turned into an offering.

GATHA 4360 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the meal that astonishes heaven

मराठी मूळ

ज्यां जैसी आवडी त्यां तैसा विभाग । देत पांडुरंग तृप्त जाली ॥1॥
मुखींचें उच्छिष्ट हिरोनियां खात । विस्मित विधाता देखोनियां ॥ध्रु.॥
दिलें जें गोपाळां तें नाहीं कोणासि । विस्मित मानसीं सुरवर ॥2॥
देव ऋषि मुनि सिद्ध हे चारण । शिव मरुद्गण चंद्र सूर्य ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे आले सकळ हि सुरवर । आनंदें निर्भर पाहावया ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

To each according to their desire, Panduranga distributed portions, and all were satisfied. He snatched morsels from their mouths and ate them, astonishing even the Creator who watched.

What He gave the cowherds is available to no one else; the gods themselves were amazed in mind. Gods, sages, munis, siddhas, celestials, Shiva, the Maruts, the sun and moon, all came, filled with bliss, just to watch.

Says Tuka, all the divine hosts arrived, overflowing with joy, to behold this sight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To each as he liked, Panduranga handed out portions, and everyone was satisfied. He snatched the half-eaten morsels from their mouths and ate them, and the Creator was amazed to see it. What He gave the cowherds is given to no one else; the gods were astonished in their hearts. Gods, sages, munis, siddhas, celestial singers, Shiva, the Maruts, the moon and the sun, all came, full of bliss, just to watch. Tuka says: every one of the divine hosts arrived, brimming with joy, to behold it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is marveling at how God shares food with His cowherd friends. Panduranga gives each boy the portion he wants and even eats the leftover, spit-touched morsels straight from their mouths, an intimacy so far beyond ceremony that the Creator Himself is stunned to watch. The point is that this nearness, this eating from the cowherds' hands, is granted to no one else, and the whole of heaven knows it. So gods, sages, siddhas, Shiva, the wind-gods, the sun and moon all gather, not to be served, but simply to witness a love that the highest beings can only stand and admire.

GATHA 4361 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the gods begging the leftovers

मराठी मूळ

आले सुरवर नानापक्षी जाले । सकळ अवतरले श्वापदवेषें ॥1॥
श्वानखररूपी होऊनियां आले । उच्छिष्ट कवळ वेचिताति ॥ध्रु.॥
होऊनियां दीन हात पसरिती । मागोनियां घेती उष्टावळी ॥2॥
अभिमान आड घालोनि बाहेरि । तयां ह्मणे घ्या रे धणी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे धणी लाधली अपार । तया सुखा पार काय सांगों ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gods came disguised as birds of many kinds, some incarnating as wild beasts. Taking the forms of dogs and donkeys, they arrived to gather the leftover morsels.

Becoming humble beggars, they stretched out their hands, asking for the leavings of the meal. Casting aside their pride, they stood outside, and He called out, 'Take your fill!' Says Tuka, they received an abundance beyond measure. How can one describe the extent of that joy?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The gods came as birds of many kinds, and some came down in the shapes of wild beasts. Taking the forms of dogs and donkeys, they came to pick up the leftover morsels. Becoming lowly beggars, they stretched out their hands and asked for the leavings of the meal. Setting their pride aside, they stood outside, and He called to them, take your fill. Tuka says: they received an abundance beyond measure. How can I tell the limit of that joy?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram drives home what the gods will lower themselves to do for a taste of Krishna's grace. They cannot share the cowherds' meal as themselves, so they slip in disguised as birds, as beasts, even as dogs and donkeys, just to scavenge the scraps left from the boys' plates. They make themselves into beggars with outstretched hands and lay down the pride that is the very mark of a god, standing humbly outside until the Lord calls, take your fill. The reversal is the teaching: heaven's mighty ones gladly trade rank for leftovers, and what they then receive is a joy so vast the poet says he cannot measure it.

GATHA 4362 Krishna Leela

Krishna, the cowherds at rough play

मराठी मूळ

एकमेकीं घेती थडका । पाडी धडका देऊनि ॥1॥
एकमेका पाठीवरि । बैसोनि करिती ढवाळी ॥ध्रु.॥
हाता हात हाणे लाही । पळतां घाई चुकविती ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लपणी चपणी । एका हाणी पाठीवरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They bump into one another, pushing and jostling each other. They ride on each other's backs, tussling and roughhousing.

They slap hands, playing tag, dodging blows while running. Says Tuka, they play hide and seek, one of them slapping another on the back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They bump into one another, knocking each other down with the blow. They climb on each other's backs and wrestle and tussle. Hand smacks hand in a game of tag, and they dodge the blows as they run. Tuka says: they play hide and seek, one of them slapping another on the back.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lingers on the plain rough-and-tumble of Krishna and the cowherd boys at play. They shove and bump and topple each other, ride piggyback, and wrestle in the dirt like any band of children. There is hand-slapping tag, dodging as they sprint, and hide and seek with a smack on the back when someone is caught. The poet records it without a lesson tacked on, and the wonder is exactly that: God in the thick of ordinary boyish games, fully one of the gang.

GATHA 4363 Krishna Leela

Krishna, calling the cows home

मराठी मूळ

चला वळूं गाई । दूर अंतरल्या भाई ॥1॥
खेळ खेळतां जाला शीण । कोण करी वणवण ॥ध्रु.॥
गाई हकारी कान्हया । ह्मणोनि लागती ते पायां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे द्यावें । नाम संकीर्तन बरवें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, let us round up the cows; they have wandered far away, brothers. Playing all these games has been tiring; who wants to keep searching? Krishna calls the cows, and they come to His feet.

Says Tuka, offer the Lord the beautiful gift of singing the Name in kirtan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, brothers, let us round up the cows; they have strayed far off. All this playing has worn us out; who wants to go wandering after them? Krishna calls the cows, and they come to His feet. Tuka says: offer the Lord the good gift of singing His Name in kirtan.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram closes the herding day with the boys tired and the cows scattered. They are spent from their games and reluctant to tramp around searching, so the work falls to Krishna, who simply calls and the cows come straight to His feet, the herd answering its master with no chase needed. On that small picture the poet turns to us with the one thing he always wants offered: the way to come to the Lord's feet ourselves is to give Him the beautiful gift of singing His Name in kirtan.

GATHA 4364 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name over the world

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं संसाराची चाड । गाऊं हरिचें नाम गोड ॥1॥
हो का प्राणाचा ही घात । परि हा न सोडीं अनंत ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्मोजन्मीं हा चि धंदा । संतसंग राहो सदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे भाव । तो हा जाणा पंढरिराव ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have no desire for worldly life; let me sing the sweet Name of Hari. Even if it costs my very life, I will not let go of this Infinite One.

Birth after birth, let this be my occupation: may the company of saints remain with me always. Says Tuka, this devotion, know it well, is the Lord of Pandhari Himself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have no appetite for worldly life; let me sing the sweet Name of Hari. Even if it costs my very life, I will not let go of this Infinite One. Birth after birth let this be my one trade; let the company of saints stay with me always. Tuka says: know that this devotion itself is the Lord of Pandhari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs worldly life against the Name and chooses the Name without hesitation. He has no hunger left for the world and wants only to sing the sweet Name of Hari, and he swears he will not release this Infinite One even if holding on costs him his life. His prayer reaches past this birth: let singing the Name be his occupation through every lifetime, and let the company of saints never leave him. The closing line lands the claim, that this very devotion is not a means to reach God but is itself the Lord of Pandhari, Vitthal present in the loving.

GATHA 4365 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, a corpse in ornaments

मराठी मूळ

हरीविण जिणें व्यर्थ चि संसारीं । प्रेत अळंकारीं मिरवत ॥1॥
देवाविण शब्द व्यर्थ चि कारण । भांड रंजवण सभेसि गा ॥ध्रु.॥
आचार करणें देवाविण जो गा । सर्पाचिया अंगा मृदुपण ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे काय बहु बोलों फार । भक्तीविण नर अभाग्य कीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Life without Hari is worthless in this world, like a corpse adorned with ornaments being paraded about. Words spoken without reference to God are futile, like a jester entertaining a crowd.

Performing rituals without devotion to God is like the smoothness of a serpent's skin. Says Tuka, what more need I say? Without devotion, a human being is truly unfortunate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Life without Hari is worthless in this world, a corpse paraded about in ornaments. A word that does not point to God is wasted breath, a jester amusing the crowd. Doing your rituals without God is like the smoothness of a snake's skin. Tuka says: what more should I say? Without devotion a person is wretched.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips the shine off a religious life that has no real love of God in it. A lifetime without Hari, however decorated, is a dead body dressed up and carried in procession; words that never point to God are empty noise, like a clown working a crowd for a laugh. Even careful ritual, done without devotion, he likens to the smooth skin of a snake, sleek on the surface and poison underneath. The warning is turned at the pattern, not at any one person: pile up observance all you like, but without bhakti the human being is left genuinely poor, and Tukaram says there is nothing more to add.

GATHA 4366 Autobiography

Self-knowledge over learning

मराठी मूळ

जालासि पंडित पुराण सांगसी । परि तूं नेणसी मीं हें कोण ॥1॥
गाढवभरी पोथ्या उलथिशी पानें । परि गुरुगम्यखुणे नेणशी बापा ॥2॥
तुका कुणबियाचा नेणे शास्त्रमत । एक पंढरीनाथ विसंबेना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You have become a scholar and expound the Puranas, yet you do not know 'Who am I?' You load books on a donkey and turn the pages, but you do not know the Guru's secret, dear one. Says Tuka, I am a farmer's son and know nothing of scriptural learning, yet I never part from the Lord of Pandhari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You have become a scholar. You expound the Puranas. But you do not know who I am. You pile books on a donkey and turn the pages, dear one, but you do not know the Guru's secret sign. Tuka says: I am a farmer's son. I know nothing of the doctrines of the scriptures. Yet I never let go of Panduranga, the Lord of Pandhari, for a moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets two kinds of knowing against each other and chooses the smaller-looking one. The learned man can recite the Puranas, yet he has missed the one question they exist for: who is the self that knows. Stacking books on a donkey is the image he gives for learning carried but not lived; the beast bears the weight and understands none of it. Against that he places his own poverty of learning, a farmer's son with no scriptural standing, and one thing he does have: he never parts from the Lord of Pandhari. The poem's point is that the Guru's secret is held in the heart, not on the page.

GATHA 4367 The Necessity of Experience

Satire, knowledge sold for the belly

मराठी मूळ

स्वप्नींच्या व्यवहारा काळांतर लेखा । जागृतीसि रुका गांठ नाहीं ॥1॥
तेवीं शब्दज्ञानें करिती चावटी । ज्ञान पोटासाटीं विकों नये ॥ध्रु.॥
बोलाची च कढी बोलाचा ची भात । जेवूनियां तृप्त कोण जाला ॥2॥
कागदीं लिहिली नांवाची साकर। चाटितां मधुर केवीं लागे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे जळो जळो त्याचें ज्ञान। यमपुरी कोण दंड साहे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who does business in a dream reckons up great accounts, but upon waking has not a single coin in hand. Just so, those who boast through mere verbal knowledge are peddling wisdom for their belly's sake; true knowledge should not be sold.

A curry made of words, rice made of words: who has ever been satisfied by eating that meal? If you write the word 'sugar' on paper and lick it, how can it taste sweet? Says Tuka, burn, burn such knowledge. Who can endure the punishment in the city of Yama?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A man does business in a dream and reckons up huge accounts. He wakes, and there is not one coin in his hand. So it is with those who chatter from mere word-knowledge. Knowledge should not be sold for the belly's sake. Curry made of words, rice made of words: who was ever filled by eating that meal? Write the word sugar on paper and lick it. How can it taste sweet? Tuka says: burn, burn such knowledge. Who can bear the punishment in the city of Yama?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the trade in spiritual talk that has no living taste behind it. The dream-merchant is his picture of it: vast accounts that vanish the moment you wake, because nothing real ever changed hands. Words about food do not feed you, and the word sugar licked off paper stays bitter; knowledge recited but not realized is exactly that empty. The sharp turn is that he says such selling of wisdom for one's belly is not merely useless but dangerous, drawing punishment in Yama's city. The examination he presses is on the pattern of trading in borrowed words, not on any one teacher; the test is whether your knowing has ever actually nourished you.

GATHA 4368 Sacred Stories

Pandharpur, Pundalik's power

मराठी मूळ

भूत नावरे कोणासी । पुंडलीकें खिळलें त्यासी॥1॥
समचरण असे विटे । कटिकर उभें नीट ॥ध्रु.॥
वाळुवंटीं नाचती संत । प्रेमामृतें डुल्लत ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पुंडलीका । भक्तिबळें तूं चि निका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This spirit could not be controlled by anyone, yet Pundalik nailed Him to that spot. With even feet on the brick He stands, hands on hips, perfectly still.

In the sand-bed the saints dance, swaying in the nectar of divine love. Says Tuka, O Pundalik, by the power of your devotion, you alone are truly great.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This spirit could be controlled by no one. Pundalik nailed Him to that spot. He stands with even feet on the brick, hands on His hips, perfectly still. On the sand by the river the saints dance, swaying in the nectar of love. Tuka says: O Pundalik, by the strength of your devotion, you alone are truly great.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem celebrates how love held God still. The wild, ungraspable spirit that no one could master was fixed in place at Pandharpur, and Tukaram credits the devotee Pundalik for it: love, not force, pinned the unpinnable. So Vitthal stands waiting on the brick, hands on hips, while the saints dance on the riverbank drunk on the sweetness of that love. The closing turn gives the glory not to the God who stands but to the devotee whose longing made Him stand, naming devotion itself as the greatness worth praising.

GATHA 4369 Longing and Separation

Complaint of love, the withholding God

मराठी मूळ

आपुले वरदळ नेदा । एवढी गोविंदा कृपणता ॥1॥
यावर बा तुमचा मोळा । हा गोपाळा कळेना ॥ध्रु.॥
सेवा तरी घेतां सांग । चोरिलें अंग सहावेना ॥2॥
तुका जरी क्रियानष्ट । तरी कां कष्ट घेतसां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He will not give even His own leftover garland. Is this Your miserliness, O Govinda? This stubbornness of Yours is beyond my understanding, O Gopala.

You do accept our service, that much is clear; yet You cannot bear to give even a bit of Yourself. Says Tuka, even if I am unworthy in action, then why do You keep laboring over me?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You will not give even Your leftover garland. Is this Your stinginess, O Govinda? This way of Yours, O Gopala, I cannot make out. You do accept our service, that much is plain. Yet You cannot bear to hand over even a scrap of Yourself. Tuka says: if I am ruined in my conduct, then why do You keep taking such trouble over me?

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the lover's grievance, half scolding and half pleading. Tukaram accuses God of meanness: He takes all the service offered and gives back not even His worn garland, withholding His own self. The complaint sharpens into a logical trap he springs on God: if I am truly worthless, why do You bother laboring over me at all. The hidden frame is that God's continued effort is itself the proof of love the poet pretends not to receive, so the charge of stinginess is really a way of begging to be given more.

GATHA 4370 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the divine enchanter

मराठी मूळ

भीमातिरींचा नाटक । यानें लावियेलें चेटक ॥1॥
मन बुद्धि जाली ठक । नेणे संसाराची टुक ॥ध्रु.॥
कैशी प्रसंगीक वाणी । प्रत्यादर कडसणी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मोठा ठक । जेथें तेथें उभा ठाके ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The enchanter of the Bhima's banks has cast His spell upon me. My mind and intellect have been bewitched; I no longer know the tricks of worldly life.

How timely are His words, how masterful His engagement. Says Tuka, He is the supreme trickster; wherever you look, there He stands.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The actor on the banks of the Bhima has cast His spell on me. My mind and intellect are tricked; I no longer know the smallest bit of worldly life. How timely His speech is, how skillful His handling. Tuka says: He is a great trickster. Wherever you look, there He stands.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes being captured by God with delight, calling Him a player and a cheat. The Lord who stands at Pandharpur on the Bhima's bank has, like a magician, bewitched the poet's mind and intellect so that ordinary worldly cleverness has fallen away. He marvels at how perfectly timed God's word is and how deftly He works His charm. The affectionate insult, great trickster, names the way grace overtakes a person against his calculation and then turns out to be everywhere at once, standing wherever the freed mind happens to look.

GATHA 4371 The Nature of God

Nondual presence, no you and I

मराठी मूळ

कां रे दाटोन होतां वेडे । देव आहे तुह्मांपुढें ॥1॥
ज्यास पाठ नाहीं पोट । करी त्रैलोक्याचा घोंट ॥ध्रु.॥
तुमची तुह्मां नाहीं सोय । कोणाचें काय जाय ॥2॥
तुका गातो नामीं । तेथें नाहीं आह्मी तुह्मी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why do you crowd about in confusion? God is standing right before you. He who has no back or front can swallow all three worlds in a gulp.

You cannot find your own way; what does anyone else lose by that? Says Tuka, I sing the Name. There, there is no 'you' or 'I.'.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you crowd about in confusion? God is standing right before you. He who has no back and no front swallows all three worlds in one gulp. You cannot find your own way. What does anyone else lose by that? Tuka says: I sing the Name. There, there is no you and no I.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram rebukes the bewildered crowd and points straight at the obvious: God is already standing in front of them. The God he names is beyond shape, with no back or front, large enough to drink down all three worlds at a swallow, so the seeking that runs in every direction is the very confusion that hides Him. He notes drily that people lose only themselves by missing the way, no one else. The resolving claim is in the Name: when he sings it the separation between worshipper and worshipped dissolves, and there is no you and I left to stand apart.

GATHA 4372 Autobiography

The poet's gift, forced upon God

मराठी मूळ

नव्हे हें कवित्व टांकसाळी नाणें । घेती भले जन भले लोक ॥1॥
लागलासे झरा पूर्ण नवनीतें । सेविलियां हित फार होय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा केला बलात्कार । अंगा आलें फार महंतपण ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is not mere poetry; it is coin minted in the royal mint. Good and worthy people accept it gladly.

A spring of pure butter has begun to flow; consuming it brings great benefit. Says Tuka, I forced myself upon God, and the mantle of a great saint descended on me of its own accord.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is not poetry; it is coin struck in the royal mint. Good and worthy people take it gladly. A spring of pure butter has begun to flow. Whoever takes it gains great good. Tuka says: I forced myself upon God, and great sainthood came upon me of itself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks plainly about the worth of his own verse and where it came from. He insists his words are not mere literature but true coin from the king's mint, currency that good people accept at full value, and he likens them to a flowing spring of fresh butter that nourishes whoever takes it. The striking admission is in the last line: he did not earn this by qualification but seized God by force, pressing his demand until it was granted. The sainthood that resulted, he says, descended on its own, a gift answering insistence rather than a reward for merit.

GATHA 4373 Appeals and Exhortations

Address to the mind, keep holy company

मराठी मूळ

सांवळें सुंदर पाहे दृष्टभरि । ऐसें कांहीं करीं मन माझें ॥1॥
मना तुज ठाव दिला त्याचे पायीं । राहें विठाबाईसवें सदा ॥ध्रु.॥
मना नको धरूं आणिकांचा संग । नाहीं पांडुरंग जयां मनीं ॥2॥
वरपंग भाव नको ह्मणे तुका । करीं प्राणसखा नारायणा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O my mind, gaze upon that beautiful dark form until your eyes are filled. I have given you a place at His feet; stay always with Vitthabai.

O mind, do not keep the company of those who do not hold Panduranga in their minds. Says Tuka, do not settle for shallow devotion; make Narayana the beloved friend of your very life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Gaze on that beautiful dark form until your eyes are full. Do this for me, my mind. O mind, I have given you a place at His feet. Stay always with Vithabai. O mind, do not keep the company of others, of those who do not hold Panduranga in their hearts. Tuka says: do not settle for surface devotion. Make Narayana the friend of your very life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns and instructs his own mind, treating it as a wayward companion he must direct. He tells it to drink in the dark beautiful form of Vitthal until satisfied, and reminds it that he has already lodged it at the Lord's feet, so it should stay there always. The warning is about company: do not consort with people who have no place for Panduranga in their hearts, since their company pulls the mind away. The closing demand raises the standard from outward, show devotion to inward bond, asking the mind to make Narayana not a habit but the dearest friend of one's life.

GATHA 4374 Longing and Separation

Longing, the soul's lone journey

मराठी मूळ

एकली वना चालली राना । चोरुनि जना घराचारी॥1॥
कोणी नाहीं संगीसवें । देहभावें उदास ॥ध्रु.॥
जाउनि पडे दुर्घटवनीं। श्वापदांनीं वेढिली ॥2॥
मार्ग न चले जातां पुढें । भय गाढें उदेलें॥3॥
मागील मागें अंतरलीं । पुढील चाली खोळंबा ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं यासि । हृदयस्थासी आपुल्या ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

She set out alone into the wilderness, stealing away from her household and family. No one is with her as companion; she is indifferent to the body's concerns.

She enters a dense, impassable forest, surrounded by wild beasts. The path ahead will not yield to her steps; a great fear has arisen.

Those behind have fallen far away; the way forward is blocked. Says Tuka, at such a time, let this soul call upon the One who dwells within its own chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

She set out alone into the forest, into the wilds, stealing away from household and family. No one goes with her. She is indifferent to the body and its concerns. She comes to a dense, trackless forest, ringed by wild beasts. The path ahead will not yield as she goes on. A great fear has risen. Those behind have fallen far away. The way forward is blocked. Tuka says: at such a time let this soul call, in its heart, on the One who dwells within its own chitta.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the soul's journey as the tale of a woman who slips away alone from home into the wilderness. The flight from family and the indifference to the body mark a turn away from worldly attachment; she wants God enough to leave everything. But the path grows dark and impassable, wild beasts close in, what she left is gone for good and what lies ahead is shut, the exact terror of one who has renounced the old life and not yet reached the new. The resolution is inward: with every outward road blocked, the only way left is to call on the One already dwelling within her own heart.

GATHA 4375 Longing and Separation

Longing, the dark night of abandonment

मराठी मूळ

पडली घोर रजनी । संगी कोणी नसे चि ॥1॥
पहा हो कैसें चालविलें । पिसें गोवलें लावूनि ॥ध्रु.॥
कोठें लपविलें तें अंग । होता संग दिला तो ॥ ।2॥
मज कधीं नव्हतें ठावें । दोही भावें वाटोळें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कैंची उरी । दोहीपरि नाडिलें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A deep, dark night has fallen, and there is no one for company. See how He has led me along, attaching me to this madness.

Where has He hidden His form? The companionship He once gave is gone. I never knew it would come to this: ruin from both sides.

Says Tuka, what chance is left? I have been deceived in every way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A deep, dark night has fallen. There is no one for company. See how He has led me along, fastening this madness on me. Where has He hidden His form? The companionship He once gave is gone. I never knew it would come to this: ruined on both sides. Tuka says: what chance is left to me? I have been cheated every way.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the cry from the dark night, when the love God once gave is withdrawn. Tukaram looks back and sees that the Lord led him on, fastening on him a madness for the divine, and now hides His form and takes away the nearness he had known. He feels ruined from both sides: he gave up the world for God's sake, and now God too has vanished, so he is left with neither. The poem does not resolve the abandonment; it lets the complaint stand, the bewildered grief of one who feels deceived by the very love that drew him.

GATHA 4376 Longing and Separation

Plea, hold God to His own name

मराठी मूळ

उदार कृपाळ पतितपावन । ि◌ब्रदें नारायणा जाती वांयां ॥1॥
वणिनलासि श्रुति नेणे तुझा पार । राहे मौनाकार नेति ऐसें ॥ध्रु.॥
तेथें माझा धांवा पावे कोणीकडे । अदृष्ट हें पुढें वोडवलें ॥2॥
कोण ऐसा भक्त लाधला भाग्यासी । आठवण ऐसी द्यावी तुज ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे नको पाहों माझा अंत । जाणोनि हे मात उडी घालीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Generous, compassionate, Purifier of the Fallen: are these pledges of Yours, O Narayana, to go to waste? The Vedas, having tried to describe You, remain silent, saying 'not this, not this,' unable to know Your extent. So how can my cry reach You from here? Misfortune has overtaken me.

What devotee has been so blessed as to be able to remind You of Yourself? Says Tuka, do not test my limits. Knowing my plight, take the leap and come to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Generous, compassionate, Purifier of the fallen: are these names of Yours, O Narayana, to go to waste? The Vedas tried to describe You and fell silent, saying not this, not this, unable to reach Your end. Then where can my cry reach You from here? This misfortune has risen up before me. What devotee was ever so blessed that he could remind You of Your own self? Tuka says: do not test how far I can go. Knowing my state, leap in and save me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays by holding God to His own titles. He names Him generous, compassionate, the Purifier of the fallen, and then presses the point: if these names are true, they cannot be allowed to go empty, for then God Himself is at stake. He measures the distance honestly, that the Vedas themselves could only say not this, not this and stop short, so his small cry seems to have no way of reaching across. His boldness is to remind God of His own nature, then plead that God not see how far his endurance can be stretched but instead, knowing his plight, leap down and save him.

GATHA 4377 The Nature of God

Nature of God, He meets each devotion

मराठी मूळ

ज्याचें जैसें भावी मन । त्यासि देणें दरुषण ॥1॥
पुरवूं जाणे मनिंची खूण । समाधान करोनि ॥ध्रु.॥
आपणियातें प्रगट करी । छाया वरी कृपेची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे केले दान । मन उन्मन हरिनामीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

According to the devotion in one's chitta, He grants His vision. He knows how to fulfill the innermost longing and bring contentment.

He reveals Himself and spreads the shade of His grace. Says Tuka, He has given this gift: the mind has become absorbed in Hari's Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As the devotion in a heart is, so He grants His vision. He knows how to fulfill the inmost longing and to bring it peace. He makes Himself plain and spreads the shade of His grace over it. Tuka says: He has given the gift; the mind, beyond mind, rests in Hari's Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes how God answers each devotee according to that devotee's own heart. The form of the vision matches the form of the love that seeks it, and God knows exactly how to meet the secret longing within and settle it into peace. He does not stay hidden but reveals Himself and lays the cool shade of His grace over the one who longs. The gift named at the end is the highest: the mind passes beyond its restless thinking state into the stillness of unmani and comes to rest in Hari's Name.

GATHA 4378 Sacred Stories

Wonder, Pundalik's bold love

मराठी मूळ

कां रे पुंडए मातलासी । उभें केलें विठ्ठलासि ॥1॥
विस्त क्षीरसागरवासीं । आला उभा पंढरीसि ॥ध्रु.॥
भक्ती देखोनि निकट । देवें सोडिलें वैकुंठ ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे बळी । तूं चि एक भूमंडळीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Pundalik, why did you become so bold as to make Vitthal stand? He who resided in the ocean of milk has come to stand in Pandhari. Seeing such intimate devotion, God left Vaikuntha behind.

Says Tuka, you alone are the mightiest one on this earth.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Pundalik, why did you grow so bold? You made Vitthal stand still. He who lives in the ocean of milk has come and stands here in Pandhari. He saw devotion this close, and for it God left Vaikuntha behind. Tuka says: you alone, Pundalik, are the mightiest on this whole earth.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is marveling at Pundalik, the devotee whose love first drew Vitthal to Pandhari. The story is that God, who dwells in the milk-ocean, came down and simply stood on the brick, waiting, because one man's love held Him there. Tukaram turns this into a claim about the power of devotion: it can pull the Lord out of His own heaven and fix Him in place. So he calls Pundalik the strongest being on earth, not for any feat of arms, but because his nearness of heart moved God Himself.

GATHA 4379 Prayers

Prayer, the Name on the lips

मराठी मूळ

शेवटींची विनंती । ऐका ऐका कमळापती ॥1॥
जीवपरमात्मा ऐक्यासि। सदा वसो हृदयेंसीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा । कंठीं वसावें केशवा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This is my final supplication. Listen, O Lord of Lakshmi.

May the jiva and the Supreme Self remain united, dwelling forever in my chitta. Says Tuka, O Keshava, please reside in my throat so Your Name may always be on my lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This is my last request. Listen, listen, Lord of Lakshmi. Let the jiva and the Supreme Self be one, and stay forever in my heart. Tuka says: O God, O Keshava, live in my throat, so Your Name is always on my lips.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram offers what he calls his final petition, and it has two parts. First he asks that the soul and the Supreme Self be joined and never leave his heart, the union the scriptures point toward. Then he names a homelier wish: that Keshava live in his throat itself, so the Name keeps rising even without effort. The high goal of oneness and the simple practice of constant remembrance are asked for together, as if one carries the other.

GATHA 4380 Prayers

Prayer, God already knows

मराठी मूळ

माझें परिसावें गा†हाणें । चित्त द्यावें नारायणें ॥1॥
माझे हृदयींचें वर्म । देवा जाणशी तूं कर्म ॥ध्रु.॥
सबाहएअंतरसाक्ष। ऐसा वेदीं केला पक्ष ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नेणां । काय सांगों नारायणा॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hear my plea, O Narayana; give me Your attention. You know the secret of my chitta, O God; You know all my deeds.

You are the witness both within and without; the Vedas affirm this truth. Says Tuka, I am at a loss for words. What more can I tell You, O Narayana?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hear my complaint; give it Your attention, Narayana. You know the secret of my heart, O God; You know what I have done. You are the witness within and without; the Vedas have said so. Tuka says: You know it already. What is there for me to tell You, Narayana?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram comes to lay out his case before God and then stops short. The reason is that God already knows the inmost secret of his heart and every deed he has done; the Vedas call Him the witness inside and outside all things. So the prayer collapses into honesty: there is nothing to confess, nothing to explain, because the listener sees it all anyway. What is left is not a report but a surrender to being fully known.

GATHA 4381 The Necessity of Experience

Experience, love past intellect

मराठी मूळ

गुरुचिया मुखें होइल ब्रह्मज्ञान । न कळे प्रेमखुण विठोबाची ॥1॥
वेदातें विचारा पुराणातें पुसा । विठोबाचा कैसा प्रेमभाव ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे सांडा जाणिवेचा शीण । विठोबाची खूण जाणती संत ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through the Guru's mouth one may gain knowledge of Brahman, but the secret of Vitthoba's love cannot be known that way. Examine the Vedas, inquire of the Puranas: what is the nature of Vitthoba's love? Says Tuka, abandon the weariness of intellectual knowing. Only the saints truly know the secret of Vitthoba.

IN PLAIN WORDS

From the Guru's mouth you may come to know Brahman. But the secret of Vithoba's love cannot be known that way. Search the Vedas; ask the Puranas: what is Vithoba's love really like? Tuka says: drop the weariness of trying to know with the mind. Only the saints know the secret of Vithoba.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram draws a sharp line between knowledge and love. A teacher can hand you knowledge of Brahman, and the Vedas and Puranas can be studied, but none of that reaches the actual secret of Vithoba's love. That secret is not information; it is a relationship, tasted not analyzed. So he tells the seeker to set down the exhausting effort to grasp it intellectually, because only the saints, those who have loved, hold the key.

GATHA 4382 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, single-minded devotion

मराठी मूळ

देव आतां आह्मीं केला असे ऋणी । आणिका वांचूनि काय गुंता ॥1॥
एकाचें आर्जव करू एकनिष्ठ । आणिकांचा बोभाट कामा नये ॥ध्रु.॥
बहुतांचे आर्जव केलिया खटपट । नाहीं हा शेवट शुद्ध होत ॥2॥
पुरता विचार आणोनी मानसीं । अंतरलों सर्वांसि पई देखा ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देवा चरणीं असो भाव । तेणें माझा जीव संतोष हा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have now placed God in my debt. What other entanglement is there? I devote myself single-mindedly to the One; the clamor of others is of no use.

Trying to please many only leads to confusion and never reaches a pure conclusion. Having thought it over thoroughly, I have distanced myself from all else.

Says Tuka, let my devotion rest at God's feet; that alone is my contentment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have now made God my debtor. Apart from Him, what else should tie me down? Let me serve the One alone, with a single heart; the noise of others is no use to me. Trying to please many is only trouble; it never comes to a clean end. I have thought it through fully, and so I have stepped back from everything else. Tuka says: let my love rest at God's feet. That alone is my soul's contentment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues for undivided devotion by weighing it against the alternative. Serving many masters only breeds confusion and never reaches a clean conclusion, so after thinking it through he withdraws from all of them. He keeps one bond: single-minded service to God, whom his love has, in a sense, placed in his debt. The payoff he names is not gain but peace: with his heart fixed at God's feet, his soul is content.

GATHA 4383 Prayers

Prayer, guard the senses

मराठी मूळ

पापाची वासना नको दावूं डोळां । त्याहुनि अंधळा बराच मी ॥1॥
निंदेचें श्रवण नको माझे कानीं । बधिर करोनि ठेवीं देवा ॥ध्रु.॥
अपवित्र वाणी नको माझ्या मुखा । त्याजहुनि मुका बराच मी ॥2॥
नको मज कधीं परस्त्रीसंगति । जनांतुन माती उठतां भली ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे मज अवघ्याचा कांटाळा । तूं एक गोपाळा आवडसी ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Do not let my eyes see sinful sights; I would rather be blind than that. Let my ears not hear slander; make me deaf instead, O God.

Let no impure speech come from my mouth; I would rather be mute than that. Never let me fall into the company of another's wife; let the earth swallow me rather than that.

Says Tuka, I am weary of everything else. You alone, O Gopala, are dear to me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Do not show my eyes the desire for sin; I would rather be blind than that. Let no slander reach my ears; make me deaf instead, O God. Let no impure speech leave my mouth; I would rather be mute than that. Never let me near another man's wife; let the earth swallow me before that. Tuka says: I am sick of everything else. You alone, Gopala, are dear to me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays for protection by way of his own senses, and he means it starkly: he would sooner lose a faculty than misuse it. Better blind than to look with sinful longing, better deaf than to hear slander, better mute than to speak impurely, better dead than to go near another's wife. The harshness is aimed at the temptations themselves, not at the body, which he is willing to sacrifice to stay clean. Underneath it all is one positive wish: he is weary of everything that is not God, and Gopala alone is dear.

GATHA 4384 Social Criticism

Social criticism, selling the kirtan

मराठी मूळ

कीर्त्तनाचा विकरा मातेचें गमन । भाड खाई धन विटाळ तो ॥1॥
हरिभक्ताचि माता हे हरिगुणकिर्त्त । इजवर पोट भरिती चांडाळ ते ॥ध्रु.॥
अंत्यज हा ऐसें कल्पांतीं करीना । भाड हे खाईना जननीची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे त्याचें दर्शन ही खोटें । पूर्वजांसि नेटें नरका धाडी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Selling kirtan for profit is like trafficking in one's own mother. The glory of Hari's devotion is the mother of all devotees, and those who make a living from her are the lowest of the low.

Even one cast out by society would never, until the end of time, do such a thing as selling his own mother for gain. Says Tuka, even the sight of such a person is inauspicious; he sends his own ancestors to hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

To sell kirtan for money is to traffic in your own mother. You eat the wage; that is filth. The praise of Hari's virtues is the devotee's mother; the lowest wretches fill their bellies off her. Even an outcast would never, to the end of time, do such a thing; he would not eat a wage taken from his own mother. Tuka says: even the sight of such a man is false and foul; he drives his own ancestors into hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram attacks the practice of turning sacred song into a trade. He calls the glory of Hari the very mother of every devotee, so to charge a fee for kirtan is, in his image, to live off the sale of one's mother. The point is the pattern, not contempt for any person: selling what should be given freely poisons the singer and even, he says, his lineage. The verse is a warning to examine whether devotion is being kept pure or quietly turned into income.

GATHA 4385 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the generous Lord

मराठी मूळ

पंढरी पावन जालें माझें मन । आतां करूं ध्यान विठोबाचें ॥1॥
आतां ऐसें करूं नाम गाऊं गीतीं । सुखाचा सांगाती विठो करूं ॥ध्रु.॥
संग करूं त्याचा तो सखा आमचा । अनंतां जन्मांचा मायबाप ॥2॥
परतोनि सोई धरीं कां रे मना । विठ्ठलचरणा घालीं मिठी ॥3॥
घातलीसे मिठी नाही भक्तिभाव । उदार पंढरिराव तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind has been purified by Pandhari. Now let me meditate on Vitthoba.

Now let me sing the Name in song and make Vittho my companion of happiness. Let me keep His company, for He is my friend, my parent through countless births.

Turn your attention inward, O mind, and embrace the feet of Vitthal. I have embraced His feet.

The devotion may not yet be perfect, but the Lord of Pandhari is generous. Says Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Pandhari has made my mind clean. Now let me meditate on Vithoba. Now let me do this: sing the Name in song, and make Vittho my companion in joy. Let me keep His company, for He is my friend, my mother and father through countless births. Turn back inward, O my mind, and throw your arms around the feet of Vitthal. I have thrown my arms around them. My devotion may not be true and full, yet the Lord of Pandhari is generous. Tuka says.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a mind washed clean by Pandhari and the simple resolve that follows: meditate on Vithoba, sing His Name, take Him as friend and companion in joy. He calls the mind back from its wandering and tells it to embrace Vitthal's feet, then reports that he has done so. He is honest that his own devotion is not yet perfect. His confidence rests not on the quality of his love but on the generosity of the Lord of Pandhari, who accepts even an imperfect embrace.

GATHA 4386 Longing and Separation

Longing, come and embrace me

मराठी मूळ

येई गे विठ्ठले विश्वजीवनकले । सुंदर घननीळे पांडुरंगें ॥1॥
येई गे विठ्ठले करुणाकल्लोळे । जीव कळवळे भेटावया ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगती गोड आणीक उत्तरें । तुझें प्रेम झुरे भेटावया ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे धांव घालीं कृष्णाबाई । क्षेम चाहूंबाही देई मज ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, O Vitthale, the life-giving art of the universe. O beautiful dark-hued Panduranga.

Come, O Vitthale, O tide of compassion. My jiva yearns to meet You.

No other words taste sweet to me. My love longs to meet You.

Says Tuka, rush to me, O Krishnabai. Give me an embrace of welcome with both arms.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, O Vitthale, life of the whole world. Beautiful dark cloud-blue Panduranga. Come, O Vitthale, You wave of compassion. My soul aches to meet You. No other words taste sweet to me. My love pines to meet You. Tuka says: come running, O Krishnabai. Give me a welcoming embrace with both Your arms.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a cry of longing addressed straight to the Lord, here called Vitthale and Krishnabai in tender, almost motherly terms. Tukaram names God as the life of the universe and a wave of compassion, then turns from praise to ache: his soul yearns only to meet Him, and no other words are sweet. The verse ends not with theology but with a plain physical request, that God come running and hold him with both arms. The whole abhanga is the impatience of one who wants only the meeting.

GATHA 4387 Longing and Separation

Longing, when will You meet me

मराठी मूळ

कटावरी कर कासया ठेविले । जननी विठ्ठले जीवलगे॥1॥
शंखचक्रगदाकमळमंडित । आयुधें मंडित कृष्णाबाई॥ध्रु.॥
क्षण एक धीर होत नाहीं चित्ता । केव्हां पंढरिनाथा भेटशील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हें चि करीं देई । तई च विश्रामा पावईन॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why have You placed Your hands on Your hips, O Mother Vitthale, O beloved one? Adorned with conch, discus, mace, and lotus, arrayed with sacred weapons, O Krishnabai. Not for a moment can my heart find peace.

When will You meet me, O Lord of Pandhari? Says Tuka, grant me this one thing, and only then shall I find rest.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why have You set Your hands upon Your hips, Mother Vitthale, dear one? Adorned with conch and discus and mace and lotus, arrayed with Your weapons, O Krishnabai. Not for a single moment can my heart hold steady. When will You meet me, Lord of Pandhari? Tuka says: grant me just this one thing, and only then will I find rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gazes at the standing image of Vitthal, hands on hips, holding the conch, discus, mace, and lotus, and addresses Him as Mother. The beauty of the form only sharpens his impatience: his heart cannot stay calm even for a moment while the meeting is withheld. So the prayer narrows to a single question and a single request, when will You meet me, and grant me only this. He says his rest depends on nothing else; until the meeting comes, there is no peace.

GATHA 4388 Longing and Separation

Longing, hold the merciful to His word

मराठी मूळ

आतां मोकलावें नव्हे हें उचित । तरी कृपावंत ह्मणवावें ॥1॥
पूवाअ भक्त जाले सर्व आपंगिले । नाहीं उपेक्षले तुह्मीं कोणी ॥ध्रु.॥
माझिया वेळेसि कां गा लपालासी । विश्व पोसितोसि लपोनियां ॥2॥
करावी ह्मणावी सर्वां भूतीं दया । तरी भेटावया येईन मी ॥3॥
तरी माझे हाती देई मनबुद्धि । जरि दयानिधि येशील तूं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तूं चि अवघा सूत्रधारी । माझी सत्ता हरी काय आहे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

It is not right to abandon me now; if You are to be called compassionate, prove it. All previous devotees were accepted by You; You never neglected any of them.

Why do You hide when it is my turn? You sustain the whole world, yet You hide from me. You say one must show compassion to all beings.

Then come and meet me. But give my mind and intellect into my own hands, if You, the treasure of mercy, will truly come.

Says Tuka, You alone are the master of all strings. What power do I have, O Hari?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

It is not right to abandon me now; not if You are to be called merciful. All the devotees before me were taken in by You; You neglected none of them. So why, when my turn comes, do You hide? You feed the whole world, and yet You hide from me. You yourself say one must show mercy to all beings. Then come and meet me. But put my mind and intellect into my own hands, if You, the treasure of mercy, will really come. Tuka says: You alone pull every string. What power, Hari, is mine?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with God's own reputation. If He is truly called compassionate, and if He took in every devotee before and neglected none, then to hide now, on Tukaram's turn, breaks His own word and His own teaching that mercy is owed to all. So he demands the meeting, half complaint and half plea. Yet at the close he undercuts his own bargaining: he admits he has no power of his own, that God alone moves every string, so even his mind and intellect must be given back into his hands by grace before anything can happen.

GATHA 4389 Prayers

Surrender, make me Your own

मराठी मूळ

माझें कोण आहे तुजविण देवा । मुकुंदा केशवा नारायणा ॥1॥
वाट पाहतसें कृपेच्या सागरा । गोपीमनोहरा पांडुरंगा॥ध्रु.॥
साच करीं हरी आपुली िब्रदावळी । कृपेनें सांभाळीं महाराजा ॥2॥
क्षमा करीं सर्व अपराध माझा । लडिवाळ मी तुझा पांडुरंगा ॥3॥
साहए होसी तरी जाती साही वैरी । मग सुखें अंतरीं ध्यान तुझें ॥4॥
कृपा करोनि देई दया क्षमा शांती । तेणें तुझी भक्ति लाभईल ॥5॥
माझें हें सामर्थ्य नव्हे नारायणा । जरी कांहीं करुणा येइल तुज ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे मज कैसें आपंगा जी । आपुलेंसें करा जी पांडुरंगा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who do I have besides You, O God? O Mukunda, Keshava, Narayana. I await You with folded hands, O ocean of mercy, O enchanter of the gopis, O Panduranga.

Make Your own pledges come true, O Hari. Protect me with Your grace, O great King.

Forgive all my offenses. I am Your spoiled child, O Panduranga.

If You come to my aid, the six inner enemies will depart. Then I shall meditate on You in peace.

Grant me compassion, forgiveness, and tranquility, so that devotion to You may flourish. This is not within my own power, O Narayana.

Only if some mercy arises in You can it happen. Says Tuka, accept me as Your own. Make me Yours, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who is mine but You, O God? Mukunda, Keshava, Narayana. I am watching the road for You, ocean of mercy, charmer of the gopis, Panduranga. Make Your own promises true, Hari; keep me with Your grace, great King. Forgive all my offenses. I am Your spoiled child, Panduranga. If You stand by me, my six enemies leave; then in peace my heart can dwell on You. By Your grace give me mercy, forgiveness, and peace, so that devotion to You can grow. This is not in my own strength, Narayana; only if some pity rises in You. Tuka says: somehow take me in. Make me Your own, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram throws himself wholly on God, saying he has no one else, and waits like a watcher on the road. He asks God to honor His own pledges, forgive his faults, and treat him as a spoiled child who can presume on a parent's love. He is clear that everything he wants, the routing of the six inner enemies of lust, anger, greed and the rest, and the growth of devotion itself, is beyond his own strength and can come only if mercy rises in God. The whole prayer ends in surrender: not I will earn You, but You make me Your own.

GATHA 4390 Prayers

Pleading on the Name, a spoiled child

मराठी मूळ

अपराध जाले जरी असंख्यात । तरी कृपावंत नाम तुझें ॥1॥
तुझें लडिवाळ तुज कृपा यावी । म्यां वाट पाहावी कवणाची ॥ध्रु.॥
मायबाप माझा रुक्मादेवीवर । हा दृढ निर्धार अंतरींचा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोणे गोष्टीचें संकष्ट । न घालीं मज भेट नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even if my offenses are beyond counting, Your Name is still compassionate. I am Your spoiled child; You should show mercy.

Whose path shall I look to, if not Yours? My mother and father is the husband of Rukmadevi. This is the firm conviction within my chitta.

Says Tuka, do not put me through any ordeal. Simply grant me Your presence, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even if my offenses are beyond counting, your Name is still full of mercy. I am your spoiled child; the mercy should come to me. Whose path should I watch for, if not yours? My mother and father is the husband of Rukmadevi. This is the firm resolve inside my heart. Tuka says: do not put me through any ordeal. Just come and meet me, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram brings his sins forward on purpose and then sets the Name against them, betting that the Name's mercy is larger than his failings. He does not plead innocence; he pleads relationship, calling himself a spoiled child who has nowhere else to look. Naming Vitthal, the husband of Rukmadevi, as his own mother and father, he makes God responsible for him the way a parent is responsible for a child. The closing ask is small and total at once: skip the testing, just show up and meet me.

GATHA 4391 Longing and Separation

Longing, you taught me this need

मराठी मूळ

आधीं कां मज लावियेली सवे । आतां न राहावे तुजविण ॥1॥
पहिलें चि तोंडक कां गा नाहीं केलें । आतां उपेक्षलें न सोडीं मी ॥ध्रु.॥
कृपेच्या सागरा न पाहें निर्वाण । जालों तुजवीण कासावीस ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कोठें गुंतलेति हरी । येई झडकरी पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why did You accustom me to You in the first place? Now I cannot bear to be without You. Why did You not reject me at the very start? Now that I am neglected, I will not let go.

O ocean of compassion, do not wait for my final ruin. I am desperate without You.

Says Tuka, where are You entangled, O Hari? Come quickly, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why did you get me used to you in the first place? Now I cannot stay without you. Why did you not turn me away at the very start? Now that you have left me, I will not let go. Ocean of mercy, do not wait for my final ruin. Without you I am in agony. Tuka says: where have you gotten caught, Hari? Come quickly, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the longing back on God as a complaint: you are the one who created this dependence, so the abandonment is your doing. He refuses the easy exit; having been made to need God, he will not now release his grip. Calling Vitthal an ocean of mercy, he warns that mercy delayed until he is destroyed is no mercy at all. The half-teasing final line, where have you gotten entangled, treats God as a friend who is late, and demands he hurry.

GATHA 4392 Longing and Separation

Longing, when will you come

मराठी मूळ

बा रे पांडुरंगा केव्हां येशी भेटी । जाहालों हिंपुटी तुजवीण ॥1॥
तुजवीण सखें न वटे मज कोणी । वाटतें चरणीं घालूं मिठीं ॥ध्रु.॥
ओवाळावी काया चरणांवरोनि । केव्हां चक्रपाणी भेटशील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझी पुरवीं आवडी । वेगीं घालीं उडी नारायणा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O dear Panduranga, when will You come to meet me? I have grown weary and forlorn without You. Without You, no one feels like a true friend.

I long to throw my arms around Your feet. I would offer my body over and over at Your feet.

When will You meet me, O Chakrapani? Says Tuka, fulfill my chitta's desire. Leap to me swiftly, O Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dear Panduranga, when will you come to meet me? I have grown weary and forlorn without you. Without you, no one feels like a friend to me. I want to throw my arms around your feet. I would wave my body over your feet again and again. When will you meet me, Chakrapani? Tuka says: fulfill my desire. Leap to me quickly, Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the lover's question asked of an absent God: when, and how long. Tukaram measures everything by Vitthal's absence; without him even other people stop feeling like company. The body itself becomes an offering, waved over the feet the way a lamp is waved in worship, spent gladly for the sake of contact. The plea ends in motion, asking God not merely to arrive but to leap, as if the longing has run out of patience for a slow approach.

GATHA 4393 Longing and Separation

Longing, naming the price of meeting

मराठी मूळ

पंचाग्निसाधन करूं धूम्रपान । काय तीर्थाटण करूं सांग ॥1॥
सांग कोणे देशीं आहे तुझें गांव । घेऊनियां धांव येऊं तेथें ॥ध्रु.॥
सांग कांहीं वृत्त कोण करूं व्रत । जेणें कृपावंत होशील तूं ॥2॥
वाटतें सेवटीं जालासि निष्ठ । न देसी उत्तर तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Shall I perform the five-fire penance, or inhale smoke in austerity? Shall I go on pilgrimages? Tell me. Tell me in which land Your abode lies, and I will run there at once.

Tell me what vow or observance I should undertake to make You gracious. Says Tuka, it seems that in the end You have become indifferent. You give me no answer.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Should I do the five-fire penance, or breathe in smoke as austerity? Should I go on pilgrimages? Tell me. Tell me in what land your village is, and I will run there at once. Tell me what observance, what vow I should keep, so that you will become merciful. Tuka says: it seems that in the end you have become hard. You give me no answer.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out the whole catalogue of effort, the harshest penances and the longest pilgrimages, and offers to do any of it, if only God will name the price of meeting. The questions are real offers, not boasts; he is ready to run to whatever land holds God's village. But the offers meet silence, and that silence is the real subject. The ending names the wound plainly: I have asked you everything and you have turned hard and given no answer, leaving the seeker holding a willingness God will not receive.

GATHA 4394 Longing and Separation

Longing, the God who is everywhere but here

मराठी मूळ

तुजवीण तीळभरी रिता ठाव । नाहीं ऐसें विश्व बोलतसे ॥1॥
बोलियेले योगी मुनी साधु संत । आहेसि या आंत सर्वांठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
मी तया विश्वासें आलों शरणागत । पूवाअचें अपत्य आहें तुझें ॥2॥
अनंत ब्रह्मांडें भरोनि उरलासि । मजला जालासि कोठें नाहीं ॥3॥
अंतपार नाहीं माझिया रूपासि । काय सेवकासि भेट देऊं ॥4॥
ऐसें विचारिलें ह्मणोनि न येशी । सांग हृषीकेशी मायबापा ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे काय करावा उपाय । जेणें तुझे पाय आतुडति ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They say there is not a sesame seed's space anywhere without You. Yogis, munis, saints, and sages have all declared that You are present within everything.

Trusting their word, I have come as a surrendered one. I am Your child from ages past.

You fill infinite universes and remain beyond them, yet for me alone You seem to have vanished. You have no end or limit to Your being.

How can You offer a meeting to this servant? Thinking thus, You do not come to me. Tell me then, O Lord, O my Father and Mother.

Says Tuka, what remedy can I find by which Your feet may be reached?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is not a sesame seed of space anywhere without you; the whole world says so. Yogis, sages, holy ones and saints have all said you are inside everything, in every place. Trusting that, I have come to you for refuge; I am your child from long ago. You fill endless universes and remain beyond them, yet to me you have become a nowhere. There is no end or limit to your form. So how can you give a meeting to your servant? Thinking like that, you do not come. Tell me, Hrishikesha, my mother and father. Tuka says: what means should I use, so that your feet come within my reach?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses the teaching of God's all-pervadingness until it turns into an accusation. Everyone, the yogis and the saints, swears God fills every speck of space, and he came to refuge trusting exactly that word. Yet the God who is everywhere has become, for him, a nowhere; the limitless form seems to use its very limitlessness as an excuse not to show up for one small servant. He does not abandon the claim, he holds God to it, calling him mother and father, and asks the practical question that closes the poem: by what means can I actually reach the feet of a God who is supposed to be already here?

GATHA 4395 Longing and Separation

Longing, mountains of passion in the way

मराठी मूळ

काम क्रोध आड पडले पर्वत । राहिला अनंत पलीकडे ॥1॥
नुलंघवे मज न सांपडे वाट । दुस्तर हा घाट वैरियांचा ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां कैंचा मज सखा नारायण । गेला अंतरोन पांडुरंगा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे व्यर्थ मोलाचें शरीर । गेलें हा विचार कळों आला ॥3॥
नव्हे निष्ठावंत तुज काय बोल । सेवेविण मोल मागतसें ॥ध्रु.॥
न घडे भजन शुद्ध भावनिष्ठा । आपुल्या अदृष्टावरी बोल ॥ध्रु.॥
पूवाअ जाले भक्त असंख्य विरक्त । काम क्रोध अहंते निदानिळलें ॥2॥
ऐसी अंगवण नाहीं मज देवा । करीतसें हेवा भेटावयाचा ॥3॥
कृपा करोनियां पुरवीं असोसी । आपुल्या िब्रदासी राखावया ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे एक बाळक अज्ञातें । त्यासि हे पोसित मायबापें ॥5॥
अगा ये मधुसूदना माधवा । अगा ये कमळापती यादवा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mountains of lust and anger stand in the way. The Infinite One remains on the other side.

I cannot cross over; I cannot find the path. This is a treacherous pass guarded by enemies.

How can Narayana now be my friend? He has gone beyond my reach, O Panduranga. Says Tuka, this precious body has gone to waste; this truth has become clear. I am not a person of steady faith.

What claim can I make on You? I have not served You, yet I ask for reward. Devotion and pure conviction do not come to me.

I can only blame my own fate. Previous devotees, countless and detached, conquered lust, anger, and ego.

I do not have such strength, O God, yet I long to meet You. Show mercy and fulfill my longing, for the sake of Your own pledges.

Says Tuka, I am an ignorant infant; my parents must nourish me. O come, Madhusudana, Madhava.

O come, Lord of Lakshmi, Yadava.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Lust and anger stand in the way like mountains. The Infinite One has stayed on the far side. I cannot cross over; I cannot find the path. This is a treacherous pass held by enemies. How can Narayana be my friend now? Panduranga has gone out of my reach. Tuka says: this precious body has gone to waste; this much has become clear. I am not a person of steady faith; what claim can I make on you? I ask for reward without having served. Pure devotion and firm feeling do not happen in me. I can only blame my own fate. In the past, countless devotees, free of attachment, put down lust, anger and pride. I do not have that strength, God, yet I am jealous for the meeting. Show mercy and fill up my craving, for the sake of your own pledges. Tuka says: there is one helpless infant; the mother and father feed it. Come, Madhusudana, Madhava. Come, Lord of Lakshmi, Yadava.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures his own passions as a mountain range that walls God off on the far side, with no path through and enemies holding the pass. Then he turns the blame inward and confesses he has no standing: no service done, no steady faith, no renunciation, only the demand for reward. He measures himself against the old detached devotees who conquered lust, anger and pride, and admits flatly that he lacks their strength. So he drops the claim of merit entirely and asks God to act for the sake of God's own promises, taking the place of a helpless infant whose parents must feed it precisely because it can do nothing for itself.

GATHA 4396 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, a litany of holy names

मराठी मूळ

अगा श्रीधरा केशवा । अगा बांधवा द्रौपदीच्या ॥1॥
अगा विश्वव्यापका जनादनना । गोकुळवासी गोपिकारमणा ।
अगा गुणनिधि गुणनिधाना । अगा मदनना कंसाचिया ॥ध्रु.॥
अगा सवौत्तमा सर्वेश्वरा । गुणातीता विश्वंभरा ।
अगा निर्गुणा निराकारा । अगा आधारा दीनाचिया ॥2॥
अगा उपमन्यसहाकारा । अगा शयना फणिवरा ।
अगा काळकृतांत असुरा । अगा अपारा अलक्षा ॥3॥
अगा वैकुंठनिवासा । अगा अयोध्यापति राजहंसा ।
अगा ये पंढरिनिवासा। अगा सर्वेशा सहजरूपा ॥4॥
अगा परमात्मा परमपुरुषा। अगा अव्यया जगदीशा ।
अगा कृपाळुवा आपुल्या दासा । तोडीं भवपाशा तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥
कैसी करूं तुझी सेवा । ऐसें सांगावें जी देवा ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Shridhara, Keshava. O brother of Draupadi.

O all-pervading Janardana, dweller in Gokul, beloved of the gopis. O treasure of virtues, O Destroyer of Kamsa.

O Supreme One, Lord of all, transcender of qualities, sustainer of the universe. O formless, shapeless One, O support of the helpless.

O protector of Upamanyu, O One who reclines on the great serpent. O Death to the demons, O boundless, imperceptible One.

O dweller of Vaikuntha, O sovereign of Ayodhya, O royal swan. O resident of Pandhari, O Lord of all, whose nature is effortless.

O supreme Self, O imperishable Lord of the world. O merciful One to Your servants, cut the bonds of worldly existence.

Says Tuka. Tell me, how shall I serve You? Instruct me, O God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O Shridhara, Keshava. O brother of Draupadi. O all-pervading Janardana, dweller in Gokul, beloved of the gopis. O treasure of virtues, O destroyer of Kamsa. O highest of all, Lord of all, beyond the qualities, holder of the universe. O without quality, without form, O support of the helpless. O helper of Upamanyu, O one who lies on the great serpent. O death to the demons, O boundless, unseeable one. O dweller in Vaikuntha, O king of Ayodhya, royal swan. O dweller in Pandhari, O Lord of all, of natural form. O supreme Self, supreme Person. O changeless Lord of the world. O merciful one to your servant, cut the bonds of worldly life. Tuka says: how should I serve you? Tell me that, God.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga is one long calling, heaping Vitthal's names from every story and every level of the tradition into a single breath of address. The names move across opposites on purpose: the cowherd of Gokul and the Lord beyond all qualities, the slayer of demons and the support of the helpless, the form that lies on the serpent and the formless Self. By gathering Krishna, Rama and Vitthal into one stream of names, Tukaram insists they are one God answering to all of them. The piling of titles ends in two plain requests, and that is the point of the litany: cut my worldly bonds, and tell me how I am to serve you.

GATHA 4397

Confession and Sin

Confession, no qualification but mercy

मराठी मूळ

कैसा आणूं अनुभवा । होशी ठावा कैशापरी ॥1॥
कर्मभ्रष्ट माझें मन । नेणें जप तप अनुष्ठान ।
नाहीं इंद्रियांसि दमन । नव्हे मन एकविध॥ध्रु.॥
नेणे यातीचा आचार । नेणें भक्तीचा विचार ।
मज नाहीं संतांचा आधार । नाहीं स्थिर बुद्धि माझी ॥2॥
न सुटे मायाजाळ । नाहीं वैराग्याचें बळ ।
न जिंकवती सबळ । काम क्रोध शरीरीं ॥3॥
आतां राख कैसें तरि । मज नुपेक्षावें हरी ।
तुझीं ब्रदें चराचरीं । तैसीं साच करीं तुका ह्मणे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How shall I bring You into experience? How shall I know You? My mind is fallen from right conduct; it knows no chanting, austerity, or discipline. My senses are not controlled; my mind is not one-pointed.

I do not know the customs of my caste. I do not know the path of devotion.

I have no support from the saints; my intellect is not steady. The net of illusion will not release me.

I have no strength of renunciation. The mighty forces of lust and anger in my body will not be conquered.

Even so, protect me somehow, O Hari. Do not forsake me.

Your pledges are proclaimed throughout creation; make them true. Says Tuka.

IN PLAIN WORDS

How shall I bring you into my experience? In what way will you become known to me? My mind has fallen from right action; it knows no chanting, no austerity, no discipline. My senses are not controlled; my mind is not one-pointed. I do not know the conduct of my caste. I do not know the way of devotion. I have no support of the saints; my intellect is not steady. The net of illusion will not let me go. I have no strength of renunciation. The strong forces of lust and anger in my body cannot be conquered. Even so, save me somehow; do not pass me over, Hari. Your pledges are proclaimed through all that moves and is still. Tuka says: make them true.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram empties out every credential a seeker might offer and finds he has none of them: no austerity, no controlled senses, no caste observance, no steady mind, no renunciation, not even the support of the saints. The honest inventory leaves him with a single line of appeal. Having nothing of his own to bargain with, he points to God's reputation instead, the pledges to rescue that are proclaimed across all of creation. The closing demand is sharp: those promises are spoken everywhere, so now make them true on me.

GATHA 4398 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Pandharpur, Kashi is here

मराठी मूळ

भीमातीरवासी । तेथें निश्चयेंसी काशी ॥1॥
मुख्यमुक्तीचें माहेर । ऐसें जाणा पंढरपुर ॥ध्रु.॥
घडे भींवरेशीं स्नान । त्यासि पुन्हा नाहीं जन्म ॥2॥
भाव धरोनि नेटका । मोक्ष जवळी ह्मणे तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dwelling on the banks of the Bhima, Kashi is assuredly present there. Know Pandharpur as the very birthplace of the highest liberation.

One who bathes in the Bhimra river shall never take birth again. Says Tuka, hold a firm and pure devotion, and liberation is close at hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He lives on the bank of the Bhima; Kashi is surely present there. Know Pandharpur as the very home of the highest liberation. Whoever bathes in the Bhima river takes no birth again. Tuka says: hold a clean, firm devotion, and liberation is near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram folds the great pilgrim city of Kashi into Pandharpur, where Vitthal stands by the Bhima river, claiming the whole power of pilgrimage is already present at his own home shrine. Pandharpur is named the birthplace of the highest liberation, so that the devotee need not travel elsewhere to find release. A bath in the Bhima is said to end rebirth itself. The condition is set quietly at the end: the prize stays near only for one who keeps a clean and steady devotion.

GATHA 4399 Worldly Metaphors

Social criticism, nature does not change

मराठी मूळ

जाली गाढवी दुधाळ । महिमा गाईची पावेल ॥1॥
श्वान जालेंसे चांगलें । तरी कां सांगातें जेवील ॥ध्रु.॥
जाली सिंदळा चांगली । तरि कां पतिव्रता जाली ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐशा जाति । काय उंचपण पावती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If a she-donkey gives milk, will it attain the status of a cow's? If a dog is groomed nicely, will it be invited to dine at the table? If a fallen woman becomes refined, does that make her a chaste wife? Says Tuka, can such natures ever attain true nobility?

IN PLAIN WORDS

If a she-donkey gives milk, will she reach the dignity of a cow? If a dog is groomed well, will it be invited to eat at the table with you? If a loose woman is made refined, does that make her a faithful wife? Tuka says: can such natures ever reach true high standing?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lines up three blunt images to argue that an inner nature is not changed by surface improvement. The point is not contempt for the donkey, the dog or the woman; it is a warning about the gap between appearance and reality, polish on the outside while the disposition stays what it was. Read against himself and the reader, the question turns into self-examination: am I trusting in grooming and pretense rather than a real change of heart. The poem leaves the question open and pointed, asking whether any merely cosmetic fix can buy genuine worth.

GATHA 4400 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise of Pandharpur, darshan alone frees

मराठी मूळ

काशीयात्रा पांच द्वारकेच्या तीन । पंढरीची जाण एक यात्रा ॥1॥
काशी देह विटंबणें द्वारकें जाळणें । पंढरीशी होणें ब्रह्मरूप ॥ध्रु.॥
अठरापगडयाती सकळ हि वैष्णव । दुजा नाहीं भाव पंढरीसि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे असो अथवा नसो भाव । दर्शनें पंढरिराव मोक्ष देतो ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Five pilgrimages to Kashi equal three to Dwarka, but one pilgrimage to Pandhari surpasses them all. At Kashi there is mortification of the body; at Dwarka, burning of the self; but at Pandhari, one becomes Brahman.

All eighteen castes and sub-castes become Vaishnavas there; no other distinction exists in Pandhari. Says Tuka, whether devotion is present or absent, the Lord of Pandhari grants liberation through His mere darshan.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Five pilgrimages to Kashi, three to Dwarka, but Pandhari is one single pilgrimage. At Kashi the body is tormented, at Dwarka the self is burned, but at Pandhari one becomes the form of Brahman. All eighteen castes and sub-castes become Vaishnavas there; no other distinction holds in Pandhari. Tuka says: whether you have devotion or not, the Lord of Pandhari gives liberation just by his darshan.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram ranks the famous holy places and sets Pandharpur above them all, because the others ask for hard mortification while Pandhari simply makes one Brahman. The second claim is social as much as spiritual: at Pandhari the eighteen castes dissolve into one community of Vaishnavas, with no rank left standing before Vitthal. The last line pushes furthest of all, saying the Lord of Pandhari grants liberation by sight alone, with or without the worshipper's devotion. It places the whole weight of release on God's freely given grace rather than on anything the pilgrim brings.

GATHA 4401 Prayers

Prayer for inward gifts

मराठी मूळ

हें चि मागणें विठाबाई । पायीं ठेवूनियां डोई ॥1॥
शांति दया अंतःकरणीं । रंगो रामनामीं वाणी ॥ध्रु.॥
मूळ द्वंद्वाचें विघडो । निजानंदीं वृत्त जडो ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे हरी । आतां आपुलेंसें करीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This alone is my prayer, O Vitthabai, placing my head at Your feet. May peace and compassion fill my chitta.

May my speech be dyed in Rama's Name. May the root of duality be severed.

May my attention be firmly fixed in the bliss of the Self. Says Tuka, O Hari, now make me Your own.

IN PLAIN WORDS

This alone is my asking, Vithabai, as I lay my head at your feet. Let peace and compassion be in my heart. Let my speech be steeped in Rama's Name. Let the root of duality break apart. Let my attention settle in the bliss of the Self. Tuka says: Hari, now make me your own.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for nothing outward, no relief, no fortune, only a changed inner state. The gifts he names build on one another: peace and compassion in the heart, the tongue dyed through with Rama's Name, the very root of dividedness cut, and the mind coming to rest in the bliss of the Self. The closing line gathers all of it into a single surrender, asking Hari to take possession of him. The whole prayer treats union, not benefit, as the only thing worth begging for.

GATHA 4402 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, all acts for the One

मराठी मूळ

करोनि स्नानविधि आणि देवधर्म । क्रिया नित्यनेम तुजसाटीं ॥1॥
तुजलागीं दानें तुजलागीं तीर्थॉ । सकळ ही व्रतें तुजलागीं ॥ध्रु.॥
सकळ चित्तवृत्त दिवस आणि राती । आवडशी प्रीती नारायणा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे याहो पवित्राच्या राया । प्राणविसावया पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All my bathing rituals, worship, and religious observances are for You alone. For You are my charities, for You my pilgrimages, for You all my vows.

All the movements of my chitta, by day and by night, are drawn toward You in love, O Narayana. Says Tuka, O King of the Pure, O Panduranga, You are the resting place of my very life.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My baths and rites, my worship and observances, my daily duties: they are all for You. My gifts are for You. My pilgrimages are for You. All my vows are for You. Every movement of my mind, by day and by night, is drawn to You in love, Narayana. Tuka says: You are the King of the Pure, Panduranga. You are the resting place of my very life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gathers up the whole apparatus of religion, bathing, worship, charity, pilgrimage, vows, and hands all of it to one address. None of it is an end in itself; each act is only a way of reaching Vitthal. He goes further than outward acts: even the constant motion of his mind, waking and sleeping, leans toward God in love. The benediction names the stakes plainly. Panduranga is not one item among his practices but the rest in which his life finally lies down.

GATHA 4403 Longing and Separation

Longing, the hidden God

मराठी मूळ

पहावा नयनीं विठ्ठल चि एक । कांहीं तरी सार्थक संसाराचें ॥1॥
कोठें पाहों तुज कां गा लपालासि । कांहीं बोल मशीं नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
वाटते उदास मज दाही दिशा । तुजविण हृषीकेशा वांचोनियां ॥2॥
नको ठेवूं मज आपणा वेगळें । बहुत कळवळें तुजलागीं ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भेटी देई नारायणा । घडी कंठवेना तुजविण ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let my eyes see Vitthal and Vitthal alone; let there be some meaning to this worldly life. Where shall I look for You? Why do You hide? Speak something to me, O Narayana.

All ten directions feel desolate to me, living without You, O Hrishikesha. Do not keep me separate from Yourself; I long for You with great intensity.

Says Tuka, grant me Your presence, O Narayana. Without You, I cannot endure even a moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let my eyes see Vitthal, only Vitthal. Then this worldly life has some meaning. Where shall I look for You? Why do You hide? Say something to me, Narayana. All ten directions feel empty to me, living without You, Hrishikesha. Do not keep me apart from Yourself. I long for You with all my heart. Tuka says: give me Your presence, Narayana. Without You I cannot bear even a moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes seeing God the one thing that would justify being alive at all; without it, the round of worldly life is empty. He speaks to a God who is present but withheld, and he protests that silence directly: why do You hide, say something. The complaint is not doubt but ache. The whole of space feels deserted because the one face he wants is missing. The closing line sets the measure of his need: not years or days, but a single moment is too long to spend apart from Narayana.

GATHA 4404 Longing and Separation

Complaint, You saved others

मराठी मूळ

पूवाअ बहुतांचे केले प्रतिपाळ । तें मज सकळ श्रुत आहे ॥1॥
अज अविनाश निर्गुण निरामय । विचारिलें काय त्यांचे वेळे ॥ध्रु.॥
तयांचियें वेळे होशी कृपावंत । माझा चि कां अंत पहातोसि ॥2॥
नारद प्र†हाद उपमन्य धुरु । त्यांचा अंगीकारु कैसा केला ॥3॥
अंबऋषीसाटीं गर्भवास जाले । कां गा मोकलिलें कृपासिंधु ॥4॥
धर्माचें उच्छिष्ट अर्जुनाचीं घोडीं । आणीक सांकडीं कितीएक ॥5॥
जालासि लुगडीं तया द्रौपदीचीं । न ये कां आमुची कृपा कांहीं ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे कां गा जालासि कठीण । माझा भाग सीण कोण जाणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the past You protected so many devotees. I am well aware of all that.

Unborn, imperishable, formless, and beyond sickness, did You consider any of this at their time of need? At their hour You became compassionate. Why then do You test only me to the end? Narada, Prahlad, Upamanyu, Dhruva: how did You embrace them? For Ambarisha's sake, You entered the womb.

Why then have You abandoned me, O ocean of mercy? You ate the leftovers of Dharma and groomed Arjuna's horses, and bore countless other hardships. You became Draupadi's saris.

Why does no mercy come for me? Says Tuka, why have You become so hard? Who knows the weight of my suffering?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the past You protected many. I know all of it well. You are unborn, imperishable, formless, free of all sickness. Did You weigh any of that when their hour came? At their hour You grew kind. Why then do You test only me to the end? Narada, Prahlad, Upamanyu, Dhruva: how You took them up. For Ambarisha You entered the womb. Why then have You abandoned me, ocean of mercy? You ate the leftovers of Dharma and groomed Arjuna's horses, and bore countless hardships. You became Draupadi's saris. Why does no mercy come for me? Tuka says: why have You turned so hard? Who knows the weight of my suffering?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram argues with God by reciting God's own record. He knows the stories: Narada, Prahlad, Dhruva lifted up, the Lord taking births and even menial service for the sake of devotees, becoming the cloth that covered Draupadi. The list is not praise but evidence in a case. If You acted then, why not now; why is my hour the one where You stand back and watch. The harshness is aimed at the apparent silence, and it rests on faith, not its loss. Only someone certain of God's mercy would dare to charge Him with withholding it, and the last line insists that the depth of his own suffering is being overlooked.

GATHA 4405 Longing and Separation

Longing, life without the meeting

मराठी मूळ

कासयासि व्यर्थ घातलें संसारीं । होतें तैसें जरी तुझे चित्तीं ॥1॥
तुझिये भेटीची थोर असे आस । दिसोनी निरास आली मज ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां काय जिणें जालें निरर्थक । वैकुंठनायक भेटे चि ना ॥2॥
आडलासि काय कृपेच्या सागरा । रकुमादेवीवरा सोइरिया॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देई चरणाची सेवा । नुपेक्षीं केशवा मायबापा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Why did You cast me into this world for nothing, if this was Your intention all along? I had such great longing for Your meeting, but now it seems hopeless. What is the use of living now? Life has become meaningless if the Lord of Vaikuntha will not meet me.

Are You obstructed somehow, O ocean of grace, O husband of Rukmadevi, O my dear One? Says Tuka, grant me the service of Your feet. Do not forsake me, O Keshava, my parent.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why did You cast me into this world for nothing, if this was Your plan all along? I had such great hope of meeting You, and now it looks hopeless. What use is living now? Life is meaningless if the Lord of Vaikuntha will not meet me. Are You blocked somehow, ocean of grace, husband of Rukmadevi, my own dear One? Tuka says: give me the service of Your feet. Do not forsake me, Keshava, my father and mother.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures his whole birth against one outcome: the meeting with God. If that was never to come, then being thrown into the world was pointless, and the protest carries an edge of accusation. He confesses that his great hope now looks like despair, and he says outright that a life without this meeting is empty. Half teasing, half pleading, he asks whether something is obstructing the ocean of grace itself. The prayer narrows to its smallest form: not a vision, just the service of those feet, and the cry of a child to a parent not to be left behind.

GATHA 4406 Faith and Trust

Faith, God feeds the helpless

मराठी मूळ

पक्षीयाचे घरीं नाहीं सामुगरी । त्यांची चिंता करी नारायण ॥1॥
अजगर जनावर वारुळांत राहे । त्याजकडे पाहे पांडुरंग ॥ध्रु.॥
चातक हा पक्षी नेघे भूमिजळ । त्यासाटीं घननीळ नित्य वर्षे ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी पिप्पलिकांची जात । पुरवीं मनोरथ पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The bird has no provisions in its home, yet Narayana takes care of its needs. The python and other creatures dwell in anthills, yet Panduranga watches over them.

The chataka bird refuses to drink earthly water; for its sake the dark-hued Lord rains from the clouds. Says Tuka, we are of the race of ants. Fulfill our heart's desire, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The bird keeps no store in its nest, yet Narayana cares for its needs. The python and other creatures live in anthills, and Panduranga watches over them. The chataka bird will not drink water from the earth; for its sake the dark Lord rains from the clouds. Tuka says: we are of the race of ants. Fulfill our heart's desire, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his case for trust from the plainest evidence in nature. The bird with no granary, the creatures hidden in anthills, are all provided for by a care they neither earn nor arrange. The chataka, which by legend drinks only rain and refuses standing water, is the sharpest image: for one creature's stubborn need, the very clouds are moved to pour. He then places himself lowest of all, among ants, and lets the argument finish itself. If God tends the smallest and most helpless, then his own heart's desire is safe to ask for.

GATHA 4407 The Power of the Name

The Name, a free shop

मराठी मूळ

रामनाम हा चि मांडिला दुकान । आहे वानोवाण घ्यारे कोणी ॥1॥
नका कोणी करुं घेता रे आळस । वांटितों तुह्मांस फुकाचें हें ॥ध्रु.॥
संचितासारिखे पडे त्याच्या हाता । फारसें मागतां तरी न ये ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मीं सांठविलें सार । उरलिया थार विचारितां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have set up a shop of Rama's Name. There are goods in plenty; come, take what you will.

Let no one be lazy about taking them; I am distributing this free of charge. Each receives according to their merit; if you ask for too much, it cannot be given.

Says Tuka, we have stored the essence. What remains, upon examination, is of the highest quality.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have set up a shop, and the only goods are the Name of Rama. There is plenty; come, anyone, take it. Do not be lazy about taking. I am giving it away for free. Each one receives according to what they have stored up; ask for too much and it will not come. Tuka says: I have laid in the essence. Look it over: what is left is the best.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram casts himself as a shopkeeper whose single stock is the Name of Rama, and he is not selling it but giving it away. The only barrier is the customer's own sloth in coming to take. There is one honest condition: what each person can receive matches the merit they bring, so greed that demands more than it is ready for goes unfilled. The point is that the supply itself is endless and unpriced; the limit lies in us, not in him. And the essence he has stored, the Name, is offered as the finest thing on the shelf.

GATHA 4408 Ecstasy and Joy

Reunion, after many births

मराठी मूळ

बहुजन्मां शेवटीं स्वामी तुझी भेटी । बहु मोह पोटीं थोर जाला ॥1॥
बहु पुरें पाहिलीं बहु दिशा शोधिली । बहु चिंता वाहिली दुर्भराची ॥ध्रु.॥
बहु काळ गेले अनुचित केलें । बहु नाहीं गाइलें नाम तुझें ॥2॥
ऐसा मी अपराधी अगा कृपानिधि । बहु संतां संनिधि ठेवीं तुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

After so many births, at last, O Lord, Your meeting has come. Much delusion had grown great within my chitta.

I wandered through many cities and searched in every direction, carrying the heavy burden of unbearable anxiety. Much time passed in wrongdoing; Your Name was not sung enough.

Such a sinner am I, O treasure of mercy. Says Tuka, keep me always in the company of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

After many births, at last, Lord, the meeting with You has come. Great delusion had grown large inside me. I wandered through many cities, searched in every direction, carried a heavy weight of unbearable worry. Much time passed in wrong deeds; I did not sing Your Name enough. Such a sinner I am, treasure of mercy. Tuka says: keep me always near the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks back from the moment of meeting across the long road that led to it. Birth after birth was spent in delusion, in restless searching from city to city, and under a load of anxiety he calls unbearable. He owns the waste plainly: time misspent, the Name left unsung, and names himself a sinner without softening it. Yet the confession opens into a single request that protects the gain. Keep me with the saints, because their company is what holds a wandering heart in place.

GATHA 4409 Longing and Separation

Longing, urgent for the sight

मराठी मूळ

कोण उपाव करूं भेटावया । जाळावी हे काया ऐसें वाटे ॥1॥
सोडोनियां गांव जाऊं वनांतरा । रुकुमादेवीवरा पहावया॥ध्रु.॥
करूं उपवास शोधूं हें शरीर । न धरवे धीर नारायणा॥2॥
जाती आयुष्याचे दिवस हे चारी । मग केव्हां हरी भेटशील ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे कांहीं सांगा विचारोनि । विठो तुझे मनीं असेल तें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What remedy shall I try to meet You? I feel like burning this body. Leaving the village, I would go to the wilderness to see the husband of Rukmadevi.

I will fast and discipline this body. I cannot hold my patience, O Narayana.

These few days of life are passing; when then will You meet me, O Hari? Says Tuka, tell me something after due thought, O Vittho. Whatever is in Your mind, let it be.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What remedy can I try to meet You? I feel like burning this body. I would leave the village and go into the forest to see the husband of Rukmadevi. I will fast and discipline this body. I cannot hold my patience, Narayana. These few days of life are passing. When then will You meet me, Hari? Tuka says: think and tell me something, Vittho. Whatever is in Your mind, let it be.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is past calm waiting; he casts about for any means and reaches for extremes, even the wish to burn the body that keeps him from God. He would abandon home for the forest, fast, drive the body hard, anything to force the meeting. Under the impatience lies a real fear: life is short, the days are running out, and the encounter still has not come. So he presses for an answer, asking God to speak a verdict. The last line bends the urgency back into surrender. After all the demands, he hands the outcome over: whatever is in Your mind, let that be.

GATHA 4410 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, the only kin

मराठी मूळ

माय बाप बंधु सोयरा सांगाती । तूं चि माझी प्रीति गण गोत ॥1॥
शरण आलीं त्यांचीं वारिलीं दुरितें । तारिले पतित असंख्यात ॥ध्रु.॥
इतर कोण जाणे पावलें विश्रांति । न येतां तुजप्रति शरणागत ॥2॥
तयामध्यें मज ठेवीं नारायणा । लक्षुमीरमणा सोइरिया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे देई दर्शनाचा लाभ । जे पाय दुर्लभ ब्रह्मादिकां ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Mother, father, brother, kinsman, companion: You alone are my beloved, my clan, my family. Those who came to You for refuge had their sins removed.

Countless wrongdoers have been saved. Who else can give true rest unless one comes to You as a surrendered soul? Place me among them, O Narayana, O husband of Lakshmi, O dear One.

Says Tuka, grant me the gift of Your darshan, those feet that are rare even for Brahma and the gods.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Mother, father, brother, kinsman, companion: You alone are my love, my clan, my family. Those who came to You for refuge had their sins taken away. Countless fallen ones have been saved. Who else gives true rest, unless one comes to You as a surrendered soul? Place me among them, Narayana, husband of Lakshmi, my dear One. Tuka says: grant me the gift of Your sight, those feet that are rare even for Brahma and the gods.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram dissolves every ordinary tie into one. Mother, father, brother, friend, the whole web of kinship is replaced by God alone. The ground for this is God's record with those who surrender: their sins lifted, countless fallen ones rescued, a rest that nothing else can give. So the prayer is simply to be counted among the surrendered, not singled out. The closing line marks how great the gift is. The sight of these feet is rare even for Brahma and the gods, yet it is offered to one who comes empty-handed and admits he has no other family.

GATHA 4411 Prayers

Prayer, drive out the enemies

मराठी मूळ

पाप ताप माझे गुणदोष निवारीं । कृष्णा विष्णु हरी नारायणा ॥1॥
काम क्रोध वैरी घालोनि बाहेरी । तूं राहें अंतरीं पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
करिशील तरी नव्हे कांइ एक । निमिनलें त्रैलोक्य हेळामात्रें ॥2॥
समर्थासि काय आह्मीं शिकवावें । तुका ह्मणे यावें पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Remove my sins, afflictions, virtues, and faults, O Krishna, Vishnu, Hari, Narayana. Drive out the enemies of lust and anger, and dwell within me, O Panduranga.

If You will it, nothing is impossible. You created the three worlds with a mere glance.

What need is there for the Capable One to be instructed by us? Says Tuka, simply come, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Take away my sins, my afflictions, my virtues and my faults, Krishna, Vishnu, Hari, Narayana. Throw out the enemies, lust and anger, and come live within me, Panduranga. If You will it, nothing is impossible. You made the three worlds with a single glance. What can we teach the One who is able to do all? Tuka says: only come, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks God to clear out not only his sins and faults but his virtues too, since clinging to one's own goodness is itself a tie; he wants the inner room emptied so God can live there. The enemies he names by name, lust and anger, are to be thrown out so the heart can become a dwelling. His confidence rests on God's power: One who made three worlds with a glance can surely do this small thing. He refuses to dictate the method, since instructing the all-able would be absurd. The whole prayer shrinks to one word of trust. Just come.

GATHA 4412 Longing and Separation

Longing, home of the homeless

मराठी मूळ

ये गा महाविष्णु अनंतभुजाच्या । आह्मां अनाथांच्या माहेरा ये ॥1॥
भेटावया तुज ओढे माझा जीव । एकवेळा पाय दावीं डोळां ॥ध्रु.॥
आणीक हे आर्त नाहीं नारायणा । ओढे हे वासना भेटावया ॥2॥
वाटे चित्तीं काय करावा विचार । चरण सुंदर पहावया ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे माझे पुरवीं मनोरथ । येई गा न संवरीत पांडुरंगा ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Come, O great Vishnu of infinite arms, come to us, the home of the homeless. My jiva strains to meet You.

Show me Your feet just once before my eyes. I have no other longing, O Narayana.

This desire, this yearning, is only to meet You. I keep wondering in my chitta what to do, how to behold those beautiful feet.

Says Tuka, fulfill my chitta's desire. Come without restraint, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Come, great Vishnu of countless arms, come to us, the home of the homeless. My life strains toward meeting You. Show me Your feet just once before my eyes. I have no other longing, Narayana. This desire, this yearning, is only to meet You. I keep wondering in my mind what I should do to see those beautiful feet. Tuka says: fulfill my heart's desire. Come without holding back, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram calls on the vast cosmic Vishnu and asks Him to become something small and intimate: a home for those who have none. His whole life pulls toward one encounter, and he keeps the request modest, just one sight of the feet. He is careful to say there is no second wish hidden behind it; this single yearning has no rival. The restless turning of his mind, wondering what act could earn the vision, is part of the ache. The final plea asks God to drop all reserve and come fully, without measuring what He gives.

GATHA 4413 Prayers

The Name, the glory of Rama

मराठी मूळ

काय पाहतोसि कृपेच्या सागरा । नराच्या नरेंद्रा पांडुरंगा ॥1॥
नामाचा प्रताप िब्रदाचा बडिवार । करावा साचार नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
कलीमाजी देव बौध्यरूप जाला । जगाचिया बोला लागूं नका ॥2॥
माय पुत्रा काय मारुं पाहे कळी । जगाची ढवाळी काय काज ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे या हो कृपेच्या सागरा । रुकुमादेवीवरा मायबापा ॥4॥
धन्य तो एक संसारीं । रामनाम जो उच्चारी ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे रामनामीं । कृतकृत्य जालों आह्मीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

What are You waiting for, O ocean of grace, O King of kings, O Panduranga? Make the glory of the Name and the honor of Your pledges come true, O Narayana. In this age of Kali, God has taken the form of Buddha.

Do not heed the words of the world. Can Kali, the dark age, truly destroy a mother's son? What business is the world's gossip? Says Tuka, come, O ocean of mercy, O husband of Rukmadevi, O my parent. Blessed is that one in this world who utters the Name of Rama.

Says Tuka, through Rama's Name, we have become perfectly fulfilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What are You waiting for, ocean of grace, King of kings, Panduranga? Make the glory of the Name and the honor of Your pledges come true, Narayana. In this age of Kali, God took the form of Buddha. Do not listen to the talk of the world. Can the dark age really kill a mother's son? What is the world's gossip to us? Tuka says: come, ocean of mercy, husband of Rukmadevi, my father and mother. Blessed is the one in this world who speaks the Name of Rama. Tuka says: through Rama's Name, we have become wholly fulfilled.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God to act on God's own reputation. The Name has a glory and the Lord has standing pledges; let them be proved true rather than left as words. He treats the dark age of Kali as a threat that cannot finally harm one who belongs to God, a mother's son, and tells God to ignore the chatter of the world that says otherwise. The same dismissal is his own freedom: the world's gossip is no business of the devotee. The poem then resolves into pure assurance. To speak Rama's Name is blessedness, and through it Tukaram declares himself already complete, with nothing left to win.

GATHA 4414 Faith and Trust

Faith, God comes to your door

मराठी मूळ

येइल घरा देव न धरीं संदेहा । फकिराचा यावा व्हावा जेव्हां ॥1॥
होइल फकीर योगी महानुभाव । घडीघडी देव सांभाळील ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसें बोलती बहुत । येणे गुणें संत जाले राम ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God will come to your home; do not hold any doubt about it. When one becomes a true fakir, a yogi, a great soul, then God will watch over you at every moment.

Says Tuka, many speak thus, and by this truth the saints have become one with Rama.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God will come to your home. Do not hold any doubt about it. When a man becomes a true fakir, a yogi, a great soul, then God will watch over him at every moment. Tuka says: many speak this way; and by this very thing the saints have become one with Rama.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is making a flat promise and naming what it costs. God comes to your house; do not waste energy doubting it. But the coming is tied to a condition: you must become inwardly poor and surrendered, a fakir, a yogi, a great soul, someone with nothing left to guard. To such a one God gives constant, moment by moment care. Tukaram adds that this is not his private idea: many have said it, and it is by exactly this that the saints crossed over into Rama.

GATHA 4415 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the wasted human birth

मराठी मूळ

भक्तीवीण जिणें जळो लाजिरवाणें । संसार भोगणें दुःखमूळ ॥1॥
वीसलक्ष योनि वृक्षामाजी घ्याव्या । जलचरीं भोगाव्या नवलक्ष ॥ध्रु.॥
अकरालक्ष योनि किडएंमाजी घ्याव्या । दशलक्ष भोगाव्या पक्ष्यांमध्ये ॥2॥
तीसलक्ष योनि पशूंचीये घरीं । मानवाभीतरीं चारलक्ष ॥3॥
एकएक योनि कोटिकोटि फेरा । मनुष्यदेहाचा वारा मग लागे ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे तेव्हां नरदेह नरा । तयाचा मातेरा केला मूढें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Life without devotion is shameful and fit to be burned. Enduring worldly existence is the root of all suffering.

Twenty lakh forms of life must be endured among trees; nine lakh among water creatures. Eleven lakh forms among insects and worms; ten lakh among birds.

Thirty lakh forms among animals, and four lakh in the human species. Each form must be passed through crores and crores of times before the breeze of a human birth reaches one.

Says Tuka, when at last the human body is obtained, the fool squanders it to ruin.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A life without devotion is shameful; let it be burned. To go on enduring the world is the root of suffering. Twenty lakh wombs must be passed among the trees. Nine lakh among the creatures of the water. Eleven lakh among insects and worms. Ten lakh among the birds. Thirty lakh in the houses of the animals. Four lakh among human kinds. Each form is taken crores upon crores of times, and only then does the breeze of a human birth touch you. Tuka says: and when at last the human body is reached, the fool grinds it to dust.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is counting the price of a human birth so you will not throw it away. He stacks up the old reckoning of the wombs: lakhs upon lakhs of forms among trees, water creatures, worms, birds, animals, each entered crores of times, before a soul is finally born as a human being. The number is meant to land as weight, not arithmetic: a human life is the rarest opening in an almost endless circuit. To live that life without devotion is to burn the one chance, and the suffering of going round again is the result. The sharp word is for the pattern in any of us that treats this birth as cheap, not for any particular person.

GATHA 4416 Prayers

Prayer, the only refuge

मराठी मूळ

तुजवांचून कोणा शरण । जाऊं आतां कर जोडून॥1॥
कोण करील माझें साहे । चित्तीं विचारूनि पाहें ॥ध्रु.॥
तूं तंव कृपेचा सागर । दीनबंधु जगदोद्धार ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे निका । भवसिंधु तारक नौका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without You, to whom shall I go for refuge, with folded hands? Who will come to my aid? Consider this carefully in Your chitta. You are the ocean of compassion, the Friend of the lowly, the Redeemer of the world.

Says Tuka, You are the pure and trustworthy boat for crossing the ocean of worldly existence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Without You, to whom shall I go for refuge, with folded hands? Who will be my help? Consider it carefully in Your heart and see. You are the ocean of compassion, the friend of the lowly, the lifter of the whole world. Tuka says: You are the good and trusty boat that carries me across the sea of this worldly life.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is closing every other door so that only one remains. He asks where else he could go: with folded hands he can find no second refuge, no one else to come to his aid. Then he turns the question on God, telling Him to look in His own heart and see that there is no one else either. He names what God is, ocean of mercy, friend of the lowly, redeemer of the world, and so makes the plea unrefusable. The poem ends in a single image: God is the one seaworthy boat across the ocean of birth and death.

GATHA 4417 Prayers

Prayer, the honor of the one held

मराठी मूळ

हातीं धरिलियाची लाज । देवा असोंदे गा तुज॥1॥
आहें अमंगळ दुर्बळ । होई दीन तूं दयाळ ॥ध्रु.॥
बाळ सेंबडें मातेसि । काय नावडे तियेसि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जाणें । करोनि देहाचें सांडणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Honor the one You have taken by the hand, O God; let that dignity remain with You. I am inauspicious and weak; I am lowly, and You are merciful.

Does a mother not love her child even when it is dirty and covered with snot? Says Tuka, I know I must let go of this body in the end.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The honor of the one You have taken by the hand is Yours, O God; let it rest with You. I am unholy and weak; I am lowly, and You are merciful. Does a mother turn away from her own child because it is dirty and runny-nosed? Tuka says: I know this, that in the end I must lay down this body and go.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is handing God the responsibility for his own worth. Once God has taken him by the hand, his reputation is no longer his to defend; it has become God's honor to keep. He freely admits he is unclean and weak, and sets that against God's mercy. The mother and the snot-nosed child is the whole argument: love does not wait for the child to be clean, so his filth is no reason for God to let go. And he knows the stakes are final, since the body itself will soon be set down; the hand that holds him must be the one that does not.

GATHA 4418 Social Criticism

Social criticism, guru and disciple for hire

मराठी मूळ

जळोजळो तें गुरुपण । जळोजळो तें चेलेपण ॥1॥
गुरु आला वेशीद्वारीं । शिष्य पळतों खिंडोरीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काशासाटीं जालें येणें । त्याचें आलें वर्षासन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चेला । गुरू दोघे हि नरकाला ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Cursed be such guruhood, cursed be such discipleship. When the guru arrives at the village gate, the disciple runs away by the back lane.

Why did this guru come? Only because his annual stipend was due. Says Tuka, both disciple and guru are headed for hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Burn such guruhood; burn such discipleship. The guru comes to the village gate, and the disciple runs off down the back lane. What did this coming amount to? His yearly stipend had fallen due. Tuka says: disciple and guru, both of them, are bound for hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is attacking a teaching that runs on money instead of truth. The guru arrives, and the disciple, who should be running toward him, slips away by the back alley; the warmth is gone. The visit was never for the soul: the guru showed up because his annual payment was owed, so the bond is a transaction wearing holy clothes. Tukaram sends both to hell to mark how empty it is when the teacher comes for his fee and the student dodges the debt. The verse points at the hollow pattern of a relationship without devotion, asking us to test our own teaching and following, not to despise any one teacher.

GATHA 4419 Prayers

Prayer, come quickly Lord of Pandhari

मराठी मूळ

अगा पंढरीच्या राया । वेगीं येई तूं सावया ॥1॥
दीनबंधु तुझें नाम । देई आपुलें आह्मां प्रेम ॥ध्रु.॥
जीवनकळा तूं विश्वाची । तूं चि माउली अनाथाची ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे पुंडलिका । ठेवीं मस्तकीं पादुका ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O Lord of Pandhari, come quickly to my aid. 'Friend of the lowly' is Your Name; give me Your divine love.

You are the life-giving art of the whole world, the Mother of the orphaned. Says Tuka, O Pundalik, place the Lord's sandals upon my head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O King of Pandhari, come quickly to my aid. Friend of the lowly is Your Name; give us Your own love. You are the living power of the universe; You alone are the mother of the orphan. Tuka says: O Pundalik, place the Lord's sandals upon my head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is calling the Lord of Pandhari to come at once and is reminding Him of His own Name. If Vitthal is called the friend of the lowly, then the lowly may demand the love that the Name promises. He widens the appeal: this is the one who is the life of all the world and the mother of every orphan, so the orphaned have a claim on Him. At the close he turns to Pundalik, the devotee who first drew Vitthal to Pandhari, and asks for the simplest blessing: the Lord's sandals set on his head, surrender made visible.

GATHA 4420 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, the Name holds all

मराठी मूळ

विटेवरी समचरण । तो हा रुक्मणीरमण ॥1॥
वेदशास्त्रा माहेर । केले दासा उपकार ॥ध्रु.॥
नामापाशीं चारी मुक्ति। पहा हृदयीं प्रतीति ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कळा । अंगीं जयाच्या सकळा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He stands with even feet upon the brick, Rukmini's Beloved. The Vedas and scriptures find their home in Him.

He has blessed His servants with great grace. The four kinds of liberation reside near the Name; experience this truth within your heart.

Says Tuka, all sacred arts reside in His being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He stands with even feet upon the brick, the Beloved of Rukmini. In Him the Vedas and the scriptures find their home. He has done His servants this great kindness. The four kinds of liberation wait close beside the Name; look, and feel the proof of it in your own heart. Tuka says: every sacred power lives in His body.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is gathering everything into the figure on the brick at Pandhari. The Lord stands with feet set level, the Beloved of Rukmini, and the Vedas and scriptures are not above Him but find their source, their home, in Him. His kindness to his servants is to put the whole of that within reach of the Name. The four kinds of liberation that seekers strain after are not far off; they stand beside the Name, and the proof is not in argument but in the heart of anyone who tests it. So all sacred power is present in this one form, and the Name is the door to it.

GATHA 4421 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the snares of maya

मराठी मूळ

सकळ हे माया नागवे कवणा । भांबाविलें जना दाही दिशा ॥1॥
आशा तृष्णा दंभ लागलीं हीं पाठी । नेदी बैसों हाटीं मोह ठायीं ॥ध्रु.॥
काम क्रोध घरा लावितील आगी । निंदा हिंसा दोघी पळतां खाती ॥2॥
लाज पुढें उभी राहिली आडवी । ते करी गाढवी थोर घात ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे चिंता घाली गर्भवासीं । ओढोनियां पाशीं चहूंकडे ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This maya deceives everyone, bewildering people in all ten directions. Desire, greed, and pretense follow close behind; delusion does not let one rest anywhere.

Lust and anger set the house on fire; slander and malice devour you even as you flee. Shame stands before you, blocking the way, and it causes the greatest ruin.

Says Tuka, worry drags you into the womb again, pulling you from every side.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All this is maya; whom does it not strip bare? It throws people into confusion in all ten directions. Hope, craving, and pretense cling close at your back; delusion will not let you sit still anywhere. Lust and anger set fire to the house; slander and malice devour you even as you run. Shame plants itself across your path and works the greatest ruin. Tuka says: worry casts you back into the womb, dragging you by the noose from every side.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming the trap so plainly that you can feel it close. Maya leaves no one untouched; it spins people about in every direction. Then he lists the agents one by one: hope and craving and show that follow at your heels, lust and anger that burn the home down, slander and malice that eat you while you flee, and shame that blocks the road and ruins you. The point of the catalogue is that there is no exit while these run you. The end names the cost: worry itself drags you back into another birth, a noose pulling from all sides, which is why the soul must turn to God rather than fight the trap on its own terms.

GATHA 4422 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, Pandhari the crowning jewel

मराठी मूळ

सकळतीर्थाहुनि । पंढरी हें मुगुटमणि ॥1॥
काय सांगों तेथिल शोभा । रमावल्लभ जेथें उभा ॥ध्रु.॥
न लभे व्रततीर्थदानीं। तें या विठ्ठलदर्शनीं ॥2॥
साधु संत गाती नाम । सकळ भूतांचा विश्राम ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे स्तुती । करूं काय सांगों किती ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Among all sacred places, Pandhari is the crowning jewel. How can I describe the beauty of the place where the beloved of Lakshmi stands? What cannot be obtained through vows, pilgrimages, and charity is gained by the mere sight of Vitthal.

Saints sing the Name there, bringing peace to all beings. Says Tuka, how much praise can I offer? How much can I say?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Of all holy places, Pandhari is the crown jewel. How can I tell its beauty, where the Beloved of Lakshmi stands? What no vow, no pilgrimage, no gift can win is gained here in the sight of Vitthal. Holy men and saints sing the Name here, and all beings find their rest. Tuka says: how much praise can I make? How much can I tell?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is setting Pandhari above every other sacred place and saying why. It is the crowning jewel of all tirthas, because there the Beloved of Lakshmi himself stands waiting. The claim is sharp: what years of vows, pilgrimages, and charity cannot earn is given freely just by laying eyes on Vitthal. There the saints sing the Name, and that singing brings rest to every creature. He ends overwhelmed, admitting his praise can never reach the size of the thing he is praising.

GATHA 4423 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, be what you are

मराठी मूळ

गव्हांच्या घुग†या । नाचण्यांच्या पु†या । ब†या त्या चि ब†या । पाधाणी त्या पाधाणी ॥1॥
काय थोरपण । वांयां जाळावा तो शीण । कारणापें भिन्न । निवडे तें निराळें ॥ध्रु.॥
रुचि वोजेपाशी । गरज ते जैशीतैशी । करूं नका नाशी । खावें खाणें जालें तें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मोठा । काय करावा तो ताटा । नाहीं वीण निटा । पाविजेत मारग ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wheat makes wheat cakes, and millet makes millet bread. The staples remain staples and the side dishes remain side dishes.

What is the use of pretending to a greatness that only wastes effort? What differs from the ordinary stands apart on its own. The real taste lies with the substance; the need is what it is.

Do not destroy what is; eat the food that has been prepared. Says Tuka, what use is a big platter if one cannot find the straightforward path?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wheat makes wheat dumplings; millet makes millet bread. A staple stays a staple; a side dish stays a side dish. What good is pretending to greatness? It only burns up effort for nothing. What truly differs stands apart on its own. The taste lies with the real substance; the need is whatever it is. Do not throw it away; eat the food that has been cooked. Tuka says: what use is a great platter if you cannot find the plain, straight road?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is using kitchen plainness to puncture pretense. Wheat yields wheat cakes and millet yields millet bread; each thing is what it is, staple or side dish, and putting on airs of being more only wastes your effort. Real worth shows itself without being claimed. So he says: stop straining after a borrowed greatness, take the food actually cooked in front of you, do not waste it. The closing line is the lesson: a grand platter is worthless if you have lost the simple, direct path, and the straight road matters more than any show.

GATHA 4424 Renunciation

Renunciation, company shapes you

मराठी मूळ

आपुलिया ऐसें करी । संग धरी ज्याचा हो ॥1 ॥
ह्मणउनि परपरते । वरवरते पळतसें ॥ध्रु.॥
लोभिक तें लोभा लावी। बांधल्या गोवी वांचूनि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नामगोठी । पुरे भेटी तुझी देवा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Whoever you keep company with makes you like himself. That is why I flee from the worldly and the superficial.

The greedy one infects others with greed. He traps all who are caught in his net.

Says Tuka, let our conversation be of the Name alone. Your meeting, O God, is enough for me.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whoever you keep company with makes you into himself. That is why I flee from the worldly and the shallow, keeping well away. The greedy man fastens his greed onto others; he ties up everyone caught in his net. Tuka says: let our talk be of the Name alone. Your meeting, O God, is enough for me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why he keeps his distance from certain company. Whoever you sit with remakes you in his own likeness, so company is not a small matter; it is a kind of fate. That is why he runs from the worldly and the superficial, staying at the edges. He gives the clearest case: a greedy man passes his greed to those around him, binding them in his own net. So he sets the one company he wants, talk of the Name, and the one meeting that satisfies him completely, the meeting with God.

GATHA 4425 Worldly Life

Worldly life, the two-faced world

मराठी मूळ

बरें जालीयाचे अवघें सांगाती । वाइटाचे अंतीं कोणी नाहीं ॥1॥
नोहे मातापिता नोहे कांतासुत । इतरांची मात काय सांगों ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जन दुतोंडी सावज । सांपडे सहज तिकडे धरी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When times are good, everyone is your companion. When things go wrong, no one remains.

Neither mother nor father, neither spouse nor child stands by you. What can be said of others? Says Tuka, the world is a two-faced beast; it seizes whatever prey falls easiest to hand.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When things go well, everyone is your companion. When things go wrong, at the end no one is there. Not mother, not father, not wife, not son. What is there to say of the rest? Tuka says: the world is a two-faced beast; it seizes whatever prey falls easiest to hand.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is stripping the comfort out of human company so you will look elsewhere for refuge. In good times the companions crowd around; the moment trouble comes, they are gone. He names the closest ties to make the point sting: even mother, father, wife, and child do not finally stand by you, so the rest matter even less. The closing image is hard: the world is a two-faced animal that simply takes whatever victim is nearest and easiest. The unspoken turn is that only God is the companion who does not desert, which is why such company cannot be trusted with your soul.

GATHA 4426 Prayers

Helplessness, surrender at the feet

मराठी मूळ

मिथ्या आहे सर्व अवघें हें मायिक । न कळे विवेक मज कांहीं ॥1॥
सर्व बाजागिरी वाटती ही खरी । पहातां येथें उरी कांहीं नाहीं ॥ध्रु.॥
आतां मज दुःख वाटतें अंतरीं । उपाय झडकरी सांग कांहीं ॥2॥
पुढें कोण गति न कळे सर्वथा । तुझे पायीं माथा ठेवियेला ॥3॥
करणें तें करीं सुखें आतां हरी । तुज म्यां निर्धारीं धरियेलें ॥4॥
स्वहित तें काय न कळे सर्वथा । तारीं तूं अनंता तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All of this is false, all of it illusory. I do not understand any discrimination.

All the tricks of the world seem real, yet upon examination, nothing remains. Now my chitta is heavy with sorrow.

Tell me some swift remedy. I cannot foresee what lies ahead.

I have placed my head at Your feet. Do with me as You will, O Hari.

I have firmly chosen You. Says Tuka, I do not know what is truly good for me. Save me, O Ananta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All of this is false. All of it is illusion. I do not understand any discernment. The tricks of the world all seem real to me, yet when I look closely, nothing remains here. Now sorrow weighs in my heart. Tell me some swift remedy. I cannot see at all what lies ahead. I have laid my head at Your feet. Do whatever You must do, gladly now, O Hari. I have firmly taken hold of You. Tuka says: I do not know at all what is good for me. You save me, O Ananta.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram admits he has lost the ability to tell the real from the false. The world's tricks look solid, yet they dissolve under any honest look, and that leaves him heavy with sorrow and blind to what comes next. So he stops trying to manage his own rescue: he puts his head at God's feet and tells Hari to do whatever needs doing. The confession is the point. He does not even know what is good for him, so he hands that knowing over too, and asks Ananta simply to save him.

GATHA 4427 Autobiography

Defiance, lion to the wicked

मराठी मूळ

अवघ्या कोल्हएांचें वर्म अंडीं । धरितां तोंडीं खीळ पडे ॥1॥
भुंकुं नका भुंकुं नका । आला तुका विष्णुदास ॥ध्रु.॥
कवणे ठायीं सादर व्हावें । नाहीं ठावें गाढवा ॥2॥
दुर्जनासि पंचानन । तुका रजरेणु संतांचा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The secret weakness of all jackals lies in their litters. Seize that, and they are silenced.

Stop barking, stop barking. Tuka, the servant of Vishnu, has arrived.

A donkey does not know when to show respect. Says Tuka, I am a lion to the wicked, and a grain of dust at the feet of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The weak spot of all the jackals is in their litter. Take hold of that, and a peg drops into their mouths and silences them. Stop barking, stop barking. Tuka, the servant of Vishnu, has come. Where should you bow with respect? A donkey does not know. Tuka says: to the wicked I am a lion; to the saints I am the dust at their feet.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers his attackers with a barnyard image: jackals can be silenced if you seize what they are most attached to. He calls his critics barking dogs and tells them to stop, because the servant of Vishnu has arrived and will not be cowed. The donkey that does not know when to show respect is the pattern he names: a heart so coarse it cannot recognize what is holy. He sets his own two faces against each other. Toward arrogant wickedness he is a lion; toward the saints he is willing to be nothing, mere dust at their feet.

GATHA 4428 Longing and Separation

Longing, no lack at God's feet

मराठी मूळ

तुझे ह्मणों आह्मां । मग उणें पुरुषोत्तमा ॥1॥
ऐसा धर्म काय । अमृतानें मृत्यु होय ॥ध्रु.॥
कल्पवृक्षा तळीं । गांठी बांधलिया झोळी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे परीस । सांपडल्या उपवास॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If we call ourselves Yours, O Supreme Being, should there then be any lack? What kind of justice is it that ambrosia should bring death? Sitting beneath the wish-fulfilling tree, one ties a knot in an empty bag. Says Tuka, having found the philosopher's stone, one should not go hungry.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If we call ourselves Yours, O Purushottama, should there still be any lack? What kind of law is this, that nectar should bring death? Sitting under the wish-granting tree, a man ties up his empty bag with a knot. Tuka says: having found the philosopher's stone, he goes on fasting.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram presses God with a complaint shaped as a question. If they truly belong to the Supreme Being, then any want they still feel is a kind of contradiction, like the nectar of immortality somehow dealing out death. He sharpens it with two images of self-defeat: a man sits beneath the tree that grants every wish, yet ties his bag shut as if afraid to receive; a man holds the stone that turns iron to gold, yet stays hungry. The fault he names is not God's stinginess but the devotee's failure to draw on a nearness that is already given.

GATHA 4429 Longing and Separation

Longing, the form not the void

मराठी मूळ

कोरडिया गोष्टी नावडती मना । नाहीं ब्रह्मज्ञानाविण चाड ॥1॥
दाखवीं आपुलें सगुण रूपडें । वंदीन मी कोडें पाय तुझे ॥ध्रु.॥
न लगे तो मोक्ष मज सायुज्यता । नावडे हे वार्ता शून्याकारी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे चाड धरीन श्रीमुखें । येशिल कवतुकें जवळीक ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Dry, empty talk does not please the mind. Without the direct knowledge of Brahman, I have no interest.

Show me Your form in its fullness; I will bow at Your feet with delight. I do not want mere liberation or formless union.

The talk of the void does not appeal to me. Says Tuka, I will be satisfied only when You come near me with playful affection, and I behold Your face.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Dry talk does not please my mind. Without the knowledge of Brahman I have no desire. Show me Your form with all its qualities; I will gladly bow at Your feet. I do not want that liberation, that merging into You. I do not like this talk of the void. Tuka says: I will keep my longing for Your blessed face. You will come near me in play.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses dry doctrine and the bare abstractions that promise union by erasing the lover. He asks instead for the saguna form, the Lord with shape and qualities, so that he can bow and behold a face. The radical turn is that he sets aside even moksha and sayujya, absorption into God, which most seekers treat as the highest prize. Talk of the void leaves him cold because it dissolves the very relationship he wants. He holds out for the personal: the blessed face, the God who comes near in playful affection rather than swallowing the devotee into formlessness.

GATHA 4430 Devotion to Vitthal

Adoration, beyond the gods' reach

मराठी मूळ

गणेश सारजा करिती गायना । आणि देवांगना रंभे ऐशा ॥1॥
तेथें आह्मीं मानवांहीं विनवावें तें काय । सुरवर पाय वंदिति जेथें ॥ध्रु.॥
ज्याच्या गायनासी तटस्थ शंकर । त्या हि परि पार न कळे तुझा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे आह्मी किंकर ते किती । इंद्राची हि मति नागविशी ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Ganesha and Saraswati sing before Him, along with divine maidens like Rambha. What can we mere mortals offer there, where the gods themselves bow at His feet? Even Shankara, who stands entranced by such singing, cannot fathom Your depths.

Says Tuka, we are the humblest of servants. You bewilder even the intellect of Indra.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Ganesha and Saraswati sing before Him, and divine women like Rambha as well. There, where the gods themselves bow at His feet, what is there for us mortals to offer? Even Shankara stands still, lost in that singing, and still he cannot find Your far shore. Tuka says: how small are we, His servants. You confound even the mind of Indra.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram measures God's greatness by who fails to reach it. The high gods sing in His presence and bow at His feet; Shiva himself is frozen in wonder by that music and still cannot fathom the depth. If the foremost beings cannot find God's limit, the poet asks what a mere mortal servant could possibly add. The closing line lands it: even Indra, king of the gods, has his intellect baffled. The smallness Tukaram claims is not despair but the proper posture before a One that overflows every measure the cosmos can bring.

GATHA 4431 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, becoming what he beholds

मराठी मूळ

डोळयांचें दैव आजि उभें ठेलें । निधान देखिलें पंढरीये ॥1॥
काय ते वानावें वाचेचे पालवें । वेदा न बोलवे रूप ज्याचें ॥ध्रु.॥
आनंदाच्या रसें ओंतीव चांगलें । देखतां रंगलें चित्त माझें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मी तों सगळाच विरालों । विठ्ठल चि जालों दर्शनानें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fortune of my eyes has today stood before me. I have beheld the treasure of Pandhari.

How can the tongue describe it, when even the Vedas cannot speak of that form? Cast in the mold of bliss, that beautiful form captured my chitta the moment I saw it. Says Tuka, I have been utterly dissolved. Through that darshan, I myself have become Vitthal.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Today the fortune of my eyes has stood before me. I have seen the treasure at Pandhari. How can the tongue praise it, when even the Vedas cannot speak of that form? It is poured out of the very juice of bliss, so beautiful; seeing it, my mind was steeped in its color. Tuka says: I have wholly melted away. By that darshan I have myself become Vitthal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the moment of sight at Pandharpur as good fortune made visible, the treasure his eyes were always meant to see. The form is past speech, beyond even the Vedas, because it is cast from bliss itself, and his mind is soaked through with it like cloth in dye. Then comes the boldest claim: he does not merely admire Vitthal, he dissolves. In true darshan the seer is consumed into the seen, so that he can say he has himself become Vitthal. It is the language of nondual union spoken from inside love, not theory.

GATHA 4432 Krishna Leela

Krishna's deeds, wonder past the Vedas

मराठी मूळ

भोगियेल्या नारी । परि तो बाळब्रह्मचारी ॥1॥
ऐसी ज्याचें अंगीं कळा । पार न कळे वेदाला ॥ध्रु.॥
वळीवळी थोरथोर। मोडोनियां केले चूर ॥2॥
वांकडी कुबज्या । सरसी आणियेली वोजा ॥3॥
मल्ल रगडिला पायीं । गज झुगारिला बाहीं ॥4॥
जिवें मारियेला मामा । धांवें भक्ताचिया कामा ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे पूर्ण । दावी भक्तीचीं विंदानें ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He consorted with women, yet He remained an eternal celibate. Such is the art within Him; even the Vedas cannot fathom its extent.

He defeated mighty wrestlers one after another, crushing them to pieces. He straightened the hunchbacked Kubja and made her beautiful.

He trampled the great wrestler beneath His feet and flung the elephant aside with His arms. He killed His own uncle Kamsa, always rushing to fulfill His devotees' needs.

Says Tuka, the One who is complete reveals the wonders of devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He took His pleasure with women, yet He stayed an unbroken celibate. Such is the power in Him that even the Vedas cannot find its limit. One after another He broke the mighty ones and ground them to dust. He took the crooked, hunchbacked Kubja and made her straight and lovely. He crushed the wrestler under His feet and flung the elephant aside with His arm. He killed His own uncle, and He runs to do His devotees' work. Tuka says: the One who is full reveals the wonders of devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram piles up Krishna's deeds to show a power that holds opposites together. He moves among women yet remains the eternal celibate, a paradox the Vedas cannot resolve. He overpowers wrestlers and elephants, straightens the bent Kubja, and slays the tyrant uncle Kamsa, and in the same breath He comes running to do small things for His devotees. The point is not a list of feats but the kind of being who performs them: complete in Himself, owing nothing, He still bends to serve those who love Him. That stooping is the real wonder the deeds are meant to reveal.

GATHA 4433 Appeals and Exhortations

Old age, remember Hari now

मराठी मूळ

वृद्धपणीं आली जरा । शरीर कांपे थरथरा ॥1॥
आयुष्य गेलें हें कळेना । स्मरा वेगीं पंढरिराणा ॥ध्रु.॥
दांत दाढा पडिल्या ओस । हनुवटि भेटे नाकास ॥2॥
हात पाय राहिलें कान। नेत्रा पाझर हाले मान ॥3॥
अंगकांति परतली । चिरगुटा ऐसी जाली ॥4॥
आड पडे जिव्हा लोटे । शब्द नये मुखा वाटे॥5॥
लांब लोंबताती अंड । भरभरा वाजे गांड ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां तरी । स्मरा वेगीं हरी हरी ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In old age, the body trembles and shakes. You do not realize that your lifespan has gone.

Remember the Lord of Pandhari quickly. Teeth and molars have fallen out; the chin now meets the nose.

Hands and feet have weakened, ears have failed; the eyes water and the head shakes. The complexion has faded, the skin hangs in folds like old cloth.

The tongue gets stuck and lolls about; words will not come from the mouth as they should. Says Tuka, at least now, at least now, remember Hari quickly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Old age has come, and the body shakes and trembles. You do not see that your life is gone. Remember the Lord of Pandhari quickly. The teeth and molars have fallen and left the gums bare; the chin meets the nose. The hands, the feet, the ears have stopped; the eyes run, the head wobbles. The skin's glow has turned; it has become like an old rag. The tongue gets caught and lolls; the words will not come out of the mouth. The testicles hang long and loose; the backside breaks wind in bursts. Tuka says: at least now, remember Hari, Hari, quickly.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses to let old age be dignified or hidden. He lists the body's collapse without flinching, the lost teeth, the running eyes, the slack skin, the failing control of the body's lowest functions, precisely so the reader cannot look away. The unsparing catalogue is not mockery of the old; it is a mirror held up to every body, since this is where each one is headed. The shaking hand is also the hand that did nothing while life slipped past. So the refrain hammers in: while the mouth can still form a word, remember Hari, because the time to begin is shrinking with each named decay.

GATHA 4434 Appeals and Exhortations

Old age, remember now and be freed

मराठी मूळ

वृद्धपणी न पुसे कोणी । विटंबणी देहाची ॥1॥
नव द्वारें जाली मोकळीक । गांड सरली वाजती ॥ध्रु.॥
दंत दाढा गळे थुंका । लागे नाका हनुवटी ॥2॥
शब्द नये मुखावाटा । करिती चेष्टा पोरें ती ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे अजूनि तरी । स्मरें श्रीहरी सोडवील ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In old age, no one inquires about you. The body is humiliated.

The nine doors of the body have become loose and uncontrolled. Teeth and gums drip saliva; the chin touches the nose.

Words will not come from the mouth; children mock and tease you. Says Tuka, at least now remember Shri Hari; He will set you free.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In old age no one asks after you. The body is put to shame. The nine doors have gone loose; the backside has lost its hold and sounds. The teeth and molars are gone, the spit drips, the chin meets the nose. The words will not come out of the mouth; the children make sport of you. Tuka says: even now, remember Shri Hari, and He will set you free.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram returns to the indignities of age, the body that no one tends, the nine openings that no longer obey, the dribbling mouth, the children who jeer. He names these things plainly so the comfortable will feel how thin their dignity is. The harshness is aimed at complacency, not at the elderly, who are simply showing what awaits all. Against this slow humiliation he sets one door still open: remembrance of Shri Hari, available even now, late as it is. That remembrance is the one thing that loosens the deeper bondage the failing body only makes visible.

GATHA 4435 The Moral Ideal

Moral warning, hospitality and rage

मराठी मूळ

अतित्याई देतां जीव । नये कींव देवासि ॥1॥
थोडएासाटीं राग आला । जीव दिला गंगेंत ॥ध्रु.॥
त्यासि परलोकीं नाहीं मुक्ति । अधोगति चुकेना ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कृष्णराम । स्मरतां श्रम वारती ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When a guest arrives and you give grudgingly, God takes no pity on you. For a small matter you flew into a rage and threw your life away in the river.

For such a person there is no liberation in the next world; the downward path cannot be avoided. Says Tuka, by remembering Krishna and Rama, all sorrows are removed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When a guest comes and you give grudgingly, no pity for you stirs in God. Over a small thing anger rose, and he threw his life away in the river. For such a one there is no release in the world beyond; the downward path is not escaped. Tuka says: by remembering Krishna and Rama, the toil is taken away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets two failures side by side. To feed a guest with a closed hand forfeits God's compassion, because grudging giving is no giving at all. To throw one's life away in a fit of rage over some small matter is worse, and it does not buy release; the soul that ends so falls, not rises. He is naming the patterns of stinginess and unchecked anger, not condemning a particular person, and the warning turns each reader back on his own heart. Then he offers the way out he always offers: the steady remembrance of Krishna and Rama, which lifts the very weariness these faults create.

GATHA 4436 Ecstasy and Joy

Ecstasy, joy at the sight

मराठी मूळ

तुझें रूप पाहतां देवा । सुख जालें माझ्या जीवा॥1॥
हें तों वाचे बोलवेना । काय सांगों नारायणा ॥ध्रु.॥
जन्मोजन्मींचे सुकृत । तुझे पायीं रमे चित्त ॥2॥
जरी योगाचा अभ्यास । तेव्हां तुझा निजध्यास ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे भक्त । गोड गाऊं हरिचें गीत॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing Your form, O God, joy has filled my jiva. This cannot be expressed in words.

What can I tell You, O Narayana? Through the merit of many births, my mind delights at Your feet. When the practice of yoga was undertaken, it became the constant contemplation of You.

Says Tuka, let us devotees sweetly sing the song of Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seeing Your form, O God, joy has come to my life. This cannot be spoken by the tongue. What can I tell, O Narayana? By the good deeds of birth after birth, my mind delights at Your feet. If there was any practice of yoga, it was this: the constant inward thought of You. Tuka says: we devotees will sweetly sing the song of Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram traces a clear line from sight to surrender. Beholding God's form fills his very life with a joy too large for speech. He reads his arrival at this moment as the ripening of merit gathered across many lifetimes, so that his mind now rests gladly at God's feet. Then he quietly redefines yoga: not a technique he mastered, but the single unbroken remembrance of God that became his whole practice. The poem ends not in solitary rapture but in company, devotees together turning the joy into song, which is for Tukaram the natural form that such gladness takes.

GATHA 4437 Prayers

Surrender, guard my honor

मराठी मूळ

तुजवीण मज कोण आहे देवा । मुकुंदा केशवा नारायणा ॥1॥
जोडोनियां कर कृपेच्या सागरा । गोपीमनोहरा पांडुरंगा ॥ध्रु.॥
साच करीं हरी आपुली ि◌ब्रदावळी । कृपेनें सांभाळीं मायबापा ॥2॥
साहए होसी जरी जाती सहा वैरी । मग ध्यान करीं आवडीनें ॥3॥
सर्व अपराध क्षमा करीं माझा । लडिवाळ तुझा पांडुरंगा ॥4॥
कृपा करोनियां द्यावी क्षमा शांति । तेणें तुझी भक्ति घडेल देवा ॥5॥
ऐसें तों सामर्थ्य नाहीं नारायणा । जरी तुज करुणा येइल कांहीं ॥6॥
तुका ह्मणे आतां आपंगावें मज । राखें माझी लाज पांडुरंगा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who do I have besides You, O God? O Mukunda, Keshava, Narayana. With folded hands I pray to You, O ocean of grace, O enchanter of the gopis, O Panduranga.

Make Your pledges come true, O Hari. Protect me with Your grace, O my parent.

If You come to my aid, the six inner enemies will depart. Then I will meditate on You with love.

Forgive all my offenses, O Panduranga. I am Your spoiled child.

Grant me mercy, forbearance, and peace, so that devotion to You may truly blossom, O God. Such strength is not in me, O Narayana.

Only if some compassion stirs in You can it come to be. Says Tuka, embrace me now. Guard my honor, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Whom do I have but You, O God? O Mukunda, Keshava, Narayana. With folded hands I pray to You, ocean of grace, charmer of the gopis, O Panduranga. Make Your promise true, O Hari; protect me with Your grace, O mother and father. If You become my help, the six enemies will leave; then I will meditate on You with love. Forgive all my faults, O Panduranga. I am Your spoiled child. Give me, in mercy, forgiveness and peace, so that devotion to You may take shape, O God. I have no such strength, O Narayana, unless some compassion stirs in You. Tuka says: now take me up. Guard my honor, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram prays from a place of having no one else to turn to, calling on God by name after name as ocean of grace and as both mother and father. He asks God to keep His own pledge to protect those who are His, since that promise, not the devotee's worth, is what he leans on. He is honest about the order of things: only when God helps do the six inner enemies, the passions, lose their grip, and only then can he meditate in peace. He calls himself a spoiled child to be forgiven, and admits he has no strength of his own; everything waits on God's compassion stirring first. The last plea, guard my honor, places his whole standing in God's hands.

GATHA 4438 The Power of the Name

The Name at death, only blessing

मराठी मूळ

नको विद्या वयसा आयुष्य फारसें । नाहीं मज पिसें मुक्तीचें ही ॥1॥
रामकृष्ण ह्मणतां जावो माझा प्राण । हें चि कृपादान मागतसें ॥ध्रु.॥
नको धन मान न वाढे संतान । मुखीं नारायण प्राण जावा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे दीन काकुलती येतों । तुज निरवितों पांडुरंगा ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I do not want learning, youth, or a long life. I have no craving even for liberation.

Let my life depart while uttering the names Rama and Krishna. This is the only blessing I seek.

I do not want wealth or prestige or a growing family. Let Narayana be on my lips when my breath leaves.

Says Tuka, I am helpless and I plead with You. I entrust myself to You, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I do not want learning. I do not want youth. I do not want a long life. I have no craving even for liberation. Let my breath leave while I am saying the names Rama and Krishna. This alone is the blessing I beg for. I do not want wealth. I do not want honor. I do not want a growing family. Let Narayana be on my lips when my breath goes. Tuka says: I am helpless and I come pleading. I hand myself over to You, Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away every prize a person could ask for, low and high alike: learning, youth, long life, wealth, honor, children, and even liberation itself. He sets one wish above all of them, that the names Rama and Krishna, Narayana, be in his mouth at the moment his breath leaves. That is the single blessing he asks for. The poem ends in surrender, not in bargaining: he calls himself helpless and entrusts his whole self to Panduranga, leaving the dying breath in God's hands.

GATHA 4439 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the false guru

मराठी मूळ

शिष्या सांगे उपदेश । गुरुपूजा हे विशेष ॥1॥
दावी आचार सोवळे । दंड कमंडलु माळे ॥ध्रु.॥
छाटी भगवी मानसीं ।व्यर्थ ह्मणवी संन्यासी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लोभ । न सुटे नाहीं लाभ ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He gives his disciples teachings and demands elaborate worship of the guru. He displays his ritual purity, his staff, water-pot, and prayer beads.

He wears the saffron robes and pretends to be a renunciant, but it is all empty show. Says Tuka, as long as greed does not leave, there is no true gain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He gives teachings to his disciples. He demands special worship of the guru. He shows off his ritual purity, his staff, his water-pot, his beads. He wears the saffron robe and calls himself a renunciant. It is all empty. Tuka says: while greed has not left, there is no gain.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes a man who has all the marks of a holy teacher and none of the substance. He teaches, demands honor as a guru, and displays the staff, water-pot, beads, and saffron robe that signal renunciation. The poem names the rot at the center: he still has not let go of greed, so the renunciation is only costume. The test is not the outward gear but whether grasping has actually loosened; where it has not, there is no real gain, however convincing the show. The warning is worth turning on oneself, since the same props can dress up the same hidden greed in anyone.

GATHA 4440 The Necessity of Experience

God seen everywhere

मराठी मूळ

जिकडे पाहें तिकडे उभा । अवघ्या गगनाचा गाभा॥ 1 ॥
डोळां बैसलें बैसलें । रूप राहोनि संचलें ॥ध्रु.॥
न वजिनतां दाही दिशा । जिकडे पाहें तिकडे सरिसा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे समपदीं । उभा दिठीचिये आधीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Wherever I look, He stands. He is the very essence of the entire sky.

He has settled into my eyes and remains there, pervading all. Without excluding any of the ten directions, He is equally present wherever I gaze.

Says Tuka, He stands at the level of perfect equality, right before my sight.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Wherever I look, He is standing. He is the very core of the whole sky. He has settled into my eyes and stays there, filling everything. He leaves out none of the ten directions; wherever I look, He is right there with me. Tuka says: He stands in perfect evenness, there before my sight even begins.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is reporting what he sees once vision has changed. He does not find God in one place but standing everywhere he turns, the inner essence of the entire sky, leaving out none of the ten directions. He says God has lodged in his very eyes, so the seeing and the seen are no longer separate. The last line presses this further: God stands in perfect evenness, present before the act of looking even starts, which means He is not an object the gaze finds but is already there ahead of it.

GATHA 4441 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, worth borrowed from another

मराठी मूळ

आपटा संवदड रानचारा । दस†याचा होय तुरा॥1॥
तैसा देवामुळें मान । नाहीं तरी पुसें कोण ॥ध्रु.॥
मृत्तकेची ते घागरी । पाण्यासाटीं बैसे शिरी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माप जाण । दाण्यासवें घेणें देणें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The apta tree is just a wild shrub, but on Dussehra day it becomes a crown of honor. Just so, one gains respect through God's grace; without Him, who would care? An earthen pot is just clay, yet for the sake of water it is placed upon one's head.

Says Tuka, a measuring vessel is valued only because of the grain it holds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The apta is only a wild shrub of the forest. On Dussehra it becomes a crown of honor. So it is with honor that comes from God: without Him, who would ask after you? The pot is only baked clay. For the sake of the water it carries, it is set upon the head. Tuka says: know this, the measuring vessel matters only for the grain it holds.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram gives three plain images to make one point: a thing's honor is borrowed, not its own. The apta is just a roadside shrub, prized only because the festival of Dussehra makes its leaves a crown for a day. A clay pot is carried on the head only because of the water inside it, and a measuring vessel is valued only for the grain that passes through it. In each case the worth belongs to what is held or given, not to the container. So with a person: any respect we enjoy is on loan from God, and without Him no one would bother to ask after us, which is a quiet rebuke to pride in standing we did not author.

GATHA 4442 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, time well spent in the Name

मराठी मूळ

काळ सार्थक केला त्यांणी । धरिला मनीं विठ्ठल॥1॥
नाम वाचे श्रवण कीर्त्त । पाउलें चित्तीं समान ॥ध्रु.॥
कीर्त्तनाचा समारंभ । निदपभ सर्वदा ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्वरूपसिद्ध । नित्य समाधि हरिनामीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They have made good use of their time who have held Vitthal in their chitta. The Name is on their lips, glory fills their ears, and His feet rest steadily in their minds.

They conduct kirtan ceaselessly and without blemish, at all times. Says Tuka, the realization of the true Self, the unbroken samadhi, is found in Hari's Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They have made their time worth something who have held Vitthal in the heart. The Name is on their lips, His glory in their ears, His feet steady in their minds. They keep up kirtan always, without blemish, at every hour. Tuka says: the realization of the true Self, the unbroken samadhi, is in the Name of Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers what it means to have lived a life well: not by any worldly measure, but by having kept Vitthal fixed in the heart. He sketches a life saturated with the Name, on the lips, His glory in the ears, His feet steady in the mind, with kirtan going on without break or blemish. Then he makes the large claim plain: the goal that others seek by hard discipline, realization of the true Self and unbroken samadhi, is found right here, inside Hari's Name. The Name is not a beginner's step toward the depth; it is the depth.

GATHA 4443 Autobiography

Farewell, Tuka departs for Vaikuntha

मराठी मूळ

आह्मी जातों आपुल्या गांवा । आमुचा रामराम घ्यावा ॥1॥
तुमची आमची हे चि भेटी । येथुनियां जन्मतुटी॥ध्रु.॥
आतां असों द्यावी दया । तुमच्या लागतसें पायां ॥2॥
येतां निजधामीं कोणी । विठ्ठलविठ्ठल बोला वाणी ॥3॥
रामकृष्ण मुखीं बोला । तुका जातो वैकुंठाला ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am going to my own village. Accept my farewell greetings.

This meeting of ours is the last; from here, the cycle of birth is broken. Now please bestow your kindness.

I touch your feet. When I arrive at my true home, let the words 'Vitthal, Vitthal' be on every tongue.

Speak Rama Krishna with your mouths. Tuka is going to Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am going to my own village. Take my farewell greeting. This meeting of ours is the last; from here the round of births is cut. Now show me your kindness. I touch your feet. When I reach my true home, let the words Vitthal, Vitthal be on every tongue. Say Rama Krishna with your mouths. Tuka is going to Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as one leaving, calling death a journey back to his own village and his true home. He tells those around him that this is their last meeting, because for him the cycle of birth and death is now broken; he is not coming back. He asks one thing of them in parting: keep the Name going, Vitthal, Vitthal and Rama Krishna on their tongues, after he is gone. The poem turns the terror of dying into a homecoming and hands the survivors not grief to nurse but the Name to carry on.

GATHA 4444 Longing and Separation

Longing, the calf that cannot feed

मराठी मूळ

कामधेनूचें वासरूं । खाया न मिळे काय करूं ॥1॥
ऐसें आह्मां मांडियेलें । विठो त्वां कां सांडियेलें ॥ध्रु.॥
बैसोनि कल्पद्रुमातळीं । पोटासाटीं तळमळीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे नारायणा । बरें लोकीं हें दीसेना ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I am the calf of the wish-fulfilling cow, yet I cannot find anything to eat. O Vittho, why have You set things up this way and then abandoned me? Sitting beneath the wish-fulfilling tree, I agonize over my hunger.

Says Tuka, O Narayana, this does not look good to the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I am the calf of the wish-granting cow, and still I find nothing to eat. What am I to do? This is what has been set up for me. Vittho, why have You thrown me aside? I sit at the foot of the wish-granting tree and writhe over an empty stomach. Tuka says: Narayana, this does not look good in front of people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes his complaint sharp by setting hunger right next to abundance. He is the calf of the cow that grants every wish, sitting under the tree that gives whatever is asked, and yet he starves; the very source of plenty is at hand and he is left out. He puts the contradiction to God as a blunt question: why set things up this way and then abandon me? The closing line is half plea, half dare, that God's own reputation is at stake, since it looks bad before the world for the wish-granting Lord to let His own devotee go hungry. It is the bold, intimate scolding of one who trusts enough to argue.

GATHA 4445 The Power of the Name

The Name, refuge of the fallen

मराठी मूळ

तुझें नाम माझे मुखी असो देवा । विनवितों राघवा दास तुझा ॥1॥
तुझ्या नामबळें तरले पतित । ह्मणोनि माझें चित्त तुझे पायीं ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे तुझें नाम हें सादर । गातां निरंतर सुख वाटे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

May Your Name ever be on my lips, O God. I beseech You, O Raghava; I am Your servant.

By the power of Your Name, wrongdoers have been delivered. Therefore my chitta rests at Your feet.

Says Tuka, singing Your Name continuously brings me such joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let Your Name be always on my lips, God. I beg You, Raghava; I am Your servant. By the power of Your Name the fallen have been carried across. So my heart rests at Your feet. Tuka says: when I sing Your Name without stopping, joy keeps rising in me.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram asks for one steady gift: that God's Name never leave his mouth. He grounds the request in what the Name has already done, that even the fallen and the wrongdoing have been ferried across by its power, and that is exactly why he trusts it and lays his heart at God's feet. The Name is offered here as the refuge that does not check your record first. The poem closes on the felt result: singing it without break brings a joy that does not run dry, so the practice is its own reward, not only a means to rescue.

GATHA 4446 Worldly Life

Worldly life, ties without warmth

मराठी मूळ

उभय भाग्यवंत तरी च समान । स्थळीं समाधान तरी च राहे ॥1॥
युक्तीचें गौरव नसतां जिव्हाळा । सांचवणी जळा परी नाश ॥ध्रु.॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघे विनोदाचे ठाव । एकात्मक भाव नाहीं तेथें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Both parties must be fortunate for true harmony to prevail; contentment endures only when there is genuine affection. Without real warmth behind the formal courtesies, the bond is like stored water that eventually spoils.

Says Tuka, all such places are for amusement only. True unity of spirit is absent there.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Both sides must be fortunate for things to be equal. Only then does contentment stay in a place. Without the warmth behind the polite respect, it is like stored-up water: it spoils in the end. Tuka says: all such places are only for amusement. There is no real oneness of heart there.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at the bonds that hold worldly relationships together and weighs what makes them last. Outward courtesy is not enough; without real affection behind the polite respect, a tie is like water kept too long, it goes stagnant and turns bad. True harmony needs both sides to bring genuine warmth, not just manners. His verdict is cool and clear: gatherings built only on form are for passing pleasure, and the unity of spirit that would make them real is simply not present. The point is not to scorn company but to see honestly how thin a bond without love actually is.

GATHA 4447 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the two-day guest

मराठी मूळ

दो दिवसांचा पाहुणा चालतो उताणा । कां रे नारायणा न भजसी ॥1॥
तूं अखंड दुश्चित्ता तुज नेती अवचिता । मग पंढरीनाथा भजसी केव्हां ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे आहेत उदंड । तया केशव प्रचंड केवीं भेटे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You are a guest of but two days, lying about carelessly. Why do you not worship Narayana? Your mind is forever restless, and death may seize you at any moment.

When then will you worship the Lord of Pandhari? Says Tuka, there are plenty of such people, but how will the mighty Keshava ever meet them?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You are a guest of just two days, lying about as if it were nothing. Why, then, do you not worship Narayana? Your mind never settles, and death may carry you off without warning. So when will you ever worship the Lord of Pandhari? Tuka says: there are crowds of such people. How is the mighty Keshava ever to meet them?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram wakes the listener with a hard fact: this life is a two-day stay, a guest's visit, not a permanent home, and you are spending it sprawled in idle ease. He presses the urgency by joining a restless mind to a sudden death that can come at any moment, which leaves no safe later for the devotion you keep postponing. The closing line widens the rebuke to a whole crowd who live this way and then wonders aloud how the great Keshava could ever come near such distracted, unready hearts. The sting is meant to turn the hearer toward worship now, while there is still time, rather than to write anyone off.

GATHA 4448 Prayers

Prayer, Pandhari and nothing else

मराठी मूळ

तुझे पाय माझें भाळ । एकत्रता सर्वकाळ ॥1॥
हें चिं देई विठाबाई । पांडुरंगे माझे आई ॥ध्रु.॥
नाहीं मोक्ष मुक्ति चाड । तुझी सेवा लागे गोड ॥2॥
सदा संग सज्जनांचा । नको वियोग पंढरीचा ॥3॥
नित्य चंद्रभागे स्नान । करीं क्षेत्रप्रदक्षण॥4॥
पुंडलीक पाहोन दृष्टी । हषॉ नाचों वाळवंटीं ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे पांडुरंगा । तुझें स्वरूप चंद्रभागा ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Let Your feet rest upon my forehead at all times. Grant me this, O Vitthabai, O Panduranga, my Mother.

I have no desire for liberation or heavenly rewards. Your service alone is sweet to me.

May I always have the company of the saints. Let there be no separation from Pandhari.

Let me bathe daily in the Chandrabhaga and circumambulate the sacred precincts. Let me behold Pundalik with my eyes and dance with joy in the sand-bed of Pandhari.

Says Tuka, O Panduranga, the Chandrabhaga itself is Your very form.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let Your feet rest on my forehead at all times. Give me only this, Vithabai, Panduranga, my Mother. I have no longing for liberation or release. Your service alone tastes sweet to me. Let me always have the company of the good. Let there be no separation from Pandhari. Let me bathe each day in the Chandrabhaga and walk around the holy ground. Let me see Pundalik with my own eyes and dance with joy in the sand by the river. Tuka says: Panduranga, the Chandrabhaga itself is Your own form.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lays out a whole life of devotion as a single prayer, addressing Panduranga tenderly as Vithabai and Mother. He refuses the usual goal, liberation, saying God's service alone is sweet to him, and asks instead for the things of Pandhari: the saints' company, the daily bathe in the Chandrabhaga, the walk around the holy precinct, the sight of Pundalik, the dance in the riverside sand. Every wish keeps him at the shrine rather than carrying him beyond it. The last line shows why these are not lesser things: the river Chandrabhaga is God's own form, so to want Pandhari is already to want God, and union is sought in the place itself, not somewhere past it.

GATHA 4449 Worldly Metaphors

Metaphor, the cart that overturns

मराठी मूळ

बाईल चालिली माहेरा । संगें दिधला ह्मातारा ॥1॥
सिधा सामग्री पोटाची । सवें स्वारी बइलाची ॥ध्रु.॥
जाता पाडिली ढोरानें । सिव्या देती अन्योविन्ये ॥2॥
न सावरी आपणातें । नग्न सावलें वरतें ॥3॥
फजित केलें जनलोकीं । मेला ह्मणे पडे नरकीं॥4॥
गोहाची हे गेली लाज । गांजितां कां तुह्मी मज ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे जनीं । छी थू केली विटंबणी ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The wife set off for her mother's home, taking the old husband along. Provisions for the journey and a bullock cart were arranged.

On the way, the bullocks threw them off, and curses flew between them. The old man could not control himself; his clothes fell off, leaving him naked and exposed.

He was humiliated before all the people. He cursed himself, saying he would fall into hell.

All modesty and dignity were lost. 'Why do you torment me so?' he cried.

Says Tuka, shame was heaped upon them before the whole world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The wife set out for her mother's home and took the old man along. Food for the road was packed, and a bullock to ride. On the way the beast threw them down, and they hurled curses at each other. The old man could not steady himself; his clothes came off and he was left bare. He was shamed in front of everyone. He cursed himself and said he would fall into hell. All his modesty was gone. Why do you torment me so, he cried. Tuka says: before the whole world, people spat and jeered at the disgrace.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells a small, brutal story: a journey set out with care, with food packed and a bullock to ride, that ends in the cart overturning, the old man thrown down, stripped bare, and jeered at in public. Like his other tales it works as a parable of worldly ventures, undertakings begun with confidence and provisions that collapse and leave a person exposed and humiliated. The cursing back and forth, the lost dignity, and the cry of why are you tormenting me show how quickly a comfortable plan turns to shame when the supports give way. The point is the fragility of any journey through the world that leans on its own arrangements, and the verse leaves the reader to feel the exposure rather than to mock the man.

GATHA 4450 Social Criticism

Social criticism, birth without devotion

मराठी मूळ

तुळसीवृंदावनीं उपजला कांदा । नावडे गोविंदा कांहीं केल्या ॥1॥
तैसे वंशामध्यें जाले जे मानव । जाणावे दानव अभक्त ते ॥ध्रु.॥
केवडएामधील निगपध कणसें । तैशीं तीं माणसें भक्तिहीन ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जेवीं वंदनांतिल आळी । न चढे निढळीं देवाचिया ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If an onion sprouts in a tulsi garden, Govinda will never accept it, no matter what you do. Just so, those who are born into a good lineage but lack devotion should be known as demons.

Like worthless husks growing amid fine grain, such are the people devoid of devotion. Says Tuka, just as a worm from a sandalwood tree cannot be placed upon the brow of the deity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If an onion sprouts in a tulsi garden, Govinda will not accept it, no matter what you do. So too: those born into a good lineage who have no devotion, know them as demons, the unworthy. Like worthless husks growing among fine grain, such are the people without devotion. Tuka says: it is like a worm from the sandalwood tree; it cannot be set upon the deity's brow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is striking at the idea that good birth alone makes a person holy. He uses things that grow in a holy place yet remain useless: an onion in the tulsi garden, husks among the grain, a worm bred in sandalwood. Each one shares the location and even the soil of something sacred, but cannot be offered to God. The point turns on devotion, not lineage: without bhakti, a high birth is just an onion in the wrong bed. The harshness is aimed at the assumption that pedigree substitutes for love of God, and it asks the listener to check which one he is trusting in.

GATHA 4451 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, surrender to Govinda alone

मराठी मूळ

शिव शक्ति आणि सूर्य गणपति । एक चि ह्मणती विष्णूस ही ॥1॥
हिरा गार दोनी मानिती समान । राजस भजनें वांयां जाती ॥ध्रु.॥
अन्य देवतांसि देव ह्मणऊन । तामस जीवन तमोयोग्या ॥2॥
वांयां जायासाठीं केलासे हव्यास । अन्य देवतांस देवपण ॥3॥
आपुलिया मुखें सांगतसे धणी । नव्हे माझी वाणी पदरींची ॥4॥
धन्य ते वैष्णव भजती केशव । सित्वक हे जीव मोक्षा योग्य ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे मोक्ष नाहीं कोणापासीं । एका गोविंदासी शरण व्हा रे ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who say Shiva, Shakti, Surya, Ganapati, and Vishnu are all the same treat a diamond and a pebble as equal. Their rajasic worship goes to waste.

Those who call other deities equal to God follow the tamasic path, fit only for darkness. All effort spent on elevating other deities to the status of the supreme God is wasted.

The Lord Himself declares this through His own mouth; these are not my own words. Blessed are those Vaishnavas who worship Keshava.

They are sattvic souls, worthy of liberation. Says Tuka, liberation does not reside with any other. Surrender to Govinda alone.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who say Shiva, Shakti, Surya, Ganapati, and Vishnu are all the same treat a diamond and a pebble as equal. Their rajasic worship goes to waste. To call other deities equal to God is the tamasic way, fit only for darkness. All effort spent raising other deities to the highest place is wasted. The Lord says this through his own mouth; these are not my own words. Blessed are the Vaishnavas who worship Keshava. They are sattvic souls, fit for liberation. Tuka says: liberation rests with no other; surrender to Govinda alone.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga makes an exclusive claim and does not soften it. Tukaram says that flattening all deities into one sameness is not large-heartedness but a failure to tell a diamond from a pebble, and such worship bears no fruit. He grades the paths by the three gunas: such leveling is rajasic or tamasic, while devotion to Keshava alone is sattvic and leads to release. To guard against pride, he insists the claim is not his own invention but the Lord's own word. The stakes are liberation itself, which he says is found in surrender to Govinda and nowhere else.

GATHA 4452 The Saints

Saints, the unworthy supplicant

मराठी मूळ

तुह्मी साधु संत कैवल्यसागर । मोक्षाचे आगर तुह्मां घरीं ॥1॥
तेथें मतिमंद काय बोलों वाणी । अमृताचे धणी पाणी कां घ्या ॥ध्रु.॥
कोटी भानु तेजीं खद्योत बापुडें । तैसा तुह्मांपुढें काय बोलों ॥2॥
तुह्मी अवघे चिंतामणि कल्पतरूचीं वनें । त्यापुढें धांवणें मषकांनीं ॥3॥
वाराणशीक्षेत्र गंगा वाहे कोड । का तेथें पाड कोकणाचे ॥4॥
समुद्राची तृषा हरी ऐसा कोण । जगाची जी तान्ह निववितो ॥6॥
मेरूचा पाठार अवघी ते िक्षति । मषकाचे हातीं मुिष्ट फावे ॥7॥
सिंहापुढें काय जंबूक आरोळी । मोतियांचे वोळी कांच काय ॥8॥
कापुरासि काय लावूनि उटावें । काय ओवाळावें दीपकासि ॥9॥
तैशी तुह्मी निरे ज्ञानाचे भरींव । तेथें म्यां बोलावें पाड काय ॥10॥
कृपानिधि तुह्मीं बोलविलें बोला । सुखें न्याय केला तुमचा मीं ॥11॥
अज्ञान मी वेडें ह्मणवितों बाळ । माझा प्रतिपाळ करणें तुह्मां ॥12॥
बोबडें बोलणें न धरावा कोप । क्षमा करा बाप कृपासिंधु ॥13॥
तुका ह्मणे तुह्मी संत बापमाय । भयें धरिले पाय कृपानिधि ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

You saints are the ocean of spiritual freedom, the storehouse of liberation. Before you, what can a dull mind offer in words? Why should the masters of nectar drink mere water? Before the blaze of a billion suns, the firefly is nothing.

What can I say before you? You are all wish-fulfilling gems, forests of wish-fulfilling trees. Before you, what can a fly accomplish by running? You are like the holy field of Varanasi where the Ganga flows in delight.

What significance has the Konkan coast beside that? Who can quench the ocean's own thirst, that which slakes the thirst of the whole world? The plateau of Mount Meru covers the whole earth, yet a gnat can grasp only a fistful. Before a lion, what is the jackal's roar? Beside a string of pearls, what is glass? Should one apply sandalwood paste to camphor? Should one wave a lamp before the sun? You are solid blocks of wisdom; what right have I to speak before you? O treasure of compassion, you have made me speak.

I have gladly served your cause. I am an ignorant child who calls himself small.

It is yours to nourish me. Forgive my babbling; do not be angry.

You saints are my mother and father. Says Tuka, in fear I have grasped your feet, O ocean of mercy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

You saints are the ocean of freedom, the storehouse of liberation. Before you, what can a dull mind say in words? Why should the masters of nectar drink mere water? Before a billion suns, the firefly is nothing; so what can I say before you? You are wish-fulfilling gems, forests of wish-granting trees; what can a fly do by running before you? You are Varanasi where the Ganga flows in joy; what is the Konkan coast beside that? Who can quench the ocean's own thirst, the ocean that slakes the world? Meru covers the whole earth, yet a gnat grasps only a fistful. Before a lion, what is a jackal's howl? Beside a string of pearls, what is glass? Should one rub sandal paste on camphor? Should one wave a lamp before the sun? You are solid blocks of wisdom; what right have I to speak before you? Treasure of mercy, you yourselves have made me speak. I have gladly served your cause. I am an ignorant child who calls himself small. It is yours to nourish me. Forgive my babbling; do not be angry. You saints are my mother and father. Tuka says: in fear I have grasped your feet, ocean of mercy.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a poem of self-abasement before the saints, piling up image after image to measure his own smallness against their greatness. Each comparison sets a tiny thing against a vast one: firefly and suns, gnat and Meru, glass and pearls, a lamp waved at the sun. The point of the cascade is not despair but the right posture of a seeker: he has nothing to offer such people and no standing to instruct them. He even disowns his own speaking, saying the saints themselves have drawn the words out of him. He ends as a frightened child clinging to the feet of those he calls his mother and father, asking only to be forgiven and kept.

GATHA 4453 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, God within the body

मराठी मूळ

देहीं असोनियां देव । वृथा फिरतो निद।व ॥1॥
देव आहे अंतर्यामीं । व्यर्थ हिंडे तीर्थग्रामीं ॥ध्रु.॥
नाभी मृगाचे कस्तुरी। व्यर्थ हिंडे वनांतरीं ॥2॥
साखरेचें मूळ ऊंस । तैसा देहीं देव दिसे॥3॥
दुधीं असतां नवनीत । नेणे तयाचें मथित ॥4॥
तुका सांगे मूढजना । देहीं देव कां पाहाना ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God dwells within the body, yet one wanders about aimlessly and mercilessly. God is present within; yet one roams uselessly among pilgrimage places.

The musk deer carries kasturi in its own navel, yet wanders the forests in vain. Sugar's root lies in the sugarcane; just so, God is visible within the body.

Butter already exists within milk, yet one does not know how to churn it out. Says Tuka, I tell the foolish: why do you not see God within your own body?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God dwells within the body, yet you wander about for nothing. God is in the inmost self, yet you roam uselessly from shrine to shrine. The musk deer carries the musk in its own navel, yet wanders the forest in vain. Sugar's root is the cane; just so, God is to be seen within the body. Butter is already in the milk, but you do not know how to churn it out. Tuka says to the foolish: why do you not see God within your own body?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is correcting the search that runs outward when the thing sought is already inside. He says God lives in the inmost self, so all the wandering to pilgrimage places is misplaced effort. His three images each carry the treasure within and miss it: the musk deer chasing the scent that comes from its own navel, sugar that is already in the cane, butter already hidden in the milk. The fault is not absence but ignorance of how to find what is present, like not knowing how to churn the milk. He ends bluntly, calling the listener foolish and asking why he will not simply look within.

GATHA 4454 The Power of the Name

The Name, the effortless mantra

मराठी मूळ

जयजय ह्मणा राम । हातें टाळी वाचे नाम ॥1॥
आटाआटी नाहीं ज्यास । न वेचे मोल न पडे खांस ॥ध्रु.॥
आपण ह्मणे आणिकां हातीं । यज्ञादिकीं नये ते गति ॥2॥
आसन भोजन करितां काम । ध्यानसमाधि ह्मणतां राम ॥3॥
मंत्र जपा हा चि सार। वर्णा याती जयजयकार ॥4॥
ह्मणतां राम ह्मणे तुका । वेळोवेळां चुकों नका ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Say 'Victory, victory' to Rama. Clap your hands and speak the Name aloud.

There is no strain in this, no cost, no hardship. Say it yourself and help others say it too.

The state attained by this cannot be reached through rituals and sacrifices. Whether sitting, eating, or going about your work, let saying Rama be your meditation and samadhi.

This is the essence of all mantras and chanting, the victorious cry for all castes and communities. Says Tuka, keep saying Rama; do not miss a single opportunity.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Say 'Victory, victory' to Rama. Clap your hands and speak the Name aloud. There is no strain in this, no cost, no hardship. Say it yourself, and put it into the hands of others too. The state this gives cannot be reached by sacrifices and rites. Sitting, eating, working: let saying Rama be your meditation and your samadhi. This is the very essence of all mantras and chanting, the victory cry for every caste and community. Tuka says: keep saying Rama; do not miss it, time after time.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga presses the Name as the easiest and highest practice at once. Tukaram emphasizes that it asks nothing hard: no expense, no strain, only the voice and the clapping hands, so anyone can do it anywhere. He sets it above ritual and sacrifice, saying it reaches a state those cannot, and that repeating Rama through ordinary activity is itself meditation and samadhi. He calls it the essence of all mantras and, pointedly, the cry open to every caste and community, which removes the gatekeeping of ritual. The closing urging is simply not to let any moment slip past unfilled by the Name.

GATHA 4455

Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, the reckoning of Death

मराठी मूळ

शिकवणेसाटीं वाटते तळमळ । पुढें येईल काळा फोडों डोई ॥1॥
तेव्हां त्यासि काय देशील उत्तर । मेळउनि अंतर ठेवितोसि ॥ध्रु.॥
येथींचिया सोंगें भोरपियाचे परि । होईल तें दुरि शृंगारिलें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे कां रे राखिलें खरकटें । रागेल्याचे तंट रागेलें का ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I feel anguish trying to instruct you, for when Death comes and knocks upon your head, what answer will you give? You accumulate dirt within while keeping up appearances like a scarecrow. The adornment of worldly show will be stripped away at that hour.

Says Tuka, why have you clung to these scraps? When the angry one is enraged, it is the angry one who suffers.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I burn with anguish trying to teach you, for Death will come and split your head open. What answer will you give him then? You gather filth inside while keeping up the show. This costume of yours, like a mummer's, will be stripped away when that hour comes, and all your finery falls far off. Tuka says: why have you held on to these scraps? When the angry man rages, it is the angry man himself who suffers.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram speaks as a teacher in genuine pain over a listener who will not learn. He names the stake directly: Death is coming, and at that hour the man will have no answer, because inwardly he has stored up filth while outwardly keeping up appearances. The image of the mummer or scarecrow says the whole performance is a costume that will be torn off, leaving nothing. The scraps he clings to are the small worldly attachments not worth the loss. The closing line turns the warning inward: rage at the rebuke harms only the one who rages, so the listener's resistance is itself the trap.

GATHA 4456 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, handing over good and bad

मराठी मूळ

होई आतां माझ्या भोगाचा भोगिता । सकळ अनंता शुभाशुभ ॥1॥
आठवुनी पाय राहिलों हृदयीं । निवारली तई सकळ चिंता ॥ध्रु.॥
अचळ न चळे देहाचें चळण । आहे हें वळण प्रारब्धें चि ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे जालें एक चि वचन । केलिया कीर्त्तन आराणुक ॥3॥
लेखी दुखण्यासमान । वेचला नारायणीं क्षण ।

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Now, O Ananta, become the one who experiences all my fortunes, good and bad. Remembering Your feet, I have anchored them in my heart.

All worry has thereby been removed. The body's movements are unsteady, but this is the course of destiny.

Says Tuka, having spoken one word at kirtan, all weariness is dispelled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Now, Ananta, become the one who undergoes all my fortunes, the good and the bad alike. Remembering your feet, I have set them in my heart, and so all my worry is gone. The body's movements stay unsteady; this swaying is only the course of destiny. Tuka says: it has come down to one word. Once kirtan is done, all weariness is dispelled.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is an act of handing the whole of one's life over to God. Tukaram asks Ananta to become the very experiencer of his fortunes, both pleasant and painful, so that the weight no longer rests on him. With the Lord's feet held in the heart, his anxiety simply drops away. He distinguishes the self from the body, whose unsteady movements he assigns to prarabdha, the course already set by past action, not to himself. What remains is a single thing: the Name spoken in kirtan, which dissolves all weariness.

GATHA 4457 Appeals and Exhortations

Exhortation, weigh the profit before death

मराठी मूळ

उद्यांचें आजि च मरण । आणोनि ह्मणे हरि भोक्ता ॥1॥
नाहीं कांहीं पडों येत तुटी । जाणें तो आहे सेवटीं ।
लाभ विचारोनि पोटीं। होई सेवटीं जागृत ॥ध्रु.॥
आहे ते उरे कटा । लावुनि चळ आपुला फाटा ।
पुरे हें न पुरे सेवटा । तरण्या बळकटा सदा वास॥2॥
ह्मणोनि मोडावा कांटाळा । अविद्यात्मक कोंवळा ।
होतील प्रबळा । आशा तृष्णा माया ॥3॥
क्षण या देहाच्या अंतीं। जड होउनि राहेल माती ।
परदेश ते परवर होती । चिळसविती नाकडोळे ॥4॥
जंव या नाहीं पातल्या विपित्त । आयुष्य भविष्य आहे हातीं ।
लाभ विचारोनि गुंती । तुका ह्मणे अंतीं सर्व पिसुनें॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Bring the thought of tomorrow's death into today and say that Hari is the one who sustains. There is no loss in this.

Since the end is certain, consider the profit wisely and stay alert at the last hour. What you have, keep it; cut off the trailing tendrils of attachment.

It will not suffice in the end, so hold firmly to the strong vessel of faith. Therefore, cast off the weariness of the ignorant, tender self.

Desire, craving, and illusion will grow powerful if allowed. At the moment of the body's end, it will lie as inert clay.

Those who were near will become strangers, covering nose and eyes in revulsion. While calamity has not yet struck, while the breath of life is still in your hands, weigh the gain and invest wisely.

Says Tuka, in the end, everything is madness.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Bring tomorrow's death into today, and say that Hari is the one who provides. Then nothing is lost. Since the end is certain, weigh the profit in your heart and stay awake at the last. Keep what you truly have; cut away the trailing tendrils of attachment. It will not be enough at the end, so hold fast to the strong vessel of faith that always carries one across. So break the laziness of the ignorant, tender self; or else desire, craving, and illusion will grow strong. At the body's last moment it lies as inert clay. Those who were near become strangers, covering nose and eyes in disgust. While calamity has not yet struck, while breath and future are still in your hands, weigh the gain and invest wisely. Tuka says: in the end, all of it is madness.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram urges a sober accounting done now, while there is still time. He tells the listener to picture death as if it were today, which clarifies what is worth keeping and what is mere attachment to be cut away. The profit to seek is faith in Hari, the strong vessel that carries one across; everything else proves insufficient at the end. He paints the moment of death plainly: the body becomes inert clay and even those who loved you turn away in revulsion, so nothing worldly survives the crossing. The warning is that delay lets desire, craving, and illusion grow strong, and that without this reckoning the whole of a life spent otherwise is madness.

GATHA 4458 Prayers

Prayer, the touchstone and the iron

मराठी मूळ

आसावलें मन जीवनाचें ओढी । नामरूपीं गोडी लावियेली ॥1॥
काय तुझे पायीं नाहीं भांडवल । माझे मिथ्या बोल जाती ऐसे ॥ध्रु.॥
काय लोखंडाचे पाहे गुणदोष । सिवोन परीस सोनें करी ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे माझें अवघें असों द्यावें । आपुलें करावें ब्रीद साच ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

My mind thirsts and is drawn to the water of life. You have made me taste the sweetness of the Name and the divine form.

Are Your feet lacking in some treasure, that my words should prove false? The touchstone does not examine the faults of iron; it simply touches and turns it to gold. Says Tuka, let all my failings remain as they are. Make Your own pledge come true.

IN PLAIN WORDS

My mind thirsts and is drawn to the water of life. You have made me taste the sweetness of the Name and the form. Are your feet short of treasure, that my false words should win out? Does the touchstone weigh the faults of iron? It only touches it and turns it to gold. Tuka says: let all that is mine stay as it is; only make your own pledge come true.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer that rests the whole weight on God's nature rather than the devotee's worth. Tukaram admits his own thirst and his false words, then asks whether God's feet are so poor that such failings could defeat them. His central image is the touchstone, which does not inspect the rusty iron's flaws but simply transforms it into gold by contact. So he asks God not to wait for him to become worthy. He even leaves his own faults untouched, throwing the responsibility back on God: keep your own pledge to save, and let that, not my merit, be what decides.

GATHA 4459 The Saints

Saints, longing for the dust of their feet

मराठी मूळ

पंढरीची वारी जयांचिये घरीं । पायधुळी शिरीं वंदिन त्यांची ॥1॥
दासाचा मी दास पोसणा डोंगर । आतां बहु फार काय बोलों ॥ध्रु.॥
जातीचें मी हीन न कळे भजन । ह्मणोनि संतचरण इच्छीतसें ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे मज ह्मणावें आपुलें । बहुता तारिलें संतजनीं ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the homes of those who make the pilgrimage to Pandhari, I will bow my head to the dust of their feet. I am a servant of servants, sheltered by the mountain of their grace.

What more can I say? I am lowly by birth and know nothing of devotion. Therefore I long for the feet of the saints.

Says Tuka, call me Your own. Many have been saved by the holy ones.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the homes of those who make the Pandhari pilgrimage, I will bow my head to the dust of their feet. I am the servant of servants, sheltered by the mountain of their grace. What more can I say now? I am low by birth and know nothing of devotion, so I long for the feet of the saints. Tuka says: call me your own. The holy ones have saved a great many.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lowers himself entirely before the company of the saints, the people who make the yearly pilgrimage to Pandhari. He wants nothing but to honor the dust of their feet and calls himself the servant of their servants. He names his own disqualifications openly, his low birth and his lack of any skill in devotion, and turns these very lacks into the reason he clings to the saints rather than to his own merit. His one request is to be claimed as their own. The hope behind it is plain: the saints have rescued many already, so their grace, not his worth, is what he counts on.

GATHA 4460 The Power of the Name

The Name, the one true friend

मराठी मूळ

नाम पावन पावन । त्याहून पवित्र आहे कोण ॥1॥
शिव हालाहालें तापला । तो ही नामें शीतळ जाला ॥ध्रु.॥
शिवास नामाचा आधार । केला किळकाळ किंकर ॥2॥
मरण जालें काशीपुरी। तेथें नाम चि उद्धरी ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे अवघीं चोरें। एक हरिनाम सोइरें ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Name is sacred, supremely sacred. Who is holier than the Name? Shiva was scorched by the deadly poison, yet the Name made Him cool.

The Name gave Shiva His power and made Death itself His servant. Even when death occurs at Kashi, it is the Name alone that liberates.

Says Tuka, when all else proves false and treacherous, the Name of Hari is the one true friend.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Name is sacred, supremely sacred. Who is holier than the Name? Shiva was scorched by the deadly poison, yet the Name made him cool. The Name gave Shiva his strength and made Death itself his servant. Even when one dies at Kashi, it is the Name alone that liberates. Tuka says: when all else is a thief, the one Name of Hari is your true kin.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga places the Name above everything, even above the great deities and the great holy places. Tukaram points to Shiva, scorched by the world-poison and cooled only by the Name, to show that the Name is what gives even Shiva his power and his mastery over death. He then names Kashi, the famous place to die for release, and says it is still the Name, not the location, that actually liberates. The closing line sharpens the stakes: everything else, even what we trust to save us, is finally a thief that takes and gives nothing back. The Name of Hari alone stands as true kin.

GATHA 4461 Social Criticism

Social criticism, the proud slanderer of saints

मराठी मूळ

अल्प विद्या परि गर्वशिरोमणि । मजहुनि ज्ञानी कोणी आहे ॥1॥
अंगीं भरे ताठा कोणासी मानीना । साधूची हेळणा स्वयें करी ॥ध्रु.॥
सज्जनाच्या देहीं मानी जो विटाळ । त्रैलोकीं चांडाळ तो चि एक ॥2॥
संतांची जो निंदा करी मुखीं जप। खतेलें तें पाप वज्रलेप ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे ऐसे मावेचे मइंद । त्यांपाशीं गोविंद नाहीं नाहीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He has but little learning, yet he is the crest-jewel of pride, fancying that no one is wiser than he. His body is stiff with arrogance; he respects no one and himself insults the saints.

He who considers a saint's body impure is the vilest wretch in all three worlds. He who slanders the saints while performing rituals with his lips is smeared with sin as hard as diamond.

Says Tuka, such pretenders and imposters are far, far from Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He has little learning, yet he is the crest-jewel of pride, sure that no one is wiser than he. His body is stiff with arrogance; he honors no one and himself mocks the saints. He who holds a good person's body to be impure is the one true outcaste in all three worlds. He who slanders the saints while muttering prayers with his lips piles up sin set hard as diamond. Tuka says: such frauds and imposters, with them there is no Govinda, none at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is exposing a pattern: a little knowledge swollen into towering pride. The man knows almost nothing yet is certain he is the wisest, so stiff with arrogance that he respects no one and turns to mocking the saints. The poem names the worst form of this as treating a holy person's body as polluted, which inverts true purity and makes the proud man himself the real outcaste. Worse still is the hypocrite who slanders the saints with the same mouth that chants prayers, layering on a sin that sets hard as diamond. The warning is that wherever such pretense and contempt for the saints live, God is simply absent; the danger Tukaram is pointing at is the proud, scornful pattern itself, which any of us can fall into.

GATHA 4462 Social Criticism

Social criticism, devotion without mercy

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं संतांशीं शरण । काय वाचोनि पुराण ॥1॥
ह्मणे विठ्ठलाचा दास । देखोनी परनारीस हांसे ॥ध्रु.॥
करिती विठोबाची भक्ति । दयाधर्म नाहीं चित्तीं ॥2॥
तेथें नाहीं माझा देव। व्यर्थ श्रमवी हा जीव ॥3॥
अंगीं नाहीं क्षमा दया । ह्मणती भेट पंढरीराया ॥4॥
नाहीं धर्माची वासना । काय करोनि प्रदिक्षणा॥5॥
ऐसें नव्हे भक्तिवर्म । तेथें नाहीं माझा राम ॥6॥
नये कृपा कांहीं केल्या । नये घाम जीव गेल्या ॥7॥
जैसी खड्गाची धार । विठ्ठलचरणीं तुका शूर ॥8॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without surrendering to the saints, what use is reading the Puranas? He calls himself Vitthal's devotee but leers at other men's wives. They worship Vitthoba outwardly but have no compassion or righteousness in their chitta.

My God does not dwell there; such a one exhausts his jiva for nothing. He has no patience or mercy in him, yet claims to have met the Lord of Pandhari.

Without the desire for dharma, what use are circumambulations? This is not the essence of true devotion; my Rama is not there. Grace will not come to such a one no matter what he does, even if he sweats his life away.

Says Tuka, like the edge of a sword, the path to Vitthal's feet demands a warrior's courage.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If you do not surrender to the saints, what use is reading the Puranas? He calls himself Vitthal's servant, and he leers at other men's wives. They worship Vithoba on the outside, but there is no compassion, no right conduct, in the heart. My God is not there. Such a one wears out his life for nothing. There is no patience in him, no mercy, yet he says he has met the Lord of Pandhari. There is no longing for dharma in him. What use is his walking around the shrine? This is not the truth of devotion; my Rama is not there. No matter what he does, grace will not come; it will not come even if he sweats his life away. Tuka says: like the edge of a sword, the path to Vitthal's feet asks for a warrior's courage.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is testing devotion by its fruit, not its display. He names a man who carries the labels, servant of Vitthal, worshipper of Vithoba, who walks the circuit of the shrine, yet keeps no mercy, no patience, no longing for right living in his heart. To such conduct Tukaram says God simply is not present, and no amount of outward effort or sweat will buy the grace that is missing. The point is turned at the pattern, not at any one person: ritual without compassion is empty. He closes with the cost: this path is a sword's edge, and only courage, the willingness to be inwardly true, can walk it.

GATHA 4463 The Nature of God

Reassurance, the heart's intent is enough

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं रिकामीक परी वाहे मनीं । तया चक्रपाणि साहए होय ॥1॥
उद्वेग जीवासि पंढरीचें ध्यान । तया नारायण साहए करी ॥ध्रु.॥
शरीरासि बळ नाहीं स्वता भाव । तया पंढरिराव साहए करी ॥2॥
असो नसो बळ राहे पराधीन । तरी अनुमान करूं नका ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे येणें करोनि चिंतनीं । तया नारायण जवळीक ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Even one who has no leisure but carries devotion in the heart is aided by the Lord. One whose soul is restless with longing for Pandhari is helped by Narayana.

One whose body lacks strength but whose spirit remains surrendered is helped by the Lord of Pandhari. Whether strength is present or not, if one remains dependent on God, do not hesitate.

Says Tuka, through such constant remembrance, Narayana stays always near.

IN PLAIN WORDS

One who has no free time, but carries God in the mind, is helped by Chakrapani. One whose soul is restless with the thought of Pandhari is helped by Narayana. One whose body has no strength but whose heart is true is helped by the Lord of Pandhari. Strength or no strength, stay surrendered; do not doubt this. Tuka says: by this much remembrance, Narayana stays near.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is answering the person who fears they have neither time nor strength enough for devotion. His reply is that God measures the heart's intent, not the hours or the body's power. The one with no leisure who still carries God, the weak one whose spirit stays surrendered, the soul restless with longing for Pandhari, each is helped by Narayana. So the instruction is to stop calculating whether you qualify and simply remain dependent; remembrance, however small, keeps God close.

GATHA 4464 Sacred Stories

Story, the child who cried to God

मराठी मूळ

दारिद्रानें विप्र पीडिला अपार । तया पोटीं पोर एक असे ॥1॥
बाहेरी मिष्टान्न मिळे एके दिशीं । घेऊनी छंदासि त्या चि बैसे ॥ध्रु.॥
क्षुधाकाळीं रडे देखिलें तें मागे । कांहीं केल्या नेघे दुजें कांहीं ॥2॥
सहज कौतुकें बोले बापमाये । देवापाशीं आहे मागशी तें ॥3॥
तेव्हां तुजलागीं स्मरे नारायणा । जीवींच्या जीवना पांडुरंगा॥4॥
लागली हे क्षुधा जात असे प्राण । काय हें निर्वाण पाहातोसि ॥5॥
प्राण हा उत्कर्ष जाहला विव्हळ । तेव्हां तो कृपाळ धांव घाली ॥7॥
सांडूनि वैकुंठ धांव घाली तई । आळंगिला बाहीं कृपावंतें ॥8॥
तुका ह्मणे दिला क्षीराचा सागर । राहे निरंतर तयापासीं ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A brahmin was tormented by dire poverty. He had one child.

The child would occasionally find sweets somewhere and become fixated on them. When hungry, the child would cry and demand those very sweets, refusing everything else.

In playful innocence, the parents said, 'Ask God for what you want.' From that moment the child remembered You, O Narayana, O life of my life, O Panduranga. 'I am starving; my life is ebbing away.

What final end are You waiting for?' When the child's distress became unbearable and overwhelming, the compassionate Lord rushed to help. Leaving Vaikuntha behind, He came running and embraced the child with His gracious arms.

Says Tuka, He gave the child an ocean of milk and stayed with that family forever.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A brahmin was crushed by deep poverty. He had one small child. One day the child found sweets somewhere outside and grew fixed on them. When hunger came, the child cried and begged for those sweets, and would take nothing else. In simple play, the mother and father said: God has them; ask God for what you want. From then the child remembered You, O Narayana, life of my life, O Panduranga. The child cried: this hunger is on me, my life is leaving; what final end are you waiting to see? When the child's distress rose and overwhelmed him, the merciful One ran. He left Vaikuntha and ran at once; the compassionate One gathered the child in his arms. Tuka says: he gave an ocean of milk, and he stays near that family forever.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells a small story to show what God answers. A starving child, told in passing to ask God for the sweets he craves, takes the words at face value and calls on Narayana with his whole life on the line. That literal, total trust is the point: the child does not perform devotion, he simply cries from need, and the cry empties him out.

Tukaram says the Lord leaves Vaikuntha and runs, embraces the child, and pours out an ocean of milk. The teaching held inside the story is that helpless, single-hearted calling, the kind a child makes, is what brings God running.

GATHA 4465 Prayers

Prayer, asking for the strength to love

मराठी मूळ

अनाथाचा सखा ऐकिला प्रताप । होसि कृपावंत मजवरि ॥1॥
माझिया गा चित्ता करिं शिकवण । जेणें तुझे चरण जोडतील ॥ध्रु.॥
जोडोनियां कर येतों काकुलती । रकुमाईच्या पति कृपावंता ॥2॥
हरुषें निर्भर करीं माझें मन । दाखवीं चरण पांडुरंगा॥3॥
तुझे भेटीविण जन्म गेलां वांयां । भजन कराया शक्ति नाहीं ॥4॥
न घडे तुझी सेवा न घडे पूजन । जन्मोनि निष्कारण जाऊं पाहे ॥5॥
तुका ह्मणे हरि करावें या काय । भजनासि साहए होई बापा ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have heard of the glory of the Friend of the helpless. Be gracious to me as well.

Teach my mind the way by which Your feet may be reached. With folded hands I come pleading, O husband of Rukmini, O compassionate One.

Fill my mind with overflowing joy. Show me Your feet, O Panduranga.

Without meeting You, my births have gone to waste. I have no strength for devotion.

I cannot perform Your worship or Your service. This birth seems destined to pass in vain.

Says Tuka, O Hari, what is to be done? Come to my aid in devotion, O Father.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have heard your glory, Friend of the helpless. Be gracious to me too. Teach my mind the lesson by which I may reach your feet. With folded hands I come pleading, husband of Rukmini, merciful One. Fill my mind to overflowing with joy. Show me your feet, O Panduranga. Without meeting you, my births have gone to waste. I have no strength to do devotion. I cannot do your service; I cannot do your worship. This birth seems set to pass for nothing. Tuka says: Hari, what is to be done about this? Come to my aid in devotion, O Father.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a prayer that confesses its own emptiness. Tukaram does not boast of his devotion; he says plainly that he has no strength to worship or serve, and that birth after birth has gone to waste without meeting God. So instead of offering devotion, he asks God to give it: teach my mind the way to your feet, come to my aid in devotion. The radical move is to make even the capacity for love a gift he must beg for, leaning entirely on the One known as Friend of the helpless rather than on his own effort.

GATHA 4466 Worldly Metaphors

Married-life metaphor, the mismatched soul

मराठी मूळ

हीनवर बीजवर दोघी त्या गडणी । अखंड कहाणी संसाराची ॥1॥
माझे पति बहु लहान चि आहे । खेळावया जाय पोरांसवें ॥ध्रु.॥
माझें दुःख जरी ऐकशील सई । ह्मातारा तो बाई खोकतसे ॥2॥
खेळे सांजवरी बाहेरी तो राहे । वाट मी पाहें सेजेवरी ॥3॥
पूर्व पुण्य माझें नाहीं वा नीट । बहु होती कष्ट सांगो कांही ॥4॥
जवळ मी जातें अंगा अंग लावूं । नेदी जवळ येऊं कांटाळतो ॥5॥
पूर्व सुकृताचा हा चि बाई ठेवा । तुका ह्मणे देवा काय बोल ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A young wife and an old wife, both companions, share the unending tale of married life. The young wife says, 'My husband is still so little; he goes off to play with the other children.' The old wife says, 'If you will hear my sorrow, sister, my old husband just coughs and wheezes.' The young wife says, 'He plays outside till evening and stays out late.

I wait for him on the bed.' 'My past merits are not in order; what great troubles I must endure.' When the young wife goes near and tries to embrace him, he will not let her close and turns away in annoyance. Says Tuka, this is the inheritance of past karma, dear sister. What can be said to God about it?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A young wife and an old wife, two companions, tell the endless tale of married life. The young one says: my husband is still so little; he goes off to play with the other children. The old one says: if you will hear my sorrow, sister, my old husband only coughs and wheezes. The young one says: he plays outside till evening and stays out late, and I wait for him on the bed. My past merit is not set right; so much trouble has come, what can I say of it. When I go near to press my body to his, he will not let me close; he turns away in disgust. Tuka says: this is the store of past deeds, sister. What can be said to God about it?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram dresses a spiritual complaint in a homely scene of two ill-matched wives. The young wife's husband is a child who would rather play, the old wife's husband only coughs and shrinks from her touch; in both, the longing for union meets a partner who cannot meet it. Read as the soul and God, it voices the ache of one who reaches for union and feels held off, and Tukaram traces that frustration to the account of past deeds rather than to any cruelty in God. The closing line shrugs the whole thing back to heaven: this is karma's inheritance, so what is there to argue with God about? It names the soul's restless longing and its sense of being kept at a distance, without pretending to resolve it.

GATHA 4467 Faith and Trust

Faith, God's strength behind you

मराठी मूळ

स्वामीच्या सामथ्यॉ । चाले बोलिला पुरुषार्थ ॥1॥
पाठी देवाचें हें बळ । मग लाभे हातीं काळ ॥ध्रु.॥
देव ज्यासी साहए । तेणें केलें सर्व होय ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे स्वामीसत्ता । मग नाहीं भय चित्ता ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

By the master's power, one's stated purpose prevails. With God's strength behind you, even Death comes into your hands.

Whatever one attempts with God's support will succeed. Says Tuka, when the Lord is your sovereign, there is no fear in the chitta.

IN PLAIN WORDS

By the master's power, the purpose you speak of moves forward. With God's strength at your back, even Death falls into your hands. The one God helps, that one has everything done for him. Tuka says: when the Lord is your sovereign, then there is no fear in the heart.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is locating all real power outside the self and in God. Whatever you set out to do succeeds not by your own force but because the master's strength stands behind it, and with that backing even Death, the last terror, becomes something you can master. The claim he lands is about fear: once you take God as your sovereign, the ground of all fear is gone, because the outcome no longer rests on your weakness. The instruction is to lean on that strength rather than your own.

GATHA 4468 The Power of the Name

The Name, its power to deliver

मराठी मूळ

नामांचा डांगोरा फिरवीं घरोघरीं । ह्मणा हरीहरी सर्वभावें ॥1॥
नामें हरती कर्में वैकुंठींची पै विस्त । संनिध श्रीपति सदोदित ॥ध्रु.॥
नामाचा महिमा बहुतां कळला । नामें उद्धरिला अजामेळ ॥2॥
गजेंद्राची ि◌स्थति पुराणीं बोलती । नामें चि श्रीपति पावलासे ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे घेतां मुक्ति आहे । नामें सर्व पाहें आकिळलें॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Proclaim the Name from door to door. Say 'Hari, Hari' with your whole being.

The Name removes all karma and opens the way to Vaikuntha. Shripati is always near.

The greatness of the Name has been known to many. The Name delivered even the wrongdoer Ajamila.

The Puranas tell the story of Gajendra: through the Name alone, Shripati came to his rescue. Says Tuka, by taking the Name, liberation is assured. The Name holds everything within its power.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Carry the Name from door to door like a town crier. Say Hari, Hari with your whole heart. The Name burns away karma and spreads the wealth of Vaikuntha; Shripati is always near. Many have come to know the greatness of the Name. The Name lifted up even Ajamila. The Puranas tell of Gajendra's plight: by the Name alone Shripati came to him. Tuka says: take the Name and liberation is yours. The Name holds everything within its grasp.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is preaching the Name as the one accessible, all-sufficient practice. Said with the whole heart, repeated like a crier going door to door, it burns off karma and keeps God close at hand. He grounds the claim in two well-known rescues: Ajamila, a sinner saved when he called a holy name at death, and Gajendra the elephant, lifted from the crocodile when he cried out. The stakes he names are total: by simply taking the Name, liberation is assured, because the Name holds everything within its grasp.

GATHA 4469 The Saints

The saints, freedom from Yama's noose

मराठी मूळ

यमाचे हे पाश नाटोपती कोणातें । आह्मां दिनानाथें रिक्षयेलें ॥1॥
यम नेतां तुह्मां रक्षील हें कोण । तुह्मां धन्यधन्य कोण ह्मणती ॥ध्रु.॥
संतसज्जनमेळा पवित्र संतकीतिन । त्यांनीं उत्तम ि्स्थति सांगितली ॥2॥
तें चि धरोनि चित्तीं तुका हित करी। यमासि पांपरी हाणे आतां ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The noose of Yama cannot be resisted by anyone, yet the Lord of the lowly has freed us from it. When Yama comes to take you, who will protect you? Who will call you blessed then? The company of saints and the glory of their virtue have shown the noblest path.

Holding this truth in my chitta, Tuka works for the good of all and now kicks Yama's messengers aside.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Yama's noose cannot be thrown off by anyone, yet the Lord of the lowly has freed us from it. When Yama comes to take you, who will protect you? Who will call you blessed then? The gathering of saints and good people, the pure glory of the saints, have shown the highest state. Holding that very thing in the heart, Tuka works for the good of all, and now he kicks Yama's messengers aside.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts a fear no one escapes with a rescue he has already received. Yama's noose, death and its reckoning, binds everyone, and he presses the reader with the question: when it comes, who will save you, who will call you blessed? His answer is the company of saints, whose pure example pointed him to the highest state, and the Lord of the lowly who acts through them. Holding that in his heart, he says he can now kick aside the messengers of death, not as a boast over a person but as the confidence the saints' path gives against the one fear that masters all.

GATHA 4470 Longing and Separation

Longing, holy defiance toward God

मराठी मूळ

देवासी पैं भांडों एकचित्त करूनि । आह्मांसि सज्जनीं सांगितलें ॥1॥
आह्मां काय आतां देवें आडो परी । भेटी नेदी तरी सुखें नेदो ॥ध्रु.॥
तो चि नांदो सदा हरि पैं वैकुंठीं । आह्मां देशवटी देवो सुखें ॥2॥
देवें अभिमान चित्तांत धरिला । तरी तो एकला राहो आतां ॥3॥
चित्तीं धरोनि नाम असों सुखें येथें । हषॉ गाऊं गीत गोविंदाचें ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे सर्व देवाची नष्टाई । आह्मी सुखें डुलतसों ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The saints have told us to argue with God, to be single-minded in our appeal to Him. What can God do to obstruct us now? If He will not grant us a meeting, let Him keep His happiness to Himself.

Let Him remain forever in Vaikuntha. Let Him gladly banish us if He wishes.

If God has chosen to be stubborn, then let Him stay alone. We will hold the Name in our chitta and dwell here in contentment, singing the songs of Govinda with joy.

Says Tuka, all this is God's own mischief. We continue to sway blissfully in His Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Let us quarrel with God, single-minded in it; this is what the good people told us. What can God do to block us now? If he will not give us a meeting, then let him keep his happiness. Let Hari live forever in Vaikuntha; let him gladly send us into exile. If God has set his pride against us, then let him stay alone now. Holding the Name in the heart, we will stay here content, and with joy we will sing the song of Govinda. Tuka says: all this is God's own mischief, and we keep swaying happily in his Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the bold, lover's quarrel of bhakti, which Tukaram says the saints themselves taught. Stung that God withholds his presence, he answers pride with mock pride: keep your Vaikuntha, keep your happiness, send us into exile, stay alone. But the defiance turns out to be a deeper trust, not a rejection. Even refused a meeting, he finds he already holds the Name in his heart and can sing of Govinda with joy, so the whole standoff is God's playful mischief, and the devotee keeps swaying in delight regardless. The radical claim is that the Name in the heart is itself the presence, so even God's withdrawal cannot rob the lover.

GATHA 4471 The Power of the Name

The Name, the open market for all

मराठी मूळ

भरणी आली मुक्त पेठा । करा लाटा व्यापार ॥1॥
उधार घ्या रे उधार घ्या रे । अवघे या रे जातीचे ॥ध्रु.॥
येथें पंक्तिभेद नाहीं । मोठें कांहीं लहान ॥2॥
तुका ह्मणे लाभ घ्यावा। मुद्दल भावा जतन ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The fair is open and the market is free. Trade now and reap the profit.

Take on credit, take on credit. Come, all of you, all castes together.

Here there is no distinction of status, no high or low. Says Tuka, take this profit. Guard the capital of pure devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The shipment has come, the market is open. Strike your trade now. Take it on credit, take it on credit. Come, all of you, every caste. Here there is no ranking by rank, nothing greater, nothing smaller. Tuka says: take the profit. Guard the capital, which is devotion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pictures the Name as a market thrown open to everyone. The goods have arrived, the trade is free, and he calls all castes in together, declaring that here there is no high and low, no ranking by status. That leveling is the radical point: the wealth of God is sold to anyone on credit, regardless of birth or standing. The profit is liberation, freely available; and the one thing to protect is the capital that makes the trade, which he names as pure devotion.

GATHA 4472 True Worship

True worship, God at the daily meal

मराठी मूळ

ग्रासोग्रासीं भाव । तरी देहिं च जेवी देव ॥1॥
धरीं स्मरण तें सार । नाहीं दुरी तें अंतर ॥ध्रु.॥
भोगितां तूं भावें । देव जेऊं बैसे सवें ॥2॥
तुज पावो देवा । भावें अंतरींची सेवा ॥3॥
गुंतला साधनीं । देव नाहीं त्रिभुवनीं ॥4॥
तुका ह्मणे हातीं । न धरितां गमाविती ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

If with every morsel you hold devotion, then God Himself dines with you in the body. Hold to that remembrance which is the essence; the distance is not great.

When you eat with that feeling, God sits beside you at the meal. Through inner devotion, God reaches you.

But one who is tangled in rituals alone will not find God in all three worlds. Says Tuka, those who do not hold Him in their hands will lose Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

If devotion is in every mouthful, then God eats with you in the body itself. Hold that remembrance; it is the essence. The distance is not far. When you eat with that feeling, God sits and eats beside you. Through the heart's inner service, you reach God. One tangled only in techniques will not find God in the three worlds. Tuka says: those who do not hold him in their hands lose him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is moving worship out of the ritual hall and into the ordinary meal. If you eat with devotion in every mouthful, he says, God is not far off but sits beside you, dining in your own body; the inner service of the heart is what reaches him. Against this he sets mere technique: one caught up in the machinery of practice will not find God anywhere in the three worlds. The point he lands is that God is held by living remembrance, present in daily acts, and is lost the moment you let go of him in favor of method.

GATHA 4473 Longing and Separation

Longing, desire turned toward God

मराठी मूळ

कामिनीसी जैसा आवडे भ्रतार । इच्छीत चकोर चंद्र जैसा ॥1॥
तैसी हे आवडी विठ्ठलाचे पायीं । लागलिया नाहीं गर्भवास ॥ध्रु.॥
दुष्काळें पीडिल्या आवडे भोजन । आणिक जीवन तृषाक्रांता ॥2॥
कामातुर जैसा भय लज्जा सांडोनि । आवडे कामिनी सर्वभावें ॥3॥
तुका ह्मणे तैसी राहिली आवडी । पांडुरंग थडी पाववील ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As a wife loves her husband, as the chakor bird longs for the moon, let such longing attach itself to Vitthal's feet, and there shall be no more birth in the womb. As the famished crave food, as the parched crave water, as the lustful abandon all shame and fear, desiring the beloved with every fiber of being, so let longing persist.

Says Tuka, Panduranga will carry such a one to the shore.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As a wife loves her husband, as the chakor bird longs for the moon, let this longing fasten on Vitthal's feet; once it does, there is no more birth in the womb. As the famine-struck crave food, as the thirst-struck crave water, as the lustful one throws off fear and shame and desires the beloved with his whole being, so let the longing stay. Tuka says: when such longing stays, Panduranga will bring you to the far shore.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the most consuming human desires and tells you to turn them, whole and undiluted, toward God. The wife's love, the chakor's pining for the moon, the starving man's craving, the thirsty man's thirst, the lover who flings off shame, each is a picture of total, single-minded wanting. He does not soften that intensity; he asks you to fasten exactly that much hunger onto Vitthal's feet. The promise is that longing of this order ends rebirth and that Panduranga himself carries such a one across to the far shore.

GATHA 4474 Devotion to Vitthal

The sacred formula, Panduranga as its root

मराठी मूळ

ॐ तत्सदिति सूत्राचें सार । कृपेचा सागर पांडुरंग॥1॥
हरिःॐ सहित उदत अनुदत । प्रचुरीश्वरासहित पांडुरंग ॥2॥
गोब्राह्मणहिता होऊनि निराळे । वेदाचें तें मूळ तुका ह्मणे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Om Tat Sat: this is the essence of the sacred formula. Panduranga is the ocean of grace.

Hari Om, with the rising and falling tones of the Vedic chant, Panduranga is one with the Supreme Lord. Says Tuka, the root of the Vedas stands apart, devoted to the welfare of cows and brahmins.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Om Tat Sat: this is the heart of the sacred word. Panduranga is the ocean of grace. Hari Om, with the rising and falling tones of the chant, Panduranga is one with the Supreme Lord. Tuka says: he stands apart, the root of the Vedas, set on the good of cows and brahmins.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the highest Vedic formula, Om Tat Sat, and says its whole meaning is one person: Panduranga, the form of Vitthal at Pandhari. He is the ocean of grace, and he is one with the Supreme that the chant rises and falls toward. The closing line gives him a double place: he is the very root the Vedas grow from, and yet he stands apart, turned outward toward the welfare of cows and brahmins. The point is that the abstract sacred sound and the living, caring Lord are not two things.

GATHA 4475 Sacred Stories

A mother's abandonment, the turn of fate

मराठी मूळ

सांडियेला गर्भ उबगोनि माउली । नाहीं सांभाळली भूमि शुद्ध ॥1॥
उष्ण तान भूक एवढिये आकांतीं । ओसंगा लाविती काय ह्मुण ॥ध्रु.॥
खांद्यावरि शूळ मरणाचिये वाटे । अन्याय ही मोठे केले साच ॥2॥
हातींचा हिरोनि घातला पोटासी। तुका ह्मणे ऐसी परी जाली ॥3॥
ओंव्या प्रारंभ 231 अभंग 3

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mother, weary and in distress, abandoned the child at birth, not caring whether the ground was clean. In such a crisis of heat, thirst, and hunger, who can be expected to hold the infant to her bosom? With death's trident upon her shoulders, on the road to execution, grave wrongs had truly been committed.

What was snatched from her hands was thrust into the belly of another. Says Tuka, such was the turn of fate.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mother, worn out and in distress, left the child at birth. She did not see whether the ground was clean. In such heat and thirst and hunger, who can hold the infant to her breast? With death's trident on her shoulders, on the road to execution, great wrongs had truly been done. What was torn from her hands was thrust into another's belly. Tuka says: such was the turn of fate.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at an act that horrifies, a mother abandoning her newborn, and refuses to flatten it into simple blame. He sets it inside her crisis: she is half dead herself, driven by heat, thirst, hunger, and a sentence of death already on her shoulders. The wrong is real and named as wrong, yet the verse asks what such a crushed person can be expected to do. The last image is bleak, what was hers torn away and given to another's hunger, and Tukaram leaves it as fate's turning, pointing the eye at the whole machinery of suffering rather than at one ruined woman.

GATHA 4476 Autobiography

The Name alone, God runs to the singer

मराठी मूळ

पांडुरंगा करुं प्रथम नमन । दुसरें चरणा संतांचिया॥1॥
याच्या कृपादानें कथेचा विस्तार । बाबाजीसद्गुदास तुका ॥2॥
काय माझी वाणी मानेल संतांसी । रंजवूं चित्तासी आपुलिया ॥3॥
या मनासी लागो हरिनामाचा छंद । आवडी गोविंद गावयासी ॥4॥
सीण जाला मज संवसारसंभ्रमें । सीतळ या नामें जाली काया॥5॥
या सुखा उपमा नाहीं द्यावयासी । आलें आकारासी निविनकार ॥6॥
नित्य धांवे तेथें नामाचा गजर । घोष जयजयकार आइकतां ॥7॥
तांतडी ते काय हरिगुण गाय । आणीक उपाय दुःखमूळ ॥8॥
मूळ नरकाचें राज्यमदेंमाते । अंतरे बहुत देव दुरी ॥9॥
दुरी अंतरला नामनिंदकासी । जैसें गोंचिडासी क्षीर राहे ॥10॥
हे वाट गोमटी वैकुंठासी जातां । रामकृष्णकथा दिंडी ध्वजा ॥11॥
जाणतयांनीं सांगितलें करा । अंतरासी वारा आडूनियां ॥12॥
यांसी आहे ठावें परि अंध होती । विषयाची खंती वाटे जना ॥13॥
नाहीं त्या सुटलीं द्रव्य लोभ माया । भस्म दंड छाया तरुवराची ॥14॥
चित्त ज्याचें पुत्रपत्नीबंधूवरी । सुटल हा परि कैसें जाणा ॥15॥
जाणत नेणत करा हरिकथा । तराल सर्वथा भाक माझी ॥16॥
माझी मज असे घडली प्रचित । नसेल पतित ऐसा कोणी ॥17॥
कोणीं तरी कांहीं केलें आचरण । मज या कीर्तनेंविण नाहीं ॥18॥
नाहीं भय भक्ता तराया पोटाचें । देवासी तयाचें करणें लागे ॥19॥
लागे पाठोवाटी पाहे पायांकडे । पीतांबर खडे वाट सांडी ॥20॥
डिंकोनियां कां रे राहिले हे लोक । हें चि कवतुक वाटे मज ॥21॥
जयानें तारिले पाषाण सागरीं । तो ध्या रे अंतरीं स्वामी माझा॥22॥
माझिया जीवाची केली सोडवण । ऐसा नारायण कृपाळु हा ॥23॥
हा चि माझा नेम हा चि माझा धर्म । नित्य वाचे नाम विठोबाचें ॥24॥
चेतवला अग्न तापत्रयज्वाळ । तो करी शितळ रामनाम ॥25॥
मना धीर करीं दृढ चित्तां धरीं । तारील श्रीहरि मायबाप ॥26॥
बाप हा कृपाळु भक्ता भाविकांसी । घरीं होय दासी कामारी त्या ॥27॥
त्याचा भार माथां चालवी आपुला। जिहीं त्या दिधला सर्व भाव ॥28॥
भावेंविण त्याची प्रिाप्त । पुराणें बोलती ऐसी मात ॥29॥
मात त्याची जया आवडे जीवासी। तया गर्भवासीं नाहीं येणें ॥30॥
यावें गर्भवासीं तरी च विष्णुदासीं। उद्धार लोकांसी पूज्य होती ॥31॥
होती आवडत जीवाचे ताइत। त्यां घडी अच्युत न विसंभे ॥32॥
भेदाभेद नाहीं चिंता दुःख कांहीं । वैकुंठ त्या ठायीं सदा वसे ॥33॥
वसे तेथें देव सदा सर्वकाळ । करिती निर्मळ नामघोष ॥34॥

संपदा तयांची न सरे कल्पांतीं । मेळविला भक्ती देवलाभ ॥35॥
लाभ तयां जाला संसारा येऊनी । भगवंत ऋणी भक्ती केला ॥36॥
लागलेंसे पिसें काय मूढजनां । काय नारायणा विसरलीं ॥37॥
विसरलीं तयां थोर जाली हाणी । पचविल्या खाणी चौ†यासी ॥38॥
शिकविलें तरी नाहीं कोणा लाज । लागलीसे भाज धन गोड ॥39॥
गोड एक आहे अविट गोविंद । आणीक तो छंद नासिवंत ॥40॥
तळमळ त्याची कांहीं तरी करा । कां रे निदसुरा बुडावया ॥41॥
या जनासी भय यमाचें नाहीं । सांडियेलीं तिहीं एकराज्यें ॥42॥
जेणें अग्नमाजी घातलासे पाव । नेणता तो राव जनक होता॥43॥
तान भूक जिहीं साहिले आघात । तया पाय हात काय नाहीं॥44॥
नाहीं ऐसा तिहीं केला संवसार । दुःखाचे डोंगर तोडावया ॥45॥
याच जन्में घडे देवाचें भजन । आणीक हें ज्ञान नाहीं कोठें ॥46॥
कोठें पुढें नाहीं घ्यावया विसांवा । फिरोनि या गांवा आल्याविण॥47॥
विनवितां दिवस बहुत लागती । ह्मणउनि चित्तीं देव धरा ॥48॥
धरा पाय तुह्मी संतांचे जीवासी । वियोग तयांसी देवा नाहीं ॥49॥
नाहीं चाड देवा आणीक सुखाची । आवडी नामाची त्याच्या तया॥50॥
त्याची च उच्छिष्ट बोलतों उत्तरें । सांगितलें खरें व्यासादिकीं ॥51॥
व्यासें सांगितलें भक्ति हे विचार । भवसिंधु पार तरावया ॥52॥
तरावया जना केलें भागवत । गोवळ गोपी भक्त माता पिता ॥53॥
तारुनियां खरे नेली एक्यासरें । निमित्तें उत्तरें रुसिया ॥54॥
यासी वर्म ठावें भक्तां तरावया । जननी बाळ माया राख तान्हें ॥55॥
तान्हेलें भुकेलें ह्मणे वेळोवेळां । न मगतां लळा जाणोनियां ॥56॥
जाणोनियां वर्म देठ लावियेला । द्रौपदीच्या बोलासवें धांवे ॥57॥
धांवे सर्वता धेनु जैसी वत्सा । भक्तालागीं तैसा नारायण ॥58॥
नारायण व्होवा हांव ज्याच्या जीवा । धन्य त्याच्या दैवा पार नाहीं ॥59॥
पार नाहीं सुखा तें दिलें तयासी । अखंड वाचेसी रामनाम ॥60॥
रामनाम दोनी उत्तम अक्षरें । भवानीशंकरें उपदेशिलीं ॥61॥
उपदेश करी विश्वनाथ कानीं । वाराणसी प्राणी मध्यें मरे ॥62॥
मरणाचे अंतीं राम ह्मणे जरी । न लगे यमपुरी जावें तया ॥63॥
तयासी उत्तम ठाव वैकुंठीं । वसे नाम चित्तीं सर्वकाळ ॥64॥
सर्वकाळ वसे वैष्णवांच्या घरीं । नसे क्षणभरी थिर कोठें ॥65॥
कोठें नका पाहों करा हरिकथा । तेथें अवचिता सांपडेल ॥66॥
सांपडे हा देव भाविकांचे हातीं । शाहाणे मरती तरी नाहीं ॥67॥
नाहीं भलें भक्ती केलियावांचूनि। अहंता पापिणी नागवण ॥68॥
नागवलों ह्मणे देव मी आपणा । लाभ दिला जना ठकलों तो ॥69॥

तो चि देव येर नव्हे ऐसें कांहीं। जनादनन ठायीं चहूं खाणी ॥70॥
खाणी भरूनियां राहिलासे आंत । बोलावया मात ठाव नाहीं ॥71॥
ठाव नाहीं रिता कोणी देवाविण । ऐसी ते सज्जन संतवाणी ॥72॥
वाणी बोलूनियां गेलीं एक पुढें । तयासी वांकुडें जातां ठक ॥73॥
ठका नाहीं अर्थ ठाउका वेदांचा । होऊनि भेदाचा दास ठेला ॥74॥
दास ठेला पोट अर्थ दंभासाटीं । ह्मणउनि तुटी देवासवें ॥75॥
सवें देव द्विजातीही दुराविला । आणिकांचा आला कोण पाड ॥76॥
पाड करूनियां नागविलीं फार । पंडित वेव्हार खळवादी ॥77॥
वादका निंदका देवाचें दरुशन । नव्हे जाला पूर्ण षडकमाअ ॥78॥
षडकमाअ हीन रामनाम कंठीं । तयासवें भेटी सवें देवा ॥79॥
देवासी आवड भाविक जो भोळा । शुद्ध त्या चांडाळा करुनि मानी ॥80॥
मानियेल्या नाहीं विश्वास या बोला । नाम घेतां मला युक्ति थोडी॥81॥
बोलतां पांगल्या श्रुति नेति नेति । खुंटलिया युक्ति पुढें त्यांच्या॥83॥
पुढें पार त्याचा न कळे चि जातां । पाउलें देखतां ब्रह्मादिकां॥84॥
काय भक्तीपिसें लागलें देवासी । इच्छा ज्याची जैसी तैसा होय॥85॥
होय हा सगुण निर्गुण आवडी । भक्तिप्रय गोडी फेडावया ॥86॥
या बापासी बाळ बोले लाडें कोडें । करुनि वांकुडें मुख तैसें॥87॥
तैसें याचकाचें समाधान दाता । होय हा राखता सत्त्वकाळीं ॥88॥
सत्त्वकाळीं कामा न येती आयुधें । बळ हा संबंध सैन्यलोक॥89॥
सैन्यलोक तया दाखवी प्रताप । लोटला हा कोप कोपावरी ॥90॥
कोपा मरण नाहीं शांत होय त्यासी । प्रमाण भल्यासी सत्त्वगुणीं॥91॥
सत्त्वरजतमा आपण नासती । करितां हे भक्ति विठोबाची ॥92॥
चित्त रंगलिया चैतन्य चि होय । तेथें उणें काय निजसुखा ॥93॥
सुखाचा सागरु आहे विटेवरी । कृपादान करी तो चि एक ॥94॥
एक चित्त धरुं विठोबाचे पायीं । तेथें उणें कांहीं एक आह्मां ॥95॥
करुं हरिकथा सुखाची समाधि । आणिकाची बुद्धी दुष्ट नास ॥97॥
नासे संवसार लोकमोहो माया । शरण जा रे तया विठोबासी॥98॥
सिकविलें मज मूढा संतजनीं । दृढ या वचनीं राहिलोंसे ॥99॥
राहिलोंसे दृढ विठोबाचे पायीं । तुका ह्मणे कांहीं न लगे आंता॥100॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

First I bow to Panduranga, then to the feet of the saints. By their gift of grace, this narrative expands.

Tuka is the servant of the Sadguru Babaji. Will my words find favor with the saints? Let me at least please my own chitta.

May this mind be seized by the passion of Hari's Name, the love of singing of Govinda. I am weary from the toil of worldly life; this body has been cooled by the Name.

No comparison exists for this happiness. The formless has taken form.

Wherever the chanting of the Name resounds, wherever the cry of 'Victory!' is heard, God runs to that place. What urgency can there be other than singing the glories of Hari? All other efforts are the root of sorrow.

The pride of power and kingdom is the root of hell; it makes God distant. One who slanders the Name is as far from God as a tick is from milk.

This is the beautiful road to Vaikuntha: the procession of Rama Krishna's story, with banners and flags. The wise have taught us: bar the door against the wandering mind.

People know this, yet they become blind. The sorrow of sense-pleasures grips them.

They have not freed themselves from wealth, greed, and illusion; they carry the staff and ashes, resting in the shade of a tree. One whose mind is fixed on wife, children, and relatives, know that such a one is not liberated.

Whether knowing or unknowing, sing the story of Hari; you will surely be saved. This is my solemn word.

I have experienced it myself. There has been no greater wrongdoer than I.

Others at least performed some spiritual practice; I had nothing but kirtan. The devotee need not worry about filling his belly; God Himself takes care of it.

God follows behind His devotee, watching his steps, dropping His yellow garment and stumbling in His haste. Why do these people remain frozen, stuck in place? This wonder amazes me.

He who made stones float across the ocean, contemplate Him within your chitta, my Lord. He liberated my very soul.

Such is Narayana, the compassionate One. This is my vow, this is my dharma: the Name of Vitthoba always on my lips.

The fire of the three afflictions has been kindled, but the Name of Rama makes it cool. Take courage, O mind; hold firm.

Shri Hari, our parent, will save us. This Father is gracious to His faithful devotees; He becomes a servant in their homes.

He carries their burden on His own head, for those who have given Him their whole being. Without devotion, He cannot be attained; so the Puranas declare.

Whoever loves to hear His story will never enter the womb again. If one must enter the womb, let it be as a servant of Vishnu, to uplift the world and be honored.

Such souls become the darlings of God's own chitta, His cherished talismans; the Lord never parts from them for a moment. There is no duality, no sorrow or anxiety; Vaikuntha dwells wherever they are.

God resides there at all times, where they chant His Name in purity. Their wealth never diminishes, even at the end of time; through devotion they have won God Himself.

Blessed are they who, having come into this world, have made God their debtor through devotion. What madness has seized these foolish folk? Have they forgotten Narayana? Those who have forgotten Him have suffered a great blow, ground through the eighty-four lakh species.

Though taught, none of them feels any shame; the allure of wealth tastes too sweet. There is one sweetness that never palls: Govinda.

All other passions are perishable. Feel some urgency for Him.

Why do you sleep, headed for drowning? These people have no fear of Yama; they have thrown away their single greatest treasure. King Janaka, not knowing, once thrust his foot into fire.

Those who endured hunger, thirst, and hardship, did they lack hands and feet? Yet they did not make their worldly life a comfortable settlement; they strove to cut through mountains of sorrow. Devotion to God is possible only in this human birth; there is no other wisdom anywhere.

There is no resting place ahead without returning to this village once more. To speak of all this would take many days; therefore hold God within your chitta.

Grasp the feet of the saints with all your life; they never suffer separation from God. God has no desire for any other pleasure.

The love of the Name is all He craves. I speak only the leftovers of those saints; the truth was told by Vyasa and others.

Vyasa taught the path of devotion to cross the ocean of worldly existence. For the deliverance of people, the Bhagavata was composed: the cowherds, the gopis, devotees, mothers, and fathers.

Saving them all, He carried them across in one stroke, using the pretext of feigned anger. The saints know the secret of saving their devotees: as a mother protects her infant, sheltering the hungry child.

The hungry, thirsty child cries out again and again, and the mother, knowing its needs without being asked, responds. Knowing the secret, God ran at the mere words of Draupadi.

He runs as a cow runs to her calf; so does Narayana run to His devotees. Blessed beyond measure is the fortune of one whose soul yearns for Narayana.

The joy given to such a one has no end: the Name of Rama always on the lips. The two syllables of Rama's Name are the supreme and excellent; Shiva and Parvati themselves taught them.

Vishwanath whispers the teaching into the ear of every being who dies at Varanasi. If at the moment of death one says 'Rama,' one need not go to the city of Yama.

Such a jiva receives the finest place in Vaikuntha, where the Name dwells in the chitta at all times. God dwells forever in the homes of the Vaishnavas; He does not stay still for a moment elsewhere.

Do not search anywhere else; do the story of Hari, and He will appear suddenly. God is caught in the hands of the simple and faithful; the clever may die trying and still not find Him.

Nothing good comes without devotion. Ego, the sinful one, is the great deceiver.

God says, 'I have been tricked by My own devotees. The profit went to the people, and I was the one outwitted.' That one alone is God; there is no other.

Janardana is present in all four mines of creation. He fills all creation and remains within; there is no space left to describe Him.

There is no place empty of God. Such is the testimony of saints and scripture.

The great ones spoke and went ahead. To go against their words is to be deceived.

The deceiver does not understand the meaning of the Vedas; enslaved by the sense of difference, he remains trapped. Enslaved to his belly, to wealth, and to pride, he is therefore cut off from God.

Even the twice-born caste has been estranged from God. What chance then for others? Scholars and debaters who argue and slander will never see God, even if they complete all the six prescribed duties.

But one who is without those duties yet carries Rama's Name on his lips, God will embrace and walk alongside. God loves the simple and faithful; He purifies even the excluded and honors them.

If you do not believe these words, if you think chanting the Name is too simple a method, consider that the scriptures themselves fell silent, saying 'not this, not this,' their logic exhausted. They could not reach the end of His mystery.

Even Brahma and the gods could only glimpse His feet. What madness of devotion has seized this God? He becomes whatever His devotee desires.

He becomes both with form and formless, to satisfy the longing of His beloved. Like a child who speaks lisping, loving words and makes a sulky face to his father, so does God respond.

Like a patron who fulfills the supplicant's needs, He remains the protector at all times. Weapons, armies, and allies are useless for eternal protection.

He shows His might to those who show theirs, sending wave after wave of wrath against wrath. Anger has no death; it subsides only through peace.

For the good, the measure is goodness. The three gunas, sattva, rajas, and tamas, are themselves destroyed when one practices devotion to Vitthoba.

When the mind is steeped in devotion, it becomes pure consciousness itself. What then is lacking for the experience of the inner bliss? The ocean of bliss stands upon the brick.

He alone bestows the gift of grace. Let us fix our minds upon Vitthoba's feet alone; nothing more is needed for us.

Let us do Hari's kirtan, the samadhi of happiness. All other counsel is wicked and destructive.

Worldly existence, delusion, and maya are destroyed. Go, take refuge in Vitthoba.

The saints taught me, a fool, and I have remained firm in their words. I remain firm at Vitthoba's feet.

Says Tuka, nothing more is needed now.

IN PLAIN WORDS

First I bow to Panduranga, then to the feet of the saints. By their grace this telling grows. Tuka is the servant of the Sadguru Babaji. Will my words please the saints? Let me at least gladden my own heart. May this mind be seized by love of Hari's Name, the joy of singing Govinda. I was worn out by the toil of the world; this body has been cooled by the Name. There is no comparison for this joy. The formless has taken form. Wherever the Name resounds, wherever the cry of victory is heard, God runs to that place. What hurry is there but to sing Hari's praise? Every other effort is the root of sorrow. The pride of power and kingdom is the root of hell; it pushes God far off. One who slanders the Name is as far from God as a tick is from milk. This is the lovely road to Vaikuntha: the procession of the Rama Krishna story, with banners and flags. The wise have taught us to bar the door against the wandering mind. People know this, yet they go blind; the sorrow of the senses grips them. They have not freed themselves from wealth, greed, and illusion; they carry the staff and ashes and rest in the shade of a tree. One whose mind is fixed on wife, children, and kin, know that one is not free. Whether you know or do not know, sing the story of Hari; you will surely be saved. This is my solemn word. I have learned it on myself. There has been no greater wrongdoer than I. Others did at least some practice; I had nothing but kirtan. The devotee need not worry about his belly; God himself sees to it. God follows behind his devotee, watching his steps, dropping his yellow garment and stumbling in his haste. Why do these people stay frozen in place? This wonder amazes me. He who made stones float across the sea, hold him within your heart, my Lord. He set my very soul free. Such is Narayana, the compassionate one. This is my vow, this is my dharma: the Name of Vithoba always on my lips. The fire of the three afflictions has been lit, and the Name of Rama makes it cool. Take courage, my mind; hold firm. Shri Hari, our mother and father, will save us. This Father is kind to his faithful; he becomes a servant in their homes. He carries their burden on his own head, for those who have given him their whole being. Without devotion he is not won; so the Puranas say. Whoever loves to hear his story will not enter the womb again. If he must enter the womb, let it be as a servant of Vishnu, to lift up the world and be honored. Such souls are the darlings of God's heart, his cherished talismans; the Lord never leaves them for a moment. There is no division there, no sorrow, no fear; Vaikuntha lives wherever they are. God stays there always, where they chant his Name in purity. Their wealth does not run out, even at the end of time; through devotion they have won God himself. Blessed are they who, coming into this world, have made God their debtor through devotion. What madness has seized these foolish folk? Have they forgotten Narayana? Those who forgot him suffered a great loss, ground through the eighty-four lakh wombs. Though taught, none feels any shame; the taste of wealth is too sweet. There is one sweetness that never palls: Govinda. Every other passion perishes. Feel some longing for him. Why do you sleep while you head toward drowning? These people have no fear of Yama; they have thrown away their one great treasure. King Janaka, not knowing, once thrust his foot into fire. Those who bore hunger, thirst, and blows, did they lack hands and feet? They did not turn the world into a soft settlement; they strove to cut through mountains of sorrow. Devotion to God is possible only in this human birth; there is no other wisdom anywhere. There is no resting place ahead without coming back to this village again. To say all of it would take many days; so hold God in your heart. Grasp the feet of the saints with all your life; they are never parted from God. God wants no other pleasure; he craves only the love of his Name. I speak only the leavings of those saints; the truth was told by Vyasa and the rest. Vyasa taught the path of devotion, to cross the ocean of the world. For the saving of people the Bhagavata was made: the cowherds, the gopis, the devotees, the mothers and fathers. He carried them all across in one stroke, using feigned anger as the pretext. The saints know the secret of saving devotees: as a mother shelters her hungry infant. The hungry child cries out again and again, and the mother, knowing its need without being asked, comes. Knowing the secret, God ran at the mere words of Draupadi. He runs as a cow runs to her calf; so does Narayana run to his devotees. Blessed beyond measure is the fortune of one whose soul yearns for Narayana. The joy given to such a one has no end: the Name of Rama always on the lips. The two syllables of Rama's Name are the best; Shiva and Parvati themselves taught them. Vishwanath whispers the teaching into the ear of every being who dies at Varanasi. If at the end one says Rama, that one need not go to the city of Yama. That soul gets the finest place in Vaikuntha, where the Name lives in the heart always.

God lives forever in the homes of the Vaishnavas; he does not rest a moment anywhere else. Do not search elsewhere; do the story of Hari, and he will appear all at once. God is caught in the hands of the simple and faithful; the clever may die trying and still not find him. Nothing good comes without devotion. Ego, the sinful one, is the great robber. God says, I have been tricked by my own devotees; the profit went to them, and I was the one outwitted. That one alone is God; there is no other. Janardana is present in all four kinds of birth. He fills all creation and stays within; there is no room left to describe him. There is no place empty of God. So speak the saints and the scriptures. The great ones spoke and went on ahead. To go against their words is to be deceived. The deceiver does not grasp the meaning of the Vedas; enslaved to difference, he stays trapped. A slave to his belly, to wealth, and to pride, he is cut off from God. Even the twice-born has been estranged from God; what chance then for others? Scholars and debaters who argue and slander will never see God, even if they finish all six prescribed duties. But one who lacks those duties, yet carries Rama's Name on his lips, God will embrace and walk beside. God loves the simple and faithful; he purifies even the outcaste and honors him. If you do not believe these words, if you think the Name too easy a way, remember that the scriptures themselves fell silent, saying not this, not this, their logic spent. They could not reach the end of his mystery. Even Brahma and the gods could only glimpse his feet. What madness of love has seized this God? He becomes whatever his devotee wants. He becomes both with form and formless, to satisfy his beloved's longing. Like a child who lisps loving words and pulls a sulky face at his father, so God answers. Like a giver who meets the beggar's need, he is the protector at all times. Weapons, armies, and allies are useless for lasting safety. He shows his might to those who show theirs, sending wave on wave of wrath against wrath. Anger does not die; it stills only through peace. For the good, the measure is goodness. The three gunas, sattva, rajas, and tamas, are themselves destroyed when one does devotion to Vithoba. When the mind is steeped in devotion, it becomes pure consciousness itself. What then is lacking for the bliss within? The ocean of bliss stands on the brick. He alone gives the gift of grace. Let us fix our minds on Vithoba's feet alone; nothing more is needed for us. Let us do Hari's kirtan, the samadhi of joy; all other counsel is wicked and ruins. The world, the snare of people, and maya are destroyed. Go, take refuge in Vithoba. The saints taught me, a fool, and I have held firm to their word. Tuka says: I stand firm at Vithoba's feet; nothing more is needed now.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a long teaching-poem that lays out Tukaram's whole creed in one breath: the Name is everything, and everything else is the root of sorrow. He opens by bowing to Panduranga and the saints and confessing he is the lowest wrongdoer, with nothing to his credit but kirtan, so that the path he names can carry anyone. The single claim, repeated from every angle, is that singing Hari's Name saves you whether you understand it or not, while rituals, austerities, scholarship, wealth, and pride only keep the cycle of birth turning and push God away. He stacks proof on proof, that God runs to where the Name is sung as a cow runs to her calf, that he came at Draupadi's word, that he is caught by simple milkmaids and eludes the clever, that even Yama and the Vedas confirm the Name's power, and warns that the slanderer of the Name is as far from God as a tick from milk. The point of self-examination is sharp: knowing all this, people still go blind for the sweetness of wealth and the love of wife, children, and kin, so the verse keeps asking why you sleep while heading toward drowning. The close is the whole abhanga in miniature: fix on Vithoba's feet, do his kirtan, and nothing more is needed.

GATHA 4477 Devotion to Vitthal

The Name as the only gain, the world as drowning

मराठी मूळ

गाईन ओंविया पंढरिचा देव । आमुचा तो जीव पांडुरंग ॥1॥
रंगलें हें चित्त माझें तया पायीं । ह्मणउनि घेई हा चि लाहो ॥2॥
लाहो करीन मी हा चि संवसारीं । राम कृष्ण हरि नारायण ॥3॥
नारायण नाम घालितां तुकासी । न येती या रासी तपतीथॉ ॥4॥
तीथॉ रज माथां वंदिती संतांचे । जे गाती हरिचे गुणवाद ॥5॥
गुणवाद ज्याचे गातां पूज्य जाले । बडिवार बोले कोण त्यांचा ॥6॥
त्याचा नाहीं पार कळला वेदांसी । आणीक ही ऋषि विचारितां ॥7॥
विचारितां तैसा होय त्यांच्या भावें । निजसुख ठावें नाहीं कोणा ॥8॥
कोणा कवतुक न कळे हे माव । निजलिया जिवें करी धंदा ॥9॥
करुनि कवतुक खेळे हा चि लीळा । व्यापूनि वेगळा पाहातुसे ॥10॥
सेवटीं आपण एकला चि खरा । सोंग हा पसारा नट केला ॥11॥
लावियेलें चाळा मीपणें हें जन । भोग- तया कोण भोगविशी ॥12॥
विषयीं गुंतलीं विसरलीं तुज । कन्या पुत्र भाज धनलोभा ॥13॥
लोभें गिळी फांसा आविसाच्या आशा। पडोनि मासा तळमळी ॥14॥
तळमळ याची तरी शम होईल । जरी हा विठ्ठल आठविती ॥15॥
आठव हा तरी संतांच्या सांगातें। किंवा हें संचित जन्मांतरें ॥16॥
जन्मांतरें तीन भोगितां कळती । केलें तें पावती करितां पुढें ॥17॥
पुढें जाणोनियां करावें संचित। पुजावे अतीत देव द्विज ॥18॥
जन्म तुटे ऐसें नव्हे तुह्मां जना । पुढिल्या पावना धर्म करा ॥19॥
करा जप तप अनुष्ठान याग । संतीं हा मारग स्थापियेला ॥20॥
लावियेलीं कर्में शुद्ध आचरणें । कोणा एका तेणें काळें पावे ॥21॥
पावला सत्वर निष्काम उदार। जिंकिली अपार वासना हे ॥22॥
वासनेचें मूळ छेदिल्या वांचून । तरलेंसें कोणी न ह्मणावें ॥23॥
न ह्मणावें जाला पंडित वाचक । करूं मंत्रघोष अक्षरांचा ॥24॥
चाळविलीं एकें ते चि आवडीनें । लोक दंभमानें देहसुखें ॥25॥
सुख तरी च घडे भजनाचें सार । वाचे निरंतर रामनाम ॥26॥
राम हा उच्चार तरी च बैसे वाचे । अनंता जन्माचें पुण्य होय ॥27॥
पुण्य ऐसें काय रामनामापुढें । काय ते बापुडे यागयज्ञ ॥28॥
यागयज्ञ तप संसार दायकें । न तुटती एके नामेंविण ॥29॥
नामेंविण भवसिंधु पावे पार । अइसा विचार नाहीं दुजा ॥30॥
जाणती हे भक्तराज महामुनि । नाम सुखधणी अमृताची ॥31॥
अमृताचें सार निजतत्त्व बीज । गुहएाचें तें गुज रामनाम ॥32॥
नामें असंख्यात तारिले अपार । पुराणीं हें सार प्रसिद्ध हे ॥33॥
हें चि सुख आह्मी घेऊं सर्वकाळ । करूनि निर्मळ हरिकथा ॥34॥

कथाकाळीं लागे सकळा समाधि । तात्काळ हे बुिद्ध दुष्ट नासे ॥35॥
नासे लोभ मोहो आशा तृष्णा माया । गातां गुण तया विठोबाचे ॥36॥
विठोबाचे गुण मज आवडती । आणीक हे चित्तीं न लगे कांहीं ॥37॥
कांहीं कोणी नका सांगों हे उपाव। माझा मनीं भाव नाहीं दुजा ॥38॥
जाणोनियां आह्मी दिला जीवभाव। दृढ याचे पाये धरियेले ॥39॥
धरियेले आतां न सोडीं जीवेंसी । केला ये च विशीं निरधार ॥40॥
निरधार आतां राहिलों ये नेटीं। संवसारतुटी करूनियां ॥41॥
येणें अंगीकार केला पांडुरंगें । रंगविला रंगें आपुलिया ॥42॥
आपुली पाखर घालुनियां वरि । आह्मांसी तो करी यत्न देव ॥43॥
देव राखे तया आणिकांचें काय। करितां उपाय चाले तेथें ॥44॥
तेथें नाहीं रिघ किळकाळासी जातां । दास ह्मणवितां विठोबाचे ॥45॥
विठोबाचे आह्मी लाडिके डिंगर । कांपती असुर काळ धाकें ॥46॥
धाक तिहीं लोकीं जयाचा दरारा । स्मरण हें करा त्याचें तुह्मी ॥47॥
तुह्मी निदसुर नका राहूं कोणी । चुकावया खाणी गर्भवास ॥48॥
गर्भवासदुःख यमाचें दंडणें । थोर होय शीण येतां जातां ॥49॥
तान भूक पीडा जीतां ते आगात । मेल्या यमदूत जाच करिती ॥50॥
जाच करिती हे ह्मणसी कोणा आहे ठावें । नरकीं कौरवें बुडी दिली ॥51॥
बुडी दिली कुंभपाकीं दुयोधनें । दाविना लाजेनें मुख धर्मा ॥52॥
धर्म हा कृपाळू आलासे जवळी । बैसला पाताळीं वरि नये ॥53॥
न ये वरि कांहीं करितां उपाव । भोगवितो देव त्याचे त्यासी ॥54॥
नारायण विसरलीं संवसारीं । तया अघोरीं वास सत्य ॥56॥
सत्य मानूनियां संतांच्या वचना । जा रे नारायणा शरण तुह्मी ॥57॥
तुह्मी नका मानूं कोणी विसवास। पुत्र पत्नी आस धन वित्त॥58॥
धन वित्त लोभ माया मोहपाश । मांडियले फासे यमदूतीं ॥59॥
दूतीं याच्या मुखा केलेंसे कुडण । वाचे नारायण येऊं नेदी ॥60॥
नेदी शुद्धबुिद्ध आतळों चित्तासी । नाना कर्म त्यासी दुरावती॥61॥
दुराविलीं एकें जाणतीं च फार । निंदा अहंकार वादभेद ॥62॥
वाद भेद निंदा हे फंद काळाचें । गोवितील वाचे रिकामिकें ॥63॥
रिकामिक देवा होय नव्हे मना । चिंतेचिये घाणा जुंपिजेसी ॥64॥
सेवटीं हे गळा लावुनियां दोरी । सांभाळ ये करी वासनेचा ॥65॥
वासनेचा संग होय अंतकाळीं । तरी तपोबळी जन्म धरी ॥66॥
धरूनियां देव राहतील चित्तीं । आधींचिया गती आठवाया ॥67॥
आठवावा देव मरणाचे काळीं। ह्मणउनि बळी जीव दिले ॥68॥
दिले टाकूनियां भोग ऋषेश्वरीं । खाती वनांतरीं कंदमूळें ॥69॥
मुळें सुखाचिया देव अंतरला । अल्पासाटीं नेला अधोगती ॥70॥

गति हे उत्तम व्हावया उपाव । आहे धरा पाव विठोबाचे ॥71॥
विठोबाचे पायीं राहिलिया भावें । न लगे कोठें जावें वनांतरा॥72॥
तरती दुबळीं विठोबाच्या नांवें। संचित ज्या सवें नाहीं शुद्ध॥73॥
शुद्ध तरी याचे काय तें नवल। ह्मणतां विठ्ठल वेळोवेळां ॥74॥
वेळा कांहीं नाहीं कवणाचे हातीं । न कळे हे गति भविष्याची॥75॥
भविष्य न सुटे भोगिल्यावांचूनि । संचित जाणोनि शुद्ध करा ॥76॥
करावे सायास आपुल्या हिताचे । येथें आलियाचे मनुष्यपण ॥77॥
मनुष्यपण तरी साधी नारायण । नाहीं तरी हीन पशुहूनी ॥78॥
पशु पाप पुण्य काय ते जाणती । मनुष्या या गति ठाउकिया॥79॥
ठाउकें हें असे पाप पुण्य लोका । देखती ते एकां भोगितिया॥80॥
भोगतील एक दुःख संवसारीं । काय सांगों परी वेगळाल्या ॥81॥
ल्यावें खावें बरें असावें सदैव । हे चि करी हांव संवसारीं ॥82॥
संवसारें जन गिंळले सकळ । भोगवितो फळ गर्भवासा ॥83॥
वासनेचें मूळ छेदिल्यावांचून । नव्हे या खंडण गर्भवासा ॥84॥
सायास केलियावांचुनि तें कांहीं । भोगावरी पाहीं घालूं नये ॥85॥
नये बळें धड घालूं कांटएावरि । जाये जीवें धरी सर्प हातीं ॥86॥
हातीं आहे हित करील तयासी । ह्मणउनि ऋषीं सांगितलें ॥87॥
सांगती या लोकां फजित करुनि ।आपण जे कोणी तरले ते॥88॥
तेणें वाळवंटीं उभारिले कर । कृपेचा सागर पांडुरंग ॥89॥
गंगाचरणीं करी पातकांची धुनी । पाउलें तीं मनीं चिंतिलिया ॥90॥
चिंतनें जयाच्या तारिले पाषाण । उद्धरी चरण लावूनियां ॥91॥
लावूनियां टाळी नलगे बैसावें । प्रेमसुख घ्यावें संतसंगें ॥92॥
संतसंगें कथा करावें कीर्तन । सुखाचें साधन रामराम ॥93॥
मग कोठें देव जाऊं न सके दुरी । बैसोनि भीतरी राहे कंठीं ॥94॥
राहे व्यापुनियां सकळ शरीर । आपुला विसर पडों नेदी ॥95॥
नेदी दुःख देखों आपुलिया दासा । वारी गर्भवासा यमदूता ॥96॥
तान भूक त्यासी वाहों नेदी चिंता । दिंश्चत हे घेतां नाम होती ॥97॥
होती जीव त्यांचे सकळ ही जंत । परि ते अंकित संचिताचे ॥98॥
चेवले जे कोणी देहअभिमानें । त्यांसी नारायणें कृपा केली ॥99॥
कृपाळू हा देव अनाथा कोंवसा । आह्मी त्याच्या आशा लागलोंसों ॥100॥
लावियेले कासे येणें पांडुरंगें । तुका ह्मणे संगें संतांचिया ॥101॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I shall sing ovis of the God of Pandhari. Panduranga is our very life.

My chitta has been dyed at His feet; therefore let me reap this blessed harvest. This alone shall be my gain in this world: Rama, Krishna, Hari, Narayana.

No amount of austerity or pilgrimage can equal what comes from chanting Narayana's Name to Tuka. The dust of the saints' feet is honored as holy by all the sacred sites; those who sing Hari's glories are venerated everywhere.

They who sing His praises have become worthy of worship; who can measure their greatness? Even the Vedas could not fathom His extent, nor could the sages with all their inquiry. As one contemplates, He becomes whatever their devotion makes Him; yet no one truly knows the bliss of the Self.

No one grasps this wonder, this divine play. While souls sleep, He conducts the business of creation.

He plays His sport as a game, pervading all yet standing apart, watching. In the end, He alone is real.

All this display is but an actor's costume. He has set the world spinning with the sense of 'I' and 'mine.' Who causes beings to experience what they experience? Entangled in sense pleasures, they have forgotten You, lost in children, wealth, and greed.

Greed swallows the hook of desperate hope; the fish, having taken the bait, writhes in agony. Their agony would cease if they would only remember this Vitthal.

But such remembrance comes only through the company of saints, or through the merit of past lives. The fruits of past actions across three lifetimes are realized through experience.

What one has done, one receives; what one does next shapes the future. Knowing what lies ahead, accumulate good merit; honor the guests, the gods, and the brahmins.

The cycle of birth does not break so easily for worldly people; practice dharma for the sake of a better future. Perform chanting, austerity, rituals, and worship.

The saints have established this path. The prescribed actions and pure conduct, through them one will reach God in time.

The selfless and generous one arrives swiftly. He who has conquered the great enemy of desire prevails.

Unless the root of desire is severed, do not claim to be liberated. Do not claim to be a scholar or a reciter just because you chant mantras and syllables.

Worldly people have been led astray by their own preferences, by the pride of the body, by vanity and pretense. True happiness comes only through the essence of devotion: the Name of Rama always on the lips.

The utterance of Rama settles on the tongue only through the merit of countless births. What merit can stand before the Name of Rama? What are those petty rituals and sacrifices? Rituals, sacrifices, and austerities only perpetuate the world; without the Name, they cannot cut through it.

Without the Name, how can the ocean of existence be crossed? There is no other wisdom. The great devotees and sages know this: the Name is the treasury of nectar's joy.

The essence of nectar, the seed of the highest truth, the innermost secret of secrets is Rama's Name. The Name has delivered countless wrongdoers beyond all measure.

This is the well-known truth of the Puranas. This joy we shall take at all times, performing the pure story of Hari.

During the kirtan, everyone attains samadhi; at once the wicked mind is destroyed. Greed, delusion, desire, craving, and illusion all perish when one sings the glories of Vitthoba.

The virtues of Vitthoba are dear to me. Nothing else attracts my chitta.

Let no one suggest any other remedy to me. My chitta holds no second allegiance.

Knowing this, I have given my whole being. I have firmly grasped His feet.

Having grasped them, I will not let go even at the cost of my life. My resolve is fixed in this alone.

I have severed my ties with worldly existence and settled firmly here. Panduranga has accepted me and dyed me in His own color.

He has spread His wing of protection over me; God Himself takes care of us. When God protects you, what can others do? Their schemes have no power there.

Not even Death can enter when one is called the servant of Vitthoba. We are the cherished little ones of Vitthoba.

The demons and Death tremble in dread of His devotees. The fear and authority of the Lord span all three worlds.

Remember Him, all of you. Do not lie sleeping, anyone.

Wake up and escape the mines of rebirth and the agonies of the womb. The suffering of the womb and the punishment of Yama bring great torment in the coming and going.

Hunger, thirst, and pain afflict the living. After death, the messengers of Yama torment.

You say, who has ever witnessed this? The Kauravas plunged headlong into hell. Duryodhana was cast into the boiling cauldron of Kumbhipaka and could not show his face to Dharma.

Dharma, the compassionate one, came near and sat in the nether world, unable to rise. He cannot rise, no matter what is tried.

God makes each one reap what they have sown. Those who have forgotten Narayana in this world truly dwell in the most terrible hells.

Accept the words of the saints as truth and go, all of you, to Narayana for refuge. Do not put your trust in anything else: not in sons, wife, hopes, or wealth.

Wealth, greed, and the snares of attachment are traps set by the messengers of Yama. Their agents have muzzled your mouths so that the word Narayana cannot escape your lips.

They do not let pure wisdom touch your chitta; all manner of karmic burdens keep God far away. Many who considered themselves wise have been estranged by slander, ego, disputation, and divisiveness.

Strife, division, and slander are the tricks of Death. They entrap the idle tongue with pointless words.

The idle mind wanders, unable to decide whether God exists or not, and is yoked to the mill of worry. In the end, Death places a rope around your neck and tidies up the loose ends of desire.

If desire's company persists at the hour of death, one takes birth again, even if endowed with the power of austerity. Those who have held God in their chitta will remember their former states.

Remember God at the hour of death. That is why the courageous ones have given their lives for this purpose.

The sages gave up all pleasures and ate roots and tubers in the forest. The root of happiness lies in God; without Him, one is dragged to the lowest state even for the smallest lapse.

The best path and the best effort is this: hold the feet of Vitthoba. Once settled at Vitthoba's feet with devotion, there is no need to go anywhere else, not even to the forest.

Even the weak are saved by Vitthoba's Name, even those who have no store of pure merit. If the chitta is pure, what marvel is it? Simply saying 'Vitthal' again and again is enough.

No one holds the hour of their death in their own hands. The course of destiny cannot be known.

Destiny cannot be escaped without experiencing it. Knowing this, purify your store of merit.

Strive for your own welfare during this human birth. If you use the human birth to find Narayana, well and good.

Otherwise you are lower than a beast. Animals know nothing of sin or merit.

Humans, however, are aware of such things. People know what sin and merit are, for they see others experiencing the results.

Some will suffer the sorrows of worldly life. The varieties of misery are beyond telling.

They want to eat well, dress well, and live in comfort. This is the only ambition of their worldly existence.

The world has swallowed everyone whole, feeding them the fruit of rebirth. Unless the root of desire is cut, the cycle of the womb cannot be ended.

Without effort, nothing is gained. One should not passively ride the current of fate.

Do not force your body upon thorns. Do not carelessly grasp a serpent.

What lies in one's own hands can be worked for one's benefit. Therefore the sages have spoken.

They teach these people, even if it means embarrassing them, for they themselves are the ones who crossed over. They raised their arms in the sand-bed of Pandhari.

The ocean of grace is Panduranga. At His feet, the river of sins is washed clean, when those sacred feet are contemplated in the chitta.

By whose contemplation stones were made to float, He liberates by the mere touch of His feet. Clap your hands and there is no need to sit in rigid meditation.

Take the joy of divine love in the company of saints. In the company of saints, do kirtan and tell the sacred story.

The joyful path is simply Rama, Rama. Then God can go nowhere far.

He settles within and stays in your throat. He pervades the entire body and does not let you forget Him.

He does not let His servants see suffering. He wards off rebirth and the messengers of Yama.

He does not let hunger, thirst, or worry touch His devotees. All anxieties are dispelled by taking the Name.

All living beings are also souls, yet they are bound by their accumulated actions. Those who were puffed up with body-pride were shown Narayana's grace.

This God is compassionate, the shelter of the helpless. We are attached to His hope.

Panduranga has yoked us to Himself. Says Tuka, through the company of the saints.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I will sing ovis of the God of Pandhari. Panduranga is our very life. My heart has been dyed at his feet; so let me reap this blessed harvest. This alone shall be my gain in this world: Rama, Krishna, Hari, Narayana. When Tuka chants the Name of Narayana, no heaps of austerity or pilgrimage can equal it. The pilgrimage sites honor on their heads the dust of the saints' feet, the saints who sing Hari's praise. Those who sing his praise have become worthy of worship; who can tell their greatness? The Vedas did not reach the end of him, nor the sages with all their inquiry. He becomes whatever their devotion makes him; yet no one truly knows the bliss of the Self. No one grasps this wonder, this play. While souls sleep, he carries on the work of creation. He plays his sport as a game, filling all things yet standing apart and watching. In the end he alone is real; all this show is an actor's costume. He has set the world spinning with the sense of I and mine. Who makes beings taste what they taste? Tangled in the senses, they have forgotten you, lost in daughters, sons, kin, and the greed for wealth. Greed swallows the hook of desperate hope; the fish, having taken the bait, writhes. Its writhing would grow still if only it remembered this Vitthal. But such remembering comes through the company of saints, or through the merit of past lives. The fruits of three lifetimes are known through what one tastes; what you have done you receive, and what you do now shapes what comes. Knowing what lies ahead, gather good merit; honor the guests, the gods, the brahmins. The chain of birth does not break so easily for worldly people; do dharma for the sake of a better future. Do chanting, austerity, ritual, and worship; the saints have laid down this road. Through the prescribed acts and pure conduct, one reaches God in time. The selfless and generous one comes swiftly; he who has conquered the great enemy of desire prevails. Until the root of desire is cut, let no one claim to be freed. Do not claim to be a scholar or reciter just because you chant mantras and syllables. Worldly people have been led astray by their own likings, by pride of body, by show and vanity. True joy comes only through the heart of devotion: the Name of Rama always on the lips. The utterance of Rama settles on the tongue only through the merit of countless births. What merit can stand before the Name of Rama? What are those poor little rituals and sacrifices? Rituals, sacrifices, austerities only keep the world going; without the Name they cannot cut through it. Without the Name, how is the ocean of existence crossed? There is no other wisdom. The great devotees and sages know this: the Name is the treasury of nectar's joy. The essence of nectar, the seed of the highest truth, the secret of secrets, is Rama's Name. By the Name countless wrongdoers beyond measure have been saved; this is the known truth of the Puranas. This joy we shall take at all times, doing the pure story of Hari. During the kirtan everyone falls into samadhi; at once the wicked mind is destroyed. Greed, delusion, hope, craving, and illusion all perish when one sings the praise of Vithoba. The virtues of Vithoba are dear to me; nothing else holds my heart. Let no one suggest any other remedy to me; my heart holds no second love. Knowing this, I have given my whole being and firmly grasped his feet. Having grasped them, I will not let go even at the cost of my life; my resolve is fixed in this alone. I have cut my ties with the world and settled firmly here. Panduranga has accepted me and dyed me in his own color. He has spread his wing of shelter over me; God himself takes care of us. When God guards you, what can others do? Their schemes have no power there. Death cannot enter when one is called the servant of Vithoba. We are the cherished little ones of Vithoba; the demons and Death tremble in dread of his devotees. His fear and authority span the three worlds. Remember him, all of you. Do not lie sleeping. Wake and escape the wombs of rebirth and the agonies of the womb. The pain of the womb, the rod of Yama, the great weariness of coming and going. Hunger, thirst, and pain strike the living; after death the messengers of Yama torment. You ask, who has ever seen this? The Kauravas plunged into hell. Duryodhana was cast into the boiling cauldron and could not show his face to Dharma. Dharma, the kind one, came near and sat in the lower world, unable to rise. He cannot rise, no matter what is tried; God makes each reap what he has sown. Those who forgot Narayana in the world truly dwell in the most terrible hells. Take the saints' words as true, and go, all of you, to Narayana for refuge. Do not put your trust in anything else: not sons, wife, hopes, wealth. Wealth, greed, the snares of attachment, these are the traps set by Yama's messengers. His agents have gagged your mouths so the word Narayana cannot escape. They do not let pure wisdom touch your heart; all kinds of karma keep God far off. Many who thought themselves wise have been estranged by slander, ego, dispute, and division. Strife, division, and slander are the tricks of Death; they trap the idle tongue with empty words. The idle mind cannot decide whether God is or is not, and is yoked to the mill of worry. In the end Death puts a rope around your neck and tidies up the loose ends of desire. If desire's company stays at the hour of death, one takes birth again, even with the power of austerity. Those who held God in their hearts will remember their former states. Remember God at the hour of death. That is why the brave ones gave their lives for this. The sages gave up all pleasures and ate roots and tubers in the forest. The root of joy is God; for a small lapse one is dragged to the lowest state. The best path, the best effort, is this: hold the feet of Vithoba. Once settled at Vithoba's feet with love, there is no need to go anywhere, not even to the forest. Even the weak are saved by Vithoba's Name, even those with no store of pure merit. If the merit is pure, what marvel is that? Simply saying Vitthal again and again is enough. No one holds the hour of death in his own hands; the course of destiny cannot be known. Destiny cannot be escaped without being lived through; knowing this, purify your store of merit. Strive for your own good in this human birth. If you use this human birth to find Narayana, well and good; otherwise you are lower than a beast. Animals know nothing of sin or merit; humans know these things. People know what sin and merit are, for they see others reap their results. Some will suffer the sorrows of the world; the kinds of misery are beyond telling. To eat well, dress well, live in comfort, that is their only ambition in the world. The world has swallowed everyone whole, feeding them the fruit of rebirth. Until the root of desire is cut, the cycle of the womb cannot end. Without effort nothing is won; do not passively ride the current of fate. Do not throw your body on thorns; do not carelessly grasp a serpent. What is in your own hands can be worked for your good; so the sages have said. They teach these people even at the cost of shaming them, for they themselves are the ones who crossed. They raised their arms in the sand-bed of Pandhari: Panduranga, the ocean of grace. At his feet the river of sins is washed clean, when those feet are held in the heart. By whose contemplation stones were made to float, he lifts you up by the touch of his feet. Clap your hands; you need not sit in rigid meditation. Take the joy of love in the company of saints. In the company of saints do kirtan and tell the sacred story; the joyful means is Rama, Rama. Then God cannot go anywhere far; he settles within and stays in your throat. He fills the whole body and does not let you forget him. He does not let his servant see suffering; he wards off the womb and the messengers of Yama. He does not let hunger, thirst, or worry touch them; all cares go when the Name is taken. They too are living beings, all of them, yet bound by their gathered karma. Those who woke from body-pride, on them Narayana showed his grace. This God is kind, the shelter of the helpless; we have set our hope on him. Tuka says: Panduranga has yoked us to himself, through the company of the saints.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a sweeping teaching-poem whose single insistence is that the Name of God, taken in the company of saints, is the only real gain a human birth offers. Tukaram opens by saying his heart is already dyed at Panduranga's feet, then argues that no austerity or pilgrimage can match the Name, because even the Vedas and sages never reached the end of God, who plays the whole world as a sport while remaining the one reality behind it. He names the trap plainly: people are hooked like a fish on the bait of wealth, sons, and wife, and forget Vitthal, so the cycle of wombs and the rod of Yama keep turning. Against this he sets a stark warning, illustrated by the Kauravas and Duryodhana fallen into hell, that to forget Narayana is to dwell in terrible suffering, while desire clinging at the hour of death drags one back into birth. The call to self-examination is urgent and double: this human birth is the one chance, lower than a beast if wasted, so do not sleep, do not trust wife or wealth, but cut the root of desire and take refuge. The resolution is mercy: God shelters even the weak and merit-less who simply say Vitthal, runs after his devotee, fills his very body, and yokes him to himself, so the whole effort comes down to kirtan in the company of saints.

GATHA 4478 Krishna Leela

The gopis' longing, Krishna comes to the ardent

मराठी मूळ

विचार करिती बैसोनि गौळणी । ज्या कृष्णकामिनी कामातुरा ॥1॥
एकांत एकल्या एका च सुखाच्या । आवडती त्यांच्या गोष्टी त्यांला ॥2॥
तर्कवितकिर्णी दुराविल्या दुरी । मौन त्या परिचारी आरंभिलें ॥3॥
कुशळा कवित्या कथित्या लोभिका । त्या ही येथें नका आह्मांपाशीं ॥4॥
भेऊनियां जना एकी सवा जाल्या । वाती विझविल्या दाटोबळें ॥6॥
कृष्णसुख नाहीं कळलें मानसीं । निंदिती त्या त्यासी कृष्णरता ॥7॥
तो नये जवळी देखोनि कोल्हाळ । ह्मणउनि समेळ मेळविला ॥8॥
अंतरीं कोमळा बाहेरी निर्मळा । तल्लीन त्या बाळा कृष्णध्यानीं ॥9॥
हरिरूपीं दृिष्ट कानीं त्या च गोष्टी । आळंगिती कंठीं एका एकी ॥10॥
न साहे वियोग करिती रोदना । भ्रमिष्ट भावना देहाचिया ॥11॥
विसरल्या मागें गृह सुत पती । अवस्था याचिती गोविंदाची ॥12॥
अवस्था लागोनि निवळ चि ठेल्या । एका एकी जाल्या कृष्णरूपा॥13॥
कृष्णा ह्मणोनियां देती आलिंगन । विरहताप तेणें निवारेना ॥14॥
ताप कोण वारी गोविंदावांचूनि । साच तो नयनीं न देखतां ॥15॥
न देखतां त्यांचा प्राण रिघों पाहे । आजि कामास ये उसिर केला ॥16॥
रित्या ज्ञानगोष्टी तयां नावडती । आिंळगण प्रीती कृष्णाचिया ॥17॥
मागें कांहीं आह्मी चुकलों त्याची सेवा । असेल या देवा राग आला ॥18॥
आठविती मागें पापपुण्यदोष । परिहार एकीस एक देती ॥19॥
अनुतापें जाल्या संतप्त त्या बाळा । टाकुनि विव्हळा धरणी अंग ॥20॥
जाणोनि चरित्र जवळी च होता । आली त्या अनंता कृपा मग ॥21॥
होउनी प्रगट दाखविलें रूप । तापत्रय ताप निवविले ॥22॥
निवालेया देखोनि कृष्णाचें श्रीमुख । शोक मोह दुःख दुरावला॥23॥
साच भाव त्यांचा आणुनियां मना । आळंगितो राणा वैकुंठींचा॥24॥
हरिअंगसंगें हरिरूप जाल्या । बोलों विसरल्या तया सुखा ॥25॥
व्यभिचारभावें भोगिलें अनंता । वतौनि असतां घराचारी ॥26॥
सकळा चोरोनि हरि जयां चित्तीं । धन्य त्या नांदती तयामध्यें॥27॥
उणें पुरें त्यांचें पडों नेंदी कांहीं । राखे सर्वां ठायीं देव तयां ॥28॥
न कळे लाघव ब्रह्मादिकां भाव । भक्तिभावें देव केला तैसा ॥29॥
तुका ह्मणे त्यांचा धन्य व्यभिचार । साधिलें अपार निजसुख ॥30॥

बाळक्रीडा प्रारंभ अभंग - 100

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gopis, consumed with longing for Krishna, gathered in solitude to deliberate. Alone, each devoted to one joy, they spoke of Him and delighted in the telling.

Those given to argument and speculation were kept at a distance. Those cunning, eloquent, narrative, and calculating ones were told, 'Do not come near us.' In fear of the people, they merged together as one and forcefully extinguished every lamp.

The bliss of Krishna is not known to the mind; those who do not know it slander the Krishna-devoted ones. Krishna does not come near where there is noise and commotion.

Therefore they gathered in silent harmony. Inwardly tender, outwardly pure, those maidens were absorbed in Krishna's meditation.

Their eyes were fixed on Hari's form, their ears on His stories alone. They embraced one another, each clasping the other to her chitta.

They could not endure separation and wept aloud, bewildered, forgetful of their own bodies. They forgot their homes, their children, and their husbands, calling out for Govinda's presence.

Lost in that state, they became still and clear. Each one became the very form of Krishna.

Crying 'Krishna!' they gave one another embraces, yet the fire of separation was not quenched. Who can cool this fever except Govinda Himself, when He is not seen with one's own eyes? Without seeing Him, their life-breath threatened to depart.

'He has made us wait too long,' they said. Empty philosophical talk did not please them; they craved only Krishna's embrace.

'Perhaps we have failed in some past service to Him. Perhaps God is angry.' They searched their past deeds for sins and merits, each offering the other consolation.

Overcome with remorse, those maidens burned with anguish and threw their bodies down upon the earth. Knowing their devotion, Krishna, who had been near all along, was moved to compassion.

He appeared and revealed His form, cooling the triple fire of their suffering. Seeing Krishna's blessed face, all grief, delusion, and sorrow vanished.

Perceiving the truth of their devotion, the Lord of Vaikuntha embraced them. Through union with Hari's body, they became Hari's form.

Words fell silent before that joy. Though outwardly living as householders, they had secretly embraced the Infinite through love.

Blessed are those who, while concealing Hari in their chitta, dwell among the people. God does not let them lack for anything.

He protects them in every place. The subtlety of this devotion is beyond even Brahma's grasp.

Through devotion, God is shaped to the devotee's vision. Says Tuka, blessed is their so-called transgression. Through it, they attained the supreme bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The gopis, burning with longing for Krishna, sat together in secret to deliberate. Alone, each one fixed on a single joy, they spoke of him and delighted in the telling. Those given to argument and clever talk they kept at a distance, and began their silent service. The skilled, the eloquent, the calculating ones, those too they told: do not come near us. In fear of the people they merged into one and forcefully put out every lamp. The bliss of Krishna is not known to such minds; those who do not know it slander the ones who love Krishna. He does not come near where there is noise; so they gathered in silent harmony. Tender within, pure without, those young women were absorbed in the meditation of Krishna. Their eyes fixed on Hari's form, their ears on his stories alone, they embraced one another, each clasping the other to her heart. They could not bear separation; they wept aloud, bewildered, forgetful of their own bodies. They forgot their homes, their children, their husbands, crying out for Govinda's presence. Lost in that state, they grew still and clear; one by one they became the very form of Krishna. Crying Krishna, they gave one another embraces, yet the fire of separation was not quenched. Who can cool this fever but Govinda himself, when he is not seen with the eyes? Without seeing him their life-breath was ready to leave. He has made us wait too long, they said. Empty philosophical talk did not please them; they craved only Krishna's embrace. Perhaps we failed in some past service to him; perhaps God is angry. They searched their past deeds for sins and merits, each consoling the other. Overcome with remorse, those young women burned with anguish and threw their bodies to the ground. Knowing their devotion, Krishna, who had been near all along, was moved to pity. He appeared and showed his form, cooling the triple fire of their suffering. Seeing Krishna's blessed face, all grief and delusion and sorrow went far away. Seeing the truth of their devotion, the Lord of Vaikuntha embraced them. Through union with Hari's body they became Hari's form; words fell silent before that joy. Through love they enjoyed the Infinite, though they lived outwardly as householders. Blessed are those who hide Hari in their hearts and dwell among the people. God does not let them lack anything; he guards them in every place. The subtlety of this is beyond even Brahma's grasp; through devotion God is made to take that shape. Tuka says: blessed is their so-called transgression; through it they won the supreme bliss.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the gopis' love for Krishna as the model of total, single-pointed devotion. He shows them deliberately shutting out the arguers, the clever, and the calculating, because Krishna does not come where there is noise and disputation; only the tender and silent heart can hold him. Their longing is so complete that they forget home, husband, and children, weep, lose their own bodies, and dissolve until each becomes the very form of Krishna, and even then the fire of separation only burns hotter. The turn comes through their remorse and self-searching, after which Krishna, who was near all along, reveals himself and cools the threefold fire by his mere face. The closing line is the radical claim: their love looked like transgression by worldly measure, yet Tukaram blesses it, because longing that abandons everything for God is itself the highest attainment, and the householder who hides Hari in the heart is guarded everywhere.

GATHA 4479 Prayers

Prayer, the Name that burns karma

मराठी मूळ

देवा आदिदेवा जगत्रया जीवा । परियेसीं केशवा विनंती माझी ॥1॥
माझी वाणी तुझे वर्णी तुझे वर्णी गुण नाम । ऐसी देई प्रेम कांहीं कळा ॥2॥
कळा तुजपाशीं आमचें जीवन । उचित करून देई आह्मां ॥3॥
आह्मां शरणागतां तुझा चि आधार। तूं तंव सागर कृपासिंधु ॥4॥
सिंधु पायावाट होय तुझ्या नामें । जाळीं महाकर्में दुस्तरें तीं ॥5॥
तीं फळें उत्तमें तुझा निजध्यास । नाहीं गर्भवास सेविलिया ॥6॥
सेविंलिया राम कृष्ण नारायण । नाहीं त्या बंधन संसाराचें ॥7॥
संसार तें काय तृणवतमय । अग्न त्यासी खाय क्षणमात्रें ॥8॥
क्षणमात्रें जाळी दोषांचिया रासी । निंद्य उत्तमासी वंद्य करी ॥9॥
करीं ि◌ब्रदें साच आपलीं आपण । पतितपावन दिनानाथ ॥10॥
नाथ अनाथाचा पति गोपिकांचा । पुरवी चित्तींचा मनोरथ ॥11॥
चित्तीं जें धरावें तुका ह्मणे दासीं । पुरविता होसी मनोरथ ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

O God of gods, O Life of the three worlds, hear my prayer, O Keshava. Let my speech ever sing Your virtues and Your Name.

Grant me some art of love for this. The art of our life resides with You.

Grant us what is fitting. We who have surrendered have no support but You.

You are the ocean, the sea of compassion. By Your Name, the ocean itself makes way.

Your Name burns the greatest, most impassable karmas. The finest fruit of steadfast contemplation on You is freedom from the womb.

One who serves Rama, Krishna, and Narayana has no bonds of worldly existence. What is this world but a thing of straw? Fire devours it in an instant.

In a moment it burns away heaps of sins, transforming the despised into the honored. Make Your own pledges come true.

O Purifier of the Fallen, Lord of the humble. Lord of the helpless, Husband of the gopis, You fulfill the chitta's desire.

Says Tuka, whatever the servants hold in their chitta, You fulfill their every wish.

IN PLAIN WORDS

O God of gods, O Life of the three worlds, hear my prayer, O Keshava. Let my speech sing your virtues and your Name. Grant me some art of love for this. The art of our life rests with you. Grant us what is fitting. We who have surrendered have no support but you. You are the ocean, the sea of compassion. By your Name the ocean itself makes way. Your Name burns the greatest, most impassable karmas. The finest fruit of steady contemplation on you is freedom from the womb. One who serves Rama, Krishna, and Narayana has no bonds of the world. What is this world but a thing of straw? Fire eats it up in a moment. In a moment it burns away heaps of sins, turning the despised into the honored. Make your own pledges come true, O Purifier of the Fallen, Lord of the humble. Lord of the helpless, Husband of the gopis, you fulfill the heart's desire. Tuka says: whatever your servants hold in their heart, you fulfill their every wish.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is a direct prayer, and its one request is small in words and large in stakes: let my speech be given over to singing God's Name. Tukaram surrenders entirely, saying the surrendered have no support but Keshava, the sea of compassion. He then names what the Name does: it parts the impassable ocean of existence, burns the heaviest karmas in a moment, and frees one from the cycle of the womb. He calls the whole world a thing of straw that fire eats up at once, so that the despised sinner is turned into the honored. The close holds God to his own titles, Purifier of the Fallen and Lord of the helpless, asking him to make his pledges true and fulfill what the devotee holds in the heart.

GATHA 4480 Krishna Leela

Krishna's birth, chains fall on their own

मराठी मूळ

मनोरथ जैसे गोकुळींच्या जना । पुरवावी वासना तयापरी ॥1॥
रिण फेडावया अवतार केला । अविनाश आला आकारासी ॥2॥
सीण जाला वसुदेवदेवकीस । वधी बाळें कंस दुराचारी ॥3॥
दुराचारियासी नाहीं भूतदया । आप पर तया पाप पुण्य ॥4॥
पुण्यकाळ त्याचा राहिलासे उभा । देवकीच्या गर्भा देव आले ॥5॥
गर्भासी तयांच्य आला नारायण । तुटलें बंधन आपेंआप॥6॥
आपेंआप बेडए तुटल्या शंकळा । बंदाच्या आगळा किलिया कोंडे ॥7॥
कोंडमार केला होता बहु दिस । सोडवी निमिष्य नलगतां ॥8॥
न कळे तो त्यासी सांगितला भाव । आपणासी ठाव नंदाघरीं ॥9॥
नंदाघरीं जातां येतां वसुदेवा । नाहीं जाला गोवा सवें देव ॥10॥
सवें देव तया आड नये कांहीं । तुका ह्मणे नाहीं भय चिंता ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As the wishes of Gokul's people were fulfilled, so may our desires be granted. To repay a debt, the Incarnation was taken.

The Imperishable One came into form. Vasudeva and Devaki had suffered long.

The wicked Kamsa slaughtered infants. One without compassion, knowing neither sin nor merit, held sway.

But the holy hour arrived, and God entered Devaki's womb. God came to that womb as Narayana.

The chains and shackles fell apart on their own. The bolts and bars of the prison opened by themselves.

The captivity had been long and harsh, yet liberation came in an instant. The plan was whispered without Kamsa's knowledge.

God found His place at Nanda's home. As Vasudeva traveled to and from Nanda's house, God went along without any obstacle.

Says Tuka, with God alongside, nothing stands in the way. There is no fear, no worry.

IN PLAIN WORDS

As the wishes of Gokul's people were fulfilled, so may our longing be granted. To repay a debt, the Incarnation was taken; the Imperishable came into form. Vasudeva and Devaki had suffered long. The wicked Kamsa slaughtered their infants. The cruel one has no compassion for any creature; for him there is no self and other, no sin and merit. But his holy hour came to a stand, and God entered Devaki's womb. Narayana came to that womb, and the chains broke of themselves. By themselves the fetters and shackles fell apart; the bolts and bars of the prison opened. The captivity had lasted many days; he set them free in less than a breath. Without Kamsa's knowing, the plan was told: God's own place was at Nanda's home. As Vasudeva went to and came from Nanda's house, there was no obstacle, for God went with him. Tuka says: with God alongside, nothing stands in the way; there is no fear, no worry.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells the night of Krishna's birth to show how God's presence dissolves every barrier. He frames the avatara as the repaying of a debt: the Imperishable takes form to end the long suffering of Vasudeva and Devaki under the merciless Kamsa, who kills infants and recognizes no line between sin and merit. The moment Narayana enters Devaki's womb, the holy hour arrives and the prison undoes itself, chains, shackles, bolts, and bars opening with no human effort. The closing teaching draws the point out of the story: when God goes with you, as he went with Vasudeva carrying the child to Nanda's house, no obstacle can hold, and fear and worry simply have no place.

GATHA 4481 Krishna Leela

Krishna comes to Gokul, knowledge without austerity

मराठी मूळ

चिंता ते पळाली गोकुळाबाहेरी । प्रवेश भीतरी केला देवें ॥1॥
देव आला घरा नंदाचिया गांवा । धन्य त्याच्या दैवा दैव आलें ॥2॥
आलें अविनाश धरूनि आकार । दैत्याचा संहार करावया ॥3॥
करावया भक्तजनाचें पालण । आले रामकृष्ण गोकुळासी ॥4॥
गोकुळीं आनंद प्रगटलें सुख । निर्भर हे लोक घरोघरीं ॥5॥
घरोघरीं जाला लक्ष्मीचा वास । दैन्यदिाळद्रास त्रास आला ॥6॥
आला नारायण तयांच्या अंतरा । दया क्षमा नरा नारीलोकां ॥7॥
लोकां गोकुळींच्या जालें ब्रह्मज्ञान । केलियावांचून जपतपें ॥8॥
केलीं नारायणें आपुलीं अंकित । तो चि त्यांचें हित सर्व जाणे ॥10॥
सर्व जाणे एक विष्णु साच खरा । आणीक दुसरा नाहींनाहीं ॥11॥
नाहीं भक्ता दुजें तिहीं त्रिभुवनीं । एका चक्रपाणीवांचूनियां ॥12॥
याच्या सुखसंगें घेती गर्भवास । तुका ह्मणे आस त्यजूनियां ॥13॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Worry fled beyond the borders of Gokul. God entered within.

God came to the home of Nanda in Gokul. Blessed was their destiny; fortune itself arrived.

The Imperishable took on a form to destroy the demons. To nurture and protect His devotees, Rama and Krishna came to Gokul.

Joy was born in Gokul; happiness overflowed. Every household was filled with delight.

In every home, Lakshmi took up residence. Poverty and misery were driven away.

Narayana entered the hearts of all. Compassion and forgiveness filled the men and women.

The people of Gokul attained the knowledge of Brahman without performing any austerities. Narayana made them all His own.

He alone knows their true welfare. Says Tuka, Vishnu alone is the one true reality. There is nothing else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Worry fled beyond the borders of Gokul; God entered within. God came to the home of Nanda, to his village. Blessed was their destiny; fortune itself arrived. The Imperishable came, taking a form, to destroy the demons. To nurture and protect his devotees, Rama and Krishna came to Gokul. Joy was born in Gokul; happiness broke open. The people overflowed, house by house. In every home Lakshmi took up dwelling; poverty and misery were driven off. Narayana entered their hearts; compassion and forgiveness filled the men and women. The people of Gokul gained the knowledge of Brahman without doing any chanting or austerity. Narayana made them all his own; he alone knows their true welfare. Vishnu alone is the one true reality, and there is no other, none. For the devotee there is no second in the three worlds, except the one who holds the discus. With the joy of his company they take birth in the womb, Tuka says, casting off all longing.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram celebrates Krishna's coming to Gokul as a flood of grace that needs no spiritual technique. God enters, worry flees, and the village fills with joy, with Lakshmi dwelling in every house and poverty driven out. The striking claim is that the cowherds gained the knowledge of Brahman without any chanting or austerity, simply because Narayana entered their hearts and made them his own. From this Tukaram lifts a teaching of strict oneness: Vishnu alone is real, there is no second in the three worlds, and the holder of the discus is the devotee's only refuge. The closing line says that for such joy of his company even rebirth in the womb is worth taking, once all other longing is cast aside.

GATHA 4482 Krishna Leela

The gopis' merit, Krishna the unchanging crystal

मराठी मूळ

यांच्या पूर्वपुण्या कोण लेखा करी । जिंहीं तो मुरारी खेळविला ॥1॥
खेळविला जिंहीं अंतर्बाहएसुखें । मेळवूनि मुखें चुंबन दिलें ॥2॥
दिलें त्यांसी सुख अंतरीचें देवें । जिंहीं एका भावें जाणितला ॥3॥
जाणितला तिहीं कामातुर नारी । कृष्णभोगावरी चित्त ज्यांचें ॥4॥
ज्यांचें कृष्णीं तन मन जालें रत । गृह पति सुत विसरल्या ॥5॥
विष तयां जालें धन मान जन । वसविती वन एकांतीं त्या ॥6॥
एकांतीं त्या जाती हरीसी घेउनि । भोगइच्छाधणी फेडावया ॥7॥
वयाच्या संपन्ना तैसा त्यांकारणें । अंतरींचा देणें इच्छाभोग ॥8॥
भोग त्याग नाहीं दोन्ही जयापासीं । तुका ह्मणे जैसी स्पटिकशिळा ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Who can count the past merits of those who played with Murari? They played with Him in both inner and outer delight, pressing their faces to His and kissing Him. God gave them the joy of His innermost chitta, for they knew Him with single devotion.

Those passion-filled women who knew Him, whose minds were fixed on the delight of Krishna, whose every thought was absorbed in Krishna, forgot their homes, husbands, and children. Wealth, honor, and people became poison to them.

They went to the forest seeking solitude. They took Hari with them into seclusion to satisfy the hunger of their longing.

He gave them the inner fulfillment they desired, matching the fullness of their youth. Says Tuka, neither enjoyment nor renunciation exists as two in His presence. He is like a crystal, clear and unchanged.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who can count the past merits of those who played with Murari? They played with him in inner and outer delight, pressing their faces to his and giving him kisses. God gave them the joy of his innermost heart, for they knew him with single love. Those passion-filled women knew him, their minds fixed on the delight of Krishna. Their body and mind grew absorbed in Krishna; they forgot home, husband, and children. Wealth, honor, and people became poison to them; they made the forest their dwelling, in solitude. Into that solitude they go, taking Hari with them, to satisfy the hunger of their longing. Matching the fullness of their youth, he gives them the inner enjoyment they desire. He in whom enjoyment and renunciation are not two, Tuka says, is like a slab of crystal.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram praises the gopis' immense store of past merit, which let them play with Krishna in body and soul, and reads their passion as the highest knowing love. Their absorption is total: home, husband, children forgotten, and wealth, honor, and society turned to poison, so that they carry Hari into the forest's solitude to satisfy a longing that is finally for God himself. The point he draws is about God's nature, not theirs: he meets each one exactly according to her desire, giving the inner enjoyment she craves. The closing image of the crystal slab says God himself is unchanged by what passes through him; in him enjoyment and renunciation are not two opposing things but one clear, untouched reality.

GATHA 4483 Krishna Leela

God the crystal, guileless, runs to the faithful

मराठी मूळ

शिळा स्फटिकाची न पालटे भेदें । दाउनियां छंदे जैसी तैसी ॥1॥
जैसा केला तैसा होय क्षणक्षणा । फेडावी वासना भक्तिभावें ॥2॥
फेडावया आला अवघियांची धणी । गोपाळ गौळणी मायबापा ॥3॥
मायबापा सोडविलें बंदीहुनि । चाणूर मदुननी कंसादिक ॥4॥
दिक नाहीं देणें अरिमित्रा एक । पूतना कंटक मुक्त केली ॥5॥
मुक्त केला मामा कंस महादोषी । बाळहत्या रासी पातकांच्या ॥6॥
पाप कोठें राहे हरी आठवितां । भक्ती द्वेषें चिंता जैसा तैसा ॥7॥
साक्षी तयापाशीं पूर्वीलकर्माच्या। बांधला सेवेच्या रुणी देव ॥8॥
देव भोळा धांवे भक्ता पाठोवाठी। उच्चारितां कंठीं मागेंमागें ॥9॥
मानाचा कंटाळा तुका ह्मणे त्यासी। धांवे तो घरासी भाविकांच्या ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The crystal does not change its nature through reflections. It displays colors yet remains as it is.

He becomes whatever one makes of Him, moment by moment, fulfilling desire through devotion. He came to satisfy the longing of all: cowherds, milkmaids, parents.

He freed the parents from captivity and slew Chanura, Mardana, Kamsa, and the rest. He treats friend and foe the same.

He liberated the demoness Putana and all other tormentors. He freed His uncle Kamsa, the great wrongdoer burdened with the massacre of infants.

Where does sin remain when Hari is remembered? Through devotion or even through enmity, He is present just the same. The record of past deeds lies with Him.

God is bound by the debt of service. God, being guileless, runs after His devotees.

When they call His Name, He follows close behind. Says Tuka, He is repelled by pride. He runs to the homes of the faithful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The crystal slab does not change with what falls on it; it shows colors yet stays as it is. He becomes whatever one makes of him, moment by moment, fulfilling desire through devotion. He came to satisfy the longing of all: cowherds, milkmaids, parents. He freed the parents from prison and slew Chanura, Mardana, Kamsa, and the rest. He gives no different treatment to friend and foe alike. He liberated the thorn-like demoness Putana; he freed his own uncle Kamsa, the great sinner, heaped with the killing of infants. Where can sin remain when Hari is remembered? Through devotion or even through enmity, he is present just the same. The record of past deeds lies with him; God is bound by the debt of service. God, being guileless, runs after his devotee; when they chant his Name, he follows close behind. Tuka says: he is wearied by pride, and he runs to the homes of the faithful.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram extends the crystal image: God is like a crystal that takes on every color yet is never altered, becoming whatever the devotee's love shapes him into without losing himself. The startling teaching is his evenhandedness, he gives the same to friend and foe, even liberating the demoness Putana and the infant-killing Kamsa, because in his presence the question of sin dissolves the moment Hari is remembered. He is present whether one comes through devotion or even through hatred, and he keeps the account of every deed. The close names the heart of Tukaram's God: he is guileless and runs after his devotee the instant the Name is chanted, but he is repelled by pride, so he comes to the homes of the simple and faithful, not the self-important.

GATHA 4484

Krishna Leela

God bound by milkmaids, caught by the simple

मराठी मूळ

चारी वेद ज्याची कीर्ती वाखाणिती । बांधवी तो हातीं गौळणीच्या ॥1॥
गौळणिया गळा बांधिती धारणीं । पायां चक्रपाणी लागे तया ॥2॥
तयाघरीं रिघे चोरावया लोणी । रितें पाळतूनि शिरे माजी ॥3॥
माजी शिरोनियां नवनीत खाये । कवाड तें आहे जैसें तैसें ॥4॥
जैसा तैसा आहे अंतर्बाहएात्कारीं । ह्मणउनि चोरी नसंपडे ॥5॥
नसंपडे तयां करितां खटपट । वाउगे बोभाट वर्माविण ॥6॥
वर्म जाणती त्या एकल्या एकटा । बैसतील वाटा निरोधूनि ॥7॥
निवांत राहिल्या निःसंग होऊनि । निश्चळ ज्या ध्यानीं कृष्णध्यान ॥8॥
न ये क्षणभरी योगियांचे ध्यानीं । धरिती गौळणी भाविका त्या ॥9॥
भाविका तयांसी येतो काकुलती। शाहाण्या मरती नसंपडे ॥10॥
नलगे वेचावी टोळी धनानांवें । तुका ह्मणें भावें चाड एका ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The four Vedas sing His praises, yet He is bound by the hands of milkmaids. The milkmaids tie Him by the waist, and the Lord of the discus bows at their feet.

He enters their homes to steal butter, slipping in through any gap He finds. He enters and eats the fresh butter, leaving the doors exactly as they were.

Inside and outside, He is the same. Therefore His thievery is never detected.

Those who try and try cannot catch Him by cunning. Only those who know the secret can catch Him: single-minded women waiting alone in ambush.

When they are still, empty of self, and absorbed in Krishna's meditation, He who cannot be held even for a moment by the yogis' concentration is held by those simple milkmaids. He comes pleading to them.

The clever may die trying, yet He eludes them. Says Tuka, there is no need to spend armies of wealth. Only one thing is needed: pure devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He whose fame the four Vedas recount is bound by the hands of the milkmaids. The milkmaids tie him by the waist, and the Lord of the discus bows at their feet. He enters their homes to steal butter, slipping in through any gap. He goes in and eats the fresh butter, and the door stays just as it was. Inside and outside he is the same; so his theft is never caught. Those who try and try cannot catch him by scheming; the outcry without knowing the secret is useless. Only those who know the secret can catch him: single women waiting alone in ambush. When they stay quiet, free of self, still in the meditation of Krishna, he who cannot be held for a moment in the yogis' meditation is held by those faithful milkmaids. He comes pleading to them. The clever may die trying, yet he is not caught. There is no need to spend armies of wealth. Tuka says: through devotion, only one thing is wanted.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the Lord whom the four Vedas cannot exhaust against the milkmaids who tie him by the waist and make him bow at their feet. The butter-thief images carry the teaching: God is the same inside and outside, so cunning and clamor can never catch him, and the clever may die in the attempt. He is caught only by the woman who waits in still ambush, emptied of self and absorbed in Krishna; what no yogi's meditation can hold for a moment, simple loving devotion holds fast, until God himself comes pleading. The close states the lesson plainly: no wealth or technique is required, only single-hearted love. The way to seize the unseizable God is to stop scheming and simply long for him.

GATHA 4485 Surrender and Acceptance

Surrender, Yama's rod for the faithless

मराठी मूळ

चाड अनन्याची धरी नारायण । आपणासमान करी रंका ॥1॥
रंक होती राजे यमाचिये घरीं । आचरणें बरी नाहीं ह्मणवोनि ॥2॥
नसंपडे इंद्रचंद्रब्रह्मादिकां । अभिमानें एका तिळमात्रें॥3॥
तिळमात्र जरी होय अभिमान । मेरु तो समान भार देवा ॥4॥
भार पृथिवीचा वाहिला सकळ । जड होती खळ दुष्ट लोक ॥5॥
दुष्ट अभक्त जे निष्ठ मानसीं । केली हे तयांसी यमपुरी ॥6॥
यमदूत त्यांसी करिती यातना । नाहीं नारायणा भजिजेलें ॥7॥
जे नाहीं भजले एका भावें हरी । तयां दंड करी यमधर्म ॥8॥
यमधर्म ह्मणे तयां दोषियांसी । कां रे केशवासी चुकलेती ॥9॥
चुकलेती कथा पुराणश्रवण । होते तुह्मां कान डोळे मुख ॥10॥
कान डोळे मुख संतांची संगति । न धरा च चित्तीं सांगितलें ॥11॥
सांगितलें संतीं तुह्मां उगवूनि । गर्भाद येऊनि यमदंड ॥12॥
दंडूं आह्मीं रागें ह्मणे यमधर्म । देवा होय श्रम दुर्जनाचा ॥13॥
दुर्जनाचा याणें करूनि संहार । पूर्णअवतार रामकृष्ण ॥14॥
रामकृष्णनामें रंगले जे नर । तुका ह्मणे घर वैकुंठी त्यां ॥15॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana cherishes the one who is utterly surrendered and makes even a pauper equal to Himself. Kings become beggars in Yama's domain because their conduct was not righteous.

He cannot be grasped by Indra, Chandra, or Brahma, not even through a sesame seed's worth of pride. If there is even a sesame seed's pride, that pride weighs as heavy as Mount Meru upon God.

God bears the burden of the whole earth, yet the wicked and the faithless are heavy to Him. For those who are cruel, faithless, and hard of chitta, the city of Yama was made.

The messengers of Yama torment those who never worshiped Narayana. Those who did not worship Hari with single devotion are punished by Yama.

Yama says to those wrongdoers, 'Why did you stray from Keshava? You had ears, eyes, and a mouth. You had the company of saints.

Yet you did not hold to what was taught.' The saints explained everything, from the womb onward, about the rod of Yama. 'We shall punish them severely,' says Yama.

God Himself is wearied by the burden of the wicked. To destroy such evildoers, the full incarnation of Rama and Krishna was taken.

Those who are dyed in the Name of Rama and Krishna, says Tuka, have their home in Vaikuntha.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana cherishes the one who is wholly surrendered and makes even a pauper equal to himself. Kings become beggars in Yama's house, because their conduct was not good. He is not caught by Indra, Chandra, or Brahma if there is even a sesame seed of pride. If there is a sesame seed of pride, that pride weighs as heavy as Mount Meru upon God. God bears the whole weight of the earth, yet the wicked and faithless are heavy to him. For the cruel and faithless, hard of heart, the city of Yama was made. Yama's messengers torment those who never worshiped Narayana. Those who did not worship Hari with single love are punished by Yama's law. Yama says to those wrongdoers: why did you stray from Keshava? You had ears, eyes, a mouth; you had the company of saints. Yet you did not hold in your heart what was taught. The saints explained it all, from the womb onward, the rod of Yama. We shall punish them in our anger, says Yama's law. God himself is wearied by the burden of the wicked. To destroy such evildoers, the full incarnation of Rama and Krishna was taken. Those who are dyed in the Name of Rama and Krishna, Tuka says, have their home in Vaikuntha.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram contrasts two destinies that turn entirely on pride and surrender. The wholly surrendered one is raised to God's own level, even from beggary, while kings of bad conduct are reduced to beggars in Yama's house. The hard teaching is that the smallest pride, a sesame seed's worth, weighs on God like Mount Meru, so that not even Indra or Brahma can grasp him through it. The middle of the poem stages Yama's interrogation of the faithless: they had ears, eyes, mouth, and the company of saints, and were warned from the womb itself, yet did not hold the teaching, and so they meet the rod. The point is not gloating over the damned but self-examination, since the warning was always available; the resolution is that the avatara of Rama and Krishna came precisely to destroy this burden of wickedness, and those dyed in the Name find their home in Vaikuntha.

GATHA 4486 Devotion to Vitthal

Gokul love, God serves devotees

मराठी मूळ

वैकुंठीच्या लोकां दुर्लभ हरिजन । तया नारायण समागमें ॥1॥
समागम त्यांचा धरिला अनंतें । जिहीं चित्तवित्त समपिनलें ॥2॥
समथॉ तीं गाती हरीचे पवाडे । येर ते बापुडे रावराणे॥3॥
रामकृष्णें केलें कौतुक गोकुळीं । गोपाळांचे मेळीं गाई चारी ॥4॥
गाई चारी मोहोरी पांवा वाहे पाठीं । धन्य जाळी काठी कांबळीचें ॥5॥
काय गिौळयांच्या होत्या पुण्यरासी । आणीक त्या ह्मैसी गाई पशु ॥6॥
सुख तें अमुप लुटिलें सकळीं । गोपिका गोपाळीं धणीवरि ॥7॥
धणीवरि त्यांसी सांगितली मात । जयाचें जें आर्त तयापरी ॥8॥
परी याचि तुह्मी आइका नवळ । दुर्गम जो खोल साधनासि ॥9॥
शिक लावूनियां घालिती बाहेरी । पाहाती भीतरी सवें चि तो ॥10॥
तोंडाकडे त्यांच्या पाहे कवतुकें । शिव्या देतां सुखें हासतुसे ॥11॥
हांसतसे शिव्या देतां त्या गौळणी । मरतां जपध्यानीं न बोले तो ॥12॥
तो जेंजें करिल तें दिसे उत्तम । तुका ह्मणे वर्म दावी सोपें ॥13॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The people of Vaikuntha consider the company of Hari's devotees a rare treasure. Ananta embraced those who surrendered their chitta and wealth to Him.

They are the truly powerful, singing Hari's heroic deeds. All other kings and rulers are mere wretches beside them.

Rama and Krishna performed wonders in Gokul, herding cows among the cowherds. He herded cows, carried a flute on His back.

Blessed were His staff, His blanket, His stick. He who is beyond even the contemplation of the three worlds runs to round up the cattle.

He wears the garlands they offer on His own head. The food offering He desires is a morsel begged from their hands.

He snatches morsels from their mouths and eats their leftovers with relish. He weaves peacock feathers into His crown and dances, clapping to their rhythms.

Those with whom Hari dances have forgotten all body-consciousness. Says Tuka, the worship of the faithful is received by God unknowingly. Without being asked, He reveals His true abode.

To reach that abode, He wanders behind them, in the company of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Even the people of Vaikuntha rarely reach the company of Hari's devotees; with those devotees Narayana keeps company. Ananta holds close those who gave Him their whole heart and all they own. They are the truly strong ones, who sing Hari's great deeds; beside them, kings and rulers are only poor wretches. Rama and Krishna made their play in Gokul, herding the cattle among the cowherds. He herds the cattle, carries a flute on His back. Blessed is His staff, His stick, His coarse blanket. What store of merit did the cowherds have? And their buffaloes too, their cows, their beasts. They all plundered boundless joy, the gopis and the cowherds, to their fill. He told each one according to her own longing, and satisfied her to the full. But hear this wonder, He says: He is hard to reach by hard practice. They scold Him and push Him outside; He looks in and stays right with them. He watches their faces with delight; when they curse Him He only laughs, glad. Those cowherd women curse Him and He laughs; the man who will not come for chanting and meditation at the hour of death. Whatever He does looks good to them. Tuka says: He shows the secret, and it is easy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is inverting the usual ladder of holiness. The heavenly beings of Vaikuntha envy the simple cowherds of Gokul, because God keeps company not with the high but with those who hand Him their whole heart and all they own. He measures greatness by that surrender: the cowherds who sing Hari's deeds outrank every king. The point of the herding and the flute and the rough blanket is that God who is unreachable by hard discipline comes close to people who simply scold Him, push Him out, and live with Him like family. The closing contrast is sharp: the devotee who curses Him familiarly is nearer than the man who only remembers God formally, in chanting and meditation, at the end. Tuka calls this the secret, and says it is easy: love, not technique, is the door.

GATHA 4487 Krishna Leela

Gopi love, answered in kind

मराठी मूळ

दावी वर्म सोपें भाविकां गोपाळां । वाहे त्यांच्या गळां पाले माळा ॥1॥
मान देती आधीं मागतील डाव । देवा तें गौरव माने सुख ॥2॥
मानती ते मंत्र हमामा हुंबरी । सिंतोडिती वरि स्नान तेणें ॥3॥
वस्त्रें घोंगडिया घालुनियां तळीं । वरी वनमाळी बैसविती ॥4॥
तिंहीं लोकांसी जो दुर्लभ चिंतना । तो धांवे गोधना वळतियां ॥5॥
यांच्या वचनाचीं पुष्पें वाहे शिरीं । नैवेद्य त्यांकरीं कवळ मागे ॥6॥
त्यांचिये मुखींचें हिरोनियां घ्यावें। उच्छिष्ट तें खावें धणीवरी ॥7॥
वरी माथां गुंफे मोरपिसांवेटी । नाचे टाळी पिटी त्यांच्या छंदें ॥8॥
छंदें नाचतील जयासवें हरी । देहभाव वरी विसरलीं ॥9॥
विसरली वरी देहाची भावना । ते चि नारायणा सर्वपूजा ॥10॥
पूजा भाविकांची न कळतां घ्यावी । न मागतां दावी निज ठाव ॥11॥
ठाव पावावया हिंडे मागें मागें । तुका ह्मणे संगें भक्तांचिया ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God gave His devotees the bliss of His own Self. The gopis, those virtuous women, were embraced by Him.

God owed them a debt across many births. When they sulked, He soothed them, taking oaths and performing acts of atonement.

He told all the gopis, 'I shall never leave you.' 'You are in My heart with your whole being.' 'Let your devotion toward Me be as Mine is toward you. I am truly the same for you.' 'Let your own hearts be your witness.

Narayana is the guarantee for us both.' He pledges His own oath. God speaks truth according to each one's devotion, bringing it into experience.

He consoles each one in a different way. What one knows, the other does not.

No two share the same devotion. God receives each one's offering distinctly.

He does not let it be known that He is equally present everywhere. To all of them, in all conditions, He is the same.

Whatever desire each one holds in her heart, the Dark-Hued Lord fulfills it. He fulfilled the heart's desire of each gopi, and of all the people of Gokul.

He planted the seed of longing in Gokul's people, settling Govinda in their hearts. He even stole away their minds, every one of them.

The love they bore for their cowherds was beyond measure. Says Tuka, they loved the Lord of Vaikuntha. They forgot everything else.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He shows the easy secret to the simple cowherds; He wears the garlands they offer around His own neck. They claim their turn first, and He gives them honor; God takes their demand as a joy. Their crude shouts and teasing He counts as sacred chants; the water they splash on Him He counts as His bath. They spread their clothes and coarse blankets on the ground and seat Vanamali, the Lord of the Forest, on top. He whom the three worlds cannot reach even in thought, He runs to round up their cattle. He wears the flowers of their words on His head; the food He asks of them is a morsel from their hands. He snatches the morsels from their mouths and eats their leavings to the full. He weaves a crest of peacock feathers, and dances and claps to their tune. Those with whom Hari dances forget the body. When the body's sense is forgotten, that itself is the whole worship of Narayana. He takes the faithful one's worship without their knowing; unasked, He shows His own dwelling. To give them that place He goes wandering after them. Tuka says: He goes in the company of His devotees.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is showing how God receives love on the lover's own terms. The cowherds offer no formal ritual; their rough teasing becomes His sacred chants, their splashed water becomes His bath, their blanket becomes His seat. He who cannot be reached by the three worlds' contemplation gladly takes a half-eaten morsel from their hands and dances to their rhythm. The hinge of the poem is the line that forgetting the body is itself the whole worship of Narayana: self-forgetful love is the real offering, not the correct procedure. And the direction of seeking is reversed: God takes their worship unasked and goes wandering after them, rather than waiting to be sought.

GATHA 4488 Krishna Leela

Each gopi loved her own way

मराठी मूळ

भक्तजनां दिलें निजसुख देवें । गोपिका त्या भावें आळंगिल्या ॥1॥
आळंगिल्या गोपी गुणवंता नारी । त्यांच्या जन्मांतरीं हरि ऋणी ॥2॥
रुसलिया त्यांचें करी समाधान । करविता आण क्रिया करी ॥3॥
क्रिया करी तुह्मां न वजे पासुनि । अवघियाजणी गोपिकांसी ॥4॥
गोपिकांसी ह्मणे वैकुंठींचा पति । तुह्मीं माझ्या चित्तीं सर्वभावें ॥5॥
भाव जैसा माझ्याठायीं तुह्मी धरा । तैसा चि मी खरा तुह्मांलागीं ॥6॥
तुह्मां कळों द्या हा माझा साच भाव । तुमचा चि जीव तुह्मां ग्वाही ॥7॥
ग्वाही तुह्मां आह्मां असे नारायण। आपली च आण वाहातसे ॥8॥
सत्य बोले देव भक्तिभाव जैसा। अनुभवें रसा आणूनियां ॥9॥
यांसी बुझावितो वेगळाल्या भावें । एकीचें हें ठावें नाहीं एकी ॥10॥
एकी क्रिया नाहीं आवघियांचा भाव । पृथक हा देव घेतो तैसें ॥11॥
तैसें कळों नेदी जो मी कोठें नाहीं । अवघियांचे ठायीं जैसा तैसा ॥12॥
जैसा मनोरथ जये चित्तीं काम । तैसा मेघशाम पुरवितो ॥13॥
पुरविले मनोरथ गोपिकांचे । आणीक लोकांचे गोकुळींच्या ॥14॥
गोकुळींच्या लोकां लावियेला छंद । बैसला गोविंद त्याचा चित्तीं ॥15॥
चित्तें ही चोरुनि घेतलीं सकळा । आवडी गोपाळांवरी तयां ॥16॥
आवडे तयांसी वैकुंठनायक । गेलीं सकिळक विसरोनि ॥17॥
निंदा स्तुती कोणी न करी कोणाची । नाहीं या देहाची शुद्ध कोणा॥18॥
कोणासी नाठवे कन्या पुत्र माया । देव ह्मणुनि तया चुंबन देती ॥19॥
देती या टाकून भ्रतारांसी घरीं । लाज ते अंतरीं आथी च ना ॥20॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Absorbed in Hari's form, the desires of the gopis became transcendent. These daughters-in-law of the cowherds were indifferent to all else.

Krishna assumed the forms of their husbands and consorted with each in her own home. He performed wonders according to each one's nature.

Some saw Him as Hari, others as their child. The devotion of each was unique, and so His form appeared accordingly.

They regarded their mantras to be the sounds of joking and teasing. Their ritual bath was the water splashed upon each other in play.

They spread out their shawls and blankets beneath Him and seated the Lord of the Forest upon them. Those three worlds found Him unattainable in contemplation, yet He ran to round up their cattle.

He wore their garlands of flowers on His head. The food He craved was a morsel begged from their hands.

He snatched morsels from their mouths and ate them. He wove peacock feathers into His crest and danced, clapping and swaying to their rhythms.

Those with whom Hari danced forgot all sense of the body. Says Tuka, the worship of the faithful is accepted by God without their knowing. Unasked, He reveals His own dwelling.

He wanders after them, seeking their company.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God gave His devotees the joy of His own Self; with love He embraced those gopis. He embraced the gopis, those women rich in virtue; Hari is in debt to them across their births. When they sulk He soothes them; He swears oaths and does whatever it takes. He swears: I will never leave you, He tells all the gopis. The Lord of Vaikuntha says to the gopis: you are in My heart with your whole being. Hold the same love toward Me, and I am just as true toward you. Let this true love of Mine become clear to you; your own life is your witness. Narayana stands as witness for you and for us; He swears His own oath. God speaks the truth as each one's love is, bringing it into living experience. He consoles each with a different feeling; what one knows, another does not. There is no single act, no single love for all; God receives each one apart, as she is. So He does not let it be known that there is nowhere He is not; He is the same in all of them, just as He is. Whatever the wish, whatever the longing in a heart, the dark cloud-hued one fulfills it. He fulfilled the gopis' wishes, and the wishes of the people of Gokul. He set a longing in the people of Gokul; Govinda settled in their hearts. He stole away the hearts of them all; their love went out to the cowherd boys. The Lord of Vaikuntha is dear to them; they have forgotten everything. No one praises or blames anyone; no one keeps any sense of the body. No one remembers daughter, son, or worldly bond; they call Him God and give Him kisses. They leave their husbands at home and go; there is no shame left in their hearts at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

The claim here is that God meets each devotee exactly as that devotee loves Him, and even calls Himself indebted to that love. He gives oaths, mirrors back each gopi's feeling, and fulfills the precise wish each heart holds, consoling each in her own way so that no two share the same experience. Tukaram says God hides the fact that He is equally everywhere, because love wants its own particular Beloved, not a general presence. The strong ending, gopis leaving husbands and shame behind to kiss Him, is not literal scandal but the measure of a love that has burned away every lesser attachment and self-consciousness; the test it sets for the reader is whether anything in us is still held back from God.

GATHA 4489 Krishna Leela

Many forms, one Lord at play

मराठी मूळ

मनें हरिरूपीं गुंतल्या वासना । उदास या सुना गौळयांच्या ॥1॥
यांच्या भ्रतारांचीं धरूनियां रूपें । त्यांच्या घरीं त्यांपें भोग करी ॥2॥
करी कवतुक त्याचे तयापरी । एकां दिसे हरि एकां लेंक ॥3॥
एक भाव नाहीं सकळांच्या चित्तीं । ह्मणऊनि प्रीति तैसें रूप ॥4॥
रूप याचें आहे अवघें चि एक । परि कवतुक दाखविलें ॥5॥
लेंकरूं न कळे स्थूल कीं लहान । खेळे नारायण कवतुकें ॥6॥
कवतुक केलें सोंग बहुरूप । तुका ह्मणे बाप जगाचा हा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gopis' desires were wholly absorbed in Hari's form, and the daughters-in-law of the cowherds were indifferent to all else. Taking the forms of their husbands, Krishna went to their homes and enjoyed with each one.

He played each marvel according to its kind. To some He appeared as Hari, to others as their child.

The devotion of each was different, and so was His form. His form is in reality one, yet He displayed this wonder.

The child does not know large from small. Narayana plays with innocent delight.

Says Tuka, what a spectacle He created: the many-formed disguise of the Father of the world.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Their minds, their desires, are caught up in Hari's form; these daughters-in-law of the cowherds are cold to all else. Taking the forms of their husbands, He goes to their homes and gives them His company there. He plays each wonder according to its kind; to some He looks like Hari, to some like their child. The same love is not in everyone's heart; so as their love is, such is the form. His form is in truth only one, yet He showed this wonder. The child does not know large from small; Narayana plays with simple delight. He made this play, this disguise of many forms. Tuka says: He is the Father of the world.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is explaining why the one God appears in many shapes. The form a devotee sees is shaped by the love she brings: to one He is the Beloved, to another the child, because no two hearts hold the same feeling. He insists the form is in reality single; the variety is His play, His chosen disguise. The image of the child who does not know large from small points to a God who delights without calculation, giving Himself wholly into each relationship. The closing line keeps this from becoming mere whimsy: this many-faced player is the Father of the whole world, holding all those forms at once.

GATHA 4490 Krishna Leela

Greed blinds, God stands near

मराठी मूळ

जगाचा हा बाप दाखविलें माये । माती खातां जाये मारावया ॥1॥
मारावया तिणें उगारिली काठी । भुवनें त्या पोटीं चौदा देखे ॥2॥
देखे भयानक झांकियेले डोळे । मागुता तो खेळे तयेपुढे ॥3॥
पुढें रिघोनियां घाली गळां कव । कळों नेदी माव मायावंता ॥4॥
मायावंत विश्वरूप काय जाणे । माझें माझें ह्मणे बाळ देवा ॥5॥
बाळपणीं रीठा रगडिला दाढे । मारियेले गाढे कागबग ॥6॥
गळां बांधऊनि उखळासी दावें । उन्मळी त्या भावें विमळार्जुन ॥7॥
न कळे जुनाट जगाचा जीवन । घातलें मोहन गौळयांसी ॥8॥
सिंकीं उतरूनि खाय नवनीत । न कळे बहुत होय तरी ॥9॥
तरीं दुधडेरे भरले रांजण । खाय ते भरून दावी दुणी ॥10॥
दुणी जालें त्याचा मानिती संतोष दुभत्याची आस धरूनियां ॥11॥
आशाबद्धा देव असोनि जवळी । नेणती ते काळीं स्वार्थामुळें ॥12॥
मुळें याच देव न कळे तयांसी । चित्त आशापाशीं गोवियेलें ॥13॥
लेंकरूं आमचें ह्मणे दसवंती । नंदाचिये चित्तीं तो चि भाव ॥14॥
भाव जाणावया चरित्र दाखवी। घुसिळतां रवी डेरियांत ॥15॥
डेरियांत लोणी खादलें रिघोनि । पाहे तों जननी हातीं लागे ॥16॥
हातीं धरूनियां काढिला बाहेरी। देखोनियां करी चोज त्यासी ॥17॥
सिकवी विचार नेणे त्याची गती । होता कोणे रीती डेरियांत ॥18॥
यांसी पुत्रलोभें न कळे हा भाव । कळों नेदी माव देव त्यांसी ॥19॥
त्यांसी मायामोहजाळ घाली फांस । देर आपणास कळों नेदी ॥20॥
नेदी राहों भाव लोभिकांचे चित्तीं । जाणतां चि होती अंधळीं तीं ॥21॥
अंधळीं तीं तुका ह्मणे संवसारीं । जिहीं नाहीं हरि ओळखिला ॥22॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is the Father of the world, yet His mother came to punish Him for eating dirt. She raised a stick to beat Him, and in His mouth she saw all fourteen worlds.

Terrified by that fearful vision, she shut her eyes. And there He was again before her, playing as before.

He ran ahead and threw His arms around her neck, concealing His divine illusion from the Great Enchanter's mother. She, the mother of the Cosmic Illusionist, knew nothing of His universal form.

'Mine, mine,' she said, claiming the infant God. In infancy He crushed the demoness Putana with His teeth.

He slew the mighty demons Kaga and Baka. His mother tied Him to a mortar with a rope, and He uprooted the twin Arjuna trees.

The ancient Lord of the universe, the life of all creation, cast His spell upon the cowherds. He climbed down from the hanging pot and ate the butter; no matter how much He consumed, there was always more.

The churning pots and milk vessels stayed full. He ate them full and showed them doubled over.

The people counted themselves fortunate in their increasing yield, holding on to hopes of still more butter. Yet, though God stood beside them, they did not recognize Him, their minds tethered to worldly desires.

Because of this, God remained unknown to them, for their chitta were snared by hope. 'This child is ours,' said Yashoda.

Nanda's chitta held the same feeling. To reveal their blindness, He let Himself be caught.

Entering the butter pot to eat, His mother found Him and pulled Him out. She saw the marvel but could not make sense of it.

How had He gotten inside with the doors shut? Their love for their son blinded them to the truth. God concealed His mystery from them.

He cast the net of maya and illusion over them, not letting them know His true identity. He does not allow devotion to remain in the chittas of the greedy.

The knowing become blind. Says Tuka, blind are those in this world who have not recognized Hari.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is the Father of the world, yet He showed it to His mother: He ate dirt, and she came to strike Him. She raised the stick to beat Him, and in His mouth she saw the fourteen worlds. She saw that fearful sight and shut her eyes; and again He was playing there before her. He runs ahead and throws His arms around her neck; the Lord of Maya lets none of His magic be known. How could she know the universal form of the Lord of Maya? Mine, mine, says the infant God's mother. As a child He crushed the demoness with His teeth; He killed the strong demons Kaga and Baka. Tied by the neck to the mortar with a rope, with that He uprooted the twin Arjuna trees. The ancient one, the life of the world, is not known; He cast His spell over the cowherds. He takes down the hanging pot and eats the butter; however much He eats, it is not noticed, there is still more. The milk pots and jars stay full; He eats them and shows them doubled again. They count it good fortune that the yield is doubled, holding on to their hope of more milk. Bound by hope, with God right beside them, in that hour they do not know Him, because of their own gain. For this reason God is not known to them; the heart is tangled in the noose of hope. This is our child, says Yashoda; in Nanda's heart is the same feeling. To make their feeling known, He shows His play: while she churns the curd in the pot. He slips in and eats the butter in the pot; when she looks, the mother catches Him by the hand. She takes Him by the hand and pulls Him out; seeing it, she marvels at Him. She tries to make sense of it, but cannot grasp His way: how was He inside the pot? Their love for their son blinds them to this truth; God lets none of His magic be known to them. He throws the net of maya and delusion over them like a snare, and lets none of it be known. He does not let true feeling stay in the hearts of the greedy; even the knowing become blind. Tuka says: blind in this world are those who have not recognized Hari.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram threads the childhood miracles into a single point about seeing and not seeing. Yashoda glimpses the fourteen worlds in the infant's mouth, then shuts her eyes and goes back to mothering Him, because God deliberately covers His own greatness so that her love can stay love. The same veiling falls on the cowherds whose butter never runs out: they read the abundance only as good luck and more profit, and so, with God standing beside them, they miss Him. The named danger is the noose of hope and gain, which tangles the heart and blinds even the clever. The closing turn aims the lesson at us, not at Yashoda's tender blindness: the truly blind are those caught in greed who never recognize Hari at all.

GATHA 4491 Devotion to Vitthal

Single-pointed devotion, the cowherds' rare joy

मराठी मूळ

ओळखी तयांसी होय एका भावें । दुसरिया देवें न पविजे ॥1॥
न पविजे कदा उन्मत्त जालिया । डंबु तो चि वांयां नागवण ॥2॥
वनवास देवाकारणें एकांत । करावीं हीं व्रततपें याग॥3॥
व्रत याग यांसी फळलीं बहुतें । होतीं या संचितें गौळयांची ॥4॥
यांसी देवें तारियेलें न कळतां । मागील अनंता ठावें होतें ॥5॥
होतें तें द्यावया आला नारायण । मायबापां रीण गौळयांचें ॥6॥
गौळयांचें सुख दुर्लभ आणिकां । नाहीं ब्रह्मादिकां तुका ह्मणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He can be known only through single-pointed devotion. By no other means can God be reached.

He can never be attained by the intoxicated and the proud. Pretense and ego are only self-deception.

The purpose of solitude, of forest-dwelling, of vows, austerities, and rituals, is to reach God. All these bore fruit for the cowherds through their accumulated merit.

God saved them without their even knowing it; their past was known to the Infinite One. He came as Narayana to give what was due, to repay His debt to the parents and cowherds.

Says Tuka, the joy of the cowherds is beyond the reach of even Brahma and the gods.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is recognized only by single-pointed love; by no other god is He reached. He is never reached by the drunk and proud; their show is only useless ruin. Forest-dwelling for God's sake, solitude, the keeping of vows and austerities and sacrifices: vow and sacrifice bore much fruit for the cowherds; this was their store of merit. God saved them without their knowing; the Infinite One knew their past. Narayana came to give what was theirs, to repay His debt to the cowherd parents. Tuka says: the joy of the cowherds is hard for others to reach; even Brahma and the gods do not have it.

WHAT IT MEANS

This poem names the one thing that reaches God and the one thing that bars the way. He is recognized only by undivided love; pride and intoxicated self-display, even when dressed as devotion, end in nothing but ruin. Tukaram does not throw away vows, austerities, and forest discipline; he says their whole purpose is to reach God, and that the cowherds' simpler love already carried the merit such practices aim at. The striking claim is that God saved them before they even knew it and came as if repaying a debt He owed them. The verse ends by ranking their joy above Brahma and the gods, putting humble single-hearted love higher than any cosmic station.

GATHA 4492 Krishna Leela

Two homes, parents drowned in Him

मराठी मूळ

नेणतियांसाटीं नेणता लाहान । थिंकोनि भोजन मागे माये ॥1॥
माया दोनी यास बाप नारायणा । सारखी भावना तयांवरी ॥2॥
तयांवरी त्याचा समचित्त भाव । देवकीवसुदेव नंद दोघे ॥3॥
घेउनियां एके ठायीं अवतार । एकीं केला थोर वाढवूनि॥4॥
उणा पुरा यासी नाहीं कोणी ठाव । सारिखा चि देव अवघियांसी॥5॥
यासी दोनी ठाव सारिखे अनंता । आधील मागुता वाढला तो ॥6॥
वाढला तो सेवाभक्तिचिया गुणें । उपचारमिष्टान्नें करूनियां ॥7॥
करोनियां सायास मेळविलें धन । तें ही कृष्णार्पण केलें तीहीं ॥8॥
कृष्णासी सकळ गाई घोडे ह्मैसी । समर्पिनल्या दासी जीवें भाव॥9॥
जीवें भावें त्याची करितील सेवा । न विसंबती नांवा क्षणभरी॥10॥
क्षणभरी होतां वेगळा तयांस । होती कासावीस प्राण त्यांचे ॥11॥
त्यांचे ध्यानीं मनीं सर्वभावें हरि । देह काम करी चित्त त्यापें ॥12॥
त्याचें चि चिंतन कृष्ण कोठें गेला । कृष्ण हा जेविला नाहीं कृष्ण॥13॥
कृष्ण आला घरा कृष्ण गेला दारा । कृष्ण हा सोयरा भेटों कृष्णा ॥14॥
कृष्ण गातां ओंव्या दळणीं कांडणीं । कृष्ण हा भोजनीं पाचारिती ॥15॥
कृष्ण तयां ध्यानीं आसनीं शयनीं । कृष्ण देखे स्वपनीं कृष्णरूप ॥16॥
कृष्ण त्यांस दिसे आभास दुश्चतां । धन्य मातापिता तुका ह्मणे ॥17॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the sake of the innocent, He became small and innocent, crying and begging His mother for food. He had two sets of parents, Narayana's love equal for both.

His regard was balanced and impartial: Devaki and Vasudeva on one side, Nanda and Yashoda on the other. He was born in one place, raised to greatness in another.

He shows neither more nor less to anyone; God is the same to all. Both homes were equal to Him.

What grew from before continued growing. He grew through the nourishment of devoted service, through lovingly prepared offerings.

Through their efforts and earnings, they offered their wealth, and all of it was surrendered to Krishna. They gave Krishna everything: cows, horses, buffaloes, servants, their very lives.

They served Him with all their being and did not leave His Name for even a moment. Even a moment apart from Him made their jivas frantic and distressed.

Their thoughts, meditations, and entire being were devoted to Hari. The body went through its work, but the chitta was with Him.

Their constant thought was: 'Where has Krishna gone? Has Krishna eaten? Has Krishna not?' 'Krishna has come home, Krishna has gone out. Krishna is our kinsman.

Let us meet Krishna.' Singing ovis of Krishna while grinding and pounding, calling Krishna at mealtimes. Krishna in their waking, in their sitting, in their sleeping.

Krishna in their dreams, Krishna's form everywhere. Krishna appeared to them even in passing shadows and fleeting worries.

Says Tuka, blessed are the mother and father of such a child.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For the simple ones He became small and simple; crying, He begs His mother for food. He has two mothers and Narayana for father; His feeling is the same toward them. Toward them His heart is even and equal: Devaki and Vasudeva, and Nanda, the two pairs. He took birth in one place; in the other He was raised to greatness. He has no place for more or less; God is the same to all. Both homes are equal to the Infinite One; He grew where He was raised, the latter home. He grew through the strength of their loving service, through their care and the sweet food they made. With great effort they gathered wealth, and all of it they offered to Krishna. To Krishna they gave their cows, horses, buffaloes; the servant-women gave their very lives in love. With heart and soul they serve Him; they cannot bear to be apart from His Name for a moment. To be parted from Him even a moment makes their breath gasp in distress. In their meditation and mind, with their whole being, is Hari; the body does its work, the heart is with Him. Their one thought: where has Krishna gone? Has Krishna eaten or not? Krishna has come home, Krishna has gone out; Krishna is our kinsman, let us meet Krishna. Singing songs of Krishna while grinding and pounding, they call on Krishna at their meals. Krishna in their meditation, their sitting, their lying down; Krishna they see in dreams, the form of Krishna. Krishna they see even in a passing shadow when distracted. Tuka says: blessed are that mother and father.

WHAT IT MEANS

The verse holds two truths together: God is impartial, and God lets Himself be utterly possessed by love. He gives equal regard to both his birth parents and his foster parents, showing no more or less to anyone; yet He grows up in Gokul fed by service and love, accepting all they own and even their lives. Tukaram then paints constant remembrance as the form their love takes: the hands grind and pound while the heart is wholly on Krishna, His name spoken at meals, His form seen in sleep and even in a passing shadow. This is the picture of a mind so saturated with God that nothing else fully registers. The benediction at the end blesses Nanda and Yashoda, holding up such absorbed, all-day remembrance as the life worth envying.

GATHA 4493 Krishna Leela

Taste Him once, never return

मराठी मूळ

कृष्ण हा परिचारी कृष्ण हा वेव्हारी । कृष्ण घ्या वो नारी आणिकी ह्मणे ॥1॥
ह्मणे कृष्णाविण कैसें तुह्मां गमे । विळ हा करमे वांयांविण ॥2॥
वांयांविण तुह्मीं पिटीत्या चाकटी । घ्या गे जगजेठी क्षणभरी ॥3॥
क्षणभरी याच्या सुखाचा सोहळा । पहा एकवेळा घेऊनियां ॥4॥
याचें सुख तुह्मां कळलियावरि । मग दारोदारीं न फिराल ॥5॥
लटिकें हें तुह्मां वाटेल खेळणें । एका कृष्णाविणें आवघें चि ॥6॥
अवघ्यांचा तुह्मीं टाकाल सांगात । घेऊनि अनंत जाल राना ॥7॥
नावडे तुह्मांस आणीक बोलिलें । मग हें लागलें हरिध्यान ॥8॥
न करा हा मग या जीवा वेगळा । टोंकवाल बाळा आणिका ही ॥9॥
आणिका ही तुह्मा येती काकुलती। जवळी इच्छती क्षण बैसों ॥10॥
बैसों चला पाहों गोपाळाचें मुख। एकी एक सुख सांगतील ॥11॥
सांगे जंव ऐसी मात दसवंती । तंव धरिती चित्तीं बाळा ॥12॥
बाळा एकी घरा घेउनियां जाती । नाहीं त्या परती तुका ह्मणे ॥13॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The women say, 'Krishna is our attendant, Krishna is our dealer. Take Krishna, O women, give Him to one another.' Yashoda says, 'How do you pass the time without Krishna? How does the day go by?' 'Why do you stand empty-handed, clapping in vain? Take the Lord of the World for even a moment.' 'Once you taste His joy, you will never wander door to door again.' 'All this play will seem false to you, everything except Krishna.' 'You will abandon every companion and go with Krishna alone to the wilderness.' 'No other words will please you once this Hari-meditation has taken root.' 'You will not then make Him separate from your jiva.

You will urge even others toward Him.' 'Others too will come pleading to you, longing to sit near Him for a moment.' 'Come, let us sit and gaze at Gopala's face,' they tell each other, sharing news of their joy. Says Tuka, some women take the child home. They do not bring Him back.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Krishna is our helper, Krishna is our companion in work; take Krishna, O women, says one to another. How do you pass the time without Krishna? she says; the hour goes by in waste. For nothing you sit clapping your hands; take the Lord of the World for even a moment. For just a moment look upon the joy of Him; take Him once and see. Once you know His joy you will not wander door to door again. This play will seem false to you; everything is empty except Krishna alone. You will leave the company of everyone and take the Infinite One and go to the forest. No other talk will please you once this meditation on Hari has taken hold. Then you will not let Him be apart from your life; you will draw even others toward the child. Others too will come begging to you, longing to sit by Him a moment. Come, let us sit and look at Gopala's face, they tell one another, sharing their joy. While Yashoda is speaking such words, they take the child to their hearts. Some women take the child home. Tuka says: they do not bring Him back.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is one devotee urging another to taste God just once, sure that one taste will change everything. The argument runs through the poem: try Him for a moment, and you will stop wandering door to door, every other pleasure will look hollow, and you will want to draw others in too. The drift is toward total claim: the lover ends up leaving all company for the Infinite One alone. The quiet final line, that the women who take the child home do not bring Him back, lands the stakes plainly. Once God is truly received into the heart, He is not handed back; that is the cost and the gift of the first taste.

GATHA 4494

Krishna Leela

Lost in Krishna, distinctions forgotten

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे पुन्हा न येती मागुत्या । कृष्णासीं खेळतां दिवस गमे ॥1॥
दिवस राती कांहीं नाठवे तयांसी । पाहातां मुखासी कृष्णाचिया ॥2॥
याच्या मुखें नये डोळयासी वीट । राहिले हे नीट ताटस्थ चि ॥3॥
ताटस्थ राहिलें सकळ शरीर । इंिद्रयें व्यापार विसरलीं ॥4॥
विसरल्या तान भुक घर दार । नाहीं हा विचार आहों कोठें ॥5॥
कोठें असों कोण जाला वेळ काळ । नाठवे सकळ विसरल्या ॥6॥
विसरल्या आह्मीं कोणीये जातीच्या। वर्णा ही चहूंच्या एक जाल्या ॥7॥
एक जाल्या तेव्हां कृष्णाचिया सुखें । निःशंकें भातुकें खेळतील ॥8॥
खेळता भातुकें कृष्णाच्या सहित । नाहीं आशंकित चित्त त्यांचें ॥9॥
चित्तीं तो गोविंद लटिकें दळण । करिती हें जन करी तैसें ॥10॥
जन करी तैसा खेळतील खेळ । अवघा गोपाळ करूनियां ॥11॥
करिती आपला आवघा गोविंद । जना साच फंद लटिका त्या ॥12॥
त्याणीं केला हरि सासुरें माहेर । बंधु हे कुमर दीर भावें ॥13॥
भावना राहिली एकाचिये ठायीं । तुका ह्मणे पायीं गोविंदाचे ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, once gone, they do not return. Playing with Krishna, the day passes unnoticed.

Day and night mean nothing to them, gazing upon Krishna's face. Looking at Him, the eyes never tire.

They remain motionless and still. The whole body becomes transfixed.

The senses forget their functions. They forgot hunger, thirst, home, and threshold.

They did not think about where they were. They forgot what time it was, what moment had passed.

They forgot everything. They forgot what caste they belonged to.

All four varnas became one. Becoming one in Krishna's joy, they played house without a care.

They played house together with Krishna, free of any hesitation. Govinda was in their chitta.

The grinding was only a pretense. The world took it for real, but they played it as a game.

What the world took as serious, they played as sport, making Govinda the center of it all. They made Hari their in-laws' home and their mother's home.

Brothers, husbands, kinsmen, all were cast in the role by that devotion. Says Tuka, all feeling settled at the feet of Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: once gone, they do not come back again; the day passes while they play with Krishna. Day and night mean nothing to them, gazing on Krishna's face. The eyes never tire of His face; they stand fixed and still. The whole body stands transfixed; the senses forget their work. They forget thirst and hunger, home and door; there is no thought of where they are. Where are we, what hour, what time has passed, they remember nothing, they have forgotten. We have forgotten what caste we are; all four classes have become one. Become one, then, in Krishna's joy, they play house without a care. They play house together with Krishna; their hearts hold no doubt. In their hearts is Govinda; the grinding is only a pretense. The world does this for real; they play at it as the world does. The play the world takes as serious, they play as sport, making Gopala the whole of it. They make Govinda their everything; what the world takes as true is false to them. They made Hari their husband's home and their mother's home; brothers, sons, kinsmen, all by their love. All their feeling settled in one place. Tuka says: at the feet of Govinda.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes what total absorption in God does to ordinary life. Time, hunger, place, even the body's sense all drop away under the gaze on Krishna's face, and with them drops caste: all four classes become one in His joy. The poem then draws the line between the world and the devotee through the same daily chores. The world grinds and keeps house in deadly earnest; these lovers do the very same acts as play, because Govinda, not the work, is the real center. Every relation, husband's home, mother's home, brother, son, has been recast as a way of holding Him. The closing image gathers it all: their whole feeling has come to rest at one place, the feet of Govinda.

GATHA 4495 Krishna Leela

Play wedding, One in every role

मराठी मूळ

गोविंद भ्रतार गोविंद मुळहारी । नामें भेद परि एक चि तो ॥1॥
एकाचीं च नामें ठेवियेलीं दोनी । किल्पतील मनीं यावें जावें ॥2॥
जावें यावें तिहीं घरळिचया घरीं । तेथिची सिदोरी तेथें न्यावी ॥3॥
विचारितां दिसे येणें जाणें खोटें । दाविती गोमटें लोका ऐसें ॥4॥
लोक करूनियां साच वर्तताती । तैशा त्या खेळती लटिक्याची ॥5॥
लटिकीं करिती मंगळदायकें । लटिकीं च एकें एकां व्याही ॥6॥
व्याही भाई हरि सोयरा जावायी । अवघियांच्या ठायीं केला एक ॥7॥
एकासि च पावे जें कांहीं करिती । उपचार संपित्त नाना भोग ॥8॥
भोग देती सर्व एका नारायणा । लटिक्या भावना व्याही भाई ॥9॥
लटिका च त्यांणीं केला संवसार । जाणती साचार वेगळा त्या ॥10॥
त्यांणीं मृित्तकेचें करूनि अवघें । खेळतील दोघें पुरुषनारी ॥11॥
पुरुषनारी त्यांणीं ठेवियेलीं नावें । कवतुकभावें विचरती ॥12॥
विचरती जैसे साच भावें लोक । तैसें नाहीं सुख खेळतीया ॥13॥
यांणीं जाणितलें आपआपणया । लटिकें हें वांयां खेळतों तें ॥14॥
खेळतों ते आह्मीं नव्हों नारीनर । ह्मणोनि विकार नाहीं तयां ॥15॥
तया ठावें आहे आह्मी अवघीं एक । ह्मणोनि निःशंक खेळतील ॥16॥
तयां ठावें नाहीं हरिचिया गुणें । आह्मी कोणकोणें काय खेळों ॥17॥
काय खातों आह्मी कासया सांगातें । कैसें हें लागतें नेणों मुखी॥18॥
मुखीं चवी नाहीं वरी अंगीं लाज । वरणा याती काज न धरिती॥19॥
धरितील कांहीं संकोच त्या मना । हांसतां या जना नाइकती॥20॥
नाइकती बोल आणिकांचे कानीं । हरि चित्तीं मनीं बैसलासे ॥21॥
बैसलासे हरि जयांचिये चित्तीं । तयां नावडती मायबापें ॥22॥
मायबापें त्यांचीं नेती पाचारुनि । बळें परि मनीं हरि वसे ॥23॥
वसतील बाळा आपलाले घरीं । ध्यान त्या अंतरीं गोविंदाचें ॥24॥
गोविंदाचें ध्यान निजलिया जाग्या । आणीक वाउग्या न बोलती॥25॥
न बोलती निजलिया हरिविण । जागृति सपन एक जालें ॥26॥
एकविध सुख घेती नित्य बाळा । भ्रमर परिमळालागीं तैशा ॥27॥
तैसा त्यांचा भाव घेतला त्यांपरी । तुका ह्मणे हरि बाळलीला॥28॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Govinda as husband, Govinda as the one to whom the bride is given: different names, but one and the same. They gave Him two names but imagined Him coming and going between homes.

They would go and come between their households, carrying provisions from one place to the other. Upon reflection, all this coming and going is false.

They showed the world a lovely appearance. The world takes life seriously; those women played at life as make-believe.

They performed mock-auspicious ceremonies, pretending to arrange marriages among themselves. The in-laws, brothers, husbands, sons-in-law: all these roles were filled by the One alone.

Whatever they offered, whatever rituals they performed, all the offerings, ceremonies, and pleasures went to the one Narayana. The entire household was a beautiful pretense.

In-laws and brothers were make-believe. Says Tuka, they knew what was truly different. Their so-called married life was a knowing game.

They fashioned everything from clay: pots, vessels, cooking utensils. They played as man and woman, naming things in playful sport.

They played as worldly folk do, but their joy was nothing like the world's. They knew within themselves that their play was an illusion.

'We are playing; we are not really man and woman.' Therefore there was no confusion or desire among them. They knew, 'We are all one.' Therefore they played without any inhibition.

They did not know, by Hari's grace, who was who or what they were playing. They did not know what they ate or why they kept company.

They did not know how this taste came to their mouths. They had no taste for anything else, yet no sense of modesty about it.

They cared nothing for distinctions of caste or status. They held to whatever came, without any self-consciousness.

They did not listen to outsiders' words. Hari was seated in their chitta and minds.

Says Tuka, in those whose chittas Hari has entered, mothers and fathers are not even loved.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Govinda the husband, Govinda the one who gives the bride: the names differ, but He is one and the same. They set two names on the one, and imagine in their minds a coming and going. They go and come between those make-believe homes, carrying provisions from one to the other. Looked at closely, all this going and coming is false; they show the people a lovely sight. The people live it as real; those women play it as make-believe. They make mock auspicious rites; in play one becomes the other's in-law. In-law, brother, kinsman, son-in-law, Hari is made all of them in every place. Whatever they do reaches the One alone: the rites, the wealth, the many offerings. All the offerings go to the one Narayana; in-law and brother are make-believe feeling. They made the whole household a pretense; they truly know that He is apart from it. They make everything out of clay, and the two play, man and woman. They set names of man and woman, and move about in playful delight. They move about as worldly people do in earnest, yet their joy is not like the world's. They know within themselves: this play is empty, we play it for nothing. We who play are not really woman and man; so there is no lust in them. They know we are all one; so they play without any fear. By Hari's grace they do not know who is who, or who plays what. They do not know what they eat or why they keep company; they do not know how this taste comes to their mouths. There is no taste in their mouths, yet no shame on their bodies; they hold no care for class or caste. If their minds feel any shyness, when people laugh they do not hear it. They do not let others' words into their ears; Hari is seated in their hearts and minds. In those whose hearts Hari has entered, mother and father are no longer dear. Their mothers and fathers call and take them away by force, but Hari stays in the mind. The children sit in their own homes, with the meditation of Govinda within. The meditation of Govinda, asleep or awake; they speak nothing else, nothing idle. Asleep, they speak nothing but Hari; waking and dream have become one. The children take this single joy always, as the bee goes for the fragrance. Just so He took their love in their own way. Tuka says: Hari, the child's play.

WHAT IT MEANS

The children's game of pretend weddings becomes Tukaram's picture of a heart that sees through the whole world to the One. Every role they assign, husband, in-law, brother, son-in-law, is secretly filled by Hari alone, and every mock offering reaches Narayana; they perform the household earnestly outside while knowing inside it is play. Because they know they are all one and not really man and woman, the play carries no lust and no shame, and the laughter of onlookers cannot touch them. The deeper turn is that even the players forget who is who, swallowed in a single joy, so that waking and dream become one. Tukaram offers this as the model: like the bee drawn only to fragrance, give the world its outward forms but let the heart rest wholly in Hari, until even mother and father grow distant before that one love.

GATHA 4496 Krishna Leela

Cosmic infant, the leaf of devotion

मराठी मूळ

लीलाविग्रही तो लेववी खाववी । यशोदा बैसवी मांडीवरी ॥1॥
मांडीवरी भार पुष्पाचिये परी । बैसोनियां करी स्तनपान ॥2॥
नभाचा ही साक्षी पाताळापरता । कुर्विाळते माता हातें त्यासि ॥3॥
हातें कुर्वाळुनी मुखीं घाली घांस । पुरे ह्मणे तीस पोट धालें ॥4॥
पोट धालें मग देतसे ढेंकर । भक्तीचें तें फार तुळसीदळ ॥5॥
तुळसीदळ भावें सहित देवापाणी । फार त्याहुनि क्षीरसागरा ॥6॥
क्षीराचा कांटाळा असे एकवेळ । भक्तीचें तें जळ गोड देवा ॥7॥
देवा भक्त जिवाहुनि आवडती । सकळ हि प्रीति त्यांच्याठायीं ॥8॥
त्यांचा हा अंकित सर्व भावें हरि । तुका ह्मणे करी सर्व काज ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He who fills the universe with His play, He lets Yashoda seat Him on her lap, feed Him, and dress Him. She sits Him in her lap, light as a flower, and He suckles at her breast.

He who is the witness of the sky and reaches beyond the netherworld, that One she pats and caresses with her hands. She feeds Him morsels by hand, and He says, 'Enough, my belly is full,' and gives a little belch.

But what fills Him is the tulsi leaf of devotion, offered with faith and water. That is more to Him than the ocean of milk.

He may tire of the milk-ocean at times, but the water offered by a devotee is always sweet to God. Devotees are dearer to God than His own life.

All His love rests with them. Says Tuka, He is entirely in their service. He does their every task.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He who holds the whole play in His form, He lets Yashoda dress Him and feed Him and seat Him on her lap. Light as a flower He is on her lap; sitting there He drinks at her breast. He who is the witness of the sky and beyond the netherworld, that one His mother caresses with her hands. With her hand she caresses Him and puts a morsel in His mouth; He says, enough, my belly is full. His belly full, then He gives a little belch; but a leaf of devotion is much more to Him. A tulsi leaf offered with love and water is far more to Him than the ocean of milk. He may grow weary of milk at times, but the water of devotion is sweet to God. Devotees are dearer to God than His own life; all His love rests with them. Hari is wholly bound to them with His whole heart. Tuka says: He does their every task.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the infinite and the intimate side by side: the One who witnesses the whole cosmos lets Yashoda dress Him, feed Him by hand, and burp Him like any baby. The turn comes with His full belly: the milk that fills Him matters less than a single tulsi leaf offered with love. He can tire of the ocean of milk, but the plain water of a devotee's faith is always sweet to Him. The point is that God measures an offering by the love in it, not its size or richness. The poem ends in the most personal claim of all: devotees are dearer to Him than His own life, and He binds Himself to them so completely that He does their every task.

GATHA 4497 Krishna Leela

Krishna is all, Brahma bows

मराठी मूळ

जयेवेळीं चोरूनियां नेलीं वत्सें । तयालागीं तैसें होणें लागे ॥1॥
लागे दोहीं ठायी करावें पाळण । जगाचा जीवन मायबाप ॥2॥
माय जाल्यावरी अवघ्या वत्सांची । घरीं वत्सें जीचीं तैसा जाला ॥3॥
जाला तैसा जैसे घरिंचे गोपाळ । आणिक सकळ मोहरी पांवे ॥4॥
मोहरी पांवे सिंगें वाहिल्या काहाळा । देखिला सोहाळा ब्रह्मादिकीं ॥5॥
ब्रह्मांदिकां सुख स्वपनीं ही नाहीं । तैसें दोहीं ठायीं वोसंडलें ॥6॥
वोसंडल्या क्षीर अमुप त्या गायी । जैसी ज्याची आई तैसा जाला ॥7॥
लाघव कळलें ब्रह्मयासी याचें । परब्रह्म साचें अवतरलें ॥8॥
तरले हे जन सकळ ही आतां । ऐसें तो विधाता बोलियेला ॥9॥
लागला हे स्तुती करूं अनंताची । चतुर्मुख वाची भक्ती स्तोत्रें ॥10॥
भक्तिकाजें देवें केला अवतार। पृथ्वीचा भार फेडावया ॥11॥
पृथिवी दाटीली होती या असुरीं । नासाहावे वरीभार तये ॥12॥
तया काकुलती आपल्या दासांची । तयालागीं वेची सर्वस्व ही ॥13॥
स्वहित दासांचें करावयालागीं । अव्यक्त हें जगीं व्यक्ती आलें ॥14॥
हरी नाममात्रें पातकांच्या रासी । तो आला घरासि गौळयांच्या ॥16॥
गौळये अवघीं जालीं कृष्णमय । नामें लोकत्रय तरतील ॥17॥
तरतील नामें कृष्णाचिया दोषी । बहुत ज्यांपाशीं होइल पाप ॥18॥
पाप ऐसें नाहीं कृष्णनामें राहे । धन्य तो चि पाहे कृष्णमुख ॥19॥
मुख माझें काय जो मी वणूप पार । मग नमस्कार घाली ब्रह्मा ॥20॥
ब्रह्मा नमस्कार घाली गोधनासी । कळला तयासि हा चि देव ॥21॥
देव चि अवगा जालासे सकळ । गाई हा गोपाळ वत्सें तेथें ॥22॥
तेथें पाहाणें जें आणीक दुसरें । मूर्ख त्या अंतरें दुजा नाहीं ॥23॥
दुजा भाव तुका ह्मणे जया चित्ती । रवरव भोगिती कुंभपाक ॥24॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When Brahma stole the calves, God had to become the same to maintain both sides. He became the mother of every calf.

In every home where a calf belonged, He became that very calf. He became every cowherd in every household, complete with flutes and horns and trumpets.

Brahma and the gods witnessed this spectacle. Such joy had never come to them even in dreams, yet now it overflowed in both directions.

The cows gave torrents of milk. He became each one's own mother.

This subtlety became known to Brahma: the supreme Brahman had truly incarnated. 'All these people are now saved,' the Creator declared.

He began to praise the Infinite One, the four-faced one chanting hymns of devotion. It was for the sake of devotees that God took incarnation, to relieve the burden of the earth.

The earth had been oppressed by demons, unable to bear their weight. God spends all He has for the sake of His servants who cry to Him.

The Unmanifest became manifest in this world for the welfare of His devotees. By the mere power of Hari's Name, heaps of sins are destroyed.

That God has come to the homes of cowherds. The cowherds have all become one with Krishna.

The three worlds shall be saved by His Name. Even the sinful shall be saved by Krishna's Name, no matter how great their sins.

No sin can survive before the Name of Krishna. Blessed is the one who beholds Krishna's face.

'What is my mouth that I should describe His extent?' said Brahma, and then bowed before the cattle. He recognized that this was God Himself.

God was everything: the cows, the cowherds, the calves. To look for anything second there was the mark of a fool; there was no 'other.' Says Tuka, those who hold duality in their chitta will suffer the torments of hell.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When the calves were stolen away, He had to become the same as them. He had to keep the herd on both sides, He the life and the mother-father of the world. He became the mother of all the calves; where a calf belonged to a house, He became that calf. He became just like the cowherd boys of the houses, with all their flutes and reed-pipes. Flutes and pipes, horns and trumpets they sounded; Brahma and the gods saw the festival. Such joy was not given to Brahma and the gods even in dreams; so it overflowed on both sides. The cows poured out boundless milk; as each one's own mother, so He became. Brahma came to know His skill: the supreme Brahman had truly come down. All these people are saved now, so the Creator spoke. He began to praise the Infinite One; the four-faced one chanted hymns of devotion. God took birth for the sake of His devotees, to lift the burden of the earth. The earth was crowded with these demons; their weight upon her could not be borne. He pities His own servants who cry to Him; for them He spends all He has. To do good for His servants, the Unmanifest came into the world manifest. By Hari's Name alone the heaps of sins are gone; He came to the homes of the cowherds. The cowherds all became filled with Krishna; by the Name the three worlds will cross over. Even sinners will cross over by Krishna's Name, those with great sin upon them. No sin can stay before Krishna's Name; blessed is the one who beholds Krishna's face. What is my mouth, that I could measure His extent, said Brahma, and bowed down. Brahma bowed down before the cattle; he had understood that this very thing is God. God had become everything, all of it: the cows, the cowherd boys, the calves were there. To look for any second thing there, the fool has no other within him. Tuka says: those who hold a second feeling in the heart suffer the torments of hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells how Krishna, when Brahma hid the calves and boys, became every missing calf and every missing cowherd Himself, mothering each so perfectly that no home noticed and the cows poured out milk in joy. The marvel teaches Brahma the lesson: the one Brahman has truly become all of it, and so the four-faced creator, who could not measure God's extent, bows down before mere cattle, recognizing God in them. This grounds the poem's wider claim that God incarnates for His devotees' sake and to ease the earth, and that His Name alone burns away even the greatest heaps of sin. The closing line states the nondual stakes bluntly: where God has become everything, to keep seeing a second, separate reality is the fool's error, and that divided seeing is itself the torment of hell. The warning points at the habit of dividing the world from God, not at any particular person.

GATHA 4498 Krishna Leela

Seeing God in all, the cowherds' merit

मराठी मूळ

कुंभपाक लागे तयासि भोगणें । अवघा चि नेणे देव ऐसा ॥1॥
देव ऐसा ठावा नाहीं जया जना । तयासि यातना यमकरी ॥2॥
कळला हा देव तया साच खरा । गाई वत्सें घरा धाडी ब्रह्मा ॥3॥
ब्रह्मादिकां ऐसा देव अगोचर । कैसा त्याचा पार जाणवेल ॥4॥
जाणवेल देव गौळयांच्या भावें । तुका ह्मणे सेवे संचित हें ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

One who does not see everything as God must suffer the torments of the lowest hells. He to whom God is not known is punished by Yama's tortures.

When Brahma recognized God for certain, he sent the cows and calves back home. If God is beyond even Brahma's comprehension, how can His extent be known by anyone? Says Tuka, God is known through the devotion of the cowherds. Their accumulated merit made it possible.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The one who does not see everything as God must boil in the lowest hells. The one to whom God is unknown is tortured by Yama. Brahma knew this God for what he truly is, and sent the cows and calves back home. If God is hidden even from Brahma, how can anyone measure him? God is known through the cowherds' love. Tuka says: such devotion is their stored-up merit.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the seeing of God in everything against the failure to see it, and names what hangs on each. The one who cannot see God in all suffers Yama and the cycle of birth; the one who can is free. He recalls that even Brahma, who once tried to test the boy by stealing the calves, finally recognized him and gave them back, which shows that God lies beyond the reach of the learned. The plain cowherds reach him instead through love, and Tukaram calls that love their accumulated merit. The point is that devotion, not intellect, is what opens the eyes to God present everywhere.

GATHA 4499 Worldly Metaphors

God the true master, the open field

मराठी मूळ

संचित उत्तम भूमि कसूनियां । जाऊं नेणे वांयां परि त्याचें ॥1॥
त्याचिया पिकासि आलिया घुमरी । आल्या गाईवरी आणिक गाई ॥2॥
गाई दवडुनि घालिती बाहेरी । तंव ह्मणे हरि बांधा त्या ही ॥3॥
त्याही तुह्मी बांधा तुमच्या सारिख्या । भोवंडा पारिख्या वाडएांतुनि ॥4॥
पारिख्या न येती कोणाचिया घरा । सूत्रधारी खरा नारायण ॥5॥
नारायण नांदे जयाचिये ठायीं । सहज तेथें नाहीं घालमेली ॥6॥
मेलीं हीं शाहाणीं करितां सायास । नाहीं सुखलेश तुका ह्मणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Like a well-tilled, fertile field that never fails, so is good merit. When the harvest is abundant, neighboring cows wander over to graze.

They drive the cows away, but Hari says, 'Tie them up too.' 'Tie them also; they are as good as yours. Let the strangers share the pasture.' Strangers do not come to anyone's door by accident.

The true master is Narayana, who directs everything. Where Narayana dwells, there is no turmoil or strife.

Says Tuka, the clever who labor without God know no happiness at all.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Good merit is like a fertile, well-tilled field that never fails. When the harvest is thick, the neighbors' cows wander in to graze. They drive the strange cows out, but Hari says, tie them up too. Tie them as if they were your own; let the strangers share the pasture. Strangers do not arrive at anyone's door by accident. Narayana is the true master who works it all. Where Narayana lives, there is no quarrel. Tuka says: the clever who toil without God find no happiness at all.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes one image carry the whole teaching: merit is a field that bears, and what it draws is not only your own but the stranger too. When the cowherds want to drive off the outsiders' cows, Hari overturns them and says welcome them, treat them as your own, for no stranger comes to your door by chance. The deeper claim is that Narayana is the one who arranges everything, the hidden master of the field, and where he is present there is no strife or grasping. By contrast the clever who labor on their own strength, leaving God out, get no peace from all their cleverness. He is teaching open-handedness and trust in God as the real worker behind the harvest.

GATHA 4500 Krishna Leela

The cowherds' artless dance, God in their midst

मराठी मूळ

तुका ह्मणे सुख घेतलें गोपाळीं । नाचती कांबळीं करुनि ध्वजा ॥1॥
करूनियां टिरी आपुल्या मांदळ । वाजविती टाळ दगडाचे ॥2॥
दगडाचे टाळ कोण त्यांचा नाद । गीत गातां छंद ताल नाहीं ॥3॥
नाही ताळ गातां नाचतां गोपाळां । घननीळ सावळा तयामध्यें ॥4॥
मधीं जयां हरि तें सुख आगळें । देहभाव काळें नाहीं तयां ॥5॥
तयांसि आळंगी आपुलिया करीं । जाती भूमीवरी लोटांगणीं ॥6॥
निजभाव देखे जयांचिये अंगीं । तुका ह्मणे संगीं क्रीडे तयां ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Says Tuka, the cowherds tasted that bliss to the full. They danced, making flags of their blankets.

They fashioned their own drums and clapped stones together for cymbals. What kind of rhythm did those stone cymbals produce? They sang without melody and danced without keeping time.

The cowherds danced and sang without proper beat, yet the dark, beautiful Lord was in their midst. Those who have Hari in their midst have a joy beyond all others; body-consciousness does not exist for them.

He embraces them in His own arms. They fall to the ground in ecstatic prostrations.

He sees the sincerity in their being. Says Tuka, He plays in the company of such souls.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Tuka says: the cowherds tasted joy to the full, dancing with their blankets raised like flags. They slapped their thighs for drums and clashed stones for cymbals. What sound do stone cymbals make? They sang with no tune and danced with no beat. Yet there, among them, was the dark and beautiful Lord. Those who have Hari among them have a joy beyond all joys; body-sense is gone for them. He gathers them into his own arms. They throw themselves flat on the ground before him. He sees the honest love in their bodies. Tuka says: he plays in the company of such souls.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram celebrates worship that has no polish and lacks nothing. The cowherds drum on their own thighs, clash stones for cymbals, sing off-key and dance out of time, and Tukaram openly admits there is no skill in it. What makes it complete is that the dark Lord stands in their midst, so their bodies forget themselves in joy. He is saying that God answers the heart, not the technique: he embraces these unschooled cowherds and plays among them precisely because he sees the sincerity in them. The poem quietly rebukes any worship that prizes correctness over love.

GATHA 4501 Krishna Leela

The shared feast, God who hoards nothing

मराठी मूळ

तयांसवें करी काला दहींभात । सिदो†या अनंत मेळवुनी ॥1॥
मेळवुनी अवघियांचे एके ठायीं । मागें पुढें कांहीं उरों नेदी ॥2॥
नेदी चोरी करूं जाणे अंतरींचें । आपलें हीं साचें द्यावें तेथें ॥3॥
द्यावा दहींभात आपले प्रकार । तयांचा वेव्हार सांडवावा ॥4॥
वांटी सकळांसि हातें आपुलिया । जैसें मागे तया तैसें द्यावें ॥5॥
द्यावें सांभाळुनी सम तुकभावें । आपण हि खावें त्यांचें तुक ॥6॥
तुक सकळांचे गोविंदाचे हातीं । कोण कोणे गति भला बुरा ॥7॥
राखे त्यासि तैसें आपलाल्या भावें । विचारुनि द्यावें जैसें तैसें ॥8॥
तैसें सुख नाहीं वैकुंठींच्या लोकां । तें दिलें भाविकां गोपाळांसि ॥9॥
गोपाळांचे मुखीं देउनी कवळ । घांस माखे लाळ खाय त्यांची ॥10॥
त्यांचिये मुखींचे काढूनियां घांस। झोंबतां हातांस खाय बळें ॥11॥
बळें जयाचिया ठेंगणें सकळ । तयातें गोपाळ पाडितील ॥12॥
पाठी उचलूनि वाहातील खांदीं । नाचतील मांदीं मेळवुनी ॥13॥
मांदीं मेळवुनी धणी दिली आह्मां। तुका ह्मणे जमा केल्या गाई ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With them He shared the feast of curds and rice, combining the packed lunches of all the cowherds. He gathered everything together in one place, not allowing anyone to hoard or hide anything.

He would not tolerate any secret keeping; He knows the inner hearts. One must offer one's own portion honestly there.

He told them to set aside their usual ways. He distributed to all with His own hands, giving each one exactly what was asked.

He shared attentively, in equal measure, eating the same portion Himself. All accounts were in Govinda's hands: who was good, who was wanting, and the nature of each.

He provided to each according to their faith, giving thoughtfully and justly. Such happiness is not found even among the people of Vaikuntha.

This was the gift He gave to the faithful cowherds. He placed morsels into the cowherds' mouths with His own hand.

He ate the morsels smeared with their saliva. He snatched morsels from their mouths and ate them with delight.

The One before whose might everything bows, the cowherds would wrestle to the ground. They would lift Him on their shoulders and carry Him.

They would dance in a ring, gathered together. Says Tuka, dancing in that circle, He gave them their fill. Then they rounded up the cows.

IN PLAIN WORDS

With them he makes the kala of curds and rice, mixing the lunches of all the cowherds into one. He gathers everything in one place and lets nothing be held back, before or behind. He allows no hiding; he knows each inner heart. Each must give his own portion honestly there. Set out your curds and rice in your own way and give up your private keeping. He shares it to all with his own hands, giving each one just what he asks. He shares it carefully, in equal weight, and eats his own measure too. All the weighing is in Govinda's hands: who is good, who is bad, the way of each. He keeps each one according to his own love, and gives, after thought, exactly as is fitting. Even the people of Vaikuntha have no such joy as this; he gave it to the faithful cowherds. He puts the morsel into the cowherds' mouths with his own hand. He eats the morsels smeared with their spit, eats their leavings with delight. He snatches the morsel from their mouths and eats it by force as their hands clutch at it. The one before whose strength all things are small, the cowherds wrestle to the ground. They lift him onto their shoulders and carry him, and dance gathered in a crowd. Tuka says: gathered in a crowd, he gave us our fill; then they rounded up the cows.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the cowherds' picnic, the kala, where every boy's lunch is poured into one common heap, and reads it as a picture of God's way with the heart. No one is allowed to hide a private portion, because Govinda knows each inner heart and weighs each life himself; honesty before him is the price of the feast. The astonishing turn is the intimacy: God who is too vast to measure puts food into their mouths with his own hand, eats their saliva-smeared leavings, snatches morsels from them, lets them pin him to the ground and carry him on their shoulders. Tukaram says this joy is greater than anything the dwellers of Vaikuntha have, because it is given to plain, faithful cowherds. The teaching is that nearness to God is for the open-hearted who keep nothing back, and that he repays such love by becoming utterly familiar.

GATHA 4502 Krishna Leela

Going home behind God, no joy apart from him

मराठी मूळ

केला पुढें हरि अस्तमाना दिसा । मागें त्यासरिसे थाट चाले ॥1॥
थाट चाले गाई गोपाळांची धूम । पुढें कृष्ण राम तयां सोयी ॥2॥
सोयी लागलिया तयांची अनंती । न बोलवितां येती मागें तया ॥3॥
तयांचिये चित्तीं बैसला अनंत । घेती नित्यनित्य तें चि सुख ॥4॥
सुख नाहीं कोणा हरिच्या वियोगें । तुका ह्मणे जुगें घडी जाय ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

With the setting of the sun, Hari led the way home, the whole troop of cows and cowherds following behind. The cows and cowherds streamed forward, with Krishna and Rama leading in the right direction.

Once their course was set toward the Infinite, they followed without needing to be called. The Infinite One sat firmly in their chitta.

Day after day they drank the same bliss. No one knows happiness apart from Hari.

Says Tuka, without Him, a single moment feels like an age.

IN PLAIN WORDS

At sundown Hari led the way home, and the whole troop came on behind him. The cows and cowherds streamed forward in a noisy crowd, with Krishna and Rama ahead to set their course. Once their course was set toward the Infinite, they followed without being called. The Infinite One sat firmly in their minds; day after day they drank that same joy. No one knows happiness apart from Hari. Tuka says: without him a single moment stretches into an age.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram takes the simple evening scene, the herd walking home behind Krishna at dusk, and reads it as the soul following God. Once the cowherds are turned toward the Infinite, they no longer need to be called; they go because he goes ahead, and he stays seated in their minds so the joy renews itself each day. The closing line names the stake plainly: there is no happiness anywhere except in Hari, and to be without him even for a moment feels like an age. He is describing the pull of a heart that has found its direction and can no longer bear separation.

GATHA 4503 Krishna Leela

Parting at the gates, longing in separation

मराठी मूळ

जाय फाकोनियां निवडितां गाई । आपलाल्या सोयी घराचिये ॥1॥
घराचिये सोयी अंतरला देव । गोपाळांचे जीव गोविंदापे॥2॥
गोविंदे वेधिलें तुका ह्मणे मन । वियोगें ही ध्यान संयोगाचें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

As the cows are sorted and separated, each heading toward its own home, God too fades from sight, each cowherd going his own way. The cowherds' souls remain with Govinda.

Says Tuka, Govinda has captured their minds. Even in separation, they meditate on reunion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cows scatter as they are sorted out, each turning toward its own home. As they head for home, God slips out of sight; each cowherd goes his own way, but their souls stay with Govinda. Tuka says: Govinda has caught their minds. Even in separation, they keep meditating on reunion.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram catches the moment the day's company breaks up, when the cows are sorted and each boy turns toward his own house and Krishna passes from sight. Outwardly they separate, but their souls do not leave Govinda; he has captured their minds, so distance changes nothing inward. The closing claim is that even in separation they are meditating on reunion, which is the mark of true love. He is showing that once the heart is bound to God, parting only turns into longing, and longing is itself a form of communion.

GATHA 4504 Krishna Leela

The mother wards off the eye, God becomes small

मराठी मूळ

संयोग सकळां असे सर्वकाळ । दुश्चत्त गोपाळ आला दिसे ॥1॥
गोपाळ गुणाचा ह्मणे गुणमय । निंबलोण माये उतरिलें ॥2॥
उतरूनि हातें धरि हनूवठी । ओवाळूनि दिठी सांडियेली॥3॥
दिठी घाली माता विश्वाच्या जनका । भक्तिचिया सुखा गोडावला ॥4॥
लहान हा थोर जीवजंत भूतें । आपण दैवतें जाला देवी ॥5॥
देवी ह्मैसासुर मुंजिया खेचर । लहान हि थोर देव हरि ॥6॥
हरि तुका ह्मणे अवघा एकला । परि या धाकुला भक्तासाटीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Union is with them at all times. The cowherd came home looking worried.

His mother, seeing the precious cowherd-boy, performed a ritual warding off the evil eye and cast it away. She waved the charm and then held his chin.

She cast the glance of protection and threw it aside. The mother cast her eyes upon the Father of the universe.

Relishing the sweetness of devotion, He who is greater than the greatest became small. Among all the small and great living things, He became the child of His own divine power.

The goddess slew the buffalo-demon and other celestial beings. Both small and great are all God, all Hari.

Says Tuka, Hari is all in all, but for the sake of His devotees, He becomes small.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Union with them is always there, yet the cowherd came home looking troubled. His mother, calling the dear boy full of virtue, waved the salt and mustard about him to ward off the evil eye and threw it away. She lifted her hand, held his chin, waved the charm before his eyes and cast it off. The mother casts the glance of protection on the Father of the universe. He has grown sweet on the joy of his devotee. Among all things, small and great, the living and the dead, he himself became the deities, the goddess. The goddess who slew the buffalo-demon, the spirits, the sky-rangers, the small and the great, all are God, all are Hari. Tuka says: Hari is all of it, alone, yet for the sake of his devotees he becomes small.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lingers on a tender household scene: a worried boy comes home and his mother performs the common rite to ward off the evil eye, waving salt and mustard, holding his chin. The wonder he points to is who is letting her do it, for this is the Father of the universe submitting to a mother's care because he has grown sweet on her love. Tukaram then widens the frame: the same Hari is everything, the goddess who slew the buffalo-demon, every spirit and being, small and great alike. The last line lands the paradox: the one who is all things, and is alone, willingly shrinks himself into a child for the sake of those who love him. The teaching is that God's greatness and his smallness are one act of love toward the devotee.

GATHA 4505 Krishna Leela

The universe in his mouth, I alone am real

मराठी मूळ

भक्तीसाटीं केली यशोदेसी आळी । थिंकोनिया चोळी डोळे देव ॥1॥
देव गिळुनियां धरिलें मोहन । माय ह्मणे कोण येथें दुजें ॥2॥
दुजें येथें कोणी नाहीं कृष्णाविण । निरुते जाणोन पुसे देवा ॥3॥
देवापाशीं पुसे देव काय जाला । हांसें आलें बोला याचें हरि ॥4॥
यांचे मी जवळी देव तो नेणती । लटिकें मानिती साच खरें ॥5॥
लटिकें तें साच साच तें लटिके । नेणती लोभिकें आशाबद्ध ॥6॥
सांग ह्मणे माय येरु वासी तोंड । तंव तें ब्रह्मांड देखे माजी ॥7॥
माजी जया चंद्र सूर्य तारांगणें । तो भक्तांकारणें बाळलीला ॥8॥
लीळा कोण जाणे याचें महिमान । जगाचें जीवन देवादिदेव ॥9॥
देवें कवतुक दाखविलें तयां । लागतील पायां मायबापें ॥10॥
मायबाप ह्मणे हा चि देव खरा । आणीक पसारा लटिका तो ॥11॥
तो हि त्यांचा देव दिला नारायणें । माझें हें करणें तो हि मी च ॥12॥
मीं च ह्मणउनि जें जें जेथें ध्याती । तेथें मी श्रीपति भोगिता तें ॥13॥
तें मज वेगळें मी तया निराळा । नाहीं या सकळा ब्रह्मांडांत ॥14॥
ततभावना तैसें भविष्य तयाचें । फळ देता साचें मी च एक ॥15॥
मी च एक खरा बोलें नारायण । दाविलें निर्वाण निजदासां ॥16॥
निजदासां खूण दाविली निरुती । तुका ह्मणे भूतीं नारायण ॥17॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

For the sake of devotion, He threw tantrums with Yashoda, rubbing His eyes and demanding food. He swallowed the universe and held it under His spell.

His mother said, 'Who else is here?' There was no one besides Krishna. She asked the child, knowing the answer intuitively.

She asked God what had happened to God, and Hari smiled at the absurdity of her question. 'God is right beside them, yet they do not know Him.

They believe the false to be true.' They take the false for real and the real for false. The hope-bound and greedy cannot see.

'Open your mouth,' said His mother. He opened His mouth wide, and she saw the entire universe inside.

Within Him were the moon, the sun, and the stars. He who contains all this performs His child's play for the devotees' delight.

Who can know the mystery of His greatness? He is the life of the world, the God of gods. God showed them this wonder, and the parents fell at His feet.

The parents said, 'This alone is the true God. All else is illusion.' Yet that God too was given to them by Narayana.

'My doing and that are also Me,' He said. 'Whatever is contemplated anywhere, I am the one who experiences it.' 'Nothing is separate from Me, and I am not separate from anything, in all these universes.' 'As is the feeling, so is the destiny.

I alone am the one who gives the fruit.' 'I alone am real,' says Narayana. 'I have shown My servants the ultimate truth.' Says Tuka, He revealed the certain sign to His own servants: Narayana is present in all beings.

IN PLAIN WORDS

For his devotees' sake he threw a tantrum with Yashoda, rubbing his eyes, the God himself crying. He had swallowed the universe and held it under his spell. The mother said, who else is here? There was no one but Krishna. She asked the child, knowing the truth within. She asks God what has become of God, and Hari smiles at her words. I am right beside them, and they do not know me; they take the false for true. The false is taken for true and the true for false; the greedy and the desire-bound cannot tell. Open your mouth, says his mother. He opens it wide, and she sees the whole cosmos inside. Within it are moon, sun, and the fields of stars; he who holds all this plays the child for his devotees' delight. Who can know the measure of his greatness? He is the life of the world, the God of gods. God showed them this wonder, and the parents fell at his feet. The parents said, this alone is the true God; all the rest is false. Yet that very God was given to them by Narayana. My doing, and that too, are myself, he said. Whatever is contemplated, wherever, I am the one who enjoys it there. It is not separate from me, and I am not apart from it, in all these universes. As the feeling is, so is the destiny; I alone am the one who gives the fruit. I alone am real, says Narayana. He has shown his servants the final truth. Tuka says: he has shown his own servants the sure sign, that Narayana lives in all beings.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram retells the scene where the child Krishna is accused of eating dirt and, told to open his mouth, shows Yashoda the entire universe inside it, with the moon, the sun and the stars. He reads it as God deliberately playing the child for his devotees while secretly holding all things under his spell. The hard saying is in the middle: God is right beside people and they do not know him, because the desire-bound take the false for the real and the real for the false. The vision in the mouth is meant to break that error, and the parents fall at his feet confessing this alone is the true God. The poem closes with God's own claim, that he is the doer of everything, the one who experiences and gives the fruit of every act, nothing apart from him, and the sure sign he reveals to his servants is that Narayana dwells in every being.

GATHA 4506 Appeals and Exhortations

Seeing God in all, the wildfire swallowed

मराठी मूळ

नारायण भूतीं न कळे जयांसि । होय गर्भवासीं येणें जाणें ॥1॥
येणें जाणें होय भूतांच्या मत्सरें । न कळतां खरें देव ऐसा ॥2॥
देव ऐसा जया कळला सकळ । गेली तळमळ द्वेषबुद्धि॥3॥
बुद्धीचा पालट नव्हे कोणे काळीं । हरि जळीं स्थळीं तया चित्तीं ॥4॥
चित्त तें निर्मळ जैसें नवनीत । जाणिजे अनंत तयामाजी ॥5॥
तयामाजी हरि जाणिजे त्या भावें । आपलें परावें सारिखें चि ॥6॥
चिंतनें तयाच्या तरती आणीक । जो हें सकिळक देव देखे ॥7॥
देव देखे तो ही कसा देव नव्हे । उरला संदेहे काय त्यासि ॥8॥
यांसि कवतुक दाखविलें रानीं । वोणवा गिळूनि गोपाळांसि ॥10॥
गोपाळांसि डोळे झांकविले हातें । धरिलें अनंतें विश्वरूप ॥11॥
पसरूनि मुख गिळियेलें ज्वाळ । पहाती गोपाळ बोटां सांदी ॥12॥
संधि सारूनियां पाहिलें अनंता । ह्मणती ते आतां कळलांसी ॥13॥
कळला हा तुझा देह नव्हे देवा । गिळला वोणवा आणीक तो ॥14॥
तो तयां कळला आरुषां गोपाळां । दुर्गम सकळां साधनांसि ॥15॥
सीण उरे तुका ह्मणे साधनाचा । भाविकांसि साचा भाव दावी ॥16॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who do not see Narayana in all beings must continue coming and going through the cycle of birth. Coming and going is caused by ill will toward other beings, when the truth is not recognized.

But one to whom God is known in everything is freed of all restlessness and hostility. That change of vision, once it occurs, is irreversible.

Such a one sees Hari in water, on land, and in the chitta. That chitta is as pure as fresh butter.

Know that the Infinite resides within it. Know Him within through the right devotion.

One's own and another's become the same. Through the contemplation of such a being, others too are saved, for such a one sees God in everything.

One who sees God, how can that one not be God? What doubt remains for such a person? God showed them a wonder in the forest, swallowing the wildfire for the cowherds' sake. God told the cowherds to cover their eyes with their hands, and then assumed His cosmic form.

He spread His mouth wide and swallowed the flames. The cowherds peeked through the gaps between their fingers.

When it was over, they said, 'Now we know You.' Says Tuka, the effort of spiritual practices leaves one exhausted. God reveals the easy truth to the faithful.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who cannot see Narayana in all beings keep coming and going through the womb. The coming and going comes of ill will toward other beings, when the truth is not known. But the one to whom God is known in everything, his restlessness and hatred are gone. That turn of mind never reverses; Hari is in his heart, in water and on land. The heart is then as clean as fresh butter, and the Infinite is known within it. There Hari is known by that love; one's own and the stranger become the same. Through such a one's remembrance others too cross over, for he sees God in everything. The one who sees God, how is he himself not God? What doubt is left to him? He showed them a wonder in the forest, swallowing the wildfire for the cowherds' sake. He had the cowherds cover their eyes with their hands, and the Infinite took on the cosmic form. He opened his mouth wide and swallowed the flames; the cowherds peeked through the cracks of their fingers. Looking through the gaps they watched the Infinite, and said, now we have known you. Tuka says: the labor of practices only leaves you tired; to the faithful he shows the truth simply.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the test sharp before he tells the story: not seeing Narayana in all beings keeps you in birth and death, because that blindness breeds the ill will that drives the cycle, while seeing God everywhere ends restlessness and hatred and never reverses. Such a heart becomes clean as fresh butter, treats stranger and self alike, and even carries others across by its remembrance, so that one who truly sees God is not other than God. He then grounds this in the forest fire, where Krishna has the cowherds shut their eyes and swallows the wildfire, and they peek through their fingers to see and cry, now we know you. The closing line points at self-examination: straining at spiritual techniques only exhausts you, while God shows the plain truth to those who simply trust. The teaching is that vision of God in all things, won by faith rather than effort, is what frees.

GATHA 4507 Krishna Leela

God credits his servants, the wildfire survived

मराठी मूळ

भाव दावी शुद्ध देखोनियां चित्त । आपल्या अंकित निजदासां ॥1॥
सांगे गोपाळांसि काय पुण्य होतें । वांचलों जळते आगी हातीं ॥2॥
आजि आह्मां येथें राखियेलें देवें । नाहीं तरी जीवें न वंचतों ॥3॥
न वंचत्या गाई जळतों सकळें । पूर्वपुण्यबळें वांचविलें ॥4॥
पूर्वपुण्य होतें तुमचिये गांठी । बोले जगजेठी गोपाळांसि ॥5॥
गोपाळांसि ह्मणे वैकुंठनायक । भले तुह्मी एक पुण्यवंत ॥6॥
करी तुका ह्मणे करवी आपण । द्यावें थोरपण सेवकांसि ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God reveals the pure truth to those whose chittas are clean, to His own devoted servants. He tells the cowherds, 'What good fortune you must have had! We were saved from that burning fire.' 'Today God has protected us here.

Otherwise, we would not have survived.' 'The cows and all of us would have perished. It was the power of your past merits that saved us.' 'You had great merit stored within you,' says the Lord of Vaikuntha to the cowherds.

'You are truly blessed and virtuous,' He tells them. Says Tuka, He acts and He makes others act. He gives the credit to His servants.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seeing the heart clean, he shows the truth to his own marked servants. He says to the cowherds, what merit you must have had; we have come alive out of the burning fire. Today God has saved us here; otherwise we would not have escaped with our lives. The cows and all of us were burning; the strength of your past merit saved us. You had past merit stored in your bundle, says the Lord of the world to the cowherds. You cowherds are good, each one of you full of merit, says the Lord of Vaikuntha. Tuka says: he does it and he makes it done himself, yet he gives the greatness to his servants.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shows God's humility after the fire he himself put out. Krishna, who swallowed the wildfire, turns to the cowherds and tells them it was their own past merit that saved them, calling them blessed and good. The point is in the last line: God is the one who acts and the one who makes everything happen, yet he hands the credit to his servants. Tukaram is naming a pattern in how God treats those he loves, lifting them up rather than claiming the glory. It invites the devotee to recognize that even our merit and our rescue are finally his doing, given back to us as a gift.

GATHA 4508 Krishna Leela

The cowherds answer, inner sight was open

मराठी मूळ

काय आह्मां चाळविसी वायांविण । ह्मणसी दुरून देखिलासि ॥1॥
लावूनियां डोळे नव्हतों दुिश्चत । तुज परचित्त माव होती ॥2॥
होती दृिष्ट आंत उघडी आमची । बाहेरी ते वांयां चि कुंची झाकुं ॥3॥
आगी खातो ऐसा आमचा सांगाती । आनंदें नाचती भोंवताली ॥5॥
भोंवतीं आपणा मेळविलीं देवें । तुका ह्मणे ठावें नाहीं ज्ञान ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The cowherds say, 'Why do You deceive us for nothing? You say You saw the fire from afar.' 'Our eyes were open inside. We were not distracted.

The illusion was Yours alone.' 'Our inner sight was open, though outwardly we pretended to close our eyes.' 'Our companion eats fire!' they cry, and dance around Him in delight. Says Tuka, God surrounded Himself with them, yet they did not possess true knowledge.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Why do you put us off for nothing, the cowherds say; you say you saw the fire from far off. We shut our eyes but we were not blind inside; the illusion was yours alone. Our inner sight stayed open; only outwardly, for nothing, did we cover it with our hands. Our companion eats fire, they cry, and dance around him in delight. Tuka says: God gathered them about himself, though they had no learned knowledge.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram lets the cowherds talk back to Krishna with the freedom of love. He had told them to close their eyes and pretended he only saw the fire from a distance, but they tease him that the trick was his, since their inner sight never closed even when their hands covered their faces. Then, delighted rather than awed, they shout that their playmate eats fire and dance around him. The closing line is the quiet teaching: God drew these boys close to himself even though they had no formal knowledge, no scripture or learning. He is showing that intimacy and inner sight come through love, not through schooling.

GATHA 4509

Krishna Leela

Trust against argument, Hari's company is the only journey

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं त्याची शंका वैकुंठनायका । नेणती ते एकाविण दुजा ॥1॥
जाणतियां सवें येऊं नेदी हरि । तर्कवादी दुरी दुराविले॥2॥
वादियासि भेद निंदा अहंकार । देऊनियां दूर दुराविले ॥3॥
दुरावले दूर आशाबद्ध देवा । करितां या सवा कुटुंबाची ॥4॥
चित्तीं द्रव्यदारा पुत्रादिसंपत्ती । समान ते होती पशु नर ॥5॥
नरक साधिले विसरोनि देवा । बुडाले ते भवा नदीमाजी ॥6॥
जीहीं हरिसंग केला संवसारीं । तुका ह्मणे खरी खेप त्यांची ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They had no suspicion about the Lord of Vaikuntha. They knew no one besides Him.

God does not let the argumentative and disputatious come near. He keeps them far away.

To those given to dispute, He gives divisiveness, slander, and pride, keeping them at a distance. Those bound by desire are kept far from God, entangled as they are in family concerns.

Those whose chittas are occupied with wealth, women, children, and possessions become no different from beasts. Those who forget God and sink into the river of worldly existence have earned their place in hell.

Those who kept Hari's company in this world, says Tuka, theirs was the only journey that mattered.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They had no doubt about the Lord of Vaikuntha; they knew no one but the One. Hari does not let the clever come along with him; the arguers he keeps far off. To the men of dispute he hands division, slander, and pride, and pushes them away. Far off are kept the desire-bound, busy with the affairs of the household. With wealth, wife, children and property in their hearts, men become no different from beasts. They have built their own hell, forgetting God, and have drowned in the river of the world. But those who kept Hari's company in this world: Tuka says: theirs was the journey that was real.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram sets the trusting cowherds against the clever arguers. The cowherds had no suspicion of the Lord and knew no one but him, and that simple trust is what lets them stay near, while the disputatious are kept at a distance and left with the very division, slander and pride their arguing breeds. He widens it to all who are bound by desire, whose hearts are full of wealth, wife and children, saying such people become no better than beasts and drown in the river of worldly life, building their own hell by forgetting God. The point lands in the final line: only those who kept Hari's company made a journey that was real. The poem aims its sharpness at the pattern of grasping cleverness, and calls the reader to plain trust instead.

GATHA 4510 Krishna Leela

Krishna at home, the veil lifting

मराठी मूळ

खेळींमेळीं आले घरा गोपीनाथ । गोपाळांसहित मातेपाशीं ॥1॥
मातेपाशीं एक नवल सांगती । जाली तैसी ख्याती वोणव्याची ॥2॥
ओविाळलें तिनें करूनि आरती । पुसे दसवंती गोपाळांसि ॥3॥
पुसे पडताळुनी मागुती मागुती । गोपाळ सांगती कवतुक ॥4॥
कवतुका कानीं आइकतां त्यांचे । बोलतां ये वाचे वीट नये ॥5॥
नयन गुंतले श्रीमुख पाहतां । न साहे लवतां आड पातें ॥6॥
तेव्हां कवतुक कळों आलें कांहीं । हळुहळु दोहीं मायबापां ॥7॥
हळुहळु त्यांचें पुण्य जालें वाड । वारलें हें जाड तिमिराचें ॥8॥
तिमिर हें तेथें राहों शके कैसें । जालियां प्रकाशें गोविंदाच्या ॥9॥
दावी तुका ह्मणे देव ज्या आपणा । पालटे तें क्षणामाजी एका ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Krishna returned home with the cowherds, coming to His mother's side. Yashoda asked Nanda and the cowherds to tell her the news of the wildfire.

She waved the ritual lamp of protection and asked the cowherds to confirm the tale. She asked again and again, and they told the wondrous story.

The delight of hearing their account never grew stale. Her eyes were fixed on His blessed face, and she could not bear to blink.

Then, little by little, both parents began to glimpse the truth. Little by little, their merit grew; the thick veil of ignorance lifted.

How could darkness remain where the light of Govinda shone? Says Tuka, when God reveals Himself to someone, everything changes in a single moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Gopinath comes home from play, the cowherds with Him, to His mother's side. They tell Yashoda a wonder: how the wildfire was put out. She waves the lamp of protection, and asks the cowherds again. She asks once more, and again, and they tell the marvel. Hearing it never grows stale; her words never tire of telling it. Her eyes are caught on His blessed face, and she cannot bear to blink. Then, little by little, both parents begin to see something. Little by little their merit grows large, and the thick darkness is driven off. How can darkness stay where the light of Govinda has dawned? Tuka says: when God shows Himself to someone, everything turns over in a single moment.

WHAT IT MEANS

This opens a long retelling of Krishna's childhood deeds, here the homecoming after the wildfire. Yashoda listens to the cowherds' account over and over, and her gaze locks on His face so completely that she will not even blink. Tukaram marks the slow turning in the parents: as they keep looking, their inner merit ripens and the darkness of not-knowing lifts. The point is that no darkness can stand once Govinda's light has dawned. The closing claim is the whole frame: when God truly reveals Himself, the change is not gradual but instant, complete in one moment.

GATHA 4511 Krishna Leela

The child who is Lord of all

मराठी मूळ

काय आतां यासि ह्मणावें लेंकरूं । जगाचा हा गुरु मायबाप ॥1॥
माया याची यासि राहिली व्यापून । कळों नये क्षण एक होतां ॥2॥
क्षण एक होतां विसरलीं त्यासि । माझेंमाझें ऐसें करी बाळा ॥3॥
करी कवतुक कळों नेदी कोणा । योजूनि कारणा तें चि खेळे ॥4॥
तें सुख लुटिलें घरिचिया घरीं । तुका ह्मणे परी आपुलाल्या ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

How can this one be called a mere child? He is the Guru and parent of the whole world. His maya keeps the world in its grip, yet for one moment it may lift, and then it falls again.

In one moment they forget Him, and the sense of 'mine, mine' takes over in the child. He plays His wonders without letting anyone know, designing each event for its hidden purpose.

Says Tuka, that bliss was tasted right there at home, each one in their own way.

IN PLAIN WORDS

What can you call this one, a mere child? He is the Guru, the mother and father of the whole world. His own maya keeps the world wrapped up; it lifts for a moment, and you cannot tell. In one moment they forget Him, and the child takes up its 'mine, mine.' He works His wonders and lets no one know, planning each event and so playing it out. Tuka says: that bliss was plundered right there at home, each one taking their own share.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram refuses the surface: the one Yashoda dandles is no ordinary infant but the Guru and parent of all worlds. His maya is exactly what hides this from those nearest Him; it lifts for an instant and falls again, so they keep forgetting and slipping back into 'mine, mine.' He stages His every play deliberately while letting no one catch the design. The note Tukaram lands is intimate: the bliss of God is not far off in some heaven but tasted right at home, each devotee taking it in their own measure.

GATHA 4512 Krishna Leela

The ballgame, follow the Lord or stray

मराठी मूळ

आपुलाल्यापरी करितील सेवा । गीत गाती देवा खेळवूनि ॥1॥
खेळु मांडियेला यमुने पाबळीं । या रे चेंडुफळी खेळूं आतां ॥2॥
आणविल्या डांगा चवगुणां काठी । बैसोनिया वांटी गडिया गडी ॥3॥
गडी जंव पाहे आपणासमान । नाहीं नारायण ह्मणे दुजा ॥4॥
जाणोनि गोविंदें सकळांचा भाव । तयांसि उपाव तो चि सांगे ॥5॥
सांगे सकळांसि व्हा रे एकीकडे । चेंडू राखा गडे तुह्मी माझा ॥6॥
मज हा न लगे आणीक सांगाती । राखावी बहुतीं हाल माझी ॥7॥
माझे हाके हाक मेळवा सकळ । नव जा बरळ एकमेकां ॥8॥
एका समतुकें अवघेचि राहा । जाईल तो पाहा धरा चेंडू ॥9॥
चेंडू धरा ऐसें सांगतो सकळां । आपण निराळा एकला चि ॥10॥
चिंडुनियां चेंडू हाणे ऊर्ध्वमुखें । ठेलीं सकिळक पाहात चि ॥11॥
पाहात चि ठेलीं न चलतां कांहीं । येरू लवलाहीं ह्मणे धरा ॥12॥
धरावा तयानें त्याचें बळ ज्यासि। येरा आणिकांसि लाग नव्हे ॥13॥
नव्हे काम बळ बुिद्ध नाहीं त्याचें । न धरवे निंचें उंचाविण ॥14॥
विचारीं पडिले देखिले गोपाळ । या ह्मणे सकळ मजमागें ॥15॥
मार्ग देवाविण न दिसे आणिका । चतुर होत का बहुत जन ॥16॥
चतुर चिंतिती बहुत मारग । हरि जाय लाग पाहोनियां ॥17॥
या मागें जे गेले गोविंदा गोपाळ । ते नेले सीतळ पंथ ठायां ॥18॥
पंथ जे चुकले आपले मतीचे । तयांमागें त्यांचे ते चि हाल ॥19॥
हाल दोघां एक मोहरां मागिलां । चालतां चुकलां वाट पंथ ॥20॥
पंथ पुढिलांसी चालतां न कळे । मागिलांनीं डोळे उघडावे ॥21॥
वयाचा प्रबोध विचार ज्या नाहीं । समान तो देहीं बाळकांसी ॥22॥
सिकविलें हित नायिके जो कानीं । त्यामागें भल्यांनीं जाऊं नये ॥23॥
नये तें चि करी श्रेष्ठाचिया मना । मूर्ख एक जाणा तो चि खरा ॥24॥
रानभरी जाले न कळे मारग । मग तो श्रीरंग आठविला ॥25॥
लाज सांडूनियां मारितील हाका । कळलें नायका वैकुंठींच्या ॥26॥
चारी वेद ज्याची कीर्ती वाखाणीती । तया अति प्रीति गोपाळांची॥27॥
गोपाळांचा धांवा आइकिला कानीं । सोयी चक्रपाणि पालविलें॥28॥
साया धरूनियां आले हरिपासीं । लहान थोरांसी सांभिाळलें ॥29॥
सांभिाळलें तुका ह्मणे सकळ हि । सुखी जाले ते ही हरिमुखें॥30॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Each one served God in their own way, singing songs as they played with Him. A game was organized on the banks of the Yamuna.

'Come, let us play ball now.' They brought long sticks and poles of four lengths and sat down to divide themselves into teams. When Govinda looked for someone equal to Himself as a partner, He said, 'There is no second player like Me.' Knowing the disposition of each one, He devised the plan Himself.

He told them all, 'All of you stand on one side. Guard my ball, my teammates.' 'I need no other companion.

All of you together must match my skill.' 'Join your cries to my shout. Do not scatter in confusion.' 'Stay together, all of you.

Watch where the ball goes and catch it.' He tells everyone this, yet He stands apart, alone. He struck the ball upward with His bat.

Everyone stood frozen, just watching. They stood watching, unable to move.

He cried, 'Catch it!' They could not. Only one whose strength matches His can catch it.

No one else has the speed. The cowherds fell into confusion.

He said, 'Come, follow Me.' Without God, no other path appears, no matter how clever the crowd. The clever devise many routes, but Hari waits and watches for the right moment.

Those cowherds who followed Govinda were led along the cool and safe path. Those who strayed on their own suffered the consequences.

The hardship is the same for those in front and those behind, for leaders and followers who have lost the way. The path ahead is unknown to the leaders; those behind must open their eyes.

One who lacks the discernment that comes with maturity is no better than a child in a grown body. One who will not listen to sound advice, the wise should not follow such a person.

The fool insists on doing what offends the good. Such a one alone is the true fool.

They wandered through the whole forest and lost the path. Then they remembered the Lord.

Casting aside all pride, they cried out to Him. The Lord of Vaikuntha heard their call.

The four Vedas sing His praises, yet His deepest love is for these cowherds. God heard the cowherds' cry and signaled to them.

Holding His hand, they all came to Hari's side. He comforted the small and the great and took care of all.

Says Tuka, they were all sheltered, and they rejoiced in Hari's presence.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Each one serves Him in their own way, singing as they play with Him. A game is set up on the bank of the Yamuna. 'Come, let us play ball now.' They bring the long sticks and bats of four lengths and sit to choose sides, friend with friend. When Govinda looks for a partner equal to Himself, He says there is no second like Narayana. Knowing the heart of each one, He Himself tells them the way. He tells them all: stand on one side; guard my ball, friends. 'I need no other companion. All of you together must match my skill. Join your shout to my shout. Do not scatter and babble at each other. Stay all together, as one. Watch where it goes, and catch the ball.' He tells everyone this, yet He Himself stands apart, alone. He strikes the ball upward with His bat. They all stand still, only watching. They stand watching, unable to move, while He cries, catch it. Only one whose strength matches His own can catch it; no one else can keep up. It is not within their power; they have not His strength or wit; the low cannot reach the high. The cowherds fall into doubt. He says, all of you, come behind Me. Without God no other path appears, however many clever people there are. The clever think out many roads, but Hari waits and watches for His moment. The cowherds who went behind Govinda were led along the cool, safe path. Those who strayed by their own cleverness, behind them came their own ruin. The hardship is one for those ahead and those behind, for leaders and followers who have lost the way. The path ahead is not known to the leaders; those behind must open their eyes. One without the discernment that comes with age is, in the body, the same as a child. The one who will not hear good counsel in his ear, the good should not walk behind such a one. The fool insists on doing what offends a worthy mind; know that one alone for the true fool. They wandered the whole forest and lost the path; then they remembered Shrirang. Casting off shame they will raise a cry, and the Lord of Vaikuntha hears. The four Vedas sing His fame, yet His deep love is for the cowherds. Chakrapani hears the cowherds' cry and signals them His way. Holding His robe they come to Hari's side; small and great, He keeps them safe. Tuka says: He sheltered them all, and through Hari's face they were made happy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram turns the children's ballgame into a teaching about guidance. Krishna will take no equal partner; He stands alone and tells them only one thing will work, stay together, match your cry to mine, follow Me. When He hits the ball up and they cannot field it, the lesson lands: no one's own strength or cleverness reaches that height. The poem then widens to a flat rule, that without God no road opens however clever the crowd, and that leaders who have lost the way drag their followers into the same ruin. Real maturity is discernment, not age; the true fool is the one who will not hear good counsel and offends the wise, and the good should not walk behind him. Only when the cowherds drop their pride and cry out is the Lord of Vaikuntha, whom the Vedas praise, moved to come and shelter great and small alike.

GATHA 4513 Krishna Leela

The real and its reflection

मराठी मूळ

मुखें सांगे त्यांसि पैल चेंडू पाहा । उदकांत डोहाचिये माथां ॥1॥
माथां कळंबाचे अवघडा ठायीं । दावियेला डोहीं जळामाजी ॥2॥
जळांत पाहातां हाडति या दृष्ट । ह्मणे जगजेठी ऐसें नव्हे ॥3॥
नव्हे साच चेंडू छाया दिसे आंत । खरा तेथें चित्त लावा वरी ॥4॥
वरी देखियेला अवघ्यांनीं डोळां । ह्मणती गोपाळा आतां कैसें ॥5॥
कैसें करूनियां उतरावा खालीं । देखोनियां भ्यालीं अवघीं डोहो ॥6॥
डोहो बहु खोल काळया भीतरी । सरलीं माघारीं अवघीं जणें ॥7॥
जयाचें कारण तयासी च ठावें । पुसे त्याच्या भावें त्यास हरि ॥8॥
त्यासि नारायण ह्मणे राहा तळीं । चढे वनमाळी झाडावरी ॥9॥
वरि जातां वरि पाहाती गोपाळ । ह्मणति सकळ आह्मी नेणों ॥10॥
नेणों ह्मणती हें करितोसि काई। आह्मां तुझी आई देइल सिव्या ॥11॥
आपुलिया कानां देउनियां हात । सकळीं निमित्य टाळयेलें ॥12॥
निमित्याकारणें रचिलें कारण । गेला नारायण खांदीवरी ॥13॥
खांदीवरी पाव ठेवियेला देवें । पाडावा त्या भावें चेंडू तळीं ॥14॥
तळील नेणती तुका ह्मणे भाव । अंतरींचा देव जाणों नेदी ॥15॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Krishna pointed and said, 'Look, the ball is over there, on top of the deep pool, at the crown of the kadamba tree.' He showed them the ball reflected in the water of the deep pool. Looking into the water dizzied their sight.

The Lord of the World said, 'This will not do.' 'The ball in the water is only a shadow. Fix your attention upward, on the real one.' They all looked up and saw the real ball in the tree.

'O Gopala, what shall we do now?' they cried. 'How can we bring it down?' The pool was terrifyingly deep and dark.

They all shrank back in fear. The One for whose purpose all this was arranged knows the secret.

Hari asks each one, according to their understanding, what should be done. Narayana told them to wait below.

He climbed the tree Himself. As He climbed higher, the cowherds watched from below.

They said, 'We do not understand what You are doing.' 'Our mothers will scold us,' they protested. They covered their own ears and washed their hands of it.

Says Tuka, beneath the surface they do not know the true intent. God within does not let them see.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He tells them with His own mouth: look, the ball is over there, on the deep pool, at the top of the kadamba tree. At the crown, in a hard place, He shows it reflected down in the water. Looking into the water makes their sight reel. The Lord of the World says, this will not do. The ball in the water is not the true one; it is only a shadow seen inside; the real one is up there, fix your attention on it. They all see it overhead with their eyes, and cry, O Gopala, what now? How to bring it down? Seeing the pool, they are all afraid. The pool is very deep, with Kaliya inside; every one of them shrinks back. The one for whose purpose this is done, He alone knows it; Hari asks each according to their feeling. Narayana tells them, wait below, and Vanamali climbs the tree. As He goes up the cowherds watch from below and say, we know nothing of this. They say, what are You doing? Your mother will scold us. They put their hands over their own ears and wash their hands of it. For the sake of a pretext He has made the whole occasion, and Narayana goes up onto a branch. He set His foot on the branch, meaning to drop the ball below. Tuka says: those below do not know His intent; the God within does not let them see.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram makes the lost ball a lesson in real and apparent. The boys look down at the ball's reflection in the dark pool and grow dizzy; Krishna corrects them, that is only a shadow, the true one is above, look up. Yet the whole episode is staged: He has arranged a pretext, and the deep pool He sends the ball toward is Kaliya's lair. The cowherds, frightened, cover their ears and disown the deed, protesting their mothers will scold them. The closing line names the frame the boys cannot see: God hides His own purpose from those nearest the action, letting the design unfold while they remain in the dark.

GATHA 4514 Krishna Leela

The Lord leaps in, the grief begins

मराठी मूळ

नेदी कळों केल्याविण तें कारण । दाखवी आणून अनुभवा ॥1॥
न पुरेसा हात घाली चेंडूकडे । ह्मणीतलें गडे सांभाळावें ॥2॥
बरें विचारुनी करावें कारण । ह्मणे नारायण ब†या बरें ॥4॥
बरें ह्मणउनि तयांकडे पाहे । सोडविला जाय चेंडू तळा ॥5॥
तयासवें उडी घातली अनंतें । गोपाळ रडते येती घरा ॥6॥
येतां त्यांचा लोकीं देखिला कोल्हाळ । सामोरीं सकळ आलीं पुढें ॥7॥
पुसतील मात आपआपल्यासि । हरिदुःखें त्यांसी न बोलवे ॥8॥
न बोलवे हरि बुडालासें मुखें । कुटितील दुःखें उर माथे ॥9॥
मायबापें तुका ह्मणे न देखती । ऐसें दुःख चित्तीं गोपाळांच्या ॥10॥
जालें काय ऐसें न कळे कोणासी । ह्मणती तुह्मांपासीं देव होता ॥2॥
देवासवें दुःख न पवते ऐसें । कांहीं अनारिसें दिसे आजी ॥3॥
आजि दिसे हरि फांकला यांपाशीं । ह्मणउनि ऐशी परि जाली ॥4॥
जाणविल्याविण कैसें कळे त्यांसि। शाहाणे तयांसि कळों आले ॥5॥
कळों आलें तीहीं कुंफ्द शांत केला । ठायींचा च त्यांला थोडा होता ॥6॥
होता तो विचार सांगितला जना । गोपाळ शाहाणा होता त्याणें ॥7॥
सांगे आतां हरि तुह्मां आह्मां नाहीं । बुडाला तो डोहीं यमुनेच्या ॥8॥
यासी अवकाश नव्हे चि पुसतां । जालिया अनंता कोण परि ॥9॥
परि त्या दुःखाची काय सांगों आतां । तुका ह्मणे माता लोकपाळ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God does not reveal the purpose until the deed is done. He brings everything to experience directly.

He reached for the ball but His arm fell short. 'Watch out, friends,' He called, 'take care.' He said, 'Think carefully before you act.' Narayana said, 'All right, very well.' Saying 'very well,' He looked toward them.

The ball was freed and fell. Along with it, the Infinite One leaped into the pool.

The cowherds came home weeping. The people saw their distress and rushed forward.

Each parent asked their own child for news. In their grief for Hari, the children could not speak.

They said Hari had drowned, and they beat their chests and heads. Says Tuka, the grief of the parents who could not find their children was beyond any comparison. No one knew what had really happened.

People said, 'God was with you.' 'When God is with you, such sorrow does not come. Something different has happened today.' 'Today Hari seems to have parted from them; that is why this has happened.' Only when told could they understand.

The wiser ones among them grasped it. The one who understood calmed the others.

He had always been the thoughtful one. 'Hari is no longer with us,' he told them.

'He drowned in the pool of the Yamuna.' There was no time for further questions. The situation with Ananta was beyond remedy.

Says Tuka, the grief of those mothers and people was indescribable.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He does not let the purpose be known until the deed is done; He brings it out into plain experience. His arm falls short reaching toward the ball. Watch out, friends, He calls, take care. Think well before you act, says Narayana, all right, very well. Saying very well, He looks toward them; the ball is loosed and falls below. With it the Infinite One leaps in. The cowherds come home weeping. As they come, the people see the uproar, and all rush out to meet them. Each one asks their own child for news; in grief for Hari, they cannot speak. They cannot speak the words: Hari has drowned; and they beat their breasts and heads with sorrow. Tuka says: the parents who could not see their boys, such grief was in the cowherds' hearts. No one can tell what has happened. They say, God was with you. With God along, such sorrow does not come; something strange has happened today. Today it seems Hari has parted from them, and so this has come about. Without being told, how could they know? The wise among them came to understand. They understood and quieted the outcry; in themselves it was already small. The one who had the thought told the people; that cowherd was the wise one. He says, now Hari is not with you or us; He has drowned in the pool of the Yamuna. There was no time even to ask; once it has befallen Ananta, what can be done? Tuka says: as for that grief, what can I tell now, the grief of the mothers and the people.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the staged play turns to anguish. Krishna sends the ball down and leaps into the pool after it, and the weeping cowherds carry the news home, unable even to say the words, Hari has drowned. Tukaram lingers on the raw grief: parents who cannot find their boys, breasts and heads beaten. The villagers reason aloud that sorrow could never touch them while God was with them, so He must have parted from them today. Notice the quiet thread Tukaram keeps, that God reveals the purpose only after the deed; the people grieve precisely because the meaning is still hidden from them. The wise one among them states the bare fact and there is no time even to question it.

GATHA 4515 Krishna Leela

Gokul empties out in grief

मराठी मूळ

पाषाण फुटती तें दुःख देखोनि । करितां गौळणी शोक लोकां ॥1॥
काय ऐसें पाप होतें आह्मांपासीं । बोलती एकासी एक एका ॥2॥
एकांचिये डोळां असुं बाहएात्कारी । नाहीं तीं अंतरीं जळतील ॥3॥
जळतील एकें अंतर्बाहएात्कारें । टाकिलीं लेकुरें कडियेहूनि ॥4॥
निवांत चि एकें राहिलीं निंश्चत । बाहेरी ना आंत जीव त्यांचे ॥5॥
त्यांचे जीव वरी आले त्या सकळां । एका त्या गोपाळांवांचूनियां ॥6॥
वांचणें तें आतां खोटें संवसारीं । नव्हे भेटी जरी हरिसवें ॥7॥
सवें घेऊनियां चालली गोपाळां । अवघीं च बाळा नर नारी ॥8॥
नर नारी नाहीं मनुष्याचें नावें । गोकुळ हें गांव सांडियेलें ॥9॥
सांडियेलीं अन्नें संपदा सकळ । चित्तीं तो गोपाळ धरुनि जाती ॥10॥
तिरीं माना घालूनियां उभ्या गाई । तटस्थ या डोहीं यमुनेच्या ॥11॥
यमुनेच्या तिरीं झाडें वृक्ष वल्ली। दुःखें कोमाइलीं कृष्णाचिया ॥12॥
यांचें त्यांचें दुःख एक जालें तिरीं । मग शोक करी मायबाप ॥13॥
मायबाप तुका ह्मणे सहोदर । तोंवरी च तीर न पवतां ॥14॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Stones would crack at the sight of that grief. The milkmaids and all the people lamented.

'What terrible sin must we have committed?' they asked one another. Some wept openly, tears streaming; inwardly they burned.

Others burned both inside and out, throwing their children from their arms. Some stood still and silent, as if their jivas had departed.

Every soul among them had risen to the brink, all except the cowherds who had been with Him. Life itself now seemed false in this world, for without meeting Hari, what was the use of living? Taking the cowherds with them, everyone set out: men, women, children, all.

The word 'human' no longer applied; the whole village of Gokul was abandoned. They left behind food, wealth, and everything, holding only the image of that cowherd-boy in their chitta.

The cows stood at the water's edge with lowered heads, staring silently into the pool of the Yamuna. The trees, plants, and creepers along the Yamuna had wilted with grief for Krishna.

The sorrow of all became one on that bank. Then the parents began to wail.

Says Tuka, the parents and siblings, they had been untroubled until they reached the water's edge.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Stones would split at the sight of that grief, as the milkmaids and the people wail. What sin was in us, they say to one another, each to each. In the eyes of some there are outward tears; those without them burn inside. Some burn within and without and throw their children down from their arms. Some stay quite still, settled, their jivas neither inside nor out. The very souls of them all rise to the brink, all but those cowherds who had been with Him. To live on now is false in this world, if there is to be no meeting with Hari. Taking the cowherds with them, they all set out, children, men, women, all. They are men and women in name no longer; the village of Gokul is abandoned. They leave behind food and all their wealth, holding only that cowherd in their hearts as they go. The cows stand at the bank with lowered necks, motionless at the pool of the Yamuna. On the Yamuna's bank the trees and plants and creepers have withered with grief for Krishna. The grief of these and those becomes one at the bank, and then the parents wail. Tuka says: the parents and the kin, only until they had not yet reached the bank.

WHAT IT MEANS

The whole of Gokul empties out toward the pool. Tukaram piles the grief high: some weep outwardly, some burn within, some drop their own children, some sit as if their life has already left. Living seems worthless if Hari cannot be met again, so the village abandons food and wealth and walks out, carrying only His image in the heart, while even cows, trees and creepers wilt in sorrow. The point under the lament is the measure of love, the loss of God felt as the loss of life itself. The last line is a hinge, that their grief had held them only up to the bank; what waits there will change everything.

GATHA 4516 Krishna Leela

Fear at the brink, the flaw in love

मराठी मूळ

तीर देखोनियां यमुनेचें जळ । कांठीं च कोल्हाळ करिताती ॥1॥
कइवाड नव्हे घालावया उडी । आपणासि ओढी भय मागें ॥2॥
मागें सरे माय पाउला पाउलीं । आपल्या च घाली धाकें अंग ॥3॥
अंग राखोनियां माय खेद करी । अंतरीचें हरी जाणवलें ॥4॥
जाणवलें मग देवें दिली बुडी । तुका ह्मणे कुडी भावना हे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Seeing the water of the Yamuna, they raised a great outcry on the bank. They could not bring themselves to leap in.

Fear held them back. The mother stepped back, foot by foot, instinctively protecting her own body.

She mourned outwardly while guarding her body. Hari saw what lay in her heart.

Seeing that, God dove deeper. Says Tuka, this was the falseness in their devotion.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Seeing the water of the Yamuna, they raise a great cry at the bank. None has the daring to leap in; fear drags each one back. The mother steps back, foot by foot, and in her fright shields her own body. Guarding her body, the mother grieves; Hari knows what is in her heart. Knowing it, God dives deeper down. Tuka says: this was the falseness in their feeling.

WHAT IT MEANS

At the water's edge the great love meets its limit. They wail, but no one dares jump in; even the mother backs away step by step, instinctively protecting her own body while she mourns. Tukaram says Hari reads exactly this in her heart, and in response He dives deeper, withdrawing further. The hard word he lands is kudi bhavana, a falseness in the feeling: grief that still guards the self is not yet surrender. The aim here is self-examination, the test of whether our devotion will actually risk the self or only weep from the safe bank.

GATHA 4517 Krishna Leela

Empty words, God withdraws

मराठी मूळ

भावनेच्या मुळें अंतरला देव । शिरला संदेह भयें पोटीं ॥1॥
पोटीं होतें मागें जीव द्यावा ऐसें । बोलिल्या सरिसें न करवे ॥2॥
अंतरला बहु बोलतां वाउगें । अंतरींच्या त्यागेंविण गोष्टी ॥4॥
गोष्टी सकळांच्या आइकिल्या देवें । कोण कोण्याभावें रडती तीं ॥5॥
तीं गेलीं घरास आपल्या सकळ । गोधनें गोपाळ लोक माय ॥6॥
मायबापांची तों ऐसी जाली गति । तुका ह्मणे अंतीं कळों आलें ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Because of this false feeling, God distanced Himself. Doubt and fear had entered their hearts.

They had earlier declared they would give their lives, but when the moment came, they could not match their words with action. God had been greatly estranged by empty talk and gestures without inner surrender.

God heard everyone's lamentations, noting who wept and for what reason. They all went home: people, cattle, cowherds, mothers.

Says Tuka, such was the state of the parents. In the end, the truth became clear.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Because of that feeling God drew away; doubt and fear entered their hearts. They had said before that they would give their lives, but when it came, they could not do as they had spoken. He drew far off; much was said in vain, talk without any giving up within. God heard the talk of all of them, who wept and in what spirit. They all went home, the cattle, the cowherds, the people, the mothers. Tuka says: such was the state the parents came to; in the end it became clear.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram names the gap between word and deed. They had vowed to give their lives for Hari, but at the brink they could not match the vow with action, and so God draws away and doubt fills them. He weighs not the loud talk but the inner giving, the tyaga, the surrender that was missing; lamenting without it is empty. The line points at our own pattern, the easy promise that collapses when it is tested. In the end the truth of where each one stood becomes plain, which is itself the deed's purpose, to reveal the real measure of their love.

GATHA 4518 Krishna Leela

The hidden purpose, subduing Kaliya

मराठी मूळ

आला यांचा भाव देवाचिया मना । अंतरीं कारणांसाठीं होता ॥1॥
होता भाव त्यांचा पाहोनि निराळा । नव्हता पाताळा गेला आधीं ॥2॥
आधीं पाठीमोरीं जालीं तीं सकळें । मग या गोपाळें बुडी दिली ॥3॥
दिली हाक त्याणें जाऊनि पाताळा । जागविलें काळा भुजंगासि ॥4॥
भुजंग हा होता निजला मंदिरीं । निर्भर अंतरीं गर्वनिधि ॥5॥
गर्व हरावया आला नारायण । मिस या करून चेंडुवाचें ॥6॥
चेंडुवाचे मिसें काळया नाथावा । तुका ह्मणे देवा कारण हें ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Their true feelings reached God's awareness. He had been holding back, waiting for the right moment.

He had seen that their devotion was mixed. He had not actually gone to the nether world at first.

Only after they turned away did the Cowherd-Boy dive deep. He went down to the nether world and called out to the serpent.

He roused the Kaliya serpent who had been sleeping in his palace. That serpent was deep in slumber, full of arrogant pride.

Narayana came to crush that pride, using the ball as His pretext. Says Tuka, subduing Kaliya was the Lord's true purpose.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Their true feeling reached God's mind; in His heart He had a purpose. Seeing their feeling held back and apart, He had not in fact gone down to the nether world at first. Only after they all turned their backs did the Cowherd-Boy dive in. Diving, He went down to the nether world and woke Kaliya the serpent. The serpent had been lying asleep in his palace, full to the brim within, a hoard of pride. Narayana came to take away that pride, making the ball His pretext. Under cover of the ball, He came to master Kaliya. Tuka says: this was the Lord's true purpose.

WHAT IT MEANS

Now Tukaram lifts the curtain on the whole episode. The lost ball and the dive were never the point; Krishna's true aim was to crush the pride of Kaliya, the great serpent sleeping in his pool swollen with arrogance. He did not even go down at first; only when the people turned away did He descend, reading their inner feeling. The ball was a pretext, a setting arranged for the real work. The teaching is that God stages the visible drama for a hidden purpose, and pride, here the serpent's hoard, is what He comes to break.

GATHA 4519 Krishna Leela

Kaliya's wife beholds the beauty

मराठी मूळ

काळयाचे मागे चेंडु पत्नीपाशीं । तेजःपुंज राशी देखियेला ॥1॥
लावण्यपूतळा मुखप्रभाराशी । कोटि रवि शशी उगवले ॥2॥
उघवला खांब कदनळीचा गाभा । ब्रीदें वांकी नभा देखे पायीं ॥3॥
पाहिला सकळ तिनें न्याहाळूनि । कोण या जननी विसंबली ॥4॥
विसरु हा तीस कैसा याचा जाला । जीवाहुनि वाल्हा दिसतसे ॥5॥
दिसतसे रूप गोजिरें लाहान । पाहातां लोचन सुखावले ॥6॥
पाहिलें पतौनि काळा दुष्टाकडे । मग ह्मणे कुडें जालें आतां ॥7॥
आतां हा उठोनि खाईल या बाळा । देईल वेल्हाळा माय जीव ॥8॥
जीव याचा कैसा वांचे ह्मणे नारी । मोहिली अंतरीं हरिरूपें ॥9॥
रूपे अनंताचीं अनंतप्रकार । न कळे साचार तुका ह्मणे ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He asked Kaliya's wife for the ball. She beheld a radiant being, blazing with light.

A figure of perfect beauty, a flood of facial radiance, as if ten million suns and moons had risen. He gleamed like the core of a golden plantain stem, His glory reaching beyond the sky, visible even at His feet.

She examined Him from head to toe. 'What mother could have parted from this child?' she wondered.

'How could anyone forget one so dear, more precious than life itself?' His form was exquisitely small and beautiful. Her eyes drank in the sight with satisfaction.

She glanced warily at the sleeping Kaliya and thought, 'Trouble is coming.' 'When he wakes, he will devour this child, and the child's tender mother will die of grief.' 'How can this little one survive?' she wondered, her heart captivated by Hari's beauty. Says Tuka, the forms of the Infinite are beyond all reckoning.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Behind Kaliya, near his wife, He goes for the ball; she sees a heap of pure radiance. A figure of perfect loveliness, a flood of light from His face, as if ten million suns and moons had risen. He shines like the core of a golden plantain stem; His emblems and anklets, His feet seem to touch the sky. She looks Him over from head to foot. What mother could have let go of this child, she wonders. How could she ever forget Him? He looks dearer than life itself. His form is lovely and small; her eyes are gladdened just looking. She glances over at wicked Kaliya, and then says, now trouble has come. Now when he wakes he will eat this child, and the tender mother will give up her life. How can this little one live, she says, her heart taken within by Hari's beauty. Tuka says: the forms of the Infinite are of endless kinds; their truth is not known.

WHAT IT MEANS

The scene softens at the serpent's wife, who comes upon the child Krishna blazing like ten million suns and moons, beautiful past telling. She drinks in His form head to foot and her heart is captured; she cannot imagine the mother who could part from such a child. Then dread breaks in, that when her husband Kaliya wakes he will devour the boy and break his mother's heart. Tukaram lets her wonder carry the awe of the Lord's beauty even as danger looms. The closing line names the mystery directly, that the Infinite wears endless forms and their true nature cannot be grasped.

GATHA 4520 Krishna Leela

The serpents close in, calling Garuda

मराठी मूळ

ह्मणे चेंडू कोणें आणिला या ठाया । आलों पुरवाया कोड त्याचें ॥1॥
त्याचें आइकोन निष्ठ वचन । भयाभीत मन जालें तीचें ॥2॥
तिची चित्तवृत्ती होती देवावरी । आधीं ते माघारी फिरली वेगीं ॥3॥
वेगीं मन गेलें भ्रताराचे सोयी । विघ्न आलें कांहीं आह्मांवरीं ॥4॥
वरि उदकास अंत नाहीं पार । अक्षोभ सागर भरलासे ॥5॥
संचार करूनि कोण्या वाटे आला । ठायीं च देखिला अवचिता ॥6॥
अवचिता नेणों येथें उगवला । दिसे तो धाकुला बोल मोठे ॥7॥
मोठएानें बोलतो भय नाहीं मनीं । केला उठवूनी काळ जागा ॥8॥
जागविला काळसर्प तये वेळीं । उठिला कल्लोळीं विषाचिये ॥9॥
यमुनेच्या डोहावरी आला ऊत । काळ्याकृतांतधूदकारें ॥10॥
कारणें ज्या येथें आला नारायण । जालें दरुषण दोघांमधीं ॥11॥
दोघांमध्यें जाले बोल परस्परें । प्रसंग उत्तरें युद्धाचिया ॥12॥
चिंतावला चित्तीं तोंडे बोले काळ । करीन सकळ ग्रास तुझा ॥13॥
जाला सावकाश झेंप घाली वरी। तंव ह्मणे हरि मुिष्टघातें ॥14॥
तेणें काळें त्यासि दिसे काळ तैसा। हरावया जैसा जीव जाला ॥15॥
आठवले काळा हाकारिलें गोत । मिळालीं बहुतें नागकुळें ॥16॥
कल्हारीं संधानीं धरियेला हरि । अवघा विखारीं व्यापियेला ॥17॥
यांस तुका ह्मणे नाहीं भक्तीविण । गरुडाचें चिंतन केलें मनीं ॥18॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Krishna said, 'Who brought the ball to this place? I have come to fulfill his wish.' Hearing His fearless words, terror filled her mind. Her chitta, which had been drawn to God, now turned back in alarm toward her husband.

Her mind rushed back to her husband's side: 'Some calamity has come upon us.' Above, the water stretches without end, a bottomless ocean brimming full. 'By what path did He come here? He appeared suddenly, out of nowhere.' 'He looks small, but His words are mighty.' He spoke boldly and without fear.

He woke the Kaliya serpent from sleep. The serpent rose in billowing coils of venom.

The waters of the Yamuna boiled and overflowed, with Death-like fury roaring. The purpose for which Narayana had come was fulfilled: the two faced each other.

Words were exchanged between them, leading to the confrontation of battle. Kaliya, brooding and enraged, snarled, 'I will swallow you whole.' He lunged, but Hari struck him with His fists.

Then Kaliya saw death before his eyes, as though his very life was being torn away. Kaliya summoned his kin.

Hordes of serpents gathered from every side. They coiled around Hari and saturated Him with their venom.

Says Tuka, against those without devotion, Krishna summoned the thought of Garuda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He says, who brought the ball to this place? I have come to satisfy his wish. Hearing His hard, fearless words, her mind was filled with fear. Her chitta had been on God; now first it turned quickly back. Quickly her mind ran to her husband: some calamity has come on us. Above, the water has no end, no shore; a vast unshaken sea is brimming. By what path did He come and pass? She saw Him there all at once. All at once, who knows, He has appeared here; He looks small, but his words are big. He speaks boldly, no fear in his mind, and he has roused Kaliya awake. The death-serpent was wakened then, and rose in billows of venom. A flood came over the Yamuna's pool, with the roar of Death itself. The purpose for which Narayana came was met: the two stood face to face. Words passed between the two, the speech that leads to battle. Brooding and enraged, Kaliya snarls with his mouth, I will swallow you whole. At leisure he rears up to strike from above; then Hari answers with a blow of His fist. By that blow death looms before the serpent, as if his life is being torn away. Kaliya remembers and calls his kin, and many serpent clans gather. In the joining of the fray they seize Hari, and He is wholly wrapped in venom. Tuka says: against these there is nothing but devotion; in His mind He called the thought of Garuda.

WHAT IT MEANS

The confrontation breaks open. Krishna speaks with such fearless force that the serpent's wife turns from devotion back to dread for her husband, and Kaliya wakes in coils of venom while the Yamuna boils with the roar of death. This was exactly the purpose for which Narayana came: the two face each other, words turn to battle, and when Kaliya boasts he will swallow Him whole, Hari answers with His fist. The serpent calls his whole clan, and they coil around Hari and drown Him in poison. The closing line is the key the poem hands over, that against such venom nothing avails but devotion, and so even Krishna in play turns His mind to Garuda, His own carrier and the serpents' natural dread.

GATHA 4521 Krishna Leela

Garuda comes, Kaliya subdued

मराठी मूळ

निजदास उभा तात्काळ पायापें । स्वामी देखे सर्पें विष्टयेला ॥1॥
लहानथोरें होतीं मिळालीं अपारें । त्याच्या धुदकारें निवारिलीं ॥2॥
निघतां आपटी धरूनि धांवामधीं । एकाचें चि वधी माथें पायें ॥3॥
एकीं जीव दिले येतां च त्या धाकें । येतील तीं एकें काकूलती ॥4॥
यथेष्ट भिक्षलीं पोट धाये वरी । तंव ह्मणे हरि पुरे आतां ॥5॥
आतां करूं काम आलों जयासाटीं । हरी घाली मिठी काळयासि ॥6॥
यासि नाथूनियां नाकीं दिली दोरी । चेंडू भार शिरीं कमळांचा ॥7॥
चालविला वरी बैसे नारायण । गरुडा आळंगुन बहुडविलें ॥8॥
विसरु न पडे संवगडएा गाई । यमुनेच्या डोहीं लक्ष त्यांचें ॥9॥
त्याच्या गोष्टी कांठीं बैसोनि सांगती । बुडाला दाविती येथें हरि ॥10॥
हरीचें चिंतन करितां आठव । तुका ह्मणे देव आला वरी ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His true servant stood at His feet in an instant. The Lord saw Himself surrounded by serpents.

Small and great, they had gathered in countless numbers. At Garuda's thunderous roar, they were scattered.

He seized them in his talons as they fled, crushing the head of one beneath his feet. Some died of fright at his mere approach.

Others came pleading for mercy. He devoured them to his full satisfaction, until Hari said, 'Enough now.' 'Let me do what I came for.' Hari seized Kaliya and placed a bridle on his nose, loading his head with lotuses and the ball.

He climbed upon Kaliya's back. Narayana then embraced Garuda and sent him on his way.

The cowherds never forgot their companion and the cows. Their attention was fixed on the Yamuna's pool.

They sat on the bank telling stories of Krishna, pointing, 'Here is where Hari dove in.' As they remembered and spoke of Hari, says Tuka, God arose from the water.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His own servant stands at His feet in an instant; the Lord sees Himself wrapped in serpents. Small and great, they had gathered without number; at his roar they were driven off. As they flee he catches and dashes them down in his rush, killing one with his head, one with his feet. Some give up their lives at his mere approach; some come pleading for mercy. He feeds to his fill, till his belly is full, until Hari says, enough now. Now let me do the work I came for; Hari throws His arms around Kaliya. He bridles him and puts a rope through his nose, and loads his head with the ball and with lotuses. He drives him up, and Narayana sits on him; embracing Garuda, He sends him back. The cowherds and the cows are not forgotten; their gaze is on the Yamuna's pool. Sitting on the bank they tell stories of Him, pointing here, this is where Hari drowned. As they remember Hari and call Him to mind, Tuka says: God comes up from the water.

WHAT IT MEANS

Garuda arrives the instant Krishna calls, and the eagle scatters and devours the serpent hordes until Hari tells him, enough. Then Krishna does the work He came for: He embraces Kaliya, bridles him through the nose, crowns his head with the ball and lotuses, and rides him up, sending Garuda home. The deed done, the poem returns to the grieving cowherds still fixed on the pool, telling stories, pointing to where He went under. The closing turn is the reward of remembrance, that as they keep Hari in mind and call on Him, God Himself rises out of the water to them. Devotion that does not let go is what draws the Lord back into sight.

GATHA 4522 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, rescue from the serpent

मराठी मूळ

अवचित त्यांणीं देखिला भुजंग । पळतील मग हाउ आला ॥1॥
आला घेऊनियां यमुनेबाहेरी । पालवितो करीं गडियांसि॥2॥
गडियांसि ह्मणे वैकुंठनायक । या रे सकिळक मजपाशीं ॥3॥
मजपाशीं तुह्मां भय काय करी । जविळ या दुरी जाऊं नका ॥4॥
कानीं आइकिले गोविंदाचे बोल । ह्मणती नवल चला पाहों ॥5॥
पाहों आले हरीजवळ सकळ । गोविंदें गोपाळ आंळगिले ॥6॥
आल्या गाई वरी घालितील माना । वोरसलें स्तना क्षीर लोटें ॥7॥
लोटती सकळें एकावरी एक । होउनि पृथक कुर्वाळलीं ॥8॥
कुर्वाळलीं आनंदें घेती चारापाणी । तिहीं चक्रपाणी देखियेला ॥9॥
त्यां च पाशीं होता परि केली माव । न कळे संदेह पडलिया ॥10॥
याति वृक्ष वल्ली होत्या कोमेलिया । त्यांसि कृष्णें काया दिव्य दिली ॥11॥
दिलें गोविंदें त्या पदा नाहीं नाश। तुका ह्मणे आस निरसली ॥12॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Suddenly they saw the great serpent. They began to flee in terror.

Krishna came out of the Yamuna, waving to His companions. The Lord of Vaikuntha said, 'Come to Me, all of you.' 'What harm can anything do in My presence? Come close.

Do not go away.' Their ears heard Govinda's voice. They said, 'What a wonder! Let us go and see.' They came near Hari, all of them.

Govinda embraced the cowherds. The cows came and lowered their heads upon Him.

Milk flooded from their udders. They all rushed upon each other, one on top of another, each nuzzling and caressing the others.

Amid this joy they began eating and drinking. They saw their Chakrapani.

He had been with them all along, but His illusion had hidden Him. When confusion falls, He cannot be seen.

The trees, plants, and creepers that had wilted were given divine new bodies by Krishna. Says Tuka, Govinda gave them an imperishable state. All longing was fulfilled.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All at once they saw the great serpent. They began to flee in terror. Then Krishna came out of the Yamuna. He waved His hand to His friends. The Lord of Vaikuntha said to His companions: come here, all of you, come to Me. What harm can anything do while you are with Me? Come close; do not go far away. Their ears heard Govinda's words. They said: what a wonder, let us go and see. They all came near Hari. Govinda embraced the cowherd boys. The cows came and laid their heads upon Him. Their udders overflowed; milk poured out. They all pressed together, one upon another, each nuzzling and caressing the rest. In that joy they began to eat and drink. They saw their Chakrapani. He had been there with them all along, but His maya had hidden Him. When doubt falls, He cannot be seen. The trees and plants and creepers had wilted; Krishna gave them divine new bodies. Govinda gave them a state that does not perish. Tuka says: every longing was satisfied.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga sings the close of the Kaliya episode, when Krishna rises unharmed from the Yamuna and gathers His terrified friends back to Him. The teaching is folded into the story: when fear and doubt fall over the mind, God can stand right beside you and you will not see Him; the same Lord who was always present only seems to appear once the confusion lifts. His maya is what hides Him, not any distance on His part. The wilted plants given imperishable new bodies say the rest: contact with Him does not merely comfort, it transfigures, granting a state that does not pass away. So the closing line lands every longing satisfied, because what was wanted all along was this presence.

GATHA 4523 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, separation deepens love

मराठी मूळ

आस निरसली गोविंदाचे भेटी । संवसारा तुटी पुढिलिया ॥1॥
पुढें पाठविलें गोविंदें गोपाळां । देउनि चपळां हातीं गुढी ॥2॥
हाका आरिोळया देउनि नाचती । एक सादाविती हरि आले ॥3॥
आरंधीं पडिलीं होतीं तयां घरीं । संकीर्ण त्या नारी नरलोक ॥4॥
लोका भूक तान नाहीं निद्रा डोळा । रूप वेळोवेळां आठविती ॥5॥
आहाकटा मग करिती गेलिया । आधीं ठावा तयां नाहीं कोणा ॥6॥
आधीं चुकी मग घडे आठवण । तुका ह्मणे जन परिचयें ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All longing was fulfilled by meeting Govinda. The cycle of future births was broken.

Govinda sent the cowherds ahead, placing victory-banners in the hands of those lively ones. They shouted, cheered, and danced.

Some called out, 'Hari has come!' The homes they had left in turmoil, the anxious women and men, knew no hunger, thirst, or sleep. Again and again they remembered that beautiful form.

When He was gone, they cried out, 'Alas!' Before that, none had known how much He meant. Says Tuka, first comes separation, then comes the depth of remembrance.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Every longing was satisfied by meeting Govinda. The chain of births to come was broken. Govinda sent the cowherds on ahead. He put victory-banners in the hands of those lively boys. They shouted and cheered and danced. Some called out: Hari has come. The homes they had left were in turmoil; the women and men there were full of fear. Those people felt no hunger, no thirst, no sleep on their eyes. Again and again they kept remembering His form. When He had gone, then they cried out: alas. Before that, none of them had known how much He was. First comes the missing, then comes the remembering. Tuka says: people only know by what they have lost.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here the cowherds run home as heralds of Krishna's return, while at home the families have been sick with worry over Him. Tukaram catches the strange arithmetic of love in the last lines: while Krishna was present and safe, no one measured what He meant to them; it is His absence that woke the ache of remembrance. Separation is not punishment here but a teacher, the thing that finally makes the heart see how much it holds. The everyday truth, people only know by what they have lost, is pointed inward: do not wait for the loss to learn the worth of what is near.

GATHA 4524 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, the mother's grief and the omen

मराठी मूळ

जननी हे ह्मणे आहा काय जालें । शरीर रिक्षलें काय काजें ॥1॥
काय काज आतां हरिविण जिणें । नित्य दुःख कोणें सोसावें हें ॥2॥
हें दुःख न सरे हरि न भेटे तों । त्यामागें चि जातों एका वेळे ॥3॥
एकवेळ जरी देखतें मी आतां । तरी जीवापरता न करितें ॥4॥
करितां हे मात हरीचें चिंतन । शुभ तो शकुन तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The mother says, 'Oh, what has happened? My body has wasted away. What is the use of living without Hari? Who can endure this constant sorrow?' 'This grief will not end until Hari is found.

I will follow Him at once.' 'If only I could see Him one more time, I would never let Him go.' While she spoke these words, remembering Hari, says Tuka, a good omen appeared.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The mother says: oh, what has happened? My body has wasted away. What was the use of keeping it? What is the use of living now, without Hari? Who can bear this endless sorrow? This grief will not end until Hari is found. I will go straight after Him, this very time. If I could see Him just once now, I would never let Him leave my life again. While she said these words, her thought was on Hari. Tuka says: that was a good omen.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the cry of a mother (the longing devotee in a mother's voice) who feels she cannot live another moment without the Lord. Tukaram lets the grief run all the way to its edge, even to the wish to follow Him into death, and does not soften it. Then he turns it: the very fact that, in her sorrow, her whole mind has fastened on Hari is itself the good sign. The point is that longing fixed entirely on God is not a dead end but the doorway; remembrance born of separation is auspicious, because the heart that can think only of Him is already near Him.

GATHA 4525 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, Gokul's joyful welcome

मराठी मूळ

शुभ मात तिहीं आणिली गोपाळीं । चेंडू वनमाळी घेउनि आले ॥1॥
आली दारा देखे हरुषाची गुढी । सांगितली पुढी हरुषें मात ॥2॥
हरुषलीं माता केलें निंबलोण । गोपाळांवरून कुरवंडी ॥3॥
गोपाळां भोवतें मिळालें गोकुळ । अवघीं सकळ लहान थोरें ॥4॥
थोर सुख जालें ते काळीं आनंद । सांगती गोविंद वरि आला ॥5॥
आले वरि बैसोनियां नारायण । काळया नाथून वहन केलें ॥6॥
नगराबाहेरी निघाले आनंदें । लावूनियां वाद्यें नाना घोष ॥7॥
नारायणापुढें गोपाळ चालती । आनंदें नाचती गाती गीत ॥8॥
तंव तो देखिला वैकुंठींचा पती । लोटांगणीं जाती सकळ ही ॥9॥
सकळ ही एका भावें आलिंगिले । अवघियां जाले अवघे हरि ॥10॥
हरि आलिंगनें हरिरूप जालीं । आप विसरलीं आपणास ॥11॥
सकळांसी सुख एक दिलें देवें । मायबापां भावें लोकपाळां ॥12॥
मायबाप देवा नाहीं लोकपाळ । सारिखीं सकळ तुका ह्मणे ॥13॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The cowherds brought the joyful news. The Lord had come back with the ball.

At the door she saw the banner of joy. They told the happy news with great excitement.

The mothers were overjoyed and performed the ritual warding off the evil eye, waving offerings over the cowherds. All of Gokul gathered around the cowherds, everyone, young and old.

Great joy and celebration arose. They told how Govinda had risen from the pool.

Narayana came up from the water, seated upon the subdued Kaliya. They marched out of the village in a festive procession, with instruments and all manner of joyful sounds.

The cowherds walked ahead of Narayana, dancing and singing in ecstasy. Then they beheld the Lord of Vaikuntha.

All fell to the ground in prostration. Everyone was embraced with one feeling, and all became Hari.

Through Hari's embrace they became Hari's form, forgetting themselves entirely. God gave the same bliss to all: to parents, to the guardians of the world.

Says Tuka, God has no favorites among parents and guardians. All are the same to Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cowherds brought the joyful news. Vanamali came back, bringing the ball. She came to the door and saw the banner of joy. They told the happy news first of all. The mothers were overjoyed. They made the warding ritual against the evil eye and waved the offering over the cowherds. All of Gokul gathered around the boys, every one, young and old. Great happiness arose then, great joy. They told how Govinda had risen from the pool. Narayana came up from the water, seated on the subdued Kaliya. They went out of the town in a glad procession, with instruments and many sounds. The cowherds walked ahead of Narayana, dancing and singing in joy. Then they saw the Lord of Vaikuntha. They all fell flat on the ground before Him. With one feeling He embraced them all, and all of them became Hari. By Hari's embrace they took Hari's own form; they forgot themselves entirely. God gave one and the same bliss to all, to parents, to the guardians of the world. Tuka says: God keeps no favorites among parents or guardians. To Him all are the same.

WHAT IT MEANS

The whole of Gokul pours out to meet Krishna risen from the river riding the tamed Kaliya, and the homecoming becomes a festival. The heart of it is the embrace: when the Lord holds them, with one feeling toward all, they lose themselves and become His very form. That is the abhanga's claim about union, that nearness to God does not leave the self standing apart but dissolves it into Him. The closing lines name the stake plainly: this grace plays no favorites. God gives the same bliss to parent and protector alike, and before Him no rank or relation counts for more than another.

GATHA 4526 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, grace beyond caste, the debt of devotion

मराठी मूळ

नेणें वर्ण धर्म जीं आलीं सामोरीं । अवघीं च हरी आिंळगिलीं ॥1॥
हरि लोकपाळ आले नगरांत । सकळांसहित मायबाप ॥2॥
पारणें तयांचें जालें एका वेळे । देखिलें सावळें परब्रह्म ॥3॥
ब्रह्मानंदें लोक सकळ नाचती । गुढिया उभविती घरोघरीं ॥4॥
घरोघरीं सुख आनंद सोहळा । सडे रंग माळा चौकदारीं ॥5॥
दारीं वृंदावनें तुळसीचीं वनें । रामकृष्णगाणें नारायण॥6॥
नारायण तिहीं पूजिला बहुतीं । नाना पुष्पयाती करूनियां ॥7॥
यांचें ऋण नाहीं फिटलें मागील । पुढें भांडवल जोडिती हीं ॥8॥
हीं नव्हतीं कधीं या देवा वेगळीं । केला वनमाळी सेवाऋणी ॥9॥
सेवाऋणें तुका ह्मणे रूपधारी । भक्तांचा कैवारी नारायणा ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Without asking about caste or creed, Hari embraced all who came forward. Hari and the guardians of the world entered the village, together with all the parents.

The fast of all those people was broken at once: they beheld the dark, beautiful Supreme Brahman. In the bliss of Brahman, everyone danced.

Victory banners were raised in every home. In every home there was happiness, joy, and festivity.

Colored powders, garlands, and decorations adorned every doorstep. Tulsi gardens and vrindavan shrines stood at every door, with songs of Rama, Krishna, and Narayana.

They worshiped Narayana with many kinds of flowers. Yet the debt of their past merit was not repaid.

More capital was being added for the future. They had never been separate from this God.

They made the Lord of the Forest indebted through their service. Says Tuka, it is because of the debt of devotion that Narayana takes form. He is the champion of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He did not ask about caste or creed. Whoever came forward, Hari embraced them all. Hari and the world-guardians entered the town, together with all the parents. The fast of those people was broken all at once: they saw the dark, beautiful Supreme Brahman. In the bliss of Brahman all the people danced. They raised victory-banners in house after house. In every home there was happiness, joy, and festival. Colored powders, garlands, and decorations lay at every doorstep. At every door stood tulsi groves and vrindavan shrines, with songs of Rama, Krishna, Narayana. They worshipped Narayana with many kinds of flowers. Yet their old debt was not paid off; they kept adding more capital for what was to come. These ones were never apart from this God. They made Vanamali a debtor through their service. Tuka says: it is for the debt of their service that Narayana takes a form. He is the champion of His devotees.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram opens with Krishna's refusal to ask caste or creed before He embraces anyone, and that refusal is the teaching, not a footnote: the dark beautiful boy is the Supreme Brahman, and He gives Himself to all who come without sorting them. The villagers' worship is figured as accounts, and Tukaram flips the ledger we expect: their devotion does not merely repay a debt to God, it puts God in their debt. He frames the boldest claim last, that Narayana takes a form at all because of the love His devotees pour out; the formless one consents to a body for their sake, and stands as their champion. Love, not merit owed upward, is what draws God down.

GATHA 4527 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, the world resumes its pull

मराठी मूळ

नारायण आले निजमंदिरासि । जाले या लोकांसि बहुडविते ॥1॥
बहुडविले बहु केलें समाधान । विसरु तो क्षण नका माझा ॥2॥
मात सांगितली सकळ वृत्तांत । केलें दंडवत सकळांनीं ॥3॥
सकळां भातुकें वांटिल्या साखरा । आपलाल्या घरा लोक गेले ॥4॥
लोक गेले कामा गाईपें गोपाळ । वारली सकळ लोभापाठी ॥5॥
लोभ दावुनियां आपला विसर । पाडितो कुमर धनआशा ॥6॥
आशेचे बांधले तुका ह्मणे जन । काय नारायण ऐसा जाणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana returned to His own home, bidding farewell to all the people. He comforted them and said, 'Do not forget Me, not even for a moment.' He told them everything that had happened.

Everyone bowed in reverence. Sweets and treats were distributed to all.

The people went to their homes. The people went about their work, the cowherds to their cattle.

The lure of worldly life resumed its pull. Showing the bait of desire and then vanishing from sight, youth and hope for wealth lead everyone astray.

Says Tuka, the people are bound by hope. What does Narayana know of such bondage?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana came back to His own home. He took His leave of all those people. He comforted them and said: do not forget Me, not even for a moment. He told them everything that had happened. They all bowed low before Him. Sweets and treats were shared out to everyone. The people went off to their own homes. They went back to their work, the cowherds to their cattle. The old grip of worldly life took hold again. Showing the bait of desire and then slipping out of sight, the longing for sons and the hope of wealth lead people astray. Tuka says: people are bound by hope. What does Narayana know of such bondage?

WHAT IT MEANS

The festival ends, Krishna goes home, and ordinary life closes back over the villagers like water. Tukaram names the mechanism by which it happens: desire is a bait that is shown and then withdrawn, and the cravings for children and for wealth quietly pull a heart away from the God it had just held. The hook is hope itself, the endless leaning toward a next thing. The closing question is the sharp point: people are bound by this, but Narayana is not, He has no part in such bondage. The line invites self-examination, not contempt, asking the listener to notice the bait still working in their own life even after the vision has passed.

GATHA 4528 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, the divine sport that breaks rules

मराठी मूळ

जाला कवतुक करितां रोकडें । आणीक ही पुढें नारायण ॥1॥
येउनियां पुढें धरिला मारग । हरावया भाग इंद्रापाशीं॥2॥
इंद्रा दहीं दुध तूप नेतां लोणी । घेतलें हिरोनि वाटे त्यांचें ॥3॥
हिरोनि घेतल्या कावडी सकळा । ह्मणती गोपाळा बरें नव्हे ॥4॥
नव्हे तें चि करी न भे किळकाळा । तुका ह्मणे लीळा खेळे देव ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Having worked these wonders openly, Narayana planned still more. He went ahead and blocked the road, intending to take away the offerings meant for Indra.

He intercepted the loads of curds, milk, ghee, and butter meant for Indra, seizing them all on the road. When their baskets were taken, the people said, 'This is not right, O little Cowherd.' Says Tuka, what should not be done, He does. He fears no one.

God plays His divine sport.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Having openly worked these wonders, Narayana planned still more. He went ahead and held the road. He meant to take away the share owed to Indra. He snatched away the curds, milk, ghee, and butter that were being carried to Indra. He seized it all on the road. When all their loads were taken, the people said: this is not good, O cowherd boy. Tuka says: what should not be done, He does. He fears no one. God plays His sport.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga opens the Govardhana episode: Krishna deliberately intercepts the offerings the villagers carry to Indra. The point is in His freedom. He does what convention says should not be done, and He answers to no one. Where the people see a rule broken and worry, Tukaram sees lila, the divine play that is not bound by what fear and custom permit. The teaching held inside the mischief is that God is not under our notions of right procedure; His sport can overturn the very arrangements we think He must respect, and that fearlessness is itself a sign of who He is.

GATHA 4529 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, fear from not knowing Him

मराठी मूळ

खेळ नव्हे बरा इंद्र कोपलिया । देव ह्मणे तयां भेऊं नका ॥1॥
नका धरू भय धाक कांहीं मनीं । बोले चक्रपाणि गौळयांसि ॥2॥
गौळयांसि धीर नाहीं या वचनें । आशंकितमनें वेडावलीं ॥3॥
वेडावलीं त्यांसि न कळतां भाव । देवआदिदेव नोळखतां ॥4॥
नोळखतां दुःखें वाहाती शरीरीं । तुका ह्मणे वरि भारवाही ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The cowherds said, 'This game is not good if Indra becomes angry.' God told them, 'Do not be afraid.' 'Do not hold any fear or dread in your minds,' said the Lord of the Discus to the cowherds. But His words did not reassure the cowherds.

Their minds were anxious and bewildered. They were bewildered because they did not know His nature, not recognizing Him as the God of gods.

Says Tuka, those who do not recognize the Infinite One carry a needless burden of sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cowherds said: this game is not good if Indra grows angry. God said to them: do not be afraid. Do not hold any fear or dread in your minds, said Chakrapani to the cowherds. But these words gave the cowherds no steadiness. Their minds were anxious and confused. They were confused because they did not grasp His nature. They did not recognize Him as the God of gods. Tuka says: not recognizing Him, they carry sorrow on their bodies for nothing.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cowherds are frightened that Indra will retaliate, and Krishna's plain reassurance, do not be afraid, fails to calm them. Tukaram puts His finger on why: their fear comes from not knowing who is standing in front of them. They take Him for a reckless boy and not for the God of gods, so His word cannot land. The teaching is that fear is the symptom of unrecognized presence. When you do not know that the Infinite is with you, you go on shouldering a weight of dread that has no real cause, a needless burden carried only because the eyes have not opened to Him.

GATHA 4530 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, the greedy mind cannot steady

मराठी मूळ

भारवाही नोळखती या अनंता । जवळी असतां अंगसंगें ॥1॥
अंगसंगें तया न कळे हा देव । कळोनि संदेह मागुताला ॥2॥
मागुती पडती चिंतेचिये डोहीं । जयाची हे नाहीं बुद्धि स्थिर ॥3॥
बुद्धि स्थिर होउं नेदी नारायण । आशबद्ध जन लोभिकांची ॥4॥
लोभिकां न साहे देवाचें करणें । तुका ह्मणे तेणें दुःखी होती ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They are burden-bearers who do not recognize this Infinite One, even though He walks beside them. Even in His intimate company, they do not see that He is God.

Doubt returns again and again for those whose intellect is unsteady. Narayana does not let the intellect of the greedy become steady.

The greedy cannot bear what God does. Says Tuka, that is why they remain in sorrow.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They are burden-bearers who do not know this Infinite One, though He is right beside them, touching them. Even in His close company they do not see that He is God. Doubt comes back to them again and again, for their intellect is not steady. Narayana does not let the intellect of the greedy grow steady. The greedy cannot bear what God does. Tuka says: that is why they stay in sorrow.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pushes the previous abhanga deeper, into why some hearts cannot rest even when God is at arm's length. The trouble is greed, the grasping that keeps the mind unsettled and full of returning doubt. He makes the striking claim that Narayana Himself does not let the greedy mind become steady, because a mind clutching at gain cannot bear what God actually does, His rule-breaking, unpredictable play. The intimacy is real (He touches them) yet wasted on them. The lesson, aimed at self-examination, is that craving is what keeps God unrecognized at close range, and unrecognized presence leaves a person in sorrow.

GATHA 4531 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, anger at God forfeits the feast

मराठी मूळ

दुःखी होती लोभें करावें तें काई । उडतील गाई म्हैसी आतां ॥1॥
आणीकही कांहीं होईल अरिष्ट । नायिके हा धीट सांगितलें ॥2॥
सांगों चला याच्या मायबापांपाशीं । निघाले घरासि देवा रागें ॥3॥
रागें काला देतां न घेती कवळ । टोकवी गोपाळ क्रोधियांसि ॥4॥
क्रोध देवावरि धरियेला राग । तुका ह्मणे भाग न लभती ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When people suffer through their own greed, what can be done? 'Our cows and buffaloes will be swept away now. Some other disaster will surely come.

This bold one will not listen to what he is told.' They said, 'Let us go and tell His parents.' They left for home, angry at God. In their anger, they refused to eat the feast He had prepared.

He tried to coax the angry ones, but they refused every morsel. Says Tuka, those who are angry at God forfeit their share of bliss.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They suffer through their own greed; what can be done with it? They said: our cows and buffaloes will be carried off now. Some other disaster will come too. This bold boy will not listen to what we tell him. Come, let us go and tell His parents. They set off home, angry at God. In their anger, when He offered the feast, they would not take a mouthful. He coaxed the angry ones. They refused every morsel. Tuka says: those who hold anger against God do not get their share.

WHAT IT MEANS

The frightened villagers turn from fear to resentment: they blame the boy, threaten to report Him to His parents, and storm off. The sharp moment is the food. Krishna has made the kala, the shared feast, and offers it, even coaxing them, but in their anger they refuse to eat a single bite. Tukaram reads this as the plain consequence of being angry at God: the grace is held out, and the resentful hand pushes it away. They do not get their share, not because it was withheld, but because anger closed them to it. The mirror is for the listener: resentment toward God locks the door from the inside on the very bliss being offered.

GATHA 4532 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, the feast belongs to the trusting

मराठी मूळ

भाग त्या सुखाचे वांकडएां बोबडएां । आपलिया गडएां भाविकांसि ॥1॥
भारवाही गेले टाकुनि कावडी । नवनीतगोडी भाविकांसि ॥2॥
काला करूनियां वांटिलां सकळां । आनंदें गोपाळांमाजी खेळे ॥3॥
खेळेंमेळें दहीं दुध तूप खाती । भय नाहीं चित्तीं कवणाचें ॥4॥
कवणाचें चाले तुका ह्मणे बळ । जयासी गोपाळ साहए जाला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The share of that joy belongs to the stammering, the lisping, the simple, and the faithful. The burden-bearers who left their baskets behind missed out.

The faithful cowherds feasted on the butter's sweetness. He prepared the feast and distributed it among all.

He played joyfully among the cowherds. They ate curds, milk, and ghee without a care.

No one's chitta held any fear. Says Tuka, whose strength can prevail when the Cowherd-Boy is your ally?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That share of joy belongs to the stammering, the lisping, the simple, His own faithful playmates. The burden-bearers who left their baskets behind lost it. He made the feast and shared it out among them all. He played joyfully among the cowherd boys. In play and company they ate curds and milk and ghee. In their hearts there was no fear of anyone. Tuka says: whose strength can prevail, when the Cowherd-Boy himself is your ally?

WHAT IT MEANS

Set against the angry ones who refused, this abhanga gives the feast to the simple and trusting playmates, the stammering and the lisping, the ones with no cleverness and no suspicion. Their reward is exactly what the proud and fearful forfeited: they eat freely, with no fear of anyone in their hearts. Tukaram draws the line between the two kinds of devotee not by knowledge or status but by trust. The closing question carries the whole assurance: when the Cowherd-Boy himself stands with you, no power anywhere can prevail against you, so fear in His company was always misplaced.

GATHA 4533 Krishna Leela

Krishna-lila, pride keeps God far

मराठी मूळ

जाणवलें इंद्रा चरित्र सकळ । वांकुल्या गोपाळ दाविताती ॥1॥
तातडिया मेघां आज्ञा करी राव । गोकुळींचा ठाव उरों नेदा ॥2॥
नेदाविया काई म्हसी वांचों लोक । पुरा सकिळक सिळाधारीं ॥3॥
धाक नाहीं माझा गोविळयां पोरां । सकिळक मारा ह्मणे मेघां ॥4॥
ह्मणविती देव आपणां तोंवरी । जंव नाहीं वरी कोपलों मी ॥5॥
मीपणें हा देव न कळे चि त्यांसी । अभिमानें रासि गर्वाचिया ॥6॥
अभिमानरासि जयाचिये ठायीं । तुका ह्मणे तई देव दुरी ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Indra learned of the whole affair. The cowherds were mocking him openly.

Indra commanded the clouds of deluge: 'Do not leave a single survivor in Gokul.' 'Do not let cattle or people live. Bury them all under a hail of boulders.' 'These little cowherds and their children have no fear of me.

Kill them all,' he told the clouds. 'They call themselves gods only until I am roused.' In his arrogance, God remained unknown to him.

Mountains of pride had piled up. Says Tuka, wherever there is a mountain of pride, God remains far away.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Indra came to know the whole affair: the cowherds were openly mocking him. The king commanded the storm-clouds in haste: do not leave a single place standing in Gokul. Do not let cattle or people live; bury them all under a hail of stones. These little cowherd boys have no dread of me. Kill them all, he told the clouds. They call themselves gods, he said, only until I am roused. In his I-ness this God stayed unknown to him; his arrogance was a heap of pride. Tuka says: wherever there is a heap of pride, there God stays far away.

WHAT IT MEANS

Stung that the cowherds have stopped honoring him, Indra orders the deluge to wipe out Gokul, all from wounded pride. Tukaram uses Indra as the pattern to examine, not a person to despise: the very God who could undo him stays hidden from his eyes precisely because he is so full of himself. His mipana, his I-ness, is a wall. The closing line states the law of the heart that the whole episode illustrates: where pride piles up, God keeps His distance, not as a punishment imposed from outside but because a swollen self leaves no room to recognize Him. The warning is turned toward us, to watch for the same heap forming within.

GATHA 4534 Krishna Leela

Trust over pride, God hides

मराठी मूळ

देव त्यां फावला गोपाळां । नाहीं तेथें कळा अभिमान॥1॥
नाडलीं आपल्या आपण चि एकें । संदेहदायकें बहुफारें ॥2॥
फारें चाळविलीं नेदी कळों माव । देवाआदिदेव विश्वंभर ॥3॥
विश्वासावांचुनि कळों नये खरा । अभक्तां अधीरा जैसा तैसा ॥4॥
जैसा भाव तैसा जविळ त्या दुरि । तुका ह्मणे हरि देतो घेतो ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God was won by the cowherds because there was no pride in them. Those who deceived themselves through doubt and conjecture were many.

Many were deluded and could not perceive the truth. The God of gods, the Sustainer of the universe, concealed His identity.

Without trust, the real God cannot be known. To the faithless and the impatient, He appears as they expect.

Says Tuka, as is the devotion, so is the nearness or distance. Hari gives and takes accordingly.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God let himself be won by the cowherds, because there was no pride in them. Many others tricked themselves with their own doubts and guesses. They were led astray and could not see through the veil. He is the God of gods, the one who holds the world, and he keeps his real form hidden. Without trust you cannot know the true one. To the faithless and the impatient, he appears just as they expect. Tuka says: as your love is, so he is near or far. Hari gives and takes to match it.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem reads the Govardhan story as a lesson in how God is known. The cowherds had no learning and no pride, so God let himself be caught by them; the clever, full of doubt and conjecture, missed him entirely. Tukaram names the rule under it: the real God stays veiled, and trust, not cleverness, is the only door. The closing line makes it exact. Your nearness to him is the exact measure of your faith, and Hari simply gives back what you bring.

GATHA 4535 Krishna Leela

Pride punished, fear turns to memory

मराठी मूळ

तो या साच भावें न कळे चि इंद्रा । ह्मणउनि धारा घाली सिळा ॥1॥
घाली धारा मेघ कडाडिला माथा । वरि अवचिता देखियेला ॥2॥
देखती पाऊस वोळला गोपाळ । भ्याले हे सकळ विचारिती ॥3॥
विचार पडला विसरले खेळ । अन्याय गोपाळ ह्मणती केला ॥4॥
लागलेंसे गोड न कळे ते काळीं । भेणें वनमाळी आठविती ॥5॥
आतां कायकैसा करावा विचार । गोधनासि थार आपणिया ॥6॥
यांचिया विचारें होणार ते काई । तुका ह्मणे ठायीं वेडावलीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

This truth was not grasped by Indra, blinded by pride. Therefore he sent the deluge of stones.

The clouds thundered and crashed overhead, and a sudden storm broke upon them. The cowherds saw the rain bearing down and were afraid.

They considered their plight. Worry overtook them, and they forgot their play.

'The cowherd-boy has done wrong,' they said. 'It tasted sweet at the time, and we did not think.' In their fear they now remembered the Lord.

'What shall we do now? Where can we and our cattle find shelter?' But their deliberation could not prevent what was coming. Says Tuka, they were bewildered and did not know what to do.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Indra, blinded by pride, could not grasp this truth. So he sent down a rain of stones. The clouds thundered and crashed overhead, and a storm broke on them all at once. The cowherds saw the rain bearing down and were afraid. Worry took hold of them and they forgot their play. They said, the cowherd-boy has done wrong. It felt sweet at the time, and we did not stop to think. In their fear they now remembered the Lord. What shall we do now? Where can we and our cattle find shelter? But all their thinking could not stop what was coming. Tuka says: they were bewildered and did not know what to do.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the storm that opens the Govardhan story, and Tukaram frames it through pride and its undoing. Indra, stung in his pride, hurls down stones, and the cowherds who had cheerfully gone along now panic and blame the boy who led them. The turn is in their fear: only when their own planning fails completely do they remember the Lord. The poem watches how trouble strips a person of self-reliance and pushes the mind, finally, toward the one it had forgotten.

GATHA 4536 Krishna Leela

The lifted mountain, do not fear

मराठी मूळ

वेडावलीं काय करावें या काळीं । ह्मणे वनमाळी गोपाळांसि ॥1॥
शिरी धरूं गोवद्धनन उचलूनि । ह्मणे तुह्मी कोणी भिऊं नका ॥2॥
नका सांडूं कोणी आपला आवांका । मारितां या हाका आरिोळया ॥3॥
अशंकित चित्तें न वटे त्यां खरें । धाकें च ते बरें ह्मणती चला ॥4॥
चित्ती धाक परि जवळी अनंत । तुका ह्मणे घात होऊं नेदी ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Lord said to the bewildered cowherds, 'What should be done at such a time?' 'Let us lift Govardhan mountain and hold it overhead. Let none of you be afraid.' 'Do not lose chitta.

Shout and cheer together.' Their minds were not at ease; it did not seem possible. But out of fear they said, 'Very well, let us go.' Fear was in their chitta, yet the Infinite One was beside them.

Says Tuka, He does not let His own come to harm.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The cowherds were bewildered. What is to be done now? Vanamali said to them, we will lift Govardhan and hold it up overhead. None of you be afraid. Do not lose heart, any of you. Shout and call out together. Their minds were not at ease; it did not seem possible. But out of fear they said, very well, let us go. Fear was in their hearts, yet the Infinite One stood beside them. Tuka says: he does not let his own come to harm.

WHAT IT MEANS

Vanamali answers the panic of the last poem with a plan that sounds impossible: lift the whole mountain. He tells the cowherds not to lose heart and to shout together, drawing them into the act. They do not really believe it can be done, but their fear pushes them to obey anyway. Tukaram lets that gap stand. They go forward on shaky trust, and the line that holds them up is not their confidence but the simple fact that the Infinite One is beside them and will not let his own be harmed.

GATHA 4537 Krishna Leela

The hidden doer, grace to the humble

मराठी मूळ

नेदी दुःख देखों दासा नारायण । ठेवी निवारून आल्या आधीं ॥1॥
आधीं पुढें शुद्ध करावा मारग । दासांमागें मग सुखरूप ॥2॥
पर्वतासि हात लाविला अनंतें । तो जाय वरतें आपेंआप ॥3॥
आपल्याआपण उचलिला गिरी । गोपाळ हे करी निमित्यासि ॥4॥
निमित्य करूनि करावें कारण । करितां आपण कळों नेदी ॥5॥
दिनाचा कृपाळु पतितपावन । हें करी वचन सांच खरें ॥6॥
सांगणें न लगे सुखदुःख दासा । तुका ह्मणे ऐसा कृपावंत ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana does not let His servants see suffering. He clears the obstacles before they arrive.

He cleans the path ahead and then follows behind His servants, keeping them safe. The Infinite One put His hand to the mountain, and it rose upward of its own accord.

He lifted the mountain by Himself, using the cowherds only as a pretense. He uses instruments while doing the work Himself, never revealing that He alone is the doer.

He is gracious to the humble, the Purifier of the Fallen. He makes these words come true.

A servant need not tell God his joys and sorrows. Says Tuka, such is the Compassionate One.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana does not let his servants see suffering. He sets the danger aside before it ever arrives. First he makes the road ahead clean, then walks behind his servants to keep them safe. The Infinite One laid his hand on the mountain, and it rose up of its own accord. He lifted the hill himself, using the cowherds only for show. He does the work himself and uses others as the instrument, never letting it be known that he alone is the doer. He is kind to the lowly, the one who purifies the fallen. He makes these words come true. A servant need not tell God his joys and sorrows. Tuka says: such is the Compassionate One.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem looks behind the spectacle and names who is really doing the lifting. The cowherds seem to hold the mountain, but it rises on its own under his hand; they are only the instruments he uses to keep himself hidden. Tukaram draws out the pattern. God clears the danger before it lands, walks behind his own to guard them, and works in secret so the credit never falls to him. The last lines land the comfort: you do not even have to recite your troubles to him, because such is his compassion that he has already acted.

GATHA 4538 Krishna Leela

Imaginary burden, pride exposed

मराठी मूळ

कृपावंतें हाक दिली सकिळकां । माजिया रे नका राहों कोणी ॥1॥
निघाले या भेणे पाउसाच्या जन । देखे गोवद्धनन उचलिला ॥2॥
लाविले गोपाळ फेरीं चहूंकडे । हांसे कुंफ्दे रडे कोणी धाकें ॥3॥
धाकें हीं सकळ निघालीं भीतरी । उचलिला गिरी तयाखालीं ॥4॥
तयाखालीं गाई वत्सें आलीं लोक । पक्षी सकिळक जीवजाति ॥5॥
जिहीं ह्मणविलें हरीचे अंकित । जातीचे ते होत कोणी तरी ॥6॥
जाति कुळ नाहीं तयासि प्रमाण । अनन्या अनन्य तुका ह्मणे ॥7॥
त्यांसि राखे बळें आपुले जे दास । किळकाळासि वास पाहों नेदी ।1॥
पाउस न येतां केली यांची थार । लागला तुषार येऊं मग ॥2॥
येउनि दगड बैसतील गिरी । वरुषला धारीं शिळांचिये ॥3॥
शिळांचिये धारीं वरुषला आकांत । होता दिवस सात एक सरें ॥4॥
एक सरें गिरि धरिला गोपाळीं । होतों भाव बळी आह्मी ऐसे ॥5॥
ऐसें कळों आलें देवाचिया चित्ता । ह्मणे तुह्मीं आतां हात सोडा ॥6॥
हांसती गोपाळ करूनि नवल । आइकोनि बोल गोविंदाचे ॥7॥
दावितील डोया गुडघे कोपर । फुटले ते भार उचलितां ॥8॥
भार आह्मांवरि घालुनि निराळा । राहिलासी डोळा चुकवुनि ॥9॥
निमित्य अंगुळी लावियेली बरी । पाहों कैसा गिरी धरितोसि ॥10॥
सिणले हे होते ठायींच्या त्या भारें । लटिकें चि खरें मानुनियां ॥11॥
बळें हुंबरती सत्य त्यां न कळे । नुघडती डोळे अंधळ्यांचे ॥2॥
आसुडिल्या माना हात पाय नेटें । तंव भार बोटें उचलिला ॥3॥
लटिका चि आह्मीं सीण केला देवा । कळों आलें तेव्हां सकळांसि ॥4॥
आलें कळों तुका ह्मणे अनुभवें । मग अहंभावें सांडवलीं ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The Compassionate One called out to everyone: 'Come under the mountain, all of you. Let no one remain outside.' The people, terrified of the rain, emerged and saw the mountain lifted.

The cowherds were stationed all around the rim. Some laughed, some cried, some trembled with fear.

All of them came beneath the mountain: the people, the cows, the calves, the birds, all living creatures. All who called themselves Hari's own, of whatever kind.

Says Tuka, God recognizes no caste or clan. He embraces whatever is surrendered.

He protects His own with all His might. He does not let even Death look their way.

The rain did not reach them; instead hail and boulders began to fall. Stones rained down upon the mountain for seven days without end.

The cowherds held up the mountain for that time, believing themselves truly strong. Then God sensed their growing pride and said, 'You may let go now.' The cowherds laughed at the absurdity.

'Show us your blistered knees and elbows from carrying the load,' they said. 'You put the burden on us and stood aside, out of sight.' 'You barely touched it with a fingertip.

Let us see how you hold this mountain.' They had been straining under an imaginary weight, believing the illusion to be real. They bragged in their pride, unable to see the truth.

When they finally shook out their arms and legs, they found the mountain resting on a single finger. 'We labored for nothing, O God.' Then, at last, everyone understood.

Says Tuka, they understood through direct experience, and their pride was laid aside.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The Compassionate One called out to everyone: come under the mountain, all of you, let no one stay outside. The people, terrified of the rain, came out and saw the mountain lifted. The cowherds were set all around the rim. Some laughed, some wept, some shook with fear. All of them came in beneath the mountain, the hill held up over their heads. Under it came the people, the cows, the calves, the birds, every living kind. All who called themselves Hari's own, of whatever sort they were. Caste and clan are no measure to him; to the wholly surrendered he is wholly given. Tuka says. He guards his servants with all his strength and will not let even Death look their way. The rain did not reach them; then hail and boulders began to fall. Stones came down and struck the mountain, raining in sheets of rock. The downpour of stones was a terror, and it went on seven days without a break. All that time the cowherds held the hill, sure they themselves were strong. God saw this pride rising in their minds and said, you may let go now. The cowherds laughed and thought it strange to hear Govinda's words. Show us, they said, your knees and elbows blistered from carrying the load. You put the weight on us and stood apart, slipping out of sight. You barely set a fingertip to it. Let us see how you hold this mountain. They had been straining under a weight that was never there, taking the false for the real. They boasted in their strength, blind to the truth, their eyes would not open. When at last they shook out their necks, arms and legs and looked, the mountain was resting on a single finger. We labored for nothing, O God, they said, and then it dawned on every one of them. Tuka says: they understood it by direct experience, and their pride was laid down.

WHAT IT MEANS

This is the heart of the Govardhan story told as a parable about the ego. God shelters every creature under the hill without asking caste or clan, requiring only surrender, and he guards them so completely that even Death cannot look their way. But the cowherds, holding the mountain for seven days, come to believe their own arms are bearing it. When God tells them to let go, they mock him, sure he never carried his share. Then they look: the whole weight was resting on one finger, and their straining had been against a burden that was never theirs. Tukaram points the lesson at our own self-importance. What we are sure we are carrying by our own strength, God has been holding all along, and only direct experience, not argument, finally lays the pride down.

GATHA 4539 Krishna Leela

Surrender after pride, You alone are strong

मराठी मूळ

सांडवले सकळांचे अभिमान । आणिले शरण लोटांगणीं॥1॥
लोटांगणीं आले होऊनियां दीन । मग नारायण ह्मणे भलें ॥2॥
भला आजि तुह्मी केला साच पण । गिरि गोवर्धन उचलिला ॥3॥
लागती चरणा सकळ ते काळीं । आह्मांमध्यें बळी तूं चि एक ॥4॥
एका तुजविण न यों आह्मी कामा । कळों कृष्णा रामा आलें आजी ॥5॥
आजिवरि आह्मां होता अभिमान । नेणतां चरणमहिमा तुझा ॥6॥
तुझा पार आह्मी नेणों नारायणा । नखीं गोवद्धनना राखियेलें ॥7॥
राखियेलें गोकुळ आह्मां सकळांसि । दगडाच्या राशी वरुषतां ॥8॥
वर्णावें तें काय तुझें महिमान । धरिती चरण सकिळक ॥9॥
सकळ ही तान विसरलीं भूक । सकळ ही सुख दिलें त्यांसि ॥10॥
त्यासि कळों आला वैकुंठनायका। तुका ह्मणे लोक निर्भर ते ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The pride of all was dissolved, and they fell prostrate in surrender. They came as humble supplicants, and Narayana said, 'Well done.' 'Today you have truly kept your pledge.

You have lifted the Govardhan mountain.' They all fell at His feet. 'Among us, You alone are the strong One.' 'Without You, we are of no use.

Today we have understood, O Krishna, O Rama.' 'Until now we were full of pride, not knowing the greatness of Your feet.' 'We do not know Your depths, O Narayana. You held Govardhan upon Your fingertip.' 'You saved Gokul and all of us when boulders rained from the sky.' 'How can we describe Your greatness?' Everyone held His feet.

They all forgot hunger and thirst. They were given complete happiness.

Says Tuka, they recognized the Lord of Vaikuntha, and the people were filled with perfect peace.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The pride of all of them was broken, and they were brought low in surrender. They came and fell flat on the ground as humble ones, and then Narayana said, well done. You have truly kept your word today; you have lifted up Govardhan. They all fell at his feet then. Among us, you alone are the strong one. Without you we are good for nothing. Today we have understood, O Krishna, O Rama. Until today we carried our pride, not knowing the greatness of your feet. We do not know your limits, O Narayana; on your nail you held up Govardhan. You saved Gokul and all of us when heaps of stones rained down. How can we put your greatness into words? Every one of them held his feet. They all forgot their thirst and hunger; he gave them every joy. They came to know the Lord of Vaikuntha. Tuka says: the people were filled to the brim.

WHAT IT MEANS

This poem is the answer to the cowherds' boasting: now that the trick is exposed, their pride collapses into worship. They fall flat, confess that they alone are nothing, and that he alone is the strong one who held the hill on a fingernail. Tukaram catches the exact moment of waking. Up to today we carried our pride, not knowing the greatness of your feet. The recognition is not grim; it overflows into joy, hunger and thirst forgotten, the whole crowd filled to the brim once they truly know who has been with them.

GATHA 4540 Krishna Leela

God among them, the world forgotten

मराठी मूळ

लोकां कळों आला देव आह्मांमधीं । टाकिली उपाधि तिहीं शंका ॥1॥
शंका नाहीं थोरां लाहानां जीवांसि । कळला हा हृषीकेशी मग ॥2॥
मग मनीं जाले निर्भर सकळ । संगें लोकपाळ कृष्णाचिया ॥3॥
कृष्णाचिया ओंव्या गाणें गाती गीत । कृष्णमय चित्त जालें त्यांचें ॥4॥
त्यांसि ठावा नाहीं बाहेरिल भाव । अंतरीं च वाव सुख जालें ॥6॥
सुखें तया दीस न कळे हे राती । अखंड या ज्योती गोविंदाची ॥6॥
चिंतनें चि धालीं न लगे अन्नपाणी । तुका ह्मणे मनीं समाधान ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The people realized that God was among them. They cast aside all doubt and suspicion.

Neither the great nor the small nor any creature harbored any uncertainty. They recognized Hrishikesha.

Then all chittas became filled with peace, dwelling in the company of Krishna. They sang ovis and songs about Krishna.

Their minds became entirely absorbed in Krishna. They had no awareness of the outside world; within, the space was all joy.

In that joy, they could not distinguish day from night, for the light of Govinda shone unbroken. Through contemplation alone they were satisfied; food and water were no longer needed.

Says Tuka, contentment filled their minds.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The people came to know that God was among them, and they threw off the load of all their doubt. Great souls and small, every living thing, had no more uncertainty: they had recognized Hrishikesha. Then all of them were filled with peace, in the company of Krishna. They sang verses about Krishna and sang their songs, and their minds turned entirely into Krishna. They had no awareness left of any outer thing; within, the empty space had become joy. In that joy they could not tell day from night, for the light of Govinda never went out. Through remembrance alone they were full; they needed no food or water. Tuka says: their minds were at rest.

WHAT IT MEANS

Once the cowherds know who is among them, doubt simply drops away, in the great and the small alike, and the whole village settles into Krishna. Tukaram describes a mind so absorbed that the outer world falls silent and the inner space fills with joy. The marks he names are old signs of deep absorption: day and night blur, hunger and thirst fade, and remembrance alone keeps them full. What began as a storm has ended in steady inner peace.

GATHA 4541 Krishna Leela

Senses at peace, no mine or yours

मराठी मूळ

समाधान त्यांचीं इंद्रियें सकळ । जयां तो गोपाळ समागमें ॥1॥
गोविंदाचा जाला प्रकाश भीतरी । मग त्यां बाहेरी काय काज ॥2॥
काज काम त्यांचें सरले व्यापार । नाहीं आप पर माझें तुझें ॥3॥
माया सकळांची सकळां ही वरी । विषय तें हरि दिसों नेदी ॥4॥
दिसे तया आप परावें सारिखें । तुका ह्मणे सुखें कृष्णाचिया ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

All their senses were at peace, for the Cowherd was with them. The light of Govinda blazed within.

What need then for anything outside? All their needs and occupations ceased. There was no mine or yours, no self or other.

The illusion that veils everyone could not make them see anything other than Hari. Says Tuka, to them, one's own and another's were the same, through the joy of Krishna.

IN PLAIN WORDS

All their senses were at peace, for the Cowherd was in their company. The light of Govinda had risen within them, so what work was left outside? Their tasks and their dealings were finished; there was no mine, no yours, no self, no other. The illusion that covers everyone, that covers all, could not let them see anything but Hari. Tuka says: to them their own and the stranger looked the same, in the joy of Krishna.

WHAT IT MEANS

This poem describes what is left after the world has fallen away: senses quiet, the inner light steady, all ordinary business done. Tukaram names the deepest mark of it, the dropping of mine and yours, self and other. The same Maya that keeps everyone divided cannot work on them now, because they see only Hari wherever they look. In the joy of Krishna the line between one's own people and strangers simply dissolves.

GATHA 4542 Krishna Leela

No hunger, no count of days

मराठी मूळ

कृष्णाचिया सुखें भुक नाहीं तान । सदा समाधान सकळांचें ॥1॥
कळलें चि नाहीं जाले किती दिस । बाहेरिल वास विसरलीं ॥2॥
विसरु कामाचा तुका ह्मणे जाला । उद्वेग राहिला जावें यावें ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

In the bliss of Krishna there was no hunger or thirst. All were perfectly content.

They did not notice how many days had passed. They had forgotten the world outside.

Says Tuka, desire itself had been forgotten. The restless urge to come and go had ceased.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In the joy of Krishna there was no hunger, no thirst; all of them were always at peace. They did not even notice how many days had gone by; they had forgotten the world outside. Tuka says: desire itself had been forgotten. The restless urge of coming and going had stopped.

WHAT IT MEANS

A short poem holding the state at its quietest. Lost in the joy of Krishna, the cowherds lose track of hunger, thirst, and time alike. Tukaram puts his finger on the root of it: not just the world but desire itself is forgotten. With wanting gone, the constant restless motion of coming and going, of chasing one thing after another, simply comes to a stop.

GATHA 4543 Krishna Leela

God known through devotees, shun the slanderer

मराठी मूळ

जावें बाहेरी हा नाठवे विचार । नाहीं समाचार ठावा कांहीं ॥1॥
कांहीं न कळे तें कळों आलें देवा । मांडिला रिघावा कवतुक ॥2॥
कवतुकासाठीं भक्त देहावरि । आणिताहे हरि बोलावया॥3॥
यासि नांव रूप नाहीं हा आकार । कळला साचार भक्ता मुखें ॥4॥
मुखें भक्तांचिया बोलतो आपण । अंगसंगें भिन्न नाहीं दोघां ॥5॥
दोघे वेगळाले लेखिल जो कोणी । तयाचा मेदिनी बहु भार ॥6॥
तयासी घडलीं सकळ ही पापें । भक्तांचिया कोपें निंदा द्वेषें ॥7॥
द्वेषियाचा संग न घडावा कोणा । विष जेंवी प्राणां नाश करी ॥8॥
करितां आइके निंदा या संतांची । तया होती ते चि अधःपात ॥9॥
पतन उद्धार संगाचा महिमा । त्यजावें अधमा संत सेवीं ॥10॥
संतसेवीं जोडे महालाभरासी । तुका ह्मणे यासि नाश नाहीं ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The thought of going outside did not occur to them. They had no awareness of what was happening in the world.

What they did not know became known to God, and He began to stir them with a new wonder. For the sake of wonder, God brings His devotees back into bodily awareness, calling them to speak.

He who has no name, form, or shape is truly known through the mouths of His devotees. God speaks through the mouths of His devotees.

He and they are never separate. Whoever considers the two as distinct, that one is a heavy burden upon the earth.

All sins accumulate for such a person, who through slander and hatred offends the devotees. One should never keep the company of the envious; it is like poison that destroys life.

Those who hear or participate in the slander of saints suffer the same downfall. The company one keeps determines one's rise or fall.

Abandon the wicked and serve the saints. In the service of saints, great treasures are gathered.

Says Tuka, this treasure knows no decay.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The thought of going outside never crossed their minds; they had no news of anything. What they did not know became known to God, and he set up a new wonder to draw them out. For the sake of that wonder, Hari brings his devotees back into the body and calls them to speak. He who has no name, no form, no shape is truly known through the mouths of his devotees. He speaks through his devotees' mouths himself; in being joined to them, the two are not separate. Whoever counts the two as distinct is a heavy weight on the earth. Every sin gathers on such a one, who through slander and hatred offends the devotees. Keep no one company with the hateful man; he is like poison that destroys your life. Those who speak or even listen to the slander of saints fall the same way down. Rise and fall hang on the company you keep. Leave the base ones, serve the saints. Tuka says: in serving the saints a great gain is gathered, and this gain never decays.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here Tukaram turns from the absorbed cowherds to a hard teaching about the devotees themselves. God, who has no name or form, becomes known in the world through the mouths of his saints, and he is so joined to them that to treat God and his devotee as two separate things is a grave error. From this he draws a sharp warning, aimed not at any person but at a pattern: slander and hatred of saints heap up sin, and merely keeping company with such talk or even listening to it pulls a person down the same way. The remedy is plain. Watch the company you keep, leave the corrupting kind, and serve the saints, where the one gain that never rots is found.

GATHA 4544 Krishna Leela

Remembrance fills, rain stops unnoticed

मराठी मूळ

नाहीं नाश हरि आठवितां मुखें । जोडतील सुखें सकळ ही ॥1॥
सकळी ही सुखें वोळलीं अंतरीं । मग त्याबाहेरी काय काज ॥2॥
येऊं विसरलीं बाहेरी गोपाळें । तल्लीन सकळें कृष्णसुखें ॥3॥
सुख तें योगियां नाहीं समाधीस । दिलें गाई वत्स पशु जीवां ॥4॥
वारला पाऊस केव्हां नाहीं ठावा । तुका ह्मणे देवावांचूनियां ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

There is no decay when Hari is remembered with the lips. All joys come flooding in.

When all joys have gathered within, what need is there for anything outside? The cowherds forgot to go outside, absorbed entirely in the bliss of Krishna. The bliss that yogis cannot find even in deep samadhi was given to cows, calves, and all creatures.

Says Tuka, when the rain stopped, no one knew, except God Himself.

IN PLAIN WORDS

There is no decay when Hari is remembered with the lips; every joy will be gained. When all joys have gathered within, what work is left outside? The cowherds forgot to step outside, wholly sunk in the joy of Krishna. The joy that yogis do not find even in their deepest samadhi was given here to cows, calves, and all the creatures. When the rain stopped, no one knew. Tuka says: no one but God himself.

WHAT IT MEANS

The poem holds two things side by side. First, simply remembering Hari with the lips brings every joy and nothing fades, so that once joy gathers within there is no reason to look outside. Second, and more startling, the bliss that yogis cannot reach even in deep samadhi was here handed freely to ordinary cows and calves. Tukaram lets the contrast make his point: grace does not wait on spiritual achievement. They were so absorbed that the rain ended without anyone noticing, no one but God, who had ordered the whole thing.

GATHA 4545 Krishna Leela

The danger lifted, time to go home

मराठी मूळ

यांसि समाचार सांगतों सकळा । चलावें गोकुळा ह्मणे देव ॥1॥
देव राखे तया आडलिया काळें । देव सुखफळें देतो दासां ॥2॥
दासां दुःख देखों नेदी आपुलिया । निवारी आलिया न कळतां ॥3॥
नाहीं मेघ येतां जातां देखियेला । धारीं वरुषला शिळांचिये ॥4॥
एवढें भक्तांचें सांकडें अनंता । होय निवारिता तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

God told them the news. 'Let us go to Gokul,' He said.

God protects His own when danger comes and gives the fruit of happiness to His servants. He does not let His servants see suffering; He removes it before it arrives, without their knowing.

The clouds were not seen coming or going. The rain of boulders had fallen in torrents.

Says Tuka, the Infinite One removes such great calamities from the path of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

God told them all the news: let us go to Gokul, he said. God guards his own when the time turns against them, and gives his servants the fruit of joy. He does not let his servants see suffering; he removes the trouble before it comes, without their knowing. No one saw the clouds come or go, yet the rain of stones had poured down in sheets. So great was the danger to his devotees, Tuka says, and the Infinite One lifted it away.

WHAT IT MEANS

The cycle closes with the storm gone and God calling everyone home to Gokul. Tukaram gathers the whole episode into one steady claim about how God treats his own: he stands guard when the times turn hostile and clears away the trouble before it can touch them, often without their even noticing. The clouds came and went unseen, yet a rain of boulders had fallen; the danger was real and enormous. The point is that the Infinite One quietly carried it, and his servants were kept safe through it without ever having to bear the weight.

GATHA 4546 Krishna Leela

Govardhan lifted, the rain of joy

मराठी मूळ

काकुलती एकें पाहाती बाहेरी । तया ह्मणे हरि वोसरला ॥1॥
वोसरला मेघ आला होता काळ । बाहेरी सकळ आले लोक ॥2॥
कवतुक जालें ते काळीं आनंद । कळला गोविंद साच भावें ॥3॥
भावें तयापुढें नाचती सकळें । गातील मंगळें ओंव्या गीत ॥4॥
गीत गाती ओंव्या रामकृष्णावरी । गोपाळ मोहोरी वाती पांवे ॥5॥
वत्सें गाई पशू नाचती आनंदें । वेधलिया छंदें गोविंदाच्या ॥6॥
चित्त वेधियेलें गोविंदें जयाचें । कोण तें दैवाचें तयाहुनि ॥7॥
तयाहुनि कोणी नाहीं भाग्यवंत । अखंड सांगात गोविंदाचा ॥8॥
गोविंदाचा संग तुका ह्मणे ध्यान । गोविंद ते जन गोकुळींचे ॥9॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A few of them peeked outside and saw the storm had passed. Hari said it had cleared.

The dark clouds that had gathered were gone. Everyone came out.

Wonder and joy arose at that moment. Govinda was known in His true form.

They danced and sang before Him, chanting auspicious ovis and songs. They sang ovis and songs about Rama and Krishna.

The cowherds blew their flutes and horns. Calves, cows, and all creatures danced in delight, captivated by the spell of Govinda.

One whose chitta has been captured by Govinda, who is more fortunate than that one? Says Tuka, no one is more blessed than the one who has the constant company of Govinda.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A few of them peeked outside and saw the storm had passed. Hari said it had cleared. The dark clouds that had gathered were gone. Everyone came out. Wonder and joy rose in that moment. Govinda was known in his true form. They danced and sang before him, chanting auspicious ovis and songs. They sang ovis and songs about Rama and Krishna. The cowherds blew their flutes and horns. The calves, the cows, all the creatures danced in delight, caught in the spell of Govinda. Whose mind has been caught by Govinda: who is more fortunate than that one? Tuka says: no one is more blessed than the one who has the constant company of Govinda.

WHAT IT MEANS

This opens the aftermath of the Govardhan rescue: the storm is over, the people step out, and they recognize who Krishna truly is. The whole village erupts into song and dance, and even the animals are swept into it. Tukaram then turns the scene into a single claim about fortune. The most blessed person alive is not the powerful or the rich one, but the one whose attention has been captured by Govinda. He names the prize plainly: unbroken company with God is the highest luck a soul can have.

GATHA 4547 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, the boasting clouds

मराठी मूळ

गोकुळींची गती कोण जाणे परि । पाहों आला वरी इंद्रराव ॥1॥
इंद्रापाशीं मेघ बोलती बडिवार । सकळ संहार करुनि आलों ॥2॥
आतां जीव नाहीं सांगाया ते रानीं । पुरिलें पाषाणीं शिळाधारीं ॥3॥
रिता कोठें नाहीं राहों दिला ठाव । जल्पती तो भाव न कळतां ॥4॥
न कळतां देव बळें हुंबरती । साच ते पावती अपमान ॥5॥
माव न कळतां केली तोंडपिटी । इंद्र आला दृष्टी पाहावया ॥6॥
पाहतां तें आहे जैसें होतें तैसें । नाचती विशेषें तुका ह्मणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Indra came from above to see the state of Gokul for himself. The clouds boasted to Indra, 'We have destroyed everything.

We have come back from a total annihilation.' 'There is not a jiva left to tell the tale in that forest. We buried them all under boulders.' 'Not a spot was left uncovered.' They bragged, not knowing the truth.

Those who boast without knowing God suffer humiliation. The clouds had boasted and beaten their chests in vain.

Indra came down to see for himself. Says Tuka, everything was exactly as it had been. The people danced with even greater joy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Who can know the ways of Gokul? Indra came down from above to see for himself. The clouds boasted before Indra: we have destroyed everything. We have come back from a total annihilation. There is not a single living thing left in that forest to tell the tale. We buried them all under boulders. We left no spot uncovered. They bragged, not knowing the truth. Not knowing God, they bellowed loudly, and so they truly earned their disgrace. Not knowing the trick, they beat their own mouths in vain. Indra came down to look with his own eyes. He looked, and everything was just as it had been. Tuka says: they were dancing, more joyfully than ever.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the comic turn that follows Govardhan. The storm-clouds, sent to drown Gokul, report back to Indra that they have wiped the place out, certain of their success. But their boast is empty, because they did not know that God himself was sheltering the village. When Indra comes to verify, he finds Gokul untouched and the people dancing harder than before. The lesson sits in line five: those who brag without knowing God earn their own humiliation, and the boaster who cannot see the larger hand at work beats his own mouth for nothing.

GATHA 4548 Krishna Leela

Indra's awe, division dissolved

मराठी मूळ

नाचतां देखिलीं गाई वत्सें जन । विस्मित होऊन इंद्र ठेला ॥1॥
लागला पाऊस शिळांचिये धारीं । वांचलीं हीं परी कैसीं येथें ॥2॥
येथें आहे नारायण संदेह नाहीं । विघ्न केलें ठायीं निविनघ्न तें ॥3॥
विचारितां उचलिला गोवद्धनन । अवतार पूर्ण कळों आला ॥4॥
आला गौळयांच्या घरा नारायण । करितो स्तवन इंद्र त्यांचें ॥5॥
त्यांच्या पुण्या पार कोण करी लेखा । न कळे चतुर्मुखा ब्रह्मयासि ॥6॥
सीणतां जो ध्याना न ये एकवेळा । तो तया गोपाळां समागमें ॥7॥
समागमें गाई वत्स पुण्यवंता । देह कुर्विाळतां अंगसंग ॥8॥
संग जाला मायबापां लोकपाळां । आिंळगिती गळा कंठाकंठ ॥9॥
करिते हे जाले स्तुती सकिळक । देव इंद्रादिक गोविंदाची ॥10॥
करितील वृष्टी पुष्पवरुषाव । देवआदिदेव पूजियेला॥11॥
पुष्पांजुळी मंत्र घोष जयजयकार । दुमदुमी अंबर नेणें नादें ॥12॥
नामाचे गजर गंधर्वांचीं गाणीं । आनंद भुवनीं न माये तो ॥13॥
तो सुखसोहळा अनुपम्य रासी । गोकुळीं देवासी दोहीं ठायीं ॥14॥
दोहीं ठायीं सुख दिलें नारायणें । गेला दरुषणें वैरभाव ॥15॥
भावना भेदाची जाय उठाउठी । तुका ह्मणे भेटी गोविंदाचे ॥16॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

When Indra saw the cows, the calves, and the people dancing, he was struck with wonder. 'A rain of boulders fell upon them.

How have they survived?' 'Narayana must be here. There is no doubt.

The obstacle was turned into no obstacle at all.' Upon reflection, the lifting of Govardhan made it clear: a full incarnation had arrived. Narayana had come to the home of the cowherds.

Indra now praised their merit. 'Who can count their store of virtue? Not even Brahma with his four faces.' 'He who cannot be reached even once through the exhaustion of meditation is with these cowherds always.' 'With the cows, the calves, and these blessed ones, He touches their bodies and caresses them.' Their parents and guardians embraced Him, throat to throat.

All beings, including the gods led by Indra, began to praise Govinda. The gods showered a rain of flowers.

The God of gods was worshiped. Handfuls of flowers, sacred chants, and cries of 'Victory!' rang out.

The sky thundered with the sound. The chanting of the Name, the songs of the celestial musicians, the joy that could not be contained in all the worlds.

That unmatched festival of happiness took place in Gokul, for both God and the people. In both domains, Narayana gave the same joy.

Through His darshan, all enmity dissolved. Says Tuka, at the meeting with Govinda, the sense of division is instantly destroyed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

When Indra saw the cows, the calves, and the people dancing, he stood struck with wonder. A rain of boulders fell on them; how have they survived here? Narayana is here, there is no doubt. The obstacle was made into no obstacle at all. As he thought it over, the lifting of Govardhan made it clear: a full incarnation had come. Narayana had come to the home of the cowherds. Indra now praised their merit. Who can reckon their store of virtue? Not even four-faced Brahma can. He who cannot be reached even once through the exhaustion of meditation is with these cowherds always. With the cows, the calves, and these blessed ones, he touches their bodies and caresses them. Their parents and guardians embraced him, throat to throat. All beings, the gods led by Indra among them, began to praise Govinda. The gods showered down a rain of flowers. The God of gods was worshiped. Handfuls of flowers, sacred chants, cries of victory rang out. The sky thundered with the sound. The chanting of the Name, the songs of the celestial musicians, a joy too great to fit in all the worlds. That unmatched festival of happiness took place in Gokul, for both God and the people. In both places Narayana gave the same joy. Through his darshan, all enmity dissolved. Tuka says: at the meeting with Govinda, the sense of division is destroyed at once.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here Indra, who sent the flood, becomes the witness who understands. Seeing Gokul whole after a rain of boulders, he reasons his way to the truth: only a full incarnation of Narayana could have turned that disaster into nothing. His pride collapses into praise, and he marvels that the God whom even Brahma and the hardest meditation cannot reach is here, casually touching and caressing simple cowherds. The poem then widens into a festival of flowers, chant, and song shared by gods and villagers alike. Tukaram lands the point at the end: the very darshan of Govinda burns off enmity, and at the true meeting the feeling of being separate from God is destroyed in an instant.

GATHA 4549 Krishna Leela

The sweet Name, ecstasy unrestrained

मराठी मूळ

गोविंदाचें नाम गोड घेतां वाचे । तेथें हे कइंचे वैरभाव ॥1॥
भावें नमस्कार घातले सकळीं । लोटांगणें तळीं महीवरि ॥2॥
वरि हातबाहे उभारिली देवें । कळलीया भावें सकळांच्या॥3॥
सकळ ही वरि बहुडविले स्थळा । चलावें गोपाळा ह्मणे घरा ॥4॥
राहिलीं हीं नाचों गोविंदाच्या बोलें । पडिलीया डोलें छंदें हो तीं ॥5॥
छंद तो नावरे आपणा आपला । आनंदाचा आला होता त्यांसि ॥6॥
त्यांच्या तुका ह्मणे आनंदें सकळ । ठेंगणें गोपाळ समागमें ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Govinda's Name is sweet upon the lips. Where it is spoken, how can enmity remain? All bowed in devotion, prostrating on the ground.

God raised His hands and arms, seeing the true feelings of all. He sent everyone back to their own places.

'Come, cowherds, let us go home,' He said. They would not stop dancing at Govinda's words, swaying and reeling in the grip of ecstasy.

That ecstasy could not be restrained. The tide of bliss had overtaken them.

Says Tuka, in their joy, everything seemed small beside the company of the Cowherd-Boy.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Govinda's Name is sweet on the lips. Where it is spoken, how can enmity remain? In devotion they all bowed, prostrating flat on the ground. God raised his hands and arms, seeing the true feeling in all of them. He sent everyone back to their own places. Come, cowherds, let us go home, he said. But they would not stop dancing at Govinda's words, swaying and reeling in the grip of joy. The ecstasy could not be held back by anyone, not even by themselves. The tide of bliss had taken them over. Tuka says: in their joy, everything seemed small beside the company of the Cowherd-Boy.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram dwells on what the sweetness of the Name does to a heart. Where Govinda's Name is spoken, enmity cannot stand, so the people fall in worship before him. Even when Krishna gently tells them to go home, they cannot stop dancing, because the bliss has overflowed their own control. The closing line names the measure of that bliss: once you have tasted the company of the Cowherd-Boy, everything else in the world looks small.

GATHA 4550 Krishna Leela

God with his own, no fear in the village

मराठी मूळ

समागमें असे हरि नेणतियां । नेदी जाऊं वांयां अंकितांसि ॥1॥
अंकितां सावध केलें नारायणें । गोपाळ गोधनें सकिळकां ॥2॥
सकळही जन आले गोकुळासि । आनंद मानसीं सकळांच्या ॥3॥
सकळांचा केला अंगीकार देवें । न कळतां भावें वांचवी त्यां ॥4॥
त्यां जाला निर्धार हरि आह्मांपासीं । निवांत मानसीं निर्भर तीं ॥5॥
निर्भर हे जन गोकुळींचे लोक । केले सकिळक नारायणें ॥6॥
नारायण भय येऊं नेदी गांवा । तुका ह्मणे नांवा अनुसरे त्या ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Hari is with the unknowing, in their very company. He does not let His own ones come to grief.

Narayana awakened them: the cowherds, the cattle, everyone. All the people returned to Gokul.

Joy filled every heart. God embraced every one of them, saving them by their devotion even when they did not understand it.

Now they were certain: Hari is with us. Their minds rested in perfect peace.

The people of Gokul were made whole by Narayana. Says Tuka, Narayana does not let fear enter the village. He comes to all who call upon His Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Hari is with the unknowing, right there in their company. He will not let his own ones come to ruin. Narayana woke them up: the cowherds, the cattle, every one of them. All the people returned to Gokul. Joy was in every heart. God took up the cause of them all, saving them through their devotion even when they did not understand it. Now they were certain: Hari is with us. Their minds rested, calm and full. The people of Gokul, all of them, were made whole by Narayana. Tuka says: Narayana lets no fear come into the village; he comes to all who turn to his Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

This abhanga states the protective heart of the Govardhan story. God stays beside even those who do not yet understand who he is, and he will not let his own people be destroyed. The villagers, saved without fully grasping how, come away with one settled conviction: Hari is with us, and so their minds rest. Tukaram makes the closing promise general: God keeps fear out of the village, and he comes to anyone who turns to him by his Name.

GATHA 4551 Krishna Leela

The lila as a stage, dharma to be set up

मराठी मूळ

ये दशे चरित्र केलें नारायणें । रांगतां गोधनें राखिताहे॥1॥
हें सोंग सारिलें या रूपें अनंतें । पुढें हि बहु तें करणें आहे ॥2॥
आहे तुका ह्मणे धर्म संस्थापणें । केला नारायणें अवतार॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Such were the deeds Narayana performed while still crawling and herding cattle. This chapter of His play was concluded in this form, but much more remained ahead.

Says Tuka, the incarnation was taken for the establishment of dharma.

IN PLAIN WORDS

In this stage of life Narayana did his deeds, guarding the cattle while still crawling as a child. This act of the play was finished in this form, but much more was still to be done ahead. Tuka says: the incarnation was taken by Narayana to establish dharma.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram pauses the narrative to mark a scene change. The childhood deeds, done even as the infant crawled and herded, were only one act of a larger play, and more remains to come. He names the purpose behind it all in his signature line: Narayana took this incarnation to set dharma back on its feet. The verse frames Krishna's whole life as a single drama with a stated aim.

GATHA 4552 Krishna Leela

Krishna lila, even hatred becomes the Name

मराठी मूळ

अवतार केला संहारावे दुष्ट । करिती हे नष्ट परपीडा॥1॥
परपीडा करी दैत्य कंसराव । पुढें तो ही भाव आरंभिला ॥2॥
लाविलें लाघव पाहोनियां संधी । सकळांही वधी दुष्टजना ॥3॥
दुष्टजन परपीडक जे कोणी । ते या चक्रपाणी न साहति ॥4॥
न साहवे दुःख भक्तांचें या देवा । अवतार घ्यावा लागे रूप ॥5॥
रूप हें चांगलें रामकृष्ण नाम । हरे भवश्रम उच्चारितां ॥6॥
उच्चारितां नाम कंस वैरभावें । हरोनियां जीवें कृष्ण केला ॥7॥
कृष्णरूप त्यासि दिसे अवघें जन । पाहे तों आपण कृष्ण जाला ॥8॥
पाहिलें दर्पणीं आधील मुखासि । चतुर्भुज त्यासि तो चि जाला ॥9॥
जालीं कृष्णरूप कन्या पुत्र भाज । तुका ह्मणे राज्य सैन्य जन ॥10॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The incarnation was taken to destroy the wicked who tormented others. The demon-king Kamsa inflicted suffering on the innocent, and the next chapter of that divine play began.

Watching for the right moment, God applied His skill and destroyed every evildoer. Those who cause suffering to others cannot be endured by the Lord of the Discus.

God cannot bear to see His devotees in pain; He must take form to relieve them. His form is beautiful; the Name is Rama Krishna.

Merely uttering it destroys the weariness of worldly existence. By uttering the Name in enmity, Kamsa was absorbed into Krishna.

Consumed by hatred, everything appeared as Krishna to him: his children, his wife, his army, his kingdom. He looked in the mirror and saw a four-armed form.

He himself had become Krishna. Says Tuka, his kingdom, his army, and all his people had turned into Krishna before his eyes.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The incarnation was taken to destroy the wicked who torment others. The demon-king Kamsa kept inflicting suffering on the innocent, and now that next part began. Watching for the right moment, God used his skill and struck down every evildoer. Those who cause others pain cannot be borne by the Lord of the Discus. God cannot bear to see his devotees in pain; he must take form to relieve them. The form is beautiful; the Name is Rama Krishna. Merely uttering it destroys the weariness of worldly life. Uttering the Name in enmity, Kamsa was absorbed into Krishna. Consumed by hatred, everything looked like Krishna to him: his children, his wife, his army, his kingdom. He looked in the mirror and saw a four-armed form. He himself had become Krishna. Tuka says: his kingdom, his army, and all his people had turned into Krishna before his eyes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here Tukaram moves to Kamsa and makes his strangest, sharpest point about the Name. God takes form to relieve his devotees and to destroy the wicked, and Kamsa is the chief tormentor. But Kamsa thinks about Krishna constantly, even though only in hatred and fear. Because his whole mind is fixed on Krishna, he begins to see Krishna everywhere, in his family, his army, even his own reflection. The claim Tukaram refuses to soften is that even attention given in pure enmity, if it is total, draws a soul into God; the Name does its work regardless of the mood that carries it.

GATHA 4553 Krishna Leela

Each sees by their own faith

मराठी मूळ

सैन्य जन हांसे राया जालें काई । वासपे तो ठायीं आपणासि ॥1॥
आपणा आपण जयास तीं तैसीं । वैरभाव ज्यांसि भक्ति नाहीं ॥2॥
नाहीं याचा त्याचा भाव एकविध । ह्मणउनि छंद वेगळाले ॥3॥
वेगळाल्या भावें ती तया हांसती । तयास दिसती अवघीं हरि ॥4॥
हरिला कंसाचा जीव भाव देवें । द्वेषाचिया भावें तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The army and the people laughed. 'What has happened to the king?' He could not recognize himself.

To each and to all, everything appeared as it did according to their faith. Those without devotion held enmity, and so their experience was different.

With different feelings, they laughed at him, while to him everything appeared as Hari. Says Tuka, through the vision of enmity, Kamsa's soul was absorbed by God.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The army and the people laughed: what has happened to the king? He could no longer recognize himself. To each and to all, everything appeared as their own faith made it appear. Those without devotion held only enmity, so what they saw was different. Their feeling was not single-pointed like his, so their experience went its separate way. With those scattered feelings they laughed at him, while to him everything appeared as Hari. Tuka says: through the vision of enmity, Kamsa's soul was absorbed by God.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram explains why the same scene looks different to different people. Kamsa, whose whole mind is fixed on Krishna, sees Krishna in everything, while the courtiers around him, scattered and without devotion, see only a king gone mad and laugh. The teaching is that we each meet the world according to the faith we bring to it; what fills the mind shapes what the eyes find. The unsettling conclusion stands: because Kamsa's attention was undivided, even his hatred carried him into God, while the mockers, having no single focus, gained nothing.

GATHA 4554 Krishna Leela

Single-pointed mind, even in hatred

मराठी मूळ

द्वेषाचिया ध्यानें हरिरूप जाले । भाव हारपले देहादिक॥1॥
देहादिक कर्में अभिमान वाढे । तया कंसा जोडे नारायण ॥2॥
नारायण जोडे एकविध भावें । तुका ह्मणे जीवें जाणें लागे ॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Through the meditation of hatred, he became Hari's form. All sense of body, deeds, and ego dissolved.

By deeds and ego, one only accumulates more. But through single-pointed focus, even in hatred, Kamsa attained Narayana.

Says Tuka, Narayana is attained through single-minded devotion alone. One must give one's entire being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Through the meditation of hatred, he took on Hari's form. The sense of body and the rest dissolved. By bodily deeds and ego, one only piles up more. But to that Kamsa, Narayana was joined. Narayana is joined through a single-pointed feeling. Tuka says: one must come to know it with one's whole being.

WHAT IT MEANS

This short abhanga states the principle behind Kamsa's strange fate. Constant fear and hatred of Krishna worked on Kamsa like a fierce meditation, until his ordinary sense of body and ego fell away and he was joined to Narayana. Tukaram contrasts this with the usual path of busy deeds and ego, which only adds to bondage. The point he presses is about the mind's singleness: God is reached through undivided attention, and that union must finally be known with the whole being, not merely thought about.

GATHA 4555 Krishna Leela

Self dissolved, God in every being

मराठी मूळ

जीवभाव त्याचा गेला अभिमान । ह्मणऊनि जन हांसे कंसा ॥1॥
सावध करितां नये देहावरि । देखोनियां दुरि पळे जन ॥2॥
जन वन हरि जालासे आपण । मग हे लोचन झांकियेले॥3॥
झांकुनि लोचन मौन्यें चि राहिला । नाहीं आतां बोलायाचें काम ॥4॥
बोलायासि दुजें नाहीं हें उरलें । जन कृष्ण जाले स्वयें रूप ॥5॥
रूप पालटलें गुण नाम याति । तुका ह्मणे भूतीं देव जाला ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His ego and sense of self were gone. Therefore the people laughed at Kamsa.

No matter how they tried to rouse him to bodily awareness, he could not return. Seeing this, people fled from him.

Everything, people and forest alike, had become Hari to him. He closed his eyes and sat in silence.

There was nothing left to say. Nothing second remained to be spoken of.

The people had all become Krishna in his eyes, becoming that very form. Names, forms, qualities, and castes had all been transformed.

Says Tuka, God became manifest in every being.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His sense of self and his ego were gone, so the people laughed at Kamsa. However much they tried to rouse him back to bodily awareness, he would not return. Seeing this, people fled from him. Everything, people and forest alike, had become Hari to him. He closed his eyes and sat in silence. Now there was no need to speak. Nothing second was left to be spoken of. The people had all become Krishna in his eyes, become that very form. Names, forms, qualities, and castes had all been transformed. Tuka says: God became manifest in every being.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes the final state into which Kamsa's obsession carries him. His ego dissolves so completely that he cannot be roused, and the onlookers, who see only a man undone, laugh and flee. But within him there is no longer any second thing to point at: people, forest, all of it has become Hari, so he falls silent because speech needs duality and duality is gone. The verse ends on the wider truth glimpsed in that extreme: when name, form, quality, and caste fall away, God is seen present in every being.

GATHA 4556 Krishna Leela

The trap of I and thou, surrender required

मराठी मूळ

जालों स्वयें कृष्ण आठव हा चित्तीं । भेद भयवृत्त उरली आहे ॥1॥
उरली आहे रूप नांव दिसे भिन्न । मी आणि हा कृष्ण आठवतो ॥2॥
तोंवरि हा देव नाहीं तयापासीं । आला दिसे त्यासि तो चि देव ॥3॥
देवरूप त्याची दिसे वरी काया । अंतरीं तो भयाभीत भेदें ॥4॥
भेदें तुका ह्मणे अंतरे गोविंद । साचें विण छंद वांयां जाय ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

'I have become Krishna,' he thought. Yet the awareness of separateness, the fear and duality, still lingered.

Name and form still appeared distinct. The thought 'I and this Krishna' persisted.

As long as this sense of separateness remained, God was not truly with him. Though his outer body appeared divine, within he was still shaken by duality and fear.

Says Tuka, through the sense of difference, Govinda remains distant. Without genuine surrender, all longing is in vain.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have myself become Krishna: this thought stayed in his mind. The sense of separateness, the fearful state, was still left. It was still left; form and name still appeared distinct. The thought I, and this Krishna, kept returning. As long as that remained, God was not truly with him; only then would the one who came appear to him as God himself. His outward body looked divine, but inside he was still afraid, shaken by the sense of difference. Tuka says: through the sense of difference, Govinda stays distant; without the real thing, all this longing goes to waste.

WHAT IT MEANS

Here Tukaram refines the lesson with great care so it cannot be misread. Even after Kamsa is filled with Krishna, a residue clings: the thought I have become Krishna still keeps an I standing apart from a Krishna, and with it come fear and a sense of two. As long as that split survives, God is not truly present, however divine the outer scene may look. The closing line is the warning to every seeker: where the feeling of difference remains, Govinda stays at a distance, and without genuine surrender even intense longing is wasted.

GATHA 4557 Krishna Leela

Face to face, the last duality struck down

मराठी मूळ

वांयां तैसे बोल हरिशीं अंतर । केले होती चार भयभेदें ॥1॥
भेदभय गेलें नोळखे आपणा । भेटी नारायणा कंसा जाली ॥2॥
जाली भेटी कंसा हरिशीं निकट । सन्मुख चि नीट येरयेरां ॥3॥
येरयेरां भेटी युद्धाच्या प्रसंगीं । त्याचें शस्त्र अंगीं हाणितलें ॥4॥
त्याचें वर्म होतें ठावें या अनंता । तुका ह्मणे सत्तानायक हा ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those were empty words, keeping Hari at arm's length. Four walls of fear and duality had been built.

When fear and duality dissolved, he no longer recognized himself. Then the meeting with Narayana took place for Kamsa.

Kamsa met Hari face to face, close and direct, each standing before the other. They met in the encounter of battle, and God struck him with his own weapon.

God knew his vulnerable point. Says Tuka, He is the sovereign master of all power.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Empty as such words were, they kept Hari at a distance. Four walls of fear and difference had been raised. When that fear and difference fell, he no longer knew himself. Then the meeting with Narayana came to Kamsa. The meeting came; Kamsa stood close to Hari, the two of them straight and face to face. They met in the moment of battle, and God struck him with his own weapon. God knew his vulnerable point. Tuka says: he is the sovereign master of all power.

WHAT IT MEANS

This closes the Kamsa sequence at the moment of death, and reads it as the breaking of the last barrier. Kamsa's protesting words and his fear had built walls of separation around him; only when those collapse and his self-knowledge dissolves does the true meeting with Narayana come. That meeting takes the outward shape of combat, with God striking Kamsa down using his own vulnerable point. Tukaram ends by naming who holds the final say: God is the sovereign master of all power, and the very enemy who fought him is delivered through that fatal encounter.

GATHA 4558 Krishna Leela

Krishna's deeds, the rescuer arms himself

मराठी मूळ

नारायणें कंस चाणूर मदिला । राज्यीं बैसविला उग्रसेन ॥1॥
उग्रसेन स्थापियेला शरणागत । पुरविला अंत अभक्ताचा॥2॥
अवघें चि केलें कारण अनंतें । आपुलिया हातें सकळ ही ॥3॥
सकळ ही केलीं आपुलीं अंकित । राहे गोपीनाथ मथुरेसि ॥4॥
मथुरेसि आला वैकुंठनायक । जालें सकिळक एक राज्य ॥5॥
राज्य दिलें उग्रसेना शरणागता । सोडविलीं माता पिता दोन्हीं ॥6॥
सोडवणे धांवे भक्ताच्या कैवारें । तुका ह्मणे करें शस्त्र धरी ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana slew Kamsa and Chanura. He installed Ugrasena on the throne.

Ugrasena, who had sought refuge, was established. The destruction of the faithless was complete.

The Infinite One accomplished everything by His own hand. He made all of them His own.

The Lord of the Gopis dwelt in Mathura. A single undivided rule was established.

The kingdom was given to the surrendered Ugrasena. Both parents, mother and father, were freed.

He rushes to rescue His devotees. Says Tuka, He takes up weapons in His hands for their sake.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana killed Kamsa and Chanura. He set Ugrasena on the throne. Ugrasena had come for refuge, and Narayana made him secure. He brought the faithless to their end. The Infinite One did all of it. He did it all with his own hand. He made everyone his own. The Lord of the gopis stayed in Mathura. One undivided rule was set up. He gave the kingdom to Ugrasena, who had surrendered. He freed both the parents, mother and father. He runs to rescue his devotees. Tuka says: he takes up weapons in his hands for their sake.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram tells the Mathura story to show what God does for those who turn to him. Krishna kills the tyrant Kamsa and his wrestler, then puts the surrendered Ugrasena on the throne and frees his own imprisoned parents. The point Tukaram draws is the rhythm of it: God acts with his own hand, finishes the work of the faithless, and makes everyone his own. The closing line is the sharp one. The same Infinite One who needs no weapon will take up weapons himself when a devotee is in danger; rescue is not theory, he comes running and armed.

GATHA 4559 Krishna Leela

Krishna's two homes, the hidden heart

मराठी मूळ

धरी दोही ठायीं सारखा चि भाव । देवकी वसुदेव नंद दोघे ॥1॥
दोन्ही एके ठायीं केल्या नारायणें । वाढविला तिणें आणि व्याली ॥2॥
व्याला वाढला हा आपल्या आपण । निमित्या कारणें मायबापा ॥3॥
माय हा जगाची बाप नारायणा । दुजा करी कोण यत्न यासि ॥4॥
कोण जाणे याचे अंतरींचा भाव । कळों नेदी माव तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He held the same love for both sets of parents: Devaki and Vasudeva, Nanda and Yashoda. Narayana united them both.

One gave birth, the other raised Him. He was born and grew by His own will, using parents as the instrument.

He is the Mother and Father of the world, O Narayana. Who else can make any effort for Him? Says Tuka, who can know the feeling within His heart? He does not reveal His mystery.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He holds the same love for both. Devaki and Vasudeva, Nanda and Yashoda, both pairs. Narayana made the two into one. One gave him birth, the other raised him. He was born and he grew up by his own will. The parents were only the occasion. He is the mother of the world; he is its father, O Narayana. Who else can do anything for him? Who knows the feeling inside his heart? Tuka says: he does not let his mystery be known.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram looks at Krishna's two sets of parents and refuses to rank them: the same love goes to both the birth-parents and the foster-parents. Then he overturns the picture. Krishna is not really a child who needs a mother and father; he is himself the mother and father of the whole world, and his birth and growing-up happen by his own will, with the parents only as the occasion. So no one can do anything for him, and no one can read what moves inside him. The verse lands on the limit of all our knowing: God keeps his own mystery, and will not let it be measured.

GATHA 4560 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the lover who waits

मराठी मूळ

दिनाचा कृपाळु दुष्टजना काळ । एकला सकळ व्यापक हा ॥1॥
हांसे बोले तैसा नव्हे हा अनंत । नये पराकृत ह्मणों यासि ॥2॥
यासि कळावया एक भक्तिभाव । दुजा नाहीं ठाव धांडोळतां ॥3॥
धांडोळतां श्रुति राहिल्या निंश्चत । तो करी संकेत गोपींसवें ॥4॥
गोपिकांची वाट पाहे द्रुमातळीं । मागुता न्याहाळी न देखतां ॥5॥
न देखतां त्यांसि उठे बैसे पाहे । वेडावला राहे वेळोवेळां ॥6॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He is gracious to the humble and Death to the wicked. He alone pervades everything.

He smiles and speaks, yet He is not what He appears. He should not be called ordinary.

To know Him, devotion is the only way. There is no other place to search.

Even the Vedas, having searched, rested in silence. Yet He keeps His tryst with the gopis.

He waits for them beneath the trees. When they do not come, He looks about restlessly.

Not seeing them, He rises, sits, and gazes again and again, distracted at every moment.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He is kind to the lowly and death to the wicked. He alone fills everything. He laughs and talks, but the Infinite is not what he seems. Do not call him an ordinary thing. To know him there is one way: love, the heart turned toward him. Search and you will find no other place. The Vedas searched and fell silent. Yet he keeps his meeting with the gopis. He waits for them under the tree. When they do not come, he looks around for them again. Not seeing them, he gets up, sits down, looks again. Again and again he stands there, out of his senses.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram joins two things that seem opposite: God is the all-pervading Infinite whom even the Vedas cannot reach, and God is the lover waiting under a tree, restless when the gopis are late. The point is that this vast One cannot be grasped by learning or by treating him as an ordinary object; the single road to him is bhava, the loving heart. Where the scriptures search and go quiet, love keeps its appointment. The image of Krishna rising, sitting, and looking again and again, lost in longing, says that the Infinite makes himself small and helpless for the sake of those who love him.

GATHA 4561 Krishna Leela

Krishna's care, the unworried guardian

मराठी मूळ

तो बोले कोमळ निष्ठ साहोनि । कोपतां गौळणी हास्य करी ॥1॥
करावया दास्य भक्तांचें निर्लज्ज । कवतुकें रज माथां वंदी ॥2॥
दिलें उग्रसेना मथुरेचें राज्य । सांगितलें काज करी त्याचें ॥3॥
त्यासि होतां कांहीं अरिष्टनिर्माण । निवारी आपण शरणागता ॥4॥
शरणागतां राखे सर्व भावें हरि । अवतार धरी तयांसाटीं ॥5॥
तयांसाटीं वाहे सुदर्शन गदा । उभा आहे सदा सांभिाळत ॥6॥
तळमळ नाहीं तुका ह्मणे चित्ता । भक्तांचा अनंता भार माथां ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He endures their harsh and stern words with gentleness. When the milkmaids scold Him, He only smiles.

To serve His devotees, He is shamelessly eager, joyfully bowing to the dust at their feet. He gave Ugrasena the kingdom of Mathura, fulfilling every task that was asked.

Whenever danger threatened, He stepped in to protect the surrendered ones. Hari protects those who take refuge with all His being.

He takes incarnation for their sake. For their sake He carries the Sudarshana discus and the mace.

He stands ever watchful, guarding them. Says Tuka, there is no worry in the chitta when the burden of the devotees rests upon Ananta's head.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He speaks gently and bears their harsh words. When the milkmaids scold him, he only laughs. To serve his devotees he is shameless. For sport he bows his head to the dust of their feet. He gave Ugrasena the kingdom of Mathura. He did whatever task was asked of him. When any danger arose for them, he himself turned it away from those who had surrendered. Hari guards those who take refuge, with all his being. He takes birth for their sake. For their sake he carries the Sudarshana disc and the mace. He stands always, watching over them. Tuka says: there is no anxiety in his mind. The weight of his devotees rests on Ananta's head.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram paints God as a guardian who lowers himself without shame for those who are his. Krishna takes the gopis' scolding with a laugh, bows to the dust of their feet, and does whatever his devotees ask, from giving Ugrasena a kingdom to turning away every danger that comes near them. He even takes birth and bears weapons only for their sake. The last lines are the consolation: because the burden of protecting his devotees rests on the Infinite's own head, the devotee can be free of worry; the watching is his work, not ours.

GATHA 4562 Krishna Leela

Krishna's justice, the cost of refusing the Name

मराठी मूळ

मारिले असुर दाटले मेदिनी । होते कोणाकोणी पीडित ते ॥1॥
ते हा नारायण पाठवी अघोरा । संतांच्या मत्सरा घातावरी ॥2॥
वरिले ते दूतीं यमाचिया दंडीं । नुच्चरितां तोंडीं नारायण ॥3॥
नारायण नाम नावडे जयासि । ते जाले मिरासी कुंभपाकीं ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The demons who had oppressed the earth were slain. They had tormented everyone in sight.

Narayana sent them to the terrible realms, striking down those who persecuted the saints. Those who did not utter the Name of Narayana were seized by the messengers of Yama.

Says Tuka, those to whom the Name of Narayana was hateful have become permanent residents of the boiling hells.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He killed the demons who had crowded the earth. They had been tormenting people everywhere. Narayana sent them to the dreadful realms, those who struck at the saints out of malice. The messengers of Yama took them under the rod, because they did not speak Narayana's name with their mouths. Tuka says: those to whom the name of Narayana was hateful have become settled tenants of the boiling hell.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram reads the slaying of the demons as a plain moral fact, not just a story. Those who oppress others and attack the saints out of spite are brought to their end, and after death Yama's officers seize them. The deciding mark is the mouth: they never uttered the Name. The harsh closing image of the boiling hell is aimed at a pattern, not a person, the refusal to let God's name even cross the lips. The warning turns back on the listener: examine whether the Name has any place in your own speech and heart, since that is what the verse says hangs in the balance.

GATHA 4563 Krishna Leela

Krishna in Mathura, the past forgotten in his face

मराठी मूळ

वास नारायणें केला मथुरेसि । वधूनि दुष्टांसि तये ठायीं ॥1॥
ठायीं पितियाचे मानी उग्रसेना । प्रतिपाळ जनांसहित लोकां ॥2॥
लोकां दुःख नाहीं मागील आठव । देखियेला देव दृष्टी त्यांणीं ॥3॥
देखोनियां देवा विसरलीं कंसा । ठावा नाहीं ऐसा होता येथें ॥4॥
ध्यान गोविंदाचें लागलें या लोकां । निर्भर हे तुका ह्मणे चित्तीं ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Narayana settled in Mathura, having destroyed the wicked of that place. He honored Ugrasena as a father and cared for the people and their welfare.

The people felt no sorrow, no memory of the past. They had seen God with their own eyes.

Seeing God, they forgot Kamsa entirely. It was as if he had never existed.

Says Tuka, the meditation on Govinda captivated these people. They were at perfect peace within.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Narayana made his home in Mathura, after he had killed the wicked of that place. There he honored Ugrasena as a father. He cared for the people and all the folk. The people had no sorrow, no memory of what was past. They had seen God with their own eyes. Having seen God, they forgot Kamsa. It was as if he had never been here at all. The meditation on Govinda took hold of these people. Tuka says: they were full and at peace within.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes Mathura after Krishna settles there: he honors the freed Ugrasena like a father and looks after the whole city. The change in the people is the heart of it. Once they have seen God directly, their old grief and even the memory of the tyrant Kamsa simply drop away, as if the years of fear never happened. The verse names what does this: their minds become fixed on Govinda, and that meditation leaves them full and at peace. Seeing God, Tukaram suggests, does not argue the past away; it makes the past lose its grip.

GATHA 4564 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, only Krishna ends the round of births

मराठी मूळ

चिंतले पावलीं जयां कृष्णभेटी । एरवीं ते आटी वांयांविण ॥1॥
वासना धरिती कृष्णाविणें कांहीं । सीण केला तिहीं साधनांचा ॥2॥
चाळविले डंबें एक अहंकारें । भोग जन्मांतरें न चुकती ॥3॥
न चुकती भोग तपें दानें व्रतें । एका त्या अनंतेंवांचूनियां॥4॥
चुकवुनि जन्म देईल आपणा । भजा नारायणा तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Those who longed for Krishna's meeting attained what they desired. All other efforts without Him were struggles in vain.

Those who harbored any desire apart from Krishna wearied themselves with futile practices. Those deluded by ego and pretense must continue experiencing the fruits of birth after birth.

Austerities, gifts, and vows cannot end the cycle without the One Infinite Lord. Says Tuka, He alone can break the cycle of birth and grant you Himself. Worship Narayana.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Those who longed for it reached the meeting with Krishna. For everyone else the effort was wasted. Those who hold any desire apart from Krishna wear themselves out with their practices. Some are fooled by show, some by pride. They do not escape the suffering of birth after birth. Penance, gifts, and vows do not let you escape that suffering. Nothing does, except the one Infinite. Tuka says: he can end your births and give you himself. So worship Narayana.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram weighs two paths against each other. Those who truly long for Krishna meet him and reach their goal; those who keep some other desire, or are caught in display and ego, only tire themselves and stay bound to one birth after another. He goes further and says even the respected works, austerity, charity, and vows, cannot by themselves break the cycle. The one thing that can is the Infinite Lord himself, and what he gives is not a reward but his own self. The verse ends as a direct instruction: drop the side-desires and worship Narayana, because he alone both ends the round and is the prize.

GATHA 4565 Krishna Leela

Krishna and the gopis, single-hearted love

मराठी मूळ

भजल्या गोपिका सर्व भावें देवा । नाहीं चित्तीं हेवा दुजा कांहीं ॥1॥
दुजा छंदु नाहीं तयांचिये मनीं । जागृति सपनीं कृष्णध्यान ॥2॥
ध्यान ज्यां हरीचें हरीसि तयांचें । चित्त ग्वाही ज्यांचें तैशा भावें ॥3॥
भाग्यें पूर्वपुण्यें आठविती लोक । अवघे सकिळक मथुरेचे ॥4॥
मथुरेचे लोक सुखी केले जन । तेथें नारायण राज्य करी ॥5॥
राज्य करी गोपीयादवांसहित । कमिनलें बहुतकाळ तेथें ॥6॥
तेथें दैत्यीं उपसर्ग केला लोकां । रचिली द्वारका तुका ह्मणे ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The gopis worshiped God with their whole being, harboring no second desire in their chitta. No other longing existed in their minds.

Waking or sleeping, they contemplated Krishna. Those whose meditation is on Hari, Hari's meditation is on them.

Their chittas are their own witness, sealed by mutual devotion. Through the merit of past lives, all the people of Mathura remembered God.

The people of Mathura were made happy. There Narayana ruled.

He ruled alongside the gopis and Yadavas for a long time. Then the demons troubled the people, and so, says Tuka, Dwaraka was built.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The gopis worshiped God with their whole being. There was no envy, no second thing, in their hearts. No other longing was in their minds. Awake or in sleep, they meditated on Krishna. Those whose meditation is on Hari, on them Hari meditates. Their own hearts are the witness of such love. By the merit of past lives, the people remembered God, all the people of Mathura. The people of Mathura were made happy. There Narayana ruled. He ruled along with the gopis and the Yadavas. He stayed there a long time. Then the demons troubled the people. Tuka says: and so Dwaraka was built.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram holds up the gopis as the measure of devotion: they want nothing besides Krishna, waking or sleeping, with no rival desire and no envy. He states the reciprocity plainly, that the one who meditates on Hari is meditated on by Hari in turn, and the only proof needed is the lover's own heart. From this he widens out to Mathura, where past merit lets the whole city remember God and live in happiness under Krishna's rule. The verse closes by turning the story forward: when the demons threaten the people, Krishna moves them to safety and Dwaraka is built, showing again that his rule is always bent toward sheltering those who are his.

GATHA 4566 Krishna Leela

Krishna at Dwaraka, the city of no distinctions

मराठी मूळ

रचियेला गांव सागराचे पोटीं । जडोनि गोमटीं नानारत्नें ॥1॥
रत्न खणोखणी सोनियाच्या भिंती । लागलिया ज्योति रविकळा ॥2॥
कळा सकळ ही गोविंदाचे हातीं । मंदिरें निगुतीं उभारिलीं ॥3॥
उभारिलीं दुर्गा दारवंठे फांजी । कोटी चर्या माजी शोभलिया ॥4॥
शोभलें उत्तम गांव सागरांत । सकळांसहित आले हरि ॥5॥
आला नारायण द्वारका नगरा । उदार या शूरा मुगुटमणि ॥6॥
निवडीना याति समान चि केलीं । टणक धाकुलीं नारायणें ॥7॥
नारायणें दिलीं अक्षई मंदिरें । अभंग साचारें सकळांसि॥8॥
सकळ ही धर्मशीळ पुण्यवंत । पवित्र विरक्त नारीनर ॥9॥
रचिलें तें देवें न मोडे कवणा । बिळयांचा राणा नारायण ॥10॥
बळबुद्धीनें तीं देवा च सारिखीं । तुका ह्मणे मुखीं गाती ओंव्या ॥11॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

A city was built in the belly of the ocean, studded with every kind of gem. Gems adorned every corner.

The walls were of gold, catching the sun's rays. All art and craft lay in Govinda's hands.

The mansions were raised with care. Fortresses, gates, and galleries were erected, beautified with ramparts and watchtowers.

The city shone, splendid in the ocean. Narayana came there with all His people.

Narayana, the generous and valiant, the crowning jewel among warriors, came to the city of Dwaraka. He made no distinctions of caste; He treated all as equal.

The strong and the small were the same to Narayana. He gave imperishable dwellings to all, real and unbreakable.

All were virtuous, pious, pure, and devoted, men and women alike. What God has built, no one can destroy.

The Lord of strength is Narayana. In might and wisdom, they were like God Himself.

Says Tuka, they sang ovis with their lips.

IN PLAIN WORDS

A city was built in the belly of the ocean, set with all kinds of fine gems. Gems in every corner, walls of gold, catching the light of the sun. All the craft was in Govinda's hands. The mansions were raised with care. Forts, gateways, and walkways were put up, fine with ramparts and towers. The city stood splendid in the ocean. Hari came there with all his people. Narayana came to the city of Dwaraka, the generous, the brave, the crown-jewel of warriors. He made no choice of caste; he made all equal. The strong and the small were the same to Narayana. He gave everyone undying homes, real and unbreakable. All were righteous and full of merit, pure and devoted, women and men alike. What God has built, no one can break. Narayana is the lord of the strong. In strength and wisdom they were like God himself. Tuka says: they sang ovis with their mouths.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram describes Dwaraka, the city Krishna raises in the sea, jeweled and golden and made entirely by his own craft. But the splendor is not the point he dwells on. The thing he marks is that Krishna makes no distinction of caste there: high and low, strong and weak, all are treated as equal and all are given lasting homes. Under his rule the whole population becomes righteous and pure, men and women alike, and even comes to resemble God in strength and wisdom. The closing note, that they sang ovis as they lived, says the city's true wealth was a life of constant praise, not its gold.

GATHA 4567 Krishna Leela

Krishna's company, God makes them into God

मराठी मूळ

गाती ओंव्या कामें करितां सकळें । हालवितां बाळें देवावरि ॥1॥
ऋद्धसिद्धी दासी दारीं ओळंगती । सकळ संपित्त सर्वां घरीं ॥2॥
घरीं बैसलिया जोडलें निधान । करिती कीर्त्तन नरनारी ॥3॥
नारीनर लोक धन्य त्यांची याति । जयांसि संगति गोविंदाची ॥4॥
गोविंदें गोविंद केले लोकपाळ । चिंतनें सकळ तुका ह्मणे ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

They sang ovis while doing all their work, while rocking their children, singing of God. The powers of prosperity and accomplishment served as handmaids at their doors.

Every home was blessed with abundance. Sitting at home, they found treasures.

Men and women performed kirtan. Blessed was the lineage of those who had the company of Govinda.

Govinda made the people into Govindas themselves. Says Tuka, through contemplation, all were transformed.

IN PLAIN WORDS

They sang ovis while doing all their work, rocking their children, singing of God. The powers and the perfections waited at their doors like servant-girls. There was every kind of wealth in every house. Sitting at home, they had found the treasure. Men and women did kirtan. Blessed were the people, blessed their birth, who had the company of Govinda. Govinda made the people into Govindas. Tuka says: through that remembrance, all of them were changed.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram shows what the company of God does to ordinary life. The people of Dwaraka sing of God while they work and rock their children, and the very powers and attainments that others chase through hard practice wait on them like maids at the door. The real wealth, he says, was found just by sitting at home in remembrance. The last line is the boldest claim: by keeping his company and holding him in mind, the people are not merely blessed but made into Govinda themselves. Constant remembrance, in this telling, does not only bring God near; it remakes the one who remembers into his likeness.

GATHA 4568 Krishna Leela

Krishna's rule, the king who keeps no pride

मराठी मूळ

कांहीं चिंता कोणा नाहीं कोणेविशीं । करी द्वारकेसि राज्य देव ॥1॥
द्वारकेसि राज्य करी नारायण । दुष्ट संहारून धर्म पाळी ॥2॥
पाळी वेदआज्ञा ब्राह्मणांचा मान । अतीतपूजन वैष्णवांचें॥3॥
अतीत अलिप्त अवघियां वेगळा । नाहीं हा गोपाळा अभिमान ॥4॥
अभिमान नाहीं तुका ह्मणे त्यासि । नेदी आणिकांसि धरूं देव ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

No one had any worry about anything. God ruled Dwaraka.

Narayana ruled Dwaraka, having destroyed the wicked and upheld dharma. He honored the commands of the Vedas, the dignity of brahmins, and the worship of Vaishnavas and holy guests.

He Himself remained detached and apart from all, yet this Cowherd-Boy held no pride. Says Tuka, He has no pride Himself, yet He does not let others cling to it either.

IN PLAIN WORDS

No one had any worry about anything. God ruled in Dwaraka. Narayana ruled Dwaraka. He destroyed the wicked and kept dharma. He kept the command of the Vedas and the honor of the brahmins, and the worship of holy guests and of the Vaishnavas. Detached and untouched, apart from all of it, this Cowherd holds no pride. Tuka says: he has no pride himself, and he does not let others hold on to theirs either.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram ends the Dwaraka sequence with the character of the ruler. Krishna keeps order, upholds dharma, and gives each thing its due, the Vedas, the brahmins, the holy guests, so that no one in the city carries any worry. Yet the king who does all this stands detached and untouched by it, and the Cowherd takes no pride in his own greatness. The final turn is the teaching: he is not only free of pride himself, he does not let pride take root in those around him either. The verse points the listener at the same self-examination, that nearness to God is meant to dissolve the ego, not feed it.

GATHA 4569 The Power of the Name

The Name, Brahman descends to carry us across

मराठी मूळ

धरियेलें रूप कृष्ण नाम बुंथी । परब्रह्म ि◌क्षती उतरलें॥1॥
उत्तम हें नाम राम कृष्ण जगीं । तरावयालागीं भवनदी॥2॥
दिनानाथिब्रदें रुळती चरणी । वंदितील मुनि देव ऋषि ॥3॥
ऋषीं मुनीं भेटी दिली नारायणें । आणीक कारणें बहु केलीं ॥4॥
बहु कासावीस जाला भक्तांसाटीं । तुका ह्मणे आटी सोसियेली ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He assumed a form and took the Name of Krishna, and the supreme Brahman descended to earth. This glorious Name, Rama Krishna, exists in the world for the sake of crossing the river of existence.

The pledges of the Friend of the Lowly trail at His feet. Sages, gods, and seers bow before them.

God gave audience to sages and seers and performed countless other deeds. Says Tuka, He endured great hardship for the sake of His devotees.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He took on a form and put on the name of Krishna as a cloak. The supreme Brahman came down to earth. This is the best of names in the world, Rama, Krishna, for crossing the river of becoming. The vows of the Friend of the Lowly hang at his feet. Sages, gods, and seers will bow to them. Narayana gave his meeting to the sages and the seers. He did many other things besides. He was greatly troubled for the sake of his devotees. Tuka says: he took the hardship on himself.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram says the form and the name of Krishna are a covering that the formless supreme Brahman puts on to come within our reach. The name itself, Rama, Krishna, is the boat for crossing the river of birth and death, and it carries the standing promise of the Friend of the Lowly. He recalls that God gave himself in audience to the sages and did countless deeds for others. The verse ends on what such a descent costs: the Infinite let himself be troubled and bore real hardship for the sake of his devotees. The Name we are given so cheaply was paid for by God's own willingness to suffer for us.

GATHA 4570 The Nature of God

God's vow, He carries His servants

मराठी मूळ

सोसियेला आटी गर्भवास फेरे । आयुधांचे भारे वागवितां ॥1॥
वाहोनि सकळ आपुलिये माथां । भार दासां चिंता वाहों नेदी ॥2॥
नेदी काळाचिये हातीं सेवकांसि । तुका ह्मणे ऐसी ि◌ब्रदावळी॥3॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

He endured the ordeal of entering the womb again and again, bearing the weight of weapons upon Himself. He carries everything upon His own head and does not let His servants bear the burden of worry.

He does not give His servants over to the hands of Death. Says Tuka, such is His legacy of pledges.

IN PLAIN WORDS

He endured the ordeal of the womb, born again and again. He took up the weight of His weapons and carried them. He carries everything upon His own head. He does not let His servants bear the burden of worry. He does not hand His servants over to the hands of Death. Tuka says: such are His standing pledges.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is naming what kind of God this is, by what He does for those who are His. The incarnations, the births into the womb, the weapons taken up: all of that weight He puts on His own head, so His servants do not have to carry it. The point of each line is the same exchange: the burden moves from the servant to God. He keeps His devotees out of the hands of Death itself. Tukaram calls this God's biruda, His standing vow, the thing He has bound Himself to do.

GATHA 4571 Devotion to Vitthal

Devotion, bees at the footprints

मराठी मूळ

ि◌ब्रदावळी ज्याचे रुळते चरणीं । पाउलें मेदिनी सुखावे त्या ॥1॥
सुखावे मेदिनी कृष्णाचिये चालीं । कुंकुमें शोभलीं होय रेखा ॥2॥
होउनि भ्रमर पाउलांचें सुख । घेती भक्त मुख लावूनियां ॥3॥
याचसाटीं धरियेला अवतार । सुख दिलें फार निजदासां ॥4॥
निज सुख तुका ह्मणे भक्तां ठावें । तींहीं च जाणावें भोगूं त्यासि ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

His sacred pledges trail at His feet. The earth rejoices beneath His footsteps.

The earth delights in Krishna's stride, made beautiful with the marks of vermilion. Becoming bees, His devotees press their faces to His footprints and drink the nectar there.

For this very purpose He took incarnation: to give supreme joy to His own servants. Says Tuka, that bliss of the Self is known only to the devotees. Only they may taste it.

IN PLAIN WORDS

His pledges trail at His feet. The earth grows glad wherever His feet fall. The earth delights in Krishna's walk; His steps shine like lines drawn in vermilion. His devotees become bees. They press their faces to His footprints and drink the sweetness there. For just this He took birth: to give great joy to His own servants. Tuka says: this joy of the Self is known only to the devotees. Only they can taste it.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is saying what the incarnation is actually for, and who gets to know it. Krishna's footsteps make the very earth glad, marked bright as if with vermilion, and the devotees turn into bees at those footprints, drinking the sweetness. He names the purpose plainly: God took a body so that His servants could have this joy. But the joy is not on offer to everyone. It is the bliss of the Self, and only the devotee who loves Him can taste it; describing it from outside is not the same as drinking it.

GATHA 4572 The Necessity of Experience

Union, devotee and God are not two

मराठी मूळ

भोगिला गोपिकां यादवां सकळां । गौळणीगोपाळां गाईवत्सां ॥1॥
गाती धणीवरी केला अंगसंग । पाहिला श्रीरंग डोळेभरि ॥2॥
भक्ति नवविधा तयांसि घडली । अवघीं च केली कृष्णरूप ॥3॥
रूप दाखविलें होतां भिन्न भाव । भक्त आणि देव भिन्न नाहीं ॥4॥
नाहीं राहों दिलें जातां निजधामा । तुका ह्मणे आह्मांसहित गेला ॥5॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

That bliss was tasted by the gopis, the Yadavas, the milkmaids, the cowherds, and the cows and calves. They sang to their full satisfaction and held Him close.

They gazed upon Shrirangam to the full. The ninefold devotion was fulfilled in them.

All were made into the form of Krishna. He revealed His form even through the appearance of separation.

Devotee and God are not two. When He departed for His eternal abode, says Tuka, He did not leave us behind.

He took us with Him.

IN PLAIN WORDS

That joy was tasted by the gopis, by all the Yadavas, by the milkmaids and the cowherds, by the cows and the calves. They sang to their heart's fill and held Him close. They gazed their fill on Shrirang. The ninefold devotion was made whole in them. All of them were turned into the form of Krishna. Even in the look of being separate, He showed His own form. Devotee and God are not two. When He left for His eternal home, Tuka says: He did not leave us behind. He took us with Him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is describing how complete the union with Krishna can be, using the company at Gokul as the proof. The gopis, the cowherds, even the cows and calves did not just worship from a distance; they sang, embraced Him, gazed at Him, and through that the ninefold path of devotion came to its fullness. The result he names is startling: all of them were made into the form of Krishna. So the apparent gap between worshipper and worshipped dissolves, and devotee and God turn out not to be two. The last claim seals it: when Krishna returned to His own abode, He did not abandon His people but carried them with Him.

GATHA 4573 The Nature of God

Nature of God, the all-pervading One

मराठी मूळ

गेला कोठें होता कोठुनियां आला । सहज व्यापला आहे नाहीं ॥1॥
आहे साच भावें सकळव्यापक । नाहीं अभाविक लोकां कोठें ॥2॥
कोठे नाहीं ऐसा नाहीं रिता ठाव । अनुभवी देव स्वयें जालें ॥3॥
जातों येतों आह्मी देवाचे सांगातें । तुका ह्मणे गात देवनाम ॥4॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Where did He go? Where did He come from? He naturally pervades everything, present and absent at once. He is truly present for those who believe.

For the faithless, He is nowhere to be found. There is no place empty of Him; those who have experienced Him have become God themselves.

Says Tuka, we come and go in God's company, singing His Name.

IN PLAIN WORDS

Where did He go? Where did He come from? He simply pervades everything; He is both present and not. For those who truly believe, He is really there. For the faithless, He is nowhere to be found. There is no spot anywhere that is empty of Him. Those who have tasted Him have become God themselves. We come and go in God's company. Tuka says: singing God's Name.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram answers the question that the bhakti story leaves hanging: if God came and went, where is He now? His reply is that the coming and going was never the whole truth, because God pervades all things and is everywhere at once. Whether you find Him depends on you: the believer meets a God who is truly present, the faithless person looks and finds nothing, though no place is actually empty of Him. He pushes the claim to its edge, saying those who have actually experienced Him have themselves become God. For Tukaram this is not theory but a way of walking through life, moving in God's company while singing the Name.

GATHA 4574 Autobiography

Humility, the unworthy poet's surrender

मराठी मूळ

मना वाटे तैसीं बोलिलों वचनें । केली धिटपणें सलगी देवा ॥1॥
वाणी नाहीं शुद्ध याति एक ठाव । भक्ति नेणें भाव नाहीं मनीं ॥2॥
नाहीं जालें ज्ञान पाहिलें अक्षर । मानी जैसें थोर थोरी नाहीं ॥3॥
नाहीं मनीं लाज धरिली आशंका । नाहीं भ्यालों लोकां चतुरांसि ॥4॥
चतुरांच्या राया मी तुझें अंकित । जालों शरणागत देवदेवा ॥5॥
देवा आतां करीं सरतीं हीं वचनें । तुझ्या कृपादानें बोलिलों तीं ॥6॥
तुझें देणें तुझ्या समर्पूनि पायीं । जालों उतरायी पांडुरंगा ॥7॥
रंकाहुनि रंक दास मी दासांचें । सामर्थ्य हें कैचें बोलावया ॥8॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

I have spoken as my heart moved me, taking liberties with God out of boldness. My speech is not refined; my birth has no distinction.

I know nothing of devotion; there is no real feeling in my mind. I have not gained knowledge or studied the scriptures.

I presume to speak of greatness, though greatness is not in me. I have held no shame or hesitation.

I have not feared the judgment of the learned. O King of the wise, I am Your marked one.

I have come surrendered, O God of gods. O God, make these words bear fruit.

I spoke them through Your grace. I offer Your own gift back at Your feet.

I have thus discharged my debt, O Panduranga. I am humbler than the humblest, a servant of servants.

What power do I have to speak?.

IN PLAIN WORDS

I have spoken as my heart moved me. In my boldness I took liberties with God. My speech is not pure; my birth has no standing. I do not know devotion; there is no real feeling in my mind. I have gained no knowledge; I have not even looked at the letters. I act as if I were great, but greatness is not in me. I held no shame in my heart, no hesitation. I was not afraid of clever people. O King of the wise, I am Your marked servant. I have come to You for refuge, O God of gods. God, now make these words bear fruit. I spoke them by the gift of Your grace. What was Your giving, I offer back at Your feet. So my debt is cleared, O Panduranga. I am lower than the lowest, a servant of servants. What power do I have to speak?

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram strips away every claim he might make for himself before God. He admits he wrote as he pleased, took liberties with God, has no pure speech, no high birth, no learning, no real devotion in his own mind, and no fear of the clever critics who might mock him. Having confessed all of that, he hands everything over: he is Panduranga's marked one, come for refuge, asking only that God make these words bear fruit. The turn that matters is his account of where the words came from: they were God's own gift of grace, so he is simply offering God's giving back at God's feet. By that move he says his debt is settled, and he names himself a servant of servants, with no power of his own to speak at all.

GATHA 4575 Devotion to Vitthal

Praise, Vitthal seen with the eyes

मराठी मूळ

चारी वेद ज्याची कीर्ती वाखाणिती । प्रत्यक्ष ये मूतिन विठोबाची ॥1॥
चहुंयुगांचें हें साधन साधिलें । अनुभवा आलें आपुलिया ॥2॥
एवढें करूनि आपण निराळा । प्रत्यक्ष डोळां दाखविलें ॥3॥
दावुनि सकळ प्रमाणाच्या युक्ति । जयजयकार करिती अवघे भक्त ॥4॥
भक्ति नवविधा पावली मुळची । जनादननामाची संख्या जाली ॥5॥
नवसें ओंव्या आदरें वाचितां । त्याच्या मनोरथा कार्यसिद्ध ॥6॥
सीमा न करवे आणीक ही सुखा। तुका ह्मणे देखा पांडुरंगा ॥7॥

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

The four Vedas sing His praises. This very form of Vitthoba stands here in truth.

The spiritual practice of all four ages has been perfected and brought into one's own experience. Having done all this, He stands apart, revealed directly before the eyes.

Showing every proof and argument, all the devotees raise the cry of 'Victory!' The ninefold devotion has reached its source. The count of Janardana's Names is now complete.

Nine hundred ovis, recited with devotion, bring the fulfillment of every heart's desire. Says Tuka, there is no limit to the joy that remains. Behold, O Panduranga.

IN PLAIN WORDS

The four Vedas sing His glory. Here Vithoba's very form stands before us in truth. The practice of all four ages has been brought to its fruit, and come into one's own experience. Having done all this, He stands apart, shown plainly to the eyes. Showing every proof and argument, all the devotees raise the cry of victory. The ninefold devotion has reached its source. The count of Janardana's Names is complete. These verses, recited with devotion, fulfill every heart's desire. Tuka says: there is no end to the joy that remains. Behold, O Panduranga.

WHAT IT MEANS

Tukaram is closing a long stretch of song by pointing at what it was all for. The God whom the four Vedas only praise from afar stands here as Vithoba, a form you can see with your own eyes, and the spiritual labor of all the ages has ripened into direct experience. He notes that God does all this and yet remains apart, shown openly, while every proof and argument is answered and the devotees simply cry victory. The ninefold path of devotion has returned to its source, and the telling of God's Names is now full. He ends by promising that these verses, said with love, fulfill the heart's longing, and that the joy left over has no limit; the last word is simply an invitation to look at Panduranga.